At two o'clock today Edmonton time, Mr. Speaker, the Minister announced with great fanfare a project to develop the oil sands in northeastern Alberta which will probably have one tenth of the impact it could have had on the constructions force. All this at a time when people are looking for jobs and cannot find them, when people are begging for jobs. Unemployment is extremely high across the country and a megaproject the size of which I am talking about multiplies the number of jobs right across the land, so there would even be increased employment in central Canada. This affects virtually every Province in the country, Mr. Speaker.

● (1815)

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, in his comments, obviously ignored the economics of oil production. He ignored the fact that international oil prices over the past two years have been extremely depressed which has affected some of the larger oil sands proposals, even though generous Government incentives had been offered. He pointed out that a deal was announced today in Calgary, I believe, but he also forgot that the incentives included in the deal announced today were previously announced in the budget of April 9, 1983.

Mr. Shields: Too late.

Mr. Berger: He also failed to mention that in addition to the concessions the Government of Canada has made, the Alberta Government will be lowering its royalty payment requirements. Although he may attribute all the blame to the federal Government, it would be more correct to note the over-all world situation than to note the efforts being made by other Governments in order to encourage production of this nature.

The gentleman was correct in saying that at the peak of its construction, 700 direct jobs would be created and another 90 permanent jobs would result from the operational phase.

TRADE MARKS AND PATENTS—PROPOSED CHANGES IN DRUG MANUFACTURING LICENCES. (B) FORMER MINISTER EMPLOYED BY DEPARTMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during Question Period I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) a question concerning the Government's proposed plans to remove Section 41(4) of the Patent Act. The effect of this change in the legislation would be to substantially increase the prices of pharmaceutical drugs to Canadian consumers as well as to increase taxes generally as a result of the dramatic rise in the total cost of preventional pharmacare plans. I could perhaps provide a bit of history concerning this situation.

In 1969, the Hon. Ron Basford brought forward proposed amendments to the Patent Act which implemented a scheme of compulsory licensing. This was as a result of a report by a parliamentary committee which very clearly documented that pharmaceutical drug prices in Canada were the highest in the world at that time. It was in response to this very, very serious situation that the Government moved in 1969. As I indicated, Ron Basford brought forward legislation to in fact permit the manufacture in Canada of generic drugs. At the time, the Conservative Party bitterly opposed this change. Today, it remains silent on the proposals of the Government. In 1969, the Government moved forward despite a very serious and powerful lobby by the multinational drug corporations.

Since the legislation was enacted in 1969, I would note that drug prices in Canada have dropped quite dramatically. The availability of generic drugs, both to hospitals and to consumers, has resulted in drug prices in Canada which are significantly lower than those in the United States, for example.

Just to give a few illustrations of the impact of this important legislation, I would note that 250 milligram tablets of chlorpropamide are sold in a one thousand tablet lot in Canada for $14.07, while it cost some $281.38 in the United States.

This drug is commonly used by diabetics. As well, concerning medication for heart patients, 1,000 tablets of chlorthalidone costs $30.47 in Canada and $289.98 in the United States. This is the cost from the wholesaler to the pharmacist. As a final example, one of the most commonly used pharmaceutical drugs in Canada is diazepam, the generic name for the drug better known as Valium. Again concerning the price to the pharmacist from the wholesaler, five milligram tablets of Valium cost $3.13 per 1,000 tablets in Canada and $189.97 in the United States. Clearly the effect of the legislation introduced in 1969 was to dramatically lower the costs of a wide range of pharmaceutical drugs to Canadian consumers and provincial Governments.

Earlier this year the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs proposed to repeal this important provision. It is interesting to note that the original author of the legislation, Ron Basford, has come out strongly opposed to the proposal and in fact has indicated that the Government is caving in to the multinational drug companies.

I note as well that a number of Members even in the Government caucus are speaking out in opposition to this regressive proposal because they recognize the very significant impact it would have on Canadian consumers. I would also ask how the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) could possibly defend such a proposal. She claims on the one hand to be trying to protect Medicare, but, of course, if the proposal of her colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola), is enacted, then the cost to provincial pharmcare plans for pharmaceutical drugs will go up very significantly. Indeed, so significantly that it could seriously threaten the survival of provincial pharmacare plans. There also would be a serious job loss in the generic drug industry in Canada which currently employs some 1,300 individuals.

In my view the impact of this legislation on the sick, poor and particularly elderly Canadians, whose reliance upon pharmaceutical drugs is greater than most of the others, would be devastating. I repeat that the Government's proposal amounts to nothing less than an attack on the poor, the elderly and the sick. It is for that reason that that the federal New Democratic Party is strongly opposed to any amendments whatsoever to Section 41(4) of the Patent Act.

I noted as well in my question yesterday that the Government has refused to consult until this point with those who are most affected; the Consumers Association of Canada, the National Anti-Poverty Organization and provincial governments. All are strongly opposed to this legislation. Indeed, the only group which has been consulted is the multinational drug industry and its former lobbyist, Martin O'Connell, who is now being paid by the taxpayers of Canada to advise the Government on these proposed legislative changes.

I urge the Government to withdraw any suggestion of these amendments and not to in any way dilute compulsory licensing in Canada. I would hope that the Government would recognize that the impact of this legislation would be very devastating, indeed, to many thousands of Canadian consumers, particularly the elderly, the poor and the sick.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have often wondered how the Hon. Member could stand in the House with a straight face and make some of the outrageous exaggerations and assertions that he makes, particularly when he is trying to play with the sensibilities of the elderly, the poor and the sick, trying to score cheap political points at the expense of some of the people in our society who are least able to defend themselves.

I also argue that he is guilty of monumental hypocrisy. He and his Party are always crying about jobs. Now he is upset that the Government is showing concern about jobs in an extremely vital industry, an industry which holds so much portent for the future.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member ought to know, Mr. Speaker, that the current study was initiated following the shutdown of a number of drug companies, especially in the Montreal area, and that the Government of Quebec and several other provincial governments expressed serious concern about the future of that industry.

[English]

The Government's objective is to maintain low prices for consumers. I repeat that its objective it is to maintain low prices for consumers and to create a business climate that will support development of the industry with an emphasis on the growth of return, the development of exports and an active ingredient manufacturing in Canada.

The consultations are broad. Provincial Governments are being consulted. Last week, the Minister met with provincial Ministers, consumer organizations, patent holding manufacturers, generic companies and health care professionals. Also, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has expressed her concern that costs be kept low. A balance is being sought by the Government, even though that is an extremely difficult thing for the Member and his Party to understand.

With regard to Mr. O'Connell, he fully disclosed his previous association and severed all ties prior to being retained by the Minister. The Minister felt that his awareness of the company's concerns and his knowledge of government workings would be an asset in this particular review. There is no question but he is exercising his present attitudes in a fully impartial manner. I would ask the Hon. Member to stop dragging another person's name in the mud.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

At 6.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PROPOSED CANCELLATION OF HIGHWAY SERVICE DELIVERIES

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Madam Speaker, it has come to my attention that Canada Post plans to cancel its highway service deliveries to small communities in Ontario on Saturday and Sunday, effective October 1, next. This will mean that residents will have to wait until Monday, and in some cases Tuesday, for their mail. Many of these residents receive their unemployment and pension cheques on Saturdays. It is unfair for these people, who are already in a tight financial situation, to wait any longer than is necessary.

I believe that Canada Post will eventually close down its Saturday wicket service, using as logic: why stay open when there is no incoming and outgoing mail?

While I can understand that Canada Post is trying to eliminate its large deficit, I do not believe that residents in smaller communities should be made to suffer. Surely there must be other alternatives, besides reducing this vital service.

I strongly oppose the proposed cancellation of highway service deliveries on weekends and I would encourage my colleagues in Parliament, and residents of Ontario, to take the necessary measures in order to ensure the reversal of this decision.

INCOME TAX

LOSS OF TAXPAYER'S PAYMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, this Liberal Government confiscates money from a private bank account without notice to the owner, loses or steals $1,000, destroys the departmental records, and then glibly declares, "The case is closed"!

In 1975 a Canadian citizen, through the Mercantile Bank in Calgary, mailed a $1,000 cheque to Revenue Canada as an instalment payment. The cheque was stamped by Revenue Canada and credited to his account. Then someone in the Department decided that the cheque had been credited to the wrong account, and so it was transferred. The citizen and his accountant notified the Department of the mistake, and continued to do so for several weeks, and were told that it was a simple computer mistake and would be corrected shortly.

It was corrected shortly all right, the Liberal way. Revenue Canada, without notice to or approval of the citizen, took $1,000 out of his account and credited it to his taxes.

During this dispute the records of Revenue Canada moved from Calgary to Winnipeg, and the citizen was told that the records had been destroyed and the case was closed.

The Minister of Revenue now parrots the statement and tells me that the case is closed. This is a complete cover-up by someone in Revenue Canada; no file should be destroyed when it is in dispute. The Government has a responsibility to replace this $1,000. Everyone knows this Liberal Government is money-hungry, but has it sunk so low as to condone the theft of $1,000 from an ordinary hard-working citizen, or to make him pay the same bill twice?

Honesty, honour, justice, are all I ask.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SPRUCE BUDWORM SPRAYING PROGRAM IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, the Government will undoubtedly be aware of last week's Nova Scotia Supreme Court decision which basically gave the green light to both the provincial Government and the forest industry of Nova Scotia to recommence widespread spraying with 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T over populated areas in order to combat spruce budworm infested forest areas. This decision has obvious and serious forestry, environmental, and health implications, not only for Nova Scotia but also for the forest industry and related communities and regions across Canada. Yet the silence from the Government has been deafening.

Surely the Minister of Environment (Mr. Caccia), who is also responsible for forestry, has at least been able to consult with himself in his two separate roles, and hopefully he has also discussed this serious matter with his Cabinet Colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). If so, why have we not heard a word from him? Perhaps one of the reasons is the schizophrenic nature of his portfolio, which includes both forestry and environment.

I hope that the obvious contradiction of having these two Departments under one Minister will cause the Government to reconsider the many submissions from the Canadian Institute of Forestry, the Canadian Forestry Association, the IWA, and the Forestry industry, concerning their request for a separate Ministry of Forestry or Department of Renewable Resources as has also been suggested by both this Party and the Official Opposition.

FEDERAL ADMINISTRATION

ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to take advantage of these few seconds and draw the attention of the House to a political truth that has just dawned on Quebecers. Recently, we heard from members of the Lévesque Government's Cabinet that they intended to extend their sessional leave by one month, which means that they did not intend to sit until mid-November. They later changed their minds, and so on, but in any case, Quebecers now realize that since the Quebec Government came to power, provincial members have been sitting 40 or 50 days a year, Madam Speaker. That is the shameful truth that has now dawned on Quebecers. The people who accused us of not doing our work here in this House are the same people who have been sitting about 40 days a year for more than three years, while we federal members sit about 180 days in a year. They have failed to understand that their first duty and what they are being paid for—is to represent their constituents in the National Assembly. We, on the other hand, are fully aware that our duty consists, not in playing politics in our ridings but in representing our constituents in the House and protecting their interests. Today, Madam Speaker, I would urge Quebecers to advise their Government in Quebec that its duty is not to try and sell them a new country and a new flag but to sit in the Assembly and represent the people who elected them for that purpose.

VIA RAIL

CALL FOR RESTORATION OF PASSENGER SERVICES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, a century ago Sir John A. Macdonald united this country by building a railroad from coast to coast. Two years ago the Grits began the process of dismantling that symbol of national unity when they announced a sharp reduction in passenger rail service.

The announcement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) that the Government is considering restoring service on two VIA Rail lines, one originating in his own constituency, is an indication that we are fast approaching an election. Canadians who were affected by the cuts will not forget the manner in which the disruptions were unilaterally imposed without parliamentary debate.

The Minister spoke of an attempt to re-establish the credibility of VIA. Finally we have an admission that his predecessor dealt a blow to its credibility. Restoration of two lines does not go far enough, however. Hundreds of jobs were lost, terminals were closed, lives were disrupted, and economies severely affected.

If the Minister is serious about demonstrating his good faith he will restore service to all lines that were cut, forgetting any silly review process. He will also open up the books of the public railway to the Auditor General, notwithstanding the recent remarks of Jack Horner.

Other countries are improving their rail service and conserving fuel, while this Government persists in promoting the most costly and energy wasteful forms of transportation. My constituents in Simcoe South know full well what it feels like to be deprived of a vital transportation service after losing the Barrie to Toronto run.

Canadians demand a restoration of an efficient national passenger rail service and they want it now, not when it suits the political ambitions of the Grit Party.

POLITICAL PARTIES

SCENARIO OF PLAY GAME

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, last night members of all three political Parties took part in the playing of a new game called "Poleconomy"—the game of Canada. The results of this game were such that I feel a responsibility to inform all Members of the House and the people of Canada of its outcome.

The Conservative Party was represented by the former President of the Treasury Board and the previous Finance critic, the Liberals were represented by the Chairman of the Finance Committee, and the NDP was represented by the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and myself.

The stage is set. The national political party representatives go head to head in a test to solve our country's economic problems. The Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) becomes the Prime Minister and immediately he and his Tory colleagues enter into a sweetheart alliance with the Liberals to form a coalition government against the NDP. The NDP immediately embarks on a comprehensive program bringing business, labour, and government together in a new era of co-operation. We presented solutions and alternatives that were heralded as nothing short of brilliant. However, just as we were about to achieve economic and financial success, the Prime Minister, the former President of the Treasury Board, announces that he has bankrupted the federal treasury—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: —and that the Government and country are bankrupt. With that, the game was brought to an end.

I would submit that this game is a true reflection of reality in Canada and that, together or alone, the Liberals and Tories will bring economic and social chaos to this country, and that only the NDP can provide the necessary leadership and policies to meet the challenges of the 1980s.

Madam Speaker: Order. The ball game is over.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SUGGESTED REVIEW OF DEFENCE CAPABILITIES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, there is a saying that the price of peace is eternal vigilance. There are groups in Canada who think our present equipment for maintaining that vigil is not adequate. Surely there is no group more qualified to judge the merits of our military organization than our war veterans as represented by the Royal Canadian Legion. On behalf of that group and other concerned Canadians I would like to add my support to their requests for an immediate review of our defence capabilities.

The Royal Canadian Legion, in a letter to me this month, invited me to share with the House their concern that the Armed Forces at this time are extremely undermanned and lacking in modern arms and equipment. As well, they are deeply worried that we may not be able to meet future obligations with regard to defence. I submit that these concerns are real and valid, and that the Minister of Defence (Mr. Blais) should give serious consideration to the representations I have mentioned. With recent events giving tragic proof of the hostile intentions of the U.S.S.R., there is an urgent need to attend to the security of our country.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

POSSIBLE APPLICATION FOR CHANGE IN TELEPHONE TARIFFS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, at the moment Bell Canada and all other Canadian telephone companies charge their subscribers a fixed monthly rate for the right to make as many local calls as they want. Although a high percentage of households are quite comfortably able to pay for flat rate service, basic rate make a private phone for some Canadians prohibitively expensive. For this reason, apparently, the phone companies are continuing to consider introducing usage sensitive pricing, or local measured service, in which local calls would be billed according to one or more of the following factors: the number of calls, their duration, the time of day, and the distance.

If low income households use the phone sparingly, as the theory goes, then under usage sensitive pricing their phone bills could be much lower than under the present flat rate service.

My concern is that usage sensitive pricing will not provide less expensive phone service to the elderly and the poor since they have a greater need to use their phones as a vehicle to keep in touch with relatives and friends, to seek employment, and so on. Therefore I feel that extensive research should be done by the CRTC before it considers any application by Bell Canada to use the USP system, in order to ensure that the poor and the elderly will have adequate telephone facilities at a price they can afford.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DENIAL OF ACCESS TO BOOKS TO AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Chairman of CN has suggested that the Auditor General of Canada has no business auditing the books of CN. Is it the Government's position that the Auditor General, through whom the House guarantees accountability to Canadians, should not have anything to do with the books of the CN or have any access to them?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, to begin with, I am not aware of the statements made by the Chairman of the CNR.

Mr. Nielsen: Why not?

Mr. Axworthy: I will certainly make an effort to determine what, in fact, his statements may be relating to this particular issue. As the Hon. Member knows, all Crown corporations have their own auditors and their statements are made public.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the Auditor General is the servant of the Parliament of Canada. He is the servant of all Members here and of all taxpayers. It is through his audits we guarantee to the people of Canada that we are accountable for the money they are giving us to spend wisely. What does the Government have to hide by refusing the Auditor General of Canada access to the books of CN?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am a little surprised at the suggestion made by the Hon. Member that some of the most reputable chartered accountant firms in this country, which have the responsibilities for doing the audits for major Crown corporations, would not do their job. I think the Hon. Member should not be denigrating the professional competence of such distinguished firms because we certainly trust in the private sector and the ability of those firms to perform these services.

Mr. Nielsen: Like Harrison.

GUARANTEE SOUGHT ON USE OF COMPANY RESOURCES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the Chairman's statement in his speech to the Canadian Women's Club in Alberta is that CN's internal auditors report to management, but that is the very management which is denying the Auditor General access to CN's books. What guarantees do the people of Canada have that the resources of CN are being used efficiently to the benefit of all Canadians?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Like value for money.

Mr. Nowlan: Like CAST.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as I said, I have not had the benefit of reading the speech given to the Canadian Women's Club. I would point out to the Hon. Member that on more than one occasion the President and Chairman of CNR appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport. CN's full audits and its examinations are available for discussion by that committee.

Mr. Forrestall: That is not true and you know it.

Mr. Axworthy: That is the place where the accountability is aired. Again, I would be pleased to undertake to look at the statements made by the Chairman, but I think that the Hon. Member is beginning to make suggestions that are not borne out by the facts.

VALUE FOR EXPENDITURES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the massive infusion of public funds that will accrue to the CNR under the auspices of the Crow Bill, and having regard to the attitude of the Chairman of CNR toward the Auditor General, who made reference to the fact that the Auditor General was a threat to the managerial autonomy of Crown corporations, can the Minister say anything in the House today that would assure this House and the taxpayers of Canada that this massive amount of money to accrue to the CNR will be spent in the most cost efficient manner, and that there will be value for money received by the taxpayer of Canada? What assurance can the Minister give, over and above the rhetoric of the Chairman of the CNR?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has been participating in the hearings of the Crow committee for the past three or four months. He should be aware that the Bill before that committee contains a number of clauses that hold the railways accountable on a variety of guarantees, and that the kind of funds being allocated by the Government of Canada to bring about major railway expansion are also conditional upon both performances and the kind of evaluation that the CTC will be doing. As well, the Minister of Transport has the right to withhold funds if such performances are not lived up to. It seems very clear under the legislation, as both originally presented and amended, that there are very sound obligations for CNR to perform as we would expect it to perform.

Mr. Mazankowski: Most of these guarantees are of a notional nature. Quite frankly, the Auditor General has pointed out the deficiency in the measurement of cost efficiency and value for money received in his previous report. If the Minister would like to inform himself, he might read page 426 of last year's Auditor General's report.

CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, is it the Minister's position that he supports the view of the Chairman of CN that the Auditor General should not be involved in any way in the auditing of the books of CNR "because", to quote the Chairman's speech, "it would involve a loss of the independence from political interference that is vital to any corporation operating in a competitive environment"?

Is it the position of the Government that it does not want the Auditor General to interfere or audit the books of the Crown corporation because it may prevent the Government from interfering with the corporation in a political manner?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as I pointed out to the previous questioner, it is not possible for me to support, endorse, or deny a statement I have not read nor have the full contents of. I will make an effort to receive that speech, read the statement of the Chairman and discuss the matter with him, at which point in time I would be glad to respond to the question of the Hon. Member.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PROPOSED BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice. It is clear that the Government of British Columbia intends to go ahead with its highly repressive legislation. Bill-2 currently before the British Columbia Legislature so restricts the right to organize, and the freedom of association as to be in clear violation of two international treaties signed by the Government of Canada, one in 1935 and one in 1948. Has the Government of Canada officially pointed this out to the Premier of British Columbia? Has it made an official request, either for fundamental change in this legislation or for its complete withdrawal?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the legislation presently before the Legislature of British Columbia has concerned the federal Government in a number of ways. A number of individual Ministers, depending upon their responsibilities, have made representations to the Government of British Columbia, some by telegram. At the conference on human rights a week or two ago, I spoke about our concern that the human rights code would eliminate all the mediatory aspects and leave merely the legal skeleton, which is an enormous step backward. This Government is making its views known to the Government of British Columbia. Of course the legislative process is under way in that Province and there may very well be changes to that legislation in the course of its consideration there.

Mr. Broadbent: Speeches are one thing, telegrams are another. Neither is to be completely dismissed, but formal and official action is quite another matter.

CIVIL LIBERTIES OF BRITISH COLUMBIANS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that the Government of Canada, when confronted with equally repressive legislation in the Province of Quebec last spring, entered into a formal legal arrangement in support of university teachers objecting to the legislation, what comparable action or what formal testimony to its good intentions is it prepared to show in the British Columbia case? Is it prepared to show as a Government that it is as concerned about the civil liberties of people in the Province of British Columbia as it is about the civil liberties of people in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Secretary of State, has already granted funds to at least one group in British Columbia to consider the implications of the legislation and to engage in public education with respect to it. But my hon. friend has to take into account that in the case of the legislation to which he referred in Quebec, it was passed before the Government took action. It would not be appropriate for the Government of Canada to take any form of legal action in the courts until the legislation was actually in effect. In that case, of course, what we did was to intervene on behalf of groups in the Province that were appealing.

POSSIBLE VIOLATION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, we are asking for some public and serious initiatives before the legislation takes effect. I come back to my first question to the Minister of Justice. Is the Minister aware that Bill-2 in the Province of British Columbia, which is currently being debated, violates at least two international agreements signed by the Government of Canada, one in 1935 and one in 1948? If the Minister agrees there is such a violation, why does the Government of Canada not approach, directly and officially, the Government of British Columbia and ask for changes in that legislation?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, my colleagues and I have this matter constantly under review. We will look at the matter again. I will be in British Columbia this weekend. If further representations are required, I am prepared to make them. I will be meeting the Attorney General of British Columbia tomorrow. I can assure the Hon. Member that we will be discussing the legislation which is before the British Columbia Legislature.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—ASSISTANCE FOR VICTIMS OF FIGHTING

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister knows that we are all distressed by the daily news of tragic events taking place in Lebanon, and the Minister is also aware that we are in favour of the withdrawal from Lebanese territory of all foreign troops and armed factions, and that we want to help the Lebanese and their Government to establish their country's sovereignty over all Lebanese territory.

[English]

Has the Government made its position clear on the tragic events which are occurring in Lebanon? What is being done to assist those Lebanese who are suffering most as a result of the fighting?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, just a few days ago I had the opportunity to meet with representatives of the Lebanese community in Canada. I expressed to them, as I do today, the distress we feel at the continued violence and fighting in Lebanon. We have consistently urged that all forces withdraw from Lebanon. We have supported the present Government in its efforts at reconciliation, and we have consistently supported the independent and territorial integrity of Lebanon. Obviously we regret that the mediation efforts under way have not been successful.

With the indulgence of the House, I would make one further point. That is to reply to the Hon. Member's request or suggestion that we assist those who are suffering in Lebanon. This year we have already provided several hundred thousand dollars to the International Red Cross. Just recently we received an appeal to which we responded by providing an additional $500,000 to help those currently affected by the violence in Lebanon.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REFERENCE TO FORMER MINISTER IN NEWSPAPER COMBINE CASE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is prompted by an exhibit in the trial of Southam and Thomson Newspapers. I wish to stress that my question, and I expect the Prime Minister's answer, will obviously have nothing to do with the guilt or innocence of the accused. In the memorandum that was filed this morning, signed by George Currie, who was the President of FP Newspapers, there was reference to two people. One was the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Jack Horner, and the other was Gordon Fisher. With regard to the Ottawa situation and the Ottawa Journal, the memorandum stated as follows:

Gordon thought that the proposed amendment to the Competition Act could be quietly forgotten by the Government.

I am quoting exactly from the memorandum. I again quote:

Jack Horner (then federal Industry Minister)—

● (1430)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's quotation is much too long. No quotations should be used in questions. I would ask him to go immediately to his question.

Mr. Speyer: It is alleged that Jack Horner had a meeting which was quietly forgotten by the Government, with respect to an amendment to the Combines Investigation Act. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he was aware of any such communication between Jack Horner and any officials of FP or Southam. And secondly, if the Prime Minister was aware of that, were any enquiries instigated by the Prime Minister regarding what Jack Horner said or did with respect to any amendment under the Combines Investigation Act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, Mr. Horner has not been a member of this Government for quite a while and I have no recollection of the facts that are referred to, but it seems to me that the Hon. Member, though he took some precautions at the beginning of his question, is asking me to comment directly on evidence in a trial which is before the courts. I think, Madam Speaker, with respect, that that is highly irregular.

INQUIRY RESPECTING MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice, or, in his absence, to the Acting Minister of Justice. Was the Minister of Justice, who instructs counsel for the Attorney General of Canada, aware that allegations were being made on behalf of the Attorney General of Canada as to the conduct of Mr. Horner concerning the Southam and Thomson newspapers?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have no personal knowledge of the matter but I will bring it to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Justice.

VIA RAIL

PROPOSED REINSTITUTION OF PASSENGER SERVICES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and deals with something which is very much within his personal knowledge. I refer to the interesting remarks he made over the weekend when he underwent a remarkable conversion by going to VIA's side and confessing that the Progressive Conservatives were right and that his predecessor was wrong in unilaterally chopping off 20 per cent of the VIA Rail routes. Since the Canadian Transport Commission was not involved in the initial decision or in the Minister's weekend announcement, could the Minister please advise us of what criteria he intends to use in resurrecting those abandoned lines other than the geographic requirement of being within Liberal backyards to save Liberal hides?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the last sentence of the Hon. Member's question points out why I have never in my life said that members of the Progressive Conservative Party were right about anything, and I certainly did not say so last weekend. The Hon. Member's suggestion that we were in any way endorsing what Progressive Conservative members had to say about VIA is, of course, not true. We did indicate, however, that my predecessor had said that after a two-year period certain reviews would be made. We are now undertaking to make those reviews because conditions during that period of time have changed.

We are looking at the representations made by certain groups in the areas of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, as well as in New Brunswick, all areas which contain ridings of members of all partisan persuasions and beliefs. We believe that we, as a Government, do not think in the same terms as does the Hon. Member who is thinking purely in partisan terms. We try to think in terms of the national interest.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, the Minister's conversion makes Paul on the train to Damascus look like a piker.

Some Hon. Members: Author? Author?

Mr. Nowlan: That is how big of a flip-flop his conversion was, and to try to indicate that it was not a flip-flop—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is again engaged in one of his speeches. He should ask a question.

Mr. Nowlan: Absolutely, Madam Speaker.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): In order that we may try to see if there is any substance to this one or two-year trial period that will safely bring the Minister past the next election, can the Minister show some good faith and table the paper and the Bill on VIA that were promised by his predecessor for last Christmas?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that if I were to choose a biblical allegory, I would say that the Garden of Gethsemane was not on the road to Tarsus.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that, before any paper is presented, we must first have serious discussions and consultations with Canadians who are interested and affected by the whole question of the movement of passenger traffic in all modes, rail, bus, and air. I happen to believe that one very important priority is to ensure that we get good, safe, cost-efficient transportation for people. We are now engaged in those kinds of discussions. When they are completed, the Hon. Member will be one of the first to find out.

FUTURE OF SERVICES IN SASKATCHEWAN AND NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question also concerns VIA Rail. Two years ago, through an Order in Council for what might be called the "Great Train Robbery" in this country, the Government eliminated passenger rail service to many parts of Canada. That took only three months to accomplish.

The Minister referred specifically over the weekend to the possibility of restoring the service on the Saskatoon-Melville line in Saskatchewan and the Edmundston-Moncton line in New Brunswick. I would like to ask the Minister whether or not he can now assure the House that passenger rail service will be restored on these lines within the next three months; in other words, as quickly as they were eliminated. Will we have those trains back on the track before Christmas?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would point out to the Hon. Member that we are considering a number of options related to the whole issue of the movement of passenger traffic. We felt in the case of the particular VIA line that he is talking about, the Melville-Saskatoon-Edmonton line, not only were a number of representations made but the judgment of some of the experts who looked at the situation was that the clientele and the conditions of markets had changed. Therefore, we would be prepared to review the situation to see whether that line might possibly be reinstated. However, we would first have to examine the position of VIA Rail, and we would also have to take such matters back to the Canadian Transport Commission. Therefore, I cannot give the Hon. Member an actual time line, but I can point out to him that we are giving the matter some active and very strong consideration.

TYPE OF SERVICE TO BE RESTORED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, one very important consideration is the kind of service that is restored in terms of the proper speed of trains, the frequency of trains, the connections and so on, if we do indeed get this service restored. In view of the fact that the Government once promised that the next order of LRC trains would be used in western Canada and the Atlantic Provinces, can the Minister assure the House that he will do what he can to make sure that the Melville-Saskatoon line will have an LRC service so that people can use that train efficiently and quickly?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks what kind of service would be restored, and I agree with him that what is perhaps essential to any good passenger movement system is the quality that is provided, both by the equipment and by the personnel. I would like to point out to him that my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE, has been working very closely with the Hawker Siddeley group in Thunder Bay to develop new forms of passenger traffic vehicles that might well have application on other routes. As that is still in the experimental stage, it obviously would have to go through various prototype stages.

I would like to point out that we are committed to looking at how quality service can be restored within our fiscal framework, because it is also important that we maintain accountability and responsibility in that area.

TRANSPORT

STUDY OF MARITIME FREIGHT RATE SUBSIDIES

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Some months ago before he held the portfolio of Minister of Transport, great consternation and dismay were caused in the Atlantic region by the appointment of consultants. The word was out that those consultants were going to recommend that freight rate subsidies which are so vital to the Altantic region and the Maritime Provinces in particular, would be cut back. Since it is vital that the uncertainty be ended immediately, can the Minister give his assurances to the House—and I hope that he can—that there will be no cutback of any kind on subsidies going to producers, the small and medium-sized businessmen, in the Maritime Provinces? Can he give us that assurance today, please?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would be very pleased to answer the question of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition. However, his question is about seven hours too late because this morning I was in Moncton and met with members of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission and told them at that time that the subsidies that are provided to the Maritimes will be maintained.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, we in the Maritime Provinces are grateful to receive the smallest of blessings from the Government at any time. Those blessings come so rarely and so infrequently. We were aware, and I commend the Minister for it, that the Minister had taken some initiatives this morning. I am surprised that he had not announced them in the House.

REQUEST THAT SUBSIDIES BE INCREASED

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): In light of the concerns that were brought forward by the four Atlantic Premiers and by the people with whom the Minister met this morning, has he put in train a plan which will enhance those meagre subsidies to Maritime producers, who need much more than the small amounts being handed out by the Government?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am not sure how the Hon. Leader of the Opposition goes about measuring what is meagre or small.

Mr. Nielsen: He just looks at the Cabinet.

Mr. Axworthy: In the last fiscal year the Government introduced over $650 million worth of transportation subsidies and programs to the Atlantic Provinces. The subsidy under the freight rate is $67 million this year. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition may ask, "What's $67 million?" We happen to think it is a lot of money. We also hope that the Leader of the Opposition will reconsider some of his propositions about cutting the deficit because that is what the people of the Atlantic region would be afraid of—his proposal to cut the deficit would cut their subsidies.

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, I am in no way minimizing the impact of $67 million.

Mr. LeBlanc: You were.

Mr. Mulroney: It represents the cost of three weeks' UIC with the massive unemployment costs generated by this Government. Any amount is handsome; we will accept what we can get.

ASSISTANCE FOR BUSINESSMEN

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, has the Minister put in train a program which will enhance the amounts granted to small and medium businessmen in the Maritimes who desperately need these amounts of money to lay down products at competitive prices in central Canadian markets? That is the question.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we are glad to see that there has been such a quick conversion on the part of the Leader of the Opposition. Now he wants to spend money rather than to cut back.

I should like to answer his question by saying that in my discussions this morning with the business community of the Atlantic Provinces, I issued an invitation to them to look very carefully at the analysis contained within the Hickling study that we will release next week. I invited them to come back to me with recommendations, and said that we would look at the possibilities for the future of transportation.

My colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development, is in the Atlantic Provinces now, negotiating a series of agreements under the new Industrial Regional Development Program in which transportation could provide sub-agreements. I say to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition that things are progressing very well.

Some Hon. Members: Joe! Joe!

Some Hon. Members: More! More!

Mr. Chrétien: We want Joe.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REFERENCE TO FORMER MINISTER IN NEWSPAPER COMBINE TRIAL

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has the Minister reviewed the evidence produced at the combines trial in Toronto which contained serious allegations of improprieties and possible obstruction of justice by his former colleague, the former Minister of Trade and Commerce, now the Chairman of CN? If so, what action does he propose to take? Can he tell the House if he has discussed the matter with the Right Hon. Prime Minister?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I can say that that matter has not yet come to my attention. I have not discussed it with anyone, including, of course, the Prime Minister.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, in his capacity as Attorney General of Canada, could the Minister of Justice explain how he can express no knowledge of this matter, since he has the responsibility of instructing Crown counsel in this case? How can he explain his abysmal ignorance in this matter?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, as I imagine my hon. friend knows, most legal actions taken in the name of the Attorney General are not taken with his knowledge or his direct personal authority. They are taken under his authority but not with his personal knowledge.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REQUEST THAT ACCOUNTS BE AUDITED BY AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it centres on the Canadian Development Investment Corporation, specifically the mother of Canadair and de Havilland, at the present time. Would the Prime Minister indicate if any decision has been made—Senator Austin said it was under consideration—as to whether the Auditor General of Canada will be given the responsibility of auditing CDIC, Canadair and de Havilland, or, in fact, is Chairman Horner's statement the prevalent view of the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Corporation has already indicated that when the House considers the provisions of the legislation governing the Corporation, we shall give special consideration to this aspect of the question. Up to now, the legislation has not been examined and no final decision has been made with respect to this aspect of the question.

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL'S STATEMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same stand-in Minister who undoubtedly knows that Auditor General Dye stated in committee on June 9 this year as follows:

> In the Canadair case, the taxpayers have suffered a staggering financial loss. What we have here is a costly experiment about which Parliament and the public receive little relevant or little realistic information.

Would the Minister indicate if he agrees with the Auditor General's statement with respect to the $1.6 billion loss run up by subsidiaries of CDIC, or does he agree with Chairman Horner's statement on behalf of CN and all Crown corporations?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I have no wish to pass judgment on the comments of the Auditor General or those of the President of CN. I would like the Hon. Member to consider the very substantial benefits accruing to this country as a result of the fact that the Government had the courage to invest, through Canadair, in the development of a specific prototype plane, and I would also suggest that the Hon. Member take note of the latest comments made by companies using the Challenger, which indicate the level of quality and effectiveness this aircraft has reached. As soon as he has considered the benefits that will accrue to Canada if the program is continued, and the substantial economic advantages involved, perhaps he will see the statements to which he referred in a new light.

EMPLOYMENT

PLIGHT OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Hon. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Simmons: It is all right; I am just filling in the time while your Leader opens his mouth to change feet; that is all.

Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He will be aware that many thousands of Newfoundland inshore fishermen and their families are facing a pretty bleak winter because of very poor fish catches this summer. In many cases the catches were so low that they cannot even qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. Would the Minister indicate to the House whether he and his Department have addressed this problem and what kind of response they consider making to it?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, when I visited Newfoundland three or four weeks ago this problem was brought to my attention quite forcefully by some of the fishermen. I therefore asked my officials to prepare a report for me.. There appears to be a danger that some of the fishermen will not have sufficient catch to qualify for unemployment insurance. It is possible, as we have done on occasion in the past, to have a change of regulations to take this special problem into account. I would be prepared to do that once we have an understanding by the end of the season of the full extent of the problem and what would be the most appropriate way to respond. I am determined to respond, but I cannot really do so until we fully understand the dimensions of the problem.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO FREEZE CROWSNEST PASS RATE FOR THREE YEARS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, supplementary to those put by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Chrétien: You have to earn your salary.

Mr. Ouellet: It is a reflection on your Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order.

● (1450)

Mr. Nielsen: Now that the Minister of Transport has described in such glowing terms the so-called largesse that he is laying on the Atlantic Provinces, and which is welcomed by all Members on this side, can he tell us whether he will convince the Government of Canada to be as generous with the western farmers by agreeing to the three-year freeze on the Crow proposed in committee by Members on this side of the House?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if the kind of assistance we are now providing to help in the economic development of the Atlantic Provinces through the maritime freight rate is generous, I would say the $3.6 billion the Government is putting into western Canada for a major railway expansion is doubly generous.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

APPLICATION OF PROPOSED SECURITY LEGISLATION TO FORCE'S PUBLICATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General who knows that the names of current RCMP Security Service employees are regularly revealed in the RCMP Quarterly, a practice which would land the editor in jail for five years under Clause 12 of the Minister's new security legislation. Will the Minister clarify Government policy in this area and further explain the apparent contradiction in this policy when the RCMP reveals these names yet refuses to reveal to the taxpayers of Canada the annual budget for the Security Service?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's problem is that he has constantly misinterpreted Clause 12 of the Bill to establish the Security Service.

Mr. Broadbent: So has everyone else in the country but you.

Mr. Kaplan: That Bill does not provide blanket requirements for non-disclosure of the identify of members of the Service. In fact it provides that only persons engaged in covert operational activities of the Service are covered by the provisions of Clause 12 in that Bill.

I am informed by the RCMP that no covert operational activities of the Service have been prejudiced by the reporting which takes place in the RCMP Quarterly.

SECURITY SERVICE BUDGET

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the Minister, of course, refused to answer the question concerning the annual budget. I have before me an RCMP bulletin seeking applicants for positions within the RCMP Security Service headquarters in Ottawa. This document reveals for the first time that the current annual budget of the Security Service is the astounding figure of $67.7 million. I want the Minister to confirm this figure in a bulletin of his own Department, and explain to the House and the people of Canada the recently unannounced change in policy which has resulted in its publication?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I would like to see that bulletin before I—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I bet you would.

Mr. Kaplan: —before I decide whether it would be proper to make any comment at all about it.

PROPOSED THREE-YEAR FREEZE ON CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Member in Cabinet who represents western Canada, the Minister of Transport, and who did not answer the question put to him by the Hon. Member for Yukon, whether he is prepared to accept the proposal by the Progressive Conservative Party for a three-year freeze on the cost of moving grain? He said there was $3.6 billion being put in for the railroads, mining companies, coal producers and the construction industry, but not one nickel for the producers of grain in western Canada.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, for a Member of the House who is as knowledgeable about the grain industry as the Hon. Member who has just spoken, that statement does not do him justice. He knows full well that what is of critical importance to the western farmers is to have a modern railway system to move their product to export markets so that they can expand and grow. In the last 20 years, because of the freeze of the Crow rate and the inability to provide for major capital investments, the main lines and branch lines have not been improved, they have deteriorated, and we will be running short of capacity within a matter of two to three years. It would seem to me a matter of extreme importance that this Government go ahead, as we intend to do, to help the western farmer move his commodities to market.

FUNDING OF RAILROADS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, it is very obvious from the Minister's answer that he is not prepared to do for the grain producers in western Canada what he has done for Canadians in the Atlantic part of Canada. That I guess we can accept. But if he will look at the proposal put forward by our Party, investment in rail capacity would continue. Our proposal was that $216 million of profit be withdrawn from the railroads, which is the amount the Minister of Finance spent in a photo opportunity.

Madam Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Well, I did not hear a question.

Mr. Axworthy: I have not heard a question either, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

SALARIES OF CROWN CORPORATION HEADS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board who is responsible for freedom of information. He may very well know that federal public servants have refused to release the publicly paid salaries and benefits of ten heads of Crown corporations and a federal agency, after a request was made under the Freedom of Information Act. The gentlemen involved are Canadians like Mitchell Sharp, Michael Warren, Joel Bell, Maurice Strong, Claude Taylor, Rene Amyot, Jack Horner, Maurice LeClair and others.

All of those records, Madam Speaker, are in the hands of the Privy Council Office, which is subject to the Freedom of Information Act. Upon what possible ground can it be justified that information which is clearly in that category is withheld from the people of Canada who pay the salaries of these gentlemen?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the Act passed by this House on freedom of information and the Act covering privacy provide for the withholding of certain information of a personal nature. The letter in answer to the inquiry of the journalist which gave rise to my hon. friend's question said that the information in question came under that category.

However, I understand the Privy Council Office is in a position to give some of the information in question and I will be happy to get further information for my hon. friend, because certainly we want to comply with the Act. But the House has passed it in a certain form which has to be respected.

PROVISIONS IN LEGISLATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, one of the things in that statute which was supported by this Party, I remind the hon. gentleman, was that the Minister responsible always had the right to release information if it fell within the jurisdiction of that statute. This is one of those cases. When the Minister is speaking to the public servants, will he also talk to himself and remind himself about the importance of that section of the statute?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is quite right in his reference to the particular section, although there are other sections wich do not give the responsible Minister that authority. But the Act says that the Minister responsible is the head of the institution from which the information is sought, and in that regard I would suggest my hon. friend direct his question to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why don't you talk to your friend?

FISHERIES

PEARSE REPORT—ABSENCE OF WEST COAST BUY-BACK PROGRAM

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. This will be the second winter since the Pearse Report that no buy-back program has been established on the Pacific coast. Can the Minister tell the House how much money will be available this winter or in the spring for a buy-back program, and will he tell us to what degree he wishes to diminish the number of boats presently in the fleet?

• (1500)

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the position that I have taken, both on the Atlantic Coast and on the Pacific Coast, is that the Canadian Government will not use taxpayers' money to buy surplus assets. Whether we have boats or plants, this is not, I would assume, what should be done with taxpayer's money, to buy surplus assets. However, what I have said, particularly to the Minister's Advisory Council on the Pacific Coast, is that I would listen with great interest to any recommendation concerning the establishment of a legal mechanism whereby those who will remain in the fishery will finance those who would like to get out. But again, I do not think that the wisest means of using taxpayer's money is to buy the surplus assets of any Canadian.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, the Minister means well, but he does not know what he is talking about.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): On the Pacific Coast we have a very severe problem. It is just the old problem of too many fishermen catching too few fish. Why is the Government absolutely afraid to use any up front money to get the excess catching capacity out? The stocks of fish are at stake and the Government, led by this Minister and the Minister before him, does not seem to be able to know how to act. Will any money be put up as up front money, or is the Government just going to go on and do nothing?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): I have never said that the option to which the Hon. Member has alluded has been rejected by the Government. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the 17 associations that compose the Minister's Advisory Council on the Pacific fishery have promised to come to me with their own plan for the reduction of the fleet not later than November. They extracted from me a commitment that I will not come with my own plan before they have a chance to present their own. So, please respect the fishermen on the Pacific Coast a little bit.

PETITIONS

MR. YOUNG—ENACTMENT OF SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present a petition signed by some 20 residents of my riding, in which they petition the House as follows: That toxic chemicals are posing an increasing threat to the potable waters of this Province and that there is presently no legislation which will guarantee the safety and healthfulness of those waters, and that Canada's neighbour, the United States of America, has legislation entitled the "Safe Drinking Water Act of 1974"; wherefore we, the undersigned, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact a safe drinking water Act which will protect and enhance drinking water quality in all areas of Canada.

MR. ANGUISH—NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE FRANCHISE FOR SASKATOON

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I have a great deal of pleasure today in being able to present to the House a petition signed by almost 300 residents of the town of Meadow Lake in my riding and the surrounding area, all of whom support a granting of a National Hockey League franchise for the City of Saskatoon. The petition sponsored by a local newspaper and more than 30 local businesses was signed just prior to Parliament's adjournment to the summer. This is my first opportunity to bring it to the attention of the House of Commons.

The petition shows that the people of Meadow Lake who reside some 200 miles north of Saskatoon are among the many who have shown their overwhelming support for an NHL franchise for the City of Saskatoon, this overwhelming support coming not only from the City of Saskatoon itself, but also from rural areas throughout the Province.

SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA

Question No. 2,909—Mr. Clarke:

With reference to the Professional and Special Services recorded by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology for the Science Council of Canada at page 32.31, Volume II of the 1979-80 Public Accounts of Canada, with particular reference to Data Processing Services (a) how does the Council explain the 102% increase in expenditure for the item over that for 1978-79 (b) what is a list of each contract of a value more than $2,000?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Science Council of Canada is concerned:

(a) Council expenditures in certain Professional and Special Services items, such as in data processing, may fluctuate from year to year due to the changing nature of studies being carried out, which may or may not require such services. In 1979-80 a Feasibility Study on Bibliometrics accounted for almost the total expenditure reported under data processing.

(b) National Research Council, Ottawa—$24,253.

WEST COAST HAKE FISHERY

Question No. 4,906—Mr. Miller:

1. Has the budget allocated for Department of Fisheries and Oceans observers on foreign vessels fishing hake off the west coast been adequate over the past few seasons and, if not (a) has this resulted in any periods during the fishery in which there were no observers present on the foreign vessels (b) has the size of the catches and of incidental catches been monitored sufficiently to ensure that the stocks are not being placed in jeopardy?

2. Did the Department take any action on reports from the UFAWU that hake caught by foreign vessels in the national hake fishery is actually being sold back into the North American market in contravention of the international agreements?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans does not fund an observer program in the Pacific Region. (a) Yes. (b) With the best information the Department has at this time there is no fear of the stocks being in jeopardy.

2. The Department did investigate the UFAWU reports. From the information gathered there is no reasons to believe that there has been any contravention of international agreements.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF PETRO-CANADA

ESTABLISHMENT OF RELATIONS WITH TAIWAN

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should facilitate the growth of commercial, cultural and other forms of contact between the people of Canada and Taiwan through (a) the establishment of a bilateral, non-diplomatic presence between Canada and Taiwan, including the issuance of visas directly in Taiwan and Canada thereby adopting the practice of Japan, the United States and most other western industrialized nations (b) the enhancement of trade links between Canada and Taiwan, including (i) the encouragement of export trade by Canada to Taiwan through the granting of credits and other forms of support to Canadian businessmen (ii) the establishment of direct air links between Canada and Taiwan by non-flag carrier airlines (iii) the adoption of any other practical mechanism to encourage industrial and other non-diplomatic contact between Taiwan and Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the reasons for recommending, debating and making suggestions related to the motion are quite obvious. I would like to take the opportunity today to expound upon them. Unemployment, as we all know today, is our number one problem, and international trade plays an important factor relating to that problem. In fact, according to statistics provided by both the Canadian and the U.S. Governments, for every $1 billion in trade, approximately 25,000 new Canadian jobs are created. Unfortunately, unlike most other countries, Canada has not reached its full potential for a variety of reasons, one of them concerning Taiwan.

Taiwan has the fastest growing economy in the world today. Although not recognized diplomatically by many nations including Canada, virtually all non-communist industrialized countries have established some form of bilateral non-diplomatic presence with Taiwan for the sake of promoting trade, but Canada has not. Canada, along with Italy, stands virtually alone in not taking advantage of the tremendous trade potential that exists between the two countries. That is why, for example, in 1982 Canada had a trade deficit with Taiwan of $363 million and a total trade figure of only $900 million. I say "only $900 million", because if one compares the trade figures with, let us say, the United States, the difference is staggering. We are speaking of $900 million worth of trade in Canada, whereby in 1982 the United States' trading figures with Taiwan amounted to over $15 billion. Japan, Germany, Australia and other industrialized nations are also far ahead of us. The reasons are simple. These countries, although they do not recognize Taiwan diplomatically, realize the importance of not shutting out a country whose economic growth is so far ahead of Mainland China, for example, that the per capita income in the last ten years increased by some 500 per cent in Taiwan, while communist China remained constant at approximately $400 U.S. per year per capita. It is difficult to comprehend, therefore, why we in this country not only do not promote trade with Taiwan but, in fact, create obstacles that prevent improved trade relations.

Of course, a glaring example is the visa situation. It is very difficult and inconvenient for businessmen, and in fact anyone travelling between the two countries, to obtain visas. A Taiwanese businessman wishing to come to Canada must fly to Hong Kong and apply for a visa through the Canadian High Commission there, usually with lengthy waiting periods.

In fact, Mr. Ken McGillvery, a Canadian group organizer living in Taipai, writes:

> Canadians in Taiwan are irked by the present uncomfortable and sometimes offensive treatment we receive from the Canadian High Commission in Hong Kong. We have almost exhausted our patience and lost nearly all our confidence through experiences in recent years. The High Commission in Hong Kong has repeatedly made their attitude clear that Canadians living in Taiwan are a nuisance to them and they just wish that we did not exist. We get no service at all in the form of information or even a suggestion of concern for Canadian interests here. There is no channel to which we can turn should we need protection, legal advice or assistance. All these fundamental flaws of policy and administration are the making of the External Affairs Department as interpreted by the Canadian High Commission in Hong Kong.

Mr. McGillvery goes on to say:

> Chinese nationals from Taiwan are singled out for insulting and often degrading treatment by petty 'secretaries' in the Hong Kong High Commission.
> Businessmen have frequently been given a one-month visa after many delays when they have needed much longer to properly complete their essential business.

Those are comments from a Canadian living in Taiwan who sees firsthand some problems that Canadians and Taiwanese businessmen who want to do business with Canada face under these conditions.

On the other hand, Canadians wanting to travel to Taiwan, of whom there are many, must apply for visas in the United States. In fact, last year 6,000 visas were issued to Canadians travelling to Taiwan. They must apply for these visas in the United States because they cannot do so in Canada. This procedure is not only costly in terms of money but, more important to a businessman, in terms of time. Canadian businessmen deserve better. We as Parliamentarians owe it to our business community to improve this situation and we need not look further than the United States for an example.

Although the Americans do not recognize Taiwan diplomatically, as we do not, Americans can obtain their visas in many major U.S. cities such as Chicago, Boston, New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, just to name a few. The Taiwanese can have their visas processed in Taiwan at the U.S. office called the American Institute in Taiwan.

That brings me to another crucial problem facing Canadian businessmen which is, as I said earlier, that Canada is virtually alone in not having an office in Taiwan for the benefit of promoting trade, facilitating the growth of commercial, cultural and other forms of non-diplomatic contact between the people of Canada and Taiwan and generally assisting Canadians visiting Taiwan both on business and pleasure.

Why is it that other countries have taken steps for their own benefit without, I emphasize, any major repercussions from communist China while Canada is again losing out in this regard? It is not only the United States which has established these non-diplomatic relations with Taiwan while holding diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China at the same time. Other countries include New Zealand, Great Britain, West Germany, France, Greece, Japan, Australia, Austria, Argentina, Brazil, Spain, Sweden, Belgium, Switzerland, and the list goes on. All have some form of a bilateral, non-diplomatic contact between their two countries for the benefit of their respective businesses, economies and peoples.

Yet with these and other obstacles in the way, I am pleased to announce today that a delegation of businessmen from Taiwan led by Mr. Vincent Siew, Director General of the Board of Foreign Trade in Taiwan, will be signing contracts for the purchase of over $150 million worth of Canadian goods and products later this year. The delegation of 14 business representatives is scheduled to arrive in Toronto on November 9 for a 15-day visit, which will include stopovers in Sudbury, Ottawa, Saskatoon, Vancouver and, of course, Toronto. They will purchase such diversified products as wheat, potassium chloride, coal, sulphur, and nickel while at the same time looking at such potential requirements as our high-tech industry, communications, transportation and so on, all of which can be sold to Taiwan with just a little bit of co-operation and encouragement.

This gesture of goodwill by the Taiwanese business community obviously goes a long way toward reducing the trade deficit with that country. But it is just a drop in the bucket compared to the potential that exists. It is up to us to take the necessary steps to be able to reach that potential.

An obvious example of that potential, other than the areas I have mentioned, is the Candu. As everyone knows, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is experiencing serious difficulties due to the lack of orders. As a result, jobs are being lost and others are in jeopardy. In a recent report, Andrew Horvat, a Southam News reporter in Taipai, stated:

Taiwan's Power Corporation has been begging Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. to sell it a pair of reactors, but AECLs answer has been a consistent "no Candu", even though it would inject more than a billion dollars into the comatose Canadian nuclear industry.

In fact, Taiwan requires an 8,000 megawatt production in the next 15 years. That is seven times more than the James Bay project alone. They want our Candus, and they are willing to comply by any or all international safety and other regulations, as they in fact do with the U.S., France and others from whom they are currently purchasing nuclear reactors. In fact, there is a trial Candu reactor in Taiwan which is under the control of the United States. Yet we refuse to sell them more Candus even though the sale of each Candu would inject $1 billion into our economy and create 25,000 new jobs in Canada.

Under these economic conditions and with the unemployment level which exists in this country, surely some of these options should be considered by Parliament. I understand the sensitivity of having our Government deal directly with that of Taiwan, but this does not have to be the case. Atomic Energy could negotiate with the Taiwan Power Corporation or, if need be, through a third intermediary such as the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. In fact, it is precisely such an organization that could establish itself in Taiwan as a non-diplomatic office serving Canadians in processing visas in conjunction with the High Commission in Hong Kong. But they need some encouragement from this Parliament.

In fact, whether it is the Chamber of Commerce or some other organization, it could be structured along the lines of the American Institute in Taiwan. The AIT is a non-profit organization licensed in the District of Columbia and established for the purpose of carrying out U.S. transactions in Taiwan. As a result of that office the Americans are benefiting from the tremendous growth that is taking place in that country.

The time is long overdue for Canada to do the same as the United States and the other countries I have mentioned instead of continuing to miss the boat and these great opportunities, as we are currently doing, while other industrialized nations are taking full advantage of the economic phenomenon that is taking place in Taiwan.

These are just some of the things that this motion which we are debating today recommends. At the outset you read the motion, Mr. Speaker, but let me repeat it very briefly. Its purpose is for the Government to consider facilitating:

—the growth of commercial, cultural and other forms of contact between the people of Canada and Taiwan through (a) the establishment of a bilateral, non-diplomatic presence between Canada and Taiwan, including the issuance of visas directly in Taiwan and Canada thereby adopting the practice of Japan, the United States and most other western industrialized nations (b) the enhancement of trade links between Canada and Taiwan, including (i) the encouragement of export trade by Canada to Taiwan through the granting of credits and other forms of support to Canadian businessmen (ii) the establishment of direct air links between Canada and Taiwan—

—(iii) the adoption of any other practical mechanism to encourage industrial and other non-diplomatic contact between Taiwan and Canada.

Having said that, I want to emphasize that in no way are we suggesting getting embroiled in a diplomatic situation. We do not have to get embroiled in a diplomatic situation. We recognize Taiwan diplomatically. We are suggesting that we take full advantage of the opportunities that exist in Taiwan.

I know the thrust of this motion is supported by many Members on both sides of the House. In fact, the motion was drafted earlier this year by members of the Canada-Taiwan Parliamentary Friendship Committee, of which there are 60 or 70 bipartisan Members of this House and of the other place.

Let me reiterate that what we are recommending is not new from an international standpoint. It is not a precedent-setting idea, far from it. I will repeat again, because I have to, that what is being suggested is for Canada to follow the lead of most other non-communist industrialized nations. These nations, which took positive steps before we did, continue to build and to enjoy diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China without any loss of face or trade potential, whatever it is worth, yet their economies grow as a result of their increased trade with Taiwan.

We believe that, should measures of this nature be adopted for Canada, it would lead toward realizing and utilizing the full potential that exists, a potential able to create tens of thousands of jobs in Canada and that would inject billions of dollars of much needed capital into our economy. To this end we urge the Government to join virtually all other non-communist industrialized nations in establishing a non-diplomatic presence in Taiwan so as to take full advantage of the tremendous trade potential for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words on the Bill that has been proposed by the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek). I believe it is a Bill that brings a good debate to the House of Commons.

I have never had the opportunity to visit Taiwan. The special passports that Canadian Members of Parliament have are not valid for that country.

I want to say a few words about how I see some of the difficulties which this Bill could impose on Canada's long-term relations with China. I believe our relations with China in all areas, particularly trade, cultural exchange, aid or in whatever other way they may take place, are extremely important. I speak as a Member from the Province of Saskatchewan. The Province of Saskatchewan has long-term trade relations with China, particularly in the areas of wheat and potash. These relations, which grew under the leadership of the former NDP Government in Saskatchewan, are continuing and being pursued by the present PC Government in power. The Premier of Saskatchewan, the Hon. Grant Devine, is going to China soon to continue discussions on the possibility of extending trade with China, in particular in the areas of wheat and potash.

Canada does have trade relations with China and these relations are developing. On the other hand, I think it is important for us to be aware that Canadians in general, myself in particular, do not completely understand or sense the tremendous political, cultural and historical problems that exist between China and Taiwan. I had an opportunity to visit China several years ago. I had discussions with the Chinese. They do not see Taiwan as an independent country. They simply see it as one of the provinces of China that, in a sense, is acting illicitly. The Government of China expects that province in due course to come to its senses and to return to being part of the mainland. This is, of course, an extremely complex and difficult situation. The sensitivities of the Chinese Government and the Chinese people are such that infringing in whatever way into an increased presence in Taiwan now could lead to a deterioration in the relationship which I feel is very important with Mainland China.

Ten years ago many people probably would never have heard about Taiwan. I think that is a possibility. I think ten years ago many people would never have used anything made in Taiwan. They would have looked upon it as something that was impossible. I think Canadian labour, Canadian management and industry in general has to be very conscious of countries like Taiwan that have made a jump into the industrial world, bypassed many of the traditional industrialized countries and, in a sense, have run ahead with much of their technology. It is essentially based, I believe, on the fact that Taiwan has had the management ability to see into the future, but at the same time it has had massive cheap labour.

Mr. Siddon: Cheap labour?

Mr. Ogle: I would say Canadian industry, labour and management have to be very careful to look at what would happen if an increased trade relationship took place with Taiwan. What would actually happen? Would it truly result in Canadians having more jobs, or would this just build up a trading possibility in Taiwan that, in the final event, would take away from what Canadians are already doing and what Canadians are already exporting?

I thank the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) for bringing this discussion to the floor of the House of Commons. I would very much like to indicate some areas that have not—

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) aware that the per capita income in Taiwan is ten times higher than it is in Mainland China?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I might explain to Hon. Members that the Chair usually accepts an intervention called a point of order in which an Hon. Member seeks the consent of the Member speaking to put a question. But to stand on a point of order and put a question does not constitute a point of order.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I would have no difficulty accepting a question. I would continue discussing what the Member has put forward, which I believe is a good intervention.

As to the relativity of the labour income, the Taiwanese have a higher rate than China. I was making comments about the relative income of Taiwanese labour and income in Canada and the industrialized West, and the income in Taiwan is much lower. We have to relate as Members of Parliament to people who are thinking about incomes based on historical precedent in this country, not to incomes in a country where they are much lower than we have experienced in our past.

Finally on the question of the exporting of Candus to Taiwan, I would have to express real concern myself. I do not personally believe that the Candu reactor or any kind of atomic energy put into the world community today is the way we can face future energy possibilities.

On the last point made by the previous speaker, I would just say I do not see the export of Candus, which have not proven economically to be a good thing for Canada as far as I can see, would be a means of bringing about this trade which the Hon. Member is advocating. I thank the Chair for enabling me to make these remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Standing Orders do not provide for an opportunity to ask questions, but there is no difficulty in Hon. Members seeking the consent of the Hon. Member who had the floor and presumably, in an implied way, the consent of the House to ask questions. The rules are such that there is no provision for a ten-minute question and answer period.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) which relates to the one of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Is the Hon. Member aware that the standard of living in Taiwan is on an order of magnitude that is higher than that on the communist Mainland? Would he not agree that this has something to do with the free enterprise nature of the economy of Taiwan as opposed to the communist doctrine under which the Mainland Government operates its industries? Also, is he aware of the fact that productivity bonuses are paid to workers in industries such as the large new steel company at Kaosiung in southern Taiwan, to the extent that there are no work stoppages? There are recreational facilities on the plant site; in fact, workers are receiving considerable productivity bonuses each month as an initiative to ensure that they earn their $6,000 to $10,000 per year income.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to discuss that point with the Hon. Member. I appreciate the statistics which he has given. He clearly outlined, as I indicated in my argument, the difficulty of the philosophical understanding of the culture of another place. I appreciate the fact that he talked about an imposed new form of economic structure in a country. I have seen the same kind of economic structure imposed on many other countries as well. I would take Latin America as a good example of that. When transnational companies move into a cheap labour place, they naturally have to raise the expectations of those people who live there. Basically what they are doing is setting up situations in which their transnational products will be able to compete against those in the places where the headquarters of the transnationals are situated, which happens to be North America or Europe.

I repeat that it is important to realize we are talking about relationships from our point of view, from the point of view of Taiwan and from the point of view of China. They are all different points of view, but the possibility of transnational companies setting up a new form of economics in another country and going into a cheap labour market finally works against the people living in that country. I could back that up with many examples.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member would permit a question. Would he agree that the free enterprise in Taiwan is far closer to our way of life than the communist system of Mainland China?

Mr. Jelinek: And therefore more successful.

Mr. Ogle: I am pleased to continue to conduct this class, but the model introduced in Taiwan is naturally closer to that in parts of North America. If we look at the North American model, we have to be very careful to look at its final effects, one of which I have noticed particularly in North America, that is, the deterioration of the living conditions of people. I could point to the recent experiences in Detroit, Chicago and Gary, Indiana; in places where the industrial revolution took place it left jungles. We have examples of violence taking place in those cities now which I do not think takes place in China. I do not think the quality of life in China has reached that point. At least my limited experience has not shown that. When one gets into a situation basically built upon per capita income, one witnesses a breakdown of society. It is a value thing about which I talked in my first argument. I just have an opinion on it, but it is something which we must look at when we are discussing true development.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Unless instructed otherwise, the Chair is operating on the notion that there is implied consent of the House for Hon. Members to put questions to the Hon. Member who just spoke. I will know that the implied consent is terminated when some Hon. Member indicates that we should recognize the next Hon. Member for the purpose of debate. I might add that certainly debate is made more interesting by the ability and competence of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) who is answering these questions. But it is on his consent and on the unanimous consent of the House that we proceed, in no other way.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member aware of the fact that the per capita income in Taiwan over the last ten years has increased by 500 per cent, whereas the per capita income on Mainland China has remained constant at approximately $400 U.S. per year? It seems to me that he is against the development of any new jobs in Canada.

Mr. Ogle: Previously I thought I made the argument that if jobs go to the lower paid transnational sites of companies—

Mr. Jelinek: I am talking about jobs in Canada.

Mr. Ogle: —they finally take away from jobs in Canada. One of the basic reasons there are high levels of unemployment in the industrial West right now is that jobs traditionally held in western developed countries are now going to places where cheap labour has been established and where transnational companies have set up new companies or new sites to manufacture exactly the same products that were formerly manufactured in the West. My hon. colleagues in the House of Commons today are probably all wearing watches that were made in a country which probably did not manufacture such things 25 years ago.

Mr. Siddon: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Ogle: There is nothing wrong with that at all, as long as we are able to build something equal we can trade and at the same time provide the quality of life for workers here to which they have become accustomed. I do not think we could possibly tell North American workers that they have to return to the level of a worker in Taiwan. I do not think that will happen. Perhaps the Hon. Member has different people in his riding than I have, but I do not think it will happen.

The basic question of the North-South relationship has been studied by a task force of the House. It pointed at the fact that a recession would take place in the North unless there was co-operation with the South or with the developing world. The relationship of income to life is a good point, except that there are certain areas in the world—and China is one of them—in which I do not see any possibility of the standard of life now accepted by us ever being reached. For instance, if everyone on Mainland China had a car, I have been told that the steel resources of the world would be all used up. We have to look at what standard of life is possible and how people, wherever they happen to live, relate to their standard of life.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. Does he realize, for example, that presently Canada imports more from Taiwan than we export to Taiwan? There is an imbalance of trade. Also, does he realize that we are exporting more to Mainland China than we are importing? Does he know about the present involvement of Petro-Canada off the coast of Mainland China? We as a country are being barred from supplying offshore rig technology because it is available in the shipyards in Korea. The other technical expertise is available in Singapore and Hong Kong, but the dollars of Canadian taxpayers are going through Petro-Canada to the offshore in a very risky venture from which we may not be able to obtain a return on our investment or indeed get our investment back. In other words, we are dealing with a closed society on Mainland China and a more open society in Taiwan. How does the Hon. Member square his remarks with those comments?

Mr. Ogle: I want to make clear to the Hon. Member that I never said we should cut off trade with Taiwan. I am unable to say that I know all the facts he presented. I just accept that the Hon. Member researched them. I never said anything about cutting off trade with Taiwan. I said that in trading with Taiwan, it is extremely important to consider the cultural, historical and political reality of what that means to China. I believe that our role with Mainland China in the long run will be much more important than our role with Taiwan. That is a historical fact. I do not say it is better, worse or whatever. It is a fact that our role with China is much more important. I repeat that I never said we should cut off trade with Taiwan. All I said is that in the discussion today many aspects have to be looked at that are not in dollars and cents.

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the speeches of a few Hon. Members. I would like to ask the Hon. Member who proposed the motion whether he has addressed himself to what role Canada can play to reunite Mainland China and Taiwan. I have yet to hear of any suggestions by Parliamentarians who have been in Taiwan as to whether this will be possible. I know it would be a very honourable objective for Canadians to aim for, since it would be better for both countries. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's views and whether he has addressed himself to this problem.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to answer that question. The Hon. Member probably has not read "The Three Principles of the People" by Dr. Sun Yat-sen. I will be happy to send him the book. It would take too much time in this debate to state all the facts in those three principles. However, I would support, as I believe the majority of the Members in this House would support, Taiwan's wish to reunite the two Chinas. We are certainly supportive of that and support the three principles of the people as written by Dr. Sun Yat-sen.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for recognizing me after a lengthy question and answer session, and it is with great pleasure that I express my agreement with the motion put by my colleague on the opposite side of the House. It shows that in this House, all of us, even Opposition Members, have the same goal which is to improve the well-being of the Canadian people, and if the motion proposed today were to be implemented, I sincerely believe this would promote increased trade between Canada and Taiwan, and as a result, create several thousand jobs in Canada, for the most part in high technology areas where salaries are high. When we are talking about CANDU, we are also talking about high salaries and high technology, and many Canadians would stand to benefit.

The previous speaker mentioned earlier that one of the reasons for the recession being felt in northern countries is the inability of the poorer countries in the south to buy our products. The proposal in question would help countries in the south to raise their standards of living and to buy goods from the north. It would also promote the creation of jobs here in Canada. Fortunately, China, as the Hon. Member mentioned earlier, does not intend to buy cars for all its people, because in that case, there would not be enough steel to go around, and we probably would not have had a new Opposition Leader. The Iron Ore Company would still be in business, and perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would still be president.

To get back to Taiwan and the kind of country it is, I would say that it is a democracy. I visited that country and saw its industry and its people, I asked a lot of questions, and I had a lot to think about. When visiting that country, we realize that its people have an enormous will to succeed, to make their way in the world and to get their own place in the sun, and that they are very hard workers. They are good workers in industry but also in their schools and universities, because the level of education is rising very rapidly, a sign of considerable ambition. This eagerness to work and to study has, as my colleagues mentioned earlier, resulted in a very substantial increase in the standard of living of the people of Taiwan. At first, the country had trouble even feeding its people, and today, the people are not only being fed but offered the luxury of having better doctors, improved medical care, and a better education, and I think this is a trend we Canadians would agree is a fortunate one that we would like to see in all countries throughout the world.

It is sometimes difficult for us Canadians to promote trade with Taiwan, because the situation is somewhat tense between Communist China and that country. However, when we are doing business, do we have to go into all the differences that often exist between the people of a country who have gone their separate ways? Today, we are selling a host of goods to the USSR, and I have no objection to that, although I am sure that many Canadians do not agree with the political system in that country. However, whatever the Soviet political system may be to us, we are selling them wheat, raw materials and many kinds of finished products, while they are selling us cars and a number of other commodities. So in the case of China and Taiwan, I think we should let those countries settle their own differences. They are mature people who are capable of governing themselves. However, we, as the Canadian Government, must take advantage of the opportunities we are offered and sell as many products as we can to this country. In fact, today, and it has been the case for many years, Taiwan exports a large number of products to Canada, and all consumers in the House or in the visitors' gallery will certainly agree with me that we see a lot of items made in Taiwan in the stores. Other countries, very important countries such as the United States, Japan, France, Germany and most industrialized countries have solved this problem. They have not officially recognized Taiwan at the diplomatic level, but they have sent commercial attachés there in order to promote trade, and when we promote trade, it very often works out to the advantage of both countries.

I feel that Canada should establish links with Taiwan by sending commercial attachés, by facilitating the issuance of visas and by encouraging contacts between business people in Canada and Taiwan with a view to establishing the requirements of our respective countries and to promoting trade. I am convinced that what we have here is a desire to open our minds to a more liberal view of the world as a whole.

As far as our workers are concerned, Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that Taiwan needs raw materials, as my colleague mentioned earlier, but more importantly, Taiwan also needs finished products, and especially nuclear reactors. It is not up to us to decide whether in the future, energy will be produced by nuclear means or otherwise, but that country needs electric power and is prepared to buy nuclear reactors. It has already done so in other countries. Whenever Canada sells a reactor for $1 billion, several thousands of jobs are created. The city of Taipei urgently needs to improve access to the city by subway and by train. We have Canadian companies that are among the most advanced in transportation technology, and I can think of one example, namely, Bombardier, a company that is located in Quebec, and which not long ago was awarded a contract to manufacture subway cars for New York City. I want to emphasize that as far as advanced technology is concerned, we could export our skills and our manpower. I am convinced that if we stand firm, Communist China will understand the situation and continue to buy commodities it needs in Canada.

Finally, I want to say that I agree with the motion, and that I intend to work to have it accepted. I think all Canadians stand to benefit.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I believe that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) was rising on a point of order, is that correct?

Mr. Nystrom: No, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to participate in the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case, I think it is appropriate to recognize the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates).

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very pleased to assist the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) in order to allow him to participate in the debate before its conclusion. However, I would first very much like to offer my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek). He is a long time friend of Taiwan and a realist about international business.

One of his frustrations, and one of my frustrations during the period of time since we recognized the People's Republic of China and stopped recognizing the Republic of China on Taiwan, has been the inability of our business community to utilize fully the opportunities that could be available to them in Taiwan.

The statistics that were referred to by the Hon. Member for Halton are a shocking example of just how out of kilter things have become from a trade point of view. There is no realistic reason for that to have happened. The Hon. Member for Halton indicated, by referring to numerous countries around the world, that indeed there are very few that do not have a realistic commercial arrangement with Taiwan. If that were the case with Canada, businessmen who know no boundaries in their efforts to secure business opportunities could move between Canada and Taiwan with the least possible delay and with the greatest possibility of securing the business opportunities that exist there.

The Hon. Member for Halton pointed out that a trade delegation from Taiwan was coming to Canada very soon and would be bringing with it contracts worth something in the order of $150 million. That is just one of many examples of the possibilities that exist in Taiwan for our business community.

It pleased me very much to hear the Hon. Member for Halton pose a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the House earlier this year in order to secure from the Prime Minister a somewhat different approach than has been taken concerning the sale of Candu nuclear power stations since the time we withdrew recognition from the Republic of China. It is my hope that in the days ahead we will be able to work out a business arrangement so that we can assist the Chinese people to diversify their energy possibilities through the use of a Candu nuclear power station.

Regardless of whether one is in favour of or against nuclear power, it is a reality today and, in my opinion, the Candu reactor is the safest and cheapest nuclear power station in the world today. If we are interested in safe forms of nuclear energy, then the Candu reactor is certainly the best vehicle to produce that for the people.

In April of this year, it pleased me very much to join the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) at the opening of a nuclear power station in Korea. We are hearing about the possible constructin of two nuclear power stations in Romania. Well, we may not like what is happening with the Chinese people, but surely to goodness we do not endorse the kind of Government that exists in Romania. Yet we are willing to sit down and do business with Romanians by selling them a nuclear power station. If the Government of Taiwan is willing to provide us the same safeguards as is the Government of Romania, then why are we not selling nuclear power stations to the Government of Taiwan? There is no realistic reason for that.

At this time, we realize that there is a junta in control of Argentina. That is not the same form of government that we have in Canada, but we have just recently opened a new nuclear power station in Argentina. That does not mean that we endorse the form of government that exists in Argentina, but it does mean that we know that Argentinians will buy a nuclear power station from somebody. If they do not buy it from us, then they will buy it from Germany or from France or from the United States. Well, why not buy it from Canada so that we can be of assistance in maintaining and improving the possibilities that exist for a nuclear industry in Canada? As far as I am concerned, those possibilities are vital to our country as we move toward the twenty-first century.

The suggestions contained in the motion of the Hon. Member for Halton are very realistic. It is very frustrating for a businessman from Canada or a businessman from Taiwan to try to move back and forth between Canada and Taiwan. That is stupid. There is no other word for it, it is just plain stupid.

A very significant celebration will take place in Taiwan next month. It is called "Double Ten" and occurs on October 10. It is a most sacred and very special holiday for the people of Taiwan. I will bet money, Mr. Speaker, that there will be Governors from at least 25 States of the United States present along with members of their various business communities with their order books who will be doing business. Where are we? We are trying to work out an arrangement whereby a businessman can get a visa to visit Taiwan. How are we to meet the competition if that sort of thing is allowed to happen?

It does not surprise me that members of the NDP are concerned about communist China and our relations with communist China. If we are concerned about that, what about almost every other nation in the world that has worked out a realistic commercial arrangement that allows businessmen to move back and forth without difficulty? Are their business arrangements and diplomatic relations in jeopardy because they allow this? That is just a lot of hogwash, and one can only expect that from the socialists who are trying to stick up for the communists. Well, I am not trying to stick up for the communists, neither here nor in China nor anywhere else. At least in Taiwan there is a democratic Government, and that is what I stand for. I want to help democratic Governments wherever they happen to be. I am not worried about communists.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: Our socialist friends are concerned about human rights. I have heard how they abhor capital punishment. I believe that only a week or so ago I read in the newspaper that the Chinese communists put on a big show. They invited all of the people and they lined their own people up against the wall and shot 30 or 40 of them at one time simply to make an impression on the rest of the people in that country. Well, if that is what they endorse, that is fine and dandy but that is not what I endorse. If I have to make a choice between supporting the people of Taiwan or supporting the People's Republic of China, then I am on the side of Taiwan today, tomorrow and the next day.

● (1600)

I think most Members of the House—at least Members of the two major Parties in the House—feel exactly the same way. We stand for democracy. I am not sure where Members at the end of the Chamber stand. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, whom I remember meeting after a visit to communist China, would give us the benefit of some of his ideas as a result of visiting that country and tell us how well off the people were, as he saw during his travels.

I have not gone to communist China but I have gone to Taiwan a number of times. I do not want to go to communist China, thank you very much. I hope to go back to Taiwan sometime, however, and see the free enterprise system working effectively and well.

We heard about the North-South dialogue. Taiwan would rank high in a list of the best agricultural economies in the world. Besides producing three times the amount of food on the same amount of land, since 1949, it has established one of the finest agricultural colleges in the world. It has special programs to bring people from the developing nations to Taiwan to assist, through educational programs in that college, the development of their agricultural industry. That is the type of thing that is happening in Taiwan today and it is of real benefit to the people. I endorse that type of thing totally.

Again, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Halton. It is a long time since we have had a debate on this subject in the House. The Hon. Member is to be commended for making it possible, and I enjoyed taking part in the debate.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of debate, I wonder if I could ask the Hon. Member one question?

Mr. Coates: Agreed.

Mr. Ogle: I was very interested in his remarks. I appreciate his position and in no way want to change it. As a Member of the Progressive Conservative Party, which has so many people in favour of capital punishment, I would have expected that he would have brought the argument around the other way in favour of China which is carrying it out publicly. If you were going to have it, you should have it as they do, for all the people to see. I make this point because—

Mr. Jelinek: The next thing you are going to want is public flogging.

Mr. Ogle: The point I am making, in the same spirit as the point was made to me, is that I believe the Hon. Member should have come down on the other side of the question. If I could, I would suggest to him that he should take the opportunity to visit China some time. He does not have to agree with what they are doing, but over one-quarter of the people of the world live there.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member what model of development he would use to develop China?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, that is very obvious—just use Taiwan as an example. The free enterprise system would produce for the billion or so people in China a much more realistic future than exists at the present time. The Hon. Member for Halton pointed out that in ten years Taiwan has increased the level of income by 500 per cent, while in Mainland China it has remained the same. If that is the example you want to use, then communism does not work there or anywhere else. That is exactly the way I feel about it.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the previous speaker who implied that if one happened to visit China, then one was a communist or a communist sympathizer.

Mr. Coates: I did not say that.

Mr. Nystrom: I said you were implying that, I thought, in your remarks.

Mr. Coates: Never.

Mr. Nystrom: I am glad that he was not implying that, Mr. Speaker, because if he was, there would be another communist sympathizer, namely the Premier of Saskatchewan, Grant Devine. He will take off for China in the next few days. Peter Lougheed has been there, of course, and the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has been to China.

I never thought I would be defending the Premier of Saskatchewan against his own Party, but perhaps I have to. He is going to China because it is very important to the economy of Saskatchewan. I come from that Province and in the House I represent the people of that Province. Saskatchewan exports over half its commodities to China, including wheat and potash. That country happens to be very important to the economic well-being of my constituency. That is a major reason why the Premier of my Province is going to China.

What is important to the economy of Saskatchewan is very important to the economy of all of Canada, including that part represented by the Member who moved the motion, the Province of Ontario.

I want to make that point because if we are going to talk about more trade with Taiwan, we must realize the political sensitivity of the situation with the People's Republic of China and the importance of maintaining very good relations with that country.

I happened to be listening to an open-line radio show the other day and heard the Premier of Saskatchewan say that he wanted more cultural exchanges between China and Saskatchewan, a greater exchange of farmers with Chinese farmers coming to Saskatchewan and our farmers going to China and an exchange of young people from the universities. That is the "commy" Premier of Saskatchewan speaking, the Conservative Grant Devine.

Some of these dinosaurs off to my right are so out of touch with reality that they should crawl back into their cage. That is the better place for them.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is not discussing the motion. It does not state that we are against communist China. It recommends that Canada join the rest of the industrialized world in increasing trade with Taiwan. The Hon. Member is not relating his remarks to the motion. He is talking political—I do not want to use the words that are in my mind.

An Hon. Member: Hogwash.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville. Perhaps I should indicate that the time allowed for debate of this particular motion expired at 4:07. Because there was a point of order, the Chair will extend a moment to the Hon. Member to complete his remarks and then seek consent for the next item.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) said, we are not talking about cutting off trade with Taiwan. What this Party and my Province say—Conservatives and others as well—is that when we talk of increasing trade with Taiwan, we must realize that there is a very sensitive political situation regarding China. It is very important that we do not alienate China and lose trade with that country. It happens to be exceedingly important to my Province and my people. I want to make that point very emphatically to other Members of the House.

It is not just this Party that is concerned. The Conservative Premier of my Province is going to China within a few days as the head of a delegation. I think that shows the importance of visiting China and the importance of trying to strengthen ties between Canadians and the Chinese.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2) and considering the time as 4.09 this afternoon, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

Shall all items under Private Members' Notices of Motions (Papers) preceding item No. 23 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

STUDY ON ECONOMIC IMPACT OF DELAY IN ALSANDS AND IMPERIAL OIL PROJECTS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all papers and studies done for any department or agency concerning the economic impact to Canada of a one-year delay in the development of the Alsands project in Fort McMurray, Alberta and the Imperial Oil project in Cold Lake, Alberta.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think anyone familiar with my activities in this House, particularly as they relate to the national energy policy and the resulting destruction of the tar sands and oil industry situated in my riding, will understand, when reading the order I have put forward, that I ask for copies of all papers and studies done by any department or agency concerning the economic impact on Canada of a one-year delay in the development of the Alsands project in Fort McMurray and the oil sands project of Imperial Oil in Cold Lake. This was done on December 22, 1982. At that time, if you will remember, the announcements coming out of northeastern Alberta were pretty much gloom and doom as they relate to the oil sands industry. Alsands had announced its consortium had collapsed and it was not going to proceed with the $12 billion project. At approximately the same time it was announced that the Imperial Oil project in my riding was not going to be proceeded with.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, statements were made by the Alsands consortium and Imperial Oil which indicated these projects were not economically viable, but always with the proviso that this was so because of the present fiscal regime existing in the national energy policy, particularly the petroleum gas revenue tax. That tax represented a massive grab from these very sensitive and very marginal operations, taking money from the investors and the production at a time when it was risky business to develop these projects. Indeed, in some ways it is still a risky business to develop them.

The Alsands project presents a massive infusion of capital to buy the equipment and machinery, to build the complex necessary to mine the sands because in the open-pit mining process there are vast amounts of overburden which have to be removed in order to get at the oilsands. Syncrude and Suncor are doing this now. It is remarkable to note that 20 years ago Suncor went into that very speculative venture, the mining of the oil sands, to develop a process for extraction and upgrading of this very heavy bitumen into a very high quality synthetic crude. In fact, it is of such high quality that it is in demand virtually everywhere.

Learning from the experience of the Great Canadian Oil Sands plant, which later became Suncor, Syncrude went into developing a project which cost $9 billion. Again learning from their predecessor across the road, they developed and are now producing probably twice the capacity of the Suncor plant. The reason I am giving you the background on this, Mr. Speaker, is that I want everyone to understand that the Economic Council of Canada indicated two years ago in a study that $260 billion must be spent between now and 1990 if Canada is to reach oil self-sufficiency. Remember that at that time there was also the fight over the energy agreement between the Province of Alberta and the federal Government. When it was struck, the petroleum gas revenue tax included in the new national energy policy was so devastating that both Alsands and Imperial Oil at Cold Lake said no, we cannot risk $12 billion to invest in these massive projects because of the massive tax grab by the federal Government. That is in effect what they say.

Now, the Minister of Energy at that time and the Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien) today will deny this. The various Parliamentary Secretaries and Liberal backbenchers will all deny this. They say it costs too much, it is inflation, interest rates. They go through all of that, but when you come to the bottom line the companies themselves state that the PGRT was too big a bite and it now becomes too risky.

What was being risked, Mr. Speaker? Let us look at Imperial Oil. We were asking Imperial Oil, with a total capitalization in Canada of less than $12 billion, to gamble all of its assets in Canada on one plant in Cold Lake. That is what it amounted to. The mining of the oil sands in the Cold Lake area is different from that in Fort McMurray because it is not strip mining. There are various methods they are trying to develop such as drilling holes and pumping gas or hot water to heat the sands and then pump up the crude. The overburden is much too heavy or thick to remove.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a giant research and development project. Not only does it create jobs and contribute to our energy security and our balance of payments because we replace offshore oil with that from the oil sands, but it is developing technology which is needed in places like Venezuela which also has oil sands. I had a discussion with the Ambassador from Venezuela the other night. When he heard that I was from the riding of Athabasca he immediately recognized that as the area where research and development was taking place which he and his countrymen are very interested in. But we must consider the costs and the recovery of those costs is enhanced when a plant like this goes ahead.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that some Member from the Liberal side is going to stand today and say that the plants, these megaprojects, are dead, they are too expensive, or that the Hon. Member for Athabasca knows full well that the cost of oil was dropping and therefore they could not recover their investment and they became too risky. Before those statements are made, Mr. Speaker, I would only say that that is balderdash because the companies clearly indicate in press releases that it was the fiscal regime put in place by the federal Government which made the venture too risky.

Surprisingly enough, yesterday in Calgary the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, with the Minister of Energy for Alberta, announced that new life is being breathed into the Imperial Oil Project at Cold Lake. In the official press release from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Canada, the Minister noted, "At the peak of the construction, 700 direct jobs will be created and will be filled primarily by residents of the Cold Lake region. Another 90 permanent jobs will result from the operational phase of the project. Three hundred million dollars is being invested for 700 construction jobs and 90 permanent jobs." What was originally proposed at Cold Lake was a project which, at peak construction, would provide 7,500 jobs, which would translate into 3,000 permanent jobs, from one plant alone. Double the figure, because the same type of investment was to be made north of Fort McMurray with the Alsands project. Can one imagine the effect there would be on the economy of the country today, the effect on the unemployment figures of 1.5 million people, had those two plants been allowed to continue? The unemployment figure would have been reduced by at least 500,000 to 700,-

000. That would be the impact of those two plants across Canada. It would have created an economic stimulus in Ontario alone of close to $7 billion in continual spending over the life of the projects.

However, when one turns the press release over, there is one statement that really points to where the Government is at: "The federal Government will provide earned depletion allowance". That is one thing that the Government denied both plants. The Government said that one cannot have earned depletion allowance. It further states that there will be "a waiver of payment of the petroleum gas revenue tax until the company has recovered its capital cost in accordance with the federal budget provisions announced in April 1983". In other words, when both the Alsands consortium and the Imperial Oil project at Cold Lake were prepared to invest $12 billion in each plant, a total of $24 billion, the Government said, "No, you will not receive depletion allowance. Yes, you will pay petroleum gas revenue tax from the moment you start pumping oil into the pipeline". But now Imperial has come back, and to encourage Imperial to invest $300 million, which may develop into $1.5 billion over the next three years, the Government has done exactly what the oil companies and the heavy oil industry said needed to be done in the first place. I would suggest that it is exactly two years too late.

If the Government had not been so concerned with grabbing from the goose that was laying the golden egg, if it had not been so concerned that someone might make a dollar, there would be two plants in northeastern Alberta ready to come onstream, probably in 18 months, producing 280,000 barrels of oil per day, which would amount to approximately 14 per cent of our total national supply of oil. Employment would be created across Canada in virtually every Province amounting to over 500,000 jobs, and probably closer to 700,000 jobs. We would not be buying oil offshore. We are presently importing under 200,000 barrels a day and even paying spot prices in some cases which are higher than world prices, adding to our deficit in foreign trade, which affects the dollar and employment in a vicious cycle. We would have already saved at least $5 billion in unemployment insurance benefits that have been paid out because the jobs were not there. We would have saved untold misery across the country to those men and women who are unemployed and who have now exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits, those who have sold their homes, cars, personal belongings and have gone onto welfare. God only knows how much damage we would have saved the children who are witnessing traumatic kinds of confrontations that they have never before seen happening in their families. We do not have to be all that intelligent to understand what happens when a man walks into his home—or a woman—and sees children for which he cannot provide because he cannot find a job in a stagnant economy. It does not take much to imagine the kinds of things that go on in that home. It would have saved small companies and even larger companies. Tar Sands Machine and Welding was a company in Fort McMurray owned by an individual who had invested his time, his life savings, and who was doing a superb job in the heavy oil industry. However, with the collapse of Alsands, of course, he collapsed. He had about 65 employees who all lost their jobs. I could recount numbers of different companies all over northeastern Alberta to which this happened primarily because the Government would not clear the smoke from its eyes. The Government was so concerned because it thought Alberta was being greedy and pitted the rest of the country against certain people in the oil industry in Alberta. This cash-starved Government was so concerned with grabbing as many dollars as possible, spending like a drunken sailor with no accountability to the House of Commons, that it killed two projects that are needed today as they were needed then and will be needed tomorrow for our own security. The security of our country is at stake because we do not have a secure supply of oil. Yet we have Petro-Canada, which receives a stipend from the Canadian taxpayer, investing $.5 billion in offshore China to develop oil reserves there.

When questioned as to why this is being allowed to happen, the answer comes back, "It will be a supply of oil for Canada". My God, we have reserves in the tar sands which surpass the known conventional reserves in the Middle East. We have an abundance of oil and we have the ability and technology to extract it from the tar sands. It could create jobs in Canada and thereby decimate the unemployment lines. It would keep dollars in Canada instead of their being spent offshore for oil. It would create a healthy economy. It would bind the country together because when there are jobs in northeastern Alberta, people would come from every Province to that area. God bless them for it because it creates a mix of Canadians in the region. When Hibernia finally develops people will migrate to the region from one end of the country to the other and there will be a mix. That is how we build a country.

My motion is very simple. I only want to see the papers and the studies that were done. To my knowledge, these studies were done and indicated to the Government and the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, before he brought down his National Energy Policy in Bill C-48, the drastic consequences if those plants did not come onstream. Yet he ignored it.

My final comment is that we were looking at an outside investment, not Government investment, of $24 billion. The Economic Council of Canada stated very clearly in their studies that $260 billion must be invested in the energy sector if we are to have energy self-sufficiency by the year 2000, not 1990.

I hope Hon. Members will join with me and force the Government to table these papers so that everyone in the House of Commons and all Canadians can see why and how the Government came to its decision with the petroleum gas revenue tax.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to speak in this debate because it deals with what I believe is a very important question, oil sands development and particularly the Alsands project.

Before I commence with what I intend to say, let me suggest that the demagoguery of the Hon. Member who just spoke is just incredible. To suggest as he does that the federal Government alone is responsible for the fact that the Alsands project did not proceed is to continue in the same kind of demagoguery, and what I would characterize as garbage, that we hear from Members on that side of the House when it comes to energy issues. Whenever the federal Government becomes involved in policies on national issues, some Members, particularly in the Conservative Party, think that it is sacrilege.

The Hon. Member should know and have the honesty to tell the public that the timing error for the Alsands project occurred when Premier Lougheed and his Government decided to use the Alsands project as a hostage in the negotiations for an oil pricing agreement. This was in the winter of 1980 and 1981, well before the Alsands project was finally cancelled by the companies involved after the very attractive offer both Governments made in the spring of 1982. That is when the mistake was made. It is unfortunate.

Premier Lougheed decided that this was one of the projects he would hold up. He could have found a fiscal regime in the fall of 1980 and winter of 1981 for the Alsands project. The federal Government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at that time kept answering questions in the House and saying publicly that he was ready at any time to sit down to get an agreement on a fiscal regime with the Province of Alberta for the Alsands project. However, the Premier of Alberta decided that he would not have it so. That was well before the oil pricing agreement was arrived at in the beginning of September or end of August.

Premier Lougheed had used the Alsands project as a pawn in very tough negotiations. I am not saying he was wrong in using it that way because he is very effective at protecting the interests of his electorate. He made the political judgment that he would not let that project go ahead and would not negotiate the fiscal regime with the Government of Canada or with the companies before he had an oil pricing agreement. That is all right, but he made that decision, not the federal Government.

I distinctly recall the discussions we had in our caucus and the discussions that were held elsewhere when we were pleading with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to do more to ensure that the project would go ahead, because, as the Member said, it was not only very important in terms of energy supply, the security of supply for the future of Canada, but it was very important because of the industrial benefits it would have provided across the country. But the Alberta Government refused to negotiate a fiscal regime before there was an oil pricing agreement.

That error was made and it is unfortunate. We all know what occurred subsequently. As we got into 1982 the pricing situation became uncertain. Despite the very attractive offer on the part of both levels of Government, the companies decided not to proceed. At that time both Governments did all they could but unfortunately it was too late. The offer that was presented jointly by both Governments first assured private sector participation would be at least 50 per cent, but in view of normal tax write-offs the two Governments would provide guarantees for 68 per cent of the private sector expenditures in the pre-production period. Second, no repayment of interest or principal would be scheduled until after start-up. Interest on the guaranteed loan could be capitalized and added to the oustanding loan balance and the guarantee increased accordingly. After production start-up, 58 per cent of the net revenue accruing to the private sector would be paid on the loan guarantees. Net revenue was equal to gross revenues minus 110 per cent of the operating costs, minus capital additions, minus the Alberta 5 per cent gross royalty.

I could go on, but I think it has all been said publicly already. The result was that private oil firms withdrew from the project despite the Government offer which would have removed a large part of the financial risk from the private investors. They would still have maintained 50 per cent private ownership. All told, the direct and indirect support by Canada and Alberta would have covered 84 per cent of the project costs then estimated at $13.9 billion. That was in 1982 and I suppose that investment would now be well over $14 billion.

The Hon. Member has talked about the petroleum gas revenue tax. Again, they consider it a sacrilege to have the federal Government raise a tax from the top. They say that is terrible because it goes directly at the cash flow. However, provincial royalties are taken directly from the top and that seems to be all right. Simply because the federal Government would decide to have a tax mechanism which takes money from the top, it is supposed to be bad. Apparently it is all right to be used as a policy instrument for provincial governments. I do not know how Hon. Members can reconcile that unless they only want to continue to oppose anything the federal Government does.

The PGRT would have become effective only after the guaranteed loans would have been repaid. The rate of tax would have been 16 per cent, but now, with changes that have been announced recently, would be less than that. Unless somebody opposes the PGRT for everything, which I know is the honest position of some of the Members, then one cannot say that the PGRT alone was the only reason this project did not go ahead. The PGRT would have become effective only after the guaranteed loans had been repaid.

I wanted to intervene briefly in this debate. As the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) said, it is a very important debate. I am happy now that some projects are going ahead. I am happy the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) has made sure that some changes to the fiscal regime have been made and that Petro-Canada as an instrument of public policy is involved in the Alsands development and in heavy oil. I believe this is important for the security of supply of energy in Canada. I believe it is important because of the industrial benefits which these massive projects will bring to the rest of the country.

As I have said, to suggest that the federal Government alone is responsible that the Alsands project did not go ahead, to use such language as to say the federal Government killed the Alsands project, is to hide from the truth. The time to go ahead with the Alsands project was the spring of 1981 or even in the fall of 1980. The construction of the projects would have been so far ahead that by the time the pricing situation became uncertain in the world it would have been too late for companies to cancel.

The fiscal benefits were always available from the federal Government. The federal Government was always ready, during 1981 and before that, to sit down with officials from the Province of Alberta and negotiate a regime. The Alberta Government refused to do that.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member answer a question?

Mr. Breau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions. First, I know the Hon. Member from the other side of the House would not want to mislead this House in any way. He just stated that the fiscal regime was always in place for the oil companies, meaning that the deal was in place so the companies could go ahead with the investment and the development of the oil sands. He must realize that this is not so. The fiscal regime was agreed to probably the day before yesterday, and announced yesterday, in which the petroleum gas revenue tax would not be collected until all of the capital costs were recovered by the investor.

Second, the prior offer to the Alsands project was that it would still have to pay 16 per cent. What we are talking about is 16 per cent to nothing. That is the first question.

While the Hon. Member is on his feet, could he answer a very simple question? Did he know the Alsands project collapsed after an energy agreement was signed between the federal Government and the Government of Alberta, not before? It was two to three months after because the fiscal regime could not go into place. Did the Hon. Member know that?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question, I never said the fiscal regime was in place all the time. I said the federal Government was ready in the fall of 1980 and through the winter of 1980-1981—in the spring of 1981—to negotiate a fiscal pricing regime with the Government of Alberta. It was the Government of Alberta that would have no negotiations at all before an oil pricing agreement was arrived at. Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker.

I could go back and research for the Hon. Member answers to his own questions in this House. He kept asking questions, as was legitimate, because the economic development of his region was crucial. I remember very clearly that many many times the questions he put, questions the former Leader of the Opposition put, questions the energy critic put, and the Minister kept saying: "I am ready at any time to meet with Alberta and negotiate a fiscal regime." I never said that the fiscal regime was in place. I said that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at the time was ready to negotiate one.

I am sorry, I forgot the Hon. Member's second question.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I want to know if the Hon. Member knew that the Alsands project collapsed after an energy agreement was reached with Alberta.

While I am on my feet, I just want to caution the Hon. Member. He is talking about a fiscal regime in place. The fiscal regime, as I am referring to it, was a deal with the oil companies or a developer. That is what we refer to as the fiscal regime. We are not talking about an energy agreement between the Province of Alberta and the federal Government. The fiscal regime, as it related to the Syncrude, the Suncor production, the Alsands consortium and the Imperial Oil project, was not in place. No negotiations were taking place to remove the petroleum gas revenue tax.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, to deal with the original second question posed by the Hon. Member, I said earlier that the deal had collapsed in April, 1982. I know that. It collapsed six months approximately after the oil pricing agreement. At the time the pricing situation in the world had changed, it was too late. What I said was that before the oil pricing agreement there was no need, intellectually speaking, to link the negotiations for the fiscal regime for the Alsands project with an oil pricing agreement with the Provinces. There was no need for that. The Alberta Government linked the two. By linking the two, the Province of Alberta made a timing error. By the winter of 1982—April of 1982—despite the very attractive offer of guaranteeing about 84 per cent which both Governments offered the private sector, it was too late. They lost the project. We all lost the project, not them. The country lost the project. That is the problem.

I realize that the Alsands project collapsed in 1982. The Hon. Member is trying to confuse what I mean by the negotiation of a fiscal regime and the oil pricing agreement because he wants to get out of the confusion that he created earlier. I realize that the negotiation of a fiscal regime for any particular project or a series of projects between the two Governments and the private sector, the entrepreneurs, is one thing and the oil pricing agreement is another. It was the Alberta Government that would not realize that. It was the Alberta Government that linked the two. By linking the two, it really used the Alsands project as a pawn to pressure the federal Government and the rest of the country because of the industrial benefits to the country, because of the security of supply to the country. It was Alberta that took the calculated risk of delaying the Alsands project, hoping it would pressure the federal Government into a better oil pricing agreement or an oil pricing agreement more favourable to Alberta. The Province of Alberta calculated that risk. They took it. It is too bad they made a mistake.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I have only one question. Does the time we have allocated to this question terminate at 5.09 p.m.? Is that correct, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It will be 4.52 p.m.

Mr. Shields: We will not be able to resolve this question. I think there is an easy way to resolve this question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am sorry, I thought the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) was asking how much time the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) had left. His time terminates at 4.52 p.m., but the debate will terminate at 5.10 p.m.

Mr. Shields: I think we could spend a great deal of time on this, Mr. Speaker. I would request the Hon. Member who just spoke to consult with his colleagues. Or if I could get unanimous consent to terminate debate at 5.05 p.m., and we could get the documents tabled in the House, all of us then will be able to see what is the truth. I am sure the New Democratic Party would like to know what the truth is. We on this side of the House would like to know the truth. Could I seek unanimous consent of all Members of the House to have the documents tabled so everyone can see the truth?

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I presume the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) is making that request through the Chair. The Chair advises Hon. Members that a total of one hour and 40 minutes is provided for the debate. Today is the commencement of the debate and it cannot go beyond one hour, but following today an additional 40 minutes will be available. In any case, the Hon. Member has formulated a request for which I will seek unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I am astounded the Hon. Member would want to restrict Hon. Members from speaking on such an important issue. I cannot agree to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I gather there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I am in no way restricting the debate. I am asking that we terminate the debate today so that it will not be talked out, and I am asking that the papers be tabled in the House of Commons. Perhaps Mr. Speaker could seek unanimous consent once again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent to have the debate terminated five minutes before the hour today?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Breau: No, I do not want to restrict Hon. Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate this afternoon on the motion for the production of papers concerning the economic impact of the delay of the Alsands project in Fort McMurray, Alberta and the Imperial Oil project in Cold Lake.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) blame the federal Liberals for the collapse of these megaprojects. The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) condemned the provincial Conservatives in the Province of Alberta for the collapse of these oil projects. I must say that I agree with them both. Not only should the blame be placed upon them for the collapse of these projects, it should also be placed upon the resource giants.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Athabasca that the federal Liberals did not and do not understand the oil industry. As a result they tried to compromise and change their position on many occasions, but they were unsuccessful because of what I believe was a true lack of understanding about the industry.

I do not know why the Conservative Government under the leadership of Premier Lougheed in Alberta was so stubborn in the negotiations to push the projects ahead. They would have been meaningful to all Canadians and provided self-sufficiency in energy by the end of 1990, possibly even sooner. Could it have been that he was tied so closely to the resource companies that he could not allow the projects to go ahead? I do not know. That is a question which remains paramount in my mind.

Returning to the issue of laying blame, the resource giants involved in these megaprojects have always been guaranteed an annual income or income on every project in which they have become involved. The oil industry is a high-risk business. That risk is not only minimized to resource companies; it is almost eliminated. Unless the risk is eliminated they do not want to participate in the marketplace. They want to be guaranteed an annual return on each project in which they participate.

An as alternative to the squabbling which took place, there could have been some public intervention because of the large amount of taxpayer dollars which would have gone into these projects. Sometimes taxpayers receive a nil return in terms of compensation paid to resource companies for projects which did not go ahead. Millions of dollars would have been spent on these projects.

I am keenly interested in this notice of motion for the productions of papers concerning the economic impact of the delay in these projects because my constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake is adjacent to the Alberta border. Many people across Canada, and particularly those in my riding, are affected by the economic benefits of these projects with large capital input into local areas. I know many people who work as labourers in the construction phases. Some small companies have been hurt badly by the collapse of the megaprojects on which the Government relied heavily for creating employment and helping the economy of the country, projects which have now gone astray. Small companies working in the oilpatch were hit harder than others by the collapse of the megaprojects. These companies made plans to expand, to improve and to develop new services which could have been offered in support of the building of the projects. Their plans were ruined and some of them went bankrupt. Many individuals had problems with their families and their companies particularly as a result of the collapse of the Esso Resources project at Cold Lake. Small companies had made plans, worked on their budgets and knew what they would have to charge to make a living and to provide jobs and some security for their employees. Those which survived and remained in the marketplace after the collapse of the projects did so by working for whatever company offered them work.

I see Esso Resources will go ahead with the development at Cold Lake, albeit a much smaller project requiring much less capital and providing fewer jobs than was the case with the initial megaprojects. As was pointed out by an earlier speaker, the original proposal at Cold Lake included the spending of some $12 billion to $14 billion. Now that it is hopefully planned as a phased-in project, in the two initial phases there will be a capital cost of some $300 million or about 40 times less than originally intended.

It is interesting to note that megaprojects seem very efficient and seem to provide a large number of jobs. However, I would like to refer to the statistics of Esso Resources included in a book which I received on July 6, 1983. They indicate that although Esso is spending 40 times less money in the project at Cold Lake now, the number of jobs has not reduced correspondingly. For example, in the construction stage of the heavy oil plant the initial projection provided for some 8,000 to 10,000 new jobs. Now it will be between 400 and 700 jobs, somewhat under the 40 per cent less of the spending they are projecting. In terms of permanent jobs that will be created by this project, the original plans projected some 2,000 to 3,000 permanent jobs. With the reduced model and the phasing-in proposal, some 90 permanent jobs will be created in the Cold Lake project, again somewhat more corresponding to the 40 times less money they are spending.

The point I am making is that for the dollars spent, more jobs are being created for the people of Canada by Esso Resources phasing-in proposal than would have been created by the number of dollars spent in the large megaproject. I thought that was interesting to point out in the debate this afternoon.

It is significant to note that in the original proposal, it would have taken 10 to 12 years to complete the entire project. With the smaller version coming onstream, it will be four years. That is important because we need these jobs sooner, not later. The sooner we have those jobs, the better it will be for the people of that area as well as for people right across Canada.

There is something else that has not been mentioned this afternoon on which I would like to spend some time, namely the environmental concerns of people living in the project area. Although controls have been put in place and Esso Resources has gone through the proper hearings to have their project approved, I ask them publicly to be good corporate citizens as they go ahead with this project and to assure us that the environment that could be affected by such projects will be protected.

The first concern about the environment is the emission of sulphur dioxide, the main component in acid rain. My constituency of Meadow Lake is downwind. Prevailing winds blow from the Cold Lake project across the riding that I represent, carrying the sulphur dioxide. This may cause future acid rain problems. The northern part of my riding is vulnerable to the effects of acid rain or acid precipitation because it is on the edge on the Pre-Cambrian Shield. The area does not have the ability to withstand the effects as do some agricultural areas to the south. Environment Canada operates an acid precipitation testing station at Cree Lake which monitors the situation very closely. If Esso Resources or any other resource giant is not a good corporate citizen and is not taking care of the environment, we will know that. We would then have to re-evaluate what they do in terms of polluting the environment. I again stress that I very much want them to be good corporate citizens.

There is a second area of environmental concern on which I have received numerous letters from the Village of Pierceland and the rural municipal council of Beaver River. Their concern is the water drained off Cold Lake and the placing of that waste, although will be treated, back into the river systems of the area. The Beaver River system, which runs through a good portion of my riding, affects such places as Goodsoil, Pierceland, Meadow Lake and places down the line. These people are justly concerned about the effects on their water supply and the ecosystems that could be affected by the waste material from the heavy oil plants. There could be an increase of the sewage effluent into the Beaver River system. They are also concerned about the possibility of ground water contamination due to a deep well disposal of waste from the steam injection process which may be used as well.

I lodge with the House of Commons and my constituents my concern about what could happen to the environment. I am sure that all of us, including Esso Resources, do not want anything to happen to the environment. At the same time, I appreciate the economic activity created by the projects, creating jobs for many unemployed people, as pointed out by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), not only in the immediate area but all across Canada. These people will go there to seek jobs and a new future with some stability of employment. There is a great deal of spin-off with small companies which service the resource giants, megaprojects and heavy oil projects. Providing jobs has the benefit of giving dignity to the people and makes their communities better places in which to live.

The only area of disagreement that I have with the motion is that I would like to see the tabling of the documents affecting the economy because of the delay in the project. If there are documents that are not public, and I hope the Hon. Member for Athabasca will agree with this, documents which affect environmental safety and the environmental consequences of the project going ahead, I would like to see them tabled in the House of Commons this afternoon. I appreciate the opportunity of being allowed to intervene in this debate.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to say a few words in the time remaining on this subject matter. I have had the opportunity of hearing the Hon. Member who initiated this motion on previous occasions at both the committee level and when a number of us on an energy-related committee travelled through his Province. At that time he noted a number of concerns and has since reiterated time and time again how important these developments are, not only for the constituency of Athabasca and the Province of Alberta, but also for the people of Canada.

I would be less than candid if I said I agreed with him on that particular score. I believe all Members in this House would agree that those projects to which he refers are indeed important. However, all through the debate I have noted an omission; I do not suggest it was intentional, but nevertheless an omission. On each and every occasion that that Member has stood in his place to make reference to those projects, he has always blamed or pointed the finger at the Government of Canada. Never in this House or in committee or in my discussions with him have I heard him raise any doubt or questions about the involvement of the Government of Alberta.

On numerous projects that have come to the forefront, particularly in that Province, there has been discussion, consultation and negotiation between the two levels of government. In terms of Alberta's tar sands and heavy oil deposits, whether it be in the field of pricing, taxation or direct funding, the Government of Canada has done numerous things.

• (1710)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is important that these papers are tabled and I was wondering if you would ask the House for unanimous consent to see if the papers could be tabled—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That question has already been put to the House and parliamentary practice prevents us from putting the same question twice in the same sitting. In any case, we are off the topic now.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding Order No. 374 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DISHONOURED CHEQUES

Mr. Charles Turner (London East) moved that Bill C-574, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (n.s.f. cheques), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I feel personally compelled to thank my good friend, Mr. J. Larry Condon, the former Member for the Riding of Middlesex-London-Lambton, who spoke twice in support of my Bill since I was then holding the same position you are now holding, Mr. Speaker, and was prohibited from presenting and speaking on Bills.

I know that my former colleague, like all Members of the House, is very concerned about cheque frauds as it affects the consumer, who after all is the one who usually pays the shot because of increased prices of goods. As well, it affects the businessman who cannot afford to lose income because of n.s.f. cheques.

Many variety stores are now owned and operated by couples who have worked very hard at other jobs in order to save enough money to purchase a variety store. They do this so they can become independent and, by choice, work 14 to 16 hours a day in order to make less than a $12,000, $15,000 or $20,000 profit per year. In many cases these variety store owners have steady customers who pay in cash. However, the day comes when a customer is short of cash and the store operator in good faith accepts a cheque for goods purchased. If the cheque is returned marked "n.s.f.", the store operator does not have the time or money to hire a lawyer and lay a fraud charge which, I am told, is very hard to prove. The store operator absorbs the loss which is removed from his yearly profit.

No businessman, big or small, should be forced to take a customer to court to prove that that customer has attempted to defraud him. Surely the responsibility to make the cheque good within a reasonable period of time rests solely with the person who initially wrote the cheque.

This is why included in my Bill is the provision of a period of 15 days after notification by the bank in which to allow the person who wrote the cheque to avoid criminal liability by paying the debt off in full or by making the necessary arrangements to make restitution of the debt. In the event the debt is not paid off within that period, the defrauder would become liable to prosecution in the ordinary way.

This provision clearly places the responsibility on the shoulders of the person who has incurred the debt. In my opinion, the person who issued the cheque in the first place should be the one to prove that he was not trying to purchase goods by false pretence. If a person purchases goods by passing counterfeit bills or currency, is it not true that the police can be called and charges laid, Mr. Speaker? What is the difference between bad bills and bad cheques?

As an elected Member of Parliament for the riding of London East, I have for many years visited businessmen in their establishments who inform me that cheque fraud through the use of personal cheques has risen drastically during the past few years. Virtually every gas station, variety store, drugstore, etc., has displayed signs which point out that all services and merchandise must be paid for in cash, no cheques accepted. If the customer asks the proprietor why this is so, he or she will be shown a stack of n.s.f. cheques which have been passed to the merchant months or weeks before. This clearly indicates to me that something is wrong with our system.

For example, a furniture dealer recently advised me that he sold $3,000 worth of furniture to a customer and that furniture was paid for by cheque. The furniture was delivered the next day. The customer stopped payment on the cheque. To further make my point, another case involved gas stations that serviced trucks which hauled scrap metal from Windsor to Hamilton. At that time, some gasoline station owners allowed customers to pay their accounts by cheque. However, one of the drivers presented a $4,000 cheque to pay for the gas he had purchased with a credit card. The owner of the station got in touch with is customer's bank manager in Toronto who assured him that the account was good. A few days later, the cheque was returned n.s.f. The owner went to the police, to lawyers and to the courts and still received no justice because the incident was not considered to be one of obtaining goods by false pretence. I do not care what the lawyers say, Mr. Speaker. In my opinion, this method of business practice is totally dishonest and should not be tolerated.

It seems to me that the part of the Code under consideration, in its application and operation if not in its wording, puts Canadian businessmen and merchants through a great deal of unnecessary legal expense in an attempt to recover payment for bad cheques which were issued for nothing more than payment for goods owned by the merchants in the first place. The primary purpose of this Bill is to try to improve the present law so as better to protect the small businessmen, landlords and citizens who suffer most from receiving n.s.f. cheques. In the past, recipients of n.s.f. cheques have had no other recourse but to go to small claims court or the criminal law courts in an attempt to recover the money lost.

There are many good reasons for which people write bad cheques. In some cases, it is an honest error on the part of the drawer of the cheque, and in most instances he will redeem the worthless cheque promptly after notification that his cheque was dishonoured. In such cases, full payment or even an arrangement to pay on terms is sufficient evidence to indicate that the drawer of the cheque did not commit fraud as would otherwise appear to be the case.

During the past many years, those who have suffered most from n.s.f. cheques have been the small businessmen who on knowing the person and seeing that person—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, with all respect to the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner), I believe he is reading his speech. I believe it is against the rules of the House for a Member to read his speech.

Mr. Turner: —with the intention of paying the bill, took the word of that person as indicated by a piece of paper which indicates to the businessman receiving it that money is available when the cheque goes through the normal banking process.

Some people who make out such cheques have absolutely no intention of honouring them. Certainly the present law is not strong enough to protect the recipients of such cheques, and this has caused many problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair thought that perhaps the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner) would have wanted to reply to the comment made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The Chair, of course, cannot participate in a debate, but from my point of view I was under the impression that the Hon. Member was referring extensively to the notes for his speech. Whether he was in fact reading directly from his notes or not is not for the Chair to judge, and certainly not from this distance. In any case, the Hon. Member for London East has the floor.

Mr. Turner: Thank you, Sir. I was just reading from a note.

As an example, a person who intends to rent an apartment often pays the rent in advance by writing three or four post-dated cheques. If the landlord advises the tenant that the first cheque has bounced, the tenant should have the idea that he will be put out on the street. However, due to the provisions of the Ontario Landlords and Tenants Act, he cannot be put out on the street during the months of October, November and December. This puts the landlord in the position of having to house the tenant for free. The landlord cannot collect the rent to which he is entitled without engaging in costly court proceedings. Usually he has to go to court.

Another vital problem we all find is when a person purchases goods. In the past, all governments have made an attempt to assist small businessmen and help them take the opportunity to expand and develop their businesses. But the latter has been restricted by the law under which it is possible for people to pay for their purchases by cheque. The small businessman depends on the local person to walk in, examine his goods and pay cash for the goods. This allows the businessman to buy more goods, thus creating more jobs in making his products. When he makes more sales this increases his assets, thus expanding his business.

I think we have a moral as well as a legal obligation to protect businessmen and workers, such as the Maislin workers who were issued cheques which the banks would not honour when the cheques were first presented to the banks. Many hard-working people have lost pay money when their pay cheques were marked "NSF" and the company had gone into receivership. Our criminal law provides no satisfaction for the merchant, the landlord or the worker because the law does not provide automatic repayment of n.s.f. cheques.

Let us be honest about this n.s.f. cheque law because the present law does not deter others from committing the same kind of crime. The law is viewed at the present time as a licence to steal from our businessmen. These same offenders walk down the street using the argument that "if I can beat the system and get away with it, why not?"

French law certainly treats this as an offence and the severity of the punishment depends solely on the amount of money involved. The fraud is considered very serious. If the n.s.f. cheque is between $200 and $700, the penalty is from one to five years and a fine between $720 and $7,200. Some residents of Canada may think that this is harsh but every Member of this House has heard of cases where five years would be too lenient in an n.s.f. cheque case. Surely, Mr. Speaker, our business people, merchants, landlords and workers should have the best protection of the law which would prevent financial suffering through the loss of hundreds of dollars each year. We have been told that all credit card companies suffer millions of dollars loss annually from people who work the system. I ask you, is it not true that if n.s.f. cheques and credit card frauds were eliminated by a tough law, our Canadian cost of products and living would drop drastically?

The only altenative to cash for consumers is the use of the credit card. The risk of this form of credit is assumed by the bank, oil company or department store which issues the card and the cost of that risk is paid by all customers whether they use such a card or pay cash.

Nor has the merchant been slow to see the use of credit cards. He has learned that credit customers purchase 33 per cent more than cash customers because credit customers, unlike those who write personal cheques, are not compelled to determine whether or not they can cover the cost of the purchase from their available funds. Is it not correct to assume that credit card customers are merely putting a mortgage on their future income? Therefore, for the sake of counterfeit cheque writers, we are forcing the ordinary consumer to purchase on credit, to become a debtor, and too often a bad debtor who gets in debt over his head and loses everything. Is this what we want or are we prepared to put some larger and stronger teeth into the present law against cheque frauds before cheques disappear altogether?

Banks are endeavouring to get all their customers to use their new electronic machines, but recently we have been advised by the news media that fraud artists have been taking money out of these machines from customers' accounts. In Vancouver recently $800 was taken in this way.

No matter how we look at the offence, or whatever the amount of the cheque, the elements of the offence are the same. First, issuance of the cheque; second, lack of funds at the moment of issue; and third, bad faith of the author of the cheque.

Just what is bad faith, you might ask. Bad faith does not suppose even the intention to cheat or defraud. It does not necessarily mean that the person who wrote the cheque knew there were insufficient funds. French courts assume that a person writing a cheque has a duty—and, Mr. Speaker, I agree—to know the state of his account, and therefore bad faith may be proven in the case of a person who, in doubt of his situation, writes a cheque without taking the precaution of verifying the state of his account. I do not think that is too hard to accept.

In France if the amount involved is less than $200, the offence is considered a breach of regulations. Not only is the punishment less severe, but the bad cheque speaks for the bad faith of the author of the cheque and off he goes to jail for writing a cheque without checking his bank balance. Mr. Speaker, this places the responsibility where it belongs—right on the cheque writer.

I understand that penal legislation concerning cheques is often temporarily altered because the courts are clogged with writers of n.s.f. cheques waiting for their turn in jail. If there is a surplus of n.s.f. cases, a period of ten days is allowed the author of the bad cheque from the time of the issuance of the cheque, during which he could make repayment. Thus a person who pays up is able to escape jail but is still liable to the payment of the fine. By contrast, Bill C-574 allows the cheque counterfeiter and any bad bookkeeper alike 15 days to pay what is owed, as evidence that they did not obtain something of value under false pretences. Anyone who believes that this treatment is too harsh should state why a Canadian crook deserves better treatment than a French fraud artist.

For the sake of the consumer in the marketplace and every merchant with whom he deals and who could, if he was not defrauded by these sharp cheque operators, lower the price of his saleable goods, I strongly suggest that there is a great need for a plain and simple Canadian law. It should identify and eliminate cheque counterfeiters and allow the police to bring about the evidence and allow prosecution by the Crown without requiring the businessman, the merchant, the landlord, or the little fellow in business, to weigh the cost and the benefit of trying to collect payments on account of bad cheques.

Let us as Canadians give the Canadian businessman the protection he justly deserves—the elimination of taking the n.s.f. cheque artist to court to collect his money if he can place the responsibility solely on the cheque artist and make him pay his bills or serve the consequences in jail or pay a heavy fine.

In my view the proposed Bill would provide and update such a law. I heartily support it and suggest that the Bill be passed and that Hon. Members agree the subject matter be referred to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, having listened to my friend, the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner), I am not too sure what side of the question he is on. His whole speech—which he read—inveighed against the bad cheque writer and all the harm he does. Yet the amendment that was proposed would open the gates to far more cheque fraud.

I do not know what the Hon. Member is driving at. When an offence is committed by the issuance of a cheque for which there are no funds or not sufficient funds, the police recognize the difficulty of successful prosecution, particularly where small amounts are involved. There must be an intent to commit fraud. Then if the payee temporizes with the fraudulent payor by an extension of time to pay the cheque, that converts it into a commercial debt and there is no more criminal element to it. That is the difficulty.

Subsection 320(1) of the Criminal Code provides:

Every one commits an offence who (a) by a false pretence, whether directly or through the medium of a contract obtained by a false pretence, obtains anything in respect of which the offence of theft may be committed or causes it to be delivered to another person;—

You can commit a theft with regard to money or goods; you cannot commit a theft of services. It goes on:

(b) obtains credit by a false pretence or by fraud;—

That is the person who fails to pay his hotel account or his motel account, and I look here at my good friend, the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass). It continues:

(c) knowingly makes or causes to be made, directly or indirectly, a false statement in writing with intent that it should be relied upon—

Well, one can almost get into a cheque there, but let us go down to the reference to obtaining delivery of personal property. Well, that is a suit. The payment of money, yes. Go into a bank, credit union or what have you and obtain some money by issuing a bad cheque. I can commit an offence by writing a cheque for which there are insufficient funds and giving it to a person who has sought a loan from me. Instead of giving that person cash I give them a cheque for which there are not sufficient funds. That is to establish the debt. There may be some money in the account, but if I issue a cheque for $1,000 because a friend asks me for a loan of $1,000, I enter into a contract with him that he owes me $1,000 on a particular date. Then he cannot obtain any money for it so there is a false pretence.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is the discount of an account receivable. Oh, that is a good one! My friend, the Hon. Member for London East, must know that in dealing particularly with small service businesses quite often individuals will run up accounts. They may owe $75 and they come along and say to the chap: "If you will take $60 I will give you a cheque for it; give me a discount." That is a false pretence.

Then there is the making, accepting, discounting or endorsing of a bill of exchange, cheque, draft or promissory note. That is the narrow application the Hon. Member wishes to consider in this Bill. This would be an indictable offence and that is serious. The person would be liable to imprisonment for ten years.

It has been my experience, Mr. Speaker, that this business of writing bad cheques means a loss either to the bank, the credit union or the cheque cashing agency if they are unable to charge it back to the payee of the cheque or the person who deposits the cheque in an account. Such cases run into the millions of dollars. If you are going to be so solicitous of the so-called little guy, giving him an extra 15 days to make good his cheque, what about the professional swindler who is a real bouncer of cheques? He is long gone at the end of 15 days. In this day and age an individual could go around bouncing cheques here in Ottawa to the tune of several thousands of dollars, and if my friend's amendment were to go through, which I hope it will not, nor even be considered any further with all due respect, the victim could find out the cheque was bad the same day or the next morning and yet according to this amendment there would be 15 days' grace after which a charge could be laid if the cheque were still unpaid. Well, in this day and age I think I could be lost in the Himalayas within 15 days. I could be in the centre of Africa or up the Amazon River in the jungle. In other words, absolutely long gone and no one could reach me because of this amendment. So I do not see it at all.

Where there is a bad cheque from an individual who rents a room, an apartment or a house, there is a small debt court available. No one is going to tell me that is a very difficult procedure. There are no lawyers, the fees are very low and that is recoverable as a civil debt. There is no criminal charge involved.

I think my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), who has had years of experience as a Crown prosecutor, knows that the police are very chary of persons who, in laying complaints about bad cheques, are trying to use the criminal court as a collection agency. Therefore, they say: "Go to the small debt court," because it is so very difficult to prove that at a certain instant there was not sufficient money. If there was sufficient money in the account at the time the cheque was written, that is a defence. If the individual who wrote the bad chque expected to receive money which he or she could deposit in the account to cover the particular cheque that was being written, that is a defence.

However, in this day and age of less than the Pony Express for a Post Office, there is a very serious situation concerning cheques on which people rely. How many people receive their monthly pension cheque, dividend cheque or retirement cheque by post with varying degrees of deliverability? They have issued cheques to their landlords for utilities and what have you.

Therefore, this question involving cheque fraud is a very serious one. Both are defences and the Act already provides for those and for small debt action. Therefore, I do not see what the benefit of the amendment would be, with all due respect to the Hon. Member for London East, but it is an open sesame for the professional cheque bouncer, the fraud artist. Lord only knows the untold millions of dollars that are fleeced each year here in Canada and in the United States.

I know that the judges in the United States take a much tougher view concerning bad cheques than they do here in Canada. I know of many cases of Alberta citizens who were caught somewhere down in the States bouncing cheques, and not necessarily big ones, perhaps a few hundred dollars, and they finished up doing five years at McNeil Island. They were as regular as clockwork. Five years seemed to be about the minimum sentence for a cheque involving $300 or $400. That may be a little strong but, on the other hand, it is still a penalty.

I do not agree with the purport of the amendment. I would therefore ask the House to talk it out or reject it.

[Translation]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-574 is a step in the right direction. Its purpose is to give people who have written a bad cheque an opportunity to make it good after the fact. Such a provision would encourage people to pay their debts, make it easier to find a genuine and effective solution to the problem, and acknowledge the fact that the person who has been given a bad cheque needs the payment and is entitled to it. Looking further still, I consider that a reform such as the Bill before us today paves the way for a more balanced criminal law. Generally speaking, Canada's criminal law is too harsh when it comes to nonviolent crimes and offences. We need legislative and executive reforms. Police forces must spend more time investigating—

[English]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would Your Honour clarify the matter? I believe the Hon. Member is reading her speech. I do not believe we are entitled to read speeches in the House of Commons.

Mr. Dupras: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time this afternoon that the Hon. Member has risen on this question. I wish to inform my colleagues that in deference to the Hon. Member, who is reading a speech in French, I think the same deference would be shown to any Hon. Members who have the sense to read a speech in the other language of this country. I think she should be allowed to read her speech, her notes, in French.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Does the Hon. Member for Bow River rise on the same point of order?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think if that is what we want, we should change the rules. If we are to have a rule for one, that we do not read a speech, let us have the same rule for everyone. If the Hon. Member wants us to read our speeches, then let us change the rules.

Mr. Dupras: On the same point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I think—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I do not think we should engage in a protracted debate on this point or order. The Chair would invite the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood to respond to the point of order if she so pleases.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that greater latitude is allowed when one is not using one's mother tongue. I would hope, in due course, to be able to give extensive speeches in French without grammatical errors. I am not in the position to do so now and I would hope that I would be permitted to continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Certainly it is the Chair's intention to allow the Hon. Member to continue her speech. However, the Chair should remind all Hon. Members that there are frequent, if not numerous, occasions in the House when Hon. Members from both sides, if they do not inspire themselves from texts, certainly quote extensively from texts. Certainly, it is not for the Chair to decide to what extent an Hon. Member is quoting, looking at notes or reading directly, but that practice has been tolerated more and more in this institution. Perhaps it is an ancient rule, an ancient tradition to which the Hon. Member who raised the point of order referred, but over the years the practice has fallen by the wayside to quite some extent. The Chair has tolerated extensive references to written or prepared texts. We see it happening every day. In any case, perhaps we could allow the debate to proceed.

[Translation]

Ms. McDonald: Police forces must spend more time investigating serious criminal activities such as assaults, child abuse, outright business frauds, and driving under the influence of alcohol or other drugs. The sentences should reflect the seriousness of such crimes. At the same time, people should no longer be sent to jail for petty crimes and minor offences. In those cases, the sentences are costlier than the crimes and the taxpayers have to pick up the tab.

[English]

This is a very good Bill. It is a short Bill. It is a modest Bill. It is such an excellent idea that I wonder why it has not been thought of before. It does two things at the same time. First, it actually encourages people to honour their debts, their bad cheques.

I think the remarks of the previous Conservative speaker were quite fanciful. The possibilities he mentioned were extremely remote concerning professional criminals taking advantage of an amendment of this sort. As a professional sociologist and criminologist, I can tell the House that a far more likely occurrence would be that a large number of lesser criminals or people who, through some error, have given out cheques without adequate funds in the bank would in fact pay up. It would mean that people would be paid. The real victims, small family companies, variety stores, the sort of people who very much miss the money denied to them as a result of bad cheques, would be helped by the amendment before us today.

The second reason I support this amendment is that it attempts to scale down the criminal law in the non-violent area. We have a criminal law in Canada which has very repressive means of enforcement. This means that many people go to jail for trivial and non-violent offences for which the taxpayers must pay enormous costs. There are people who go to jail in some cases for theft of a dollar or very trivial amounts of money. It costs up to $75 a day, depending upon the institution. It costs enormous amounts of money to keep them in prison. It is a stupid way to run a system.

There are people who are real victims, such as battered wives, abused children and the many people who are hit by impaired drivers on the road. They are the real victims of violence and do not receive the attention they need in the criminal justice system because it is going after many smaller offenders. There needs to be a fine-tuning of the system with greater severity where there are real dangers and less severity where the dangers are not so great.

I suggest that we ought to pass this Bill today. While we will be seeing far more comprehensive amendments, like comprehensive amendments everywhere they take longer to pass and who knows when we will be actually seeing them. While I want more comprehensive amendments to the Criminal Code, I am quite prepared to support any good measure that is introduced in the meantime. Let us take a step in the right direction and pass this Bill this afternoon.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I share the difficulty that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has in seeing how this Bill would produce the effect hoped for by the Member for London East (Mr. Turner). I agree with him when he says that this amendment would in all likelihood open the gates to far more cheque fraud and therefore have the opposite effect from that intended by the Hon. Member for London East.

In his comments he drew to the attention of the House that the use of cheque fraud has increased in recent years. He referred to the plight of many variety store owners and the fact that many gas stations today do not accept cheques because of difficulties that have occurred in the past. He said that this proposal would place responsibility where it belongs, on the cheque writer. Again, I have difficulty in seeing how this would happen.

It seems to me that his proposal would have a contrary effect. At the present time, an offence under Section 320 is committed when a person purchases goods or offers in payment a cheque which he knows to be worthless. Some of us have had the opportunity to study law. We know what the concept of mens rea, or a guilty mind, is about. To be guilty of an offence under many sections of the Criminal Code, one has to know that one is committing a crime at the time it is being committed. It used to be very difficult to obtain a conviction under these circumstances with this particular section of the Criminal Code because it was necessary for the prosecution to prove that the accused knew that there were not sufficient funds in his account at the time he gave the cheque. That is obviously a very difficult thing to do.

An ordinary citizen who normally has a couple of hundred dollars in an account may issue a cheque, as we all do, and make a miscalculation or expect a certain cheque to arrive in the mail to cover the amount of the cheque he wrote. He certainly can use arguments of this nature very easily to say that he felt that he had sufficient funds in his account at the time he issued the cheque. It is very difficult for the prosecution or anyone else to contradict an ordinary citizen under these circumstances.

Therefore, an amendment was introduced to what is now subsection 320(4) to cast the burden of proof on the accused that, when issuing the cheque, he had reasonable grounds for believing it would be honoured if presented for payment within a reasonable time.

In simple language, the ordinary citizen has the burden to prove to a court that when he issued the cheque he thought he had the funds in his account. Again, this was to avoid the necessity of providing that at the time the cheque was issued the accused knew that there were insufficient funds on deposit or no funds that would be placed in the account shortly. It was a means for the Crown to establish the guilty knowledge in the mind of the accused which is required for conviction.

The accused may simply rebut this presumption by establishing that at the time he wrote the cheque he had every reason to believe that it would be honoured by his bank. The proposal that is presented by the Member for London East is that a retail establishment, such as a variety store or gas station, would be required under this proposal to give credit, in essence, for a period of at least 15 days from the date upon which the person who wrote the cheque was notified by mail that the cheque was dishonoured. By the time the cheque was deposited in the retailer's account, refused by the bank upon which it is drawn and notification sent to the cheque writer, the total period of grace might be 30 days or more. In practice we know that retailers often provide such a grace period to a person to make good on a bad or n.s.f. cheque before taking action, such as reporting the matter to the police. Most retailers would be happy to extend such a privilege to an ordinary citizen and therefore accomplish the kind of result that the Hon. Member is seeking.

However, there are cases in which prompt action is required to apprehend the truly criminal offender. I agree with the Hon. Member for Edmonton West that an amendment of this nature would open the gates to far more cheque fraud. It would place an impediment in the way of prompt police action to protect other merchants or individuals from being victimized by persons issuing n.s.f. cheques on purpose.

On a point of principle, the effect of this amendment would be inconsistent with the purpose of Section 320. Can we really justify saying to the public that it does not matter whether they knowingly have any funds on account to cover their cheque as long as they made it good within 15 days of being notified by the bank that it was dishonoured?

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, September 20, consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 6 and 8 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able once again to speak on Bill C-110. A study of the Export Development Corporation was done by the Economic Council of Canada recently and I wish to add to the record the recommendations which were made. First, they recommended that the Export Development Corporation gradually move toward providing export credit reinsurance leaving the field of insurance proper to the private sector. They further recommended that the Export Development Corporation serve as the insurer of last resort to close any gaps left by the private sector in the supply of export credit insurance.

They also recommend that the Export Development Corporation continue to provide direct financing for Canadian sales abroad when there is reason to believe that the private sector is unable to provide the required credits.

Public financing should be made available only under terms and conditions commensurate with the risks involved and the costs of such assistance, including the opportunity cost of the funds used, except in those cases where it is deemed necessary to take into consideration the export support programs of other countries.

They further recommend that the Export Development Corporation's gradual withdrawal from most direct lending activities be accompanied by an increased concentration of its efforts in the field of credit insurance and bank guarantees.

The corporation should also stand ready to provide refinancing facilities for private lending institutions engaged in export finance.

They recommend that the federal Government continue its efforts at meetings of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to obtain an international agreement to limit further subsidized export credit. In the absence of such an agreement, they recommend that Canada use subsidized credit only in cases where there is a sufficiently strong presumption that it will facilitate the opening of new markets or that it will increase the market share for Canadian products.

Further, they recommend that in the absence of an international agreement to limit further subsidized export credit, the federal Government consider the advisability of matching foreign export support programs that currently have no equivalent in Canada and of providing assistance to domestic firms which must compete with imports that have benefited from foreign subsidized credits. They recommend that the private sector be encouraged to supply direct export credits to its Canadian producers even when a public subsidy is deemed necessary. The federal Government, through the Export Development Corporation, should assume the cost difference between the preferential conditions offered and the conditions that would have prevailed had private financing been offered in the absence of public support.

Also they recommend that the EDC manage separately those of its activities intended to expand markets for Canadian products. They further recommend that provision be made for greater co-ordination between the Export Development Corporation and the Canadian International Development Agency whenever their activities overlap.

I support Motions Nos. 6 and 8 presented by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) which will nullify the Government's proposed increase from $2.5 billion to $10 billion.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I rise again to participate in this debate on amendments to the Bill and to point out firmly to the Canadian taxpayer that the principle of this Bill is not trade, that we on this side do not oppose the Export Development Corporation and that the Progressive Conservative Party, in principle, stands four square behind trade. Canada is, and must be, a trading nation. Some 40 per cent of our Gross National Product comes from trade. Our own Member, the Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), was one of the ablest Trade Ministers in Canadian history.

No, Mr. Speaker, this Bill is not an EDC Bill, it is an ANT Bill. EDC stands for Export Development Corporation. ANT stands for accountability, need and trust.

Let us look first at accountability, or rather the lack of accountability that we have seen over the years on the other side of this House. Bill C-110 as proposed by the Grits will increase to $62 billion what the EDC can borrow, lend and insure without the consent of this House, without even the audit of the one watchdog we have who we can trust, the Auditor General. So much for accountability. In reality, none, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we urge Members opposite to support these needed amendments to protect the taxpayers of Canada, on whose behalf we were sent to this august place.

Let us look at need. Motion No. 6 would not allow the Government to increase the limit of promissory notes to $10 billion from the present $3.5 billion, as provided in the Bill. Does the Government need that increase? No. Why not? Because it has expended only 80 per cent of its present limit. In other words, there is no need.

Motion No. 8 would not allow loans through the Consolidated Revenue Fund to be increased from the present limit of $2.5 billion to $10 billion. Again, we find that the Government has not reached the present limit in this regard. It is at some $700 million as against the $2.5 billion limit. Again, there is no need, no demonstrated need.

These amendments now before you from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) are a genuine attempt to regain some measure of control over the activities of a Crown corporation that last year showed an actual profit on capital of $691 million. At first blush that would seem fine, but when you delve into the matter a little bit, you find that is a rate of return of one-tenth of 1 per cent. Ask somebody in the free enterprise world what that means in the running of a corporation. Does this corporation need even more funding and an even freer rein? I believe not. There is no demonstrated need.

Should that need arise, then the Government should come before this House and show the need is there. It should account for the need and, of course, in that manner the decision would be made right here and the Canadian taxpayer would be protected. Again, the Government should be accountable and show need. Our concern on this side of the House is first accountability, second need, and third trust.

Should we trust this Government with $62 billion in the EDC? This is a Government which has given us a $31.5 billion deficit and a total deficit which costs every man, woman and child in Canada $4,768. That is a 508 per cent increase since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office in 1968. This is a Government which wants to rule by Crown corporations. It has given us the invisible record of the post office. We have the CBC with a $700 million price tag. It is ours, Mr. Speaker. Then we have a measly $2 billion loss in Canadair. It is ours. What about the loss in de Havilland at $500 million? It is ours. This is a Government which has destroyed the petroleum industry with Petro-Canada to the tune now of probably some $8 billion. It is surely ours.

Is this the trust Canadians should accept? Should we trust the Government, or should we be pointing out to Canadian taxpayers, as I am hopefully doing right now, the need for our amendments? Hon. Members opposite should realize the need for these amendments, the need for accountability and the need for a new government that Canadians can trust.

In my nomination and many following speeches, I attempted to alert Canadians to the fact that the goal of the present Prime Minister was two fold—a bilingual nation and the redistribution of wealth. This redistribution of wealth is taking place right now through the burden of tax on the productive end of society and through Government control by Orders in Council and Crown corporations. But, even worse, these Crown corporations now have the say and control of the creation of wealth as well as its redistribution through FIRA, CIDC, CIDA, IRDC, EDC, et cetera. Bureaucrats are making the decision as to where wealth shall be directed, not free enterprise. This is still a free enterprise country but the bureaucrats are making these decisions without accountability.

We see this intervention almost daily with Canadair, de Havilland, Eldorado, Canada Post, Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler, Maislin, the fisheries industry—state control of the fisheries industry—and Air Canada. The bureaucratic, socialist eggheads surrounding the Prime Minister are slowly but surely strangling this Canada of ours. They have never met a payroll, let alone an accounts payable, so what is a $31.5 billion deficit to them? It is a method of applying the screws with more and more state control. To the question "Do you trust this Government?" Canadians by the polls have answered no. It is small wonder with the Government's philosophy and record of strangling us by Crown corporation control. What do Canadians ask for? They ask for ANT—accountability, need and trust. They do not ask for EDC. We on this side of the House, unlike ants, will not be crushed underfoot. We demand through our amendments accountability.

What about the board of the EDC? Is there a preponderance of hard-nosed business people on it? Of course not, not with this Government. Bill C-110 will simply be another step on the road to Liberal Government Crown corporation control by overtaxation, with outside representation; a corollary to the cause of the United States War of Independence.

In 1982 the Auditor General expressed the following concern:

> Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds . . . Parliament should give attention to issues surrounding control and accountability of those mixed enterprises and other entities and associates in which the Crown is a shareholder.

The amendments we are discussing today are an attempt to do just that. It is disappointing that the initiative was not taken by the Government, but it is not surprising, given its lack of concern for parliamentary control over the public purse.

On June 10, 1982 I rose in my place to decry runaway Government spending, in particular the IRDC and the CIDA. In his 1979 report, the Auditor General indicated:

> A significant factor affecting CIDA's Estimates is that it has been obliged to obtain legal authority for its operations through appropriations acts, because there is no act of Parliament establishing the Agency and delineating its authority.

CIDA costs us $2 billion per year. It is very interesting to see the types of loans which CIDA makes, and a person from CIDA will be sitting on the board of EDC and making decisions. I would like to give a rundown of some of the things CIDA has done.

It has given special assistance loans to developing countries during the year, and additional loans to Turkey were authorized by votes. It then lists a litany of horrors: a "twenty-year maturity, five-year grace period at 5 per cent interest per annum, maturing September in the year 2000, $18,958,697". In order to prop up the Bank of Canada we borrow at 16 per cent and then give away money with these loans. Under (g) of the same report, it lists a "50-year maturity, ten-year grace, interest-free, maturing at various dates between March 2003 and March 2031 for $1,953,618,922". This is the type of thing that CIDA is doing for us, and there is someone from there being appointed to the Board of EDC.

I see you nodding at me, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious that this Government with its phalanx of Crown corporations has been unable to reverse the downward slide of our economy. Indeed, it has been the major part of the cause. It is time to call on the private sector to get Canada back on its feet again. My hon. friend's amendments are a step in that direction, and I support them wholeheartedly.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, during the last few years we in Canada have been witnessing the disappearance of parliamentary democracy. This Bill is another step toward destroying what it has taken generations to build. There was a time when taxation and the expending of money was the responsibility of the monarch or the Government, whatever that Government happened to be. That was not satisfactory to the British people. Therefore, in 1215 representatives of the British people met with King John. They told him they wanted no more taxation without representation and no more expenditures without the approval of the people. That was embodied in the Magna Carta, which is the basis of British liberty.

Since that time we have seen the evolution of a system of parliamentary representation that has been the finest in the world. The late Winston Churchill said there may be some things wrong with our type of parliamentary representation, but when we compare it with the alternatives, it stands head and shoulders above all the others.

Under the Prime Ministership of Pierre Trudeau, we have not seen this evolve as we did under the late Mr. Diefenbaker, Mr. St. Laurent or Mr. Pearson. The leaders of the Progressive Conservative Party from Mr. Stanfield to the Right Hon. Joe Clark, to our present leader, Mr. Mulroney—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I am sure the Hon. Member means well by citing by name Members of the House, but it is standard practice to refer to them by their official position or the name of their riding.

Mr. Taylor: I recognize that, but when I was referring to several in the past, I could not just say their position.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is perfectly acceptable because they are no longer sitting Members.

Mr. Taylor: —and the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), are concerned because parliamentary representation and parliamentary procedure are not evolving or unfolding as they should. As a matter of fact, we see that the reverse is happening. Instead of seeing the evolution of the parliamentary representation of the people, we are seeing the devolution of it. We are seeing the devolution of parliamentary practice.

This Bill is a typical example of how we are losing control of the public purse. If Parliament loses the control of the public purse, what else has it got? Parliament must control the public purse. If not, we might as well dissolve Parliament. The whole issue rests on whether or not we are to control the amount of taxes that the people will pay and the amount of money that the Government will spend.

Under the British parliamentary system, the Government has no right to spend any money that has not been approved by the Parliament of that country. But we in Canada are seeing the devolution rather than the evolution of Parliament. By the word "devolution", I mean the descent through a series of changes. We are sinking lower and lower, which is what my friend, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) meant when he said that they are gradually strangling Parliament.

We see the results of this strangling of Parliament when we look at the people of Canada. There are a million people unemployed. People are afraid to invest any more money because we no longer control the public purse. The Government spends as it wishes and taxes as it wishes.

Let us look at this Bill which is only one of many typical examples of this loss of control. Let us look at Clause 7 of the Bill that is now before us. This Clause deals with Section 14 of the Act and does not provide for the ascent of parliamentary control but for the descent of parliamentary control. We are now increasing the amount that can be spent by Order in Council, money over which we have no control, from $3.5 billion to $10 billion. The situation was bad enough under the previous Act when Cabinet could spend up to $3.5 billion by Order in Council to use to go around the world to ensure poor deals and endorse promissory notes. But it is not $3.5 billion any more; now under this Bill it goes up to $10 billion. This is the devolution of parliamentary practice.

The amendment to this Bill will take us back to the point where we can begin to practise parliamentary procedure once again. At least we will be back to the point we were at under the present Act. I do not believe we have the authority to go beyond that. However, I would like to see it reach the point where only in the case of very specified items, Cabinet or the executive council may spend money without parliamentary approval. Even that spending should be approved in principle before the people's money may be spent by Order in Council.

That is what Clause 7 of the Bill does when it repeals Section 14 of the Act. This Clause gives Cabinet the authority to spend far beyond the amount it was authorized to spend before. Now by Order in Council, the Cabinet can spend up to $10 billion without referring to the representatives of the people. If King John had used that practice, there would have been a revolution in England rather than simply a body of men meeting him at Runnymede. Those men would have hit him so hard that he would never have recovered. That is what should happen now.

The Government does not have the approval of the people to destroy Parliament, but that is what it is doing. Under this Government, we are witnessing the devolution of Parliament. We are witnessing, step by step, its gradual descent through a series of changes. That is why this particular Bill should be amended so that Cabinet must go back to Parliament to seek approval in principle before it spends any money. That is the difference between Moscow and Ottawa. But the difference is becoming less and less; we are becoming more like Moscow and less like London, England.

In London, England, the Labour Party, the Conservative Party and every other Party that I was able to see, are anxious to preserve the control of the public purse in the hands of the people. That is democracy. We see the reverse in this country and I am getting sick and tired of the Government becoming more and more like Moscow. I did not don the uniform so that we could have a dictatorial, totalitarian Government in this country, and neither did the thousands of young men and women who died in the last two World Wars; they died so that we could preserve democracy and have control of the public purse. The Government is betraying the people with this Bill and with several other Bills.

Let us consider the other clause that we propose to amend. The Leader of the Opposition is determined to correct this state of affairs. When he is Prime Minister of Canada—which will be just as soon as the Government has the nerve to call an election—we will start to evolve parliamentary procedure and stop this devolution. Most Canadians say that the sooner that happens, the better. Let us turn to Clause 8 of the Bill—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but he has used up his allocated time. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Taylor: They do not like the truth over there.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), said they do not like the truth over there. I should like to continue in the same vein but I do not think I can do it quite as forcefully as my colleague and I do not think I can be quite as entertaining.

I feel equally strongly on the important issue under debate, however, perhaps not about the technicalities of Motions Nos. 6 and 8, but, rather, about the underlying principle. That principle is that by granting the Government the authority it requests, Parliament and the people of Canada will lose control over what is going to happen over the next ten years or so with the Export Development Corporation.

The amendment we propose to Clause 14 would reduce or limit the amount of insurance and guarantee that can be issued by the Export Development Corporation to $3.5 billion. That is still a rather large sum of money but it is nothing like the $10 billion authority that the Government requests. It is nowhere near the present ceiling either, and it is evident that a number of years would pass before the ceiling of $3.5 billion, the one we propose to retain, was reached.

Similarly, Motion No. 8, which deals with Clause 18, would limit the maximum liability of foreign Governments. The amount of money that the Export Development Corporation could loan overseas would be $2.5 billion instead of the $10 billion that the Government proposes. Here again, our reasoning is very similar.

As an illustration of what we on this side of the House have been saying for the last ten days or so that the matter has been debated, I should like to quote from yesterday's issue of The Globe and Mail. An article in the business section begins as follows:

> In a follow-up to its decision to reopen a $680-million (U.S.) loan agreement with Romania, the federal Government has authorized the Export Development Corp. to offer up to $535-million (Cdn.) in export insurance to Canadian banks and suppliers.

Later in the same article this appears:

> The Order-in-Council from the federal Cabinet authorizing the insurance said EDC's board of directors believes contracts will "impose upon the corporation a liability in an amount in excess of that which the corporation would normally undertake in relation to the country".

Evidently Hon. Members opposite have not listened to what we have been saying for ten days. In the middle of a debate on accountability and the way that decisions respecting the Export Development Corporation should be made, out it comes with an Order in Council reversing the position taken by the board of directors of that Corporation.

In this case the board, which is predominantly people in the employ of the Government, acting prudently, suggests that there is no way we should authorize $535 million insurance in connection with the Romanian deal. The Government does not want to take that advice, however. It has its own ideas and it probably has some friends in the business. It insists, by Order in Council made in secret, that the EDC incur this further half billion dollar indebtedness—or what could become an indebtedness—at a time when the insurance claims upon the EDC in the last 12 months are almost twice as much as they were in the previous 12-month period.

I strongly suggest that when decisions of this kind are taken, they should be taken in the open. There are good reasons why Parliament and the people's representatives should be able to debate the provision of a half billion dollar insurance in connection with the Romanian deal. The board of directors of the EDC has said that it is not a good business deal. From the strictly business point of view the deal does not make sense and we should not enter into it. The ability of Romania to make good on its financial promises is not certain and in the opinion of the board of directors it does not justify this amount of insurance.

There are other reasons why this matter should be debated publicly instead of the decision being made in secret in the Cabinet room and, I suppose it is hoped, without the public knowing anything about it. I am sure that is what was in the minds of Members of the Cabinet when the decision was made. Not only is the question of business prudence applicable but the Romanian deal also involves nuclear power plants and nuclear material. Should we be making deals to supply fissionable nuclear materials to Romania? It is not the most friendly country toward Canada. It has a great deal of association with Warsaw Pact countries. Is it a sensible thing for the taxpayers of Canada to subsidize the export of nuclear materials to an eastern bloc country like Romania?

There is another point that some of my friends in the NDP may want to bring up if they have an opportunity to debate this matter—and they have not had an opportunity—and that is the history of human rights in Romania. People in Canada have often said that perhaps taxpayers' money should not be used to subsidize commercial relations with countries that have a rather poor human rights record. I think there is some validity in that point of view. This issue should have been debated in Parliament by the people's representatives before the decision was made.

In my submission, Mr. Speaker, frontbench Members on the opposite side have not listened to one single word we have been saying about public accountability of Crown corporations. The obsequious Members on the backbenches opposite have just sat quietly. They have not entered into the debate at all.

I could go on at great length with some notes I have left over from a few days before when we were debating Motions Nos. 5 and 7, but I see I have again run out of time. Hopefully I will have the opportunity to follow on with the rest of my submissions when this matter comes back for third reading.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do want to participate in this debate because Bill C-110 strikes at the very heart of why Parliament is in existence. For ten days now we have been discussing the matter of the Export Development Corporation and the amendments which the Government has presented to Parliament by way of Bill C-110. Unfortunately, it is not something which has been discussed in the media of the nation. I suppose we can understand why when we consider that out of the 186 members of the press gallery, there is not one who is here. I hope they will all line up and collect their pay cheques at the end of the year.

Mr. Whelan: They are watching it on TV.

Mr. Dick: Oh, I am sure they are not up yet. In any event, this is a very important Bill to our Party because it shows the philosophical difference, perhaps, between what the Progressive Conservative Party would like to do and what the present Government has been doing for the last 15 years and wants to continue to do.

I would like to point out that our Party is not against the Export Development Corporation. In fact, we have probably been the Party in this House which has been its closest friend over the years since the corporation was first formed some 20 or 30 years ago. The fact is that with the present limits which it is allowed under the existing legislation, we do not even have to be here discussing this Bill. The Export Development Corporation could probably go on for another five years before it runs out of the funds which it presently has allotted to it.

The Export Development Corporation presently has the right to guarantee or co-sign loans and insurance for $3.5 billion. That is under the present legislation. In the last ten or 12 years since this legislation came into force, it has used up only $400 million of those funds. Therefore, it still has eight times the amount it has already used before it will have used up its entire amount. Why are we sitting here debating a Bill to increase that ceiling from $3.5 billion to $10 billion if the corporation has only used $400 million of the line of credit it is allowed? And it has taken it ten years to use that.

Clause 18 would allow the federal Cabinet to make direct loans, similar to clause 14. Once the Export Development Corporation and its board of directors have said: "No way we want to insure this loan", that is when the Cabinet, by Order in Council, can move in and say: "Oh, well, we do not care about the board of directors—which we hand-picked. We thought they were very bright. But we, as the Cabinet, have decided to overrule those independent-minded Canadians who are the board of directors and we, as the Cabinet, feel that we will do it anyway." By Order in Council, the Cabinet can overrule the board of directors and the Export Development Corporation and give direct loans rather than guaranteed and insured loans, and it wants again to increase the ceiling from $2.5 billion to $10 billion. The $2.5 billion ceiling has been in existence for ten or 12 years now, and the Export Development Corporation has used up only $700 million. It has used up only one-third in ten years. Why the big rush to increase this ceiling? The fact remains that the Government wants to give control to the Cabinet in order to spend money beyond parliamentary scrutiny.

What has it done to help the people of our country? There is a provision within the Farm Credit Corporation Act wherein the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) can go to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and ask if the Farm Credit Corporation can borrow some money. This summer the Minister asked Cabinet if he could borrow just $650 million to lend to Canadian farmers in order to help them over a period during which they have had difficulty. The Minister of Agriculture was turned down by his own colleague, the Minister of Finance, when he asked for that $650 million. He was given $250 million, which has already been used up, and there is another few months to go in this year. The Government will not even allow another institution to borrow money in order to help Canadians; it wants to have control in the hands of Cabinet, outside of the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation, so it can sign the deals or make the loans, on political porkbarrels, from one end of the country to the other, so we can export the goods represented by this money abroad. Too bad for the Canadian farmers, but, "Hello, Algeria, we are going to give you $100 million. Canadian farmers, too bad. Go bankrupt. We are not going to give you any loans". That is unfortunate.

The whole reason we are debating this Bill, as a Party, is that we believe Parliament should have control, and retain control, of the purse strings. The Canadian taxpayers have sent us here. They have said to us: "We are sending you as our representatives to demand accountability for how our money is being spent. We do not want to give this Government a blank cheque. It has been using one for 14 years. Now take hold of the purse strings." Any poll which has been done shows that the Canadian people right now do not trust the present Government. They think that the present Government is throwing money around in a crazy way. They believe it is improper for us to be running deficits of $30 billion. Last year it was $28 billion. The year before it was $18 billion. Government has increased the national debt over six times since it has become the Government.

The Canadian people want to trust their politicians and their Government, but I can tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian people do not trust their politicians. They are put on the same level as used car salesmen or worse, because the Government does not spend their money wisely. The Canadian people know that even if they do not have to come up with the dollars to pay off the debt today, their children and their children's children are going to have to pay off the debt. There is not going to be a bright future in this country. The people want to have faith in their elected representatives, but they do not have it right now. They want to have trust in their governments, but they do not have it right now. The Canadian public have sent their representatives here to exercise parliamentary control over how their tax dollars are being spent. We do not have that right now. The Government want the right, in the totality of this Bill, to spend $62 billion without ever having to come back to Parliament again. It does not even want to tell us what it is spending the money on; it just wants a blank cheque for $62 billion. That is what this Bill says.

If the Government is not going to be held accountable to the taxpayers as to how it spends their money, then the Government should have the courage to fold up this place, disband and become a dictatorship or a one-party system. The whole reason Parliament is here is accountability.

• (1150)

Mr. Whelan: Like Alberta?

Mr. Dick: Alberta has accountability every four years. The people love it so much they re-elect the Government there with fantastic majorities, and you know they are going to do the same thing with the Conservative Party in the next federal election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, the people are sick and tired of the Government running away with their money. The principle of democracy has been fought for for over 700 years. Democracy is something which people in this country sometimes take for granted, but the polls show that day by day the people are getting fed up with the arrogance of this Government and its desire to spend money without accountability.

I just want to say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that I hope this Party will carry on the debate for 50 days or 100 days if necessary to stop the arrogance of this Government in demanding a blank cheque.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I think my comments on this Bill will be slightly different from many of the speeches which have been heard. You have heard our Members deal with the specific provisions of the Bill and the $62 billion, an amount which is simply mind boggling to me. But there is something far more important involved in this debate. I only wish those on the other side could understand our point of view and realize what they are doing to this country and how they are going about it.

Accountability is part of the issue but it is much more than that. It is a philosophy of government that we are dealing with in this Bill. I have always believed that we were to govern for the people, by the people and with the people. This Government does not believe in "with the people". It is not prepared to let the people know what it is doing. The Government is not prepared to let those of us in the Official Opposition see where the money is going and how it is being spent. I can understand why when the facts and figures leak out on occasion, such as the Canadair fiasco, the Maislin fiasco and the long list of absolutely ridiculous expenditures of taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker, this country would be better governed if there were much more accountability to this House of Commons. I say this with no malice to anyone, but I believe on the Government side there are many backbenchers with great talent. I certainly feel the same way about my own Party. I believe that in the ranks of the NDP there are a few who are quite bright.

An Hon. Member: Not very many.

Mr. Cook: Perhaps not very many, but some. In any event, the people who have been elected by the voters of Canada to come to this House are not dummies, and I resent being regarded by an arrogant Government as if I did not know anything. I can look at a balance sheet, gentlemen. I can look at an operating statement. If you will give me the figures, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you what you have done and I might be able to make a contribution to better government in this country. But we have a Government which refuses to let us look at the figures, a Government with Crown corporations who get quite excited if a Parliamentarian wants to take a look at the books. But the Government will tell us about the losses eventually when it comes back for more money.

Mr. Nielsen: They will not even let the Auditor General have a look.

Mr. Cook: When they will not even let the Auditor General have a look at what is going on, then that is secret government. That is dictatorship, to use a nasty word. When there is no accountability, when the House of Commons cannot find out what the Government is doing, then it is time the Government was thrown out. There is no question at all about that in my mind.

I am here representing over 100,000 people who live in North Vancouver-Burnaby and they pay taxes. Oh, do they pay taxes!

Mr. Whelan: Bill Bennett makes them.

Mr. Cook: Do they have the faintest idea where that money goes? It is terrible for me to report to them that I cannot find out in the House of Commons or its committees. And why not? Because this Government over the years had a deliberate policy and philosophy—and I say deliberate—of ensuring that no one can find out where the money went, where the tax dollar was spent and why it was being spent.

We get the odd horror story, yes, but would it not be much more sensible if first of all Government departments had to put their figures out in an annual report in a meaningful way so that any Member of the Opposition, or of their own Party, could look at those figures and see what was going on? I defy anyone to take an annual report of any Government department, despite whatever accounting training they may have had, and make sense of it. There is deliberate, absolutely deliberate obfuscation of figures, deliberately misleading figures, deliberately attempting to evade responsibility and make the situation incomprehensible not only to the Opposition but to the Government's own Members on the backbenches.

Gentlemen, we were sent here to do a job, but with an arrogant Government and Cabinet, with Deputy Ministers who really think they run the country, and do under the regime in power then the key factor is that until you have a Government in this country which is prepared not only to trust the people but also to trust the Parliamentarians to do their job properly, we will continue to slide down the drain. And we are sliding down the drain. All you have to do, Mr. Speaker, is look at the deficits of this Government. But do you really get an opportunity to see, as an example, what the Department of Communications is spending on this, that and the other thing?

There is such a thing in business as value for money. Everyone understands value for money, but how do we find out what value we get for our money from a Government which will not tell you anything? That is what this Bill is all about. That is why we are fighting it so hard, because we are being asked to take a figure like $62 billion and not be responsible for it at all. I do not know where this Government thinks the money comes from, but I can tell the Government that it comes from the individual taxpayer and he has a right to know, and I have a duty to complain bitterly when I cannot get for him those figures.

There is no way I am going to know from this Bill, what happens to the money, Mr. Speaker. I might find out five or ten years from now that the corporation has wasted $10 billion on something, but I am not going to find out in time to do anything about it. I am not going to find out in time to make it responsible to the Canadian people. What I am talking about is the philosophy of a group of power-mad Cabinet Ministers, a group of power-mad Deputy Ministers and senior civil servants whose main job seems to be to make sure that nobody in Parliament knows what goes on. There just is no accountability and that is what this whole thing is all about.

I think the idea of the Export Development Corporation makes sense, but how it has been run, whether it has been effective or whether it has been a political toy with bad loans and bad insurance risks, I as a Member of this Parliament will never be able to find out. That is a tragedy for the Canadian people. It is a tragedy that I have to tell those people who voted for me and sent me here that I am sorry but, because of the present regime's philosophy of government which says "we will not tell you, you are never going to find out, forget it, just rubber stamp the legislation," I cannot tell them. That means to me that I am not doing my job; not because I do not want to but because I cannot.

The numbers on the other side tell me that I cannot because they simply will not make that information available to permit not only the Opposition but their own Members to know what is going on. This is government by clique. This is government by secrecy. This is government by arrogance and disregard for the true meaning of the House of Commons the true meaning of democracy. It shows a colossal contempt for the Canadian public. May the public wake up one day and take a good look at what this gang has done and how it has done it and realize that it is to their detriment to leave it in place.

I close by asking Members opposite to understand how they are destroying democracy, accountability and good sense in this country, because that is what they are doing.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think the issue has been dealt with very well in the House today. Several Members have expressed themselves differently but all have said the same thing. What we are witnessing is not only true in this House but true in almost every form of legislative arena in the world.

I believe what the last Member in particular, who is a new Member, was saying is that he does not really get mad at these fellows across the way; he just really feels sorry for them because they have to take orders from people who are not accountable. If those people want all the money in the world and do not want to report it, those Members have to say that that is what is good for the country. We should not be angry with them when they surrender their freedom to their own employees; we should feel sorry for them that they want to hang on to their positions because it gives them prestige some place. The fact is that all governments in the world have surrendered the power which they have under the constitution, which was achieved by the struggles of our forefathers to control our own destiny, to a self-styled elite.

I speak with some experience and feeling about this issue. This control which is held by small groups that exert control in our bureaucracies must be challenged. It must not only be challenged by the Conservative Party here but by all parties in every country of the world. The situation is just as bad in China, Russia, Belgium, France and Italy. Governments can change every week in France without making any difference; the same people run the country.

Why is this challenge important to Canada? Our future lies in free trade world-wide. If we want to keep peace in the world, the only proven technique to keep and maintain peace is to trade with people. It is necessary to do this so that we do not fall under the umbrella of paranoia where confused pilots fly on dark nights over strange areas. Even the government in Moscow does not know what is going on. The blundering goes on. Everyone is quick to jump on this paranoia issue and become excited and frightened, when the real issue facing Russia, Canada and the United States is how to control this monster that has been created in an effort to have people govern themselves.

I happen to deal with this type of problem quite often. I spent the last three days in New York and Pittsburgh talking about these very issues with several nations. The problem we face is how to get around the set-in-tablet mentality of governments all over the world. For instance, Europe has very restrictive legislation, regulations and techniques for stopping the flow of food into that area. With food they also include things related to health, such as medical equipment and so on. To the cynical person, this is simply a way of putting a high tariff around European nations. Europeans have a reason to be frightened since they have gone through two serious wars in the last 80 years. The people in Russia and other countries are frightened and want to protect their own supply of locally-produced food. Therefore these arbitrary restrictions are applied.

Let us look at the Middle East where new governments come into being. If we look at the legislation of the 21 nations in the Middle East, which covers North Africa and the golden area of the Euphrates, Tigris and so on, every one of these nations has copied the restrictive legislation of European countries. They are terrified that some kind of food will come into their area which will hurt their farmers and their health. They will not let food or anything healthy go into their countries until they are sure that it has met these restrictive regulations. While these restrictive regulations in Europe are mainly a protective device at the current time since they have highly qualified people and productive agriculture, the Middle East countries, which desperately need food and health care items, follow the same regulations. They are controlled by the dead hands of the government or the bureaucracy that must follow the rules.

These problems are resolved not by dealing with government organizations on one side or the other but by dealing with private groups in each of these countries in determining how to meet all of these regulations without the governments feeling cheated. In this way the goods can get moving.

This is particularly noticeable in the health medical services. For example, the Saudi Arabian government has spent billions of dollars commencing the building of a hospital and medical system. It wishes to expand it by another 7,000 beds. It wants to spend approximately $2.3 billion putting in 7,000 more beds as well as all the services, supplies and maintenance. It has not gone to other governments for help but has asked private enterprise groups in Canada to get together and determine what its needs are, to build a consortium and bid on these contracts.

The Saudi Arabian government is faced with the closed shop organizations of two big enterprises in the United States, France and England which are very good at this type of thing. Since that government feels Canada is not as far down the slope as these other countries, it would like a country such as ours to put in a bid which will force those other nations to be competitive. In other words, it has decided that running its hospital through the government makes it a complete sucker for those people who sell it things. They want to put this project up for tender in order to reduce costs and in hope that it will be operated privately from outside so it can get greater efficiency at less cost and still provide the quality of service.

This is an opportunity for Canadians to participate but we are up against the fact that most Canadians wait for the Government to do it. They want it to go before the Export Development Corporation in order to provide money. That is not how to do it because private enterprise has to keep free from the Government to get a chance to win those contracts in Saudi Arabia.

What I have said in detail illustrates the type of problem that exists in trading. It goes back to putting everything under control of a government organization that does not tell the people what it is doing and allows for all sorts of things to happen.

• (1210)

What I have said about Saudi Arabia I could repeat for trading between Taiwan and Canada or trading between Taiwan and the People's Republic of China and so on. I think I have emphasized the point enough. The answer to the opportunities that exist is not just giving more money to a government agency but to put into the thinking of those around this agency the ideas that will achieve the purpose at less cost to both sides. You cannot operate behind a curtain; it does not work. Operations of that sort are not trusted by the other fellows and you will not get much forward progress.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to speak to this Bill, particularly following the very statesmanlike speech given by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton).

Bill C-110 is an Act to amend the Export Development Act. There is a series of amendments to this Bill which attempt to restrict the amount of money which will be available to the Export Development Corporation without reference to Parliament.

Much as I can support the aims of the corporation, I must indicate a great deal of sympathy for the concern which has brought these amendments before this House. Right now about 26 per cent of our Gross National Product is directly dependent upon the export market. A fairly hefty portion of that 26 per cent is related directly or indirectly to agriculture. At no time in my understanding has the Export Development Corporation been used to develop the direct growth of agricultural production. In fact, where opportunities have arisen in the last few years, such action has not been taken by the corporation, partly because of the terms of the Act and partly because the Act was not interpreted to assist the sale of agricultural products.

For instance, just in the last year the Government has withheld credits for grain sales to several countries, countries such as Poland. The Government has given very spurious reasons for not giving these credits for the purchase of grain, such as the fact that Poland cannot pay its bills. We can agree that Poland is having difficulty payings its bills, but so are Mexico, Brazil and Chile. In each latter case we have extended credits to those countries. The loss of these kinds of sales to countries like Poland affects the cash flow of the farmers, which consequently affects the welfare of the western agricultural industry.

I have two suggestions regarding this particular situation which I would like the Government to look into. First, I think it is time the Government looked at this Bill, and the corporation, as a source of credit for the export of agricultural products.

Second, why is the Government not taking the lead in attempting to have Poland's debt negotiated by the Paris Club in the same way as that organization or group of countries has dealt with the debts of Brazil, Chile and others? It seems only fair that negotiations should be put in place and spearheaded by Canada, if necessary, to allow that to happen. Farmers would be pleased with anything that would increase the demand for their products. They recognize that part of their responsibility is to feed the world regardless of what President Reagan thinks of the country to which they sell their products and regardless of the ideology which the government of that country has put forward.

Crown corporations in Canada are intended to be instruments of public policy. Their reason for their being is the good of the country. If you look at the history of most Crown corporations, particularly when they were set up—and many were set up by previous Conservative Governments—they were set up with a good reason. Many times that reason has disappeared or been cast aside, quite often very shortly after the Crown corporations have gone into business. Instead of operating for the good of the Canadian people, quite often these Crown corporations operate for their own survival. They become so controlled by the bureaucrats put in charge of them that they lose their objective of operating for the good of Canada and start becoming corporations that operate for their own good.

This particular Government has given Crown corporations a very bad reputation, a reputation which is changing public opinion to the extent that many of the ones highly thought of are now in disrepute. Therefore, maybe it is necessary for this Parliament to put some strings on the purses of Crown corporations. A good example of what can happen without referral to Parliament is the late scandal, I suppose we can call it, of Canadair. If it can happen to Canadair—the fact that $1.6 billion in losses were incurred before the corporation was referred back to Parliament—then it can happen to any corporation. Therefore, perhaps it is important that all corporations operate within some restrictions concerning the amount of money they can spend.

Successive Auditors General have indicated quite forcefully and lustily that any money spent anywhere by any corporation, if it is taxpayers' money, must be accounted for in some way to Parliament. We have moved away from this position almost continuously in the last number of years.

Lately, for example, Canadian National Railways, whose reason for being is servicing the transportation industry for all Canadians and whose losses are paid for—made up—by the taxpayers of Canada, has said there is no way the Auditor General, a servant of this Parliament, should be able to look into its books and find out how it lost or made money. The books of the CNR will become very important to the people of Canada, particularly to the farmers of western Canada. If Parliament allows the changes suggested to the Crow rate, the amount of money which will be paid for freight will be directly dependent upon the expenditures of Canadian National Railways. Why should Canadian farmers trust the costing of a company which hides its books from its own people? Why should farmers trust a Government which depends upon a New York economist to tell it how much it costs to operate a company which the Government itself owns? This is what is happening in the refusal by CN to have the Auditor General look into its books. Since the possible successors of the present Government do not have a better record than the present Government, it is necessary to put the restrictions suggested in these amendments on any corporation which spends taxpayers' money.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, we are not speaking today of anything other than establishing a minimum of parliamentary control over the expenditure of public money. Once again we have the Government coming before Parliament seeking virtually unlimited borrowing power. That is the true meaning of the legislation we are discussing. Once again we are in the position of attempting to curb the Government's ongoing and persistent attempt to remove itself from the fiscal control of Parliament.

The Government has a record of uncontrolled expenditures second to none. Nero in his wildest moments never squandered the public money as this Grit Government has done and is still doing. Now, with the largest deficit in history, the largest public debt in history and the worst financial record since the teapot Dome scandal, it is back again asking for another blank cheque. That is what $20 billion amounts to; that and another $20 billion and yet another $20 billion. If a wage earner made a salary of $20,000 a year, in 100 years that person would earn $2 million. In 1,000 years that wage earner could earn $20 million. In one million years that person could earn $20 billion, a fraction of the authorization for which the Government wants a blank cheque.

I know it is a hypothetical consideration, particularly under this Government which takes nearly half of what one earns in income and other taxes. Nevertheless, it gives one an idea of the magnitude of the amount with which we are dealing here. But then, this Government always thinks big. If it were in private industry, it would have been in bankruptcy long ago. It has a habit of wheeling and dealing in vast amounts of money, great sprawling schemes and projects and paper programs that never get off the ground. It is a Government that is totally infatuated by its own propaganda.

Day after day the jovial Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) rises and explains that things were never better. He says that we are on the way up. He does not worry about hard facts, such as 1.5 million unemployed Canadians. But then that 1.5 million unemployed Canadians do not vote Grit anyway. Government Members wheel and deal and crank up their propaganda machine to tell Canadians how good they have it. It is fun to be out of work under this Grit Government in its wonderful land of Oz!

For months now the former Minister of Manpower, who is now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), has been telling Canadians about the hundreds of millions he has been making available in his so-called job-creation programs. Day after day he rose in the House weaving his webs of fantasy. But let me say that if all the jobs in all the paper programs had materialized, not only would there be no one out of work in Canada, but we would be scouring the world for workers. Sadly that is not the case. Unemployment exists, hardship exists, bankruptcies exist. The desperation and uncertainty of young people wondering where they are to turn next is a salient feature of this sagging society, which is the legacy of 15 years of centralization and Government misdirection.

As they go on erecting their castles in the air, spinning their fairy fantasies, one theme is recurrent. They want money, they want more money, they want unlimited money. They are like drunken con artists who, in order to keep their "sting" going, must constantly attract new sources of supply. New task forces, new consultants, new Government agencies, are spewing forth from the bottomless well of the Government's aimless frittering, demanding always more and more expenditure on the part of the taxpayer who is neither consulted nor asked to approve through his or her elected representative in this place, which is why we are sent here.

The Government must go to the market to borrow something like $25 billion this year in order to finance its day to day operations and to pay interest on its colossal debt. This means overburdening an already tightly stretched money market. It means that interest rates will move up, that ordinary Canadians will be at pains to secure the financing they need, and that once again we will be looking into the yawning maw of recession.

The Minister of Finance has said that this was okay with him, that this was fine with him. He does not want the recovery to be too sudden. He wants Canadians to suffer a little more. He would like to see a few more turns of the screw. Perhaps if Canadians get hungry enough and desperate enough, they will sit back while the Government brings in its Bills to control the press and all the other measures which have the effect of centralizing authority in the Grit Cabinet. This has been its course since resuming office in 1980. It is the course of desperation. It has been a determined and persistent effort by those who want to usher in socialism by the back door, erode the freedoms of Canadians and create a faceless and docile proletariat in the country.

They will find that Canadians are not a mean-spirited people. They will find that Canadians stand up for their rights. They will find that Canadians will not give up their heritage of freedom and independence for a mess of Liberal pottage. Canadians are not prepared to surrender any further authority to this Government of all governments. We are not prepared to give up financial control to a Government and a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who have created in the country a sprawling Frankenstein which was described by the Auditor General as a "parallel government". In the process they have driven this country to the brink of financial insolvency.

The Government is now peddling off our natural resources as quickly as it can to the highest bidders. It is keeping on the special petroleum tax although Petrofina and British Petroleum have been paid for long since. It is holding back on support to the aged and withholding financial support to medicare in order to finance the incredibly costly losses of Canadair and de Havilland and the other tottering fiscal empire under the control of the Prime Minister's friends, Senator Austin and Mr. Bell.

That is where the money is going. That is why we have these incredible deficits. That is why Canada went deeper into recession than any other OECD country and was slower climbing out. That is why Canadians have been forced to accept a reduced standard of living with reduced income. That is why we have placed these amendments before the House.

We as Members of Parliament are taking the only recourse open to us to return the control of the public purse to Parliament.

I can tell the Government now how it can get on with this measure so that it can be used as a vehicle to increase our trade with other countries, which after all is the main thrust of the Bill, but with established, traditional parliamentary control. We will give unanimous consent to the restoration of the amendment moved by the Minister, amendment No. 2, if the Government will give unanimous consent to the restoration of our amendment No. 4, which establishes the basic minimum of parliamentary control, and agree to our amendment No. 5. If they are sincere about their respect for the parliamentary tradition, they will accept that offer.

I repeat, we will consent to the re-establishment of the Government's amendment No. 2 if it will consent to the re-establishment of our amendment No. 4 and agree to amendment No. 5. Amendment No. 4 provides for the basic minimum of parliamentary control. That is all we ask, that control remain in the hands of the people through their elected representatives sitting in this House. If that position were to be adopted by the Government, it would have this measure with no further adieu.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order on the point just made by the Hon. Member with regard to a possible deal. I would have expected he would have had this discussed other than on the floor of the House. Certainly his offer has been received, and I will be more than happy to talk to him about it.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I wish to share with the House some thoughts on Bill C-110. As my colleague from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) stated, all we in the Opposition are requesting is control.

In Alberta at the present time we are having municipal, county, school board and hospital board elections. In some cases five, six or seven Members are being elected to various boards. There is heightened activity in my community and in other communities in my riding. Interest in the municipal elections is at an all-time high. Four years ago people vested certain responsibilities in those they elected to represent them on various boards. They now see that in some cases these representatives did not take their job seriously and have not been accountable to the people on how the taxes collected were spent.

I can cite an example without naming the community. There is a hot and heavy campaign going on because the school tax has increased dramatically in the past two years. People see that there has been waste and are calling the school board to account. They believe their tax dollars were collected on a false pretext and have been spent in a frivolous way.

The point I am making is that there is accountability at the municipal level. The reason is that their expenditures do not involve megadollars, such as $20 billion, an amount which we continually discuss in this House. The people have a very fair understanding of that. I, and I am sure no one else in this House, can fathom what $20 billion really means. The Hon. Member for Yukon tried to describe it. He said it would take one person earning a normal salary a million years of work to accumulate that amount.

The people who sent me here did so to represent them in the House of Commons. That is the beauty of our system. Each and every Member of this House was sent here with the same mandate. I cannot in good conscience condone what this Government is doing. Through this Bill the Government is asking for a blank cheque, assuming no accountability.

This is not the only place where there is no accountability. All Crown corporations are not accountable to the House of Commons. We do not know how and where money is being spent and whether it is being wasted. I have a theory about why the Government is resisting even the basic minimum accountability for which we are asking.

Yesterday in this House we discussed my motion for the tabling of some documents which would once and for all clear up the issue that arose during the national energy fiasco and the fight with Alberta. I asked that those documents be tabled in the House so that Members of my Party, the NDP, the Liberal Party and Canadians from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island could see them. We would know exactly what happened with the Alsands project that was to have taken place in my riding. Because it went down the tube, it is costing this country thousands and thousands of jobs. It is estimated that had those two projects gone ahead, they would have created 500,000 jobs, putting back to work one-third of the unemployed people in this country. The arguments went back and forth and the blame went back and forth. When I asked for unanimous consent for these documents to be placed on the Table, this consent was denied by the Liberal Members.

The same thing is happening here. If the accountability factor that we are suggesting in our amendment is accepted, then the loans, insurance and all the spending that will occur as a result of this Bill would be available for all to see. If all the background material were placed on the Table, everyone would have access to it.

My theory is that the Government does not want the voters across the country to know what is happening with Crown corporations, to know where the money is being spent, how it is being spent and whether it is being spent wisely. I believe it would open up the eyes of all of the voters across the country if they were to see the waste and inefficiency that goes on when the Government is spending dollars that do not belong to it or to its Crown corporations but to the people of Canada. The people of Canada support this institution through their taxes. The Government does not have any money whatsoever; the money belongs to the people of Canada.

I represent 100,000 of those people in Canada. Each Member in the House of Commons represents basically the same number. That is why we are here, Mr. Speaker. We are here to be accountable and to keep the Government accountable to those people for their money. We are only trustees and we are placed here by the electorate to keep the Government accountable. The electorate wants to know where its money is being spent and how it is being spent. The people of Canada will never know how that money is being spent if we keep a veil of secrecy around every program to spend money that is developed by the Government.

I urge all Hon. Members to think for a moment about why they were originally elected and why they originally wanted to come to this place to represent the people in their ridings. I am sure that if each Hon. Member were to examine his conscience, he would know that what I am saying is true. We must be accountable. We must spend wisely the dollars that are entrusted to us to run the Government.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to close by saying that I do hope that the Hon. Member for Yukon, through his negotiations, will bring sense to this legislation so that we do have that accountability.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in favour of the two motions moved by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), let me echo his sentiments. The issue here is accountability to Parliament. Nobody, I think, knows better than those of us on this side of the House that trade is essential to Canada. Fifty per cent of all the goods produced in our country are exported. An unmeasured quantity of services, such as insurance and banking, are exported. Trade in the form of imports and exports constitutes about 30 per cent of our GNP.

As the Hon. Member for Mississauga South pointed out, though, if this Bill is not amended as we propose, we will be giving the Government $62 billion either by subscription or capital or through loans made by the corporation. As has been said before, we will be allowing the Government to give the Export Development Corporation a blank cheque to do with as it will or as the Government would have it do. That is the reason for our amendments. That is why we have been reduced to putting up speaker after speaker in this debate. It shows how strongly we feel about accountability to Parliament and I suppose it is a sign of the impotence of Parliament that all we as the Opposition can do is put forth speaker after speaker to make ten-minute speeches to show our concern about this fundamental issue of accountability to Parliament.

I believe the details of the motions have been dealt with sufficiently by previous speakers so I do not have to go into them. I have only a short amount of time, Sir, and because I think it bears upon this motion, I would like to deal with an as yet unpublished report written by Dr. André Raynauld entitled "Réflexions sur les politiques d'exportation". That report is to be published in the autumn of this year by the Economic Council of Canada.

Dr. Raynauld essentially talks about the Export Development Corporation and he makes a number of comments, some of which I will refer to because I think they are relevant to this motion. For example, close to the beginning of his report, he said this.

And I quote:

—in recent years, Canada has started to rank first in Government assistance to exports in relation to GNP, with, perhaps, the exception of France, and even that is not quite certain.

A little further, the report says, and I quote:

In Sweden, Spain, Germany, Norway and Japan, financing agencies are of the shared-enterprise kind or strictly private.

An Hon. Member: Don't read your speech.

Mr. Kilgour: I am quoting, so I cannot do otherwise.

[English]

Mr. Evans: Don't read your speech.

Mr. Turner: You are reading your speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. It is quite acceptable for an Hon. Member to quote in the way that the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is quoting.

Mr. Chrétien: He attacked Charlie for that yesterday.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: I shall go on.

To our knowledge, only Canada has set up a Government corporation that is 100 per cent public and, in most cases, negotiates directly with foreign borrowers and Canadian exporters.

The next point concerns the effectiveness of support programs, and I quote:

The first objective is to increase exports and in so doing, create jobs.

A little further, it reads, and I quote:

Since the support programs are permanent, we would have to assume that the Canadian economy is in a permanent state of under-employment, if we are to attain that objective—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) rises on a point of order.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Hon. Member is reading his speech. On two occasions yesterday he criticized another Hon. Member for reading his speech. I suggest that he apply the same rules to himself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. At this time the Chair would like to draw the attention of Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 310. Perhaps Hon. Members would care to look at it, or with the indulgence of the House I could quote briefly from Citation 310, which reads:

Tradition has established exceptions to this principle—

That is, the principle of not reading speeches in the House.

—and these have been recognized by the Speaker from time to time. Ministers of the Crown, Leaders of Opposition Parties (and those speaking on their behalf), a Member speaking in a language that is not his own, and a Member making his maiden speech or using technical data or statistics are allowed a written text. In addition, those participating in the general debates of a session, such as the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, are exempt.

On an ongoing basis, the Chair is not in a position to determine if a Member is in fact reading verbatim from a prepared text. Referring specifically to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood, it is obvious and quite patent in the Chair's opinion that the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was quoting. I do not see how he can quote properly if he does not read the text from which he is quoting. Therefore, I think that matters are quite in order and I invite the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to continue his remarks.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) rises. Does he rise on the same point of order or on a different point of order?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would like some guidance.

Some Hon. Members: You need it.

Mr. Keeper: I would like some guidance from the Chair. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament stands in the House and quotes from another document, how much of the Hon. Member's speech consists of the quote and how much consists of the words that are between the quote. I hear very few words between the quotes.

● (1250)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is pretty hard to determine. Of course, the Chair will not indulge or participate in the debate. It is obvious that the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is making a point and he is probably arriving at the end of the illustration to his point. The Chair waits patiently for him to come to the heart of the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the article is about 10 pages long. I have just given a few examples, and I have two or three more, and if the Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) wants me to comment between quotes, I am willing to do so if it suits him. I quote, as I quoted before:

Since the support programs are permanent, we would have to assume that the Canadian economy is in a permanent state of underemployment if we are to attain that objective, which is clearly contradictory.

Mr. Speaker, I think that is obvious and Dr. Raynauld is very sorry that that is the case and so am I, but it is a rather important point, and that is why I quoted him.

Another point is, and this is later on in the article under the heading: The cost of Government intervention, and I shall quote part of the text:

—subsidies were low until around 1977. In 1980, however, $46 million was spent on loans and $20 million on operations in general.

He is referring to the EDC, and again he indicates the amount of the subsidy for this sector. Mr. Speaker, I think that as far as export subsidies are concerned, there must be a ceiling, and as one of the great economists of our country says, and I would remind the House that he has just been elected Committee Chairman of the Canadian Economics Association . . . I have a fourth quote—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! I have no objection to the Hon. Member making the occasional quote to support the points he wishes to make, but he should establish some relation between his quotes and the motions the House is considering at this time.

Mr. Kilgour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the point I am trying to make is that by increasing the Corporation's funds to $62 billion, we may be aggravating the problem to which Dr. Raynauld is referring, and if the Government is capable of acting as he said in his articles, I wonder whether they will now be able to take measures that are 10 or 15 times as stringent. I think the point Dr. Raynauld makes so well is that we must have some kind of bookkeeping.

As far as we are concerned, we feel we must have some parliamentary control over the operations of these corporations, and not give them a blank cheque, considering the situation in this country today. That is our principle, and it is reflected in our amendments. The EDC's funding must be reduced, our parliamentarians must have . . . As was said by all previous speakers, we, as elected representatives, must fight for the interests of the people of Canada, and in this particlar matter, a limit must be set, as we proposed. We must not allow unlimited funding for the EDC. I think my time has almost expired.

[English]

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, earlier in this debate dealing with Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, I had an opportunity to deal with some of the basic principles of the Bill. It is not my intention to review those comments. We have heard some rather eloquent statements in the House by those Members who have addressed us on this issue. I would particularly direct the attention of Hon. Members to the remarks made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), and those made today by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). Both Members dealt explicitly with some of the basic problems with the Bill and the reason this Party has exhibited determination to prevent the principles of the Bill being rushed through the House.

The comments to which I just referred relate to the underlying establishment of a sub-government, a superior bureaucracy that has reversed the master-servant relationship. We have seen the consequences of that with the emergence of this kind of legislation. Ministers of the Crown have become the handmaidens of senior bureaucrats.

Last evening I had an opportunity to speak to a Member of the Liberal Party; he was in the House a moment ago but I shall not name him for fear of embarrassing him. He freely acknowledged the danger of the type of thing we are concerned with today. Like so many Members of the House and so many on the Government benches who feel obliged to do so because of their precarious position in case an election is called, he supports Ministers of the Crown who bring this kind of legislation forward. In turn, Ministers of the Crown are obliged to follow the advice of the senior public servants they have hired to prepare legislation of this kind. Quite frankly, those people can see that with the growth of empire, their salaries and senior positions will be justified. That empire grows and the amount of money they have control over continues to increase, to the extent that we are now finding some exorbitant demands for funds contained in the legislation.

Motions Nos. 6 and 8 which are now before the House were proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), and supported by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Both would have the effect of reverting to previous maximum quantums, save and except for the addition of $1 thereto, the amounts that might be guaranteed, contingently or otherwise, and provided for under existing or future agreements between the Export Development Corporation and foreign borrowers. These restrictions reduce to $3.5 billion and $1 and $2.5 billion and $1 respectively the amounts that currently stand at $10 billion each under the Bill, and with great justification.

I am disturbed about the end product as a result of the removal from the consideration of this House of the detailed expenditures of the Export Development Corporation. We have heard the comments of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) who dealt specifically with an impending loan to Romania and the consequences of that loan. Such loans, quite frankly, are beyond the control of the House once the funds are placed clearly in the hands of the directors of the corporation.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

IMPORTANCE OF GOVERNMENT'S PRESENCE AT NEXT QUEBEC CITY REGIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, I want to express my disapproval of the Quebec Government's decision to refuse to allow representatives of the Government of Canada to take part in the forthcoming summit planned for the Quebec City area. The legendary uptightness of our separatist pequists is once again apparent. Many mayors of our municipalities, commissioners, businessmen and other intervenors are now being blackmailed into taking part in this summit, under the subtle threat of reprisals by our friends in the Quebec Cabinet, the same people who just woke out of their summer stupor to the realization that unemployment is very high in Quebec. Madam Speaker, how can we take this summit seriously if we are not to see the Canadian Government at the consultations that will be held? The presence of the Government of Canada is felt everywhere in the Quebec City area. For instance, the Government's assistance to small, medium-sized and large businesses, the latter including Davie shipyards as the largest industry in the Quebec City area; the federal Public Service, the Port of Quebec, the Société du Vieux-Port, the Société Inter Port, Parks Canada with its many facilities, the Quebec City Airport, Transport Canada, the Canadian gas pipeline, and so on.

TOURISM

IMPACT OF TAXES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, once again the Grit government has fumbled the ball. In its continuing quest for the holy grail of a perfect socialist state it has forgotten about the largest single employer in Canada, an industry providing jobs for more than a million people, representing over 10 per cent of the work force. I am speaking of the tourism industry, and the 100,000 tourist establishments and small businesses which accounted for 5 per cent of our GNP in 1982.

This $16 billion a year industry, which generates $4 billion in foreign exchange, is now doing poorly as a direct result of punitive Grit taxation policies. Liquor prices in Canada are 250 per cent higher than those in the U.S., food costs are 50 per cent higher, and tobacco and gas prices are double those south of the border. Federal and provincial Governments spend $80 million a year promoting tourism in Canada, then collect $8 billion in taxes from the industry. That may look like a healthy return on investment, but it is crippling a vital sector of our economy.

To add insult to injury, the federal Government promotes Canadian travel abroad. Canadians do not need this encouragement, Madam Speaker. The Liberal approach to tourism is incentive enough for Canadians to travel elsewhere.

The tourism industry is capable of creating more jobs than Liberal make-work programs, but only in a climate which decreases punitive taxation, encourages investment, and allows a profit, not one in which excessive taxation strangles all potential, and increases unemployment.

Madam Speaker: Order.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SENATOR'S RESIGNATION DEMANDED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, we deplore the remarks of Conservative Senator Richard Donahoe that we would not have the problem of aboriginal rights in Canada "if they did just what they did in Newfoundland and shot them all." The genocide of the Beathuk Indians in Newfoundland in the nineteenth century is one of the most shameful atrocities of the European era in Canada. It cannot be the subject of a joke. Genocide is not a subject for humour, not in a world where genocide is a reality and not in a country where injustices to native peoples continue, as seen in appallingly high rates of poverty, unemployment, illness, suicide, and imprisonment of native peoples.

As parliamentarians we must dissociate ourselves from these misguided remarks. Our colleagues working on aboriginal rights must redouble their efforts for a just settlement. The Leader of the Conservative Party has a particular responsibility to throw Senator Donahoe out of caucus and demand his resignation from the Senate. The Hon. Robert Stanfield, when he was Leader of the Conservative Party, refused to allow Leonard Jones to be a member of his caucus. We expect no less of the new Conservative Leader.

Remarks such as Senator Donahoe's, if not the product of racism, reflect a stupidity unacceptable even in a member of an appointed Senate. The first step in Senate reform should be Senator Donahoe's departure. All of Parliament is degraded by his continued membership.

UNITED NATIONS

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF HEADQUARTERS FROM NEW YORK TO MONTREAL

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, some of my most memorable events during the years 1961-1965, when I worked in New York, were visits to the United Nations. Somehow the entire world is contracted into a few acres where the cries and pleas of effectively all world nations are heard. I was therefore surprised to read U.S. Deputy Ambassador Charles Lichenstein's remarks that the United Nations would not be missed if it were moved out of New York. In fact he appeared to encourage the prospect of such a move.

Montreal is an excellent site for the United Nations, and Place Ville-Marie would be a suitable temporary accommodation. The Government of Canada should apply itself with diligence to determine the reality of such a relocation, and should let it be known loudly that Canadians would welcome such a relocation.

HISTORIC SITES

PRESERVATION OF BUILDINGS—CALL FOR COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the issue of heritage and the protection of Canada's historic buildings has become an increasingly important one throughout this year and last. The wanton destruction of the Canadian Pacific West Toronto Station, and more recently the threat of the removal of the historic Essex Railway Station in Mississauga, clearly indicate to many that if we do not find a quick solution to this problem we may well find ourselves without any heritage property and without any recollection of Canada's past.

Many Departments are responsible for our heritage, Departments such as that of the Secretary of State, Environment Canada, Public Works, and Transport Canada. It is time to bring this issue to the forefront. All Departments which have an interest in the heritage question should come together to form an inter-departmental committee to study this issue and draft recommendations and proposed legislation on how to protect the destruction of heritage buildings and to provide for the conservation of buildings of historical or cultural value.

NEED FOR RETRAINING POLICY

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, it is time for the Government to start concentrating on formulating a definite policy on retraining both the unemployed and working Canadians. Study after study has recommended that the Government should be considering this proposal, yet the Government makes no decisions on this at a time when there are 1.5 million Canadians unemployed. Why is the Government waiting? Technology is here to stay, and Canada is falling behind other countries which have identified this problem, are attacking it and creating new policies in conjunction with their business sectors which will encourage retraining, both in the private and public sectors.

In Norway, for example, officials have recognized that technological change involves both problems of unemployment and the retraining of present manpower. In this manner they are able to ensure that private businesses have a sufficient amount of skilled workers on hand. The costs of this plan would be shared equally by the Government and private enterprise. This, I am sure in the long run, would be less costly to all, rather than the alternative of spending billions of dollars on unemployment insurance benefits.

The workers and the knowledge are out there. We have been waiting far too long. It is time to take advantage of what is presently available, build on it, and establish a definite policy on retraining in Canada.

INCREASED COSTS FOR FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, Bill C-155 will be reintroduced into this House in a matter of hours. If passed in its present form it will break an historical statute agreement with the farmers of western Canada. Contrary to what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) stated yesterday, the extra cost of freight to farmers in the first year will increase by $163, and by the year 1992 the increase in transportation costs will be $9,485 for a farmer shipping 11,000 bushels.

• (1410)

The increase in transportation costs comes at a time when farmers can least afford it. We have increased energy costs, increased costs of production, a decline of 25 per cent in farmers' income, and the highest level of bankruptcies since the 1930s. As I pointed out to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in this House, destroy the farmer and grass will grow in the streets of every city in the nation.

DEPARTMENT'S EMERGENCY PLAN TO MEET NUCLEAR WAR CONDITIONS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, it should please the House to know that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is well prepared in the eventuality of a nuclear war. The Department's emergency planning officer has drawn up plans to manage the fishery should such an event take place. This is quite remarkable in light of the Government's poor track record in managing the fishery in peacetime.

The Fisherman's Safety Manual instructs fishermen who are tied up in Victoria, Vancouver, and New Westminster to leave as fast as they can, but does not say where they should go. The Department of Defence, if it was still in existence, would direct that evacuation. Those tied up elsewhere should stay put, the manual says, where they will be safe.

The Department would attempt to ensure that war would not resume on the fishing grounds while fishermen were there. Apparently the Department has more influence than we ever realized. It is comforting to think of our intrepid fishermen out there fishing to feed the survivors of nuclear war. I assume, of course, that they will be catching pre-cooked fish, already irradiated for long-shelf life.

The fishing industry in Canada is in crisis, Madam Speaker. With plants closing, companies going bankrupt, and fishermen unable to make a living, the emergency is here right now. It boggles the mind to think that our Government is directing its Department to spend its time and energy on such matters when there is a real emergency to deal with. However, what is most disturbing is that this is yet another indication—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time is up.

POLITICAL PARTIES

DEBTS INCURRED BY PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE LEADERSHIP CANDIDATES

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, I was sitting in this House this morning listening to the speeches of various members of the Opposition criticizing the Government for its spending plans for the Export Development Corporation. At the same time I was reading that the Tory financial critic, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), is facing unexpected debts because his campaign costs soared as a result of uncontrolled spending and inadequate estimates of costs.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Herbert: He then lamented the excessive spending and the surprise debt. What is more, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) also faces a huge sum in unpaid bills. Apparently the debts of these two financial critics reveal how their budgets were blown.

The campaign chief for the Hon. Member for St. John's West admits that controls on spending collapsed, pushing costs over expectations. Madam Speaker, these are the kind of people who suggest they are going to be able to control the Government's spending?

INCOME TAX

COMPLEXITY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I would like today to comment on the complexity of the Income Tax Act in Canada. This Act, which affects virtually every Canadian over 16 years of age, has become an instrument of confusion, a document of deception, and a tool of fear and intimidation. The Income Tax Act exists by the will of the Canadian people and yet, in the hands of this Government, it has become a vehicle of control.

In the Government's budget of 1980-81 the Government introduced 350 changes. When the author of that budget flopped and a new one flipped in, he introduced a further 133 amendments which have contributed further to this complexity which can best be described by example.

Section 39, the definition of capital gains, begins with one sentence consisting of two semicolons, 28 commas, and, believe it or not, 774 words. Compare that to the Gettysburg Address with only 276 words. Add to this complexity the fact that if Revenue Canada accuses you of guilt, guilty you are until you prove your innocence.

And now, Madam Speaker, in the Peace River country, in fact across western Canada, Revenue Canada is accusing many of our farmers of being hobby farmers and reassessing those farmers for years, and for thousands of dollars. This is a crime, Madam Speaker, a crime perpetrated against Canadians by the very Government which claims to represent them.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON FULL-TIME JOBS

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development said in a submission to the Macdonald Royal Commission, and I quote: "Perhaps full employment as originally intended, i.e. in the sense of full-time, steady jobs is no longer a sensible and realistic goal." My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is this: does that statement reflect the policy of the Government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of State for Economic Development was dealing with a very difficult problem—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —in attempting to define what full employment is in a dynamic economy. It is not an exercise in which I would like to become involved because I know it is impossible to establish a target which, within any particular time, people would regard either as realistic or realizeable. So I am not intending to respond in the simplistic way suggested by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, it has absolutely nothing to do with the definition of full employment; it is a signal to two million Canadians that, under this Government, they better give up because there are no job possibilities coming. That is what it is all about.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister can do one of two things. He can repudiate the Minister who spoke yesterday on behalf of the Government of Canada in an official submission, or he can tell us whether this is official Government policy which would consign two million Canadians to the unemployment rolls ad vitam æternam. That is the problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether that is supposed to be a question or just sort of empty rhetoric on a subject which, it seems to me, the Leader of the Opposition does not show much familiarity with. The brief to the Macdonald Commission was like all briefs we are invited to make, briefs which are challenging, raising questions the Commission should address, such as what is the nature of work? What should part-time employment be? What kind of future are we all looking toward? These are the challenging issues which parliamentarians have to deal with in this day and age. To get up and make fatuous declarations of the kind we just heard by the Leader of the Opposition is ridiculous.

We see today, for example, that even Canadians are thinking about this. There is a Gallup poll on the issue of short work weeks. The Leader of the Opposition has already shown—

Some Hon. Members: Speech!

Mr. Johnston: —that he believes in a three-day work week. I think if the Leader of the Opposition wants to ask questions, let him ask them of me and first of all read the brief, and do not read one line out of The Gazette.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): We have read the brief very carefully. It is not a question of a definition; it is a signal being sent out to Canadians that, under this Government, they have no hope to get jobs. That is what they are saying.

● (1420)

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, the backbenchers laugh, but there are two million Canadians who do not find this funny at all, not a bit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, since he did not understand the question, I will try again. I would therefore ask the Minister whether that is the Government's manpower policy: a signal to two million Canadians who do not stand a chance of obtaining employment in the days, months and years to come? Is that the full employment policy announced in his brief?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, first of all, I would invite the Leader of the Opposition to read the entire brief I submitted to the Commission. I think that is very important. And second, the Leader of the Opposition knows perfectly well that the federal Government has the best job creation record of all industrialized countries. He knows that very well. So that is the answer to his question.

[English]

ACCEPTABLE RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, we have read the document. We read it last spring. At that time it was a leaked document called "The Rocky Road to 1990", which the Minister dismissed as a working paper. Now it emerges as policy, a shameful cop-out.

I want to ask the Minister now that we know that full employment is not an achievable goal of this Government in terms of full-time jobs, what it defines as an acceptable rate of unemployment.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): First, Madam Speaker, the document never even states that full-time employment is not a legitimate goal. It raises the question: is it a legitimate goal?

Second, it makes the very point in this submission that the way to deal with unemployment is not to redefine it in order to eliminate it. The problem is there and it has to be identified. It is not to be identified by raising the accepted rates of unemployment for statistical purposes. It has to be dealt with in the socio-economic context of Canada.

That is what this document which I submitted does, within a much broader context. It deals with the whole issue of job creation, economic growth, the future of the country, the challenges of technology, and all of the issues with which members of the Opposition, I hope, will be familiar.

Mr. McGrath: We did not need this Minister to identify the problem. There are two million out there who are readily identifiable.

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM ALLOCATIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to a Minister who has some responsibility here, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Perhaps he can tell us why, in the midst of continuing high rates of unemployment and in the midst of a policy that does not accept full employment, he cut back on Canada Works this year by a third, and why he cut back the basic allocation to constituencies by 50 per cent? Why is he holding hundreds of millions of dollars for a slush fund for the Liberal campaign next year?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, there are a whole variety of questions contained within the over-all comment of the Hon. Member. Perhaps Madam Speaker would give me sufficient time to try to respond to a variety of them.

I think we are seeing exactly the problem which the Members on this side have indicated, that there are as many definitions of what full employment is so as to confuse rather than enlighten the issue.

Mr. McGrath: Why are you killing Canada Works?

Mr. Roberts: The fact of the matter is that what we need is not a lot of sound and fury over semantic quibbles about the definition of full employment, but to create more jobs in this country. That is what the intention of this Government is, and what this Government is doing.

Contrary to the assertions of the Leader of the Opposition, we have been creating jobs in Canada at an extraordinary rate, something like 328,000 over the past few months even taking into account seasonable adjustment. Therefore there really is hope for Canadians that jobs will be there as the economy recovers.

The approach that we have taken in creating jobs is to do so through changes which encourage businessmen to create jobs in the mode of the private sector and, in contrast to the proposals of the Opposition, through direct action. We are not people who believe simply in the trickle-down Reaganomic theories espoused by the Leader of the Opposition. We are taking direct action to create jobs.

Canada Works has not been cut back. What the Hon. Member has been referring to is not the Canada Works Program but to a very small part of the Canada Works Program which is the equivalent of the CCDB Program last year. He intimated—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Roberts: —in the last part of his question—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I suspect that the miners of Schefferville would be most interested in the Tories' definition of full employment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

BUDGET OF SECURITY SERVICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Minister has now had an opportunity to review with departmental and RCMP officials the document which I released yesterday revealing, for the first time, the annual budget of the RCMP Security Service. Will the Minister clarify the origin and authenticity of this document, and specifically indicate what the figure of $67,700,000 contained in that document refers to?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, it is a mistake and a violation of government policy for anyone in the RCMP or the Government to put forward to the public a figure representing the budget of the Security Service of the RCMP whether the figure that is put forward is correct or not. In view of that, I do not intend to confirm or deny any figures.

COST OF PROPOSED NEW SECURITY SERVICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, the Minister is proposing the establishment of a civilian security service and an ongoing special branch of the RCMP which would also deal with security. Will the Minister inform the House how much this new security operation will cost the taxpayers of Canada, given the $68 million or more for the existing Security Service in its first year of operation, or will the people of Canada have to learn this information once again through a job bulletin put out by the RCMP?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has shown a great deal of respect in the past for the recommendations of the McDonald Commission. I would remind him that the McDonald Commission itself reviewed that policy of whether budgets of the new security agency should be made public, and it recommended that they should not. I would ask him to consider that, in pressing questions to require the Government to confirm or deny any particular figures put forward.

THE ECONOMY

MINISTER'S BRIEF TO MACDONALD COMMISSION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. In his brief to the Macdonald Commission yesterday, the Minister stated this:

> Real interest rates are high, and this seems in part a reflection of worries about a possible resurgence of inflation and the large fiscal deficits in North America.

He said:

> —economic forecasts project a relatively weak economic performance, and a persistent unemployment problem.

How does this square with the statement of the Minister of Finance of his Government that "We have a recovery here second to none in the world so far"?

Who is deceiving the Canadian public, or who is correct? Is the Minister correct when he says, as he did in his brief, that we are having a weak economic performance? What will he do specifically to overcome that economic performance because, in all of this flatulent flapdoodle, there is no one suggestion of what should be done to overcome persistent unemployment?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the document to which the Hon. Member makes reference describes the world environment as expressed by observers. It brings together the conventional wisdom of which he perhaps is unaware. Essentially, it deals with the challenges that lie ahead.

I should add that this submission, which comes from me as Minister of State for Economic Development, is a paper of challenge. It is not supposed to be a paper of policy. The Macdonald Commission invited us to put these issues before them for consideration. I found their reaction to be quite positive, and their questions to be quite intelligent.

MINISTERS' STATEMENTS ON ECONOMIC GROWTH

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister who presented this submission on behalf of the Government to the Liberal leadership commission meeting in St. John's, Newfoundland, yesterday. I refer the Minister to page 3. The Minister refers to a time of only moderate economic growth momentum. He said that we have a lingering inflation problem, large fiscal deficits, and all of this militates against a major surge in demand. Who is correct about our situation—the Minister of Finance who says we have a recovery second to none in the world, that demand could be moderated; or the Minister in his brief where he says that everything militates against a major surge in demand? How can we have more jobs and economic recovery if there is a major bias against a surge in demand? Who is correct? Who is deceiving the Canadian people, and how can this be overcome?

An Hon. Member: A change in government.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): I can see no conflict in anything that has been said, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: We all know, those of us who have studied economic conditions in the world, that major structural changes have taken place. There have been changes in demand patterns. There have been changes in world supply patterns.

Mr. Crosbie: Who is telling the truth?

Mr. Johnston: And these have had an impact on our economies. We know that the demands for consumer durable goods will not be as they were in the 1960s and into the early 1970s. These are things that are known. This in no way suggests that we do not have a strong economic recovery under way. In fact, the recovery is surprisingly high. But there are still concerns, as the Hon. Member knows, surely as finance critic for the Opposition, about the level of real interest rates in the United States and also here, although somewhat less, and this has been interpreted as perhaps a fear among the population that inflation may recur because of the very large U.S. deficit. Everybody knows these facts. There is nothing new here.

Mr. Nielsen: Who is telling the truth?

Mr. Johnston: The Minister of Finance has dealt with these issues on many, many occasions, both in speeches and in the House. I see nothing in this paper that I submitted that is in any way in conflict with any of the statements he has made.

Mr. Crosbie: Which one of you is the deceiver?

GOAL OF FULL EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister—

Mr. Crosbie: Don't wake him up.

Mr. Stevens: —who copped out when he was asked the simple question if the Minister of State had in fact been stating government policy. Mr. Minister, in view of the fact that your Minister has stated that full employment, as originally intended in the sense of full-time steady jobs, is no longer a sensible and realistic goal, would you indicate to the House whether the Minister of State who said that was speaking for the Government? Was his submission to the Macdonald Commission cleared through cabinet, or was he simply stating his own reckless rhetoric in St. John's, Newfoundland?

Mr. Crosbie: Deceitfulness.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): I hate to pick up on that issue of reckless rhetoric coming from the Hon. Member for York-Peel, Madam Speaker, and I shall not. I would like to say that he, first of all, misquoted the brief. The submission is not made in those terms. It starts "Perhaps", because this is a question that the Commission should address. Perhaps full employment based upon all the other considerations which are set forth in this brief, as it has originally and historically been defined, should be re-examined. It says perhaps that. I think that is a perhaps we are all well advised to think about, particularly with all the challenges to our economic system and the new technologies that we see. These will be aired in full, I hope, at our Canada Tomorrow Conference which takes place in November.

Miss MacDonald: Invite the unemployed.

Mr. Johnston: As I have said in the past, I hope that it will have good representation from members of the Opposition. But I also said, in responding in the first instance, that this is a paper, as are all the other papers that will be brought to the Commission, which are papers of challenge, not papers of policy. This document is not a cabinet document of the Government of Canada. It is a submission which I made in my capacity as Minister of Economic Development to the Commission, to stimulate debate on these very important subjects.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister again, who must know that on the head of this submission is the Government of Canada's name. Would the Deputy Prime Minister at least indicate to the House whether he agrees with his Minister who has just stated that, in the sense of full-time steady jobs, that is no longer sensible? Think of the magnitude of what your Minister has said. Do you agree with that type of statement?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I wonder what is happening to Hon. Members. They are not addressing the Chair today. This is the second experienced Member of Parliament in a row who did not address the Chair.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that in this Government a statement of government policy never ends with an interrogation mark as it used to when that crowd was in office.

SPONSORSHIP OF BRIEF PRESENTED TO COMMISSION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, may I direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister? We have a document here entitled "Submission to The Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada by The Honourable Donald Johnston, Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and for Science and Technology, Government of Canada." Is that document presented to that Royal Commission on behalf of the Government of Canada, or not? Yes or no?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is doing what he did yesterday, namely, repeating a question asked originally by his Leader—

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no?

Mr. MacEachen: —which I answered at the very beginning of the Question Period.

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

AGENT ORANGE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REASSURE POPULATION

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

My question concerns the use of agent Orange, which was allegedly sprayed along the Canadian-American border, especially in my riding which borders on the states of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. This took place in the early 70s.

Up to now, questions have been put to the International Boundaries Commission and to ad hoc committees of experts on chemical analysis. My colleague from Sherbrooke would say it is like asking Dracula whether the blood he drinks is type A, B or C. My question is as follows:

Could the Minister of National Health and Welfare reassure the people living near the border and tell them there is no connection between the increasing number of cancer cases and the herbicidal spray used along the border and identified as agent Orange?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for having sent me a copy of his question a few minutes ago. The subject is well-known and it has been discussed in the House. First of all, I can give the Hon. Member's constituents the assurance that agent Orange has never been used on this border. The chemical used was another product containing much lower levels of dioxin than that contained in agent Orange. In any case, use of the product was discontinued in 1977, when it was replaced by mechanical methods. I have no record stating that the number of cancer cases is higher in the riding of Megantic-Campton-Stanstead, and I would like to give the people of that riding the assurance that, on the basis of what we know, I do not see any relation between the two.

If the Hon. Member knows anyone in his riding who has figures or whatever on the subject, they will be given very serious consideration, but I do not think his constituents should worry.

NATIONAL SECURITY

EXPULSION OF SOVIET OFFICIALS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as a member of the Cabinet Committee on Security and Intelligence, which Committee should have made the decision in the full knowledge of the KAL murders that the note preventing two Soviet spies from continuing their work in Canada was to be handed to the Soviet embassy on the very day this Parliament reopened. Why was the decision to inform the Canadian people changed? Why was the political decision made to suppress the publication of this action? Why the secrecy? When would the Government have deemed it appropriate in its wisdom to let us know? The Government certainly was not keeping its secret from the Russians. Why was the Government keeping it secret from Canadians?

● (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member may realize, the practice has varied when an expulsion is requested, whether public announcement is made. If the Hon. Member looks at the precedents since World War II he will find that on certain occasions an announcement has been made on the day or about the time the expulsion was requested. In other cases it was not.

In this particular case the sole reason for not making a public announcement was to concentrate public attention on the major issue of the downing of the airliner and the loss of ten Canadian lives, not to have that all important issue confused by an important event which took place but which is a part of an ongoing relationship with the Soviet Union. It was my decision that, in these circumstances, it would be much more prudent to concentrate our attention on that very important issue with immense implications, rather than to divert public attention to the expulsion of Soviet personnel which might be linked in some way with the KAL downing. That was a decision I made, which I think is a sound one and justified in the circumstances.

Mr. Lawrence: Through you, Madam Speaker, I say to the Minister that that is nonsense, especially when the KAL downing took place on September 1. The decision was made between September 1 and September 12 to hand the note to the embassy. It could have been done a month ago, it could have been done a month from now. That is just nonsense.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that comments on questions are not really the kind of thing which should take place during Question Period. Hon. Members are required to ask questions.

TIMING OF EXPULSION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is to ask the Minister if the real reason for his intervention in this matter, that is, to keep the decision from the Canadian people who have every right to know what happens when it happens, was not strictly political, in that he did not wish to confirm the truth of the claim by the new Leader of the Opposition two days previous to September 12 that there were many KGB agents here in Canada.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, that had nothing to do with it, though I am pleased to know that the Hon. Member read the exact words of the Leader of the Opposition when he said, "You and I both stumble into KGB agents in Ottawa every day of the week". The only two KGB agents I stumbled into have been expelled from the country. Maybe the Leader of the Opposition would now tell us where all the others are. All I can say is that his followers yesterday, after his performance, looked as grim faced as any group of KGB agents ever could look.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SOCIAL SERVICES

VOLUNTARY AGENCIES FEEDING THE HUNGRY—DEPARTMENT'S ROLE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. One of the consequences of 1.5 million unemployed is the fact that thousands of people are hungry every day. In the last two years there has been a dramatic increase in the number of volunteer agencies in cities from Halifax to Vancouver that have established facilities for feeding hungry people. Obviously our system of social security is not meeting the needs of these people. Has the Minister's Department given any consideration to the problems which are now apparent? Is it studying the scope of the problems and what might be done to alleviate them?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, without wanting to diminish the human problems which have arisen because of the difficult economic years through which we have come, first I want to say that we have quite a good safety net of programs in Canada, both federal and joint programs, as well as provincial ones. However, in the case of all welfare recipients in Canada there may be an acknowledged and relatively old problem which is not improving and on which I do not think we could have any direct influence as the federal Government. I am referring to the levels of payments of benefits decided upon and paid by the Provinces, which we reimburse 50 cents on the dollar. Unfortunately they are at the initiative of the Provinces and we are not supposed to influence them. Some have cut back. Some have deindexed. All are not giving enough vis-à-vis the level of poverty, so there is a problem there. If a Province wants to readjust its rates, we will automatically reimburse the full 50 per cent.

Mr. Orlikow: I am sure the people who are hungry and have to go to soup kitchens will not get much comfort out of the suggestion of the federal Minister that this is a provincial problem. I do not think they care who will handle the problem. What they want is some action.

REQUEST FOR STUDY ON EXTENT OF HUNGER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister. Will she give consideration to funding a study of the problem to see what is the extent of it or how many people are, in fact, hungry in the country? This study could be done by organizations such as the Canadian Council for Social Development or the National Council on Welfare. At least we could understand what is going on and what might be done to help these people who are in such desperate need.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am afraid if a question in the federal House on a provincial matter does not help that a study will not help either. However, I will explore the point. May I ask the Hon. Member whether he has made the representations he should to the Manitoba Government, for example, in order that one Province may show an example and help push up the level of welfare benefits? It is very urgent.

DENIAL OF ACCESS TO TRAINING FOR GRADE SIX EDUCATED WORKERS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It follows yesterday's statement by the Minister of State for Economic Development. Is that why applicants for training under the Skills Training Act with a functional grade six or less are being denied access to training? Is this a trial balloon in that the Government will write off those with a functional grade six or less for the unemployment world?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I really did not understand the ramifications of the Hon. Member's question. I thought he referred to an answer given yesterday by the Minister of State for Economic Development. Perhaps if he could rephrase his question in a more precise way I might be able to help him.

POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, Canada Employment Centres across the country refuse to admit, under the Skills Trainint Act, people with a functional grade six or less into training. I am asking if this is policy. It is policy only, because the Act itself emphasizes programs that especially benefit native people. Native people and people with functional grade six or less are being denied entrance into skills training programs by design, by policy of local Employment Centres. Following the statement yesterday made by his colleague, indicating that full employment is no longer possible, my question is very simple. Is this a trial balloon? Are we now prepared to write off people with a functional grade six or less as totally unemployable or unemployed?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the short answer is no, there is no connection between these two things. There was a recommendation that the problems which he pinpointed of those who have less than grade six education were more properly the responsibility of the Provinces. In a subsequent supplementary question, he raised the question of educational programs in relation to Indian groups, which is another catogery altogether. The answer is no, there is no connection between the two matters that he has cited.

REQUEST THAT BENEFITS BE EXTENDED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He will recall that last week I raised the plight of people who are unemployed, out of unemployment insurance benefits, and unable to live on their welfare payments. It has come to my attention that nearly 25,000 people in Hamilton are on welfare. Yesterday the Steel Company of Canada announced that another 1,300 people will be laid off this Fall and a potential of 300 more by Christmas. I asked the Minister of Finance if he would move to extend unemployment insurance benefits to those who are out of work through no fault of their own, and who cannot possibly live on welfare.

Will the Minister take steps to present to Cabinet a proposal for the extension of unemployment insurance benefits to those people who are seeking employment and who cannot find it because there is just not any work?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is correct that the Hon. Member did raise this question. As a result of the question I have done some checking into the situation. Of course there are more people who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits than we would like to see in Canada, but the number is considerably less than had been anticipated.

The Hon. Member then raised the question of knowledge about those who, as a result of that, were moving on to welfare. Our studies show that the percentage of those who are doing that is somewhere between 8 and 10 per cent. That figure is considerably less than those who are exhausting their unemployment insurance benefits.

The third question he raised was whether we are considering changes to unemployment insurance which might respond to this problem. The answer to that is a very general one. I am looking over the variety of our programs to see if they can be improved.

Mr. Deans: Quite clearly from the Minister's answer, if it is such a small number, then to extend unemployment insurance benefits would certainly not be any great burden.

NUMBERS ON WELFARE IN HAMILTON AREA

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister what exactly he can offer to the city of Hamilton and the immediately surrounding area to enable them to meet the demands placed upon them by having over 20 per cent of the steel workers unemployed, 25,000 people on welfare and absolutely no jobs available, or people who are currently in the job market and unable to find employment.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I really do not understand the argument of the Hon. Member. Is he suggesting that the number is so small that it would not cost very much to deal with it, or is he suggesting that the number is so small that it should not be responded to? If the problem is not great, I suppose there is no need to respond. On the contrary, however, I believe it is an important problem that we should look into.

There is obviously, as he very well knows, support by the Government of Canada in conjunction with the Provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan to deal with welfare in the normal way in which we finance those programs through the financing of the provincial Governments. The kind of question he is now raising is the kind of question which his colleagues in the provincial House should be directing to the Government of Ontario.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION—RATES AND REFINANCING

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Following hard upon the report of the subcommittee on the Northern Canada Power Commission, the Minister asked the National Energy Board to take yet another look at the method of setting power rates north of 60. How soon does the Minister expect to hear from the National Energy Board? While he is answering that question, will he tell the House how soon we can expect the Government to respond, I hope in a positive way, to the recommendations of the subcommittee on the Northern Canada Power Commission, particularly two recommendations, one dealing with reorganization and the other with refinancing?

Mr. Nielsen: Unanimous recommendations.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the National Energy Board is expected to make its report any day. I am told that the recommendations are made, so I presume it is in the realm of translation. Therefore, those recommendations are very imminent indeed.

May I say that I believe the Government has viewed the Hon. Member's submissions and those of his committee very favourably indeed. It is a question of money. We might have been able to expend more moneys as far as the NCPC is concerned in wiping out its debt, which would have had some considerable impact. But we had to find $25 million rather quickly to save Cyprus Anvil in the Yukon last year. That put some of our expenditure plans back. We certainly consider it a high priority.

PENITENTIARIES

FORCED FEEDING OF INMATE AT AGASSIZ, B.C.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Solicitor General. I am informed that last night he directed one of his doctors to force feed the Doukhobor woman held in Agassiz, B.C. I am also informed that the doctor who performed that service asked that he be fully protected in case he was put at legal risk because of doing this without the consent of the person. Will the Minister confirm this is what happened, and will he tell the House why the Government has refused to protect this medical doctor as he asked?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the issue of the protection of doctors, in my view, does not arise in the circumstances. The Government of Canada and the Correctional Service of Canada have, over the years, been force feeding criminal inmates from the Doukhobor community in West Coast penitentiaries. This has been done over 30 years. The problem of legal protection has never really arisen. It is a hypothetical question. The inmates are in a sense wards of the Government of Canada through the Correctional Service of Canada. The legal duty is clearly there. My colleague, the Minister of Justice, has informed me, and the law officers of the Crown have advised me, that the duty is there. Therefore I am confident that the circumstances do provide adequate protection for doctors behaving in a professional way in force feeding the inmates.

ORDERS GIVEN TO DOCTORS

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I believe the Solicitor General knows that the Medical Association of Canada has been advised by its legal counsel that doctors do face legal risk if they are not given legal consent before operating on a patient. The Solicitor General will also know that the British Columbia Government attempted to have one of its prisoners made a ward and the courts refused to make that person a ward of the Government. I therefore suggest to the Solicitor General that he is on very shaky legal ground. Why is the Minister putting medical doctors in his service at risk as a result of obeying orders the Minister directs them to carry out?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): As I indicated, Madam Speaker, I do not think that is at all the case. What has arisen is a difference between the statement of professional ethics of some of the medical associations and the law of Canada. Under the medical ethics that have developed over the last several years, in some cases it is the view that no procedure should be imposed on an individual without that individual's informed consent. That may be a fine general professional principle, and we are certainly not asking any doctors to violate their consciences or violate their own sense of ethics to assist the Correctional Service of Canada to fulfil its mandate. On the contrary, we have made a deliberate call across the country for doctors who can, in good conscience and in consistency with their own professional ethics, act in those circumstances to save life.

The point we are making is that when it comes to people under the custody and control of the Correctional Service of Canada, the duty is there. I have done my best and the Correctional Service of Canada has done its best to have on hand doctors who believe in saving life and are prepared to intervene to make that medical judgment when the right time comes to save the lives of inmates in those circumstances.

NATIVE RIGHTS

FUNDING OF DENE AND METIS LAND CLAIM NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He has been given notice of the question. The Minister sent a telegram to the Dene and to the Metis in the Northwest Territories in July, cutting off their funding for land claims negotiations. Since then both organizations have come together and have agreed on a strategy for land claims negotiations. Representatives of those two organizations were here this week and could not meet with the Minister. Can the Minister now guarantee to the Dene and to the Metis that money will be given to them so that they can again start land claims negotiations with the Government of Canada?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I do not think it is correct to say that I could not meet with them. Within the last half hour I have sent a note indicating that I would adjust commitments that I had made, so I am still hopeful of meeting with them.

May I also say, Madam Speaker, that yes, I can stand in the House and say that the funding was cut off at my direction as an inducement to the two organizations to get back together. Generally speaking, I think both organizations supported this. Certainly the Dene did, and the Métis admitted later on that it was the best course of action to take. They have now gotten back together to my satisfaction. I will meet with them and I think I will be in a position to reassure them completely that I am prepared to reinstitute the funding that they require.

THE LATE ANDREW BREWIN

TRIBUTES TO FORMER MEMBER

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, on behalf of our Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and on behalf of all members of our caucus and our members and supporters across the country, we pay tribute today to the memory of Andrew Brewin, the former Member of Parliament for Greenwood. To his wife Peggy, his son John and his daughters Margaret, Martha, Mary and Jane and other members of his family, we extend our deepest sympathy.

Andrew Brewin was one of our most distinguished former Members and his passing has deprived Canada of a man of passionate commitment toward the eradication of injustice in our world.

Andrew Brewin first won election to the House of Commons in 1962 and he won re-election until his retirement in 1979. In the years he served the House and the country, his concern for the wellbeing of his constituents was always at the forefront of his actions as he pressed for resolutions to their problems. For that he earned the respect of the people in Greenwood and the admiration and friendship of his constituents.

The Late Andrew Brewin

Andrew Brewin was a man who devoted his whole adult life to the service of others. He was a man of ideas and conscience and it was here in this House that he was able to speak to Canadians day in and day out about social and economic justice, about the gap between the rich and the poor and about the crying need in our world for a greater understanding between its peoples.

Andrew Brewin was a man who was devoted to work always for the common good. It was this devotion that convinced him to take up the case of Japanese Canadians who were so unjustly treated at the beginning of the Second World War. It was because of that devotion that he fought against injustice not only in Canada but internationally as well. He argued tenaciously on behalf of the needs of people in developing nations and about the obligation of the developed countries to give greater assistance to those areas.

Even after he left this House, Madam Speaker, Andrew Brewin continued to be an outspoken advocate for those principles he profoundly believed in. His lifelong work which was dedicated toward achieving world peace was well known to Members of the House, and over the past several years he increased those efforts against what he termed as the insanity in the growth of nuclear armaments.

In voicing his compassion, Andrew Brewin was always civilized and advanced his arguments with reason and warmth. It was Andrew Brewin's force and conviction that brought me and many others that I know of into active politics and the example that he set will live on long after his passing.

Andrew Brewin was a great Canadian and a great humanitarian. His work in this House and internationally is his legacy to our great country. We will all miss him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to speak on behalf of my Party on the passing of Andrew Brewin. As you know, Madam Speaker, he had been a Member of Parliament for many years. When I came to the House in 1963, I had the occasion to meet him and we became quite good friends. I think that his contribution to the House of Commons has been outstanding. His speeches in the House of Commons were always well thought of and always showed his great devotion to humanity.

During all the years he was in the House of Commons, Andrew Brewin made a very positive contribution. He spoke loudly and clearly about what he felt was important to express and at the same time he managed to make a lot of friends.

Even after he left the House of Commons he remained deeply interested in the debates of this House. During the debate on the Constitution, I personally received many phone calls from him and had many visits with him because of his great preoccupation with human rights. He wanted our House of Commons to pass a bill of rights that would inscribe in the Canadian Constitution the basic values that make Canada such a great country.

The Late Andrew Brewin

The fact that he has now left us is very sad for all of us. On behalf of every member of this Party, I would like to express my deepest sympathy to his wife, who helped him so much in his political career, and to the members of his family who spent so much time in the public service during the time Andrew served in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

I would like to add that I am sure my Quebec colleagues will remember Andrew Brewin as a man who knew Canada very well and respected every part of this country. He always wanted our country to be great and united, and it was always his desire that everyone should be well served by government in Canada. He brought the same concern to his activities at the international level, and in the course of his travels, he always worked very hard to support all international movements for peace and for the progress of mankind and to ensure that Canada's contribution would represent the best we had to offer. On behalf of the Members of my Party, I wish to join the Member for Beaches in offering the Brewin family our sincere sympathy.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, as one of those Members who was here when the late Hon. Member for Greenwood came to this House and who was also here when he left the House, I would like to associate the Official Opposition with the remarks that have been made by the Hon. Members who have eulogized the late Andrew Brewin.

Those of us who knew Andrew Brewin recognized his dedication to and concern for others. We recognized his consuming interest in securing justice for the dispossessed and the underprivileged. Those views were a credit to his Party and to the country as a whole.

He was a very able Parliamentarian, always sincere and straightforward with no guile or deviousness in his nature or in his soul. He fought very strongly for the things in which he believed and afterwards, as the Hon. Minister has just said, he was always ready to extend a hand in friendship to his colleagues in the House.

He was a member of the New Democratic Party at a time when some of its Members were giants in the House. T. C. Douglas, David Lewis, and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is still with us, lent lustre to the Chamber.

The late Hon. Member for Greenwood was always in the forefront of debate, putting forward his Party's position with grace, dignity and moderation. He always had a good word for the argument of an opponent and, while prepared to uphold his views with competence and very often with wit, could always see good in the opinions of others.

He was one of those people who went to Africa over a decade ago to obtain first-hand information on conditions on that troubled continent.

He was a Parliamentarian in every sense of the word with a true love of this Chamber and a true respect for its traditions. He knew what Parliament was about and was aware of the insoluble link between the right of free expression and the preservation of our liberties.

The sympathy of Members of this Party goes to his colleagues and to his family. I say sincerely on behalf of all of us in this Party that he will be missed.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words along with other Hon. Members about what has happened to us with the loss of Andrew Brewin last night. It was my privilege to have been close friends with Andrew Brewin for a period of between 45 and 50 years. I know something of the kind of person he was, serving the interests of this political movement of which we have been a part. He played his part in making things better not only where he lived, but in other countries around the world.

I mentioned the fact that I knew Andrew these 45 or 50 years. I might say that I had the privilege of knowing his late reverend father, who was a leader in the English Anglican church in Canada. I also know his wife, Peggy, very well and his five children, one son and four daughters. They are all married, I was at their weddings and I have had connections with them in various other ways. In addition, there is a large number of grandchildren. One of the things that Andrew was hoping for was that he would see the first great grandchild in the family, who is to be born soon. Interestingly enough, the father of the great grandchild yet to be born also has the name of Andrew.

We are very appreciative of the kind of people the Brewins are and of the personal friendships we have had together. I welcome this opportunity in Parliament to remember his wife, children and grandchildren and we extend to them our very best wishes.

I am grateful for what other Members have said, both on behalf of this Party and the Liberal and Conservative Parties. They spoke of the breadth of his interest. He was a strong and active politician and was greatly concerned about certain matters. While he was interested in international affairs, world relations and that sort of thing, he also visited other countries of the world because he wanted to render any service he could in helping to make life better for other people. He was concerned about relations in this country, about our Constitution and the things that affect people in a place such as the City of Toronto. He played a very important role. We always enjoyed the speeches he made here and welcomed the stands he took on our behalf.

I think we can say that Andrew Brewin made a very positive contribution in his 17 years in this Parliament. We are sorry to lose him but we remember him as one who made a great contribution to this country during his lifetime.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), has eloquently expressed the regrets of this side of the House. I merely wish to add a brief, personal reminiscence. I had the opportunity of working with Mr. Brewin over a period of more than 20 years in various causes. I also had the privilege of teaching law to two members of his family, one of whom is now one of our most distinguished federal public servants. I think we all feel a great sense of loss in this House at his passing.

The last significant occasion that I shared with Andrew Brewin was a small dinner given for him by the then Japanese Ambassador to Canada. It was attended by Mr. Tom Shoyama and other members of the Japanese-Canadian community in Canada in honour of his fight for the Japanese-Canadians at a time when that was not a popular cause in the country.

It is because of men like Andrew Brewin that this House and this country are as great as they are.

Madam Speaker: I am certain the House would wish me to convey to the family of Andrew Brewin the sympathy of all Members of the House and to send to his wife and family an extract of the words that were pronounced in the House today so they may be comforted by the friendship and high esteem in which our former colleague was held.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the Minister who is acting as Government House Leader has already informed us that the business today is to be that which commenced at eleven o'clock this morning. We would like to know what is to go tomorrow and what the Government's intention is for at least Monday and Tuesday of next week. If he can go further than that it would be helpful.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, we will continue with Bill C-110, as we will tomorrow. Monday will be a short day with Question Period at eleven o'clock, to be followed at twelve o'clock with one hour of debate and adjournment at one o'clock. We propose to call Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

If the Western Grain Transportation Act, otherwise known as the Crow legislation, is reported tomorrow, it is our intention to bring that forward on Tuesday. If it is not reported until Monday, then we propose to bring it forward on Thursday. On Wednesday of next week we would have Private Members' Business. It goes without saying that if we commence debate on the Crow on Thursday, we would call Bill C-110 again on Tuesday. Beyond next Thursday, which we will use for the Crow, the business will be decided later next week.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, there is some doubt with respect to discussions that took place between the Minister and myself yesterday and the day before. Are we quite certain now that on Friday we will deal with Bill C-110, and if that business is disposed of, we will then go on to Bretton Woods? Is that the order for Friday?

Mr. Collenette: I regret to inform the Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, that there was a slight misunderstanding with the New Democratic Party on the Bretton Woods Bill. It would not be our intention to move forward on that tomorrow if we dispose of report stage of Bill C-110 today. I just learned of this earlier today and must apologize to the Hon. Member for Yukon.

If we get report stage of Bill C-110 today, then perhaps we would move third reading of it tomorrow, or we might call Bill C-91. I am not sure of his Party's intentions in regard to Bill C-110 and whether it is prepared to let that go today. At any rate, the Bretton Woods Bill will not be dealt with tomorrow. It would require unanimous consent to do that as the Bill has yet to be introduced. That consent is not forthcoming at this point.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am afraid this has not been cleared up for me yet. Perhaps the Minister has not been informed of the offer I made during this morning's debate. The Parliamentary Secretary indicates that he has conveyed that information to the Minister. That may clear the way for total progress on Bill C-110. If that occurs today, what will be the business for the remainder of the day? If Bill C-110 goes on for the whole of today but is dealt with some time tomorrow, what will be taken up tomorrow in the time between its disposal and the normal adjournment hour?

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I was aware of the offer made by the Hon. Member for Yukon. Until I am advised otherwise by the Minister of State for International Trade who is in New York, the Government cannot agree to his proposal. If there is some change on that I will get back to him and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain very quickly.

On that assumption, should there be an arrangement about that particular piece of legislation, I understand it would mean that third reading would also be called today, if that is agreeable to the New Democratic Party. Tomorrow we would probably proceed with Bill C-91 and I could let him know about that later this afternoon. This is contingent upon negotiations and on the offer that he made earlier.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, as soon as the Minister sorts out what he wants to do he can let me know and I will be happy to look at it.

Last week I asked about the progress that was not being made on Bill C-653. I wonder whether the acting House Leader might be able to inform me whether the Minister of Agriculture has indicated if he is prepared to have the Bill brought back to the House so that it can be proceeded with either in its present form, which is in the form of a Private Member's Bill, or in some other form initiated by the Government. This is a Bill of crucial concern and it has been hanging around on the back burner long enough. The farmers of Canada expect the Government of Canada to do something about the problem of bankruptcies.

● (1520)

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I was aware of the proceedings last week and the undertaking of the Government House Leader to look into the matter. The Government House Leader will be back tomorrow and perhaps this subject can be raised at that time.

PETITIONS

MR. BLAIKIE—CRTC TELEVISION BROADCASTING REGULATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and pleasure of putting before the House today a petition which is signed by members of the Assiniboia Christian Centre in Winnipeg, which consists of St. Chad's Anglican Parish and the Roman Catholic Parish of John XXIII. It is a petition which expresses the concern of these people about pornography. They are concerned that the Canadian Radio-Television and Communications Commission's television broadcasting regulations do not extend to women the same protection against abusive comments or abusive pictorial representation which now exists for racial and religious groups.

MR. McKINNON—IMPOSITION OF METRIC SYSTEM

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present to the House a petition signed by 56 residents of my riding of Victoria in which they humbly shew that they oppose the mandatory imposition of the metric system in Canada and request that the implementation of the metric system in Canada be continued on a strictly voluntary basis. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. TAYLOR—CLIFFORD ROBERT OLSON

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, today I am presenting petitions from 1,606 Canadians who are asking that the Government of Canada, the House of Commons and the Senate pass Bill C-671 in order that the early execution of Clifford Robert Olson may take place. Some 8,343 Canadians have now petitioned for the execution of Clifford Robert Olson for the heinous crimes which he committed in murdering and then bragging about the deaths of 11 splendid young people. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 4,954—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Advisory Committee on Northern Development and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. (a) What are the terms of reference of the Committee (b) what matters did it consider in the fiscal year 1982-83 (c) how often did it meet and how often is it required to meet (d) what reports and/or recommendations did the Committee publish in the fiscal year 1982-83?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) The Advisory Committee on Northern Development is not a standing committee with fixed membership. It is chaired by the incumbent Deputy Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs. The incumbent Assistant Deputy Minister, Northern Program, is the Secretary.

(b) (i) Attendance at meetings is dictated by subject matter and Deputy Ministers' of Departments with expertise related to items to be discussed are invited to attend. Deputy Ministers may delegate, at their discretion, one or more of their senior management team to attend with them or in their stead. (ii) See above.

(c) No extra salary or expenses are associated with membership.

(d) The Advisory Committee's administrative requirements are provided by indeterminate employees of Indian and Northern Affairs using existing accommodation and resources.

2. (a) Terms of reference: To advise the Government on questions of policy relating to civilian and military undertakings in northern Canada, and to provide for the effective co-ordination of all government activities in that area.

(b) See (c) below.

(c) The Committee did not meet in the fiscal year 1982-83. No requirement as to frequency of meetings exists.

(d) None.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 6 and 8 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, when the House recessed at one o'clock I was in the process of discussing the implications of taking from the House of Commons and placing in to the hands of the board of directors of a Crown corporation the significant judgment which has to be made with respect to the making of loans and the consequences thereof.

This becomes very important when one examines the way in which these funds which are loaned by the Export Development Corporation are treated in their financial statement. I have before me the most recent set of financial statements, with notes attached thereto, which form part of the Annual Report for the year ended December 31, 1982. It is of particular interest to find when you note the statement of assets that a total net advance by way of principal loan receivables amounts to $4.5 billion, roughly, with respect to which there is a reserve for what is referred to as "losses on loans" of $53 million. That is a reserve for losses which have not as yet been realized.

With respect to the loan guarantees and the interest earned, an examination of the financial statements will show that there is a $6 million reserve against loan guarantees outstanding in the amount of $404 million, roughly. I was curious as to why the amount of intended reserves should be so little, having regard to the very substantial quantum of outstanding loans. The answers are very clear and are explained by way of notes in the financial statement. They are rather elaborate, but I believe I have enough time to put them on the record. Let me read from page 25 of the Annual Report:

> The provision for losses on loans is based on a review of collectibility of all outstanding loans to sovereign and commercial borrowers. In respect of this review, the Corporation recognizes that the future economic and political conditions in some of the countries where the Corporation has made loans are subject to varying degrees of pressures, some of which are unpredictable. Accordingly, delays in the repayment of principal and interest may well occur from time to time.

In the case of loans made to sovereign borrowers, that is the governments of countries or their agencies, payment delays are not necessarily indicative of a future loss requiring a provision. Sovereign entities and their international financial obligations do not have commercial mortality, and the international system does not allow the unilateral denial of a sovereign obligation. Furthermore, the international system provides several mechanisms and institutions through which countries facing repayment difficulties can effect remedial measures in agreement with their creditors. Therefore, except in the rare instance of outright repudiation or a write-off of asset value agreed to by creditors, in the opinion of management the ultimate collectibility of a sovereign obligation, and thus its asset value, is not subject to question, although delays may have to be accepted.

It is the policy of the Corporation to set aside from net income, in addition to any specific provisions made as a result of the review of the outstanding loans, an amount sufficient to maintain an accumulated non-specific allowance proportionate to the total loan principal and interest receivable for which no specific provision has been made.

What we have here, Mr. Speaker, is a complete repudiation of the general principles which apply in the case of commercial loans made by the private sector, and it is something which should alarm the general public. The statement here flies in the face of the fact that a nation like North Korea, when it suited it, completely repudiated the obligations which it had to the international community. And it is a true fact that as long as the lender in any situation, be it international or local, continues to advance money to the borrower, that loan will never be bad; it is uncollectable only when the loan is called.

What this note to the financial statement indicates very clearly is that the usual considerations which apply when examining whether a loan is a bad loan with respect to which a reserve should be claimed or not, are not listened to or paid attention to, on the false premise that sovereign powers are immortal. That is a strange justification, Mr. Speaker, because very clearly if a loan is made for $100 million and advanced for a period of 50 years interest-free, and this House has no opportunity of determining exactly what the terms of those loans are, the value of that loan in the financial statements of this Crown corporation can clearly be zero, particularly when the recipient of those funds happens to be a nation which may be hostile to Canada.

My great concern and the concern of my colleagues has been expressed throughout this debate. We have no opportunity to deal with these substantive issues when the very matters with respect to which I direct the attention of the House are taken out of the House and transferred to a board of directors who will now be made up exclusively of members of the senior Public Service in Canada. That will be the situation if the Bill in its present form goes through as requested by the Government.

One thing we should also pay some attention to is the growth within the public sector of Government expenditure as a portion of the GNP of this nation. That growth today stands at 49.2 per cent of the GNP. If this corporation uses the powers granted to it under this Bill and in fact borrows the $20 billion to which reference has been made, that will have two very substantial effects on the business community. It will dry up the available funds for regular commercial activities and force up interest rates, the very things this Government tells us it wishes not to do.

Thank you Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I think I am about the one hundredth speaker on Bill C-110.

An Hon. Member: One hundred and one.

Mr. Thomson: I guess you have to ask yourself why we are fielding 101 speakers on this Bill. I have not been able to find more than a squib on it in the newspapers ever since we started debating the Bill. Certainly the media does not care very much about it and probably most of the Canadian public does not understand the Bill. So why in the world would 101 Members of Parliament stand up in this House of Commons and fight so fiercely this particular legislation?

It is not a very significant piece of legislation. It only enables the Government to go out and put at risk $62 billion of taxpayers' hard-earned money. It is not really all that significant, I suppose. So why are we fighting so hard over a paltry $62 billion? Mr. Speaker, the reason we are fighting so hard on this Bill and why we are going to continue to fight so hard is because we are fighting against the Government's intransigence, its unwillingness to introduce any semblance of accountability to this institution. What we are fighting for in this Bill is this institution. What is the purpose of our being here if we are all totally irrelevant? I include in that the backbenchers of the Liberal Party as well as the Opposition Party. What is the point of being here if we are simply a rubber stamp to be tramped on by the Government at will? That is what this legislation is all about.

We have asked for just a few amendments to this Bill to give Parliament just a little wee bit of say over how the Government might want to spend $62 billion of the Canadian taxpayers' money. All we have asked for is some semblance of representation on the board of directors to introduce some responsibility, accountability and control over the management of the Export Development Corporation. But no, that is to be denied us.

Why is it that the Government does not want to do anything about amending Bill C-110? Why is it that for the last seven years Crown corporations have been a subject of debate? There is a mountain of information about the management, control and accountability, the role and responsibilities of directors of Crown corporations. Yet the Government does not know anything about it. It just turns its back. Not one thing has been done about it. You can go back to the Lambert Commission and the reports of J. J. Macdonell, the Auditor General who preceded Mr. Kenneth Dye, and Mr. Henderson who preceded Mr. Macdonell. Consistently, year after year after year, they have reported that Crown corporations are poorly managed, indeed out of control.

I would like to read you something, Mr. Speaker, written by a gentleman who shall remain unnamed but who has spent most of his life in Government administering Crown corporations. He says that unfortunately the Crown corporation concept is in deep trouble. It is a very good idea that is badly abused, he says. By and large most of the Crown corporations are poorly managed, drawing on Government money as if it were a bottomless pit. They have Ministers who do not know what they are doing, and boards of directors stacked with patronage appointments. I guess nothing more clearly exemplifies what this gentleman is saying than the disaster, the catastrophe of Canadair.

But to come back to my point, Mr. Speaker, why does the Government not want to do anything about these Crown corporations? Why does it not want to introduce into this House legislation to put some teeth into the management, control and accountability of Crown corporations? You have to ask yourself why. Why does the Government not want to do it, Mr. Speaker? There must be a reason why. You have a blue ribbon commission headed by Mr. Lambert and successive Auditors General who have clearly stated the need for reform. You have the members of the Business Council on National Issues who have pleaded with the Government to introduce reform. When we were in government we introduced Bill C-27, and the Liberals stonewalled it. Then the Government comes back with its own version of reform in Bill C-153, which really is simply a fraud and window-dressing, as evidenced by the fact that the other side has withdrawn the Bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, what is at the heart of the government's desire to not want to proceed with these reforms? Well, to do so would detract from the Liberal Government's ability to manipulate for their own political advantage. These Crown corporations cost the Canadian people in 1981-82 some $6.5 billion. Most people, including myself, cannot even get their arms around a billion, let alone six and a half of them. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, $6.5 billion. But no, this Government refused to introduce any reforms for the benefit of Canadians because it would interfere with political patronage and political manipulation for their benefit. I can think of no better way to illustrate this point than by giving you two examples. Sometime in the next little while we are going to see what is called the Canada Development Investment Corporation, the CDIC. It will be capitalized at the small amount of $3 billion. But it is going to have control of Canadair, de Havilland, Teleglobe, and it will acquire the share of Government ownership in the Canada Development Corporation which controls Texas Gulf Sulphur and many other companies.

We are told that the purpose of the CDIC is to enable us to manage properly the assets of these other Crown corporations. Why? Because a management team has been put in place that knows how to deal with all of these problems. At its head is Senator Jack Austin. Then there is the infamous Mr. Maurice Strong, who certainly qualifies as a great manager, there is no question. He is a Liberal so he must be a good manager. Then there is the architect of the National Energy Program, Mr. Joel Bell. These gentlemen will do all these good things for Canadians and will manage this $3 billion monster corporation. Not only are we told that they will manage it properly, CDIC will look after the interests of the taxpayers of Canada by disposing of those assets that can be managed more properly by the private sector. These gentlemen have never sold anything in their lives.

The CDIC is a blatant instrument of further state intervention, and no Canadian should misunderstand its purpose. Anything else that one hears is tommyrot, and that Government knows it but does not have the courage to stand up and admit the truth. When we say more state intervention, what does it mean to most people? Canadians like to think that we have a wonderful blend or mix in Canada of state intervention and private enterprise. They assume we get along very well this way and that Canada has this unique situation where it has a little bit of each and that we get along fine with state intervention.

Since I am running out of time I will try to wrap up very quickly. People do not seem to understand what is at stake here, and the Government certainly does not want them to understand. Jobs are at stake and that is what we are concerned about. We are talking about jobs. State intervention means the loss of jobs and the loss of the ability of Canada's economy to compete in the real world today. We will never create jobs in Canada until we are prepared to face international competition. There is no commodity for which Canada sets the price. We are at the mercy of prices for every single thing out in the real world.

State intervention represents a misallocation of capital. That $6.5 billion which I referred to a few moments ago could perhaps create 100,000 jobs for Canadians who are unemployed in this country today. Canadians will be faced with a very clear choice in a few years from now. That choice is whether they want jobs or further Government intervention in their lives and more agencies like CDIC. Crown corporations are depriving Canadians of their jobs. They are depriving us of the motivation, innovation and willingness to adapt to the real world. Canada represents less than one-half of one per cent of the world population. If we believe that we can win the battle in international markets of the world through Crown corporations we are very sadly mistaken.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this debate and I do not intend to make a long speech at this time. I will agree with my friends in the Conservative Party about the incompetent manner in which the Liberal Government has managed Crown corporations.

However, it does seem to me that some Members from the Conservative Party should deal more honestly with the whole question of Crown corporations than the Hon. Member who just finished speaking. Crown corporations in Canada are not the creation of the federal Liberal Government, they are in existence in every Province of this country, and they have been created by Conservative federal Governments as well.

While I will not go through the entire list, in my Province there is a publicly owned provincial telephone system which was established in 1908. It was not established by some socialist government but by the Conservative Government of the day headed by Sir Rodmond Roblin, the grandfather of Senator Roblin. There is a provincially owned telephone system in the Province of Saskatchewan which I believe was established by a Liberal Government. A great example of a Crown corporation in this Province is Ontario Hydro. It was established by a Conservative Government and has been managed by a Conservative Government which has been in power continuously for the last 40 years. The present Ontario Government purchased a substantial share in Sun Oil over a year ago. I could go on, but the point I am making is that Crown corporations are not foreign and not something foisted on the Canadian people by a Liberal Government alone.

Crown corporations have a long history in Canada. Most of them have an honourable history. They have been established by federal and provincial Governments, Liberal, Conservative, NDP or indeed Social Credit. It seems to me that it was the Social Credit Government in British Columbia which took over the hydro-electric system and made it a public utility owned by the people.

Crown corporations have been established in this country for many years. They were established because a government, whether Liberal, Conservative, NDP or Social Credit, believed that the private sector was not prepared to do what was necessary. I remind the Hon. Member who just spoke that it was a Conservative Government in Ottawa which established the Canadian Wheat Board and a Conservative Government in Ottawa which established the CBC. That is the reality.

While I agree with many of the criticisms made by my friends in the Conservative Party about how the Government operates and manages Crown corporations—and certainly one of the worst examples of how to do things is the establishment of the Canadian Development Investment Corporation—I wish that at least one Conservative Member of Parliament would try to tell us honestly whether they believe there is a role for any Crown corporation or whether they really believe, like some of the Reagonite and Goldwater Republicans in the U.S., that the Government should do less and less and that almost everything should be left to the private sector.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it makes sense to hear my friend from the NDP defending Crown corporations because they take the attitude that they would like everything owned by the Government. They would like pure socialism. We would be in the same situation as the Russians.

I believe that this Bill is nothing more than proliferation of subgovernment. The Liberal Party is requesting permission to go out and literally spend an extra $34 billion. The Government is asking for an unbelievable amount of money to give to foreign countries to buy our products. Anyone who has any basic knowledge of economics knows that one cannot give everything away for nothing and then borrow and leave it in a financial statement. Let me refer to state to state loans. Poland has a state to state loan. This is shown in their financial statements. We questioned the Auditor General. We asked why we did not write that loan off and be honest. Instead the Government capitalizes the interest on that loan ad infinitum. It is time we faced up to our losses, wrote them off and got on with managing this country properly. An example of that under Crown corporations is the CDIC. It took Canadair over through a very bad time. We as a Government have written off $2 billion to develop a toy, an executive jet. It may be a very fine product. But now we turn it over to CDIC. It cannot help but make money out of it. Believe me, the way Crown corporations in this country operate, the CDIC will blow it. The CDIC is incapable of selling the product because there is no incentive in the bureaucracy. We seem to proliferate Crown corporations. What is interesting about CDIC is that the Minister in charge is the Minister of Social Development. If the Government had taken that $2 billion, it could have retired every employee of Canadair on $60,000 a year indexed. That is social development, not running a company into the ground.

Furthermore, this is a political ploy on the part of the Liberal Party. It picks a Minister who is in the other place and says he is in charge of CDIC. I checked back with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. That Department is still involved. Why does the Government not face up to it and put the responsibility for CDIC where it belongs, that is with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley), let him answer questions in the House, which we have still not had answered in committee, and face up to the problem facing this country?

Another example concerning a Crown corporation which really upset me this week was when the Chairman of Canadian National, a great Canadian citizen, stood up and said the Auditor General should not meddle in the affairs of CNR. He is covering up. The Chairman is frightened to have the Auditor General deal with his financial statements. We need a comprehensive audit on every Crown corporation in Canada. We must start winding up Crown corporations. Crown corporations should only be started where the private sector is not capable of providing capital to get a corporation going. But we should not continue operating them. I would say the CBC is a prime example. It has proceeded from being a moderate organization to costing the taxpayers of Canada very close to $1 billion a year. I can watch many programs on the CBC on an American network by way of cable. I believe the original concept of the CBC, as for Canadian National and for Air Canada, is very sound. Because of the length and breadth of this country, we had to subsidize communication and transportation to help Canadians. Once we do that and we get these entities on their feet, they should be turned over to the private sector.

With respect to the private sector, the Economic Council of Canada in its report clearly states that the EDC should be reduced, restricted and its function should be taken over by the private sector. The American Credit Insurance Corporation does about ten times the volume of business the EDC does. That corporation or another credit corporation could handle this business if it were assisted on these difficult state to state loans. I will acknowledge there are some state to state loans that must be made because we have a responsibility to the Third World. But why do we not face up to these responsibilities to the Third World and write off these loans after we have made them?

We object to this Bill, Mr. Speaker. The Government is asking us as representatives of the Canadian public to triple in Clause 14 and quadruple in Clause 18 the potential available cash that would be taken out of the taxpayers' pockets. There is not enough revenue coming into the Government to handle this kind of expenditure. Our request is very simple. We say that when a Crown corporation needs funds, it should come before the House, explain the purpose of the funds and have the matter debated by the representatives of the Canadian public. We would not be doing our job in the House, we would not be representing our constituencies, and I would not be representing the voters in the constituency of Ontario if I did not speak violently against this type of proliferation and permission to borrow. This should not be allowed.

The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) has said, "We will do a deal. We will reduce the amount." That still is not good enough. The Government must come to this Parliament at least twice a year if it wants to spend this kind of money. The Government must come to Parliament and request the funds and tell us the purpose for the funds. I do not mean to put a total roadblock in front of the Government. We do not want the Liberals to do the same thing to us when we become the Government within the next year or so. I would not want that kind of roadblock. There must be some flexibility. But $34 billion is an awful lot of flexibility. It is about one-fifth of our total national debt. That means increasing our national debt by another 20 per cent. This country cannot afford any more deficits. It is having crippling effects on industry; the service industry and the tourist industry.

For example, let us take a look at the tourist industry. Through taxation programs, tax on gasoline and tax on liquor, it is driving tourists out of the country. As a result, we are $1.2 billion in the red. I hear the explanation from the Liberals that "Our people like to get the sun in the winter time." There are many Canadians who not only get the sun but who go to ski in areas run by private enterprise in the United States because we are not assisting our tourist industry here in Canada, particularly the ski industry.

I think this whole Bill has to be rewritten. I think the Economic Council of Canada, a very responsible organization, has stated it very clearly. This Bill should be withdrawn by the Government and it should be redrawn. The Government should take into consideration some of the points we have made and bring the Bill back to the House, possibly after the next Throne Speech.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the first thing I would like to do is to accept the challenge of my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and tell him yes, there is the odd good Crown corporation. In fact, when I become Prime Minister I will make the NDP a Crown corporation and then privatize it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: With no tongue in check this time let me say that, quite naturally, there are corporations which serve the public well, but that is not what this debate is all about. This is a debate about accountability. We have a Government today which is writing a cheque and signing it without filling in the numbers. It is being printed on latex and extended to the Export Development Corporation for a period of ten years, allowing that corporation to spend up to $62 billion without telling Canadians what the money is to be used for, how it is to be spent or when it will be spent. We live in a democratic country where the people, through this institution, are supposed to control the king's purse.

● (1600)

As Opposition Members we are responding to why Members of Parliament are here in the first place, that is, to control expenditures which are made on behalf of Canadian taxpayers. There is no piece of legislation as fundamental as the one with which we are dealing today. Canadians all across the country are deeply concerned about the enormous growth of Government expenditures. Its spending is out of control, and we are in a situation today of being partially shock-insulated. The average citizen does not know what a billion dollars is. A dollar bill is exactly six inches in length, so two of them make a foot. A billion dollars placed end to end in dollar bills will stretch from Halifax to Vancouver and back two and a half times. The Government wants the authority to take 62 of those without any accountability to Canadians. A former Cabinet Minister of the present Government, now the Chairman of CN and unfortunately a constituent of mine, is now saying that the Auditor General should keep his nose out of the auditing of any Crown corporation. The fact of the matter is that Canadians are begging to know where their money is being spent. I accept the challenge of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North. It is not a question of whether or not each and every Crown corporation fits on a scale of good or bad. It is a question of what this place is for. This place should provide the Government with an opportunity to respond to how people's moneys are being spent.

I would like to do something today which, I concede at the outset, is somewhat unfair. I will refer to some examples of Government expenditures that are obviously wasteful. While Canadians will understand them easily and readily, they really do not add up to all that much in terms of a percentage of total Government waste. However, I want to illustrate that this kind of legislation is an example of the willy-nilly non-accountability of Government. There is an attitude filtering through the Public Service that if it is taxation money, it does not matter. Let me turn to these examples of expenditures which seem to grow like Topsy in the back of the barnyard.

Some years ago the Anti-Inflation Board was established. The then Minister of Finance, Donald Macdonald, said that he would require a staff of fewer than 200 persons. Before the year was up, his staff numbered 866 persons, with a salary tab in excess of $15 million annually. That is simply an example of what happens throughout the country. We live in the world of language where repeated Ministers of Finance have talked about the principal objective of getting inflation and unemployment under control, yet we continue to be faced with the Government seeking authority for $62 billion without accountability, with no time period for spending the money, and without returning to Parliament. During the first term of office of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), Edgar Benson, the then Minister of Finance, said that his budget was intended to show that they really meant business in their fight against inflation. That was in 1969. Then in 1973, the first budget of John Turner indicated that its purpose first and foremost was to bring about a substantial reduction in unemployment. Then in the second budget of John Turner in 1974, he indicated that it reflected his determination to deal with inflation. This was followed by the budget of Donald Macdonald who indicated that their goals were clear and that their first objective was to maintain underlying trends to lower inflation. Then we come to the budget of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) who expected inflation to be down by the end of the year. Then the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) brought in a couple of glorious budgets which woke up the country. Now the good gentleman over there, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), tells us that we are in a beautiful economic period of time. I am sure there are two million Canadians who do not agree with him.

It is this kind of non-accountability which makes 67 per cent of respondents indicate in the Gallup poll that they do not believe this institution is relevant. They do not believe there is any accountability. We used to have representative democracy where people could elect a Member of Parliament to come here, to speak on their behalf and to talk about the control of money. This place has gone wild. They are asking us to appropriate. The Auditor General, Kenneth Dye, has been telling us that we have to be careful of appropriation of more and more money to Crown corporations and of having a sub-layer of Government gone wild.

I would like to return to the examples of Government expenditure which were discovered by the Auditor General a few years ago. He indicated that the Army had a supply of overalls to last 97 years, that the Air Force had enough light bulbs for 250 years, and that the Navy had underwear of a particular size which would meet its requirements for 1,000 years.

An Hon. Member: They were not Stanfield.

Mr. Malone: No, they were not Stanfield. Had they been, we might have had a better Armed Forces today. Then there was the example of a piece of aircraft navigational equipment which cost $9,000 and had a replacement value of $15,000. It was sent to be repaired and was declared surplus in error and sold for $20. I warned Hon. Members that these examples would be somewhat unfair, but they are little examples which people understand when the Government is requesting $62 billion in Bill C-110. They make public servants believe that when there is no accountability in this forum they do not have to be accountable in their own forum.

In the mid 1960s the Post Office Department overestimated the volume of Christmas mail. The result was that there were 53 million Christmas stamps, at a printing cost of $16,000, which were of no use after that season. The defence Department agreed to pay 25 cents per cubic foot for gas at Camp Wainwright in Alberta, although its contract was for only 21 cents. Over the years, the Department of Public Works has had its fair share of criticism because of waste and mismanagement. A firm of architectural engineers was paid $13,000 for plans to erect a two-storey federal building in Kelowna, British Columbia. Subsequently, the plans were useless because the Government decided to build a four-storey structure. An architectural firm was paid $15,000 to design the four-storey building, but once again the Government changed its mind, decided to build a three-storey structure, and the plans for the four-storey structure were also put in the waste bucket.

If we in this place cannot be accountable for the waste of some $62 billion without accountability, signing over latex cheques to EDC, surely these little examples that haunt Canadians, because they understand the size of numbers, it is only natural that we are not showing leadership here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. The Hon. Member may continue his remarks with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I regret that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) was not given the opportunity to continue his remarks. They were very pointed and made a strong case with regard to our concerns over this Bill.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-110. I once again refer to the clause we are debating today, particularly the part amended by my colleague from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). It begins this way:

> —from which outstanding contingent liabilities of the Corporation to which the arrangement applies are directly or indirectly derived . . . shall not at any time exceed ten billion dollars.

That is the way the present Bill reads. The amendment put forward by my colleague is that it "shall not at any time exceed 3 billion 500 million and 1". The whole purpose of what we are trying to address in this debate and with this piece of legislation is not so much the money but the concept or the feeling about what has been happening to Parliament and to the country with legislation brought forward by this Government over the last few years.

There is no doubt that all of us recognize that this is a very complex time. The issues we are faced with on a daily basis are extremely complex. The responsibilities that we as individuals carry, whether as Members of Parliament, business people or in some other walk of life, are very complex. That complexitity encourages us to seek out expertise, to go to people who are experts in a given area.

That is the same situation that we have had over the last few years in terms of Government and of legislation and specifically what we see in cases like this. Once you proceed to obtaining experts, the next step is to allow those experts to come together to form a bureaucracy. Up until that point it is not too bad. However, the next step is that the bureaucrats, that group of experts, suddenly has to pass regulations. At that point, we as Parliamentarians have to become very careful and watch what is happening, because we then begin to see the serious situation that is demonstrated by what this Government has put forward in Bill C-110.

Once the bureaucracy begins to pass regulations, it also begins to centralize its own authority. The authority collected through that agency is authority that is taken away from Parliament. That becomes very significant when you are dealing with Crown corporations and Government agencies that deal with, use and spend taxpayer's money. What is important is that every time you have taxpayer's money being used, that money should be overseen, watched by those who have been elected by the taxpayers.

Once you have all of this centralized authority, you have essentially the authority of Parliament, the watchdogs for the taxpayer. That responsibility goes on down the line, and that lack of responsibility is transferred down from segment to segment. If it is allowed to go on long enough, it almost brings you to the point where you have taxation without representation. We know what kind of revolt that has caused in the past.

The problem, even on the very smallest scale, is that you end up with a lack of service to those people intended to be served, the taxpayers, those who pay the taxes. They have elected us to represent them and to demonstrate their concerns to the Government. We are to have an input into what kind of legislation is put forward. Because of this evolution and because the authority of a Member of Parliament has been reduced, a very difficult situation has developed. That is exactly what Bill C-110 is all about and why we have to introduce amendments such as those brought forward by my colleague.

The question is whether we can change what has been happening. I think we can. In fact, I think we have to. I wish to quote from an article in the Edmonton Journal of September 18 which demonstrates the kind of situation we are dealing with. It reads:

> Cabinet has passed 2,789 orders in council—laws and expenditures passed by cabinet behind closed doors—since January 1. The orders do not need parliamentary approval nor are they referred to MPs for debate. They come into effect after a mere flick of the prime minister's pen. In contrast, the House of Commons considered 49 bills during that period. Only 29 gained approval. Can there be any doubt where the real power lies in Ottawa?
> Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau must carry a lot of blame for making Parliament irrelevant. What is relevant is a powerful political machine, which includes senior bureaucrats and top cabinet ministers, he set up in his office. But the blame is not entirely his to bear—Parliament allowed it to happen.

There is a lot of truth in that article. No doubt Parliament has allowed this kind of thing to happen. That is why we must take a stand on such Bills as Bill C-110. If this is allowed to continue as it has in the past, it will continue to erode the authority of Parliament, transferring the authority from here to Crown corporations, departments and bureaucracies, anywhere but into the hands of elected officials and those called upon to represent Canadians.

The big question is how to solve the problem. We are doing that today by introducing amendments such as this. The question is whether the Government Members and Government backbenchers who are equally responsible to their constituents, will recognize what they are doing by transferring their authority from Parliament to the Crown corporations. This question must be addressed seriously.

I have been a member of the committee on procedural reform. John Holtby, an adviser to the committee, recently gave me the results of the poll regarding the opinion of Canadians on the relevance of Parliament. It indicates what they think of Parliamentarians and what they think of Parliament as an institution. This has been talked about lately in the press. There have been various comments on it. There is no doubt that Canadians do not see this institution as relevant. They are not concerned about the relevance of Members because more and more what the Member says, does and controls is becoming severely limited. This is not being done on a grand scale. It is not something we suddenly realize. There is no flash of lightening that strikes and indicates that this must be stopped. There has been a constant erosion for more than a decade. Since 1968, the authority of Parliament has been whittled away, some of it going to the Crown corporations, some to the bureaucracy. It is always transferred away from the elected Member of Parliament and this institution. The net result is what we see coming out of recent polls.

The Government has speeded up the process. It has encouraged it through Orders in Council, through legislation which allows so much bureaucratic control and so much discretion, and through the vast use of regulations. Anyone who has seen some of the energy Bills recently passed in the House would be frightened by the regulations attached to that legislation and the authority that is in place for those regulations.

It is a serious issue, Mr. Speaker, and it is not simply one of changing the figure from $10 billion to $3,500 million. It is the whole issue of who is responsible to whom. As we as elected officials must realize and must demonstrate and must do all we can to protect that authority, it must remain in Parliament. Therefore, we must go through with amendments to legislation such as this. As long as the Government continues to bring in bad legislation that can harm Canadians in such a way, we as the Opposition will have no choice but to stand up, Member after Member, to speak to this very important issue.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. Owing to the great many Hon. Members on our side who have wanted to be on record concerning accountability in this type of legislation, this is the first opportunity I have had to speak on this subject.

The Chair will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the general thrust of Bill C-110 is to expand the operational capacity of the Export Development Corporation. The objection our Party has to this particular legislation is to the way that the Government wants to do this, and that is, without any further reference to Parliament and without any further need for paid-up capital. We now feel, and have always felt, that it is the job of all Crown corporations to be accountable to the Members of Parliament who represent the taxpayers who are funnelling the money into these Crown corporations.

The second thrust of the Bill is naturally to allow the Government to make more political appointments of Grits to the board of directors of operations such as the Export Development Corporation. We on our side understand that it is necessary to pay people to be Grits and to occupy those positions because it is so difficult to be a Grit these days. If a person can get free trips to attend board meetings to sit as a board member, fine, why not? That is the second thrust of the Bill.

What we are concerned about, however, is the very essence of the difference between the approach taken by the two major Parties in the country to accountability. It is the policy of the Progressive Conservative Party that Crown corporations be accountable to Parliament. It is the policy of the Liberal Government to set up the Crown corporations, give them as much money as they want in the form of a carte blanche, appoint a Grit board of directors and send them on their way. They can come back every so often for more money, but the basic idea is to get out there and spend money. The Government does not want Crown corporations to be accountable.

I refer the Chair to the recent speech made by the late great Jack Horner, a man who went to his political reward as the Chairman of the Board of Directors of Canadian National—

Mr. Bloomfield: He's not a long-time Grit.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, he has obviously overcome that, and one might say that he has gone down very fast. Now he executes the office of Chairman of the Board of Directors of Canadian National by running around the country making speeches in which he says to the Auditor General, the independent representative of the Parliament of Canada, "Keep your nose out of our business".

The Chairman has obviously missed the point of the function of the Auditor General. The Auditor General's function is not to determine whether the policy is correct. That is our job. Once a policy is passed by the House of Commons, we appreciate that, whether we like it or not, that policy is not within the ambit of the Auditor General. It is within the ambit of the Auditor General to make sure that Canadian taxpayers get fair value for their money, that the administration of the taxpayers' dollars through Crown corporations is carried out with an efficiency that gives value for money. That is what the Auditor General is interested in.

The Chairman of Canadian National puts up a specious argument by saying, "Well, our internal auditors who report to our board of directors tell us whether or not it is being done properly." He obviously does not appreciate the difference between an internal auditor from a firm of independent chartered accountants and the Auditor General. We understand that. We had a fair bit to do with him when he was on this side of the House and we understand his deficiencies in appreciating those differences.

I was pleased that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), made mention of the remarks of that great saver of the Canadian taxpayers' dollar, the former Finance Minister, John Turner. He is known affectionately as "Old Blue Eyes", the man who waits in his corporate law office on Bay Street to come and save the Canadian public from the mess that the present Government has got them into. I know that there are many people on that side of the House who wait for him with great interest, such as, for example, the new Minister of State responsible for Small Business who is to be a sort of paid watchdog for "Old Blue Eyes" when he comes back to the House on his white steed in his "second coming", as it were, to save the country.

I do know that many of us on this side of the House would welcome the reappearance of "Old Blue Eyes". Anyone who practises law in a county town can hardly wait to get his hands on a Bay Street lawyer, so he can come any time he wants. He could tell us that the purpose of the next budget, first and foremost, will be to bring about a substantial reduction in unemployment. We would welcome that today because the present minister of unemployment—I am sorry, I said unemployment when I meant finance.

Mr. Fennell: It is the same thing.

Mr. Lewis: It is actually the same thing. He has nothing to offer to ease unemployment. As a matter of fact, his idea is just to spread unemployment around.

I would like to refer directly to Motions Nos. 6 and 8. Bill C-110 would give the Cabinet the right to make its own decisions above and beyond those of the Liberal board of directors of the EDC. With these motions, we are trying to cut back on what Cabinet can do to override the moves of the board of directors.

You will know, Mr. Speaker, that the House has seen other examples of Cabinet operations where the Cabinet decides how things will happen. There is, for example, the Maislin situation where, because of the friendship between the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Bronfman family, it was decided that Maislin would get a $34 million loan guarantee. That set a bit of a precedent because the Government had never guaranteed any loans to the service industry before. We were assured that we would be saving 2,000 Canadian jobs. Those 2,000 Canadian jobs did not exist when we got the assurance. There are now no Canadian jobs and the company has gone bankrupt. We appreciate that the Cabinet found it necessary to do this for its own purposes, but the purpose of a board of directors is to manage the affairs of the company, and it is not right to allow Cabinet to override that board if it has made that kind of decision. That is why my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), is attempting to cut back on what the Government wants to do through this Bill.

There are other examples of Crown corporations that are running around without any control whatsoever. I draw to the Chair's attention the Canada Development Investment Corporation which is naturally fathered by a member from the other place who is the only Cabinet Minister from British Columbia.

We on this side note with great amusement that the Canada Development Investment Corporation reports to the House of Commons, the representatives of the people, through the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières). It is amusing because he is not even on the economic committee. At least he was not on that committee when its list of members was last published. One does not know when he would have the opportunity to have these great communications with the Minister from the other place. That is another example of a Crown corporation running around making investments.

There is a man named Joel Bell whom I have always referred to as the pseudo Lee Iacocca of Crown corporations. He will do for Crown corporations what Lee Iacocca did for the Chrysler Corporation. One must understand that there is no bottom line with a Crown corporation. Lee Iacocca had a bottom line and brought the Chrysler Corporation back to health.

We do not have any confidence that the people running the CDIC operation and other Crown corporations will do the kind of jobs that we as Members of Parliament want them to do, basically because they refuse to be accountable. If they were prepared to be accountable to Parliament and if they were not Jack Horners, we would be prepared to go along with some of these things. As long as they refuse the accountability that we as representatives of taxpayers demand, we will continue to fight legislation such as Bill C-110.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as recorded (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 6 and 8 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the two motions proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I enjoyed the address given by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) very much. He put forward a number of observations regarding Crown corporations. The problem of credit, finance and insurance is a very important one in today's financial world. There is a scramble for export markets, and countries from all around the world are working hard to assist their corporations in entering these markets. I see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is in the House, and we know how he tried to inflict a Crown corporation upon us recently, one which would be involved in this very important area.

There is great competition for markets and this presents difficulties. The treasuries of European communities and of the United States are much larger than ours and, as a result, we have to be very aggressive and use some of the methods used by our competitors in export markets.

I wholeheartedly support the amendments proposed by my colleague which deal with accountability to this institution. The Government brings forward legislation for debate in an attempt to get Opposition Parties to agree with it but it asks constantly for more money than it ought to. It takes time to get these measures through the House. The borrowing Bill is an example of that, and now the Government has brought this Bill forward. If the Government and Crown corporations can prove to Members of Parliament that the money is required, the legislation will be passed very quickly. The amount of money being asked for in this legislation brings us to the nub of the question of accountability.

Two Hon. Members who spoke ahead of me mentioned the speech that was referred to in Question Period today. The man who made that speech sat in this House for almost 20 years, but how soon he forgets, Mr. Speaker. I remember many speeches made by Mr. Horner when he spoke about the rights of Members of Parliament and the worth of the institution. Now that he is Chairman of a Crown corporation he seems to feel that that corporation should not allow the Auditor General to look at its books. In committee there have been months of debate on a Bill that will give hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money to that particular corporation. Members of Parliament are not asking to be directly involved in the operation of the railway but they feel that they have a right to know that the money voted in this institution will be properly spent. The Auditor General tells us whether this happens. It is important that Crown corporations be competitive, but we would also like them to be accountable to Parliament.

In this Bill the Government seeks authority to increase the value of loans and loan guarantees issued by Order in Council from $2.5 billion to $10 billion. That is not a small increase. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) illustrated for us, in a very picturesque way, what a billion dollars is.

When we look at Orders in Council we see just how irrelevant this institution is becoming. Since January 1 of this year Cabinet has passed 2,789 Orders in Council, all without any reference to Parliament. That authority has been put into legislation over the years and we have passed it. A committee is supposed to examine Orders in Council but considering the volume of them, it is almost impossible for one committee to do this. As a result, Parliament becomes more and more irrelevant. Surely many of these Orders in Council should come to the various committees for examination in detail. When legislation is drafted, surely we should be more concerned about the authority given to the Governor in Council to make certain regulations. It is a very innocent clause in many Bills but it gives unbelievable power to Ministers.

The Government wants to give Cabinet the authority to approve insurance deals that the Export Development Corporation is not prepared to approve. That means that if the board of directors—which the Government has appointed to run the corporation—decrees in its wisdom that a deal ought not to be approved, then Cabinet, in its wisdom, can disagree. There is nothing in the Bill to stop Cabinet from making that decision; it can override the board of directors and approve the deal. It seems to me that a Government ought to find the best people possible to sit on the board of directors and, having done so, it ought to abide by their decision. If the board thinks a deal is a bad one, then I do not see how the Government can say it does not agree. Any interference by the Government must be for political reasons. A bad deal is a bad deal.

I support my colleagues when they say we ought to limit that clause and that if the Government wants to interfere with the board of directors of the corporation, it ought to ask permission of Parliament. The Government spends taxpayers' money for which we are responsible. That accountability is at the centre of this debate, and that is what we are saying. Another thing which disturbs me about the Export Development Corporation is that it seems to be doing some of the work of CIDA. When we look at some of the loans which have been approved in the past few years, we find we have extended financing to INCO, for development of plants in Indonesia and Guatemala, and that is creating jobs which, perhaps, are jeopardized here in this country. We have forest development projects in other countries. If there is a necessity to develop those industries in those countries, that ought to be done under CIDA. The Export Development Corporation should be a lender or a financier of last resort. When the private sector is not able to put this together it should then come to the Export Development Corporation to guarantee its loans, to insure its loans or to refinance those loans. That is what the Economic Council in its report proposed. It is so very important that we have the accountability and control which comes with Parliament.

I would like to conclude by saying that I appreciate the speeches of the many Hon. Members of Parliament on this side who are so concerned about this institution and what we make of it in the future.

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express a few words of concern about this Bill which gives the Government more borrowing authority. I have lost confidence in this arrogant and incompetent Government. The reason I say that, Mr. Speaker, is that I happen to be one of those who was not born in this country. I came from Poland when I was about five years old, during the Depression. I quite appreciate the fact of unemployment and welfare. We have accomplished many things since that Depression. We have brought about social services, pensions and we have put many mechanisms in place so that a depression of the kind we had then will never happen again. But what has this Government done? It has destroyed the lives of two million Canadians who are unemployed today. I know what that feels like. I was one of those who were on welfare when I came from Poland during the Depression. I know what it feels like to go to the grocery store where you cannot even buy a loaf of bread or a quart of milk but you have to make soup out of the same bone two or three times. I have gone through all of that.

It is very hard for me to believe that this Government actually got to be so irresponsible and uncaring for the Canadian people. I can speak with some authority, Mr. Speaker, in that area because I was an elected city alderman in the City of Calgary for ten years.

Mr. Lapierre: What are your solutions?

Mr. Kushner: I am talking about solutions. There are only about five or six Hon. Members on the other side, and you are expressing concern? I am very much referring to the solutions. I do not interfere with you when you speak. Please have the courtesy to let me, on this side, speak. If you do not like it, you can walk out, because most of your colleagues are out anyway. One more or less will not make any difference.

Mr. Lapierre: You are talking about your own Party, are you not?

Mr. Kushner: If you will listen, you may learn something becaue I was in the labour movement involved with the problems we are faced with today when you were still in diapers. So perhaps you had better listen and maybe you will learn something.

I would like to refer to credibility. I have been an alderman for ten years. I was the chairman of finance and budget in Calgary for two terms. I never pretended I was some sort of an expert in finance, but I was always able to listen, to show some compassion, to cut through some red tape and be able to keep in mind that the people should receive full value for their tax dollars. That is not what is happening in the House of Commons today. The Government has been spending money like drunken sailors. Canadians no longer want to see this Government get more authority to spend money. Canadians want to see this Government get out. They want a new government so they can have hope. As our leader has pointed out many times, we must give back confidence to the business community so it can help rebuild this country and get our factories rolling and Canadians working again.

I have also served as the chairman of operations and development. So I say to the Hon. Members opposite, I have known accountability and responsibility which we do not have here. I have heard expressed many times, and I have experienced it myself, this complete loss of confidence in the Liberal Government.

Mr. Fisher: No, say it is not true.

Mr. Lapierre: Talk about jobs now.

Mr. Kushner: The Hon. Member opposite is asking about jobs. I can say that this Government has put us in this mess. It has been the Government for 15 years, so it certainly cannot blame the Conservatives and it cannot blame world economic conditions. We are living in one of the wealthiest countries in the world. We should not be in the mess we are in today. The problem is that there is no leadership on the other side. There is only one leader and the bureaucrats are running this country.

Mr. Fisher: Stick to the Bill.

Mr. Kushner: You have nothing to say, my friend, as far as running this Government is concerned, as a backbencher. That is the way it is structured now. That is the way it has become in the last 15 years.

Mr. Lapierre: You have not told us about your solutions.

Mr. Kushner: I am getting back to accountability, and that is what it is all about. I came to be chairman of the land committee. I did not pretend to be an expert, but I was able to listen and to reflect the needs of the people of my city at that time. That is what this Government has failed to do. It has failed to reflect the needs of this country.

From there I served on the Calgary Board of Education. I served as an elected official as well as a bureaucrat, but accountability existed then very much so, the accountability we do not have here. I am happy that Hon. Members opposite are responding. The reason I have lost respect is that I see there is no justice in this House of Commons. The Ministers are very evasive and incompetent, as far as I am concerned, and that seems to be the name of the game. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is doing a very good job in that area as well. It is a disgraceful situation we have got ourselves into. I was elected in the Province of Alberta as a member of the Legislative Assembly, and I have to say that accountability is somewhat lesser in that area, but nothing as compared to what we have in this Government. As a matter of fact, this Government has killed the goose which has laid the golden egg, that is, the oil industry. In fact, it has destroyed the oil industry in this country. It has destroyed the incentive and the backbone of the small business community.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lapierre: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know we have a rule of relevancy. I do not know if the Hon. Member is looking for a job, but he has been giving us his curriculum vitae. Is that part of the Bill we are discussing?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will pay attention to the Hon. Member's remarks. I am sure the Hon. Member has heard the point which has been raised.

• (1650)

Mr. Kushner: I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern but I have to give him a little background about what has happened. He has a lot to learn, as I mentioned to him before. He was still in diapers when I was in politics, and I wish he would pay attention.

Mr. Fisher: And you have not learned anything since.

Mr. Kushner: I want to remind the Parliamentary Secretary that his Government has been very famous for being evasive through the use of a commission or study. After that, the Government hires another commission to study what the first commission has actually done. A good example of that right now is the Macdonald Commission.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I call the attention of the Hon. Member to the fact that this is report stage debate and, according to the rules and practices of the House, remarks must be relevant to the item before us. I therefore invite him to address his remarks to the amendment we are discussing.

Mr. Kushner: Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but get emotional over what is happening in the country and here in the House of Commons. I would have to have a wooden head if I did not. I think we have to give some background to what is happening here. The Government is trying to get more authority over spending, and we think they have by far too much right now. The Canadian people do not want to give them any more authority. As a matter of fact, they want them out of office, and the sooner the election is called, Mr. Speaker, the better it will be.

Mr. Fisher: Relevance.

Mr. Kushner: But the Government is not going to do that, Mr. Speaker, and you know that as well as I do.

If I may, I want to touch a little more on what is really happening right now. You see, you are squirming right now and you are embarrassed about what is realy happening. You cannot stand it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member realizes remarks should be addressed to the Chair, and the Chair wants to assure the Hon. Member that the occupant of the Chair is not squirming.

With all due respect, I have to call to the attention of the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner) that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unamimous consent for the Hon. Member to extend his remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kushner: Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have so I can adjust myself at least?

Some Hon. Members: All you want.

Mr. Kushner: All I want? Oh, my goodness! We are going to stay here for a while.

I am going to respect the courtesy of the Chair and the House of Commons. I believe I have made my point quite clear, and I want to thank the Hon. Member on the other side for paying attention and being sensitive to what is happening in this country right now. I want to conclude by saying, Mr. Speaker, you are most patient.

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Kushner: Thank you, very much. I enjoyed saying a few words. I wanted to say more but I am not going to take advantage of it.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on Motions Nos. 6 and 8 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Let me say at the outset, Sir, that the old boy network of the clients of EDC is working well, it is healthy and vibrant. At 7.30 this morning I was talking to a gentleman employed by a large manufacturer who uses the facilities of the EDC for export financing. The company is one of the members of the "club of '62". This chap passed on a message to me that we should pass this Bill, just close our eyes, hold our noses and pass the Bill. That in essence was his message. Maybe he did not say it quite as concisely as I have, but that is what it was all about. He implied that we were sort of holding up some large deal that was going to be financed through the EDC.

I must say he was surprised when I advised him that the EDC had adequate financing for the next 18 months, and adequate insurance funding to handle export sales for probably the next 24 months. He was surprised to learn that the Government has the right to guarantee and insure loans up to $3.5 billion and only $460 million has been spent, the Government was asking us to close our eyes, hold our noses and give EDC an additional $10 billion for loan guarantees and insurance. He did not really understand that. He had the impression gained from the management of his company that some large deal they had ready to go out the door, ready to be signed, was being held up until this Bill passed. Well, what a lot of nonsense. It just proves the sort of fraud being perpetrated on the people of Canada.

My friend could not really understand the request for more than three times the present loan and insurance fund. He could not understand it any more than I can. Then I explained to him that we had moved an amendment to cover this matter, in fact to return the loan and insurance guarantee back to $3.5 billion because only $460 million has been used and why should we give the Government $10 billion on top? He could not understand it, and I explained to him our Motion No. 6 and what it was going to do.

I hear my friend across the way and I do not think he has ever had anything to do in the field of commerce with export business, so he should just keep quiet until I am finished. If he wants to come across and ask me about my experience in the export market I will be glad to tell him a few things.

When we began talking about Motion No. 8, Mr. Speaker, I explained that the Government presently has the right to take up to $2.5 billion from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and lend that money to foreign companies, boards, agencies or Government. He was not aware of that, and I went on to explain that even though it had lent only $711 million and it still had $1.8 billion available, in spite of all this the Government was asking us to close our eyes, hold our nose and give it another $10 billion. That is something he could not understand. He was surprised. I said, well, why not go back to your management and ask them what sort of game they are playing here? We believe as strongly as anyone in export business but we do not like being conned, and that is what is happening here. Then I went on to explain to him our Motion No. 8 and why we wanted to keep the limit at $2.5 billion. In essence, we just do not trust the guys across the aisle. That is what it comes down to. That is the bottom line. Give those guys $20 billion to play with and God knows what will happen to it.

The gentleman who called me, Mr. Speaker, and I am not being critical of him because he is a good friend of mine, but he was a messenger. He was a messenger from the boys in the club who said, "Pass on the line to these guys that you know in the House of Commons that we have to have that export financing right away and that we will go under if we do not get it." I have gone to him and said, "I want you to pass back a message to your friends in the company and tell them that they have more than adequate financing presently in EDC to last them for the next 18 to 24 months regardless of what activity they get involved in."

That is the matter in a nutshell. While I will not say what I have written here because I notice that it is an unparliamentary word and I respect you too much to utter it, Mr. Speaker, I just say to those guys to get on with their jobs while we concern ourselves with the accountability to Parliament for this amount of money.

It frightens me when I think of a board of directors, as recommended in this Bill, comprised primarily of bureaucrats who are beholden to the Government for their livelihood and income, having the ability to dip into the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the extent of $20 billion in addition to what they presently have available. That really frightens me because past experience has shown that this is where the Government spending gets out of control. Unless there is a check and balance in Parliament through the Estimates and the budget system, it just disappears.

If the Government would agree to pass the amendments, I am sure my colleagues would agree to expedite the passage of the Bill. However, until we can have some negotiations along that line, I am sure that the fact there are no cheques, no balances, no controls, and no accountability to Parliament and the people of Canada means that we cannot just blindly vote for this legislation.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it certainly is a privilege to be able to follow my illustrious colleague, the Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) who is a very successful businessman. I am well aware that he has some considerable experience in the export business because of his particular company.

I certainly support Motions Nos. 6 and 8 in the name of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Motion No. 6, which has been well described by the mover, would allow the Government of Canada to increase the limit on promissory notes to $10 billion from the present $3.5 billion. When we look at this motion more closely, we see that the present Government has come to the House of Commons with a request to increase this limit to $10 billion when in fact it has not surpassed the present limit. In that case, why does the Government want to increase this limit?

There is no way that we can allow the Government or Crown corporations to continue to grow in the direction which this Government allows. What we have had in Canada from the present Government is a fixation on excessive spending and empire building. This is certainly reflected by the preoccupation of both Ministers and administrators.

Whereas the focus should return to the House of Commons, the opposite has taken place. Crown corporations have become a subgovernment. It seems to me that it is not only improper but immoral for a government to move in the direction of removing from Parliament the means and opportunity of challenging those operations which we feel so strongly are not acting in the best interests of my constituents or the rest of Canada. That is our task as Parliamentarians.

The important issue, as I see it, is accountability to Parliament. This Government, over the years that it has been in power, has given Canadians rising deficits to a projected $31.3 billion this year. The current cost of interest on public debt in 1983 is $700 per capita, or $16,200 per taxpayer. The interest alone on our debt for 1983 will amount to a staggering $17 billion, which I believe is one-half times the amount of the total budget the year I entered this hallowed Chamber in the fall of 1972.

An Hon. Member: How much will it be when Bobby Orr gets here?

Mr. Darling: We will worry about Bobby Orr, my illustrious friend, later. I think you will admit that if he wants to come here, this Chamber is available to all people. All one has to do is to get the nomination and then be elected. I am wondering if my illustrious friend will be here after the next election even though he might get the nomination.

Mr. Bloomfield: Time will tell.

Mr. Darling: We will see.

The focus should return to the House of Commons, and I want to emphasize that point. The important issue is accountability, and this Government has not been accountable over the years.

With this record of performance, how can we be asked to give another blank cheque as the Government is asking? As many of my colleagues have stated, we are not prepared to give the Government a blanck cheque. We believe it should come before Parliament. If the Government has legitimate reasons and can point out where the expense is required and the money is needed, I believe there would then be a different attitude taken by those of us on this side of the House.

With the increase in the employment of Crown corporations, we must give Parliament more powers of direction, control and scrutiny over Crown corporations to ensure their efficient, effective and accountable performance. When I spoke on this Bill earlier I pointed out that there are well over 300 Crown corporations doing business in Canada. In many cases they are competing with the private sector. If the Crown corporations do not have sufficient funds, the Government is there to bail them out. We know the horror stories of some Crown corporations that are in the red for astronomical amounts.

Why is it that the Government and bureaucratic managers so favour Crown corporations and persist in expanding them and endeavour to form new ones at every opportunity? Why does the Government continue to resort to this corporate form of organization when the private sector time and again is a better instrument? There seems to be a love-hate relationship here. The Government embraces the growth of the Export Development Corporation with wreckless abandonment and seems both incoherent and largely unconcerned about the reasons behind this expansion. But let Hon. Members rest assured that the Progressive Conservative Party is very concerned about the growth of the Export Development Corporation and is attempting to bridal this beast.

Motion No. 8 amends the clause which would allow loans through the Consolidated Revenue Fund to be increased from the present limit of $2.5 billion to $10 billion. It seeks to increase the ceiling for loans and loan guarantees made under Cabinet authority to foreign customers. Again, there is a lack of parliamentary control over these high risk and abnormal transactions.

I maintain, along with many of my colleagues, that accountability must be the cornerstone of the parliamentary system as it is the cornerstone of the fiscal system. The standard of accountability expected of those who deal with the management of moneys and taxes raised is far less weighty and is, in fact, downright sloppy. The annual report of the Auditor General of Canada is full of page after page of horror stories relating instances of this matter. A number of items that were brought out in that report should be recalled now as we debate the merits of this particular Bill and these two amendments.

In Mr. Dye's opinion, over the past six years the actual progress toward better accountability has been limited, particularly as far as Parliament is concerned. In the following quote from the report this is further highlighted:

● (1710)

Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibilities for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds. The existing legislative framework for creating, monitoring and where necessary, changing the purpose of using the corporate form for achieving public policies objectives can be abused.

We, the Official Opposition, have recognized its abuses and stand for greater scrutiny and control, which is what we are doing about Bill C-110 and its implications.

This is what this debate is all about. It is not about whether or not the Progressive Conservative Party is against exporting or foreign trade, it is about the fact that government must be accountable to Parliament. Let me emphasize again that we are very much in favour of foreign trade, helping companies to expand trade and to provide credit where credit is necessary.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, we are debating today the amendments to Bill C-110, the Export Development Act, and in particular Motions Nos. 6 and 8. I am pleased to follow my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) who has been in this House a long time now. He understands the functioning of this House and he has seen it deteriorate over the last number of years. I guess you would be as aware as anybody, Mr. Speaker, that I am one of the Members of this House who is not often on my feet to speak on Bills that I think are not of any consequence. But I am concerned about this Bill. It touches at the very essence of our parliamentary system, and I would like to say a few words about that this afternoon. The way this Bill impinges on our system is a threat to our parliamentary democracy.

Before I go further, I want to make a reference to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who came into the debate earlier this afternoon for about four or five minutes. I could not help but observe that the only people who have spoken this afternoon in this debate are Members of the Official Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party. We appear to be the only people really concerned about the way this Parliament functions.

Mr. Fisher: Filibustering.

Mr. Halliday: Filibuster? Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the essence of parliamentary democracy, a subject which I will be getting into in a few moments. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North felt that, because we were challenging the way Crown corporations operate, we were therefore opposed to Crown corporations. He went on to explain how many of them we, as Conservative Governments federally and provincially, have instituted in the past. I think we see the role and feel there is still an effective role for Crown corporations. A Member who has been in the House as long as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North has should understand that we are not opposed to Crown corporations. We are opposed to the way they are being operated under the present Government. That is the problem we see.

From time to time I go into our schools. There are teachers in my constituency in Oxford who are prepared to have me go into the schools because they trust that I will not preach partisan politics to their students. They appreciate that I talk about our system of government. What I talk to them about on the whole is something based on three words: representative parliamentary democracy. I do not doubt for a moment that we are experiencing a type of democracy in Canada now, but it is not the type of democracy that most Canadians want. The kind of democracy practised by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues and the people who control the Liberal Party outside of this House who are not elected shows they are not interested at all in a representative parliamentary democracy. They are interested in a kind of democracy where the powers that be at the centre of that Party are able to control the backbenchers. I could not help noticing that as I sat here this afternoon and watched Members on the Government side. For a while there were as many as two or three, more recently there have been five, eight or ten. I see about six at the present time sitting on the Government side. Two of them are pretty good friends of mine. They are from London. They are two of the triplets from London. The Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) and the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield) were sitting together for quite a long time. They are both very fine gentlemen. But I am disappointed that neither they nor any of their colleagues on the other side have seen fit to get up this afternoon and speak to the very issue that we in the Opposition are talking about. We are not talking about whether the Government needs more money or not. What we are talking about is the accountability of Parliament to what the Government is doing or not doing. That is what we are discussing. Yet, the Liberals do not have the courage to get up and defend what the Government is doing. They are giving tacit approval to what we in the Opposition are saying, namely that they are not accountable to this Parliament. They are unable to defend the fact that they are being accountable to this Parliament. That is a shameful position for people who are representatives of the people of Canada. They are sitting on the Government side and they are not in a position to get up and defend how and to what extent their own Government is being accountable.

The three words, representative parliamentary democracy, are words that have a lot of meaning. I have mentioned already the effect of democracy. Take the words "parliamentary". The essence of that word is that we here in this Chamber make our decisions following talk. Lots of talk goes on here. But we should bear in mind that altogether too often we are prevented from talking in a fashion like this because the Government sees reason to bring in closure and forbids us the opportunity to speak on issues that we feel are of importance to our system here.

Finally, probably the most important word today from the point of view of this debate is the concept of the word "representative". All of us here are representing a certain part of the country. We are here to express the opinions of the people. We are also here to come to decisions and to vote based on what we hear in the debates, Mr. Speaker. It is distressing for me that Members on the Government side, the backbenchers in particular, are not given the opportunity to vote as they see fit. I am sure my friend, the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex, who is sitting today on our side, might well prefer to sit on this side of the House because his philosophies are much in keeping with those of us here. But he is not in a position to say what he would like to say on behalf of the Government because he is not given the choice to represent his own views before the House of Parliament, nor the views of his constituents. I think we are just seeing this whole system of ours go down the drain because the people of Canada are beginning to realize and are developing a cynicism which is based on the fact that no longer are we as their representatives reflecting their views.

I spoke on this Bill just two days ago and mentioned that I spoke to a good friend of some of my colleagues across the way. He was lamenting the fact that the people who are appointed to Crown corporations are no longer representative enough of the private sector. We see in the workings of the various Crown corporations that the Cabinet overrides the decisions of these boards. Yet the Government is asking to have more money. I think that is an intolerable situation. This upsets the private sector and, after all, that is still the prominent part of our economy.

In short, I am here to speak in favour of Motions Nos. 6 and 8 which are attempts on the part of the Opposition to amend this dreadful Bill which will give an opportunity to this Government to spend increasing amounts of money without being accountable to the representatives of the people of Canada.

● (1720)

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act. I am delighted to follow the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) and the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) who was asked by an Hon. Member across the aisle when Bobby Orr would come to Parliament. That will be decided in the next election.

In particular I would like to speak to Motions Nos. 6 and 8 which are before the House. Motion No. 6 in part reads:

"shall not at any time exceed 3 billion 500 million and 1".

Motion No. 8 in part reads:

"shall not at any time exceed 2 billion 500 million and 1".

As we are well aware, Bill C-110 will give the Government $62 billion of authority. We must rise and continue to speak out on behalf of the people who sent us here, demanding that the Government be accountable. Parliament should not be used for access to $62 billion without a vote on the subject.

In the words of Professor André Raynauld of the University of Montreal, the Export Development Corporation is:

—rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire, and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient.

Also, seven years ago the report of the Auditor General noted:

In the majority of Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective. Moreover, co-ordination and guidance by central government agencies of financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations are virtually nonexistent.

What we are talking about today is accountability: accountability of Government to Parliament, accountability of Members to their constituents, and accountability of Crown corporations to taxpayers.

Approximately four years ago the Lambert report noted:

In examining the bewildering array of Crown agencies we have found that existing provisions for classifying them and for accountability for each category have been rendered obsolete. The resulting state of confusion, if left unattended, will seriously impair the value of these agencies as instruments of public purpose and do further damage to the tenuous and sometimes obscure accountability links that, in varying degrees, they now have with the Government and Parliament.

Last fall the Auditor General noted:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so stained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

As a Member of Parliament for Malpeque on Prince Edward Island, I find that statement hard to accept because as elected representatives we are accountable to our constituents. We have to answer for the stands we take. I believe that the Government should answer to Parliament for the decisions it makes, that Crown corporations should answer to taxpayers and that Members of Parliament have to answer to their constituents.

I operate a business on Prince Edward Island. When I go to the bank to borrow money with which to run my business, the bank manager asks me how much I need and for what I need it. Very seldom will he give me more money than I need. In fact, I need to have good reason before he will even give me the money I want. There is no way that he would give me a line of credit ten times in excess of what I need or a blank cheque to be used for anything I decide in future. It is a good practice. Sometimes when the bank manager gives me a hard time and I have to account to him, I think he is somewhat unreasonable, but upon reflection I realize that because he has made me accountable to him I have managed to stay in business and to be successful. I hope to continue to run a successful business. I have been accountable to someone, someone was there to ensure that I did not go off on a tangent and was unable to pay my bills. The same thing should happen in Parliament. The Government should be accountable to Parliament. Members of Parliament, in their wisdom, should decide how much money the Government will be able to spend or how much it will be able to give to Crown corporations.

I am a relative rookie in the House of Commons, having only been here a little over four years, but I feel quite strongly that the Government does not appreciate the fact that it should be accountable to Parliament. In fact, it should be accountable to the Opposition who voices the concerns of the people of Canada. I cannot emphasize strongly enough how I feel about Bill C-110 and the fact that the Government wants to increase the expenditure limits of the Export Development Corporation. The Government is attempting to circumvent Members of Parliament who were sent here by their constituents to ensure that it did what was best for Canadians.

In the few minutes remaining I would like to stress the fact that the Government has not been doing the job it should be doing. It seems to be more interested in establishing Crown corporation after crown corporation like Canagrex. I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) sitting across the way. He has done everything he can to undermine the private sector.

Mr. Whelan: Prince Edward Island is the biggest user of federal dollars.

Mr. Gass: I am sorry that the Minister of Agriculture has awakened. He was peaceful and quiet until a moment ago.

Mr. Whelan: You asked for it.

Mr. Gass: The point is that I believe the Government has to be accountable to Parliament. Some Crown corporations are doing a good job, but they must be accountable to the taxpayers who fund them. The Export Development Corporation will help private enterprise, agricultural communities and so on, at least that is the intent of the Bill, but the Government does not need the amount of money it is requesting. I wonder what the Bill will do to help the tourism industry which employs well over a million people in Canada and provides $18 billion—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

• (1730)

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-110, an act to amend the Export Development Act. Bill C-110 is a bad Bill. This Bill erodes Parliament's right in the area of accountability and control regarding the public purse, taxpayers' dollars. Through this Bill the Government believes that, as in the old adage of the Divine Right of Kings, tax dollars are its divine right, that the public purse is the property of the Government to do as it pleases with as little reference to Parliament and to outside consultations as it can get away with.

Bill C-110 seeks to expand the operational capacity of the Export Development Corporation without need for further reference to Parliament. To add insult to injury, the Government seeks as well to increase the high risk or bad business transactions from $3.5 billion to $10 billion concerning insuring sales, and from $2.5 billion to $10 billion in the case of loans and loan guarantees. To further aggravate the situation, losses incurred under such circumstances are to be paid from the Consolidated Revenue Fund without reference to Parliament.

I can well understand such action being taken in a dictatorial state, but such high-handed action has no place in a democratic country. Unless we stop this continual erosion of democracy by this Government, and soon, democracy will become a dead issue in Canada.

The fact that the Export Development Corporation is not accountable to Parliament is totally unacceptable. It is the taxpayers' money we are talking about and they have the right to know how their money is being spent. To borrow money in the name of Canadian taxpayers and their children without seeking parliamentary authority to do so, cannot be allowed to continue. That is the main principle behind the reason why I refuse to go along with this Bill.

What it really means is that the Government, with this Bill, will have the authority to make any deal it cares to make. The Government will be able to make loans to anyone it wishes without any vote by any Parliament at any time. It also means that the Government may make insurance commitments that are not of a commercial nature to a ceiling of $10 billion. As well, the Government may make loans that are not of a proper commercial nature to a value of almost $10 billion.

There is no question that the Export Development Corporation is, in the words of Professor André Raynauld, of the University of Montreal, and I quote:

—rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire, and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient.

There is no question that the Export Development Corporation is poorly managed. It is another example of Government having no business in business. For example, in 1982 the 613 employees of EDC had loan transactions with 62 companies and placed slighly in excess of 900 insurance policies. Can anyone name a bank that has 10 employees for every loan customer? For that matter, can anyone name any insurance company in the private sector which issues insurance policies at an annual rate of one and one half policies per employee? Such inefficiency is not possible in the private sector. If it were so, such companies would be out of business in a very short time.

The lack of common sense which EDC is surrounded with would indicate the reasons why it financed Inco developments in Indonesia and Guatemala at the expense of taking precious jobs from Sudbury and Manitoba. A similar foolish financial fiasco had EDC financing forest development projects in Mexico, Poland and Peru in direct competition with Canadian forest products, again taking away jobs from Canadians. Foolishly again, the EDC helped finance the construction of a monument to the Algerian revolution.

One could go on and one about the way EDC conducts its business. The amount of ineptness, inefficiency and lack of common sense present in the management of EDC would be more than enough to send several private enterprises into bankruptcy if it were ever allowed to happen. The amendments to Bill C-110 introduced by our Party would institute some semblance of order and common sense to an already bad Bill.

We advocate that the chairman of EDC be appointed from outside the Public Service and that the number of public servants on the board be restricted to three. However, the Government wants to impose a 15 man board with no limit to the number of public servants on the board and that the chairman be appointed from the Public Service.

Our amendments also call for leaving the authorized capital at $1 billion and restricting borrowing to ten times the actual money on hand in the form of paid-in capital and earned surplus. We would also seek to nullify the Government's proposed increase regarding the ceiling for loans and loan guarantees made to foreign countries from the present $2.5 billion to $10 billion.

The few minutes that I am allotted to speak do not permit me to go into greater detail regarding the inappropriatness of Bill C-110 and the EDC. Suffice it to say that much has been said and written concerning the Export Development Corporation. Many recommendations have been made for the betterment of EDC. The Economic Council report "Intervention and Efficiency" devotes a full chapter to the subject of export finance and the EDC.

As well, several reports of the Auditors General over the years have stressed the lack of financial management and control which they term weak and ineffective. The reports found confusion and unaccountability to be the most important problems of EDC and many of the other Crown corporations, which has certainly impaired the value of these agencies as instruments of public service.

All of us in this House are here to represent our constituents in all facets of federal jurisdiction. It is important for us to ensure that our taxpayers are receiving good value for their tax dollars. This must be preserved at all costs if we as Members are to justify our being here in the first place, if we are to do our job diligently and effectively. We will be serving our constituents and our taxpayers as all of us should be serving and carrying on our responsibilities as Members of Parliament by refusing to compromise our responsibility. We can do that by not letting this Bill pass in its present form.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, this happens to be a day in my life which I would like to mention because it relates to the Government of the day and the performance of Members of Parliament. Thirty-one years ago today, at about this hour, I was concluding a political campaign to get myself elected, along with my colleagues, to the provincial Legislature of the Province of New Brunswick. It was a successful campaign. I had the pleasure, which I have not enjoyed since, of being part of a Government of the Province of New Brunswick which was fiscally responsible and which for the eight years of its term of office reduced the net debt of the Province on an annual basis. that is a claim which this Government certainly cannot make. Nor has it been an objective of this Government that it be fiscally responsible.

This is another Bill which indicates that this Government is not concerned about money. It may well be that it is a hidden instrument to attain some of the objectionable objectives of this Government. I am concerned about the fiscal responsibility of nations and the private banking system when I consider the debt which has been approved by nations which have no hope of paying, whether they be Poland, Argentina, Mexico, Brazil or whatever. There seems to be little likelihood that those accounts will be paid in full in view of the projections of the world economy as they are being made today.

What will be the consequence of the failure by any of these to honour their bills? What will be the consequence of their failure to pay interest down the road? What will be the consequence of their failure to pay capital down the road? What happens? It has been a long while since we have seen a government go bankrupt. In the 1930s, it was necessary for the federal Government to bail Provinces out and assist them to finance. Are we now in this milieu of economic misfortune, about to face again the possibility that governments can go broke? If so, what is the consequence?

I wonder what the policy objective of this Bill is because as yet it has not been mentioned specifically. The policy in general is that we will export more and therefore we will create more jobs, but let us take a look at where these exports might possibly be directed and, what is more, where the credit may be directed.

I do not think it is improper to ask of the Government, "Is this to be the instrument by which we may, without public approval and without approval of the House, find ourselves extending aid to the North-South program which has been so thoroughly espoused by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the people on that side of the House?" Is this to be the instrument whereby, in spite of the public asking for fiscal responsibility, we may now conceal the spending of public money directly or money borrowed for which the public is directly responsible? Can we be using that money to extend loans to people in the North-South structure of this land?

The maximum amount that is available to the Crown corporation is considered to be $50 billion or perhaps $60 billion, depending on who estimates its needs. Some of this money is to be provided by Government and some of it is to be made available through the opportunity to borrow with the Government guarantees.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if it be the Cabinet decision to make the loan, are we now setting this nation up to give money to, for instance, Cuba? Are we going to give Cuba perhaps $4 billion, $5 billion? It would not be unusual to find ourselves in that position in view of the Prime Minister's approach to, and sympathy for, the communist world. It would not be unusual or impossible for us to assume that under the cover of darkness and behind the secret curtains, the directorate of this corporation might very well choose to lend large sums of money or to extend large sums of export credit to countries such as Cuba under the guise that it is in the best interests of the North-South dialogue and the accomplishment of that policy within this nation alone.

Again, when I reflect on fiscal responsibility, I wonder what this could do to the country. It is this reason among others which makes me ask that the Government come forward and let the accounts of this corporation be examined by elected people. As was pointed out by the last speaker, there is a board over which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has absolutely total control. Basically, the chairman has had control of the meetings of boards of directors of Crown corporations, particularly when the stock was 100 percent owned by the Government as it is in this instance. Now, however, we are going to supplement the chairman's control, and that goes to the point that he can refuse to accept the vote of his committee in its decision-making process.

We now will have a board with a four-to-one ratio of public employees to private members. The responsibility of a public employee is to please his employer. The public employees on this board will not confront the Government with a decision which is not satisfactory to the Cabinet. This is for two reasons; first, because they must please the employer, which is the Government of the day, and second, because they do not want to get fired. They do not want to be contradicted by Cabinet which can overrule them. Therefore, the control is totally in the hands of the Prime Minister.

The likelihood that the Cabinet would have to overrule the board of directors is remote, provided that the board of directors knows the will of Government, and they shall certainly know it. The Government will see to it that they are completely and totally familiar with what is the wish of Government in respect of a particular loan.

This then becomes a bad Bill which does not reflect fiscal responsibility by the Government, nor does it reflect any possibility of the public knowing what goes on. As I have said, my initiation to Government was in a fiscally-responsible provincial Government. At the present time I find myself in an environment in which fiscal responsibility is just not considered desirable in respect of the accomplishment of the political objectives of a crew of elected members who think they have a halo over their heads and a right to govern and to hell with the public and its better interests.

I want to know, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to use this Bill as a negotiating instrument at all. When we do extend credit to help Governments and nations and peoples of those nations, are we going to use this to try to overcome some of the unfavourable trade situations in which we find ourselves? I think I must return again to the agricultural picture. I recall an instance when I happened to be asked to go into the storage room of the dining room of this House of Commons. Among other things which I saw there were canned fruit salads from two nations. One of those products arrived from overseas at a cost less than our cost of packaging and processing the product. That would leave nothing for the producer of some of the fruits which could have been incorporated in that mixture.

If we are to go into the world of trade with $50 billion, do we have the pledge of the Government that we will try to negotiate a better position for our agricultural producers? The agricultural producers of the land find themselves now marketing in Canadian markets which are open to virtually the world at prices which are not relative to our cost of production. Are we then going to try to negotiate some trade opportunities which will be supported by our export credit extensions? Will the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) participate in this and help our farming community?

What is the purpose of this Bill? Is it for North-South relations and a blind way to spend money with nobody knowing? Is it the instrument by which we will get better trade deals with other countries of the world to help the farmers, the fishermen, the manufacturers and the foresters? Why the secrecy? Why does the Government not come forward, Mr. Speaker? The people of the nation need to know these things if they are to spend this many billions of dollars under a blanket where nobody can see it.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been present for most of the day listening to the debate. I cannot help but say a few words about some of the things that have been said.

When we are talking about this Bill to amend the Export Development Act, what are we talking about? We are talking about giving the Export Development Corporation authority so that it can compete with the other countries of the world.

The Hon. Member from the other side who last spoke said that this might lead to aid to Cuba. Surely to God he knows that Cuba is one of the oldest buyers of seed potatoes from New Brunswick. For 50 years, Cuba has bought seed potatoes from New Brunswick. It bought potatoes even before the present régime in Cuba, and it continues to buy potatoes. This year it will be one of the biggest buyers of seed potatoes from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island because of the inspection system that we have. A delegation from Cuba visited Prince Edward Island to see what we are doing there and to make sure that our potatoes are safe to use. We used the Export Development Corporation to export those potatoes. The Minister of Agriculture of that Province welcomed that delegation. Cuba has paid for everything it has ever bought from us and it has a good record. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we should stop sales of seed potatoes to Cuba? It sounded like that because he was saying that country was friendly to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I was in Cuba just recently. We have sold Cuba more cattle and swine than any other Latin American country. All their Holstein breeding stock came from Canada and their purebred swine, that are now producing one million hogs per year, all came from good, Canadian private enterprise farms. Does the Hon. Member suggest that we should not trade with Cuba?

Let us look at what the United States is doing to get markets around the world. It is giving free credit and all kinds of things—no payment for three years, etc. Hon. Members must understand that it is a very competitive, hurly-burly world out there, and if we do not deal with it in the same way as other countries, we will not even be involved in trade.

With all the gimmicks that the United States has used its agricultural exports went down about 12 per cent last year whereas ours went up 12 per cent. It was one of the biggest years for grain sales—29 million tonnes, the most we have ever sold in the export market. We exported more cattle than ever last year as well, but gloom and doom is all we hear from Hon. Members opposite.

I do not say, Mr. Speaker, that all these things are due to things I have done to help people by travelling around the world and opening doors for them, and that kind of thing—I will do that for the good of the country any time.

Mr. Nielsen: What did you do with that cow on the lawn this morning?

Mr. Whelan: In one year, Cuba buys from Canada about $342 million worth of agricultural products. But we buy from Cuba, although to hear Hon. Members opposite, you would not think trade was a two-way street. The Premier of British Columbia is going to send a Mr. Harvey and someone called Gordon overseas. He is spending about $1 million to try to increase British Columbia exports to Europe. Ontario is going to get into the export business as well because the Premier says producers are not selling hard enough. That Legislature is not in session yet but the Premier is allocating another $1 million for Denis and people to travel around the world to try to sell products. Everyone says that trade is important, but in essence Hon. Members opposite are saying that it is not all that important.

Let us look at some of the things that are being done in Saskatchewan. The former Minister of Agriculture of that Province has taken on a new job as Minister for International Trade. I asked him if he was getting rid of his Crown corporation and he said, "No way, Gene. I just sold" He did not mention Bulgaria as the Hon. Member who spoke ahead of me did. That is a socialist-communist country. He used his Crown corporation to sell several hundreds of head of purebred beef cattle and he used that terrible thing, a Crown corporation, to do it! Can you imagine how dastardly people become when they talk about these things sometimes, Mr. Speaker. In essence they are saying "Don't do as I do, do as I say."

In Saskatchewan there is a special Minister just to look after a Crown corporation called Crop Insurance. The federal Government puts $56 million into that fund and the Province matches that amount. The Minister fired the manager who had been there since 1972, and now he is going to be sued for $400,000. That is one of the best run crop insurance programs in Canada. The federal Government spent about $168 million in Saskatchewan last year and the Province spent about $68 million, and yet the Province has the money to go into the international world and trade.

Mr. Neil: They have to, to survive.

Mr. Whelan: The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) says that they have to because we are not doing it. Canagrex is a Crown corporation, and the Auditor General commended me and the Department of Agriculture for proposing it and for the control that it has. We accepted amendments from the Opposition to make it subject to public scrutiny so that it would come before Parliament with its budget. I have not heard anyone opposite say a word about that today. It is the ideal thing that Crown corporations should be scrutinized by the Auditor General; that he should be able to walk in and examine the books anytime he wants to. Hon. Members opposite talk about Government spending not being open to scrutiny, but in all the times I have attended the Agriculture Committee, no questions about expenditures of the Department have gone unanswered. We are not big spenders—the officials and myself run a pretty tight ship. It has a pretty good crew with not a bad captain, if I may say so, as humbly as I can.

Mr. Nielsen: You are going to go down with your ship.

Mr. Whelan: When we talk of expenditures we should make a comparison between California and Ontario, perhaps. The population of California is nearly as big as the population of Canada, but Ontario's population is only one-third that of California. But who spends the most money, Mr. Speaker? Good old Tory Ontario. If Hon. Members opposite would check provincial expenditures they would see that proportionately, they are greatest in the Provinces. The Provinces use Crown corporations. And who started the CNR? Who started the Canadian Wheat Board? Who started the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation? The good old Tory Party, yet today they speak about the horrible Liberals who created Crown corporations.

I am sure the Member from Prince Edward Island was not serious when he spoke about expenditures. Does he want me to cancel that $18 million veterinary college in Prince Edward Island and all the other programs to assist agriculture? They amount to nearly 90 per cent of the total economy of Prince Edward Island. Does he suggest we stop that? He would not dare suggest it in Prince Edward Island—even his Leader would not suggest that we cut back those expenditures in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Minister realizes that his remarks should be addressed to the Chair. The time allotted to the Minister has expired.

Some Hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He has unanimous consent to extend his remarks.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I heard a Member from Calgary say that he was on the municipal council for ten years. I was in municipal politics, Mr. Speaker, and I administered budgets. I also administered the budget of the big co-operative that I was president of for 16 years before I came to the House of Commons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Minister—

The Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise).

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, do I gather that the Minister has concluded his remarks?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There was unanimous consent for the Minister to extend his remarks. I gather that the Minister chose to terminate his remarks.

An Hon. Member: Give us another load, Gene.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I was rising to draw to the attention of the Minister that remarks should be addressed to the Chair and that there is such a thing as a rule of relevance.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I want to assure you that the only purpose of my interjection was to find out whether the Minister of Agriculture would entertain a question?

• (1800)

Mr. Whelan: I just want to say to the Hon. Member from Calgary that I know a little bit about Calgary, because the first time I worked in Alberta I was about 18 years of age and I can remember how Calgary grew. I know it had good administration—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SOVIET AIRCRAFT INTRUSIONS. (B) MEETING OF INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the heinous attack by a Soviet jet fighter on a Korean Airlines 747 with the loss of 269 lives, I asked the Government on September 15 whether it intended to initiate measures at the International Civil Aviation Organization to establish new international agreements on procedures regarding sovereign airspace intrusions, including mandatory visual identification and central command control, before action by a sovereign nation, in order to prevent further tragic loss of life and further destabilization of an already tense international climate.

I am pleased that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais), in his first response in his new portfolio, demonstrated enough integrity to bring my representation to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) as he promised. I am also extremely pleased to see that the Minister of Transport took my suggestion and on September 20 proposed that ICAO draft a convention expanding and strengthening the international rules of interception. I commend the Minister on recognizing such an important initiative in this crucial matter of rules governing sovereign airspace. A new international convention needs to be established to strictly govern the interception of civilian aircraft and prevent hostile acts by military aircraft. The convention must have teeth to ensure respect for and compliance with its procedures.

This entire issue has a broader scope to it, that of east-west relations and the nature of the Soviet Union. The only surprise in the destruction of the Korean Boeing 747 and the taking of 269 innocent civilian lives, should be that the Soviets grossly miscalculated international public and governmental response to the incident. This incident, and the decisions taken, are indicative that the Soviet decision-making process may be becoming increasingly under the influence of the Soviet military establishment. For at least the past three decades the elite of Soviet youth have been channelled into the military. While the older intellectual and power-broker mandarins still remain in ultimate control, Andropov has yet to consolidate the traditional authority vested in his office.

The next generation of leadership of the power-brokers in the Soviet Union may be emerging from within the new and younger military establishment. Therefore, in dealing with the Soviet Union it must be recognized that: first, the Soviet Union has an inherent paranoia and a collective inferiority complex regarding its own security as a result of a history of having its territory overrun and overwhelmed by foreign powers; second, the newly emerging Soviet establishment through internal education and experience, has had limited access to and limited understanding of western values; and third, this new establishment has its own set of values based on a tight, closed, technocratic and totalitarian view of itself and of the individual's relationship and role within the state.

Negotiating from the rule of law and good faith alone is not sufficient in order to deal with barbaric power-brokers whose uncivilized values allow the unleashing of unrepentant forces of destruction against innocent unarmed commercial civil aviation in a supposed time of peace. We must not allow this massacre to pass without the reparations of concrete and meaningful international agreements to further stabilize and assure the peace of the international community. It is with this perspective and approach to the issue one must also look to guarding the sovereign integrity of both Canadian and NORAD airspace.

The Minister of National Defence in response to my question regarding the 77 Soviet incursions into NORAD airspace so far this year, indicated that the premise of my question was not accurate in that "there has not been any entry within Canadian airspace by any Russian aircraft" but that there had been incursions into the Canadian Air Defence Identification Zone. I am fully aware of this. NORAD airspace of course includes the CADIZ as well as the Great Britain-Iceland-Greenland gap and the Defence Early Warning Identification Zone (DEWIZ) in our northern Territories. The DEWIZ has not yet been violated by Soviet aircraft; that we know of. I appreciate that the Minister is new to his post, and I am grateful that he took time to be briefed on this important issue. His response, however, revealed that he possesses the facts without the benefit of comprehension of the subtlety the question involved and which regrettably caused him to misrepresent and distort the premise of my inquiry.

The comprehensive facts remain that Canada is less able to secure national sovereignty at the present time than ever before, and that given the increasing militarization and aggressiveness of the Soviet Union, the Government should honour its commitments to NATO by entering into a bilateral program with the United States to update the efficacy of the northern warning program, as well as bringing our defence spending up to speed, above the level of countries other than Luxemburg, by meeting our 3 per cent GNP commitment to NATO. For the Soviet Union, being a superpower means never showing weakness. The need not to display weakness explains why the Soviets shot the plane down in the first place.

The Soviet Union has perpetuated "the superpower myth", that the two superpowers are equal and therefore equally malevolent. Many people in democratic nations are seduced by this double standard and the continual KGB disinformation campaigns. By accusing KAL Flight 007 of spying, the Soviets are engaging in a game of beggaring the question. The point here is that 269 civilian lives were systematically liquidated by a political system which puts a different value on human life than we in western democracies do. We must understand that different value system and undertake measures to secure our value system from the excesses of another.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wish personally, to congratulate the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) on his appointment as co-defence critic. I look forward to hearing constructive questions from him in the future knowing his interest in subjects of a military nature.

I believe the Minister, in his response on September 15, answered the Hon. Member's questions thoroughly. However, it is worth repeating some of the points the Minister made, especially concerning the nature of Soviet military aircraft activity off Canada's east coast. Soviet military aircraft, primarily long-range Maritime patrol aircraft, en route between the Soviet Union and Cuba, occasionally intrude into Canada's Air Defence Identification Zone known as CADIZ off the east coast. The zone is international, not sovereign Canadian airspace, which is defined as that area 19.3 kilometres from the shoreline.

Canadian Forces interceptors are scrambled to identify, observe and escort intruding Soviet military aircraft out of the zone. However, it is worth underlining that there have been no intrusions of Soviet military aircraft in Canadian sovereign airspace. The photographs the Hon. Member has seen in the press were taken on such missions.

With regard to the U.S. Government's intention to upgrade the DEW Line, this information has been common knowledge for some time. Indeed, discussions between Canada and the U.S. on the modernization of the NORAD system have been going on for some time and formal negotiations are now underway between the Department of National Defence and the U.S. Department of Defence, with a view to determining how best to upgrade all component systems, not just the DEW Line, making up the air defence capability of both countries on this continent.

In closing, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the rules of engagement for the interception by military aircraft are in the public domain and that special rules and regulations governing interceptions under NORAD are, for the most part, classified but follow a commonsense, careful and cautious approach.

The Hon. Member is aware that Canada is taking a leading role at the International Civil Aviation Organization meeting in Montreal and has proposed that practical measures be adopted which would govern the interception of civilian planes and prohibit criminal acts by military aircraft. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) has consulted with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) on these issues because of the obvious interest of this Department.

The assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization is currently considering the recommendations made by the Canadian delegation to this assembly.

FINANCE—INDEXED SECURITY INVESTMENT PLAN. (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY ON TAX CHANGES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on September 19 last, I had occasion to ask a question of the Minister of State for Finance with respect to the introduction of the Indexed Security Investment Plan.

It was announced in the budget of April 19, that that plan would commence on October 1 next. Indeed on September 7, the Minister stated in a press release that although the ISIP Program would not commence until October 1, 1983, it is important to notify prospective administrators and participants of these changes in the April draft legislation that may be of interest to them. He also stated that he intends to make a further revised draft of legislation public as soon as possible.

I had asked the question because this indexed Investment Security Plan is one of the Most dramatic changes to our Income Tax Act since the tax reform of 1971. In effect, the concept of this plan is that those who invest in stocks traded on the stock market, publicly traded shares, will be able to put those shares in a plan that will index the capital gains and index the losses. Taxes will be paid on the indexed gain. In other words, after inflation is taken into account they will pay taxes on the gain but only the real gain, not the inflationary gain. The real gain may be very small. They will pay half rate taxes on the real gain.

Under this system they are also entitled to deduct their real losses. The losses can be deducted from any income source, not just at the rate of $2,000 a year. The effect is that of those who trade in publicly traded shares and use the Indexed Security Investment Plan, the rich, capable, wealthy, the big traders and those who have lots of money will not pay capital gains tax the way we pay capital gains tax. We will have to pay tax on inflationary gains but these people will be privileged.

The system will be introduced on October 1 without this House of Commons ever seeing the legislation. The Minister of Revenue (Mr. Bussières) announced details of the information that administrators of the ISIP Plan will be required to report to Revenue Canada. While reporting forms are yet to be finalized, it is expected they will be similar to existing T4 and T5 reporting forms. In other words, this procedure is in motion and ready to go. The administrators of the plan and the big brokerage houses such as Pitfield MacKay and Wood Gundy will know about it but the House of Commons will not know about it. We will not be told what the legislation is all about. It is in Justice right now. Mr. Redden in the Minister's department cannot give us the material. After all we are only Members of Parliament. This is a massive income tax change and what does the Minister of State say? "I would add, however, it is our intention to bring forward the legislation as rapidly as possible." Well, isn't that nice. This is one of the most dramatic changes in the Income Tax Act, a change that is not necessarily unanimously accepted in the investment community. I would point out that Lyman MacInnis, a senior partner of Touche Ross & Partners calls the ISIP:

—a hell of a lot of bureaucratic machinery giving the benefit to investors who least need help.

Let me emphasize that; it is giving the benefit to investors who least need help. Patricia Johnston of the organization for small business has said that if we are going to do this for the big fat cats, we had better do something for individual owners of shares in privately held companies. We better do something for landowners, farmers and fishermen too.

The system is going ahead. It will be in place on October 1 as far as the investment community is concerned. The forms will be out to them, possibly or possibly not. The regulations will be in their hands, possibly or possibly not. But for sure they will not be in our hands. This House of Commons will not have dealt with the matter. Indeed, the Bill will not even have been introduced.

What we have been calling for is parliamentary control over the taxing system and the borrowing system. We cannot as Members on this side accept this attitude from this Government.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Indexed Security Investment Plan and the process which the Liberal Government has followed in relation to it is a model for good development of important tax changes. Let me say right at the beginning, if the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is not informed about this plan then he should be ashamed to cash his pay cheque. He claims to be a finance critic yet somehow he has not been able to read a Green Paper that was issued 18 months ago, or listen to the recommendations of the Lortie Commission which came in a year ago, or read the recommendations that were contained in the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) last April, or read the proposals in a detailed Ways and Means Motion filed last April, or read a September 7 press release which came out while he was away galavanting on his holidays, or indeed, listen to the feedback that comes from investors who are very supportive.

This legislation has been suggested, debated and virtually written by the very taxpayers and investment community it should serve. New ideas are, of course, going to come forward in the next few days in the form of draft legislation. October 1 is the Government target date for that. These new ideas as announced in the September 7 press release will contain some technical changes.

These changes are a result of consultation. In this case consultation with the Toronto Stock Exchange Options Committee, a group I think we want to listen to, even if the Hon. Member does not think we should be talking to them. I believe a new open consultative budget process has been put into play over the last two years. We saw it prior to the April budget when the Minister of Finance spoke to every possible interest group he could find. The applause for that budget reflected the widespread consultation that he carried out. We saw it with the federal sales tax proposal, with the charities proposals and with a myriad of other proposals of the Government. The Indexed Security Investment Plan is a result of open government. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South should look for ways to take part in that positive process.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—REQUEST THAT ANNUAL REPORT OF DEPARTMENT BE TABLED. (B) ORGANIZATIONS' APPEARANCES BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, on June 16, I directed a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) asking when he was planning to table the annual report of the Department, or any other report dealing with the Department of Veterans Affairs in order that we could obtain an order of reference to enable the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to meet. To date nothing has been tabled, and the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs is still not able to meet.

Many recommendations and suggestions by various veterans' organizations should be discussed with a view to implementing such legislation. Veterans are still encountering many difficulties. The more years that pass without any solutions to these problems, the more serious their situation will become. Not meeting to discuss what can be done to assist veterans only makes it appear that the Government is not concerned with their hardships. Perhaps the Minister should glance at the "Last Post" in the Legion magazine. He will see that we lose more of our veterans every day, and the majority of these people and their families have not received what they should in recognition of what they have done for our country.

I have letters from veterans organizations requesting the opportunity to appear before the Committee. The National Council of Veterans Associations in Canada indicated a wish to submit a brief dealing with the basic rate of pension, the aging veterans program, and the continuation of pensions to widows at the married rate for one year following the death of the pensioners.

The Council would also like to furnish the views of the 13 member associations to the Committee regarding the Department of Veterans Affairs and its agencies. We in the Progressive Conservative Party feel there are many shortfalls in the present legislation, and we feel there is a definite need for the Committee to meet so that we may develop answers to overcome the shortfalls.

The Royal Canadian Legion also made recommendations which should be looked into. It has made suggestions regarding the aging veterans program, war veterans allowance interest exemption, Canadian war veterans living outside of Canada and others. If the Minister took time to consider them, I am sure he would agree that these ideas would if implemented be of significant value to veterans.

I am sure, the Minister is aware that because of constantly changing conditions legislation that works for today may not be suitable for tomorrow. I believe we should be able to make amendments to legislation quickly and easily so that those veterans being affected will not be forced to suffer. For this reason we should always have available an order of reference enabling us to meet when necessary to discuss what we can do to assist our veterans.

I further believe that now is a necessary time to meet particularly when there are so many issues which need to be addressed by the Committee and, most important, since the Committee Chairman was contacted directly asking that the opportunity be given to organizations such as the National Council of Veterans Association to appear. With the Royal Canadian Legion, the National Council of Veterans Association and 13 member associations ready to appear before the Committee with recommendations which would be beneficial to the welfare of veterans, surely the Minister will waste no more time in tabling the report immediately so that veterans can begin enjoying what they have earned.

On June 6, 1983 I informed the House that my Conservative colleagues and I feel that veterans deserve better treatment and that a step toward their receiving better treatment would be to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act as quickly as possible. We therefore requested that the Act be revised on the return of the House in September, providing ample time for the Minister and his Department to draft the necessary changes to the legislation. The reply received was that the review was making good progress and the Minister anticipated that legislative proposals would be ready for consideration either in the fall or next spring.

Needless to say, we and thousands of veterans are still waiting. It seems that veterans are always made to wait. They are forced to wait for improvements to legislation, just as they are forced to wait for their pensions. I realize the Minister has stated the delay in processing pension applications has been significantly reduced. However, if my Private Member's Bill, Bill C-641, an Act to amend the Pension Act, was adopted by the House veterans would have one less thing to wait for.

My Bill would impose a 90 day limit at the initial stage and a 45 day limit at each of the two levels in the appeal process. If a decision was not made within any of those periods, the applicant would be automatically awarded the full amount claimed by him. We are certainly not at a loss for veterans issues to be discussed in committee. I therefore recommend that the Minister table the report so that we can get right down to business and begin improving the conditions for veterans.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to this question directed to us in the adjournment debate; a question that was directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) on June 16, 1983, concerning the annual report of the Department, I wish to advise the House that the report will be ready for tabling between the end of October and the middle of November.

In addition to the comments of the Minister at the time on the issue of Indian veterans, I wish to add that the Minister has met with both the Alberta Indian Veterans Association and Saskatchewan Indian Veterans Association and he has heard their concerns. I would like to state also that following consultations between native representatives and departmental officials, Indian veterans have been invited to bring individual complaints to the attention of the Department of Veterans Affairs. That is the subject of the question that was posed. A mechanism has been established to investigate and respond to every complaint so presented. Also, the Department has identified counsellor positions where the basic requirements would include a good knowledge of the native culture. Five such positions are now staffed by counsellors with a native background.

While the Minister has offered his support to the Indian veteran organizations, he has had to tell them that Veterans Affairs has no authority to make funds available to support their activities. They have been referred to other Government agencies which provide funding to certain organizations.

In closing, I would like to reiterate the Minister's rejection of the Hon. Member's assertion of a breakdown in communications between the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and the various veterans organizations regarding their appearance before the committee. As the Hon. Member knows, or should know, it has always been the practice of the Chairman and Members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to meet with any organizations that wishes to appear before the Committee.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

CALL FOR EXPANSION OF CREDIT

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, farmers in Canada listening to the debates in this House on Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, are perplexed and angry with the priorities which the Government holds. Providing the Export Development Corporation with a credit of $62 billion is a bewildering contradiction for the farmer who seeks Farm Credit Corporation assistance, only to be told that the Corporation has no funds.

The EDC legislation proposed by the Government permits the extension of credit at below market rates of interest in order to promote trade, and this suggests to Canadian farmers that the same type of consideration should be made available to them.

If the Government of Algeria is deserving of a $100 million loan at 7 per cent, 10 per cent less than the cost to Canadian taxpayers of borrowing that money, and the purpose of that loan is to construct a monument to Marxism, Canadian farmers rightly ask, "Why is money not available to us through the Farm Credit Corporation for infinitely more legitimate purposes and, when it is available, why are we not given concessionary interest rates such as are available to offshore customers?"

Surely if the Government of Canada considers that Canadian exports require the type of financial commitment which Bill C-110 provides, it is not too much to suggest that agriculture, the largest job creator in the nation, should be deserving of equal treatment.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

DEMAND FOR PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, many western Canadian grain producers are facing critical financial problems. Some farmers in my constituency of Brandon-Souris have told me that if they do not receive payments soon from the Western Grain Stabilization Program, it could be the last straw. They could go bankrupt.

One would think that the Stabilization Program, to which each farmer contributed up to $1,200 this year, would have the flexibility to make payments when the payments are needed most. And in fact the program is in a very good position to do so. There is more than $800 million in the fund now. By April, 1984, there will be close to $1 billion in the fund. That is the most money the fund has ever contained in its history. However, the final decision has not yet been made on whether there will be a payment for crops seeded in 1982, and here it is September, 1983. Western grain farmers need the money now.

I urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to consider basing the calculation on a three-year rather than a five-year average so that the calculation reflects up to date conditions. As well, there is no justification for a 12-month delay, or even longer, between the time the crops are taken off and the time the payments are made. As it now stands, the program, despite all its money, does little to stabilize the western grain production industry.

We need a revised Grain Stabilization Program and, even more, we need a new Government, a Government that cares about the Canadian farmer.

EMPLOYMENT

FORECAST OF JOB OPPORTUNITIES IN HAMILTON

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) commented on the possibility of further employee cutbacks at Stelco Inc. in Hamilton. The possibility of these lay-offs is a matter of very serious concern to me, but I am also concerned that in isolating this one company's employment situation from the rest of the Hamilton community, a negative image about the city of Hamilton could be generated.

I would like to point out that a recent survey of companies across the country by Manpower Temporary Services of Toronto indicated that Hamilton, with an anticipated hiring increase of 35.7 per cent, has the brightest outlook for job opportunities for the final quarter of this year of all other communities in Canada.

In addition, unemployment in the Hamilton-Wentworth region has declined substantially since January, 1983, from 16.7 per cent of the population to 11.1 per cent this month. This decrease is due in part to job-creation projects and other measures, such as ILAP assistance to Firestone Canada Limited, put into motion by the federal Government. This level of unemployment is still unacceptably high, but the figures indicate a substantial trend toward increased hiring in the Hamilton area.

I would also like to point out that in order to provide a substantial boost to Hamilton's steel mills and related industries, it would be in the city's best interest, as well as in the best interest of the nation, for the House to pass into law the Government's Bill C-155 which would amend the Crowsnest Pass freight rate and assist in expanding the rail network in western Canada.

VIA RAIL

MINISTER URGED TO RESTORE AND IMPROVE SERVICES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I think almost all Members of this House welcome the apparent willingness of the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) to reconsider the abandonment of 20 per cent of Canada's passenger rail system which his predecessor ordered in 1981. I know that in western Canada people who travel to or from places like Rivers, Melville, Watrous, Saskatoon and Biggar, et cetera, will be hoping for reinstatement of service on the northern transcontinental route, as they, like everybody else, know that the system put in place in 1981 was ill designed and is not working. I am thinking in particular of the train that now runs from Winnipeg to Regina to Saskatoon.

I also urge the Minister to bring forward a VIA Rail Canada Act so that passenger rail service and VIA itself would no longer be at the whim of Orders-in-Council and so that there might be more genuine accountability to Parliament.

I also urge him to expedite changes in the costing order arrangement that VIA has with the railways and which has proved such a burden. Finally, I urge him not just to restore former things but to think and act imaginatively about the various ways in which passenger rail service could be used and encouraged in an energy conscious future.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LEADERSHIP VACANCY IN MANITOBA LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba Liberal Party has been leaderless for 15 months, and no one wants the job. With record high unemployment caused by this disreputable government, you would think the vacancy would be quickly filled, but not so.

The Manitoba Liberal Party is looking for a naive millionaire who is supposed to bankroll the Liberals. This position calls for someone with just the right qualifications. It requires someone who believes in the sleazy and discriminatory politics of the Liberal Party, who enjoys seeing Canadians paying through the nose for Liberal errors, who can mislead the public, and, of course, who has a sense of direction so that investment can continue to be pointed south of the border. I am pleased to announce that I have two persons in mind who have these qualifications, plus, namely, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael). May the best man, or should I say the worst man, win.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CALL FOR REMISSION OF SALES TAX

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, we are all well aware of the way in which the present income tax system discriminates against residents of northern Canada, but another tax problem which acts to the detriment of the few northern manufacturers has not received such widespread publicity. If an article is manufactured in the south, say at a cost of $100, and then transported to the North at an additional cost of $100, the final cost will be $200, plus federal sales tax levied only on the first $100, for a total of $209. If, however, the same article was manufactured in the North, the cost including transport of materials and the additional costs of northern operation, would likely be $200. Federal sales tax would then be levied on the full $200 to bring the total cost to $218. Therefore it is evident that the federal sales tax works to the disadvantage of the northern manufacturer compared with his southern competitor.

• (1110)

The solution which ought to be implemented is for the granting of partial sales tax remission for certain northern firms, in the same way that customs duties are frequently remitted for many southern firms when they can demonstrate undue hardships.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ANNUAL MARCH TO PROTEST VIOLENCE AND PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, tonight women in Ottawa, as well as in 43 other Canadian cities and cities throughout the United States and Europe, will be marching through the streets. The purpose of this annual march is to demonstrate concern about the very high levels of violence against women in our society. This violence takes many forms. Once every 17 minutes a woman is raped in Canada. Domestic violence or wife battering is far too prevalent, with shelters for victims nonexistent or underfunded in many areas. Women continue to be degraded in violent pornographic depictions, in videotapes and magazines. At work women are frequently the victims of sexual harassment.

As Jean Frances, organizer of the Ottawa march, has stated:

We're protesting everything from the sleazy eyeball, to catcalls, to actually being pushed around, to rape. It is totally unacceptable that women cannot walk through the streets safely.

While it is only women who will be marching tonight, it is important that all of us, men and women, associate ourselves with the objectives of these women for a safe society in which they do not feel threatened by violence. The cry of these women tonight will be: "Women take back the night." We are proud today to join these women in that call.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BOOK PUBLISHED BY MEMBER FOR EDMONTON SOUTH

Mr. Al MacBain (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, yesterday saw the publication of a very thoughtful book entitled, "Politicians for Peace", by the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche). It reviews the excellent work of the group known as the Parliamentarians for World Order, which includes Members from both sides of the House. In view of the regrettable inferences made about the Hon. Member for Edmonton South by the official external affairs critic for the Tory Party in an interview in The Globe and Mail earlier this week, I would like to suggest that he read his colleague's book in an effort to maintain the balance which Canadians expect of their political spokesmen in international affairs.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

OECD FORECAST OF CANADIAN YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Finance, I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister will know that a report from the OECD yesterday identified the unemployment rate in Canada into the eighties at 12 per cent, but singled out youth unemployment at an unacceptable level over the next two years of 22 per cent. Can the Minister, on behalf of the Government, tell the House what it intends to do about this unacceptable rate of youth unemployment other than the cosmetics of setting up a new bureaucracy?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to a report of the OECD with regard to unemployment predictions in Canada. He overlooked the fact that the OECD is the same organization which only a very short time ago noted, in terms of growth, that the Canadian recovery is the strongest among the seven major industrialized countries. The same organization noted that inflation has dropped more rapidly and that job creation has grown more rapidly in Canada than in any of the OECD industrialized countries.

In those circumstances the Hon. Member opposite should realize that the opportunity for employment is growing in Canada, as noted by the leading Canadian economists surveyed by the Conference Board in their report the other day. It drew attention to the fact that unemployment rates in Canada in 1984 will be at 11.2 per cent, lower than the OECD estimate and even lower than our original forecast in the budget. I am sure the short-term measures which the Government has put in place to deal with the problem of youth unemployment are having an immediate beneficial effect.

More important, over the longer term, the budget provisions and other supplementary measures that the Government has undertaken will help to make the private sector the principal generator of jobs for young people as well as for older people.

RATE OF JOB CREATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister can explain to the House how it was that new employment dropped by 75 per cent in August, according to the last data received from Statistics Canada. Perhaps he can also explain what new programs he is talking about. We have advocated putting in place an employment tax credit program which, I might say, has also been recommended in a new report from a task force of the Department of Employment and Immigration on skill development leave. Unless the Government recognizes the severity of the youth employment problem, all we can suggest is that the Government looks upon this group as the untouchables of Canada, a situation that we in this House find unacceptable.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member overlooks the fact that we in Canada have had a rapid increase in our economic growth during the last two quarters which, at an annual rate, would be a remarkable 7 per cent. While none of us anticipate that that rapid growth will continue at those levels, we can be certain that, for the remainder of this year and well into 1984, the sustainable economic growth will be considerably more than that which we forecast in the April budget. That being so, benefits in terms of youth employment will be present in the increased activities of the private sector as much as in the public.

We have, in the public sector, as the Hon. Member may recall, instituted a number of measures for young people in particular. The internships, job corps, extended youth training programs, many of which have been noted at some length by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, are obviously having a beneficial effect in the short term. In the longer term the economic recovery, spurred on by the measures we have put in place to help the private sector create the long-term jobs necessary to match the number of young people coming on to the job market, are also having a very beneficial effect.

YOUNG PEOPLE ON WELFARE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister speaks of job creation for young people in the short term. He is not aware, of course, of a study released in June by Employment and Immigration, entitled "Strategic Policy and Planning", which states, "The prospects for an improvement in youth employment during the remainder of the year are bleak." That fact was confirmed yesterday by the OECD. Today half the people on welfare in the Ottawa-Carleton area, this very region, are young people under the age of 25. That is a scandalous situation which the Government refuses to address. The Minister should wait for the question. Is the Government prepared to address the problem of youth unemployment as one of the most serious social questions facing this country today, and at least bring in employment tax credits?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I had some difficulty in discerning the question. I am glad that the Hon. Member finally came to it. The OECD study to which he refers is based on statistics up to the end of the first quarter of 1983. The statistical material that has since become available, both to this Government and private sector economists, as reflected in the Conference Board material to which I referred the Hon. Member a few moments ago, has indicated a higher rate of job creation in Canada than had been anticipated. Indeed, over 55 per cent of the jobs lost during the period of recession have been recovered. We have created a net number of new jobs of over 325,000, during the recent period, obviously including jobs for young people. In addition to the job creation that I have mentioned, we have put in place a number of programs that are of immediate benefit to young people.

I do not take second place to the Hon. Member opposite for one moment in my concern for youth unemployment in this country, nor does this Government. That concern and the commitment to create jobs for young people will be seen in the combination of public sector initiatives, short-term initiatives that we have put in place, and the longer term initiatives to stimulate permanent jobs in the private sector.

RECOMMENDATIONS MADE CONCERNING YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister and concerns the situation in Quebec, where the unemployment rate among young people is higher than the national average, which means that 157,000 young Quebecers are out of work.

Could the Minister inform the House what suggestions he has received from the 74 Liberal Members from Quebec or have they remained silent on this problem as well?

[English]

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite should know that the members of this Party who are from Quebec are as active and committed to the welfare of their constituents, including young people, as any Members of Parliament could possibly be. Many of the Hon. Members from Quebec have emphasized the problems facing young Canadians today when seeking employment. They have taken an active part in designing and developing the initiatives of which I spoke earlier. They have come forward with a variety of ideas pertaining to their own constituencies in particular, which are also of great benefit to job creation for all Canadians, including those in Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley-West): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister said that the Liberal backbenchers do have suggestions, and I would like to know what they are.

Would the Minister have us believe that the only solution offered by Liberal backbenchers is to create a new bureaucracy and a few dozen jobs for young people? In that case, what about the remaining hundreds of thousands of young Quebecers who are out of work and who have nothing to expect from this Government?

[English]

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure of the thrust of the question asked by the Hon. Member opposite but the fact is that our members from Quebec have joined with other members and have participated actively in our caucus discussions and in discussions within the Party about such initiatives as those which led to the training facilities of the Armed Forces being made available to young Canadians for periods of service in the Armed Forces. They have contributed actively to the design of various job-creation programs during the summer months. They participated in the discussions which have led to local initiatives of a kind that can benefit the young people in the Province of Quebec as well as elsewhere.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is supplementary on the matter of youth unemployment. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, as he is a former university professor, whether he has had a chance to talk to young people or visit any campuses, colleges, or retraining centres this year. Has he seen that our young people seem to be in double jeopardy? They are turning to the colleges and universities because the rate of youth unemployment is over 20 per cent, and then some of them find that they are shut out, that they cannot get into these facilities.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister about the OECD report. It is not the first report. I released the Government's own report this summer, called "The Rocky Road to 1990". I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he will make a personal statement indicating that youth unemployment in Canada today is the Government's highest priority.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member would just have to look at the figures that are in the estimates and the figures given by the Minister of Finance. In this year we have devoted more than $1 billion to solving the problem of youth unemployment. That is up from some $822 million that was in last year's budget. I think that is a self-evident answer which indicates that we are giving it the highest priority.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, we have checked the figures. If you look at the figures for ten years ago and consider the rate of unemployment today, and measure in constant dollars, you will see that the Government was spending more money in 1972 on short-term job creation than it is spending now.

OECD WARNING OF SOCIAL DISCONTENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Would the Prime Minister agree with the OECD report which suggests that frustration and apathy among young people could lead to social discontent? Would he not acknowledge that the possibility of social discontent is perhaps as dangerous to western democracy as are the Soviet missiles and other things on which we are concentrating?

Would the Prime Minister declare war, literally declare war, on youth unemployment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member should ask a single supplementary question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do agree that it is in danger of creating social discontent. It is creating social discontent and many other uncertainties in the minds of young people. That is why we have increased spending for the creation of jobs for youth. We have increased it by 25 per cent this year over last year.

Mr. Waddell: Look at 1972.

INCOME TAX

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF TAXPAYERS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Revenue. Two days ago the Canadian Chamber of Commerce delivered a brief to the Minister and his Cabinet colleagues in which it made the following charge:

> —there appears to be a significant growth in the number of frivolous or poorly based assessments, often issued without the benefit of discussion with the taxpayer. In addition, the collection officers then insist on the payment of the tax owing, even though it might be obvious on a cursory review that the assessment will be reversed on appeal.

Has the Minister investigated this very serious charge and given strict instructions to his officials that there is no room for bully boy tactics, and that Canadian taxpayers are to be treated with civility and respect and not as criminals?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. Our concern at the Department of National Revenue is to ensure that taxpayers who owe taxes pay them and that those who are responsible for ensuring that taxes are paid in full and that the tax burden does not fall on other taxpayers, do so in a civil manner, with a view to helping taxpayers complete their tax returns properly.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, nobody disputes the right of the Government to collect taxes owed to it. The point is whether the Government has a presumption of guilt on the part of the taxpayers and requires them to prove their innocence, and whether its tactics have been fair.

REPORTED GROWTH IN NON-CASH BARTER TRANSACTIONS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister about another allegation made by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. It claims that the growing complexity of the Canadian tax system is driving increasing numbers of Canadian taxpayers into the underground economy. Has the Minister investigated that allegation? What steps is the Government prepared to take to make Canada's tax system comprehensible to Canadian taxpayers once again?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the complexity of Canada's tax system is related to the many benefits the Income Tax Act provides for Canadian taxpayers. If, for instance, we had no child tax credit or business incentives like the measures introduced in his last budget by the Minister of Finance, and if we just had a flat rate for all Canadian taxpayers, it would be very easy to complete a tax return and to pay any tax owing to the Government. However, if that were the case, we would not have, within our tax system here in Canada, a set of measures aimed at creating jobs, encouraging businesses to invest in areas where economic development is critical, measures to help people in need, people on fixed incomes, and also measures to help mothers with children in single parent families to obtain substantial amounts from the Government of Canada, thus redistributing wealth within the country and helping people improve their standard of living.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLOCATION OF RESOURCES TO SECURITY SERVICE AND INVESTIGATION OF TERRORISTS

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Will the Minister confirm that the human and technical resources of the RCMP Security Service have been both diverted and diluted from the threat posed by the Soviet Union to our national security, to the following of suspected Armenian terrorists or Nazi war criminals? Second, how did we get into a situation where we have to rob Peter to pay Paul?

● (1130)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to reports in the media in the last few hours, and I certainly am glad to have the opportunity to comment on that. The war criminals activities within the RCMP come under the resources of the Criminal Investigations Branch. No resources have been transferred from the Security Service for that purpose. It is a normal criminal investigation operation.

Within the Security Service operation, I am very pleased to be able to inform the Hon. Member, the reports he read were wrong with respect to the reduction of resources in the counter intelligence division, which is the one which deals with unacceptable diplomatic behaviour of an espionage nature. In fact the resources in that particular division, on my direction to the Security Service, have not been reduced. They have been increased.

It is true, and I mentioned this before the Senate committee, that resources allocated to counter terrorism, which would include the anti-Turkish terrorists, have also been increased. The Hon. Member may want to ask, if two divisions have been increased, then which have been decreased—the Peter-Paul business. I regret to inform him, but I am sure he would agree with me, that it would not be in the interest of national security to indicate which areas of activity of the Security Service of the RCMP have been decreased.

The Hon. Member may also be interested to know that extra resources, in general, within the RCMP, manpower resources, have been freed up, because a couple of years ago Provinces asked us to prepare and train new RCMP officers at the depot to serve under provincial police contracts, and during the last several months a number of Provinces have cancelled the request which they made to take these RCMP officers. Therefore, in general, across the force we have officers whom we were training to work in provincial contracts who are now not available. I recently went to Treasury Board and arranged a transfer of those person-years from the RCMP provincial contracts to the federal contracts.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

LENDING POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, all Members of the House will be aware that the recovery will be led by and large by job creation and activity from the small business sector. In the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. Is the Minister aware that one Canadian bank today, while lending millions of dollars to the small business community over the past number of years, has in place a policy, and has terminated all lending in one Province of Canada? Is the Minister aware of that situation?

Mr. Fisher: What bank?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I would be happy to hear from the Hon. Member what bank it is. Because of this Government's commitment to the small business sector, we have in place the Small Businesses Loans Act, which last year made over 17,000 loans to small businesses. I believe that is a pretty clear indicator of the commitment of this Government to the small business sector of our economy.

NON-ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO PROJECTS ON INDIAN RESERVES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister of State for Small Businesses that the Canadian ban to which I refer is the Federal Business Development Bank. It is the Canadian Government's bank which, in the Province of British Columbia, over the years has loaned out millions of dollars to small businesses which locate their activities in industrial parks on Indian reserves. However, in 1982 and 1983 not a single dollar has been loaned to these businesses. The Department was alerted to this problem many months ago. What has the Minister done about it? Or has he sat on his hands and done nothing? Why does this problem continue today?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I have arranged a meeting with the president of the FBDB and some of his officials next week. I can assure the Hon. Member that I will be reviewing these matters at that time.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF WATERLOO-WELLINGTON WEATHER OFFICE

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister will be aware of the widespread opposition to the July 8 announcement that the Waterloo-Wellington weather office will be closed in March of 1985. This opposition has come from regional government sources, municipal governments, farm groups, and the airport commission. Has the Minister, since taking over that portfolio, had the opportunity to review this decision?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the matter is one which has been brought to my attention in recent weeks. Representations have also been made to me by Hon. Members on this side of the House as well as by other Hon. Members. I am reviewing the situation, and I hope to be able to give a precise answer in a short while.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER HOLD DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that the Kitchener-Waterloo-Wellington County area has a unique climate, different from Toronto, Hamilton, and London. Last year there were 48,000 calls, half of those from farmers. This decision has an impact on the airport improvement plan. Will the Minister not only review it but make a commitment to come to the area and talk to the sectors which are affected by this decision which was made by his Department?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to adopt the line of policy which the Hon. Member is recommending, if it were coupled with a policy decision on the part of his front benchers to increase Government expenditures.

REQUEST FOR ALL-EMBRACIVE POLICY

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, unemployment in this country, and the responsibility for it, sit squarely on the shoulders of a government which has been in power for the last 15 years. When is this Government going to follow the lead of such countries as Sweden, France, Germany and Japan, and come up with a total economic policy so that people will have faith in Canada, will find jobs in Canada, and continue to be successful in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure why the Hon. Member insists on looking at other countries for comparison. As the Minister of State responsible for finance said earlier, jobs are growing faster in Canada than in any other country the Hon. Member has mentioned.

Mr. Crosbie: That is a figment of your imagination.

Mr. Trudeau: This is recognized even by the OECD figures. The Hon. Member can also look at the budget figures themselves when we set aside some $4.8 billion in order to create jobs.

Mr. Crosbie: Part-time jobs.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, the Hon. Member from St. John's West has a part-time job. It will end, we hope, within the next year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Why do you not come down and run there?

Mr. Trudeau: This is not the case of the jobs we create in Canada. We have been creating jobs at the rate of some 35,000 to 40,000 a month for the past nine months. Mr. Speaker, I would think this is an indication of good, strong, solid growth. Obviously it will have to continue, and it will only continue if Canadians have confidence in their economy and do not follow the lead of the Conservatives who have no confidence in the future of the economy.

ROBOT TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister refers to partisan, patchwork jobs. I want to make a recommendation to him.

• (1140)

Spar Aerospace has developed the most highly technical robot in the world—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has been given a supplementary question and he should ask the question.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that we have the technology, that Canadians could be building robots when there is going to be such a tremendous demand between now and 1990?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of State for Science and Technology has made many statements on the importance of science and technology in our future development. He made a submission to the Macdonald Commission where that was explained at some length, and I would commend the reading of it to the Hon. Member.

However, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that rather than being concerned about high technology in the future, they should look at present technology, the railways, for instance. They should realize there are going to be bottlenecks in the railways, particularly in the West, by 1985 if there is not a massive upgrading of the rail system. They should look at the Bill before the House on the Crow and realize that the Government is anxious to commit some $3.8 billion for upgrading the railways. It will lever some $16 billion from the private sector in upgrading the railways. Yet we see nothing but procrastination from the two Opposition parties in the passing of this Bill which has been before the House many months.

IMMIGRATION

TERMS OF EMPLOYMENT PERMIT ISSUED TO AUSTRALIAN

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and his Parliamentary Secretary, I will address my question to the Prime Minister.

As the Minister knows, from a letter sent to him dated September 9, the Canadian Association of Motion Pictures and Electronic Recording Artists, Local 81, senior officers of the Department of Immigration at the end of July directed that an employment permit be issued to Peter Moss of Australia to enter Canada for the purpose of working for six weeks for the Partners Film Company. Since immigration regulations on April 6, 1982, require that offers of employment and employment authorizations for foreign entertainers specify the jobs to be done when a foreign entertainer is permitted entry, will the Prime Minister tell the House why in this case the offer of employment and employment authorization to Mr. Moss failed to specify the jobs he is permitted to do while in Canada, and gave him blanket permission to take any job offers he pleases while in Canada?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I suggest to the Hon. Member that a question of this nature might be better placed on the Order Paper, given the degree of detail requested. However, if the Minister wishes to reply, he may do so.

The Hon. Member for St. John's West.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND INDUSTRY—NEGOTIATION OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will know that the unemployment problem in Canada is a serious one. If he does not know it from his Minister of Finance, he should know it from the OECD report, which gives the latest figures for the seven major industrial countries and which shows Canada's record as the worst.

Given that, and given the fact that Newfoundland has the heaviest unemployment in Canada, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether his Government and the Government of Newfoundland have entered into an agreement dealing with the fishery crisis in Newfoundland, or whether they may shortly be entering into an agreement, or just where that matter now stands?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do know that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans on behalf of the federal Government did enter into an agreement with, I believe, the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland, but it was repudiated by the Premier. I understand there are now new discussions going on and that the matter is still being negotiated between the two Governments. I cannot report on the present state of those negotiations. I do know that the Minister of State for Economic Development was in Newfoundland a few days ago discussing the possibility of an ERDA Agreement, and progress is going along in that field. But in the matter of fisheries I am not quite sure where the matter presently stands.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE EXPEDITED

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Prime Minister it was reported by his Department of Employment that it is likely that 40 per cent of all the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland have not caught sufficient fish to be eligible for unemployment insurance this year. That is the magnitude of the crisis, and that was mentioned by another Member in the House several days ago.

In light of that and the fact that the fish plant at Trepassey, for example, owned by Fishery Products, is closed, and in light of the fact that the Bank of Nova Scotia has put the major offshore fishing companies of the Province in receivership at the urging of the Government of Canada, would the Prime Minister expedite any possible agreement there may now be with the Province? Could he promise the House he will have this matter checked out, and would it be possible for him to report to the House next week? There is a crisis in Newfoundland; half the population are unemployed and the other half have very little prospects.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed there has been a crisis, particularly in the fishery in Newfoundland, for the past several months. That is why we were bitterly disappointed—

Mr. Crosbie: Exactly, and we want action.

Mr. Trudeau: We want action, too, Mr. Speaker. May I repeat to the Hon. Member for St. John's West that the Newfoundland Minister of Fisheries and the federal Minister of Fisheries had signed an agreement which our Cabinet had accepted—

Mr. Crosbie: Which you repudiated.

Mr. Trudeau: —which was repudiated by the Premier. Therefore, if there is any hardship in the fisheries now, the Hon. Member can turn to the Premier and reproach him bitterly on the—

Mr. Crosbie: That is nonsense.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the present?

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member says it is nonsense because it does not suit his partisan policies. But if he is interested in unemployment, particularly in the fisheries, he will ask himself why the Premier of his Province has repudiated the fisheries agreement—

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you get briefed on what is happening now?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not interested in the truth in this. He is interested in making points on the backs of the unemployed, and that is a miserable attitude.

RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can he advise us why the decline in our inflation rate seems stalled at 5.5 per cent when the Americans continue to improve their performance and now have an inflation rate of only 2.4 per cent?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the first thing the Hon. Member should do is realize that the Canadian people collectively have brought inflation down in a year from something like 12 per cent to less than 6 per cent.

Mr. Crosbie: Who let it go up?

Mr. Trudeau: The six and five program this Government brought forward was successful.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It was successful in spite of the bitter opposition of the Opposition parties. The objective was 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. Those are the figures we are at now. We hope it will continue going down, but this will call for more than words from the Opposition. It will call for active support and, in particular, pressure on those Premiers who have not adopted the six and five program in their Provinces.

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will know that six and five might have had some value when we had a 10 per cent inflation rate, but how can six and five today be anything but a floor on wage demands or price increases? Will the Prime Minister explain to this House how his six and five program is anything but encouragement for higher inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member should not be told what side is up when he talks about a floor. The fact is, as he recognized, inflation was at 12 per cent and that it seemed no mean feat to bring it down to six.

Mr. Crosbie: Who got it there?

Mr. Trudeau: It was brought down to 6 per cent and now to 5.5 per cent. Hopefully it will continue going down. But we in this House—

Mr. Crosbie: "Man-mountain" Trudeau wrestled it to the ground.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I have the loud mouth from St. John's, Mr. Speaker, trying to kibitz on an answer to a question his hon. colleague asked. I wish he would at least have the decency and respect for his colleague on the Opposition benches to listen to the answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENSIONS

AMOUNT RECEIVED BY BRITISH PENSIONERS RESIDING IN CANADA

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As he knows, there are some 40,000 persons in Canada who receive old age pensions from the British Government. However, since those pensions are not indexed to inflation most if not all of those seniors are suffering financial hardship. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends to raise this question with Prime Minister Thatcher when she is in the country next week with a view to pressing the British Prime Minister to enter into a reciprocal social security agreement with Canada?

• (1150)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the subject is one which I intend raising. It has been raised with me by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She has made very strong representations that the matter be forwarded through me to the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and I will do so.

SPOUSAL ENTITLEMENT TO CANADA PENSION PLAN CREDITS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, last week the Canada Pensions Appeal Board ruled that the Government's policy of splitting divorced spouses' Canada Pension Plan credits was not enforceable in the courts. Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare advise the House whether she intends to bring forward measures which will give this policy the force of law so that all those women who have been misled will be able to receive what the Government has told them they are entitled to?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a little strong to speak of women who have been misled. We are reviewing the case in my Department now. But women were told to make a decision one way or the other as to their rights to credit splitting. Once they have decided not to have it and to forgo their right, you cannot say somebody misled them. We are looking into the matter. I have not reached a decision yet.

ENERGY

RADIOACTIVE LAND FILL IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, if I can pull him away from lobbying the caucus all morning.

Mr. Crosbie: How is it looking, Jean?

Mr. Chrétien: I will not collaborate with someone who says his own Leader lies.

Mr. Crosbie: The Prime Minister is getting nervous.

Mr. Friesen: If I can draw the Minister's attention to the responsibilities he has now rather than what he would like to have, in 1975 a company in my riding bought property from a company known as Fundy Chemical only to find out later on that the land fill on that site was low level radioactive land fill imported from somewhere else. Since 1976 my colleague from Fraser Valley West and I have been trying to get that landfill removed. Five years ago his predecessor wrote to me and said—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member, but a question with the level of detail like this might better be placed on the Order Paper. If the Hon. Member wishes to pursue his question, could he please state it?

Mr. Friesen: Is the difficulty in removing that low level radioactive material from that landsite, which we have been trying to have accomplished for six years now, because the property was formerly owned by a defeated Liberal Member from Manitoba who foisted that land onto an innocent purchaser?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel too much pressure in the House. I have four shadows from the other side and in two weeks this is the second question and it is related to a problem that is five years old.

I can talk with my colleagues with a lot of ease. Also, I can assure the Hon. Member that, on our side, we will never do what the Member for St. John's West is doing these days, saying that his own Leader lies about the contributions to his funds for the campaign.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

STORAGE AT CANADIAN BASES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In February, 1981, two and one-half years ago, the Prime Minister said in the House that nuclear weapons would never be used by Canada's Armed Forces. If that is still Government policy, why are there still at least 55 nuclear tipped weapons stored in Canada at Chatham, New Brunswick, Bagotville, and Comox?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the purchase and deployment of F-18s will precisely have the result that I predicted. The F-18s will not be nuclear armed and the present airplanes are being phased out and replaced by the F-18s. The Hon. Member knows that.

If he is indignant about the fact that there are still some left, I wish he would lend more support to the effort we have made in the past to denuclearize our forces in NATO, which we have done in Europe and are finishing doing in Canada now.

Mr. Andre: If I am indignant about anything it is the fact that we have another case here where defence policy statements point in one direction and defence policy action in another.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the question is very simple. According to the Prime Minister we have had a policy for several years that even in the event of hostilities these nuclear missiles would not be put on Canadian airplanes. If that is our policy and has been for a number of years, why are there still today at least 55 nuclear missiles in Canada? Why are not the actions of the Government consistent with its stated policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am really bewildered by the Hon. Member's intent. We announced in the early 1970s that we were going to denuclearize our airplaines on the western front in Germany. We did that over a period of years. It has been done now for at least ten years, but it was not done overnight. In the case of Canada, we announced the same policy and, as we announced it, we brought in the designs and acceptance of a new airplane, the F-18, which will not be armed with nuclear missiles. However, they take a little bit of time to build. I flew one personally last year, as the House will recall. They are being deployed now and they fly well. They are not armed with nuclear missiles and they will replace the ones that were armed with nuclear missiles.

This is going in the direction in which our policy said we would go. If the Hon. Member were really sincere in thinking that we would throw many dozens of planes away overnight and create new ones overnight, he is wrong. We never intended that. We just said that we would denuclearize our Armed Forces. We have been doing that, and have almost finished doing it.

PAYMENTS TO RAILROADS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the Prime Minister's allegation that constructive opposition to Bill C-155 is holding up $16 billion worth of investment, particularly $5.5 billion worth of investment in B.C., and 10,000 jobs. In view of the fact that early in 1982 the Prime Minister's government committed itself to the railroads for full compensatory rates on the 1982-83 grain crop movement, how can he continue to shovel out this twisted, misleading myth about the Opposition's responsible function as holding up progress in western Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is no myth. The Opposition has moved an amendment suggesting that the whole Bill be hoisted for three years.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Crosbie: Not true.

Mr. Trudeau: The jobs are needed now. The $16 billion and $20 billion are needed now. We have been attempting to get authority from the House to create those jobs. It is not tens of thousands of jobs, it is hundreds of thousands of jobs. It is $16 billion plus $3 billion and another half dozen billion dollars of indirect benefits from the Crow when it is passed. The railways are waiting for it. The shippers are waiting for it,—

Mr. Chrétien: The Government of B.C.

Mr. Trudeau: The Government of B.C. is waiting for it, as the Hon. Minister suggested. What we find is a Party with a Leader who is prepared to see the whole thing hoisted three years.

Mr. Nielsen: Nonsense. Rubbish.

Mr. Trudeau: The House Leader says nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: I said rubbish.

Mr. Trudeau: They have moved a motion saying that it be stood for three years.

Mr. Nielsen: Not the Bill.

Mr. Trudeau: Now if this is not what they want—

An Hon. Member: Not the Bill.

Mr. Trudeau: We want to spend the money, the railways want to invest the money, the workers need the jobs, the shippers need to put an end to the bottlenecks, and all that we have from the other side is indecision and, because they cannot make up their minds, they want to procrastinate three years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

REQUEST THAT BENEFITS BE EXTENDED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Prime Minister. The OECD says that the unemployment rate in Canada will be in excess of 12 per cent. It says, I think with some justification, that the youth unemployment rate will be in excess of 20 per cent. The Minister of Finance has indicated that unemployment will be in the order of 11.4 per cent in the coming year—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member get to his question, please?

Mr. Deans: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Whichever figure you want to choose, there will be a lot of people unemployed who will run out of UIC benefits this year. Will the Prime Minister undertake to increase or to improve the Unemployment Insurance Program in Canada to guarantee that those people who are unemployed through no fault of their own will receive sufficient benefits to meet their day-to-day commitments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this has been debated on various occasions in the House. The Minister has answered. We have no present plans to change the Unemployment Insurance Act in the way the Hon. Member suggests. Obviously, we would very much like to alleviate the burden and the misery of those who are unemployed. We are already putting billions of dollars to job creation in the budget. The scheme is working. We have been creating jobs at a rate of 35,000 to 40,000 a month for the past nine months. There are still people who are unemployed.

Mr. Deans: 12 per cent are unemployed.

Mr. Trudeau: They will not cease being unemployed just by throwing another few billion dollars at them.

The Hon. Member would suggest that we enrich the unemployment insurance scheme. It was enriched by this Government in the last decade. It is now one of the richest schemes in any of the western nations. We do not have all the resources to make it the only recourse to those who have no jobs. We have on the one hand to find jobs for them and, on the other hand, we have to stimulate the economy. It is not the best way to stimulate the economy by putting more money into unemployment insurance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Capilano on a short supplementary to his previous question.

REQUEST THAT PAYMENTS BE REDIRECTED TO FARMERS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the reply which the Prime Minister gave to my question.

Mr. Nielsen: He misled the House.

Mr. Huntington: Why does the Prime Minister not come clean with the Canadian people and the people of western Canada, and admit that when he ordered the reversal of his former Minister of Transport's method of payment on the Crow he absolutely destroyed the future and the potential of western Canada and the grain basin? He benefits only the CPR, his pal, Mr. Ian Sinclair, and that is substantiated in the Wood-Gundy research report which shows that its earnings will increase $3.50 a share as a rsult of the Crow. Why does the Prime Minister not come clean?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Member put his question?

Mr. Huntington: Why does the Prime Minister not come clean with the people and redirect the initial payments back to the producers so that this country can start to grow once again? What is he trying to do to us?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is another astonishing statement. The Hon. Member seems to forget that it is his own Party, his own Members, and many institutions in the West, including the Pools, who opposed the Bill—

Mr. Huntington: You know better than that, Sir. Come up to date.

Mr. Trudeau: Is the Hon. Member telling me that his Party, and if it is true I would like to hear it from his Leader or his former Leader, that his Party would have supported the Bill as it was first introduced by our Minister, now Minister of State for External Relations, and that somehow the fight that was going on against it, the strong opposition to it in the West—

Mr. Huntington: Little pockets, and Quebec.

Mr. Trudeau: —and strong opposition to it in Central Canada were something that he knows nothing about? We changed the Bill, Mr. Speaker, in order to get more support for it. If we had had support from that side, and from the New Democratic Party, perhaps the Bill would have gone in its original form.

Mr. Deans: Split the Bill.

Mr. Trudeau: This is really strange. This is really a strange rewriting of history. We had a Bill before this House which now the Hon. Member speaks about with nostalgia. He did not support it then because we did not have enough support. We had to bring in some amendments which brought more support.

Mr. Huntington: Only from Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Big laughs. Now his Party is not saying it will support it if we go back to the original amendments. He is saying they will not do anything for three years. Let the Leader of that Tory Party stand up and say, "We will support the Bill as it was when Mr. Pepin brought it in." Let us hear him say that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: They are very nervous over there and touchy. Watch out, Prime Minister. Yon Chrétien has a lean and hungry look.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Yukon on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to raise because of some confusion arising from the projected business for today and yesterday's statement by the acting House Leader. First, may I welcome back the Government House Leader. I hope he has totally recovered from his problems, physical, that is; I cannot wish him out of his political problems.

Yesterday as reported in Hansard at page 27387, the acting Government House Leader said:

—we will continue with Bill C-110, as we will tomorrow.

Meaning today. That theme, of course, is carried throughout the exchange that took place between the acting House Leader and myself yesterday. But we see in today's Projected Order of Business, as the second item of business, that we will be resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) for second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill C-12, an Act respecting bankruptcy and insolvency.

It was our clear understanding yesterday that we would be proceeding with Bill C-110 today, but that if it were finished today we would be going on with Bill C-91, which was the indication by the acting Government House Leader. It was not that if we conclude Bill C-110 today we would be going on with Bill C-12. We are prepared to go on, should we complete Bill C-110 today, with Bill C-91, but not with Bill C-12.

Would the Government House Leader agree that was the projected order of business?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, it is correct that we will be dealing with Bill C-110 today. Assuming that we terminate the report stage of Bill C-110 today, it is correct—because I witnessed my acting Minister on television saying so—that he said we were to study Bill C-91. I do not know if following his answer the Opposition House Leader had the opportunity to raise the matter again with my colleague. If that is not the case, we will certainly see that the Minister is prepared to resume debate on Bill C-91 today.

On Monday, though, we will go to Bill C-12 as announced yesterday. Since the chairman of the Committee will not be tabling the report with respect to Bill C-155 today, it will not be possible to deal with the report stage of that Bill before next Thursday. Next Tuesday we will resume debate on Bill C-110, assuming third reading is not passed today.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, if Bill C-110 is disposed of, what will be doing next Tuesday?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, assuming that second reading stage of Bill C-12 is not completed on Monday, we will resume debate on Bill C-12. If Bill C-12 is dealt with completely during the one hour following noon on Monday, then, as announced, we will resume debate on Bill C-91.

If my hon. colleague asks what is next if Bill C-91 is dealt with, then I would be surprised, but I would welcome the good news just as I am happy to be back. I thank the Hon. Member for his good words at the beginning of his question.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Government House leader for that clarification.

Point of Order—Mr. Nielsen

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Yesterday in the Government House Leader's absence, the acting House leader indicated to me that perhaps the Government House Leader would be able to indicate today upon his return what the Government's intention was with regard to Bill C-653. Is the Government House Leader now in a position to tell us whether that piece of legislation will be brought forward in any form during the course of the next week? Or for that matter, is it the Government's intention to meet what I understood to be a commitment to satisfy the requirements of many farmers in the country who are faced with bankruptcy?

• (1210)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I cannot deny that the Hon. Member may understand things in one way, but I am sure he will agree that we may have another understanding of certain facts. So far as the Bill to which he refers is concerned, I have to meet with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but in the meantime dealing with Bill C-12 will be a good step ahead in the sense of helping farmers and small business people with their problems. Perhaps the Hon. Member might consider giving swift and quick passage to Bill C-12. That might solve most of the problems.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on the same point, yesterday the acting House leader raised with me whether or not we would be prepared to deal with Bill C-12 expeditiously through the particular stage it is at, and I said we would.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—S.O. 21 STATEMENTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my second point of order is also very brief. I have been noticing since our return a growing number of statements under Standing Order 21 being made by Members on all sides, but particularly today from the Government side and yesterday from the NDP, which cast aspersions or reflections either on other Members or on Members of the other place.

I just want to draw the attention of the Chair—and I am sure the Chair is aware of it—to Standing Order 39 which sets forth:

No Member shall speak disrespectfully of Her Majesty, nor of any of the Royal Family, nor of His Excellency or the person administering the Government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either House, or against any Member thereof.

Also in support of my suggestion that the Chair might wish to pay closer attention to the contents of statements made under Standing Order 21, I refer to page 21873 of Hansard for Monday, January 17, 1983, when Madam Speaker was in the Chair discussing the application of the new experimental rules. She said:

There are two areas in particular where the discretion of the Chair will be a significant element in the successful operation of the provisional rules.

Further down the same column she said:

> The second area is the procedure, provided for in provisional Standing Order 21, which will enable Hon. Members other than Ministers to make statements of not more than one and a half minutes on matters of concern.

The important part appears on page 21874 of Hansard where Madam Speaker said:

> All questions raised must be on matters of concern, but they do not necessarily have to be matters of urgent and pressing necessity. The time set aside for Members' Statements should not be used to make personal attacks. I think that in the previous application of Standing Order 43, the Chair had to consider the content of the motion, but in this case, and in this particular form, Members are being given an opportunity to raise matters of concern. It is clear that personal attacks are not considered to be matters that should be raised and that are important, in the opinion of the House, at this point of the proceedings.

I am not pointing the finger at any specific side of the House, but respecting the practice of making personal references with respect to Members' conduct or statements, particularly in the other place where they do not have an opportunity to defend themselves in this place, I think the Chair might accept the suggestion that closer attention might be paid to stopping the practice in mid-air, as it were.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I would say the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is absolutely right, and I trust that his Party colleagues will observe the principles he has just mentioned, because often there is a tendency, especially in the Hon. Member's Party, to make personal attacks when criticizing actions or statements by other parliamentarians. This has occurred in the past and I am thinking of the times when certain Ministers were accused of lying and certain Members as well. I believe the principles he has emphasized this morning are entirely appropriate and that the message should be heard by all Members on both sides of the House, but especially by those who are sitting around the Hon. Member, considering the fact that in the past, and I repeat, they, and not Members on this side of the House, have tended to be guilty of this kind of attack. I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member on having brought this Standing Order to the attention of the Chair this morning, thereby emphasizing the rule of parliamentary procedure that actions or statements, not individuals themselves, may be attacked, and I would urge the Hon. Member to draw the attention of his colleagues to this rule at his caucus meeting next Wednesday.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Government House Leader focused on Members of one particular Party. That is a matter which I scrupulously avoided in raising the point. But today it did occur. I could say that today it did occur on the other side and I could cite the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain) who made disparaging remarks about a Member. Yesterday it was the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who made disparaging remarks about a Member of the other place.

I invite the House Leader to join with me in my request of the Chair that it pay closer attention to the application of Madam Speaker's correct interpretation of the operation of Standing Order 21 without attributing any specific responsibility on either side of the House. I think that on reflection he will agree that it not only occurs on that side and from the NDP but also on this side. I made that clear at the outset. It is just a practice I would like to see terminated.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think the point is well taken. There has to be some care taken in ensuring that comments by Members at any time are comments directed either to the parliamentary process being undertaken or, at the very least, to the work of another Member or a Member of the other place, not directed at the Member personally.

There is a fine line, of course. It is awfully difficult for the Chair to draw that line when listening to statements since the Chair does not have the statements in advance. It would be extremely difficult under normal circumstances for the Chair to be in a position to make a very fast judgment on a statement which is only of 90 seconds duration. I think the practice could be better followed and the end result achieved if Hon. Members would exercise self-discipline.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The matter raised has given concern to the Chair. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) made a valid point when he indicated that the Chair is in a difficult position; with a short statement things are said before the Chair is in a position to interrupt, since the period of time is so short. The Chair will make one observation: Hon. Members who offended the rule might have some difficulty getting the Chair's eye on future occasions.

PETITION

MR. ANGUISH—RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of my area of Saskatchewan who indicate that they are concerned about Bill C-155 and its effect on agriculture in western Canada. They want the Crow rate to be maintained and at the same time see the necessity to upgrade the transportation system so that they have better transportation of their products to markets. Even in light of that, the Crow rate must be maintained.

LOUIS DAVID RIEL

MEASURE TO GRANT POSTHUMOUS PARDON

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-691, an Act to grant a pardon to Louis David Riel.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, other Members in this House, particularly the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), would also have been very pleased to second this Bill.

The Parliament of Canada in 1885 committed a gross injustice that remains as a bloodstained blot on this institution. It hanged a man named Louis Riel against a plea of mercy by the jury involved and against pleas for clemency and a request for pardon by countless Canadians. Parliament could have prevented that hanging—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is permitted a brief explanation of his Bill, not a major speech at this point. The Hon. Member may give a brief explanation of the purpose of the Bill.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, this was a short introduction to the explanation of the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has ten seconds to explain the purpose of his Bill.

Mr. Yurko: This Bill intends after 98 years to grant a posthumous pardon to Louis Riel, a hero of western Canada, a hero of all Canada, a man revered from one end of the country to the other by stamps, statues, naming of roads, naming of institutions and so forth. I ask the House to support the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It may even be a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) has introduced a Bill that is pretty well a duplicate of my Bill which has been on the Order Paper for five or six years. I resent the discourtesy of the Hon. Member in using someone else's legislation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member may have a grievance. There will be another time and place in which to present that grievance, but at this stage does the Hon. Member for Edmonton East have leave to introduce his Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have taken the liberty of having this Bill printed and distributed in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. A point of order is not in order at this point.

Mr. Yurko: I have the right to ask the House for unanimous consent, as the House Leader on that side and the House Leader on this side have their opportunity. That is all I intend to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member is asking for unanimous consent for second reading of the Bill, that is all he has to say.

Mr. Yurko: That is what I intend to say, if you give me a chance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? Now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At the next sitting of the House.

COST OF NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENT

Question No. 4,751 (Revised)—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Was a full page, or nearly full page, advertisement placed in mid-March in a number of Canadian newspapers by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources entitled "Petro-Canada Is Growing To Serve You Better" and with a centrepiece "BP Now, Petro-Canada" and, if so (a) what was the total cost (b) in which newspapers was it placed and how often in each (c) by newspaper, what amount did each placement cost?

2. (a) Who designed the advertisement (b) what was the design cost (c) what was the advertising agency's fee?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows:

1. No. However, in March of 1983, Petro-Canada Products Ltd. commissioned a series of advertisements designed to inform the public of the BP re-identification program.

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY BOARD

Question No. 4,877—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Great Lakes Water Quality Board under the International Joint Commission and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the government?

2. (a) What are the terms of reference of the Board (b) what matters did it consider in the fiscal year 1982-83 (c) how often did it meet and how often is it required to meet (d) what reports and/or recommendations did the Board publish in the fiscal year 1982-83?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. The Great Lakes Water Quality Board is composed of an equal number of Canadian and American members appointed for a term of three years. At present there is one vacancy on the Canadian side and three appointments pending on the U.S. side. (a)(b)(i)(ii) See below.

(c) Salaries of Board members are not paid by the Board but are the responsibility of their respective employers.

Travel expenses of those members of the Board who are employees of federal, provincial or state Governments are paid by their respective employers. Travel expenses for other members of the Board are paid by the Board. No travel expenses were paid by the Board for members.

(d) No other direct funding is provided; however, certain secretariat costs, such as office supplies, stationery, etc., are covered by the regional office of the International Joint Commission.

2. (a) Pursuant to the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement:

(1) The Governments of Canada and the United States on November 22, 1978, entered into an Agreement on Great Lakes Water Quality, herein referred to as the Agreement, a copy ot which is shown below. Said Agreement supersedes the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of April 15, 1972.

(2) By the terms of the Agreement, the Governments of Canada and the United States have assigned special responsibilities and functions to the International Joint Commission.

(3) To assist the Commission in the exercise of the functions, powers and responsibilities assigned to it under the Agreement, the Great Lakes Water Quality Board is designated the principal advisor to the Commission with regard to all such functions, powers and responsibilities (other than those functions and responsibilities related to research as set forth in the terms of reference for the Science Advisory Board). In addition, the Board shall carry out such other functions related to water quality within the Great Lakes System.

(b) Matters considered by the Great Lakes Water Quality Board: Drinking water and public health, recreational water quality, drinking water mutagenicity, immunotoxicity, surveillance and monitoring programs, environmental quality of the Great Lakes, phosphorus inputs and controls, pollution from dredging activities, status of the petroleum refinery industry in the Great Lakes basin, U.S. and Canadian abatement programs, effluent limitations, discharge trends, compliance, solid waste disposal, areas of concern in the Great Lakes basin*, toxic and non-conventional pollutants, oil spill prevention, self-monitoring inspection programs.

*Twenty-one areas were so identified: the St. Mary's River (Ontario-Michigan); the Fox River, Southern Green Bay and the Milwaukee Estuary (Wisconsin); Waukegan Harbour (Illinois); The Grant Calumet River and the Indiana Harbour Canal (Indiana); the Saginaw River system, Saginaw Bay (Michigan); the St. Clair River and Detroit River (Ontario-Michigan); Rouge River (Michigan); Raisin River (Michigan); Maumee River (Ohio); Black River (Ohio); Cuyahoga River (Ohio); Ashtabula River (Ohio); Buffalo River; Niagara River, Hamilton Harbour and the St. Lawrence River.

(c) There are no set number of times that the Board must meet in a given year; however, the Board has met five times in fiscal year 1982-83.

(d) In fiscal year 1982-83 the Board published three reports: 1. The Annual Report 2. A report on pollution abatement programs undertaken by the petroleum refinery industry in the Great Lakes region 3. An assessment on human effects on Great Lakes Water Quality.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, September 22, consideration of Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 6 and 8 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to have the opportunity today to contribute to the debate on the amendments which have been proposed by my colleague for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). All of us in this House recognize the necessity of trade for Canada and the important role that the Export Development Corporation plays. We in this Party have no desire to undermine the EDC or prevent it from making its contribution to Canada's economic wellbeing.

It is difficult to see how several of the provisions in the Bill will substantially improve the ability of EDC to function. Instead, in our opinion the measures in this Bill, which we hope to amend, serve only to thwart Parliament's role.

As Members will recall, the Auditor General stated in his 1982 report that "Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of Government activities". He also said that it is Parliament's "fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds". Most of us in this House take that responsibility very seriously, and this Government is making it increasingly difficult and frustrating for those of us who want to fulfil our responsibilities to the people who sent us here.

Bill C-110 is just another in a series of attempts by this Government to pursue its interventionist policies and philosophies at the expense of Canadians. Members will recall that the Canada Development Investment Corporation, the most dangerous Crown corporation yet, was formed without a single word of debate in the House of Commons. The Government now wants to have access to additional billions of dollars to do with as it sees fit, without having to inform Parliament of its intentions or to ask for our approval.

The measures in this Bill will further subvert Parliament's accountability. The Government is continuing to follow the examples it set with CDIC, Canadair, de Havilland and Consolidated Computer. By introducing measures such as this, the Government is attempting further to thwart the ability of Members of Parliament to control the purse strings. We are being asked to give the Members of the Cabinet and a board of directors, which could conceivably consist of 15 public servants, virtually a free hand to deal with billions of dollars. We have plenty of examples from the past and from other Crown corporations which would make the most charitable person wary of the monetary management abilities of this bunch.

Ironically, the Liberal Government no longer considers Parliament to be the central institution in the parliamentary system of democracy. Rather, it sees it as something to be avoided, a block in the path of its way to having its interventionist policies permeate everything. It looks upon Parliament not as the central institution of our democracy, but as an obstacle, a pain-in-the-neck, something which must be tolerated and, if at all possible, avoided.

A perfect example is the lack of willingness on the part of the Minister to entrench in legislation the need for a board of directors on the EDC to come from the private sector. The problems caused by having Government representatives on the board of directors have been well documented.

In his testimony before the Public Accounts Committee in the Canadair fiasco, former Liberal Cabinet Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer, the Vice-Chairman of Canadair, outlined some of these problems. For example, he pointed out that the public servant is subordinate to the Minister and must deal directly with him. His public servant status does not allow him the leverage he may need in dealing with the Minister in matters concerning the Crown corporation. In the case of EDC, this involves at least six public servants, and usually more. If the board members were more independent of the Cabinet, perhaps their opinion as to high-risk or abnormal transactions would be better respected by the Governor in Council.

It is difficult to understand why the Government is so anxious to increase the amount of outstanding funds available for authorization by the Governor in Council from $3.5 billion to $10 billion for insurance deals. It has as yet used less than half of the current $3.5 billion authorization. Does the Government have any plans in the near future for such a large sum of money? If so, I as one Member of Parliament would certainly be interested in hearing about those plans, as I am sure would everyone else on this side of the House.

Likewise, a jump of $7.5 billion in the funds available to Cabinet for authorizing loans and loan guarantees is quite exorbitant. It is very difficult to imagine the existence of that great an increase in demand for guarantees.

However, Mr. Speaker, all Members of this House are reasonable people. If there is such a demand for loans and guarantees and if providing for them would benefit Canadian exports and our economic position, I am certain we would willingly give our approval. Unfortunately, Bill C-110 would not allow any opportunity for discussion or debate of such decisions in Parliament. Parliament would have no say in the distribution of a possible $20 billion.

The lack of accountability is totally unacceptable, not only to those of us in the Official Opposition but to many others, including the current and past Auditors General, members of the Public Accounts Committee, the Lambert Commission, the Economic Council of Canada and more. It is time for our friends opposite to wake up and recognize that the policies they are following are not welcomed by Canadians.

In 1979 when this Party was in Government, we introduced a solid piece of legislation designed to return control and accountability of Crown corporations to Parliament. That legislation was commended by many, including the Auditor General. Indeed, in the latest Auditor General's report which was issued in December of last year, the Auditor General compared Bill C-27 with the Government's proposals and he found the Government's proposals grossly deficient in comparison.

The Government has chosen to ignore the initiative that was taken by the Conservative Government when it tried to bring some element of control and accountability to Crown corporations. Instead, over the course of the past three years we have seen a steady attempt by the Liberal Government to downgrade the role of Parliament, to avoid parliamentary scrutiny, and to avoid parliamentary control over the purse strings which belong to the people of Canada.

If the Government will come before us in the House to ask for confidence and to ask for access to more taxpayers' dollars, surely it has the responsibility to us and to the people of Canada to demonstrate that it merits that confidence. It must demonstrate that in its behaviour to date it has deserved to gain access to that sort of money. To date, nothing could be further from the truth. The Government's track record in the economy and its performance with the myriad of Crown corporations it has created over the years has been dismal. The prospects for serious scandals in the future and for great losses of public funds continue to grow.

Let me ask this of you, Mr. Speaker, since I know this is a matter that is of particular concern to you as you are a vigilant observer of the way the Government operates and you are deeply concerned by the need to protect the public purse strings. If you had $100 to invest, Mr. Speaker, which one of these Ministers would you trust to invest that $100 on your behalf? Would it be the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan)? I think not. You are too prudent to accept a proposal like that, Mr. Speaker. Would it be the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais)? Certainly not. Is there anyone who sits on these Treasury benches whom you feel qualified to invest your $100, Mr. Speaker, anyone who would not simply lose your money? I see, Mr. Speaker, from your expression that you would have nothing to do with them, and certainly Hon. Members on this side of the House would agree.

If the Government wants more authority and wants to intervene in the economy further, if it wants to have greater access not only to your money, Mr. Speaker, but to the money of all Canadians, then the time has come for it to demonstrate that it merits that confidence on our part. Its actions and the performance of its Ministers to date indicates that there is no cause for such confidence. I think Canadians have every right to expect that Hon. Members on this side of the House and indeed Hon. Members on all sides would support the motions which were moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), so that we may do everything we can to rein the Government in and to restore to the purse some element of parliamentary control.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) leaned upon our enjoyable personal relationship when he referred to the possibility of my making investments through a Cabinet Minister. In the same generosity of friendship, I might reply to the Hon. Member that I do lean upon one of the Cabinet Ministers for my investments and that is the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières). Regrettably, I am not happy about that investment at all!

I should indicate that it would be better if the Hon. Member would not imply motives, agreement or disagreement, on the person of the Chair, and he knows this.

Export Development Act

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I certainly intend to listen to your advice by ignoring the Chair entirely during my remarks.

I hope that the hon. gentlemen opposite are in a mood to listen today so that I do not have to get excited and lose my train of thought while I address them.

We are, of course, discussing this Bill within the context of today's economic conditions. The economic conditions of the country today have occurred as a result of the last 20 years of rule by the hon. gentlemen opposite. They might be interested in hearing about some of the statistics that apply to what has been happening in the field of exports during that period of time. They might be interested in knowing that between 1969 and 1979 we suffered a 33 per cent decline in Canada's over-all share of world exports. That 33 per cent decline indicates that we declined in importance in the field of export trade with respect to the rest of the world. Our performance was the worst among industrialized countries during that period of time.

In 1968 our share of world trade was 5.2 per cent. In 1981 it was 3.6 per cent, even though during that period of time the present Minister responsible for external affairs who was then the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce went to the private sector in an attempt to boost our exports. Those were the results of the Minister's efforts. Thank God he is not in that area any longer, or perhaps he is back in that area at the moment.

Mr. Pepin: Statistics are wanton forms of lies.

Mr. Crosbie: As the Hon. Minister points out, statistics are closely associated with the field of prevarication. I take that as read because we hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) using statistics every day to prove the opposite of what the facts are. As an example of that, Mr. Speaker, this week we saw that the Minister of Finance had the gall and the audacity to make a speech on September 15 in which he said that Canada was leading the world in the rate and pace of its recovery. Every other independent economic forecast during that week was to the opposite effect. Canada is not leading the world in anything but loss of potential, loss of opportunity and loss of the ability to accept the challenges that are offered. Those are the areas in which we are leading the world, not the area of recovery.

As I pointed out to the Hon. Minister in Question Period, if he were to be correct in his statement, my response would be: "Stop the world, I want to get off." If Canada is leading the industrialized world in its recovery, stop the world and let us get off. It is not worth being here any longer.

That is the context in which we can look at statistics. We saw a report by the OECD today. The Government did not want to deal with it. That report points out that the unemployment prospects in Canada are much worse than the Government had forecast in its budget of last April. It forecast a rate of over 12 per cent this year.

During today's Question Period, the question of fisheries came up. The fishery is one of the main exporting industries of the country. A tremendous amount of fish is exported from Newfoundland, for example, to the United States, yet the Government, in the last two or three months, has embarked upon a plan with the Bank of Nova Scotia designed to put the offshore fishing industry of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia into receivership. It has interfered with the exports of fishery products from Newfoundland and Labrador to the United States of America. Today the Government is backing the Bank of Nova Scotia in court in an attempt to have its receivership over the Fishery Products Limited confirmed. During the last several weeks, while this attempt to put that firm into receivership was under way, the export from Fishery Products Limited to the United States has been interfered with to the tune of in excess of $1 million per week. The Government does not appear to be too concerned about the export of fish products or the economy generally.

The motions that are before the House have more to do with control and accountability. In that context I want to bring to the House's attention a point that was made by Don McGillivray in one of his columns in Southam News this week about the share of the Gross National Product now being spent by the federal Government. He said that Governments together, federal, provincial and municipal Governments, are now spending—at least, the statistics show this—for the three months that ended in June, 47.4 per cent of the Gross National Product. Governments between them are taking almost half the GNP in this country.

Mr. Pepin: An every day you are asking for more.

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister says that every day we are asking for more. What we are asking for is less, spent in a more efficient manner.

On January 12, 1980, during the election campaign when he set out his economic platform, the Prime Minister said that he would not increase federal spending as a proportion of the GNP and that he was going to contain Government spending within the growth of the GNP. That promise was made when the federal Government was taking about 15.8 per cent of the GNP under the eight-month Clark administration. Today we discover that the federal Government is taking over 20 per cent of the GNP in taxes and through revenue-gathering measures. The Government is spending this money.

Even during World War II the Government only achieved the level of taking 22 per cent of the GNP, at a time when all levels of Government took only 30 per cent of the GNP. During World War II when taxation in this country was savage, all Governments between them took 30 per cent of the Gross National Product of Canada from the citizens and spent it themselves. Today, when there is no war, over 47 per cent of the GNP is being taken by these same Governments.

I make that point because that is the fundamental error in the Bill. The Government is giving too much authority to the bureaucrats; the Government is giving too much authority to the Crown corporations; the Government is giving too much authority to civil servants generally. There is no accountability by the Export Development Corporation to Parliament nor to the people of Canada. It comes before a parliamentary committee perhaps once a year to be asked questions. Parliamentary committees are parliamentary units in our system of Government; they have no independent powers. Members have ten minutes to ask questions and to be buffaloed around by the persons to whom the questions are addressed, so there is no accountability. The EDC is one of those Crown corporations that is not accountable to the House. If the legislation now before the House is passed, it will be even less accountable for more money than it was before the legislation was passed. That is why we are opposing the Bill.

I would think that a Government should be glad to give Members of the House more power. This is the attitude I would have if I were a Minister, and will have if I am a Minister when the change of Government comes about consequent upon the calling of the next election. We know the next election will not likely be called until March, 1985. We know the nervousness in the Government ranks. We saw them act like a group of burbling school girls in Question Period today. They are so nervous when a question is asked that they have to laugh nervously and applaud any kind of bunkum they hear from the Ministers who are supposed to answer. There has to be an election in 16 months and then there will be a change of Government.

Any wise Government will enlist the help of the House of Commons in the job of controlling the bureaucracy. Ministers' offices do not control the bureauracy. The minister of state for foreign affairs, I think he is called now—

Mr. Pepin: External Relations.

Mr. Crosbie: The Deputy Prime Minister is the Minister in charge of external relations. The Minister here is in charge of foreign affairs. I do not know what the difference is—how foreign affairs differ from external relations. In any event, when he was Minister of Transport he had no control over the bureaucracy. He did not know what was happening in his department.

The Minister who is now Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) and who was in charge of the Post Office was so ignorant this summer that he did not invite me to his ceremonies in honour of producing the Sir Humphrey Gilbert stamp in Newfoundland which I had spent a year and a half writing and asking him to approve. When he had the ceremonies in St. John's at the Arts and Culture Centre this summer, he was too ignorant to invite either of the sitting Members of Parliament. He invited the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons), since elevated to the heights of Cabinet. Ten days later he descended from the heights to the depths. He knows now about the sharp teeth of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) and what the bureaucracy is like. That is by the by, Mr. Speaker. The Minister showed a pattern of ignorance. I was right in St. John's when the ceremonies took place, with free drinks and liquor splashed out. He produced the Sir Humphrey Gilbert stamp that I had harassed him for 18 months but he never even asked me to the ceremony. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I would not have gone even if he had asked me. I do not associate with bad company in my own district.

I will come back to the point I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker. Ministers do not control the civil service. They do not really know what is happening in these boards and commissions and Crown corporations. Why would they not welcome Members of the House having some real powers to make independent inquiries about what is happening as long as it was understood that they were not going to topple if they were not personally involved in situations that were uncovered? One would think that Ministers would welcome the assistance of Members of the House and its committees in an attempt to make the bureaucracy more responsive and more responsible. They do not control them, but they do not want anyone else to control them either. That is illustrated in the Bill, Mr. Speaker.

I notice from my extensive file that the Liberal Member for Manicouagan, Mr. Maltais—I am not supposed to use his name in the House but I want to give him adequate publicity—made a pitch to the Catholic bishops. He said he wants them to take leadership in economic affairs. He knows there is no leadership in this Government so he now wants the Roman Catholic bishops to take leadership and to organize a closed-door conference on the economy and to act as moderators. He praises them for playing the role of a catalyst because they attacked the Government last year. Last year they said that Liberal economic policies were immoral, but now the Liberal Member for Manicouagan believes that they should play the role of catalyst. He forgets that the Prime Minister said last year that the bishops were poor economists. In February last year the Hon. Member for Manicouagan wrote to the bishops and told them that they should not have interfered in these matters of public concern.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: They should not engage in politics.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I wonder if the Hon. Member might want to seek the consent of the House to continue his remarks, because his time has expired?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: No.

Mr. Crosbie: I thank Hon. Members for giving their unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker. The Member said that the bishops should not interfere in politics, which meant that they should not interfere in Liberal politics.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The Chair can only assume that the words used by the Hon. Member for St. John's West were a request for unanimous consent. I am advised that there is not unanimous consent.

Export Development Act

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in entering the debate on Motions Nos. 6 and 8 to amend Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, I do so not out of any concern that the trading life of our nation is not important, but rather out of a deep concern that is represented across Canada and across southwestern Ontario regarding the finances of the nation and the control of our resources. The Kitchener-Waterloo area depends upon trade. It also has a tradition of frugality and responsibility in the investment of the resources which are available to the people of that area.

• (1250)

I enter this debate, Mr. Speaker, to underline the concern of the Official Opposition, and a concern which is reflected in my area, that trading opportunities for Canadian businesses be enhanced. The issue here, of course, as my colleagues have indicated—and we have now had well over 100 representations on this theme—is parliamentary accountability. The Bill which is before us would permit $62 billion in non-accountable funds for the Export Development Corporation. The EDC, of course, is not required to table an operating budget. It is not required to table a capital budget or information on the size of its payroll, which is something which normal investors would expect.

We are aware, of course, Mr. Speaker, that the EDC has to date borrowing authority of $10 billion. However, as of December 31, 1982 it has used approximately $4.5 billion. The argument is not that we are holding up any export financing whatever in our opposition to this Bill. Rather, we wish to underline the importance of the role that the Canadian taxpayer plays in the procedures followed by the Government of Canada.

There are a large number of reasons, of course, for opposing this action which have been mentioned by my colleagues. It is inefficient, for one, with ten employees per loan and one and one half employees per insurance account.

A second factor is that the board of directors is composed of too many public servants. The exporting in this country is done mainly by private sector companies. The EDC should, therefore, have a strong private sector representation in order to balance the input from the bureaucracy.

A third factor, which is in front of all who are concerned about this issue, is the difficulty which was outlined in a recent article in The Globe and Mail, the difficulty in dealing with the agency. Export deals, the article reports, have been lost because of the procrastination of the EDC and its excessive requirements for financial guarantees.

If one needed a fourth reason it would be that when the EDC does arrange loans, they are more often than not to the same companies. Nearly half the 1982 business went to Bombardier and Spar Aerospace. The question must be raised by concerned Canadians, are these subsidies becoming a form of permanent assistance to these companies?

Motions Nos. 6 and 8 which were proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will limit the amount of money which the Cabinet can commit to bad deals.

With respect to Motion No. 6, under the current EDC Act sometimes the board of directors is not prepared to approve a proposed insurance deal because it would, "if entered into or issued, impose upon the corporation a liability for a term, or in an amount in excess of that which the corporation would normally undertake in relation to any one contract, person, commodity, service or country, or in relation to any particular contract, person or commodity". In other words, it is a bad deal. Under these circumstances, Cabinet can nonetheless approve the transaction. The money comes from the Consolidated Revenue Fund without need for parliamentary consent.

As it stands, Cabinet can commit up to $3.5 billion. This Bill would increase that amount to $10 billion. To date, only $460 million has been used, even under the current Act. The Cabinet, therefore, still has some $3 billion left. Now the Government wants $6.5 billion more.

With respect to Motion No. 8, the same provisions are in place for loans and loan guarantees as are in place for insurance deals. Cabinet can take from the Consolidated Revenue Fund up to $2.5 billion. It wants to increase this now to $10 billion. Again, the corporation has used only about $750 million of its $2.5 billion, and thus has about $1.75 billion left. This is again to be used for suspicious deals which the EDC would not touch with a ten-foot pole.

The two amendments to the Act which we are debating, and which we are seeking to annul, would bring the total amount of money available for these deals to $20 billion from its current already too high level of $6 billion.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, there is concern about the instruments of investment, and of encouragement of the free enterprise system across our country. I hear it from farmers. I hear it from small business people. I hear it from taxpayers. The Auditor General's Annual Report seven years ago underlined that in the majority of Crown corporations management control has been weak and ineffective. Four years ago the Lambert Commission underlined this. Last year the Auditor General underlined this. Therefore, the public as a whole is not unaware of this situation.

The Kitchener Chamber of Commerce last year undertook a review of the Auditor General's Report and in its review it writes:

> —we have continued concern, as does the Auditor General, with the significant waste and inefficiency in the federal government bureaucracy. In particular, we are much concerned with the very apparent use of Crown corporations for political purposes to avoid public scrutiny of government policy and ineptitude.

Motions Nos. 6 and 8 seek to redress this wrong. If the deals which the EDC refuses and Cabinet approves are not inept, or made for political purposes, why did the EDC turn them down? The Kitchener Chamber of Commerce believes it is necessary for Crown corporations to be constantly monitored and scrutinized. Given the horror stories about the abuses and excesses of these corporations, this is not too much to ask. The suggestion by the President of the CNR this past week that there ought not to be an audit of that company only fuels this concern. This Bill, if unamended, will do nothing to allay these fears; hence the motions.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Kitchener Chamber of Commerce suggests that the purpose and relevance of Crown corporations should be clearly explained to the people of Canada and constantly monitored so that they continue to exist only if their purpose can be properly justified to the taxpayers. I suggest this Bill manifestly does not do this. All in all, the government of Canada can decide to take on unsavoury export transactions by Order in Council, appropriate money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to do so, and shove the matter through as a statutory advance without any reference to Parliament or its committees whatsoever—no debate, no vote, no questions. This is not good enough for this Party. It is not good enough for the people of Canada who, after all, have their earnings invested through tax dollars in this way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the wish of the House that I call it one o'clock? Perhaps the Hon. Member who has risen in his place would like me to recognize him so he would be automatically recognized at two o'clock.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair then recognizes the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris and he will begin debate at two o'clock when the House reconvenes after lunch.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 12.59 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2.10 p.m.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should begin by welcoming Members across the way back from their extended lunch hour. It is very important that all Members of the House understand the importance of trade to Canada both today and throughout recent Canadian history. We on this side of the House want it to be clearly understood that we recognize the importance of trade since Canada is and has been an exporting nation. It is imperative that we continue in that tradition.

As we know, this country began essentially as a primary producing colony. It was a colony of France, at which time its livelihood was gained by the export of furs to France. It later became a colony of Great Britain and the nature of its economy changed somewhat. It depended upon the export of furs, then timber, potash and subsequently wheat and other agricultural products.

Today, of course, the economy of Canada is much more diversified than it was in the past but it remains, nevertheless, very dependent upon the export trade and upon those nations and neighbours with whom we have developed extensive commercial relationships. We on this side of the House recognize the importance of agencies such as the Export Development Corporation. But we are very disturbed by the changes in legislation which are currently before the House in Bill C-110 because we fear that these changes will make the Export Development Corporation much less accountable to the House than has been the case in the past and much less accountable to the House than either we on this side or the people of Canada would wish.

The point we wish to reiterate is that the Export Development Corporation in a sense is performing a very useful function in strengthening the trading sector and particularly permitting the export of processed goods to countries which have not traditionally been our customers. However, it is extremely important that this corporation operate in a way which is fully accountable to the principles of Government as they have traditionally been developed in Canada. It is extremely important that that corporation remains directly accountable to the Parliament of the land.

It has come to our attention, and hence we hope to the attention of Canadians, that there is provision within the Bill currently before the House which, unless it is amended as we propose it, should be amended, will permit the Export Development Corporation to operate in a way which is essentially non-accountable to Parliament. Furthermore, the Cabinet, by order of executive council, will be able to operate in a way which is even independent of the will of the Export Development Corporation and thus be non-accountable to Parliament.

The amount of money which the Export Development Corporation and Cabinet can spend without being directly accountable to us is mind boggling. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the total is some $62 billion. In fact, the sum of $62 billion is so horrendous that it almost requires repetition in order for the point to be effectively made. The $62 billion which the Export Development Corporation and Cabinet could expend over a period of time without answering to Parliament is such a huge sum that one must compare it to other sums in order to make it meaningful. Of course, the amount of $62 billion even makes the deficit which the Government across the way has accumulated this past year look small. The Export Development Corporation will have the authority under this Act to insure up to ten times the amount of its authorized capital.

This Bill proposes to increase that authorized capital from $1 billion to $2 billion. It will then be able to insure a total of $20 billion. It will then be able to insure a total of $20 billion, again without direct authorization by or accountability in this Parliament. In addition, the Export Development Corporation will have the authority to lend up to ten times the amount of its authorized capital. That is another $20 billion. The Cabinet will have authority by Order in Council to lend up to $2.5 billion without the concurrence of the EDC.

By the way, under this proposal the EDC is essentially managed by those who work on behalf of the Government. This Bill would increase that $2.5 billion to $10 billion. That is another $10 billion which could be spent without direct accountability. The list goes on. Another $10 billion can be spent by Order in Council, without direct accountability, in the field of insurance.

Finally, the Bill proposes to increase equity in the corporation from $1 billion to $2 billion. That is a total of $62 billion, all of which is obtained without honouring the principle of direct accountability.

There is ample evidence throughout Canada that there is a tremendous, growing apprehension on the part of Canadians about the decline in responsible Government as they understand it. As I walked about the lawns at noon hour I recognized that there are statues which heed the contribution in the past of those who worked and fought for responsible government. The essence of that responsible government is the relationship between the Cabinet and the Parliament of this land. The essence of responsible government is that the Cabinet shall be held accountable to Parliament for its actions and hence held directly accountable to the will of the people of this land.

Unfortunately, the powers which are contained within this legislation that would permit this Government to expend the amount of money we have been talking about by Order in Council means that we will have a diminishing of that responsible Government. In fact, it seems to me that we are moving in the direction of the American model where there is, in fact, a separation between the legislative arm of government and the executive arm of government. We in Canada who operate under the British parliamentary tradition have never accepted that model of government and we feel that it is extremely reprehensible that steps are being taken in that direction.

In order to support my contention that Canadians are distressed by what is happening, I would like to quote briefly from a working paper prepared by a committee of the Canada West Foundation. This is a very distinguished body whose activities are well known in western Canada. In this paper we find:

● (1420)

> The Canadian parliament at the moment has a number of obvious and important defects which can be summarized as follows: a growing inability to monitor the financial operations of government; a growing inability to control the regulatory activities of government; virtually no control over the policy initiatives of a majority government and a perceived distance from the real needs of the electorate.

Those who wrote this brief were very well informed of the intentions of those across the way, and their comments are exceedingly well taken. This brief goes on:

> The parliamentary system we inherited at confederation has evolved in a manner that has strengthened the control of the executive branch.

That is the Cabinet. The paragraph continues:

> There is no other truly democratic state in the world where the legislative branch is so supine before the executive. A Canadian Prime Minister or Premier in his own jurisdiction is the absolute ruler. The result is a four year elected dictatorship, should the incumbent choose it to be so, and this is one of the reasons for interest in parliamentary reform.

The words I have quoted are the words of those who wrote this working paper on behalf of the Canada West Foundation. It seems to me that the point which they made is extremely germane at this time. Legislation which is before the House will enhance the power of the executive arm of government. It will diminish the authority of those of us who are part of the legislative arm of government. It will set back the concept of responsible government as we know it, and it will set back the system of responsible government as known by those who worked so hard for it in the nineteenth century.

It is imperative, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments currently before this House proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party be sustained.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-110 and in particular on Motions Nos. 6 and 8 moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), and seconded by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp).

I rise with a great feeling of responsibility toward the proposals put forward by my colleagues to counter the Government's proposals to increase to $10 billion the limits on contingent liabilities and on loan guarantees for the EDC. I say a great feeling of responsibility because the issue here is accountability, and the responsibility of this Chamber. The Government is trying to make the issue in this Bill and in the various amendments into an issue of trade. The issue is accountability and the responsibility of this Chamber.

For more than ten years I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. For the last three and a half years until this week I was chairman of that body. I think it is fair to remind the House that that Committee, like all others, has a majority of members of the Government in its membership.

I have served on that Committee under five different chairmen, including Mr. Hales, a former Member of this House; the present Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse); the present Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence); the present Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington); and the present Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston). In all of those years the Public Accounts Committee was striving, along with many other people, whom I will mention in a minute, for accountability to Parliament and accountability to the taxpayers for all branches of government. Today we are dealing particularly with Crown corporations, in this case, the Export Development Corporation. I say we, along with many other agencies here, were working for the same ends. There were many studies initiated by the Government. The Auditor General himself has reported many, many times on the failure of the system to provide proper accountability to the legislators, to this House and to the taxpayers.

I think it is fair to note that many of the reports of the Public Accounts Committee have been concurred in by this House, but not necessarily acted upon by the Government. Many other reports of the Public Accounts Committee sit on the Order Paper right now awaiting only a motion for concurrence. I would not expect the Government to concur in them without some kind of a fight, but I think the Government ought to remind itself that those reports came from a committee which was made up of a majority of Government members.

One might ask why accountability is so important to the House and to the taxpayer. It is simply because of the enormous amounts of money involved.

The total debt of the Government of Canada at the end of the 1982 fiscal year was $134 billion. That is gross debt. The net debt at the end of that fiscal period was $95 billion and projections for the next three or four fiscal years brings that net debt up to $232 billion. That is an increase in the total net debt of the Government over the next four years of about 2.5 times.

Some people say that having a lot of debt is not so bad. After all we have revenues and we can pay off that debt. But debt is not free of charge. It does not come without the attendant interest responsibility. Years ago it might have been fairly easy to pay the rates of interest which, say, 50 years ago were 3 per cent and 25 years ago about 6 per cent or 7 per cent. But in the past few years, Mr. Speaker, we have seen rates of interest exceeding 20 per cent, and the average for the past seven years or so was about 15 per cent. I do not have an actual figure, but it was in the range of 15 per cent.

The costs of that interest are reflected in the estimates of the Government. We can see in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983 that the federal Government's interest costs were over $16 billion. That amount is just about equal to the total budget of the Government of Canada about 12 years ago in the 1972 fiscal year. Debt is not without its costs. We must emphasize at every possible opportunity what a huge amount of non-productive expenditures is being taken out of our budget every year by the cost of carrying our debt.

The effect of the Crown corporations on the total financial picture of the Government is another very important factor that is frequently overlooked. In the first place we have over 300 Crown corporations; nobody is exactly sure how many. At the last count Crown corporations employed some 263,000 people, which is about half the total number of people who work for the Government of Canada.

Crown corporations have not in general had unfaded reputations. A few come to mind. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited was allowed to get out of control. Now as a matter of government policy, it is borrowing $100 million every year in order to pay for the cost of production of heavy water that no one needs. It is being stored in a field in barrels in Atlantic Canada. Nobody knows why except that it is Government policy. It is an idiotic Government policy when we have enough heavy water on hand to last five years at the projected rate of sales of reactors.

After nearly two years the Government answered a question which I had on the Order Paper concerning the expenditures of Petro-Canada during the period from 1970 to 1980. I asked what shares or other ownership interest Petro-Canada had acquired in any other corporation. I received an answer to my question this week indicating that Petro-Canada acquired a 100 per cent equity in Atlantic Richfield Canada Ltd. at a cost of $342 million. It did not have this money so it had to borrow it. Interestingly enough, the book value of those $342 million worth of shares was less then half, or $126 million.

Then it acquired 100 per cent of the equity of Pacific Petroleums Ltd. at the cost of $1.496 billion, which was nearly three times the book value. Petro-Canada did not have that amount of money to spend so it borrowed almost $1.5 billion for that acquisition. Also it acquired 45 per cent of the common shares of Panarctic Oils for $80 million, and 15 per cent of Syncrude Canada Ltd. for $315 million during the same period of time.

My question was dated in 1981, and I did not request a longer period of time. If I had done so, I would have found out in answer to the question about other acquisitions, one of which was Merit Oil Ltd. of Vancouver. Petro-Canada acquired it in the name of Canadianization, which is quite a laugh because that corporation was already totally Canadian owned.

Other Crown corporations which have been and will be more and more in the news are Canadair and de Havilland. The Government should come clean with its policy intentions with respect to them. The previous Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was responsible for issuing loan guarantees for Canadair. He should admit that it was Government policy to follow a certain course of events, rather than let the new Minister from the other place come along and blame management for spending a lot of money leading up to the unprecedented write-off of $1.4 billion. It was clearly Government policy that that course was followed.

I see Mr. Speaker starting to rise, so I will finish with one sentence. The Government claims that EDC is impoverished at the same time as it is clear from the facts before us that there are hundreds of millions of dollars still unexpended in the money already available to EDC. These amendments should be supported by all Hon. Members.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in joining the debate on the two amendments now before us, I feel it will be helpful if I emphasize that there are really two types of loan activities in which the Export Development Corporation can engage. There is what one might regard as the normal corporate lending activity, and then there is Order in Council or Government type lending activity. The amendments of my colleague touch upon the second type of lending activity. In short, it is the concept that where EDC feels, for reasons presumably known to it, that it does not wish to lend to whatever level is being requested, the Government can step in and give additional money through the clauses we are now considering and attempting to amend.

We must bear in mind that we are not talking about $100 million or $1 billion. We are talking about $10 billion of authorization. If we in our wisdom in this Parliament decided to pass the clauses the Government is asking us to okay, it would mean that these Order in Council or Government type loans of the EDC could go up to a ceiling of approximately $60 billion between insurance and lending activity without any further parliamentary authority. It is extremely important that Hon. Members of the House bear this in mind.

Most of us have probably been pressured by groups which are benefiting from this type of financing. It is lobbying; that is what it is. We are told that we must get on with passing this Bill because the EDC cow may run out of milk, that they are enjoying the milk and the cream very much and would like it to continue. My colleagues have made it abundantly clear that we do not want to see Canada just participating as we have been doing in world trade, just accepting a 3.6 per cent share of world trade, but getting back to the old 5 per cent fair share of world trade. There is no disagreement on that question. In seeking to secure more trade, we must analyse whether we are being prudent in the amount of authority and authorization we are giving to the EDC and, in the specific clauses we are now considering, to the Government.

Let me put it into perspective, if I may. When it comes to the question of whether we are crowding or somehow being unfair to EDC when it requests a $60 billion authorization, let us not forget that as of December 31, 1982 the total corporate and Government lending activities, the total assets of the EDC, were $6.5 billion. That is the total amount it expended as at the end of 1982. It is asking for authorization to make it ten-fold bigger compared with its total assets at the end of last year of roughly $6.5 billion.

What is even more revealing is who has been the benefactor. As we all know, the Export Development Corporation publishes a statistical review every year. In its 1982 review it listed its lending activities under the corporate side and under the Government side. If Hon. Members would take the opportunity to read who are the benefactors, perhaps for the first time, if they have been doubting Thomases, they would see why we are so concerned about what the Government is attempting to do. The fact is that the statistical review of EDC revealed that during 1982, between Government lending activity under the Act and corporate lending activity, Bombardier Inc. of Montreal secured authorizations which will involve future financing from EDC or the Government directly of $957 million. In truth, when we compare that with the total commitments of EDC during 1982, we find that Bombardier, one company alone, received almost 40 per cent of the benefit of its commitments for that year.

Let me put that into perspective. Who is Bombardier Inc.? I invite Hon. Members to take a look at the annual report of Bombardier Inc. There is a familiar name on the board of directors of that company which will perhaps bring it into focus.

Mr. Fisher: Try to talk about its business, its profits and the way it helped the country. It is easy to be sleazy.

Mr. Lang: Take the high road.

● (1440)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, is it not rather amusing; I have not even mentioned the name yet. The Grits are so sensitive that they fear that I might inadvertently mention the name of a Liberal. On this one point, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) has guessed right. He is beginning to learn what his colleagues are up to.

By sheer coincidence, we find on the board of Bombardier Inc. the Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer, P.C., Q.C. When I noticed that, it rang a bell. That chap used to sit across the aisle, shoulder to shoulder with many of these fellows who are attempting so poorly to govern the country at the present time. As we know, the same Jean-Pierre Goyer is Vice-Chairman of Canadair Inc. Isn't that rather unique? That company, on the Government's own admission, has blown $1.4 billion of taxpayers' funds. Here we have another company getting the benefit of $970 million worth of financing through the Export Development Corporation, and there is a common Liberal link, Jean-Pierre Goyer.

Mr. Fisher: There is also a billion dollar sale in New York.

Mr. Stevens: I hope the Hon. Member for Mississauga North comes across the country with me because he would be of real assistance. He has reminded me that included in the Bombardier financing through the Export Development Corporation was a sale to the almost defunct New York Transit Authority. If we read the same statistical review, we find that the United States Metropolitan Transportation Authority of New York got two cracks at the Canadian public purse. Directly from EDC it received $294,912,000. The Government stepped in with another $626,688,000. Isn't that nice! Talk about a milk cow! It was so blatant in the United States that the U.S. Commerce Department instituted an action in that country, pointing out that in its opinion the Canadian Government had provided a subsidy amounting to $167,225 for each subway car proposed to be sold to the Transit Authority of New York.

Can you believe that this Government, which denies financing to help commuters get to work in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver, is willing to subsidize authorities in New York to help workers there get to and from work through a company which happens to have a very friendly director on this board.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to intervene with respect to Motions Nos. 6 and 8 put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I had an opportunity to address the House in this matter when we were dealing with Motions Nos. 3 and 5. At that time I raised two important issues about this Bill generally which many Members have been able to deal with as they indicate clearly why we on this side have stood against the Bill.

First, we were able to point out in those motions with respect to the corporation that for years the Conservative Party has indicated to the Government over and over again the importance of international trade to the future of this country and the need to have the financial facilities necessary for that growth if we are to become world competitive and world class in our economic endeavours. It has taken a long time for the Government to understand that.

When the Government brought forward this Bill, it was gross with respect to the amounts of money involved in it, far beyond the needs of the corporation vis-à-vis our prospects for international trade. A number of people indicated with respect to this corporation that there were clear, honest and sincere complaints from prospective customers about the ability to be able to export, that the corporation has been unable to accomplish those things which many people want to have happen. We raised those issues in order that the Government, particularly the Ministers involved, would pay attention.

Not only was there the question of the corporation, but a second issue was raised at that time, that of Crown corporations. At that time I pointed out that since 1962, 21 years ago, we have gone from 28 Crown corporations to over 300. We now have assets of $74 billion and liabilities of $63 billion. What has happened in those 21 years has been an enormous growth in the size, power and lack of accountability of Crown corporations. That is what scares many people.

Crown corporations are not controllable. They are certainly not being controlled by this Government. There has been a long and honourable tradition of Crown corporations in this country, which has had to grow in a large geographical space with a small number of people. These people had to depend upon public enterprise. The emphasis from the first public enterprise corporations has always been on public scrutiny and public accountability. That is why I complained at that time and I have not heard anyone say nay to it. In the 15 years that this Government has been in power, the honourable Canadian tradition of public accountability of corporations has developed into a situation where billions and billions of dollars of taxpayers' money lie unaccounted for.

Those are the two issues raised in Motions Nos. 3 and 5 and which affect Motions Nos. 6 and 8. Motions Nos. 6 and 8 bring into focus the most important aspect of this Bill. It is true that the question of the usefulness of the corporation to its customers is important. It is true that the question of Crown corporations is an important issue. By far the most important is not those two issues, but the question of the relationship of those corporations to this Parliament. The crucial issue in this Bill is the responsibility and accountability to Parliament, to the people who elect us. It is not possible for the people who elect the Members who sit in this Chamber to hold them accountable for the functioning of those Crown corporations because this Government has taken away the ability of Parliament to hold those corporations accountable.

At the root of it all, the most important issue here, is parliamentary control and parliamentary responsibility. Anyone who understands the history of that issue knows that we in this country enjoy our freedoms and privileges. You, Mr. Speaker, enjoy your privileges on our behalf, and all Members of this House on behalf of their constituents, because of the link between Parliament's control of the public purse and the rights of a free people to be able to control their governments.

There has been warning after warning, year after year, which the Government has ignored. There were warnings from the Lambert Commission, the reports of the Auditors General, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, the Economic Council of Canada. Over the past 15 years that this Government has been in office, those agencies have warned us year after year that the Government's ability to control public expenditures was beyond control.

My point is that this is not merely an issue of public accounting and it is not merely a question of corporations, however important that may be, as my friend, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) has indicated. It becomes finally a question of how to limit the power of Government.

In 400 years of development, the only way we have been able to do that is to limit the power of Government to raise and spend money. Throughout the whole history of the development of our Parliament and indeed the history beyond these shores, all the historical struggles which established the rights of this Parliament and the rights of the people of the country were related to accountability to the public in the raising and spending of taxes. There can be no taxation without representation. That is pointed out by the rules of this House and was established by the historic fight between the Crown and the Parliament.

It is easy to let this control slip away. One thing that people take for granted, unless they lose it, is freedom, individual liberty. That is easily and best defined as freedom from the power of Government to control. Our ability to control the power of Government lies with our ability to control its expenditure of funds. That is why this issue is not only a question of financial corporations. Ultimately it is a question of the power of the House to control on behalf of the people of the country the power of the Government. That is why we have spoken against this Bill and will continue to speak against this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

It is absolutely essential that the Government, after 15 years, finally understand that we in the Conservative Party will not allow it to continue to drive the public's ability to control expenditures out of the Chamber. When that happens, we embark upon a downhill slide which will include the loss of our ability to control the other actions of the Government.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, once again I am pleased to speak to the very important principle that is embodied in Bill C-110. We in the House forget, and in fact the Government has forgotten, that governments do not have money. It is the taxpayers who have the money.

As the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) has said, the issue at stake in this Bill began with the fundamental birth of a Parliament which exists to control the public purse and to protect the taxpayer. That is because it is the taxpayer and not the Government who has the money. Parliament oversees the spending, the delivery and the effectiveness of that money for the social good of the country.

The federal Government, because of its deficit, takes over 70 per cent of the term savings generated in the country. That means that there is not much left for others to do the work of becoming efficient, creating productivity, creating jobs and searching for world markets. As you know, Sir, the amendments we are now dealing with are Motions Nos. 6 and 8. With these amendments we are trying to prevent the Government from increasing its spending authority and power from around $6 billion to over $20 billion.

The Export Development Corporation is a Crown corporation which has really become a dinosaur. I was very pleased to be present to hear my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), point out the nature of the favouritism and the narrow channel of delivery that is involved in the spending of these massive sums of money under the control of the Export Development Corporation. As was pointed out, almost one-half of Export Development Corporation business for 1982, $2.46 billion, went to Bombardier and Spar Aerospace. The other half went to de Havilland on 12 contracts, Massey-Ferguson on four contracts, Trico on three contracts and Northern Tel on three contracts. In 1982 EDC served only 62 exporters.

Let me now turn to the issue that really troubles me. The officers who sit at the desks of the Export Development Corporation are not interested in the rest of us. It seems that the creation, management and delivery of the Export Development Corporation is for the benefit of Crown corporations, corporations controlled by Crown corporations and the people within central Canada.

In my riding alone there are eight or nine shipyards. Those shipyards have put consortiums together that allow them to build some of the beautiful ships that are being built and have been built for the North Sea oil development, for the Arctic and for the fishing industry. The Caribbean and South America are markets for these ships. Two or three of these shipyards will get together in a consortium and put together a package for the designing and building of a small fleet of ships which will cost in the order of $1 million to $1.5 million each and offer them for sale to a South American or Caribbean country. It is almost impossible for that application to make its way past the initial desks of the Export Development Corporation.

In the past, Mr. Speaker, I can remember having to intervene on behalf of those consortiums in order to get a $3 million, $6 million or $7 million contract approved or insured through the Export Development Corporation so that those important payrolls in my riding can be met. I think we must wake up and realize that one of the problems with the mindset and attitude of the Export Development Corporation is that everything must be enlarged for an economy of scale, and that attitude trickles down from the Government.

That is the dilemma that is faced by the country. If we were to return to small, good quality working communities and pay attention to sectors of industry that could put together packages of good technology, we could earn our way back into the world markets. However, that leadership is not coming from the Government.

The Government is concentrating power, sucking from the people of Canada all of their disposable wealth, and it is delivering it in the form of a subgovernment created through these Crown corporations. There is no doubt that you have heard in this debate already, Mr. Speaker, about the growth of Crown corporations since 1962. In 1962, some 20 Crown corporations existed and were put in place to serve the public need with some kind of social sense. Today the growth and proliferation of Crown corporations creates jobs and advancement for people in the civil service. They now exist to further control the purse strings of Parliament and to further remove those purse strings from Parliament.

One of the most dangerous things that is happening today is that non-budgetary powers are being transferred to Crown corporations through the types of legal trickery that are involved in this Bill. If we began to take an inventory of the non-budgetary dollars or dollars that are non-discretionary which have been transferred to equity positions in Crown corporations since 1968, we would be truly startled. Maybe I should try to formulate a question for the Order Paper that would ask how much money, detailed by year, in non-budgetary terms has been transferred from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the world of subgovernment, which includes the Export Development Corporation.

It has been said many times, and I am going to touch upon it again—and I know that you, Mr. Speaker, have been involved in this—that all we are asking for in this House is for the Government to accept report No. 7 along with the other reports from the Special Standing Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures. That report asks for four basic committees to deal with accountability. One of those would cover Crown corporations and quasi government bodies. We are entitled to an inventory and we are entitled to research expertise so that we can represent the people of this country properly. We must be able to formulate the right questions and demand answers in order to expose and disclose what is going on as a result of the Crown corporation malaise. This is vital because Bills like Bill C-110 remove more and more power from Parliament over the process of supply. We are delivering more and more spending powers and statutory and non-budgetary processes over to Cabinet and Order in Council decree.

We have to review the behavioral problems in this culture that are taking advantage of and abusing every sense of trust, through to the Auditor General's Report. We could list chapter and verse, list after list and page after page of problems. Crown corporations are even guilty of double invoicing in order to transfer profits offshore. Things like this cause great anguish and would end up in the courts if they were done in the private sector.

Crown corporations are given special preserves in terms of law. Being agencies of Her Majesty's gives them special status and protects their behavior and gives them special status when borrowing from the private sector.

These are questions that we want answered, Mr. Speaker. This is why, for the second time in this debate, I stand to protest and appeal to the Government to pull back on this kind of legislation. Give us a breathing spell and bring in some accountability.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to follow the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). He was talking about the basic ingredient of what Parliament is all about. We have the democratic institutions of today because of the people of the world who believed that if moneys were to be extracted from them, they should have something to say about the way they were spent.

We are making an argument that is as old as democracy itself—that there has to be accountability by the Government for the money it extracts from the taxpayers of Canada and then spends.

As we have gone through debate on Bill C-110, speaker after speaker has given us many examples of the tremendous proliferation of Crown corporations and their belief that they are sacred and unassailable and that it is impossible to examine their activities.

Only this week I was shocked to see that the Chairman of the CNR, Jack Horner—a former Member of the House and one who stood on many occasions to talk about accountability and the requirement to have Members on the Treasury benches account to us for the money spent, supposedly on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada—was reported as saying that he did not believe the Auditor General should audit the books of the CNR. That is exactly what we are saying he should do.

Mr. Pepin: Because somebody already does it.

Mr. Stevens: Not on behalf of Parliament.

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. Coates: The working papers are not available to Parliament and the report of the expenditures of the CNR is not part of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. Pepin: That is for sure, but the private auditors are responsible to Parliament.

Mr. Coates: It is a private audit for the private information of private people. Whether it is the Export Development Corporation, the CNR or one of the 298 Crown corporations that today employ more people than the Public Service of Canada, we say that there should be greater accountability to the people of Canada. We are quite willing to be as generous with assistance to the business community and to help them make international trade agreements as any group in the House. What we want to know is where the money they get from taxpayers is being spent, if it is being spent properly and recovered properly. We do not know that. Parliament does not know that. Nobody knows that but the board of directors, and they are basically public servants.

That is another thing that is wrong with the EDC, Mr. Speaker. The people who put most of the roadblocks in the way of the business community in relation to trade deals are the same people who sit on the board, supposedly to assist the business community and negotiate deals that will provide employment.

The Government cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. They cannot have a man sitting in a Department one day, reading regulations and imposing them on the business community, and hours later have the same man sitting on the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation. As a director of the corporation he is supposed to aid and assist the industry, but he has just made the rules and regulations, and will impose them, that will make it almost impossible for the industry to make a deal. Can he say, "Let's look favourably at the type of assistance this company is applying for because I know the problem it is facing, as I manufactured most of them"? Why get into this situation when former corporate individuals, now retired or now not involved or having any vested interest, could be on the board? They would know how difficult it is to operate in the business community of the world and would appreciate the competition a company faces.

These companies claim they need this type of assistance, they need this type of interest rate, they need this type of loan, in order to achieve the end objective, which is a contract. However, what is happening now is that there are too many soft loans being made, and that is what we are concerned about. Too many loans are made which later end up as liabilities to Parliament and to the taxpayers of Canada, and we cannot find out about them. There is no one we can call to give us the reasons why such a loan was made, and that is not right or proper. Every board of directors in this country has a group of shareholders to whom it must explain every expenditure which is carried out. The Government is now asking us to give it between $50 billion and $60 billion so it can pass out loans—to whom? We do not know for sure. For what term? We do not know for sure. Under what conditions? We do not know for sure. If it is a success, that is fine. Let the board of directors come and tell us how useful it has been. However, if it is a failure, let the board of directors appear before us, as the protectors of the tax dollars, which are in fact trust dollars, and explain why such a loan was made which later turns out to be a liability for the taxpayers and the people of Canada.

I do not really understand how a government can stand by, on such a basic issue of parliamentary democracy, and ignore the requests of a legitimate opposition who is demanding that further protection be included in a piece of legislation for the taxpayers of this country, who are the people who put up the money in the first place. It is nothing short of a shocking scandal that this Government will sit by, to a major degree, and not even involve itself in the debate, and by its silence totally ignore the positive, progressive and realistic amendments which will improve the legislation before us and give greater protection to the taxpayers of this nation. More than that, these amendments will strengthen this institution. After all, it was the Boston Tea Party which led to the American Revolution. The Boston Tea Party was all about taxation without representation, and what we have in the piece of legislation which is before us now is taxation without representation.

The Government is taking money from the pockets of the taxpayers and it is unwilling to protect them by allowing the Parliament of Canada to examine the expenditures which are being made. As the Hon. Member for Capilano has pointed out, it is not because this Government has not been warned time and time again by the Auditor General of Canada, a non-partisan individual, that the way it is doing business does not give ultimate protection to the taxpayers of Canada. We, in the Opposition, have said quite clearly to the Government of Canada that this legislation fails in its present form because it does not provide accountability. We have moved amendments to bring about accountability and which would answer some of the concerns and criticisms of the Auditor General. Surely we can expect the Government to act, and react, and say, "Why not accept this amendment? It does not hurt us". As a matter of fact, it improves the piece of legislation. It also puts a new onus on the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation because when it does examine the loan applications which are made, it is going to know that eventually it will have to answer to the people of this country for the decisions it makes. That is what we seek. That is a legitimate requirement, a legitimate request, and I hope the Government will reconsider and amend the legislation, as we suggest, so that the taxpayers of Canada will have the protection which does not exist at the present time.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the other day when I took part in the debate, the subject was the amendments proposed by my colleague for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), the intent of which was to set limits on the expansion, the doubling of authorized capital of this Crown corporation, because otherwise, the way would be open to almost unlimited increases in the loans the corporation would be able to undertake. Furthermore the amendments to Clause 14 at page 13, and to Clause 18 at page 17, we see amounts totalling $10 billion. At the present time, there is a $3.5 billion ceiling on loan or insurance contracts. Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are as concerned as the Auditor General and the Economic Council of Canada, and frankly, the Government has a responsibility to Parliament.

[English]

Actually, what we are seeing happening here, Mr. Speaker, is what was reported in the Auditor General's Report of 1982. The Auditor General noted as follows:

Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities—

The Export Development Corporation has been in business for a long time. It is just part of a pattern.

—has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

How true. Here we have an absolutely galling attempt to take this well beyond any sensible proportion. The Report goes on:

● (1520)

Broad legislation for the accountability of Crown-owned corporations should be developed—

This is totally contrary to that recommendation. It goes on:

—that will include provisions relating to each of the elements of authorizing and mandate, financing, directing, controlling and reporting. Such legislation should provide that these corporations be subject to comprehensive audits.

Parliament should give attention to issues surrounding control and accountability of those mixed enterprises and other entities and associates in which the Crown is a shareholder.

That was on page 47 of the Auditor General's Report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982.

There is no accountability, Mr. Speaker. As we pointed out the other day, the corporation files its annual report, and I have the 1982 report before me now. It does somewhere between $1.5 and maybe $2 billion worth of business a year. In 1982 there were loans of one kind or another of $2.5 billion. Then there was export insurance and related guarantees, which brought the total up to just over $4.5 billion. Yet the Government wants to increase the limits to $10 billion in one area and $10 billion in the other. Either the officers of the corporation in their advice to the Government have accepted that there shall be almost unlimited inflation for the next few years, or else they want to keep the corporation away from close examination by Parliament.

Mr. Pepin: To be able to react to demand.

Mr. Lambert: A committee of the House studying this annual report can only give it cursory attention because of the pressure of other work. But a corporation of the Crown is only really accountable when it comes to get its legislation amended. It has to justify it. There are other times when they say, well, we did it and what are you going to say about it? That to me, Mr. Speaker, is totally unacceptable. I do not want to strangle the EDC, but it has to be accountable to Parliament. I want to hear the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) hold forth on what his theories of accountability to Parliament are.

Mr. Pepin: The same as yours.

Mr. Lambert: As far as he is concerned, anything that Government proposes or does is okay by him.

Mr. Pepin: No.

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Mr. Lambert: That is a most irresponsible attitude. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—

Mr. Fisher: Everything the Government does is okay with him, too.

Mr. Lambert: —has proposed amendments, as I indicated, in order to return to the status quo in so far as the known insurance limits shall be. To say that in addition, of course, and beyond this particular amendment, the Government's share of possible loans shall be up to $10 billion means that Parliament would be required by statute to approve without dissent any loans, describing the estimates as statutory loans made under uneconomic conditions because the corporation has refused to undertake them on its own either because they are unsound or beyond, shall we say, the proper proportion of leverage and that the Government for political interests insists shall be made.

We give the Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), a blank cheque in this Bill not for $10 million, but $10 billion and we have nothing to say about it. There will be nothing that can be said about it after the event. That is about as useless as the last hairs on the tail of a dog. I should think that, as responsible officials, the workers of the corporation should apologize to the House for asking us to pass such a Bill. There is no way we should accept this Bill.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I am only going to give the House the benefit of a few of the thoughts I have with respect to this Bill. Initially it strikes me that the real issue with respect to this piece of legislation is: what is the issue? How is it best defined?

To listen to the Minister and Members on the Government side who have spoken, they define it in terms of trade. I do not think anyone in the House does not acknowledge the importance of international trade in all of our communities. I certainly am aware that the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), a colleague of mine on this side of the House, may be the greatest exponent of the need for international trade if we are to survive as a trading nation. Within my own constituency it is extraordinarily important that we have international trade. For example, one company by the name of Babcock & Wilcox, prior to the recession, used to have a payroll in excess of $60 million and employed over 1,800 people. They depend today almost exclusively on trade.

Fairness compels me to say that the EDC has been very good in its relationship with Babcock & Wilcox. I am the first person to acknowledge the fact. I have talked to the president of the company and I know that there has been a good relationship and we have prospered. It is important particularly from my perspective because my own community has unemployment of close to 20 per cent—the alleged recovery in the economy has yet to occur there—and Babcock & Wilcox now employs less than 800 people.

But I do not see trade as the only issue. I think it is one aspect, but not the paramount issue. I would like to see some Members on the other side at least acknowledge that there are substantial issues with respect to accountability and the choice of who the management ought to be in the interests of the nation as a whole. Considering the length of time this Bill has been before the House, the media attention it has received and the number of people who have listened to us speak—me at this particular moment—it is important that they understand that we are talking about potentially authorizing $62 billion. That $62 billion is the closest thing I can think of to a blank cheque. I ask people to consider if it is possible for one to realize how much money that is. It is not only $1 million, $500 million or $1 billion, but $62 billion. We are pledging the credit of the citizens of Canada potentially to that extent. What concerns me about this staggering sum is that when I read the newspapers every day, as most Members of Parliament do, I do not think enough emphasis is placed on the potential liability of what we are discussing. I repeat that this sum is almost comparable to a blank cheque.

Let us talk about one aspect of the motions. It does not concern the corporate loans but Government projects on a one country to another country basis. According to this legislation, the board has the power to turn down a loan on the basis that it is a bad risk.

Mr. Pepin: Not necessarily bad, just a risk.

Mr. Speyer: They cannot sustain the risk or do not think it wise to sustain the risk in a particular case.

Mr. Pepin: There are other aspects to it.

Mr. Speyer: I hear the Minister, whom I know and respect very much. He has had experience in this field. At the end of my comments I invite him to make a speech and talk about what I hope are his concerns about accountability and the issue of management with which he is intimately familiar.

Frankly, I have acknowledged that trade is one aspect of this Bill and an important one which is of concern to my constituency. I hope that by equal use of reasoning and frankness, he might stand up in his place as a senior and respected Member of the Government and talk about accountability and the prodigious sum of money that we are talking about, namely, $62 billion. I invite him to talk about the lack of control of the Parliament of Canada to deal with the taxpayers' money. If there is one thing that constituents are saying loud and clear from every constituency in this country, it is that they want their Members of Parliament to consider more seriously the expenditures. They want Members of Parliament to have some type of real control over the purse strings.

I say to the Minister, who wants to make a point—I know the Chair will give him every opportunity to do so as soon as I am finished—that I invite him to talk about these issues because they are significant.

Let me expand upon the circumstances where the board of directors of EDC does not think it is worth the risk for this country to make a deal with another country. This concerns the issue of management and who should be on the board of directors. I would feel much more confident, and I expect the Minister responsible for this Bill might feel more confident, according to some of his submissions, if the board of directors were at least controlled by competent people from the private sector. I would have a lot more confidence in a board of directors that had had experience in making decisions in the private sector. This is a circumstance where the board of directors may very well turn down a loan, whether it comes from the private sector or public sector, but the Government still says that it is in the public interest that it lend the money.

I would like to talk about the Bombardier bomb, as far as I am concerned. The Minister is here and I again invite him to make some remarks. We know that on a government to government basis, the Bombardier deal was worth $1 billion. We know that, in spite of the lip service that Americans pay to free trade and free enterprise, they have protectionism just like every other country. The "buy American" projects and advertisements that we see certainly give evidence of this. However, because of the serious economic plight of the City of New York and the fact that the deal was economically advantageous to that city to the tune of over $300 million, the firm of Bombardier and Budd were able to sustain this contract. There can be no doubt that jobs were the prime reason why the Government of Canada acted on behalf of these two particular companies.

However, I think we should closely examine the liabilities, how much work was going to be created and whether or not it was worth the candle. The Bombardier deal was to yield 20,000 to 25,000 man-years of work over the five-year life of the production. The United States would get 40 per cent, and the jobs that would be created would be based mostly in Vermont. Canada was to get 60 per cent. Three thousands jobs were going to be created in Canada over that period of time. The cost would be $325 million. To be conservative, assuming the cost of financing was going to be $300 million, there would be 15,000 man-years of work created at an average cost of $20,000 U.S. per job year. I believe the Government either neglects or fails to come to grips with these prodigious sums of money.

In conclusion, I wish to reiterate that the question is how one defines the issue. Is the issue to be defined with the primacy given to trade, or is the issue really a question of management or mismanagement and, most important the primacy of Parliament and the accountability of this Government to the people of Canada. That is why I stand to oppose this particular Bill in circumstances where my community needs jobs.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to the amendments to this Bill. Briefly, the intent of the amendments is to simply limit in different ways the borrowing that the Government can undertake according to this Bill. I am fully in support of such amendments.

In short, this Bill appears to take up to $2 billion from our taxpayers upon which to borrow many billions more and use that money to subsidize interest rates for the foreign customers of Canadian exporters of manufactured goods. In other words, they will be helped to borrow money to buy our goods. In effect, our exporters and manufacturers get their price, the banks, which are mainly ours, get their price for the money, and the difference is carried by our taxpayers. Our taxpayers are subsidizing the banks since most working Canadians pay a higher tax rate than the banks effectively pay.

I think this is a very dubious deal for working people in Canada. Therefore, I believe it is a good idea to limit that borrowing. I am happy to support the amendments from the Conservative Party even if its reasons for the amendments might be different from mine.

There is another side to this problem. I believe a growing quantity of our sales are in the Third World countries, for example, the Philippines. I became interested in the Philippines through immigrants in my riding. I was astonished to find that one of the main exports of the Philippines is labour. About one milion people are "exported" from the Philippines as labourers who are compelled, as a condition of going abroad to work, to remit money home. That is a major source of currency for the Philippines. University graduates from the Philippines come here to work as house maids because of the extreme poverty there. I read about the Philippines in a very interesting book called the "Development Debacle". I have even had an opportunity to visit the Philippines very briefly this month. Part of the problem is that Philippinos must buy our capital goods for their industries and for their infrastructures, such as their power supplies to industries. They must borrow. They are in hock to our banks, those in the United States principally. Canada tags along. Even though in the last ten years the real wages of Philippinos have been cut by 50 per cent and the real price of rice produced by their farmers has been cut by 50 per cent and even, according to World Bank figures, people in the Philippines are eating less per capita than ten years ago, they still have great difficulty repaying these loans. According to the daily papers in Manila, they are dodging around the same kind of bankruptcy as we hear from time to time are occurring in Brazil, Mexico, Argentina and South Korea. There has been a growing number of strikes, bitter strikes in the Philippines. Strikes have occurred in the Bataan export processing zone. Now there are the riots in Manila that we have been reading about.

My point is that our borrowing system of asking the banks to subsidize sales by Canada to countries that cannot afford to pay for our goods does not really help those countries; it helps the banks. It does not help the working people or the farmers in the Philippines. It is very doubtful to me that this borrowing system is helping Canadians. Therefore, for that reason as well I am happy to support the sense of the amendments of the Tory Party.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, in this House last night the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) rose to speak in defence of Bill C-110. As is the norm, he gave a very entertaining performance. It was so entertaining that the House called him back for two curtain calls in the form of being given unanimous consent twice to continue. I repeat, he gave a very entertaining performance in defence of Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act. I think I am safe in saying that the farmers of Canada would be much more impressed if the Minister of Agriculture had used the opportunity to tell Canadians, and in particular Canadians who are engaged in agriculture, just what it is he proposes to do in the form of specific relief for some of the problems that agriculture faces. Perhaps, instead of bearing on the EDC, the Minister of Agriculture might have told us what he proposes to do to expedite stabilization payments, which are now running four or five months behind the norm. Okanagan farmers are struggling to keep ahead of the banks, and at the same time as the Minister talks about how great it is to be able to afford the Export Development Corporation's $62 billion in credits, farmers cannot get their stabilization payments. In the Okanagan the disastrous prices received for the 1982 apple crop have triggered a stabilization payment to Okanagan orchardists, but as yet they are still in the negotiating aspects preparatory to receiving that payment.

The Minister of Agriculture also, instead of concerning himself with the merits of Bill C-110 and what a great thing it is to provide $62 billion through this corporation, might have taken the opportunity to tell us why the Farm Credit Corporation has no funds, why the Farm Credit Corporation must put money out to farmers at a rate considerably in excess of what the EDC can offer to foreign customers of Canadian products. The Minister of Agriculture, who rose so quickly and so enthusiastically to defend the Export Development Corporation and to endorse that tremendous amount of money which that agency of Government would have available to it, could have brought great joy to Canadian farmers by indicating his reponse to their difficulty.

With The Canadian farm economy in a shambles and a spirit of despair and gloom hanging over the agricultural community, the agri-business industries, the Canadian farmers would like to have seen their Minister zero in on the things important to them, the important things which caused them to rally in Penticton on Labour Day and clog the highways with their tractors just to emphasize to Canadians, and the Minister in particular, that they are in a great deal of difficulty.

These orchardists are asking that action be taken right now before they are forced off their farms. They are asking for tariff protection simply on the basis that you cannot let the tail end of another country's production set the price which Canadian farmers can ask for their product. As much as anything the farmers of Canada are asking for recognition, recognition of their importance to the nation and to the nation's economy and recognition that agriculture in Canada is in crisis.

Bill C-110 gives the recognition of the Government of Canada that export trade is important to Canada. It underlines that by making $62 billion available. That is the degree of recognition which Bill C-110 and the Government of Canada say is important. That is the degree of recognition which measures the amount of importance the Government gives to exports.

This recognition is given substance by the $2 billion capitalization which it permits and by the borrowing authority of the corporation of ten times that amount, that is, $20 billion, by giving authority to accept insurance liabilities to a further $20 billion, by allowing Cabinet to authorize $10 billion in dubious loans, and by allowing Cabinet to accept liabilities in the form of insurance contracts of an additional $10 billion, for a total liability for the taxpayers to assume of a maximum of $62 billion. That is an incredible amount when one considers that the total budget of the Canadian Government is somewhere around $90 billion. Canadian farmers quite rightly ask why similar amounts of money are not available to agriculture through the Farm Credit Corporation. They do not want that much money, but they would like some to be available to them. Why are farmers not given concessionary financing terms, such as those available to offshore customers through the Export Development Corporation? One Okanagan orchardist was forced to take out a loan with the FCC when interest rates were at their highest. He informs me that the has an extra $500 per month burden in interest charges over what he would pay at current rates. Also he told me that the only alternative available to him would be to borrow from a private lender, pay off the FCC and reapply to FCC for a new loan, because private lenders will not provide long-term credit. Of course, the hooker is that the FCC cannot give any assurance that money will be available. If the Government of Canada considers that Canadian exports require the financial commitments contained in Bill C-110, surely it is not too much to suggest that agriculture, the largest job creator in the nation, is deserving of equal treatment.

I mentioned job creation because the obvious objective for providing this amount of money to the EDC is that it may end up in the creation of jobs in Canada in the manufacturing and in other sectors of the economy. We must remember that at the time when we favour one side of the economy we are neglecting agriculture. In the City of Penticton in my constituency, the Canadian Canners operation closed down last year, putting 300 people out of work. We have to look for a more balanced approach to the type of aid we provide industry, farmers or whatever.

Bill C-110 totally discriminates and overlooks the need of the Government of Canada to appear interested in all areas of the economy and the need for the Government of Canada to accept accountability across the spectrum of economic activity in the nation.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members of my Party continue to rise to express their opposition to Bill C-110, surely it must be clearly evident to Hon. Members on the other side of the House that this is no ordinary piece of legislation. How many times must we on this side of the House rise before Government Members recognize that this is a serious issue? The wealth of Canadian taxpayers is not unlimited. The people of Canada expect and deserve accountability for the expenditure of their tax dollars. Unfortunately it is only Opposition Members and the Auditor General of Canada who show genuine concern for the public purse.

The amendments currently under discussion would go a long way toward making the Export Development Corporation and the Government more responsible. In a portion of the Bill under discussion today, the Government wishes to increase from $3.5 billion to $10 billion the amount of money which Cabinet may have at its disposal to insure export loans which the board of directors of the EDC has decided are too risky.

The Government will be entering into a series of high risk propositions to the tune of billions of dollars in order to support the export sector of the economy. We in this Party are arguing that $3.5 billion, half of which is presently unused, is more than enough to insure a series of what could easily be unsound export deals. Why should we put an additional $6.5 billion at risk? Perhaps the Government is pushing this particular portion of the legislation because it feels there may be some revenue to be generated by competing with insurance companies around the world. Nothing could be further from the truth. Mr. Culham, senior vice-president of finance of the EDC, told the standing committee dealing with Bill C-110 that EDC's $1.1 million profit reported last year was insignificant in relation to the billions of dollars of loan and insurance business the corporation handles each year. The Export Development Corporation should get out of the insurance business. There are private sector interests that could more adequately provide this service.

Unfortunately, the Government continues to believe in the infallibility of the public sector. It has almost no faith in the expertise which is readily available in the private sector. I mention this because it was made absolutely clear during the committee hearings. The Minister responsible for EDC was only vaguely aware of a paper presented to the corporation by the Royal Bank of Canada concerning the financing of Canadian exports. Why did the Minister not seriously consider the proposal of the country's largest bank, an organization which is well represented throughout the world? In the paper it compared the various methods of raising capital on the Euro-bond market, and concluded that it had been able to raise money at a lower cost than had the EDC. Surely this finding should interest the Minister. The Royal Bank plan called for not only increasing the involvement of our Canadian chartered banks in export financing, but also for the involvement of the 50-odd new foreign banks now operating in Canada.

The Bank Act passed in 1980 allows foreign banks to operate in Canada. These banks represent a host of nations from around the world. Why are they being excluded from helping to finance Canadian trade? Obviously this left leaning Government has a dislike for private sector organizations. Had the Royal Bank's proposal been accepted, it would have ensured that Canadians would become more effective exporters. It would have lessened the risk to Canadian taxpayers, to the extent that the Government would have had to borrow less through the EDC. Unfortunately, these proposals did not receive the attention they warranted and were countered by a 50-page paper from the EDC.

A further problem with this section of the Act is that it will only increase the Government's capacity to service these speculative types of ventures and will ultimately result in an unmandated form of foreign aid. We have foreign aid agencies with a mandate to do precisely that. The role of the EDC is to promote Canadian exports and, by so doing, to improve the Canadian economy. Its mandate should not be to serve as a foreign aid agency. By increasing its capacity to insure poor risks behind the backs of Parliamentarians, we are only increasing the likelihood that hundreds of millions of dollars will be squandered. What guarantees does the House have that insuring high risk export deals will in the end result in permanent jobs for Canadians? There are no guarantees whatsoever to taxpayers in the Bill. What is guaranteed is that the EDC will be unaccountable.

Motion No. 8 is simply a further attempt responsibly to control the Export Development Corporation. In the same manner that the previous motion would limit the amount Cabinet has at its disposal for insuring risky export ventures, this motion is designed to keep a realistic ceiling on the amount the directors of the corporation can use for loan guarantees. To increase the amount of financing available through the Consolidated Revenue Fund from $2.5 billion to $10 billion will have a twofold effect. First, it will of course lead to greater expenditures. Second, it will increase, not diminish, the problem of accountability. While this motion cannot solve the latter problem, it would succeed at least in going some distance toward correcting the former. If the Government has only $2.5 billion in the Consolidated Revenue Fund to use for loan guarantees, perhaps the Export Development Corporation will develop sharper business practices.

● (1600)

Last May, Mr. David Slater, Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, appeared before the standing committee to comment on Bill C-110. Mr. Slater offered these words of caution:

> It should be noted that export subsidies are far from being the potent instruments governments seem to think they are in achieving their various macro-economic objectives.

As well, Mr. Slater said that it is a myth that loan subsidies from the Export Development Corporation are mostly aimed at giving exports that initial push, or assisting small or medium-size companies. The fact is, he said, large corporations receive most of the resources devoted to export assistance.

Finally, on the subject of private sector participation in the field of export finance, Mr. Slater said that the Export Development Corporation should encourage a greater direct involvement of private sector institutions. This was the advice of the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, not the chairman of the Royal Bank. Unfortunately, his words appear to have fallen on deaf ears.

In closing, allow me to make one further point. Canada has lost many opportunities to export goods in the international market. Bureaucracies are notorious for inaction. Contracts have been lost because the Export Development Corporation has been slow to act. In many instances, Canada has lost out because of keen foreign private sector competitors. What is wrong with sharing the financing of exporting Canadian goods with the private sector? It has the experience, the knowledge and the investment capital that is so necessary in this field. Why not spread the risks around?

We live in a pluralistic society, but it is becoming increasingly clear that our society is dominated by big government. The record of the Government in the field of export has deteriorated consistently over the past decade. It is time for a new approach, an approach that would utilize all sectors in our society, rather then excluding them from participating.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the third time in this debate, and I count it a privilege to do just that. I note with interest the empty benches on the other side. Of the six or seven Liberals who are here, one is the Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) who has already told us that he is not going to participate in this debate. It seems a little ironic that one of the Ministers accountable to the people of Canada for external relations is not going to take part in a debate dealing with the Export Development Corporation. One would think that was part of the interest, if not the responsibility, that he should have in our foreign relations.

As we have debated Bill C-110, Mr. Speaker, we have talked about the growing number of Crown corporations and the growing freedom they enjoy in borrowing money, expending our indebtedness, and in making Canadians go further and further into debt from the day they are born. Motions Nos. 3 and 5 dealt specifically with the global borrowing capacity of the corporation. Now, on Motions Nos. 6 and 8 we are dealing with one aspect where the Cabinet, on its own initiative, by way of EDC can extend loan guarantees from the present $3.5 billion to $10 billion. It can lend outside of the parameters of EDC from $2.5 billion to $10 billion.

There has been a principle enunciated over and over again, Mr. Speaker, by Members on this side that the Parliament of Canada must assert its authority regarding the spending of the Government. When the Government has open-ended borrowing authority, as it appears to have in this Bill, then the Parliament of Canada must assert itself. That is one of the fundamental principles of parliamentary democracy, the power of the purse. As we were debating that several days ago, I remember that one of my colleagues spoke of that very principle. We as Parliamentarians must have scrutiny over the spending power of the Government. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) sat there and said, "Well, that is what we are doing now." I remember his saying that, and I think he will freely admit that. It is not a big confession to make; he can handle that much. That highlighted the difference in the mindset of the Conservative Party from that of the Liberal Government. The Liberal approach has always been, "Give us global authority, we can do what we want, and that mandate is for anything we want to do." Nothing illustrates that more clearly, Mr. Speaker, than the election campaign in 1980 where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went across Canada very quietly, which was uncharacteristic of him. It was almost impossible to get him to say anything. Then he got his mandate, and now he wants to be able to do anything. He did not debate the Constitution, the National Energy Program or any of those things during the election campaign, but now that he is elected, he thinks he can do anything. That is the principle the Government invokes in this kind of debate and in this kind of Bill: "Give us a mandate over $62 billion and then let us do as we wish."

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that there ought to be some strictures placed on this kind of open-ended spending. That is the principle of parliamentary authority. When you give the Cabinet the kind of mandate the clause in this Bill will do, it invariably goes sour because there is not enough of a check. It may be that we have very short memories as Canadians, but I think all of us still remember the kind of investment made in Jamaica on behalf of former Prime Minister Manley. It was for no other reason than to influence the elections of that particular Commonwealth country on behalf of Mr. Manley, because he happened to be a good friend of our Prime Minister and he happened to be of the same kind of political stripe as our Prime Minister. He was able to use the kind of authority this Bill gives to Cabinet to do the many things he did in Jamaica. When they can do that, it invariably is wrong. It is wrong in principle, Mr. Speaker, because it creates the wrong pattern. It shows differences of application between foreign companies and domestic ones.

I can understand the Government wanting to have as sweet a deal as it can to encourage foreign trade. All of us want to facilitate and encourage foreign trade. But when you treat foreign countries better than you treat your own citizens, there is something wrong. As we have noted before, and as my colleague mentioned earlier, there was this deal to build a monument in Algeria. I thought the deal was for 9.9 per cent, but my colleague tells me that the deal to construct the monument was for 7.5 per cent. If we can lend money for that kind of a deal when our people are paying 18 per cent to 24 per cent, then there is something wrong.

I have a company in my riding called Geramatic. It happens to be one of the best companies, not only in Canada but in the world, leaders in the field of hydraulic winches. Here is a company dealing in export, but in the last three months it has given notice that it has to move out of the country because it cannot function here any longer because of the cost of operation. That is the double standard of treatment. Foreign companies get a "sweetheart" deal in interest rates, but domestic companies have to pay the going rate of interest and, because of the cost of operation, have to move away. In this particular case, it affects 110 families in one fell swoop. This has occurred partly because of the National Energy Program, I might add. These companies are driven out of Canada.

If the Government is interested in our proposal, I would certainly invite it to make an arrangement whereby the principles that we have been addressing will be spoken to in the amendments that it brings forward. I would invite it to do so.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this should not be attributed to the Hon. Member's power of persuasion, but I believe that if you seek unanimous consent, you will find that there is unanimous consent for the following motion:

That, with regard to Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act:

1. All amendments at the report stage shall be deemed to have been withdrawn.

2. Notwithstanding any Standing Order, the Government or Opposition may propose amendments that are the same or similar except in detail as amendments numbers 2, 3, 5, 6 and 8 as put on notice for the consideration of the House at report stage.

3. The Government shall also introduce an amendment with regard to the reference of the annual report and financial statements of the Export Development Corporation to Committee.

4. All questions necessary for the disposal of the report stage shall be put without further debate no later than 4.59 p.m. this day.

5. That third reading of the Bill will be called for debate as the first item of Government Business on Tuesday, September 27, 1983 and that all questions necessary for the disposal of the third reading stage of the Bill shall be put without further debate or amendment no later than 5.59 p.m. on Tuesday, September 27, 1983.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that is substantially the arrangements that have been made. I have in my hand copies of the amendments that have been agreed to and which will be introduced, some moved by Government Ministers and others by Members from this side.

I might say that had the Government been as reasonable last week as it has been this week, this measure would have progressed much more quickly than it has by reaching this late stage, because we now have achieved what we always have been saying is the responsibility of the Government, namely, a measure of parliamentary control over the public purse which is achieved by the amendments which will be proposed here this afternoon.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, for the sake of the record, I would also like to confirm that we accept the House order and,

I suppose, that we second what the House Leader of the Conservative Party said about the importance of accountability over Crown corporations. I hope that this will set a precedent in terms of what will happen in the future and I also hope that this will set a precedent in terms of how this Minister and other Ministers will listen to some of the ideas of the Official Opposition on Bills that come before the House in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The House has heard the motion proposed by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) and seconded by the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The motion is found to be in order. Accordingly, do Hon. Members agree to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Motions Nos. 1, 3, 5, 6 and 8 (Mr. Blenkarn) withdrawn.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the amendments which were before the House are, by virtue of the motion you have just passed, withdrawn, I would propose to make a series of motions for subsequent amendments. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That Bill C-110, An Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended by adding immediately after line 34 at page 2 the following new Clause:

"4. Subsection 9(2) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) The Chairman and, if the President is a person other than the Chairman, the President shall be paid by the Corporation a salary to be fixed by the Governor in Council." " and by renumbering the subsequent clauses accordingly.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, let us dispose of the motions one by one seriatim.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is in the position of having heard an amendment proposed by the Hon. Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Is it the wish of the House to debate the amendment, or shall I put the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready to agree to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That Bill C-110, An Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 23 to 26 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"11.(1) The authorized capital of the Corporation is one billion five hundred million dollars divided into fifteen million shares of the par value of one hundred dollars each."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I sense that the mood of the House may be to proceed seriatim with amendments made by the Hon. Minister, so I will put the question again assuming that there is no wish on the part of Hon. Members for debate. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make another motion. I move, seconded by the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan):

That Bill C-110 be amended by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 4 and substituting the following:

"exceed an amount equal to ten times the aggregate of

(a) the paid-in capital of the Corporation from time to time, and

(b) the retained earnings of the Corporation, if any, determined in accordance with the most recent statements of accounts of the Corporation for a financial year which have been audited by the Auditor General of Canada."

May I speak to the amendment for a moment, Mr. Speaker? I would like to say to the House that this Party has, to this point, put up 140 speakers on report stage of the amendments that were before the House. We did that not because we in any way wanted to upset international trade. Indeed, we think it is essential that the trade of the country be promoted with the best efforts of all. However, it is most important for this Party and for the country that the people of the country know that the Parliament of Canada controls the spending of the Government of Canada and that agencies that are responsible to the Government of Canada are controlled by the Parliament of Canada.

This amendment will control the borrowing of the corporation to the actual capital and surplus of the corporation. In that sense, the corporation will not be able to run away with itself. It will be under the strict control of Parliament, and we think that this amendment is exceptionally important and is the kind of thing we as a Party stand for.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say I am happy that while we were unable to agree to certain amendments that the Opposition wanted earlier, we have been able to find wording and amendments that apparently suit their purposes and which are acceptable in relation to the operation of the Export Development Corporation. Even though I was well satisfied with the original Bill, I believe it is our responsibility to try to accept constructive amendments, wherever they come from, and to try for a situation in which all Members of the House feel that they can, with good heart, support the efforts of the Export Development Corporation.

Having said that, I guess you will find that both of us are out of order, because the House order calls for no further debate on these amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Perhaps I can assist in that regard by putting the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)) moved:

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out line 11 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

shall not at any time exceed $7 billion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have two problems, the first being that I am beginning to sound like a parrot, and the other being that I do not know where the Minister is going next.

Mr. Regan: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, before moving the next motion may I say that you certainly do not resemble a parrot.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)) moved:

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out line 38 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

shall not at any time exceed $6 billion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)) moved:

Export Development Act

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended

(a) by adding, immediately after line 17, on page 4 the following clause:

9. Section 21 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

21(1) the accounts of the Corporation shall be audited by the Auditor General of Canada

(2) Every annual report and financial statement of the Corporation submitted pursuant to subsection 75(3) of the Financial Administration Act shall, after it is laid before Parliament, be referred to any committee of the House of Commons established for the purpose of reviewing matters relating to finance and trade.

(b) by renumbering the subsequent clauses accordingly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Regan moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When shall the Bill be read a third time? In accordance with the House order just passed unanimously the Bill will be read a third time on Tuesday next.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to proceed to the next order of House business?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent to call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being five o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock in the morning, at which time, pursuant to order made Tuesday, September 20, 1983 the House will begin its proceedings with Members' Statements followed by the Question Period. Have a good weekend.

At 4.27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF BRITISH PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, on behalf of all Canadians, Members of the House, and British compatriots, I would like to extend a most sincere welcome to the Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher during her stay here. As you know, Canadian and British parliamentarians have been exchanging views on world, economic, and social needs for quite some time, and this has always been in the better interest of the Canadian and British parliamentary systems.

Today will be an historic day in Parliament. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will be the first British Prime Minister to make a joint address to the House of Commons and the Senate in 25 years. One must recall how another British Prime Minister, Winston Churchill, addressed the Canadian Parliament in this Chamber in a time of global war, aimed at returning the world to global peace.

On this occasion we on this side of the House are particularly glad our Leader and Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will be engaging Mrs. Thatcher in important talks relating to economics, bilateral relations, and ways in which our two nations may work together to bring about world peace.

I know as you know, Madam Speaker, that Mrs. Thatcher will be treated with great civility during her visit to our Parliament. During her four-day visit to Canada, I am sure she will come to know the warmth and hospitality of all Canadians. Having had the honour of being received last spring by Mrs. Thatcher at 10 Downing Street, I can assure the House that the Prime Minister is a most gracious and humble leader of her country.

We are also convinced that Mrs. Thatcher's deliberations with Canadian leaders will be fruitful, meaningful, and will benefit all the Commonwealth.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must say that the statement on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) is really a very borderline one. I was hoping that something would come out in the form of a statement, but I should have stopped the Hon. Member sooner.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

TAXATION OF NORTHERN ALLOWANCES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, the Government must know by now that the most important policy issue affecting Canadians who live and work in the northern part of Canada is that of taxation. Yet, last week at the Mines Ministers' Conference held in Regina, the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), to the dismay of his provincial counterparts, stated that the Liberal Government had no intention of moderating in the slightest its plan to tax hitherto non-taxed items such as housing and vacation travel allowances.

On the other hand it comes to light that senior officials in the Department of Transport, and CTC commissioners, have been receiving free airline passes from the airlines they are supposed to regulate, and that they have not paid income tax on those travel benefits.

The men and women who work in our northern mines, thereby creating new wealth for Canada, are tiring of the double standard whereby they are to be taxed on every last nickel of deemed benefits when the Liberal "fat cats" in Ottawa get away scot-free.

AIR TRANSPORT

BAN ON SMOKING IN AIRCRAFT ADVOCATED

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 21 on a question concerning safety for all Canadians who travel as air passengers in this country. On behalf of these Canadians I would like to put forward an additional intervention requesting that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) seriously consider within his Ministry banning smoking on all aircraft in Canada.

On June 20, 1983, I raised that question with the Minister's predecessor. As well, the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) on June 23 brought this matter to the attention of the House under Standing Order 21 in an attempt to encourage support for the banning of smoking on aircraft. We have a ban on smoking in public places in Canada such as on buses, taxis, and indeed in the House of Commons. This matter is serious enough to warrant the consideration of the Minister of Transport to find ways and means to implement a total ban of smoking on aircraft in Canada.

EXCISE TAX

INCREASE IN TOBACCO TAXES CONDEMNED

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, the Grit Government should be fully aware by now of the serious economic situation which has developed as a result of the indexation of federal excise taxes on alcohol and tobacco. Automatic increases in these taxes cause future increases at both federal and provincial levels resulting from past increases. This results in a perpetuation of inflation of consumer prices, even if manufacturers were to stop net price increases altogether.

Tobacco is the nation's third most important cash crop. In 1982 it generated total tax revenue of $2.2 billion, of which $1.15 billion flowed into federal coffers. Tobacco manufacturers employed 8,275 Canadians in 1982, and paid more than $216 million in wages and salaries. Employment in the wholesale and retail segments of the industry is estimated at 31,000. The industry is in the top five in terms of capital expenditures, productivity, and absence of work stoppages. Punitive tax policies directly threaten the vitality of this sector of the economy.

Beer, wine, and liquor tax increases are costing that industry more than 37,000 jobs and will result in an increase in the tourism deficit of $700 million in 1983. The President of the Association of Canadian Distillers estimates a loss of 2,000 jobs in that industry alone.

We have seen what punitive taxes did to the oil industry. The pros and cons of smoking and drinking do not enter into this picture. At stake here are thousands of jobs, millions of dollars, and the economic viability of two important sectors of an already fragile economy. When will the Liberals stop using moralistic motives and stop reaping the profits—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time is up.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CALL FOR ALL-PARTY MEETING TO DEVISE SOLUTIONS FOR UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, a few months ago, as on other occasions, I raised the extremely important matter of unemployment as it affects not only people in Canada today but the future of life in our country. I welcome the fact that quite a number of Members have risen and made statements on the same matter. I have in mind, in particular, some of the statements made by my colleagues in this Party. But I want to take this moment to emphasize that the problem of unemployment and what it may mean for the life of Canada five years or ten years from now is extremely important. It is something with which all of us as a political issue must be concerned.

One suggestion I make is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) consider the possibility of having a meeting of perhaps five or six Liberals, five or six Conservatives, and five or six New Democrats so that we can get together to come up with statements which will really solve the problem of unemployment today. The future of living in Canada depends on winning this issue. I urge very strongly that we now take active action on it.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PLIGHT OF WOMEN AGED 50 TO 65 YEARS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, in Canada today we have assistance for those over age 65, we have the spouse's allowance for those between the ages of 60 and 65, and we have the Canada Pension for the disabled under the age of 65, but for thousands of women between the ages of 50 and 65 there is nothing. I submit that this big gap in our social assistance program is a priority item.

Every week women between the ages of 50 and 65 come to me. Some are single who looked after an aging parent or a crippled brother, some are divorcees who were left stranded to raise a family by an uncaring husband, and some are divorced, but all now find it difficult to get work even if their health permits them to work.

My husband left me with three little girls, and instead of going on welfare I scrubbed floors, sold cards, peddled seeds, and did everything I could to keep my children dressed and in school.

Now they are away from home, my health is gone, I have no unemployment insurance, I have no Canada Pension, and I am 60 years of age. Can you help me?

These were the words of a woman who bravely held back her tears when I had to tell her that there is no program in Canada to help her, except welfare. She shuddered at the thought of accepting welfare. This is not the story of just one woman. Thousands of women have similar stories, and they are heartbreaking. In this rich country surely we can provide enough priority to fill this gap in our social assistance program. These women lived in dignity. Surely we are not going to let them die in poverty.

ENERGY

CAPE BRETON COAL LIQUEFACTION PROJECT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise to make a statement regarding a report in this weekend's newspapers that the federal Government is ready to approve another $750,000 grant for the controversial Cape Breton coal liquefaction project headed by former Liberal Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie. The Government would be wise to pause here and take stock before going ahead with these grants. To put it mildly, the matter raised quite a furor in the House of Commons for a week the last time the possibility of a grant to Mr. Gillespie and his associates was raised.

The Sharp task force, which was formed on July 7 of this year, is to look into the really difficult matter of conflict of interest guidelines for former Ministers. The Government should wait for its report. It should indeed have looked further into the Gillespie matter and held a special open inquiry.

I also question the consistency of the policy as reflected by the energy policy and some of the statements made this past weekend by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). Are we going for coal liquefaction, or are we going to stick with the $8 billion which we are giving for petroleum incentive program grants for the Beaufort Sea and other areas? Or are we going to buy, which would be cheaper for the Canadian consumer, offshore oil from Saudi Arabia or Venezuela? The Government is being inconsistent here. Before it gives this grant, it should take pause.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member's time is up.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

SEIZURE OF CLAN FRASER CRESTS AND EMBLEMS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, on July 15 Douglas Fraser and his wife, American tourists from Georgia, arrived at Canadian customs in Windsor. The purpose of their visit to Canada was to attend a Scottish festival in Orillia, Ontario. Mr. Fraser is the chairman of the Clan Fraser Society of North America. Not being familiar with Canadian customs regulations, they failed to declare $1,200 worth of T-shirts, crests, lapel pins and assorted articles, all designated with Clan Fraser crests which they intended to exhibit and sell at the festival. Rather than acting with understanding and good will, the customs officers seized all the articles and their vehicle, threatened them with jail, and refused to listen to any explanation.

My purpose for raising this on the floor of the House of Commons is this. We are trying to build a tourist industry in Canada. We do that by creating events and attracting tourists to Canada, to Orillia and other parts of this country. All of our efforts go for naught if heavy-handed customs officials at points of entry discourage tourists from coming to Canada by using secret police tactics on innocent people.

CRIMINAL CODE

CALL FOR REVIEW OF PROVISIONS GOVERNING GUN-RELATED CRIMES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, we have all been saddened to see an increasing number of near fatal gunshot wounds inflicted by criminals while in the act of robbing service stations, quick-checks, milk stores, et cetera. I think it is long overdue that all members of the House give serious consideration to having the matter referred by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to the all-party Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in order that we can review the facts that are before us today regarding the increased number of murders which occur while in the act of committing a criminal offence. The carrying of a gun is not permissible in Canada. The way some of these offenders are treated is sad.

• (1115)

I would like to see the Government show its responsibility to the Canadian people by referring this matter to the Justice and Legal Affairs all-party Committee in order that we can review the possible necessity of a return to capital punishment for premeditated first-degree murder.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL SECURITY

PLIGHT OF PEOPLE LIVING IN POVERTY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Prime Minister is unable to be in the House at the moment so I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

On Friday of last week official Government statistics proved beyond a shadow of a doubt the magnitude of the social problems that have been created because of the Government's misguided economic policies. Those statistics show that 4.1 million Canadians are living below the poverty line, an increase of half a million since 1981. Almost half of the single-parent families headed by women are living in poverty. Their income has dropped by 11 per cent in the past year. Those are the social problems that have been created by the Government's economic policies. Having created these problems, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister what the Government will do to correct them.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I believe there was a budget that was presented in the House not very long ago which was well received by everyone in Canada as a budget that was coping with the present situation. Of course we are aware of these problems and we are very pre-occupied with them, but we do not think that there is a quick solution to such problems. We must make sure that Canadian policies are adjusted to the international economic environment.

I believe everything is looking much better at this time. There is a recovery under way in most of the western world and Canada is leading the pack in that recovery because the policies of the Government apply to the present circumstances.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, obviously the Minister has not looked at the statistics that were released on Friday. Those statistics prove that the poor in Canada are getting poorer and more numerous.

NEEDS OF SINGLE SENIOR CITIZENS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister about the one group in particular that is more likely to be living in poverty, single seniors. Six out of every ten single seniors live in poverty. In order to create a headline in July of this year, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that she was going to increase the incomes of single seniors next year. Since the Minister and his colleagues have been able to find the money to bail out Maislin, Dome Petroleum, de Havilland, and so many other companies this year, I would like to know why it is that senior citizens have to wait until next year to receive any assistance. Why is it that their needs are not considered as great as the needs of the President of Dome Petroleum?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, dealing with the question of the policy enunciated by the Hon. Member, we are now very happy to know that her position is that the Government should spend more money to cure the problems. Dealing with the other instances mentioned, some of the money, for example, the money for Dome Petroleum, has not been disbursed at this time.

The only point I would like to make is that in helping Dome, Massey-Ferguson and others, perhaps it is only a coincidence, but I think we were helping more by protecting jobs at the same time. If the Hon. Member is arguing at this time that to cope with these problems we should spend more money, we will take notice of that. However, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that, right after the 1980 election, the first thing we did was to give more money to single senior citizens. That was the first measure introduced by the Government when we came back into power in 1980.

Miss MacDonald: Obviously the Minister has not been listening to his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who says that senior citizens are living in dire straits now but she will not do anything about it until next year.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I should like the Minister to tell the House who made the decision to postpone the increase for single seniors until next year. Was it made on the basis that the increase would be available to them next year, an election year, in order to try to buy their votes? Is that the kind of cynical policy that the Government is putting forward?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think that if we had been cynical we would not have moved right after the election when there were still four years ahead of us. The first move we made was to increase that type of payment, and now the Minister of National Health and Welfare would like to have another increase on top of the indexation already there. If she succeeds, it will be the second increase in one term. I think that shows our concern. At the same time we know that, if we do that, it will increase Government expenditures. We keep hearing complaints from the other side of the House that we are spending too much and that we should cut expenditures. Hon. Members opposite should make up their minds; if they want us to spend more, then they should not get up the day after saying we should reduce the deficit.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN PUBLIC SPENDING

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister——in English, the candidate.

[English]

Last week a Liberal Cabinet Minister told the Macdonald Royal Commission:

> The more Governments support economic activities that are not viable . . . .the less they are able to maintain generous social security programs and ample social services.

It is not a question of spending more, Madam Speaker; it is a question of spending differently.

I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Government is giving urgent consideration to a change in public policy spending. Will the Government consider giving less money to Crown corporations and more money for social benefits?

I would point out to the Minister that the money the Government gave to Canadair alone would increase the guaranteed income supplement to senior citizens by more than 50 per cent.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member says that we should cut the Crown corporations, and he named one. It depends from which Province you come. There were some controversies in the House some months ago because we did not want to close down the heavy water plants in Cape Breton. While campaigning in the next riding, the Hon. Member's Leader said that the Government was well advised to keep that kind of expenditure on the books. I think there should be communication between members of that Party about whether we should or should not help some of the industries that create jobs and maintain a certain level of employment. If it is good for us to keep the heavy water plants in Cape Breton, why is it not good for us to keep on the 7,000 workers employed by Canadair in Montreal? What is wrong with keeping the employees of de Havilland in Toronto working? We have to make some difficult choices.

I want to say again that the first thing the Government did after the election of 1980 was to increase the GIS for single people. The Minister would like to do it twice. I think it must be recognized that if we had been politically opportunistic we would have kept that increase until this time, but we did it as the first measure right after the election in 1980.

Mr. Hawkes: Given the track record of the Government we can expect it before the next general election, and not when people really need it.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. The Government has to make difficult choices, and it chose to cut spending on post-secondary education. That is a choice which the Liberal Government made at the same time as it was throwing young people out of work in this country. Those young people want to go to school so they can get training in order to get jobs, but the Government cut the funds. Will the Government reverse that decision, and do it now in order to give us a chance to turn the clock back and put money into education? Young people need it today so they can get the training to get the jobs.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member has switched subjects. I am happy to reply to his question about post-secondary education.

When we started that program it was a 50-50 program between the Provinces and the federal Government; today in Canada the federal Government pays virtually 60 per cent of all the costs. The Provinces have increased the fees for students, and now the students pay more than 15 per cent while the contribution of the Provinces has gone down from 50 per cent of all the costs to 25 per cent of all the costs. As most of the Provinces are Tory, the Hon. Member would be well advised to tell them that, if they had kept their end of the 50-50 bargain for post-secondary education, the universities would not be in the position they are in today. If anyone is to blame, it is the Tory Governments in all Provinces but one.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN EMPLOYMENT POLICIES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I find it strange that the Tories are bleeding all over the public parking lot on behalf of the poor when their colleagues at Queen's Park are calling for a leaner and meaner approach to social welfare.

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, one year ago 12 per cent of all Canadian families were living in poverty and today that has gone up to 14 per cent. In other words, 3.5 million Canadians are living in real poverty and we read about it every day; people eating out of garbage cans, kids lining up at soup kitchens, people sleeping out in the streets overnight. This has come about, to a great degree, Madam Speaker, as a result of government policy to raise unemployment in its fight against inflation. Will the Government now reverse its thrust towards creating meaningful employment and get off its hick in fighting inflation, because it is killing the economy of the country?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think that is a repetition of the previous question which we were asked. The economic policies of this Government are presented to Parliament in the form of budgets. The last budget was very well received by all sectors of the Canadian economy.

I feel that some of the rhetoric used by the Hon. Member in relation to garbage cans and so on is a bit exaggerated. I might even call it demagogic. However, I agree with him that through the Tory convention in Toronto last weekend we now know that what they want to do, in the other extreme, is to cut. I believe we are in the middle. In the Liberal way, we are trying to have a proper balance. But I would like to tell the House that Mr. Davis said last week that the opposition parties should have very precise policies, and not the way we see the party of the Official Opposition today, asking for cuts and at the same time asking for increased expenditures. He would like to—

An Hon. Member: Get rid of the Liberals at the trough.

Mr. Chrétien: —have one firm policy. We have some policies. They are working in Canada at this time. The economy is turning around very well and we are very optimistic for the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, I would like to suggest to the Hon. Minister that he need only walk a few paces off Parliament Hill and he will see in action exactly what I just described in my first question, a block and a half south of here.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO STIMULATE CONSUMER SPENDING

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question concerns wage restraints. In view of the fact that a great deal of poverty in this country relates to single families headed by females who have been badly hit by wage restraints right across the board from coast to coast, will the Minister assure the House that not only will we not continue with the six and five program, but that he will stop listening to the rich in this country who want to bring in a 4 per cent and 3 per cent program. That is something that some Conservative leaders across this country are advocating at the present time. Will the Minister assure the House that the thrust will be the other way around, to stimulate the economy and consumer spending, to get us out of the recession, which is precisely what the Department of Finance report said—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there is really no need for me to put up a big defence at this time, since the 6 and 5 policy introduced by our Government has been one of the most successful policies in Canada. The purpose of our policy was to bring down inflation. For 1983, our objective was to keep inflation down to 6 percent, and we therefore gave salary increases not exceeding 6 percent. Last month, the rate of inflation was 5.5 percent, which means that employees who received a 6 percent raised made a net profit in 1983, a considerable change from the situation that prevailed before. The 6 and 5 program has straightened out the economy in Canada, and I think it is one of the best programs we have developed in recent years. As far as what our policy will be when the program expires, this will be announced by the Minister of Finance at the appropriate time.

[English]

CANADIAN AND BRITISH POLICIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. In a few hours we are going to be addressed by Prime Minister Thatcher of the United Kingdom, in many ways the soul sister in economic policy terms of this Government—

● (1130)

Mr. Waddell: I want to ask the Minister, who is not without ambition himself, whether the economic policies of the Government are the same as Prime Minister Thatcher's policies in that the main fight is against inflation and not jobs, and that the Government intends to rely upon the private sector for providing jobs?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member shows great taste at this moment in asking that type of question. But if we were to judge by electoral performance, I think his cousins in England got badly beaten in the elecion there. It is for the people of that country to decide.

I think the Prime Minister of England, Mrs. Thatcher, is most welcome in Canada. I do not think it is proper for the Government to debate here in Canada the policies decided by the electors in other nations, especially when their Prime Minister is in town.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR RADIO SERVICE IN NORTHERN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications my question is directed to his parliamentary secretary. It concerns the commencement of broadcasting for CBC Radio in northern New Brunswick. Indeed, as I talk today, we have yet to receive this service. We know that there has been a lot of negotiations with respect to television broadcasts in that Province. Can the parliamentary secretary give any assurances as to a possible start-up date and as to what the timetable would be with regard to the installation of the necessary equipment to bring that signal into northern New Brunswick?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, first I want to say that the Hon. Member for Restigouche has worked long and hard on this problem of getting CBC service to northern New Brunswick.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Burghardt: I am pleased to report that the equipment is in place for the service to begin in northern New Brunswick. The exact start-up date is a question mark at the moment, but I can assure the Hon. Member that the CBC is working very diligently on this and that the start-up date should be announced within a matter of days.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

CHAIRMAN'S TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. How does he justify the Government's spending priorities when the figures that were released to the House of Commons last Friday indicate that the Chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission ran up travel expenses for international travel in one year of some $66,000? Incidentally, much of this was for chartered aircraft and first-class travel. This was at the very same time as record numbers of Canadian farmers were being driven from the land because of their inability to secure adequate financing from the Government.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Agriculture will be in the House tomorrow and will be in a position to deal with that question.

USE OF CHARTERED AIRCRAFT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, seeing as the President of the Treasury Board seeks to escape his responsibility for Government spending, let me put my question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture who, I am afraid, is the Minister of Transport. No doubt he is on top of this, though.

In view of the fact that the figures released show that chartered aircraft were used five times for round trips between Paris and Algiers, twice for trips between Ottawa and New York, and once for a trip between Ottawa and Montreal, how did this take place? Was it an example of poor planning on the part of the CDC, or was it a matter that the Chairman simply did not care about the expenditure of public funds?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as the President of the Treasury Board said, it is a matter which the Minister of Agriculture will be in the House to address. I am sure he will provide an explanation to the Hon. Member, even though the Hon. Member will not understand it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—DOWNING OF KOREAN AIRLINER—COMPENSATION FOR VICTIM'S FAMILIES

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Last week the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated in the House that if there were any suggestions made that would help increase the possibility of early compensation for Canadian victims of the Russian atrocity with respect to Korean Airline's Flight 007, he would be happy to hear them.

Would the Minister of Justice indicate whether his Department and its staff might be used for the purpose of providing services to the families and survivors of those ten Canadian victims so that an action might be commenced in the Canadian Courts for punitive damages and loss of support for those ten Canadians, with a view to obtaining writs of execution in Canadian courts that could then be levied against the property of the Soviet Union in Canada and thereby expedite the process? Is that a possibility, and can the Minister indicate to the House whether he is prepared to undertake it?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, there may be ways in which my Department can assist in counselling such people. As the Hon. Member knows, there are legal aid programs across the country which are funded in good part by the federal Government and are there for the purpose of helping people in all of their litigation when they have financial need.

Of course, in a case of this kind, as I understand my hon. friend to be referring to it, the law to be applied would be Canadian law so that these would be normal cases in the Canadian courts. Certainly if there is any general direction or guidance that my Ministry can give within its own guidelines of service, we would be very pleased to do that.

Mr. Gamble: I should not be surprised by that kind of response from this Government. Very clearly, the offer was made last week in the House that if some practical solution would be offered that could help the victims of that disastrous action by the Soviet Union, the Minister would be prepared to listen.

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT ASSIST IN PREPARING CLAIMS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, I have made a suggestion. It has nothing to do with legal aid, it concerns the responsibility of the Government to extract from that murderous regime in the Kremlin some compensation for Canadians. I ask the Minister to forget about provincial legal aid and deal with his responsibility. Will he now indicate to the House that the services of his Department, the solicitors in the Department of Justice, will begin to assist those Canadian families so that due compensation can be provided to them without delay?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I understand that this is a great occasion for my hon. friend to fulminate, but would he take into account the fact that lawyers in my Department do not give advice even to the Government, by and large, on the legislation of the various Provinces in Canada of the kind he is talking about. It is the mandate not of my Department but of the Department of External Affairs to give advice to the Government on matters of the kind he raises. We are bound by the legislation that determines the kind of advice we can give to the Government. As I indicated in my first answer, we will go to the limit of our responsibility to help Canadians who have the kind of problem of which my hon. friend spoke.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. How does he reconcile his Department's decision along with that of his predecessor to close down CFB Chatham in view of the statement made by the Prime Minister on September 23, 1976, that Chatham is indeed fulfilling a need and there are no plans to close it down? That commitment was made to the members of the Miramichi Regional Development Corporation in Bathurst.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I have not seen the statement to which the hon. gentleman refers. I would be pleased to receive that copy from which he quotes. However, there is no doubt that the Government has made the decision to close down Chatham and we are proceeding with that decision.

I point out as well that we are conscious of the impact that that program will have on the region. That is why my Department and other government Departments are reviewing what solutions can be arrived at in order to compensate for any job loss that would be created as the result of closing down the Chatham base.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, we are dealing with approximately 3,200 souls who are losing their jobs and who feel a sense of despair as great as anybody who believes in the great Book of Revelation, who have sinned and feel themselves doomed to the fiery lake.

I ask the Minister what he intends to do in view of the Prime Minister's statement of the same day that, yes, the Chatham air base has a permanent status. In view of the Minister's comment today that that base will be closed down, is that an indication of how much the Prime Minister has lost control of his Party?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am amazed that the hon. gentleman asks a question in those terms. We have had representations on an ongoing basis on this side of the House from the hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi relating to the measures that will be implemented in order to alleviate the negative impact of the closing of the Chatham base. The Hon. Member is a johnny-come-lately on that particular dossier. As a matter of interest, I am meeting with the local MLA this afternoon as well as with the Mayor of Chatham. Undoubtedly, they must be in the galleries and witnessing the shameful performance of the hon. gentleman. In the past, I have not heard his questions being directed in relation to that issue. I want to indicate to you, Madam Speaker—

• (1140)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: I do not want to sit down before I indicate that I am ready and very willing to consider any solutions that the hon. gentleman may advance in order to soften the blow of the closing of the Chatham base.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, the Minister can rest assured that the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal will not advance any proposals. He will only gripe.

FUTURE OF BASE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): In answer to the first question, the Minister said that the decision had indeed been made to close the base. That is news to me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Where have you been, buddy; where have you been?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, when the braying donkeys stop, I will continue.

An Hon. Member: You haven't even informed the Member.

Mr. Crosbie: The Member doesn't know.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The Government has made a decision to stand down 416 Squadron, but that is not the only activity connected with CFB Chatham. The other military activities there were not to be affected. If there is any change in the Government's decision, I would like the Minister to explain it, please.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Hon. gentleman is quite right. It is the standing down of the squadron relating to using the CF 101 Voodoo aircraft at the present time.

Some Hon. Members: Incredible.

Mr. Blais: In terms of the military activities that are also within the Chatham area, those activities will be maintained.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Canadian Dairy Commission continues to be tarnished by the escapades of its Executive Director, Mr. Choquette. Three official reports have questioned and censored the procedures and actions of the Dairy Commission. The RCMP is presently investigating its marketing procedures. Mr. Choquette and his assistant are spending $53,000 per year on travel alone. What action does the Government intend to take to control this suspicious expenditure of dairy producers' money?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am glad to be able to answer the Hon. Member's question, because three inquiries were conducted previously, and each inquiry found the administration of the Canadian Dairy Commission to be in accordance with the Regulations. Furthermore, the Chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission has followed 30 recommendations out of 33, and we feel that the present financial year should show some improvement.

[English]

REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): My supplementary question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister, Madam Speaker. Would the Acting Prime Minister not agree that, as a matter of Government principle, Mr. Choquette should be suspended from his position as Executive Director while he is under investigation, so that during that period we can at least keep him out of the dairy producers' pockets?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I certainly do not agree with the statement just made by my colleague opposite, because the Canadian Dairy Commission is among the best agencies of its kind in the world. Canada, thanks to its dairy policy, happens to be the only country in the world that does not have a milk surplus. All kinds of accusations are now being fired from various sources at the Canadian Dairy Commission. However, these funds were spent by the Commission's Chairman and the executive for the purpose of improving the position of dairy producers in this country, and this is proven by the fact that we have the best policies in the world.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RADIATION EXPERIMENTS ON DOGS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence, who was sitting there just a moment ago, so perhaps I could—

Mr. Crosbie: There he comes.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Here he comes. I have given the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary notice of this question.

Millions of Canadian animal lovers, and especially dog owners, will be upset to learn of the University of Ottawa's experiments on dogs, that is, irradiating beagles until they die, to determine the reasons for nausea and vomiting in humans. Will the Minister review this barbaric process now going on at Shirley's Bay, or preferably stop this process, this suffering, which is admitted by University of Ottawa officials?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his interest in the matter. I want to assure him that the experiments that are being carried on relating to radiation and its impact on dogs are a result of the necessity on the part of the Department of National Defence to evaluate the impact of radiation on human beings. The experiments are under very, very tight control. I can assure the hon. gentleman that we have reviewed the methodology with those who seek to protect the impact of such experiments on the animal species. They are satisfied that the methodology is appropriate and is acceptable.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Whatever methodology the Minister has reviewed, the fact remains that the animals are still suffering.

SELECTION OF BEAGLES FOR USE IN EXPERIMENTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): How can the Minister be sure that there is any correlation between dogs and humans in this case when tests with thalidomide, for example, proved positive on dogs, and we all know of the human tragedy that resulted, whereas testing with penicillin proved to be lethal to certain animals, including dogs? I am just wondering how the Minister can justify fiddling around with helpless animals which cannot complain, and why beagles? Are German sheperds and Doberman pinschers too dangerous?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I do not think the hon. gentleman should make light of the particular issue. I thought that his initial question was very serious and I know the hon. gentleman is concerned about experimentation of any kind involving animals. In this particular instance the best scientific advice that we received was to the effect that dogs were acceptable in terms of the experimentation that was being conducted, in terms of the relationship that the findings would have to human reaction. That is why the dogs were selected in this instance.

CHAIRMAN'S OPPOSITION TO AUDITING OF BOOKS BY AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. He will know that the Chairman of CN has suggested that the railway's independence would somehow be threatened if the Auditor General were to audit CN's books. He will know that comprehensive audits are performed on government Departments by the Auditor General to determine if the Canadian taxpayer is getting value for money. Is it government policy to refuse to allow the Auditor General to perform comprehensive audits on Crown corporations, or is the Chairman off on a frolic of his own?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I do not think there is an over-all policy in the terms my hon. friend has suggested. The various Crown corporations operate under a range of statutes creating them, which were passed by this Parliament, and the role of the Auditor General with respect to Crown corporations is something that I and others have under study.

CONCEPT OF COMPREHENSIVE AUDITING

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, to carry the subject further, I would suggest to the Minister that comprehensive audits are used in Crown corporations to see if the taxpayer is getting value for money. It is a way of determining the bottom line which is used in business. In refusing to allow the Auditor General, on a selective basis, to examine Crown corporations, does the Minister not feel that the Government is not taking into account a method of determining efficiency which would be in the interest of all Canadian taxpayers?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the concept of a comprehensive audit is still in the process of evolution. I understand that the accounting profession has not yet defined and decreed a generally accepted standard as to what comprehensive auditing means. But certainly in the minds of some people at least, it is proving to be a useful instrument and, as I understand it, the concept, to the extent that it has evolved, has already been used in some Crown corporations. One point at issue is whether any such audit is to be at the request of and for the board of a Crown corporation or for the Government or for Parliament as a whole. Therefore I think that my hon. friend will agree with me that there is a very interesting and important area developing. However, in terms of a generally accepted standard defining comprehensive auditing, the accounting profession itself is still in the process of thinking of a definition.

PART-TIME WORKS—COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour to whom I extend my belated but sincere congratulations on his assumption of new ministerial responsibility. My question relates to the report of the Commission of Inquiry into Part-Time work, dated April but not released until September of this year. The Minister might comment on the five-month delay. In view of the variety of opinions received from the various communities affected, does the Minister intend, as the spokesman for the Government, to reply formally to the recommendations made by the Commission?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question and his congratulations, and I would like to take this opportunity to, in turn, congratulate the Hon. Member on his appointment as official Opposition critic on labour matters.

As for the Hon. Member's question, the delay in publishing the report probably occurred, and perhaps this should be checked, at the translating and subsequently at the printing stage. As far as the possibility of commenting on the report is concerned, it is a matter I am considering at the present time, and as soon as a decision is made, I shall be glad to make a statement to that effect in the House.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Labour. The report is likely one of those which does not conveniently fall within our Standing Orders wherein its tabling results in it being deemed referred to an appropriate Standing Committee. In view of that, and in view of the variety of responses that one has heard from the various sectors affected, would the Minister consider initiating House action where by this report would be referred to the appropriate Standing Committee in order that that committee might not only study its recommendations but hear witnesses?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I should be happy to discuss the matter with the Government House Leader, and I am sure that he will be able to report to the House Leader for the Progressive Conservative Party on the appropriate way of answering the Hon. Member's question, either affirmatively or negatively.

FISHERIES

CASSIAR PACKING COMPANY—PAYMENTS OWED TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Cassiar Packing Company was recently placed into receivership by the Royal Bank of Canada, jeopardizing the jobs of 1,000 shore workers and fishermen. The action came only after the end of the season, about the time fishermen were to draw on their accounts with the company at the bank. As a consequence fishermen stand to lose up to $1 million in payments owing to them if this matter is not resolved satisfactorily.

What action has the Minister taken to intervene in this procedure taken by the Royal Bank? Would the Parliamentary Secretary assure the fishermen they will get the full value of their season's fishing? Will the Parliamentary Secretary also indicate whether this Government has a growing concern about the concentration of power the banks are getting at the expense of the fishing industry?

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I cannot respond in detail to each of the two or three questions raised by the Hon. Member opposite because I am not fully aware of all the details surrounding this particular matter. What I can assure the Hon. Member of is that we are concerned about the fishermen and about the industry, that it be a viable one and that any action taken by any group that impacts upon that industry, which has a negative effect upon its primary participants, the people who make a living from the sea, is of great concern to us. I will, on behalf of the Minister, be examining this question.

PENSIONS OF SURVIVORS OF OFFICERS KILLED ON DUTY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. This summer the Minister received an important report from the RCMP Commissioner which was very critical of the pension plan for widows and children of RCMP officers killed in the line of duty. These individuals are clearly disadvantaged by comparison with survivors under all other police force plans, not only in Canada but elsewhere. What action does the Minister intend to take to put a very early end to this second class treatment of members of the RCMP and their survivors?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I have been very involved in this issue of getting better treatment for the survivors of RCMP officers and, indeed, correctional officers as well—

Miss MacDonald: Correctional officers?

Mr. Kaplan: —slain on duty. Several years ago, shortly after I became Solicitor General, we did introduce a new program to provide increased benefits for them. The Hon. Member is pointing to the fact that some police forces in the country had still better arrangements for survivors in circumstances like that, and I asked to have a study done. The Hon. Member refers to it as if it were completed. It is not completed in final form. Work is still under way to assess exactly where the new plan that I have introduced, which moves so much further ahead, is in relation to other existing plans.

I can assure the Hon. Member that when I do have a final report I will look at it and consult with my colleagues from Treasury Board to be sure we give the RCMP and the Correctional Service of Canada the kind of assurances to their families—who see them leave every morning, putting their lives on the line for fellow Canadians—the kind of assurances that the backup we have for them is adequate.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM—ALLEGATIONS OF FRAUD

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. Is the RCMP investigating possible fraud in connection with the Petroleum Incentives Program introduced by this Government as part of the National Energy Program?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, in the normal course we do not make announcements about RCMP investigations under way.

Mr. Nielsen: It is in the public press.

Mr. Kaplan: It is a very well established tradition, and one which is based on very sound reasons, that investigations take place off the record and that, when they reach a point where charges should be laid, that is the moment at which the fact that people are under investigation is made known. I would ask the House to respect that position and not to press me in every case, where you read in the papers that there are suspicions of an investigation under way, that that fact be confirmed or denied.

GRANTS TO EXPLORATION COMPANIES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the Minister concerned at all about the possible abuse of the Petroleum Incentives Program in light of the fact that we taxpayers have spent some $2.2 billion to the end of the last fiscal year in giving grants to exploration companies? In light of the Minister's own concern about reviewing every drilling program over $50 million, which is essentially every offshore well, can the Minister tell this House whether he feels there may have been abuse?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not know of any specific instances where there have been obvious abuses. If the Hon. Member has some cases, she should refer them to me and I will certainly investigate. Of course it is a very expensive program. We have reviewed the administration since I have been Minister to speed up the program so that the industry would not wait too long before having a decision about Canadianization or the amount of money to be received. If there is some fraud, I would like to be informed of it and we will make sure that it is corrected.

In the case of the administration, if there are some specific problems I would like to look into them, but I have not myself received any complaints to that effect. However, I would ask the group working on that and satisfy myself that the administration is being carried out according to the law passed by Parliament.

IMPACT OF PROGRAM ON SHIPYARDS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, may I direct a supplementary, a very directly related question with respect to the PIP grants, to the Minister? The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be aware that under the grants not only is the cost of leasing from offshore included under the qualifying arrangements for such grants but, as well, the bringing into Canada on a temporary basis of offshore ships. In order to recover some of the 7,000 jobs we have lost in the Canadian shipyards over the last year, would the Minister join with the Minister of Finance and review this situation, if for no other reason than to maximize the level or to set a minimum level of Canadian content with respect to the ships, so we will not be importing offshore service and drilling rigs?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, shipyards in Canada have built many rigs. Some have been operating in Canadian waters, some have been utilized in the North Sea and elsewhere. I guess at this time one of the preoccupations of the Government is the level of PIP grants that we have to face. As the Hon. Member's colleague from Vancouver mentioned, there are some people who are preoccupied by the level of these expenditures. We try to control the costs. To force the industry always to buy new ships from Canada will increase the costs even more, especially at this time when there is a large surplus of available rigs around the world. The industry is trying to get the best price possible. As the Minister I have to ensure that the cost of every one of these drilling operations is minimum, otherwise the PIP grants will increase accordingly.

LEASING OF OFFSHORE DRILLING RIGS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister would look very closely at the situation as it in fact currently exists. The Canadian entrepreneur has been forced offshore. Petro-Canada, Bow Valley and other companies have built in Canada, sold their vessels offshore, and leased them back in order to obtain the 80 per cent qualification. Will the Minister look at the specifics of that effect of PIP?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I will certainly look at all aspects. I do not think the system described by the Hon. Member makes a big difference. The fact that one is leasing either from a Canadian or a foreign company does not increase the cost of leasing.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,633 and 4,907.

[Text]

DESTRUCTION OF RCMP FILES

Question No. 4,633—Mr. Mitges:

1. Did the McDonald Royal Commission into RCMP wrongdoing state that 800,000 files held on individual Canadians should be destroyed?

2. Did the Solicitor General give orders to the RCMP to destroy the files and, if not, on what date will he do so?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are concerned:

1. No.

2. A new destruction policy for RCMP Security Service files on individuals was authorized by the Solicitor General on February 11, 1983. A review of personal files is well under way to designate those which are to be destroyed pursuant to this policy. All files on individuals identified for disposal according to the principles laid out in the policy, will be destroyed as soon as certain matters currently before the courts have been dealt with.

MARXIST STUDY CONFERENCE

Question No. 4,907—Mr. Epp:

1. Did the Canada Council contribute to organizers of the Marxist Study Conference held at the University of Manitoba from March 12 to 15, 1983 and, if so, what amount?

2. Did any other departments, agencies or commissions contribute any funds to the Conference and, if so, which ones and in what amount were the contributions?

3. What was the purpose of the Canada Council contribution to the Conference?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows: 1. To be answered elsewhere. 2. No. 3. To be answered elsewhere.

In so far as the Canada Council is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows: 1. No. 2. To be answered elsewhere. 3. Not applicable.

I am informed by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada as follows: 1. To be answered elsewhere. 2. Yes. A grant of $6,000 was made by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council under its program of aid to Occasional Scholarly Conferences held in Canada as a partial contribution to the travel costs entailed in the Conference. 3. To be answered elsewhere.

BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1980

MEASURE RESPECTING BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY

The House resumed from Friday, November 26, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mrs. Erola that Bill C-12, respecting bankruptcy and insolvency, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make some observations about Bill C-12 before we pass it along to the Standing Committee. This Bill has been around for more than eight years. It has had a variety of Bill numbers. It was first introduced in 1975 as Bill C-60. After introduction and by negotiated agreement it was sent on to the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. That Committee recommended 139 changes to the Bill. It was withdrawn and resubmitted as Bill S-11 and introduced again in the Senate on March 21, 1978. It did not move forward for debate but was reintroduced as Bill S-14 on February 27, 1979. Again it was introduced in the House on April 16, 1980, and three years and five months after this present session commenced we have it before us again for debate.

The Bill has had about one and a half days of debate, and we now have it again for debate and reference to the Standing Committee. We might ask why this Bill, which is so vital to the conduct of good business practice, has been left on the back burner for so many years. It could be said that the tremendous increase in business and personal bankruptcies over the past five years made the Bill a focal point for an attack on Government economic policies. To put it another way, it was a good debating Bill but could be very embarrassing to the Government. It chose to keep it down the list of legislation.

But why bring it forward now, we might ask? The answer is quite simple: pressure from the business community, a good and valid reason. Business bankruptcies have risen from 3,700 in 1979 to 6,897 in the first eight months of 1983. Farm bankruptcies in that same period in 1979 amounted to 77 for the first eight months and 287 for the first eight months of 1983. The losses suffered were quite substantial—$585 million in 1979 and $1,390 million in that same eight-month period in 1983. If we add to that personal bankruptcies, sometimes called consumer bankruptcies, we see that they increased from 11,670 in the first eight months of 1979 to 18,476 in the January-August period of 1983, an increase of 58 per cent in four years.

The real reason the Bill is being brought forward is the Maislin Transport bankruptcy. Pay cheques were bounced in an operation into which the Government poured several hundred million dollars. The bail-out money did not help; it was just too close to home. Too many Ministers and Liberal Members were feeling the heat, and now we have the Minister saying that she will amend the Bill to give some priority to wages of employees caught in a bankruptcy. It was only when a large Quebec-based company went under and its employees, friends and creditors put sufficient heat on Quebec Members to cause them to worry about their electoral base that the Bill was given priority and brought forward.

The statistical record is shocking. Just going back four years and picking the January to August period of eight months from 1979 to 1983, there were 77,547 personal bankruptcies and 26,981 business bankruptcies with losses of $4,270 million. That was the 1979 to 1983 period, the January to August eight-month figures. But only when Maislin Transport was in difficulty, some employees had payroll cheques bounced and the heat was applied to Quebec Members of Parliament, did we see some movement on the Government legislative list. So much for the background and history of the Bill.

I have not mentioned the businesses which have been put into receivership or chose voluntary liquidation. We have no statistics for that group, but I have heard figures of from 6,000 to 18,000 per year. I accept the lower figure in the absence of some proof of the higher number. When we see the dimensions of this economic tragedy, we understand why there are almost two million unemployed people in Canada and the gloomy forecast for employment down the road. We cannot eliminate 26,981 businesses and have another 30,000 going into receivership in four years without expecting to have massive job dislocations and personal bankruptcies. You cannot wipe out $4 billion or $5 billion in losses as the result of bankruptcies and probably a similar amount from businesses placed into receivership and not have disastrous waves in the economy.

The human tragedy is the biggest loss. Thousands of entrepreneurs closed their doors forever. Using the full year's comparison for 1979 to 1982, the number of businesses forced to close their doors increased by 91 per cent. In 1982 alone, over the 12-month period, 10,763 businesses were forced to close their doors forever.

Rather than take action to repair the economy, the Government has chosen to throw massive amounts of money at selected companies. To date Canadair has cost the taxpayers of Canada $2 billion. That sum of money is almost equal to the total liabilities of all the businesses that were declared bankrupt in 1982.

I know we have the commercial Galahads with us who say that only the strong survive or should survive. Others will tell you that the businesses were poorly managed. They will also tell you that most small and medium-sized businesses are undercapitalized. A few go under due to fraud. You may be surprised to learn that in the retail trade more losses are recorded by employee theft than by bankruptcy. I suspect there is a bit of truth in all the excuses or reasons for bankruptcy or receiver-trustee arrangements.

The bankruptcy legislation first passed in 1949 has not kept pace with the times. It was amended once in 1966 and has seen nothing more until this Bill in its various forms was introduced. In the intervening years much has changed in commercial practice. The employees and unsecured creditors have been abused by the major creditors and by autocratic receivers.

We are aware of deals between unethical receivers who dispose of assets at distressed prices through the economic vultures. These vultures are known to the receivers. They offer ready cash for good, saleable merchandise and raw materials. In many cases no competitive bids are received. A lot of arranged sales are made to the detriment of the unsecured creditors. Our objective should be to amend this legislation to see more justice, honesty and equity in these tragedies.

Today in Canada we have the most illogical, ambiguous, contradictory and grossly unfair income tax system of all the western democracies. We have bankruptcy legislation that has gone unamended since 1966. In that period of time our economy has exploded and we have been ravaged by inflation and bankruptcies. Survivors of the current recession are standing with their balance sheets stripped bare of capital assets. If there is a bump of any significance in the current recovery, many of the survivors will join the tens of thousands who have gone under.

Do we find many objectors to any amendments to this legislation? Not many have raised their heads to date, but I am sure there will be some. I note in the April 18 issue of The Financial Times that mention is made of a new Ontario law on liens and there is the comment that it worries the developers. The article states that the new legislation in Ontario that affects the assets of a bankrupt developer changes the rules under which major lenders extend financing. It further comments that it will raise the cost of borrowing for developers. I find that concept of financing rather disgusting. The article states in effect that should a developer become insolvent, the lender who finances the developer must have the assets of the suppliers and the subcontractors free from and unencumbered by liens at his disposal. The lender must have his free ride or he will raise the cost of money to the developer.

The Province of Ontario has moved, quite properly, to give some measure of protection through a lien to subcontractors and suppliers to a developer. One bank commented that this lien protection given by the new act in Ontario is a serious impairment to any lender. This recent change in Ontario legislation is a step in the right direction. It should cause us to look at the plight of the unsecured creditor and employees of a company in bankruptcy or receivership when we consider this legislation.

Many businesses with stripped balance sheets are at the mercy of the receiver-trustee who is petitioned to take over the business that is in difficulty. The receiver can, upon direction of the largest creditor, usually a bank, seize and sell the assets to satisfy the bank's liability. Inventory and good fixed assets are sold at distressed prices. Anything that is left is dispersed to the unsecured creditors. The bank and National Revenue are usually first on the list of those who are secured creditors and receive their outstanding accounts.

The power in the hands of the receiver is awesome. Some unsecured developers have developed a defence against the all-powerful receiver. I can recall a particular instance in my own business: a company ordered several thousands of dollars worth of material from my company. The credit information indicated the customer was in good financial condition. After 45 days passed, we called for our outstanding receivable only to be advised that the cheque was prepared and was awaiting signature. That is a favoured excuse. After 60 days we called again, accepted apologies, and were assured that the cheque would go forward within a week.

We heard a rumble in the trade that suggested our customer had a cash flow problem. We called again and offered to take back some or all of our merchandise. The customer declined and said our cheque was on top of those cheques awaiting signature. Further commercial credit investigation did not indicate any serious financial problem beyond a slow-pay rating. We heard another rumble in the trade, called our customer again and asked if we could borrow back some of our merchandise as we had a large order to fill and did not have enough products on the shelf to fill the order. Our customer agreed to "loan" us our own merchandise and we despatched our truck to bring it to our warehouse. Within 48 hours the company was in receivership. Within 60 hours the receiver called and demanded that we return our merchandise. He fretted, he fumed, he used numerous unparliamentary words and expressions when I told him we would not return the merchandise. He quoted me the law, said he would get a court order and force me to return the merchandise and further threatened to bring the sheriff with him and seize the merchandise. The more enraged he became, the more secure I felt. I thold him where to go, how to get there and hung up the phone.

After several more phone calls with threats of court action, I invited him to proceed and said that we were prepared to meet him in court. My position was that he had taken every precaution possible in a normal commercial transaction. We had offered to take back the merchandise to relieve the cash flow problem we heard they were experiencing, albeit unofficially. We know what we did was unlawful. However, after you have been stung a number of times in bankruptcies, you get hardened to a law that is out of date with the realities of the commercial marketplace.

I could tell you more about experiences, Mr. Speaker, such as going to the final meeting of an unsecured creditor to find that I was the only one of more than 300 creditors who turned up. In fact, the meeting was held in the receiver's 12 by 12 office. He laughed when I asked for a statement of the final disposition of accounts. I did not laugh, but he thought it was strange that anyone would show up for the meeting. I was struck by the arrogant, callous and flippant attitude of the receiver. You get more respect from a slot machine. We must see that the unsecured creditors have a security mechanism available to them.

We must amend this legislation as well to protect the employees' wages. We must remove potential conflict of interest between receiver-trustee functions and manager-creditor functions. Unsecured creditors must be kept informed by the receiver-trustee of the amount received on the disposition of assets. More important, they should have some input into the decision to sell or dispose of assets by auction.

I would like to see an amendment put in the statute that would protect the businessman from the Government when that Government is party to his going into bankruptcy. I am sure all of us at one time or another have had a call from a businessman informing us that National Revenue is closing in because he did not remit his employee payroll deductions, income tax, UIC, CPP or whatever. It should be a requirement that those funds be placed in a trust account and not be attachable by the bank. That should get the Government out of its preferred position in a bankruptcy. However, I refer to more serious matters.

There are many reasons for bankruptcies. Clarkson Company Limited, the oldest trustee in bankruptcy in Canada, estimates that 70 per cent of all business failures can be attributed to poor management. But what about the case of Mr. Lorne Shields, a man who perhaps knows more about the bicycle business than anyone in Canada? Mr. Shields had an excellent business and earned about $400,000 annually in bottom line profits. He was an importer of bicycles who, for market and tariff reasons, decided to begin to manufacture his requirements in Canada. He set up a manufacturing facility, hired about 200 people, and pre-sold a year's production at a profit.

One day, Sir, Mr. Shields had a visit from a dominion customs appraiser named John Peillard who told Lorne Shields that he was not a manufacturer of bicycles but was an assembler, and as such that he must pay duty on the imported components he used in his production. Mr. Shields said: "All my competitors import duty free". "No matter," said the dominion customs appraiser, "you are classified as an assembler and therefore you are not entitled to duty-free status; and furthermore, we demand payment of $310,000 duty which we have assessed your company".

Well, Sir, Lorne Shields was devastated. He came to Ottawa, he bumped around National Revenue and finally, after numerous trips to the capital, the Minister of National Revenue agreed to see him. Now, the Minister with a smiling, shining face agreed that Mr. Shields had been badly done by. He said he would have the ruling changed right away and Mr. Shields left happy.

About two weeks later, Mr. Shields received a letter from the Minister saying that the Minister was very sorry but he could not change the ruling laid down by his officials, that the $310,000 levy must stand, that he was indeed an assembler and not a manufacturer and National Revenue must have its money now.

What Mr. Shields did not know was that a deal had been struck by the Enterprise Development Board. It had received an application from CCM for another bundle of money to bail it out of another financial mess. The Board turned that application down, but the Minister did not want to see CCM go into bankruptcy because an election was on the horizon. So they cut a deal, as they say in the trade. Somehow they had to get rid of Lorne Shields' operation because, as the CCM people said, he had such a share of the market that CCM could not become profitable unless Shields was out of the market and they had his chunk of the market. So a method was found to put Lorne Shields to the wall. All this had been cooked up before the dominion customs appraiser came to Lorne Shields' place of business. He was only the messenger.

Mr. Shields was petitioned into bankruptcy by his bank. He had paid $230,000 of the $310,000 invoice for the duty to National Revenue in the sure understanding that the Minister of National Revenue would have the classification of his business changed and the funds paid would be returned. Meanwhile, Mr. Shields' lawyer took the matter to the Tariff Appeal Board. It heard the case about 24 months later.

Mr. Shields and his lawyer had a discussion with the dominion customs appraiser. They questioned the definition of the terms "manufacturer" and "assembler". They asked to see the statute or the regulations that described a manufacturer and an assembler. The customs appraiser told them it was not written in the statute or the regulations but was contained in an interdepartmental memo between Deputy Ministers. In orther words, they had assessed a duty upon Lorne Shields for imported components in his product and did not have the statutory or regulatory authority to back it up. They told him that interdepartmental memos were confidential and that he could not see them. The Tariff Board confirmed this fact 24 months later and ordered the return of Mr. Shields' $230,000 duty payment and the cancellation of the $80,000 outstanding balance being demanded by National Revenue.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you about the fairness, justice and equity of the situation, so here is what happened to the major players in this sordid game. Mr. Lorne Shields went into bankruptcy and lost everything. The dominion customs appraiser, Mr. John Peillard, was given a lateral promotion and was moved to the electrical section as an appraiser.

The National Revenue officials, the Assistant Deputy Minister and the Deputy Minister to whom Mr. Piellard reported and took direction went on their merry way collecting their rewards as usual, protected from the commercial world they regulate.

The Minister of National Revenue went to his just reward in the other place, where he sits saying even less today than he said when he was a Member of the House of Commons. His face is still smiling and shining, especially when his monthly pay cheque arrives.

Did Mr. Shields, the victim of this undercover crime, have an MP? Mr. Speaker, I see that you are ready to rise. I would ask the indulgence of the House to allow me to continue. I have just a few more words to say, if you would put that question, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to conclude his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kempling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank Hon. Members for their courtesy.

You might ask, Sir, did Mr. Shields, the victim of this undercover crime, have an MP? In this representative democracy, was he represented in Parliament? Did Mr. Shields' MP try to do something or anything for him? Well, yes, he met Mr. Shields at a social function and said: "Sorry, there is nothing I can do for you". There was no measure of justice, equity or fairness that could be applied to the case of Mr. Shields.

What is Mr. Shields' MP doing today? Well, Sir, he is the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan). What happened to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who was the real mover and shaker behind this sordid economic tragedy? Well, he was defeated in the 1979 election, as he should have been.

Oh, yes, what happened to CCM? They were to benefit from the demise of Lorne Shields' enterprise. Well, they finally bit the dust after consuming almost half a billion dollars in grants and guarantees over a period of years.

As horrible as all that sounds, Sir, it is a true story. I have to ask myself, should not Lorne Shields get some redress? The Government of Canada, through its Ministers and officials, caused a thriving business to go into bankruptcy. Those Ministers and officials knew they did not have the statutory or regulatory authority to levy a tariff bill against him. Regardless, he was put to the wall and thrown into bankruptcy. He was a successful, profitable employer of 200 people, contributing to the GNP and the tax base of the country. Yet through behind-scenes manoeuvring, he was thrown into bankruptcy.

Almost three years from the time Mr. Shields gave the Government a $230,000 cheque, he received a rebate from National Revenue. It went to the receiver to try and pay some of his unsecured creditors.

Again, Mr. Speaker, National Revenue put the knife into Mr. Shields. After using his $230,000 for nearly three years, it did not even pay him interest on the money it illegally took from him. So much for fairness, equity and justice.

I do not know if we can protect people from devious and deceitful public servants. I have received a number of painful phone calls recently, and I know other Hon. Members have as well, from retail clothing store owners who told me that a special inspection was being put in place for textile products that they were importing. This was done without warning. Suddenly shipments were being held at the border, demurrage charges were mounting and fall retail sales were curtailed because the Government had only a handful of specially trained people to do the inspections. Had the situation continued much longer, many retailers would have gone bankrupt. As it now stands, many of them will have reduced earnings because of demurrage charges by the carrier of the goods and because of many lost sales. We need some protection from the Government, perhaps in the way of a court injunction or some other device. I hope that we can deal with this aspect at committee. Let us agree to have a full and thorough hearing before the standing committee so that these matters may be aired.

Let me conclude, Sir, by making a plea. People watching the House of Commons proceedings sometimes comment that our proceedings are irrelevant. They do not understand that this House is a debating forum and that it is the nature of a representative democracy that members bring forward their views on a variety of matters offered for debate and state them as forcefully as allowed.

One of the hallmarks of a democratic society is the measure of fairness, equity and justice written into its statutes. We have an opportunity to repair a statute that is short on those qualities.

Our economy is improving, but any slight bump or hesitation will cause it to fall back. Investors are looking for marks of confidence, indications that someone is seriously looking at the defects in our economic process. We have an opportunity to place a mark that says we have repaired the inequities in our bankruptcy statute and made it fair, equitable and just so that some of those businesses that find themselves financially strapped may have a reprieve or a second chance. If that is not possible, then the distribution of the assets must be done in such a way as to yield the greatest dollar value for distribution to all the creditors.

I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House for allowing me to have extra time to place those comments on the record. When the Bill goes to committee I hope we will have wide-ranging hearings so that we may repair some of the inequities that are present in our economy today.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) on his speech. Obviously he draws upon a wealth of personal experience in this area of the law. I look forward to hearing from the Hon. Member in committee. He would obviously strike terror into the heart of any receiver who dared come near any of his constituents. I commend him for the tenacity with which he has approached the question.

The Hon. Member referred to the glaring inequities in the legislation. One of the most glaring inequities, and I am sure he would agree, is the present status of wage earners who are often consigned to the bottom of the totem pole when it comes to distributing the assets of a bankrupt firm. I should like to ask the Hon. Member what the position of his Party is with respect to the establishment in Canada of a wage earner protection fund, an insurance scheme, which would be financed by contributions from employers. I do not mean from small employers of less than six people, but, rather, from large employers. What is the position of the Hon. Member for Burlington and his Party on the establishment of such a wage protection scheme as recommended by the Senate committee and the Landry Commission?

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the legislation has been around for eight years. It was brought forward in April, 1980 but we have not seen it since in any forum of debate. We intend to look at that question in detail when the Bill comes before committee. At that time we will examine what remedies and protections we can put in for employees.

From 1980 until April 26, 1983 there has been a massive disruption in our economy. What may have been adequate at the time of the Senate hearings is not adequate today. I think the wisest thing would be to take the matter to committee where it can be discussed in full detail. The Hon. Member can attend those meetings and make his contribution.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a supplementary question. In the course of debate on this Bill his colleagues have taken a number of positions. One Member indicated that it is his view that the appropriate means of resolving this question is to establish a super priority for wage earners. The Hon. Member for Burlington is obviously knowledgeable and experienced in this area. Is he prepared to indicate whether he agrees with his colleagues on the establishment of a super priority, or does he agree with his colleagues in the other place that a wage insurance scheme should be established?

Mr. Kempling: I have to repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation has been around for eight years but it has not been before the House for three years and five months. Much has changed in the economy in that time. I think we should hear the witnesses and representatives who come before the standing committee and then make our decisions, based on the realities of today.

My colleagues have commented on this in the past but much has happened since then. Many bankruptcies have occurred and I think it would be best to let the matter go to committee where we can discuss it.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is sincere in his inquiries of the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), he should read my speech of May 19, 1981, which outlines the position of the Conservative Party. This was the only Party to say that wage earners will have a super priority. That was our position then and it is our position today. All I ask the Hon. Member to do is read the speech as he was not the critic at that time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are other Hon. Members rising to ask questions or make short comments? If not, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to make a few comments with respect to this important legislation which, as has been indicated by previous speakers, has been before the House in one form or another for the past eight years. I note that we finally have a reply from the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) about the position his Party takes with respect to the question of the protection of the status of wage earners. The Hon. Member indicated—and other positions on that may be taken by Members of the same Party in the other place, that he does not support the establishment of a wage insurance scheme, as was recommended by all of those who have looked at this issue.

During second reading debate my colleagues have dealt with a number of important issues which arise during any discussion of bankruptcy legislation. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) and others dealt with many of the key economic questions which arise in this important area of bankruptcy. They have noted, and I reiterate, that there has been an explosion in the granting of credit in Canada, there being some $30 billion outstanding in credit.

The Liberal Government's economic policy has not only failed but has resulted in high interest rates and the collapse of consumer demand. Small businesses have been particularly hard hit by this and the level of bankruptcies in Canada has reached historic high. Last year, for example, bankruptcies left behind some $3.6 billion in debts. As well, in 1982 there were over 40,000 corporate and personal bankruptcies in Canada. Many of these resulted in tragic personal losses to the individuals involved as well as to the communities. In the case of corporations which go bankrupt, the spin-off effect can be devastating to a small community.

I must also comment on what in my view is the serious failure of the Federal Business Development Bank to take a tough but fair look at requests for financing, particularly by small businesses, in these difficult economic times. While the Government is prepared to bail out the big boys, the Domes, the Chryslers and the Maislins, for too many small businesses go under when, with a little bridge financing by the Federal Business Development Bank, they would survive. A restaurant in my constituency of Burnaby is a prime example of this. The Federal Business Development Bank turned the owner down flat but he was able to borrow funds from other sources and, fortunately, his operation is thriving today. Had he not been in the position to borrow elsewhere, he might have gone under. That kind of attitude on the part of the FBDB in the face of Government largesse to the big corporations is unacceptable.

Credit is granted far too easily today. Many individuals have accumulated debts which they cannot possibly repay, whether they be credit card or other forms of consumer debt. The advertising which is used to promote credit is, in many instances, overwhelming, and when an individual loses his job he is often completely stranded.

These are some of the serious questions which arise in this difficult area of bankruptcy. I look forward to a careful study of the key issues which arise as a result of the tabling of the legislation. I believe that the committee hearings must be comprehensive and must afford an opportunity to all individuals to make representations as to the impact of this legislation.

At the same time I would note that clearly the time to move forward on changes to this area of the law is now. We have waited far too long for amendments to this archaic legislation. Certainly, as long as the Government is prepared to respond sensibly and with some concern, particularly in one or two of the areas I will be touching upon shortly, I am confident that finally we will see some changes in this area of the law.

By far the most contentious provision of this legislation is the provisions which deal with the priority which is to be accorded to workers who are owed money in the event of a bankruptcy. This is the issue, Mr. Speaker, which has dominated all of the discussions surrounding this legislation from the time that the first Bill, Bill C-60, was tabled in this House in 1975. This Bill was tabled in response to the Tassé report, which was issued by the Government in 1970. This report very clearly documented that there are major flaws in bankruptcy legislation as it presently exists.

The Senate committee which looked into the provisions and studied the subject matter of Bill C-60 heard representations from a broad cross-section of the community. Following its study, it came to the conclusion that the recommendations of the Government in Bill C-60 were fundamentally flawed. That Bill recommended a $2,000 super priority for wage earners over and above secured and preferred creditors. The Senate committee unanimously rejected that approach and, in my view, its reasons for doing so are as sound today as they were when it came forward with its report in 1978.

I would note that again in 1980, following the tabling by the Government of Bill C-12, the Senate committee studied the whole question and paid particular attention to the arguments which had been made in support of a super priority. I note that the Bill which is now before the House, however, contains no super priority whatsoever for wage earners. Rather, it would place wage earners in the same category in which they are presently placed. The only change would be an increase in the overall amount. However, in virtually all instances that would have no impact whatsoever. Obviously changes must be made and made very soon, because far too many working people are left out when it comes to a bankruptcy or receivership.

The two fundamental approaches in this area are either super priority or the establishment of a wage earners' insurance fund. The Conservative Party has indicated that it supports a super priority and is opposed to the establishment of a wage earners' insurance fund, despite the evidence before the Senate committee and despite the unanimous report of the Landry Commission which very carefully examined this whole area.

Before looking at the relative merits of those two solutions, Mr. Speaker, I might indicate the dimensions of this problem. It is very easy to talk in global terms about the devastating impact of a bankruptcy on working men and women in terms of their inability to continue to pay their rent, buy food and pay for the ongoing expenses which they face in these difficult times. This point was dramatically driven home to me when I received a letter from one of my constituents, a young man who graduated from Burnaby Central Senior High School in 1982. I can do no better, Mr. Speaker, that quote from the letter which he sent to me, which very eloquently points to the difficulties facing working people in this area. He said the following:

> During the summer months I entered the work force in hopes of obtaining sufficient funds to attend Simon Fraser University this spring semester. I was able to receive employment with Truwall Construction (Alberta) Limited of Calgary. Truwall met with some financial difficulties and was forced into receivership. I obviously felt bad for all those involved, but felt that reimbursement of wages to employees would most definitely be top priority. Today after several months of correspondence—

That was with the employment standards people in the Alberta employment standards branch.

—I was rudely awakened to the fact that it was not me, the employee, whose concerns were met with first, but those of the Royal Bank of Canada.

I find this to be a gross injustice to all those employees, including myself, who were affected in this manner.

I ask you, my Parliamentary representative, to assist me with this matter and to explain to me why those least able to defend themselves are hardest hit.

My hopes of paying my own way through university, at least for this year, are futile. My only recourse is to burden my more than willing parents with this.

Please consider my complaint.

The letter is signed by Brad Gilmour of Amberwood Place in Burnaby, British Columbia. What more graphic evidence does the Government need of the importance to move quickly to ensure a realistic priority for working people?

As well, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), has been most diligent in pursuing the question of the rights of working men and women at the White Farm Equipment Company of Canada in Brantford, Ontario. I would note that if this company were forced into bankruptcy, the employees there stand to lose over $6 million in fringe benefits and severance pay. We are talking here, Mr. Speaker, of over 1,000 employees. Imagine the devastating impact this would have not only on the employees and their families but on the entire community of Brantford, which is so dependent on this major employer. Once again I want to commend my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant, for his diligence in pursuing efforts to keep this company alive and thriving in order that this bankruptcy will not in fact have this impact.

There are many other examples of bankruptcies in other parts of Canada, including the Maislin bankruptcy, where workers have been left completely out in the cold. The banks have swooped in and taken what assets do remain and have left the employees with nothing. In January of 1982 four building supply companies which were owned by a Vancouver chartered accountant were put into receivership when they could not keep up with their loan payments. The companies had stores in eight different British Columbia communities, many of them small communities. Most of their employees were laid off without any notice whatsoever. Because the companies filed for bankruptcy and the secured creditors swooped in, these employees were once again denied any back pay whatsoever.

As I have indicated, the problem is a real one. It is a growing one at a time of economic crisis and of record bankruptcies in this country.

The question is, then, having recognized the depth of this problem, what is the appropriate response to it? I have noted that there are effectively two alternatives: super priority, as proposed initially in Bill C-60, and the establishment of a wage insurance scheme.

The Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce unanimously rejected the proposal for super priority. I would like to outline its reasons for rejecting this proposal. I remind Hon. Members of this House and those persons who are viewing these proceedings today that this was a unanimous report with both Conservative and Liberal senators concurring strongly. The report stated that super priority, as proposed in Bill C-60, does not achieve the objectives of certainty of payment to the wage earner; promptness of payment to the wage earner; ease and simplicity of administration; and the maintenance of the ability of a borrower to obtain financing for his business operations.

I will deal briefly with each of these points because on each count, Mr. Speaker, super priority does not answer the needs of working men and women. First with respect to certainty of payment to the wage earner, as the committee indicated there is no certainty whatsoever that wages owing by the bankrupt will be paid. In many instances, the assets of the bankrupt will be completely insufficient even to meet the top priority of wages, and often sophisticated lenders might stipulate that their loans will be made to an associated holding company which owns all of the valuable assets, once again leaving workers out in the cold, even in the face of a super priority.

A second and very important point is that the Committee noted that there is no guarantee whatsoever that the payment to the wage earner will be made promptly. Surely Hon. Members of this House will recognize the importance of promptness in making such payments because wage earners must pay their bills on a day to day basis and cannot afford to have significant delays—weeks, months, possibly even longer—in the payment of their claims. So once again, even though they may have super priority on paper, they will, in practice, not receive the funds for many, many months in many instances. Often the assets of the bankrupt company will not be readily convertible into cash and the lender might be very reluctant to borrow money.

Yet another difficulty with the concept of super priority which the Conservative Party supports is the serious difficulties in administration of this proposal. Most significant would be allocation of the burden of this super priority among the secured creditors of the bankrupt. The courts would be clogged with bitter disputes over the relative burden to be shared by creditors, and while the courts are clogged and lawyers are arguing, workers will receive nothing whatsoever.

Finally, I would note that super priority may very well very impair or reduce the credit which is available in a labour-intensive industry. Surely this cannot be an objective which would be sought by Members of the House. The final conclusion of the Senate Committee was that super priority is not the proper method for granting wage earners the protection they deserve.

In the face of that conclusion it is most surprising to hear that the Conservative Party and apparently the new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) are prepared to accept a proposal for super priority which has been soundly rejected by a detailed study of the Senate Committee.

Not only did the Senate Committee look into this question, but following the Senate report the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs established a special committee to examine this whole question of super priority versus a wage insurance scheme. That was an outstanding committee with representatives including the chairman of the committee, who was a former superintendent of bankruptcy and dean of law at the University of Ottawa; Ron Lang, who was a member of the Canadian Congress staff; George Hitchman, who is the deputy chairman of the Bank of Nova Scotia; and Raymond Dufour, vice-president of a major bankruptcy firm. This committee, with broad representation from business, labour, the academic community and bankruptcy trustees, once again examined the relative merits of super priority versus a wage insurance scheme.

What was their conclusion? To no one's surprise, they said that super priority was clearly not the answer and that workers would not be protected by super priority. Instead, this committee again recommended the establishment of a wage earners' insurance scheme.

It is very rare that a committee with representatives from the CLC and the banking community agree on anything, but in this instance the committee was unanimous in saying that working people will be left out in the cold by super priority and that the only answer to giving equity in this area is the establishment of a wage insurance scheme. They recognize that some time would be needed in order to implement this recommendation and they suggested a three-year period in which the Consolidated Revenue Fund should ensure a super priority up to a maximum of $1,000.

We in this Party would be prepared to look at the possibility of some other interim solution, even including the possibility of a super priority for that limited period of time. How the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the Members of the Conservative Party in the House can possibly support a super priority which has been utterly discredited not only by their colleagues in the other place but by a non-partisan committee looking into this question certainly escapes me and, I am sure, those persons who are looking at this area of the law.

I will certainly look forward to the respresentations before the committee hopefully by Mr. Landry, who chaired the committee, by the CLC and many others who will graphically demonstrate that super priority is not in fact the answer. The answer must be the establishment of a wage insurance scheme such as those which have been in existence for some time in France, Germany and the United Kindgom. They have been operating successfully, I might add.

The other major area I would like to touch upon in conclusion is the question of the very difficult times which are facing farmers and the suggestion by the Government that it wishes to insert a provision in Bill C-12 to deal with the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. My Party and particularly the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), who has been in the forefront of efforts to ensure the passage of Bill C-653 as amended where necessary, are prepared to have that Bill passed forthwith. To suggest that farmers and workers should played off against one another in Bill C-12 is obviously completely unsatisfactory.

In conclusion, I look forward to the very serious concerns of the farming community and particularly the working people being brought before the committee for a very thorough and comprehensive study. Change is certainly long overdue but we must ensure that that change is not merely cosmetic.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I am somewhat fascinated by the association which he and his Party has with banks and insurance companies with respect to the question of super priority and insurance schemes. Does he appreciate that under an insurance scheme the workers in a potentially bankrupt company would have to contribute toward payments to an employer that ultimately went into receivership? Does he appreciate the fact that workers would have to contribute money to a firm that might go bankrupt?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid it is the Hon. Member who does not understand the proposal for a wage insurance scheme. I would be pleased to quote for the Hon. Member's edification from the Senate Committee recommendations in this area which stated:

> The Wage Earners Protection Fund would be self-sustaining and maintained by monthly contributions from all employers in Canada, based on the number of employees. Contributions from such a large number of employers would result in modest amounts being paid per employee. The only exception to this universal rule would be that no contributions would be required from employers with fewer than six employees.

That was the recommendation of the Senate Committee, that it should in fact be funded by employers. I also suggest that the Hon. Member might want to read the report of the Landry Commission which again looked into this whole question very carefully and also recommended that the wage insurance scheme should in fact be funded by employers.

Therefore, the suggestion by the Hon. Member that workers would somehow have to contribute is not based upon any recommendation that has come from either the Senate or the Landry Commission. This would be a scheme financed by employers, as are all of the similar schemes in Europe.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, in the same vein, I would point out to the Hon. Member that one of the contributing causes to the increase in bankruptcies are employer costs of one kind or another. He is suggesting to the House that we should increase costs for employers which might, in turn, increase bankruptcies. I think that is predictable.

After 18 years of domination of this House by the NDP-Liberal alliance, is the Hon. Member signalling that there is a willingness on their part to reconsider spending priorities? Specifically, I am wondering if he believes there should be a public sector contribution to this wage scheme and whether he is willing to consider reducing the grants to Crown corporations such as Petro-Canada in order to have the money to make contributions to what I would consider more socially useful purposes which, in this case, would be the protection of wage earners in the country.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Undoubtedly, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) would like to reply to that question. He will have ample opportunity to make his position known and we will all have ample opportunity to do the same at committee stage. I thought that we had an agreement to end the debate at this time and refer the Bill to the committee. With the indulgence of Hon. Members of the House, I suggest that we do that at this time.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I think the Hon. Member's point is well taken. He has accurately stated what the agreement is. If the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) will defer answering the question posed to him until a later time, I suggest that this Bill be referred to committee.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, that was in fact the understanding and certainly I will comment on the coalition between the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party on this Bill on another occasion. We are prepared to see the Bill go to committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1 p.m., pursuant to an order of the House made on Tuesday, September 20, 1983, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 1 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

APPENDIX

of

THE RIGHT HON. MARGARET THATCHER
Prime Minister of Britain to

Both Houses of Parliament in the HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA on Monday, September 26, 1983

The Right Hon. Prime Minister was welcomed by the Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Hon. Jean Marchand, Speaker of the Senate and the Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, Speaker of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Speaker of the House of Commons): May I call this session to order?

Prime Minister, it is a great honour for us to have you address this joint session of the Senate and the House of Commons. I would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to introduce our distinguished guest.

[English]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Madam Speaker of the House of Commons, Madam Prime Minister and Mr. Thatcher, Hon. Members of the Senate and House of Commons, rarely in the history of the Parliament of Canada have its Members issued an invitation to a visitor to address a joint session of the Senate and the House of Commons. Never have we had a more welcome and distinguished visitor than the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, the Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Her visit honours this institution and all of us. It calls to mind the two separate threads which have gone into the weaving of the relationship of our two countries in modern times. I am referring to Great Britain's role in the evolution of Canada as an independent parliamentary democracy, and to the growth of a partnership as strong friends and allies.

Centuries of British parliamentary achievement have fundamentally influenced the quality of Canadian life and liberty. We owe an eternal debt to those whose monumental struggles ended in victories for the British common people, victories which redounded to the advantage of Canadians with much less effort.

One need only recall that when representative government first appeared in Nova Scotia in 1758, and responsible self-government there in 1848, it was as a direct result of parliamentary freedoms won with great difficulty by the Mother of Parliaments at Westminster. Thus it was that the doctrines of parliamentary supremacy and independence took root in eastern Canada and spread across the land, and now constitute the unspoken first statement of every speech in this Parliament and in our provincial legislatures.

The symbols and the reality of Britain's influence upon the Parliament of Canada are everywhere around us. They include the rights and privileges of Members, the very design of this Chamber and the fact, as you know, Madam Speaker, that your chair was a gift to this institution from the Parliament of the United Kingdom.

It is most appropriate to pay public tribute in this place to Prime Minister Thatcher for the crucial role she played in the final achievement of Canada's complete constitutional independence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The people of Canada owe her a very heavy debt of gratitude. We presented her with an extremely difficult problem, a political and diplomatic minefield. But despite an avalanche of contrary advice from Canadian and British sources, she stood resolute in her determination that Westminster would do what this Parliament requested. Thus did she demonstrate her deep and constant respect for the Parliament of Canada as the legitimate voice of the people of Canada.

In a spirit of generosity, understanding and true friendship, she cleared the agenda at Westminster and made sure that Canada's Constitution Act passed through all legislative stages with dispatch. To the long list of the Fathers of Confederation, Madam Speaker, we must certainly now add the name of one Mother.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: The respect and admiration enjoyed by Prime Minister Thatcher in Canada and the rest of the world are essentially due to the strength of character and leadership she has shown in the course of governing her country and in conducting international affairs.

Beyond party or ideological differences, she is universally recognized as a leader whose courage and integrity are equalled only by the strength of her convictions.

Forty-two years ago, her famous predecessor, Sir Winston Churchill, spoke in this House words that inspired Canada and the free world in wartime. Today, now we are about to listen to Prime Minister Thatcher, the real challenge is to inspire the world to support the cause of peace. This, together with the need to guarantee economic recovery, is the most formidable challenge of our time. The external and defence policies of East and West will either lead us to a durable peace or a devastating war. There is no alternative.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization has been the basis on which successive governments in this country have built our defence policy.

The performance of Canada and of the Atlantic Alliance as a whole has proved beyond a doubt that NATO is a sound, united and extremely effective organization, and Canada is proud to have been one of the founding members, together with Great Britain. Thanks to NATO, Europe has enjoyed 34 years of peace. Indeed, this organization offers the West the best guarantees for avoiding a terrible war and creating a durable peace.

This morning, Prime Minister Thatcher and I discussed ways of utilizing this force and solidarity, not only to safeguard our present security but also to increase future security through arms reduction.

Confident in our strength and in the enduring ties of friendship we have created in war and peacetime, we must find the energy and the courage to work even harder at reducing tensions in the world and thus diminish the threat of nuclear war that haunts our nations. There is no other alternative.

Madam Prime Minister, at the Williamsburg Summit, you and I declared, together with our colleagues, and I quote: "We undertake to devote all our political resources to reducing the threat of war. Our vision is that of a world from which the spectre of war will have disappeared for all mankind, and we are determined to see this objective become a reality."

Today, this vision seems even less attainable than it was three months ago. The threat of a nuclear holocaust which hovers over the entire world has taken increasingly frightening forms. Our nations are therefore demanding that we, their governments and leaders, honour our commitment to the cause of peace.

As far as I am concerned, no personal enterprise and no priority other than the pursuit of peace is important enough to take up all my time and energy.

Today, more than ever before in the history of mankind, the survival of our species depends on the courage and wisdom of nations and their leaders.

• (1610)

[English]

At such a time, the peoples of the NATO countries expect more than familiar nostrums from their leaders. They demand vision, resolve and greatness of spirit. It is at such a time, such a time of critical global challenges, that our most distinguished guest has honoured us with her presence. Madam Speaker, I am pleased and proud to present to the Parliament of Canada the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, the Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher (Prime Minister of Great Britain): Madam Speaker, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Prime Minister, Hon. Members of the Senate, Members of the House of Commons:

[Translation]

On this first day of my visit to Canada, it is a great honour for me to speak to you, and especially to do so in this historic Chamber.

Madam Speaker, you and my host, the Prime Minister, are both members of the Francophone community that has contributed so much towards making Canada the great country it has become today.

[English]

Half your title, Madam Speaker, has a familiar ring. If the other half does not, that is because Canada has set a trend of emancipation in Speakers which we have now established with Prime Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: The last time we met was when, as Minister of Science and Technology in Canada, you came to see me as Minister of Education and Science in Britain. That was 11 years ago. Who would have predicted then that together we would achieve this double first?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: I know that some of your parliamentary practices differ from ours. Question time is clearly a different experience for the Prime Minister of Canada if, as I believe, he can pass any question he likes to another Minister for answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: That must keep the Cabinet up to the mark. My colleagues do not even have to be in the Chamber. Last year in the British Parliament we had Canada very much on our mind and, I heard, vice versa.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Thatcher: You referred to this very generously, Prime Minister. And I am proud that my administration was so closely associated with a successful outcome to the process of patriation of the Canadian Constitution. Together we have successfully stored our last piece of colonial furniture in the museum of history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: A constitutional link has, quite properly, been severed. The effect of that is not to weaken but to strengthen our common heritage. We can look freely to the future. For there will be much for Canada and Britain to do together. We are linked in so many important ways. We believe in the same high and honourable ideals. We stand ready to defend our free and independent way of life. We agree on the great purposes which we must pursue in the wider world.

If I may say something about each of these three things, first I will speak about our common ideals. Madam Speaker, people of my generation lived through a period when the fundamental values of western civilization were questioned. The doubters sought to portray them as moribund. They claimed to find more vigorous, more progressive ideas in the communist world. Constantly seeking utopia, they fastened on one false creed after another, avoiding always that least fashionable solution, the reassertion of traditional values.

We have been told that the West has no ideology, that Britain, in a famous phrase, has lost an empire and failed to find a role, that the young lack a sense of purpose and the old cannot provide them with one.

Madam Speaker, it is not true. The ideals which our two countries share are the answer to all the doubters. For centuries we have striven first to win, then to preserve, that freedom and justice without which life has neither dignity nor meaning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: We have learned by experience that the only political system which protects and perpetuates these values is parliamentary democracy. It does so because it allows thought and expression to flower and because the good sense of a mature people is brought to bear on the excesses of governments and of individuals.

These are not the panaceas of political theorists. They are ideas that have worked. Overwhelmingly, our electorates wish to preserve them. Wherever people have been free to choose, they have chosen the path of freedom. The crowded island of Britain and the wide open spaces of Canada are traditional havens for refugees from political persecution and for those seeking a new start in a land of liberty. The number of Canadians from central Europe bear witness to Canada's generosity toward the oppressed.

The western democracies are not short of ideals. We have values and a way of life which are the envy of those who have never known them. I wonder whether we take them too much for granted, for the preservation of freedom and justice needs constant unremitting effort. As Goethe wrote in "Faust":

> He only earns his freedom and existence who daily conquers them anew.

There is a battle of ideas to be won, a battle in which we are better equipped than our adversaries, for our ideas are better. The propaganda campaign to sap the morale of the democracies is relentless. We must meet it by puncturing each spurious argument and by destroying every myth that emerges. We must constantly proclaim our ideals, to our own people at home, to young countries that have yet to choose, to those who live in the shadow of tyranny. It is time for freedom to take the offensive.

Mrs. Thatcher: Canada and Britain, Madam Speaker, share not only common ideals but also, as you have said, Prime Minister, the will and capacity to defend them. At home we recall with gratitude the valour and sacrifice of Canadian troops in two world wars; we remember their achievements and their courage with thanksgiving and admiration. We stood together. We prevailed.

Last year, during the Falklands' crisis, Canada was staunch in her support. We were deeply grateful for your resolve to uphold the rule of law, for the good wishes and encouragement which we received from so many individual Canadians, for the wonderful generosity you showed to our wounded servicemen, widows and families in your many contributions to the South Atlantic Fund.

Canada realized, as we did, that there was a fundamental principle at stake, with application far wider than the South Atlantic—that aggression must never be allowed to pay.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: It did not. And today I thank you for helping to ensure that it did not. Democracies by their nature long for peace, for a world free from conflict and threats. But the reality is that our way of life is threatened. As fellow members of NATO our clear duty is to assess that threat accurately and to ensure that we are able, if necessary, to resist it.

The threat is not one of superior ideas. We have nothing to fear from the bankrupt ideology of the Soviet Union. The combination of political repression and economic failure is plain for all the world to see. The threat comes from the proclaimed goal of Soviet communism to spread its system throughout the world, from the fact that the Soviet Union is engaged in a remorseless military build-up going far beyond the needs of defence, and from the evidence that that country is prepared to advance its aim by the use of force or by the threat of force beyond its borders, as in East Germany in 1953, in Hungary in 1956, in Czechoslovakia in 1968, and recently in Afghanistan and in Poland. More widely, it is seeking by proxy to further its aims in Africa, in the Middle East, in Asia and in Central America.

For anyone who doubted the nature of the Soviet system, its willingness to resort to force careless of the human consequences, the shooting down of the Korean airliner has come as a most terrible and tragic reminder. Our policy must be based on a clear understanding of the people we are dealing with and the system they have shaped. Otherwise, we shall get it wrong. That system was founded and sustained by force. It is structured to resist all political change. We have to live with it not as we would wish it to be but as it is. The task of members of NATO is to ensure that our way of life is never compromised.

That means that we must be strong, strong in capacity—there must never be an imbalance in any range of armament that leads to the conclusion that aggression against us might succeed—and strong in will—the other side must never be tempted to believe that it could win a war against the West. We in NATO threaten no one. We come together not to attack others but to defend our own. We shall engage in the battle of ideas. We intend freedom and justice to conquer. Yes, we do have a creed and we wish others to share it. But it is no part of our policy to impose our beliefs by force or the threat of force. That, Madam Speaker, is the great distinction. And that is where the facile comparisons which we sometimes hear made between the two superpowers founder. There is no comparison between the United States, that great citadel of freedom and justice, and the Soviet Union.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: The United States long possessed overwhelming military superiority over its rival. History will show that no country in that position has ever used power so responsibly. Democracy itself curbs the irresponsible use of power. But, when democracy is absent, when an unfettered executive lives in isolation from the free world and from most of its own people, when this is combined with enormous military strength, there is the real danger to peace.

But, Madam Speaker, we must constantly seek ways of making the world a better and a safer place. The task of reaching genuine agreements on arms control and disarmament is long and painstaking. Nevertheless we must persevere in the hope that we can secure reductions which are balanced and can be verified. Then our defence would still be secure but at a lower level of armaments and expenditure.

In this task in which Canada and Britain are honestly engaged with our NATO allies, we are constantly faced with misleading Soviet propaganda. In the last year or two we have seen a massive attempt to bend the will of western governments by working on the minds of our electorates with bogus arguments. In country after country that attempt has failed. Yet the propaganda continues. Every few weeks there is a further statement from Moscow designed to give an appearance of flexibility. But so far, when these public statements are checked at the negotiating table—the real test of truth—flexibility disappears.

The question, Madam Speaker, is: are the current generation of Soviet leaders ready to negotiate as earnestly as NATO to make the world a safer place? Or, are they so much the prisoners of their system and their history, so wedded to military might that they are unable to rise to the opportunity? Even now, as the moment for Cruise and Pershing deployment in Europe draws near, it is in Moscow's power to ensure, by accepting the zero option, that not a single missile of this kind is put in place. Otherwise, to restore the balance on which our security depends, deployment will begin at the end of this year. Our nerve is being tested. To falter now would be fatal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: But that is not the end of the story. NATO has made other radical proposals for reducing the number of these weapons. We await a serious Soviet response. Now, and for as far as we can see, it must be plain to Moscow that the western democracies will not be seduced by propaganda and will not be cowed by threats.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: Our desire for disarmament is profound. But it is matched by the unshakeable resolve that our way of life shall be secure.

In the wider world there are other great tasks for Canada and Britain in the years to come. Our shared values and traditions and the close and living links between us promise continued co-operation for our own benefit and the benefit of others.

Those living links are strong. Tens of thousands of British families have close relatives in Canada. Around a million British and Canadian visitors cross the Atlantic each year. There are Canadian assets in Britain of over a billion dollars, and Britain is the second largest investor in Canada. Canada has provided a host of distinguished names in British public life and commerce. It has sometimes seemed that half our press is run by Canadians and the other half by Australians.

I head a Government which is deeply interested in Canada. We are both open societies with a world vision born of a special historical experience. The keen interest Canada has taken in the problems of the Third World and the United Nations is proof of a nation with wide horizons.

One of the most valuable legacies of the Empire to Britain has been a world-wide network of interests and of human links so that we could not, even if we wished, become an inward-looking nation preoccupied with our own problems.

At home Britain is changing. Five years ago there was a widespread feeling that our problems were insoluble. That was before we tackled them so vigorously. Now, there is a spreading sense of realism. People are beginning to lose their fear of change. British industry is more confident, more efficient and more productive. The new technologies are flourishing. Jobs have been created in industries which did not exist ten years ago. We have reason to hope that our inventive genius will increasingly be turned to industrial profit. With greater robustness, vigour and enterprise in our society we shall be an even stronger friend and ally.

As you reminded us, Prime Minister, it is over 40 years since another British Prime Minister—and I do not have to tell you which one—stood here and spoke about a chicken which refused to have its neck wrung. I am happy to report that that same chicken is alive and well and as resolved as ever to preserve inviolate that selfsame area of its anatomy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: In 1983 we are better able than we were to work with you to pursue our common aims in the wider world. As founder members of the Commonwealth we have a special opportunity to join with that unique gathering of nations to preserve and extend the heritage of ideals which are the essence of the Commonwealth—freedom based on the rule of law, always under assault somewhere, even in the Commonwealth, but essential to the survival of the civilized world.

As members of the economic Summit, to which you referred, Mr. Prime Minister, Canada and Britain again share a distinctive responsibility to apply the energy and experience of the world's most advanced and successful economies to the serious economic and financial problems which face so many countries, to preserve and extend the world's free trading system, to bring to the developing countries aid, advice and help as they tackle their own formidable difficulties.

As founder members of the United Nations—that organization which has so often disappointed expectation but without which the world would be a worse place—we shall both continue to take a special interest in world security, and in peacekeeping and the work of its specialized agencies.

You on this side of the Atlantic, we in Europe, each have our own special relationships. Just as we rejoice in and welcome the strength of the friendship between Canada and the United States, so we ask you to see the vital importance of the European Community. The process of making a community causes problems not just to its members but to its friends like Canada, and some of its policies have led to sharp disputes. But the Community has an enormous contribution to make to the maintenance of international free trade and to the promotion of our common ideals. In a dangerous world it is a vital area of democracy and stability which Britain is firmly committed to maintain and extend.

Madam Speaker, Canada and Britain seek a better, safer, freer and more prosperous world. We do so because we are protagonists of the timeless values of freedom and justice, because we are both great western democracies, because we are the privileged beneficiaries of a political, social and economic system which is the best man has ever devised and which has incomparably more to offer to the human spirit than the false ideologies of the unfree world.

But let us then proclaim that truth together. Let us tell the world that freedom is on the march. The democracies have the duty to lead. We are strong in belief. We glory in our freedom. We hear the voices of the oppressed and seek for them the justice and the liberty which are our own.

Should future generations have cause to remember us, let it be not only because we helped to stop the spread of tyranny, but also because we left the human race one step closer to its greatest hope—that one day men the world over shall be free.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Marchand (Speaker of the Senate): Prime Minister Thatcher, Prime Minister Trudeau, Madam Speaker, when you were first elected Prime Minister of Great Britain, I was very impressed. A mighty, powerful country like Great Britain electing a woman as Prime Minister is something which is quite new. However, I was much more impressed when you were re-elected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand: After watching you on television this morning, after reading an interview which you gave to a Toronto newspaper, and after listening to your words this afternoon, I understand why your are Prime Minister of Great Britain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand: If I were a woman sitting in this Parliament, I would be very optimistic about my future because you know how closely we follow the British tradition.

Thank you for coming to our country and our Parliament. Thank you for your enlightening address and the wisdom and warmth contained therein. I am confident that your words will not quickly fade from the minds of all here assembled. I hope that others during your continuing visit will have even a brief opportunity to share our appreciation of your experience and the depth of your personality.

[Translation]

We have not forgotten that Great Britain is the world power that made it possible for us to achieve autonomy and subsequently full independence without bloodshed and without suffering the aftermath of forced or violent secession.

Some people believe that the latest step taken has isolated us once and for all from your great country. They are wrong. The heritage we have received from your country, and I am thinking of the parliamentary and legal system, and our social and even our cultural heritage, is among the values we cherish most and which are an integral part of our national fabric.

[English]

Few nations can wear the mantle of mother country as comfortably as yours. It has nurtured this nation through more than two centuries of infancy, often painful adolescence and maturity. If Canada has reached adulthood, it is because it has been given its lead by an understanding, not suffocating, parent. Even our minorities will be hard pressed to point to another nation, another system of government, which grants so much freedom to progress, freedom to dissent, and freedom to be unique.

There is no doubt in my mind that there will always be a special relationship between our two countries notwithstanding their distance and their necessary differences.

[Translation]

On behalf of the Senate of Canada, I wish to thank you, Right Hon. Lady, for accepting the invitation extended by our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and I hope that you will remember your visit here as one of the high points of your distinguished political career.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Prime Minister, in expressing the appreciation of Members of the House of Commons and myself for the wisdom and eloquence of your words, I feel compelled to go beyond the traditional dictums in order to reflect with greater accuracy the depth of our admiration. We are greatly honoured by your presence here today, Prime Minister, and hope that our expressions of gratitude and esteem will convey to you in some small way the warmth and sincerity of our sentiments.

You have personified, Madam Prime Minister, as I sensed very strongly when I first met you, the ideal of the rigorous, dedicated, and resolute leader. In your determination to further the collective wellbeing of those you represent, you have demonstrated only the highest degree of commitment, conviction and tenacity in the face of all adversity. You have established a standard of leadership which no doubt serves as an inspiration and example to leaders of the democratic world.

[Translation]

History has created strong ties between Great Britain and Canada, and although various constitutional changes may have modified the nature of those ties, they have not weakened them. With you, we have learned about democracy and tolerance. Witness our institutions, which bear the imprint of the age-old wisdom of your own, which were the result of experience and not merely a philosophical creation. It has given them a pragmatic quality that is particularly suited to moderating the enthusiasm of inexperience. Our law, for instance, attuned to custom and usage, has in the course of time been able to adapt to the conditions created by our constantly evolving political, economic and social life.

It is part of our debt to your country, and we wish to emphasize that, since the traditions that were brought here by the two founding peoples are mutually enriching. Together with the values of our native peoples and those of our immigrants, they have created a very special attitude, philosophy and way of life. It is a heritage to which your country has contributed very generously, a heritage we cherish and of which we are proud.

[English]

We have learned many lessons from what you have told us today, Prime Minister, and we are reassured that your country is determined to safeguard the peace of all citizens who live in fear of the menaces which are upon us. It could not be otherwise since your country remains a beacon and a fortress of moral values in a world plagued by uncertainties. We stand here today with a consciousness heightened by the experiences of the past several decades, acutely aware of the need for a continued spirit of complicity among the free nations of the planet in their concern over the world's precarious balance of power.

As the prominent leader of one of the greatest of these nations, Prime Minister, with the utmost respect and the warmest affection and gratitude, we welcome you today and thank you for having addressed us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The session is now adjourned.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Minister of State (International Trade)) moved that Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this Bill was before this House at report stage until last Friday when after seven days of report stage debate, a debate which did not involve the question of exports and the need for financing and assistance to our exports but involved the issue of parliamentary accountability, the Government to some extent saw some reason and consented to the amendments which are now part of the Bill as presented to the House at this stage. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, those amendments reduced the gross limit of the Bill from a demand for the right to deal with $62 billion to a demand for the right to deal with $44.5 billion, a $17.5 billion reduction in demand.

Second, those amendments require an automatic reference of the Export Development Corporation's performance to standing committees of the House so that the committees will be able to review annually the performance of this corporation as it works to assist the exporters of our country.

Last, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most dramatic amendment is the change in terms of the borrowing arrangement for the corporation. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that under the Bill presented to Parliament and under the previous Export Development Act, the corporation was entitled to borrow in relation to its authorized capital. That borrowing is now limited to ten times the paid-in capital and retained earnings of the corporation. That in itself is a very dramatic form of parliamentary accountability.

We are not quite sure what the retained earnings of the corporation are at this point, but the corporation can borrow approximately $7 billion because that would be approximately ten times its paid-in capital and retained earnings. That is a far cry from the automatic right to borrow $20 billion without having the Government put any money into the corporation at all.

This has, therefore, been a dramatic action largely led by this Party to make sure that Parliament again would have control over the public purse and would have some element of control over the activities of the corporation. The result of the debate that we have engaged in over the past weeks is proof, Sir, that Parliament can work, proof that if Members of Parliament are prepared to demand that the Crown be accountable, the Crown can be forced to be accountable. I think that is a tribute to the House and, indeed, it is a tribute to the Government that it finally saw the wisdom of the statements made and positions taken by members of this Party in requiring accountability to Parliament.

There are serious problems with the Export Development Corporation. Those problems were, to some extent, referred to by the many speakers who spoke at report stage on the various amendments. Before we finish this debate which, by House order, should finish today, I think it is essential that those particular positions be put to the House again for the record so that the officials of the Export Development Corporation may know where we stand, what we would like done with the corporation and how we would like to see that corporation run to the benefit of the trade of Canada.

There were serious allegations made about the efficiency of the Export Development Corporation in a study done by the Economic Council of Canada. I want to refer to that study first because I think it made a number of references to how the corporation should work. The Economic Council of Canada made a number of recommendations, Sir. I would like to go over those recommendations very briefly with Members of the House so that we can come to some type of consensus and formulate some type of direction from the House to the corporation as to how the corporation might better promote the exports of the country.

At one time, Sir, the corporation was essentially an insurance corporation for an exporter with a receivable from a foreign country or receivables from purchasers or consignees of Canadian goods in foreign countries. That exporter would purchase from the Export Development Corporation insurance coverage to cover all his world-wide export contracts with various countries and consignees. The corporation's basic business interests remained in the insurance field until 1970. It was only after 1970 that the corporation moved into the field of lending money.

A lot of the discussion on this Bill has been about the lending function of the corporation. Perhaps the most important thing the corporation could be engaged in is the insurance field. The Economic Council of Canada dealt with that aspect and said that in its view the corporation should be more involved in the export credit reinsurance and the insurance aspect—in other words, it should get back to where it was before, insuring and reinsuring of exports so that when they give credit on the sale of goods and services they are going to wind up with accounts that are collectable. When goods are shipped to a foreign consignee first of all, it is very difficult to get them back; second, in many cases there is an opportunity to sue in a foreign court; and third, in the process the company's working capital requirements have to be financed. The sale of goods to a purchaser in a foreign country represents risks that are entirely different from those involved in selling goods domestically. It is for that reason that exporters and their bankers demand insurance coverage. We must have a more aggressive insurance and reinsurance coverage.

The Economic Council of Canada talks about developing private markets for insurance, and reinsurance of those private insurers, so that exporters get paid for their goods.

The corporation had better examine the references regarding insurance made by the Economic Council of Canada. I say that because many exporters come to me complaining that they cannot get along with the Export Development Corporation. They say it is too fussy, it does not check credits, it gives small coverage on insurance and it is hard to get along with. One company claimed that the Export Development Corporation is a waste of time and it deals with the American Credit Indemnity Company of New York where they can get insurance at one-third or one-fifth of the cost of the Export Development Corporation's coverage.

Reference was made to the sale of a food conveyor system for an airport in Singapore. Apparently the negotiations with the Export Development Corporation became so cumbersome that they placed the business with the American Credit Indemnity Company where the premium was less. They got the coverage and were paid without any problem. But where was the Export Development Corporation's insurance program? It was working in a very bureaucratic and backward fashion with an attitude that it was not appropriate to the development of the trade.

The Economic Council of Canada suggested that the corporation should withdraw bit by bit from the lending field because there seems to be a limited number of borrowers who get assistance, and almost always it is the same group. For example, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has borrowed about 25 per cent of the money the corporation has lent. Is this financing export or is it financing Atomic Energy of Canada Limited under another heading? I think it is the latter. If we are going to sell atomic reactors, perhaps the Government of Canada should finance the sales but let us recognize it for what it is: it is financing Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, not export sales. Therefore, to a large extent, one begins to wonder whether this is not an implicit subsidy to a relatively few number of corporations which are receiving a subsidy and which perhaps should be designated to them. If they need a subsidy they should have the subsidy, but it should not be buried under the glowing cloak of export assistance when in fact it is corporate assistance to businesses which may or may not be entitled to receive assistance year after year just because of foreign sales.

We must look at what the cost to Canada is for these particular businesses which seem continually to rely on the Export Development Corporation somehow as their banker at low interest cost. That low interest cost is a huge subsidy to these corporations. It does not appear anywhere in the estimates. That is something which we as a nation must look at. This is the kind of thing which the corporation must look at. Is the Export Development Corporation here to finance exports, or is it here to be a source of credit to a limited few which have, for one reason or another, the right to access money at very significantly subsidized rates?

Further, the Economic Council of Canada looks at the question of subsidizing rates, a concessionary financing. There is no question that what we have to do is struggle with our trading partners, with other countries which are leading exporters, and get rid of this business of subsidizing interest rates. That is not a question of fair trade; that is a question of subsidized trade. When we are looking at our tariff policy and at our dumping arrangements, our other trade arrangements, we ought very carefully to examine those countries which give concessionary financing for goods purchased by Canadians from those foreign countries. That type of assistance is non-tariff assistance and should be treated as a form of dumping, a form of subsidizing exports, the kind of thing which, if it is going to continue, will seriously mar international trade. We had better get tough about the matter. It does not do the foreign country in balance any good. It does not do us any good to do it. It is expensive for all of us. We ought to get tough with those who do it by treating the goods which they export to Canada in a fashion different from what they claim to be a fair market basis. We ought to treat them as being pariahs in world trade and penalize them accordingly.

We might well be better off, Sir, as the Economic Council says, when we have a situation where it is a question of exporting goods or of reducing the need for imports, to spend more of our money reducing the need for imports, because that is the other aspect of trade. It is all very well to buy and sell goods all over the world, but sometimes one is just as well off to sell fewer goods and make more of the things and do more of those things at home that one can do at home. I wonder about the airplane business, for example. Are we all that bright in financing airplanes at concessionary rates to foreign purchasers but not to Canadians? Are we all that bright in financing ships for export to foreign countries but not for Canadians? In effect, the Canadian goes offshore to buy his ship because he can get concessionary financing. We sell ships to a foreigner with concessionary financing but not to Canadians. Where are we getting lost? It is not too bright, Mr. Speaker, and it is about time the EDC and the Minister started looking at the situation and saying somewhere along the line that we have to do the business like, bottom line type of thing.

● (1125)

A lot has been said about the New York subway deal whereby we supplied the best part of $1 billion in concessionary rates. Even today they are concessionary rates, Sir. When the loan was committed to the City of New York it represented a subsidy of between 6 per cent and 7 per cent, an enormous subsidy on a per annum basis. Today rates have fallen and it does not represent that kind of subsidy at all, but it still is a small subsidy. The loan was justified on the basis of creating employment, but 40 per cent of the employment is American. The loan was justified on the basis of the export of our technology, and so on, to that great market in New York. At the same time we have cities in Canada which need commuter service, subway cars and so on, so should we not be offering that kind of financial assistance to our own people before we offer it to those around the world? When do the people of the City of New York have the right to assistance from Canada before the people of Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver?

Mr. Nystrom: Or Yorkton.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says Yorkton.

I would like to move, Mr. Speaker, to the question of other types of financing that we might look at. We have before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs a reference with respect to foreign banks. You will know, Sir, that under the Bank Act we have allowed some 58 foreign banks to operate in Canada. The reason for this is that our banks, which were certainly not large in terms of foreign business 15 or 20 years ago, have now become quite dominant in some foreign markets. Indeed, they rank high in a list of international banks doing business around the world. What we have to look at is the extent to which we can use our own Canadian bank network to promote and finance our trade and the extent to which foreign banks operating in Canada can help us with financing our foreign trade. After all, one of the reasons for bringing in a foreign bank to the country, presumably, is to finance trade activities. By and large they are not there to look after the ordinary citizens' deposit or chequing accounts or that type of thing; they are interested in commercial activity, and what we ought to look at in licensing foreign banks is their willingness to assist in financing Canada's export trade.

During the debate a great deal was made of the efficiency of the operation itself. The corporation's executives have probably heard to the full the fact that in their last year's report they indicated they had 613 employees, approximately ten employees for every loan customers. The fact is that they made about 120 loan transactions but with only 62 separate customers. Therefore, that corporation had ten employees for every loan transaction.

Then one goes on to the insurance account and finds that it wrote about 900 new insurance policies. It has about 1,320 insurance accounts, but it wrote 900 new insurance accounts, amounting to one and a half insurance accounts for every employee.

When one finds that the corporation has offices in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax and, of course, here in Ottawa, one begins to wonder, in view of the size of the corporation and the kinds of things it is doing, why it needs all this help and all these offices. After all, if it is only involved in 900 new guarantee deals in a year and if it has only 62 customers to whom to lend money, why does it need over 600 employees? The answer is that it does not.

No reasonable person could ever suggest that the corporation is efficiently and effectively managed. I say that because of the straight statistics produced by the corporation. The corporation may say that it must be very careful when it gives a credit line to a foreign country, that it must check out the economy of the country and ensure that the credit is worth while, and that it is necessary to employ economists and so on. I ask why? We do have a Department of External Affairs. We do have embassies and consulates around the world. Surely we do not need a duplicate arrangement involving the Export Development Corporation.

I therefore say to Your Honour that there is a great deal of room for fat trimming in the corporation. It is my hope that with the promise of the Minister that his new board of directors, which will now total 15, will have a significant private majority, this directorship will be comprised of people who will not be yes men or yes women. I hope these people will take a hard-nosed look at the activities of the Corporation, its employees, its expenses such as travelling costs, and, if necessary, contract out some of the work of the corporation. Is there any reason the corporation's insurance should not be available in major insurance offices around the country? Is there any reason the banks of the country should not be directly capable of dealing with the Export Development Corporation on their own, placing the paper, receiving the guarantee, much the same as they do under the Small Businesses Loans Act, for example? There is no reason at all.

I say to Your Honour that a great deal of overhead being carried and a great deal of bureaucracy could easily be eliminated. I hope that the private sector appointees will very quickly turn around this image created by 613 employees handling 62 loan accounts and 900 new insurance policies. We must have a bottom line board of directors, and the Minister had better appoint a bottom line board of directors. Perhaps there have been further additions as of this year, and I am not exactly sure what the paid-in capital of the corporation is at this point, but as of the end of December, 1982 the corporation had $651 million in subscribed capital and retained earnings. On the $651 million, it earned $1 million. This is perhaps less than one-tenth of 1 per cent; I am not very good at mathematics. However, the return was $1 million on $651 million. That is a pathetic return. That return represents an implicit subsidy to those persons and corporations who received export concessionary financing. Bearing in mind the fact that during 1982 the Government of Canada was paying on the average 15 per cent for its money, the $651 million really cost us 15 per cent, or very close to $100 million. For the $100 million we received back $1 million. The subsidy then was very close to $99 million.

When we are paying out that kind of subsidy, and that is what we did, we had better make sure that Canada is getting value for the subsidies. A new, hard-nosed private board of directors had better be appointed to review the situation, because the matter will be coming back to the House of Commons next year. As soon as the corporation's next annual report is through, it is required that the report be referred back to the House's Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. That is one of the amendments that was put through on Friday. I am sure the committee will be asking those very questions, and I am now drawing the amendment to the attention of the Government and to the directors of the corporation.

There are a great number of things that we need to do concerning trade in Canada. We rely on foreign trade. We are a country that produces some basic commodities in huge amounts. They must be sold to the world. We are a country that has some of the most highly educated young people in the world, probably a higher percentage than anywhere else. Those young people are learning skills and trade in highly technical fields. Our exports of technological equipment can beat down doors of the world markets. We need an export corporation and we need financial assistance and the drive and the enthusiasm of people out there to encourage our producers to produce and to sell our goods. The challenge of the corporation is to move Canada ahead in trade.

Unfortunately, over the years we, as a country, have slipped in the percentage of world trade. At one time we had very close to 6 per cent of the world's trade. We are now down to well less than 4 per cent of the world's trade. We have gone down about 50 per cent from our former position, and that cannot continue. We in this nation rely on trading with others for our prosperity. The corporation is one of our front line tools for trade. It had better start acting efficiently, effectively and dramatically to encourage and build our trade, or we in this House of Commons will want to know why.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who has declared that he is strongly in favour of added incentives for exporters in Canada, if this debate being conducted by the Official Opposition is a filibuster. I would ask him how many speakers he has put up on behalf of that Party in an attempt to stop us from coming forward with the increased funding that is necessary to do the job on behalf of Canadian exporters.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member was not here on Friday but he can be excused. The issue in the debate was that of parliamentary accountability. It had nothing at all to do with trade.

Mr. Thomson: He does not understand.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is right. He does not understand that. He does not understand because at some point he has taken the attitude that the Government knows best and he believes anything the bureaucracy tells him.

If he could read financial statements he would know that there was no need for this Bill to be passed in a mad rush. If there was any urgency the Government would have introduced the Bill for debate much sooner than last week. Even last week, with the most optimistic trade possibilities, the Government had enough credit on hand to finance Canada's exports without any additional capital requirements, or borrowing limit requirements, without any additional money toward order in council awards or order in council insurance appointments.

If the Hon. Member cares to examine the financial statement, he would find that at ten times the subscribed capital and earned surplus in the corporation it could borrow roughly $7 billion. He would also find that the corporation only owes the marketplace $4.5 billion. Therefore he would know that the corporation had the right to borrow well over $2 billion without this Bill ever coming before Parliament.

The Hon. Member does not understand the Bill yet he stands here and asks questions. He asks how many speakers we have put up. While I do not have the exact number, there are about 153. He asks why they were speaking. It is so that Parliament and Members of Parliament could ensure that this corporation and the Government which that Hon. Member represents is accountable to Parliament and not the bureaucracy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair ought to remind Hon. Members that questions, comments and replies should be brief and to the point. Is the Hon. Member standing to be recognized for a further question?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that they cannot oppose the substance of what we are attempting to do, which is to facilitate the efforts of the Export Development Corporation in doing its job in a much expanded way on behalf of the private sector in this country. But what have they done? They got on the high horse of parliamentary accountability.

If the Opposition intends to adopt this practice not only with a Bill through which we are attempting to help those people who can really make our economy move in the days ahead but with every Bill we introduce, I simply want the Canadian people to know that that is obstruction and not constructive criticism.

Mr. Nickerson: What is your question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I have heard other Hon. Members ask what the question was. Standing Order 35(1) provides for questions or comments and replies thereto.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the reply is clear. This Party will stand up for Canadians, talk in the House and put forward constructive amendments. We will make sure that the agencies of the Government and the Government itself are accountable to Parliament. We will make every effort and speak as long and often as necessary to make sure that that occurs. For the Hon. Member to say that this is a Bill with respect to trade and that our debate concerns trade is not to understand what occurred here for the past two and a half weeks.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Opposition is supportive of our efforts to aid the private sector to do its job of increasing our share of world trade. I am glad that they have come to that admission lately, however reluctantly.

If the issue is credibility, I would invite the Hon. Member to review the speeches which have been made in the House by Hon. Members from this side, including myself, dealing with the ways in which the Export Development Corporation is accountable to the people of Canada through our institution of Parliament. Let me summarize some of the ways in which that corporation is accountable. It is accountable to the Auditor General, the Comptroller General, the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates when additional borrowings must be approved, and to the Minister who is answerable in the House. He is an excellent Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) who has been making great efforts on behalf of Canadian exporters to make their goods known and better recognized in the marketplace of the world. It is through that approach that we have accountability.

The Opposition may not want that exact approach and prefer to have an opportunity to approve every single additional issue when the Export Development Corporation has to go to the marketplace. Surely that is an unreasonable constraint to impose on any operation which has to be flexible in meeting the needs of Canada's exporters. The House does not sit all year long and it must also deal with many other issues that come before us. Imagine what would happen if every new issue that the EDC wanted to bring out had to be brought before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member has gone on for an additional two minutes. I think he has made his point.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member did not read the Bill. He will find that under the existing Act, and as it was amended on Friday, borrowing by the Export Development Corporation can take place without the corporation ever coming to the House and without ever having the approval of any committee of the House.

Mr. Forrestall: Or without the Minister's approval.

Mr. Blenkarn: Indeed, without the Minister. Though it may have some problems with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). He will know that the controls which we wanted were ones which the Minister finally gave us. They demanded that there be some equity capital relationship between borrowing and debt. We would then have some element of control over what the corporation in fact borrows so that it cannot get itself into some of the problem situations such as companies like Canadair and de Havilland were allowed to get into by the Government. We have been very responsible by forcing the corporation to have a relationship in borrowing ten times the paid-in capital and retained earnings of the corporation. That kind of change, which the Government finally accepted on Friday after resisting it for seven days of debate, makes quite a difference in the control that Parliament and the people have over this corporation and its actions.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to be fairly brief this morning but I wish to continue the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary about the amendments that passed through the House on Friday. I also wish to talk about the Bill itself in general.

There were two significant points about the amendments which were passed on Friday with all-Party support. The first was that there will now be more accountability to Parliament and its committees by the Export Development Corporation. I think that is a very good and positive step. It is the kind of step which should be taken with other Crown corporations in this national Parliament.

The Province of Saskatchewan, under the premiership of Tommy Douglas back in the 1940s, established a special Crown corporations committee of the legislature on which sat Members of all Parties. The annual reports of the provincial Crown corporations are referred automatically to that committee each and every year. Also, every year the officers of the Crown corporations must go before the committee, talk about their plans and justify what they have done in the year gone by. That is a very good step. It is the kind of thing we should have in this Parliament where automatically the reports of Crown corporations are referred to the relevant committee for cross-examination and discussion by Parliamentarians. I think that is very important.

I am a very strong supporter of Crown corporations. I suppose that is true of all Parties, including the Conservative Party. I can look at Peter Lougheed in Alberta with PWA and his investments in the oil industry, or Bill Davis in Ontario with the purchase of part of Suncor and other Crown corporations. I can look at the federal Crown corporations and the ones we have established in the three Provinces which we have governed in the last number of years. It is very important that they be more accountable and more responsive to the wishes of Canadians. That is the message we tried to get across in this debate, and we have succeeded to a certain degree by the amendments that were accepted last Friday.

The second important point about the amendments is that Parliament finally has a little say over what a Bill should contain or what the EDC should look like, rather than the Cabinet or the executive exercising an almost autocratic say in a situation where we have a majority Parliament. I think that is a good step as well. Where we have a majority Parliament in our system, all too often because of the hang-up on the confidence vote, the lack of free votes or things of that sort and the lack of clout of committees, the executive, the Prime Minister's office or the Minister's office, has much too much power and Parliament itself has much too little power. Those were the two very significant points about the amendments which all three Parties supported last Friday to Bill C-110 respecting the Export Development Corporation.

Another point I want to make is that this is only a beginning. We have to move more and more toward a system of economic democracy where ordinary citizens, workers, farmers, consumers, producers and business people have more say over the economic direction of the country. For years we have talked about and exercised political democracy and voted every two to five years. The time has come in the twentieth century to start talking about the ways and means of achieving real economic democracy so that the ordinary citizen, regardless of one's income, has more influence upon the direction of society. I believe we can do that as well in the Crown corporations of this land.

World trade is very important for Canada. In fact, it is more important in our country than in most other countries of the world.

[Translation]

International trade has always been very important to Canada, because we do not have a large population, compared with the United States, France, Japan and other countries. In Canada, international trade represents about 25 per cent of our gross national product. In the United States, it is 12 or 13 per cent of GNP, the same in France and Germany, and perhaps less than 10 per cent in Japan. Export development is very important for creating jobs for Canadians, more 80 for us than for other countries, with the exception, for instance, of New Zealand, Australia and other countries with a small population. Mr. Speaker, the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) said earlier that our share of international trade has shrunk considerably in the last twenty years. For instance, between 1972 and 1979, it dropped from 4.9 per cent to 3.4 per cent. In only seven years we had this substantial drop in our share of world trade, notwithstanding the Export Development Corporation, the Government of Canada and all the speeches made by the Prime Minister and other Ministers during that time. Another interesting figure shows that between 1969 and 1979, the market share of Canadian exports dropped 33 per cent. That is a lot.

[English]

With those kinds of statistics it is easy to see that, despite the fact trade is so important, our share of world trade is falling. This is one reason more and more people in the country are unemployed each and every year.

World trade is becoming more and more aggressive. We can look at the French, Germans, Japanese, Americans, British and even the Third World. Despite the fact that we in Canada have increased our exports dramatically, in the last ten years or 15 years our share of world trade has fallen.

I would like to indicate one more specific which I think puts into perspective the need for being more aggressive and ensuring that we are more competitive with the French, Germans and Japanese. Between 1969 and 1979 we increased our trade at an annual rate by some 15.1 per cent. We may say that that is a tremendous increase or growth in our trade, but developing countries increased their trade at an annual rate of 23.1 per cent, or 8 per cent faster than Canada. My feeling is that we will go more and more slowly in terms of our increase in trade in comparison with the rest of the world.

I want to spend a minute or two on other matters which are very relevant to the Export Development Corporation and to trade in general. I do this because of the tremendously high unemployment rate in the country. I refer to our failure as a nation in expanding our manufacturing base. I see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) in the House. He has often mentioned our failure as a country to develop, protect, expand, modernize and make competitive our manaufacturing base with the Europeans, Japanese and Americans.

Back in 1970 our deficit in manufactured goods was $2.5 billion. In 1981 our deficit in finished goods had risen from $2.5 billion to $21 billion—a tremendous deficit in finished products. In finished products we have many skilled jobs with which to put people to work. The EDC must do a much better job in terms of financing, insuring and promoting in every way it can under the Act the export of Canadian manufactured goods around the globe. Perhaps it is one of the sad commentaries in our country that since its inception, or even earlier, we have been an exporter of raw materials and an importer of finished goods. If we go back to Samuel de Champlain in 1608, the French exported beaver pelts from Canada and purchased finished goods in return. We are no longer exporting great quantities of beaver pelts, but we are still following the same philosophy of exporting raw material and importing finished goods. The EDC has to do something to try to change that trend.

The other point that disturbs me about the Export Development Corporation and our trade in general is that too much of the export financing done by the EDC, and I think the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will agree with this, is going to a few large companies and much too little is going to small business.

I believe that the large multinational corporations are powerful. They can look after themselves. They have a lot of funds, resources and contacts around the world. The EDC does not have to worry about financing many of these big corporations in different parts of the world. Instead, it should be concerned about helping the small business people across this country.

A couple of years ago a special committee of this House studied the possibility of establishing a national trading corporation. In its report, it stated that 37 per cent of businesses in Canada did not know the Export Development Corporation even existed and only 29 per cent of businesses in this country ever used the EDC. It shows there is something missing when only 29 per cent use EDC and only 62 per cent know it exists. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) may want to comment on this later.

In its statement of May 24 last, the Economic Council of Canada said to us that between 1969 and 1980 only 16 companies had availed themselves of over 50 per cent of the loans from the Export Development Corporation. One company had a loan on 40 different occasions between 1969 and 1980. Some 138 companies used EDC loan financing between 1969 and 1980. There were 415 loans, and 16 companies accounted for well over half of the loans from the Export Development Corporation. That is another point that is very important. If the EDC is to be seen to be working and efficient, it should put more emphasis on aiding and assisting small business in this country, which employs 60 per cent or more of the Canadian population.

Those are some of the important matters that we should look at. There are a number of other points on trade and the EDC that I have mentioned at other times. One is that we must ensure that our trade policy jibes with our foreign policy, that we not just try to make a buck for the sake of a buck, but that there be some moral purpose to the kind of trade we are trying to develop. As I mentioned, we should try to push more manufactured goods.

I have often tried to point out to the House that before we can have a proper trade policy, we need a proper economic and industrial policy so that we know where we are going. We need a more planned economy. We should specialize in a few areas that are natural to our country. We should modernize our industry so that we can preserve some jobs and create others. These are some points the EDC should be working on as well.

In conclusion, I am pleased that last Friday afternoon we reached an all-Party agreement to make the Export Development Corporation more accountable to this House. A number of people worked on this for quite some time. I hope the Government will look on this as a precedent and automatically refer the annual reports of all Crown corporations to the relevant committees from here on in. This is very important because of the number of Crown corporations that we have. Most of us in this House support Crown corporations. We must ensure that they are accountable and are in step with the policies and wishes of the Parliament of Canada.

The last point I want to make is that this Parliament should have more say over Government policy when we have a majority Parliament. All too often it is the executive or the Prime Minister who run the show and want to use us as a rubber stamp. In a healthy democracy in the twentieth century we need to have more legislative input and clout from the ordinary Member of Parliament. It is time we had some radical parliamentary reform so that we can move in that direction. I do not see why the Prime Minister should have the right in our system to appoint heads of Crown corporations and to appoint unilaterally heads of regulatory agencies and national boards. If we are to have a truly democratic parliamentary system, the Prime Minister should only nominate. That nomination should go before the relevant committee of this House. The committee would cross-examine the nominee and either ratify or reject the nomination of the Prime Minister. That would be true parliamentary democracy. I hope that is the direction this Parliament will go in the years that lie ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Question, comments, debate?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I first want to indicate to the Members why the Minister responsible, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), is not here today. The Minister is attending the quadralateral meetings at Meach Lake which Canada is hosting on questions of international trade. He has asked me expressly to thank the Members of the House for the co-operation they have given, especially on Friday when we were able to reach a rather monumental agreement and come to a House Order to pass this through third reading today.

I would like especially, with the Minister's admonition to me, to thank the Hon. Members for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Members on this side of the House who have been instrumental in bringing concerns to the attention of the Minister which ultimately resulted in the amendments that were made at report stage on Friday and which are now part of the Bill that will receive third reading today.

In my role almost as a mediator between sides, I found it a very exciting prospect to find ways to accommodate the valid expressions of concern of the Opposition and the very valid need for moving forward with necessary legislation on the part of the Government. I can assure Members on both sides of the House that I intend to play that role as actively as I possibly can in the future to see whether we can make Parliament work the way all of us want it to make it work—much more effectively, moving forward with legislation on which all of us can agree.

There is no doubt that the legislation was necessary. The Export Development Corporation has a very vital function in our economy. The way our economy is structured, certainly international trade cannot be anything but seen by this House as being of the utmost importance, and the Export Development Corporation facilitates that greatly. I was interested in some of the comments made by the Members for Mississauga South and Yorkton-Melville. I am sure some of those comments will be reiterated by other Members as the debate continues.

Through the amendment process we have emphasized the notion of accountability of Crown corporations to Parliament, although I would say that accountability to Parliament on a less frequent basis was certainly part of the legislation as it was brought before us. Parliamentary accountability through the reference of the annual report, should we continue with the provisional rules now before the House, would have been the case in any event. The amendment brought forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South ensures that should the provisional House rule not continue beyond the deadline that we have set for ourselves in the trial period, automatically that annual report will be referred to committee, should there be changes to the Standing Orders away from what we now have. It was always our intention that these changes to the Standing Orders would continue and, therefore, the annual report of the Export Development Corporation would have automatically been referred to a committee for scrutiny. We have a different form of parliamentary accountability perhaps from the point of view of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and others, and that accountability has been strengthened. Certainly I was always of the opinion that the Export Development Corporation would have to be accountable to Parliament in a very meaningful way even as the Bill was originally introduced.

I was interested to hear the comments made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South with regard to the Economic Council report. That was a report we in committee looked at with great care. Indeed, representatives of the Economic Council came before the committee to make representations about the Export Development Corporation and to present their report on export financing. I too share the concerns of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and others with regard to the role of the Export Development Corporation vis-à-vis the role of other private sector intermediaries in financing foreign trade.

During those committee hearings we heard a great deal with regard to how other countries come to joint arrangements between private sector financial intermediaries and state controlled export financing arms. I would hope that in the future we in Canada would indeed see some movement toward more joint ventures and more loan guarantees made by the Export Development Corporation to ensure not only the widest possible range of export financing mechanisms available but that the market penetration of sound export financing can be as deep as possible without having to depend solely on one agency.

My hon. friend referred to the 613 employees of the Export Development Corporation. Contrary to his views, when one is talking about penetrating a massive market with tens of billions of dollars worth of export, 613 is really quite a small number of employees to do the kind of job that we would like to see done in the export financing field. I would hope that those 613 employees could be used more intensively through the use of joint ventures with private sector financial intermediaries.

Expanded coverage and the presence of export development financing through the Export Development Corporation to a wider range of firms are ideas that we in the Finance Committee were very concerned about and we probed quite deeply into those matters. I would certainly be of the view that the facilities of the Export Development Corporation should first be made known and then made available to a much wider range of firms, and I refer both to the nature of export business as well as to the size of firms.

Obviously, given the size of the Export Development Corporation, export financing through the corporation will be more favourably disposed toward export financing for very large deals through very large firms. I believe it was the original intention of the Export Development Corporation to finance the very large deals that the private sector would be reluctant to finance. I can certainly see a role, however, for the Export Development Corporation, through loan guarantees and other kinds of joint arrangements, in making its facilities available to the smaller firms that have a very important role to play in the export future of the country.

With regard to the area of co-operation, I might, Mr. Speaker, just as an aside, say a few things about the structure of our private financial intermediation system. At the moment, as you know, Mr. Speaker, there are certain restrictions on our financial institutions with regard to the nature of business that they can undertake in the marketplace. The chartered banks, the Canadian owned and operated banks, the Schedule A banks, have restrictions on the kinds of things that they can do. Subsidiaries of foreign-owned and controlled banks, our Schedule B banks, have very serious restrictions on the kinds of business that they can undertake. That matter is currently before the Finance Committee and we are about to make recommendations with regard to how we should look at the question of Schedule B banks, what the nature of their presence should be and whether or not some of the restrictions, in particular the 8 per cent ceiling, should be changed or not.

Certainly these institutions, the chartered banks, the Schedule A and B banks, the trust companies, credit unions, co-ops, caisses populaires and insurance companies have in the past been separated into specific sectors of financial intermediation. My own personal view is that as a result of this we have precluded a great many innovative and creative arrangements that are now being undertaken in other countries to facilitate the financing of domestic and export operations that we could enjoy here in Canada.

I would hope to see the Export Development Corporation form part of the renewed, reinvigorated and renovated system of financial intermediation that I see evolving in the minds of many parliamentarians here. This new system of financial intermediation could create the framework that would facilitate the kinds of changes that we have all been talking about with regard to trust company legislation and the kinds of changes that have been asked for with regard to life insurance and general insurance legislation as well as legislation with regard to caisses populaires, credit unions and other forms of financial intermediaries.

A more flexible and broader based set of financial institutions in the country could certainly compete in many different markets outside of those which are currently available to them. The Export Development Corporation then could play a very major catalytic role by ensuring that export financing was made widely available in the country, not only to large firms but to small firms and to a wider array of economic and commercial activities.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the comment made by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville who said that he was a great advocate of a planned economy. The only thing that I could say about that is that "planned" has a tendency to become obsolete, which is why we have the phrase "planned obsolescence".

I am very much opposed to the notion that the state somehow has the kind of insight and intuition that would make it possible for it to plan the future from the centre. I do not think we can do so, and certainly the view of the Government is that we should not even try to do so.

The essence of what I have been saying, Mr. Speaker, is that we need to try to make our economic system, and especially in this case our system of financial intermediation and arrangement of financing, more flexible, more adaptable and more driven by the real needs and demands for services in the marketplace. It certainly is not my view that we can somehow plan and direct where financing should take place and what kinds of businesses certain financial intermediaries should engage in. Perhaps in the 1940s and 1950s when things were so much simpler, it was possible for governments to say: "This is an area of business that you as a financial intermediary can get into and this is an area that another financial intermediary can get into but you cannot compete with one another."

If our intermediaries are going to be able to compete in today's world, if they are to be first-rate and provide the best and cheapest services to Canadians for the purposes we all want to see, then we will have to have financial intermediaries that are capable of adapting and changing and working together by coming to joint arrangements and finding ways of providing those financial services at the cheapest possible cost in the most efficient ways. That means more flexibility, more adaptability and that we need to have a bottom-up type of financial system as opposed to a top-down, centrally planned financial system. I think that that kind of a view toward financial intermediation and financial institutions in the country is precisely the same kind of view that we will have to take toward an industrial policy, because an industrial policy that is top-down directed will be just as inflexible and prove over time to be just as obsolete and ineffective as would a financial system that is top-down directed. It has to be bottom-up, market-oriented and responsive to changing needs.

If anything is certain in the future of this country, it is that change will occur as fast as it has in the past, not slower. There is no time for bureaucratic adjustment to change; it has to be bottom-up. What the Government has to do is to ensure that it can remove the barriers and restrictions that may hold up the development and growth of the economy and our financial institutions. They must provide the kind of flexibility that will facilitate change so that we can create the jobs and wealth that the country needs in the future.

The Export Development Corporation has a vital role to play because it is oriented toward megaproject financing. As many Hon. Members have said, it needs to take into consideration how it can work as a catalyst with private financial institutions in the future to get financing from them as opposed to depending on parliamentary approval for major infusions of new capital. We are talking about a maximum of $15 billion in lending from the Export Development Corporation. I cannot see a situation where Parliament would be willing to expand that base greatly. We must find ways to get the maximum leverage out of that $15 billion and the other facilities available to the Export Development Corporation in order to improve ways that our Schedule B banks, our Schedule A banks and other financial institutions can expand export financing and Canada's presence in export markets.

Hon. Members opposite have put forward very good ideas on this subject. The Export Development Corporation should not see itself as a "stand alone" agency doing most of its financing out of its own coffers; it should be a catalytic agent to ensure that financing for megaprojects is done but also that, through loan guarantees and other mechanisms, smaller firms have access to export financing.

I should like to thank Hon. Members for their co-operation. The Minister is grateful for the co-operation that has resulted in the House order that will see the legislation pass third reading this afternoon. In my role with the Government House Leader, I look forward to seeing that kind of co-operation in the future to ensure that we move the nation's business ahead as the people expect.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could advise us whether the international trade meeting is dealing with concessional financing, which is implicit in this Bill?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the full agenda that is before the Minister. I know that he is having discussions with other ministers of international trade and I believe that later today he will make a full announcement about the agenda and the agreements reached. I understand that great progress is being made and, like the Hon. Member, I look forward to the Minister's statement.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I should like the Hon. Member to clarify some of the statements he made which I believe referred to his philosophy of planning. Do I understand him to say that he does not believe the federal Government should be involved in planning, that there should be no federal planning, that it should be a laissez-faire country and that the federal Government has no responsibility to lead in this area? That is really what he said—that he does not believe in federal planning.

Then he talked about bottom-up planning. As a Liberal, how does he think he is going to relate to any bottom-up planning in western Canada where there is absolutely no representation in the Liberal Party?

He also referred to planning by financial institutions. The last group I would want to leave planning to in my part of the country is the financial institutions. It seems to me that sound planning must involve regions, communities, labour groups and management. It should not be left to the financial institutions. Is the Hon. Member's philosophy the Liberal Government's philosophy? It seems to me that it is, at least the laissez-faire aspect of it.

This Party believes in co-operative planning. We believe in planning with regions, with different sectors of the economy, but we certainly believe that the federal Government has the responsibility to take leadership in economic matters.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think the difference between what the Hon. Member is talking about and what I am talking about is that I was expresssing the point of view that the best planning comes from the people and not from organizations of people, as the Hon. Member might suggest. Community groups are not the community, and governments are not the people and often do not have consistent views of what the people want. I did not mention planning by financial institutions; I was talking about—

Mrs. Mitchell: Leave it to the banks.

Mr. Evans: The Hon. Member says leave it to the banks. In western Canada major financial institutions are called credit unions and are supposedly owned by all members of the credit unions. I was talking about an expanded horizon for all financial institutions. Those with the smallest horizons at the present time are trust companies, credit unions and caisses populaires. They have an ability to compete and take on these other financial institutions in head to head competition. The people will decide where the best financial intermediation takes place and who is providing the best services. If the institutions that the Hon. Member and her Party dislike so violently do not provide the services that the people want, then there will be massive growth in credit unions, caisses populaires, small trust companies and other forms of financial intermediaries.

That is the view of the world that I have—let the financial institutions compete. The average, individual Canadian will then decide the structure of our financial institutions because they will choose the one that provides the best service at the lowest price, which meets their needs in the best way. That is bottom-up planning—let the people decide through head to head competition those who want their money. That is bottom-up planning, not having a—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, order.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, after hearing that dissertation I think the Hon. Member opposite should move across the floor. He says he does not approve of the central planning operation and he wants our economy to be market oriented. I totally agree with him on that. Why is it that in Canada 50 per cent of the Gross National Product is controlled by Crown corporations, federally and provincially? We are running toward state capitalism as fast as we can and the Government is at the head of the parade. I do not understand the Hon. Member's remarks in this context.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should look at the facts over the last 15 or 17 years and ask where the greatest growth of Government has occurred. It occurred not at the federal level, but at the provincial and municipal levels. If the Hon. Member does not understand the philosophy of the Government and how my philosophy is consistent with that, then I certainly cannot understand that his philosophy is consistent with the action taken by every Conservative provincial government in the country. I do not think free enterprise is inconsistent with Liberalism.

If the kind of things which myself and this Government are being accused of are so inconsistent, or if I do not fit into this Party because I hold these views, then I certainly feel the shoe fits on the other foot as well, because it has been the provincial governments, and the municipal governments under the control of the provincial governments, which have shown the largest insurgence into all areas of our economy in the past 15 to 20 years. It has not been the federal Government.

It has been in the provincial governments, and the municipal governments under the control of the provincial governments, where the greatest incursions into individual freedoms and actions have occurred. I find nothing inconsistent, Mr. Speaker, with what I am saying. I feel my beliefs are totally consistent with those of my Party, and I will continue to profess them.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), directed to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who spoke earlier on behalf of the New Democratic Party, he seemed to express the opinion that Government planning necessarily implied planned obsolescence. Perhaps there is something lacking in my education, but I would have assumed that anyone would consider that planned obsolescence, as much as anything could be, is an invention of the marketplace, whether one talks about light bulbs, automobiles or vacuum cleaners which are geared to break down in a matter of two or three years in order to keep the market going. To support my argument on that point, and asking him to comment, I would point out that according to most Canadians this Government is obsolete, and I am sure it was not planned that way.

Mr. Evans: What I meant by the comment "planned obsolescence" was that any central planning structure tends to create for itself the conditions for its own obsolescence. The problem with central planning bureaucracies, whether they be corporate, government or institutional of any kind, is that they do not change. As change occurs inevitably in our society and in our world they, by their very nature, become obsolete. Their planning function becomes obstructionist as opposed to creating and promoting the kind of change which the future demands. What I am saying, therefore, Mr. Speaker, is that all the good intentions which are behind the establishment of major planning functions lead directly to the establishment of a bureaucracy which, instead of planning for the future, starts to deal with planning to maintain its own existence, which in fact is counter to the notion of change in the future. That is the kind of thing I was talking about. Central planning leads to its own destruction by its very nature.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to question the reply of the Parliamentary Secretary with respect to the growth of Crown corporations by the provincial governments. I do not have the figures here to refute his argument, but I do not seem to recall that provincial Crown corporations have grown to anything of the magnitude of the corporations of the federal Government. The number of Crown corporations which existed federally just after the Second World War were, I believe, something in the neighbourhood of 36 or 40. Today there are approximately 400 Crown corporations. I doubt that there is any Province in Canada which can match that growth, so I would like to question that remark of the Parliamentary Secretary.

I was, however, delighted with his willingness to co-operate, as expressed at the beginning of his speech, because it is something I certainly have not witnessed in the four and a half years I have been a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Evans: Where were you on Friday, John?

Mr. Thomson: The Parliamentary Secretary asks where I was on Friday. I have a small job to do and it is called "Crown corporations". I was spending a bit of my time at that.

I was pleased by the comments of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) in concluding his remarks when he talked about the appointment of the chief executive officer. I could not agree with the Hon. Member more on this particular point. It is absolutely vital, in terms of the accountability and control of Crown corporations, that the chief executive officer of that corporation be appointed by the board of directors. I would have to think a little bit about whether or not every chief executive officer should come before a parliamentary committee. I feel that is perhaps somewhat onerous. However, it may be necessary because as long as we have the current situation where directors are simply a cosmetic appointment by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), we really have no way of effectively causing the chief executive officer to be accountable to the board. And that is at the heart of the control of a Crown corporation. If you have a chief executive officer who is appointed, as presently, by the Prime Minister, to whom does he account? He accounts to the Prime Minister. The board is simply there to go through the motions. Therefore, I totally agree with the thrust of the comments of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville. It may very well be necessary for Parliament to set up a process whereby the chief executive officer is screened and approved by a committee of Parliament.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, my hon. friend from Mississauga South and the Parliamentary Secretary have already referred to the fact that we have reached a milestone because we have finally agreed on a few insignificant amendments. I would like to compare that to rearranging the deck chairs on the Titanic. That is about the size of it. The Liberal Government has moved only one millimetre in those terms.

The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) was asking whether we were filibustering this Bill. He is darned right, we did filibuster the Bill for a very good reason. The Hon. Member for Willowdale completely missed the point of the debate. If he does not understand that the people of Canada care about the Canadian Dairy Commission and the $1.4 billion which Canadair has thrown down the drain, about the waste and extravagance and the uncontrolled operations of the Crown corporations of Canada, then he has missed the entire point of the debate. He has the nerve to stand up in this House and ask if we were filibustering. Yes, we filibustered the Bill and as far as I am concerned we would still be here carrying on that filibuster if I had my way, because the amendments we were given in the Bill are nothing. It is just simply going through the motions.

Mr. McKenzie: Let him read Friday's Hansard and then he will learn what happened.

Mr. Thomson: We are trying to represent our constituents. Apparently the Hon. Member for Willowdale does not seem to be concerned. Does he think that his constituents are not concerned about the $200,000 worth of extravagance indulged in by the head of the Canadian Dairy Commission? How does he feel about that? What we are debating in this House, and what we were debating in this House, are the principles involved in controlling Crown corporations. The EDC legislation happened to be a Bill on which the Members on this side of the House and the New Democratic Party could put forward their views about the lack of control over Crown corporations.

● (1240)

As you might gather, Mr. Speaker, my concerns with respect to Crown corporations are two-fold. First of all, all 282 of us in this institution have done a lot of work over the last 18 months on parliamentary reform. There is a willingness on all sides of the House to come to grips with this important issue because what is at stake is the credibility of this institution and every Member. The same is true as it relates to Crown corporations. If we do not come to grips with this issue, Mr. Speaker, every Member of this House suffers and the institution itself will suffer. Look at the things happening in the Canada Dairy Commission. What do you think the Canadian people think of this man who heads the commission? Abuse of public trust, that is what it is. You know that, Members opposite know it, in fact every Member of this House knows it, and we all cringe a little bit.

Secondly, my concern is the proliferation of Crown corporations. One cannot keep up with them. I had from the Treasury Board a list showing 319 Crown corporations. It spelled out the subsidiaries and their classification. I said to my secretary that I would like to get that list updated or make sure it is up-to-date because the list was published last December. Do you know how many more we have today? Twelve new ones. They are just growing like weeds and no one on the other side wants to get their arms around the issue.

We in this House all know how important this issue is. Crown corporations represent 50 per cent of the Gross National Product, employ 263,000 people with $67 billion in assets.

Federal Government appropriations on their behalf amounted to $6.5 billion last year. I cannot even comprehend $1 billion, let alone $6.5 billion.

I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the reckless abandon with which we are creating these Crown corporations. Every time we create one we deprive Canadians of a little bit more of their freedom, the freedom to innovate. We take away their motivation. If we are to be internationally competitive, Mr. Speaker, the solution to our problem lies with Crown corporations because their very thrust is not to be competitive. They are not bottom-line oriented. In a good many cases maybe they should not be. There is a good and valid reason for many Crown corporations. They have a legitimate role to play, they are a legitimate tool of Government where you want to give autonomy to a particular entity to accomplish a mission. But the unceasing proliferation of Crown corporations in Canada is sapping our willingness and ability to go out and compete in a very tough world today.

I have no quarrel with the Export Development Corporation, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, on balance I think it does a pretty good job. I do question some of its practices but by and large it is fairly well managed. So the point is, and I want to stress this to the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), that we are not condemning the functions or purposes of the EDC. There is no one on this side who has condemned those objectives and it would be wrong for anyone to conclude from Hon. Members' remarks that we were opposed to the EDC. But please understand that we are trying to focus public attention on this enormous and complex problem of Crown corporations which the Government opposite does not seem to want to come to grips with. Quite the contrary, it goes out and creates a monster like the Canada Development Investment Corporation. I think this is scary.

When I take the Parliamentary Secretary's remarks about centralized planning and the need to be market oriented and compare them with the formation of this monster—and I say "monster" knowingly—the CDIC, I can see that the primary function of that corporation is really to further state capitalism. The men who run it make no bones about it. Senator Austin, father of this legislation, makes no pretence about it. He says we are creating the CDIC to advance the cause of state ownership. It is part and parcel of the Canadian industrial policy of this Government. Oh, he said it, and so have Mr. Maurice Strong and Mr. Joel Bell.

Mr. Evans: It is not true.

Mr. Thomson: Well, I can give the Hon. Member a quotation from their speeches.

Mr. Evans: Please do.

Mr. Thomson: This is the reason they have created the CDIC.

Mr. Evans: You will have to produce them because I do not believe it.

Mr. Thomson: The reason it is so difficult to come to grips with this issue is that we cannot sort out and put in a separate compartment the commercial or bottom-line functions of a Crown corporation and what I would call the public interest functions. So what we do is put them together and we ask the chief executive officer and board of directors to manage that corporation, and they have to weigh every single day in every decision they make whether or not the venture is going to be profitable and whether or not it is in the public interest.

● (1250)

This is at the heart of the problem of Crown corporations and their accountability. Unless we can find a means to segregate those functions within a corporation that should be bottom-line oriented, putting those into a separate compartment and then over here, on the other side, putting those public interest functions into another compartment, very clearly and succinctly spelling out the mandate to the chief executive officers and the board of directors, we will never come to grips with the accountability of Crown corporations, because—and it is only human nature—it is very easy to cloud the issue. If I make a mistake, if I pull a boner in a company and I can say that it does not show up in the bottom line, and one can say that I did not make a profit this year, it would not be because I really made a commercial mistake, but, rather, because I acted in the public interest. Probably no one but the employees or very close associates of the chief executive officer will know the difference. Certainly Parliament and the taxpayers of Canada will not know.

This is at the heart of the issue, together with the appointments of the board and of the chief executive officer, which are all so crucial, in my view, to controlling the operations of Crown corporations.

Let me just return to the subject of the Canadian Development Investment Corporation for a moment. This is the mandate of the Canadian Development Investment Corporation:

> The objects of the Corporation are:
> (a) to assist in the creation or development of businesses, resources, properties and industries of Canada;
> (b) to expand, widen and develop opportunities for Canadians to participate in the economic development of Canada through the application of their skills and capital in any activities carried on by the Corporation;
> (c) to invest in the shares or securities of any corporation owning property or carrying on business related to the economic interests of Canada;
> (d) to invest in ventures or enterprises, including the acquisition of property, likely to benefit Canada; and
> (e) to carry out all activities in the best interests of Canada, operating in a commercial manner.

That is a very clear set of objectives. That means that the corporation can do absolutely anything under the sun. To whom does it report? It reports to the Prime Minister essentially. That is what it is all about, with no due regard, going through the motions. It sends us some financial statements. It really just reports on money spent. However, there is no clear-cut, succinct mandate by which we can hold the CDIC, its officers and the board of directors accountable, and that is the point. It can muddy the water and confuse all of the decisions that it makes because it has cats and dogs and rats. One just cannot sort it out.

I am not trying to suggest that Parliament should attempt to be a manager. That is not the role we are here to play. I want to emphasize this point. In terms of accountability, I am not suggesting for one minute that Parliamentarians become managers of Crown corporations. However, I am suggesting that we as Parliamentarians must come to grips with this issue of accountability if we are to save our own credibility. It is a vital issue. There seems to be an unwillingness to come to grips with it.

For the last 18 months, as all Hon. Members will know, we have had a Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. The Committee has been charged with the responsibility of trying to introduce some parliamentary reform. The seventh report of the Committee, with which Hon. Members will be familiar, makes recommendations and deals with proposals—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired. He could be allowed to continue if he obtains the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thomson: I thank Your Honour for your indulgence and that of the House. I just want to make a point which all Hon. Members should consider. It deals with the financial accountability committees. The Committee on Standing Order and Procedure has recommended that there be four committees established, one being a Public Accounts Committee, which is already a standing committee. The following comittees have been recommended:

(a) Public Accounts, to which the Public Accounts and all Reports of the Auditor General shall be deemed to have been permanently referred, immediately the said documents are tabled.

(b) Fiscal Framework, which is empowered to consider on its own initiative the national fiscal and economic policies.

(c) Expenditure Proposals, to which the subject matter of the estimates and all related documents shall be deemed to have been permanently referred immediately the said documents are tabled.

(d) Government Corporations and Agencies, which is empowered to consider on its own initiative the operations of all corporations or agencies which are government-owned or controlled or in which the government has an interest."

I would conclude by saying to Hon. Members opposite that this is just a small start in the right direction to give this institution and ourselves some accountability. I would plead, let us move forward with the reform and let us move forward quickly.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Calgary South, I very much appreciate the point he is making to the effect that this is not really a quarrel with the Export Development Corporation or with the need for increased opportunities for Canadians to export. I am pleased to have heard him state before the House that the goal of the Opposition is not to stop those particular efforts.

Let me make my point clear. If the purpose of having 150 or more speakers from the Opposition on a Bill dealing with the Export Development Corporation is not to have the effect of retarding the process of getting the EDC where we want it to be, but, rather, is to be a mere attempt to draw to the attention of the House, and perhaps Canadians, that there have been problems in the past with a number of Crown corporations, then I respectfully submit that they chose the wrong Crown corporation by which to bring these points before the public.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why?

Mr. Peterson: There are other Crown corporations, such as Canadair, where the Minister—

Mr. Blenkarn: This fat cat should be let off the hook, eh?

Mr. Peterson: It is very difficult to hear oneself think when an Hon. Member shouts.

Mr. Blenkarn: You have to have the ability to do it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I would remind Hon. Members that questions and comments must be brief and to the point, and in the current circumstances, if the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) is to be allowed to reply, I think the Chair ought to recognize him at this time on the points made so far by the Parliamentary Secretary. The Hon. Member for—

Mr. Peterson: May I reply?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): If he so wishes.

Mr. Peterson: My only point, then, Mr. Speaker, is that if the wish is to deal with Crown corporations as a whole, as an entity, there are other ways and means available to us, as Members of Parliament, to deal with these issues directly.

Some Hon. Members: Read them off.

Mr. Peterson: It is not something that must be piggy-backed in the door. This is something that we could do through an Opposition Day. It is something with which we as Members of Parliament will have an opportunity to deal when the CDIC Bill—

Mr. Blenkarn: When is it coming? Are you afraid to bring it on?

Mr. Peterson: —comes before us, when we are dealing directly with issues such as Canadair. I do not think Hon. Members opposite will have a great deal of difficulty from this side of the House in finding a common effort to develop better modalities for dealing with the type of problem we have encountered in the past. This is not the issue. The EDC is not the issue on which the debate should be founded.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for Calgary South will, of course, be given an opportunity to reply at the resumption of debate after three o'clock today.

S.O. 21

It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE MEASURES TO LIMIT IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN-BUILT SHIPS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, according to a press release from the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association, more foreign-built ships and floating equipment were registered in Canada in the first eight months of 1983 than in the entire year of 1982. If all the figures provided by Mr. Walsh, president of the Association, are accurate, it is clear that the Canadian Government should immediately take the necessary corrective action. The situation in our shipyards is indeed alarming. I am thinking, for instance, of the Davie shipyards in Lauzon, whose performance in terms of jobs has in recent years been in the 1,500 to 2,500 range. The figures for August, however, indicate that employment has dropped to 960 workers, and although construction on the CN Marine ferry will provide employment for the coming months, the future does not seem very promising for this shipyard which is the principal employer in the Quebec City area. Last January, the Government promised to get legislation through the House that would provide better safeguards for shipyard workers by restricting imports of foreign-built ships and providing guarantees with attractive provisions. I therefore urge the Government to have these measures adopted immediately, with the consent of the Opposition parties, which for once will have a chance to let their actions speak louder than their words.

SHIPBUILDING

PREFERENTIAL TAX TREATMENT OF FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my statement concerns essentially the same theme. More foreign built vessels and floating equipment were registered in Canada during the first eight months of 1983 than in all of 1982—some 170,000 gross tonnes.

This means that equipment that can be and should be built in Canadian shipyards is being constructed offshore, and the Canadian industry is left to fight its worst recession in decades. Since 1969, 315 foreign built vessels and floating equipment with an aggregate tonnage of 1.161 million gross tonnes have been registered in Canada at the expense of the Canadian shipbuilding industry. This industry, in terms of jobs and solvency, cannot afford to continue to put up with the importation of foreign built vessels into Canada in record numbers.

Therefore I urge the Government to give the House the assurance that the Ways and Means Motion of June 29, which would tighten up custom loopholes, will be passed in this session of Parliament, and thus eliminate the preferential or absence of duty on ships imported into Canada from a number of countries. I believe all Parties in the House support swift passage of this motion, having full realization of the urgency of this problem for the shipbuilding industry in Canada.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—REGISTRATION DEADLINE FOR REMOVAL GRANTS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as Members of the House will know, the registration deadline for the UFFI Assistance Program is just three days away. UFFI home owners interested in receiving financial assistance must register no later than Friday, September 30.

It is of great concern to me that not all UFFI home owners have yet registered for the program. I would like to remind those who have not registered that they can do so by calling the UFFI Centre's toll free number, or by writing the UFFI Centre. Letters must be postmarked no later than September 30. The UFFI Centre's phone number and address can be obtained from MPs' offices.

It should be noted that, because the volume of phone calls to the UFFI Centre may be great, and lines may be busy, letters may be the preferable means of ensuring registration. Those who fail to contact the UFFI Centre by the end of this month will lose the opportunity to ensure that any UFFI related improvements to their homes are eligible for federal help.

With just three days remaining before the September 30 deadline, almost 53,000 people have registered with the UFFI Assistance Program. It was launched in December, 1981, and was established to help approximately 80,000 Canadians who had insulated their homes with the foam.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INCREASED INITIAL PAYMENT FOR BARLEY URGED

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, about three weeks ago the Canadian Wheat Board suggested an increase in the initial payment for barley. As well, Cargill and the United Grain Growers have asked the Treasury Board to approve an increase in the initial payment to $110 per metric tonne, yet elevator operators and Canadian barley growers are still waiting for a decision.

While No. 1 feed barley has been trading in recent weeks at $160 per tonne or more on the export market out of Thunder Bay, the Wheat Board is paying farmers a mere $95 per tonne. Is it any wonder that farmers are reluctant to haul their barley to elevators? As a result, the Wheat Board is in danger of not having enough barley to meet its exports demands.

This ridiculously low initial price is causing another problem. Because the Wheat Board buys the majority of the Canadian barley crop, it virtually controls even the non-Board domestic price. Therefore, non-Board barley has sold domestically at just under $130 per tonne in recent weeks.

The discrepancy between the world price and the Wheat Board's initial payment for barley is far too great. Barley growers should not have to wait a full year until a final payment reimburses them for the difference.

It is critical that the Cabinet immediately approve an increase in the initial payment for barley. Its failure to do so to date illustrates the Government's inability to understand the financial needs of Canada's cash-starved farmers.

INCOME TAX

REQUIREMENT THAT SENIOR CITIZENS MAKE QUARTERLY PAYMENTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, Government legislation requires that income tax, if it is not deducted at source, be paid in quarterly installments by taxpayers. Unfortunately this requirement causes undue suffering and hardship to many senior citizens.

Many of those who are retired live on the proceeds of a modest pension and they supplement this pension income with the interest earned from investments and savings. Canada Savings Bonds, because of their security, have been a prime source of investment for many pensioners. Certainly the nation has benefited as a result of the support many have given to Canada Savings Bonds. However, the interest on Canada Savings Bonds is paid once a year, in November, yet people are required to pay in income tax in quarterly payments, three of which fall due prior to November. In effect the Government wants its money back before it has paid it out.

For senior citizens who depend on Canada Savings Bond interest as an important part of their income, quarterly installment payments are a real hardship. Some are forced to borrow at commercial rates to make these installment payments.

I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister of Revenue the hardship that this regulation has caused, and I urge that the legislation be amended to permit payment of income tax on Canada Savings Bond interest after the interest is received in November.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POLITICAL PARTIES

INCOME OF SENIOR CITIZENS—FORMER PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, as Liberal Members of Parliament we are becoming accustomed to the contradictory and uncivil displays put on by the Official Opposition to gloss over their distinct lack of policies. However, it is most shameful when the Official Opposition pretends to be the champion of the senior citizen and the underprivileged.

Yesterday, for example, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Island (Miss MacDonald) shed crocodile tears on behalf of those seniors receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement. As all Members of the House know, the Liberal Government promised to increase the GIS during the 1980 campaign. Making good that promise was the first act of the Liberal Government. Guaranteed Income Supplement benefits have never been limited under the six and five restraint program.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and all former Tory Government Cabinet Ministers might well remember the policy of that regime. The then Prime Minister said on November 16, 1979, as reported at page 1393 of Hansard, that senior citizens on fixed incomes would have to "endure, now, some of the high interest rates and other economic problems that have to be faced in the short term if we are to have long-term solutions." That is the Tory concern and compassion for Canadians on fixed incomes—to endure with neither help nor hope.

• (1410)

The Liberal Government has taken tough decisions and helped those who need help most, while the Official Opposition offers only shallow—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

DROP IN INITIAL PRICE FOR WHEAT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, agriculture in western Canada is in a sorry state. Net farm income in 1982 decreased by more than 25 per cent, and 10 per cent or more of our farms are in financial difficulties. World grain prices are at 1973 levels, while input costs for farmers have tripled during the last ten years. Grain, hog and cattle producers are taken for granted. The Government restricts their credit and expects them to carry on with a net loss each year.

In 1982 more than 485 farmers went bankrupt, and scores of others are on the verge of bankruptcy. This Liberal Government gives farmers no priority. Only 1.5 per cent of the total budget goes to agriculture.

Now, to cap the series of tragedies largely due to the Liberals, Senator Hazen Argue, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, has dropped the initial price of Red Spring Wheat to $4.63, Durum to $4.49, and the price of feed barley to $2.07 per bushel. This is absolutely disgraceful. The Senator, who hides in the Senate, would not listen to the recommendations of the Progressive Conservative Party to hold the prices to the 1982-83 level. Senator Hazen Argue has provided no leadership, has lockjaw in Cabinet, and has lost all credibility.

The most important industry in Canada refuses to suffer any longer under this useless Senator. On behalf of the farmers of western Canada, I say to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), before the entire farm industry goes down the drain, fire this socialist.

Madam Speaker: Order.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a short statement to make. I bring to the attention of the House and of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that many of us still have a problem in our riding with mortgage interest rates. I have a couple of cases in my riding. One deals with Fidelity Trust. My constituents are paying 17.75 per cent on their mortgage, and mortgage interest rates are now about 12 per cent. They are trying to get the mortgage paid off. We have gone through the Minister of Finance who promised Canadians that he would intervene and do something about it. We have gone back to the trust company and it will not do a darn thing. The fact is that the trust company wants interest payments for three months. It wants a penalty. These are just usurious demands.

The banks, finance companies, and trust companies have been making lots of money. Surely they can reduce mortgage rates for people in a fair and equitable manner, or allow people to pay off their mortgages equitably. That is all we ask. In this particular case with Fidelity Trust—and with some other trust companies—it will not do a darn thing, and the Minister of Finance is not prepared to back up his word which he gave to Canadians in this House.

FISHERIES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERY

Hon. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, yesterday in St. John's I was pleased to be part of an event of considerable importance to the economy and welfare of Newfoundland. A fisheries agreement, touted by Premier Peckford as the most important bilateral agreement since Newfoundland and Canada joined to form one nation, was signed by the Premier and by my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané).

The two Governments have taken a landmark step to become joint partners in an undertaking of immense and significant proportions, namely, the stabilization of the deep sea fishery in Newfoundland through the instrument of the world's second largest fishing company.

I am especially pleased and excited about the prospects for my riding of Burin-St. George's. Widespread has been the misery inflicted by the virtual shutdown of the deep sea industry over recent months. On behalf of my constituents I welcome the new accord between Newfoundland and Ottawa.

It must be noted that there will be some job loss. However, the agreement between Newfoundland and Canada addresses this problem by the establishment of a regional Burin Peninsula Development Fund. I am confident that ultimately the net job opportunities available on the Burin Peninsula will be at least equal to the numbers which were in existence prior to the crisis in the trawler industry. The fisheries agreement marks a happy day for Newfoundland and for one of Canada's important primary industries.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

RATE OF RECOVERY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, one of the towering intellects on the Government side of the House—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: —surrounded by pygmies, of course.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The real level of economic production in Canada is 3 per cent below what it was when our recession started, but now in the United States it is 0.7 per cent above. In Canada we have 267,000 fewer people employed than when the recession started, but in the United States they have 854,000 more jobs than when the recession started. Our disposable income here is 4.2 per cent below that of 1981, and in the United States it is 3.5 per cent above.

In view of these facts is it the Government's position that Canada has a recovery second to none in the world so far, and that a moderation in the pace of recovery is not only acceptable but helpful? Is that still the Government's position in light of these facts?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, having been here for a while, I know that the devil on the other side also quotes statistics. I always come here prepared to counter statistics that are given to me, with a set of counterstatistics.

Confidence in Canada is at a record high now. Confidence among consumers was at an 18-year high in the second quarter of 1983. Seventy per cent of businessmen consulted recently said that they were optimistic about growth in Canada. The output is strong. In the second quarter of 1983 there was a 7.2 per cent rate of increase. Industrial production is high, 4.9 per cent, on the basis of June 1983, compared with June, 1982. The trade picture is excellent. Everyone knows about that. Job creation is fine, 318,000 in the first eight months of this year. Interest rates are half what they were 20 months ago. Inflation is half what it was 20 months ago.

I can counter any bad statistics for 1975, or whatever year the Hon. Member can suggest. I know, when I do that, that I am only rivalling my hon. friend in the fine art of quoting statistics. There is no country in the world today which has all good statistics; every country has a mix of them.

Mr. Crosbie: That was a very impressive performance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DECLINE IN FAMILY INCOME

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Acting Prime Minister is correct in his statistics and we have such a wonderful state of economic circumstances in Canada, why did his fellow Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs say on September 24 that many Canadian women would spend their final days in poverty if changes were not made? Why should that statement be necessary? Could the Minister also advise us, if things are so wonderful, how is it that Statistics Canada has shown that average family income has declined 4 per cent last year, the second year in a row for the first time in history? Will the Government remove, for example, the Canadian ownership charge which is imposing unnecessarily a tax of $900 million on Canadian consumers this year? Let's have some action.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I was very frank in the answer I gave. I said that there were a number of statistics in Canada that were not "comfortable". I realize that. I am the first one to admit it. For example, statistics on investment and on unemployment are not good. The Government is doing its best to correct that.

With respect to the Minister of State for Economic Development, I heard him say repeatedly in the House—and the press covered it pretty well, I thought—that the speech he presented to the Macdonald Commission was a speech in which he was simply projecting or thinking out loud. This was not a program for the Government. This was simply his concept and views of the future, the difficulties and the good side of it. It was not meant to be a Government program. It was not meant to be a quasi-budget or anything of that kind.

● (1420)

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I never mentioned the Minister of Regional Economic Development. I said the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CANCEL OIL OWNERSHIP TAX

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, better known as the gnome from Dome, said in connection with the Canadian ownership charge, which is four cents a gallon on all gasoline and heating oil consumed in Canada and which is still being imposed, that Ottawa intends to collect that levy indefinitely whether Dome needs it or not. Is it the position of the Government that it is going to continue to collect $900 million a year for Dome, or without Dome, or forget Dome, or for Petro-Canada, or just for the Government, or is it going to stop that imposition and put Canadian consumers in a position to spend $900 million more on those things they really need and not on unnecessary Government taxation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I want to tell my hon. friend that flattery will get him nowhere, either with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or with me. With regard to what I understand is the Canadianization charge, I think it will be well used in the future, if that is what my hon. friend has in mind. Most people in this country are pleased to see the degree of foreign ownership in the gas and oil field decreasing from the ninety per cent level to the sixty per cent level at which it is now.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO STIMULATE PRIVATE SECTOR EMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister is reported to have said in Montreal last Friday that the problem of unemployment cannot be solved by the Government alone, but will require the co-operation of the private sector. He made that comment when the OECD was reporting on the Canadian economy and predicting an unemployment rate in excess of 12 per cent, and a youth unemployment rate in excess of 20 per cent, indeed 22 per cent for this year. When can we expect an announcement from the Government on some stimulation of the private sector so that it can get on with the job of co-operating with the Government and creating jobs?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member did not also remark on the report which was released at the end of last week on the update of the accomplishments under the NEED Program. It has accomplished exactly what we described we wanted to do and has worked along the lines that he has just suggested to us. Under the NEED Program, as a result of expenditure by the federal Government of $500 million we have levered into activity $1.1 billion through private sector co-operation which will have created over nine months, ending this month, 90,000 jobs. The kind of program he has just been suggesting, of encouraging the private sector to work with us in creating jobs, is indeed well under way and has succeeded in excess our expectations.

The Hon. Member referred to the OECD report on unemployment and mentioned the youth unemployment rate which it describes. He should also have pointed out that the survey indicates that Canada and the United States are the only two countries of those surveyed which show a decline in the unemployment rate in 1984 over 1983. Indeed, the most important statistic shown by them is that, in terms of unemployment that lasts 12 months and over, the Canadian record is better than any other country under the OECD listing.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF EMPLOYMENT TAX CREDIT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the NEED Program merely addresses a short-term solution, a band-aid solution. I ask the Minister, on behalf of the 600,000 young people of this country who are unemployed, what long-term prospects they have of finding a job. Is the Minister prepared to recommend to his colleagues that they put in place an employment tax incentive program, for example, which will produce jobs effectively and inexpensively, producing permanent jobs as opposed to the band-aid type treatment we keep getting from this Minister?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is entirely incorrect in his assumption. The jobs created under the NEED Program very often go on to become permanent jobs. They are simply not a band-aid approach. As far as the band-aid solution which the Member has suggested as a tax credit is concerned, he should be aware that we now have in place job subsidy programs which are more effective and more encouraging to the private sector in creating those types of jobs because they provide an immediate cash flow assistance to business rather than waiting for the year-end effect of a tax credit impact.

SOCIAL SECURITY

LEVEL OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the responsibility of the federal Government to do something soon about increasing poverty. Statistics Canada and the Toronto Social Planning Council have documented the tragedy of increasing numbers of children who are being permanently damaged by severe poverty in Canada. In view of the high level of unemployment and family breakup in all regions of Canada, will the Minister take steps to increase the family allowance, to protect children of low income families who are at considerable risk? As she knows, this can be taxed back from higher income families.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, as a result of coverage of a question by the Hon. Member's colleague a few days ago, people are now wondering whether the poor are a federal or provincial responsibility. That attitude is not acceptable in this country. The Hon. Member should have researched before asking her question. She would know that the Child Tax Credit, which goes to those most in need, was not only fully indexed but, in addition to the cheques the mothers receive, there was an additional $50 this year which is to do exactly what the Hon. Member is just now discovering is a problem, and everyone else knows is a problem.

COMMUNITY AND CO-OPERATIVE GROUPS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, it is interesting to note that the reports I mentioned came out after the child tax credit. Also, as everyone should know, it is far from adequate to feed a family. The Minister is in effect becoming a partner in crime with Socred-Tory provincial Governments. I want to explain that.

Madam Speaker: Order. There is no need to explain that. The Hon. Member should just ask her question.

Mrs. Mitchell: Provincial Governments are slashing social programs which are tax-shared by the federal Government. The Minister, through her Department, retains amounts of money equal to those which the Provinces have cut. Will this Minister meet with the Minister of Finance, who I wish were here today, with regard to transferring the federal savings of some $8 million in British Columbia through the Secretary of State so that this money can be allocated to self-help community groups and co-operatives which will do the job in their communities?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House do not believe in helping the poor through images and slogans. That has never helped anybody. We have not only conserved the full budgets of all social programs, but have fully indexed them and have obtained increases in several of them. That is the only way to fight for those most in need. If the Hon. Member knows that her Province is slashing social programs, why does she not say it there, and not here?

EMPLOYMENT

COED PROGRAM—FATE OF HAMILTON APPLICATIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Over the course of the last ten days this Minister and other Ministers, as well as the Prime Minister, have indicated that the Government will not extend unemployment insurance to cover those who are running out and for whom welfare will not provide sufficient money to meet their needs. The Minister has indicated that he wants jobs. Why is it then that of the 32 applications from Hamilton under the COED Program, 25 were rejected outright without explanation, three have not yet been decided upon, and only four have been approved? Of the 494 potential jobs, only 106 have been approved. Will the Minister move to correct this stupidity?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the explanation for the situation in Hamilton which the Hon. Member describes, if memory serves, is that something like $1.4 million was made available to the Hamilton area under the COED Program. The city council's recommendation was that approximately $1 million of that should go toward speeding up the construction of two hotel projects, leaving $400,000 or so for other projects. It was at the behest, or on the counsel, of city council that those steps were taken. I believe that the generation of employment which resulted from following the recommendation of council was much greater than would have been the case if we had followed the course of action which the Hon. Member is suggesting.

If I remember correctly, there is as well something like $6 million in other NEED programs that apply to the Hamilton area. In fact, at the behest of my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, he and I are reviewing the Hamilton applications to see if there is some way of funding some of the other worthy projects which are brought to our attention.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

FREE TRAVEL FOR OFFICIALS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as Acting Minister of Agriculture. I would like to refer the Minister to the comprehensive audit of the Canadian Dairy Commission which was conducted by the Auditor General and which disclosed that senior officials of the CDC made a practice of accepting free travel and accommodation from people with whom the CDC was doing business. When the information about Mr. Choquette's travel bills was made available to the House last Friday, did it include all of these freebies which he may have accepted, or were these freebies in addition to the $210,000 in travel costs disclosed?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I would like to answer the question about Mr. Choquette's increased travel expenses. I think the House ought to know that there are five reasons for this increase: the number of exports, the increase in exports, adjusting to world markets, dealing with new customers and the energetic approach taken by the Canadian Dairy Commission in doing so.

Madam Speaker, in 1976, our dairy exports were worth $41 million and cost us $30,000 in expenses, and in 1982-1983, those exports were worth around $400 million, and our expenses were around $100,000. Madam Speaker, I do not think the increase in expenses should give any cause for alarm since they were made in the interests of Canadian farm producers.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, perhaps the next time the Parliamentary Secretary responds to a question, he could get around to actually answering the question that was asked.

RCMP INVESTIGATION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Minister of Agriculture to answer the question that was asked, rather than shunting his responsibility. Did the Order for Return that was tabled on Friday include any or all freebies that were accepted by Mr. Choquette or by other officials of the Commission? Second, since the Minister of Agriculture has disclosed that the RCMP has been investigating the CDC, may I ask the Minister if the RCMP investigation has been concluded?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, it is a fact that in the past few years, there have been a number of inquiries regarding the Canadian Dairy Commission, and up to now, their findings have always exonerated the Commission's administration.

It is also a fact that the Auditor General made 33 recommendations, and that the Canadian Dairy Commission has already approved 30 recommendations and is now discussing the feasibility of making further improvements.

Madam Speaker, I would also like to mention that recently, Canada lost its markets in Mexico and Jamaica to the Americans and the Canadian Dairy Commission had to look for markets elsewhere, in Algeria, Nigeria, Peru and other countries. Since the Canadian Dairy Commission had to adjust to these changes as effectively as possible, it had to spend a little more.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

REMOVAL OF UREA FORMALDEHYDE FROM MANITOBA HOMES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Consumer and Corporate Affairs licensed contractors are not paying their subcontractors for removing urea formaldehyde foam insulation from Manitoba homes. Therefore the subcontractors have placed liens against 150 properties in Manitoba and work has remained unfinished. Will the Minister inform the House what she will do to correct this situation, and particularly what action she is planning to take to assist those home owners in Manitoba who will face the winter with no outside walls for protection against the cold weather?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am having some difficulty with the Hon. Member's question because we do not have Consumer and Corporate Affairs contractors. We merely license contractors who have been qualified under certain standards to perform the work. We are not actually the contractors who perform the work.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I never said that Consumer and Corporate Affairs had its own contractors. I said that it licenses contractors.

MANITOBA GOVERNMENT'S NON-COMPLIANCE WITH REGULATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the Manitoba NDP Government is not obtaining performance bonds from these contractors to ensure the protection of home owners, nor is the Manitoba NDP Government reporting these delinquent firms to the federal Government as is required. To make matters worse, there is only one individual in Winnipeg from Consumer and Corporate Affairs assigned to handle the problems being encountered by the three western Provinces. Has the Minister had any consultations with the Manitoba NDP Government as to why it is not conforming to federal Government regulations? Will she work in conjunction with the Manitoba Government to have the liens removed immediately, have the foam insulation removed, and have the outside sidings replaced?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, this is the first time this problem has been brought to my attention. The Province of Manitoba has not informed me of the difficulties and I am glad that the Hon. Member is fulfilling his obligations as a Member of Parliament by bringing the matter to my attention. I can assure him that I will look into the matter once he has presented all the facts to my office.

FISHERIES

EMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I would like to do so before he tells us a "whale of a tale" about socializing the Newfoundland fishing industry.

The President of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation told the Macdonald Royal Commission that the number of fishermen in Newfoundland and Labrador must be reduced from the present total of 26,000 to some 12,000 if the fishery is to become viable. This amounts to a reduction of some 14,000 jobs. I would like to ask the Minister if the President, when making that statement, was reflecting government policy. If so, what alternative employment opportunities has the Minister to offer these 14,000 people?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am happy to report to the Hon. Member that the policy of the Canadian Government was made public by myself some months ago. As you know, Madam Speaker, one of the three cornerstone principles of the Government is to create jobs, and that policy is targeted to create the maximum number of jobs, particularly in Atlantic Canada, depending, of course, on whether the program would hurt the income of its participants. The need for maximum employment is one of the reasons why, for instance, during my tenure I will not allow trawler plants. That is the policy of the Canadian Government as approved by Cabinet.

As to socialism in Newfoundland, I am sure the Hon. Member heard the compliments that Conservative Premier Peckford paid to the federal Government, and I hope that the Hon. Member will share the opinion of the Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Mr. Crouse: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Minister for his answer.

ROLE OF CANADIAN SALTFISH CORPORATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Minister is well aware that there are still a large number of resource-short plants in Newfoundland as well as throughout Atlantic Canada. In giving the Canadian Saltfish Corporation in Newfoundland complete authority over the resource-short plant program, the Minister has allowed that corporation to greatly exceed its mandate. I would like to ask him when Parliament will be presented with suitable legislation to authorize this. Can the Minister assure us as well, in light of the massive unemployment in Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada, that no foreign trawlers will be involved in the resource-short plant program untill all Canadian trawlers are fully employed?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as to the problem of unemployment, I would like the Hon. Member to recognize for a moment what the federal Government has done and what Premier Peckford did yesterday to stabilize no less than 16,000 jobs in Newfoundland. I think that is quite an achievement. I was moved when I heard Premier Peckford say that it was the most important bilateral agreement that Newfoundland has signed with the federal Government since Confederation. It happened during the tenure of this Government, and not during the tenure of either Mr. Clark or Mr. Diefenbaker. It was under the tenure of the present Prime Minister that this took place.

As for the question of the resource-short plants, I hope to be able to make an announcement in the very near future.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BUDWORM SPRAYING PROGRAM IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who also happens to be responsible for forestry and for Parks Canada. First of all I should like to congratulate him on his appointment, and also for meeting several times with some of his Canadian Forestry Service officials in the short time that he has been Minister.

The Minister will be aware of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court decision handed down less than two weeks ago which basically gave the green light to the Government and the forest industry in Nova Scotia to renew widespread aerial spraying with 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T over populated areas in order to combat spruce budworm infested areas. Since then we have not heard a word from the Minister or from the Minister of National Health and Welfare about this.

Has the Minister, in his environmental role, consulted with himself in his forestry role, as to the serious implications of this decision in Nova Scotia and throughout Canada? If so, what is the result of this consultation and any consultations he may have had with other Ministers or with various provincial Governments? What initiative has he taken, in either role, to ensure that any potential threat to the environment and to public health is kept in check across Canada, while bearing in mind the health and future productivity of our forest resource?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his kind words. With regard to the decision, he is probably aware, as I understand it, that the judge concluded that there was not enough evidence to decide that the use of that particular type of herbicide was harmful. From the knowledge that I have of the law, it seems to me that until the question of the proof of onus is shifted from where it stands now to the individual or to the group that initiates the utilization of a new product, this type of decision will continue to take place.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, I cannot help but wonder what advice the Minister is getting from the various sub departments of his Ministry.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FORESTRY AGREEMENT

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I have a question on another forestry related matter. The Minister will be aware that the British Columbia Ottawa forestry subsidiary agreement expires on March 31, 1984. Could he tell me the stage of negotiations for a new forestry agreement between the Canadian Forestry Service for the Government of Canada, and the B.C. Ministry of Forests in Victoria? When is the new agreement with our number one forest products Province to be concluded?

Finally, what, if any, provisions are contemplated in order to ensure that the B.C. Government will honour both its long and short-term commitments under any such agreement? This is something that B.C. has not been famous for in recent months.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, in conversations with the B.C. Minister of Forestry a few weeks ago in Winnipeg, I was given the indication that a proposal would be forthcoming from that Government in a few months. The other questions raised by the Hon. Member seem to be argumentative in nature.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. A Canadian Press story fresh off the wire, and just handed to me a few moments ago, quotes the Prime Minister as saying earlier today in Toronto, that co-operative federalism "will remain dead in the sense that the federal Government is expected to hand money over to the Provinces for them to spend in any which way".

Since equalization payments to the have-not Provinces would fall into the category to which the Prime Minister referred in Toronto, would the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that the federal Government has no intention whatsoever of eliminating equalization payments to the Provinces, or of changing those payments in any major way?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, obviously my hon. friend is trying to extract things from what the Prime Minister has said that were not meant to be said. I think everyone in the House would agree with what the Prime Minister said on this occasion: co-operative federalism does not allow either the federal Government or the provincial Governments to spend whichever way. I think there is nothing in the quotation that would shock anyone, with the possible exception of my hon. friend.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Acting Prime Minister. Will he rise to his feet now and tell the House whether the federal Government has any plans to eliminate equalization payments to the have-not Provinces or to change those payments in any major way in the foreseeable future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, with respect to equalization payments I am reminded by my learned colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that this is now in the Constitution. I am at a loss to find what worries my hon. friend. Perhaps we should have a conversation later when he could be more specific.

IMMIGRATION

LEBANON—ADMITTANCE OF REFUGEES TO CANADA

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

[English]

The Minister will know that a large number of people have lost their homes in the Chouf Mountains in the past three weeks. Similar things have happened in Sri Lanka recently and in Afghanistan during the past four years. Will the Minister tell the House if he has any concrete plans to discuss with other nations whereby a reasonable number of such people might be relocated to Canada, the United States, West Germany and so on? Will he also tell us if the Government has any concrete plans in this regard?

[Translation]

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Madam Speaker, we have already set up a program for refugees from Lebanon.

[English]

I can tell the Hon. Member that the special program put in place last June will remain in effect. As the status of Lebanese visitors in Canada expires, they may extend their stay by one year if they wish, with permission to work. At the end of the year each case will be reviewed and a decision made as to landing in Canada. Canadian citizens, or permanent residents having relatives in Lebanon who are facing hardships, will be permitted to sponsor such relatives even if they cannot meet regular selection criteria.

In spite of recent developments in Lebanon, our visa office there has resumed normal operations. So far, few Lebanese residents have applied. There do not appear to be too many who are contemplating immigration. The special program announced in June, 1982, remains in effect.

I will consider the Hon. Member's representations about further international action if it appears, as a result of pressure for immigration to Canada, that some further discussion is warranted.

REQUEST FOR RELAXATION OF CRITERIA

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Minister for that answer. Is he prepared to consider relaxing the criteria and point system for people applying to relatives in Canada from Lebanon? I am also referring to Sri Lanka and Afghanistan refugees.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, two weeks or so ago we announced that we would take similar measures in relation to people coming from Sri Lanka or people of Sri Lankan origin. In that case, and in the Lebanese case, we extend ourselves in every possible way to apply humanitarian considerations. I do not know, but I will check to see if there is some special need in relation to potential immigrants from Afghanistan.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

LABOUR DISPUTE AT OTTAWA RENTED RESTAURANT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. As he knows, the Mill Restaurant, a tenant of the National Capital Commission, which comes under his jurisdiction, has been virtually shut down for two months because the owner refused, until today, to bargain with his employees over confiscation of tip money and uniform costs, call in to work without assured compensation, and wages at the Ontario minimum. Will the Minister tell the House what action he has taken to protect both the principles of collective bargaining in this case and the revenues of the National Capital Commission?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am not familiar with the details of the question asked by the Hon. Member. I can tell him, however, that I take a back seat to no one in the protection of the rights acquired by workers. I will inquire and try to give him a more detailed answer tomorrow.

PENSIONS

PLIGHT OF BRITISH PENSIONERS LIVING IN CANADA

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last Friday I asked the Prime Minister whether it was his intention to raise, in the meetings with Prime Minister Thatcher yesterday and today, the problem of some 40,000 persons living in Canada who receive British pensions and if those pensions would be increased by the cost of living. I also asked whether he would press the British Prime Minister to enter into a reciprocal security agreement with Canada. Could the Minister advise the House whether this matter was indeed raised by the Prime Minister, and what the results of those discussions were?

• (1450)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, as soon as the Prime Minister is back in town I will check with him and have an answer.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S REFUSAL TO MEET PROVINCIAL COUNTERPARTS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications, if he would like to take his seat. As the Minister may know, two weeks ago in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Chairman of the Canadian Radio-television and Communications Commission, the CRTC, condemned what he called the unco-ordinated approach to telecommunications policy development in this country, and went further to say, and I quote, "Jurisdictional disputes create investment uncertainty and can lower the rate of innovation and technological development in this country."

The Minister bears a direct responsibility for that, and in light of it I would like to ask him why he has refused the invitation of his provincial colleagues to meet with him in St. John's tomorrow?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has two things confused. There are two groups of Ministers who are concerned with the area for which I have responsibility; one group consists of the communications Ministers and the other consists of the Ministers responsible for culture and historical resources. The meeting to which he is referring is the meeting of the Ministers responsible for culture and historical resources.

INVITATION EXTENDED TO MINISTER

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, the confusion, of course, is not mine but the Minister's. I have here 11 pieces of correspondence from the Ministers now meeting in St. John's, Newfoundland. These invitations were issued to the Minister seven months ago. They have asked him to come. They want him to come tomorrow. Why will he not do that?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that it is not the Ministers of Communications. Therefore, his quotation from the Chairman of the CRTC is completely aside from the point. The meeting is one which is an interprovincial meeting of Ministers responsible for culture. I have indicated a number of times my interest in participating in such meetings. However, as we have done consistently in the past, we have always thought it better that these meetings be preceded by meetings with officials so that agendas could be set on which we agreed and also so that we could determine in advance the areas on which we wish to make some progress.

The Minister responsible for convening the meeting has done so knowing that I would not attend the meeting under the circumstances in which it was called. However, notwithstanding the procedure employed by the Minister from Newfoundland, which is completely contrary to the procedure accepted by the Ministers responsible for culture in the past, to wit, a decision made as to the date which is agreeable to both sides, in spite of his way of proceeding, I have indicated my availability to meet with the Ministers of Culture during the course of the months of October and November in an informal way to report on the Applebaum-Hebert Commission Report. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member, if he will allow me, and bear with me—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fox: —for a few seconds more, I feel quite strongly that that meeting only has sense inasmuch as it responds to the Applebaum-Hebert Commission of Inquiry—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

TAXATION OF FORESTRY AND MINING INDUSTRIES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since he has attended just recently, in the absence of the Minister of State (Mines), a meeting with provincial resource ministers in Regina, and is, on behalf of the Government, attending additional meetings of that sort, could the Minister tell the House what kind of positive proposals he took to this meeting, particularly in light of the very serious circumstances in which both the mining industry and the forest industry are finding themselves right now? In other words, was the Minister able to take any proposals to the meeting which would give the industries reason to anticipate that there would be a different tax regime which would permit these industries to be competitive in world markets once again?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I believe that the conference was a good one. We had an agenda which was very easy to deal with. Of course we are aware of the different problems which face the mining industry and we have discussed that, but basically the remedy for the problems of the mining industry in Canada at this time is the improvement in the markets. Everyone is of the view, because of the recovery in the western world at this time, that the outlook for the mining industry is better than it was a year ago.

GOVERNMENT'S PROPOSALS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, there are a couple of major problems which the mining industry is facing: first, the Government's present regime of giving grants to industries in trouble which in turn means that some of the other plants are financing their own demise. Another serious problem which the industry has is in connection with the Government's proposals to tax northern benefits. The Minister was asked about both of these issues. What answer did he give to the mining and forestry ministers in the Provinces in terms of both a new tax regime which would keep the industries competitive in world markets, and a regime by which northern benefits could once again be permitted to be earned without being taxed by the heavy-handed federal Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the matter was discussed and is being considered by the Minister of Finance. The Minister has extended benefits for another year, so the problem will not arise until 1984. The Government is aware of the situation, we discussed it briefly, and the Minister of Finance, who some time ago decided to do away with these benefits, has extended them until next year. Whether or not he decides to change his policy, I have made the necessary arrangements to inform the Minister of Finance of the concerns of my provincial colleagues.

FISHERIES

ABSENCE OF BUY-BACK PROGRAM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who was in the Chamber.

Mr. Nowlan: He has gone fishing.

An Hon. Member: There is his Parliamentary Secretary.

Madam Speaker: Does the Hon. Member want to ask the question of an Acting Minister?

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, I will put the question to the Parliamentary Secretary. Last week the Minister said that it would not be his policy to put money up front in order to start a buy-back program this winter in British Columbia. He said he was waiting for a report from the Minister's advisory committee which would appear in November. We on the West Coast would like to know if there is going to be any buy-back program starting this winter, or are we going to be into the third and fourth year of no buy-back program?

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member properly pointed out, the Minister, in addressing himself to this issue last week, indicated that he wanted to await the advice, after proper deliberations, of the advisory committee. It would be a little premature and somewhat redundant and contradictory for me to stand here and indicate when a buy-back plan would take place and what kind of buy-back plan would take place, when the Minister already said a few days ago that he will want to consult his advisory committee before making any more pronouncements on this matter.

DELAY IN INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAM

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): As a supplementary, Madam Speaker, the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary know that if there is to be any buy-back program this winter somebody must finance it. It is going to require up-front government money no matter how it may be paid for later. The question remains. Put aside the details. We want to know is there going to be a buy-back program this winter, or is it going to be put off for another 12 months, or 18 months, or two years? Is there no answer at all that can be given by the Government side?

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I know the Hon. Member's great and sincere interest in the welfare of fishermen on the West Coast, and I want to assure him that that interest and dedication are shared by both the Minister and myself and the officials of the Fisheries Department. I would ask him in good faith to bear with the Minister, to bear with the advisory board on the West Coast, and to bear with the officials who are as concerned as he is about this problem and are as anxious as he is to ensure that it is addressed as quickly as possible. But more consultation, not for the sake of consultation but for the sake of making sure that due process is given its proper place, is necessary at this time.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MANITOBA TASK FORCE STUDY ON HOUSING

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since I am only going to have one question I would like to ask the Minister about the status of a $1.3 million proposal in Manitoba for a task force on housing for status Indians. The proposal was made by a John Petrinka, who said the over-all program was designed not only for the benefit of the individual bands and their people but equally—but equally—for the Liberal Party of Canada. Can he tell us the status of that particular study which is not going to produce one house for any Indian family in Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, may I advise the Hon. Member that studies usually do not produce concrete items such as houses. They make recommendations for Government to consider in terms of policy. I would tell the Hon. Member that I will find out precisely what the status of the recommendations is now.

Let me point out again, Madam Speaker, that in this current fiscal year we have more than doubled the amount of money for Indian housing over what was provided the year before. That is a 100 per cent increase which has not ever been experienced, even when there were Conservative Governments in power, so that we have now been able to attack the backlog. This has created a tremendous amount of employment among Indian people and it has met with the approbation of most Indian people across Canada, including those in Manitoba who have got a substantially increased number of houses as a result.

THE LATE OSIE F. VILLENEUVE

TRIBUTES TO FORMER MEMBER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, yet another of our colleagues has passed away. I refer to Osie Villeneuve, who was a very strong Parliamentarian, a dedicated servant of his people in his constituency at both the federal and provincial levels.

Although his time in Parliament was short by comparison with his tenure in the provincial legislature, he was here in the years of the Government headed by the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker and was very highly regarded by Mr. Diefenbaker when he was Prime Minister.

Osie Villeneuve was a fitting representative of that area where the strains of Scottish Highlander and French-speaking Canadian so felicitously merged together to produce a society with a charm and flavour all its own. He was in every sense a "man from Glengarry" and a strong proponent of the Scottish as well as his native culture. He represented a county where Scottish and French Canadian lumbermen erected a tradition and history of sturdy self-reliance and dependence on their own efforts for survival. He was a familiar figure at the Games which are yearly held in Maxville, where his funeral is scheduled to take place on Thursday next.

Representing an area which was the early home of Ralph Connor, whose family name was, of course, Gordon, where there are still memories of John Sandfield MacDonald and where Simon Fraser lies buried, he knew well how to mingle the strains of both our ancient races. In this House in the late fifties and early sixties, Osie Villeneuve was a repository of down-to-earth common sense with a strong feeling of affection for his people and his Province.

His passing represents the second death of a former Member in a few days and our sympathies go to his family, his widow Alma, and his sons Brian, Bernard and Ronald; and also to his riding and to Premier William Davis, under whose banner he served and was serving at his death.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I would like to rise on behalf of the Government of Canada to pay tribute to a provincial colleague from my constituency and that of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier). Osie Villeneuve, as the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has indicated, served this House for six years. He also served the provincial legislature for 29 years, a total of 35 years of very dedicated and devoted service to the people of eastern Ontario. Mr. Villeneuve's many years of public service at the federal and provincial levels is indicative of the concern and interest he demonstrated on countless occasions towards the well-being of his area and its citizens.

My experience with Mr. Villeneuve goes back much longer than the time I have been a federal Member of Parliament. It began during my days in business in the constituency which he served. One of the things I have always admired about Mr. Villeneuve is that he always spoke out for what he believed in. Obviously every Member of this House has great respect for those like Mr. Villeneuve who dedicate their lives to serving the public in this manner.

During election times he was a fierce competitor, but to me what was most important was that between elections he was dedicated to the people of his area, regardless of one's political persuasion.

Those of us in eastern Ontario who had the privilege of knowing and befriending Osie will be comforted by the fond memories of his efforts on our behalf. He touched the lives of nearly every person in his constituency during his 35 years of service. He had a strong commitment to his family, his country, his constituency, and he will be sorely missed. To his wife Alma and his three sons, as well as to all members of the Villeneuve family, I would like to extend the Government's and my personal deepest sympathy during this time of remembrance.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I knew Osie Villeneuve well. I served with him in the Ontario legislature for 12 or more years and I remember him vividly. As was said earlier, he was a person who had a remarkable capacity for finding a compromise, and though he was a strong partisan he was able to put aside partisan differences on those occasions when finding solutions to difficult situations required that to be done. He was able, as is evidenced by the number of years he was successfully re-elected, to reach out and touch the constituents in his riding association and in his riding.

He seemed to have the capacity, Madam Speaker, as I recall from working with him, for finding in everything that was being done something that was worth while. People who came to the Ontario legislature to meet with Osie Villeneuve never went away with the impression that he somehow or other did not understand their problem or would not take some action to try to ameliorate it.

Therefore I want to join with my two colleagues in the House to say on behalf of my colleagues how sad we feel at his passing and I hope his family will at least feel the comfort that they surely must in knowing that he is well respected, well regarded and has provided a tremendous amount of service on behalf of so many people.

Point of Order—Mr. Huntington

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I had expected to rise before Question Period under Standing Order 21 to pay tribute to my colleague and friend, the Hon. Osie F. Villeneuve, MPP for Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry, but as you know, following discussions I had with you, Madam Speaker, I understand and accept your recommendation that honouring or paying tribute to distinguished personalities cannot and must not be done under Standing Order 21. Therefore I am pleased to join those who have spoken before me and add that we were all deeply saddened to learn of the death of the Hon. Osie F. Villeneuve from Maxville, Ontario.

Mr. Villeneuve represented the riding I presently represent from 1957 to 1962, and with the exception of that brief period he represented the population of Glengarry in the Ontario legislature at Queen's Park from 1948 until now, a remarkable 35-year career. On numerous occasions I had the privilege of working very closely with Mr. Villeneuve. Osie, as he is so well known to all of us, served his constituency with honour and dignity. He was a hard-working and dedicated servant. His door was always open to his constituents. He will be long remembered for the non-partisan manner in which he carried out his numerous mandates as a representative of both provincial and federal Governments. Osie will be missed by all.

On behalf of the population of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, I wish to express our most sincere and heartfelt sympathies to his wife Alma and to their three sons, Ronald, Bernard and Brian.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I would just add a few words as well to what has been said. I had the pleasure of working with Osie Villeneuve at Queen's Park, and especially with his son, Brian. Osie was an inspiration to all of us who aspired to political life. I would like Brian, his mother, his brothers and the rest of his family to know of my deep sorrow also at this time.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. HUNTINGTON—S.O. 21 STATEMENT OF MR. BURGHARDT

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I would just like to draw your attention to the statement under Standing Order 21 of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Burghardt) during today's proceedings. If that statement is examined, one will find it is very close to a ministerial statement and is outside the intent of Standing Order 21. I flag that for your attention in case Ministers start using that procedure for ministerial statements.

Madam Speaker: I will look into the matter. It did not appear to me that the point raised by the Hon. Member applied, but I will look into it and see whether in fact the statement under Standing Order 21 was properly used.

MR. McKENZIE—REPLY OF MRS. EROLA DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise to point out that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) misled the House today. I asked her about the UFFI problem in Winnipeg and what she was going to do about it. She informed the House that she had no knowledge of the subject. I have a copy of a—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is certainly not a point of order. If the Hon. Member reads the blues of the House of Commons, he will see that nothing in the rules refers to that kind of matter as being a point of order. It is a matter of debate. The Hon. Member may debate it on another occasion.

PERSONS EMPLOYED IN DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE IN WESTERN CANADA

Question No. 4,668—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How many persons are presently employed in the Research Branch of the Department of Agriculture in western Canada?

2. How many man-years are involved for the fiscal year 1982-83 and what percentage of those man-years are for administrative or clerical positions?

3. Is the Department anticipating a reduction in research positions in western Canada due to transfers, lay-offs or attrition in 1983 and, if so, what is the justification for this reduction?

4. Is the Department planning to close any research facilities such as greenhouses, growth chambers or laboratories in western Canada in 1983 and, if so, what is the justification for doing so?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. As of December 31, 1982, the Research Branch had 1,346 employees in Western Canada.

2. A total of 1,429 person-years of which 10.6 per cent are in the Administrative and Foreign Service or Administrative Support Categories.

3. The Department is not anticipating a reduction in the number of positions conducting agricultural research or providing essential services in support of research in western Canada for any reason in 1983.

4. There are no plans to close any facilities necessary for continued research in western Canada in 1983. It may be necessary to restrict or curtail the use of some non-essential facilities in order to reduce energy costs and remain within the budgetary allocations.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS RESEARCH ADVISORY COUNCIL

Question No. 4,925—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Fisheries and Oceans Advisory Committee and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. (a) What are the terms of reference of the Committee (b) what matters did it consider in the fiscal year 1982-83 (c) how often did it meet and how often is it required to meet (d) what reports and/or recommendations did the Committee publish in the fiscal year 1982-83?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. There is a Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council. Membership is as follows:

(a) Names of Members	(b) (i) Background/Expertise	(b) (ii) Term/Date of Appointment	(c) Remuneration to date*
Dr. W. E. Johnson (Chairman of FORAC)	Fisheries Scientist. (Long history as senior DFO official.)	3 yrs. Sep. 80	GIC-6 $ 61,090 to $ 71,890

* The amount specified under "remuneration to date" includes an honoraria of $150 per day for non-public servant members of the Council for days spent on Council business (as fixed by Order in Council P.C. 1981-3034 dated October 29, 1981) as well as reimbursement of travel and living expenses in accordance with Treasury Board regulations.

(d) The federal Government provides an annual budget to cover the operation of the Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council as well as the salary of the Chairman and one indeterminate employee.

2. (a) The terms of reference of the Council, as stated in the Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council Act, are as follows:

"It is the function of the Council to advise the Minister on all matters referred to it by the Minister relating to:

(a) fisheries research and the marine sciences including technological developments in those fields;

(b) the scope and adequacy of the science policies and programs of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, having regard to the duties and functions of that Department and the science policies and international obligations of the Government of Canada; and

(c) the co-ordination of research and development programs in the fields of fisheries research and the marine sciences."

(b) and (c) At FORAC's inaugural meeting on November 30, 1981, the Minister asked the Council to undertake a general review of his department's fisheries and oceanographic research and development activities and provide him with any comments and recommendations as to their quality, relevance, adequacy and balance considering both the present and the future. In fiscal year 1982-83 the Council proceeded with this task by holding a series of visitations and meetings (total of six) at the major fisheries and oceanographic research establishments across Canada. FORAC submitted its views and recommendations to the Minister at its annual meeting with him in Ottawa on February 4, 1983. It states in the FORAC Act that "the Council shall meet annually at the city of Ottawa and at such other times and places as are necessary for the work of the Council."

(d) The Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council does not publish any reports or recommendations.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pinard (for Mr. Regan) that Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker,, just prior to the lunch hour adjournment, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Peterson) asked me why we chose to debate Bill C-110 for seven days with some 140-odd speakers. I would happily reply to that question.

Bill C-110, as the Parliamentary Secretary may know, was introduced in the House in May of 1981, two years and some months ago. When it was introduced into the House by the then Minister of State for Trade, he came to me as spokesman for Trade of the Conservative Party and asked me if we could very quickly dispense with the Bill. It did not seem to involve a great deal. I reviewed the Bill and agreed with him that it was not earthshaking, but I sought three amendments to the Bill. First, I wanted greater representation from the private sector on the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation. Second, I wanted the financial disclosure shown in the financial statements of the Export Development Corporation. I wanted the corporation to disclose the contingent liability with respect to the commitments the corporation had made to finance certain contracts at one rate of interest, then going out on the open market and having to finance those commitments at a higher rate of interest. Third, I wanted the Government to bring forward appropriations that were necessary to fund the Export Development Corporation from time to time. I wanted them brought before Parliament. The then Minister of State for Trade said; "I do not see any problem with those amendments. They seem perfectly reasonable. I think I can arrange to have those approved by my Cabinet."

Here we are, two years later, debating the Bill. They were very reasonable amendments that I put forward. We put those amendments forward in committee for over two years. We did not receive one civilized response in a period of two years to those simple, straightforward amendments, not one sign of willingness to amend the Bill in those reasonable ways. I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that that is why we were here in the House for seven days. That is why we put forth 140 speakers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Are there any further questions or comments? Debate.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in joining in the final debate on the Export Development Corporation Bill, I felt it might be helpful if I could underline what has really transpired with respect to the Bill. First, I would like to emphasize that Canada does need an important acceleration in our trade activity as far as the rest of the world is concerned.

There are several ways that we can consider the matter. I had an earlier opportunity to speak at report stage on the Bill and pointed out that on a world, global basis, Canada at one time had about 5 per cent of the total trade of the world, and that has now deteriorated to about 3.6 per cent. But perhaps I should have continued further at that time and pointed out that with respect to the components of our share of world trade the picture is even bleaker. I refer, of course, to manufactured products. We find that we once had over 4 per cent of the world's total share, but that has now deteriorated, as far as manufactured goods are concerned, to something over 2 per cent. I suggest, and this point has certainly been made by many business associations, such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, that if we could just regain our fair share of world trade, especially in manufactured and in semi-manufactured products, we would really cut our unemployment by half. Surely, when we face the reality that, first, there has been a steady deterioration under the emperor with respect to our share of world trade, and that perhaps half of the unemployment today is due to the fact that we have lost that fair share of world trade, we can see how relevant the debate is with respect to export-import trade generally, but specifically with respect to Bill C-110, the Export Development Corporation Bill.

Having said that, it is natural to ask what will be done about it. My first suggestion would be to make it extremely easy for business generally in Canada, and especially for the smaller businessman, to get their fair share of trade in the world market. This brings us to the essential question of whether the Export Development Corporation is serving the Canadian public, the businessman—and the small businessman specifically—adequately in relation to allowing them to participate in world trade. Coupled with that question, I believe we must consider whether Parliament is being given the opportunity to scrutinize, perhaps to make suggestions, and above all to be satisfied with what the Export Development Corporation is doing. It must not only be adequate but fair and attempting to achieve the goal we seek, which is to regain what we have lost in world trade.

This is where I feel the debate on Bill C-110 has been so relevant. I know that the trained seals on the other side are often impatient when we delay a Bill because we feel there are certain provisions that must be changed. We sought various amendments to this particular Bill. While we would like to have won them all, we agreed to accept amendments in the spirit of compromise which perhaps went only part of the way. At least, they were an improvement. Of course, I am referring to amendments to these blank cheques which the Government enjoys having Parliament authorize. At least we were able to have that measure tempered. More importantly, we were able to have a specific clause included in the Bill which will require the annual report and financial statements to be referred to the relevant committee of the House every year.

Having said that, let me underline why I feel it is so important that we have that type of parliamentary scrutiny. During the debate at report stage of this Bill, I mentioned that most Canadians would not believe it if they were told that of the approximately $2.5 billion total financing commitments and dealings that the Export Development Corporation handled in 1982, $957 million went to one company; Bombadier. I invite those who are interested to go to the Library and read the annual report from Bombadier. They will find it almost unbelievable that in relation to the size of that company, the Export Development Corporation would have felt justified in awarding it the benefit of almost $1 billion worth of financing. In 1982, for example, the total sales of Bombadier were $448 million. In one year, financing was approved which will result in an eventual benefit to that company of almost $1 billion in sales.

When we are dealing with a situation which represents almost 40 per cent of the total 1982 activity of the Export Development Corporation, surely it is relevant that we in the House ask if that was a wise course of action. Surely we must ask if there has been proper scrutiny and when we would have an opportunity to review the details of what the EDC is doing with respect to that one benefactor of financing.

Let me go further. How many in the Canadian public realize that one country has been given what is called an unconfirmed line of credit of $2.5 billion? Of course, I refer to an arrangement that was made some time ago in favour of China. While that may be a very sensible move for the people of Canada to make, surely we in the House owe it to our constituents to almost insist that the Government must be able to satisfy the Members of the House that the deal which it has in mind is fair, will serve the Canadian public, and particularly the smaller businessman since that is where EDC lacks fairness, before it enters into those kinds of transactions.

Furthermore, we have seen these disclosures of mismanagement of various Crown corporations in Canada. I could take the balance of my time just reading the names of the companies that are involved, such as Consolidated Computer and Canadair. Suffice it to say that there are billions of taxpayers' money not only for this generation but for generations to come that will be lost because of the ineptitude of the Government in running so many of these Crown corporations.

Again we find that the EDC plays a hand. While Bombardier received almost 40 per cent of the total activity of the EDC in 1982, a nice little company owned by the Crown called de Havilland picked up $200 million. Surely we must ask ourselves, if the Government saw fit to give assistance amounting to $200 million to one concern, a Crown corporation, whether that was the most suitable way to spend that money compared to ensuring perhaps 100 or 1,000 smaller businesses picking up a piece of that type of financing benefit.

While pointing out the de Havilland example, I think it is interesting to see to which countries that financing has been awarded. For example, in 1982 there was a financing facility awarded to a country called the United Republic of Cameroom. It was for $25.190 million. As well, we see that Colombia picked up a couple of financings; one for $1.466 million and another for $1.460 million, both giving a benefit to de Havilland in Canada. There is another financing of $3.502 million for Colombia in favour of de Havilland.

Mr. Blais: Selling planes built in Toronto.

Mr. Stevens: All of these are to this one, single Crown owned company.

Mr. Blais: Selling planes made in Toronto.

Mr. Stevens: Let me go on to mention that in Egypt in 1982, de Havilland was able to get $119 million—almost $120 million—in financing, again for their benefit with the destination being the Arab Republic of Egypt. The more one speaks to people who are active in the Canadian export and import business, the more one hears one common message. It is that the federal Government is using the financing available either to support its Crown corporations or, in turn, its favourite corporate associates. That is what this question of scrutiny and parliamentary authority is all about. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) has been heckling me this afternoon across the aisle.

• (1530)

Mr. Blais: I have been giving you facts.

Mr. Stevens: He simply talks about building planes to sell in other countries, with the hope of employing people in the Toronto area.

Mr. Blais: Not only the hope. It will employ people.

Mr. Stevens: If it is as simple as that, why has the Minister of National Defence, as a member of Government, consistently refused to make disclosures through the House which the people of Canada feel should be made with respect to such financing? Certainly other countries such as the United Kingdom and the United States take for granted that public financing of this nature is an open book. One can learn anything about the financing, including the rate, the term and the customers involved. Here, one cannot learn that. It is a secret. Certainly it is a secret because the Government feels—

Mr. Blais: You cannot get commercial information like that any place. Tell me one place where you can.

Mr. Stevens: I hear the Minister interjecting again. If he would like to check through his staff, he could have that information within 24 hours. Certainly that would be the case with the Export-Import Bank in the United States. If his staff cannot obtain it, I will get it for him. If there is any other way I can help that Minister to improve the defences of Canada, I want him to be assured of my assistance, because it is long overdue.

Mr. Cullen: What is long overdue, your assistance?

Mr. Blais: The aircraft built by de Havilland—

Mr. Stevens: I hear the Minister referring to aircraft built by de Havilland. Is he referring to Twin Otters? Apparently that will be our fighting aircraft.

Mr. Blais: Did you ever hear of the Buffalo?

Mr. Stevens: Clearly, when the Minister of National Defence keeps interjecting, we are getting to the quick. He knows that this is stuff the Government would just as soon have under the carpet and not much comment about.

Mr. Blais: Is that as much as you know about de Havilland? You should visit its aircraft plant in Toronto.

Mr. Stevens: Let me emphasize that I am only giving an example of where EDC financing has been routed.

I could go through this for other companies that are very closely connected with the Government. Here is one in favour of de Havilland for $3.8 million to Malaysia. When we were dealing with an aggregate of $200 million in financing for the benefit of the Havilland, was that the most sensible way in 1982 for the Government of Canada to facilitate an export, as opposed to ensuring that hundreds of smaller businessmen received some part of the benefit? The question is as simple as that. I have yet, either in committee or in the House, to hear a Government Member or backbencher attempt to justify some of this type of financing to which I am referring.

I have cited various countries, but what about the United States? Why, if we wished to sell to the United States aircraft manufactured by de Havilland, would we have to give them concessional financing through the EDC? In 1982 I see before me four financings, all for the benefit of de Havilland: one for $6,144,000; another for $11,858,000; another for $6,267,000; and a final one for $6,513,000, all to customers in the United States to allow them to buy de Havilland aircraft with our financing. Is that competition?

There is always a danger in this field when a company like de Havilland finds it tough to sell its products that if will start, through the Government of Canada, selling a financing program which the buyer cannot refuse. That, in turn, tends to weaken the infrastructure in the country. The selfsame Government which is hinting that it would like to see more free trade, especially with the United States, apparently overlooks the fact that to the degree we weaken our own in-country industrial capability and competitiveness and at the same time welcome free trade, basically we are asking for a situation that might develop where we will be overwhelmed by the American producer, and the manufacturing capability in Canada will be lessened still more.

What I am discussing is something which is actively being considered and reviewed in many of the so-called think-tanks both in Canada and the United States. If there is a debate which will ensue in the House, either in this session or the next, I hope that at least in part it centres on the critical question of where Canada's role will be through the 1980s and into the 1990s in terms of world trade. It is time we accepted that the academic, philosophical attitude of our emperor, which may have been in vogue in the 1960s, has absolutely no relevance in the 1980s. If we continue to follow his impractical, unrealistic approaches, coupled with the confrontation which he seems to love so much, it will mean a much less wealthy Canada than we have every right to expect. The fall in real incomes in the last two years, which has started to accelerate as Statistics Canada pointed out, is just the beginning of a continuing fall if we do not start looking outward at the world and saying that Canada once again will regain its fair share of world trade. To do that, we must start looking at some of the issues I have touched upon today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate on a matter which is extremely important to Canadians. There are a minimum of 1.3 million Canadians now out of work, particularly young people. Every day I am in my riding I hear from people of all ages who say that they have lost their jobs. I am thinking of a man who told me he recently lost his job after 25 years. I am thinking of young people who tell me they cannot find their first job. As everyone here knows, the unemployment situation in Canada is unacceptable to all Canadians, whatever their politics or location in the country.

My contribution this afternoon is primarily based on a quotation by Jean Monnet, the father of the European Community, who said:

> If a freely elected government makes a simple plan clear, free people can immediately adjust to it. Businessmen could plan investments, working people could plan savings, shopkeepers plan inventories, and farmers plan their fields.

I wish those words were posted on the walls here so that every one of us could look at them every day of the week. I think Mr. Monnet has stated a truth about which each one of us should be told frequently.

Evidently it is true that $1 billion worth of new exports creates approximately 40,000 jobs. It is clear that every time you create another $1 billion in exports you create an additional 40,000 jobs. The most cutting indictment that anyone can make of the Government is that it has willfully and intentionally created unemployment over the last number of years in order to fight inflation. It may have done something about inflation, but 1.3 million or more Canadians and their families have paid the full price for a policy designed to fight inflation and create additional unemployment.

I realize it is easy to be critical. This Bill asks what we on this side propose to do about the situation. Last year Professor Thibaut de Saint Phalle wrote a book entitled "Trade, Inflation, and the Dollar". Everyone could gain from reading the book. I am speaking personally and not on behalf of the Official Opposition in saying that some of his suggestions are applicable to Canada, this Government, and to all Canadians. I say that in the context that Canada, while being one of the luckiest countries in the world, is desperately in need of re-invigoration, renewed enthusiasm and, if I may coin a term, re-invigorization.

What can this Government and the Government in waiting do to help Canada increase its exports? Some of his suggestions are as follows: First, we can show greater interest in strengthening the world's monetary system. Second, we can show greater interst in, and response to, trade barriers created by other nations. Third, we can enact a clear national export policy. I know those opposite will say that they just announced one a few days ago. A press conference is now being held across the street with the trade ministers of the OECD, the United States, Japan and Canada.

Again I refer back to the quote of Mr. Monnet. How can a businessman plan a plant expansion, a new plant or whatever, when, until six months ago, the third option—the option that we get away from dependence on the United States and increase our multilateral approach with other countries in order to avoid dependence on the United States, greater trade with the United States and greater economic integration with the United States—was somehow morally unacceptable to Canadians? It is true that the recent trade policy of the Government indicates a greater sectoral integration with the United States.

My point is that you cannot jump from a national energy policy that blantantly discriminates against our major trading partner and other measures, such as FIRA, which sends a signal to the United States that it is not welcome in Canada, that we want to reduce rather than increase our economic ties with that country, and then say as we did six weeks ago, "Presto, Eureka, we are now converts, we want greater recognition of the geography between the two countries and greater recognition of the need for sectoral free trade with the United States". It is this flipping and flopping, going backwards and forward, going upside down and inside out, which has worsened many of our economic problems.

The Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) in Question Period today stated that our investment statistics are bad. That should qualify as the understatement of the week. You cannot create permanent jobs without increasing investment. Jobs in large measure are a function of investment. If someone chooses to put his saving into a savings account at the bank, not as many jobs will be created as if he had put an addition on his house, opened a small dairy business or something along that line. That is the way to create long-term jobs in Canada. When you do not have this fundamental confidence among investors, you do not have the employment opportunities that Canada needs. I guess I had better speak briefly to the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I was about to say that there is the matter of relevance. There is strict relevance and relative relevance. The scope is pretty wide. The Hon. Member has made the point, so I will allow him to speak to the Bill at this time.

Mr. Kilgour: It is clear to all Members that last week we achieved something. There was all-Party agreement to the amendments. As you have probably heard one or two times today, Mr. Speaker, the borrowing capacity of the corporation is limited to ten times its paid-in capital in earnings rather than its authorized capital. Second, the authorized capital asked for of $2 billion has been reduced to $1.5 billion. This reduces the possible borrowings from $20 billion to $15 billion. Also of importance is the fact that in future the company will have to present its annual report and financial statements to the House of Commons, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, for examination. Finally, the right of the Government to take up loans and guarantees not appropriate to the corporation's activities has been reduced from $20 billion to $13 billion. For this we have to thank the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and recognize the goodwill of the Government on these matters.

The EDC can do part of the job, but it cannot do all of the job. We believe that it should be more accountable to Parliament. We have succeeded in persuading the Government to go along with this. I think it is within the grounds of relevance if in a personal capacity I say something about the proposed restructuring of the Department of External Affairs with respect to trade. You, Mr. Speaker, will be aware of the fact that External Affairs is to be integrated from top to bottom with the former trade section of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I invite the Hon. Member to state the relationship of the Bill, the Export Development Act, to what he is now raising, which is the subject matter of another Bill presently before a committee of this House.

Mr. Kilgour: It is indeed, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for correcting me on that. I believe this is relevant. I have before me the fascinating study of the Economic Council of Canada entitled, "The Bottom Line". It deals in large measure with trade. Chapter 10 deals with future trade policy. It talks about low interest loans. It is hard to argued that the EDC is not making low interest loans. In discussing an amendment last week, I stated that it may be making a lot of low interest loans and may in fact be engaging in more aid than trade.

We on this side strongly favour aid. However, I wonder whether the EDC should properly be confusing its role of financing trade with a role which more properly belongs to CIDA, that of encouraging aid. This study talks about productivity. The author states that the productivity problem persists and that productivity has not grown for eight years.

How will this Bill increase productivity in the vital export industries which are now in a period of recession, as is the rest of the economy? How will we increase, through the Export Development Corporation, our trade in, for example, the export of manufactured goods?

It has already been pointed out in this debate that Canada's percentage of the total exports of manufactured goods was 3.3 per cent in 1960. In fairness, it is 4.2 per cent today. At the same time, Japan, for example, has gone from 5.3 per cent of total exports of manufactured goods in 1960 to 14.8 per cent. Surely, Sir, it seems to me that if Japan has had a simply phenomenal increase in its total exports of manufactured goods and Canada has had an increase of slightly under one percentage point, we should be looking at the programs used in Japan as compared to those used here.

What, for example, does Japan do with its equivalent of the Export Development Corporation? Is it modelled after our Export Development Corporation? Is it different, and if so, how does it differ? Should we not have a Bill in front of us now which would take Canada in the direction that Japan has gone in terms of exports? One may say that there are other programs dealing with that. Yes, it is true that there are other programs dealing with exports, but do we have the right kinds of programs? Do we have the right kinds of mechanisms in place that will allow Canadian manufacturers and exporters to increase their percentage of total world exports?

It has been pointed out by numerous speakers that the Export Development Corporation is not perfect. I think it is clear that this Bill does not perfect it. A number of speakers have referred to Professor André Raynauld who said that the EDC is:

> —rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire, and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient.

Professor Raynauld has compared the EDC to equivalent organizations in other countries and does not come to favourable conclusions.

The point cannot be made often enough that we on this side want to increase exports. We want to support anything and everything which will increase exports from Canada, because only in that way will we get Canadians back to work. At least I am persuaded that it is only by increasing exports that we will accomplish that.

I believe that it is a mistake for the Government to pretend that this Bill, as amended, is a panacea. It is not. It will take many other things to improve our trade position significantly. More important in my view, Sir, is that it is going to take a change of thinking on the part of the Government to improve our trade position, or, hopefully, it will take a new government which recognizes that the private sector can create jobs in the export market and that permanent jobs will only be created when Canada resumes its role as a secure place in which to invest, to work and to do business.

Let me give an example which perhaps makes what I am trying to say seem more real. Recently I heard of the case of a person in a European country who was engaged in the business of exporting beef. Somebody asked that person whether he did business in Canada. I am informed that the man rolled his eyes and said: "No, of course not. I do not do business in Canada". Asked why, he said that years ago he had had a contract with a Canadian company and that Canadian company, which I obviously will not name, had botched the contract to the point that this man will never do business in Canada again. Unfortunately in this case, the European business community is a small business community. Stories like this get around rather quickly in the European business community, and they hurt you, Mr. Speaker, they hurt me and they hurt our constituents. If Canada is known as a country where one does not do business by choice, that hurts all of us.

I think that all of us in our own way within our own communities and businesses have to change our way of thinking. We have to become pursuers of excellence. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the book that is number one on the non-fiction bestseller list at the moment is entitled "In Pursuit of Excellence". It basically deals with management techniques of successful American companies. The book that is number two on the non-fiction bestseller list is called "Megatrends". I have read one of those books and I am now reading the other one. I wish everyone would read those books. Everyone would see that Canada has more going for it than any other country in the world. As we have all heard many times, Canada has people, resources, geography, infrastructures, social programs and access to markets. In my view, we have absolutely everything that is necessary to be number one in the world; yet, for various reasons, we are not number one at the moment.

We all must say to ourselves that from now on, we are going to pursue excellence in whatever our business or occupation is. We are going to get into this market or that market with a sense of urgency. Our businessmen must have a sense of urgency. You and I, Mr. Speaker, for different reasons, must have a sense of urgency as well.

Canadians need to develop an alertness to opportunities. Somebody was complaining the other day that there does not seem to be this sense of urgency in our business community at the moment. This sense of urgency must be encouraged. Anything that this Government or a new government can do that will encourage Canadians to do business around the world must, in my view, be done.

I will refer to some examples. I refer again to the book written by Mr. de Saint Phalle, and it seems to me that there is not enough appreciation of the need for exports in Canada.

Mr. Blais: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kilgour: It seems to me that the substitution of investments abroad by Canadian firms for a policy of marketing from Canada is one that must be encouraged.

My time is almost up. I do not have to tell you, Sir, how many Canadian companies have chosen to simply move out rather than continue here. There must be improved research and development in Canada. There must be more adequate training programs for the executives who are marketing Canadian products around the world.

May I continue, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, since the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is the first speaker in a long time from that side of the House who has made sense, I have no objections to his continuing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Questions, comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it seems to be rather coincidental that my work this week has taken me into the consideration of two Bills, one in committee and one in the House, dealing with international trade. Bill C-152, the Government reorganization Bill, has of course a great deal to do with, shall we say, the framework of the department for international trade in the now omnibus Department of External Relations. This particular Bill, Bill C-110, deals with the financing of a good deal of our international trade. During the extensive debate at report stage my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and others, adverted to the problems of international trade in Canada. They spoke of its decline in an absolute and relative sense and the necessity for an increase, if we are to regain employment and economic activity. Those are not very simple problems.

● (1600)

Earlier, a Member of the Government referred to the fact that some 140 Members spoke at report stage in order to achieve the particular objective of having the Bill amended. The Government showed unbelievable gall in the size of borrowing authority it sought, the overcapitalization, and so on, of the Export Development Corporation. This could easily be halved and the corporation could still carry on as well as before. Unfortunately, however, it would have had to be accountable to Parliament if it wanted to increase the ceilings for borrowings and insurance as well as capitalization. We know that the Government wants to get as much blanket authority as possible so that it will not need to come to Parliament and give an accounting.

I do not know whether, in agreeing to the amendments of last Friday, we accommodated the real objective of the Government, that is, a gain of about one-third. There are ways of getting what you want. A typical bureaucratic way of achieving success is to overdemand and then make a concession. After extensive debate, concessions are eagerly seized upon by all concerned and a settlement is made. That is all very well but, of course, it was what the Government wants. I dare say we could have carried on debate and denied passage of the Bill at report stage, but then the Government would have brought in closure.

I am not going to comment on the amendments that were made or the Bill as it stands. I am going to say something that no one else referred to in the earlier stages of debate or in committee, where documents are produced, however. There is a stony silence from the media as well, as far as the representations made by public bodies and corporate interests with expertise in the field are concerned. This matter should therefore be brought up in this forum where there is wider public observation. I am going to refer to two bodies that made strong representations that I think are in keeping with what should be the philosophy of the corporation.

The Export Development Corporation was set up years ago to assist private financing—to assist Canadian exporters who, at that time, were doing well in the international field. The economies of Germany and Japan and the modern economies of Taiwan, Singapore and Korea were not set up, nor did we have competition from Brazil and other parts of the world where Canadians, to their surprise, now face competition. The attitude of many manufacturers and members of the public was almost, "How dare they?" They were used to the fat years after World War II when we lived in a euphoria of so-called international power and trade. The truth of the matter is that some of these countries have far more modern machinery and a younger and better trained work force which has a work ethic.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), referred to productivity. At the present time I am engaged in a study of productivity in the public and private sectors of Canada. The short answer to productivity is for the working public and the managing public to recover the work ethic. That is one of the, perhaps, simplistic ways of saying that we have to do better, not only in the public and private sectors but at all levels of government. We have been living in the land of the lotus eaters for the past generation and now we must work at regaining some of our lost trade.

In 1982 the Economic Council of Canada produced a report called "Intervention and Efficiency". After a rather notorious visit to Europe some six or seven years ago by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), he went on television in this country, without having discussed the matter with his Ministers, and indicated that the Government would become much more interventionist. We have seen what five to seven years of more intervention has done for efficiency. What has been the result as far as the Canadian economy is concerned? The Economic Council of Canada identifies one of the Government agencies which has had direct intervention, because it has excluded pretty well everyone else, and that is the Export Development Corporation. Canadians face greater risks in international trade than in domestic trade, and the financial requirements for it are greater. I will read those recommendations very quickly. The first one deals with the Export Development Corporation, and I quote:

> We recommend that the Export Development Corporation gradually move towards providing export credit reinsurance, leaving the field of insurance proper to the private sector. We further recommend that the Export Development Corporation serve as the insurer of last resort to close any gaps left by the private sector in the supply of export credit insurance.

That is entirely within the philosophy as posed by the Opposition, and as was stated during the debate on this particular Bill. The Minister may look startled about this, but this is a fact. I quote the next recommendation. It reads:

> We recommend that the Export Development Corporation continue to provide direct financing for Canadian sales abroad when there is reason to believe that the private sector is unable to provide the required credits. Public financing should be made available only under terms and conditions commensurable with the risks involved and the costs of such assistance—including the opportunity cost of the funds used—except in those cases where it is deemed necessary to take into consideration the export-support programs of other countries.

This means that the Export Development Corporation would partially withdraw from direct export financing, except when a credit gap is found. This has always existed. I remember many years ago one of the first big breakthroughs in selling railway engines on the world market came between Canada and Mexico. Mexico did not discover any oil. Mexico was a poor country. It needed railway rolling stock and, frankly we needed a good, healthy, productive spurt in the locomotive manufacturing field. This was done with government financing with long-term low interest rates. There was a political element. There is no doubt about that. But, my goodness, it was an economic shot in the arm for both countries and, therefore, it was an activity which was worthy.

That is provided for in the Export Development Act. I believe it is $5 billion or $7 billion now as a result of the amendments, with which the Government of Canada can make direct loans or participate in the financing directly rather than through the corporation.

I quote the following from the next recommendation:

> We further recommend that the Export Development Corporation's gradual withdrawal from most direct-lending activities be accompanied by an increased concentration of its efforts in the field of credit insurance and bank guarantees. The Corporation should also stand ready to provide refinancing facilities for private lending institutions engaged in export finance.

That is precisely what a government agency of this kind should be doing in the type of economy we want here in Canada. I have already seen some efforts in this field.

I would like to talk about a brief which was submitted to the Science Council of Canada by the Royal Bank with regard to counter trade, which is a new phenomenon. Counter trade means swapping or barter. For example, if country A wishes to buy from country B, it is on condition that country B may buy from country C, which in turn, will buy something else from country A. It is all a lock-up deal, and that has to be financed. I cannot say a lot of Canadian banks, but certainly the Royal Bank, which spoke about this in its brief of May of 1983, said that this is a phenomenon which Canadian business cannot ignore, nor can the Canadian Government. There is one recommendation made that there be, in the section of international trade in External Affairs, a desk designed to deal strictly with counter trade. If we ignore recommendations of this kind, Mr. Speaker, we do so at our own peril.

I have read the last of the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada. I hope I have done so on a positive basis.

I would like to re-emphasize again what was said about counter trade. A classic example, perhaps, is Indonesia. It is perhaps the one which is most widely known among Canadians. By the counter purchase policy instituted in January, 1982, as a means of increasing Indonesia's non-oil exports, foreign companies now tendering on government-funded contracts are required to purchase non-oil, non-gas goods equivalent in value to the contract in the event their bid is accepted.

We in Government have been told time and time again about the necessity for the Canadian business community, and Canada as a whole, to get involved in that North-South trade, so-called, with the Third World countries. The economies of those people are in a precarious state. They do not have a great deal of money lying free to finance the deficits they have in trade. Therefore, this counterbalance, this counter trade practice, has grown up. It is understandable and we have to get involved. The faster we do so, the better, and not only through our private institutions. Not only must private businessman wake up to it, but government must also wake up to it, not next year or the year after, but now. I hope that in the next committee meeting on Bill C-152 the Ministers in question are going to be asked what they are doing about counter trade.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Member is as follows: with reference to the question of competition in which EDC might be involved with the private sector, would the hon. gentleman indicate to me whether he has any knowledge, first of all, of any private sector corporation, which is in the export insurance business, which has at any time complained to him or, indeed, has launched a complaint relating to the activities of the EDC?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I have heard rumours of some complaints. Some Hon. Members have raised the question. But I have never personally received any complaint with regard to the field of insurance. I do know some of the banks are acting, more recently, in conjunction with EDC on a shared basis, and that is to be encouraged. As to the insurance, I would say this, in fairness, that I believe EDC scared them all out of the field years ago. It has become a state monopoly. That is why I believe the Economic Council of Canada has said, "This state organization must desist from what amounts to intervention by the state which has existed for some time and let the others in."

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, being very knowledgeable in this field, knows very well the areas to which we are directing our exports. Does he not recognize that the level of risk there is regarding the financing of any export items creates substantial difficulty, especially in today's financial environment, in finding private sector companies that are ready to assume that high level of risk?

Mr. Lambert: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that. On the other hand, I do not think I would like to express it that way. I would much prefer to take a positive approach and say that we have a degree of trust in those people with whom we trade. We do not approach them on the basis of high insurance contracts which are an immediate telegraph to others that frankly we will sell to them but we do not trust them very much. That to me is the reaction if it becomes known that the rate charged for an insurance policy is as high as the market will bear.

I think there is room for improvement here. While there have been some difficult times, in the end you will find that if your prime seller, the Canadian businessman, has been on his toes and has a proper contract, the calls on insurance will be much smaller than might be feared.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, regarding EDCs involvement in export financing, the Hon. Member has recognized that there has been an increased level of co-operation between the conventional lending institutions and the EDC. Has the hon. gentleman been approached by any of the conventional financing institutions decrying the role of the EDC in export financing or at any time criticizing or claiming that EDC was denying them access to financial returns as a result of its involvement in export financing?

Mr. Lambert: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that personally I have never received any reports. I have read of some representations made by newspaper columnists, presumably expert in the field, suggesting that the financial institutions of Canada had finally decided to, well, go somewhere else because, frankly, competition from the EDC was too severe, the profits to be made were not commensurate with the risk and activity. In the same way, the life insurance companies got shooed out of the house mortgage field some years ago. When I was building my first house and practising law, there was not a bank in this field, there were a few trust companies, and Central Mortgage and Housing only went into larger apartments or limited dividend projects. The rest was done by the NHA with the life insurance companies and some trust companies.

However, and I trust I will end on a positive note, I am hoping we will see that more of the banks, particularly those which have developed over the past five to eight years in the international field and which have taken advantage of the anticipated creation of the B-series banks here in Canada on a reciprocal basis, will get involved. They have learned a great deal more about international financing. They have learned how to work in those markets, and they are there for that particular purpose. I hope that as a result of their activities they will get into a great deal more financing of Canada's exports rather than recourse being made to the EDC on all occasions.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), put on the record many, many times that with a staff of 600 less than 100 applications for financing were processed during the whole year at the EDC. Therefore, the market demand cannot be that great. More and more is being handled, I think, by some of the charter banks, and certainly if the banks are the people who are drawing to our attention the counter trade, that means that they are involved.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has recognized that there are occasions where international transactions occasion extremely high risk with very low returns, and that creates an environment that is not very attractive to the private sector. In that context, and in view of the fact that there is increasing demand for participation in the export market where this particular environment is to be found, namely high risk and low return, does he not see that there is a need for greater involvement of agencies such as the EDC, to go into areas where the private sector fears to tread?

Mr. Lambert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will say this much. Having been in this House at the time the EDC or its predecessor was established, I am quite well aware of the compelling reasons at the time. I supported the establishment of the EDC and, yes, there is a place for it. Having said that, I say that its present role should not remain writ on stone, and it would be more in keeping with the need for expanding Canadian trade for it to go more into re-insurance, as the financial backer of last resort, and the encouragement of more participation by private financial institutions. Not only those which operate from Canada, but, as you may know, some 65 foreign banks have established branches here in Canada and they have connections abroad. I would not want these foreign banks to act as bird dogs for business for their home banks.

Now that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) has come into the House, possibly he would like to say something to us about this question of counter trade, unless my time has expired. We hope the Minister of State for International Trade will give us some learned discourse on the subject of counter trade.

● (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. On the last point made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, the Minister of State for International Trade is considered to have spoken because he was the mover of the motion now being debated. He was the prime mover. It was moved on his behalf. Technically he has spoken. He can only speak again with the unanimous consent of the House. I hope that is clear, if he wishes to speak. Debate?

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) ended his last remarks on a somewhat complimentary basis, with qualifications however. I too could perhaps start my remarks in a somewhat complimentary fashion, but I might not end on such a complimentary note.

We should now be aware, at this point in the debate on Bill C-110, that after perhaps one of the longest report stage debates on a matter of principle, the Progressive Conservative Party was able to gain substantial concessions toward parliamentary accountability in the Export Development Corporation Bill known as Bill C-110. The authorized capital of the corporation formerly determined its borrowing capacity. In the future, the corporation's borrowing capacity will be limited to ten times its paid-in capital and its retained earnings. The authorized capital of some $2 billion requested by the Government was reduced, because of long debate, to $1.5 billion. This, in effect, reduces the possible borrowing from $20 billion to $15 billion. In future, the corporation will be required to present its annual report and its financial statements to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for examination, something that has been long overdue. Once again, accountability has been strengthened. Lastly, the Government's right to take up loans and guarantees not appropriate to the EDC's activities has been reduced from $20 billion to $13 billion. That will not answer all of our concerns, but it will some of them, which, in turn, would justify the need for extended debate on the Bill.

There could be no doubt about the difference in approach to government financing that exists between the Progressive Conservative Party and the Liberal Party of Canada. The Progressive Conservative Party believes very strongly in the principle of accountability and control. The Liberal Party, or the governing Party today, believes that the tax dollars of Canadians and their descendants are the property of the Government to do with as it pleases, with as little reference to Parliament and to outside consultation as it can get away with being made possible through legislation. In other words, it is circumventing the responsibility of Parliament or Government to the electors who require representation here in Ottawa.

Bill C-110 has two major thrusts. But before I proceed, and to throw some perspective on the seriousness of the Bill, I must go back a few days in the debate to a statement made by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). I wish to quote him directly because it does indicate the seriousness of the matter at hand. As quoted from page 27439 of Hansard, he said:

> Let me put it into perspective, if I may. When it comes to the question of whether we are crowding or somehow being unfair to EDC when it requests a $60 billion authorization, let us not forget that as of December 31, 1982 the total corporate and Government lending activities, the total assets of the EDC, were $6.5 billion. That is the total amount it expended as at the end of 1982. It is asking for authorization to make it ten-fold bigger compared with its total assets at the end of the last year of roughly $6.5 billion.

The first major thrust with which we are dealing in Bill C-110 is to expand the operational capacity of the Export Development Corporation, more commonly referred to as the EDC. In so doing, the Government seeks to expand the borrowing capacity of the corporation without need for further reference to Parliament and without need for further paid-in capital. The Government also seeks to increase the amount of high risk or bad business transactions that the Cabinet may approve, originally from $3.5 billion to $10 billion, but now because of changes, from $3.5 billion to $7 billion in the case of insurance. Originally it had requested from $2.5 billion to $10 billion in the case of loans and loan guarantees and now, through debate, that has been reduced to $6 billion. Any losses made under such circumstances are paid from the Consolidated Revenue Fund without future reference to Parliament.

The second major thrust of Bill C-110 is to alter the current structure and powers of the board of directors. We will refer to some specific problems in that area. The number of directors increases from 12 to 15, and the requirement that six of the directors be public servants has been dropped. This does not go far enough toward ensuring adequate private sector participation on the board. If the Government so desired, it could appoint no one at all from the private sector. Therefore, I think it fair to say that the Export Development Corporation is not truly accountable to Parliament.

We must consider one specific, glaring example of lack of accountability and the concern involving those who might lobby the financial involvement of Government by again referring to page 27440 of Hansard for September 23, when the Hon. Member for York-Peel, in discussing the lending of money by EDC to a company on whose board sat the Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer, stated:

> By sheer coincidence, we find on the board of Bombardier Inc. the Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer, P.C., Q.C. When I noticed that, it rang a bell. That chap used to sit across the aisle, shoulder to shoulder with many of these fellows who are attempting so poorly to govern the country at the present time. As we know, the same Jean-Pierre Goyer is Vice-Chairman of Canadair Inc . . . . That company, on the Government's own admission, has blown $1.4 billion of taxpayers' funds. Here we have another company getting the benefit of $970 million worth of financing through the Export Development Corporation, and there is a common Liberal link, Jean-Pierre Goyer . . . included in the Bombardier financing through the Export Development Corporation was a sale to the almost defunct New York Transit Authority. If we read the same statistical review, we find that the United States Metropolitan Transportation Authority of New York got two cracks at the Canadian public purse. Directly from EDC it received $294,912,000. The Government stepped in with another $626,688,000. Isn't that nice! Talk about a milk cow! It was so blatant in the United States that the U.S. Commerce Department instituted an action in that country, pointing out that in its opinion the Canadian Government had provided a subsidy amounting to $167,225 for each subway car proposed to be sold to the Transit Authority of New York.
> Can you believe that this Government, which denies financing to help commuters get to work in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver, is willing to subsidize authorities in New York to help workers there get to and from work through a company which happens to have a very friendly director on this board.

He is the already referred to as the Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer, PC, QC. If that does not indicate without question in the minds of those here in the House of Commons a necessity for accountability of the EDC to Parliament, I do not know what will.

The EDC does not have its spending adequately scrutinized here in Parliament. It is not required to table an operating budget, a capital budget or information on the size of its payroll. It may borrow money in the name of Canadian taxpayers, their children and their children's children without seeking parliamentary authority to do just that. But for anyone who has paid attention to the Government's operations and expenditures over the years, this comes as relatively no surprise.

The expansion of Government intervention and the erosion of accountability was accurately reported in 1979 by the Auditor General of Canada, James J. Macdonell. His reports were based upon the findings of four Government-wide studies, each on a different aspect of financial management, control and accountability and each involving upwards of 100,000 hours of professional analysis and study. In terms of size and scope, each study could easily in itself be equated to a royal commission. His findings are as important today as they were back in 1979. The conclusions were straightforward and identifiable: control of the public purse had been lost in this country. An attitude permeated the bureaucracy that somehow the taxpayer was accountable to Government.

In 1978, a report to the House of Commons by Macdonell offered these comments on the ballooning and its impact on effective management. I must quote from two paragraphs of that report as follows:

> If our findings are an indictment of anything, it is of the system which apparently puts more emphasis on developing policy initiatives and new programs, than on the principles and well-established practices of economical, efficient and effective resource management.

He went on to state:

> Operating in a climate which seemed to provide reasonably easy access to a bottomless public purse . . . it is not surprising that few Brownie points were available for managers who displayed frugality, let alone parsimony, in spending public funds and bringing in an effective program on schedule and below budget.

It is indeed deplorable that the insight and intelligence of J. J. Macdonell was wasted on a Government that, rather than heeding his warning, increased its interference in the economy and continued to expand at unprecedented rates.

The question of increasing the budget of yet another Crown corporation over which we have no control is absolutely deplorable. I am reminded of a book entitled "The Disease of Government", written by Professor H. S. Ferns of Birmingham, England, who suggests that:

> As a result of sustained government intervention in the economy and the creation of regulatory planning and operative government industrial institutions, . . . the end of market economies is now in sight . . . Governments, to be effective as agencies of social co-operation, have to define and limit their role in the community; otherwise governments are a source of confusion, disorder, and other massive evils . . . The need to limit the power of governments in the interest of liberty and peace is now universal.

This is exactly why the Progressive Conservative Party is opposing Bill C-110, which would increase to $44.5 billion the amount of money that the EDC can borrow, lend and insure without adequate parliamentary control. This Party speaks for the interests of all Canadian taxpayers who no longer want to be misled and confused about Government spending. They like to see government run somewhat like a business, accountable to those who have their money invested.

In the words of a former U.S. Treasury Secretary, William Simon:

> —people must be taught to start calling for a rollback of the bureaucracy, where nothing will be lost but strangling regulation and where gains will always take the form of liberty, productivity and jobs.

Today we are indeed forced to witness a disease of Government, and it is a malady which, if allowed to go unchecked, will not be susceptible to cure.

Let me quote from Hansard of September 23, at page 27442. This was said by the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates):

> We are making an argument that is as old as democracy itself—that there has to be accountability by the Government for the money it extracts from the taxpayers of Canada and then spends.

Export Development Act

As we have gone through debate on Bill C-110, speaker after speaker has given us many examples of the tremendous proliferation of Crown corporations and their belief that they are sacred and unassailable and that it is impossible to examine their activities.

Only this week I was shocked to see that the Chairman of the CNR, Jack Horner—a former Member of the House and one who stood on many occasions to talk about accountability and the requirement to have Members on the Treasury benches account to us for the money spent, supposedly on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada—was reported as saying that he did not believe the Auditor General should audit the books of the CNR.

That is exactly what we are saying here in the House during this debate. That is what the Auditor General should be permitted to do.

Seven years ago, the Auditor General noted that in the majority of Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective. Moreover, co-ordination and guidance by central Government agencies of financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations are virtually non-existent.

I do not see anything different being said in my remarks today and the remarks of the Auditor General than was said by Jack Horner who, now in his capacity as Chairman of the CNR, feels that auditing by the Auditor General should not occur.

It is a shame that we have to live with such inconsistencies on the record. The time for reports and discussion has passed. The time has come for meaningful action to be taken to increase the accountability and control of Crown corporations.

The EDC is proof positive that the current Government has, for many years, been unwilling to listen to the Auditor General, Members of Parliament on both sides and most important, the individual Canadian taxpayer.

It has been completely unresponsive to the needs and aspirations of the voters. Canadians are demanding cost effectiveness in Government to act as an inspiration for recovery and hope. Instead, we see a Government which continues to expand and spend money without regard for costs.

Last Wednesday, we listened to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek), expound on the virtues of increased trade and its ability to increase jobs. We are all aware of the benefits of export development, yet this Government seems to feel that only it is capable of making important decisions regarding trade.

The Economic council, in its report, entitled "Intervention and Efficiency", noted this fact on page 51:

Canada is perhaps the country with the least private-sector participation in export financing decisions. The Governments of most other industrial nations encourage bank participation in this area, more so than does the Government of Canada. In six of the industrialized countries examined, the supply of primary financing is left completely in the hands of the private sector, which may, however resort to public rediscounting facilities. In most of the 17 countries studied, the negotiations for granting export credit are also left to the private sector. This is not the case in Canada, where direct negotiations take place between the EDC and the foreign buyer. When the banks are invited to participate jointly with the EDC in long-term financing, they often complain of being denied access to all the information and to the negotiations, and of being presented with ready-made proposals.

• (1650)

This was according to a report of the Economic Council of Canada entitled, "Intervention and Efficiency". The private sector must participate more in the decisionmaking process of the EDC. However, Liberals believe that the bureaucrats who govern most govern best. It is imperative that the Export Development Corporation be governed by a disciplined, cost-conscious board of directors. The Government has a responsibility to Parliament and to the people of Canada to ensure that the public purse is not treated as a bottomless pit.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members who are rising to ask questions or to make comments? If there are none, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, we are drawing to the close of another Bill, Bill C-110, and once again I rise to indicate that it reflects the fundamental problems of process in the House of Commons and the rules by which we govern ourselves.

Some two years ago this Bill was started. It is now getting through. I agree with anyone who says that the process takes too long. Two years is much too long for the passage of Bill C-110. But that begs a question. It is not just simple Opposition intransigence which is trying to stop the Bill. There were very good, honest and legitimate reasons to stop it, just as there were good and honest reasons for the Government to want to get a Bill amending the EDC through Parliament. Somehow between those two forces we have a stand-off at high noon. The problem mainly goes back to process and our views on what the House is all about. Certainly some of the delay resulted from Government priority. It brought forth many other Bills which took a lot of House time to get through. It was a question of the Cabinet as the executive of the nation setting its priorities as to what Bills it wanted. Certainly the House, and particularly the Opposition, canmnot be blamed for that. The Government is entitled to set its own rules.

I suppose the main reason for the opposition, as indicated by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), was accountability. Since the Second World War over 400 Crown corporations have been established. If we did in all their subsidiaries, the figure would be much larger. The question arises as to how a democratic society controls Crown corporations. Most of the board members and appointments to Crown corporations are made by the executive. This has caused a sub-government tied into the main executive, the Cabinet. We see a close relationship between Crown corporations and Government departments, which has resulted in a lack of accountability for taxpayers' dollars.

We must always remember that our primary objective as elected officials is to protect the dollar which comes out of our pockets as citizens and, because of the deficits which have built up, will come out of the pockets of our children and grandchildren. Ordinary Canadians can quite properly criticize us for not developing a process and mechanism to protect their dollars. For every dollar a private citizen cannot decide to spend, there is a dollar in the hands of the Government which it decides to spend, at the expense of the work, effort and sweat of ordinary citizens. That is principle I am against.

Millions and millions of individual decisions by ordinary Canadians on how to spend their own dollars would lead to a much wiser result than those dollars being taxed away and spent by a few men and women of whatever political stripe. When we believe that an executive can make better decisions than ordinary Canadians, we are wrong. If we continue the way we are, we will return to the pre-1750s when there really was state capitalism in the form of a monarchy and a tightly knit group of advisers and counsellors. Essentially that is what we are returning today. We have a duty to oppose it today just as people fought and indeed gave their lives in the 1700s for the right to make their own decisions, which of course was primarily the right to property.

Not only is there the issue of accountability. There is also the issue of freedom of information and the legitimate role of Parliament versus bureaucracy. The Bill before us reflects once again how many Bills come through the bureaucratic process to Parliament. We all know the charts that show how an idea about something which needs to be done progresses through the bureaucracy. There is a huge chart indicating the Departments through which each Bill has to go. There are arrows going each way, whether it be to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Finance or Treasury Board. The arrows go both ways indicating a dialogue, but in the far right-hand corner of the chart there is a little tiny box marked "Parliament". There is an arrow into it and there is an arrow out the other side. It is the job of the executive to get it through Parliament with no amendments. That is what we stand here resisting.

I believe Government Members should be seeing this matter from a different perspective as well. If a Bill has not originated with one of us as Parliamentarians but has come through the bureaucracy, then we must check that bureaucracy, which is becoming increasingly larger. They are individually fine people, but collectively they have taken on a power which has subsumed the power of the House. Indeed, Government backbenchers should play a much more critical role in the consideration of legislation which comes before us. This Bill is a particular example.

Two years ago the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) brought forward three amendments which would have made the Bill acceptable. It was similar to the constitutional package which the Government could have had by Christmas of the year it was brought in, if it would have accepted one amendment. The Government would not accept the amendment, so we fought for months and months, causing enormous division in the country. These three amendments were reasonable in themselves. This Bill could have been law for two years.

What were the amendments? Of course, the first one concerned more private individuals on the board of directors rather than public servants appointed by the executive or the Cabinet. The second concerned financial disclosure, especially of the interest rate subsidies used. The reason these should be known is that every time some dimension of an industry is subsidized, we are really delaying a problem which ultimately surfaces and has to be dealt with. But when it has to be faced ultimately, the problems are ten times worse and the agony is great indeed. It is better to face it at the beginning. Why do we not have that information up front so that we can deal with it and everyone can operate above board? Then there would be no financial foolishness or skullduggery under the table. Of course, the third amendment indicated that major commitments or appropriations by EDC should come before Parliament. My original thesis was that the primary role of individual Members of Parliament was that of a financial watchdog. If we accept that, then surely this amendment was a reasonable one.

Had the Government accepted the amendments of the Hon. Member for Calgary South, the Bill would already be two years old and we would have had more time to direct our energy and effort as Members to some of the other major problems in the country rather than fight over the principles of accountability, freedom of information and the role of Parliament. While we fight for what we believe and while the Government continues to fight for secrecy and Government by executive fiat without any responsibility to the House, the nation is literally being destroyed. We stand here fiddling while Rome burns, while Canada is being destroyed.

With a simple change of the rules of the House, we could make it that votes against the Government on ordinary pieces of legislation would not result in the Government falling and having to call an election. We have often argued in the House that it is only on the budget, the Throne Speech and major pieces of critical policy legislation that the Government would declare a question of confidence. On ordinary pieces of legislation such as an amendment to this statute or the Farm Credit Corporation, the bulk of which come out of the bureaucracy, backbenchers on both sides in the House and in committee should be able to take a critical look at that legislation. If we do not like it, we vote it down and the Cabinet Minister would say, "Fine, ladies and gentlemen, you do not like it, we will take it back and re-work it." We could do that. We do not need to have responsible Government on ordinary pieces of legislation, particularly in the twentieth century when legislation is much more significant and there are literally thousands of pieces of legislation on the books.

While we fiddle, the country is being destroyed. As the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) said, our over-all trade has gone down from 5 per cent to 3 per cent. In manufactured products, it has dropped from 4 per cent to 2 per cent. Had we retained our original 5 per cent and 4 per cent, we would have had 50 per cent fewer people unemployed than we do today. Think of that in terms of the unemployment insurance dollars and the welfare dollars that would be saved. With another 750,000 people working, tax revenues would be so much greater. The deficit would be smaller.

I have argued about the effects of the deficit. Just as night follows day, deficits lead to inflation, which, in turn, leads to high interest rates, which, in turn, leads to a collapse such as we are experiencing today. There is an adjustment factor that takes place when nations have huge deficits such as we now have. We have between 1.5 million and 2 million people unemployed.

If we had 50 per cent fewer people unemployed, the extra tax revenue would have permitted the Government to do so much more. It would not be in the marketplace borrowing all the money. There would have been more capital that people would have had to put into businesses because there would be nowhere else to invest it in terms of government.

The way it is today, people can sit back and take absolutely no risk whatsoever. They can lend to their Government and get an enormous rate of return. We had a classic example a couple of years ago where people got 19.5 per cent. If two years ago you had a million dollars to invest and lent it to the Government, you would have received an income of $195,000 without taking one scintilla of risk. If the Government had not been demanding the money and competing, that money would have had to be put into the marketplace. It is true there would have been a risk, but we would have seen the building of plants and the creation of jobs. Therefore, we might have had even less unemployment.

Two years later the original amendments have not been accepted. Other amendments have been brought forth, lately the amendments which were accepted which dealt with the lending capacity of the corporation and automatic reference to a standing committee, a change in the borrowing arrangements restricting it to ten times paid-up capital. Over-all, as I said earlier, the basis of our objection is accountability. At third reading, when we are to look at the Bill in principle as amended, do we still have outstanding issues that have not been dealt with? I submit we do. Therefore, the problems will continue with respect to this and other corporations. We will continue to waste enormous amounts of time in the House as well as human vitality and energy which could be put to positive use building a greater nation rather than spinning our wheels.

The first issue is whether the Export Development Corporation could be lending money directly or whether it should have an insurance function. We have read the reports and the original statute. Prior to 1970, the EDC was an insurance agency. Since then it has been lending money. As the Economic Council points out, if the EDC were to return to an insurance principle, it would get a much bigger bang for its buck. By guaranteeing money, you would put out a little bit of money in terms of insurance coverage. That would go a lot farther than lending an actual sum of money to one corporation.

The second issue has, to a certain extent, been dealt with in the Bill. It deals with the bureaucratic nature of the corporation. I would like to ask EDC why it took over 600 people to process 100 applications last year. There may be a perfectly rational answer. They may be able to show that everybody put in a full day's labour and that it was valuable to the country.

However, if there is padding and too many people, that makes the corporation look inefficient. It also tends to reduce morale in the corporation. As well, it ties up people with all sorts of vitality and experience. They may be able to go to another area of government or another corporation which could use those people in terms of making applications to EDC. They would understand the internal nature of the corporation and government itself. We need to look at the red tape, the expense and the cumbersome nature of the applications.

The third issue is the whole process where, for some reason or other, the bulk of the corporation money is going to a very restricted number of corporation. Some of our Members talked about Atomic Energy of Canada, a Crown corporation, and de Havilland Aircraft, another Crown corporation. If it is the Government's intention that its own Crown corporations are to get priority and have access to public tax dollars indirectly through the corporation rather than through direct Government appropriations, Government purchases of shares or straight Government loans, why do we not face that question? Why do we pay 600 people to operate the EDC and run money into Crown corporations when we would not need anybody to do that if we run it through departmental loans or Government investment in equity? I wonder if the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) would rise and give his views on that.

The fifth issue which has not been dealt with to my satisfaction in trying to follow these issues, together with other issues that come before us, is the whole question of concessionary finance where we subsidize interest rates on loans to other countries so that those countries can buy goods from Canada, which creates employment. The effect is that the deficit continues to get larger. These deficits in themselves are much more dangerous on a long term than the problems they are trying to solve. The Government says that it is better than we lend it the money and subsidize it so that Canadians are employed because if Canadians are employed, they are not rioting in the streets. It does not need to be that way because I think one can always go to the people and explain that the situation is that we are either priced out of the market, because of our northern climate where it takes too much heat to grow plants and therefore we must reduce our fuel taxes, or perhaps because our labourers are demanding too much in wages. Labourers would be prepared to work for less if the costs of their loans and mortgages were lower, because it is all relative. If we increase the deficit and therefore interest rates, the ordinary labourer will, quite properly, ask for more money to meet his day-to-day needs. If we do not increase the deficit and keep all those expenses down, then that labourer does not have to ask for more money. It does not have to be the way it is now.

● (1710)

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are rising to point out that my time has expired. I could go on to many other issues, but I will leave it at that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members seeking to ask questions or make comments at this time? If there are none, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth time that I have endeavoured to speak to this particular Bill. The Bill is becoming more familiar to me each time I speak.

I am much happier with the Bill as it is now than I was when I spoke previously. At that time, the Bill was bad in a number of respects, particularly on the issue of accountability. The Export Development Corporation had been given the power to borrow $2 billion and then had been given the power to multiply that by ten to borrow $20 billion without reference to the Parliament of Canada. That is the part that we were seriously concerned about.

I heard an Hon. Member today question why this debate had gone on for so long. That is the very reason. This is an important aspect of parliamentary democracy. If we lose accountability and the control of the public purse, we do not have a parliamentary democracy of the kind spoken about by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Great Britain yesterday. Parliament must take responsibility. When that happens, we have proper representation.

As I mentioned on one other occasion, there was a time when the representation was true. When Parliament first began, everybody went to the site of Parliament. Everybody was present. Each person voted the way he felt he should vote. That was true democracy. As society and the population grew, that became impossible, so we devised a scheme whereby representatives went to Parliament to represent 5,500 people, 10,000 people, and today there are Members of the House who represent more than 100,000 people.

As the population grows, it becomes difficult to reflect the thinking of the greatest possible majority in a riding, but that is the responsibility of the Member. He can do that through a number of means. He can stand for certain principles at election time, and if people elect him they expect him to uphold those principles. He can hold a series of public meetings to secure the wishes of his constituents, as indeed I did when discussing the Crow Bill. People turned out in large numbers at five meetings that were held in my riding. The people who were there were a cross-section of the country. There were farmers, businessmen, hog producers, cattle producers, grain growers and processors. They indicated how they wanted their elected representative to vote in the House of Commons. Almost unanimously they wanted their representative to vote for the freedom of choice which is the basis of our democracy.

When our forefathers went West seeking land, they went West with determination. They had little money but strong backs. They had little more than the clothes on their backs, but they were determined to build a heritage. They were determined to develop something of which their children could be proud. Among those things which they were determined to develop was accountability. A father bought a farm and his children worked. Accountability was learned in the farmstead. So it was in the mining camps. We were taught that we had to be accountable.

I remember a time when I received 25 cents a day for looking after my neighbour's cows. I took the cows up the hill at seven in the morning and I went to get them at six o'clock at night when I got home from school. I received 25 cents a day for that. I remember my mother saying to me that that came to $1.75 a week and that I must be accountable for that money. She asked me what I was going to do with it in ten weeks. I had to be accountable. That is the lesson that Government officials must learn.

To a considerable degree, we now have accountability in this Bill. There is not as much accountability as we would like to see, but there is now much more accountability than there was before. But what about all the other corporations? What about the Government itself? We want accountability in the Parliament of the country. We are not in Moscow where the Government can do what it likes without the knowledge of the people. That Government simply tells the people what is good for them. That is not what we want in Canada.

We want the Members of a democratic Parliament to reflect to the greatest possible degree the thinking of the people who sent them to Parliament. We want the Government to include that thinking in its administration, in its policies and in its laws to the greatest possible degree. That is democracy. We have gotten far away from that.

Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that the people of the country, whether they live in P.E.I., Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, the Yukon, the Northwest Territories or Indian reservations, would have favoured seeing the country go into debt by spending more than it made this year, by spending $31 billion more than it takes in? Not on your life, Mr. Speaker.

I represent three Indian reservations and I have met with the band councils. I have learned to respect our Indian people. Our Indian people are not illiterate, as some people think. They are business people. I remember the time the Indians I represent came to me and said: "How can we be accountable when we apply for a grant first thing in the spring in order to put in a sewer system on our reserve, we get the money in October; and then the Government says we have to spend it now or we lose the money?" Rather than lose the money, they try to spend it in October. What happens then? They are putting in sewer lines in frosty conditions, the worst possible time to put in a sewer system. In the west, snow often falls in the middle of October. Sometimes the snow comes before that, but I have seen pretty severe winters starting on October 15.

Here they were trying to put sewer lines in in November. That is a waste of public money.

One of the Indian band councillors from the Blackfoot Reserve said that they were wasting the money but they have to do it. The Government told them they had to do it. That is not accountability on the part of the Government, Mr. Speaker. Our Indian people had no choice. They had to do it or else lose the money entirely and be told the following year that they had lost their chance.

Accountability does not exist when an Indian reservation applies for a grant in the spring and they get it in October. Surely it does not take months to go over these papers. Sometimes I write letters to Ministers of the Government and I get an answer back within a week. Other times I get an answer back three months later. Is that doing the job? I have been a Minister and I have had some heavy portfolios. At one time I was responsible for the motor vehicle branch, the Department of Highways, the research council, the licensing of drivers and the cancellation of licences for drunk drivers, et cetera. It was a tremendous load. As well, I was responsible for the telephone system of Alberta. I know the many hours of work that are involved, Mr. Speaker, but people did not have to wait three months for a reply to letters. If the letters piled up I worked until the early hours of the morning, and that is what Ministers should do. Of course, I understand there is a limit, but surely three, four or five months' delay on a reply is no way to run a public business. That is not accountability.

The whole matter of accountability is what is involved here, Mr. Speaker. Due to the tremendous work of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and others who helped him, we have gained that to some extent in this Bill. The Government finally gave in, and now will be accountable for this particular corporation, but what about all the others and the Ministries? They should all be accountable if we are to have anything like a democracy. I hope that now that the Bill is just about ready to go to the Senate, we will be able to get results from our international trade and export market.

I should like to tell the House of an incident that really hurt me, Mr. Speaker. In the City of Drumheller we were close to getting an industry with world-wide connections, but then the Government refused to give the last grant that was required. They may never have had to call on the guarantee, but they refused that guarantee, and today the company has gone into receivership. About 200 people were thrown out of work. When I go through the west part of Drumheller, I see machines sitting idle. That industry could have provided 150 families with a living and could have been exporting machines, but the Federal Business Development Bank would not give a guarantee so that the program could go into the final stages.

One machine the company manufactured was a 139 cultivator and the Prasko seeder which could have been sent to Third World countries if a guarantee had been provided. The Prasko air seeder is a tremendous innovation and has all kinds of potential. All the research had been carried out, but in the final stages, when the cash flow was needed, it was not available. The bank would not take a chance that it might not succeed but, rather, made sure that it did not succeed, and the company went into receivership. It also made the chisel plow. These implements could have been used all around the world and could have provided work for 150 or more people. Welders from all over Canada could have been given work instead of being put on the unemployment rolls. Financial institutions would not go along with the proposal, however, and had to have their money then and there. The Government would not give any guarantee, so the plant went under. Today, in Drumheller that site sits cold and lonely, hundreds of Prasko seeders in the yard and scores of people drawing unemployment insurance. It is no wonder the Unemployment Insurance Fund is disappearing, Mr. Speaker. The only way to keep the fund functioning is to have more and more people working. The people who worked at the Prasko plant put their whole life's savings into running it, but the Government would not take a chance. But the Government took a chance with Imperial Oil to the tune of $30 billion. It is no wonder there are two million people unemployed. There is no incentive for people to invest their money, either. If we invest our money, then we create jobs. Perhaps only one or two people would be hired to start with, but any business can expand.

Another thing that hurts us is the capital gains tax. In Turner Valley a man showed me an empty lot with a garage beside it which he owned. He wanted to expand, and he said to me, "If you think I want to do that for any blinkety blankety Government, you are crazy. I will do it for my family. I will work 24 hours a day for my son and daughter and my wife, but I am not going to work for the Government to grab the money. I will pay income tax as I go along, but when I die or sell the business I do not want to have to pay all over again."

The capital gains tax is unfair. It kills incentive and halts expansion. It is no wonder we have two million people unemployed. There is no incentive to invest in this country anymore.

Just the other day I was on a plane returning to Ottawa. The man in the seat beside me told me that he had money invested in Florida. He said, "The way things are going in this country I need a little nest egg for my wife and family if I get ill and cannot work. But the way things are going in this country, I have no faith in the Government." As a result, he is investing his money in another country. The Government is responsible for that attitude, and it is mostly because in so many cases there has not been enough accountability.

In Parliament, we should turn our eyes inward and find out what we are doing wrong. I suggest the first thing we need is what the Hon. Member for Mississauga South fought for so ably in this Bill—accountability and control of the public purse. When industry sees that the Government is paying its own way and not spending money it does not have, then industry will follow suit.

The Bill has been improved greatly, Mr. Speaker. The effort made by all Hon. Members, particularly the effort of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, has been repaid because now there will be some responsibility—unless there is some loophole we have not found yet. I hope that is not so. I hope this corporation will become a model for every other corporation, all 300 of them, so that we can eventually change all legislation and make them all responsible to Parliament, which will have the final say in regard to these things.

• (1730)

Parliament should have the final say. Parliament should have the right to control the moneys which are expended. I used the illustration the other day of King John and the Magna Carta. King John was spending wildly for various projects he wanted, not what the people particularly wanted, and when he came back from France one time, he was met by some of the people of Britain. They met him on the field of Runnymede and said to him, "We want you to sign here. We want you to be responsible. We want you to be accountable. We want to have some say in the money you collect and the way in which you spend it." It was a small beginning, but that was the basis of our Parliament today. As the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Great Britain said yesterday, "Accountability, that is the difference between a democracy and a totalitarian state." In a totalitarian state the people have no business knowing what the government is doing. They have no right to know. They cannot gather in Red Square and protest in the way the Canadian people can line up and even sleep on our grounds and protest about something which might eventually save their lives.

I see you rising, Mr. Speaker. I am just barely getting started, but I recognize the rules. The 20 minutes go pretty fast. I would like just to say in conclusion that I hope this Bill will be a model, that this corporation will be accountable to this Parliament, that it will be an example to all other corporations and that we will now start on a new course in this country with government responsible and with the Parliament of Canada having control of the purse strings of the nation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions or make brief comments? If not, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this last segment of the debate on Bill C-110, I would first of all like to deal with a number of subjects which have arisen from time to time, namely those of competitiveness and productivity as they affect both our export markets and our ability to lengthen our production lines for our domestic market within Canada. In relating to both competitiveness and productivity, I would like to make some particular reference to the questions of the debt burden, interest rates and inflation which have plagued not only government, but industry, over the last number of years.

The idea espoused by many speakers in this debate so far, that workers have created their inflationary misery through the wage-price spiral, would be funny were the effects not so harsh and tragic for millions of Canadians. Both high interest rates and the high rate of inflation can be traced directly to the office door of business. The high inflation which began in the late 1960s came from two main sources, the Viet Nam war—that is some time ago but it is important for us to bear in mind—and a conglomerate merger boom which occurred in both Canada and the United States. That inflation declined during the mid-1970s, but returned with a vengeance in recent years. It is only now beginning to ebb through a deliberately induced recession and depression in many world economies. No one has more successfully induced that depression than has the Government and the business community of Canada.

This inflation is tied to an even higher military expenditure and a merger boom to end all merger booms. The only people to benefit from these trends are corporate shareholders, and 90 per cent of Canadians do not even own one share. Let us first dispose of the idea that government is the only source of inflation. Business and government have been equal partners, but not equal offenders. The federal debt in Canada was virtually unchanged from 1968 to 1973. Until 1978 it grew by 17.5 per cent per year, on average. Corporate debt has grown by 15 per cent to 16 per cent every year since 1968—every year. Government is not blameless, but business has been at it much more steadily and much longer.

Corporations have also the ability to print money. They do it through mergers and takeovers. Company A buys the outstanding shares of Company B, but pays a premium over the usual trading price which has averaged 60 per cent over the last few years. This means that billions of dollars of unproductive debt are added to company balance sheets. And this means, of course, higher prices for both goods and services, and the consumer gets the bill. Increasingly, business does not go to the market for capital, and it has not done so for some time. The so-called "democracy of the marketplace" which many Hon. Members, particularly Conservatives, but many on the other side of the House, still tout as being something real, actually, it is a fairy tale, Mr. Speaker. Business increasingly does not go to the marketplace for its capital for takeovers or for investment. It builds those funds into its own price structure. That amounts to taxation without representation. No one complains when prices reflect the production of goods at a reasonable profit, but when business does not go to the marketplace, and takes it out of largely administered price structures, because of the increasing corporation monopoly control which the larger corporations have gained, it is taxation without representation and there is no other word for it. The democracy of the marketplace in this situation is an absolute myth.

Takeovers in Canada came to $55 billion for 1976 to 1981. This means an additional $20 billion or more in business debt. Mergers are just not productive and there is nothing in the market system to justify them or make them desirable, not the large corporate mergers which we have seen increasingly in recent years. Of course, some of our economic problems are imported from the United States. Its federal debt passed the trillion dollar mark in 1981. However, since 1975 it has spent more than $650 billion on arms. The increase in its massive federal debt is mainly caused by arms expenditures. On that point, Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the new Leader of the Conservative Party, its new messiah, has been advocating, along with his caucus colleagues, ever-increasing defence expenditures in Canada, which again will create some of the same kind of problems, albeit on a smaller scale, as has been the case in the United States in the last few years where the Reagan administration has found that its promises just cannot be brought to bear fruit, largely as a result of it. Some of that business has come to Canadian firms, but it is all play money. Billions of these dollars have been pumped into both economies, but there has not been a corresponding increase in goods. This puts great inflationary pressure on prices. There is too much money chasing too few goods, in the classical term. The merger boom has helped raise interest rates through increased competition for large amounts of capital. In other words, the high interest rates which have driven many Canadian small businesses, farms and home owners into bankruptcy, have happened because those very same ordinary Canadians, normally productive, have been forced to foot the bill for corporate mergers. These mergers will in turn make things even worse for them and drive even more of them out of business.

That is the kind of problem we face with the kind of economy we have seen in Canada and in many other countries over the last few years. The myth of a free enterprise society in a country which is rapidly becoming a corporate society and a corporate state is just a myth. It is a fairy tale. As long as the Government, the Official Opposition Party and the people act as if the fairy tale were true, we will continue, I submit, to get deeper and deeper into debt and deeper and deeper into severe trouble, both in our economy and as a society.

Home owners trying to renew their mortgages cannot compete with Seagrams, Dome Petroleum or Petro-Canada. We cannot control inflation in the United States, but we can put our own house in order. If we let companies continue to merge as they wish, we must prohibit them from passing on the additional cost to the public. Let the billions come out of dividends. If shareholders know they will have to pay directly and immediately for their lust to acquire, it might slow them down. That would help bring down both inflation and interest rates. The Government has subsidized the takeover game and we can no longer expect ordinary Canadian wage earners, small business people, farmers and consumers to pay for it.

● (1740)

There has also been a lot of talk during this debate from both sides as to the strategies we must follow. I would like to touch for a few brief moments on some of the strategies we have followed which were endorsed, both implicitly and explicitly by both the Liberal Government and the Conservative Opposition.

Mr. Blenkarn: What?

Mr. Kristiansen: Northeast Coal in British Columbia.

Mr. Blenkarn: What has that got to do with—

Mr. Kristiansen: That company, again supported by the B.C. Members of the Conservative Party, hand in hand with their Social Credit allies—they do not like to hear the truth, Mr. Speaker. To quote from a recent article in a Canadian Press story—

Mr. Blenkarn: How about the EDC?

Mr. Kristiansen: —it says:

> On the eve of the formal opening of two more coal mines in western Canada, an independent report has forecast that one or more of the mines now operating or under construction in British Columbia will be forced to close within a few years.
> The report, prepared by industry analysts H.N. Halverson Consultants Ltd., nominates as the most likely candidates for closure 'new mines in remote locations'—the Quintette and Bullmoose Mines at the centre of the Northeast Coal project.

We are in the middle, Mr. Speaker, of spending well over $1 billion in public money, not to mention the private money, to create a huge edifice in northeastern British Columbia which is already outdated. The respective Governments were told by some of the top analysts in the field that this was totally outdated before they made the investment.

Another example, Mr. Speaker, was the pre-build pipeline. That was supported by the Liberal Government and the Conservative Opposition. Once again we have to say we told you so, but it would give us a lot more joy to say, "You guys were right and it is working out." But you threw away whatever leverage or bargaining power we had. We are now in a situation, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen: "Don't blame us for gas problems, Americans told". Canadian Ambassador Allan Gotlieb:

> —speaking to a luncheon meeting of the American Gas Association in Washington, said the Canadian Government has become concerned at some of the punitive measures being put forward in the U.S. Congress against imports of Canadian natural gas.

Not only was there not an ironclad agreement, not only did we throw away our leverage, not only are we exporting our cheap gas instead of providing the right of way for a pipeline so the Americans can burn their own Arctic gas, the Americans are now saying that because the gas was fixed at a cheap price we are undercutting some of their own gas production and they want to penalize us for that. That is the fault of the Conservative and Liberal Parties, tweedledum and tweedledee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kristiansen: They advocated that as a joint policy, just as they and their friends advocated Northeast Coal.

Mr. Blenkarn: What has this got to do with EDC?

Mr. Kristiansen: They are both a flop. Both Parties and both projects are a flop, and they should have known. We do not know anything, of course; we are New Democrats.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kristiansen: We are the ones who told them that the oil and gas companies were lying in the early 1970s, and they said, "Who do you think you are?" "Who does Tommy Douglas think he is?", they asked. Two years later when the whole thing fell apart, they are sitting there red-faced and they cannot understand. They are the biggest bunch of absolute phonies in the world, and that is a polite phrase. I only wish some of the people in the media would read their own newspapers of a few years back.

Mr. Blenkarn: How about you reading the Bill?

Mr. Kristiansen: They would realize that while some of us are certainly not infallible, every once in a while we know something about the marketplace that they fail to understand and appreciate, that it is not a fairyland where you can give away what you have, have no bargaining power left, and then have the right to complain because somebody takes you for a ride. We are constantly being taken for a ride. These guys over here, the Conservatives, and those guys over there, the Liberals, have been the drivers who have taken us for that ride into the sorry situation in which we find our economy today.

Mr. Blais: Who is introducing this Bill?

Mr. Kristiansen: Maybe the Government wants to atone for its sins. Maybe it is going to turn over a new leaf and behave in a little more accountable and responsible way. But you will pardon us, Mr. Speaker, if we have to see it to believe it. We have been a long time waiting.

While the Conservatives and Liberals have joined in one megaproject boondoggle after another, projects which have collapsed in our faces, most regrettably those of the people of Canada, they have continually neglected over decades and decades and decades the renewable resources of this land, the forest industry in particular. Again, it is many small companies in that industry which need assistance from the EDC and other agencies of Government because they do not have the wherewithal to seek out many of those specialized markets in Europe, the Middle East and other places, in many cases where the purchasing companies are willing to put the capital up front. Those smaller companies, which are lean enough, hungry enough and adaptable enough to be able to cut their product to suit those markets, do not have the facilities to seek those markets out. They need that kind of assistance and require financial assistance in start-up costs, modification costs, so they can meet the markets many of us know are there.

I have had, Mr. Speaker, many examples in my own electoral district, certainly in the adjoining ones, of small private companies which made it during this period when the giants were flopping and failing, the giants which have been traditionally favoured by both the Government and representatives of the Official Opposition whether in Ottawa or the various Provinces. I have seen them make it because they are willing to adapt. They are willing to go out as much as they can with their limited resources, change their production line and their measurements. They will go to metric, imperial or whatever. They will cut one foot, two foot, three foot or whatever is required in order to adapt to the market as it exists. They do not sit back on their fat rumps like a lot of the majors have done in the forest industry over the last few years and say, "Come to us". Markets do not just come to you, especially in lean times. They got so used to being big and fat when times were great and they sat back and said, "We are just going to cut for volume. To heck with quality. To heck with having to modify our industrial plant to meet whatever demands are there." So they have collapsed.

If it were just those corporate managers who had to suffer, Mr. Speaker, well, they made the decisions and they have the right to suffer. But there are 300 communities across this country who have suffered terribly from the consequences of their decisions. There are hundreds of thousands of working people and small businesses which provide the machinery and support services those companies traditionally require, and they have been the ones which have had to suffer. Just as the ordinary consumers and farmers and small business people and homeowners of Canada have had to suffer through interest rates and inflation for which corporate mergers and the arms budget in the U.S. were in large part responsible, so are the service industries and small business people in 300 communities across Canada being asked to pay the price once again for decisions that they had no part whatsoever in making.

I would like to conclude simply by saying that one of the things that we have to address, if we are talking about the nature of the economy we must have if we are to adapt and not serve just some mythical target but the needs of the Canadian people, is to decide whether we want an accountable society with decentralized power-structures where people from all walks of life have a more direct say in governing their communities, their resources and their means of livelihood. In that way they can ensure the decisions made meet their needs and not just self perpetuating corporate managers. Or do we want a society in which an increasingly concentrated and monopolistic corporate big daddy, through its Government agents, be they Liberal or Conservative, decides what is best for him with the interests of the people and the nation as an afterthought? Those are the two choices facing Canadians. It is, fundamentally the choice, represented broadly—though we are not without sin—between the NDP on one side of the argument and the Liberals and Tories on the other. No matter what legislation the Government passes, if it does not decide that it will make the economy work for people rather than have the people work for the economy, it will fall flat on its face. The ordinary people of Canada are the ones who will be continuously asked to pay the price. They have paid enough. It is time the Government gave them a product that was worth it.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, it was certainly interesting to listen to a Member of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), tell us how, if his Party formed the government, and heaven help us if it ever did, it would do away with business. Could one imagine what would happen to this country if the NDP did away with all business? It is against business and against profit. What a mess we would have. I am glad the Hon. Member mentioned the name of Tommy Douglas. Hon. Members should remember what happened in Saskatchewan under Mr. Douglas. There was once a boot factory, a shoe factory, a glue factory, every type of factory under the sun, and every one of them flopped. It was a total disaster. He spoke of what Mr. Douglas will do. Mr. Douglas is a big multinationalist. He is on the board of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I would call to his attention the Bill before us, Bill C-110. While there has been some leeway with regard to subject matter, the Hon. Member does appear to be straying a bit.

Mr. McKenzie: I hope we will not have a double standard here, Mr. Speaker. There was much talk of investment and where investment is going, and I would like to make some comments. I have figures going back to the time of the prior Government in Manitoba, from 1969 to 1977, concerning the amount of investment that was driven out of the Province, either into Alberta or into the United States. I have also seen the amount of investment money that these people across the way have driven out of this country, in the billions. It is reducing in amount now, because there is nothing else left to go.

I was recently on a trip back to Winnipeg and I had a conversation with a developer. He works out of Winnipeg at Toronto. All his work is in Texas, Louisiana and Florida. That is where all the investment money is going. There will never be any economic recovery in this country as long as we have this Liberal bunch in, I can guarantee that, because they cannot attract investment. All they do is drive it out of the country. I was also reading a recent trade magazine and found that Kentucky advertises itself as being the eleventh Province. It stated, "Come to Kentucky, where profit is not a dirty word." That is what these people have done to this country. I have seen other examples in Manitoba of the New Democratic Party getting into the Chinese food business and what have you, and that folded up also.

The Export Development Corporation is one of the many Crown corporations which has a highly inefficient operation. For example, in 1982 the Export Development Corporation's 613 employees had loan transactions with 62 companies and placed slightly in excess of 900 separate insurance policies. How many banks have ten employees for every loan customer? How many insurance companies in the private sector issue insurance policies at an annual rate of one and one half policies per employee?

The Government makes money on its export insurance coverage, but fails to market the insurance adequately. Only a small handful of corporations received the benefit of the Export Development Corporation's export subsidies. Little is being done to expand this circle. The Export Development Corporation's actual profit last year was $1 million on capital of $691 million, a rate of return of one-tenth of 1 per cent.

To quote from the Economic Council of Canada's report, "Intervention and Efficiency", "Government assistance should be of a temporary nature. But each year, as time goes by, the names of the firms receiving assistance from the Export Development Corportion become more and more familiar." Sixteen companies received half of the 415 loans to 138 identified companies authorized by the EDC between 1969 and 1980. One of them received 40. One Crown corporation, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., which led groups of exporters in negotiations of turnkey projects related to the sale of Candu nuclear reactors, received 25 per cent of all the financing authorized by the EDC during that period. Over-all, six companies received half of the total value of loans authorized by the corporation during those years. Therefore, leaving aside the AECl, the number of companies that received half the total amount of loans authorized over the period is 19, still a small figure. The report questions, "Could it be that these exporters have not yet reached maturity? One is rather tempted to believe that, for these firms, the subsidy has become a form of permanent assistance."

Last year the EDC lent or facilitated bank financing in the sum of $2.5 billion. Of that amount, $1 billion went to Bombardier, $200,000 went to de Havilland, and $100,000 to Spar Aerospace. Thus, three of the 62 comanies that received EDC financing last year received more than half of the total money.

The EDC has not always conducted transactions that are in the best interests of Canadian taxpayers and their children. The EDC has financed Inco Developments in Indonesia and Guatemala, thus jeopardizing jobs in Sudbury and Manitoba.

The EDC has financed forest development projects in Mexico, Poland and Peru, developments that will compete with Canadian forest products. The EDC helped to finance the construction of a monument to the Algerian revolution. Is that not a high priority?

At a time when Government borrowing costs were in the range of 16 per cent, the EDC arranged a 9.7 per cent loan of $563 million U.S. to assist Bombardier in the sale of subway cars to New York City. Forty per cent of the jobs created by this deal are in the United States.

Often the EDC will be indecisive or will not match a foreign country's offer. A March 29, 1983, Globe and Mail article stated, "A Canadian company has lost a $70 million (U.S.) export order to build an iron foundry in Saudi Arabia because the federally financed Export Development Corporation could not match private European financing terms".

The EDC is supposed to aid Canadian exporters by subsidizing export financing. However, the agency's requirements for financial guarantees from the buyer were so stiff that with the guarantees, Stell Technology Limited of Burlington, Ontario, could have borrowed the money more cheaply from a commercial bank.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 5.59 p.m., pursuant to order made Friday, September 23, 1983, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House.

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Nielsen: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

AGRICULTURE

WORK OF CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, since Monday, a number of questions have been asked about the Canadian Dairy Commission, and more specifically about the chairman, Mr. Gilles Choquette, and his trips abroad to promote sales on behalf of the Commission. I was very surprised to hear these questions about the Canadian Dairy Commission, our dairy policy and our milk exports and sales abroad. When we meet representatives of agricultural organizations, they all tell us that we have the best dairy policy in the world, and that the quota system, established in 1976 and improved since then, is a very good policy.

Madam Speaker, we produce a lot of milk in Canada, and we have to sell it outside the country, because Canadian consumption is not sufficient to absorb production. It is clear that this year, the Canadian Dairy Commission, thanks to its chairman, Mr. Choquette, has done excellent work. It was able to sell $313.5 million worth of milk abroad, spending about $60,000 on travel expenses.

Madam Speaker, we have a very colloquial expression for saying that if you want to be effective, you must have foreign markets. Marketing means being aggressive, and export sales involve a lot of hard work. Now, if we spend money on promoting sales and we have enough money and—

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

DEGREE OF CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, on Monday the leaders of two of NATO's most important member nations spoke of the need for tough action to counter the growing Soviet threat to world peace. The British Prime Minister proclaimed that aggression must never be allowed to pay and that it is time for freedom to take the offensive. The American President warned that we cannot count on the instinct for survival to protect us against war. However, our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) believes that the survival of our species depends on the courage and wisdom of nations and their leaders. Does he truly believe that courage and wisdom will stop the Soviet threat any more than appeasement stopped Hitler?

The Prime Minister signed a friendship protocol agreement with the U.S.S.R. in 1971 and proclaimed that Canadians find themselves living within a constitutional framework with a formal structure similar to that in the Soviet Union. He has also stated that he would choose Cuban or Chinese socialism as the national model for Canadian society, and he has led communist delegations to Moscow and Peking.

Is this why Canada ranks thirteenth out of the 14 NATO nations in defence spending? Is this why the Prime Minister vacillated for months before announcing a boycott of the Olympics after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and why he has been silent in the House on the Soviet destruction of a Korean airliner?

I call upon the Prime Minister to rise in his place and declare Canada's commitment to NATO's efforts to match Soviet might with western might, or to state whether he is in fact still a communist sympathizer.

THE PRESS

REPRESENTATIONS BY MINISTER'S OFFICE OVER PUBLICATION OF CARTOON

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise to draw to the attention of the House what I consider to be a very serious example of interference with freedom of the press by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola). Recently an article and cartoon appeared in a newsletter published by the Native Women's Association of Canada which depicted a massacre of Indian peasants by government troops in Guatemala. The cartoon was in fact drawn by an Indian child who had survived this massacre.

The office of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs blatantly interfered with freedom of the press by contacting the office of the Native Women's Association of Canada and suggesting to this organization that perhaps the cartoon did not reflect the policy of the Government of Canada. The Minister in question, Madam Speaker, indicated that she felt that the cartoon was not in particularly good taste and was not relevant to that particular magazine.

I do not think that I have to remind Members of the House of Commons that in a free society, a society with freedom of the press, it is political thuggery for a Minister of the Crown to contact an organization about a newsletter which is partly government financed and suggest to that organization that she does not approve of their editorial policy, whether it be in cartoons or elsewhere. This is particularly serious in light of this Minister's responsibility for implementing the recommendations of the Kent Commission and bringing forward legislation that could touch upon freedom of the press. I am sure all members of the House would join with me in condemning this very heavy handed action—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen).

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

FUNDING OF SECOND CAREER ASSISTANCE NETWORK

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the House the fact that every year over 4,000 servicemen leave the Canadian Armed Forces because of compulsory retirement provisions or medical problems. The vast majority of these men and women are between 40 and 50 years of age, with some having only a primary school education. These service people may find themselves at the termination of their service with few marketable skills in Civilian life. The individuals who are fortunate enough to learn a skill will find that only one-third of the 110 trades available within the Armed Forces are recognized by provincial trade associations.

● (1410)

Serious consideration should be given by the Government of Canada to a meaningful increase in the funding of the second career assistance network currently administered by the Department of National Defence, along with a redirection of that program to assist those who face the greatest difficulty instead of those individuals who are easiest to place in civilian life.

At the same time the Government of Canada should consider, as a priority, the establishment of a Canadian Armed Forces technical school that would meet the educational requirements of the Provinces in skilled training and assist Canadian industry in averting shortages of skilled labour in the 1980s.

INDUSTRY

COST OF ESTABLISHING HELICOPTER MANUFACTURING IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): The late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker once made the following statement, "I have but one love, Canada; one purpose, its greatness; one aim, unity from the Atlantic to the Pacific." These are indeed inspiring words—words which should be brought to mind regularly.

As a Member of Parliament, I feel it incumbent upon myself to bring up issues which affect the lives of Canadians and the unity of the country. Madam Speaker, the issue is one of fairness. In order for citizens to regain feelings of unity and harmony within Confederation, people in every Province must feel that they are receiving their share of the benefits from the federal Government.

The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mr. Lalonde) once spoke of the Liberal team in Quebec as one that will promote the interests of all Quebecers and indeed, all Canadians. If the Liberal Party is one that serves all Canadians, then why does the Government intend to set up helicopter manfacturing facilities in Quebec at a cost to the taxpayers of Canada of $500 million? This decision was taken despite the fact that alternate, cheaper facilities are available.

Fleet Industries in Fort Erie, a firm with a reputation as an aeronautical pioneer, can provide the same service with start-up costs of only $35 million. Not only that, but many more jobs would be going to Canadians. Bell is an American firm, whose R and D will take place primarily in the United States. The proposal by Fleet Industries of Fort Erie will bring more jobs to Canadians and will cost much less.

I challenge the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) to provide documentation showing that, job for job and dollar for dollar, the Bell proposal is a superior one—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time is up.

BILINGUALISM

FEDERAL FUNDING OF SECOND LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, between 1978 and the present the federal Government has reduced its commitment to the Provinces for funding second language education, with the result that the Provinces are putting up more and more of the costs. What this means is that the number of students who can be educated in their second language, and the number of Canadians who can be employed in assisting Canadian children to become bilingual, declines dramatically.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced that "Co-operative federalism is dead—and will remain dead in the sense that the federal Government is expected to hand money over to the Provinces for them to spend in any which way." In this case, the cuts in federal funding in real terms would imply that, if co-operative federalism is dead, it is the Trudeau Government that has killed it.

If the Government believes that one of the hallmarks of the particular nature of federalism in Canada is the commitment of all citizens to a bilingual country, then it will have to explain how it expects Canadian citizens to support and entrench official bilingualism when, at the same time, the federal Government cuts funds for bilingual education and makes it more and more difficult for Canadian children to become competent in their second official language. We in the New Democratic Party urge the Government to commit itself to long-term funding for bilingual education.

[Translation]

If the federal Government is serious about bilingualism in Canada, it must take the necessary action and grant financial assistance to schools, across Canada, in order to achieve this goal.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HIRING OF AMERICAN MARKETING ANALYSTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, Funk and Wagnall's dictionary defines irony as the reverse of what is expected. I have just learned of a situation which Canadian taxpayers will agree is not only dripping with irony—it is bizarre.

CBC's AM station in Edmonton, CBX, has experienced a serious decline in audience ratings recently. Listeners prefer Ron Collister's talk show on CJCA, or Standard Broadcast News coverage on CFRN. At any rate, the high-powered commercial competition in Edmonton was apparently too much for mother corporation.

The CBC's answer was to hire media marketing consultants to lure listeners to CBX, to gear up for ratings week, which is happening right now in Edmonton. The slight problem is that the CBC hired two, possibly three, market analysts from Chicago, Illinois. At heaven knows what expense to the Canadian taxpayer, the firm of Reimer and Gerson spent several weeks surveying 18 to 35 year olds in the Edmonton market.

I find this astonishing and shameful. Surely the hundreds of millions of dollars we taxpayers pump into the CBC could produce either corporation expertise or, at least, Canadian media marketing talent to survey Edmonton or any other place in Canada.

The irony of this situation is that the CBC, with its pronounced nationalistic and anti-U.S. bias, should go to the Americans to tell Canadians what we are all about.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

MINISTERS' TRAVELLING EXPENSES—GUIDELINES GOVERNING USE OF EXECUTIVE JETS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the incredible revelations over cabinet flights using one of the two government fleets—just Transport, not Defence—which cost Canadians over $10,000 per day for a given 100-day period, could the Acting Prime Minister please advise this House what guidelines, if any, govern the use of such executive jets, and will he give a commitment to table them in the House forthwith?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, the guidelines are very well known. They were tabled in the House in 1977. There have been a few corrections since, but they are purely procedural. I would be delighted to table the new set, if asked.

People should read the guidelines. It would be very useful if they did so, particularly those people who comment professionally on the subject.

May I just extract a few sentences? One of the criteria is, and I quote:

... substantial savings of essential time can be made by using departmental aircraft ...

The Leader of the Opposition, when he was at Iron Ore, had an aircraft because it was a way of saving his time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: This is quite normal, quite acceptable. It is getting the best for the buck you invest.

Mr. McDermid: You missed the point.

Mr. Pepin: Ministers are supposed to be seen from coast to coast regularly. People want to see them. They want to question them. So they use these aircraft to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: I will read another criterion:

In instances where Ministers are travelling with official parties of some size which need to travel together—

Mr. McDermid: Order.

Mr. Pepin: The article criticizes the admission of officials to these planes. Hon. Members on the opposite side who have been Ministers know that very often it is most convenient and necessary to have the officials with you because that is when you finalize your position or debate some aspect of the issues you are going to tackle at the other end of the trip.

An Hon. Member: Let's have a speech.

Mr. Pepin: As a principle, the use of private aircraft, I believe is quite defensible. No one should be ashamed of it. The Hon. Members on the other side, when they were on this side, used those planes extensively—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: No, we did not.

Mr. Pepin: —and there is no increase in the use of the planes now. Sixty a month, twice a day, is the average in the last three years, I will grant to—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am sure the Minister will have time to complete his answer when replying to supplementary questions.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, hopefully not at such length because we would like them tabled. Methinks the Minister protesteth too much. There are also people who think on this side that we went too far one way, just as the Government has gone too far the other way.

PURPOSE OF TRIPS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, along with admitting that sometimes it is necessary, can the Acting Prime Minister give us the justification for spending $10,000 per day for a Minister to go to a boy scout reception, or to fly somewhere to announce the design of a new postage stamp?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, this is where judgment comes in.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: This is why the whole thing is operated on a system under which the Minister who uses a plane has to tell the Minister of Transport, and sign a form, "I request the use of this airplane fully conditional to the guidelines established by the Department of Transport." It is run in that way. I repeat it, because I am quite proud of having said that. It is a question of judgment. To the people who were there in Edmonton for the ceremony announcing a new stamp, the presence of the Minister was essential. This is what made the event, otherwise it would not have been an event.

● (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: This is what happens all the time. When you do not answer these invitations, people at the other end are raging mad at you for not having given them the attention they thought they deserved and for not giving the event the importance it deserved to have. That is a question of judgment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: What a crock.

REQUEST FOR MONTHLY PUBLICATION OF DETAILS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, without getting into the question of judgment, I must confess I am somewhat mystified.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: If the Minister's explanation is justified concerning the policy of shredding passenger lists after 90 days, if the Government has nothing to hide, why do people have to pay for something which does not have to be hidden? Will the Minister please make this information from both the Transport and Defence fleets public at the end of every month so we can remove the suspicion of cover-up by cut-up?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): There should not be any suspicion at all. If these things come out it is because of the Freedom of Information Act. These things have been known all along. Members of the Press know they have access to this information now, and if it is destroyed after 90 days it is not to hide anything, it is simply because by that time everyone knows about it.

The members of the Press—really, Charles Lynch can keep his own file. He has extensive files on all of that, and after 90 days if he does not have it in his file it is because he has not done his work—and he does his work.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

CHAIRMAN'S TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have a very specific question for the Minister of Agriculture which his Parliamentary Secretary refused to answer yesterday. Did the information concerning the Canadian Dairy Commission, which was tabled in Parliament last Friday, include all of the travelling expenses of the chairman of the CDC, including any free trips he accepted from people doing business with the Commission and any hospitality expenses, or were those expenses in addition to the $210,000 disclosed to Parliament?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the information tabled in the House, which the Hon. Member has, was given to me as authentic. I do not think he has to report anything to the Auditor General, the Comptroller or anyone, which was not reported there. I take it for granted everything necessary to be reported was reported because the expenses that the Hon. Member is talking about were checked by the Auditor General in the review that I requested.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, in the Minister's misleading answer he was completely correct on one thing—the Auditor General did conduct a comprehensive audit which pointed out that senior officials in the Canadian Dairy Commission were accepting freebies from people doing business with the Commission. The Minister was asked the specific question whether or not those figures were disclosed in the return tabled on Friday.

USE OF CHARTERED AIRCRAFT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, did the Minister personally approve the use of chartered aircraft by the chairman of the CDC, including four round trips between Paris and Algiers, two trips between Ottawa and New York, and one trip between Ottawa and Montreal? If he did, what was the reason chartered aircraft were used? Was it a matter of bad planning on the part of the chairman, or was it simply that he did not care about the expenditure of the public's money?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the chairman of the Commission has the responsibility to make sure that sales of dairy products are taken care of. No one in the world has a better system than we do, and no one has less supplies on hand than we do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: For the amount of money which has been spent selling dairy products in this very competitive world, where the U.S. has 689,000 metric tonnes of surplus product, and the European community has over one million—

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Whelan: We have none unsold up until, I believe, June of next year. The Hon. Member knows that this is a very minute amount of money spent for travelling.

Mr. McDermid: That does not excuse his behaviour.

Mr. Whelan: The Auditor General pointed out some of these things the Hon. Member is talking about. If he took trips as guest of someone else, I am sure the Hon. Member has never been guilty of that. No one has ever been guilty of saying, "Do you want to come with me on a plane ride? I am going to give you a plane ride," et cetera. It is a common thing in the country today. People call it hitchhiking on the highway. I do not know how anyone is going to check out whether anyone gives them a ride in a car or this type of thing. But when we are speaking of flights on chartered aircraft and that type of thing, the information I have concerning some of the flighs, and I would have to check it further, is that he was a guest on a flight for which he did not pay anything to be a guest, and he did not charter the flight, either.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—IMPORTATION OF HIGH SULPHUR CONTENT COAL FROM UNITED STATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of the Environment. It concerns both the problems of acid rain and the need to create more jobs.

Is the Acting Prime Minister aware that the Province of Ontario imports, from the United States, 80 per cent of the coal that it requires, coal which has eight times the sulphur content, sulphur being the active producer of acid rain, as does coal coming from western Canada? If he is aware of this fact will he try to persuade Premier Davis, who is always speaking of the need to buy Canadian, to practise what he preaches, stop getting his coal from the United States and, instead, buy it from western Canada?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, perhaps because I have some past familiarity with these questions, I could respond to the Hon. Member. It has been the case that we in Canada have been pressing, both on the Provinces and on Governments outside Canada, namely, the United States' Government, actions which would lead to the appropriate level of emissions to control the problem of acid rain.

The approach we have always taken has been not to try to prescribe the methods of arriving at these objectives, but, rather, to establish the objective which is acceptable and then leave to the responsible jurisdictions whatever means they wish to pursue to arrive at that reasonable objective. Instead of trying to prescribe the means to establish what needs to be done, we leave to the responsible jurisdiction the means of arriving at it.

There is a context, under the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, of committees which leads the federal Government to be in continual discussion with all of the Provinces, including Ontario, concerning how to respond to the needs of bringing down the Canadian emission level which will lead to safe results. The whole question involving utilization of coal and the kind of coal has been an essential matter within those discussions.

Mr. Broadbent: Well, so much for bafflegab.

COAL BOUGHT BY ONTARIO HYDRO

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I will ask either the Minister who has just responded or the Acting Prime Minister to respond to the question. The reality is that the coal in western Canada has only one-eighth the amount of sulphur, which is the active agent in producing acid rain, as that of coal from the United States. Since we know that fact, and since we know there are thousands of unemployed miners in western Canada who would also like jobs, why does the Government of Canada not simply request the Premier of the Province of Ontario to buy Canadian coal for Ontario Hydro? It is pretty simple.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I think that the answer is reasonably simple also, Madam Speaker. The basic question involves the most cost effective ways of arriving at the desired result. Our impulse has always been to arrive at the desirable result and not to proclaim how provincial Government are to do so. It may be, as the result of a variety of factors, that there are alternative mechanisms, whether there are other technological processes, for instance, the use of scrubbers, the use of pyorrite rejection processes or whatever—but other means that are less costly of arriving at the over-all result.

I return to the basic point, that what we must do is to arrive at tolerable deposition levels, and that requires agreement on the part of both the Provinces and other Governments as to what the objective should be, and the means of arriving at it are within the jurisdictions of other Governments. It may be that—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Roberts: —the approach which the Hon. Member suggests is the most desirable one, but not necessarily so.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Minister is really extremely long, whether he is answering with respect to the environment or something else. I just have to warn the Minister that his answers must be shortened.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, as usual, I agree with your ruling. The Minister, did not give us any answer at all on the environmental issue. I wish to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question on the same subject, but in terms of its job impact.

PURCHASE OF CANADIAN COAL ADVOCATED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering the fact that Canada annually imports some 16 million tonnes of what is accurately described as "dirty coal" from the United States, if we purchased that coal for use in central Canada from western Canada instead, we would produce thousands of badly needed jobs. Why does the Government of Canada not take this action which would provide jobs, deal with the environment, and also provide needed east-west Canadian trade?

● (1430)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I thought the Minister of the Environment answered the environmental aspect of the question very well. He did it twice to make sure he got his point across. The other question raised by the Member—and that is the disadvantage of having two questions rolled into one—was why does central Canada not buy coal from Canada instead of buying it from the United States. The answer to that is very, very simple. Economics. It is found that it is cheaper for us to import coal from the U.S. into the central part of Canada and to produce coal and export it to Japan and anywhere else for the West Coast.

Mr. Chrétien: And we need railways too. We need the Crow.

Mr. Pepin: We do the same with respect to oil. Canada is the only country in the world that imports oil at one end and exports it at the other end. Economics, my dear Watson.

TRUST COMPANIES

REFUSAL TO REWRITE MORTGAGES AT LOWER RATES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, on June 14 last I asked the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs a question regarding the activities of several trust companies and their refusal to rewrite mortgages at a lower rate upon the payment of three months' interest penalty. The Minister replied in part, as reported at page 26340 of Hansard:

> It is a situation that should not be allowed to occur, and I can assure the Hon. Member that my officials are, at the present time, making representations to the companies concerned with a view to correcting this situation.

What have the officials of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs done to stop this massive rip-off? Why is she keeping secret the report she has prepared on Canada Trust, one of the major players in this rip-off?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the answer is very simple. The report has not been presented to me. The investigation is still under way.

I might add that I am disappointed that the practice still continues and that many of the trust companies, indeed some of the banks, are continuing the practice. I have great sympathy for those people. I can assure the Hon. Member that when all the facts are known they will be public.

PROTECTION REQUESTED FOR HOME OWNERS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. The massive correspondence that I have on this subject indicates that the trust companies declined to write into the mortgage contracts a three-month penalty clause, stating that it was unnecessary because it was standard in the industry. What is the Minister doing to protect the more than 750,000 Canadians who are being held at ransom by a handful of unscrupulous trust companies?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that if there is something specific to be done it would be through the Interest Act. Is he suggesting that we amend the Interest Act? If so, I wish he would make his policies very clear on this point.

Mr. Epp: What are yours?

Mrs. Erola: In the meantime I can assure him that we are investigating these charges and that we are taking a very close look. The report is not yet available at the moment. It has not been made to me, but I can assure him again that every case that is brought to my attention will be investigated.

INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE CONSPIRACY

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister and follows along the lines of that of the Hon. Member for Burlington. As the Minister is aware, there has always been a long-standing tradition in this country of being able to prepay a mortgage upon meeting a three-month penalty clause. Last Fall that policy changed as a result of corporate decisions. I am talking about Canada Trust, Royal Trust, and National Trust. Has she instituted any investigation through Combines Investigation with respect to a potential conspiracy which may offend the provisions of that Act?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, we have. In fact I was just talking about that very same examination that is currently under way. When that is completed I will make it public. I ask the Hon. Members, however, if there are other avenues they are suggesting, to let us hear them. Put them forward.

REQUEST THAT INTEREST ACT BE AMENDED

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Housing who, I know, is very sympathetic to the plight of mortgage holders who are undergoing a great hardship. I ask him whether or not he is sympathetic and whether it is the policy of his Government that the Interest Act ought to be changed so that at the end of two years instead of five years people can get out of their mortgages by prepayment of a three months' penalty?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, while I am very sympathetic to the issue as presented by the Hon. Member, I must say that I would have to reflect on the implications of what he has suggested since one of the goals we are trying to achieve is longer mortgages. We are in fact trying to come up with a policy which would, in part, answer the Hon. Member's preoccupation, on longer term mortgages. Of course I would support what would protect those who take mortgages, and I hope that the financial institutions, as the Minister of Finance has indicated, would be reasonable in their approach to their clients.

CRIMINAL CODE

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS ON SUBJECT OF STREET PROSTITUTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It relates to the Government's and particularly the Minister's lack of action in the area of street soliciting and prostitution. He will recall that his response at the end of June this year was totally unsatisfactory and was met with great rejection across the country. In fact his predecessor, the former Minister of Justice, the Hon. Ron Basford, has stated that he totally disagrees with the Government's position on prostitution.

After reflection over the summer, will the Minister not now consider allowing the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to go forward by way of legislation in the House so that we can deal with something that is a problem across the country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I announced the Government's policy on this matter at the beginning of the summer. We are hoping to have the co-operation of Parties opposite in getting legislation to amend the criminal law passed in the new session of Parliament.

In the meantime, the committee that I have appointed to look at the matter of prostitution and pornography is very actively involved in its work. We are awaiting the work and the report of that committee. I hope they will be able to help us in either determining or creating what consensus may exist in Canada with respect to the solution of this difficult problem.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I believe the Minister is showing his academic side rather than his political side. I think the people of Canada want action now. This matter has been studied to death. They do not need another commission going around the world looking at red light districts and the flesh pots of this planet.

CHILD PROSTITUTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, specifically as it relates to child prostitution and specific recommendations made by the committee, will the Minister not bring forward those amendments that were suggested by the committee to make it a criminal offence to be involved in prostitution with children under the age of 18 years of age? Will he not at least bring forward that particular amendment?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member may think he knows what the people of Canada want, but in fact there is a good deal of public division on this question. In fact there was division on his committee—

Mr. LeBlanc: Within his own Party.

Mr. MacGuigan: And within his own Party undoubtedly, as well.

With respect to child pornography, there is a very important study being done by Dr. Badgley. We hope to have that report on all aspects of children and victims of crime. We will certainly be prepared to proceed with legislation at the proper time. We hope to have that report early in the new year.

FISHERIES

FUTURE OF NOVA SCOTIA COMPANIES

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It is my understand from rumours that the Minister will be meeting with Premier Buchanan tomorrow on the problem of Nickerson and National Sea Products. Is the Minister planning to propose to the Province the nationalization of these two companies? If so, what will he do to protect the position of all the other smaller companies across Nova Scotia and other Maritime Provinces caused by such an influx of capital into these companies? If not, will he allow private enterprise in Nova Scotia and other areas to pick up the assets of these two big companies?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the last part of the Hon. Member's question asked, in effect, if the Government would allow the small processing companies in Nova Scotia to buy the bigger ones which have financial difficulties. My first comment is, of course, that this is a provincial responsibility. I am sure that neither the Government of Nova Scotia nor the federal Government would object to seeing the small companies take over the bigger companies.

Second, there is no question here of nationalization. What is even more important is that there is no question of bail-out. If we start giving hand-outs to big companies, the smaller ones—and rightly so—will say, "What about us? We want bail-outs and hand-outs". What I am trying to achieve with Premier Buchanan, and with Premier Peckford of Newfoundland and Labrador, is an equitable solution to a problem which could affect hundreds of small processors. If some big companies go under, of course there will be a depressing effect on all the different companies of the Atlantic region.

REQUEST FOR FORESTRY JOB-CREATION PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the continuing 22 per cent unemployment among Canada's young people and the growing concern about dwindling timber resources for Canada's No. 1 industry, I find it incredible that the Government has not yet announced a comprehensive, long-term plan to provide jobs in forestry at decent rates of pay. As EBAP forestry projects wind down at the end of this month, the Government has nothing substantial to put in their place—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member should ask a question.

Mr. Manly: Instead of flying kites about a possible "youth corps" or "conservation corps" that may or may not be in the new Throne Speech, I would like to ask the Minister when he will meet his responsibility to our young people. When will the Government meet its responsibility to the forest industry and bring in a job-creation program which is not simply makeshift but will pay real dividends in the future?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member opposite were more in touch with the facts than he obviously is. Youth unemployment is not at the level he has described. It is under 20 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: Second and more important, in relation to the subsequent question he posed the Government has already undertaken considerable efforts in the forest industry across the country, particularly in British Columbia and particularly with the utilization of Section 38 funds to create employment in the forest industry and to undertake work which is important in terms of the long-term interests of that industry.

The third thing the Hon. Member should know, but seems not to know, is that it is the provincial Government of British Columbia which withdrew from The Employment Bridging Assistance Program. The federal Government made up the provincial Government's shortfall in that program. Even though the program is supposed to come to an end very shortly, we are considering ways of supplementing it. His real criticism should be directed against the Government of British Columbia which has pulled the rug out from under the programs we have sponsored for direct and special assistance to the forest industry.

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Would he agree that the British Columbia Government has cut back the social services programs and that in fact the federal Government has pulled the plug as well, because in the Canada Works Program money going to private initiatives means less money for social services? Would the Minister agree that he in fact pulled the rug from under social service programs which he was funding? Second, would he try to make one change which I will suggest to him, that is, allow co-operative business to get some of the Canada Works money?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, absolutely not. As I have just said, the fact of the matter is that under a variety of programs we have been and are continuing to be of considerable assistance. It is not the fact that the federal Government has pulled the rug out from underneath the support of job creation in the forest industry. That is the reverse of the truth. It is in fact the British Columbia Government which has reneged on some of those programs.

The answer to the second part of the question is no, it is not the case that we have reneged on the possibility of using Canada Works funds in social and community projects. It is true that we have opened up Canada Works to programs which encourage and assist the private sector in creating jobs. I do not know whether the Hon. Member is opposed to using the private sector to create jobs in this country. I sincerely hope not because that would seem to me to be an incredible—

Mr. Waddell: That is fine.

Mr. Roberts: He says fine. Then he should be endorsing our programs, not criticizing them.

Mr. Waddell: But don't take it from the other sector.

CRIMINAL CODE

CHILD PROSTITUTION—EXISTENCE OF INTERNATIONAL RING

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I will direct my question to the Acting Minister, the Solicitor General. The Minister of Justice has already told my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, that he has rejected specific recommendations by the Justice Committee which would make it a crime for adults to buy sex from juveniles. In light of the fact that B.C. law enforcement agencies say that there is an international "chicken hawk" ring in existence, ranging from Los Angeles to Vancouver to South Africa, in which the "chickens", or juveniles under 18, are preyed upon by the "hawks", or adults, how can the Minister justify the failure of the Government to implement the Justice Committee's recommendations?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Criminal Code in its present form provides penalties for involving juveniles in sexual activity. A legislative package is being brought forward by the Government now to toughen the laws in the area of prostitution. A commission has been established as well, and its terms of reference should have the support of Hon. Members opposite. I encourage the House to support the work of that commission which has already begun. It will deal with some of the controversial aspects of prostitution, and propose solutions to the House for legislation.

TRANS-BORDER TRAFFIC IN CHILDREN

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Minister. I should point out that the report to which he refers will not even be reported back to the Minister until December, 1984. In the meantime Vancouver law enforcement officers have in their possession 7,000 pictures of young people, some as young as 13, involved in the "chicken hawk" ring, plus an address book containing the names of the victims. Since some of these youngsters are from B.C. and others are from Los Angeles, what is the Minister doing to stop these trans-border transactions in young people?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the type of activity she has just described is covered by the Criminal Code and that the enforcement of the Criminal Code is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Attorney General of the Province. From reports I have read in the media, action is being considered by the Attorney General in that area.

THE ECONOMY

CONFERENCE BOARD'S GROWTH FORECAST

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Could he tell the House what we are to make of the statement of the Minister of Finance in Winnipeg yesterday to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, in which he said:

> We are expected to have this year and next year the largest real growth of any of the summit countries.

The Conference Board release today indicated that growth in the United States this year will be 3.4 per cent and only 3 per cent in Canada, that growth next year in the United States will be 5.4 per cent and only 2.7 per cent in Canada, and that in 1985 it will be 3.1 per cent in the United States and 0.4 per cent in Canada. How do we justify this kind of misrepresentation by the Minister?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): I thought I got across yesterday, Madam Speaker, that one, or one set of statistics does not make the winter or the spring. I tried to convey the idea that one has to take his daily dose of statistics with a grain of salt. Today we have one indicating that job creation went down in August to 15,000 from 50,000 the month before. If we look at statistics for past years we find out that August is usually a static month. There is usually less growth of employment in August. I have my daily bread of statistics.

"Unless interest rates", says the Conference Board, "fall, recovery will peter out." That is one factor only. Inflation is coming down, and unemployment is coming down. They are other factors. This is why I feel a bit embarrassed to try to answer statistics in single file. The only way to assess the state of the economy in Canada is to put them all on a single page of paper. That is why I find it difficult to comment on only one.

Oral Questions

NEW PROGRAMS SOUGHT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister will know—and I think he is even agreeing with me in his statement, now having given some Conference Board figures—that the Conference Board has forecast sluggish growth and continued high unemployment. The real question all Canadians want answered is when the Government will stop fuddling around. When will we have some new programs or new attitudes? When will he take a look at some of the things which Mrs. Thatcher told the Prime Minister yesterday? If he will not do something along that line, when will he recommend to the Prime Minister that the House be dissolved and we go to a general election?

● (1450)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend speaks as though we on this side of the House were totally satisfied. We are not. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance repeat that every day. There are a number of statistics and situations that we do not like. The Member speaks as though we are resting on our seats and contemplating the future. We are not doing that. We are working constantly to try to find if there can be improvements to the programs we now have. We do that on a regular basis. On the occasion of a budget or the announcement of new programs, we answer more specifically some of the problems we face. The problem of youth, for example, is an area on which we are now concentrating our thinking very substantially.

TRADE

PROPOSAL TO EXPAND SECTORAL FREE TRADE WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. It concerns the paper "Canadian Trade Policy for the 1980s" which he introduced about a month ago. When the Minister was commenting on the paper, he said that we need more sector by sector free trade agreements with the United States. About 11 years ago one of his predecessors, Mitchell Sharp, said in a similar paper that the free trade option "was judged to be inconsistent with Canada's desire to preserve a maximum degree of independence". Can the Minister explain why Mitchell Sharp's arguments have been rejected by the Cabinet, and why they do not carry weight with the Cabinet today?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is comparing apples and oranges, but I am delighted to see him interested in the vital field of expanding our trade opportunities. What Mitchell Sharp rejected and what the Government rejected was the question of total free trade with the United States or, if you like, a customs union. What I am talking about at the present time is an examination of sectors where a free trade arrangement might be mutually beneficial to Canada and the United States, as has proved to be the case in the automotive business over the course of the past 20 years.

Right now we are looking at the question of whether it would be of advantage in relation to jobs in Canada for us to have a free trade arrangement with the United States in specialty steel, or in textiles and garments. We are also looking at the question of mass communications equipment in cities. Another possible area of examination is the petrochemical industry. The people who are in those industries and who create the jobs believe that there might be some advantages in both of those fields. It may be that our American friends will have others to suggest, but what is at stake is the free access of particular products to the vast American market which overcomes the disadvantage that Canadian manufacturers have of a very limited domestic market.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, despite the wind, the Minister has not answered the question. I want to know why the federal Government is leaning away from the third option, the option to diversify our trade, which was advocated by the federal Government years ago, as well as by the Diefenbaker Government before that, in favour of a more narrow sector by sector approach with the United States at a time when, ironically, America's share of world trade and output is declining and the share of trade and output of other countries is on the way up. Why this shift at this particular time?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should realize that there is no shift. If you are running a store, you want to sell to every possible customer, particularly to customers who have the money to buy the goods. We are seeking an expansion of our trade with the United States, trying to overcome any trade barriers by the lowering of tariffs so that we can get them in there better. That does not mean that we are in any way decreasing our pursuit of Pacific Rim opportunities where the ASEAN countries and other countries have very rapid rates of growth and, therefore, are becoming better and better markets. My attitude is, let us sell Canadian goods and services to the world wherever we can, keeping in mind that export markets are shifting targets. Therefore we must shift our efforts as the opportunities occur. That is why Canadian trade has grown from $17 billion in 1970 to $85 billion last year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

UPGRADING OF DISTANT EARLY WARNING LINE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

Can the Minister confirm that the Government of Canada has been approached by the Government of the United States with a view to upgrading the DEW Line system at a cost of about $1 billion? If so, what has been the response of the Government of Canada, particularly to the request that Canada pay part of the cost?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Madam Speaker. In fact the Hon. Member sitting in front of the Hon. Member who posed the question addressed that same issue last week. An approach has been made by the American Government relating to the modernization of the DEW Line. The approach and the representations that were made for financial participation by Canada in that project are now under consideration. The Government of Canada has authorized my Department and myself to overview the ongoing negotiations. Of course the Hon. Member will understand that, until such time as those negotiations are completed, I will not be in a position to make any comments relating to their content, or to any of the positions we might wish to advance.

POSSIBLE CONTRACTS FOR MANUFACTURERS OF ELECTRONIC EQUIPMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Supply and Services. If this $1 billion upgrading takes place, it will presumably mean that a great deal of electronic equipment will have to be bought. Is the Government considering any special plans which will ensure that Canadian electronics manufacturers have a good chance at the contracts which will be involved?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I can inform the House that the matter of industrial spinoffs as a result of Canadian participation is one of the Canadian Government's major considerations in responding to the request made by the American Government. However, as I mentioned earlier, I hope the Hon. Member will understand that until negotiations have been completed, I cannot go on to reveal our basic considerations in these negotiations.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

THE CASE OF SIDNEY JAFFE

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State concerning Sidney Jaffe whose abduction from Canada is a matter of national and international concern. Is Mr. Jaffe a Canadian citizen and, if so, when did he apply for citizenship and when did he become a citizen?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a series of detailed questions which are indeed important. The request of the petitioner will be looked into in accordance with the provisions of the Citizenship Act. He will have an opportunity to state the reasons of his case and the judge will be in a position to make a decision. If there is need for an appeal, the Court of Appeal will look into the case in an appropriate manner.

GRANTING OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is directly to the Minister as opposed to the Citizenship Act or the court. While the Minister is checking on that, perhaps he might inform himself as to whether the residence requirements under Section 5(1)(b) were waived in accordance with the provisions of Section 5, Subsection (3) or (4) of the same act, which is his responsibility.

I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Were Mr. Sidney Jaffe and his wife accorded landed immigrant status? When was this done, and was it granted through regular procedure or as a result of ministerial intervention, such as a ministerial permit?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, this kind of detailed question could be more appropriately dealt with on the Order Paper. I will check on the facts and report to the Hon. Member.

SHIPBUILDING

LEGISLATIVE ACTION NEEDED TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister who, as a former Minister of Transport, will have knowledge. It concerns the Ways and Means Motion of June 29 of this year which, if passed, would tighten up customs loopholes and eliminate preferential duty and absence of duty on ships imported into Canada from other countries. What action is the Minister taking to bring forward this legislation as soon as possible in view of the fact that members of all Parties in the House, I believe, would give quick passage to it in the full realization of the urgency of this matter for the shipbuilding industry in Canada and the need for more jobs for this already hard pressed industry?

• (1500)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I will ask the new Minister of Transport what priority he is giving to that issue. I would not be well behaved if I did not do that. I will also find out if these measures were not applicable the moment that they were announced, which is also a possibility. Again, I will contact my hon. friend to give him that information.

MR. CORBETT—APOHAQUI, N.B.—CHANGE IN MAILING ADDRESS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONVEYANCE OF HOUSE RESOLUTION TO U.S.S.R. SUPREME SOVIET

Madam Speaker: I would like to report to the House the following: the resolution which was adopted following the emergency debate that was allowed by the Chair on September 12 directed the Speaker to convey the text of that resolution to the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. As I was directed, I asked the Chargé d'Affaires of the Soviet Embassy to present himself at my office so that I could deliver the resolution to him. He did come to my office on September 22, 1983, but informed me that he was under instructions not to accept the text of the resolution.

It is clear that I was and will be unable to communicate the text of that resolution to the Presidium through the usual diplomatic channels. I have, therefore, done my best to comply with the order of the House, and I must say to the House that, from the conversations that I had with the Chargé d'Affaires of the Soviet Embassy, my feeling is that the opinion of the Parliament was well understood by him and that possibly that opinion was conveyed to the proper authorities in Moscow.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HUNTINGTON—S.O. 21 STATEMENT OF MR. BURGHARDT—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would like to rule on the point of order which was raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). He is not in the House at the present time, but I think perhaps I can rule. He was raising objections about the statement under Standing Order 21 made by the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Burghardt). My reading of that statement is that it was in order.

The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is rising on a point of order?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-155 AMENDMENTS

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it seems that the Soviet Embassy is treating the Parliament with the same degree of contempt that has been accepted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). However, that is not my point of order.

My point of order deals with items now standing on today's Order Paper, and it will be brief. I am raising it at this time in order to facilitate the orderly conduct of the business of the House which will arise tomorrow.

It is a well established practice of the House and one that is set out in Standing Order 79(10) that when a Bill first comes up for debate at the report stage, the Speaker has the authority to select and combine amendments for debate and often has cause to rule on the procedural acceptability or unacceptability of any or all of the amendments.

There are currently, Madam Speaker, as of today's Order Paper, some 145 notices of amendments to Bill C-155 standing on the Order Paper and, of course, there is the potential for still more amendments to be added prior to the consideration of the Bill tomorrow. I am concerned, as I am sure are the Chair and the officers of the Table, that the sheer volume of amendments for which notice has been given and the lack of notice that Members are given prior to the Chair's observations concerning the procedural acceptability of report stage amendments will combine to slow progress of debate on Bill C-155.

If I may, Madam Speaker, direct your attention to a ruling made at page 2651 of Hansard for March 27, 1973, by the then Acting Speaker, Mr. Laniel, I think that it will help to clarify the point that I am making concerning the consideration of Bill C-155 tomorrow. At that time, the Acting Speaker was ruling on the acceptability of five amendments that were put forward by Members of the Social Credit Party. He noted that Members had the undoubted right to comment on the procedural acceptability of their amendments but they should direct their observations on any given procedural point to all motions affected by a procedure, practice or rule at once rather than dealing with the amendments one by one. The Acting Speaker said, as reported at page 2651 of Hansard:

> The Hon. Member naturally has a right to comment on each of these motions. The Chair considers that the notices of motions are definitely interrelated, and I think therefore that I can say straight away, on my own initiative, that the reasons behind the ruling that I propose to make concerning the five motions are based on Standing orders, and have precedents in previous rulings and opinions, or in interpretations of Standing orders in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. I do not see why the Chair should have to make a ruling on any one motion in isolation.

Considering the number of amendments that may be on the Order Paper by tomorrow and recognizing that some of those amendments will most likely be questionable, I suspect that both the Chair and Members will face a considerable task when attempting to straighten out the arguments being made, if in fact motions are grouped for consideration prior to inviting the input of Hon. Members with respect to the acceptability or unacceptability of each of the amendments.

Moreover, until such time as Hon. Members have had the opportunity to study the Chair's comments with respect to the proposed amendments, it will be difficult to respond to the Chair's concerns, which undoubtedly will be raised with respect to their acceptance or non-acceptance. I would therefore put forward the suggestion, Madam Speaker, that members be given the opportunity to defend the procedural acceptability of the notices of amendments that are on the Order Paper in their name at the time those amendments would ordinarily come up for debate. This would serve to deal with procedural arguments in a more orderly manner than if all arguments were to be heard at the beginning of the debate, and indeed it might assist the Chair by focusing the arguments being made by Members to a particular procedural point.

As well, my suggestion should give Hon. Members the opportunity to study your remarks on the proposed amendments before making their submissions to the Chair, and it would alleviate the kind of uncertainty that occurred at the time when Bill C-124 came before the House and when you, Madam Speaker, were in the Chair. I am sure you will recall that that legislation had to do with the capping of civil service pensions. At that time, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) was, through your generosity and that of the House and indeed with the consent of the House, allowed to turn back the clock and make an intervention with respect to Motion No. 1 then standing in his name at a point when debate had already progressed to the consideration of Motion No. 4.

I will not develop that point in any further detail other than to refer the Chair to Hansard of July 30, 1982, at page 19866 and subsequent pages. I will perhaps read one brief quote from Hansard because the language used was so delightful, Madam Speaker. I am quoting you, Madam Speaker, from page 19959:

> It is quite a dilemma because I have just given an interpretation of what my ruling said, and in my view it meant that I had ruled. If the House did not understand what I meant, I suppose there is nothing wrong with being generous.

You then asked for the consent of the House, and the Hon. Member for Churchill was allowed to develop his argument, which you then took under consideration, Madam Speaker, and subsequently ruled upon.

I would suggest, Madam Speaker, that before the announcement is made by the Chair, as such announcement inevitably will be made with respect to the grouping of the amendments, Members be allowed to present their submissions with respect to the acceptability or unacceptability of any of those motions within an intended grouping that may be of questionable procedural acceptability. In that way I think the procedural discussion, at least, would go ahead in a more orderly fashion. If that alternative is not accepted, then we agree that, even if the grouping occurs before the calling for submissions on the procedural acceptability or non-acceptability, it be clearly understood that Members could make submissions on each of the amendments the Chair intends to question procedurally.

● (1510)

I know that my next suggestion would place quite a burden on the Chair and the Table officers, having to deal overnight with 145, and possibly more, notices of motions bringing amendments to this measure but I wonder if, before the grouping tomorrow, the Chair might point out, as far as is possible, those amendments which might cause the Chair some concern with respect to their acceptability or non-acceptability. That could be taken as a signal to Members that they could work up their submissions in that regard.

I have other concerns with respect to the interpretation of Standing Order 79(6) and the form of the notices of motions that have been filed under that Standing Order, but I can deal with those seriatim as they arise, as I expect they will, in the order in which they appear on today's Order Paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would like to speak to this point of order. I feel that the interpretation of the Standing Order given by the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is exaggerated, and I can not subscribe at all to his suggestion on how to interpret the Standing Order, which in my view is quite clear and gives the Chair full discretionary powers. The fact, however, that Standing Order 79(10) gives the Chair this power and discretion does not alter the fact that according to parliamentary practice and other Standing Orders, Hon. Members are not allowed to discuss, comment on, or appeal, the rulings of the Chair. Perhaps I may remind the Chair, since I know, Madam Speaker, that you will read over the comments made by the Member for Yukon and will also take the time to read this particular Standing Order, which is quite clear, perhaps I may draw your attention to the paragraph in question which, basically, says two things: first, it gives the Speaker the power to select or combine amendments and clauses to be proposed at the report stage.

The Standing Order also gives the Speaker, and this is where the interpretation given by the Member for Yukon runs counter to the Standing Order of the House, to what this Standing Order empowers the Speaker to do, it is the power, freedom and discretion, in case of doubt, to call upon any Member who has given the Chair notice of an amendment to give such explanation of the subject of the amendment as may enable the Speaker to form a judgment upon it. There are two aspects here: the Speaker may combine or select the amendments, and once the Chair's decision is made, it cannot be discussed or appealed in the House; the second power conferred on the Speaker by Standing Order 79(10) is probably based on concern for full consideration of the matter and for ensuring that members proposing the amendments are treated in a just and equitable manner—that the Speaker is free to consult Hon. Members until the debate begins, within the period prescribed by the Standing Orders, that is, the Speaker may call upon Members and ask them for explanations, and that should be sufficient for the Chair to draw its conclusions and make a ruling, and decide whether an amendment is acceptable or not.

As for suggesting that the Chair reverse its ruling because, with or without consultation, it had decided that an amendment was unacceptable, as for raising a point of order and having a debate on each amendment or several or a few or only one, I submit this goes against parliamentary practice, because Hon. Members may not appeal a ruling by the Chair, and the Standing Order is quite clear, and empowers the Speaker, and I quote:

—to form a judgment upon the subject of the amendment.

Once the Chair has formed a judgment, it can no longer be discussed, and we intend to respect the Standing Order. I do not agree at all with the interpretation given by my learned colleague from Yukon. In fact, I think he is giving us notice of a procedural debate that could take weeks and months—it is very easy to paralyze Parliament. The equity he is seeking, and the concern—if he is sincere, and I do not doubt that he is—he seems to have that each amendment, even if there are a great many, be given serious consideration, all that is covered by the Standing Order. With due respect, I submit that the Chair must consider the amendments within the limits prescribed by the Standing Order and not according to the interpretation preferred by a Member of the Opposition. In other words, if the Chair has any doubts, it can consult with any Member of this House, but once the Chair has formed a judgment, I submit that we should not waste any more of the time of the House on discussing that judgment. We have no right to discuss it. In the circumstances, I submit that we should apply Standing Order 79(10) very strictly. That is the appropriate procedure, contained in the Standing Orders of the House of Commons of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Government House Leader did not intentionally distort what I said. I agree with everything he has said with respect to the interpretation of the rules—everything. I am not suggesting that the Chair should not have the discretion to group; of course the Chair has that discretion. What I am suggesting is that if the Chair has a concern about any particular amendment, then the Member in whose name that amendment stands should be given the opportunity to make submissions with respect to its procedural acceptability. We have already established precedents, and I read from them, to the effect that once amendments have been grouped, that procedure is not available to Members. It is on that fine point that I raise this problem.

In justice and fairness, Members of the House should have the right to make submissions with respect to amendments with which the Chair has concern before they are grouped, or there should be a clear understanding that it can be done after they are grouped. No one questions the discretion of the Chair to direct the grouping.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I am not going to repeat what I said before, but I was in fact talking about this particular point. The powers the Chair has are conferred upon it by the Standing Orders. Of course, Hon. Members proposing the amendments may be consulted if the Chair so decides, but it is not up to them to decide. The consultations provided under Standing Order 79(10) cannot be imposed on the Chair by Hon. Members. If, after consultations or on its own initiative, the Chair decides that it requires explanations before making a decision, it is free to call upon Hon. Members before eleven o'clock tomorrow morning. That is what the Standing Order says. The consultation process is limited by the Standing Order, and I submit that we should follow this very clear interpretation of Standing Order 79(10). The Member for Yukon claims that the Chair should go further than that and allow a procedural debate for each Member who wishes to speak tomorrow after eleven o'clock, in order to justify the acceptability or unacceptability of the amendment. I submit that this would be a tremendous waste of Parliament's time, because it would be, and it is, against the letter and the intent of the Standing Order. The Hon. Member may be consulted, if the Chair so decides, before 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, as provided in paragraph (10) of the Standing Order.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, that is not what I have been saying at all. I guess the trouble must be the difference between my anglo thinking and the Hon. Member's franco thinking. I am not suggesting that the Chair does not have that discretion; it does. First of all, I am dealing with the amendments about which the Chair expresses some concern. Presumably if no concern is expressed about any particular amendment, it will be accepted for debate and this procedural debate would not arise. Ninety per cent of those amendments were accepted in committee where there was an excellent chairman with knowledge on procedural matters, so presumably they will be accepted here. It is only those amendments which raise questions in the mind of the Chair that will become the subject of discussion. I do not suggest for a moment that Your Honour does not have the right to hear any argument on the question of an amendment. I am suggesting to you, however, that certainly the traditions and practices of this place would seem to indicate that the Chair would want to be assisted and that the Chair would want to hear some degree of submissions with respect to the procedural non-acceptability of an amendment, if for no other reason than either fortify, or otherwise, the conclusions which she has reached on the advice of her Table officers. That is all that I am suggesting.

• (1520)

Madam Speaker: Well, I think the debate probably has some usefulness because we do have a very, very important task before us. The Table officers already are trying to suggest a grouping which I hope will be acceptable to the House. Indeed, there might be some questions about the acceptability of some amendments and there might be some cases where the Chair itself is in doubt, or would like to have more explanation on some particular amendments.

I will follow the practice which I have always followed. Even in giving my groupings, I have always grouped them in words which preserve the right of an Hon. Member to bring in objections if he thought that he was being frustrated in his right to see an amendment debated by the House. I will try to maintain that practice because I believe it works very well. I have done that in the past and the Hon. Member for Yukon has cited a precedent which conforms exactly with what I have done in the past.

Of course, I will fulfil my responsibility of grouping to the best of my knowledge, with due ruling out of certain amendments if I feel it is quite clear that they should not be debated.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONVEYANCE OF HOUSE RESOLUTION TO U.S.S.R. SUPREME SOVIET

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to your earlier announcement in connection with your inability to comply, as you indicated, with the resolution passed by this House on September 12. This House showed its concern by adopting a unanimous resolution to convey to the Chairman of the Presidium of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet our condemnation of the act of the Government of the Supreme Soviet, and demanding, among other things, compensation to the families of those persons who lost their lives in that action.

With all respect to the Chair, may I suggest that the mere affront to this House which was committed by the Chargé d'Affaires of the Soviet embassy in Canada ought not to end the matter. The final paragraph of that unanimous resolution specifically provides as follows:

> Directs the Speaker to convey the text of this motion to the Chairman of the Presidium of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet.

That specific direction did not require the Chair to deliver the text of the motion to the Embassy of the Soviet Union for transmittal to the Chairman of the Supreme Soviet, but rather simply to convey the text of the motion, leaving it up to the Chair to determine the mode of conveyance.

May I be permitted to submit to the Chair that there are a number of ways in which this conveyance might be undertaken? I am thinking specifically of a delivery of same through diplomatic pouch to the Canadian Ambassador in Moscow for delivery by hand, if necessary, coupled with a copy of that same motion to be mailed in the Soviet Union to the Chairman of the Supreme Soviet, coupled with an action by the Chair to use the Canadian mails for the purpose of mailing same to the Supreme Soviet.

I submit to the Chair that the efforts of this House in a matter of this nature ought not to be frustrated by the actions of some underling diplomat of a foreign government who is about to be reprimanded by this House of Commons. Accordingly, I urge upon the Chair an undertaking of the specific directions given by this House to the Chair. Some of the methods of conveyance to which I made reference certainly do not exhaust all of the methods which might be employed. I am convinced that if Madam Speaker puts her mind to it, others can be devised. My urging upon Madam Speaker is that we do not let this matter lie dormant, having regard to the concerns of all Hon. Members of the House who were involved in the passage of that unanimous resolution.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order as the mover of the motion. I would like to say, as one Hon. Member of Parliament, that I am deeply disturbed by what can only be described as a contemptuous action by the Soviet Union with regard to this motion. If I heard your honour correctly, and I think I did, in reporting back to the House, the Chargé d'Affaires of the Soviet Union had been instructed, presumably by his superiors in the Soviet Union, not to accept this message which was passed by the Parliament of Canada.

I repeat, Madam Speaker, in my view that amounts to a contempt of Parliament. It is to compound the mistaken, villainous or cruel act, however one wants to describe it—and I believe all of those adjectives are appropriate to describe the original action of the shooting down of a civilian aircraft by the Soviet Union—for the Soviet Union to respond in this way.

I also feel very seriously, Madam Speaker, that the Parliament of Canada cannot let the matter stand with our having received from the Chair a message from the Chargé d'Affaires. I would like to say that I, for one, feel the course of action that Your Honour has taken was the appropriate one, the initial step, and I am, frankly, astounded and surprised that no matter what it thought of the content of the message, the Soviet Union has seen fit simply not to receive it.

I feel, Madam Speaker, in addition to some suggestions which have been made now about subsequent action, that it would probably be appropriate for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) on behalf of the Government of Canada to request now that the Chargé d'Affaires come to him, as the appropriate Minister in the Government of Canada, to explain why such contemptuous behaviour should be taken by the Soviet Union, which, I repeat, amounts to a contempt of this Parliament. That resolution was unanimously passed. It reflected the very serious, deeply felt feelings of the people of Canada. The very least the Soviet Union ought to do is to receive the message before it responds to it.

Madam Speaker: I am quite grateful for these suggestions which have been made by the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble). However, I will address myself to the last suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I do not feel that I can delegate this responsibility to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who would be speaking in the name of the Government about a resolution which the Parliament of Canada has asked the Speaker to transmit to the Soviet authorities.

The effect of the order given to the Chair by the House is that the Chargé d'Affaires did not accept it. We know the answer. I do not believe it would be useful for me to ask, and I would not delegate that responsibility to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If the Minister wants to pick that up on his own and initiate some kind of action, of course, he is free to do so. However, I will look into the other suggestions to see how this message can be transmitted. We already know that a message which was transmitted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs has not been received, has been refused, here in Ottawa. Also a message which was conveyed by our Embassy in Moscow was refused.

I can go that route myself, following the suggestions of the Hon. Members. However, I repeat, I would not delegate that responsibility to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I do not feel it would be proper for Parliament to delegate that responsibility, unless the House decides unanimously otherwise. I do not see that it is implicit in the order which this Parliament has given me that I now go to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him to perform that duty for me.

• (1530)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I do not think I said that you, yourself, should request the Secretary of State for External Affairs to take that step. If I did say that, I did not mean to. But I do believe he should do it, and that, quite correctly, should come as a request from some of us on this side of the House. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) is here; he might indicate he is in agreement with the suggestion and take it to the Minister.

The reason I think it should now be raised with the Minister is that I regard the initial response of the Soviet Union as a contempt of Parliament. We have already seen that it does not intend to respond to the highest officer of this Parliament and therefore is not likely to take any other appropriate action. As a result of that, my view is that we now have to shift the focus. The Soviet Union has taken an additional step to the original one in indicating it is not even prepared to listen to the Parliament of Canada. I think that is a very serious mistake. It is a contempt for any Government which has representatives in this country of ours to so treat Parliament. It is very serious indeed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is my view that the Secretary of State for External Affairs ought to be calling in the Chargé d'Affaires to pass on this message that we view with contempt, if you like, their contemptuous behaviour.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble) made several suggestions to you, only one of which I think you should even consider, that being the one concerning the Ambassador in Moscow. I would hope you would not reduce the dignity of the House by sending a letter from within the Soviet Union. I agree with the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) that the Chargé d'Affaires is in contempt of this House, but I disagree strongly that it is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to take the matter up on behalf of the House.

I would have another suggestion to offer to you, Madam Speaker. Since the Soviet diplomats are in contempt of this House, I suggest that you inform each one of them that he or she is persona non grata in the galleries of this House until the message from this House has been accepted by them.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as someone who just a little over a week ago attended a special memorial service undertaken by Canadians of Korean heritage in front of the Ontario Legislature, together with Members of this House from all three Parties, I plead and beg of you on behalf of the families who lost relatives in this murderous act that you explore all available avenues. Again, I think your ruling is very correct; this is not an issue between the Parliament of Canada and the Government of the Soviet Union. This is an issue between the Parliament of Canada and the Soviet Union. I think we should explore all possible avenues. Maybe it means communicating with the Parliament of the Soviet Union, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: What Parliament?

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I intended to rise at the same time as the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble) and subsequently the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I do not think I can add much more except to say that I am incensed by the results you brought back. I hasten to add that, obviously, it is not the messenger we are angry with, it is the message itself. I think this is in great contempt of this Parliament, and we in Parliament cannot let it rest there.

May I just add to the list and, if it is in order, even submit a motion that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization review this matter very quickly and report their recommendations to Parliament. If you find that in order, I would simply move to seek the unanimous consent of my colleagues that we send the subject matter for urgent attention to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is clear that the Soviet diplomat's attitude constitutes an affront to Parliament, and in our search for an effective means of transmitting this institution's message, we, as parliamentarians, are prepared to consider all useful suggestions. Several were made to the Chair today. I think that before making a hasty decision, we should remember we all have the same objective in mind. Perhaps the Chair could reflect on this matter within the next few hours, and, if it deems appropriate, consult with the parliamentary House Leaders on what should be done to ensure that the resolution adopted by Parliament is transmitted to the appropriate authorities.

As for the Chair's position that this is a parliamentary and not a Government matter, I agree wholeheartedly. I think it is now up to the Chair to transmit the message as the servant of the House, but if we can help you in any way, in addition to the comments made in the House today, we are at your disposal for further consultation, as the Chair decides. Nevertheless, I would like to give my Hon. colleague from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) the assurance that we shall transmit his views and mention the attitude of the Soviet diplomat to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen).

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the Government House Leader has made the suggestion that I would have made had he not risen. I think perhaps, if we have the usual House Leaders' meeting tomorrow, we might review the matter at that time and perhaps consult with you subsequent thereto. Certainly something has to be done to resolve the situation. There is also the very important question of whether or not ordinary diplomatic immunity applies in a case of this nature. That question will have to be explored as well before we come to any premature conclusions as to what Parliament should do about the contemptuous behaviour of the Chargé d'Affaires in refusing to accept the message of this House through its servant, Madam Speaker.

I would suggest the matter be allowed to rest there, and in the meantime may I point out that 40 minutes have now gone by on two very important points which have arisen, one concerning the business of tomorrow—because there is no other occasion upon which that point can be raised—and this one which had to be addressed immediately because it dealt with a report from the Chair. Perhaps, Madam Speaker, there might be a disposition to extend the hours by unanimous consent tonight by 40 minutes so as to allow all three items, which now stand on the Order Paper as Private Members' business, to be called.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, to answer the question of the Hon. Member, I must add the words "if necessary" because these past Wednesdays we have noted that time has often been wasted and that the House had to adjourn before six o'clock since one or two Members were not ready to proceed with their Bills. So, if the Hon. Members are ready to proceed with the study of the three Bills on the Order Paper today, of course we agree that the House sit until 6.40 p.m., if necessary.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the House sit past six o'clock, if necessary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: In answer to the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and other Members, I must tell them that I will examine what other means are available to me to convey the message which the House has asked me to send to the soviet authorities. I can only warn Hon. Members against some means which have been suggested and which are perhaps not in keeping with the dignity of this institution. I did convey the message to the highest level. I received a reply which neither I nor the House like, but should I go running right and left to hand over the message, or even slip it under a door to be able to deliver it? Anyway, those are things to be considered.

If Hon. Members agree, I will examine all means at my disposal and, as the President of the Privy Council and the Hon. Member for Yukon have suggested, I will advise the Leaders of the various Parties of my conclusions so that they may review the question and then make new recommendations to me.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—PROTECTION OF VARIETY STORES AGAINST VIOLENCE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition by concerned citizens of my riding of Grey-Simcoe which urges the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure that grocery stores, variety stores and other similar outlets that are open late hours in the evenings be adequately staffed and protected in order to help curtail robberies, beatings and even murders that lately have taken place in ever-increasing numbers in these establishments across Canada.

MR. HALLIDAY—OBJECTIONS OF OXFORD RIDING CITIZENS TO PROPOSALS OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege and duty to present three petitions to the House this afternoon. If I may, I would do so under the umbrella of one preamble.

These petitions manifest the steadfast opposition of citizens of the riding of Oxford to the proposals of the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario that would alter the riding in a manner disrespectful of the longstanding cultural and economic ties and associations within the present federal constituency of Oxford. The first is signed by 24 residents of East Zorra-Tavistock township who object to the proposed severance of their township from Oxford riding. The second petition includes the names of over 90 people from Zorra township who express a firm desire to prevent their township from being separated from Oxford.

Finally, the third petition I have the honour to present today is signed by over 1,100 concerned citizens of the constituency of Oxford who oppose the Commission's proposal to remove East Zorra-Tavistock and Zorra townships from the riding.

These people, availing themselves of the right to petition, humbly call upon the House of Commons to urge the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission to reconsider their proposals so that Zorra and East Zorra-Tavistock townships may continue to be represented in the Parliament of Canada by the elected Member for Oxford.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 5,002.

[Text]

AM STEREO IN CANADA

Question No. 5,002—Mr. Beatty:

1. Is the Government prepared to allow the speedy introduction of AM stereo in Canada and, if so, on what date?

2. Is the Department of Communications considering allowing only the sale of "universal" AM stereo receivers in Canada in order to allow broadcasters to choose whatever system of transmission they would prefer?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. The Government has issued experimental authorizations to broadcasters in various parts of the country to test a number of different AM stereophonic systems. The results of these experiments are being reviewed by three different consultative groups including a specialized committee of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, the Technical Advisory Committee of the Department of Communications, and the Canadian Radio Technical Planning Board. Upon an analysis of these experimental results and based on the recommendations of these consultative groups, it is expected that AM stereo will be introduced in Canada in a timely manner.

2. One of the most recent technological breakthroughs in the field of AM stereophonic broadcasting has been in the development of multisystem receivers capable of decoding any of the systems which are currently available. The technical committees are reviewing this new development and will make recommendations concerning the cost effectiveness and technical acceptability of these receivers for the Canadian market. Should these recommendations be favourable and in the public interest, the Department will consider the development of regulations whereby only "universal" type AM stereo receivers would be allowed to be sold in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Fisher: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

EXEMPTIONS FROM CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order that, a once-in-a-lifetime exemption from capital gains taxation be provided for the main business property of non-incorporated or incorporated farmers and businesses employing less than 30 persons, and with gross sales less than $1 million annually, and with fewer than three places of business, excluding foreign-owned farms or businesses, franchise operations and quota values of any kind, and this exemption from capital gains be made conditional upon those involved investing at least 50 per cent of the taxable amount in the Farm Credit Corporation or in Small Business Development Bonds, at a rate of interest to be more than 50 per cent of the Canadian prime interest rate.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with substantial pleasure that I rise to speak briefly on the motion today, because I believe the fact that I am able to raise this issue and to cause some deliberation of this proposal by Hon. Members on all sides of the House is a reflection that the process in Canada continues to work and that individuals at the grass roots level can have the opportunity to have their ideas contemplated and promoted by themselves, and then deliberated by the House.

I want to pay particular tribute to a farmer in my constituency, an immigrant to Canada from Belgium some many years ago by the name of Leon Meersseman who, while growing tobacco on his property, cultivating his fields, expresses his concern with respect to the quality of life in Canada and how it may somehow be improved for other Canadians by giving thought to the tax system, among other things, as reflected in this particular motion. I wish I could claim its complete authorship. I wish, that I could stand before Hon. Members today and suggest that this idea had its genesis in my own conciousness, but it was in fact this farmer who initially came to me with the idea. It was probably generated from thoughts being put forth by Members of this House and by the Government when we were debating alternative sources of funding for the Farm Credit Corporation and the concept of Small Business Bonds to assist not only small businessmen but also the farming operations in Canada.

I think it is a fact accepted by Hon. Members on all sides of the House that we are currently in a time in our society when there is a tremendous impact upon farmers and small businessmen of high interest rates and of the effect of an ever-restrictive credit market to which they can go not only for their ongoing daily operations but for their long-term credit as well. Indeed, this House has expressed itself on a number of occasions in supporting the Small Business Bond concept.

In supporting the extension of sources from which farm credit could be seeking its funds, allowing it to go to the private market, and in coming forward with this particular Bill, the idea in mind, in simple form, was to permit Canadians to invest in themselves, in particular, to allow small businessmen and farmers to invest in their own operations and to come to the assistance of others who find themselves in the same employ. In effect, through this motion we are asking the Government to contemplate permitting farmers to fund the FCC themselves, at least in part. In order to effect that, we are attempting to alleviate what, at the very least, is an irritant in my view and in the minds of most of those in the farming community of Canada, namely the capital gains tax.

While making this proposal to the House, it is not without recognition of the fact that this country had provisions for inheritance taxes and state taxes. One can place it in this context, that the society that we represent bought the removal of those inheritance and succession duty taxes by the acceptance of the concept of the capital gains tax. However, there are certain problems with that kind of taxation. Farmers, in particular, and certainly in the same sort of way the small businessman, are the engines of this nation who create employment and provide the food which would otherwise not be placed on our tables. They are in a different position from that of the labourer or the salaried employees who have the opportunity, through other tax provisions such as RRSPs, RHOSPs and the other mechanisms the House has put into our tax system, to set aside money for their retirement. I believe Members from all sides of the House accept the principle that farmers and small businessmen find their retirement programs in their farms and businesses since they do not have the disposable income from their business operations to permit them to purchase RRSPs or other retirement plans for their advanced years. They are unable to take advantage of tax incentives to save money in that manner.

• (1550)

With respect to farmers, they use their money for the improvement of their land or buildings in an attempt to enhance their operations and make them more viable, or to become more efficient producers. Therefore, at the end of their working lives they find that what others would have put away for retirement they have used on their farming operations. When that operation is sold they are exposed to the capital gains tax.

I think it is probably charitable to express that as an irritant. In many instances it is far beyond an irritation. While exemptions have been provided to permit tranferral to members of the family, there are still farmers in our society with no sons or daughters to whom those transfers can be made. Not only do those individuals lose the ability to make that rollover, they are subjected to a tax which they view as a robbery of their ability to look after themselves in their old age.

Therefore, this motion attempts to achieve two goals. It attempts to provide funding for the FCC and small business development from the private sector while providing an exemption or relief from the total effect of the capital gains tax at the same time. The motion suggests that there be a minimum investment and that only a portion of the investment be subjected to a preferred tax. The return from that investment should be lower than the standard rate of interest so that it is not viewed as a windfall but rather a conscious decision on the part of the investors not only to protect themselves for the future in some small way but to help those who may want to continue the occupation they loved throughout their working life.

I recognize that I do not have the benefit of the Finance Department to analyze all the financial implications of this proposal. However, I put it to the House that my idea has sufficient merit at least to bear discussion and examination by the Finance Department as well as a response in the House, in the event it is found unacceptable, to explain why it is so. It should not simply be said to be unacceptable without its conceptual problems being disclosed.

I believe this concept will work. It is not so novel as to be completely unheard of. It probably bears some similarity to the agri-bond proposals of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, which are not without some merit. That concept certainly bears some consideration, and I am not married to this proposal in the sense that I would be opposed to an alternative such as an agri-bond issue or other proposal which would achieve the same end.

I am attempting to sensitize Members of the House, and hopefully the bureaucracy, to the idea that there is a need in the country and that the public would like to see us working on this or similar ideas that would achieve the same end.

At the end of the day, if I could have achieved that, I believe I will have achieved the end to which I alluded at the beginning, that is, that our system permits the upward movement of an idea from the fields in Essex County to the point where the House could express its views upon it, then into the bowels of the bureaucracy, hopefully to be generated back to the House in this or some other form so that we could see legislation implemented.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin) for doing some thinking. While I would not suggest naturally that all of his thoughts were the same as those of others, he has touched the central theme that small business persons and farmers across the country have been expressing to their Members of Parliament at least since prior to 1971. The theme is that capital gains taxation affects them negatively. Furthermore, they perceive it as being unfair, as do most representatives.

I submit that we do not have the concept called capital gains tax today. That is, we do not have a tax on gains. Instead, it is a tax on gain plus inflation.

Let us use the farming business as an example. Since valuation day is 1971, a tractor purchased in 1971 may sell today for more than its purchase price. But surely there is not a Member sitting in the House today who believes that that tractor is in fact worth more today than it was more than a decade ago after it may have had as many as a thousand hours of use. That tractor, which has less new technology, less comfort and more wear, is not worth more. The fact is the inflation has added phoney, or funny, money. Therefore, the sale price simply indicates a number that looks larger but does not, in reality, represent a greater value. Therefore, that is not a capital gains tax but a capital gain plus inflation tax.

What other segment of our society is paying tax on inflation? More important, farmers are among the only group of business persons in the entire country who can not protect themselves against inflation. For example, if that tax were applied to a clothing store operator, and his cost to purchase clothing for the store increased, he would simply sell the clothing for more. Whoever heard of a farmer saying that his gasoline costs him 30 per cent more this year so his wheat will be sold for 30 per cent more? Whoever heard of a farmer, after hearing feedgrain costs had risen, selling his meat for a certain amount more? Farmers must pay the price on the products they buy and they receive the price that is offered to them when they sell. Therefore, there is a double jeopardy where farmers are not only the only group in society which is taxed on inflation, but are one of the groups in society that cannot protect themselves against inflation.

• (1600)

The Government needs to listen to the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent who sits on its side of the House. I am pleased that this piece of legislation is in his name. According to the rules for Private Members' Motions, if we speak beyond an hour this piece of legislation will have been spoken out. I am pleased to follow the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent because I do not want to speak out this motion. I think it deserves the consideration which he requests. I have some trouble with the last part of it because I do not believe we have the right to tell farmers to invest in the Farm Credit Corporation. I think they are subjected to a phoney taxation now, but at least the motion of the Hon. Member is better than the present case.

Canadians listening to the debate today on television or those who will read it in Hansard in the future should know that whatever Member talks out this motion will have to bear the burden. It is upon his or her shoulders if this good piece of legislation does not go forward.

As the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent indicated, farmers are faced with a tax on inflation. Also it should be pointed out that of all the tax systems in Canada today, the capital gains tax is the most expensive to collect. In the case of income tax, people sit in their homes, fill out their forms, mail them in, and once they are audited and checked by the Department of National Revenue, that is the amount they receive from or owe the Government. In the case of the capital gains tax, the Government is dealing with acquired properties and assessed values. It requires a bank and battery of assessors and inspectors, and an entire new process of collecting the tax dollar is created. The fundamental question is not whether it is more expensive to farmers, but whether it is justified in the first place. To be truthful, if a farmer did not pay his capital gains tax, that money would be recorded as income and would be subject to income tax. Surely one should not have to pay income tax and be exposed to the capital gains tax at the same time.

What a whipping of our farmers who are the most efficient producers in Canada! Anyone who doubts that should read the speeches of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in which he praised the efficiency of farmers compared with other Canadian producers. In his great rhetoric of "irregardless" and "et cetera", he talked about how efficient farmers were. The Government of Canada does not believe that because it treats them in a totally unfair manner in terms of taxation and capital gains.

With the capital gains tax on farmland, I believe we have a double jeopardy in taxation. For example, if a farmer purchased a new parcel of land in 1975 at a fixed value of $1,000 per acre, and if he sold it in 1983 at $1,500 per acre, the $500 difference would be called profit and subjected to taxation. But in 1975 he used money on which he had already paid income tax to purchase the land. If he is taxed when he sells the land, then he has actually been taxed twice. If we look at the question of gains, we must analyse whether or not it was a gain or whether the gain was inflation. If the gain was simply inflation, then he is certainly being taxed twice.

There are many examples in the agricultural and small business sectors of something being called gain which is not gain but in fact is double taxation or prejudice against a sector of society which the Minister of Agriculture frequently claims is the most efficient in the country today.

Those of us who have the privilege of serving rural communities—and the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent serves a rural community—occasionally hear our city cousins in coffee shops talk about, "the rich farmer".

Mr. Althouse: Oh!

Mr. Malone: I hear an Hon. Member of the NDP making noises. It is amazing how 11 per cent of the membership of the House of Commons makes more than 50 per cent of the noise.

Mr. Althouse: Especially with 20 per cent of the vote.

Mr. Malone: There he goes again. He referred to 11 per cent of the vote in the next election.

Mr. Althouse: I said, "20 per cent".

Mr. Malone: In any event, when we hear our city cousins talking about "rich farmers", they fail to realize that farmers do not only work eight hours per day, five days per week. Also our urban cousins fail to remember that there are more than one or two breadwinners in farming families. Their hours per day and their days per week are longer. Many family members are involved in the task of producing goods, yet farms are taxed as if they were some other business, all within a year's calendar and as if all the money were one earning. This productive sector of our society is being taxed in an unusually harsh manner.

Before taking my seat, I want to indicate that I am deeply annoyed with the way in which we have developed, both federally and provincially, discrimination against rural people. I am not only referring to the example of capital gains which affects mostly farmers. I am also referring to the rates of telephone companies. Our urban cousins, depending upon the Province, receive this service for $6 or $8 per private telephone per month, whereas farmers are forced to make deals on $100,000 combines while four of his neighbours listen in. In my constituency, which is mainly involved in ranching, there is a move to take away rural mail service. Some ranches are 60 miles apart in the southern part of my riding. Yet our urban cousins receive door-to-door delivery from Canada Post. They can simply get out of bed, go to the door and reach around the corner to grab their mail. This is somehow deemed to be fair by Canada Post, by Mr. Warren. I submit that it is not. Turning to telecommunications or television service, in east central Alberta and west central Saskatchewan, this service is absolutely atrocious. There are communities which do not receive adequate television, despite the fact that the residents of Frobisher Bay receive six television channels. I believe there is discrimination against the rural sector of Canada.

Very few groups in society, except farmers and some small business persons, pay tax on inflation, pay double jeopardy tax, and have their retirement funds stolen. The Hon. Member for Essex-Kent mentioned the point as well that when a farmer acquires his property, in effect he is hoping that someday, when he receives his capital, it will be his nestegg for his retirement years. In comes the Government, big fisted, grabbing half of what the farmer has brought in, claiming that the farmer's retirement fund belongs to it.

All Members should accept the motion put forward. It merely states that "the Government should consider the advisability". Whether it is right or not in all of the specifics, the Government should consider the advisability of taking a new look at the capital gains question. I remind all Hon. Members that the last person to speak, if he speaks for the full hour, has upon his shoulders the burden of upsetting this initiative of questioning its acceptability. That should not occur. This Bill should be allowed to pass so that we can give due consideration to an injustice which has existed for more than a decade. That has been far too long a period, and should not continue to exist.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Essex Kent (Mr. Daudlin) to study the whole question of the capital gains tax as it affects farmers and small businessmen. This has been of concern to those in rural communities in particular ever since it began to develop as an uneven or unequal form of taxation, starting in about the mid-seventies.

Members of the House do not easily forget the promise made by the governing Party in the last election to attempt to ameliorate the situation. I remind the House that the promise was to change the evaluation day from December 31, 1971 to an evaluation day in 1974. Some of their literature indicated that an indexing provision would be applied as well.

Since coming here, prior to every budget I have written a letter to the Minister of Finance. This is one of three or four items included in my letter. So far it has been ignored by Ministers of Finance. Because the item has again come up for debate today, I hope that in a subsequent budget the Minister will recall one of the few campaign promises affecting small business and agriculture which his Party made at the time of the last election. It was part of the mandate. It is time that that small amelioration of excess taxation in this regard be looked at.

We got into this position on what seemed to be fairly rational grounds. The Carter Commission investigated the whole taxation system. It was to come up with a system that would tax everyone equitably. Carter made the very succinct statement that a buck is a buck and it should be taxed. Unfortunately, 10 or 12 years later we do not have a much better situation than at the time of the Carter investigation. We have wobbled away from any attempt to have equitable taxation and have gone back to ad hockery at its finest in every budget since then. It is very timely that the House consider this motion, which reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order that a once-in-a-lifetime exemption from capital gains taxation be provided for the main business property of non-incorporated or incorporated farmers and businesses employing less than 30 persons, and with growth sales less than $1 million annually, and with fewer than three places of business, excluding foreign-owned farms or business, franchise operations and quota values of any kind, and this exemption from capital gains be made conditional upon those involved investing at least 50 per cent of the taxable amount in the Farm Credit Corporation or in Small Business Development Bonds, at a rate of interest to be more than 50 per cent of the Canadian prime interest rate.

That is a very good area of study, something that should be a primary objective of the House in the next few months. Many questions are raised in this motion which require further study and investigation. Included in the items for study is the whole question of the ownership of farmland and the relationship between professional and business investment in farmland as a hedge against inflation.

The taxation system will have to address the question of whether the investment is simply a hedge against inflation. In recent years, up until last year, the value of farmland has increased faster than the average rate of inflation. This has been the case for the past six or eight years. It has been a good investment for a professional or someone operating another business to provide himself with a hedge against inflation. The problem is the effect that this has on rural communities and farmers attempting to use their investment in farmland as a means of making a living. Sometimes the requirements or expectations of the two groups are quite different.

The farmer buys the land in order to generate income and provide himself and his family with a living. The investors invest because recent experience has proven that the investment will not deteriorate very quickly. The question is whether they should be treated equally when it comes to taxation.

Another question is whether we should continue with some of the ad hoc solutions thrown into the capital gains aspect as it affects farmers and small businesses. For example, will the in-family rollover continue, or should that be studied as well? When we look at capital gains, we should also look at how Revenue Canada treats farmers. That should be put under intense scrutiny as well. The definitions that Revenue Canada is using for those attempting to become farmers and the distinctions they are making between those who are genuinely attempting to begin farming by having an off-farm job and those people they consider to be using a farm as a means of avoiding taxation are questionable, to say the least. I have had cases in my riding where a farmer has been farming for 45 or 46 years. That farmer is now in his middle sixties. He has turned over by sale some of his property to his sons and daughters. He still farms 700 acres or 800 acres but, for some reason, Revenue Canada has decided that he is no longer a farmer. The reasons for this are not too clear. He is, however, being taxed as a non-farmer and he is not being allowed to deduct some of the farm expenses that he has had in the profession that he has carried out for all of his life. Those are the kinds of things that must be clarified and made consistent if equity is to be introduced into the taxation system as it affects small business people and farmers.

Are the limits that are proposed here indeed the best limits that could be proposed? Are they workable right across the country? Are they workable in the farm community as well as in the small business community? The limit of $1 million for total actual turnover of gross sales means different things for different businesses. For instance, even within the farming sector, there is a wide variation between gross sales and the actual amount of investment that the farmer will have.

If a farmer engages in an intensive livestock feeding operation, his gross sales could meet or even occasionally exceed the amount of money that he has invested. However, for prairie grain farms at the present time, and I think the same would hold true for cropping operations in central Canada and maritime Canada, gross sales under current market conditions are equivalent to about 10 per cent of the investment. In other words, if a grain farm in western Canada, under average conditions in western Canada today, were to generate gross sales of $1 million, we would probably be looking at an operation that would have an investment of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $10 million. With the mechanization that is often present in that particular branch of farming, the operation would not employ anything approaching 30 people but would perhaps employ more like eight or ten people.

The question of what limits to impose and what criteria to use should, I think, be studied and not accepted as given, as may be the interpretation of this particular motion. I would hope, if it does get to a committee of some sort of special consideration, that all of these proposed limitations be treated simply as proposals and that such a committee would work diligently to come up with a more equitable kind of taxing system, not only in the area of capital gains but also investigate the taxing system as it affects small businessmen and farmers in general.

The proposal to provide some sort of reinvestment funding through the purchase of a form of agri-bond that seems to be present in this motion is something that is definitely worth further study. It is something that has been called for by many farm organizations and some of the business communities. This proposal, as I read it, would give the selling farmer or small businessman the opportunity to avoid any form of capital gains tax if he had apparently already made his once-in-a-lifetime sale and had some further property or business to dispose of. He would have the option of designating half of that income to an agri-bond or a special bond through the Small Business Development Bank which could be used by the next generation of small businessmen or farmers.

I remind the House that some of the lending institutions that existed back when I was just beginning in my profession of farming did have a policy similar to that. At that time, Co-operative Trust in western Canada would provide loans to young farmers who had very little equity. It would provide loans to farmers with as little as 20 per cent equity, provided the seller of the farmland would invest at least half of the proceeds of the sale in Co-operative Trust investments. It was simply a requirement of the transaction that at least half of the proceeds of the sale go back into the lending institution so that it could serve an ever-increasing clientele of young beginning farmers and small businessmen.

Until such time as there is a complete review of the taxation system as it applies to small businessmen and farmers and until we have a system that would take all aspects of the taxation picture into account, as an interim measure, I would alert the House to a proposal that was made by Members from this corner of the House many times. Until such time as there is a full reassessment of the taxation policies of the country, the House would be well advised to adopt an exemption for capital gains purposes for small businessmen and farmers that would exempt the first $100,000 of the capital gain. This proposal has been implemented in at least one Province in the country. Under the previous provincial Government administration in Saskatchewan, the New Democratic Government had placed that kind of exemption on the provincial portion of capital gains tax that is levied. I think that there would be some merit to proposing a similar kind of exemption at the federal level.

As the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) mentioned, there is a measure of inequity involved in the way the taxation system affects farm people and the way it affects their urban cousins. While it appears to be equal in terms of the full exemption for the primary residence, it is a very clear economic fact that a farm house, no matter how nice it is, never achieves the same market value as does a similar home located in an urban setting. This proposed exemption on the first $100,000 of capital gain would tend to rectify the inequality that exists there.

Indexation is something that I think must accompany any kind of continuation of a valuation day that one must work from. While all of us in the House are, I think, in favour of indexing any valuation day that continues on in the current method of imposing tax, the problem is, which index is to be used? Is the straight cost of living index to be used or is the real valuation of the property, business or farm in that particular Province to be used?

There are wide variations from year to year between regions of the country with regard to capital gains that accrue. In the year that has just finished, many Provinces noted no captial gain in the value of farmland. Many showed a negative gain with land actually dropping in value. Only one or two Provinces showed a marginal increase in the value of farmland last year. This does vary. The question of indexation, whether a property index, a business index, a combination of both or a general cost of living index, should be studied. The fact that there is no index has created a disproportionate tax load on farmers and small-businessmen who have retired under the current capital gains law, and that inequity should be corrected as soon as possible.

I recommend that a study of the whole area of taxation, particularly capital gains, should be proceeded with post haste. In the interim, there is room for patching up of the well-patched valuation day and the capital gains taxation. I think the proposals I have made today would make the law more equitable.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin) for bringing this motion forward today. It is a timely motion and recognizes an inequity that has been a burden on all farmers and small-businessmen across Canada. It is a tax that was imposed perhaps as a result of a series of discussions and pressures brought to bear by other sections of society that wanted the deletion of the estate tax and the implementation of a capital gains tax as an alternative. Little did the organizations that presented the proposal realize the effect the tax would have during the inflationary 1970s. As was indicated by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), the tax could be regarded as being harsher than was intended, and in fact as being a tax on inflation. I want to commend the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent for his concern.

I think we should look at what has happened over the years. In Alberta the total value of land and buildings increased ten times in 12 years, from 3.5 billion in 1971 to $30.2 billion in 1982; in Saskatchewan it went from $3.8 billion to $26.8 billion in the same period; in Ontario from $5.1 billion to $24.7 billion in the same period.

There is another problem, Mr. Speaker. If we are concerned about the disappearance of productive agricultural land in Canada—and obviously the Provinces, whose jurisdiction this comes under, are not doing anything about it—then we should look further than has been suggested by either Member of the Opposition who spoke. We should examine the possibility of exempting all agricultural land from capital gains tax as long as it is kept in food production. This may be the only way for the Government to prevent its disappearance if the Provinces are not going to assist in this regard. I recognize that the management of these resources comes under provincial jurisdiction.

I have to agree with the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent that over the years of their involvement, farmers and small-businessmen have reinvested in order to improve their holdings or expand their businesses and hope to use the proceeds as their retirement income. I believe the time has come to make some allowance for the toll that inflation has taken of retirement savings. It is for this reason that I wholeheartedly endorse the motion.

I should like to suggest that perhaps it is time for the Government to look at another aspect of farm financing or of financing small businesses. We should examine the possibility of giving a guarantee to any farmer or small-businessman who would take back a mortgage on fixed capital assets, as is done with farm improvement loans or small business loans or even through Canada Mortgage and Housing. I wholeheartedly endorse the motion and hope it will receive speedy passage.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the motion before the House. The capital gains tax imposed on the sale of agricultural land is one of the major problems that farmers face, particularly when it comes to the continuation of the family farm. In the constituency that I represent, on valuation day in 1971 a quarter section of land sold for approximately $12,000 per quarter. Today that same property is selling for $70,000 or $80,000 per quarter. The resulting capital gains tax is a tremendous burden on the family farm and more particularly on the senior farmer who may want to retire with some dignity. If a farmer owns five or six quarter sections of land and wants to retire to settle in a small rural town in Saskatchewan, he finds that he does not have the cash available to buy a home so that he can retire with dignity. Usually he wants his son to carry on the family farm. The motion before the House would alleviate his problems to a great extent. The rollover provision in the Income Tax Act is of some help but in many cases the senior farmer just does not have the money that would allow him to retire while at the same time allowing the family farm to continue operation. The Income Tax Act has been counterproductive in many areas but if we were to single out one area where it is most counterproductive, it is in the continuation of a farm or business.

I am very pleased to support the motion and to bring to the attention of the House that for several years this Party has called for this kind of move on the part of the Government. I hope the Government will see fit to support the motion and will bring legislation to the House which will benefit the whole agricultural area, particularly the senior farmer who faces these problems.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to speak to the motion although I do not agree with everything that is in it. I think you mentioned my name as seconder of the motion; I do not know how I got that honour. I am happy to second it but I have some reservations about portions of it.

It seems to me that we are talking about two different questions in this little motion and I think they have been mixed up and incorrectly construed in some of the speeches we have heard. We are talking, first, about capital gains tax in general. Then, more specifically, within that broad question we are talking about the indexation of the capital itself, so that the only portion being taxed is the portion which is a real gain. If that is the principle, I certainly support it.

• (1640)

We have done that in other areas. We have done it with our personal income tax, which is indexed every year. We are about to introduce, on October 1, the indexed security investment plan, which will index capital gains for publicly traded shares on the stock market.

I would like to draw to the attention of every Hon. Member a very important paper which was published in November of 1980 entitled "A Review of the Taxation of Capital Gains in Canada". On page 4 there is a very important principle stated in one brief sentence, which I would like to quote:

An individual who realizes a $100 gain has the same increased spending and saving alternatives as another person who receives an additional $100 in his paycheque.

That is a very important principle. There are three ways to make money in this country: first, from your pay cheque. If you are a factory worker, a school teacher, a clerk in a store, an executive or whatever, your weekly pay cheque is your first way to make money. The second way to make money is from profits from a company. The third way to make money is to invest in a capital gain and watch that gain grow.

When we heard some of the references here about capital gains tax, particularly by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), we learned of some mistakes in the calculation of the tax liabilities on capital gains. Capital gains tax out of those three areas is the easiest tax to carry because it is a half tax. At maximum rates it is a half tax. Half the gain is brought into income and half is overlooked entirely. Then the half which is brought into income is taxed at the subsequent marginal rate. That makes the capital gain out of those three areas the easiest tax to bear because it is, first of all, only a tax on half of the profit.

Let us take the example given by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) with respect to farmers in his area and follow it straight through, including in the example the extra provision of capital gains reserves, which makes the capital gains tax even easier to bear. Let us say that the farmer sells a quarter of his land at $80,000 profit. His total sale based on the figures which the Hon. Member gave us would be, let us say, $92,000. The farmer bought the land for $12,000 in 1971 and is selling it for $92,000 today. He has a total profit differential, inflation plus real gain, of $80,000.

What the farmer would do if he sold it to his son or daughter is to report one-tenth of that profit every year. He has a ten-year reserve period. Therefore, every year the farmer reports a gain of $8,000. Because it is a half tax, he then cuts that $8,000 in half and he pays tax on the $4,000.

Let us say, then, that the farmer, like the Hon. Member for Assiniboia, has other income, that he is a rich gentleman; life has smiled on him and he is in the maximum tax rate, the richest rate—like the Hon. Member for Assiniboia. He would then pay tax at 50 per cent. His annual tax, therefore, on that $80,000 would be $2,000 a year for ten years. It is hard to say, Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member was doing a few minutes ago, that that is an onerous task if your highest tax on an $80,000 profit is $2,000 a year for ten years. I do not feel the Hon. Member should toss these figures around in quite such a way. It is a bit misleading.

Mr. Taylor: You have missed the whole point.

Mr. Fisher: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot also missed the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the capital gains tax is a half rate tax. We hear this a lot in the House. If we are to deal honestly with the question of capital gains, we should constantly remind our listeners and our constituents that this is the easiest of all forms of tax.

Mr. Taylor: You are haywire. That is his nest egg.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING GRANTING, TRANSFER AND OPERATION OF PROFESSIONAL SPORTS FRANCHISES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West) moved that Bill C-690, to amend the Combines Investigation Act (sport franchises), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill, which received first reading on June 29, 1983, is straightforward and rather narrow in scope. The proposed amendment would make it absolutely clear that the granting, transfer and operation of sports franchises is subject to the full force of the competition provisions in the Combines Investigation Act.

The genesis of this particular proposal which I bring forward today was the arbitrary and rather unsatisfactory treatment given by the governors of the National Hockey League to an application for transfer of franchise from St. Louis, Missouri, to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. At that time, Mr. Speaker, an application was made not only by the participants in the project in Saskatchewan, but it was supported wholeheartedly and financially by the City of Saskatoon and the Government of the Province of Saskatchewan. This was an application to the National Hockey League which was given—as I anticipated at the time, and I have not had any change in my estimation since—the overwhelming support of the people of Saskatchewan and, indeed, of people across Canada.

Unfortunately, the treatment which the applicants received from the National Hockey League was, as I have indicated, unsatisfactory. It was arbitrary. The hearing which was held on behalf of the Saskatchewan application was a charade. It raised a level of indignation not only in Saskatchewan but across the country, which is manifest in the fact, as I understand it, that there was support not only from this Party but from the New Democratic Party and the Government represented by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at that time was good enough, at my suggestion, to initiate an investigation under the provisions of this Act. On reviewing the provisions of the Act, it occurred to me that the situation in Canada today is far less strict with respect to the provisions of anti-trust legislation than in the United States. What we have in Canada today is a situation where the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act are excluded as they relate to professional sports leagues. In other words, whereas any other business in Canada is subject to the Combines Investigation Act, professional sports leagues are not, and are specifically exempt from the application of the provisions of this Act. They can, in fact, carry on business in combination with each other, arbitrarily set prices, involve themselves in the whole question of player drafts. They have enormous power, enormous ability, by virtue of the exemption granted by the Parliament of Canada, with respect to the operation of their league.

Let me say at the outset that I understand this exemption. I understand it because I know there are particular exigencies in terms of professional sports, particularly in this country, and I feel the vast majority of Canadians would agree to the exemption from the provisions of the Act. But this does not mean that the governors of any professional sport can deal in an arbitrary way with legitimate applications without a fair hearing. The point of my Bill is simply to send a message to the governors of the National Hockey League to let them know that, even though they have been used to running things their own way for a long period of time, legislators in Canada have the ability to remind them that they have a responsibility, a public trust, regarding legitimate applications received from Canadian sources.

I ask Members of this House to consider the legitimacy of the Province of Saskatchewan's application to be part of the National Hockey League in terms of national unity. Also, were it not for the Province of Saskatchewan a lot of the owners of the NHL would not be making the kind of profits they are today. What would the NHL be today without the likes of Gordie Howe? Or the Bentley brothers from my constituency? The Metz brothers, Bob Bourne from my constituency, or Bryan Trottier, just to name a few of the great hockey players who have come from Saskatchewan.

I am not suggesting that anyone should have the right to come forward and say that because they come from Saskatchewan, or any part of Canada, they have a right by virtue of that fact to have a franchise. The reason I am so anxious to have this Bill go before the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is that the Bill simply says that if there is a legitimate application, the applicant must receive a fair hearing from any professional league. There must be legitimate reasons given for the denial of a franchise. I do not think that is asking too much. I want the governors of the NHL to come before the Committee to find out what it is like to get a fair hearing. I am prepared to give them a fair hearing and hear their side of the story, unlike the treatment they gave the Saskatchewan people. They were allowed something like an hour or an hour and a half and the NHL had made up its mind in advance about the whole matter. That hearing was a charade. But when they come before a committee of this House, I can assure them, and I know I speak for all Members, that they will have a fair hearing and we will look at the merits of this matter.

I simply ask the forbearance of Members of this House to have this matter go through to Committee. I realize there are pros and cons to this particular proposal, but this matter has received support from all sides of the House. In Saskatchewan it is a matter of some concern. The people of that Province are watching this debate because they want to see right now whether the Prime Minister and his Party are going to allow this matter to go to Committee. I can assure the House that if it appears to the people of Saskatchewan that this matter is talked out, that will be a message that what was said by the Government at the time of the rejection of the Saskatchewan application was mere words. I say to Members of this House that it is important to let this Bill go forward to the Committee, which is not now seized with any other matter, and to give urgent attention to this matter.

I understand some of the questions which will be raised about my proposal. Fine; we can amend the proposal and cut the cloth to make the suit. If there is any concern by any professional sports league in Canada about the implications of my proposal, if we are concerned about our ability to keep the Canadian Football League Canadian, I can assure Members of the House that myself and Members of my Party will support any appropriate amendment which might be brought forward.

I am not going to speak very long because I know this matter will be given a fair and reasonable hearing, Mr. Speaker. It has already received the endorsement of all Parties in this House. I know the Government Party will allow this matter to go to Committee so we can have a full hearing concerning the implications of my suggestion and send a message to professional sport that, where there are legitimate applications, regardless of where they come from in Canada, all we as legislators want is that a fair hearing be given. Coming as I do from Saskatoon where there are very deeply held feelings with respect to the way in which we were treated, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that is not asking very much. I ask Members of the House to support this matter to the extent of letting it go to Committee so we may have full opportunity to examine its implications.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that I for one do support his proposal. I will go further and say it is my belief that, because of the nature of sport, hockey specifically, notwithstanding the fact we say that lacrosse is our national sport, I think it is well known that every Canadian boy from about the age of two or three is probably as much at home on a pair of skates as he is with a pair of shoes. I would be in favour not only of having a team from Saskatoon, but I believe it should be considered that virtually every capital of every Province in Canada have their own representative team.

What we are dealing with here this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, in Bill C-690 is, of course, an attempt to deal with a very specific case. I believe the Hon. Member's point is well taken in introducing this Bill to amend certain provisions of the Combines Investigation Act as it relates to professional sports.

For my own benefit and the benefit of the House I would like to try and put into perspective exactly what this Bill would do in the over-all Act and perhaps raise a couple of questions, which I know cannot be dealt with extensively here but perhaps some of my other colleagues could address themselves to them in their interventions this afternoon.

We are all aware that the Hon. Member's concern in this matter arises from the decision taken in May of this year by the NHL to not permit a group in Saskatoon to purchase the St. Louis Blues hockey team and move it to the new coliseum which they intended to build in the city. Of course, they wanted hockey there; it is good for the city. In my opinion it would be good for business and I think that Saskatoon could not help but be the winners in this particular instance.

I know a great many people in Saskatchewan and elsewhere were very disappointed, myself included. In fact, some of them were incensed by what they felt to be an arbitrary and high-handed act by the League. Many people, mainly from Saskatchewan but also from other parts of Canada, wrote to the previous Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs expressing their concern that our national sport would be completely in the hands of a small group of people who could decide what the ciizens of a Province—which has produced many of the game's greatest stars, as the Hon. Member pointed out—would not be allowed to watch and support their onw NHL team.

Clearly, concentrations of power which may be used to the detriment of the public or some part of it should be dealt with by the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. My colleague, as far as I can make out, is not opposed to that particular proposition. That is precisely what the Act is for and why Parliament, as long ago as 1889, considered that legislation dealing with monopolies and other restrictions on competition is required. The Present Act does permit the investigation of such situations and, specifically, the action of the NHL in this instance.

● (1700)

The Director of Investigation and Research, who, under the Act, has the responsibility for conducting inquiries, determined that an inquiry is warranted and has acted accordingly. The inquiry which he initiated is being conducted under Section 33 of the Act, and the Hon. Member is nodding his head, which is the Section that relates to monopolies. The Act defines a monopoly as:

—a situation where one or more persons either substantially or completely control throughout Canada or any area thereof the class or species of business in which they are engaged and have operated such business or are likely to operate it to the detriment or against the interest of the public—

The Director is, of course, still conducting his inquiry, and he must determine, after he has gathered all his evidence, whether that evidence proves that the actions of the National Hockey League violate that provision relating to monopolies. If that is the conclusion which he comes to, he can then refer the evidence to the Attorney-General to decide whether the League should be taken to court in a prosecution. At this stage, of course, we cannot know what the outcome of the inquiry will be, but it is clear that the present Act does permit an investigation of this action by the NHL which concerns the Hon. Member and so many other Members of this House.

I might point out as well that the amendment which the Hon. Member proposes would do nothing to alter the situation with respect to the Saskatoon proposal, or the present inquiry. The reason is very simple. The law cannot be amended to apply retroactively. The actions of the League in May in rejecting the Saskatoon application for a franchise were either legal or illegal under the present Act. That will be determined by the inquiry now under way. Any amendment which this House may make now will not, in my opinion, have any bearing on that.

I am sure the Hon. Member hopes that the amendments which he proposes we make to the Act will ensure that in future the National Hockey League, or any other professional sports league considering an application for a franchise, will realise that their actions are subject to the law. However, it is not at all clear, Madam Speaker, that the proposed amendments would have that result. Let me explain my reasoning.

The Section of the present Act which relates specifically to professional sport in Section 32.3. The part of that Section which creates an offence reads:

32.3(1) Every one who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with another person

(a) to limit unreasonably the opportunities for any other person to participate, as a player or competitor, in professional sport or to impose unreasonable terms or conditions on those persons who so participate, or

(b) to limit unreasonably the opportunity for any other person to negotiate with and, if agreement is reached, to play for the team or club of his choice in a professional league.

Clearly, this Section relates to agreements which place unreasonable restrictions on the opportunities of players. It does not deal with restrictions on teams or franchises. The problem which the Hon. Member has pointed out, and which his proposal seeks to correct, lies in Subsection (3) of Section 32.3. That Subsection reads:

(3) This section applies, and section 32 does not apply, to agreements and arrangements and to provisions of agreements and arrangements between or among teams and clubs engaged in professional sport as members of the same league and between or among directors, officers or employees of such teams and clubs where such agreements, arrangements and provisions relate exclusively to matters described in subsection (1) or to the granting and operation of franchise in the league, and section 32 applies and this section does not apply to all other agreements, arrangements and provisions thereof between or among such teams, clubs and persons. 1974-75-76, c. 76, s.15.

I suppose we can all pretty well get lost in this legalese. However, I guess one could say, in just common sense English, that the Subsection therefore states that Section 32, the general conspiracy provision of the Act, will not apply to arrangements relating to the granting and operation of franchises but that Section 32.3 will apply. However, that Section does not deal with franchises at all. It only deals with restrictions on the opportunities of players to participate in the sport. The amendment which the Hon. Member proposes would delete the words "or to the granting and operation of franchises in the league". The Bill would also add a new Subsection to the present Section 32, making it clear that that Section, and not Section 32.3, would apply to arrangements concerning franchises. These agreements would then have to be tested against the main conspiracy provisions contained in Section 32 in order to determine their legality. That is the problem that I set out to clarify for myself, as to whether what was being done was legal or illegal.

Section 32 deals, first of all, with agreements or arrangements. Clearly, teams in professional sport agree among themselves on many things—rules, schedules, and so on. They may also agree among themselves on how the revenues obtained from the games they play against each other are distributed. Most importantly, however, the teams must agree to play against each other. That is, if they are organized into a league, they must agree on what other teams will be permitted to join the league. Therefore, any decision a league makes concerning the award of a franchise will have that element of "agreement" which is required by Section 32.

There are also four Subsections to Section 32(1), each of which describes what it is which makes certain agreements illegal. The main Subsection, the one under which most combines conspiracy cases are brought, is Section 32(1)(c). That is the Section which makes illegal agreements "to prevent or lessen unduly, competition in the production or supply of a product".

There may arise certain circumstances under which a league's decision on whether to award a franchise might come under that provision, if the Hon. Member's proposal is adopted. I am thinking particularly of territorial restrictions, where one team is given an exclusive right, or a monopoly, in a certain metropolitan area. A league's refusal to permit another team to establish itself and join the league in the same city or area as an existing team, without financially compensating the existing team, could possibly be illegal under the Act if this Bill is adopted. And, perhaps it should be. But it is important that this House should not pass too hastily a Bill which may have this result.

What about a situation, such as the recent Saskatoon case, where a league denies a franchise to a city which does not already have one? Would that situation come under Section 32(1)(c)? Would it "prevent or lessen unduly competition"? The answer is not at all clear. A court would have to decide, first of all, what the product is in which competition has been lessened. If the product in question is the exhibition of games in a certain sport, or even professional sports in general, would the denial of a franchise lessen competition if there were no professional sports franchises in that city to begin with? Would it do so to an "undue extent"?

These questions must be addressed. I do not want to attempt to answer these questions here and I will not. I hope, merely by asking them, to point out to the House that the bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West does little to clarify the Act as it applies to the granting of professional sports franchises.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Doug Richardson will be very unhappy with that.

● (1710)

Mr. Parent: Is Mr. Richardson your friend? I have never met the man but I am sure that if he is your friend he must be a very nice fellow.

I very seriously doubt whether the National Hockey League would have acted in any different fashion if the Hon. Member's amendments had been in place last May. I am afraid that not only does this Bill attempt to slam the barn door after the horses have left, but it does not even slam it effectively.

For a number of years now there has been talk of amending our competition laws. Many proposals have been put forward; few have been adopted. In light of that history, it would be ironic if the House should pass a bill to amend the Combines Investigation Act which is so specific in what it seeks to deal with and yet so limited in what it would accomplish.

It may be that the Combines Investigation Act does require amendment in order to deal more effectively with the way professional sports franchises are awarded. When the Act was amended in 1976 and Section 32.3(3) was incorporated into it, it was felt that professional sport had unique characteristics which required that it not be dealt with under the general conspiracy provisions of Section 32. However, as the Hon. Member pointed out in proposing the Bill, Section 32.3 let the question of franchises fall between the cracks.

Perhaps when this House considers proposals for more general amendments, including amendments to the provisions concerning monopolies and mergers, it might also look again at Section 32.3. We could then ensure that a single section, Section 32.3, would contain the entire competition law relating to professional sport. I hope that when this House does set about the overdue task of amending a number of the major provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, the Hon. Member and others on his side of the House will continue their interest in the subject of competition law and will support its reform.

We have heard a good deal about the outpouring of support from the people of Saskatoon and indeed the people of all Saskatchewan for the proposal to bring a National Hockey League franchise to that city. They, in turn, have been supported by a good many Canadians from all over the country, including my area of the Niagara Peninsula. I am certain that all Members of the House wish them success in their continuing efforts to bring a professional hockey team to Saskatoon. In my opinion it would be good for the city and good for professional hockey.

A fair bit has been written about the National Hockey League and the way it has handled this matter. Not only is the League under inquiry by the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act in this country, but it has also been sued for $60 million in a private action in the United States by the Ralston-Purina Company. Because their actions are under inquiry at this time, it would be improper for me to comment on them now. I believe, though, that we should all regret the fact that the situation has developed to the point of protracted litigation in both countries.

I understand that the Director's inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act has been slowed down substantially by a series of court actions taken by the National Hockey League to block the inquiry. Back in June, on application by the Director, the Chairman of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission issued subpoenas to the members of the board of governors of the League and its senior officials requiring them to appear to give evidence in the inquiry. At that time it was announced in the press that the League intended to co-operate fully with the Director's inquiry.

What has happened? Since then the League has tried to stop the inquiry or throw roadblocks in its way. During the summer, the Federal Court of Canada threw out the League's argument that the subpoenas issued were unconstitutional as being contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. More recently, the court rejected their application to delay the proceedings further pending their appeal of the first decision.

I have a number of other things I wanted to say in this particular debate, but suffice it to say that I believe my colleague for Saskatoon West is wise in bringing this matter to our attention. Like him, I look forward to the time when we can debate it in committee.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise today and speak in support of the Bill of my colleague from Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Let me go on record as saying that my colleague from Saskatoon West wisely lives in Saskatoon East and is one of our more distinguished members of the constituency. Whenever he is away on trips, I always make sure he has little flags and other things to hand out. He is looking after those matters very well, I understand.

However, today I would like to go on record with him in proclaiming that what happened in Saskatoon this spring was very much against what the people in Saskatoon wanted. Something should be done to see that the wishes of the people in that Province are fulfilled and that Saskatoon will get a major league hockey team.

I accept the fact that the debate up to this point has been in what we would call legalese. It has been strictly on legal terms. I would begin by simply saying that, not being a lawyer, I do not feel competent to speak to the matter in that particular respect.

However, when these matters arise, I can relate to what was said by Robert Service in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew". Let me reflect on how it would relate to lawyers. I am misquoting, but he said: "I am not as wise as those lawyer guys, but strictly between us two, it is between you and me and the rest of us that we will maybe save the Blues". That is not exactly how he said it but it is in that manner that all Parties, as my hon. friend for Saskatoon West indicated, will have to find a way in which this particular problem can be solved.

A group of people in Saskatoon who were extremely interested in hockey, the city and the Province, had put together a financial package to buy the St. Louis Blues. When they finally made their proposition to the NHL they were treated like children and as if they should not be there. In effect, they were simply discarded. There must be a way to resolve this problem in an adult manner.

During the negotiations between Saskatoon and the National Hockey League this past year, I would say that I probably received more mail on this particular subject than anything else. That points very directly to the fact that hockey is part and parcel of life in that Province. As my colleague for Saskatoon West indicated, that area has been looked upon by the NHL over the years as one of the factories of hockey players. Many fans in that area are related to or familiar with National Hockey League players and want to see them playing hockey in Saskatoon.

A friend of mine, Tom Bentley, whose name relates very closely to one of the great hockey families in Saskatoon, is a senior hockey player now, as are many old Saskatchewan people who keep playing hockey years after they should have known enough to stop. He lives in Clavet now. He said that it would be important to have a team in Saskatoon because they are real fans in that city. They understand, are knowledgeable and know who is good and who is not. Since they play the game themselves, they know which players are skilful. This is quite different from other NHL cities where the fans want to see violence or something else. They do not go to see the skills that these players have gained while playing this sport.

I would like to say a word to the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) who indicated that he supported the general idea of NHL teams all across the country. I would point out to him that Saskatoon is not the capital of Saskatchewan yet. I hope that if his motion to have a team in all the capitals of Canada passes we will get one in Saskatoon before Regina.

● (1720)

The Hon. Member indicated that the proposed Bill may not solve the problem, but it is extremely important to find a solution down the road. Hopefully a Bill will be introduced and Saskatoon will have its team. Perhaps it will not be this Bill, but I hope it does go to committee.

When the debate began last spring, people had gut feelings that Saskatoon would have a team. I was nervous that their expectations were too high. The local fans believed that the matter would be easily handled. I have had experience in other parts of the world dealing with multinational corporations. I really felt for the fans because I knew they would probably be let down. This is what happened: they were let down.

The NHL, which is big business in a sense, is out to make a profit. The dimension of the people at the bottom who make it work, the fans, is forgotten. If it happens to be a fruit company in Central America or a sugar company in Brazil, the people at the bottom make it work, but they are frequently the ones who are left out or do not have a say in what goes on. When all this was taking place in Saskatoon last spring, I constantly had the feeling that I was experiencing something I had lived through before in other parts of the world. I felt nobody who would listen to the people at the bottom, the fans or the families of the players. If it were not for these people there would not be a National Hockey League, but I knew that the League would be thinking of other things, such as a bigger drawing centre or more sure profits.

There is a special breed of person in Saskatchewan. They are people who really believe in the game. They are willing to go to great sacrifices to see that this comes about. We in the House of Commons have a duty to see that that is respected. We must find a way to change the law or introduce whatever piece of legislation is necessary to ensure that the National Hockey League cannot step in and say that Saskatchewan cannot have a team, even though the base is there, the money is there and everything is in place to make it operate. We, as Members of Parliament, have a responsibility.

I am very happy that all three Parties were in accord. Last spring the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wrote a letter to the National Hockey League. The Progressive Conservative Party supported the idea of a franchise in Saskatoon. The New Democratic Party supported the idea. It appeared to be a unanimous decision of the House, but unfortunately the franchise was not given to Saskatoon and in a sense we are still out in the cold.

We support morally and in every way we can the Motion of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West. I trust the Government will see that the matter gets to committee and that it will be studied there. The National Hockey League will be able to appear and give its point of view. The League could be questioned. Basically there is nothing to hide. If it has a good reason, let us hear it. If it does not have a good reason, let us ask why. It is simple. It is the way the country runs. It is the way committees are set up. It is what Parliament is about. I trust the Government will let this Bill go to committee and that there will be a positive result for all people in Saskatchewan who want a professional hockey team in Saskatoon.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I assure the House that my comments with respect to this Bill will be relatively short. I come from Cambridge. My family has had a considerable amount of history in hockey; this is what really prompts me to speak. My father played in the National Hockey League. Although I do not have the abilities of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), I certainly love the sport.

Quite frankly, I was shocked by what I thought was shabby treatment of the application of Saskatoon last spring. I know from watching all professional sports what great fans are the people of Saskatchewan and I know what a great contribution that sport makes to the Province of Saskatchewan. It is unbelievable that people will drive 300 or 400 miles to watch a Roughriders game. That Province has an incredible amount of spirit, it richly deserves a National Hockey League franchise.

There may be good reasons which have not been indicated why the application was turned down, but certainly the manner in which the NHL dealt with the matter does not satisfy me. I think there has to be some accountability of all professional sports teams. In that regard I think of hockey as one of our national treasures. It is one of the sports, like football, which helped to unite the nation. It gives us a real sense of competition. We all care very much about our professional teams. That being the case, there is really a public trust involved. Because this is so, I think there is an obligation on the part of the NHL to be very frank and to indicate why the franchise was turned down.

I remember the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), perhaps it was last June, indicating in a public release that he would see whether there was some way in which he could use his good offices to influence the president of the National Hockey League in the matter. The Prime Minister made a promise to all Canadians; he made a promise in the House that he would use his good offices to see whether or not the Saskatoon application might be accepted. What better way could there be than by referring this matter to committee?

I listened with a great degree of interest to the representations of the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) who professed to care about this subject matter but said that the Bill was unsatisfactory. I would like to put the Government side to the test because I believe that the subject matter ought to be investigated by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of the House of Commons. Everyone in the House knows that at this particular point in time there is no reason that it cannot be immediately referred to that committee for a full hearing.

Accordingly, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-690, an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (sports franchises), be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice ands Legal Affairs."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It has been moved by Mr. Speyer, seconded by Mr. Kilgour:

That Bill C-690, an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (sports franchises) be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I just want to say that I agree.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Accordingly, the Order is discharged, the Bill is withdrawn and the subject matter thereof is referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to know exactly what it is we are agreeing to. If the purpose of the amendment would be to change the Bill and therefore to refer its subject matter to committee without ending the present debate, perhaps it is something to which we could agree. The question is whether the debate is ended on the motion being proposed.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should make it very clear to the House that the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) was agreed to. That motion had the effect of having the Bill not now read a second time, but that the Order read earlier be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The House agreed to that motion. Therefore, there is nothing before the House at this time. The Order was discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

We will now proceed with the next item of Private Members' Business.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURAL SUBSIDIES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all studies, documents, research papers and reports done by or for any department or agency comparing Canadian government agricultural subsidies and United States government agricultural subsidies.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when I placed my question on the Order Paper on July 23, 1982, I wanted to know what research the Government might have undertaken to compare the subsidies Canadian farmers receive and the subsidies that farmers in countries such as the United States receive. I was interested because at that time the Government had already made plain that it was going to change the historic Crownsnest Pass Agreement.

Such changes will directly affect a large number of my constituents who are engaged in grain farming. The increase in the freight rates will diminish their ability to compete against grain growers in other countries, particularly their chief competitor, the United States grain grower.

Many Government members and other proponents for this change in the Crow have argued that it is an unfair subsidy to our grain farmers, that our grain farmers should pay a much higher rate for moving their grain and that the subsidies they supposedly are receiving under the Crow gives them an unfair advantage. Therefore, I wanted to know how direct or indirect subsidies which the Canadian farmers receive compare to those received by their major competitor, the U.S. grain farmer.

To say that I was shocked when I received the response from the Government earlier this year is putting it mildly. The response was: "The Minister of Agriculture is not aware of the existence of the documents requested. I therefore ask the Hon. Member to withdraw his motion". In other words, the Government does not have any studies, documents, research papers or reports on agricultural subsidies. Agriculture is one of Canada's major industries. It is one of our major export items. We are in direct competition with the United States, the European Common Market, Australia and Argentina, all of which give various subsidies and various forms of support.

Through Bill C-155, this Government will drastically change the economics of farming in western Canada yet this Government reports to the House that it has no studies, documents or reports on the subsidies that our wheat farmers receive compared to farmers in other countries. It has done no study to determine what effect this legislation will have on the competitive position of our farmers. I find this very hard to believe.

The Government must either be lying or be damned fools. Would a Government bring in massive changes to western agriculture without first considering the competitive position in which it would leave our farmers? Do our negotiators to GATT and other international conferences go without any idea what subsidies agriculture in other countries receives? I cannot believe we are that stupid or that naive. Either the Government are lying or they are damned fools.

Perhaps in answer the Government is deliberately misleading the House. Of course, it has studies comparing agricultural subsidies but it does not want to make them public. It does not want to acknowledge the fact that Canadian agriculture, particularly grain farming, is the least subsidized in the world. It does not want to acknowledge that fact because it would show the economic folly of what the Government is doing with a Bill to change the Crowsnest Pass Agreement.

The Government owes this House and the Canadian public some straight answers. I hope that the Government spokesperson who will be speaking today on this motion will give us some answers. I hope he will answer whether anybody in International Trade and Commerce, External Affairs, Agriculture or Transport monitors subsidies in agriculture in Canada and in other countries. Surely such people exist and surely such studies are done. I hope that the Government spokesperson who speaks today will tell the House, yes or no, that we do have these people or we do not have these people.

It is amazing that the Government while in the midst of such massive changes to agriculture in western Canada should come to this House and admit that it has done no studies on the subsidies that the chief competitors receive. Is this possible? I am so flabbergasted that I have difficulty trying to find the words to define how I feel. That is most unusual for a politican.

With massive resources at its disposal, economists and specialists filling tower after tower of highrises in this city, the Government admits that it does not have any studies on the subsidies that agriculture in the United States receives or on the subsidies that farmers in the European Economic Community, Argentina and Australia receive. Does the Government mean to tell me that it actually does not know? If the Government does not know, how dare it proceed with Bill C-155?

If you plan major moves in agriculture, Mr. Speaker, you have to consider the subsidies that are received by farmers throughout the world. Not to do so is ultimate stupidity. Why has the Government not done those studies? Is it afraid to do those studies? Is it afraid to table them for the public to see? I think the latter is the case. I would not tend to think that the Government, with its massive bureaucracy, is that stupid but that the figures, studies and reports are there. The Hon. Member opposite shakes his head no. Is he admitting that the Government is so stupid it does not do any studies on agricultural subsidies in other countries? Is that what the Government member is admitting? In either case, Mr. Speaker, the Government stands condemned as either being a liar or being damned naive and stupid.

• (1740)

I urge the House to pass the motion and force the Government to make these relevant documents public so that Members of the House and the Canadian public can take a good, honest look at the type of competition our grain farmers will be facing in the years ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the world food situation is a matter of concern for many prominent figures in political and economic circles, as it is for people in many countries, for purely humanitarian reasons. That being said, Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) ought to know that there is not a single country, and I am mainly thinking of the industrialized countries with widely differing policies, that is going to divulge exactly the kind of subsidies it grants, either directly or indirectly, to agriculture. I think it is hard to see, what with unilateral, bilateral, multilateral agreements, what kind of direct or indirect subsidies are being granted, considering that production differs from country to country.

The present rate of population growth is such that we can expect an increase in the world demand for food that exceeds the projected growth in food production. For many years, people have been talking about a world food crisis. At a time when demand is expected to continue to increase, when certain developing countries are showing signs of positive economic growth, and we are seeing a growing trend towards consumer societies of the kind that exist in most western countries, it was to be expected that countries that are major exporters of food commodities would compete and will continue to compete most actively for a large share of these lucrative markets.

Mr. Speaker, once again, I am convinced that the countries engaged in this very competitive exercise will not divulge their secrets and tell us how they are subsidizing certain commodities, either directly or indirectly. They are attracted by very substantial economic benefits, for their balance of payments and domestic income, and this is particularly true of western countries that are not yet out of the economic recession. Will this lead to a trade war in the agro-food sector, in the form of fierce competition on export markets and increased protectionist measures on the respective domestic markets of the countries and groups of countries concerned?

I would not go so far as to say that such a war has already started, but the issues being raised today and the concerns that have been expressed with respect to developments in trade relations over the last few years already give some indication of what the foreign trade situation may be in the not so distant future. I have just mentioned that current forecasts indicate that export markets are expanding. We feel that we have the necessary potential to develop our farm production to benefit from these expanding markets. In my opinion, this is a worthy and legitimate objective. Yet, it is not new. Is it not the very same objective which federal and provincial departments of agriculture have sought from the very beginning in endeavouring to help our agro-food industry meet the needs of our domestic market primarily, and of foreign markets secondly, by producing healthy high quality food at reasonable costs, while providing producers with equitable incomes in line with their efforts and investments?

We shall probably be hearing today this list of objectives for the nth time. It is with these objectives in mind that the government has created and continues to create assistance programs, financial or otherwise, for farm producers and other contributors to the agro-food industry? These assistance programs have sometimes appeared in the form of food production, transport, processing and marketing subsidies. What the Hon. Member for Regina East does not understand when he blames the Government, is why it does not have any study or accurate figures from various countries about the type of subsidies for each particular kind of product. It is simply because these come under various programs. It all depends on the type of assistance. Is the assistance program aimed at production, transportation or marketing boards? In my opinion, this is rather difficult to accurately determine and if, because of the various programs we were to stop tomorrow morning giving this matter special attention, Mr. Speaker, it is almost certain that many agreements would be cancelled.

These programs were designed and implemented to promote the development of the Canadian industry with due consideration being given to Canadian realities and very often Canadian needs. If we want to increase the effectiveness and profitability of the Canadian agricultural food products industry, it is first of all because it is in the interests of Canadian consumers. Canadians now spend 15.8 per cent of their disposable income on food products. Only the Americans use a lower percentage of their income for food. This is now the case in Canada.

How do my comments relate to today's debate? I do not want to be simplistic in my approach, but I want to place my remarks in a more realistic context than has been done until now.

Government agricultural subsidies, whether federal or provincial, were first aimed at ensuring the profitability and efficiency of the Canadian industry. If assistance programs have allowed our farm producers and agricultural food products industry to become more competitive, so much the better since it benefits further our economy! Of course, reference can be made to cases where subsidies seem to benefit other people, outside Canada, for instance. In such cases, the government is expected to subsidize exports, and therefore, Canadian taxpayers are expected to subsidize the consumers in other countries. One can look at it that way. However, I believe there are other ways to look at it. In my opinion, the subsidies which seem to benefit others allow us in fact to maintain our production capacity, to remain effective and preserve the markets sometimes acquired by our producers through relentless and patient efforts.

In the short term, some types of financial assistance can be considered as an export subsidy, but in the long run, the very survival of our industry is at stake. What is involved is our capacity to meet the needs of the Canadian people. Can we afford to abandon some of our agricultural sectors because of temporary problems in which case we would become completely dependent on foreign supplies to meet the demands of the Canadian market? There is an important moral and political choice to be made. Once again, the needs of consumers are involved. Canadians could benefit from short term price reductions, but in the long run, if we no longer have the capacity to produce, we shall have to purchase where we can and at a price dictated by others. This is one aspect of the matter.

From another point of view, many financial assistance or subsidy programs were implemented, not to enable Canadian producers to keep on supplying foreign markets in order to protect our production capacity, but simply to protect our domestic markets which belong to our producers against foreign products which are sometimes subsidized. If we look at the purchasing programs of the Agricultural Products Board these last few years, we can see that in each case its involvement was aimed at supporting our Canadian industry when it was threatened by low-priced imports.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply remind the House that when the Canadian Government decided to buy canned tomatoes in Ontario, it was precisely to maintain the production which had been disrupted by imports of foreign produce. I think that nobody in the House could have claimed then with any degree of certainty whether such imported produce had been subsidized, because there are very subtle ways of doing that nowadays, even though we cannot say so openly since we must abide by multilateral agreements.

All kinds of arguments are defensible in light of current trends on the international market. In that respect, I firmly believe that we can take a wide variety of approaches, including outright protectionism through heavily subsidized markets, both domestic and foreign, in the hope that we will eventually run our competitors into the ground and be left with highly lucrative markets. Then again, on the strength of economic theories and in keeping with absolute principles of free trade, any subsidy program which, one way or another, would protect our existing markets or industries could be opposed.

I think that extreme measures seldom reflect a balanced economy, and the policy we have followed so far is the best: first and foremost, we want our food producers to earn a decent living and to be efficient, so we are prepared to help them achieve their full potential. Later on, we will be in a better position to determine which resources we might allocate to maintain the lead we will have gained over our competitors through this positive and constructive investment. The fierce fight and competition on the export markets will be all the more beneficial to us if we are on solid ground to defend our positions.

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Would the Hon. Member allow a question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member had time left from his allocated time.

[Translation]

Would the Parliamentary Secretary entertain a question?

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am sorry, the answer is no.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I am rather disappointed that the last speaker would not accept a question. It seemed to me that he is in favour of passage of this motion. I wish that could be determined, because if he is in favour of it—I ask that question but I also want to address the subject matter and I do not want to get the two confused—then there is very little reason for our continuing debate. If he is so prepared and Hon. Members on your right are prepared to have the motion pass, I am sure that Members on this side are prepared to support it and debate could be ended forthwith. I hope I might make that as a point of order to be followed by my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): This is an unusual situation. I am not sure what the Hon. Member seeks to achieve.

Mr. McCain: Is he ready to let the motion go through?

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might speak to this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Let it be understood that I recognized the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) to make a speech. If he now sits down, I presume he has terminated his remarks and I would have to go to another Hon. Member.

Mr. McCain: I sat down out of respect for your rising, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am still standing and the Hon. Member is addressing the Chair.

Let me clear the situation up. I respect the fact that the Hon. Member was trying to make a suggestion by way of a point of order. Normally the Chair is prepared to recognize that and allow the Parliamentary Secretary an opportunity to respond if he so pleases; if not, I would invite the Hon. Member to continue his remarks if he wishes.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I have to take that as a suggestion that the Government is not prepared to put these papers on the desk.

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would have risen to respond to the point of order had my hon. friend wanted to speak to that. There might have been some substantive reason for doing so, but instead he got himself into difficulty about whether he wanted to continue his speech. He has chosen to continue.

I now rise on a point of order which I think is valid, because he now imputes motives to Members on your right by reason of the fact that neither the Hon. Member nor anyone else on this side has risen to respond to a point of order that was never raised. If he chooses to do so, I respectfully suggest to the Chair that it would be contrary to the rules of order of the House and ought not to be permitted. We cannot have imputed motives. He may have made a judgment in his own mind of what may or may not be meant by a certain action but I suggest it cannot be expressed in those terms here.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I recognize the difficulty the Chair is in. A suggestion was made by the Hon. Member from the Official Opposition that if Members of the Government were in favour, the item be allowed to go to a vote. Your Honour could not allow debate and discussion on that point. Perhaps the way out of the difficulty is for Government Members to nod their heads indicating yes or no. In this way we would get the necessary indication and could allow the Member of the Official Opposition to proceed with his speech or allow the question to go to a vote. If Hon. Members opposite would just nod their heads, we could proceed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): We do not proceed in this House by nodding our heads; there has to be an audible yes or no or some remark.

First of all, the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte did not make a formal motion which was duly seconded. He rose on a point of order, which is perfectly legitimate, at the beginning of his remarks. The Parliamentary Secretary chose not to respond. At that point I thought I had made myself very clear, that either the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte continue his remarks or I see another Member from any side of the House who wanted to speak.

I accept the point raised by the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin) at face value. Unfortunately, the Chair did not hear the remarks uttered by the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte. At this point I would respectfully suggest that, of course, tradition forbids an Hon. Member from imputing motive.

I think debate should be allowed to continue at this point and I invite the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte to do so.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I am at your disposal and I appreciate your position.

A certain coincidence makes this motion extremely timely, Mr. Speaker. The information requested is pertinent and is important to a situation which exists in relation to a recent ruling of the Department of Commerce in the United States on a surcharge on the entry of potatoes from Canada to that country. The information requested would be extremely valuable to those who are trying to prepare the case because unquestionably there is an element of subsidy on agricultural products in the United States. In the last ten years this subsidy has increased from $2 billion per year to an estimated $20 billion for this crop year.

The products involved are entering our market directly or indirectly. Whether they enter as corn or meat, as wine or canned products, or however they enter this country, we must ask whether they are receiving the benefit of that subsidy. I sumbit to you, Mr. Speaker, that this information is vital.

● (1800)

I have no intention of trying to talk this Bill out. I submit that if the Garrison Dam project goes forward, it will incorporate more subsidy for the farmers of the irrigated area than all the agricultural subsidies paid in Canada. Yet part of the ruling with respect to the surcharge on potatoes going into the United States is that there might be some subsidies in Canada. I suppose you might say it is the case of the pot calling the kettle black, but our agricultural budget in no way approaches $20 billion, which will be theirs in this year. I do not want to impute, and I did not mean to do so; I had to draw a conclusion. There was nothing else which I could do a few moments ago under the circumstances. I heard nothing from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Dionne) which indicated an objection to tabling these figures. These figures are important to Canada.

Not too long ago it was my pleasure to be in Europe and to discuss the movement of agricultural products. I have repeated, perhaps not in this House but many times to my friends on this side of the House, that 500,000 tonnes of barley was exported from the European Economic Community, and that the subsidy paid on that export exceeded the price paid by the Canadian Wheat Board to the Canadian farmer. That is the extent to which Canadian farmers are competing with subsidies given by other countries in the world market. Not too long ago we received grape concentrates from France at little more than the cost of freight and container. This concentrate arrived in this nation of ours in competition with our wine industry on that basis and without the application of additional duty.

I submit that this motion is indeed timely and that we should get every single aspect of subsidy, direct and indirect, which is paid by the Government of the United States of America to its agricultural producers. It should, for instance, include the benefits which accrue to farmers through the FHA because they get loans and second loans and third loans through the FHA and those farmers are not closed out. They are given a chance to recover, a chance which our Farm Credit Corporation, because of its underfinancing, has been absolutely and utterly unable to do.

When we are talking about a country imposing surcharge of duty on us, I would like to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that the potato is the subject matter of today. I want to point out to every Hon. Member of this House, and I ask them to listen carefully, that there are at the present time agricultural organizations in the United States, commodity by commodity, looking at what will be the ultimate outcome of the potato ruling. Anyone in this nation who is interested in agriculture, and who thinks that this process is going to stop with the consideration of the potato application from the State of Maine, has to be blinding himself to the realities which exist in the area of trade in the United States, and for which protection is being sought in every way possible.

It would be a tremendous bonus to the case of Canadian agriculture to be able to present a totally knowledgeable presentation outlining the subsidies which are paid by the Government of the United States, directly or indirectly, to its farmers.

I am not going to take any more time, Mr. Speaker, because I want this motion to pass. I want that information this week because, as the Parliamentary Secretary said, "We have it". Then why not put it on the Table so it might help all of our agriculture all across Canada? Whether it be meat, grain, fruit, or vegetables, nothing is immune to a regional application from any commodity group anywhere in the United States to the Department of Commerce of the United States. I am deeply concerned. Let us please have that information.

● (1805)

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I, like the Hon. Member who has just spoken, have experienced first hand the effect of the discussions surrounding Maine potatoes and the eastern Canada potato issue. The Hon. Member will know that we have just come from deliberations with respect to tomato imports which so drastically affected production during the 1982 crop and threw into complete disarray Canadian marketing of canned tomatoes. When put together with the production which took place in the 1982 crop year, which was exceptional, this exacerbated the entire problem and put us into a situation where we have our already struggling canning industry going into a tailspin.

I must confess that I did not have the opportunity to hear in their complete form the remarks addressed to the House by the Parliamentary Secretary. However, I would find it difficult to believe that we are able at this point to respond to what is obviously a very difficult request at best, if not impossible, to delineate all the subsidies, direct or indirect, there might be on agricultural products. I wonder if we would not end up comparing apples and oranges, or comparing indirect subsidies involved in putting an agricultural student through a Canadian university with, say, the value to farmers of a major irrigation project the likes of which were referred to by the Hon. Member.

Mr. McCain: Throw away the red herrings and let us get down to the nuts and bolts.

Mr. Daudlin: One wonders just how you do these comparisons and whether we assist the situation by suggesting for the moment it is easy to do, that we can snap our fingers and get it, and whether at the end of the day it is not a real description that we give, whether we are not in fact clouding the issue as opposed to helping it.

I know the Hon. Member seeks, for very valid reasons and out of the depth of sincerity, the kind of clarity and information he is looking for to support the case for the producers he represents. But I ask him sincerely whether or not he is potentially putting us in a position where we might be doing them harm as opposed to good? I suppose we could include, for instance, as a subsidy such things as education, the roads which take farm goods to market, the inspection services performed on agrifood products, research, technology transfer programs, drainage, and export missions.

Mr. McDermid: You are reaching.

Mr. Daudlin: As well as more obvious things like the Agricultural Stabilization Act, crop insurance, the western grain stabilization program and the dairy subsidy. Surely we expose ourselves to those considerations if we are going to have the kind of deliberations we are talking about. From any of these programs and services it would be nearly impossible to decide how much of the public expenditure was strictly speaking a farm subsidy and how much was a benefit to the whole of society. How many of us have stood in this place and argued how much better off we would be if the true cost of goods was being paid by the consumer as opposed to being partially borne by the taxpayer? How do we define that?

We would also have to consider, Mr. Speaker, all of the programs offered by the Provinces and then duplicate the entire process in the U.S., adding up all the federal and state programs which were of some assistance to farmers. Clearly, if not impossible, that is very, very difficult.

However, this is a good opportunity to discuss, as I think we should be, some of the aspects of agricultural policy in this country and the degree to which they constitute a subsidy to farmers. The place to start might be in the entire budget of Agriculture Canada, which Members will agree is approximately $1 billion. When you add in the spending on grain transportation, the grain and oil seed programs for Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the programs offered to farmers through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, you are talking about a grand total of roughly $1.7 billion in fiscal 1981-82. In the same fiscal year the total expenditures in agriculture by provincial Governments was something in the order of $1.1 billion.

Therefore, just by adding up those figures, $1.7 billion in the federal sphere and $1.1 billion provincially, we are already up to $2.8 billion. By comparison, if one takes that figure and considers the farm cash receipts for 1981 of $18.6 billion, one could say that in the biggest, ball park terms, public expenditure on agriculture amounted to around 14 per cent of cash receipts.

Since we are also discussing subsidy levels in other countries, we should consider what was said by Claude Villain, Director General of the Commission of European Communities, in a speech to the University of Minnesota in April of last year. Hon. Members can appreciate that the major theme of his speech was to the effect that the United States should not be angry with the Community for the degree to which it subsidizes its producers and its exports. Surely we have heard the same sort of concerns expressed by our own producers here in Canada, not only producers of the primary products, but also secondary producers, the processors, people in transport and what-have-you. He said: "I will simply say that if you compare budget spending on agriculture with the value added of the agriculture industry, you will find that in 1976 to 1978, the ratio in the European Economic Community was 39.2 per cent and in the United States it was 37.6 per cent". Today I do not have the data that went into that particular computation. However, in a general way, it shows that compared to the United States and the EEC, Canadian farmers receive considerably less subsidy than do their competitors in other countries. I do not know that that is a particular issue here today, but it is important to know.

Some, especially those connected with the Economic Council of Canada, might argue that the system of agricultural marketing boards in this country also constitutes a subsidy to farmers in that marketing boards in many cases guarantee farmers a decent return for products produced within a certain quota. The magic figure of a $1 billion subsidy was produced for the sake of headlines. It was derived by neatly adding up the value of the whole quota in the country. That was a patently ridiculous way of approaching the subject. If, in fact, all of the quota in the country was offered for sale at once, its value would have nothing like the value which it now attracts in the limited quantities in which it is traded.

I do not want to get into great marketing board debates at this particular time. This is neither the place nor the time when it should happen. Allow me, rather, to return to the general comparison of subsidy levels in the United States, the EEC and in Canada. I draw Your Honour's attention to a report in The Globe and Mail earlier this month in which subsidies on major grains were compared. The figures were taken from a study prepared by an Ottawa consulting company for the Manitoba Government. It showed that in the ten-year period ending in 1981-82, the level of subsidy to the Canadian grain producers was vastly less than their competitors in the Community and in the United States. In a ten-year period, wheat subsidies in Canada amounted to 4 per cent of the marketing price compared to 8.6 per cent in the United States and 10.5 per cent in the EEC. For barley, the figures were 5.7 per cent, 7.2 per cent and 20.8 per cent for Canada, the United States and the EEC respectively. I know that there are other subsidies that made the level of subsidy between Canada and the United States more equal. Again, that recalls my introductory disclaimer about comparing apples and oranges.

● (1815)

The most highly subsidized aspect of all Canadian agriculture is the dairy industry. In all, the dairy program costs the federal Government about $300 million a year. That is $100 million more than Agriculture Canada will spend on research this year. But if we are going to be truthful, we must say the dairy subsidy is almost entirely a subsidy to consumers. If the farmers did not get the subsidy, the price to consumers would have to be higher and then one gets into that dilemma which I mentioned at the beginning of my short intervention: how do we keep track of this if we define, as we have done time and again, the subsidy to the dairy producer as being, in effect, a consumer subsidy? Is it one that should be taken into account when doing a comparison? Should it be discounted completely and removed from the figures? It becomes a problem of definition.

As it stands, the dairy subsidy, as an integral part of the dairy program, has brought large benefits to both producers and consumers. Our supply management system has kept dairy production running reasonably closely in line with market demand. Of course, there has been some overproduction in past years but it is nothing compared to the excesses in the EEC and the United States.

If one refers back only to the Question Period of this day and recalls the question asked and the answer made by the Minister, he referred to the milk powder surpluses that exist and the fact that the European Economic Community now has tremendous surpluses unlike anything we have ever seen in Canada. The Americans are also experiencing the same kind of surpluses. In Canada we have our powder sold until at least June of next year. One wonders whether the program should be criticized as it has been from some quarters.

As it stands, the dairy subsidy is an integral part of the dairy program and has brought large benefits to both producers and consumers.

The EEC now has a mountain of butter in storage amounting to approximately 650,000 tonnes. As of last April, as stated by the Minister, the United States had nearly 600,000 tonnes of skim milk powder and a quarter of a million tonnes of butter. Combined, the EEC and the U.S. will probably spend $8 billion in their dairy programs this year and I think that makes our $300 million program look pretty good.

Looking at the over-all stabilization program, in recent years we in Canada have paid out in the neighbourhood of $50 million a year in deficiency payments to farmers for times when their receipts fell below the trigger price. I can speak with some conviction and personal knowledge with respect to the stabilization payments. As I have already indicated to the House, 80 per cent of the greenhouse production in Canada finds itself in my riding. Without the stabilization program, I can say that it would be far below 80 per cent which I could represent in the House today. Even in the last two or three years they have had to have access time and again to the stabilization program when the markets have not provided the cost of production let alone a reasonable and decent profit.

This year the budget for stabilization is approximately $70 million. Is that the kind of program that our compatriots in the United States would look upon as a subsidy program, or is it, in effect, a social program that continues to have the agricultural sector alive and well and viable, or at the very least maintained in an effort to become viable in the following year?

We will also contribute about $140 million to the western grain stabilization fund, although it is not expected that a payment will be made. In comparison, the United States has spent $22 billion in farm supports so far, mostly for the PIK or Payment In Kind program. By some estimates it could go as high as $30 billion by the end of the year.

If the dairy subsidy is deducted, Canada has spent just over $1 billion in support payments since the Agricultural Stabilization Act was passed in 1957. In the past few years provincial Governments have become involved in various red meat stabilization programs. We estimate that they have spent about $500 million on these programs in the past eight years while we have spent about $214 million at the federal level.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would allow a short question.

● (1820)

Mr. Daudlin: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to answer a question if time permits once I have completed my intervention. There are some items which I would like to have on record. If time permits, I would be delighted to—

Mr. Taylor: You haven't said anything yet.

Mr. Daudlin: It is unfortunate the Hon. Member across the way has been listening so inattentively. He has not heard much of what I put on the record. If in fact he concentrates a little, which I know he finds difficult, I would be delighted if he found even one item—

Mr. Taylor: Tell us something other than a lot of baloney.

Mr. Daudlin: It is unfortunate that one would classify information so vital to the agricultural sector as baloney. I thought the Hon. Member came from an agricultural area.

Mr. Taylor: You are full of baloney.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin) has the floor in order to make a speech. He should not be interrupted.

Mr. Daudlin: Let us look at crop insurance. This year the federal Government will provide about $140 million for this excellent program, matching the premiums paid by participating farmers. It is true that we subsidize crop insurance. The simple fact is that without our contribution the premiums would be too high for farmers to pay and we would see a situation in which hundreds or even thousands of farmers would be wiped out by one or two major crop losses.

The value of our program is reflected in the way in which the United States moved to adopt a similar program. There are those who contend that lending programs for farmers are actually subsidy programs which cost the Government money. In my view that is a fallacy. Anyone who would support that argument is obviously misinformed, at least as far as the federal Government of Canada is concerned.

Let us consider the Farm Credit Corporation. During the current fiscal year, between April 1 and September 15 the corporation approved 3,257 regular loans for a total of $406.5 million. During the same period, 60 loans valued at $1.8 million were approved by the corporation under the Farm Syndicates Act. In addition, the FCC approved 902 loans for a total value of $166.8 million under the corporation's Special Farm Financial Assistance Program.

However, the Farm Credit Corporation does not subsidize farmers. All of its costs are covered by the interest margins charged to farmers and it is in fact working toward a progressively larger return on the Government's capital. If one consults farmers in Ohio on the other side of the border of my constituency, one finds that they look upon the FCC as a subsidy arrangement of a kind and type that they deem should be counted when one determines whether or not a subsidy is being provided to our growers.

The Special Farm Financial Assistance Program is somewhat of an exception, because it is an interest rebate program. Between November, 1981 and the spring of 1984, the FCC expects to approve $345 million in loans under the special program. The way it works is that farmers who received loans under the first $45 million of the program will receive a 5 per cent interest rebate for the first two years of their loans. The interest rebate on loans approved out of the other $300 million is 4 per cent.

But let me stress that the corporation estimates that about $29 million in rebates will be paid out by the federal Government altogether. Let me re-emphasize that the Government will not be losing money on this program. Also I point out that in 1981-82 the FCC had $10.9 million in retained earnings. As well, in the three years prior to that the corporation actually made a profit. All in all it is extremely difficult to compare domestic programs, but perhaps we should look a bit longer at the export scene.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

• (1825)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker in the remaining few minutes those on the Government side can contemplate whether this motion should be accepted.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin) presented some information that causes us to wonder about the honesty of the response we are getting to this request to table studies having to do with the amount of subsidies which apply to different agricultural commodities. The Member clearly stated the proportions of subsidy that exist for barley. On three or four other commodities, he went right down to the last decimal point on the proportions of subsidy that apply in the United States, Canada and in the European Economic Community. We do not understand how those figures can be arrived at when the Government can reply to my colleague from Regina East (Mr. de Jong) that it does not have such figures and, therefore, it cannot table them and make them public. The only way to arrive at a percentage or proportion is to have figures from which you can work. This gives a very clear indication that the studies have been done but, for reasons not made clear in this debate, the Government has chosen not to make them public.

I hope that Members opposite will see that there is no advantage in keeping this information from the Opposition and the public and that it will table the papers requested by my colleague for Regina East.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to talk out this motion. Therefore, at what time must I resume my seat?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair should inform the House that, in keeping with the order passed earlier by the House and in the spirit of that order, the debate will adjourn at 32 minutes past the hour.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, it will be too bad if this motion is talked out because it is very important to agriculture. It will indicate the priority which this Government places on agriculture. We have had a long debate on the statutory Crow rate, Bill C-155.

One could spend hours on the importance of research and on what has not been researched by this Government. The farmers will spend hours on it. I have been appointed the Wheat Board critic. I have done a bit of research. The intensity that is required to bring together the necessary research to point out how important it is for farmers to compete in the international marketplace is most important to agriculture today.

The remarks made by the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin) are very contradictory in the area of supporting the position of agriculture and the position of the farmer. This is most important. Some research that I have done indicates that Canadian farmers are being supported by less than 17 per cent while in the United States it is 33 per cent and in the European Economic Community it is up to 55 per cent. It is most important that this information and this research be laid upon the Table so that farmers can understand the direction being followed.

It would be a major mistake for the Government to move against this kind of motion because of the repercussions it would have on agriculture and our farmers. The debate on the statutory Crow rate, Bill C-155, is a prime example as the Government is imposing a freight rate increase which the farmers cannot afford at this time. Research would prove this without a doubt and would support our amendment which suggests freezing the Bill until the year 1986 so that more of this research could be done.

I am going to sit down, Mr. Speaker, to make sure that I do not talk this motion out. It is in the best interests of the Canadian farmer that research should be done to provide for what we in the country need to put agriculture in a better position.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I would like you to clarify once again exactly how much time I have left because I do not want to take more than a few minutes to say what I have to say. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you might tell me how much time I have.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The debate will be adjourned at 6.32 p.m.

Mr. Parent: I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank—the Hon. Member is trying to say something to me?

Mr. Taylor: There is enough time for you to read the rest of your speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Hon. Members should not talk to each other across the aisle during debate. Remarks should be addressed to the Chair, please.

Mr. Parent: Of course, Mr. Speaker. I understand that and I apologize for not speaking through you to the Hon. Member who just woke up.

I would like to add my own few words to the debate. Hon. Members on this side of the House spoke earlier about the different problems we are having. All in all, it is extremely difficult to compare domestic problems, but let us look a little more closely at the export scene. The agricultural community throughout Canada, especially my area which produces 85 per cent of the grapes and therefore wine of Canada—and we do indeed import a great deal more of those products than we have in years gone by—are very much relieved to see that the so-called grain war between the United States and the EEC has cooled off in recent months. We believe that this is a forerunner of things that we wish would come in the days ahead. It has certainly threatened to have a disastrous effect on Canadian farmers over-all, and our farmers rely on exports for fully 50 per cent of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being past six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members are aware, of course, that there are a great many report stage motions on the Notice Paper relating to Bill C-155. I have had an opportunity to examine a number of the motions and I am ready this morning to make what I will call a preliminary ruling. The Chair must say that the Table officers have worked through the night in order to examine these motions and to do some of the groupings which allow us to enter into debate today. Hon. Members will understand, however, that it was not possible to go through the totality of these motions, and I would be prepared to rule on the others later.

• (1115)

The Chair is concerned about the procedural acceptability of Motion No. 1 since it seeks to introduce a disguised preamble and it is extremely difficult to amend the Bill in such a way as to include a preamble. As far as the Chair is concerned, this motion does not meet the very stringent conditions imposed on such amendments.

I hope the House Leaders have a copy of this ruling. I asked that it be distributed because I think it is easier for Members to follow if they have a copy. Does the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) have a copy of this?

Mr. Deans: Yes, I have.

Madam Speaker: The Minister has a copy.

Motions Nos. 2 and 59, Motions Nos. 3 and 4 and Motions Nos. 5 and 61 cause the Chair some misgiving as they appear to go beyond the scope of the Bill, and Motions Nos. 5 and 61 appear to be substantive amendments being introduced into an interpretation clause which, as Hon. Members know, is not procedurally acceptable.

Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 66 and 67, which appear to be related, are also of concern to the Chair as they appear to be contrary to the intent and purpose of the Bill as it was read a second time. Certainly some of them appear to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown.

Motions Nos. 13 and 14 appear to be substantive amendments to the interpretation clause and beyond the scope of the Bill. Thus the Chair has serious reservations about allowing them to be put to the House. Motions Nos. 15, 16, 17 and 134 give the Chair similar problems.

Motion No. 18 also gives the Chair misgivings as the Hon. Member appears to be attempting to enlarge the interpretation clause. Further, it would seem that the motion is substantive in relation to the interpretation clause and is beyond the scope of the Bill.

Motions Nos. 19 and 70 appear to be beyond the scope of the Bill and, in effect, seek to destroy the purpose of the Bill which the House has already approved in principle.

Motion No. 20 also appears to be beyond the scope of the Bill as read a second time, and the same reasoning applies to Motion No. 21 and to Motions Nos. 22 and 23, as it does to Motions Nos. 36 and 41.

Motions Nos. 24, 25, 26 and 29 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), and Motion No. 27 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) appear acceptable to the Chair and should all be grouped for debate. Motion No. 24 should be voted on separately and an affirmative vote on Motion No. 25 would also dispose of Motions Nos. 26 and 27; however, a negative vote on Motion No. 25 would require further voting on Motions Nos. 26 and 27. Motion No. 29 will be voted on separately.

Motion No. 28 appears to the Chair to be beyond the scope of the Bill and thus should not be proceeded with.

Motions Nos. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34 and 35 should each be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 37 and 38 will be debated together but will be voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 39 and 40 should be grouped for debate and an affirmative vote on Motion No. 39 will dispose of Motion No. 40.

Motions Nos. 42, 43, 44, 45 and 46 will be grouped for debate but ought to be voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 47, 48 and 49 will be grouped for debate and Motion No. 47 will be voted on separately. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 48 will dispose of Motion No. 49; however, a negative vote on Motion No. 48 will require the question being put on Motion No. 49.

Motion No. 51 appears to the Chair to be beyond the scope of the Bill as voted at second reading; and further, it appears to infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown and thus should not be proceeded with.

● (1120)

Motions Nos. 50, 52 and 53 should be grouped for debate. Motion No. 50 should be voted on separately and a vote on Motion No. 52 will dispose of Motion No. 53.

Motion No. 54 appears to the Chair to be beyond the scope of the Bill, as is Motion No. 57.

Motions Nos. 55 and 56 should be debated together but voted on separately.

It is my intention to give Hon. Members an opportunity to speak to the procedural regularity of the motions which I have just noted. Members may wish to have this discussion later and, if so, I suggest we now proceed to the first acceptable motion, which is Motion No. 24 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

I am setting these 20-some motions aside. This is a preliminary ruling. At first reading of them, as I say, the Chair has misgivings about them. However, there has not been time to look into them in more detail and to mount the arguments and precedents which would support my decision. Therefore, that is the reason I am setting them aside and asking Hon. Members also to reflect on these preliminary arguments that I have given the House so that when the time comes and I am ready to give a more considered opinion on these amendments, we can then enter into the procedural debate if there is a need to have such procedural debate. I will be ready to rule on the remaining motions either tomorrow or Monday, at which time the procedural debate could take place.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I thank you for the consideration you have given to the question of calling for submissions as to procedural regularity at a later time. Having regard to the fact that the entire first page of your statement and the entire second page, except for the last paragraph thereof, and Motions Nos. 51, 54 and 57 on page 4 of your statement, are all motions with which the Chair has some concern—and I think you will agree that it is a considerable number that give the Chair concern—my only concern now is your stated intention to make a ruling tomorrow or Monday. That may not give us enough time to consider the concerns and make the submissions that we may wish to make.

In the meantime, however, the remaining portion of Your Honour's statement has opened enough motions which the Chair considers to be regular to allow debate, certainly to carry on today, tomorrow and Monday, and perhaps the Chair might consider a greater degree of leniency before making a definitive ruling either tomorrow or Monday. I do not know how much time we need, but we will certainly try to be ready by Monday. We certainly will not be ready by tomorrow, but we may be ready by Monday, given the weekend. However, if we need more time, I may wish to ask for it at a later stage in the debate.

Madam Speaker: I do not disagree with that. I think it would accommodate the Table officers considerably if Hon. Members would accept that I not rule tomorrow, because they do need the time and they are working through the night to do these things. I would therefore be quite prepared to leave it at least until Monday, at which time I think I could give the House some indication of our thinking on most of these amendments. Then we could determine when the procedural debate could take place.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I fully agree with the comments of the House Leader for the Official Opposition. I am concerned, however, that the scope of the rulings today, preliminary though they are, covers such a multitude of different amendments and topics that it will be extremely difficult for people adequately to analyse both those and others which I believe to be of concern to many of us.

● (1125)

I was wondering whether it might not be more appropriate if the Government were to go ahead with some other business today and allow the Chair and the Opposition the opportunity to review the whole question of the appropriateness of amendments and prepare for discussion on them.

Quite clearly, the amendments that are being ruled upon, even in a preliminary way, not only touch upon amendments from the Opposition but also amendments that the Government may feel have some substantive requirement for its purposes. I would ask whether it might not be appropriate simply to call another order and allow that this be dealt with properly, rather than in a staged and haphazard way.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, with regard to this particular point, I think the suggestion made by the Hon. House Leader for the Conservative Party is by far the appropriate technique to follow. We recognize that there are a number of very critical amendments that should be allowed further review and, as he said, further submissions. The suggestion made by the House Leader of the NDP I believe would just be delaying further what is a very critical and important piece of legislation. Therefore, we would certainly be prepared to follow the proposal put forward by the House Leader of the Conservative Party and support his submission that perhaps further time can be taken to examine those amendments on which you would like further review. But we would hope that we could proceed with the amendments that are already acceptable and start today forthwith.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I too agree with the proposal put forward by the House Leader for the Official Opposition. I myself would like to have a little time to look at some of the rulings you have made. I have some idea of the complexity of the report and I am not surprised that you call into question some of the amendments that were made because there was much lively discussion on some of them in the committee. Indeed, it was very difficult to decide in some instances whether or not amendments were in order from the point of view that you have expressed in your notes today. They were accepted in the committee on the basis that there was some question as to their procedural acceptability. They were not obviously out of order to the Chair. Therefore I may want to argue in favour of some of the motions about which you raised questions in your preliminary ruling.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I really do feel quite strongly that some time should be given in order to consider this. Therefore, I would move that this House recess until 2 p.m.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid that the motion is not in order. We must proceed with the business of the House.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 24

That Bill C-155 be amended in Clause 3 striking out line 35 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"tion or board, the business of".

Motion No. 25

That Bill C-155 be amended in Clause 3

(a) by striking out line 38 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"(e) not more than twelve other members."

(b) by striking out lines 3 to 18 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"(i) five members, representing the following organizations in Canada: one member representing the Manitoba Pool Elevators, one member representing the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, one member representing the Alberta Wheat Pool, one member representing the United Grain Growers Limited and one member representing the privately-owned primary elevator licensees, as prescribed by regulations made by the Governor in Council,".

Motion No. 26

That Bill C-155 be amended in Clause 3

(a) by striking out line 38 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"(e) not more than fourteen other members".

(b) by striking out lines 3 to 12 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"(i) six members, each representing one of the six largest primary elevator licensees in Canada as prescribed by regulations made by the Governor in Council, and determined on the basis of elevator receipts and cash purchase tickets,".

● (1130)

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia) moved:

Motion No. 27

That Bill C-155 be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 3 to 12 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"(i) six members, each representing one of the six largest primary elevator licensees in Canada as prescribed by regulations made by the Governor in Council, and determined on the basis of elevator receipts and cash purchase tickets,".

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 29

That Bill C-155 be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 19 to 22 at page 4.

Madam Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, may I be clear on something? Are you reading all of the amendments Nos. 24, 25, 26, 27 and 29 and then we will begin the debate with No. 24? Have I got that correct?

Madam Speaker: Yes. These motions were grouped for debate, as the Hon. Member will recall. If he reads the preliminary ruling I have just given to the House, he will see that these motions were grouped for debate and debate can start with Motion No. 24 in the name of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I rise on Motion No. 24. In light of the earlier discussions, the preliminary ruling of the Chair, what the Clerks at the Table have had to go through day and night and what Members on all sides will have to go through to sort out where we stand on each of the amendments and the arguments we want to make, I do not think this debate should proceed at this time. I therefore move:

That this House do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As Hon. Members are aware, no debate is permitted on a motion to adjourn. Accordingly, those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Benjamin), which was negatived on the following division:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HER ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCESS MARGRIET OF THE NETHERLANDS, AND HER HUSBAND, MR. PIETER VAN VOLLENHOVEN

Madam Speaker: Before going into the next proceeding, may I call the attention of the House to the distinguished presence in our gallery of a beautiful princess who was born in Canada, Her Royal Highness Princess Margriet of the Netherlands, and her husband, Mr. Pieter Van Vollenhoven.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—LENGTH OF QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, since we in this Party were here between 12.30 and one o'clock ready to vote, and since the bells rang until now as a result of the Government, I wonder if there might be a disposition to extend Question Period since we have gone 30 minutes into it, so that we have the full time of a normal Question Period.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member was referring to the Energy debate or the debate on the Crow. In any event, he is aware of our traditional generosity, and so, as far as I am concerned, there is no objection to having the usual forty-five minutes for oral question period.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

CONFERENCE BOARD FORECAST

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for—

Some Hon. Members: Where is your Leader?

Mr. Crosbie: Where were they for the last three hours? Now they are yelling like jackasses.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: My question is for the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1430)

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister of Finance will know that yesterday Statistics Canada released a report showing that the economy has slowed down in the first half of the year and there has now been a significant slowdown in the second half of the year. The leading indicators for household income have slowed. Yesterday the Conference Board of Canada showed that the current economic recovery may already be over. Growth is sluggish.

In view of those facts why did the Minister, in his speech of Tuesday, September 27, say to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce that we have a real recovery that is becoming increasingly well rooted? How could the Minister make that statement knowing the facts as indicated by these two bodies, and what steps—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Crosbie: You may not be interested, but the unemployed are.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: What steps is the Minister taking to overcome the decline in personal disposable income, the decline in housing starts, the decline in momentum of retail sales? What steps will he take so that the recovery will be well rooted?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is not easy to answer all the Hon. Member's rhetoric in a few words. I may remind him that the Conference Board, to which he was referring, very clearly indicated this week, when it published a summary of forecasts made by 18 major organizations and forecasters, that this year and next year, growth in Canada would be very substantial and compare favourably with growth in the United States. I can assure him that the discussions I had at the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank in the last few days with my American and other colleagues have confirmed this trend, and international analysts expect that both Canada and the United States will experience greater growth than other industrialized countries in 1983 and 1984.

As far as personal disposable income is concerned, Madam Speaker, there will not be a decline but an increase in the personal disposable income of Canadians in 1983. Instead of declining, total housing starts will be close to 200,000 units this year, compared to 96,000 last year. As far as retail sales are concerned, the Hon. Member ought to know that their momentum has increased this year compared to last year. Retail sales in 1983 are expected to be substantially better than they were in 1982, and we need only look at sales in the automobile industry, which have been doing very well in recent months.

DECLINE IN PERSONAL INCOME

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, this is not rhetoric. I refer to the Minister's own Statistics Canada report of yesterday. That report reads:

> Personal disposable incomes . . . declined by 5.8 per cent at annual rates in the first half of the year—

This is because of a number of factors, including the weak recovery of labour income, and increased taxes. Then it goes on to read:

> Housing starts declined by 27.0 per cent in July—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that that quotation is too long. All that is necessary at this particular time is to ask questions.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister is this: in view of these facts, the only thing well rooted in Canada is the Minister's propensity for deceiving the Canadian people. When will the Minister take steps to assist in raising the personal disposable income of Canadians by reducing taxes, or by taking other steps to help the recovery that he says is so well rooted?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as far as deceiving the Canadian people is concerned, I do not think anybody could beat members of the Conservative Party at that, particularly when one considers their Leader's statement in the House last week concerning the International Monetary Fund.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BOARD'S PROJECTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Why does the Consumer Board of Canada say at page 3 of its report that real disposable income, or household incomes, once taxes and inflation have been accounted for, is expected to decline by nearly 2 per cent, thus giving the lie to the Minister who says the exact opposite in his answer?

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Crosbie: Why is it that the Minister is not telling the truth to the Canadian people and is attempting to deceive the Canadian people with these slanted statistics that he offers the House, while ignoring his own Statistics Canada and Conference Board Reports?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, one must assess the validity of the Hon. Member's claim in light of the fact that he refers to the Consumer Board when he is really talking about the Conference Board. He cannot even get the names right, so how can he get the figures right?

Mr. Crosbie: Statistics Canada.

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the personal disposable income of Canadians is concerned, I have indicated before and I repeat again that it is expected that, by the end of this year, the personal disposable income of Canadians will have gone up and not down as compared to last year.

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. In the Conference Board Report which was released yesterday, the Board takes the view that fears about inflation and huge government deficits will keep interest rates high for a long time to come. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, therefore, if he agrees with the statement made in the House last week by the Deputy Prime Minister in response to a question from the Leader of the Opposition, to the effect that the high Canadian deficit has absolutely no bearing on our economic performance. That statement is directly contradicted by yesterday's statement from the Conference Board.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows of the Government's concern about the growing inflation that we have known in the last few years and the damage that that has done to industrial economies all over the world. The Hon. Member also knows that we are concerned about the size of the deficit, and I referred to this extensively in my last budget. I initiated a number of steps that would gradually reduce the deficit. However, at the present time all analysts in Canada and the United States recognize that for this year, and most likely for next year, the deficit itself will not have a significant impact on interest rates. The source of concern is the medium level of the deficit in the last years of this particular decade, and this issue must be addressed. I proposed a number of steps in my budget that would address this issue.

As the Hon. Member knows, a year and a half ago the spread between the Canadian and American short-term interest rates was as high as 4 per cent and 5 per cent, but for the last three months the Canadian interest rates have been lower than the American rates. We have exploited to the maximum the existing room for manoeuvring.

Again, at the International Monetary Fund meetings it was stressed by representatives from almost every country that it was important for the United States particularly to aim at reducing its deficit in the medium term, and I am confident that the U.S. administration will want to address this issue.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance seems to defy the credibility of the Conference Board of Canada in that reply. It is evident that the Government merely follows the trends and projections established by Statistics Canada analysts and others.

GROWTH RATES IN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister, who is so confident that Canada is moving in the right direction, why yesterday's Conference Board report shows that growth in Canada will fall considerably below that of American growth for the next five-year period. That indication defies the answer he gave to the Hon. Member for St. John's West a few moments ago. Growth in Canada will be less than 1 per cent, while it will be 3 per cent to 6 per cent in the United States during the next five-year period. The unemployment rate in Canada will be—

Madam Speaker: Order. This is an abuse of enumerating statistics. These preambles are simply too long. I cannot allow them to go on. Ask the question immediately.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, does the Minister concur with the projections of the Conference Board of Canada, or will he continue to mislead the House by citing out of context the trends to which this report points?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the best answer I can give to the Hon. Member is to refer to another statement issued by the Conference Board last week, I believe. That statement included a survey of the 18 main forecasters in the country who have arrived at different conclusions than the conclusions arrived at in the statement issued by the Conference Board yesterday. The Conference Board statement is only one out of 19 forecasts. It is one that is very much on the low side and it does not correspond to our own forecast.

Our own forecast corresponds very substantially to the forecasts of the 18 other forecasters as indicated by the Conference Board last week. My friend can pick and choose what he wishes. I can tell him that the international analyses made by organizations like the OECD and the IMF also correspond with the forecasts made by the 18 forecasters referred to in my answer. We are trying to look into a crystal ball. The only thing I can say to the Hon. Member is that he should consider the 18 other forecasts which take totally different views from those of the Conference Board.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE DIVIDED INTO THREE PARTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Government House Leader that concerns the important piece of legislation that is now before Parliament. As the Minister knows, the Crow legislation contains three key elements: first, the revitalization of port and rail facilities; second the disposition of some 50,000 acres of coal lands in British Columbia and, third, the change in the Crow rate. The Conservative Party has now joined the New Democratic Party in opposing a change in the Crow rate.

I should like to ask the Minister if he will tell the House what conclusion he has reached in response to a letter sent today by our House Leader. The letter said that if the Government breaks the Bill into three elements, we on this side will be willing to dispose of those sections that deal with the coal lands and the revitalization of the ports and rail facilities by the end of next week. Will the Government indicate if it is prepared to take action that will produce results, by accepting that idea?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I have two things to say in reply. First of all, I am sure that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party wants to respect the Standing Order and apply them. He knows very well that when a Bill is debated in the House he is not allowed to ask questions on the subject. That is the first point. Besides that, if, rather than delaying things this morning and using dilatory tactics by moving the adjournment of the House, thus preventing debate from occurring, he had used that time to try to make his point, that would have been much more useful than wasting three hours of the time of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: You rang the bell.

Mr. Pinard: As to the second part of the Hon. Member's question in reference to a letter that, I gather, was sent to me by his colleague, the House Leader of the NDP, I have not received that letter yet. Even if I had received it I would have invited my hon. colleague to join me in a House Leaders' meeting that I am willing to have at any time to discuss all the business of the House, including the Crow. Of course, to try to score political points it is useful to be able to refer to a letter which has been sent to me but which I have not received.

I speak in good faith, Madam Speaker. I am willing to negotiate anything on any Bill. His colleague knows that all he has to do is call me and I will have a meeting anytime.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I say to the House Leader that we are serious. My understanding was that the letter had been delivered to his office by hand this morning.

If I understand the rules correctly, one can ask procedural questions but not substantive questions about Bills that are before the House. Let us forget those matters; we are concerned about the substance of this matter.

I should like to clarify what the Minister has just said. Is the Minister telling the House that the Government is now prepared to do what ought to have been done sometime ago, which is to break the Bill into its three key elements and bring two of them before the House so that they can be disposed of quickly?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member contradicted himself in the preamble to his question. I would rather not go into this any further, because I would be insulting the intelligence of most of the members of this House by elaborating on the issue. I may therefore remind the Hon. Member that discussions on how the business of the House should be conducted usually take place at meetings at the parliamentary House leader level. I offered to suggest that his colleague, who is well aware of this procedure, advise me that a meeting would be desirable. I am willing to discuss the form and duration of the debate. I am also willing to negotiate any agreement that will help the House dispose quickly of the Bill in question. However, I think the Hon. Member should understand that a good way to get one's views across is to refrain from using purely dilatory tactics like the one used this morning by the New Democratic Party when it moved an adjournment motion on the spur of the moment, at eleven o'clock this morning, thus preventing Parliament from considering this important matter. I think there are more useful ways of speeding up the debate than preventing the House from sitting and trying to make political points during oral question period by making proposals usually made during private meetings among the parliamentary House leaders.

[English]

REQUEST FOR HOUSE LEADERS' MEETING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, that would all have sounded a model of sweet reason but, as the House Leader knows, the reality is that there was no House Leaders' meeting today, nor is one scheduled for tomorrow. We are quite serious in making the proposal now. This part of the Bill that is totally unacceptable—and that is the change in the Crow rate—to Canadians almost from coast to coast—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member is giving the Chair some difficulty. First of all, just now he is debating, and I wish he would keep to questions concerning the procedure of the Bill and be very careful not to surpass that.

Mr. Broadbent: I will be very reasonable with the House Leader, Madam Speaker. Since the House is supposed to debate this measure for the rest of today and tomorrow, and since it is evident that this Party does not intend to allow that Bill to pass—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —and the Conservative Opposition has taken the same view, will the Government House Leader meet with the House Leaders of the two Opposition Parties this afternoon to discuss breaking up the Bill so that we can proceed in an orderly fashion in the House of Commons?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat what I just said, namely that I am always prepared to meet with my colleagues. I indicated yesterday to the Hon. Member's parliamentary House leader that although I was unable to hold a meeting this morning, I was willing, if he wanted a meeting, to have one later on, even this afternoon. Meanwhile, I think we ought to proceed with the debate, and since the Hon. Member says he wants to be reasonable, in that case perhaps the House could be allowed to sit so that the debate can take place. I realize he may be opposed to the bill, but I feel that if he has any respect for democracy, he will allow the debate to take place and let his party express its views and dissent, and support amendments it has proposed, and at the appropriate time, allow the House to speak out in favour or against the amendments at the report stage and third reading. That is what the parliamentary system is all about. In that case, the House can proceed intelligently, and the Opposition, while making its dissenting views known, can, at a given point, allow Parliament to speak out in favour or against a question. Nevertheless, this procedure does not preclude having meetings at the parliamentary House leader level to negotiate what can be done during the debate, and if his colleague wishes to meet this afternoon, I am available, provided the House Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party is willing to attend the meeting as well and make his views known.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—SHOOTING DOWN OF KOREAN AIRLINER—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister who, I understand, will not be in the House until next week, I put my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

An Hon. Member: Where is Mulroney?

An Hon. Member: We want Joe.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, as Members of the Government know, the Leader of the Opposition is attending the funeral of one who has served Canada well for many years—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is not part of Question Period. The Hon. Member owes no answer to the House in these things.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In the context of a statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the House on September 12, who quoted our ambassador to the United Nations as saying, when referring to the KAL 007 tragedy, as reported at page 27025 of Hansard as follows:

> The deliberate in-flight destruction of this civilian, unarmed, easily identifiable passenger aircraft by sophisticated fighter aircraft of the Soviet Union, no matter where it occurred, is nothing short of murder.

● (1450)

Would the Acting Prime Minister indicate if in fact the Prime Minister was stating the present position of the Government, when he said in Sault Ste. Marie on Sunday that the same shooting—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. Really, this is an abuse of quotations, the second one in the same question. There must be a simple question which can be asked, and the House need not be reminded of all of these quotations.

Mr. Nielsen: A simple answer.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Was the Prime Minister expressing the present position of the Government when he stated that the downing of the KAL 007 flight was an accident, as he stated last Sunday?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of these statements. I will report them to the Prime Minister. I am sure he will be able to handle the question when he returns from his trip to New York where he is attending a meeting of the UN. Of course, I would like to report to the Hon. Member that the Leader of the Opposition is having a very good week this week in the House; he did not open his mouth at all. I have nothing else to add.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister at least concluded his remarks with something we all agree with; he has nothing to say.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, if the Acting Prime Minister does not want to comment on the unfortunate comment made by his Prime Minister, would he tell the House what in fact is the Government's position with respect to the shooting down of the Korean aircraft? Was it an accident, or was it a deliberate act of murder?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the position of this Government is very well known on this issue. Canada was the first country to move on this issue. It was the first country to apply sanctions against the Russians. I believe the policy of this Government on this incident is very well known in the Canadian and the international community.

Mr. Stevens: What is it?

Mr. Chrétien: We took many initiatives. I am sure that the statements made by the Prime Minister here in the House or anywhere else can be read by everyone, but the facts remain the same. This Government was the first to condemn the action of the Russians and to take action to ensure there would be adequate compensation for the lives of the Canadians who died. I have not read the two statements referred to by the Hon. Member. I will read them and will be in a position to comment after I have done so. I have not seen them yet.

PUBLIC WORKS

MIRABEL AIRPORT—EXPROPRIATION OF LAND

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Some time ago, I sent a press clipping from a Montreal daily which indicated that in 1970, the Government had asked its experts to make a study of land expropriation in connection with Mirabel Airport. The document clearly condemns and acknowledges the monumental error made by the Government in expropriating so much land, and I would like to know whether the Minister could confirm today that this document is genuine?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, this is a newspaper clipping that was sent to me by the Hon. Member. I referred the clipping to my Department's legal section and asked the archivists to find out whether such a document existed and what it was about. I have not yet received a reply, but as soon as I do, I shall inform the Hon. Member accordingly.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I should be delighted to hand over to the Minister a so-called confidential document, dated March 31, 1970, which acknowledges the monumental error of the Government with respect to land expropriation and makes other recommendations I will not have time to quote in the House today. In the circumstances, could the Minister of Public Works undertake to make this document public, with a view to providing all Canadians with further information on the reasons why, for 14 years, the Government has refused to cede back land to owners who were expropriated and who have reason to accuse the Government of having treated them unfairly?

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, first of all, I think the Hon. Member is misinforming the House. It is not a matter of refusing. We have already announced that we were prepared to sell back 30,000 acres. I feel that this is an excellent indication that we are acting in good faith. As for finding out what the document exactly contains, the Hon. Member, who was briefly in the same position I am now, and I am referring to that of having to answer questions, will surely allow me to examine the document if it is transmitted to me and to find out under what conditions it can be made public and to what extent I could or would not be able to comment.

HOUSE RESALE PROGRAM—MIRABEL AREA

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Public Works.

Since I just heard the Hon. Member for Joliette say that the land at Mirabel is badly administered, I would point out to the House that when his Government was in office, it did suggest that the land be handed back to the former owners. Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Public Works to tell the House whether the house resale program in the Mirabel region was successful.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the fact that a great many people—including many former occupants and owners—jumped at the chance to buy back the houses is a clear indication of the success and generosity of that program. I hope that the Hon. Member will indeed support my efforts to defuse that situation rather than make it worse.

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—DEALERS' OFFER TO PURCHASE

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and of his Parliamentary Secretary, perhaps the Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) could answer this question. It refers to the White Farm Equipment Company. Last week in response to a question put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brant, the Minister indicated that the Government would be open to consideration of any kind of bids from companies which were concerned about keeping White Farm equipment as an ongoing concern. The Minister mentioned other points as well.

I wonder whether the Government is aware of the recent offer made by a consortium of some 75 dealers, headed by Mr. John Buhler, a successful businessman, to salvage this company? I would like to know whether the Government is encouraging the receiver to consider this particular offer so that many, many dealers and small businessmen in rural constituencies could remain viable and not go bankrupt if there were a liquidation of White Farm Equipment?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has in fact been monitoring the situation with regard to White Farm Equipment quite closely. I will take the question as notice in order that he may respond upon his return to the House.

COMPANY'S RESEARCH PROGRAMS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Madam Speaker, I appreciate that response from the Minister. When he is making the representation to the appropriate Minister, could the Minister also inquire whether the Government will ensure that various research programs which have been committed, or have been offered to White Farm Equipment, would continue if this bid is successful? As the Minister knows, research is a very important element in the whole operation. May I have the assurance that the Minister will convey this request to the Minister as well?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Yes.

URGENCY OF ISSUE

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question addressed to the same Minister. The Minister should know that there is a certain amount of urgency about this issue because I understand that tomorrow morning the proposals must be in the hands of the receiver by nine o'clock. If he is going to make representations to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I would hope that he would do it in such time that this proposal from Manitoba can have some impact.

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has in fact been monitoring the matter very closely and he is aware of all of the time frames involved.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CABINET USE OF EXECUTIVE AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR NEW GUIDELINES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since the Minister recently moved to withdraw some perks from some public servants, will he now move with equal dispatch, as one of the most senior public servants, to establish a new set of guidelines for Cabinet use of executive aircraft, such guidelines not to be subject to individual judgment of purpose or passenger?

● (1500)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as the Acting Prime Minister pointed out yesterday, the use of the government executive fleet has existed now for some 30 years. It was designed to ensure that Ministers of the Crown, as well as Royalty and other people who need convenience—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, I am sorry that members of the Opposition would be so disrespectful of the Royal Family.

The fact of the matter is that the fleet is at the disposal of Ministers, taking into account the pressures of time and the need to fulfil responsibilities under the very heavy agenda to Parliament and Cabinet. The guidelines established in 1977 are being applied with the responsibility and standards which I think are necessary. However, as the Hon. Member knows, we are taking a look at a number of aspects of the operation of my Department and that may be one of the areas which will come under review. If the members of the Opposition would give us a chance to get rid of the Crow Bill soon, I would have more time to look at such matters as that.

Mr. Nielsen: You kept the bells ringing today.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, perhaps we should start calling Members opposite Royal Hon. Members, instead of Hon. Members.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

PUBLICATION OF PASSENGER LISTS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I am talking about the revelations of the abuse by Cabinet, at a cost of $10,000 a day for 100 days. If the Minister has nothing to hide and feels there is no abuse, then surely as a preliminary step of resurrection he would undertake to publish the passenger manifest list from both the Transport and Defence fleets on a monthly basis, so the public would find out what is going on and there would not be any suspicion of a cover-up. Will he do that?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, to begin with let me make it very clear there are no abuses of that system, nor is there any attempt to cover up. We will review the regulations, and perhaps the Hon. Member's recommendation might be accepted. I will look at his proposal because I want to assure him and other Members that there are no abuses and there will be no abuses in the use of that fleet.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL PRICES FOR GRAIN

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since he and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board are both in the air, is he aware of the serious cash flow situation that farmers have? The Canadian Wheat Board, as well as grain companies, have been calling for an increase in the initial payment for grain to farmers. When will the Minister announce it, and how much will it be?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, just to correct the record, the Minister of State for the Wheat Board is in China selling grain, and I was in Saskatchewan selling the Crow.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Eating crow.

Mr. Axworthy: No; selling.

Some Hon. Members: Eating crow.

Mr. Axworthy: No. Well, Madam Speaker, in comparison to the members of the Opposition who are eating turkey all the time.

Mr. Nielsen: Then I find you most distasteful.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, if his colleagues will allow me to answer, the fact is that the Wheat Board has made recommendations and the Minister responsible has discussed those recommendations with members of the Grain Advisory Board. They are now being formulated into Cabinet proposals and I expect that, as soon as the Minister of State returns from his selling mission overseas, the Cabinet will take that under immediate advisement. We hope to have a decision very soon on that very critical matter.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST ON PART OF BOARD MEMBER

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who will know that Mr. Roy Olsen, President of Phillips Cables, is an Order in Council appointment to the Atomic Energy Control Board. He will also know that this company has sold over $10 million worth of cable to Ontario Hydro's nuclear system. Does he not believe this is a conflict of interest?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): This question was asked of me some months ago and we have looked into the matter. The advice we have received from the people looking into this matter is that there is no conflict of interest.

ADVICE GIVEN TO MINISTER

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, the Minister has guidelines which were prepared by the Government in 1974 for Order in Council appointments. Those guidelines mention in several places that those who are appointed to the Board should not be involved in any commercial enterprise. I ask the Minister who advises him, and on what basis does he consider this not to be a conflict of interest.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think this gentleman was appointed because he is an expert in the field and it is an advisory board, not a full-time job. I do not think the Hon. Member is suggesting that we should not appoint anyone part-time on any boards. Most of the members appointed are on a part-time basis. At the time I asked the question I was informed that the people who looked into this matter reported to my Department that they did not feel it was a conflict of interest situation. But I will certainly review the situation again and report back to the Hon. Member.

CRIMINAL CODE

SAFEGUARDS FOR WORKS OF ART

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice who is no doubt aware, because I gave him notice of the question, that the Canadian Association of University Teachers has made representations on the inclusion in the new obscenity legislation of some safeguards to ensure that the new laws cannot be used to go after genuine works of art, to hinder scientific research or political discussion of pornography. Would the Minister agree that these are sensible safeguards, and give a commitment to introduce them at the same time as the provisions he has already put into the draft legislation?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I do thank the Hon. Member for notice of her question. I am, in any event, aware of the representations of the Canadian Association of University Teachers. There already is a safeguard provision in the Criminal Code for work of that kind. Section 153 (3), which is known as the "public good defence", does exempt works of that merit. I am not aware of any history of persecution by Attorneys General in their administration of the legislation which would justify changing the character of the existing Section to put the onus entirely on the Crown. I really do not see why there should be any need at this time for a change of that kind to give a broader protection than now exists, because the existing Section seems to be quite adequate.

BALANCE URGED IN LEGISLATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, the existing provision refers to the public good but is not as specific, I trust the Minister will realize, as what is being proposed, which says quite specifically serious artistic, scientific, medical, literary or political value. It also gives some other specifications about use in universities and so forth.

Does the Minister realize that what the community wants is a much more vigorous implementation of the law, and in order to get that we need new safeguards as well? We do not want new vigorous laws to go overboard and in the wrong direction. The CAUT proposal would be a means of giving some equilibrium to the law. The new law would be tough, but it would be directed to real pornography and could not be used as an excuse for a new witch-hunt of people like D. H. Lawrence or own Margaret Laurence.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I welcome the assertion by the Hon. Member that what is desired is a more effective law on obscenity. That is the objective on this side of the House as well. It is inconceivable to me that under the present law, or the law as we propose it, a court would find there is undue exploitation of sex or violence or any of the other categories in a situation where there was serious artistic, literary, or scientific merit. I do not really believe, Madam Speaker, that there is a problem here which needs to be addressed beyond the way in which it is now dealt with in the Code. Obviously when that legislation is introduced we will be having discussions about that, and the Hon. Member can make her point again.

Oral Questions

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

FEDERAL EXAMINATION OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question was for the Secretary of State but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Justice who, last week in an answer to a question by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, said:

—the Secretary of State has already granted funds to at least one group in British Columbia to consider the implications of the legislation and to engage in public education with respect to it.

In view of the routine nature of that answer, as though that practice is routine, is it the policy of the Government to examine provincial policies to see which ones the Government disagrees with, and then fund organizations in each of the Provinces if it disagrees with the aims of particular legislation? I would like to ask the Minister what are the criteria that the Government uses to make those judgments.

● (1510)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend may also have a question to address to my college, the Secretary of State. However, let me remind him that one of the reasons that we were looking at the legislation in British Columbia is that we were asked to do so by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who raised the question in the House last week.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: Obviously there are occasions when the federal Government does have to look to provincial legislation. However, in this case, to the best of my knowledge the grant which has been made by the Secretary of State is a perfectly proper one for normal purposes.

Mr. Friesen: It is apparent, then, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Justice takes his marching orders from the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

GRANT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA ORGANIZATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): My supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Justice with respect to the grant made to a British Columbia organization, would the Minister confirm that, first of all? Second, to what organization was the grant made, and how much of it was made to the organization? In view of the statement made by the Minister of Justice that it involves at least one organization, is the Secretary of State intending to make further grants to other organizations and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that since 1970 we have had a program to support human rights groups all over Canada, not only in British Columbia but in all the ten Provinces. Any groups that want to apply to the program are free to do so, and the conditions and criteria are well known. We do study each request individually. If the request meets the objectives of the program, we do grant the money as appropriated by Parliament.

INCOME TAX

REQUIREMENT THAT SENIOR CITIZENS MAKE QUARTERLY PAYMENTS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Could he explain to the Canadian people, especially the senior citizens of this country, why they must pay income tax quarterly to the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I would like to refer the Hon. Member to the provisions of the Income Tax Act, which state that when part of your income is not subject to deductions at the source, taxes due on this income must be paid quarterly. Naturally, this situation can cause problems to certain groups, such as senior citizens, which the Hon. Member mentioned. However, I cannot preclude one group from meeting the requirements contained in the Income Tax Act without parliamentary approval. The Act would therefore have to be amended accordingly to meet the wishes expressed by the Hon. Member. This requirement of the Act as it relates to senior citizens concerns me as well as other Members on both sides of the House. We are looking at solutions to correct the situation. I have already discussed this with the Minister of Finance. I will have other opportunities to discuss the matter with him and if it is possible to implement special provisions for a particular group of taxpayers, we shall see what can be done.

[English]

REQUEST THAT EXCEPTION BE MADE FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Will the Minister make a firm commitment today to request the Minister of Finance, in his next budget, to make that allowance? The Government makes exceptions for all kinds of people. Surely it can make an exception, in this instance, for senior citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, whatever the sympathy we may feel for a particular group of taxpayers, I think that it would be irresponsible to change the provisions of the act without having first examined the consequences of such action. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are looking at the various groups and at the consequences of a possible change. If with such a change we can lighten the burden which a particular group of taxpayers must now bear, we shall do so.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

AID TO QUEBEC MUNICIPALITIES FOR JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Last week, the Union des municipalités régionales de comté et des municipalités locales met in Quebec City. One of the items on the agenda was of course Bill 38, tabled by the Government of Quebec some time ago to prevent municipalities from receiving federal assistance for job creation, and as a result of this meeting, both participants and the Quebec Bill made the headlines. The Union des municipalités is having a convention at this time.

I would like to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration what the federal Government's position is on this issue. Does the Minister intend to meet the Quebec ministers in order to find a solution to the problem of distributing funds earmarked for municipalities?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am, in fact, meeting the Quebec Minister, Mr. Léonard, on October 4 to discuss this matter. I quite understand the Quebec Government's insistence on respecting provincial jurisdiction over municipalities, but in turn, I must also insist on the right of the Government of Canada to treat Canadian citizens residing in Quebec as it treats other Canadian citizens across the country, and I hope Mr. Léonard will show his good faith and intelligence by agreeing with the position taken by the federal Government.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Government House Leader. May we take it for granted that we will be dealing with Crow for the remainder of this day, the Crow on Friday, the Crow next Monday and the Crow next Tuesday?

Mr. Pinard: No, Madam Speaker, the business of the House is always subject to change with notice. But in principle, theoretically, I think the Hon. Member is right.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: We intend to proceed with Bill C-155 today, tomorrow, and Monday and Tuesday of next week unless we change the order of the day, as is our prerogative.

FM BROADCASTING IN CANADA

Question No. 4,942—Mr. Beatty:

1. How many different programming formats for FM radio does the CRTC license and what are those formats?

2. For what reason does the CRTC require strict adherence to particular formats?

3. What studies, if any, have been done for the government or for the CRTC to determine whether there is greater variety in programming in comparable United States or Canadian markets?

4. How many persons are employed by the CRTC to monitor (a) all broadcasters' (b) FM broadcasters' compliance with all federal programming requirements for broadcasters?

5. How often are individual FM stations monitored to ensure their compliance with CRTC programming requirements?

6. How many FM stations are there in Canada?

7. How many FM stations are monitored each year for their compliance with federal programming requirements?

8. What records must be kept by FM stations in order to permit the CRTC to ensure compliance with the federal requirements?

9. What is the direct cost to FM broadcasters of compliance with CRTC requirements?

10. Was an estimate made of the loss to FM broadcasters from foregone revenue as a result of compliance with CRTC regulations and (a) if so, on what date and how was such an estimate made (b) if not, for what reason was it not made?

11. If an FM broadcaster wishes to adjust his format as a result of market requirements, how does he go about receiving the CRTC's approval?

12. On average, how long does it take to achieve a decision from the CRTC on a proposed format change?

Return tabled.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport; and Motions Nos. 24, 25, 26 and 29 (Mr. Benjamin) and Motion No. 27 (Mr. Gustafson).

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to stand and participate in the debate on Motion No. 27 which deals with representation on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I am somewhat surprised that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) had so little to say on the matter of the statutory Crow rate. I believe his speech consisted of less than a couple of lines.

I was also surprised that Government Members were not here for two hours and delayed debate on this Bill this morning.

Since this is a historical piece of legislation with which we are dealing and because representation on the Transportation Committee is so important, I believe it is fair to say that the farmers in western Canada are very concerned about who is represented. I believe if one studied the action and direction which the Progressive Conservative Party has taken with this Bill, one will find that we have constantly recommended producer representation on the Transportation Committee. While certain Members have said that the Conservatives had taken one position then and another position now, I suggest that nothing is further from the truth. I have reread some of the speeches made by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and also went as far as to read some of mine. I want to suggest that since the outset of debate on Bill C-155 this spring, which has gone on for some time, we have constantly defended the position of the primary producer and the farmer.

The statutory Crow rate was originally established so that produce could be delivered to the open water ports of this country which, in most cases, are more than 1,000 miles away. It was most important that the agreements which were reached at that time would allow the producers the right to believe that their products would get to the markets of the world, and it is our position that this Bill in no way would obstruct the rights and the privileges of the producer to produce his grain and realize a fair return for his production.

In dealing with Motion No. 27 in particular, I want to go back to the original proposal that was put forward and amended by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). In keeping with the direction that our Party has taken, it was suggested that there should first be a producer representation of one from the Province of Alberta, two from the Province of Saskatchewan due to its high production of grain as compared to Alberta and Manitoba, and one producer from the Province of Manitoba. It was the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, who implemented this on behalf of the producers.

Our reason for moving Motion No. 27 is that we believe it is important that there be equal representation from producer elevators and grain line companies. Basically, this motion states that there will be three members from the grain line companies and three representatives from the Pools, which are the Alberta Pool, Saskatchewan Pool and Manitoba Pool. Once again, our Party has mapped out a direction that is fair and equitable in respect of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

Since this Committee will play a very important role in directing the activities of transportation and making suggestions to the council, it is most important that it has fair representation. I also suggest in regard to the smaller grain companies that they have representation according to Clause 3(e)(ii). The smaller companies such as Parrish Heimbecker, Weyburn Terminal and others will have the right to elect one member to represent them on the board.

I want to re-emphasize the importance of having broad representation and producer representation. If the Government has made one major mistake in the Bill, if the former Minister has made one major mistake—one of several, I believe—and the Minister who was in charge before him has made a mistake, it is that they have not investigated the situation of the primary producer. They have not researched the problems that the producer faces and do not realize that the producers are incapable of meeting the increased freight rates that they will be expected to pay. I suggest that is the greatest mistake which has been made in Bill C-155. Producer representation is the most important element in this Bill.

The Hon. Member for Vegreville and the Conservative Party have justifiably made great attempts to make sure that one producer is not played against another. That is exactly what the Government has done and we have tried in every way possible, through our amendments, to make sure that that kind of obstruction does not exist.

If the prairie producer is not considered when we deal with this or any other clause of the Bill, our country faces a very serious situation. I want to draw a comparison because I think it is helpful.

• (1530)

The Government, through its national energy policy, took action while not understanding that it was putting Canadians out of work and putting the primary producer in the oil fields of western Canada out of business. The Government chose to buy oil from Mexico. The Canadian oil fields were shut down and put out of business. I am glad the Minister is here. I want to say to him that if the primary producers in agriculture are put out of business because they cannot meet the costs, and research shows that the costs to the primary producer are high, the impact will be great. The impact of the national energy policy will be small in comparison to the impact it will have on agriculture throughout this country.

This and other amendments we have put forward protect the primary producer. They are most important. We ask the Government to accept these amendments in the interests of the primary producer.

I see I have about half a minute remaining, Mr. Speaker, so let me say that if the farmers are to be represented, it will be the Progressive Conservatives who represent the interests of the farmer and the primary producer. I have said that in the House, in my riding and across southern Saskatchewan. It is important that they be represented. That is no more important than Motion No. 27 which puts the producer into a position of responsibility and a position where the producer has some input with the Minister in charge.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. Motion No. 27, of course, would be impossible unless Motion No. 26 was passed. Sub-clause 3(e) states, "not more than 11 other Members", and the three Members cannot be increased to six other Members without increasing the 11 to 14, a move which I shall oppose for a number of reasons.

First, I have always believed that the committee is too large to be functional. It is very difficult to get advice from a committee with that many members. One would probably get conflicting advice all down the line. My second reason for opposing it is that Clause 3 as it is now written is amended from the original clause in the Bill by an amendment put forward by the Progressive Conservative Party in the committee and accepted by the committee. I intend to stand by the proposal adopted by the committee.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) talk about the Conservative Party, the co-operative movement, and how they are supporting farmers in the Province of Saskatchewan. He has moved Motion No. 27 which would, in effect, have three Members on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee which is referred to in the Bill.

When the Bill was originally drafted, the three prairie Wheat Pools were to have three committee members on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. During the summer, the Conservative Party, in a blatant attack upon the Wheat Pools and co-operative movement of this country, introduced an amendment—I believe it was introduced by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight)—which reduced the number of committee members from three to one. Now we have the Member for Assiniboia saying in the House that they made a serious mistake. Once again they are changing their mind. It is like the Leader of the Conservative Party who is on both sides of every single issue that comes up in the House, that is when he has the courage to come into the House. During the summer, the Conservative Party said that the Wheat Pool should not have three members on the committee. Their amendment was passed, supported by the Liberal Party, and now the Member for Assiniboia contradicts his own Party, once again saying that the Wheat Pool should have three members on this committee. That shows the confusion there is in that Party over the Bill now before the House. It shows that they do not know where they stand on the important issue of the Crow rate as it affects western Canadian farmers.

I am concerned also about where they stand on a number of other motions before the House. We are not debating just this motion. By the way, Motion No. 27, moved by the Hon.

Member for Assiniboia, is exactly the same as the motion that was put on the Order Paper by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), that is, Motion No. 26.

My colleague from Regina West was the only person in the committee who voted to have three Wheat Pool members on the committee. The Conservative Party voted against it. He is the Member who led the attack on behalf of the Wheat Pools, which market the majority of grain in my Province. He was the only Member who stood up and defended them against the combined forces of the Liberal and Conservative Parties.

Mr. Thacker: He is the only one who showed up. We never saw you there.

Mr. Nystrom: We only have one Member on that committee. That Member was at the committee throughout the summer. We also had one alternate and we made sure he was there at every hearing. The Conservative Party often went day after day after day without its full delegation of representatives on the committee or their full delegation of alternates. Where were they?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hate to do this, but I am not going to sit here and listen to the Hon. Member attack Members who spent a great deal of time this past summer on the committee. What the Hon. Member just said is patently not true. The Conservative Party was fully represented there at all times.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) may agree or disagree with the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), but that is basically a matter for debate. Matters like that should not be raised under the guise of points of order.

Mr. Nystrom: It is very interesting to see the Liberal Party jump to the defence of the Conservative Party once again. I guess it shows the true alliance in this country. That is why when the motion was moved last summer reducing the number of Wheat Pool representatives from three to one, the Liberal Party supported that Conservative amendment. It shows who are the true friends of the farmer.

The other motion that is important here is Motion No. 24, moved by the Hon. Member for Regina West. That motion would delete the word "co-operative" in Clause 3 of the Bill. This is another indication of a blatant Conservative attack on co-operatives and the United Grain Growers. It makes it impossible for wheat pool directors, officers or committee members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Manitoba Wheat Pool, Alberta Wheat Pool, or UGG to be members of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

I do not know whether the Conservative Party believes in democracy. However, this kind of clause in the Bill virtually eliminates thousands and thousands of ordinary farmers in all three prairie Provinces from running for democratic office and being a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. In my riding—and I am sure the same is true in the riding of Assiniboia—there are hundreds of ordinary farmers who are Wheat Pool Committee men. They work for the Canadian Wheat Pool or for United Grain Growers. With Clause 3 of the Bill in effect there is no way they could seek office.

Another point is that we have taken the time and trouble to obtain a legal opinion. We were told by a lawyer that this meant that ordinary Wheat Pool Committee men or farmers who are out there trying to work for the Wheat Pool would not be eligible to run for office. Yet the Conservative Party would eliminate thousands of ordinary farmers in my Province from the democratic process. I believe in freedom, I believe in liberty, and I believe in the right of every man and woman to seek elected office. I believe in true democracy and in economic democracy. It makes me very angry as a Member of Parliament to see hundreds of my friends in my constituency being excluded from the democratic rights they should enjoy by the Conservative Party.

Mr. Benjamin: And supported by the Liberals.

Mr. Nystrom: Unfortunately, their leaders, such as Ronald Reagan and Margaret Thatcher, talk about freedom and democracy, freedom and democracy if one is wealthy and rich, freedom and democracy for the elite. When it comes to ordinary citizens or farmers in Kamsack, Canora, Churchbridge, Melville or Ituna in my riding, that same Party will deny them the right to be members of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I cannot understand it. I would be very interested in knowing whether or not there would be any support whatsoever for that among Canadians. I am absolutely sure that there would not be.

An Hon. Member: They are not bad guys, just misled.

Mr. Nystrom: I believe I hear the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) making utterances from his seat. I would be very interested in hearing him rise in the House to defend the stand of the Conservative Party that ordinary Wheat Pool Committee men cannot seek office on this Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I would be very interested in seeing him rise to make an undemocratic speech. Also I am interested in ensuring that all farmers in the prairie Provinces know where the Conservative Party really stands. It is interested in giving the private grain trade seats on that committee. It is interested in giving the railways seats on that committee.

I see the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is present today. He must be embarrassed because his face is turning the same colour as his jacket. He must be embarrassed to know that his Party is supporting a clause in the Bill which is undemocratic. It stands against freedom. His Party moved that particular clause. Members of that Party are denying basic rights to ordinary men and women. It is something which goes back to the nineteenth century and tells us where the Conservative Party really stands.

One of the motives for its amendment is that it is attacking the Wheat Pool movement and the United Grain Growers. It is defending its friends in the private grain trade and in the private grain exchange. The co-operative movement in Canada has been very important. The people who built the wheat pools, the co-operatives and the credit unions made a tremendous contribution to the country. As I travel throughout my riding I see wheat pool elevators in village after village, town after town. Those people want to be treated fairly and squarely. They want at least three members on the Committee. They do not want the membership reduced to one, as the Conservative Party would like it. Also they want to ensure that ordinary grassroot farmers have a chance to be members of that committee, not just bureaucrats, Government officials and the corporate elite which the Conservative Party would like to see running the affairs of the country.

I do not apologize for standing up for ordinary citizens in the House of Commons. It is very interesting to see how the Conservative Party, when push comes to shove, will not stand up for ordinary Canadian citizens. I am very shocked that several of my friends in that Party, who I know believe in democracy, fair trade and equal treatment, will sit on their hind-ends and allow their Party leadership to get away with this nonsense and discrimination against western Canadians and ordinary farmers in my constituency and indeed right across the land.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange that Members of the New Democratic Party started out in this debate by saying that they would do everything in their power to kill the Bill and now they are making various proposals and deals with the Government in an attempt to get some parts of it through. That was the essence of their press release and their questions today. If there is any caving in, it seems to be coming from the NDP.

I rise in support of Motion No. 27 presented by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson). The motion would establish a representation on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee from the primary elevator system in Canada. In part it reads:

> —six members, each representing one of the six largest primary elevator licensees in Canada as prescribed by regulations made by the Governor in Council, and determined on the basis of elevator receipts and cash purchase tickets.

This would mean that each of the three prairie pools would have one representative, United Grain Growers would have a representative, Pioneer would have a representative, as would Cargill.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) moved two of the motions we are now debating. In Motion No. 25 he proposes five members, and then as a safety valve he proposes six members in Motion No. 26. Motion 24 is a perfectly logical and reasonable amendment. I certainly want to support it. It is consistent with the proposition of fairness, and consistent particularly with our major thrust in ensuring that producers have adequate representation on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee and in ensuring that the producers' interest is incorporated in the Bill.

One of the many deficiencies in the Bill is the lack of any mention of producer interest and the requirement to maximize returns to the producer. We have incorporated that into several clauses of the Bill as one of the primary obligations of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee as well as the Grain Transportation Agency Administrator. It is important to recognize the welfare of the producer. We are really setting up a new grain handling and transportation system and a new grain handling and transportation administration. We were appalled by the fact that there was hardly a mention of the producer. We sought to incorporate that in the Bill. The thrust of our amendments to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee concerns grassroot producers who are not necessarily tied into any grain handling company, grain handling system or co-operative.

We think that the pools can adequately maintain representation on these kinds of organizations through their administration and management, but we thought it was very important to include individual producers whose sole aim, objective and purpose in life is to produce grain. It is important to have them there functioning and representing the interest of the producer, not the interests of grain elevators or any other association.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) became excited and indicated that the Conservatives were trying to exclude ordinary producers. The fact of the matter is that we are doing just the opposite. We are trying to include ordinary producers and to ensure that ordinary producers who have no other vested interest, have an opportunity to sit down with the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. That committee will be attended by the Chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Chairman of the Canadian Grain Commission, representatives of the railways and representatives of the grain elevator companies so that they can say, "Look, guys, there is a problem here," and so that they can speak directly to the railroads, so that they can speak directly to the Chairman of the Canadian Grain Commission and the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board. We think that that is very important.

● (1550)

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville has become very excited when talking about attendance of Conservative Members. This committee travelled across western Canada and visited his home Province. He did not even attend the hearings in the Province of Saskatchewan. Out of the 66 meetings that this committee held, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville attended only one meeting. That only goes to show his interest in the Bill and his interest in the welfare of the producers. Yet he stands here today and pontificates and chastises Conservative Members and Liberal Members.

I am pleased that the chairman of the committee stood up in defence of all Hon. Members who worked very hard and very diligently and for long hours to try to dissect each and every clause of the Bill and to try to seek out solutions. There certainly were differences of opinion, and there will be still more as the Bill proceeds, but the fact of the matter is that the Members worked very hard. I take violent exception to the fact that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville chastised us after attending only one committee hearing.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that the chairman of the committee was very generous. Whether an Hon. Member was a member of the committee or whether he just attended as an observer, the chairman allowed all Members to participate. He was very generous with the committee's time, and certainly when we travelled to Regina, Edmonton, and Winnipeg, any Member who was located in the area had the opportunity to sit in on the committee hearings and to participate in any way, shape or form excepting only for the opportunity to vote. I commend him for it, and I think as a result of that, the committee hearing process was much better.

I take violent exception to the fact that a Member such as the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville can come to the House in such an excited state and try to suggest that we as members of the committee were attempting to exclude the primary producer when the opposite is the fact.

We moved a motion, Mr. Speaker, that would incorporate four producer members into the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I guess the difference between the position taken by Members of the Conservative Party and the position taken by representatives of the pools was the fact that pools collectively wanted to exclude the producers. We do not know why the representatives from the pools wanted that. They made the point that they wanted to exclude the producers. Rather than having three producer members as originally called for in the Bill, they suggested that that be deleted and that the Chairman of the Wheat Board Advisory Committee and the Chairman of the Livestock Feed Board Advisory Committee represent the producers. We found that totally unsatisfactory and, as a result, we moved an amendment which allowed four grain producers to be members of the board, two from the Province of Saskatchewan and one each from the Provinces of Alberta and Manitoba.

In addition, we moved another amendment which allowed for a feed grain producer to be represented on this committee. We also made other changes to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee by allowing for representation from the trucking industry. When we are talking theoretically about the movement of grain, we must remember that every bushel of grain that moves travels by truck. The trucking industry is an important component of the whole grain moving system.

In terms of enlarging the objectives and the terms of reference of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, we have endeavoured to have the members of that committee commit themselves in their duties and obligations to the principles of maximizing the returns to producers and representing the best interests of the producers. We endeavoured to do the same regarding the terms of reference of the Grain Transport Administrator and we think that that is a step in the right direction because, throughout the course of our hearings, we were told time and time again that the producers' interests were not clearly enunciated in the Bill, and that is what we wanted to change.

I would like to speak briefly to Motion No. 29. Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party want to stop the railways from having a seat on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. How absurd could they be, Mr. Speaker? The producers want to get their hands on the representatives of the railroad at committee. That is where the decision-making process, the communications process and the entire co-ordination and consultation process should take place.

I find the position taken by Members of the NDP to be absolutely ludicrous and absolutely absurd. In my opinion, the real action will take place at committee, because I can see producers who have been shortchanged by improper allocation of cars, shortage of cars or lack of service tangling with the railroads there. I can see them tangling with the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board and the member from the Canadian Grain Commission, but it is important to have the railway representatives present because if they are not at the table, then this committee will be worthless. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the Government will see fit to support Motion No. 27 and reject Motion No. 29.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words respecting Motion No. 27 which was so excellently moved by my friend, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson). It appears to me that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) either did not listen when the Hon. Member was speaking or did not bother reading the amendment, because the allegations he made are simply unfounded. They are not right. That is not what the Hon. Member for Assiniboia said at all. As a matter of fact, the words of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia were fair and just. Fairness and justice is what we want and what our people and our farmers want.

I would ask the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville if it is fair and just for a group that handles 20 per cent of the grain in western Canada to be entitled to membership on the committee. He suggests that we designate members according to the organization. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia is suggesting that we designate members in accordance with the amount of business done. That is sensible and I am sure every farmer in the country would support that. It makes sense.

As a matter of fact, I received a phone call from a member of the Alberta Wheat Pool recently. He said: "This isn't fair at all. We handle far more grain than another company and we have many, many more elevators. But our representation isn't anything near what it should be. We should have more than one representative for the three prairie Provinces." I agree with that. I am not going to argue the case for the Alberta Wheat Pool or the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool or the Manitoba Wheat Pool. I am arguing the case for the farmer who is entitled to fair representation.

If a large percentage of farmers take their grain to the Alberta Wheat Pool, that indicates that there should be more representation from the pools than from independent companies, and vice versa. If farmers take 50 per cent of their grain to an independent company, are we to leave that company out because it does not happen to be one of the big boys with big elevators? That is what the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is suggesting. He is suggesting that we are to designate them. I say that that is offering special favours and special privileges and we are against special privileges. We want to be fair to every individual farmer in the country. This amendment is fair to every individual farmer in the country.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville talked about killing the Bill. He is more concerned with killing the Conservative Party because he is frightened that, day by day, he is getting closer to losing his seat.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if it is in order to distort what I said. It was Members of the Conservative Party who moved the motion to reduce the Wheat Pool representation from three to one. They did it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That is hardly a point of order. That is debate. Hon. Members will have the opportunity to contribute additonal remarks to the debate later on. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has the floor.

● (1600)

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of misrepresentation which the Hon. Member tries to make continually. He is not getting through to the people of western Canada because he is not telling the truth. This Party is not trying to reduce the membership of any particular organization. We want to have representation according to the way individual farmers deal with them. That is the basis of it. If ten farmers take their wheat to one pool and 100 farmers take it to another, why should we insist on one having ten members and the other one maybe no members?

The Hon. Member for Assiniboia tries to be fair but, by misrepresentation, the Member from the NDP tries to hide the facts. The resolution of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia calls for six members—the original motion says three—each representing one of the six largest primary elevator licencees in Canada as prescribed by regulations made by the Governor in Council and determined on the basis of elevator receipts and cash purchase tickets. The interpretation given by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is completely different from that.

I want the farmers in my riding to know what the Conservative Party is doing. We do not stand for special privilege. We want the farmer to have a fair show, whether he has five cents in his pocket, whether he has 1,000 hogs, whether he has five elevators or whether he is a quarter-section farmer, he is an individual, a Canadian and is entitled to representation. When the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville tries to mislead the House, we have to be suspicious of his motive.

I support the amendment and I will be prepared to stand anywhere in Canada and fight for the principle. All too often I have seen the big shots get in where they have a vested interest instead of the people who go in objectively for the good of the country, not for their own pocketbook. That is what we want in Canada and that is what the Hon. Member for Assiniboia is fighting for. That is what his motion says in black and white for anyone to read. The trouble is that the NDP Members do not read anything unless they like it. If it is socialistic, they will read it.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville said he had legal opinion. I would like to know where he got that legal opinion because I have legal opinion that is completely different. The man who gave me the legal opinion will stand head and shoulders above any solicitor his Party can put forward. If he wants to name his legal opinion, I will be glad to name mine.

Let us forget the legal opinion for a moment and get down to the common sense of the ordinary, every day farmer. Let each of them interpret Clause 3(d) of the Bill. They are not illiterate. The clause deals with the membership of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee as follows:

> Four members who are active grain producers currently holding a Canadian Wheat Board permit book—

They have to be growing wheat and selling it to an elevator and have a Canadian Wheat Board permit book. It goes on:

> —and who, in the opinion of the Minister, have been duly elected as representatives of grain producers—

Not appointed but elected, Mr. Speaker:

> —one representing the producers of Manitoba, two representing the producers of Saskatchewan and one representing the producers of Alberta, and who, at the time of their election, and for the duration of their service as members of the Committee are not nominees, officers, directors, agents or representatives of any corporation—

This is not one from a corporation that has a vested interest, or a co-operative that has a vested interest or a business that has a vested interest. The NDP Members would leave all of them in, however, except the co-operatives. They would delete co-operatives but apparently all the others are fine with them. Why should there be a special privilege for the co-operatives? I deal with co-operatives because I like their business, but they have never asked for a special privilege and I am not going to give them a special privilege. They will take their share along with everyone else.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville indicated that an individual farmer would not get on the board, but that is who we want on the board, Mr. Speaker, not someone with a vested interest or someone who holds a high position in some agency or corporation or co-operative. We want the ordinary, every day farmer who will deal with things objectively. My hon. friends should take this back to their lawyer and tell him to read it. It does not bar the individual farmer, it perpetuates him. It gives us a chance to get a fresh, net opinion from the farmer fighting for a livelihood, not the rich, wealthy and special people.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the amendment to this Bill that would provide for farmers to be members of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I submit that the amendment ought to be accepted if for no other reason than that the history of the Crow rate relates to the movement of grain. From its inception, this legislation was directed toward producers. For as long as the Crow rate has been in existence, there has been an intention to serve producers of the country. It only makes sense that when changes are made to the legislation, its fundamental purpose must be kept in mind. And the fundamental reason for the Crow rate originally was for the movement of grain in western Canada.

There are those who argue that we would deny representation to Wheat Pools, but it should be remembered that in the original draft of the legislation there was an opportunity for farmer-producer representation. It was the Wheat Pools, in their own interest, which took the view that they should be represented and not the producer. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) asked why we should single out the co-operatives for attention when it comes to having vested interests. How can we say that among all grain traders only they should be represented? Is there any reason that we should single them out for that privilege, among all grain traders?

I see I have the ear of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy). I would ask him if it is not obvious that the purpose of grain companies is to buy and sell grain and that this leads to the export of grain? Is it not also obviously the case that producers may do other things with grain than export it, particularly in Alberta where 47 per cent of grain grown is what we call "value added"? It goes into the production of poultry, pork, beef, or is in some other way used for some purpose other than being sold as whole grain. Those producers, who represent virtually one half of the agricultural income of Alberta, surely ought to have some say as opposed to those whose only objective is the export of grain. Those who are members only of a pool organization will reflect a perspective which is primarily self-serving, and that perspective will mean that grain will move from the Province without value added. I hear a little heckle coming to me from the New Democratic Party to my extreme left, whose Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, are very pink and very ill read. Since that Hon. Member comes from the Province of Saskatchewan, he ought also to be aware enough of western agriculture to know that while he may be arguing his individual point, the truth of the prairies is that we are not homogeneous, and we ought not to be.

One of the great challenges which comes often from the Government side on this question is that the prairie people cannot get their act together. I hope we do not because our acts are in fact different. Saskatchewan exports almost 85 per cent of what it grows. In Alberta, a sister and neighbouring Province, virtually half of the grain grown is feed grain. Our producers have a different purpose from that of those who belong to grain companies whose first priority is to export. I submit, Sir, that it is counter to prairie production to say that it ought to be a grain company which sits on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee when in fact it is producers, for whom this Bill was designed originally, and for historic reasons who should continue to be the representatives from this day forth. This Bill is intended for the producers of western Canada, and there is a variance in what Alberta and Saskatchewan do with their production. This variance can only be expressed with adequate producer representation.

I believe that the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) has done western Canada a great service by submitting that it should be those with the particular mental bent only to buy and sell grain and little else who should be removed by method of amendment in order to allow producers a variety of representation on a board which is sensitive to the needs of western Canada. A challenge was put forward by the Hon. Member for Bow River. How can the Government possibly select one set of grain traders and say that they are to be the privileged few is a question which absolutely demands an answer. We cannot pick out a grain company and stamp that across the three prairie Provinces, and say that it is privileged above all other companies, without any system of vote or any system of determining how it gets there. The Government surely cannot set up a committee which will have the power that this one will and not allow for some kind of input from the producers.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Mount St. Helen's is over here blowing his top again. He is a Member of the NDP and will probably not have the courage to speak himself, but he will stand here and shoot off steam and blow off ash as he always does. He sits over here and hollers through my microphone. I challenge him. He has a chance to rise and speak. We will allow him to do that any time that I sit down.

I would like to read into the record what the Province of Alberta, in its official submission, had to say with regard to this question of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. It said this:

> The Senior Grain Transportation Committee should be restructured so that a majority of the members represent Western farmers and are free of vested interest in the grain handling/transportation system.

In short, Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that that is the official position of the Province of Alberta. The submission goes on to read as follows:

> The grain farmer who has the responsibility to pay future cost increases is not adequately represented. The Crown is well represented through the Canadian Wheat Board, Canadian Grain Commission and the Administrator: the trade interests are covered through their appointed representatives, the railways' interests through their representatives but direct grain farmer representation is restricted to 3 out of the total 21 memberships.

What we find is that the Province of Alberta, as a provincial Government, stands opposed to the position of this Government. It would favour the amendment presented by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia. I feel it is important that I read into the record the position of the Alberta Wheat Pool. I quote directly as follows:

> The Pools submit that representation on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee should be composed of those parties having a significant interest in and a direct responsibility for the transportation of western grain. This is considered desirable as it is anticipated that the Senior Grain Transportation Committee will be involved in significant grain transportation matters affecting Western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt but the Hon. Member's time has expired. He could be allowed to continue with unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is agreed.

Mr. Malone: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the fact that the House has extended extra time. I would not want to take very much time but that the point I have been making hangs in limbo if I do not add some words to the quote I just read.

What the pools are saying in essence is that this is a transportation matter and it is only a transportation matter. The original debates, as they related to the Crow rate, back in the earlier history of this country, clearly showed that the establishment of a Crow rate was not purely a transportation matter, and in western Canada today it is not believed to be purely a transportation matter. This, Sir, is an economic development matter. If it were only a transportation question, as the pools are trying to submit that it is, their argument might be a more viable one.

The question is which way the economy of western Canada, and in turn the whole of Canada, is better served. I submit for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the Minister, that the economy of western Canada is much better served if the members of that committee, which will have some considerable power, reflect the interests of those who are the growers of grains and the users of grains. We cannot conclude, Sir, that those who are intermediate to the process of bying and selling grain can be guaranteed to have the best interests of the growers always at heart. They have a vested interest. We would be fools to believe otherwise.

I submit in conclusion, Sir, that the Hon. Member for Assiniboia has presented an amendment which commands that we lend an ear and be respectful to the producers of this country, consistent with our history, with the fact that the principle of this Bill is to serve producers, and consistent with the fact that this is an economic initiative, not just a transportation initiative.

Now is your chance to speak.

● (1620)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) said that now it is my chance to speak. I do not know what he is getting at. Perhaps he is alluding to one of the Members who was standing behind me and shouting at him occasionally during his speech. He may have thought it was me, but it was not.

There are a number of things which have come up in this part of the debate, and what we are looking at is some amendments to set up the membership of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee as it will be called under the new legislation. What we have seen in the debate so far, particularly from my friends to the right, is a fair bit of misunderstanding, to put it charitably, and a lack of information as to what actually went on to get us to where we are. I would like to put on the record what the process was from the time the original Bill was put before committee, what it said, and what happened to it in committee. Apparently the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), in particular, is quite ignorant of what went on in committee.

The original Bill had the precise same wording as the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson). But that was not good enough for the Conservative Members on the committee, so they got together with their friends across the way and proposed an amendment to that portion of the Bill, Clause 3, which we now see before us here today. That is a Conservative amendment proposed on September 1 at 9.40 in the morning by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). It is word for word exactly what he proposed, with one change. The Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) came in at 11.40 a.m. and proposed an amendment to the amendment, which was also incorporated in the Bill, and that is what we have here now. It was supported by the Liberals. The vote in each case was Liberals and Conservatives against the one lone New Democrat who sits on the committee.

In the course of the amendment by our good friend, the Hon. Member for Red Deer, the various organizations were named. Great issue has been taken with that by two or three previous speakers, but it was not until the Hon. Member moved his amendment that we were told who those committee members would represent. We were told very clearly that there would be one representative of the Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Organization, which is the umbrella organization for the three prairie pools; one member representing United Grain Growers Limited, and one member representing the two largest privately owned primary elevator companies. So it was the Hon. Member for Red Deer who put names on who would sit for whom. It was the Conservatives who changed the Bill as it was written and to which we are now proposing to return by the motion of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia; they changed it themselves. It was set up to provide a certain amount of equity, or the possibility of it. By having the six members you can see it would be possible to have at least one member representing each of the three prairie pools which collectively handle a little over 60 per cent of the grain in prairie Canada. The other two or three members could have been divided among the private grain companies and the United Grain Growers. They were not satisfied just to reduce the proportion of representation from those prairie co-operative grain companies; they have to go a step further. When they got down to the point of adding producer representatives, they made it very clear that they did not want anyone who had anything at all to do with prairie Wheat Pools to be part of that committee by way of being producer representatives.

Mr. Mayer: Or the United Grain Growers; be fair.

Mr. Althouse: That is right. I do not know whom we have got.

Mr. Mayer: We would have got farmers.

Mr. Althouse: The Hon. Member says it would have been farmers, but they would have been a very special kind of farmer. They would have been farmers who did not have anything to do with the local committees of the United Grain Growers or the various Wheat Pools. By placing them outside without ability to take part in this committee, you are eliminating a great many farmers in western Canada. I do not know the figures for Manitoba and Alberta, but I know from my own Province of Saskatchewan that there are approximately 800 Wheat Pool Committees made up of some 12 to 20 farmers each. Given a legal opinion and the reading of the resolution as it is now, all of those will be eliminated from being able to participate as representatives on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. You are eliminating 15,000 or 16,000 farmers in Saskatchewan alone.

Mr. Malone: Not true.

Mr. Althouse: I have not even made allowance for the committee members who are part of the UGG structure. The history of the Wheat Pool movement is perhaps not well understood on this side. I do not know how they could forget, but the Wheat Pools and farmers are very closely allied, always were and always will be. I remind the House that the Wheat Pool movement began in my riding with some individuals from the Kelvington and Ituna areas who pushed to begin signing up people for the Wheat Pool which was finally begun in 1924, with a president from Bankend, again in that little triangle.

The membership is very much involved in the marketing of wheat pool grain. That was the reason they started. They started with at least 50 per cent of the grain signed up and committed to a five-year contract, a commitment which continues to this day. In our Province the pools have over 60 per cent of the business and they do not get that kind of commitment without having the full support of the Wheat Pool Committee members and individual members out on the farm. I think no one with that kind of involvement in his community activities, including the marketing of grain and the interest he would have in being part of the local Wheat Pool Committee, should be eliminated from taking part as member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. Those are the very kinds of people we want on that committee. The legislation proposed by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster and amended by the Hon. Member for Red Deer prevents them from taking part.

Mr. Malone: Wrong.

Mr. Althouse: I think it was a misinterpretation of what Members of Parliament are suppose to be doing here, a misinterpretation of the input individual members have within their organizations. The way this motion is written it would even prohibit a person who was part of a co-operative farm. To be a member you have to be a director in most of the co-operative farms I have in my area, and those people could not take part, simply because of the kind—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) rises on a point of order.

Mr. McKnight: Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, on debate, I wonder if the Hon. Member could describe the amendment in the Bill that he is speaking of?

• (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Let it be clearly understood that before a Member is allowed to ask a question of the Member who has the floor, that Hon. Member must consent to receiving the question. That is hardly a point of order in the way in which it was done. Rules of debate require that an Hon. Member who has the floor be not interrupted unduly. In any case, the question has been asked. The Hon. Member may respond if he so wishes.

Mr. McKnight: On a point of order, then, Mr. Speaker, there is a rule of relevancy, and if the Hon. Member who is speaking could bring himself to the amendment as the Bill is printed in his references, it would certainly make debate much more lucid and we could carry on in a much more economical manner.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre has 30 seconds left.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, to the poor Hon. Member to my right, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) who is getting lost, I will say that if he looks at the Bill, we are on Clause 3. We are on amendments to Subclause 3. I have been discussing Clause 3 the whole time in my speech. Perhaps he would call a page and get himself a copy of the Bill so that he could follow along as well. The pages will, I understand, if requested, even read to the Hon. Member what is being said in the Bill, if he has difficulty there as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the courtesy which was just extended would also be extended to the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre so that he may complete his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is agreed.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I was in the process of pointing out the very clear connection between the grass roots farmers and their Wheat Pools. Some Members of the House were concerned that these farmers might not be represented on the Transportation Committee, and were therefore defending their position of ensuring that anyone who is a member of a co-operative or corporation must not be allowed to be included in that committee. Farmers who have taken an interest in marketing grain have done so, to a very large extent, through the Wheat Pool movement by becoming members of the pool as young farmers and participating in local Wheat Pool Committees which are comprised of 12 to 20 people. Some of them are even larger than that. At each elevator delivery point, there is a Wheat Pool Committee with a chairman and a secretary. With the Bill as it is now worded, thanks to the amendment of the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster, these people would be denied the privilege of participating as advisers and representatives on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee with which this Clause of the Bill deals. This is where the potential leadership for the farm movement originates, almost without exception. It is not doing anything for the agricultural movement in western Canada to try deliberately to eliminate these kinds of people from taking part as elected or appointed representatives of their organizations.

We think that this whole debate shows a bit of hypocrisy on the part of the Conservative Members, since they had the exact same clause in the original Bill as they are now attempting to put back in. They eliminated it themselves.

Mr. Benjamin: They repented.

Mr. Althouse: Now I am pleased to see that they have repented. There have been a great many repentances on the part of that Party. The Conservatives fought a very weak fight at second reading. Halfway or two-thirds of the way through the committee stage, they decided that perhaps the NDP was right and that perhaps they should be opposing the Bill with a little more power and a little more influence than they had before.

Mr. Malone: Tell us about Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. Althouse: At second reading, we heard barely one Conservative for every New Democrat who spoke. The normal process is three to one. They could not disturb themselves to take part in the debate at that time. I am pleased to see today that they have been stirred up enough to keep their usual share of the debate going and that they now find that the original way in which the Bill was written was fine. I hope they will be able to convince their Liberal friends again, as they did in committee, that a mistake has been made. I hope that we will be able to get this part of the Bill back to where it will be of some use to farmers so that farmers, who are members of the co-operative movement, either the United Grain Growers or the pools, will be eligible to be part of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is always a delight to follow the Members of the NDP, because when they speak of hypocrisy, they just reflect it themselves. They are always so sanctimonious in their comments. They purport to represent the ordinary producer, yet they voted against Clause 3(c) which would provide for four active producers. The facts speak for themselves. One can look at the record. They purport to represent the senior people, the labouring classes of the country, yet what do they do? They keep a Government in power that goes into deficit so far that the people who are hurt are the senior citizens, the poor people who can never get out. It is because the NDP keeps the Government in power.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member's remarks are not relevant to the motions now being debated. I would invite him to come back to those motions, please.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, then the Hon. Member went on to another point. I think the truth of the matter is that Members of the NDP are speaking for the body corporate of the Wheat Pools, which are huge organizations. They have the vast majority of grain sales in the West. They are speaking for the body corporate, not for the little man who owns them. However, are they prepared to apply the Combines Investigation Act to them? No way. They are prepared to see the corporations getting 100 per cent of the market. However, concerning a newspaper or something that has 20 per cent of the market, they are prepared to attack it viciously. If an oil company happens to be a little larger, they will attack it viciously, but not the corporation.

The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) said that the reason the membership was reduced and the PC moved the amendment was that the Wheat Pools acted as one corporate body on the issue. The Hon. Member himself said that they always acted together, and therefore, why would they be given three votes? Would the Hon. Member be prepared to give Cargill three if it split itself into Cargill Manitoba, Cargill Saskatchewan and Cargill Alberta? Would he give the United Grain Producers three votes if it split itself into UGG Manitoba, UGG Saskatchewan and UGG Alberta? Of course it just has one vote because it has one legitimate interest. Of course, that is where the Minister and the Government made their largest mistake, when they went from the Gilson proposals which, concerning the method of payment, was 81 to 19, to what the former Minister of Transport then proposed, which was 50-50. By listening to the Wheat Pools, the body corporate, and giving it more power and legitimacy than it deserved, the Government acted as if it were representing all the farmers, but it was not. It represented the corporate interest. It was its duty. If I were the president or the director of the Alberta Wheat Pool and went up to a meeting, I would act for the corporation. That would be my job. I would be a director of the corporation. Therefore, the Government should have been seen in that light. The Government should not give the weight to the corporate interest that it did. It acted in unanimity, together, when it went into Quebec. It acted in unanimity when it came in and said, "Take off the active producers and put on only our three body corporates."

Mr. Malone: Take off, eh?

Mr. Thacker: We simply would not agree with it. We felt that the interest of the man on the soil was different from that of the corporate body, whether UGG, Cargill or the Wheat Pool.

● (1640)

The Wheat Pool, as a body corporate, has become very large. It has professional management, directors and the whole body. It is just as unrepresentative of the man on the soil as other corporations such as Esso. The NDP Members constantly rise to attack large corporations because they have a professional management body, but the Wheat Pools are no different.

Therefore, I stand in favour of the motion and I hope the Government will accept it. I have no doubt at all that the people of Canada will see through the NDP arguments purporting to represent and protect people and that they are actually injuring the very people whom they purport to represent.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), Shipbuilding—PIP grants—Loss of jobs in shipyards. (b) Construction of drilling rigs; the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), White Farm Equipment Ltd.—Urgency of issue; the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), External Affairs—Nuclear technology—Possible exchanges between Argentina and Libya. (b) Relations with Argentina.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport, and on Motions No. 24, 25, 26 and 29 (Mr. Benjamin) and Motion No. 27 (Mr. Gustafson).

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate on Bill C-155. I will read the amendment I am speaking to very slowly so that the Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) will be able to keep track of it.

At the outset I will say that the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre did participate during several days as a member of the standing committee. Since the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) was in briefly to make a statement one afternoon and, for some reason, we did not see him again at all the remaining sittings we had throughout Canada, I can understand the mistakes and misinterpretations he made concerning this amendment. However, I believe the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre must be making a deliberate attempt either to take things out of context or else be relies on old reports which Members have.

I would like to review for the House what occurred with Part I dealing with the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. At the outset, we who travelled with the committee across western Canada heard from approximately 20 Wheat Pool Committees that appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport. They said time and again that they were not sure that the Wheat Pool speaks for them. They indicated that they were not convinced that the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, for instance, is representing them in a fair and open manner. They believed it might be tinged by some bias it has as directors for members of the corporate board. Therefore they wanted to express their views to the Members of the Standing Committee on Transport in the House of Commons and not those of the directors and officers of the company. They did so on several occasions.

We then had a submission made to us on behalf of the Canadian Co-Operative Wheat Producers Organization, which is an umbrella group for the Alberta Pool, Saskatchewan Pool and Manitoba Pool. When we examine the original Bill as it was first presented to the House by the previous Minister of Transport, we see that it provided for three representatives from the three pools. There was a representative from the United Grain Growers and a shared representation from what could be considered Richardson or Pioneer and Cargill Grain. The pools considered that to be a very large and cumbersome committee, as stated in their brief to the standing committee on behalf of the Canadian Co-Operative Wheat Producers Organization. They said they did not want to have those three men or women, who actively earned their livelihood from month to month and day to day by producing grain representing them but that the elected chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee should represent all the producers in the three prairie Provinces. The chairman is probably elected by a 35 per cent voter turnout and probably receives 25 per cent of the vote. Nevertheless, he is elected.

The pools then came and said that in order to protect the feed grain producers in the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario and B.C. we should have the chairman of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, who is not elected but appointed, on the board. The pools wanted him rather than three feed grain producers. It was obvious to people who studied that situation that it did not allow representation from the Maritimes but only from Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia.

We put forward an amendment to reduce the size of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee to comply with the request of the pools since they said it was too large. We eliminated two pool representatives but said they could have one, because this committee is not really one where votes will count. It is not a committee where votes will be decided for or against but one where views can be expressed. We felt that they could be expressed on behalf of those pools by the Canadian Wheat Producers Organization. To counterbalance that, we said that the producers should have four members consisting of one from Alberta, one from Manitoba and two from Saskatchewan.

Furthermore, rather than the only person to protect the consumers of feed grains being someone from the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, we suggested having one user of feed grains from the prairie basin, the three prairie Provinces. That made a lot of sense and was supported by members who wished to have producer representation.

As these hearings progressed we wanted to make sure that there was not a vested interest or duplication of interest in the expression of views on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. Therefore, we took steps similar to those we take when we prescribe the ability to vote in a federal or provincial election in Canada. We enunciated the eligibility of those who could run in an election, such as we do for elections to this House or to legislatures across the country.

I would like to quote from page 12586 of our standing committee reports. An amendment was made that caused some concern as to whether the committee Members of the pools and the UGG would be eligible to serve on the committee. The amendment read, "... is an elected or appointed representative of any board or committee involved in an advisory or other capacity with respect to the grain trade." We debated that amendment and asked for a legal opinion. We asked for that legal opinion from Mr. Thompson, counsel to the Standing Committee on Transport and a member of the Canadian Transportation Committee and from Mr. Lefebvre, who is the General Counsel to the Department of Transport. Both counsels were asked for their opinion with regard to the concern expressed by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) as to whether committee members of the pools would be eligible. If it is a real concern that he has raised, it is something we should be concerned about. The question concluded:

So, Mr. Chairman, I think now is the time to raise it with the counsels while we have them here.

Mr. Thompson stated:

In my opinion, if such a person were a member of such a local advisory committee he could not, unless he resigned, be elected as a member of this committee.

That was Mr. Thompson's information. We then asked Mr. Lefebvre, and he said:

I do not know enough about the role or the structure of the wheat pools, their committee members, what their role is. It could go either way, but I do not know enough—

The Hon. Member for Regina West then interjected and reiterated his concern. The Chairman, the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), then said:

Mr. Benjamin, I think your point is well taken, and I remind committee members that I asked the question this morning as to whether or not a delegate to the wheat pool would thus be ineligible to the elected—

MR. BENJAMIN: We amended it; we took that out.

THE CHAIRMAN: —and I was told so.

No meaning he would not be. The Committee report goes on to read:

● (1650)

MR. NEIL: Mr. Chairman, I understood from Mr. Lefebvre when the question was put to him that this would not restrict those people from being part of the—

THE CHAIRMAN: That was my understanding.

AN HON. MEMBER: It is mine too.

MR. BENJAMIN: But they have to resign.

MR. NEIL: Not, no, no; that was not our understanding from counsel this morning. It was asked specifically. It is not the intention of the members on this side to prevent members of local pools or UGG organizations from being elected or named to this committee.

Then we have the workhorse of the NDP. I pay tribute to him. He singlehandedly put forward their point of view day after day, hour after hour. Referring to the statement by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), he said this:

MR. BENJAMIN: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that; I agree that was not the intent of the movers of that addition. I think by unanimous consent we can do anything. We could go back and reword that, or else an appropriate amendment is going to have to be done at the report stage.

Hon. Members who spoke for the New Democratic Party have completely taken out of context any representation that was made in the Bill. The Member for Regina West recognized that it was not the intention of this Party to deny local Wheat Pool men or women or UGG Members the right to be elected to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, we are moving into what I am sure most Canadians viewing this debate must find very confusing. We are talking about different clauses in the Bill, in particular the makeup of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

The Conservative Party has been quite loud and vociferous in its hooting at our speakers. That generally indicates there is something that disturbs those Members. When Government Members begin to hoot and holler, you realize you have touched a sore point, something is there and they do not want it heard. In fact, they try to drown you out, as Members to my right have been trying to drown out the major point we have been trying to make. Many of the amendments we are dealing with today, amendments to the report from the Committee, are really amendments to Conservative amendments. The point which the Hon. Members for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) made is that the amendment introduced by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) in essence reverts to what the original Bill said. It negates the Conservative amendment introduced in committee on which the Liberals and Conservatives voted together. I have the records here.

When the sessions started at 9.40 a.m. on Thursday, September 1, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) moved the major amendment, "that Clause 3 be amended by deleting lines 11 to 39 on page 3 and lines 1 to 17 on page 4 and substituting the following therefor". What follows is close to what we have now. There were some further subamendments, for example, at 11.12, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) moved a further refinement to Clause 3(e)(i).

The Bill before us today is a combination of Liberals and Conservatives voting together to reduce the number of delegates from the Wheat Pool on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. That is clear. Regardless of what the Hon. Members for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), Assiniboia and Kindersley-Lloydminster had to say, the truth is here and it is substantiated in the records. It was their amendment which reduced the number of representatives from the Wheat Pool from three to one.

In the debates today we heard justification of that original amendment introduced by the Conservative Party how the Wheat Pool, indeed, is one organization. As I listened to the speakers and read through the transcripts of the original debate, it was as though these Members were arguing the cause that they were arguing on Thursday, September 1. The arguments that many of them presented today were indeed the same type of argument that they were presenting on September 1. It is as though they are still arguing the cause that the pool should, in fact, have only one representative and not three.

I wish these Members would have heard the speech of my dear friend from Assiniboia who laid out the new line today. It is quite different from the line laid out on Thursday, September 1. The new line today, as it is in Motion No. 27, is to go back to what was in the original Bill. The line today is to support what the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) was saying in committee on September 1.

The line today is never to admit that you made a mistake. The Conservative Party can never admit that it made a mistake. It will not admit it made a mistake on September 1. Instead of admitting this basic mistake, it is totally changing direction from September 1 to today. They are now trying to bring in a group of red herrings: how often the Member for Yorkton-Melville attended the committee meetings, questioning the personal motivation of Members, shouting down our Members and trying to do everything possible except to admit that they have changed direction totally.

What they are proposing today and urging this House to accept is what they were arguing against on September 1. That is the simple truth. As the Canadian public listens to this debate, I hope they will not be influenced by the catcalling and all the red herrings from the Members on my right, but will realize one simple fact, that what the Conservative Party is proposing today was what they were opposing on September 1.

Today is September 29. That was on September 21. In 28 days we have seen a major turnaround. Why? I suspect that when it was finally realized what the Conservative amendments on September 1 did, the farming members in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba started ringing their Members of Parliament and saying, "Are you guys crazy? Do you realize what you guys have done? You have totally emasculated the ability of the Wheat Pool to represent or make representations to this committee. You have reduced them from three to one."

The Conservative Party suggests that the Liberals always rule by poll. It is quite right. I might also suggest that today the Conservative Party enunciates its positions according to polls. It realizes that the producers in western Canada were totally outraged at the amendments it forced through committee, supported by the Liberals, and now it is desperately trying to backtrack from that position.

Unless we live in 1984 in the George Orwellian world—and we have not reached that yet—the record stands. Hon. Members interested in the topic can refer to the transcript of the committee hearings. They can go back to Thursday, September 1 and they will realize the greater mess into which the Conservative amendment put the producers of western Canada. It made a terrible Bill even worse. If the aim of the Progressive Conservative Party was to make a terrible Bill so obnoxious that no one could support it, indeed with its amendment on September 1 it moved in that direction. I think the Conservatives were surprised to learn that the Government would go ahead with the legislation and that their obnoxious amendment would be written in stone, included in the legislation and become a reality. They desperately want to backtrack from their position but, when they backtrack, they must clothe the issue in some good rhetoric—"we want to see more producers; we want freedom". The Conservatives have misused the term "freedom". Historians will shake their heads in shame. It has been a total misuse and abuse of the word.

Of course they are suggesting that the pools are like any other corporation and that they are not co-operatives. Sometimes one has criticisms about Wheat Pools as one has criticisms of all organizations, particularly democratic ones. There is no doubt that the Wheat Pools are representative of their members. I see Mr. Speaker indicating that my time is up. I wonder whether, with the unanimous consent of the House, I might have just another minute to conclude my remarks.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Benjamin: What Tory said, "No"?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, did I hear you correctly that there was not unanimous consent? According to the established custom we have given consent to Conservative speakers to wind up their remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair heard a negative voice in reply to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. de Jong: It is very surprising.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, just to set the record straight, I did not hear any "no" from our side.

Mr. de Jong: It was from your side.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, it was.

Mr. Mayer: Certainly we were prepared to listen to the Hon. Member. It is always interesting to listen to people making fools of themselves. If he had continued, I would have had no objection. It is very interesting to listen to the comments of this great grain farmer from Regina East. He talked about producers, representing producers, and what was in their best interests. I did not hear any NDP Members say whether or not they were in favour of additional producer representation on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I did not hear any of them talk about what that committee would do. Those Members did not see fit to support the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) in his "Lone Ranger" vigilance before the Standing Committee on Transport. Now they are instant experts and want to talk about everything in the Bill. They want to explain the intricacies of the amendments and everything that occurred on September 1.

Where was the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) on September 1? I do not think he was working as hard as the Hon. Member for Regina West or the rest of us who worked on the Transport Committee. Had he attended the hearings, he might have had a better idea of what those of us who attended went through regularly.

Mr. de Jong: Stop attacking people and address the issue.

Mr. Mayer: I hear him shouting and hollering and catcalling. That was the very thing he was blaming Hon. Members on this side for doing. I have with me a Canadian Wheat Board permit book. I wonder how many permit books the Hon. Member for Regina East has had in his long career as a farmer. That is the nub of the issue.

Mr. de Jong: That is an old line.

Mr. Mayer: I do not understand why he is shouting and hollering. He made mention of the fact that when people become excited and shout, it is because a nerve was struck. If he is as good at his word as he is with his lungs, what I am saying must offend him and have some validity. I wonder how much grain he has produced. I wonder what kind of a feel he has for producers. I wonder how many line-ups he has had the privilege of standing in on a hot day, trying to deliver grain at the end of a crop year. These are the kinds of things producers understand. These are the kinds of things which many of us in the Official Opposition have done in terms of farming, trying to stay in business and meeting commitments to our bankers or business people who gave us credit. These are the kinds of things the Official Opposition attempted to represent.

In many ways the Bill was drafted in favour of the railways. Our main purpose on the Transport Committee was to get some amendments through which would in fact favour producers. I would be interested in knowing whether or not NDP Members were against additional producer representation. I did not hear them bemoan that fact. Why are they so strangely silent? Are they against producers, as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) pointed out? Producers are really the foundation of the whole system. Without producers producing grain, we would not need the Bill, the Senior Grain Transportation Committee or all the things we will discuss in days ahead.

NDP Members talked about red herrings. I submit that this whole issue is nothing more than a red herring for them because they did not once address the substantive issue of what in fact the Senior Grain Transportation Committee would do. For the benefit of the NDP Members who did not attend the committee meetings this summer and fall, I will attempt to clue them in. It may be tough because I think it is very difficult to explain things to some of them. Basically the Senior Grain Transportation Committee will function as a group comprised of the various sectors involved in grain. Certainly the producer is the primary one, but it will also include elevator companies, shippers, people who handle grain on the coast, truckers, railway companies, elevator operators and terminal operators. This committee should function with all those participants at the table. It is important to have them all there. That is why this Party saw fit to include producers. Without producers, who are the first in the chain of production, we would really miss a very important link.

In addition, I would argue that producers have a basic, common sense understanding of what goes on. They are basically mechanics. They are able to farm because they understand machinery and they know about the grade of grains. They know what is involved in terms of cleaning and shipping grain of the same grade on unit trains to get away from shipping carloads of different grain and to get away from some of the switching at the terminals.

Mr. Benjamin: What does that have to do with the amendments before the House?

Mr. Mayer: Producers have a lot of common sense and a basic understanding of the grain handling system. Some of the witnesses who appeared before the committee this summer thought there was no room for bona fide producers on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. We were successful in moving an amendment to have additional producer representation on the committee. It was interesting that the Hon. Member for Regina East bemoaned that fact, but my Party moved an amendment which actually provided for an additional producer representative from his own Province. I would be interested to know if he was against that. Four producers will be elected: one from Manitoba, two from Saskatchewan and one from Alberta. I wonder whether the Hon. Member wants to shout, hoot, make noises and raise red herrings about that. At the moment he is strangely silent.

Returning to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, it should involve all those factions so that problems can be settled at the table or in the room so that people do not go elsewhere to point fingers, blame someone else or raise false concerns in the press. There would be a chance to address issues right in the room.

Certainly there is concern about the size of that committee. Any of us who have been involved in committee work know the interesting saying that the best committee in terms of size is one of three with two absent. That goes a little too far, but if the amendment of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) is accepted, I believe the committee will have 21 members. It will be a very large committee. Therefore, it is very important that the committee be structured properly, that the meetings be well organized, that the people who are to attend the meeting will have a chance to look at an agenda beforehand, will be well prepared, will know what the problem is and how it will be addressed and will proceed in that very businesslike fashion. Although we agree that a committee of that size can be rather cumbersome, I think there are ways for that committee to organize itself so that it will function and function well.

• (1710)

I also think that it is important for producers to be involved, Mr. Speaker, and that was essentially our feelings in committee. I point out to the Hon. Member for Regina East that I represent a rural riding that consists largely of farming communities. I do not think there are many farmers in Regina East, but in my travels to my constituency every weekend, I did not see that any producers were outraged. I did not receive any phone calls from producers who were upset that additional producers were to become members of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I do not know who members of the NDP were talking to, but my experience, Mr. Speaker, was not like their experience.

The Hon. Member said that it was a terrible Bill. In many ways, it is a terrible Bill. I believe that the Government itself realizes that the Bill has some shortcomings. The Government has indicated that by moving an amendment to establish review processes which would immediately begin looking at the Bill once it is passed.

I would agree with the Hon. Member for Regina East who said that the Bill is in many ways a flawed Bill, but I do not understand why members of the NDP did not take the opportunity of this amendment to raise some of the things that they think are wrong with the Bill and point out to the Government why they think it is terrible and where it can be improved. All we have heard from them is a tirade by these instant experts who did not see fit to attend any of the committee meetings. They abandoned the Hon. Member for Regina West and left him to do that very important job on the Transport Committee by himself all summer.

I do not particularly want to prolong this debate, but I would like to raise a point that may or may not be significant regarding its procedure. If this amendment is accepted, there should be a consequential amendment moved at the bottom of page 3 that would allow for the addition of the three members as moved by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia. That consequential amendment would raise the number of members on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee from 11 to 14. I assume that if the Government is prepared to accept this amendment, that will be taken care of, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I too am happy to be afforded the opportunity to make a few remarks on this first day of debate of the Crow freight rate Bill. Without a doubt, this is a historic day in the House of Commons. It is a day that Canadians have been talking about, thinking about and asking questions about for a long time.

I am very happy to see that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) has been present through the whole debate today. I respect his presence although, with all due respect to my friend, the Hon. Minister, I would have to say that when I heard that he had been removed from the role of Minister of Employment, a very difficult role, and placed in the role of Minister of Transport in order to bring the Crow debate to western Canada, I could not help but think of the poem entitled "The Charge of the Light Brigade". I could see the Minister swashbuckling along in his cavalry uniform, with his helmet, sabre and pistol, on his horse and saddle as he heard the order: "Charge for the guns". If this Bill is passed and the Crow rate is changed, the Minister will be as flat on the ground politically as those 600 poor cavalrymen who rode against the guns. I think that he is probably well aware of that, so I will not continue with that line of thinking any longer.

It is true that we are participating in a historic debate today. During the preliminary discussions, there have been many friendly interventions between the Parties.

I am a western Canadian from the Prairies who grew up on a farm. I grew up within the system of co-ops and pools that are very much part and parcel of Canadian life in the West. From the time I was small, I knew that the things that were important in life were grain elevators, schools, churches and the like. I also knew, from listening to my father and my uncles and others, about the great difficulty that Canadian farmers had with handling their grain in the beginning.

I heard this summer that an amendment had been moved during the committee hearings. I give full credit to all Members of the House who sat through those committee hearings because they were long, hard and complicated and were held during a very hot summer. I have much respect for the people from all Parties who sat in on those hearings. Because of the work of those Members, we have before us what might be called the tracks of that committee. The committee's reports speak about the discussions and debate that occurred, about the people who were interested and presented statements and position papers to the committee. I must say that when I heard that the Wheat Pools would have only one representative on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee representing Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, realizing that the Wheat Pools still handle the majority of grain sales in the West, I was very surprised. I was surprised because it seemed to me to be a very unfair way of handling that particular situation.

The pools that handle the largest amount of grain sales in the West were built upon a historic way of handling grain that began when our fathers and grandfathers realized that they were not going to be able to cope with the big grain companies. They built their own pools, which afforded them a democratic, co-operative way of looking after themselves. I think that that must be greatly respected. I have a feeling that Members of the House have that respect, but when I heard that an amendment had been moved that would limit the three pools to one representative rather than three, I was shocked.

I would like to point out that it is extremely important for Members who are participating in the debate but who were not present at the committee hearings to go over the reports of the committee hearings because much of the debate has been handled in those reports. From his remarks this afternoon, I would say that the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), for whom I have much respect, should do a little bit of reading. He should read the reports of the committee because I felt that some of his remarks did not, in my opinion, properly indicate the historic development of the amendments.

I would repeat again that I have great respect for the parliamentary form of the Hon. Member for Bow River. I know that he is an outdoorsman and has done a great deal of good work with young people. He knows very well that one cannot cover one's tracks in the snow. I would suggest that the tracks made by the committee in preparation for today's debate are contained in the minutes of the committee hearings. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he go and check those tracks, because I felt that he was unconsciously offering the House information that was not contained in the minutes.

I was surprised by the remarks made by my good friend, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). From his remarks I understood he was suggesting that it was more important to have somebody represent views than represent votes on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee that will be established by the new Act. I personally believe that views are extremely important, naturally, and every sector should have its views properly represented. But when it comes to the crunch, I think everyone in the House and most people in the democratic process in Canada, realize that votes finally make the decision. I insist that the three pools be represented on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee because, in the final analysis, it will be extremely important that they have voting rights so that they can put their views into the democratic process.

● (1720)

During the debate this afternoon the tone of some of the remarks by my colleagues to my right spoke against the notion of co-operation, the basic notions that set up the co-ops and the pool systems and that one vote be represented in those organizations and that they are basically different in their structure, philosophy and the way they operate from the grain companies.

I suggest that the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) should check his remarks. When he spoke I heard a tone that I think was condescending toward most of the grain farmers I know. He was almost attacking the people that this Bill is all about. It is important in the debate today and in the days following that we show respect for people on the farm.

Regarding the pools and their representation, I feel that the three prairie Provinces, a great wheat producing area of the world, should be represented by a member from each of the pools on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

I see that my time has come to an end, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this Bill. I am rather surprised that no Liberal Members have spoken on any of the amendments since they supported all the Tory amendments in committee. It is rather interesting that they are not willing to speak on the Bill now.

I should like to begin with a reference to my own constituency on Vancouver Island, a reference which may not seem to be too well related to the Bill but really it is. Some nine years ago I visited some retired prairie farmers who then lived in my riding. I noticed that in their homes plaques were exhibited in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool which, as my hon. friend from Saskatchewan pointed out, was founded in 1924. They had a great feeling for their Wheat Pool because it represented them as basic, grass roots farmers. It was their organization and it represented a degree of emancipation from the elevator owners who had ripped them off for years. They were very proud to be members of the Wheat Pool and so the plaques had a prominent place in their homes.

I think it is significant that when the Bill was before committee the precise wording that Motion No. 27 is trying to introduce, was there. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) is now trying to restore it but the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) had changed that. I think it is very important that we recognize the importance of Wheat Pool members and the contribution they have made to farming in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. They should have proper representation on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. This is a committee that will be responsible for making basic representations concerning the allocation of freight cars, and recommendations about how the system will operate.

It is interesting to note that some 60 per cent of grain shipped from the prairies comes from the three Wheat Pools, 17 per cent from the grain growers and about 20 per cent from the private organizations—about 20 per cent from the United Grain Growers and about 20 per cent from private organizations. The New Democratic Party suggests and it seems reasonable to me, that because some 60 per cent was being shipped through the pools they should have three representatives on the committee, one from each of the prairie pools, the United Grain Growers, which shipped between 17 per cent and 20 per cent, should have a representative, and the private elevator companies, which ship about 20 per cent, should have a representative. That would make five representatives in all.

On the other hand, the Conservatives say that the three pools, which ship come 60 per cent of the grain, should have one representative, and the United Grain Growers should have one representative, making two from the total co-operative sector which accounts for 80 per cent of the total shipments. They add a representative from the private sector. We see where the Conservatives stand. It is interesting that they are now trying to repair some of that damage and changing their positions. This is typical of their approach to the Crow. They now say they are opposed to any changes for three years. We would like to see something more than this flip-flop policy. We would like to know where they stand.

I urge that the amendments put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) be accepted. All Members paid tribute to his sterling work on that committee. This proposed committee should be made much more representative than it is as a result of the Conservative-Liberal coalition which stripped the pools of their proper representation.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps before I address my remarks specifically to the amendments I could express my sincere appreciation to Members of the Standing Committee on Transport who have spent a good part of the summer on this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: One of my staff travelled with them, and in his last gasping moments before he expired at the end of the committee hearings he indicated to me that the committee met for 31 days over the summer and heard over 240 witnesses. That is quite a remarkable tour de force on the part of the committee. I believe the fact that we had well over 80 amendments moved by the committee and accepted, is also an indication that the work was not in vain but in fact produced an improved piece of legislation.

• (1730)

It is in that spirit, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to address the series of representations being made today. At the first opportunity I had to meet with that committee, as the new Minister of Transport responsible for this Bill, I indicated quite clearly that because of the very extensive debate which had taken place, and the representations which had been heard concerning membership of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, that was a set of proposals which I was prepared to accept as a committee recommendation. Speaking on behalf of the Government, we were not taking a hard and fast line that it was something which was Government policy. We felt that that was something which should reflect the best wisdom which could be accumulating during the course of the committee hearings. It was in that spirit that our own Members supported the initial motion to reduce the number of members on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

I am interested to know, Mr. Speaker, that we now have a change in that position. It is a change which I personally welcome. Coming from western Canada I share many of the same sentiments which have been expressed during the course of debate, and I feel that representation of the producer groups is a very important element to have on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I share the notion that that committee is a central component of the whole change which we are introducing. It is the first time we will bring together all the different players in the game who will have to share information, knowledge, and also begin to share some responsibility for making the new system work. There will be the producers, the railways, the terminal companies and the truckers, all now sitting around the same table on a regular basis, and if they go back to some good old fashioned labour/management procedures, they will realize that if you get all the parties in the same game sitting on a continuous basis, then the likelihood of an agreement is much higher. Furthermore, we might achieve a higher rate of efficiency in the system because each of the major players will have an opportunity to realize that he has an obligation and responsibility to get the best price for the farmers and the best cost in the system.

We sometimes tend to make the mistake of assuming that the delivery system of grain is purely railways. It is not. There are a number of other major players. Certainly, the terminals and the companies which gather the grain, the ports themselves, and the other forms of transportation, are all part of that linkage which comes together. In this particular committee we will have all those people having to get into that kind of discussion and, I believe, out of that will emerge degrees of consensus about the improved implementation of the grain delivery system in western Canada.

In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate that we are quite prepared to accept the proposals put forward by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson). We think that the wording has a familiar ring to it, back to the original proposal. I do feel it is an improvement, frankly. Therefore, we can indicate to the Hon. Members of both Parties opposite that, if they are prepared to agree, we would also, as the Government, be prepared to go along and support that amendment.

I believe it was the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) who pointed out that in order to make that amendment effective a series of consequential amendments would have to be moved, and it is the responsibility of the Minister to do so. I indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that I am prepared to move those consequential amendments which would give force and life to that particular amendment. If it is in order to do so now, I would be prepared to do so. However, I notice that in the Speaker's instructions this morning, she indicated she wanted to have grouped amendments debated first and that we would be voting on them at a later date. I am really in the Speaker's hands as to whether I should move the consequential amendments now or simply wait until those amendments are about to be voted on.

Perhaps there is agreement on Motion No. 27. I heard the Hon. Members of the New Democratic caucus saying they felt that producers should be involved. Certainly the movers of the amendment are in agreement. We are in agreement with it as well. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we could have this amendment accepted on this first day and then we can go on to other business. If that is the case, I would be prepared to move the consequential amendments along with it. However, Mr. Speaker, I will take your advice on how we might proceed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: My understanding is that the amendment before the House would have to be adopted. It would then require consequential amendments which the Minister would be in a position to offer.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the remarks of the Minister. Madam Speaker grouped Motions Nos. 24, 25, 26, 27 and 29 for debate. No. 24 should be voted on separately. Affirmative vote on Motion No. 25 would dispose of Motion Nos. 26 and 27. A negative vote on Motion No. 25 would require further voting on Motion Nos. 26 and 27, and Motion No. 29 is to be voted on separately—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I call the attention of the Hon. Member for Regina West to the fact that he apparently has spoken in the course of this debate and cannot be recognized again on the same subject matter.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not what I am doing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member rose. He started to speak. It is my understanding he moved an adjournment motion. He clearly spoke. He had his opportunity, according to the rules of the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rose on a point of order. The Minister asked for the guidance of the Chair. I am asking for the guidance of the Minister. Is he saying that he is accepting all five of those motions, two of which are identical, and he would then move consequential amendments following the deferred votes? Or is he only accepting certain ones, and what would be the procedure then? Do we vote separately in spite of Madam Speaker's preliminary ruling? Do we vote separately if the Government indicates it is prepared to accept amendments that the Speaker said should be voted on in concert? I think we are going to find ourselves in trouble farther down the road.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is before us, as I understand it, is an amendment which would increase the number of members of a board. If such an amendment were adopted, there would then be consequential amendments which the Minister has indicated he would be prepared to move. It seems to the Chair that this is what is before us at this point. If the Minister has further comments which he cares to make by way of clarification, perhaps he could have the unanimous consent of the House to speak.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Axworthy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To clarify the situation and perhaps to dispatch the proceedings, what I was proposing is that the wording under Motion No. 27 in the orders be accepted, and I would be prepared to move any consequential amendments thereto. I was asking what the appropriate timing for moving such a motion was. I know that Motion No. 27 has virtually identical wording to Motion No. 26. Therefore, it seems to me there is an agreement. If we can move that wording now and then move on to consequential amendments this afternoon, I would be prepared to do so.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister has given an undertaking to introduce the appropriate consequential amendments at a subsequent point. Does that answer the questions of the Hon. Member for Regina West?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I take it, then, that the Government is prepared to accept Motion Nos. 26 and 27, which are the same as the original wording of the Bill. Can I take it, then, that now he would bring in his consequential amendments to Motions Nos. 26 and 27 but that Motions Nos. 24, 25 and 29 will remain under debate and will be voted upon separately?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreeable to the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be agreement. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Benjamin: On Motions Nos. 26 and 27?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions Nos. 26 and 27 appear to be the same motion. Therefore, we can put these two motions at the same time and they can be voted on by the House, presumably. With the consent of the House I am taking Motion No. 26 simply because it is numbered ahead of Motion No. 27. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 26 (Mr. Benjamin) agreed to.

• (1740)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am told that Motion No. 26 does not need the same consequential amendments because it did include a reference to not more than 14 other members. Is the Minister aware of any other consequential amendments?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I think it is true that with the acceptance of Motion No. 26 one of the consequential amendments back on line 38 is taken care of. It is my understanding, however, that we would also have to move a consequential amendment on page 4. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith):

That Bill C-155 as reprinted be amended at page 4 by striking out lines 15 to 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"referred to in subparagraph (1) and".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Axworthy) agreed to.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, it would have been nice to have a copy of the amendment. Does the amendment moved by the Minister do nothing more than confirm the adoption of Motions Nos. 26 and 27?

An Hon. Member: Motion No. 26, not Motion No. 27.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, there is no substantive change. This is simply to keep it in line with other amendments. It maintains the representation under the proposed amendment in Motion No. 26.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House having accepted Motion No. 26, there is no need to vote on Motion No. 27 and it is dropped.

Motion No. 27 (Mr. Gustafson) withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my understanding that at this point the debate will resume on the balance of the clauses grouped for debate, Motions Nos. 24, 25 and 29.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity this afternoon of listening to debate on Bill C-155, which is commonly known as the Government's proposal to amend the Crowsnest Pass freight rate. I have been very impressed at the thoughtful contribution of Members of my own caucus.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) rises on a point of order.

Mr. McKnight: I hesitate to interrupt, Mr. Speaker, but would not Motion No. 25 now be considered out of order or redundant? As I see it, it was leaving one Member off; it is asking for five members from the major grain elevator companies, not six. Would it not be considered to be redundant now that we have adopted Motion No. 26?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster. Now that motion No. 26 has been adopted, is there agreement that Motion No. 25 could at this stage be dropped?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I will quite readily confess to you and the House, Sir, that while we are pleased that the intent of Motion No. 26 has been approved and the Minister has brought in a consequential amendment, I appreciate there is some conflict between Motion No. 25 and Motion No. 26, which is why I could not understand why they were grouped. However, could we let it stand for now and just continue debate on Motions Nos. 24 and 29, and I would be happy to advise the Chair tomorrow on Motion No. 25?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will resume debate on Motions Nos. 24 and 29, grouped for purposes of debate.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, I have been very impressed this afternoon by the thoughtful contribution of Members of my caucus to this particular debate—

Mr. Smith: You are easily impressed.

Mr. Young: —and the passionate pleas made by Members of my caucus on behalf of the farmers in the prairie Provinces. Those pleas arise I believe because of their deep concern that the measure before the House will destroy the co-operative spirit which has traditionally been a part of prairie life. As I understand it from both the minutes of the proceedings in the committee and the debate, at least from the Conservative side of the House, the only co-operative spirit which exists around this amendment exists in the coalition of the Conservative and Government Parties. I would also add that since some of my colleagues in the Conservative Party have been loudly boasting and bragging about how they are going to form the Government after the next election, I think they are going to be in for a big surprise in the prairie Provinces.

Mr. Beatty: This is a prairie expert speaking here.

Mr. Young: You will probably find that even though the Liberal Party does not exist west of Winnipeg, perhaps the Conservative Party will find itself in much the same position in certain sections of the western Provinces. I can understand why some of those Conservative Members would get rather excited about that because, contrary to the claims they have continually attempted to put forward that the NDP is somehow associated with the Liberals, surely the actions of the Conservative Party, both in committee and particularly on this amendment, clearly show to anyone who cares to look or listen that the true picture is that the Conservative Party is in the pocket of the Liberal Party. This particular amendment clearly eliminates any doubt which ever existed about any kind of allegiance they might expect from the farming community in this country.

It is not only a person like me who comes from the east end of Toronto, Mr. Speaker, who is particularly concerned about what this proposal is going to do to farmers. We in the cities appreciate that there has been a strong tradition of support in our country for farmers. We welcome and appreciate the contribution that the farming community makes to Canadian life. There are many people in my own constituency who came off the farms and who have spoken to me personally about their concern over what this Government is trying to do to the Crow rate, particularly the attitude this particular amendment displays towards the farmer and their importance in our community, their own local communities, the agricultural community generally, and particularly to the life of Canada.

Surely, as Members of my caucus have expressed it in the past, in this debate and specifically this afternoon, the amendment, if passed, would be clearly undemocratic. It would make this particular Bill even more undemocratic than it was before it went to committee. It is not only myself nor the NDP that makes this statement. The Toronto Star, which one would hardly call a progressive paper in terms of where the NDP stands, published an editorial not too long ago which absolutely castigated the Government for what it was doing to the Canadian farmers. I would like to quote just a few paragraphs because I am sure that Members on all sides of the House will be quite interested. The Toronto Star stated:

Despite the opposition of provincial governments and of virtually every responsible farm group on the prairies, the federal government intends to unilaterally and drastically restructure the Crowsnest Pass Agreement. And if the Crow dies, the funerals of many western communities may follow.

It then goes on to state, "When the national Government—on our behalf", and with the words "on our behalf", it means not only Canadians who live on the Prairies but also others who have supported the farming community over the years, including those who live in cities, as I do, in the east end of Toronto. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Smith) asked of me in the past when I rose to debate this Government measure on the Crowsnest Pass rate, "Why is the guy from the east end of Toronto standing up to debate this issue"? The reasons I stand up are exactly the same reasons the Toronto Star put forth as to why Canadians should be concerned, why they should support the farming community regardless of where one lives in Canada. It is because the farming community is such a strong element in our traditional life and certainly in the economic life of this country. It is with that concern that the Toronto Star goes on to state:

When the national Government—on our behalf—proposes to disregard so cavalierly the deepfelt and legitimate concerns of one of our regions, all Canadians have cause to be disturbed. Our Confederation is based on recognition of the frequent need to subordinate local, parochial concerns to the broader national interests in which we all share; but it is equally based on recognizing the need for fairness, understanding and sensitivity in handling the legitimate claims and grievances of Canadians in all parts of the country.

This amendment clearly does not fall within the sense of understanding, fairness or sensitivity of the Star or any Canadian. Frankly, it goes beyond Canadians' view of Canada as being a fair country which does not believe in dealing meanly or unfairly with any part or constituency within the country.

The Toronto Star goes on to state:

As Western Canada sees it, the Crow is part of a Confederation bargain: Western Canada got low, fixed freight rates in return for agreeing to pay high import tariffs protecting eastern industries.

Residents of eastern Canada understand that they enjoy support from the farming community, and they were willing to enter into this bargain with the farmers in western Canada. The article continues:

Since then, the Crow's fixed rate—a half cent per ton-mile—has allowed our western farmers to compete for exports, from their land-locked position, with the transportation-subsidized farmers of Argentina, Australia and the U.S. Grain is Canada's fourth largest export, accounting for sales last year of about $6 billion.

But the West's commitment to the Crow is based on concerns much deeper than simply cheap rates.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my allotted time has expired.

Some Hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Young: With the agreement of the House, of course, I could continue speaking for another half hour about the injustice of this particular Bill. I will end on that note.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure, as the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River, to register some of the concerns of my constituents over this particular Bill and the reason we are supportive of the amendment as brought forward by my colleague. The purpose of the amendment would be to eliminate from line 35 the word "co-operative". That is extremely important, especially in areas of the West, because members of co-operatives would no longer be excluded. The wording in the Bill as it is at the present time is very anti-democratic because it would mean that farmers at the grass roots level who were interested in participating in committees such as the Senior Grain Transport Committee would be excluded.

For the benefit of the House, may I mention the importance of co-operative tradition to western Canada. In fact, it is the grass roots involvement in co-operatives that has seen the rise of many people in western Canada with regard to their participation in our institutions in general. It is the co-operative spirit and the co-operatives themselves that have built up much of western Canada.

As I am sure the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is well aware because of his roots in the West and his involvement at the University of Winnipeg in matters relating to people working together, it would be very unfair to have this type of wording in a clause which would prohibit participation by those farmers at the grass roots level who have been and are involved in co-operatives. I am very pleased that before the amendment was even brought before the committee, a Member of our Party was the one who stood up for the rights of individual members who are members of the co-ops. This particular wording underlines the lack of understanding of the drafters of the Bill concerning the unique way in which the farming culture has developed in western Canada.

For that reason, it is important to see that we adopt the amendment brought forward by my colleague, as it recognizes the fact that it is the co-operative spirit that has built up the West. I would therefore urge Hon. Members to support this particular motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

SHIPBUILDING—PIP GRANTS—LOSS OF JOBS IN SHIPYARDS. (B) CONSTRUCTION OF DRILLING RIGS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions I have risen in the Chamber to express some concern that continuation of the Petroleum Incentive Program grants established by this present Government would in fact negate or perhaps totally obliterate the few positive aspects that were contained in the Government's assistance to shipbuilding last January or February.

As recently as September 20, I brought the plight as seen by the Canadian shipbuilding industry and its related industrial framework to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Their concern is that unless the Government takes steps to maximize Canadian content flowing from PIP grants, the impact on Canadian industry will be very bad indeed.

The reason for raising the question again stems not necessarily from the growing concern by all sides of the Chamber, I am sure, but by the industry as well, that we now have virtually a $7 billion tiger by the tail. No one quite knows how to control it. In fact, the grants are beyond the power of this House to deal with other than by cutting them off and I do not believe anyone is suggesting that. I am looking for a clear and concise answer about the Government's intention with respect to the impact that the program has on the Canadian shipbuilding industry in its present from.

In just the last six months the Canadian industry is down by some 6,000 jobs. That makes a total of approximately 12,000 jobs which have been lost in the last 18 months. The reason for that loss is that, according to the PIPs program, capital costs are not included. Therefore it is to the advantage of the entrepreneur to have someone else build an offshore service rig or a drilling platform and then lease it from him because the cost of leases can be included in the 80 per cent grant toward this type of energy exploration and development.

It would be one thing if the entrepreneur went to a Canadian shipyard and told it to build a structure, lease it back to the entrepreneur who would then pay the shipyard. If that were the case, we would be providing and stimulating Canadian employment in our shipyards and support industries in that sector of our economy. What happens, however, is that it is cheaper—when the entrepreneur sees that he cannot get access up to the 80 per cent grant, since he will pay a certain amount more if he builds a rig in Canada—to go off shore to Korea, Japan, Norway or another country to build it. He can get the advantage of cheap financing through Export Development. Since his responsibility is to his shareholders and he is not in the business of losing money for his investors, he goes offshore to find a foreign builder and then leases the rig back. He then brings it back into the country under a foreign flag. It does not need a Canadian crew and only has to meet a minimum—not Canadian—standard with respect to operation in our coastal or northern areas. That is what happens first.

● (1805)

To demonstrate that, PetroCan, in the first blush of Canadian nationalism, built several offshore service rigs in Canada. The incentives grants came in. Petro-Canada said that it was being silly by continuing to use its own ships. Therefore, it sold them offshore, or wherever it could sell them, and then leased them back. It charged this country with 80 per cent of the total cost that was allowable. In fact, it included the full cost of the lease, not just 80 per cent.

The spin-off is that what happened will continue to happen because when you bring a foreign vessel into this country, a duty must be paid. Lo and behold, we find that the 80 per cent grant pays for importing the ship. This is therefore a good thing for the entrepreneur.

While the grants are good in terms of stimulating new energy development in this country, they deprive Canadian workers of sustainable long-term jobs. This shows up in the figures and indicates why Canadian shipyards are facing the worst year in the last 15. I invite the Parliamentary Secretary to enlighten us as to whether the Government intends to bring in some modifications to change these one or two narrow points.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the PIP grants are providing up to 80 per cent for exploration in the offshore and 25 per cent for development costs in the offshore. However, when a grant is given, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) has the power to supervise plans for the employment of Canadians and for the full development of opportunities on behalf of Canadian manufacturers and suppliers. In addition, under a grant there is the right of the office of Regional and Industrial Benefits in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to review plans to ensure that these opportunities are being given to Canadians.

Hon. Members will notice that I use the word "opportunity". I do not say that these two different ministries have a dictatorial power. We cannot provide a dictatorial power because of our obligations under GATT and because market conditions and the intelligent operation of these companies require that they must have some outside option beside Canadian suppliers.

There is a balancing act here. No doubt we would all like to see the exploration and development activities in the offshore, plus 100 per cent of supply, undertaken by Canadian companies and Canadian shipyards. However, under GATT we cannot demand that 100 per cent of the supply take place in Canadian shipyards. We do not have that power under our international obligations.

Unfortunately, the Hon. Member does not get all his facts entirely straight. The losses that he describes are not as a result of PIP grant incentives but a result of an enormous world glut in exploration equipment. Second, it is as a result of the recent general slowdown in ship purchases all over the world.

It would only be fair for the Hon. Member to note that government activity has more than offset much of this slowdown. In fact, government activity is specifically designed for that. The $700 million coast guard ship acquisition and refurbishing plan under the special recovery program is intended to speed up activity in the shipyards, to take projects that were further down the line and schedule them for today.

We believe that the patrol frigate given to the Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. Ltd. will offset much of this slowdown. The new regulations, customs jurisdiction, temporary extension of subsidies to Canadian shipbuilders and the adoption of new coastal trading rules combine to provide some offset to this world glut of equipment and to the general slowdown that the industry has experienced.

INDUSTRY—WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—URGENCY OF ISSUE

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise an issue this evening which I raised in the form of a supplementary question this afternoon in the House. I very much appreciate being on the adjournment debate list, because this is the type of thing for which the adjournment debate should be used.

Earlier I asked the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Smith) a question concerning the situation of White Equipment. It is a well-known issue of which most farmers are aware because the White Farm and the Cockshutt names in farm equipment have long been associated with agriculture in Canada and throughout the world.

The imminent problem is that at nine o'clock tomorrow morning it is my understanding that the court-appointed receiver, Peat Marwick, will determine what will happen to the company. One of my concerns is that there are many people who will be affected by the move tomorrow morning. It relates to jobs, both direct ones at the plant in Brantford and those with dealers across the country.

It is my information that there are 123 dealers in Canada. The majority of them are in Saskatchewan, according to my information there are approximately 50 in that Province. As far as jobs with the dealers are concerned, I would estimate that there are roughly ten jobs per dealer. That would be a conservative estimate. There could very well be more. My guess is that we are talking of something in the order of 1,200 to 1,500 jobs in the dealership network across Canada. At the peak of the operation of White Farm Equipment, it employed something like 1,100 people. Even if we took a figure of 500 people at the plant, we would be talking in the neighbourhood of 2,000 jobs. This is a significant number of jobs, especially when we will face a very tough winter as far as employment is concerned. This issue does have consequences in respect of jobs.

The Government should also be concerned about the service end of the matter. As I said, the White Farm and Cockshutt names in farm equipment are synonymous and have long been associated with agriculture in the world. There are very major implications for farmers who have purchased this equipment. In addition to the 2,000 lost jobs I referred to earlier, this also involves an issue regarding service.

What will happen to the people who purchased expensive combines in the last two years or three years? Will they be able to obtain service? Will parts for these combines be available? What will happen to their resale value or their trade-in value on new equipment? There will be far-reaching consequence in terms of the individual farmers who are affected, and this comes at a time when farmers like everyone else are facing financial difficulty. Some people who have recently became involved in farming have purchased this equipment. I know of instances where this will cause extreme financial problems and in some cases could even be the determining factor in whether or not people are able to stay in business.

The issue also involves technology. I am a farmer. I have owned combines and I have operated Cockshutt combines. It is my understanding that the technology associated with the new 9700 model of White combine is extremely important because it performs very well in the field. There is an opportunity for Canadians to pursue this technology and to develop a name for themselves outside the country. I know there are many White combines across the line in the United States. I would suggest that we also have an export potential if we can maintain this operation and technology in Canada.

This issue has consequences in four areas: in jobs, in service, in technology and in our ability to export, and that relates to our balance of payments, interest rates, the value of our money and all those things.

● (1815)

Let me quote from the Regina Leader-Post of September 20, 1983:

> The court-appointment receiver—Peat Marwick Ltd.—is looking for a buyer who will protect the jobs at the Brantford plant as well as the dealers and the axial-flow combine technology developed by White with federal financial help, Lumley said.

It has come to my attention in the last couple of days that a group in Winnipeg is prepared to put forward a very serious bid that would save the company and keep it from being liquidated. The members of that group are concerned that they may not have enough time to meet the nine o'clock deadline tomorrow morning. Let me indicate what I am asking from the Government. I know my time is fast running out, Mr. Speaker.

The people from Winnipeg who are involved in this offer are, I understand, in the farm equipment manufacturing business. They are putting together an offer that will include the dealers, which means that the dealers themselves will be putting up some money. I think it is very healthy for them to be involved directly. They are, however, concerned that they may not have enough time to meet the nine o'clock deadline tomorrow.

I know that the Government itself cannot legally interfere with the actions of the receiver. However, I am suggesting that the Government use every method it can to see that this legitimate group from Winnipeg has the time to make its offer to the court-appointed receiver tomorrow morning. If there is a chance to save these jobs, to provide this service to farmers and do the things that the Minister himself said he hoped to do, we should in fact provide enough time for this offer to be made tomorrow morning. I would ask again that the parliamentary secretary address this problem and use whatever influence he has with the Minister to see that in fact this offer from Winnipeg has a chance to materialize in time to be of some use to the receiver.

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the concerns of the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), because it is true that we are talking about thousands of jobs, about preserving the dealer network and about preserving the technology involved in this situation.

The Hon. Member knows that the Minister and the people involved in ITC, as well as the receiver, have been trying to find somebody that would continue to operate White Farm Equipment Ltd. of Brantford in a viable way. At this point in time, since the receiver has been named by the Court, I honestly think, as I am quite sure the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette will understand, that it is in the best interests of the people involved that no further comments should be made. I honestly believe that any further comments on the matter could hurt the negotiations that may occur tomorrow morning or the day after as far as a prospective buyer is concerned.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the position that has been taken at this time, and I am quite sure the Hon. Member will understand that it has been taken with the best interests of all of the people involved in mind.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—NUCLEAR TECHNOLOGY—POSSIBLE EXCHANGES BETWEEN ARGENTINA AND LIBYA. (B) RELATIONS WITH ARGENTINA

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I make this intervention in the Adjournment Debate this evening subsequent to a question that was asked on June 2 of this year of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). That question was prompted by two things; the Falklands crisis, and the press reports which indicated that the Argentinian Government was negotiating with Libya for nuclear materials. That report indicated that the nuclear materials might in fact have been medical isotopes, but there was no confidence that the relationship between Libya and Argentina would be held at that level.

The concern I expressed at that time to the Minister was that Canada inadvertently, through the relationship we had established with the sale of the Candu reactor to Argentina and through the ongoing supply of uranium fuel to Argentina, was an unwitting accomplice to the possible proliferation of nuclear weapons materials. Well before the question of the Falklands crisis, our relationship with Argentina was and has continued to be a tenuous one. Argentina has refused to sign bilateral agreements which we felt were important to make sure that Canada's involvement was not in the field of nuclear weaponry. It is true that Argentina had signed agreements with us, but the bilateral agreement that is important to us now, and those subsequent to the unfortunate history of the Candu sales in the East, were not forthcoming from the Argentinian Government. We know that Argentina has been reprocessing fuel since our sale of the Candu reactor to Argentina. It now has plutonium in quantities large enough to produce bombs.

With the report that Argentina was negotiating Khadafy I think there was a great level of concern around the world that we would see the birth of another member of the nuclear weapon family. Several coincidences have occurred in this past week. The first was that Margaret Thatcher while here reminded us of the type of Government there is in Argentina, and that it is unreliable. In addition, recent press reports on the memoirs of Richard Nixon indicate that he has said that Khadafy used to give him nightmares. If the general can do that to Richard Nixon then I suggest we ought to pay attention to him.

The question I should like to leave with the Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs is whether we in Canada have any additional information on this. In spite of the fact that I fully support the entire nuclear system, I should like to know whether we have taken a good solid look at withdrawing from our relationship with Argentina because of present difficulties, and those that may occur in the future if we continue to co-operate with Argentina.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): As everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, Canada and Argentina have just completed together a Candu-type nuclear station at Embalse. The station was officially opened on May 3, 1983 and has now come on stream. However, such industrial cooperation for peaceful use of nuclear technology falls within the four corners of the January 1976 bilateral nuclear cooperation agreement between the Canadian and Argentinian Governments. As it has been stated on several occasions in the House, this agreement is altogether consistent with Canada's December 1974 non-proliferation policy which was aimed at ensuring to the fullest extent possible that Canadian nuclear materials would not encourage proliferation.

In December 1976, the Government of Canada changed its policy so as to make sure that our nuclear trade would involve exclusively such countries as those which were formally committed through the Non-Proliferation Treaty or a similar agreement to reject nuclear explosive technology and to put all their nuclear facilities under international guarantees. Rather than putting an end to the existing and fruitful cooperation with Argentina, the Government decided at the time that our cooperation would not extend beyond the Embalse project for as long as the Argentinians would not agree to the provisions of December 1976.

As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, the Argentinian Government has steadfastly denied having any intention of developing nuclear weapons. On the other hand, everything leads me to believe that, in its relations with other countries, Argentina is prudent and moderate. The fact remains that states are sovereign and free to choose their nuclear partners. Should Argentina want to cooperate with Libya, surely it will keep in mind the fact that that country is signatory to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and that all its facilities are controlled by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Any planned diversion of nuclear matters or Canadian technology to Third World countries must be agreed to in advance by our country. The Canada-Argentina agreement is perfectly clear on this. We have no reason to believe that the Argentina government wishes to divert some items of Canadian origin without the consent of our government, something it agreed freely not to do on signing the agreement in January 1976. Some have also alluded to a possible trade between Argentina and China. Anyone interested in this issue, including the hon. member, will be happy to learn that the government of China applied for membership in the International Atomic Energy Commission on September 6, and that its representatives have indicated publicly on many occasions that they want to avoid the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock.

At 6.25 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF HELICOPTER MANUFACTURING PLANT IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC AND POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, last Wednesday, the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) rose in the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 21, to announce that he could not support a decision by the Canadian Government regarding the establishment of a Bell Helicopter plant in Quebec. I would like to refer to a statement by the new Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) which appeared in Le Droit of June 13 of this year, in which he said that, as leader of the Party, he would decide on the positions to be taken by the Progressive Conservative Party and that he would not tolerate haphazard statements by fellow members. In the circumstances, all members of this House must be anxious to know whether the new Leader of the Opposition approves the establishment of the Bell Helicopter plant in Quebec. If he does, what is he going to do about the Hon. Member for Erie?

I purposely asked two simple questions in order to have a reply within the next few days.

COAST GUARD

ORDERS FOR NEW ICEBREAKING VESSELS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, for years the Progressive Conservative Party has been urging that the icebreaker fleet of the Canadian Coast Guard be upgraded. Not only will the procurement of new icebreaking vessels enable the Coast Guard to fulfil its obligations in the St. Lawrence and Arctic more adequately, resulting in safer and longer shipping seasons and generally stimulating commercial navigation, but also it will provide badly needed work for hard-pressed Canadian shipyard workers. For these reasons we on this side are pleased to see the Government finally acting on our recommendations and placing orders for six light icebreaking vessels.

The next step, might I suggest, Madam Speaker, should be the design and construction of heavy icebreakers for year-round use in the Arctic Ocean and Northwest Passage.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Madam Speaker, I rise to correct a statement made by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) two nights ago. The Leader of the Opposition said that the Liberal Party has undermined Canada's relationship with the United States. He said it is time for Canada to say who its friends are. Contrary to this statement and others made by the Leader of the Opposition, Canada-U.S. relations are healthy. In fact the relationship is stronger now than it has been for some time.

The U.S. Ambassador to Canada, Paul Robinson, Jr., has recently stated that things are going very well between this Government and the Reagan administration. The American trade representative, William Block, has been quoted as saying that Canada-U.S. relations are strong and thriving. Mr. Block said that issues between the two countries are being addressed in a spirit of co-operation.

There have been many recent signs to indicate that Canada-U.S. relations are prospering. The United States has applauded the new trade policy of this Government, which calls for an increase in free trade between the two countries. That trade policy recognizes the United States as Canada's best trading partner and strongest ally.

Another important sign of a strong relationship is the recent appointment of a senior official to deal exclusively with Canada in the U.S. State Department. There are other signs of a healthy relationship. Canada and the United States are working together in a serious and co-operative spirit to combat the problem of acid rain. Canada has shown it is a committed ally by assuring a greater contribution to western security and by agreeing to allow the testing of the Cruise missile—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

S.O. 21

RATE OF YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I continue to voice my concern about youth unemployment. As recently as 1981 youth unemployment was running at a rate of 13.3 per cent. Last year it moved up to 18.7 per cent. According to the OECD it will average 22 per cent this year and next. This pretty well reflects the statistics in my own riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. The over-all message from the OECD is that the magnitude of the unemployment problem left over from the recession is overwhelming.

This problem is particularly serious for young people who shoulder the major part of the burden of a global recession and high unemployment. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already observed, frustration and apathy among the young could lead to social discontent. With respect to my own riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, great concern is not enough.

SPORTS

DENIAL OF NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE FRANCHISE TO SASKATOON

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, this particular week there has been another phase in what I call the "battle of Saskatoon", which is the battle of trying to get a National Hockey League hockey team to that city. As you are aware, the St. Louis Blues were for sale last spring. The National Hockey League would not accept the offer which was made by a group of representatives from the city of Saskatoon.

On Wednesday afternoon, my friend, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), proposed a motion in the House during Private Members' Hour which was amended by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), and which, thanks to the Liberals, passed. What that amounts to is that the granting, transfer, and operation of professional sports franchises should be looked at by the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee.

● (1110)

I would ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Chairman of the Committee, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), to see that this matter is taken to the Committee as soon as possible, and that the president and directors of the NHL be asked to appear as witnesses to explain why they turned down that offer, which was a good one, without any real explanation. I believe we now have an opportunity to bring the battle of Saskatoon to a successful conclusion.

WORLD MARITIME DAY

SAFETY AT SEA

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, this is a statement I wanted to make yesterday on the occasion of World Maritime Day, but because of the NDP adjournment motion stalling the proceedings of this House—

Mr. Nielsen: You kept the bells ringing.

Mr. Flis:— I was denied the privilege of doing so. The International Maritime Organization, IMO, a specialized agency of the UN based in London, England, designated September 29, 1983, as World Maritime Day.

Madam Speaker: Order. If the Hon. Member is going to continue in that vein I want to remind him that the only thing possible at this time is to make a statement on an issue which preoccupies the Hon. Member. There is no question that statements under Standing Order 21 should be used to offer good wishes on the occasion of one or other special day.

Mr. Flis: Madam Speaker, IMO, like its sister organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, ICAO, which has its headquarters in Montreal, is concerned with the promotion of safety. With ICAO it is air safety, with IMO it is safety of life at sea.

As one of the world's largest trading nations, Canada draws upon maritime services to transport over 200 million tons of international commerce annually. Domestic waterborne trading exceeds 65 million tons annually. With over 500 active ports and harbours, Canada annually hosts approximately 60,000 commercial vessel arrivals. The safe and effective administration of this country's maritime environment is entrusted to our Canadian Coast Guard whose members are globally recognized for their professionalism. It is my pleasure, therefore, following the occasion of yesterday's World Maritime Day, to draw to the attention of this House the important of shipping to the Canadian economy and population.

I feel I speak for all Members of this House when I wish seafarers throughout the world, our Coast Guard, the IMO organization, and all 125 nations which are members of IMO, continued success and achievement.

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—DEALERS' OFFER TO BUY COMPANY

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, a Manitoba businessman named John Buhler, and other White Farm Equipment dealers, are making a serious attempt to retain White Farm Limited as a viable separate entity. Last night Mr. Buhler telexed a letter of intent to buy, along with a deposit of $100,000, to the receiver. He plans to assemble a $11.6 million offer in conjunction with other White Farm dealers and possibly a financier. But, Madam Speaker, he needs more time.

I urge the federal Government either to view this letter of intent as a legal, solid offer, or to extend the deadline from 9 a.m. tomorrow, Saturday, until October 15, by which time Mr. Buhler expects to have ironed out the details. At stake is the fate of 119 White Farm dealerships. There are also the thousands of farmers who own White Farm equipment and require replacement parts for that equipment, who must be considered.

This latest offer is especially important to my home Province of Manitoba, where there are 20 White Farm dealerships employing more than 200 people. Relocating the company's assets in Manitoba, as Mr. Buhler has proposed, would place the headquarters in the very region where the products are in high demand.

The Government has already seen to it that an offer to purchase by White Farm's parent company in the United States was rejected. I urge the Government therefore not to let this offer also slip through its hands.

ABORTION

FREEDOM OF CHOICE ADVOCATED

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver-East): Madam Speaker, tomorrow women and men across the country will mark a day of action for "Choice on Abortion". The issue is choice, not pro or anti-abortion. The right of the indvidual male or female to exercise freedom of choice in private medical and sexual matters is a hallmark of Canadian society. The Badgley Report documented economic and geographic inequities in the abortion law. Fewer than 30 per cent of hospitals in Canada perform abortions. Increasing numbers of women must obtain abortions in the U.S. Prevention of unwanted pregnancies, of course, is preferable to abortion. If birth control information, education and counselling were more readily available, the number of abortions would decrease. However, the federal Government has been steadily eroding Planned Parenthood's funding.

In 1982, 72 per cent of Canadians believed that the decision to perform an abortion should rest with the consenting patient and her doctor. Ninety-five per cent of doctors approve of abortion in some circumstances. The Canadian Labour Congress, the United Church, and the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women support the removal of abortion from the Criminal Code.

• (1115)

The NDP reaffirmed our support for freedom of choice and a full range of reproductive health services. Over the past 20 years many countries, regardless of political system or religious ideology, have legalized abortions. As Grace MacInnis said in 1969, "There will never be—

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—SHOOTING DOWN OF KOREAN AIRLINER—REJECTION OF CANADIAN NOTE AND RESOLUTION

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I am aware that a role that has been assigned to the Speaker is part of the problem, but my question relates to government-to-government communications and responsibilities.

The Soviet chargé d'affaires in Ottawa first abruptly rejected a formal note from the Government with regard to the shooting down of the Korean aircraft, and second, declined to accept the unanimous resolution of this House condemning that action. Has the Government conveyed to the Soviet Government its displeasure at the conduct of the chargé d'affaires and, if so, would it table any notes or correspondence relating thereto?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): The other day the Speaker of the House said that with respect to the resolution passed by the House—

Mr. Nielsen: The note.

Mr. Pepin: —this was her responsibility.

Mr. Nielsen: The government note.

Mr. Cousineau: You don't want to listen.

Mr. Pepin: The situation is well known. The Government has made representations with respect to compensation, both here in Ottawa and in Moscow.

Mr. McGrath: But they won't accept it.

Mr. Pepin: The Russians have returned the mail and they have now come up with a request of their own for compensation for the damage suffered—

Mr. McGrath: Have we accepted their note?

Mr. Pepin: —by the action, by the sanction we imposed on the transportation of Aeroflot to Canada. Therefore, call it diplomatic ping pong if you want—

Mr. McKnight: You guys blew your serve.

Mr. Pepin: —but we do not accept their view, obviously. We are continuing our constant effort to ensure that the investigation will take place, and to amend the rules of international law on this subject, as presented by the Minister of Transport at the ICAO Council meeting. We are continuing to request compensation. We are making efforts to define further what the compensation should be. This is not an easy exercise. We all realize that fact. However, this is one in which tenacity, perseverance, patience—

Mr. Nielsen: When is it going to come?

Mr. Pepin: —are the order of the day. As my hon. friend knows, in a previous instance, in the Comos instance, after reacting negatively, because of the tenacity of the Canadian Government, the Russians finally made compensation.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, has the Government received an acknowledgement of any kind, at any time, from the Soviet authorities of its formal request for an explanation of the atrocity in which ten Canadians went to their death, and its concurrent request for compensation for the victims' families and, if so, would the Minister table any notes or related documentation before this House?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): I find it difficult to answer because the facts are known. The Russians are aware—

Mr. McGrath: Where is the note?

Mr. Pepin: —of our representations on that subject.

Mr. Nielsen: Answer the question.

Mr. Pepin: As I said before, they are returning these notes, but they cannot be ignorant of the fact that we have protested very strongly—

Mr. Nielsen: Table the note.

Mr. Pepin: —and that we have established a presumption of guilt, to speak the legal language familiar to my hon. friend. We have done that.

Mr. Nielsen: Table the note.

Mr. Pepin: We have constantly pressed for it, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. Nielsen: Table the note.

Mr. Pepin: I am really at a loss in determining what my hon. friend really wants to know.

Mr. Nielsen: Table the note.

Mr. Hees: Just answer his question.

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, it is pretty peculiar that the leadership of the Government would advocate an even-handed posture with regard to the super powers when one of them will not even acknowledge its existence. There is a serious problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED ROLE FOR NEW CANADIAN AMBASSADOR

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Government take the initiative, Mr. Acting Prime Minister, of instructing our ambassador designate, Mr. Peter Roberts, who, I understand, is leaving for Moscow on Monday or shortly thereafter, to hand our formal protest and demands for compensation to the Soviet Foreign Minister when he is presenting his official credentials in the Soviet Union?

• (1120)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, when Ambassador Pearson left Moscow he had an extended meeting with Mr. Gromyko. He spelled out, in oral terms, the case that Canada was making against what happened to the Korean airliner.

Mr. Nielsen: Answer the question.

Mr. Pepin: The Russians are quite aware of what we are doing. What is it that my hon. friend wants? He wants me to table the note that we have sent to the Soviet Union, the one that they returned?

Mr. Nielsen: Will Roberts present it? Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: Just answer the question.

Mr. Pepin: What is it that the Leader of the Opposition wants? Mr. Roberts will obviously, at the first occasion, repeat the case that the Canadian Government has been making repeatedly against the Soviet Union.

Mr. Nielsen: Deliver the note. Roberts delivers the note.

Mr. Pepin: They will return it again. He will deliver the message that is in the note. The Russians have established that in order not to recognize responsibility they cannot accept the note.

Mr. Nielsen: Where is your tenacity?

Mr. Pepin: They recognize that. Thus, we will keep repeating the case we have already made against the action taken against the Korean airliner by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, the Minister is saying that he is absolutely helpless in the face of a simple, straight forward problem that has to be dealt with on a government-to-government basis. That is what he is saying.

INSTRUCTIONS TO NEW AMBASSADOR

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I see that the Minister has just taken instructions from the Minister of Finance who would be better off sticking with problems in the economy rather than advising in external affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: My question is very straightforward. Will the Government instruct our ambassador to designate who, I understand, will be meeting with the Soviet Foreign Minister to present his own credentials, to present the outrage and dismay of the Canadian people as expressed in that note, given this absolutely unacceptable international violation? Will he at least do that on behalf of the families who are aggrieved?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, obviously we will be doing that. But the departing Ambassador of Canada in the Soviet Union has already made that case very, very strongly in his last visit with the Minister of External Affairs of the Soviet Union. Our case has repeatedly been made for a full explanation. We have asked that in the UN Security Council and at the ICAO meeting. ICAO has decided to have an investigation. Unfortunately, the Soviets will not participate in that investigation. Admission of responsibility—we have pressed that very strongly. Full compensation—we have pressed that very strongly. I do not think any Government in the world has been clearer on that than Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: Instruct Roberts to deliver the note.

Mr. Pepin: I will make sure that when Mr. Roberts presents his credentials to the Soviet Union he will repeat it for the tenth time.

Some Hon. Members: Deliver the note.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT DEFICIT—IMPACT ON ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and it is further to the concerns expressed yesterday about the very high level of the budget deficit. I recently read a compilation of 16 leading North American economists who all expressed the same concern about the very high level of deficits and the effect this has on the economy. Their conclusion was that we would either have record high interest rates, a crowding out of private sector borrowers and high inflation, or an aborted recovery. Since that is the conclusion he will have to deal with whether he likes it or not, what action is he proposing to take to deal with this, since his budget of last April clearly has not been enough?

• (1125)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right in making reference to the fact that most analysts in the United States in particular, and in Canada as well, feel that the size of the deficit is important in terms of the performance of the economy over the medium and long term. I have indicated this in my own budget and I have taken a number of steps in that regard. In the speech I made to the International Monetary Fund I also indicated that this was a very important issue to be addressed in North America over the next while.

If my hon. friend would check the statements of the analysts he has referred to, he will find that practically all of them have mentioned this as a medium-term problem and not as a short-term problem, and that there is no crowding out of private investors at the present time and none is expected this year. Most analysts do not expect that there will be a serious problem in this regard at least until late next year.

In my own budget I have taken steps to reduce the deficit gradually over the next few years. As the Hon. Member knows, the plans contained in my budget have been very well received by the country and by the financial markets as being a responsible step to gradually moderating the size of the deficit.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I think the Minister is living in the past again. It is clear that the commentary we have been hearing has suggested that this recovery, which is very tentative right now, will be aborted.

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, let me refer back to the conclusions reached by the Conference Board a couple of days ago. Those conclusions indicated that the unemployment rate in Canada relative to that in the United States would decline far more slowly and would still be around 11 per cent in five years' time. That is clearly related to the level of interest rates over that period of time. Is the Minister doing anything to address this problem, or will he consign to a further five years of misery those one and a half million Canadians who are out of work today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member chooses to refer to one report made by one organization. He neglects to refer to reports made by the 18 other organizations that have taken somewhat different views in this regard. I can refer him to a statement made by the former head of the C.D. Howe Institute, Judith Maxwell, who has taken a very different view.

Rather than engaging in a battle of forecasters with my hon. friend, I would invite him to look at the facts. He will see, for instance, that our interest rates, in spite of the large deficit that exists this year, have declined since the beginning of the year. I hope that they will continue to decline gradually. What is even more important is that our interest rates have declined significantly compared to those in the United States.

The spread that formerly existed between U.S. and Canada interest rates has narrowed extensively for short-term papers. We now have an interest rate in this country which is half a point below that in the United States. I think the Canadian economy has performed very well in that regard. The world financial institutions and the Canadian people at large are showing a great deal more confidence in the country than my hon. friend seems to be showing.

Oral Questions

BANKS AND BANKING

BANK OF MONTREAL—REPORTED OFFER TO BUY UNITED STATES BANK

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance, who is well aware that the Canadian banks have become rather notorious because of their unwillingness to assist Canadians in their struggle to survive in a sea of red ink. However, we learned something very interesting in the last couple of days. The Bank of Montreal, with its historic high interest rates this particular year, is now planning to use in excess of half a billion dollars to buy a bank in the United states. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he can explain to the House and Canadians how this transaction by the Bank of Montreal will assist Canadians? How will it create jobs and create an economic stimulus in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will not comment on rumours and speculations about an issue such as this. My hon. friend knows that. Perhaps I can raise one question in his mind. What if such a purchase, for instance, were to be made with money that was made by the Bank of Montreal in the United States? If not one Canadian dollars was involved, would he have the same attitude about it?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I believe that is somewhat of a glib response.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance knows that the Constitution gives him the responsibility of ensuring that the Canadian banking system operates in the best interests of Canadians. Will the Minister, recognizing his constitutional responsibility and knowing full well that the takeover that I speak of will occur very quickly, intervene? Does he plan to do anything about this?

● (1130)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I answered this in the first part of my previous reply. I remind the Hon. Member that we in this country have everything to gain by having Canadian financial institutions and manufacturing institutions with branches abroad and being very active internationally. This country needs a lot more Canadian multinationals and large Canadian firms with Canadian shareholders and with Canadian head offices. I thought the NDP had complained enough about foreign multinationals being in this country. They should now rejoice if we have in this country strong institutions that are ready to take on institutions in other countries.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They never rejoice.

Mr. Riis: I remind the Minister that in excess of half a billion dollars which the Bank of Montreal plans to spend to take over a bank in the United States could have been invested in the Canadian construction industry and this would have created 50,000 jobs in this country. That is the kind of economic development, stimulus, and social response the banks ought to be encouraging in this country.

SPREAD BETWEEN LOAN CHARGES AND INTEREST DEPOSIT RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I want to turn to the interest rate situation which was raised by a previous questioner. With all economists now agreeing that present high interest rates are keeping a lid on any real recovery program in this country, is the Minister of Finance prepared to meet with the chief executive officer of Canada's banks to see whether they are prepared to reduce the interest rate spread in this country, which at the moment is higher than it has been since the early 1970s?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have already indicated to my Hon. colleague that I am always glad to meet those who are responsible for our financial institutions in Canada, including banks or any other organization, if that can be helpful in improving the economic situation in Canada. I would also remind the Hon. Member that, as I said earlier, we have brought down interest rates in Canada very rapidly during the past year, and that at the present time, the prime rate in Canada is the same as in the United States, despite the fact that our inflation rate here in Canada is higher than it is in the States, even today. As a result, the real return on money in Canada is less than it is in the States at this time, and just the same, we have succeeded in maintaining this policy without a devaluation of the Canadian dollar. I have always tried to keep interest rates as low as possible in this country, and that has been the objective of the monetary and fiscal policy we have pursued since last year, and we intend to continue our efforts to reduce interest rates as much as possible. I think that what has happened during the last six months is a clear indication of the resolve of the Government and the Bank of Canada to work at keeping interest rates as low as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

ACCESS PROGRAM—CREATION OF JOBS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration who has stated the need to involve the private sector in creating new employment opportunities, a position which this Party accepts and endorses without qualification. The only program in place to provide direct incentives to the private sector is the Access Program which was announced in April of this year. It set aside $95 million to provide 31,000 jobs for Canada's young people. Can the Minister give the House an estimate of how many jobs have been created under that program?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asked how many jobs. I am not sure whether he means jobs for young people, or overall. The figure overall is about 81,000. I believe I have the figure for young people here somewhere. I will try to dig it out and give it to the Hon. Member.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL INITIATIVE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I am sorry the Minister did not understand the question. My understanding is that to date not one job has been created under the Access Program, notwithstanding the fact that it was announced in April of this year, at a time when his own Department was telling his predecessor through a study that youth unemployment was going to get progressively worse during the year. That is the point the Minister seems to miss.

Given the importance of youth unemployment and unemployment among women, is the Minister prepared to convene a meeting of his provincial counterparts to see whether they can devise ways of involving the Provinces, as they did under the NEED Program, in a program similar to Access which would target incentives to the private sector to hire not only young people but women, who are also hard hit?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I refer both to this year and to oncoming years. In the year 1983-84 we are spending $390 million in assistance to provide young people with jobs. I believe that approximately 130,000 young people have been put to work as a result of those efforts. Looking ahead from 1983 into the next two years, through Career Access we believe that 36,000 people will find jobs and with the Job Corps another 8,000 young people. We expect that 66,000 young people will find work through the Canada Works Program. It will be seen that not only has there been a considerable impact on youth employment in the past through projects and programs which have already been mounted, but we expect that effort to continue successfully.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

VISIT BY FRENCH GOVERNMENT VESSELS TO GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of State for External Relations, who is also Acting Prime Minister this morning. It is my information that the French navy frigate La Henaff, and the seismic ship Lucien Beaufort, sighted on August 11 carrying out surveys within Canada's exclusive economic zone and outside their 12 mile territorial limit, were not there to assist fishing boats, as claimed, since the three or four trawlers operating out of St. Pierre and Miquelon were on refit in August. What was the real purpose of these ships from France when carrying out seismic surveys within our exclusive economic zone, and is it true that France is presently issuing exploration permits for oil and gas within their claimed 200 mile zone between St. Pierre and continental France, which is really Canada's exclusive economic zone?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the facts as narrated by my hon. friend are basically correct, and they have been reported in the press in the same fashion. Upon being informed of the presence of the two ships, the Canadian Government asked the French Government for a full explanation. There has been an exchange of correspondence between the two Governments on the subject.

Mr. Nielsen: Did they accept it?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, they did. It is a better tradition than the one we just talked about.

The French tended to downgrade the significance of "the coincidence" in which two ships happened to be in the same area at the same time, one, a seismic ships, and the other, a military ship. This has also been the subject of discussion on the negotiations with respect to the state of the French request for the extension of the continental shelf around St. Pierre and Miquelon, the Canadian position being that we recognize the 12 mile territorial zone, but we do not recognize the extension. The Canadian Government has repeated its willingness to discuss further with the French. It has been decided to hold another meeting next spring on the subject. Depending on where you sit, this was—

Madam Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the Hon. Minister, but his answer is really too long.

CANADIAN FISHING RIGHTS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. The implication that this was just simply two ships which passed in the night is hard to accept. I would say to the Minister that if French claims are accepted it would mean the loss of fishing rights on St. Pierre Bank for Canadian fishermen.

Mr. McGrath: We might even lose Newfoundland.

Mr. Crouse: In view of this threat, what steps is Canada taking now to protect our fishing rights, especially our scallop fishing rights on this Bank? The rights of our scallop fishermen are being seriously threatened by the Americans on Georges Bank. If this is followed through it could well mean the total destruction of a $75 million scallop fishery in Atlantic Canada. What steps is the Government taking to protect that fishery?

• (1140)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot say what steps are being taken because there has been no change to the situation as it existed before. This incident, or call it whatever you like, this happening of the two ships being there at the same time, did not influence the situation of the fishery as it is now. I have already indicated that the discussion on the extent of the zone recognized by the Canadian Government around St. Pierre and Miquelon is following diplomatic channels.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE CLOSING OF KHD LABORATORY IN MONTREAL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister. According to this morning's Gazette, KHD, a German multinational company is threatening to close down its research laboratory in Montreal. The company has already received $34 million in grants from the federal Government since 1974. What action does the Government intend to take to protect the jobs involved and to keep this laboratory here in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of this situation. I shall bring it to the attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion as soon as possible.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It was in The Gazette this morning, on the first page and it is just another example of economic blackmail by a foreign company. To get back to my supplementary question, I would like to know, for future reference, why the Government refuses to become directly involved by taking shares in a company it subsidizes.

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is seeking a debate on this matter. There have been situations where the Government of Canada did take equity in companies it was assisting. I do not think we can start a philosophical debate on the issue this morning, but as far as the substance of the problem is concerned, I shall bring it to the attention of the Minister.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SERVICE TO SMALL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Acting Prime Minister. On September 21 the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau raised the subject of the Canada Post Corporation's cancellation of highway service deliveries, post office to post office, in the small communities of Canada. Fortunately, that has been postponed, at least. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if this postponement of the cessation of services to the small communities of Canada is permanent, or is merely a temporary cancellation of the program which was to be introduced by Canada Post?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sorry that I have to say once again that I am not au fait with that situation. I will bring it to the attention of the Minister. I apologize for the fact that the Minister responsible is not here this morning. All the Ministers have good reasons and I could recite them. I will have to take the question as notice.

Mr. McCain: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the position of the Acting Prime Minister. There is no question but that the population of Canada as a whole wanted some reduction of the deficit on the Canada Post service as it is conducted by the Government, but that was never interpreted to mean that it would be accomplished by the reduction of historic and vital services.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON POSTAL SERVICES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he would bring the subject up with the Minister responsible for postal services. Would he also advise the House of the Government's policy in respect to the further curtailment of postal services to the deserving people of Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have already said that I would do that. I will observe at the same time that a corporation was created by the Government in order to resolve these issues. My hon. friend recognizes that this is not easy, in the sense that they have budgetary limitations. That is the kind of tough decision that all Crown corporations have to make. As usual, the Minister says that he will pass it on to the head of the Crown corporation.

Madam Speaker: Order. Would Hon. Members not agree with the Chair that it is not altogether logical to have a supplementary question to a question that has been taken as notice? I would suggest that, in a case where a question is taken as notice, the supplementary question could be reserved to the time when the question is answered. If Hon. Members feel that is fair, that is what I will do in the future.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY—DEGREE OF CANADIAN OWNERSHIP

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Last Tuesday in the House, in response to a question by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, about the Canadian ownership account in his last sentence as reported at page 27497 of Hansard the Minister said:

—the degree of foreign ownership in the gas and oil field decreasing from the ninety per cent level to the sixty per cent level at which it is now.

In its 1982 report the Petroleum Monitoring Agency clearly states that the level of Canadian ownership prior to the introduction of the National Energy Program stood at 74 per cent; today it stands at 66 per cent. Those figures are a lot different from what was stated by the Minister on Tuesday. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister if he would like to withdraw or correct that statement.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I would not because I took those figures from a report of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources saying that in the early seventies—

Mr. Nielsen: That was your first mistake.

Mr. Pepin: —the level was at 90 per cent of foreign ownership and that at the moment it is 66 per cent or 63 per cent, I cannot recall. I was not giving the House bad information. These are figures I received from the Department of Energy Mines and Resources.

Mr. Thomson: Madam Speaker, the statement is grossly misleading. The report of the Petroleum Monitoring Agency on the level of Canadian ownership says that even in 1977 the level of Canadian ownership was 74 per cent.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister has left a grossly misleading impression on the Canadian public by that statement. I would ask him to withdraw it or correct it.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will just repeat it. My friend was talking about 1977 and I was talking about 1970. I said, in the early seventies.

An Hon. Member: You did not.

Mr. Pepin: I thought I did. If I did not, I will correct myself and repeat it. In the early seventies the level was at 90 per cent; now the level is at 60 per cent.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

CHAIRMAN'S RESIGNATION—APPOINTMENT OF SUCCESSOR

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Communications.

[English]

The question arises from yesterday's announced resignation of the distinguished Chairman of the Canadian Radio television and Communications Commission, Dr. Oliver Meisel. Since the Minister was given notice of Dr. Meisel's departure about seven weeks ago, can he say whether a working broadcaster is on the short list for his replacement, and how soon Dr. Meisel's successor may be announced?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I can very well understand the Hon. Member's interest in the CRTC. I know he is a former broadcaster. What he is suggesting, in the full light of Parliament, is that I add his name to the list. I am willing to do so. I can also understand the uncertainty in his mind with the approaching election.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I think I will pass up that appointment for another two, three or four terms.

ROLE OF COMMISSION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): While the Minister is deliberating during this transition period, is he thinking of reconstituting the CRTC to speed up its agonizingly slow process? Is the Government rethinking the role of a CRTC now that the communications explosion has made that kind of regulatory agency almost an anachronism?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I think that in a country like Canada an organization such as the CRTC will always remain a necessity. While other countries may deregulate, I think the proper way of handling the question in Canada is by reregulation which will allow a body such as the CRTC to take into account the new technological environment in which we live and to handle the questions offered to them in a more efficient manner.

MEDICAL CARE

EFFECT OF EXTRA BILLING ON SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question was to be directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in her absence I will address it to the Acting Prime Minister. The Minister knows, as does every Hon. Member in this House of Commons, that the number of senior citizens is steadily growing in Canada. This is a group which lives basically with fear and anxiety about the future, particularly senior women. In New Brunswick this past week there have been press conferences held by a group of senior citizens indicating the fear they have about the cutbacks to medicare and the hospital fee schedules which are being introduced. Would the Minister tell the House how the Government of Canada can justify not doing anything when senior citizens are suffering like this?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Government has indicated its position on the question of extra billing and user fees. That position was made public during the month of August. This is the position of the Government. We have indicated that the Government intends to introduce a health act which would take steps to ensure that extra billing and user fees will not be encouraged. The Government intends to introduce that legislation as soon as it is appropriate.

In the meantime I would like to remind my hon. friend that pressure should be brought upon the provincial Governments concerned by the senior citizens. Indeed, I would hope that the representations made by the senior citizens concerned would be enough to impress the responsible provincial authorities.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I will again address my question to the Acting Prime Minister. I believe the Government does have a plan right now and it is intentionally holding it back by calling for this health act which is not being brought forward. I believe the Government is going to use medicare as one of the main issues in fighting the next election. Would the Minister tell the House when the elderly people of Canada can expect the Government to act for them?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this Government has been acting on behalf of and for senior citizens ever since it has been in office. The number of steps we have taken to support senior citizens compares favourably with that of any other country. Certainly it compares favourably with anything which any New Democratic Party Government has done provincially anywhere, let alone the Conservative Party, about which I need not speak in the particular regard, because of its lack of concern.

I would like to tell my hon. friend that he will not have to wait until the next election before seeing the new Canada Health Act.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

U.S. CONGRESS DECISION ON EXTENSION OF SEASON

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister is no doubt aware that on August 3, without debate or public hearing, the United States House of Representatives Committee on Public Works approved a Bill authorizing the extension of the Seaway and the extension of winter navigation on the Seaway. The position of the Government of Canada previously had been that that was not a desirable option. Can the Minister tell us whether or not there were any consultations between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States with respect to positions on this Bill? And what is the policy of the Government of Canada today with respect to the extension of the St. Lawrence Seaway navigation season?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, in the United States system an act or initiative by Congress is not necessarily one which is adopted or put forward by the executive branch. It is something which they have to reconcile between themselves. Therefore it does not necessarily represent the position taken by the U.S. Government. We do, however, have a continuing line of discussion with the U.S. Government concerning the joint management of the Seaway. I would point out that at the present time, because of the reduction in traffic over the last few years, there is no immediate demand or requirement for extension of that capacity. It is a matter which we will continue to discuss. However, I would not say it is on the front burner of examination, simply because the Seaway is working very adequately now and servicing all the traffic requirements.

REQUEST FOR DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. CONGRESS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the situation in the United States with respect to the separation of powers. There has been a movement now, however, on the part of the House of Representatives. I understand there is even stronger backing by the Senate of the United States with respect to the proposal. If the Government is continuing discussions with the administration, are there any initiatives being taken by the Government of Canada with respect to discussions with the Congress of the United States, or is this project being carried on much like the Garrison Project carried on, even though everyone said it was not going anywhere?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to Garrison which, of course, is a difficult issue for those of us from Manitoba. I would not want the same problem to arise, so I will seek the co-operation of External Affairs and our Ambassador in Washington in order to determine from the Congress what its particular position is. We will receive a report, and I will forward it to the Hon. Member.

FINANCE

TARIFF RELIEF SOUGHT FOR EDMONTON COMPANY

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Could the Minister tell the House how long the recommendation for tariff relief for Birdman Enterprises of Edmonton has been sitting in his office? When will that recommendation go forward to Cabinet for final decision? And when will Cabinet decide?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I will be glad to check and report back to the Hon. Member.

MONTANA ENTICEMENT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, is the Minister aware of the fact that the State of Montana is making a concerted effort to take that industry with all those jobs and all that export potential and move it from Edmonton to Montana? The problem, Madam Speaker, is that the request for relief was made in May. The Civil Service was slow. The Minister's office is even slower. When a Minister's office is killing Canadian jobs—

An Hon. Member: What is the question?

Madam Speaker: Order. We have had the question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—SHOOTING DOWN OF KOREAN AIRLINER—EFFECT ON DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of State for External Relations. It concerns the tragic shooting down of the KAL 007. I am sure he will know and bear in mind that this is not just a case of responsibility and compensation. There is another more recent issue, one of diplomatic relations. I would like to ask the Minister, therefore, if the Government of Canada has communicated any message to the Soviet Union or to the Soviet Embassy indicating that we will not tolerate any refusal of a message sent by the Government of Canada or by the Parliament of Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe we are getting into formalities here. I feel that the important thing to bear in mind is the question, has the Canadian Government communicated to the Government of the Soviet Union its displeasure, anger, and disapproval of what took place on August 31? I feel that this is clear. We have done that. The House of Commons has done that. We have sent messages. The Canadian Ambassador in the Soviet Union has paid a visit to the Secretary for External Affairs of the Soviet Union. We have protested in ICAO. We have protested in the Security Council also. I believe the message is pretty clear. I do not think there is any doubt as to what our position is. We established from the beginning a presumption of guilt. We said to the Soviet Union, "Now you prove us wrong. You give us the information. Otherwise, recognize your responsibilities and act accordingly".

USE OF EMBASSIES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. It seems to me that the important issue to Canadians in general is the question of what is an embassy if it is not an institution for the means of exchanging communications, whether or not communications are accepted. The question is that if you have an embassy on Canadian soil, surely the purpose of that embassy is to receive messages. I simply ask the Minister: is that priciple not going to be enforced, because at least the messages must be received? Otherwise, will he not address the question as to why we would have an embassy which simply exists here and will not accept Canadian messages? What is the definition for having an embassy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe we have used both the Soviet embassy in Ottawa and our embassy in Moscow. We have made full use of these embassies. I will leave it at that. I am sure the chargé d'affaires of the Soviet Union reads Hansard every day, and I am sure he will take the Hon. Member for Crowfoot's condemnation of his behaviour personally, and may communicate it to his Government.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—MEDICAL TESTING OF IMPAIRED DRIVERS

STANDING ORDERS AND PROCEDURE

PRESENTATION OF TENTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present the tenth report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure in both official languages. As I do so, I would like the House to know that despite the stressful position of the House this was a Committee which arrived at its conclusions, all of them in all of the reports, by consensus rather than by vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POINT OF ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES—PRESENTATION OF NINTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Madam Speaker, a mistake was made in the text of the Ninth Report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates which was presented in the House on Thursday, September 29, 1983. On page 2 of the report, Schedule I should read as follows:

Clause 60 is amended by substituting "Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion" for "Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce".

—and renumber the subsequent items accordingly.

Madam Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have the text corrected accordingly. Madam Speaker, the mistake is due to the fact that the amendment to Schedule I was laid on the Table but was not voted on, while the one I am proposing was. The other amendment that was not voted on must be presented at the report stage.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, this takes me by surprise. There have been no discussions held with me with respect to this request. I would ask the Hon. Member to be tolerant and not ask consent today but allow me the weekend to look at it and perhaps we will have consent on Monday.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Since we do not have unanimous consent, the Hon. Member will certainly approve of the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,032, 4,824, 4,889, 4,956 and 4,960.

[Text]

TRADE FACILITATION OFFICE

Question No. 4,032—Mr. Herbert:

Where is the Trade Facilitation Office of the Canadian International Development Agency located, how many persons are on staff and what is its annual budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Trade Facilitation Office is not part of the Canadian International Development Agency. It is an independent non-profit, non-governmental organization which receives CIDA support.

The Trade Facilitation Office is located in Phase 4 of Place du Portage.

KRUSHCHEV DOCUMENTARY

Question No. 4,824—Mr. Beatty:

1. In 1972, was a CBC television documentary on Nikita Krushchev prevented from being aired after being promoted until several days before the scheduled air time and, if so, for what reason?

2. Did the U.S.S.R., through Moscow or its Embassy in Canada, have any contact with the Government regarding the program?

3. At any time, did the U.S.S.R. government indicate that the airing of the program on the CBC would be considered an unfriendly act by Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. In the autumn of 1972 the CBC negotiated with Time Life Inc. for the right to a television documentary entitled "Krushchev Remembers". The CBC required editing privileges to fit the documentary into a one hour time slot. Late in the negotiations, these privileges were refused by Time Life Inc. and consequently the CBC withdrew from the contract.

2. In advance of the anticipated airing of the documentary, a representative of the Soviet Embassy called on the Department of External Affairs.

3. The Soviet Embassy representative expressed concern that the broadcast could have a negative impact on bilateral relations between Canada and the Soviet Union.

PETRO-CANADA INTERNATIONAL ASSISTANCE CORPORATION

Question No. 4,889—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. On what date, under what authority, and in what circumstances was Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation incorporated?

2. What are its terms of reference?

3. (a) How is it financed (b) what is its capitalization (c) what is its budget and how is the budget approved (d) what are its borrowing powers?

4. (a) Who are its officers (b) what amount are they paid (c) where do they meet?

5. Is the Corporation under specific direction to contract Canadian enterprise and capital equipment in all circumstances for its operations?

6. (a) How are its various activities undertaken, such as those in Jamaica, Tanzania, Senegal, and Barbados (b) are they undertaken by solicitation or by generation from within the Corporation itself and, in either event, what criteria are used in selecting the project to be initiated at one time or another?

7. Does the Corporation report to Parliament or to Petro-Canada?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation reports as follows:

1. Petro-Canada International was initially incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act on January 20, 1981, pursuant to the Petro-Canada Act. PCI's mandate, which is to act as a delivery mechanism for Canadian official development assistance to oil-importing developing countries, was established by Order in Council P.C. 1981-2167, dated August 5, 1981. The Articles of Incorporation were subsequently amended on November 18, 1981 to reflect the directives of the Government and on April 22, 1982, through Order in Council P.C. 1982-1264, the Corporation's name was changed to Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation.

2. Terms of reference: (a) Assist developing countries to reduce or eliminate their dependence on imported oil by using Canadian technology and expertise, where possible, for hydrocarbon exploration and related activities, and function as a direct-delivery mechanism for Canadian official development assistance and, as an executing agent for other development assistance institutions, to carry out the following activities in developing countries eligible to receive Canadian bilateral development assistance and which are dependent on imported oil:

(i) to participate in exploration for hydrocarbon resources, particularly oil and gas, in developing countries;

(ii) to conduct pre-exploration and related studies in developing countries; and

(iii) to provide technical assistance and training to personnel from developing countries in hydrocarbon resource exploration development and production-related activities.

(b) Operate as an instrument of Canadian official development assistance in a manner consistent with the government's foreign aid objectives and programs.

3. (a) PCIAC is financed by funds appropriated by Parliament under the spending estimates of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

(b) PCAC's one share is held by its parent, Petro-Canada.

(c) Under the Articles of Incorporation, prior to the commencement of PCIAC's financial year, the Corporation must submit a capital budget for the approval of the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Finance, and the President of the Treasury Board and an operating budget to the Government for the approval of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the President of the Treasury Board. However, at the present time, PCIAC provides assistance in the form of grants only and does not submit a capital budget. The 1982 operating budget for PCIAC was $21 million, and the 1983 budget has been set at $42 million.

(d) The Articles of Incorporation stipulate that PCIAC cannot borrow money without the approval of the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the President of the Treasury Board. There is, however, a provision for an advance or loan from Petro-Canada which in the aggregate cannot exceed $50 million.

4. (a) and (b) The Board of Directors of PCIAC is William J. Jenkins, Wilbert H. Hopper, Frederick G. Rayer, Peter M. Towe, George W. Tough. The Directors do not receive any remuneration.

The Officers of PCIAC are Frederick G. Rayer, President, Georges A. Léger, Vice-President, Peter M. Towe, Chairman, Robert McCaskill, Secretary. These officers are employees of Petro-Canada, which charges PCIAC monthly for their services on a non-profit, cost-recovery basis according to the time actually spent on the business of the Corporation.

(c) To date, meetings of the Board of Directors have been held in Ottawa.

5. PCIAC was instructed to utilize Canadian technology and expertise where possible in the development and implementation of projects that would assist developing countries to reduce or eliminate their dependency on imported oil. A major criterion for consideration of any project by PCIAC's Board of Directors is the potential for the use of Canadian goods and services.

6. (a) and (b) Prospective recipient countries submit project proposals for consideration through official channels. In reviewing these project proposals, the following criteria are used: the eligibility of the country for Canadian aid; the potential for the use of Canadian goods and services; the geological potential; the energy needs of the recipient country; the domestic economics of the proposed project; the potential social and economic benefits of a reduced dependency on imported oil; and the level of private sector activity in the recipient country.

Through an operating services agreement, PCIAC has access to the expert services of Petro-Canada, which in turn uses Canadian consultants, contractors and suppliers, as needed, in providing assistance in oil and gas exploration activities in a developing country.

7. PCIAC reports to Petro-Canada.

FOREST INDUSTRIES ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 4,956—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Forest Industry Advisory Committee and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. (a) What are the terms of reference of the Committee (b) what matters did it consider in the fiscal year 1982-83 (c) how often did it meet and how often is it required to meet (d) what reports and/or recommendations did the Committee publish in the fiscal year 1982-83?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

1. Yes there is a Forest Industries Advisory Committee.

(a) See below.

(b) (i) Background or expertise indicated by title and position. (ii) Members have been appointed on an indeterminate basis at the present time with length of each appointment yet to be decided.

(c) Members are reimbursed according to Treasury Board guidelines for travel expenses incurred to attend the meetings. Travel expenses for the two meetings held in February and April, 1983 totalled $14,177.82—see individual expenditures below. No other forms of reimbursement or salary to members are involved.

(d) The Government is willing to provide up to $125,000 for outside consultant services to assist the Committee in preparing an interim report on forest industry opportunities and constraints. Also, the Forest Industry Advisory Committee's administrative requirements are provided by indeterminate employees of Industry, Trade and Commerce using existing accommodation and resources.

2. (a) See below.

(b) The matters discussed in the fiscal year 1982-83 were primarily of an organizational nature related to the composition, terms of reference and work program of the Committee.

(c) Two meetings have been held to date and two meetings are scheduled for June, 1983. There are no formal requirements for meeting dates.

INTERNATIONAL SATELLITE MONITORING AGENCY

Question No. 4,960—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was a study by Dr. Robin Ranger on the arms control and crisis management potential of the proposed International Satellite Monitoring Agency to be completed by January 31, 1983 and, if so, has it been completed and, if not, on what date will it be completed?

2. What amount, if any, of the $9,000 allocated was paid?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. The report was completed as scheduled but the scientific authority which reviewed the report concluded that it required further work to meet the terms of the contract. Consequently the report was returned to Dr. Ranger for re-working and it is anticipated that the finished product should be ready to go to print by the end of July, 1983.

2. Total paid was $3,450.

[English]

Mr. Evans: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, during the war there was an old saying that when you have good literature, read it and pass it along. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary would be kind enough to indicate when he might pay some particular attention to questions which have been left on the Order Paper following the resignation of the former distinguished Member for Central Nova. Very specifically, they were questions asked on July 6, November 5, December 3, 1982 and March 3, March 29, June 7, June 14 and June 22 of 1983.

Mr. Evans: Madam Speaker, I have noted the Hon. Member's passing with regret and certainly I will look into the questions that were put to me today and I will see if I can get the answers to those as quickly as possible.

Mr. Forrestall: Madam Speaker, I have one further request of the Parliamentary Secretary. I have in place on the Order Paper a starred question dealing with the effects of the PIP grants. I wonder if I might have some indication now, some ten days or two weeks having gone by, if I can anticipate an early reply to that next week.

Mr. Evans: I will certainly look into that immediately, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: It was the practice to answer those in 48 hours.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Thursday, September 29, consideration of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport; and Motions Nos. 24, 25 and 29 (Mr. Benjamin).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I understand the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) had the floor when this matter was last debated and I believe he has approximately four minutes remaining.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, that is correct. When we reached six o'clock last night I was just trying to point out to the House that if the wording in the amendment as printed in Bill C-155 remains, this would constitute an attack on the co-operative spirit of the farmers of western Canada. I want to just underline the problem with the present wording as we have it in the amended and reprinted Bill.

The particular problem I want to highlight is that any of the farmers who are members of a local shipping committee or who are Wheat Pool delegates, those who might be officers of perhaps even a co-operative farm, farmers who are co-operating with other farmers, would be effectively excluded from eligibility for being elected as members of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. Our suggested solution, Mr. Speaker, is that we strike out the reference to co-operatives, which would strike them off the excluded list, thus making them eligible to participate on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

By way of background, Mr. Speaker, if we were to let the present wording remain in the amended Bill we are really betraying a cultural bias, albeit an eastern cultural bias, and I suppose this would be a good time to introduce to Hon. Members the concept of ethnocentrism. That is something we teach at any elementary sociology course at the university level. Basically it means we judge other cultures, or even regional subcultures, on the basis of our own experience. I suggest that if we were to leave this wording in here, that is really what is happening in this particular case. There would be a failure on the part of this Parliament as drafters of this legislation to recognize and understand unique Prairie institutions which have developed over the years co-operatively and in a pioneer spirit. Therefore we are suggesting that it is all the more important that we strike out co-operatives from this list of individuals who are excluded.

I am a bit embarrassed to say that it was the original amendment of the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) which excluded people who are members of co-ops and local shipping committees. What I am suggesting is that our amendment gives a second chance to the Government and to the Conservatives to right a fault which may have been unintentional; I give them the benefit of the doubt. However, in any case it is giving them and the Government an opportunity to correct a fault that really should not have been there in the first place.

• (1210)

I would like to elaborate a little further on the other motion that has been grouped with Motion No. 24, and that is Motion No. 29. If one were to ask me what our amendment would do, its basic intention is to reduce the heavy hand of the CNR and the CPR and to lower their representation on this particular Committee. We do not really think it is necessary that the CPR have a member and the CNR have a member. I think that historically their concerns have been adequately met. There would be an opportunity for producers to ensure that they are not overlooked in the drafting of the Bill.

If Your Honour wants to know why I have expressed concern, it is because we have been through a series of rail line abandonment hearings, for example, in Manitoba. I know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is aware that there have been some 18 hearings dealing with rail line abandonment in Manitoba and all 18 have been in favour of the railways. The railways are adequately represented in the CTC, which has looked after the interest of the railways. Why is it that the last 18 hearings all went in favour of the railways?

I see Your Honour is giving me the signal that my allotted time is about to expire. I am simply saying that if our amendments are accepted, there would be an opportunity for both the Government and the Conservative Party to right a historic wrong and ensure that the producers would be adequately represented. I just give those few suggestions to the House of Commons so that we could correct some of these obvious faults in the amended, reprinted wording of the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I understand that last night the House considered Motion No. 26. In accordance with Madam Speaker's ruling which grouped certain motions, it would follow that Motion No. 25 would now be withdrawn.

I gather that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) wanted some consideration of the issue. If he has any comment, perhaps now is the time, because it should logically now be withdrawn.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, at the moment, my druthers are that it does not logically follow that it be withdrawn. I would like to suggest that this be held over until Madam Speaker makes rulings on many other motions on Monday. If Your Honour will notice, our Motion No. 25, while it covers the same areas as our Motions Nos. 26 and 27, calls for five members, not six. This is the problem with the groupings. We wanted to deal with our Motion No. 25 first. If it succeeded, we would have withdrawn Motion No 26. If it did not succeed in the House, then we would want to deal with Motion No. 26. However, Motion No. 26 has been accepted. Our first choice motion was Motion No. 25. That is why I would like to ask if Your Honour could just leave this matter in abeyance until Monday and we could discuss it further.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair would accept the Hon. Member's request. I do not hear a procedural argument which would affect the statement I made to the effect that, with the passage of Motion No. 26, it would automatically follow that Motion No. 25 would be withdrawn. However, if the Hon. Member wants further time to consider the problem, then there is no difficulty. It will not interfere in any way with proceeding with debate on the other motions. Motions Nos. 24 and 29 are for debate now.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Motions Nos. 24 and 29, since I understand we will be pleading Motion No. 25 at a later time.

Briefly, I think the issue at stake here is chiefly whether those who pay are to have an adequate voice in what is done with the money they pay. The question under Motion No. 24 is whether the farmers who have taken the trouble to organize themselves into co-operatives will be penalized and restricted in being able to have representation on the Grain Board. It is apparently the preference of certain Hon. Members to the extreme right that co-operative members and officers should be so penalized, should be kept out of the action, if possible. This would, of course, reduce to some extent the actual grass roots representation of the producers as compared to the carriers. That is the reason for supporting Motion No. 29, which would reduce the railways to one representative.

The fact is that throughout the history of Canada the railroads have been overrepresented in decisions that concern the railroads and the users have been unrepresented. There was some shared of excuse for that when the users were scarcely there in the western Prairies a century ago. There is no excuse for it now.

To reduce the representation those users have had for many years through the co-operatives they have built would be extremely unjust and, in the long run, would turn out to be a mistake economically, because without any doubt the effect of that reduction would be to bias further the policy decisions in favour of the carriers, especially the Canadian Pacific Railway, and against the producing farmers. The bias has already gone farther than is healthy, but this kind of unfair redistribution of the powers of the board would increase it further so that decisions would be more unfair and more uneconomical.

If the farmers are unable to represent themselves adequately in the struggle over both freight rates and the application of the moneys that are spent on capital and operating of the railroad so far as grain is concerned, if their voices are muffled by the present proposal, then the farmers and the grain industry will suffer. The industry will decline as a result of the kind of action which our amendments seek to prevent.

What is at stake here is also a deeper principle which runs far beyond the Prairies. It is the principle of user-pay. We have heard this slogan, especially from certain government spokesmen over the last ten years, that the users should pay. It is usually focused on some particular area. At this point it is being focused on the prairie farmers who constitute a minority within Canada. There is a big propaganda campaign to accuse the prairie farmers of being fat cats who want someone else to pay for transporting their grain so that they can receive unearned income by not paying a fair share of the cost of transportation. It has not been mentioned, however, that practically every other form of transportation in Canada is also subsidized. Airline, marine and road transportation particularly is lavishly subsidized. If user-pay were to be applied against everyone who uses our highways, rides our airlines or uses the St. Lawrence Seaway or the rest of our marine transportation, there would be a unanimous outcry against that policy. It would be quite uneconomical for the majority of users, whether they are passengers or freight consignors and consignees. Therefore the policy of applying the principle of user-pay is handled selectively.

Approximately five years ago this policy was implemented in metro Toronto as a justification for jacking up the fares on the transit system and establishing an almost annual fixed increase in the TTC fares. The slogan at that time was "user-pay". It was pointed out in that case that if no one used the TTC, the roads would be congested to the point where the automobile drivers would be unable to use the roads. Therefore it was in the interest of not only TTC riders but the public that TTC be able to operate with a fare that even poor people could pay.

The same dispute applies in the case of the grain growers and the grain carriers. We see here an attempt on the part of the Government, and certain movers of Conservative amendments in league with the Government, to stick it to those farmers who have had the courage and sense of social responsibility to organize the co-operatives. These co-operatives which handle approximately 60 per cent of the grain will be penalized. They are to be denied effective representation on this board and clearly, the import of that type of change is to hand over the decision-making more powerfully than ever to the Canadian Pacific Railroad, Canadian Pacific Investments and those associated with milking the farmers.

It is the farmers who are to be milked by this Bill. If this Bill passes, there will no doubt be other targets picked up very quickly. We know that the effect of the Government's policy which was stated two years ago is to undo all the aid arrangements on which Canada's transportation networks have been built. The argument in the back rooms is probably to the effect that, since farmers are now established in the Prairies and Canadian cities are filled with people, there is a captive market for the profiteering owners of the transportation industries. These industries include those who either profit from direct transportation or supply the expensive equipment for publicly-owned corporations such as the Toronto Transit Commission. In either case the aim is to use a captive market, whether it be the farmers in Saskatchewan or the transit riders in metro Toronto, who must use the established transportation system because there is no alternative. These systems have become a monopoly which they must use.

Since there is an established market with no chance of competition, the corporation owners, their friends across the aisle and to my extreme right have decided that now is the time to begin sticking it to the users and raising the price they will have to pay regardless of the fact that on the Prairies, for example, farmers' income has declined by over 40 per cent in the last six years while the income of Canadian Pacific has risen by some 250 per cent. Those facts are being studiously ignored in the propaganda we hear from the large Parties in this House and their friends in the media.

However, if they have their way, it will be a short ride even for those corporations because once they have starved the farmers out of business there will not be any grain to haul. They will not be able to play with the Crow rate any longer. It is a short-sighted policy even from their point of view but it is disastrous not only for the farmers but for the Canadian people. I urge Parliament to think very carefully about these amendments and particularly to support Motions Nos. 24 and 29.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to say a few words this afternoon in this very important debate. I am particularly pleased to speak to this particular amendment that has been put forward by my colleague for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

I believe that the issue we are dealing with today touches the very basis of how we see a democratic society. I do not believe there are any Members in the House, and I would like to think that there are not many Canadians, who do not strongly and firmly believe in the principles of a democracy. One of those basic principles is that Canadians ought to have a voice in what is decided by those groups that have an opportunity to make a profound impact on their lives. That is essentially what we are talking about here today—whether 15,000 to 20,000 western Canadians should be denied representation on one of the most crucial boards that deals with western grain transportation.

Quite frankly, I find that perplexing, to say the least. It is dificult to understand why the Government would say that there are perhaps as many as 20,000 people in western Canada who ought not to participate in the democratic process over a matter that will have a profound influence on their lives and futures.

I know that some Members opposite and other Members of the House may question my assumption that 20,000 people will be affected. Let me say that I have a legal opinion—I emphasize "legal" opinion—which states that this is the case. It is that person's legal opinion that 15,000 to 20,000 western Canadian grain producers will not be able to take part in the appropriate elections to see them represented on a board that will be most influential on the lives of western Canadians.

I suggest this is a direct attack on the co-operative movement in western Canada. I do not want to suggest for a moment that the Government is doing this with some malicious intent or evil motivation. I would like to think that it is simply an oversight on behalf of the Minister and the federal Government that the co-operatives ought not to have a voice, in terms of grain transportation, equal to that of others who are involved.

Those of us who come from western Canada and have lived on the Prairies of western Canada recognize the importance of the co-operative movement only too well. I would go so far as to say that it was the co-operative movement in western Canada that built a good deal of that part of the country. That co-operative movement has probably meant more to lifting the welfare of Canadians generally than any other movement in this country.

I believe the very essence of co-operatives has been overlooked over the years. I recall very distinctly that the federal Government realized not many months ago that most people from western Canada were involved in co-operatives. The co-operative movement, as part of the western tradition, has become an integral part of westerners' lives.

At the point when the federal Government recognized the integral relationship between the co-operatives and life in western Canada, it decided to make a direct appeal for the support of the co-operative movement. It did a number of things over the last number of months that would appeal to the co-operatives in western Canada and would appeal to co-operatives generally, although it did focus on gathering more support from that sector of western Canadian society. That is why I am perplexed today, Mr. Speaker.

I am somewhat confused about why the Government of Canada would bring forth such a notion in order to eliminate participation in some of the most critical decisions facing western Canadians made by people involved in a senior capacity or quasi-management role in the co-operatives. I must say that I will be voting against this amendment for no other reason than that it places 15,000 to 20,000 western Canadians in a second-class citizen status. I am not prepared to send a message to that group of people saying that we are not prepared to allow them the democratic right of expressing themselves by running for office in terms of what we are speaking of here today.

I do hope that the Government will come to its senses and realize that the particular amendment of which I am speaking is intended to assist the Government in providing a more democratic basis for its decision making and that it is not an attempt to scuttle the Government's efforts. In fact, it is an attempt to improve this piece of legislation by recognizing the role of co-operatives and encouraging people to participate on the appropriate board.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to support the amendments put forward in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), being Motions Nos. 24 and 29. I would argue, as some of my colleagues have argued, that the very idea that representatives of the Wheat Pools should not be nominees is offensive to any Hon. Member of the House who has fought for some time to ensure that the people who have a great stake in the outcome—the producers or representatives of producers—should have some say in those major decisions that affect the operations of their farms and that affect their livelihoods, and I am certainly one of those Members. That the Government and the Official Opposition can argue that directors, agents or representatives of any co-operative should not be allowed to become a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee is mystifying, to say the least.

Members of many of the co-operatives concerned here have a very direct interest in the number of cars allocated to them and where those cars will be allocated. This is not because they have personal vested interests but because they are representatives or directors of co-operatives that broadly represent the interests of that whole group of producers. Those representatives are only to be some of the representatives on that committee, but surely it is not too much to suggest that they, above all, should have some major say, if not the determining say, in the allocation of grain cars. There have been shortages of cars for the Canadian grain industry in the past. I know that many of those cars are also allocated from time to time to the lumber industry in my own area. Surely the railway companies should not have a greater say in the allocation of those cars than the democratically elected representatives of those thousands of people whose livelihoods depend on the decisions made.

The attitude of members of the Official Opposition, particularly as so many of them represent the western grain growing Provinces, is absolutely astounding. As I was listening to yesterday's debate I could not help but recall a play called "Paper Wheat". Unfortunately I do not have the script of that play here today, but in recent years that play enjoyed some popularity and in fact drew crowds right across Canada, particularly in the smaller communities of the prairie Provinces.

The play dealt with the growth of the Wheat Pools and the history of the farmers' movement, particularly in western Canada when farmers attempted to have some determining say as to what would happen to their livelihoods. There was an interesting character in that play. The farmers and others in the farming communities were actively engaged in trying to build the co-ops and the Wheat Pools. They were trying to sign up a certain number of producers in the area in order to establish the Pool. I forget the exact target they were aiming for. Perhaps one of my colleagues could help me.

Mr. Althouse: Fifty per cent.

Mr. Kristiansen: They were trying to sign up 50 per cent of the producers. The interesting character that I referred to was a grain elevator operator, and he said when asked to join: "You will never make it". When the farmers signed up 10 per cent of the producers, this fellow said: "No, I am not going to join; you will never make it". They signed up 20 per cent and he said: "No, you will never make it. It's an impossible dream; the railways will beat you and the grain exchange will beat you." The farmers signed up 30 per cent and 40 per cent and this character took the same attitude. Finally the farmers only needed one more member in order to sign up the required 50 per cent of producers. Lo and behold, this fellow decided to join. His comment at that time was: "I always knew they'd do it!"

I cannot help but think of that particular character in that play, Mr. Speaker, in relation to the position taken by Members of the Official Opposition in relation to this Bill. All of a sudden they have decided, perhaps, that they will vigorously oppose the Bill after having acted in a number of odd ways during the course of the last few months. Do we now hear them saying: "Gee, we always knew they would do it"? Do they want to jump aboard the bandwagon so they do not get left out and they are not seen in the light of their behaviour during the previous few months? They have not really seen the light, have they? They are now taking the position that we should put it off for three years so that they can do it.

Many farmers who are still on the Prairies and have participated in the building of these very co-ops and Wheat Pools will be denied their proper representation unless at least one of these amendments now being moved by members of the NDP or something very much like it is carried. If it is not carried, those farmers will be angry and they will remember. During the long winters on the Canadian Prairies, a lot of thinking gets done. Those farmers will chew over and ruminate on what has been going on during the spring, summer and fall.

One subject that often comes up is "What are those guys in Ottawa doing?" These people have a lot of time to think this over. They are not influenced by the hoopla imagery of the advertising game. They have a memory and they watch the performance of people over the long haul. Like a certain species of the crow, or jackdaw as it is known in some countries, they have a long developed memory. They do not have that instinctively but have gained it through long experience. The working and farming people of prairie Canada will remember who was playing games with their most vital interests.

I ask the Members of the Official Opposition in particular to recognize where they come from and to remember that the farmers of western Canada do not forget easily. I hope the Official Opposition will realize that their prime job is to represent the interests of those who sent them here and will support not only this amendment but a number of others being put forward by the NDP.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In accordance with Madam Speaker's ruling, for the purpose of voting I will be putting Motions Nos. 24 and 29 separately. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt motion No. 24?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the vote stands deferred.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motion No. 29?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the vote stands deferred.

Pursuant to Madam Speaker's ruling earlier, Motions Nos. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34 and 35 are to be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 30, 31 and 32 stand in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Accordingly, the debate will begin on Motion No. 30.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 30

That Bill C-155 be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 4 the following:

"(f) nothing in paragraph (d) shall prevent elected local committee members and delegates of grain co-operatives and the officers of farming corporations and co-operatives from being eligible for election to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to those Members who were not participants in the Committee, in case they are not aware of it, that Clause 3 in Part I of the Bill is entirely a clause of the Conservative Party, supported in every paragraph by the Liberals. Not one line, not one word of the Liberal clause was even debated. Members should have seen the original tory Clause 3. It certainly would have eliminated 20,000 to 30,000 grain producers from running for election, those who are of the Wheat Fool committees and UGG locals.

Our legal advice is that the way the clause now reads, it will still prohibit a member of a Wheat Pool committee, the chairman or secretary of a Wheat Pool committee, an elevator agent who holds land and has Wheat Board permit. It will also eliminate a co-operative farm with five or ten farm families on it. It will eliminate members of the board of directors of the co-operative farm, the Chairman of the board and the secretary-treasurer of farm co-operatives from running for election, even though they are otherwise eligible as active grain producers holding a Canadian Wheat Board permit.

My Motion No. 30 will add a new paragraph which reads:

(f) nothing in paragraph (d) shall prevent elected local committee members and delegates of grain co-operatives and the officers of farming corporations and co-operatives from being eligible for election to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

I have included farming corporations as well as farming co-operatives because many family farms have incorporated. One spouse may be the president or chairman and the other the secretary or vice-president. Sons and daughters are also part of the incorporation. Our legal advice is that the way the clause now reads, a private farm that is incorporated, whether it be one or more families, grain producers holding a Canadian Wheat Board permit book, would be prohibited from having its members run for election.

As my colleague for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) pointed out yesterday, there are over 800 Wheat Pool committees in Saskatchewan, each with ten or 20 members. I imagine there are 600 or 700 Wheat Pool committees in Manitoba and in Alberta combined. I do not know how many United Grain Growers locals there are. We are looking at between 15,000 and 25,000 grain producers who are eliminated from standing for election to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee the way the clause now reads.

An election under the Bill would now involve four representatives: one from Alberta, two from Saskatchewan and one from Manitoba. The election would be carried out in the same manner as elections for the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee and would probably be carried out at the same time.

In a democratic election, the eligible voters decide who will represent them. It is not up to Parliament. If the president of a grain co-operative who is also a permit book holder and an active grain farmer chooses to run, it will be up to the grain producers in that Province to decide whether they want him. They will decide whether they want somebody who is also on a board of directors, a delegate or a nominee.

This would also eliminate organizations that could hardly be called great friends of mine. They are nice fellows. It would eliminate the officers of the Palliser Wheat Growers from running as well as the flax growers, barley growers and all other associations. As the clause now stands, they are prohibited from running. Democratic elections should be kept as wide as possible. There should be minimum requirements in terms of eligibility. This flies in the face of what I consider to be the democratic process.

In earlier debate we attempted to have various parts of the clause changed. We have others that will be coming up. The way the Committee is now structured under Clause 3, the Senior Grain Transportation Committee will have an inordinate representation of those who do not grow grain and do not hold a Canadian Wheat Board permit.

Each railroad has a representative. There is also one representative each from the Great Lakes carriers, elevator licensees, the Canadian Trucking Association and the Prairie Livestock Feed Board. There is also one for Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba who are also feed grain users. We have only four grain farmers elected at large.

● (1250)

Mr. Mayer: Where were you when we were in Committee?

Mr. Benjamin: I am sorry, we have six elevator company representatives now. We are back to the Tory repentance of yesterday. It makes no difference; it still gives an inordinate representation to those who do not grow grain. We do not think either railroad should have members on the Committee helping, in effect, to regulate themselves with regard to the allocation of cars. The Senior Grain Transportation Committee can consult with the railway officers, the railway statisticians, the railway operating management on a day to day basis about where railway cars are located. They can get all the information they need.

It is incredible to me, Mr. Speaker, that Clause 3, as proposed by the Conservatives and supported by the Government, totally ignores the Government's clause. There they were, joined in an attack on the co-operative movement, and, in other parts of the Bill, in an attack on orderly marketing and the reduction of the authority and powers of the Canadian Wheat Board. That is unacceptable in western Canada, Mr. Speaker.

In their conversion on the road to the Crowsnest Pass the Conservatives have called not for a commutation of the death sentence on the Crow rate but merely a stay of execution. Even that is better than nothing. If it were to succeed it would at least give us three more years of the statutory rate for grain producers. But having done that, it seems to me they have no choice, if they want to have any credibility, particularly in western Canada, but to join us in either forcing the Government to withdraw the legislation or getting the Government to change it so that the statutory grain rates for the producers are kept in place.

The representation of the grain producers on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee has to be kept as wide as possible. That has to be taken care of. There is no reason to impinge upon the eligibility of an active grain producer who currently holds a Canadian Wheat Board permit book; there is no need to impinge upon their ability to run for the position, particularly when the motion moved by the Tories and supported by the Liberals contains the words "or co-operatives". That is why we would like to add subparagraph (f) in accordance with Motion No. 30.

Whether the amendments proposed by this Party are ruled in order or not, if they are all put together it will be seen that the legislation would then read the way a New Democratic Party Government would write it. All our amendments are designed to accomplish the fullest representation for grain producers and their organizations.

No one will convince me, and they will certainly not convince anyone out West, that the Wheat Pools are just a commercial interest and that they do not have the interests of producers at heart. If that were true, then why is there any representation on the Committee from the private grain companies? Is someone, like the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), trying to tell me that they are not there just to make a buck, that they are in business for the aid and comfort of the grain producers? Would people tell me that they are there to help the poor grain producers? That is hogwash, Mr. Speaker.

The private grain trade has become fat from living off the backs of grain farmers for too many years in this country. The Canadian Wheat Board put an end to some of that, and to a greater extent so did the co-operative movement. Thank God for that! It is totally improper and unacceptable for this Chamber to interfere with what the grain producers and farm organizations in western Canada can do themselves. Sometimes that requires aid and comfort from a national Government and the Parliament of Canada. To have legislation that niggles away at and undermines and seeks to destroy what our people have put together over 60 to 75 years is reprehensible and not acceptable.

I want to assure the House that that will be our intent throughout debate on the Bill. This motion and others subsequent to it contain that intent all the way through, in every clause of the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I have indicated by way of signal to he Hon. Member that his time has expired. In fact, I have allowed him some additional time because this is his motion. If he wants to continue his remarks, however, he would need the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I thank my colleagues also for their courtesy. I will not go past one o'clock.

This legislation should enhance the eligibility of grain producers for membership on the committee. Whether they be an officer, a delegate, a nominee, a Wheat Pool committee member, chairman of a committee, president of a family-owned incorporated farm, the president of the board of directors of a co-operative farm—none of those situations should bar them from eligibility to run for election as a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. The way the clause reads at the moment would prohibit that and my motion would correct it.

In Committee the Conservatives withdrew four lines from the clause when we were debating Clause 3. I believe the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) was sincere at that time when he said that it was not his objective to eliminate all these people. I want to submit to him and all other Hon. Members that the way the clause still reads it does in fact eliminate them. We should not do that.

I want to plead with the House to accept this motion. It does not do violence to the intent of the legislation and does not exceed the royal recommendation. It has been ruled to be in order. If the legislation were to pass—I hope not, but if it were to become the law of the land—it seems to me that the inclusion of this paragraph would keep grain producers and the people they elect to represent them in grain and farm co-operative organizations eligible to stand for election and to be voted for or against by their fellow grain producers. That is the democratic way. Let us keep things that way and not place all these ridiculous, unnecessary and undemocratic restrictions on those who seek to represent their colleagues in the grain growing and handling business. Surely that is nothing more than common sense and good democratic practice. I urge the acceptance of this motion upon the House.

I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will consider that the Hon. Member has completed his remarks. If any other Hon. Member wishes to be seen now by the Chair so that he and others will understand that that Hon. Member will take up debate at two o'clock, as a convenience to Members the Chair would recognize him. If no one is recognized, I will put the question.

Mr. Althouse: May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): At two o'clock the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock I had indicated to the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) that he would have the floor at this time.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Hon. Members will know, we are on Motion No. 30 which attempts to clarify a part of Clause 3 of the Western Grain Transportation Act, Bill C-155, which we have been discussing since yesterday. The pertinent motion deals with a part of Clause 3 which allocates four members to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. These members would be active grain growers holding Canadian Wheat Board permit books. The point which is at issue here, at this point in time, is a further provision in that clause which has created a space on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee for these four producers. It goes on to say that these four producers must not be from a category which they go on to spell out.

Clause 3(d) reads in part:

—at the time of their election, and for the duration of their service as members of the Committee—

These producers shall not be:

—nominees, officers, directors, agents or representatives of any corporation, board or cooperative, the business of which is the purchase, sale, storage, processing or transportation of grain—

The problem which has arisen since we dealt with this clause is that we have been receiving conflicting legal opinions as to whether that prohibition would apply to a farmer who is a member of his local Wheat Pool committee or his United Grain Growers local committee, or whether it would apply to and include people who have been delegates to the United Grain Growers annual meeting, or delegates to the various pool organizations in the three Provinces. There are conflicting opinions as to whether those delegates would or would not be eligible to serve on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

These delegates include a great number of farmers who are very interested in the transportation of grain and the good of their community. To make certain these people are not prohibited from seeking election to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee under that clause which allows one member from Alberta, one farmer from Manitoba and two farmers from Saskatchewan, we have proposed Motion No. 30, which says:

(f) nothing in paragraph (d) shall prevent elected local committee members and delegates of grain co-operatives and the officers of farming corporations and co-operatives from being eligible for election to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

This is to be inserted for greater clarity, Mr. Speaker, to make absolutely certain that at no time would there be a court ruling which would declare a farmer ineligible to be a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee simply because he was either a delegate to one of the three Prairie pools or to the annual meeting of the United Grain Growers. It would also clarify the position of farmers who are members of local seed cleaning co-operatives which are in the business of storage and processing of grain. It would make them eligible for the Senior Grain Transportation Committee without any argument as to the interpretation.

There is some doubt whether some members of co-operative farms, particularly if they have some seed cleaning as part of their operation, would be eligible now. The inclusion of this amendment would make it quite clear that the intention of the Bill is not to reduce the eligibility of farmers who are very active in their local communities and in the grain trade at the local level. It would permit them to seek a post on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

We support this motion on the understanding that any elected position in a democracy should be as wide open as possible. There is a requirement that the people who seek this particular position must be active holders of a Canadian Wheat Board permit book, which means they are active farmers. That requirement rules out any full-time president of a grain company. It would make it very difficult for them to continue because most of them have been required, through the exigencies of their work with the grain co-operatives, to lease their land to someone else, which makes them no longer an active farmer. So I think the concern behind the Bill as it now stands may have been extended a little too far and instead has created a lot of doubt as to whether ordinary farmers who take part in their local community organizations, including the UGG and the pools, are eligible to seek election. It would broaden the base of those eligible to be part of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

I urge both sides of the House to reconsider the clause to broaden the base and allow for the widest democratic participation possible, and to support this motion as it now stands before us.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this amendment. The previous speaker gave us a fairly detailed explanation of how it relates to the actual circumstances of working farmers in the grain areas of the West. I wish to point out that through co-operation between the Government and the Official Opposition there is being carried out here a very specific attack on the principle of co-operation. People who are actively involved in co-operatives are subject to discrimination. They cannot have their elected representatives even stand for nomination to the grain board. Other bodies such as the railroads are under no such limitation; they have no internal democratic structure. That is to say, no structure which gives a vote to people as people; it only gives votes to dollars. When the dollar has spoken, the person who is appointed is then their representative to sit on the grain board.

That is the absolute opposite of the co-operative organization, Mr. Speaker. What the Liberals and the Tories are saying is that money talks, either exclusively, as in the case of the appointment of the railway representative, or predominantly if they have their way in the formation of this committee. Democratic structures in which people vote, as in the co-operatives, are to be downgraded. In fact, they are quite consistent. Whether it be a Tory or Liberal Government in Ottawa, Queen's Park or other Provinces they consistently oppose co-operatives. They have a strong ideological bias against them and it is to be expected that in this case they would want the interests of their corporate friends represented by the vote of Canadian Pacific Investments and the likes of that, and the only counterbalance to that should be individual, unorganized farmers who, by contrast, are as vulnerable to the pressure of the corporation as a tenant in one of the huge complexes built or owned by Canadian Pacific Investments masquerading under the name of Marathon Realty in Toronto.

No doubt these people with a bias against co-operatives have a very practical reason for it. The problem with co-operatives is that they make small people strong. Ordinary farmers, workers, residents, tenants, small-businessmen and small-businesswomen, ordinary people, through a co-operative have a chance to become strong and to talk back to the huge corporations like Canadian Pacific and Marathon Realty.

That is the reason for this attack on the co-operatives, which makes it necessary for us to move this amendment to make it clear that nothing in this Act shall work against the principle of democratic representation as it is embodied in the co-operatives.

This is just not a little battle of some grain farmers 1,000 or 2,000 miles away on the western Prairies. The same corporation that opposes the democratic right of farmers on the Prairies opposes that of thousands of tenants in the City of Toronto. Toronto is a city where the majority of people are tenants of apartment owners, not home owners, not even tenants one by one in small houses. Most of us live in apartment buildings owned by corporations, most of them large. One of the largest is Marathon Realty, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Canadian Pacific.

Several years ago a lawyer from Marathon Realty told me: "You will never see Marathon building any more rental accommodation in Toronto so long as Ontario has rent control." In other words, the same corporation which is trying to destroy the democratic right of farmers on the Prairies also opposes the chance of its own tenants in Toronto to avail themselves of any kind of legal protection against a powerful landlord whose power against the tenants is in at least the ratio of 1,000 to one, considering there is one owner against 1,000 tenants.

The Tories are trying to weaken the rent control they were forced to bring in during their minority government in Ontario. They are being backed by Canadian Pacific Investments. It is quite natural they would try to do the same kind of damage to the farmers' organizations on the Prairies. Therefore, it is quite necessary that Parliament should give serious consideration to the amendment that we are proposing. It is not on behalf of a tiny little interest group speaking through the power of money: the Tory proposal is exactly that. What we are discussing is the right of farmers, many thousands of them, to join together in some kind of mutual trusting arrangement, not blind trust, having the democratic structures whereby they can examine the operations of their officers much more rigorously and democratically than is possible for the small shareholders in a company like Canadian Pacific Investments. They do not want their representatives to be appointed to the Grain Board by someone's fiat, as is done with Canadian Pacific. They want their representatives simply to stand for election among farmers who are members of the co-operative and farmers who are not members of the co-operative. The Tories and the Liberals say: "No, those co-op officers and delegates are not to be allowed even to stand for election." The Tories say that they stand for democracy, which would threaten the power of Canadian Pacific Investments which is funding so much of the Tories' campaign.

The amendment by which we are proposing to safeguard the democratic rights of co-operative farmers on the Prairies embodies a principle which goes far beyond the Prairies. Certainly it embodies the principle of co-op housing in metro Toronto, which the Tory Government at Queen's Park and the Liberal Government in Ottawa are busy trying to undermine, underfund and generally downgrade, year by year. It is the same principle of co-operation that the tenants in Toronto are trying to develop on the basis of the experience of farmers out West. The Tories, the Liberals and Canadian Pacific Investments, for the private profit of Canadian Pacific, are attacking that principle at both ends, both in Toronto and on the Prairies.

I urge Hon. Members of the House, not only those whose vote may depend on prairie grain farmers, but also those who supposedly represent the interests of the majority of Toronto people, those who are tenants of apartment buildings, members of unions and members of small business associations, anyone who organizes with others to strengthen the position of small people, to support the rights of those who must be defended. The amendment embodies the principle of their defence and I urge the House to adopt it.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us, Motion No. 30, submitted by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), is a very important one, one on which I hope we can use reason in the House rather than just having the Government or, indeed, the Conservative Party sitting idly by on it. The reason I feel this way is that there is a real possibility that thousands of prairie farmers could be prevented from seeking office on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee if Clause 3, which, by the way, was moved by the Conservative Party and supported by the Liberal Party—

Mr. Mayer: How do you know? You weren't there.

Mr. Nystrom: —in the Committee this summer, carries. I would ask the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) to stand and tell the House his interpretation of this particular clause. I think, very seriously, that if the heckling could be kept down, Hon. Members would find this to be a very important part of our debate.

Clause 3 states that four members who are active producers can be elected to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. It states that there might be one for Manitoba, two for Saskatchewan and one for Alberta. We should follow the next portion very carefully, particularly those Hon. Members in the House who are also lawyers, and Your Honour is included. It states:

—who, at the time of their election, and for the duration of their service as members of the Committee, are not nominees, officers, directors, agents or representatives of any corporation, board or co-operative, the business of which is the purchase, sale, storage, processing or the transportation of grain—

I understand the reason this clause was inserted concerning many of the people who will be sitting on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. It is a conflict of interest clause. That means that if a representative of one of the elevator companies or the railways or anyone else who is to be on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee is represented in that way, then that same person should not be seeking office as a producer. In many cases this type of clause is obviously needed.

However, the problem with the clause is that when the word "co-operative" is inserted, it is dealing with the structure of the Wheat Pools on the Prairies. I think many Hon. Members do not understand that the Wheat Pools on the Prairies involve a very grass roots issue, a decentralized kind of structure. Every country elevator in my Province and across the Prairies has a Wheat Pool committee. Approximately 800 of those committees exist in the Province of Saskatchewan alone. Between 10 and 20 farmers are members of each committee.

We have heard at least one legal opinion that says it is possible, and I think one could so construe in a court of law, that a representative of a company could be a Wheat Pool committee man. These Wheat Pool committee men do not have a great deal of power, but they do have some power over what happens in local country elevators. They also meet every year. At their annual meetings they pass resolutions requesting the head office or the Wheat Pool to take certain positions on issues of great importance to the farmers. As I said, this involves hundreds of different Wheat Pool committees and thousands, maybe even tens of thousands, of prairie farmers.

If lawyers were able to persuade the courts that a representative of any corporation, board or co-operative would mean the chairman, the secretary or an ordinary member of a Wheat Pool committee, then this clause in the Bill would disenfranchise thousands of prairie farmers.

In all seriousness, perhaps the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who is the Conservative Party spokesman, or another Conservative might give us the legal interpretation as to what Clause 3 really means.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why don't you hire a lawyer?

● (1430)

Mr. Nystrom: Why do I not hire a lawyer? The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is an excellent lawyer and I would invite him to look at Clause 3 and advise the House whether or not an officer could indeed be the secretary of a Wheat Pool committee, chairman of a Wheat Pool committee or an ordinary member of a Wheat Pool committee.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I will look at it next week.

Mr. Benjamin: He wants to charge us first before he gives us a legal opinion.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It will be a legal aid case for the NDP.

Mr. Nystrom: I invite Members of the Conservative Party to take a serious look at this.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why don't you be serious?

Mr. Nystrom: I am being very serious. Incidentally, not a single Member from the Conservative Party has spoken to this motion.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is a nothing motion, that is why.

Mr. Nystrom: Then why do you not get up and say that? I would like to see a Member of the Conservative Party get up and tell us why he believes that a Wheat Pool secretary, president or committee member would not be disenfranchised from seeking office to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

Mr. Mazankowski: He is not excluded and you know it.

Mr. Nystrom: We have lawyers who say that it is not unreasonable to interpret that a representative of a co-operative could be a Wheat Pool committee man. If that is the case, we will then have a situation where thousands of people will be disenfranchised. This also refers directly to the word "agent". A Wheat Pool agent in a small town or village may not be able to seek office on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee as well. If that is the case, I think it is very unfair that so many ordinary, hard working farmers are being excluded from being elected to the office of a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) and Members on all sides of the House should take a very close look at this. The Wheat Pools are very decentralized. They practise a great degree of economic democracy in terms of having thousands of their members involved in running the local elevator and trying to run the Wheat Pool at a provincial and national level as well.

The same thing could perhaps apply to a co-op farm. There are a number of co-op farms in this country. Would someone who is a director of a co-op farm be excluded from seeking office because Clause 3 states that officers, directors and agents cannot seek office? Are directors of a co-op farm, which might indeed be an ordinary small farm, excluded from seeking office? What about a small family farm that has been incorporated? There are many such farms in my riding and I ask whether they would be excluded from seeking office. The Member for Vegreville is shaking his head; I can hear it from here. Please get up and tell us what you are saying. I can hear his head rattling but I cannot understand what he is saying.

This clause of the Bill could deny thousands of people on the Prairies the right to seek office. This also applies to the United Grain Growers, to a corporate farm, to a co-operative farm and, of course, to the Wheat Pools. I believe the Wheat Pools in this country are much too important to be left out of the scheme of things as far as this committee is concerned.

It is my understanding that a number of lawyers who have studied this issue have taken different positions. If there is any doubt, why do we not insert a clause in the Bill similar to that suggested by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) which makes it abolutely clear that the target here is not the ordinary farmer who has a permit book but the senior officer of a company, an agent of a company or a senior representative of a company. If that is the intent of Clause 3, which I believe it is, why do we not make that explicit rather than implicit, so that in the future a court, judge or lawyer will not make the opposite interpretation, which could be extremely harmful to agriculture in western Canada?

I suggest to the House that if it finds the wording in Clause 3 unacceptable, it should look for another set of words that would make it explicit that the Wheat Pool and co-op people and small incorporated farms would not be excluded from seeking office. I say that very seriously to Members of the Conservative Party because I come from a family that spent many years attempting to build a co-operative movement and Wheat Pools back in the 1930s and 1940s and also build a credit union in the belief that people had to work together in order to better themselves. I do not want to see people who believe in a co-operative way of life being discriminated against by this Bill which is before the House today.

I particularly do not want to see that when it comes from Members of the Convervative Party who are absolutely silent on this. I would like them at least to get up and say publicly that they are absolutely sure they can give us an ironclad guarantee that this clause will not exclude a chairman or a president of a Wheat Pool, the UGG or directors of a small corporate farm or members of a co-operative farm. Will old "ironclad" from Vegreville get up and give us that kind of guarantee? He and his colleagues are sitting there, perhaps because there is some uncertainty. Perhaps even some of them who are antico-operative hope that the courts will say that members of the co-op or Wheat Pool committees do not have a right to seek office for this particular committee.

I invite Members of the Conservative Party to put that on the record. I invite Members of the Liberal Party to go back to the Department of Transport and the Department of Justice and get some legal opinions that will guarantee us on behalf of our constituents that our people will not be discriminated against.

[Translation]

And I mention this to the Parliamentary Secretary, because it is very important to us, since in my riding, every year from 75 to 80 per cent of our producers sell all their wheat to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and the UGG. It is very important to us, and I hope you will be able to do this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary . . . The Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton Stanstead (Mr. Tessier) has the floor.

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, if you were the Prime Minister, I would say you were letting the cat out of the bag, but I had my turn, and I am quite happy to be just a Member of Parliament, and, I hope, a very effective one.

Mr. Speaker, I think the members of the New Democratic Party will be very pleased about what I will have to say at the beginning of my speech, but I want to make it clear that I do not intend to fall into their little trap and that I will not support their amendment.

Mr. Speaker, especially following my experience in the West when I heard people talk about their concerns, I have had some serious second thoughts about the consultations that have brought us to Bill C-155. I am prepared to agree with western producers that they should have been the first to be consulted and that consultations should have been thorough and complete. That is my view, but I do not think this particular mistake should prevent us from proceeding with consideration of Bill C-155.

Mr. Speaker, we agreed to reduce the number of members on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, as recommended by the Progressive Conservative Party, because we wanted to show our co-operation on a point that did not affect the basic principles and objectives of Bill C-155.

To go any further, and I want to make this quite clear to the members opposite, to go any further amounts to making false assumptions, and to take any other position would be misrepresenting the real situation.

People who say that Clause 3 of the Bill is a threat to the co-operative system in the West are, I am sorry to say, making false assumptions and saying things that are absolutely untrue. When they say we are letting in the railway companies, I think it is perfectly normal, within the framework of our transportation policy, to have partners that are involved in that policy. I would like to say to my friends opposite that especially as Quebecers, we wanted Bill C-155 to be a transportation measure, and as such, we support it wholeheartedly.

Mr. Speaker, the West seems to thrive on its divisions, and the host of associations representing producers will be their downfall. Here in the House, representatives of the New Democratic Party are sending us all kinds of messages, but they have no vision of the West. They are incapable of devising ways to serve the West's real interests. They want to make the Senior Grain Transportation Committee another hotbed of divisiveness, without vision and without the means to solve the problems of the West once and for all.

Mr. Speaker, this is not an attack against the co-operatives. We want a mechanism that will help us achieve the objectives of our transportation policy. Everyone is welcome on the Committee, provided they are prepared to share the objectives of a transportation policy that is to the West's advantage, and I challenge the Opposition on the Conservative and the New Democratic Party sides to prove otherwise.

● (1440)

[English]

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the words of the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier). In spite of his normal jovial disposition, I was a little bit disappointed because he really did not seem to address the particular thrust of this amendment. This amendment basically attempts to enhance and strengthen the co-operative movement and attempts to make sure that enshrined in this particular Bill is the fact that there will be an assurance, or ironclad guarantee, if you will, that those producers who are members of committees and who are delegates will have the opportunity to serve on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I will refer you to Clause 3(d) as a reminder of what we are really talking about. I shall try to bring the issue down to a constituency or local level so that we can understand what provision we are attempting to strengthen and enhance. Paragraph (d) indicates that there would be four members who would be active grain producers and their prescription and proscription is spelled out very specifically. They would be holders of a Canadian Wheat Board permit book and, as has been emphasized by some of my colleagues, they would indeed be active producers. That proscription is adequate enough for anyone who might have fears with regard to a conflict of interest. We want to make sure that Motion No. 30 enhances and strengthens the understanding of the matter that some Members of the Conservative Party have indicated we should have.

I wish that Members of the Conservative Party would say something. I wish they would offer us their legal interpretation of the motion so that we could have it on the record and know exactly where they stand. I am embarrassed to say that not one of them has spoken up about this particular clause so far. I think it is very important that we strengthen the hands of those who are involved in co-ops and Wheat Boards.

I would like to underline exactly what the provision of this added subsection will do, Mr. Speaker. Nothing in paragraph (d) shall prevent elected local committee members and delegates of grain co-operatives and the officers of farming corporations and co-operatives from being eligible for election to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

I would like to refer to what my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), clearly pointed out, because what is true in Yorkton-Melville is also true in Dauphin-Swan River. There are local committees in all of the little communities which have grain elevators, whether it be Dauphin, Swan River or Roblin. These communities include people who are actively participating in co-ops and Wheat Pools. If Members of the Conservative Party are so convinced that nothing in paragraph (d) would prohibit the participation of these people, I wish they would say so. Even if I were to buy their argument and even if they were so convinced of this, they should have no problem supporting this particular amendment because all it does is clearly spell out the enhanced and strengthened position of the active producers who are involved in the co-ops and local Wheat Pools. The provision clearly spells out that they would be eligible for membership on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that I am really appalled by the thundering silence of Members of the Conservative Party today. I hope that some of them will tell us why they are failing to support a motion that would untie the hands of all of the farmers, which is what this particular motion proposes to do.

We are concerned that within the provisions of this particular clause as amended and reprinted, and as introduced by Membes of the Conservative Party and supported by Members of the Liberal Party, there is not an adequate provision for memberhship on the committee from representatives of small communities such as those in my riding of Dauphin-Swan River. When speaking about a Bill such as this which is supposed to have such wonderful implications, I think it is important that we recognize that the primary producers are actively involved in a participatory or economic democracy, as indicated by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkon-Melville. Because of their experience and participation at that level, those who are active in that way would have a heightened awareness of the type of role that they could play on any committee.

I think it is very critical that we include in a clause such as this the amendment that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), has brought before the House. I would urge the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead and others to reconsider the position that they have taken and to seek out legal opinions. There has been some indication that the provisions of paragraph (d) are legally doubtful. I would urge the Conservatives, even though they feel that paragraph (d) would bring no jeopardy, to support this amendment so that the position of farmers will be strengthened and they will be able to serve on committees such as the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to voice my concerns about these specific provisions with regard to members in co-ops, local committee boards and shipping boards. We are concerned that these matters be included in these types of Bills.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) who has brought to my attention a possible misprint in Clause 10(3). I would indicate to the House that this is a minor matter and requires only a motion to delete a word. The matter is in the process and will be handled in the near future.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is not in the Chamber. He invited the Members of this Party to put their position with regard to co-operatives on record, and I want to do so. It is unfortunate that he is not here. He appears to be a hit and run kind of Member. He attended one out of 66 meetings which the Transport Committee held this summer on Bill C-155. He speaks and then leaves the House.

I want categorically to put on record for the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville that I and my Party are not opposed to co-operatives. I will say it again: we are not opposed to co-operatives. There is nothing that we have done with regard to this Bill that would indicate otherwise. What the NDP is attempting to do with this amendment is not to defend co-operatives, but simply raise a political ruse. They are nothing but a bunch of political chameleons. I will get into that later.

I belong to a local pool and the local UGG. The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) belongs to a local pool, as does the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight).

Mr. McKnight: And the UGG.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) belongs to a pool.

An Hon. Member: Even Hazen Argue.

Mr. Mayer: It shows how open they are to membership when they take in Hazen Argue. I wonder how many Members to my far left can stand up and say that they belong to a pool or UGG, which is a co-operative. I had with me in the House yesterday a Canadian Wheat Board permit book which I have had since I was 18 years old. I do not think that great grain grower from Spadina (Mr. Heap), who spoke so eloquently about the grain producer, can talk about having a permit book.

Mr. Evans: He produces fertilizer for the grain growers.

Mr. Mayer: That may be. He provides fertilizer in the spring and if we let him out there, he would provide some wind and our land would all blow away. Therefore we will keep him here.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, what this NDP amendment is trying to do. If there is a legitimate concern, we are equally as concerned about what the amendment says. We voiced these kinds of things at the Committee. If the Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) had been there as well as the Member for Yorkton-Melville, they would understand what went on in Committee and would not be raising these political issues.

This is a bad Bill. In my opinion, there is no sense raising any more concern than there need be. There will be plenty of concern if and when this Bill is passed. I lament the day that it will be passed. If we are going to raise issues, let us at least be fair to the people we represent and only raise real issues.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville talked about his constituents possibly being denied the opportunity to be represented on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I submit that his constituents were denied an opportunity this summer to be represented at the Transport Committee when these vital issues were being discussed. If he is so concerned about representation on behalf of his constituents, he should have shown up at some of the Transport Committee meetings this summer.

Let me again put categorically on the record that this Party is not opposed to co-operatives. I will quote the words in Committee of the Hon. Member for Regina West with regard to the concerns he raised and which I hope were allayed at Committee. If there is any concern that what the motion says is not what was intended to be accomplished by the wording, then we in this Party are certainly not concerned about changing the wording. We do not want to see individual producers denied access to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

Our record on that is clean. We moved the amendment which resulted in an additional producer as well as the amendment which included the truckers. Where was the NDP? They voted against the truckers, the little people which the Member for Spadina talked about. If there were ever little people in the area of big giants, it is the little truckers which compete with CP and CN in the trucking business. I would like to have seen the Members from the NDP support our amendment to get the truckers included.

We also got an additional member of the feed users. That is a plus for western Canada. It amounts to another producer. It means that this Party was responsible for getting two additional producers on the Committee. Instead of three, we have five. I do not hear anyone complaining about that. If we want to be consistent, let us talk about what went on in Committee. I wish to quote from the Transport Committee proceedings, page 125:28, September 1, 1983. I quote:

> MR. BENJAMIN: Mr. Chairman, I have another question. What about a family farm that is incorporated, or a co-operative farm? Say you have a co-operative farm with ten or a dozen or you have a farm that is incorporated, a father, two sons, the wife and the daughter, that is a corporation . . . I just want to make sure those people are not eliminated.

That was a legitimate concern that was raised in Committee. It was the proper place to do it. The chairman replied: "They are not". Mr. Lefebvre, the Department counsel, then said:

> Yes, Mr. Chairman. We have looked at this and the previous wording was worded in a way similar to this one for the exact purpose of not eliminating farmers, even if they are co-operative farmers.

To our satisfaction, with the advice of counsel at the Committee, this amendment put in at Committee which the NDP is now so excited about did not cause the problems they are now raising. I submit that the reason they are concerned about this is that they attacked the pools very vigorously when we travelled to Winnipeg and Regina. They are now trying to get back some political hay which they threw away in Winnipeg and Regina.

Let me quote what the Hon. Member for Regina West said about the pools in Winnipeg when talking to the president of the Manitoba Wheat Pool:

> Would you not agree if grain producers could get three or four or five times increases in their prices, there would be no problem about them paying more freight rates? Why would you hold still for your own members paying more freight rates at the prices they are getting today, that are down from what they were two or three years ago.

When we were in Regina—if NDP Members other than the Member for Regina West would have travelled with the Committee they would know this—the Member for Regina West said to Mr. Turner, the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool:

If you are prepared to blindly accept the kinds of things that Mr. Snavely has put forward—and Gilson and Pepin are based on Snavely—then I submit, Mr. Chairman, to Mr. Turner, that you are not really protecting the farmer's social and economic conditions, as you say on the first page of your summary.

The tone of the remarks was that the NDP was very unhappy with what the pools had said to this Committee with regard to eliminating the statutory rate for producers.

Now we have this great bleeding heart tirade from our left about how in favour they are of co-operatives and what great things the co-operatives are. They want to get back in the good graces of the co-operatives. I submit that the whole purpose of this amendment is not to look after the producers, which this Party saw fit to look after and did the best we could throughout the Committee proceedings, but simply to get themselves back in the good graces of the pools that they attacked quite vigorously in both Winnipeg and Regina.

When the Hon. Member for Regina West says that his motion will not do violence to the amendment, I agree with him totally. However when he gets up and speaks he does violence to this House. He misrepresents what transpired at committee. The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) attended one meeting. I do not know where he was for the rest of them. If he had been concerned about the producers in his area he should have at least showed up at committee. He did not even see fit to attend when the committee travelled to his own Province.

● (1500)

I agree with the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). We see no reason to impinge on the eligibility of producers. This Party's amendment was specifically designed to allow individual producers to be appointed on their own behalf. I do not think anyone who understands how the Senior Grain Transportation Committee is supposed to work could think of eliminating the railways. I do not like the railways any more than anyone else does. I have many concerns about their monopoly and how we have to deal with them. In order for the Senior Grain Transportation Committee to function effectively, however, all the major players must be part of it, so that if there are problems to be sorted out the railways can be told by the other participants to get their act together.

If the NDP wants to pursue a philosophy to the effect that whenever we hear the CNR or the CPR mentioned we should have nothing to do with the railroads, I do not think that is in the best interests of the producer.

If there are some real concerns about the NDP amendment, we would like to see them addressed, Mr. Speaker. We are not in favour of excluding any producers from the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. The reasons the NDP have advanced in support of the amendment and the problems that they have tried to blame on this Party are spurious, and I know that the producers of western Canada will recognize them as such. All they have to do is to check on the participation of the NDP in the committee proceedings during the summer.

If there is a legal opinion that is different from that which we heard from two lawyers at the committee which would exclude individual producers who happen to be directors of local pools, local UGGs, or members of a family farm that operates as a corporation or co-operative farm, we are not in favour of that either.

I hope I have put enough on record so that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) will not have to get up again to ask what our position is.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that we are finally hearing a spokesperson from the Official Opposition speak on the amendment introduced by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

We are concerned about the makeup of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. We feel that it is a committee that can have an important role to play. There is still some debate about whether this will be a technical committee or an advisory committee. I wish to put on record the testimony given to the Transport Committee by Mr. Arthur Kroeger, Secretary, Ministry of State for Economic Development, as reported at page 125:44 of the proceedings of that committee as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the committee is intended as was suggested to this committee by Mr. Turner of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. I do not think it is intended that this committee would be limited to narrow technical functions. It is true that to deal with some of the major issues in the grain transportation system at present, you have to look at some of the specifics; you have to look at some technical matters. But the committee is intended to have broad advisory responsibilities, in the first instance to the administrator.

I think that illustrates that this can be more than just a technical committee.

We are concerned that as many producers as possible be eligible to sit on that committee. Out of this concern we are moving this amendment that clear up the ambiguity that exists in the amendment to Clause 3(d) of the proposed legislation.

We are concerned about this and I do not think it does the cause of the Official Opposition any good to belittle that concern. In fact, I think it raises the question of whether they share our concerns. Their attempt to belittle our position on this makes me wonder whether there is a double agenda involved. When the Conservatives moved the amendment that constitutes much of Clause 3(d), their intent was so obvious and blatant that they had to amend the original amendment. It was then accepted by the Liberals and Conservatives voting together.

Mr. Mayer: How would you know? You were not there.

Mr. de Jong: In the original amendment the part that they deleted was "—or elected or appointed representives of any board or committee involved in an advisory or other capacity with respect to the grain trade."

That last wording in the original amendment to Clause 3(d) would have made it even more obvious that members of the Wheat Pool who sit on advisory committees would have been eliminated from being eligible to sit on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. It was so obvious that they had to withdraw that last part of the paragraph. To dispute that there is some ambiguity in this subclause is nonsense; it is there. Different legal opinions have admitted that ambiguity. In the opinion of some lawyers a reasonable interpretation of the words in that subclause could prevent a nominee of a co-operative chosen to be a delegate at a subdistrict committee meeting of grain producers from being elected or continuing to serve as a member of the committee.

Furthermore, it is possible to construe Subclause (d) as preventing a member of a local Wheat Pool advisory committee who sits as a representative of a co-operative from being elected or from continuing to serve as a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. The proposed wording of Clause 3(d) does not go so far as to deny a member of a co-operative from being elected or from continuing to serve as a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. There is honest ambiguity and there is honest doubt here.

Why are Members of the Conservative Party so adamant in opposing a very reasonable and innocent subamendment? If they are so in favour of having Wheat Pool members and delegates participating in the election of members to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, why are they opposing this amendment?

• (1510)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette rises on a point of order.

Mr. Mayer: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I said about eight times during my ten minute speech that we were not opposed to this amendment. I will say it again to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). We are not opposed to this amendment. If there is any doubt about what the Bill is going to do to individual members of co-operatives, of Wheat Pools, of wheat pool locals, of UGG locals, we are not opposed to the amendment. I do not know how many times I have to get up and say it, but I will say it again. We are not opposed to this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point. The Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, while that was not really a valid point of order, I do welcome the intervention. It is marvellous to hear the statement being put that plainly, although the second time the Hon. Member repeated it he did include an "if", if there is reasonable doubt. Other speakers from the Conservative Party have mentioned that there does not exist such doubt in this legislation. The point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that that doubt does exist. I hope the Official Opposition will recognize that a reasonable doubt does exist and that it will indeed support this subamendment.

The history of the co-operative movement in agriculture in western Canada is vital. It has played a very crucial role. The co-operative movement is the result of years of experience of farmers in Canada which led them to the conclusion that only through co-operative action can they defend their self-interest, that only through coming together, marketing their products together, are they able to prevent the exploitation which private grain dealers have been involved in for years and years. At one time, Mr. Speaker, the co-operative movement was totally opposed by the vested interests in this country, the people who operated the Grain Exchange out of Winnipeg and the private grain monopolies. And those grain monopolies had their interests represented in both the Liberal and Conservative Parties. These traditional Parties opposed the co-operative movement because it meant that their power over farmers would evaporate, that the farmers themselves would take control of their own destinies.

All progressive victories in the past have necessitated an ongoing struggle to maintain those victories. We see that with medicare, with social legislation, with all progressive legislation. Every progressive move brings forth a reaction. The fight against the co-operative movement, Mr. Speaker, is not over. That fight continues. We in this Party are determined to fight to protect the victories of the past. We are determined to fight to protect the pools and the co-operative efforts of farmers themselves. We will fight against any measure to erode the position of the farmers.

I can understand, perhaps, some of my Conservative friends being somewhat confused because a co-operative, like the Pools, Mr. Speaker, represents the producers. In the end it is a producers' organization. So producers involved in that organization, even though they might have various positions, are still first and foremost producers. They are not members of some corporation. They have created the Wheat Pool, which has many of the trappings of a corporation, but it is more than that. It is the product of the producers themselves. Ordinary producers, who are involved in advisory positions and in operating the Wheat Pools should not be labelled in the same way as one would label a manager of a private grain company or a private elevator.

I notice the Chair is indicating that my time is up. With the consent of the House I would request one more minute to conclude my remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to conclude his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Jong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And I wish to thank the House for this opportunity to conclude my remarks.

The point I was trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that members of the Wheat Pools, whether in Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba, who hold delegate positions or advisory positions are not really just officers or agents of a company. They are still producers involved in a co-operative effort with other producers. Their position is quite different to that of an officer of a private company. That is why I am dismayed that the words "or co-operative" is in here. To me it indicates that there is not a recognition that a producer who is active in his pool organization is not the same as a businessman who is involved in a private grain company. There is a very distinct difference, Mr. Speaker.

The other point I wish to make in summation, Mr. Speaker—and perhaps it is my major point—is that if there is agreement in the House that there is reasonable ambiguity in the subclause as it now exists, then I invite the House to give unanimous consent to the amendment, Motion No. 30, which has been introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West. I ask for unanimous consent that Motion No. 30 be accepted.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise again today to speak on what I consider to be a historic Bill. I believe everyone who has spoken on the motion today realizes that in later years someone will look back at the record to see who spoke and what they said today. Although my remarks may not be the most historic on record, I would like to add them to the debate.

I have always had a great interest in historic law. If one had the opportunity to visit some of the ancient civilizations such as Egypt or Persia, one would find that the law was carved in stone. It was set up in such a way by the lawmakers that it would remain. There was a finality to the law. Good law which is made today has a permanence to it. Unfortunately, bad law has a permanence to it as well. This Bill, which will set up a way of handling grain in western Canada, if it passes, is very important. It is a Bill which will set down in a permanent way something which is extremely important to western Canadians.

Some of my colleagues to my right have indicated that not all the Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party took part in the committee hearings. That is exactly correct. I did not take part in the hearings myself. Nevertheless, I still feel that Parliament is a place in which Members can relate to the work of the Members who took part in the committee hearings. I also feel it is very important, when we come to the House of Commons, that we relate from our point of view to the legislation which is being discussed. Each Hon. Member here brings a different point of view. It is true that because of my vocation in life I do not have a quota book, I do not own a farm, I do not farm every year. However, farming in my part of the world is extremely important. Even though I do not have a quota book, and even though I was not at the committee hearings—and we all have a right to speak on the Bill—I feel it is extremely important that when something is being set down in stone, something is being put into law, we must be very sure in making that law that we protect the little person, the person at the bottom. In moving Motion No. 30 my colleague is trying to spell out in a concrete way that the person at the bottom, the representative of someone who belongs to a local grain co-operative, will not be excluded, ever. The mood which seems to exist in the country today sometimes argues against the notion of co-operatives. It is a mood which says that it is better to look after oneself, after one person, than to have a group looking after everyone. I can see that sometime down the road a person who belonged to a co-operative might be discarded simply because of the mood against co-ops. That is why I would like to see this amendment in the Bill. I hear that Hon. Members down there are willing to accept it. It must be clear in the future that the little person will always be protected.

Another point I would like to bring forward is that those who were not present at all the committee hearings have a special reason for reading the Bill now and bringing forward their viewpoint. They can see it from their perspective but they do not have all the history. I would like to see it clearly spelled out in this part of the Bill that a representative of one group cannot come in as a representative of another group and thereby take two places. The reason I say this is that in the grain growing and handling business we have a lot of people whom I would call joiners. In church, in school, in political Parties, in business you will have a certain number of people whom I call joiners. They are people who get into various organizations at the same time. We can look at the various representatives of the grain associations in western Canada and we will find that there are many people who belong to four or five different groups. As some of my colleagues pointed out, they belong to pools, the UGG and so on. They are joiners, and that is probably one of the reasons why they became active in politics. I would like it spelled out that if a person is appointed to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee under one heading, he cannot come in under another heading as well.

I would call upon my colleagues around here, Mr. Speaker, to be very cautious of the fact that we are putting something down which can be interpreted in a different way by our sons, grandsons and greatgrandsons, unless it is spelled out very clearly today. All the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) intended to do was to spell this out very clearly as it relates to people who are in co-operative associations. I was happy to hear the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) say that he—and I am sure he is representing his Party—would be willing to accept this if there is any doubt. I feel there is a doubt. Our legal opinion indicates there is a doubt, and so I hope Members on the Government side and on our side will agree that the motion should be included there and that the Bill will be like the old laws written in stone, that it will be clear and simple enough for all to understand, and the ordinary, little person will be the one who will be protected all the time.

I am going to bring my remarks to an end now, Mr. Speaker, but I hope that everyone in the House will take to heart these few thoughts I have brought to the matter and that the little person will be protected all the time through this motion.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to support my colleague, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer). Quite frankly, we are dealing with a motion which is really redundant, but in order that there be no doubt we certainly will accept the spirit and thrust of what the NDP is proposing. In the course of the committee hearings, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) stated:

It is not the intention of the Members on this side to prevent Members of local pools or UGG organizations from being elected or being named to this Committee.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) knows that very well. He was there. Nonetheless, he continues to prompt his colleagues to distort the facts and mischievously to mislead Members of this House. The fact is that most of what we have heard today is nothing but clap-trap. What we on this side of the House tried to achieve was simply to ensure that producers, enfettered by any other biases, full-time producers who were in the business of farming and had no other biases or interests, were to be included in this very useful Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

Once again we witness the hypocrisy of the New Democratic Party. During the course of the committee meetings at one point in time the Hon. Member for Regina West discarded the Senior Grain Transportation Committee as being meaningless or irrelevant. He said, and I quote from page 126:106:

I would prefer that this whole damn thing he deleted or else be put under the aegis of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Now we hear from Members over there that this committee is going to transform the whole policy making mechanism for the grain transportation industry, yet at the same time the Hon. Member said that as far as he was concerned the whole damn thing should be deleted. They cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Nystrom: Watch your language.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, I am only quoting the Hon. Member for Regina West who uses that word more than all other Members put together.

It seems that the NDP does not want producers sitting on this committee, Mr. Speaker. It wants producers to be aligned with either the UGG or the pools or Cargill or CN or CP. What we were trying to do was to ensure that, say, a director of CN or CP who was a farmer could not serve on this committee. There is a former Member of this House who is now a chairman of one of the railroads and he has a Wheat Board permit. If that restriction is not put in place he could conceivably sit as a farm representative. I guess the NDP really wanted that sort of thing, but we did not. We wanted to clarify and make absolutely sure that these were bona-fide, full-fledged producers who were in the business of producing grain.

Mr. Gustafson: I hope the press hears that.

Mr. Mazankowski: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we thought it was very important that these producers had the opportunity to square off with representatives from the railroads. The Members of the NDP do not want the railroads sitting at the same table as the farmers on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. How absurd! How ridiculous! The fact of the matter is that if there is going to be any cohesion or co-ordination, if there is any way that we can cut out the finger-pointing, that can take place during the course of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee's sittings. I see the former Minister of Transport applauding in support. I think he knows, as I know, that the only way to get this very complex and complicated system working is to bring representatives of all components of this very diverse system together and seat them around a table, get them all pulling in the same direction, dedicating themselves to a common cause, the discharging of their responsibilities and obligations.

I can think of no other way in which a lot of the difficulties and problems, either real or potential, can be overcome and reduced to a minimum than through the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. We certainly support the concept. It was never our intention to be overly restrictive as far as the producers were concerned. We believe that these various organizations involved in the system can have their representatives, but we also very firmly believe that producers are very important. We consider that to be the reason for the whole structure in the first place. If it were not for producers producing grain, we would not need a Senior Grain Transportation Committee or a Grain Transportation Agency Administrator. Therefore, it is only natural that producers should serve on the committee.

The same is true with regard to other parts of the Bill. I do not know whether it was an oversight or whether it was deliberate, but the word "producer" was conspicuous by its absence. Quite frankly, we as Members on this side tried to incorporate the word "producers" at every opportunity. We also incorporated that any decisions taken by the Senior Grain Transportation Committee or the Grain Transportation Administrator would be taken in the best interests of the producer, in other words, maximizing returns for the producer. That is what we set out to do and that is what we will continue to do as we debate the Bill.

I repeat that the New Democratic party has tried maliciously to exaggerate and to use a red herring. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette indicated, it is trying to get back into the good graces of the Wheat Pools. In so doing, it is trying to do irreparable damage to the producer body. No one went to bat for the producers, certainly the NDP did not. It voted against it. Of course, the Wheat Pools did not give their support, believing that they could best represent the producers. We saw fit, and the Government supported our amendment, to incorporate Wheat Pool membership, strengthening it. We certainly apologize to no one and we think the Bill will be better as a result.

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could have the permission of the House to ask a question of the Hon. Member who just sat down?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member does have some time remaining. Does he wish to accept a question?

Mr. Mazankowski: Sure.

Mr. Nystrom: My question is perhaps technical, but it is with regard to Clause 3 of the Bill. It states that those who cannot be members of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, those who cannot run for election, are "nominees, officers, directors, agents or representatives of any corporation, board or co-operative". I am wondering whether or not the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) can tell us why he is sure this would not exclude those who are on Wheat Pool committees, such as the chairmen of the local committees at Lintlaw, Assiniboia, or wherever. I do not have the material with me right now, but the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), who is to speak next, will read into the record a legal opinion which raises some doubt as to whether or not these ordinary producer-farmers may actually seek office if they happen to belong to a local Wheat Pool committee. If that is the case, it is very undemocratic.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for the question because my colleague, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette answered it. If the Hon. Member would want to familiarize himself with the evidence that was taken at the committee, I would refer him to the passage in Committee Proceedings No. 125, at pages 28 and 29. The general counsel for the Ministry of Transport clarified that point. Quite frankly, it was on the basis of the advice of legal counsel that the committee was given the assurance that delegates would not be excluded. As reported in Issue No. 125, at pages 87 and 88, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw very categorically stated: "it is not the intention of the Members on this side to prevent members of local pools or the UGG organizations from being elected or being named to this Committee". The Hon. Member for Regina West responded: "I agree that was not the intent of the movers of that edition".

While the Hon. Member for Regina West understood perfectly the intentions of the Members of the Conservative Party when they moved the amendment, he has obviously been influenced by other Members of his Party because he is now suggesting that there was a deliberate attempt to exclude the delegates, the locals of the Wheat Pools, and the UGG. That was never intended to be the case. However, as the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette pointed out, to remove any question of doubt we are certainly prepared to accept the thrust and the principle of the NDP motion. I understand that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) has considered it and is prepared to accept it in principle, except that he has perhaps found a better way of incorporating the thrust and the principle enshrined in the motion of the NDP so that it could be consistent with the other wording in the Bill.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and the New Democratic Party, I am glad to accept the conversion of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kristiansen: —and supposedly that of his colleagues. I seem to recall his saying just a few moments ago that our amendment was both redundant and unnecessary.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is.

Mr. Kristiansen: In dealing with the subject, I would now like to read into the record, under the letterhead of the House of Commons, a letter to the Hon. Member for Regina West from Mr. R. Cosman, the Assistant Parliamentary Counsel to the House, dated September 29, 1983. It states:

> In response to a request from Mr. Daryll Richards of your office, I have reviewed the amendment proposed with respect to paragraph (d) of Clause 3 of Bill C-155 as contained in the seventeenth report of the Standing Committee on Transport.
> It is my opinion that a reasonable interpretation of the words of that paragraph could prevent a "nominee" of a co-operative chosen to be a delegate at a subdistrict committee meeting of grain producers from being elected or continuing to serve as a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.
> Furthermore, it is reasonably possible to construe paragraph (d) as preventing a member of a local wheat pool advisory committee who sits as a "representative" of a co-operative from being elected or continuing to serve as a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, as well.
>
> The proposed wording of paragraph 3(d), however, does not go so far as to deny a member of a co-operative from being elected or continuing to serve as a member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.
> In forming my opinion, I have taken the position that if I were advocating the non-eligibility of a "nominee" of a co-operative or the removal from membership of a "representative" of a co-operative with respect to the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, could the words of paragraph 3(d) reasonably be interpreted to support my position, and I find that they do, notwithstanding that it may not have been the original intention of the drafters of this particular provision to have such an effect.

I am gratified to know that we are on good grounds. We felt that we were from the beginning, even if my Party was not certain, even if the Conservative Party was not certain, and even if the Liberal Government was not certain.

● (1540)

Certainly the letter I just quoted gives more than enough grounds for reasonable doubt that we were right in our opinion that these people may have been excluded, albeit inadvertently. Surely it is incumbent upon the representatives of ordinary people, especially Members from the western grain producing Provinces, to resolve the question in such a way that the benefit of the doubt goes to the representatives of co-operatives and those other organizations. If that is not done, what right do Members from the prairie Provinces have to claim even that they try to represent the best interests of the people who sent them here?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just to bring a little order, if I could, and to assist the Chair, there is one way of finding out how people feel about a certain amendment, that is, by way of a vote. If you check, Mr. Speaker, you will see that we allowed the NDP to continue to put their point. When we stood to speak on it, we agreed with their point and they continued to put it forward. There is a very simple way in this Hosue of deciding whether or not we support an amendment.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, conversions are always welcome. Also, I personally thought we were always in good order in this place—at least recently.

I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) and the Hon. Member for Vegreville, both of whom may choose to answer or have another Conservative answer on their behalf. In their references back to the committee which held hearings this summer, they seem to make much about the fact that although the NDP was fully represented in that committee at every hearing, they wonder why we did not have more people present at every meeting than we were eligible for at that committee. I would suggest to them that if the Conservatives are really concerned that there are not more New Democrats participating in parliamentary committees of the House, they should suggest to their voters back in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba that they would be well advised to send more New Democrats at the next opportunity so they can be properly represented. In that way they can raise some of the questions that are so necessary and have representatives who do not constantly flip-flop, back-stab, jag, twist and turn—although we welcome their turning and conversion—

Mr. Mazankowski: You certainly made the point yourself.

Mr. Kristiansen: Now they shout loudly because they want the people in the Prairies to think that they have always been on their side. Then why do they flip-flap on their basic position on this Bill. After many of their amendments which they proposed to Government Members on that committee were accepted they then decided-perhaps because so many of their suggestions were accepted—that the Bill is no good and they would oppose it. However, they are not opposing it very strongly. In fact, it was not until they were virtually intimidated time and again by Members from this corner of the House that they even stood in their places to say what they thought.

Mr. Gustafson: A clear admission.

Mr. Kristiansen: There is some bird taking flight down in that corner. It is certainly not a crow, but I do not know what species it is.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to correct the record, which is quite misleading if left to stand as it is. I wish to point out that the NDP in committee proposed 88 amendments, six of which were accepted, 51 of which were rejected, 28 of which were out of order and three which they saw fit to withdraw. Therefore, the point that the Hon. Member is making is quite misleading.

Mr. Kristiansen: I know what they say about statistics where I come from.

Mr. McKnight: Wait until you see the next vote count.

Mr. Kristiansen: I do not know if that made it on to the record but I look forward to the next vote count. I want to say something else. We who do not happen to be members of Wheat Pools or come from the prairie Provinces have also had our credentials challenged. I have been a British Columbian and a resident of the West Kootenays long enough to know that if you scratch an interior resident of British Columbia you will find a hayseed close beneath the surface. Most of us have fairly deep roots in the wheat and grain growing areas of the country. I am sure it is true of many of my colleagues who do not have the privilege of being members of Wheat Pools in the Prairie Provinces.

Mr. McKnight: Any hayseeds in your riding, Lorne?

Mr. Kristiansen: I come from a family who came to the Beverley hills of Saskatchewan in 1902 and 1905, who were active in the growth and origins of the United Grain Growers, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Progressive Party and the Saskatchewan Farmer Labour Party. I have as much right as anyone who happens to be currently a resident and a member of a Wheat Pool in that area to speak on the subject.

Furthermore, quite apart from the background of Members, each of us, by virtue of our election to this place, is allowed to do more than, as stated in an old poem, "Sit in places and grow dumb". Not only are we allowed to do much more than that, it is incumbent upon us to do more. Moreover, as Members of a Party which has recognized for many years the very close bond that exists between working people, whether on farms, in factories, in mills or in the woods. I resent the insinuation, particularly from some Conservatives, that we do not have as much right to claim our place in debate with regard to the welfare of this nation and its various communities as they may claim. We have that degree of tolerance and have always shown it. I suggest, particularly to those in the Opposition who pretend to value traditions, that they show as much.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because, unlike the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), I do not pretend to be a great expert on the grain trade.

Mr. Nystrom: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Nickerson: This afternoon, I listened intently to the speeches made by the Members of the NDP. I have to report that I still do not know very much about the grain trade, but I certainly learned a lot from them as to how one goes about it when one wants to twist words, distort phrases and give rise to unreasonable fears in the minds of western farmers.

Mr. Mazankowski: Shame on you fellows.

Mr. Nickerson: About the most charitable thing one could say with respect to Motion No. 30 is that it is redundant.

Mr. Nystrom: Why do you support it?

Mr. Nickerson: It is not necessary whatsoever. If one was a little less charitable, like my good friend, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), one might describe it as being spurious. It appears that the only reason it was introduced was once more to delay the proper consideration of the Bill that is before us.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could the Hon. Member indicate, with that type of rhetoric, why he will be supporting our amendment if it is redundant?

Mr. Nickerson: If the Hon. Member would be kind enough to wait until I reach that point in my presentation, he will find out. The objective behind introducing motions such as the one before us was undoubtedly just to delay the matter and give an opportunity to the Hon. Member for Spadina to talk about rent controls in Toronto. I do not know what that has to do with the Bill before us.

Mr. Heap: The same corporation.

Mr. Nickerson: Perhaps it was so that the NDP Members could present themselves as the saviours of the co-op movement. I know and have the support of very many people in the co-op movement. I am aware that these are very reasonable and business-oriented people. They must be to be in that movement. For that reason, when it comes time to vote, I can assure you that they will vote 99 percent in favour of the Progressive Conservative Party rather than the NDP.

We have heard fears raised about what would happen if a farming family incorporated itself or if two or three families got together and formed a production co-operative. I will read the existing Clause 3(d), Mr. Speaker, from line 30. It reads:

—who, at the time of their election, and for the duration of their service as members of the committee are not nominees, officers, directors, agents or representatives of any corporation, board or co-operative, the business of which is the purchase, sale, storage, processing or transportation of grain;—

Members of the NDP would have us believe that because a farmer loads up his truck and drives it for eight miles to the elevator, he is in the business of the transportation of grain. They would have us believe that because he buys his seed grain, he is in the business of buying and selling grain. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a court in the land that would put that interpretation on the words contained in Clause 3(d).

I was very pleased with the way our position was presented in committee by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and his many colleagues who put in so many hours of work on that committee. I was very pleased by the way they fought for the grain producers of Canada. I think they have achieved a considerable victory by having incorporated on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee four representatives of the primary producers of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: It is essential, Sir, that the representatives of these primary producers be free from any possible conflict of interest. They should be able to concentrate only from the point of view of the producers. For that reason, not just any permit book holder may be permitted to be the producer representative because, as the Hon. Member for Vegreville has quite rightly pointed out, the same permit book holder might also be the president of a railroad company. He might be the president of a firm that trades in grain on the Winnipeg commodity exchange. That is not what we intended when we presented the amendments that have been accepted by the Government.

There does, however, appear to be one possible misinterpretation of these amendments, and that deals with the member of the local Wheat Pool committee. It was certainly not our intention, nor, I am sure, was it the intention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), that that person be excluded from the possibility of election. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to support the amendment that we believe the Minister of Transport intends to bring forward.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member who last spoke for the introduction to his speech. I too have certainly enjoyed the debate this afternoon. It has been educational, edifying and at times even enlightening, but I think it all comes down to the very simple point that all Parties in the House are anxious that two things be accomplished. The purpose of the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) was to ensure that the member of the local co-op or pool be not excluded from membership on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I think that is a position that has been clearly endorsed by members of the Official Opposition and certainly by Members on the Government side.

At the same time, we have expressed the concern, as has the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) on behalf of his Party, that we did not want a system that would result in double membership by the major organizations that are represented, because that in effect would throw the balance of the committee out of whack. That Grain Transportation Committee is composed of the major institutions. Through this part of the Bill, we are trying to ensure that in effect the grass roots membership would also have an opportunity to be represented on the Transportation Committee to bring to it the particular point of view that they represent.

I think it is possible, Mr. Speaker, to arrive at a solution to those two points of view without doing any injustice to any of the positions taken by Hon. Members. It would require a certain unanimous agreement on behalf of Members of the House. First, if the Hon. Member for Regina West were in agreement to withdraw his Motion No. 30 as it is stated in the orders of the House, I would then be prepared to offer for consideration an amendment that would read as follows:

That Bill C-155 be amended at page 3 by deleting lines 34 to 37 and substituting the following therefor:

"or agents of any organization referred to in paragraph (e); and"—

That, in effect, Mr. Speaker, would ensure that anyone from the local level could be elected as part of that producer representation, but that person could not be a person who was going to be a member under the organizational representation as set out in paragraph (e). I think that therefore, guarantees the right that Members have been arguing for over the past two or three hours, and that is, that members of local co-ops, committees and others could in fact be elected without any hesitation. It would not mean, as feared by the Hon. Member, that the president of a railroad who also held a permit book could be elected as well and therefore have an additional advantage.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that this motion might elicit an acceptable agreement from Members of the House. If Hon. Members could indicate their agreement, then perhaps we could go forward and accept the proposed motion and withdraw Motion No. 30, with all due credit being given to all Hon. Members who have contributed this afternoon. I do believe an important point has been made and we might as well accept that point and get on with the business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this point, the Chair is of the understanding that if there is agremeent by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to withdraw Motion No. 30 which is before us, the Minister would then move the amendment that he has indicated. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Regina West to withdraw Motion No. 30?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am agreeable but I take it that once the Minister moves the motion that will replace mine, we will then be recognized for some brief debate on his motion. I am quite willing to withdraw mine and proceed with the Minister's motion.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we would certainly be in agreement with that proposition and we will be supporting the motion that has been proposed by the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy).

Motion No. 30 (Mr. Benjamin) withdrawn.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport) moved:

That Bill C-155 be amended at page 3 by deleting lines 34 to 37 and substituting the following therefor:

"or agents of any organization referred to in paragraph (e); and"—

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State (External Relations)): I do not intend to take part in the debate at this time, Mr. Speaker. I merely wish to suggest to the Chair that if you would look around the House, perhaps you could obtain unanimous consent to revert to tabling of documents, since I would like to table a number of documents that I was asked for this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Minister to have leave of the House to return to tabling of documents in order that he may table a document?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we have an amendment which covers the ground that all of us are anxious to cover, although I must say that the Minister is worrying unnecessarily. However, if it satisfies everybody, fine. In the amendment it says "or agents of any organization referred to in paragraph (e) and". I would point out that under (e), if the President of United Grain Growers is appointed by the United Grain Growers as a representative under paragraph (e) and he chooses to stand for election as one of the four elected people under paragraph (d), obviously he would have to resign as the representative for the United Grain Growers under paragraph (e). He could not sit in both positions. Either the UGG or the grain producers would have one less representative. I do not think any grain company or organization would be that dumb. It was an unnecessary worry on the part of the Minister. It does not make any difference.

Similarly, if the President of the CPR had a grain farm and a Wheat Board permit and chose to run as one of the four representatives democratically elected, in the first place I doubt he would get more than one half of one per cent of the votes of the grain producers in western Canada, but he could not sit in both positions. If he were to win in one, he could not sit in the other.

The Minister is correct in the sense that, hopefully, it would obviate any over-representation by an elected officer. Someone there under paragraph (d) could not be there under (e), or if they were there under (e), they could not be there under (d). I believe that is all that is trying to be accomplished. If that serves to head off any worries which the Minister has, that is fine with us.

I am more pleased that the amendment deletes lines 34 to 37, which should not have been there in the first place. The Conservative Party protests as to what great supporters and advocates they are of the co-operative movement. If that is the case, why did they have the word "co-operative" there in the first place? I tried in committee to persuade them not to have it in there. I will take their word that they are great supporters of the co-operatives and the Wheat Pools. I am pleased that they are prepared now as a further repentance—that is now three or four of them; they will be almost sinless by the time we get through this Bill—to accept the deletion of those four lines of their Conservative Clause, supported by the Liberals. Now the Liberals are prepared to move to delete the lines that they supported that had been moved by the Conservatives, in which case they have both repented, ye sinners.

I could not resist teasing my colleagues in the Liberal and Conservative Parties on that score. It is all on the record of the committee, and certainly on the record of the House. The main point is that Members on all sides of the House are trying to accomplish an objective that we all had, but we could not come up with a wording on which we could all agree. It appears we now have, so we can support the Minister's amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Axworthy) agreed to.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 31

That Bill C-155 be amended in Clause 10 by adding immediately after line 20 at page 6 the following:

"(c) a person who in his opinion represents labour in the handling and transportation of grain".

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak to this amendment. I have been a trade unionist for 28 years. I strongly hope that we can have agreement in the House that labour should be represented on this important national board. There may have been better ways of organizing grain transportation, but if there is going to be a board like this, it will have an important function. Therefore, it is quite important that there be labour representation on it, as this motion provides.

There will be a number of different major jurisdictions concerned. There are the grain cleaners, grain loaders, the various stages of handling, the elevator employees, the railway workers, the longshoremen, the seamen, that is if Canada ever goes back to having a merchant marine. All these people ought to have a voice on this Grain Transportation Committee.

The basic principle is occasionally recognized in our country, but is not recognized often enough. The principle is simply that the people who do this work could have a voice in the decisions. Whether it is in grain handling at the beginning, the transportation, the loading, the grain handling at the other end, these are the people who do the work that create the surplus out of which wages are paid and profits are found. It is to the benefit of the country as a whole that they should have a voice in directing the work that they are doing. They are on the spot, they see what is needed and what is necessary for their health and safety.

I have 18 years' experience working in a factory which made corrugated paper boxes. I worked as a labourer in all departments, but mainly in the press department. I was a member of what is now the Canadian Paperworkers' Union. I could see day by day the value to the workers, but ultimately to a much wider circle, of having workers listened to in management decisions.

This was just one of 50 plants in this large North American corporation. There was no system of labour representation on any board of directors. Instead, we had to make do with negotiations and consultations between the union in our plant or the unions in other plants and the general management that represented only the large shareholders. Nevertheless, when we got a manager who was prepared to listen to the union, it turned out that not only working conditions and health and safety conditions in the plant were improved, but the plant became more efficient and productive for the benefit of both the workers and the company.

In this situation, the same applies, but there is a further consideration. In this situation the principal shareholder is the people of Canada. Considering the amount of money that has been put into the transportation system and the grain handling system in all of its forms, the pricipal investor in that whole system or complex is the people of Canada. There is, therefore, a more special reason why this principle should be embodied in the structure of the committee, namely, there should be some representation of labour, the people who actually do the work. This is quite distinct from putting in the representation, already provided for, of some of the major corporations that employ the labour. When only they are represented it turns out that they do not do a very good job in the long run because they do not understand the necessity of considering the health, welfare and wisdom of those who actually do the work.

● (1610)

Where public money is involved it is very important that the people doing the cleaning and loading of grain, the grain handling, whether at the elevators or ports, the longshoring and, when Canada comes to its senses and has a merchant marine, the people handling the boats offshore and in the lakes—all these people should have at least one voice in the management of the grain handling industry. They constitute the brain and muscle of a national network without which the grain cannot move to the ports, let alone beyond the ports. They should not be treated as mere muscle; they are brain and muscle and spirit as well. Without their participation we will not have orderly and productive movement of grain.

I therefore urge all Parties in the House to support the amendment to have the Minister appoint a person who represents labour in the handling and transportation of grain.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, as we said in committee and on other occasions, we feel it is very important that all segments of the grain industry be represented, at least in an observer capacity. Some concern has been expressed by members of the grain producing community to the effect that they would like to find a way of bringing an action or communicating directly with the labour unions when they withdraw services and cause producers to lose money.

The amendment before us is much the same as that proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) in committee, although his was broader in scope. We supported that amendment.

When we look at the history of the grain handling sector of the economy, it is easy to see why it is important to have representation of some segment of the labour organizations involved in the movement of grain.

A strike began on May 16, 1982, which was settled on July 7, 1972, after 53 days. Ports in British Columbia were closed for 21 days in 1972. On July 26, 1973, a strike began which lasted 33 days. In 1974, grain handlers stopped work on October 10 and the strike lasted 44 days. At that time Mr. Vogel, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, said the strike was costing prairie farmers in western Canada $200 million in lost sales. In 1975, there was a 36-day walkout of grain weighers, a 24-day walkout by longshoremen and a one-day walkout by longshore-foremen. Dock workers at Montreal, Quebec City and Trois Rivières went on strike for 25 days. In 1978, the strike on Canada's inland shipping fleet lasted for nine days. In 1981, a work stoppage at Thunder Bay lasted for 16 days. In November, 1982, there was another work stoppage.

By accepting the amendment we hope that the Parties involved in the movement of grain, including the unions—those in the grain terminals, the longshoremen and the railroading unions and all others—can be brought together with the four or five real grain producers in the Senior Grain Transportation Committee along with the management of those companies. This is why we think it would be effective for the grain producers to be unfettered and able to represent their fellow producers in discussions between the management of the terminal operators in Vancouver, the management of the railway companies, and the management of the line elevator companies, the people who are so important in the movement of grain.

We feel confident that if there is face to face discussion on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee among members of all segments of the industry, the movement of grain will go much more smoothly and no one will suffer. We therefore support the amendment.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was a little disappointed that the Member of the New Democratic Party who spoke in support of the amendment did not explain to the House who this representative would be. Would he belong to the port union, the railway union, the elevator union? There are a lot of workers involved in grain handling who do not belong to any union but they are labour and should be represented. I listened intently, hoping to get some guidance on who the labour representative should be.

I agree that the representative of labour should be included as an observer. Of course, the choice is being left to the Minister, and that is as it should be. In the Transport Committee we inserted Clause 10(3) as follows:

> The Minister may appoint, and
> (a) a person as his representative

That was so that there will be an observer present representing the Minister, but one who is not allowed to vote or take part in discussions. We also provided for:

> (b) a person who in his opinion represents the producers of crops in the Western Division for the shipment of which a Canadian Wheat Board permit is not required.

Such person could also act as an observer on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

I see nothing wrong with adding a representative of labour as well. This would not make the committee too large, which was a consideration of the Transport Committee. It would allow labour to monitor the meetings and have some indirect input. Some may argue that an observer does not have much say in the proceedings. When the Transport Committee was travelling across Canada and was considering the Bill clause by clause, many observers attended its meetings. As the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) knows very well, some were from the railways, some from labour and some from the various producers. They talked to the committee members. They talked to us before the hearings and after the hearings. Members from all three Parties lobbied us. They played a very important role in the whole process. I see labour also playing a very important role by being given this observer status on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

● (1620)

I would also like to demonstrate to the New Democratic Party that if that Party brings in positive, constructive amendments to this Bill, we will support them. However, if that Party brings in frivolous amendments just to stall the debate and take the time of the House, then we will not support those amendments. The Government is prepared to support positive amendments such as this one. I am announcing to Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party that we, on this side of the House, are ready to support their amendment.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see this type of amendment made to this Bill. I am a person who has had the good fortune to work within the labour ranks and from there to go into the role of management. In the Port of Vancouver I have had occasion to have many meetings, not only with the senior managers around the port activities but I have also had the pleasure of having hours of discussion with senior labour people. I can also remember some years back, when I was a new Member of this House, a group of us quietly going out to see what could be done to break one of the impasses between the longshormen's union, the Grain Workers' Union and the railroad union. I made the observation that too often much of the trouble which develops in these confrontations is really created by people whose function it is to work at public relations or in the legal field, legal people and labour lawyers. It was our experience at that time that the impasse was broken only by getting the leaders on the labour side together with the senior people on the industrial side and bypassing the bureaucracy. That brought about a resolution to that particular impasse.

I believe it is important that some of us who are management oriented realize that there is often more talent in managerial functions on the labour side than there is in the hierarchy of management.

In the Port of Vancouver we have had bottlenecks and unloading problems over the years. I had a conversation with Mr. Henry Kancs, the leader of the Grain Workers' Union, who gets absolutely frustrated with the inability of the industry to bring its parts together and to improve some of the inefficiencies. He feels that some of the inefficiencies caused by management is felt on the backs of the working men. I know the frustration which grain workers feel when they know there are simple arrangements which can increase the productivity of the port and the handling of the grain, and which would also increase the take-home pay packet of the grain worker. I speak, for instance, Mr. Speaker, of the simple act of the dispatching of grain cars for the elevators in the Port of Vancouver from Kamloops or to some other inland point where the assembly of the trains matches the delivery need of the elevators. I speak simply of enlarging the four-mile switching limit at the Port of Vancouver to 12 miles. These are suggestions which have come from labour. However, when you enlarge the switching limit from 4 miles to 12 miles you immediately run into the interests of the British Columbia railroad which probably has revenues which are dependent on the 4-mile switching limit. However, over-all, the Port of Vancouver could work to advantage on a 12-mile limit.

I hope that if we put a labour observer into a committee that is as important as this one we can start to break down some of the artificial impediments to the improvements of the productivity of the whole movement system, because if we do not, the farmer is going to suffer along with the individual worker in the system. I feel it would do the attitude to this whole concept much good to bring labour more and more into this type of decision so that it can understand more and more of the problems of the farmer and of the manager. If we do not do this, we are going to have more and more people laid off and more and more labour strikes. We must work at explaining why decisions are made, and spread the knowledge and the reasons behind certain things which are being done. If we could allow input from the working man into these decisions, I feel we would do much to improve the productivity which this country needs if it is to start creating more jobs and addressing our serious unemployment problem.

I am very pleased to see all Parties in the House come together on the suggestion that labour should be involved. I feel this will go a long way toward creating a good working relationship for the future.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, we tried initially, if I recall, to have this done by way of the Minister appointing a voting member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee from the trade union movement involved in the storage, handling, elevating, loading and unloading and transportation of grain. I do not recall whether I was ruled out of order or whether I was voted down. However, we would still prefer that. One of the major players in the whole system is the worker. However, if this is all we can get for now by way of agreement from the Government and from the Official Opposition, that is fine. It is a beginning. We in this Party are under no illusion that this is a giant step forward, but it is finally a recognition. In legislation which is already in place there is little or no attention paid to workers, nor is any opportunity provided for workers to have some input. The railway workers are represented by somewhere between 15 and 20 different unions. With the grain handlers, one major union and a smaller one are involved. There are two or three unions representing the Great Lakes seamen, the deck officers and the engineers. The Grain Services Union represents country elevator employees in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and some head office employees. There are the terminal elevator employees. There is the Electrical Workers Union. This adds up to about 30 or 35 unions which represent probably in the order of 100,000 workers.

It was interesting to see, Mr. Speaker, the input of individual trade union members and organizations prior to the hearings of the Transport Committee at the time we were holding the hearings, and following. I believe two different federations of labour and at least one city labour council presented briefs to the committee. The Grain Services Union representative appeared on behalf of many hundreds of country elevator agents. Surely that is a good indication, Mr. Speaker, in fact convincing evidence that the workers want to be included. They are in fact interested, they want to do a good job, and they want the opportunity. They have something to contribute. They know about the day-to-day operations in much greater detail and depth than a lot of their managers and foremen do.

• (1630)

The Parliamentary Secretary was wondering how the Minister would go about appointing that person. Well, it seems to me you will have to consult with the Canadian Labour Congress, the umbrella organization, which in turn would need to consult with all its member unions and probably strike a committee to get together and select from their number a person whom the Minister could appoint as an observer. It would not necessarily be the same person every year. Maybe you could have two different people each year, one year someone from the grain handlers union, another year someone from the railway brotherhood, or some other organization. I would think the CLC would be the most convenient vehicle, or else the Minister himself could consult with the trade union organizations and the CLC and strike a committee of all unions involved in all aspects of grain handling and transportation. He could have them select from one of their number a person he can appoint as an observer.

I am assuming that this person who was there as an observer would at least have a voice but no vote. If all he can do is to sit there and observe, then you might as well mail him a copy of the minutes and he can stay home. But when there is a problem among the unions, or something like that, the union observer will be consulted and asked to participate in the meetings of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee to offer solutions, ideas, suggestions and tell the committee what their problems are. But if he is not going to have a voice, then he can stay home, read the minutes and save the expense of going to the meetings.

Let me illustrate an area we heard about in committee, especially from the railroads and once in a while from a Government Member and some other organizations, this business of weekend loading of railway cars at country elevators. I can tell you that the grain service union representing country elevator agents, and the elevator companies, when they co-operated with the railroads to spot some cars Friday night, they loaded them Saturday and Sunday for pick up Sunday night or Monday morning, there were a number of instances where this was done. The railroads brought the cars in, the employees and the elevator company worked like dogs over the weekend, loaded the cars, and a week later they were still sitting there. But they are willing to co-operate.

There is some dispute between the elevator agents and some of the grain companies regarding the 40 hours a week. I believe they can work it out because it is very similar to the dispute at the time when the 40 hour week was adopted in 1950 in the railroads. They can work it out and I am sure they will. But on the whole matter of weekend loading, both the elevator companies and the elevator agents as well as the grain services' unions can be most helpful. It is just a case of not listening to the railroads only, as has been to damn the case over the years.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I can get confirmation from the Parliamentary Secretary that not only will the observer have a voice but also that it will be the intention of the Government at some early date to provide for a voting member, at least one, from the trade union movement involved in the transportation of grain. When I was on the railroad myself, heavily involved in the strike of 1950, which all of us hated, over the 40 hours a week, and in every episode since, much of the difficulty and problems which led or contributed to a breakdown and a strike or lock-out could have been avoided if there had been a lot more involvement from the unions in the day-to-day operations and year-to-year decision making, whether it is on technological change or on how to do something more efficiently. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) is perfectly correct; it is not only the grain handlers union in Vancouver. If you talk to railroaders in Vancouver, Winnipeg and Thunder Bay, the mess which passes for a distribution system in those three locations is incredible. In the name of competition you have two or three railroads running all over the darn city using up valuable land which could be used for houses, when they could all be running on the same set of three or four tracks instead of having a dozen tracks all over the city. The railway brotherhood unions have a contribution to make in this area.

If the Government were willing to reconsider and bring in an amendment of its own, I am certain we could have unanimous consent to increase the voting members of this committee by one or two. So what? Bring in an amendment, in which case I would be glad to withdraw my own. Add one or two more representatives selected by the trade union movement and appointed by the Minister. That would go a long way toward helping in this massive task which all the players have. It would help to head off in advance potential misunderstandings, breakdowns in communication, and confrontation. It would help to head off a lot of that. My own experience as both an employee and an employer is that when you had people working with you and not for you, you got a lot more work done, and done a lot better, and you had a much more loyal group of employees no matter what the size of the operation. But the present practices of management have brought about troubles of their own making, so I hope the Parliamentary Secretary, in response to my question, will be permitted to confirm that the observer will have a voice. I know he cannot have a vote. The Government should consider, during the course of report stage, bringing an amendment of its own to add one or two more people to the committee who would be appointed with a voice from the trade union movement.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I know I cannot speak twice but I would like to draw the Hon. Member's attention to Clause 11 which allows the committee to determine its own rules of conduct. He will find his answer in that clause.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter the discussion very briefly at this point on, I am happy to say, a more peaceful tone perhaps than some of the previous incursions. First of all, I should like to give support to the amendment submitted in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), particularly as I am one who has had considerable direct experience in the involvement of employees in management decision-making, in fact in the company in which I am still on the seniority list. That was an experiment which produced healthy results in my own community. At least they were good results until the "BCRICing" of that company in British Columbia, an Act which terminated any local management, not to mention employee involvement in that management.

It was a worth-while experience, and I think it was generally recognized as such by Parties all around that table and in that given community. Because of that experience and my own belief in the worth of such exercises, even if it is just representation in an observer capacity, as is mentioned in the amendment, I would particularly like to say how pleased I was to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) a few minutes ago, a Member with whom I often find myself in disagreement, even if we do not argue directly very often. My experience is much the same as his, that when representatives of working people and representatives of the management side of industry are able to work together over extended periods of time wearing a common hat, there is a greater understanding and non-conflict created during the long process of non-conflict situations which can be very useful in overcoming some of these instances which must of necessity occur from time to time in the adversary relationship that takes place around collective bargaining. There is a great deal to be said for the kind of common understanding that is built during such a period. That is an essential lesson in conflict management, one which this nation and its component parts really must learn if we are to continue to survive and grow as a nation and as a community in the way we should.

I would also like to say that I appreciate what seems to be the tone adopted so far by Members from all corners of the House in the debate on this particular amendment. In so doing, I would also like to pay tribute, which I think is appropriate, to one of my colleagues who succeeded, together with the stroke of rationality that struck both the Government and the Official Opposition, in having the thrust of his last amendment accepted. As one who studies more than just human behaviour from time to time, I would like to quote briefly from a text which I believe to be appropriate, particularly to the Hon. Member for Regina West but also to the process in which we are engaged. In a book entitled "On Aggression" by Konrad Lorenz, some time is spent discussing the habits of a species of bird called jackdaws, which is actually the second most common variety of crow, a species which seems rather appropriate to our discussion. It states:

> In jackdaws, and in many other very social birds, ranking order leads directly to protection of the weaker ones.

It continues:

> Since high-ranking jackdaws, particularly males, interfere in every quarrel between two inferiors, this graduation of social tension has the desirable effect that the higher-ranking birds always intervene in favour of the losing party.
> In jackdaws, another form of "authority" is already linked with the ranking position which the individual has acquired by its aggressive drive. The expression movements of a high-ranking jackdaw, particularly of an old male, are given much more attention by the colony members than those of a lower-ranking, young bird. For example, if a young bird shows fright at some meaningless stimulus, the others, especially the older ones, pay almost no attention to his expressions of fear. But if the same sort of alarm proceeds from one of the old males, all the jackdaws within sight and earshot immediately take flight. Since, in jackdaws, recognition of predatory enemies is not innate but is learned by every individual from the behaviour of experienced old birds, it is probably of considerable importance that great store is set by the "opinion" of old, high-ranking, and experienced birds.

I believe many people in the farming communities of western Canada would join with me in giving credit to the Hon. Member for Regina West who is certainly, in my own caucus, one of the oldest, highest-ranking and most experienced of old birds.

Mr. Pepin: Some bird.

Mr. Evans: Also one of the ugliest.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, just briefly I want to rise and associate myself with the expression of support that emanated from the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). We certainly have no difficulty in supporting Motion No. 31, which provides for a person representing labour and the handling of the transportation of grain to attend all or any meetings of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee as an observer, and that appointment would obviously be made by the Minister. As has been said by myself and other Hon. Members, the importance of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee and the work that it will do centres around the hope that all components of the system will be represented at the table. It is fair to say that there are some perhaps who may well have wished that the unions, the labour movement, had been included as a system participant, because they are vitally and integrally involved in the transportation of grain.

As outlined in the interpretation section of the Bill, "system participant" means any corporation, partnership or organization engaged in the transportation of grain by rail or the shipping or handling of grain for transportation by rail as designated by the Governor in Council individually or by class. Because of the unique role that the labour movement plays in the orderly flow or movement of grain, I think a good argument could be made, because with that designation go some responsibilities as well.

I want to speak on the matter of reliability as an objective in our grain transportation system. Throughout the Bill, the original draft of the Bill, one sees the objective of the grain handling and transportation as being efficient and effective. We in our Party tried to incorporate the word "reliability" at every occasion possible. We felt that that was a clear objective and, that the Senior Grain Transportation Committee should cite it as an objective, because I think that if there is anything that has tarnished and damaged our reputation as a supplier of grain, it would probably not exceed the concept of reliability. In order for Canada to reap the kind of sales that it needs in the competitive marketplace and to receive the kind of premium prices that we hope to achieve, reliability becomes paramount.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster outlined a number of labour disruptions that have occurred over the last ten year and which have certainly hurt Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier of grain, and that goes without saying. To the extent that we can reduce the kind of labour disruption that occurs which, in turn, would reduce the disruption of the smooth and orderly flow of grain to all ports and hence to our markets, anything we could do in the Bill to achieve that goal would certainly be a step in the right direction.

I certainly welcome the motion that has been advanced. As the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster indicated, we did support the concept in committee and we will certainly support it now. I simply want to repeat that we have a grain transportation and handling system that is very complex. It depends upon the decisions of a great many people. It depends upon whether we face the challenges of geography. Naturally, we will be faced with strikes and labour disruptions, but we hope we can reduce those to a minimum and thereby increase the potential earnings of the producer. I think that the word "reliability", as a logical goal in achieving a worthwhile grain transportation and handling system, is something for which we should all strive. It ties in very closely with our other thrust, namely the need to maximize returns to the producers. That should be the bottom line objective of our efforts with this Bill in order to ensure that they receive top dollars for their grain and that they can move their grain rather than store it and have it become a very costly item in terms of storage and lost revenue.

• (1650)

Let me repeat the importance of having everyone at the table. Again I must say that it boggles my mind when the NDP suggests that representatives of the railways should not sit or the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. It is incomprehensible and certainly illogical.

I think there is sufficient latitude under Clause 10 for the Minister to appoint a person as his representative or a person who, in his opinion represents the producers of crops in the western division for the shipment of which a Canadian Wheat Board permit is not required. I think, to that extent, that we can allow the Senior Grain Transportation Commitee to have observers. If we include a union representitive, that will certainly be of assistance in having all components at the bargaining table. I also find it strange that the NDP, which dismissed the Senior Grain Transportation Committee as a non-entity, is now suggesting that it is a pretty important component of this legislation. I presume that by the process of osmosis they are either getting hooked or led into supporting this Bill. It seems they have come a long way from their original stance when debate on this Bill began. At that time they said they would do everything in their power to obstruct it and everything possible to ensure that the Bill did not move forward an inch in the House of Commons. We now see them proposing constructive amendments, as the Parliamentary Secretary alluded to earlier.

If there is any confusion in anyone's mind, it certainly must be in the minds of the supporters of the NDP because they are now making a strong case for having all components of the system, except the railways, represented on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. I believe that they sense that this committee will have a great amount of influence over future policies of grain handling and transportation in Canada.

I think it goes without saying that while it is important to have a representative on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, it is also important that he carries with it an obligation. When the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) makes his pitch to have labour represented, I hope he recognizes that the farmers of Canada will be looking to that labour representative for some leadership in ensuring that the rank and file workers, who can either allow the shipments to proceed or to stop, act responsibly. I hope it is taken for granted that the producers and all other representatives on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee will be expecting the labour movement to discharge its responsibility in a manner which will not impair the orderly movement of grain and that the labour representative will ensure that that happens.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I also rise to speak in support of this motion, particularly as it relates to the labour unions and workers being represented on the Grain Transportation Committee. One of the problems which farmers face is strikes. When there is even a rumour of a strike in the Prairies there is a great deal of concern on the part of the farmer. Usually those strikes come at a time when there is a maximum need for the movement of grain which is at the end of July or following road ban time or when there has been a glut of grain. As the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) noted, at that time the bins are bulging and storage is needed.

It is most important that there be a representative of labour on this committee so that dialogue can take place between all of the players. I think it is important to point out that this is the direction our Party has taken through the debate.

I wrote down three words expressed by the Hon. Member for Vegreville which I believe exemplify the direction in which the committee has attempted to head. There are "fair and equitable representation of all segments".

Let me deal with the question of fairness. Certainly it would only be fair to have some representation from the labour to present its views as it is fair to have producers, grain companies, rail companies, commissioners and the Wheat Board. On the other hand, it is interesting to note that the NDP has decided that it does not want representatives from the railroads, if one can believe that. How can problems be negotiated in the Senior Grain Transportation Committee if all of the players are not represented around the table?

The Hon. Member then referred to equality. Since I had the privilege of being the first to speak—other than a couple of words from the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin)—I can go back to the basics that were laid out in Motion No. 27 which amended exactly the same thing that was introduced in Motion No. 26. We simply have a continuation of that in dealing with the members who relate very directly to the Grain Transportation Committee.

I am very happy to see the progress that is being achieved in the House. It is the direction that our Party believed we could achieve from the outset in the committee and at report stage as well. In our motion, we wanted equality for the grain companies; three representatives from each grain company, three from the line companies and three from the co-operatives. I believe that is fair and equitable. We have now reached that goal. We wanted representation from the primary producer, and the amendment put forward by my colleague for Kindersly-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) achieved that in committee with one producer from Alberta, two from Saskatchewan and one from Manitoba—none of which was directly related to the grain companies.

It is most important that we have someone from labour represented on the greater Grain Transportation Committee which can represent its problems about the bottlenecks that exist and also relate to the problems that farmers have in moving their grain.

● (1700)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I realize that five o'clock is coming close. I believe, however, that we have had a pretty good examination of this particular amendment. As my Parliamentary Secretary has indicated, again we share the sentiments of the other side of the House and we believe that this is a useful amendment and we are prepared to adop it. I would hope that we could call the question on this issue so that on Monday we could start fresh on a brand new set of ideas and issues.

Before doing that, however, I would like the agreement of the House to spend a short minute or two on something that I would like to express to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Axworthy: I would simply say that I agree with the spirit of the amendment but I want to qualify it to this extent: I think it is very important that, as the Minister making such an appointment, I have a way of doing so that would be acceptable to the union movement as well as make it easier for me to expedite my duties. I would want to offer a suggestion. I believe there is a transportation grain handlers' subcommittee of the CLC. I would suggest that I work with them or have them put forward nominations of that kind so that they would be able to choose a person who would best reflect the various union interests. I know there are several major unions of that kind involved and I would prefer to have them make the nomination, which I could in turn respond to. Perhaps I could be in contact with the President of the CLC to work out some arrangement of that kind to make sure there was a broad base of support.

With that qualification, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could have the agreement of the House to call the question on this particular amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Benjamin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I may have misunderstood the Minister, or perhaps he misunderstood me. I said that we were agreeable to allowing the Minister to take his minute or two. However, my colleague the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) would like to speak for four or five minutes and my colleague the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) would like to speak as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next, at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.03 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Friday, September 30, 1983, consideration of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport; and Motion No. 31 (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: The Chair will recall that last Tuesday the Speaker expressed some concern about certain of the motions that were on the Order Paper, mainly as to their procedural acceptability or non-acceptability, and indicated at the time that the Chair might be prepared to rule on that first group raised last Tuesday today or tomorrow.

The first question I would have for the Chair is by way of suggestion. Would the Chair indicate when it will be the intention of the Chair to consider submissions with respect to the group raised last Tuesday, and when we might expect the remainder, so that we can consider whether or not we wish to make submissions on those?

If it is the intention of the Chair to make rulings tomorrow on those matters that were raised last Tuesday, then I would suggest that the Chair hear submissions on the first group at three o'clock this afternoon. However, if it is the intention of the Chair to go beyond tomorrow, then we would have more time to consider those of last Tuesday.

I suppose the more urgent request, though, is whether the Chair would give some indication as to when we would hear an expression of concern, if any, with respect to the remainder of the motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe it is the intention of Madam Speaker to make comments regarding both matters raised by the Hon. Member after Question Period this afternoon.

Mr. Nielsen: May I just clarify one matter. Making comments and making rulings are two different things. May we rest assured that we will be permitted to make submissions at three o'clock this afternoon on the first group raised last Tuesday, if the Chair intends to rule on them on Tuesday?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is the Chair's understanding that Madam Speaker intends to give Hon. Members an opportunity to comment.

Mr. Nielsen: At three o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe that after three o'clock today it will be more appropriate for the Hon. Member to raise the matter again with Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: Very well.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, when we left off debate on Friday, we were dealing with Motion No. 31 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), my colleague, who proposed:

That Bill C-155 be amended in Clause 10 by adding immediately after line 20 at page 6 the following:

"(c) a person who in his opinion represents labour in the handling and transportation of grain".

That particular amendment is very important because, as has been previously pointed out by Hon. Members, a history of conflict has arisen in transportation of grain. Too often I think the conflict generated has been that of a superficial nature involving many people trying to pit, as it were, labour against the farmer, or agriculture against the people who are moving the trains and unloading the grain.

• (1115)

Of course, there are many railway unions within my own riding. These unions include those involved in running trains, seeing that the cars get moved and maintenance. There are also those who are involved in bridging and building. It would be very desirable for these many unions to have representatives at meetings of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. As has been suggested, it is certainly possible that different unions could be represented at different times.

The suggestion of my colleague for Regina West to have labour represented on such a committee is valuable because whenever there is a good management and labour working relationship, the job is accomplished much better. It is possible for those people who are working at the grassroots level to identify certain shortcomings and areas where changes are needed and bottlenecks can be cleared up in the movement of grain.

Our other concern is that health and safety always be considered. In this respect, I want to refer to the study conducted by the NDP in its special task force report on occupational health and safety in the federal work place. Its report is entitled "Graveyard Shifts: Life and Death on the Job in Canada". On Thursday, January 22, 1981, Members of Parliament from my Party who were involved in this particular occupational health and safety task force were at a grain elevator at Thunder Bay. They made several observations which appear at page 40 of that report and I would like to put them on the record because I think it is important for those involved in the farming and labour sectors to be aware of the type of concerns that were analyzed.

They found that the most serious and obvious problem is grain dust. It is everywhere. Although it is more dense in some areas of the elevator than others, there is no area free of it. The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) picked up a mask discarded by a sweeper who had been on the shift for less than an hour. The accumulation of the dust in that mask makes it next to impossible to breath through. I am sure that management sometimes may not be aware of these types of problems. The Hon. Member also observed that the risk of fire must also be great. In fact, there had been several recent explosions in other elevators along the terminal. However, none of the workers could remember when the last fire drill had been held in their elevator.

Why is there value in labour being represented on such committees? They have insight and experience from being involved in working conditions. It is important that some of their experiences be understood and relayed to any type of Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

I also want to underline the link which exists between farmers and labour. Too often there seems to be people who want to try to split the two. Even within my own family, while my father worked on the farm he began to work on the railways on a seasonal basis. In a constituency such as mine there are many farmers who have gone on to work in the trades or maintenance of railways. If they had not gone on to work on the railways, their sons have done so. Of course, many have moved to western ports such as Vancouver of Prince Rupert. I have relatives who have worked on the farms and the railway in a riding and then gone to Prince Rupert.

Therefore, to try to drive a wedge between labour and farmers is to try to drive a wedge between families. There are many people on the Prairies who would not be fooled by that type of bogus wedge. In order to overcome those types of false wedges, I think it is important to see that the transport committees be represented by people involved in labour.

As the Hon. Member for Regina West has pointed out, we are sorry that we have come to this stage where the status of a labour representative on such a committee would only be that of an observer. I must say I was a bit disappointed when the Parliamentary Secretary referred us to Clause 11 and did not give any indication or guarantee that there would be an opportunity for the observers to speak up or have their voices heard. I underline that because, as my colleague mentioned, we in the New Democratic Party would be far happier to see a full-fledged member from labour on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, perhaps even a couple of members. However the membership might rotate, I think it would be important that we have that type of representation. Even if we increased the size of the committee from 18 members to 20 members, it would be highly desirable. I would urge the Government to consider afresh the offer made by my colleague earlier that he would be delighted to withdraw this amendment if we had some idea that a full-fledged member of labour would be represented.

I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) takes that suggestion into consideration. He has some labour union people living in his riding. A substantial number of railway people live in Winnipeg, and I am sure they would be delighted to see his concern in this area.

For the sake of unity and peace in the transportation of grain, for basic human relations, for the sake of communication and for the sake of understanding, I think it is important that this motion be considered and agreed to by all Members. I would strongly urge the Government to consider having perhaps a couple of full-fledged labour representatives on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee and then we could have these matters dealt with in a way that is fair and that recognizes the human value of those who work with their hands to see that we have bread on our tables.

I think it is important that we recognize afresh that there is no such thing as an ordinary person in Canadian society. Everybody is extraordinary. Insights which labour people can bring to us on such a committee would be more than worthwhile. I would urge the House of Commons to look favourably on this motion but also to see that a full-fledged representative of labour is placed on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be here today to speak on this amendment. I spent the weekend and part of last week in the West.

An Hon. Member: You got more coverage than Mulroney did.

Mr. Hovdebo: I was very impressed to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) speak in Saskatoon and again in Regina and make a commitment to the western farmers that the Progressive Conservative Party will do everything in its power to make sure the western producers would not bear the brunt of the upgrading of the railways. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition was as disappointed as I was when he got back to the House today and found that last week the Progressive Conservatives could have put up 48 speakers on these issues but deigned to put up only seven to make a contribution to the best legislation that this House can get to.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure whether it is appropriate for a Member to cast a reflection upon the attendance of other Members in participating in debate. There may be valid reasons for Members not wanting to participate. For the record, Mr. Hovdebo attended 17 out of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: He is not on the Committee, and that is pretty good.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member was referring to a number of speeches in the course of debate, and as far as the Chair is concerned a reference to a number of speeches from one group or another is not unparliamentary itself.

• (1125)

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it should be clearly pointed out that the Hon. Member who now shows a great interest in the Crow debate only attended 17 of 66 meetings of the Standing Committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, considering that I was the second alternate, the third member on the Transport Committee, 17 out of 66 is pretty good.

Mr. Mazankowski: He still could have attended every meeting, and he knows it. He chose not to attend more than 17 meetings. That should be recorded.

Mr. Hovdebo: This particular amendment is an attempt to get the voice of labour on this particular Committee. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) defends western farmers and this particular Bill. He has spent a considerable amount of time attempting to impute a feeling to the New Democratic Party that this particular Committee will not do any good. We know that the Committee has some flaws and that the Bill has some flaws. We also know that the total direction of this Bill as far as farmers are concerned is to reduce effectively the possibility of their survival.

Since we have the Bill before us and it seems that the Government is foolhardy enough to eliminate its chances in the West by passing the Bill or keeping it before the House, we must make it the best Bill possible. One way to make the committee work well is not, as the Hon. Member for Vegreville suggested, by eliminating any particular group, such as the co-operatives. We should bring in as many of them as possible. We made a motion to add labour to the regular Committee. This particular approach was turned down not only by the Liberals but by the Conservatives. We now allow labour at least to have an observer status. When one can only have the crumbs, I guess one accepts them. We need a strong labour voice. By having a labour member as an observer, at least there will be somebody there able to put forward labour's case.

In the last few years there have been a couple of grain handler strikes. Actually there have been very few. There are so many unions involved in the movement of grain that if one of them strikes, it affects the whole operation. We need someone on the committee who can present the views of labour. It could work both ways. Having a labour representative will help to get out the story of labour a little better and to a few more people than would be the case with no representative on the Committee. Also labour will be able to understand a little better the position of farmers.

Every time there is a strike in the grain handling system, there is a great movement across the country to do something about the labour union. I am a farmer. I know that the movement of grain is important, but I think the time has come when we have to look at who pays the penalty for a strike. When there is a strike in the grain handling system, farmers are affected by the possibility that their grain will not be sold as quickly as it would have. Eventually they will be able to sell their grain, but they may have to carry it over a few weeks or months longer. If affects them because they are paying interest on money and it stops their cash flow. It also affects the labourers, those working in every facet of the grain-moving operation. They are the ones to go without wages for the period of time the union is on strike.

• (1130)

In addition, a large number of elevators are involved in grain handling. They are paid for this handling of grain. Whether they handle it now or later does not make much difference as they will still be paid. When the grain is not moving, they are paid for storing it. Therefore, even while the unions are on strike the grain elevator companies including to co-ops go on collecting the storage charges. The grain handling strike does not affect the elevator companies. They are not affected the same way as the farmers, and obviously the union members who go without wages.

It is time the House looked at the penalties consequent upon a strike. There are two sides to every strike. If only labour pays the penalty, the grain companies collect storage charges as well as handling the grain later, whether this week, next week or two weeks down the road, they do not have much to lose. It is time that Parliament looked at imposing some kind of penalty on the other people involved in a strike.

Labour has made concessions to make the movement of grain more smooth over the years. If labour can be more knowledgeable about the needs of the system, I am sure we can find some kind of arrangement whereby labour will not always be on the outside. The Leader of the Opposition does not think that we should "Swedenize" industry in Canada. I say to him that "Swedenizing" must be pretty good because Swedish industry has fewer days lost to strikes than any other country. Labour is part of the discussion on every development in Sweden. That is what we should have here.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on Motion No. 31. It is important that there be worker representation on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. The reason is that the railways will not run, the ships will not be loaded and the grain will not be sold unless the workers in the system co-operate. Since the workers are so important to the whole industry, it is only common sense that they have representation on the Committee.

My only disappointment with the Minister and other Members is that under the motion to be moved by the Minister, the working person or labour union person on the Committee will have observer status only. I urge the Minister to ensure that the union person be a full voting member of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. It is important that the working people have a full voice. They are as important in managing the railways as the railway companies themselves. They are a very important part of the system and must be fully represented.

As has been said in this debate, there have been many strikes in our grain-moving industry. There are several different unions, such as the grain services union, the longshoremens' union, the railway unions, the grain handlers' union and so on. We on the Prairies become very frustrated when a union goes on strike and the system breaks down. One way of having a more efficient system and averting a strike is to ensure that workers have full participation at the table and more involvement in the management of their industry. There is no one better than the worker in managing the industry because he is the one who handles the cars and works with the equipment. If that person is fully represented, the system will operate much more efficiently.

The time has come to give the ordinary worker a much greater say at the bargaining table in terms of how companies should be managed. We in this country tend to cheer Solidarity and Lech Walesa in Poland. We all applaud the tremendous fight which he and Solidarity are putting up in that country. Until they were so cruelly and autocratically put down, the one thing they were campaigning for in Poland was worker control and participation in the management of industries. In addition to the straight political democracy that we take for granted in this country, they are also campaigning for economic demcoracy. In that regard, Solidarity in Poland was ahead of what is the reality in this country. If we are going to applaud them for what they stand for in their country, then we can set an example in this country by making sure that we practice economic democracy.

I am disappointed when the Minister says that he is willing to accept a labour representative on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, but only as an observer. It has to be more than an observer: it has to be a participant with full voting rights that are equal to those of the farmers, the railways and the companies. If we do that we will have a much better system. In fact, we should do this as a matter of course in all of our legislation or all of our companies and Crown corporations. If we did that, we would have a much more efficient economy. Canadians would tend to pull together, work together and co-operate to make their own industry much more productive.

I will give an example. In my Province of Saskatchewan, we have SED Systems, a high-tech firm involved in the agriculture business and communications. SED Systems was responsible for building part of the Canadarm used on the American space shuttle. This is a very successful company. The ownership of that company is interesting. There is a real mix in the democratic sense. It is owned partly by the Government of Saskatchewan, partly by the University of Saskatchewan and partly by the company workers. It is a tripartite arrangement which works very well indeed.

We should strive for that kind of arrangement in this country. With that kind of arrangement there is greater pride, interest and enthusiasm on the part of the workers to ensure that the company goes well, is productive and makes a contribution to this country.

I will give a couple of examples of what I mean. On August 10 at the hearings in Regina, Mr. Hugh Wagner, the secretary-treasurer of the grain services union, appeared before the special committee. He said, and I quote:

> It is also ironic that the Minister of Transport introduces legislation to funnel hundreds of millions of dollars to the railway companies when he does not seem to see the need for such basic things as $500 per car worth of safety modification on hopper cars. Transport Canada's reluctance in this regard makes true sceptics of us when we hear promises to strictly monitor railway performance in return for the windfall of higher freight rates.

● (1140)

The secretary-treasurer of the grain services union says that something as basic as $500 worth of safety monitoring devices on a hopper car would make things so much better and easier for the workers who handle those hopper cars. It would make things much safer in terms of physical health and mental health by relieving anxiety about the possibility of being injured.

I do not know whether the secretary-treasurer of the grain services union is right or wrong and I do not know whether we are dealing with $500 or $800, but I do know one thing from what he has said and that is that worries, concerns and anxieties exist about the safety of hopper cars. It seems to me that if more workers were on the boards of directors of comapnies, on transportation committees and on advisory councils, these kinds of concerns would be heard by everyone involved and there would be a much greater chance of remedying concerns of this sort which would hopefully create a more efficient system for farmers and everyone else in Canada. That, Mr. Speaker, must be our objective.

As I have said before, I hope that we can begin to establish that objective and set a precedent for all industries in Canada. I have seen the operation of many industries in my constituency and I know that in most cases the people who are able to give the best advice about managing the company on a day to day basis are the workers who work for that company. They know the best way to load a car and the best way to organize an assembly line, because that is their livelihood and they do it all the time.

I think the time has come to start practising economic democracy in the country. We must extend political democracy to include economic democracy so that, regardless of one's income, one has some real clout in a democratic sense over what happens to the economy. I think that is what Motion No. 31, if accepted, will do in a very minor way.

I am pleading, Mr. Speaker, for the country to go in that direction. If we were to go in that direction, I think we would have a much better system and a much better country with greater equality and greater freedom for each and every person who lives in the country.

Why are we so cautious and conservative, Mr. Speaker? Why do we not become a bit bolder and give more power to the ordinary people? Why do we not decentralize our institutions and allow for more local control? Time and time again, I hear from the business community, from members of the Conservative Party and members of the Liberal Party that we must give more control to the businessman and to the private sector, that there must be more decentralization, more control of the economy, more incentives and the like. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, what about more control for the ordinary citizens of Canada? What about giving more control to the ordinary workers and the ordinary farmers of the country so that they can participate in the decisions that affect the direction the country is taking? What about decentralizing the power and putting it back in the hands of the ordinary people? I assure you that that would work very well, Mr. Speaker.

In my Province there is a very decentralized agricultural system. We have a country elevator system and the Wheat Pool is dominant. The Wheat Pool is a company that is owned by the farmers themselves and farmers are workers in every sense of the word. They have organized the largest grain handling company in the country and they have done it very efficiently and very well. It has worked well for Canada and it has worked well for the farmers themselves. We can use that as an example to show the many other industries in Canada how ordinary folk, regardless of their income, can make a great many important decisions.

Instead of worshiping the mighty dollar, I wish that members of the Conservative Party would begin to worship the ordinary farmer, worker and consumer in the country. If they did that, the whole country would be much better off. Have I run out of time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member wishes to continue, he will need the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes of the time of the House to speak to this amendment. It is interesting that I should speak after a Member of the New Democratic Party has spoken. As a former psychologist, I can sometimes see the consistency in the way some people use language and language structure. The concern about power and control that is expressed through the repeated use of those words characterizes, I think, much of what goes wrong in the minds of NDP Members. Their basic philosophy is that they would have Government control an increasing number of Crown corporations. They are really asking for control to be placed in the hands of fewer people. It is a basic contradiction. The Conservative Party of Canada, Mr. Speaker, with its concern for the diffusion of power into the hands of many, many different people, is striving for the exact opposite of what the NDP strives for.

I stand in the House today to deal with one aspect of the Crow Bill, this specific amendment. It is a very good amendment and, if passed, would see that labour is represented in a way that allows it to co-operate in moving grain. It is a positive development, Mr. Speaker.

There is sometimes a sense of desperation on the part of Opposition Members, both of the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party, about what the Government is trying to do with the Crow situation. Before Members of the New Democratic Party attempt to run away with the thought that they are strongly opposed to this piece of legislation, I think it is wise to remind the House that the only reason we are faced with this piece of legislation is that Members of the New Democratic Party combined with Members of the Liberal Party to get rid of a Government that was moving grain. The New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party threw that Government out of office. We are now faced with this legislation which will not do western Canada and Canada in general a whole lot of good and in fact may do it a whole lot of harm simply because Members of the NDP put the Liberal Party back in office. In their search for power and control over all of the affairs of the nation, it is the Members of the NDP who make us stand today to deal with the Crow Bill.

If Members of the New Democratic Party had been concerned about western Canadian small businessmen, farmers, yound people and Canadian people in general, they would have gone along with the budget which the Canadian Welfare Council called the fairest to poor people in the decade of the seventies. That is the budget that Members of the New Democratic Party stood up and defeated, throwing the country into an election and giving us the Crow Bill.

It is sometimes difficult for me to sit in the House and listen to my own Party's positions being so badly mangled and misinterpreted. The Conservative Party of Canada is the only Party in Canadian federal politics that consistently, in all areas of human endeavour, speaks about the need for co-operation. The alacrity with which we are prepared to support this amendment is simply one small example of the continuing commitment on the part of this Party to co-operative federalism and to co-operation in the affairs of mankind. Yes, Mr. Speaker, this proposed amendment takes us one small, necessary step toward co-operation in the grain handling industry.

We all know that a work stoppage in the grain handling industry is hard on the workers, hard on the companies and is even harder on the farmers and the customers. Every time we come to confrontation, we create victims. Our approach has always been consistent and it is to seek and move toward co-operation on every conceivable occasion. We should co-operate with provincial Governments, with labour, with large business and with small business.

Canada is a nation of immense geographic size with a relatively tiny population. Each time that we forget the need to co-operate and replace that need with an attitude of confrontation, we hurt ourselves and we hurt succeeding generations.

● (1150)

Much of the difficulty in this country has come about in the last 15 years because the Liberal Party of Canada, joined by the New Democratic Party, seeks power for themselves, power over the lives of Canadians by some small elite group. That is the philosophical ideology which guides both of those Parties in this House, and it inevitably creates confrontation. When one tries to centralize power in the hands of a few, it will be resisted by free people who want the diffusion and decentralization of that power.

I would be happier, Mr. Speaker, if we had an amendment before us today which would create a full voting member. However, we are prepared to support this amendment because it is a small step in the direction of co-operation. It is a small step in the diffusion of power. I commend the NDP for giving up their usual approach of centralizing power in the hands of the few and presenting this amendment for which I urge the support of the House.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I had not really intended to enter into this debate. However, I feel it is time to clear up the muddy waters. Our Party would have preferred that an amendment be accepted by the Government which would have made the labour representative a full voting member of the board. In fact, we were tempted to move such an amendment in committee. It was ruled out of order because the decision was made that that would require an expenditure by the Government and, quite clearly, the opposition is not in a position to move an amendment which requires an expenditure by the Government. That is the way the rules operate.

We accept, somewhat reluctantly, that the only way we can get those people who are so vitally concerned about the transportation system and whose co-operation is so desperately needed on the board, or at least to be heard by the board on an ongoing basis, is to have them as non-voting members; in other words, to have them as observers.

Our position, in terms of worker participation, is consistent with the positions which have been taken by this Party since its inception. For example, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who is just about to depart from this House, would have read in his previous incarnation some of the statements of this Party made at its founding convention, and statements of this Party made at subsequent conventions, where we very strongly advocated the participation of larger and larger numbers of people involved in the decisions of government. In fact, we were true to that philosophy in December of 1979 when the Conservative Party, then the government in office, brought forward a budget which we anticipated did not enjoy the widespread support of the people of Canada. We moved a motion condemning that Party for moving to subject the people of this country to usurious taxes.

There was an election held subsequent to our decision to oppose the government and, by golly, we were right. The people of Canada, given the opportunity to vote on the budget of the Conservative Party in 1979, voted it out of office. If that is not an example of our commitment to participatory democracy, what is? How could we have involved more people in that decision than to have given the Canadian public an opportunity to cast its vote? I say to the Hon. Member for Calgary West, we were consistent right down the line, as we always are. It strikes me as odd that the Hon. Member's days of studying philosophy did not allow him to study it in sufficient depth so that he could see the consistency of what this Party has said.

What aggravates me, Mr. Speaker, is that here we are, as usual, fighting on behalf of the people of Canada to give them some way of having their say in the decisions made by government, and we are thwarted at almost every turn by the Tories. The Conservative Party, reluctantly, at the last moment, recognizing that there is some support for what we are proposing, gives its begrudging support to what it is we are trying to do.

I put to you, Mr. Speaker, that what this Party wants to see in this country is exemplified by what we have proposed in committee by asking that those people who are most actively involved in the transportation system be given a full voting place on the board, and subsequently, because that was not permitted, to give them observer status at least. What we are attempting to provide for those people is what we would like to see provided on all boards of all commissions for all the operations of government. The people of Canada must be given an opportunity to say what they believe is in their best interests.

We want to see those who are most affected, which in this case would be the employees of the transportation company, those people who, frankly, are most eligible, take part in the discussions which would affect their day to day lives. I know that that kind of thinking is foreign to the Conservative Party. I know it has difficulty coming to grips with that kind of proposal. I am surprised, however, that the Liberal Party is having difficulty coming to grips with it. I can understand that the belief of the Conservative Party has historically been that those with the money should have the say. I can understand that and can well appreciate that the attitude of the Conservative Party has always been that those who own everything should be the ones who have the say and the workers should never be heard from. That Party has been anti-union since its inception. It became a political party in order to oppose the trade union movement. It is just that simple. Margaret Thatcher will never be out of favour in Canada as long as there is a Tory Party here to stand up and spout her garbage. But let me say I am disappointed with the Liberal Party. I would have thought it might have accepted representatives of labour as fully-fledged members of the board in order to have their input, accepting the fact that they also should be part of the board and answerable for its decisions.

I believe this is the appropriate way to make these boards work. Labour does not want to be a sort of adjunct. It is quite prepared to sit down and be part of the discussions, to come to decisions and to stand up and defend those decisions before the public. The only way to guarantee it that opportunity is to include labour among the fully-fledged members.

As I think about it, I cannot understand why the Minister himself would not have agreed that observer status in this instance is not enough. It is denying a very significant segment of the industry which is most involved in this particular legislation an opportunity to accept its responsibility and to take part. I would urge upon the Minister that he divorce himself from the Conservative philosophy that those with all the power should be given more. I urge him to recognize the need to involve the workers and their representatives. The railroads, in particular, I might say, would work an awful lot better if some attention were paid to the people who do the work out on the lines, the people who have to get the trains from where they are to where they have to be, through all of the difficulties. I would urge the Minister, given the fact he has already accepted that labour should be given observer status, to go even further. Even though he would not have the support of the Conservative Party—which, frankly, I do not care about—he would certainly have our support.

• (1200)

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Motion No. 31 to give official observer status to representatives of the workers who perform the important task of cleaning, loading and transporting grain.

I want to take issue with the fact that this motion gives only observer status to labour. I would urge the Government to reconsider that. We are going to see massive improvements to our transportation system which could affect many workers right across Canada.

I want to speak about my riding for a moment, where a large amount of the money will be going in double tracking, retunnelling and a new diesel maintenance shop in Golden. In places like Revelstoke these changes could mean the relocation of many workers from Revelstoke, a divisional point on CP Rail. It would mean the relocation of mechanical workers from a small place called Field, British Columbia. These people are already subject to very tough Government measures regarding living in the parks. If they wish to sell their home, they must sell it to someone who has a need to reside in the park. But if they move to Golden, how will they do that because there will be no railway workers to live within the parks?

These are the kinds of concerns labour has, and they should have some say in what is happening. A long-time divisional point like Revelstoke has a population of about 9,000. If 1,000 of those workers are relocated to a place like Golden, which could happen, I think it is imperative that labour have someone sitting on this Committee to discuss the concerns of that community which would lose a major part of its payroll. Labour should have the right to vote, not merely that of an observer.

We have seen, Mr. Speaker, some of the ramifications of the Conservative type of legislation in British Columbia, legislation which was brought in without proper consultation with labour. It is sad, sad, sad that the Liberal-Conservative Government in British Columbia has moulded itself together virtually to roll back labour's voice in the communication which takes place between Government, labour and the people.

It is imperative, Mr. Speaker, that labour have a voice and full voting privileges. It is imperative that labour have full knowledge of what is taking place so we do not have the confrontation we have had in the past. It is high time that Canada started to recognize we should have full co-operation between labour, management, business and community so that we do not have to face the kind of conflict we see today where Government comes in and arbitrarily rolls back the advances made in human rights and other issues. Labour has to have a voice in negotiations which take place. In Revelstoke the CP payroll alone is about $1.5 million a month. If they were to lose that payroll, can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what would happen to that community? These are the kinds of things that labour must be able to sit down and discuss to find ways of resolving these issues. If it means a better economic system of transportating the grain, that is well and good. But labour and management must be able to sit down and come up with some kind of program to offset the kind of changes being made.

To use the taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker, to upgrade a rail system, and at the same time virtually destroy a community and its workers, I think is wrong. Labour must be involved, along with the other groups, and they must have the right to full representation and the right to vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 31 (Mr. Benjamin) agreed to.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 32

That Bill C-155 be amended in Clause 13 by striking out lines 10 and 11 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"an employee of the Canadian Wheat Board".

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Motion No. 32 which takes the position that the Canadian Wheat Board is the most important of the agencies to take part in the movement of grain. The reason for putting this amendment before the House is that we recognize that marketing and transportation are so closely linked that it is impossible to control one without having some control over the other. By making the administrator an employee of the Wheat Board, we would be making sure that linkage was there continuously.

In the presentation of the Canadian Wheat Board to the Committee they indicated some disturbance about what might happen in the development of a committee which had as much power as the Senior Grain Transportation Committee and was not related to marketing as closely as it should be. The Wheat Board is an agency established under legislation passed by this Parliament in 1935. It has three basic responsibilities. One is to market the wheat barley and oats. I will not go into them specifically but I think they have to be put before the House. Second, it had a responsibility to provide price stabilization for the farmers for those grains which it held by annual pooling. Third, it attempts to assure every individual farmer of a portion of the market available in any particular year.

● (1210)

The result of the Wheat Board controlling the marketing of grain has been that whether one lives in Peace River or as close to Thunder Bay as possible, one still has a fair proportion of the market in any particular year, which is quite different from the situation with which I grew up, when the amount of grain that could be sold in northern Saskatchewan was relative, possible only when the grain near to the ports had already been sold.

I would like to place in context the real need for the relationship between marketing and transportation. Mr. Jarvis, who is the Chief Commissioner for the Canadian Wheat Board, stated before the committee:

> The Canadian Wheat Board, like any other sales organization, must control shipment of its own products in order to ensure performance. For these reasons, the Board has always held the view that overall control of the system, as it is developed in co-ordination with the total of the grain industry, should be administered by the Board.

In the last number of years since the Conservative Government's short term in office, we have established the Grain Transportation Agency. Although Mr. Jarvis did not suggest that the Agency was entirely useless, he suggested the extension of that kind of power to a group which had more responsibility might effectively eliminate the relationship between the Wheat Board and transportation. Consequently, he went on to state:

> The Board still feels that the system operates most efficiently and effectively if grain transportation is fully coordinated by the major sales agency. If this is not permitted, it should be clear that we view any further reduction in the Board's ability to coordinate transportation as a very serious step backward for the export sales program for western Canadian grains.

What Mr. Jarvis was attempting to point out to the committee was that if one separates the responsibility for transportation so far from marketing, one finds no assurance that products which have been sold will get to the consumers, and that instead of improving the transportation system it may become worse than it is at present. It has been doing a pretty good job in the last while, and I think much of that can be attributed to the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board has been the main agency in controlling both sales and transportation. If the two are separated, it is bound to affect the efficiency and the effectiveness of the total grain sales operation. Mr. Jarvis went on to state:

> Our strong concern is that with the establishment of a grain transportation agency by bill C-155 and under Section 97 (b) of the Canada Grain Act, further powers could readily be shifted by order in council from the Canadian Wheat Board to this agency at a later date.

That in itself is a very great danger to every farmer who has derived a great deal of security from the Canadian Wheat Board, which is a Government agency but one operated on behalf of, and financed by, the farmers. I want Your Honour to know that no money from the taxpayers of Canada goes into the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board. The sale and marketing of Canadian grains by the Canadian Wheat Board is financed entirely by the farmers. Therefore, since what we are discussing in this Transportation Act is the movement of grain, it is very important that we have the kind of control over that movement which allows the farmers' agency to operate well and effectively. If we do not, we will be doing a real disservice to the farmers.

It is possible, as Mr. Jarvis pointed out, that if we do not have a close relationship between the Wheat Board and the Senior Grain Transportation Committee, we will be doing a disservice to the operation. He went on to say:

> These powers could include those the board currently has under Section 21(k) of the Canadian Wheat Board Act which allows the board to operate the block shipping system. Any such transfer in the future would result, we believe, not only in major problems for the efficiency of the transportation system but also for the effectiveness of our sales efforts.

If we allow this kind of situation by passing the Bill without the amendment we are suggesting, we will be contributing to lack of efficiency rather than increased efficiency.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am most anxious to hear from the Official Opposition in this debate. After all the great words we heard out in Regina and Saskatoon over the weekend, I would like to know where all this fighting to keep the Crow is coming from with regard to the Official Opposition. It seems to me that the Conservatives should be charged with false pretences as an Official Opposition.

The amendment under discussion is in accordance with the wishes of 90 per cent of the grain producers in western Canada who support orderly marketing and want to see the Wheat Board strengthened, not weakened. This legislation undermines and weakens—in fact, attacks—the Canadian Wheat Board. It will allow for the removal of certain powers. The Bill would set up one man, the Grain Transportation Administrator, as an agency. This agency, of course, even though it is comprised of only one man, has all the powers of any government agency.

We already have at least four agencies involved in the handling and transportation of grain: the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canada Grain Commission, the Canadian Transportation Commission, the Railway Committee and the Marine Committee. This legislation inserts an additional agency into this mix.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), quoted the Chief Commissioner for the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. Jarvis. I want to quote the words of a well-known and respected figure in western Canada, one who served about ten or 12 years as President of the Sask Wheat Pool and then another dozen or so years as Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board. I refer to one Charlie Gibbings, who the committee voted not to invite and then voted to invite. When he could not come on the day they chose, they then voted not to invite him. We will also remember that out West.

● (1220)

Other colleagues will be quoting the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee, the National Farmers Union and other organizations who want the authority envisaged in this legislation left with the Canadian Wheat Board. But let me quote Mr. Gibbings:

> As this committee has been told before, it is imperative that grain sales and grain transportation not be separated.

The Wheat Board Advisory Committee has told us repeatedly that the marketing and sale of grain are inextricably linked to the transportation of that product and that transportation is vital to the success of marketing and sale by the Canadian Wheat Board. That is $6 billion worth of export grain in addition to whatever we consume in Canada.

Mr. Gibbings goes on to say:

> The Canadian Wheat Board must be able to arrange transportation of its own product, or it cannot fulfil its obligations to Western grain producers or their customers overseas. The Board's marketing success depends on its ability to make day-by-day or even hour-by-hour decisions on grain movement. Its flexibility must not be compromised.

Providing powers to a Grain Transportation Administrator can do nothing else but compromise and threaten the prospect of the Canadian Wheat Board's ability and flexibility in the marketing and sales to be compromised.

At the moment we have a Grain Transportation Co-ordinator who works closely with the Canadian Wheat Board and Canada Grain Commission. The fact that we are moving record volumes proves that it is working.

The Canada Grain Commission allocates 5 per cent of the cars for individual producers and the Canadian Wheat Board allocates the rest for board and non-board grain under a quota system and a block system. It is working fine. Then why do we need another agency imposed on a group of agencies that are already doing a first-class job? That is why we submit that the Senior Grain Transportation Administrator is one person who should be an employee of the Canadian Wheat Board. This employee—an official, officer or even a commissioner of the Wheat Board appointed by the Minister—operates under the purview of the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board as an agency of Her Majesty.

Every attempt has been made since 1935 to get rid of the Canadian Wheat Board legislation. In more recent years, who has mounted the attacks, the undermining and criticisms? The private grain trade. The Winnipeg Commodity Exchange does not like it. The railroads would like to have most of the say in where the rolling stock goes and when, at their convenience.

Mr. Gibbings pointed out:

> We have a group of individuals in the GTA and in Transport Canada whose abstract economic principles tell them that the grain industry has gone the wrong way over the past hundred years. They want to see the transportation system in a certain configuration, and they expect farmers, the grain companies, the Wheat Board, and our customers to adjust to accommodate it.
> I suggest the reverse approach be taken. Let the transportation system develop to meet the needs of the people who are using it. That is the approach that makes real economic sense, and the Government should allow it to proceed by keeping bureaucracy out of the grain business.

We have always been operating throughout these decades on the basis of what is best for the railroads. They are a utility which everyone must use both directly and indirectly. Surely the railroads and every other transportation system should function to meet the needs of the shippers and receivers, the loaders and unloaders and the handlers of commodities that are to be moved.

Mr. Gibbings is right on. The situation should be the other way around. Our transportation system should be set up to meet the needs of the people who are using it, instead of the people who have to use it adjusting their operations to suit some people in the Department of Transport and the two railroads.

Most fundamentally of all, the attempt to undermine and reduce the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board has always been with us, particularly since the end of the Second World War. There was legitimate cause for the grain co-operatives and the grain producers to band together and build their own country elevator system to enable our three Prairie Pools and the United Grain Growers to handle some 80 per cent of all our grains. The private grain trade does not like that.

In addition, even the Government of the day in 1935 under R. B. Bennett recognized that there had to be a central marketing and sales organization for Canada's export grains. The subsequent Mackenzie King Government, particularly in the first and second year of World War II, really put the Canadian Wheat Board Act into a functioning state and enlarged its powers. Since the war those powers have been broadened to include the setting up of a block system, the administration of a quota system for the amounts of grain that farmers can deliver and the allocation of the cars to move that grain under those quotas in the block system. Surely that is keeping the railways functioning to meet the needs of the people who must use it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired. He would require the unanimous consent of the House to continue. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, once again we witness the NDP grasping for straws, trying to sow the seeds of fear and attempting to create a mountain out of a molehill.

Mr. Fisher: All great Tory tricks.

Mr. Mazankowski: There is another great farmer from Toronto who wants to get into the debate. Certainly his comments would be welcomed, particularly his expertise.

The NDP are trying to create the impression that the Grain Transportation Administrator will undermine the role of the Canadian Wheat Board. I do not believe that that was ever the intent behind the establishment of a Grain Transportation Co-ordinator or Administrator. Historically, over the last four years I do not think there is any evidence that that has in fact happened. Quite the contrary.

If the NDP are concerned about the possibility of the Wheat Board's integrity being undermined, perhaps they would do well to pass their eyes over Motion No. 39. If passed, this motion would ensure that the provisions of this Act respecting the functions and the duties of the Administrator would not restrict the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board under the Canadian Wheat Board Act to make available the quantities and types of grains necessary to achieve sales in its own behalf and in the interests of producers.

Quite frankly, the evidence that we received during the course of the committee hearings made two or three points very fundamentally clear. The Grain Transportation Administrator was serving a very useful function. His role was supported by all parties involved in the handling and moving of grain, and that should be continued. We heard time and time again during the course of the development of the legislation that all parties to the whole grain handling and transportation system supported the concept of the Grain Administrator.

Our Government established the concept of an administrator in 1979. It was felt at that time there was a clear need for it, and the concept was put in place for a trial period. It was not enshrined in legislative form but as a trial mechanism which has worked very well. I do not think, other than a few radicals, like the Chairman of the Advisory Board to the Canadian Wheat Board and a few other NDP socialists who want to see everything concentrated into one empire, that there is any great amount of negative reaction to the concept of the Administrator.

Let us look briefly at the terms of reference given to the Grain Transportation Authority in 1979. First, the objectives were to increase the grain handling and transportation system's capacity to achieve a 20 per cent increase in exports in 1980 and a 50 per cent increase by 1985 to 30 million tonnes. Those objectives have been achieved.

I do not think the Grain Transportation Authority would suggest for one minute that it achieved those targets on its own. It provided the mechanism wherein all parties could come together and sort out the difficulties and work together in a cohesive manner. I think that is important. We heard from the NDP about the importance of having all parties at the table to ensure that everyone was aware of their responsibilities and that everyone knew what everyone else was doing. That was really the start of it. While the Grain Transportation Authority did not have a whole lot of legislative authority, it did have a lot of persuasive abilities. It was in that connection that it was able to assist in facilitating the movement of grain and overcome certain bottlenecks.

The second objective of the GTA was to ensure that prairie grain moves to domestic consumption and export positions in a prompt, efficient and orderly manner. Third, its objective was to secure the co-operation and participation of the industries concerned in providing the required transportation and handling services and facilities. Fourth, the GTA was to carry out the required planning and implement the changes necessary to make the forwarding system operate more efficiently and effectively, and to increase its capacity to meet the 1985 target of a 50 per cent increase in exports. Fifth, it was to keep all parties and the public fully informed about the system's operations and shortcomings.

From that day hence there have been regular documents and publications released by the Grain Transportation Authority which make for some very interesting reading. For example, the January, 1983 "Grain Transportation Update" has the headline "New Grain Exports Records". I have its annual report for the 1981-1982 crop year. In April, 1983 the headline is "Another Record Breaking Winter". It talks about the West Coast performance and some of the difficulties. The August, 1983 headline reads "Canada Exports 28.3 million tonnes".

The GTA does not only publish the good news but it publishes some of the critical news and some of the things that have to be done to be sure all parties are fully informed and aware of the difficulties. I think the GTA works very well. If anything, it has enhanced the integrity of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Prior to 1979 the Canadian Wheat Board was continually embroiled in all the difficulties, arguments, charges and countercharges that were levied at the various players within the system. On frequent occasions the Wheat Board was caught in the middle. I think the Grain Transportation Authority has provided that kind of safety valve and it has taken a lot of the heat that would normally accrue to the Canadian Wheat Board.

In specific terms, what were the responsibilities? First, it took responsibility for the primary allocation and use of the car fleet, including the CN and CP grain-dedicated fleet, Government hopper cars, federal and provincial, and Canadian Wheat Board hopper cars. Second, it allocated railway equipment between the Board and non-Board sectors and between the various users of cars for non-Board grains.

It was in that connection that the role of the Administrator or the Co-ordinator was very important. Because the Board was involved in the allocation of cars, I am not suggesting this was the truth but there was a perception that they were unfairly allocating a more favourable proportion to those Board grains and non-Board grains. However, that was overcome to a large extent by the bringing together of all the parties, by letting the public know what was going on and by the Administrator acting as a referee.

Third, the responsibility of the GTA was to develop policies and procedures where necessary to ensure proper functioning of the allocation system. Fourth, it was to determine future needs for rail cars and to make recommendations to the Minister of Transport on the required acquisitions for the grain fleet.

That is another area in which it did an excellent job. It has constantly monitored the hopper car and rolling stock fleet requirements, the cars that were going out of service and the need for additional cars coming on.

The GTA has served a very useful role and it will continue to do so. The important element in terms of this institution is that it must be neutral and function in a neutral way. It must not have any vested interest, either in the Board or in the non-Board side of things. It must have the necessary stature to deal with transportation issues on an equal footing with all participants.

I think that contrary to what my friends in the New Democratic Party suggest, there has been support for the concept of the Co-ordinator and it has come from rather interesting places: for example, a joint submission by the Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. Let me finish with this quote from a submission: "Very important institution. The Pools accept the formal establishment of a grain transportation agency administrator with co-ordinating functions and powers." I can quote further comments of the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, who said that they worked very closely with the Grain Administrator but they were concerned about any erosion of powers in so far as the Canadian Wheat Board is concerned. That protected feature is enshrined in the legislation. Therefore, we on this side will be voting against the motion of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to follow the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). He said our Party was once again, to quote him, "grasping for straws and making a mountain out of a molehill". It is interesting that he would say that because up until now he has been following the leadership of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) in all the motions before the House. If he thinks we are always grasping for straws and making mountains out of molehills, why is he following the leadership of the Hon. Member for Regina West? Last week he supported the amendment by the Hon. Member for Regina West to move from one member to three members the Wheat Pool membership on the Senior Grain Advisory Committee. He also supported our amendment to make sure that Wheat Pool committee men, chairmen and secretaries could seek office. Today he is supporting another motion to ensure that labour has a voice on the Committee. He has taken his Party and the leadership of his Party very, very seriously. He is taking his cue from this side of the House. It is very ironic that he has to say that kind of thing.

He must have some concerns as well because Motion No. 39, in the name of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), ensures in a legal sense that no power is taken from the Canadian Wheat Board. I am sure he must have the concerns we have as well. Once again he is following the leadership of the Hon. Member for Regina West.

Although Motion No. 39 on the Order Paper in a technical and legal sense will make it impossible, if the Government supports it, to take away any of the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board, it is very important that the chief officer or the Administrator of the new Committee be an employee of the Wheat Board. I say that from life's experience. When one looks at organizations, whether it is a political party, a business organization, a volunteer organization or a people's organization, the chief administrating officer has immense discretionary power by virtue of the office; the office is very important. What that person says or does, what staff that person has around him or her, gives that person an awful lot of power. For that reason I would like to see the Administrator be an employee of the Wheat Board.

Once again I say that we should listen to the voice of the people. The people in this case are the farmers of the land. They are saying overwhelmingly that Canadian Wheat Board must be the most powerful agency, that the Canadian Wheat Board must be the agency which markets, sells and tries to get them the best price for their grain. Any diluting or weakening is not responding to the wishes of our constituents. I remind my friends in the Conservative Party of that reality. I say this because I believe in democracy and that ordinary citizens have to have more say over the direction of the country.

If we allow the Administrator of this new Committee to be any person whatsoever, with the powers we are giving this person we run the possibility through the discretionary acts of the Administrator of taking away powers from the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe that does not go in the direction the people want, and we in this Chamber are supposed to represent the people.

I am sure as an urban Member, Mr. Speaker, you realize the points I am making are very important. In the Bill the Administrator is given tremendous power. It is said that the Committee may, on its own initiative, or shall, at the request of the Minister or the Administrator, advise and make recommendations to the Minister or the Administrator on any matter affecting transportation, shipping or handling of grain. In other words, immense powers are vested in the Committee and immense powers are vested in the Administrator himself or herself.

The Administrator is appointed for four years. Once the Administrator is appointed, that office, the make-up of the person and the gut feeling of that person about the transportation of grain become extremely important. It is also provided in the Bill that the Administrator can be reappointed after his first term in office expires. For reasons like that it is very important that the Administrator be an employee of the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board is a farmers' organization. If one were to have a vote in my riding among permit holders, I would venture to say that over 80 per cent or 90 per cent would say that we must strengthen the Wheat Board in every conceivable way. It is as important to the farmers as a trade union is to workers in the Kootenays or as a professional association is to lawyers and doctors of the country. For reasons like that we must ensure that the Administrator is someone who comes from their organization, from the Canadian Wheat Board.

Over many years farmers have fought to build a co-operative movement. They have banded together collectively to help one another, to share and to work for the common good or common cause. They fought for many years. One could speak for hours in the House about the struggle to build the Canadian Wheat Board, about the tremendous problems with the Grain Exchange in Winnipeg, the Richardson family in Winnipeg, the commodities market, the Chicago futures market and the great Depression which was complicated by the fact that there was a drought. People of my grandfather's and father's generation sacrificed much to leave behind an agency or a system which represented the ordinary farmer, which ensured that ordinary farmers, whether small, middle-sized or large, obtained fair prices for their commodities, which ensured quotas, planning and an organization in place that would treat everyone equally. I want to see that organization strengthened. I do not want to see it weakened by default. That possibility is there when we allow the Administrator to have such powers and discretionary bases. Of course, every Administrator will reflect his own ideology and philosophy.

I say to Hon. Members of all Parties and from all regions that farmers are exemplified or represented by Roy Atkinson, the Chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee. They made very clear in their testimony before the committee that it was very important for the Wheat Board to be supported. It is very important that urban Members from Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal or wherever understand—

An Hon. Member: Winnipeg-Fort Garry?

Mr. Nystrom: I suppose, although he should know, being a westerner. They should understand that the Wheat Board Advisory Committee is elected by farmers. They want to strengthen the Wheat Board and make sure that anything the House does does not deviate from that principle.

I have before me a transcript of the proceedings on August 18. Mr. Roy Atkinson, the Chairman, said—

Mr. Mazankowski: Another radical socialist.

Mr. Nystrom: I hear the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) indicating that he is another radical socialist and that he will not listen to him. I do not know whether or not he respects democracy, whether or not he likes or dislikes Roy Atkinson. This man is the Chairman of the Wheat Board Advisory Committee in Canada. He probably thinks Peter Lougheed is a socialist. He worships Margaret Thatcher; he is a clone of Margaret Thatcher.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why didn't you go and hear him if you like him so much?

Mr. Nystrom: I have heard Roy Atkinson many times. He is an old friend. He speaks the will of the people. He speaks for the people. He is the voice of the people. He was elected by grain producers, and that is important. I wish the Conservative Party would respect democracy. When we mention the Chairman of the Wheat Board Advisory Committee, they start to laugh and show disrespect for the farmers' own elected person. That is shameful. They rise in the House and talk about the Chamber of Commerce or Iron Ore of Canada, organizations of the elite which represent a small wealthy group, as if they are gods. Then they are snarky and make various kinds of unflattering utterances when we talk about someone who represents the voice of the people, like Roy Atkinson.

I am sure my farmers will be very interested in knowing that the Conservatives do not take the Wheat Board Advisory Committee very seriously at all. When there are elections for that office in my riding, various people participate. For example, in my riding we elected a very brilliant young farmer, Michael Halyk, who sits on the Wheat Board Advisory Committee. He represents us very well. I am sure he would be interested in knowing that the Conservative Party laughs at the Chairman of the Committee and at the work he is doing, just because he happens to be a person who is not afraid to speak out on behalf of Canadian farmers.

Are you starting to rise, Mr. Speaker, or could I have a few mintues to continue? It would be interesting to have some of these quotations on the record, such as the one of Mr. Roy Atkinson.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House to continue with his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

• (1250)

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to speak to Motion No. 32 as it gives us an opportunity to consider a number of matters. It again gives NDP Members an opportunity to say why we oppose this Bill so strenuously, and that is that it threatens the entire way of life on the Prairies. That is not just because of changes to the Crow rate and all that goes along with that. We have gone into the details of this on other occasions. We believe this is part and parcel of a long-term trend which will erode not just the way of life which has been built up on the basis of the statutory grain rate, but the whole economic framework of western Canada, of which the Canadian Wheat Board has been a central part.

It comes as no surprise that Progressive Conservative Members do not support us in this amendment. They are not interested in defending the way of life which has built up over the years in western Canada. That is not clear to many western Canadians yet, but some day it will become clear that that is not on the agenda of the Conservative Party. The Conservatives are not a genuine defender of the way of life that has built up on the Prairies over the years as a result of certain economic institutions like the Canadian Wheat Board and historical arrangements like the Crow rate.

The fact that the Progressive Conservative Party is being picky about this amendment and is not seizing every opportunity, along with us, to reaffirm the role of the Canadian Wheat Board in the Prairie economy is a very clear indication of what we have been saying all along. The Conservatives are in line with the Liberals in so far as the long-term agenda in the West is concerned. What is that? The long-term agenda is fundamentally to transform the economy of western Canada so that western Canadians, in this case grain producers, do not have the control over their own destiny which they formerly had and would like to keep.

Mr. Breau: It is so that they will have a railway.

Mr. Blaikie: They have a railway, can have a railway and will have a railway as long as there is the political will to make the railways do what is necessary in this country. There is absolutely no reason why we should have before us this piece of legislation in order to have a good railway system. My Leader indicated in the House last week that we are prepared to go ahead with a Bill dealing with railway upgrading and expansion. However, we do not believe this should be done on the backs of the Canadian grain producers, unlike the Liberals and Conservatives who have capitulated to the blackmail of the railways in this country.

I come back to the Progressive Conservatives. The people in western Canada know that the Liberals are not their friends, so we do not have to debate that. However, there is still a significant number who believe that, when it comes to this kind of issue, they still have friends in the Progressive Conservative Party. That is not surprising because the Conservatives have taken almost every position they can take on this Bill. They have danced all over the place. They have been on one side of the fence, on the fence, on the other side, back again and then over again. It is very difficult to know what is going on. But, given the historical presence of the Progressive Conservative Party in western Canada, it is not surprising that there are still people who hope that the Party to whom they have given their loyalty over the years is a genuine defender of their interests.

Many western Canadians who do not think so now will come to think in the near future that the Progressive Conservative Party has abandoned the protection of their way of life on the Prairies. That will soon come to be known. They cannot bring themselves to defend this amendment which would reaffirm and reassert the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board because that Board is responsible for orderly marketing.

The Canadian Wheat Board is a symbol in Canada of orderly marketing, the way in which we have tried to protect grain producers and others from the effects of the marketplace. That is something which always rubs Conservatives the wrong way. Yet they have had to accept the Canadian Wheat Board over the years.

I cannot hear what the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is saying. If he is going to have a bit of a jape between him and his comrades, maybe he could say it a little louder so that I could respond.

It is no surprise that the Progressive Conservative Party is not with us on this amendment, given the constant penetration of the Progressive Conservative Party by neo-conservative American ideas. There has been an abandonment of the Tory tradition in Canada of wanting to build up institutions to protect the common good and the people of Canada. It is not surprising that the Conservatives would not be with us on this amendment to reaffirm and reassert the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board. In their heart of hearts they would like to see orderly marketing in this country eroded. One way they can begin to do that is by allowing step by step the erosion of the Canadian Wheat Board. That will not just have an effect on orderly marketing of grain in this country, but a symbolic effect on the acceptance of orderly marketing throughout the country.

These are the people who normally rant, rave and froth at the mouth about bureaucrats who are not accountable to the elected people, to Parliament or in any other democratic way. Yet they are willing to lay back and take the appointment by Order in Council of one person who will not be accountable to the Canadian Wheat Board, to Parliament, nor be accountable in any of the ways which they always stand up and mouth off about with regard to the kind of accountability they would like to see. When it comes to the crunch, when they have to choose either accountability or their own hidden and not so hidden ideological agenda for orderly marketing in this country, what do we hear? Nothing. We hear the Hon. Member for Vegreville get up and whine about the NDP, as if that was some kind of argument. He has not said why he does not think the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board ought to be asserted in this way in the amendment.

I hope the debate on this amendment will be an opportunity for those who are paying attention to this debate to see clearly once and for all that the Progressive Conservative Party has an agenda other than strengthening the economic institutions that we have built up over the years in western Canada. On this amendment they refuse to come to the defence of the Canadian Wheat Board. With their procrastination on the Crow rate, their indecisiveness and talking out of both sides of their mouths, they have abandoned the whole of western Canada.

May I call it one o'clock?

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, Public Service bashing seems to be a hobby of the Official Opposition. The latest incident occurred when the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) said that a Tory government would seriously consider throwing about 44,000 Canadians out of work, or 20 per cent of the civil service.

It can be small comfort to the thousands of honest, hard-working Canadians who work for the Public Service that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) has repudiated his Treasury Board critic's numbers but not his intentions. It is small comfort indeed, when the Leader of the Official Opposition was reported in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of May 26, 1983, as saying, "When we", the Tories, "come in walking softly and carrying a big stick, it's going to cause mass cardiac arrest in the Towers-of-Power of Never-Never-Land". The Public Service bashing by the Leader of the Opposition has included a claim heard on CBC television on May 26, 1983, that, "They've never worked in their lives. They've never done a day's work".

The Leader of the Opposition has threatened the Public Service on a number of occasions with some obscure actions to be taken if his Party should ever form a government. In the face of this Public Service bashing, Madam Speaker, simply stating that his Party has not considered cutting 44,000 Public Service jobs is not good enough. It is clear that the Leader of the Opposition's anti-Public Service bias could mean that he will get around to considering Public Service reduction at some point in time.

The goal of Government should be to provide the people of Canada with better and more efficiently delivered public services—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

EDUCATION

NATIONAL UNIVERSITIES WEEK—FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, yesterday marked the commencement of Canada's first National Universities Week. Ongoing publicity resulting from the chronic problem of under-funding has often overshadowed the host of positive and important achievements of our colleges and universities. It is hoped, therefore, that National Universities Week will not only underline the problem of under-funding but will also highlight the vital role played by post-secondary institutions.

At the present time, and well into the foreseeable future, universities and colleges are going to be key players in the economic recovery of the country. The technological revolution will require thousands of well trained and highly skilled people, and there will be a premium on those with a high potential for training and those with superior basic skills such as can only be provided by post-secondary schools.

As well, universities have always played an important role in research and development, a function that is becoming increasingly important if not vital to our future. Academics are being called upon to work jointly with business and government toward the application and development of new technology-related products and techniques in Canada.

For some time academics have been warning policy makers that chronic under-funding will result in the inability of institutions to graduate sufficient scientists, researchers, and even teachers, to meet the Government's stated goals. This warning must be heeded.

The motto selected for Canada's first National Universities Week has been well chosen. It is, "We have the future in minds". Might I add that we, the legislators, would do well to mind the future of our colleges and universities.

ABORTION

RIGHTS OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, on Friday the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) reaffirmed the support of the New Democratic Party for the concept of freedom of choice on abortion. The choice is conveniently given to the patient and to her doctor but is denied to a third very involved player, the unborn child who is the occupant of the womb. Quoting the names of agencies and institutions that support so-called freedom of choice does not make a wrong right.

A new individual's existence begins at conception. When the ovum is fertilized it acquires a distinctive genetic pattern which makes it a unique human being. It already has in place analogues of a major life-preserving system. It requires only time and nutrition to achieve full human development. The legal dictum that the act of birth is the dividing line between regarding a fetus as human or not is an arbitrary distinction without functional basis.

It is the duty of society to defend and protect the rights of the most defenceless of human beings, the unborn child. Support of the principle of freedom of choice on abortion is an abrogation of the duty of society to protect those who cannot protect themselves.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal Government are becoming more arrogant every day. Instead of calling a First Ministers' meeting, the Prime Minister interviewed four of the Premiers and then, because those four refused to say, "Yes, yes, Mr. Prime Minister," he questioned whether he would even see the other six.

As well, the Prime Minister has told the people that Bill C-155 will create jobs when in its present form, it will destroy the cattle industry, the hog industry, and the processing industry in western Canada, and will destroy the thousands of jobs that the potential expansion of these sectors would create. Bill C-155 will also force more farmers into bankruptcy creating a loss of more jobs. The National Energy Program all but ruined the petroleum industry in western Canada, and now the Liberals are doing the same thing to much of the agricultural industry. This Bill will certainly enrich the railways though.

If the Prime Minister wants to reduce inflation, why does he not start squeezing out some of the lard from his own administration by cutting out the unnecessary joy trips in government planes made by his Ministers? That in itself would save $1 million.

Worse still, the Prime Minister is now excusing the communists for shooting down the Korean passenger plane by calling it an accident.

The Canadian people want a free enterpriser with fresh ideas to head the Canadian Government, namely, the national Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Brian Mulroney, who calls shooting down the passenger plane murder. So resign, Mr. Prime Minister.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE POSITION ON WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I wish to object most strongly to statements made by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) in Saskatchewan over the weeken professing full-fledged Conservative support for the Crow rate. His protestations of true blue fidelity to the Crow rate have been flatly contradicted by the fainthearted efforts of Members of the Conservative Party in the House of Commons.

The truth is, Madam Speaker, that Conservative Members had 48 opportunities to speak in defence of the Crow rate in the House on Friday, and chose to put up only seven speakers. They are permitted to speak three times as often as are Members of the New Democratic Party, and instead they speak one-third as often. If that is defending the Crow, then the Conservatives should be arrested and charged for impersonating an Official Opposition. If the Leader of the Opposition says that that is defending the Crow, then he should change his last name so that it begins with a "B" instead of an "M" because he is slicing it that thick.

We intend to tell western Canadians that the Opposition Leader's words have not and are not being matched by action. When prairie farmers find this out, we think that Members of the Conservative Party will lose some seats because they have betrayed the interests of western Canadians.

The voters will also be interested to learn that CP Limited contributed $50,000 to the Conservatives in 1982, doubling its contribution of $25,000 in 1981. I think it is fair to ask why—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMNATION OF POLICIES OF MANITOBA NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the Manitoba NDP Government is the worst Government in the country for business, and it is the most anti-business régime in Canada. Because of its socialist philosophies, businesses are being driven out of the Province. Because of the policies of the federal Liberal Government and those of the Manitoba NDP Government, the country of Canada and the Province of Manitoba have no hope for economic recovery.

In 1981 and 1982 the outflow of money from Canada totalled more than $23 billion. Under the federal Liberals and the Manitoba NDPs, 1983 is also proving to be another year of economic disaster, with expansion for the whole of this year predicted to be a valueless 3 per cent and falling rapidly. The unemployment rate is at 12 per cent, which means that two million people are unemployed. Under these two governments we will see only further recession with an expected $21.7 billion deficit in 1983, increasing to $31.1 billion by 1988.

The Manitoba government is blind to the fact that its policies are only creating problems which are adding to our already sick economy. Under these anti-business, anti-profit and anti-entrepreneur philosophies, we will never see and enjoy a healthy economy or full employment.

S.O. 21

DELAY IN DELIVERY OF HOUSING GRANT APPLICATIONS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, many Canadians honestly believed that the now-ended CHOSP grant program was more than just government lip service to the housing problems of Canadians. How sad that this is not the case. Many problems concerning this program have been brought to my attention, but none so ignominious as the problem which was forced on residents of Langley, British Columbia, and on many Canadians across the country.

In the case of the residents of Langley, B.C., two applicants mailed their grant applications in what should have been adequate time to be considered for the $3,000 grants. In one case it was six full days, and in the other, eight. In both cases mailing times were documented. In one case there were sworn affidavits. Neither arrived at the CMHC in Vancouver by the May 5 deadline.

Slow postal service is not uncommon in Fraser Valley West. Even an eight day delivery for the 30 miles trip from Langley to downtown Vancouver is, sadly, not unheard of. What is truly incomprehensible in this instance is that one Crown corporation, Canada Post, literally thwarted the efforts of Canadians to receive assistance from another Crown corporation.

The President of Canada Post has apologized for the poor service but cannot give my constituents the grant. The Minister responsible for CMHC has apologized and said he would have liked to include postmarks, but added that no money is left for these innocent victims. These innocent Canadian taxpayers seek only what is rightfully theirs, service. They are being denied this by a Crown corporation—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, during the Conservative "Dump Joe Clark" campaign last spring, the new Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) attacked his predecessor again and again, saying that, "If you spot Pierre Trudeau 100 seats in French-speaking Canada, the Liberals will win the Government ten times out of ten." Well, Madam Speaker, we hear that during the weekend the new Leader of the Opposition resurrected his famous mathematical equation. He told his audience in Saskatchewan that, "If you do this, you will get that, ten times out of ten". We hear this morning some more examples of that famous Mulroney math. Iron Ore of Canada, following in its former president's footsteps, is throwing 600 more people out of work in Sept-Îles and Labrador City. What is more, Iron Ore has reported a $37 million loss for 1982, and we all know who its president was for that year.

The people of Canada have now learned, as the people of Schefferville, Sept-Îles and Labrador City have learned all too well, that a vote for Brian Mulroney means you will lose your jobs ten times out of ten. They have also learned, Madam Speaker, that a vote for Brian Mulroney is a vote for financial mismanagement and deficits ten times out of ten. You can be sure that the approach used by the Leader of the Opposition in Schefferville, now being followed in Sept-Îles and Labrador City, is the same approach he would use as Prime Minister, in ten Provinces out of ten, ten times out of ten.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON SHOOTING DOWN OF KOREAN AIRLINER

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I have in my possession a transcript of remarks by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at a community reception in Sault Ste. Marie on September 25. Referring to the stalking and destruction of Korean Airlines Flight No. 007, the Prime Minister said—and I understand he repeated it on the weekend—this was an "accident" and "we have to be careful that other more serious accidents do not happen". This was no accident, Madam Speaker. It was cold, calculated, deliberate murder, and our Prime Minister's willingness to give the Soviets the benefit of the doubt does not reflect the thinking of the world community of nations, nor the outrage and disgust of our own Canadian people.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PRIORITIES OF PRIME MINISTER—PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In Montreal over the weekend the Prime Minister spelled out his Government's priorities for actions, which may in themselves be laudable. What was shameful was that he did not include the needs of two million unemployed Canadians. They were not among his priorities. He did not include the needs of four million Canadians who are living in poverty. They were not on his priority list. When is the Prime Minister going to recognize that there are millions of Canadians without jobs, without adequate incomes, and who are fighting for their very survival? When are they going to become his top priority?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member will realize that her question is pretty rhetorical. It is not a request to clarify Government policy. It is not a request for information. It is really an attack on the Prime Minister's speech. However, if her question is non-rhetorical, then I will tell her that, of course, the reduction of unemployment is a major priority of the Government of Canada. All the policies of the Government have been established with a view to bringing about a continuing recovery in Canada and with a view to reducing the unemployment rate. That is the basic economic policy which has been laid out by the Minister of Finance, and which has been followed persistently and successfully by him.

RATIO OF POPULATION LIVING IN POVERTY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): It is true, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Finance may inadvertently have spelled out the Government's priorities when he said last week, "A moderation in the pace of economic recovery is not only acceptable but helpful." In other words, slow down the recovery, put more people out of work, create more poverty. That is what the priority is of the Minister of Finance. One out of six Canadians are living in poverty. If the Government follows the advice of the Minister of Finance, would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us how many more Canadians is it prepared to see living in that condition? Is it going to accept one out of five Canadians living in poverty, or one out of four? How many is the Government going to accept if it follows the advice of the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has misunderstood the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance was paying attention to the necessity of maintaining a sustained recovery, not a recovery which would bloom immediately into renewed inflation and a downturn, but a recovery which will be so based that it will continue over a period of years and will lead to a progressive reduction in the unemployment rate. I believe that has been the policy which the Minister has recently reaffirmed with his colleagues in Washington where these matters were discussed at the International Monetary Fund Meetings. I believe the Hon. Member, upon reflection, would agree that that is a very desirable objective.

HUNGRY CHILDREN

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister does not seem to understand the real facts which exists in this country. Let me give him one shocking figure which he can remember. Today there are 119,000 children in metropolitan Toronto alone who are living in poverty, and over one million such children in Canada as a whole. If a single parent mother came to the Deputy Prime Minister and said, as they have to me, "I cannot get a job; I cannot get into a retraining course; I cannot feed my children properly", what advice would he give her? Where do people like that fit into the Government's priorities?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talks as if she is the only Member of Parliament who receives Canadian citizens and who discusses their problems. Last Saturday I spent five hours in my office listening to individuals who have problems and, who are affected by the unemployment rate. In each case I attempt to provide the best advice and assistance I can. That is my responsibility as a Member of Parliament. As a member of the Government, I feel we all have the responsibility to bring about improvement in the economic situation.

The Hon. Member has referred to the situation of children in Canada. Obviously there are improvements that can be made, not only for children, but also for the single elderly. But there has been no Government in the history of this country which has done more for the children of Canada than the Government presently in office and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who has consistently brought measures into this House to improve the situation, particularly of low income families and the children of those families.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FATAL ACCIDENT AT LAC-LA-BICHE—ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD OF INQUIRY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. I am sure I express the sentiments of all Members of Parliament when I say how grieved we are over the accident which occurred at Lac-la-Biche involving the three young people who were enrolled under the Manpower employment program.

In view of the fact there is going to be a military board of inquiry into this serious accident, can the Minister tell the House if the information derived as a result of this board of inquiry will be made public, especially to the parents and families of the people who were killed?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I hasten to join with the hon. gentleman in offering my condolences to the parents of those who died as a result of this accident. I also join with the hon. gentleman, and I am sure other Members of this House, in offering our condolences to the bereaved of those who died in other mishaps during this particular weekend.

I would indicate to the hon. gentleman that indeed there is going to be a board of inquiry. I will seriously consider, having received the report, what portion of that report can be made public.

AGE OF EQUIPMENT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, can the Minister assure this House that none of the people who survived that accident will be made scapegoats for faulty equipment, in view of the fact that some of the equipment they are using is now 40 years old and of World War II vintage?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I wish to assure the hon. gentleman that the boards of inquiry formed to study events of this nature are of the utmost competence. I want to assure the hon. gentleman that the facts will be found out and conclusions drawn based on an objective analysis of those facts.

FINANCE

TAX TREATMENT OF POOR AND RICH

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, and it goes back to the alarming report on the weekend about the level of poverty in Canada. The report indicated some 40 per cent of single parent families are at the poverty level. Is the Minister aware that literally thousands of these families living at the poverty level continue to pay taxes while, according to the most recent data available, about 5,000 Canadians who earned over $50,000 a year paid not one penny in income tax? If he is aware of this apparent injustice, what does the Government plan to do about it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as far as the first part of the question is concerned, indeed the Government has taken steps to reduce the level of taxation at the lower end of the spectrum. I refer him to my April budget where some four million Canadians saw their tax decreased this year. I refer him in particular to that portion of the budget where we have provided that the workers' allowance increases from 3 per cent to 20 per cent while keeping the upper limit of $500. We have also taken steps to ensure that the child tax credit would be maintained at the level it was last year in order to assure that low income families—

Mrs. Mitchell: Not enough, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: I hear a Member saying it is not enough. Of course it is not enough, and we will try to do more, and as the economy picks up and as we get the resources, we will allocate them to the people most in need. That has been the policy of this Government and this is the way we intend to pursue our policy vigorously. We want growth in this country so there will be more revenue for the Government and the people of Canada, and in that way we will be able to provide even more help to people in need. This is a very high priority for the Government, and always has been.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Minister, who normally has a fair record for dealing with the facts in the House, knows that his most recent budget and those of his predecessor gave proportionately greater tax breaks to upper income Canadians than they did to the average people and the poor.

NON-PAYMENT OF TAXES BY WEALTHY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, so long as ordinary workers whose income is below the poverty level pay taxes, so long as pensioners whose income is below the poverty level pay taxes, so long as single parent families whose income is below the poverty level continue to pay taxes, how can the Minister justify a situation in this country where more than 5,000 Canadians earning over $50,000 do not pay one penny in taxes? Answer that question.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have not examined the files of those 5,000 Canadians for the good reason, as the Hon. Member knows, that Ministers do not have access to those files. The Hon. Member knows the income tax law and the provisions of the law. I do not know exactly how these people manage their affairs and how—

Mr. Broadbent: Ask Allan MacEachen.

Mr. Lalonde: —but the Hon. Member knows that in effect eventually these people are called upon to pay taxes. There are provisions in the Income Tax Act to take into account investments people are making and the losses they suffer in preceding years, for instance, if they have incurred losses in their business operations.

The fact is that the basic tax rate for people making $50,000 a year is higher than the tax rate for people with low income. There may be individual cases, a limited number as the Hon. Member has indicated, where, if you take into account events which have occurred in the previous years, although they may have made $50,000 this year, they may have suffered very heavy losses in the previous year or two which they are entitled to recuperate under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Parker: Well, change the Act.

Mr. Lalonde: I hear "Change the Act". I invite my friends to participate in the debates when those Acts are considered because they will—

Mr. Broadbent: When we did, you voted against the changes.

Mr. Lalonde: Well, that is it. The NDP is always against change and progress and they are against growth, and that is not new.

Mr. Broadbent: How is that for a witticism, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Lalonde: I thought it was pretty good.

Mr. Broadbent: I will try the Deputy Prime Minister.

MEDICAL CARE

REPORTED REMOVAL OF ALBERTANS FROM BENEFITS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, on the weekend in the Province of Alberta, which has that wonderful and benign Conservative administration, somewhere between 100,000 and 200,000 Albertans were cut off medicare. That took place in this country in 1983 in the Conservative Province of Alberta. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that this violates in the most fundamental way the principle of universal medicare? If the Government of Canada agrees with that, when is it going to take some action against such vicious, inhuman activity by a provincial Government, instead of just talking about it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the legislation passed by the Parliament of Canada provides for universal access to medicare. That was a principle introduced by a Liberal Government. In fact I happen to be the Minister who introduced that Bill, and the principle of universal access is still a principle of the Liberal Government. I hope that when we take action to ensure—

Mr. Broadbent: When? Do it now.

Mr. MacEachen: —that the principle is respected, that the Hon. Member will be a little more helpful than he has been on other pieces of important legislation before the House of Commons.

VIA RAIL

RESTORATION OF SERVICES—REQUEST FOR CROSS-COUNTRY HEARINGS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, we all listened with interest last week when the Minister of Transport announced that the rails might soon be rolling again in cities across Canada, where 20 per cent of the VIA Rail service was terminated in 1981. Given the fact that I have learned today that some of those trains may be rolling within 30 days, or could be rolling within 30 days, would the Minister inform the House whether these hearings to which he referred, will apply to all areas across Canada and not just to specific ridings for the political spinoff advantages that they might supply to the Government in power today?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, yes, I will give that assurance.

Mr. Domm: I thank the Minister for that assurance, and I can assure him that he will be hearing from delegations right across Canada.

BY-PASSING OF CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister. It did not go unnoticed that the Minister of Transport did not go to the CTC, the normal course of action to take when opening hearings. He went directly to VIA Rail Canada Incorporated, which means that he gets an immediate result for his approaches. Would the Minister make the same approach involving 20 per cent of the passenger rail service in Canada, until such time as the CTC or the Canadian Railway Committee is able to determine that it should not be in operation, and given the fact that his present actions have already represented a flip-flop from a position of a former Minister to a more reasonable position of a current Minister?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the changes that we are considering were in fact put in place by the previous Minister in terms of establishing a review after a two-year period. What we are simply considering is what changes may have taken place in certain market conditions in different regions of the country, and to go back, as any proper corporation or organization would do, and assess the impact and results of those decisions, and the reintroduction of those lines wherever that may be possible and economical according to the standards and guidelines set forward in the decision in 1981. That is what we are presently examining. However, we would want first to discuss this with VIA Rail. We want to ensure it still fits within the fiscal framework that we have for that particular corporation and, at the same time, consider how we can improve services in areas where there have been market changes. As I said previously, when we are prepared to move on those fronts, we will let the House know.

VANCOUVER ISLAND PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport, who has just added confusion to a problem which has arisen on the West Coast. I hope the Minister is aware that the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission has called hearings on the West Coast concerning the application of CP Rail into the operation by VIA Rail of the E & N Railway on the east coast of Vancouver Island. It is complicated, but I hope he has got hold of that notion. Since a Crown corporation, VIA Rail, is operating this passenger service, I am wondering if he can tell us why the Railway Transport Committee accepted an application from CP Rail to discontinue the service which, incidentally, the Minister should know, CP Rail is under a statutory obligation to operate in return for very generous compensation.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his very careful and precise explanation of the facts, of which I am already in full possession. If he were in full possession of the facts he would know that, indeed, the arrangements between VIA Rail and both CN and CP are under contract, that the ownership of the rails is retained by the railroads, and that the services are operated by VIA Rail. The application is now before the Transport Commission. It has both the responsibility and the obligation to receive such applications. I would not want to comment on the case until such time as those hearings are completed and decisions are made, at which time it would be or could be referred to me.

REQUEST FOR COPY OF CONTRACT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The Minister apparently believes that I have within my possession an understanding of the relationship between CP Rail and VIA Rail. In this connection, I should add that documents have been denied me and others. I wonder therefore whether the Minister is prepared to make available to me and to those who will be attending the hearings this week in Victoria, Comox, Courtenay and Nanaimo, a copy of the understanding between CP Rail and VIA Rail involving the operation of E & N? That is not a public document, so far as I know.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would be quite pleased to look into the representations of the Hon. Member, but he would have to recognize the fact that in such transactions there are commercial arrangements in which there are fiscal arrangements being made. I would have to consult the signatories to the particular agreement. However, I will consider his representations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REMOVAL OF CANADIAN WORKERS FROM UNITED STATES RAILWAY PENSION PLANS

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister is aware that Canadian citizens employed by American railways in Canada have been involuntarily removed from their railway pension plans, without prior consultation or warning, by the U.S. Railway Retirement Board. The Minister has informed me that this issue was being raised with the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service and with the U.S. State Department by the appropriate officials. Could the Minister report to the House on the success of these representations made on behalf of the affected Canadian workers?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, I will be pleased to report to the Hon. Member when I check further into the actual results of these representations. I do not have the details at my hand at the moment, but I will check and make them available to the Hon. Member.

NEED FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): I would like to ask a very brief supplementary question, Madam Speaker. I would merely remind the Minister that there are thousands of Canadians across this country who are worried sick about their pension benefits and they should get some information from the Minister as rapidly as possible, and this should not be delayed any longer.

Mr. Nielsen: What do you say to that, Al? Answer that one. Yes or no?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): I agree.

INDUSTRY

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION ON ASSISTANCE FOR LOGGING INDUSTRY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but it had better be answered by the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance will know that an industry task force, an advisory task force, which was appointed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to check into the forest industry, felt it necessary to issue an interim report reminding the Government of its previous commitment to extend to the logging industry certain fast write-off provisions as a way to help the independent side of the logging industry, the independent trucker. As he knows, this is not the first time that the industry has made this request. At a time when we desperately need to stimulate the forest industry, would he agree that it is unwise, not very prudent, to delay the implementation of these provisions any longer?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, obviously the Minister of Finance receives many recommendations for incentives to various industries. The task force report was received a while ago. Its recommendations are subject to examination at the present time. When I have reached a particular conclusion I will be very happy to inform the House, through the form of budget, normally, or in other ways.

INNOVATIVE TAX REGIME URGED

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): While the Minister carries on this inquiry and examination, would he also take into account the advisory committee's strong words with regard to the so-called grant programs for modernization and expansion? It stated, for instance, that it was "deeply skeptical" about grants for expansion of pulp and paper production. It stated that while grants were clearly "addictive", they were not necessarily a good system for helping the industry. Would the Minister also take under advisement the suggestion that we have consistently made that, instead of these grants to help the industry, he should really be working toward a more innovative tax regime to help all industries to recapture their market positions?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we shall certainly consider the suggestions made by the task force. I should, however, like to inform the Hon. Member that the views of the task force are not shared by all members of industry, far from it.

Furthermore, as the Hon. Member is aware, although the tax credit system is advantageous for companies that make profits, other companies like those in the pulp and paper industry which in recent years have suffered very considerable losses were unable to benefit from the tax credits being offered, and the net result was that although these companies were basically sound, they were unable to make plans for necessary expansion projects. This occurred in a number of cases, and I think that generally, industry agrees it is a good thing to have both a grants system and a system of tax credits, since grants will help the weaker sectors that are unable to take advantage of the tax credit system.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who, of course, will be involved in National Universities Week, speaking tomorrow evening, I believe. Can he give any hope at all to the universities and colleges in Canada at their time of genuine national crisis as a result of swelling enrollment and very serious, almost crippling, Government cutbacks, including the federal Government's cut-back of $102 million in fiscal transfers? Specifically, will the Minister take up the suggestion which I made a few weeks ago that, since the situation is so critical, the federal Government might indeed join with the Provinces to establish a joint emergency fund designed to assist universities and colleges throughout Canada?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. Indeed, the question of funds being available to students is a matter of prime concern. As she already knows, this Parliament unanimously approved Bill C-161 under which more than $60 million was transferred to Provinces to help students especially in this crucial year. Last summer I brought to the attention of all provincial Ministers of Education the importance of transferring that money to the students. Unfortunately, in some Provinces, of which British Columbia is one, those moneys were not transferred directly but have been used by some Provinces to reduce their corresponding share.

If we are to put more money in any fund, it would be with the clear understanding by the Provinces that the money would at least be transferred to students and not used by Provinces to offset their own financial responsibility.

Miss Jewett: I entirely agree with the Minister. The Government should never have entered into block funding in the first place. We in this Party, as well as the academic community, urged it not to at the time.

REQUEST FOR NEW FUNDING FORMULA

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, with reference not only to students but the institutions themselves, I want to ask the Minister specifically if he will develop a joint emergency fund for the institutions, to be spent in no other way? Will he also use this moment when we are under six and five to begin talking with the Provinces about a new funding formula that will ensure that federal money does in fact go to the universities?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has put her finger on something very important. In our Constitution there are two levels of Government, one of which especially has exclusive jurisdiction in matters of education. When the federal Government wants to spend money and help the university community, it cannot go over and beyond the Provinces. We have to ensure that we agree on the objectives and we have to agree that the money must be spent in that sector. Although we would increase our block funding—and the Hon. Member has very specifically pointed out the need in the community to maintain an increased level of funding—there is no need for the Government to increase it if there is no involvement on the part of the Provinces to make sure that the money is used in the system.

A permanent feature of our negotiations in the last few years has been to make sure that we get a formal commitment from the Provinces that the money will be earmarked for the post-secondary level and will be spent in that sector.

Oral Questions

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

CRITERIA CONSIDERED IN GRANTING LOANS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister has been quoted as saying that Canada will use its position on organizations like the IMF to stop loans to countries which trample on human beings. I believe he used Viet Nam as example. Will he tell the House whether he, in fact, said that and if it was a statement of Government policy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not think that is a statement of Government policy. To the contrary, it has consistently been our view that applications to the International Monetary Fund for assistance should, in the main, be judged upon economic and financial criteria. If we introduced political considerations it would be very difficult to manage the Fund in a commercially satisfactory way. I do not recall having made that statement but, if I did, I would be very surprised.

Mr. Kilgour: The speech referred to was made in Bangkok, I believe.

HUMAN RIGHTS ISSUE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, will the Minister tell us if he believes that the Government of Canada should take no position with respect to the IMF and the trampling upon human rights wherever that takes place in the world?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the question is a very difficult one. It has been addressed in another context by the standing committee with respect to the delivery of foreign aid. I thought the conclusions of the committee were sound because, in the main, the committee did not recommend the suspension or termination of aid in countries where there had been violations of human rights. It did say that where the violations were so gross that aid programs would be inconsequential or inoperative, then that would be a matter to influence not granting, reducing, or terminating aid.

As far as the International Monetary Fund is concerned, to my knowledge there has been no rule, except the general one, that applications should be based and judged upon economic criteria. That has been the Canadian view. Although there have been other countries which have requested that financial issues be judged upon non-financial criteria, we have not endorsed that view up to the present.

SHIPPING

MONITORING OF UNCTAD AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON CANADA

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It rises out of the fact that on Thursday of this week the UNCTAD arrangements with respect to the new code of ethics for liner operations, the 40-40-20 split on trade carriage will come into effect.

Will the Minister indicate to the House what steps his Department will take to monitor the initial phases of this new arrangement for the purpose of protecting Canada? Does he, at this point in time, have any reason to believe that Canadian shipping or shippers might be detrimentally affected by Canada not being a signatory to that agreement?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is no indication of that kind at present. As the Hon. Member knows, the negotiations on that were a responsibility carried out by officials of External Affairs, in consultation with people in the marine administration. I recognize his concern and would certainly undertake again to ensure that a proper monitoring and analysis are done. We would try to prepare such an assessment for him.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF STUDIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): The Minister will be aware that if we were signatories to that agreement and were to reserve for ourselves the right of moving 40 per cent of our in exports and imports, it could mean up to 30,000 new direct Canadian jobs for Canadian merchant marine engineers and others.

At the end of his review period during the initial stages of this arrangement, will the Minister undertake to review or release in public whatever reports or studies are done, and to make some visible comment on the gradual re-establishment of a Canadian merchant marine so that we might take immediate advantage of the opportunities accorded under this United Nations arrangement?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the development of a deep sea fleet is a subject that has been examined many times by different federal Governments, including this one. It is a subject in which we certainly have a continuing interest. However, there are certain significant interest groups in the country, particularly those in the west port areas, that are quite strongly opposed to the introduction of such a fleet. I would hope, with his co-operation and that of others, once we are able to complete the debate on the Crow Bill it will give me more time to go places out West to meet with such groups to see if we could arrive at a more cordial arrangement and therefore be able to pursue that matter more constructively.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

UNIVERSITY EXPENDITURES ON RESEARCH

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. I believe all of us in the House would want to commend the universities of Canada for the 150 years of very important contributions they have made to the development of the nation.

Could the Minister explain to the House why spending on research and development by our Canadian universities, which was at a level of 12 per cent through the 1960s and 1970s, dropped to a level of only 8 per cent in 1983? The actual performance of research within our Canadian universities dropped from some 25 per cent through the past decade to only 19 per cent for 1983. Could the Minister explain this sudden reduction of spending on research and development within the universities, and say what he proposes to do about it?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the issue of spending for research and development generally is, of course, one of prime importance to the Government and fundamental to the technology policy which I introduced in the House last May. I am sure the Member in question is gratified by the increased levels of funding which have been provided to NSERC. The other granting councils are primarily responsible for all research and development at the post-graduate level in the university system in Canada.

What we see happening across the country on an almost weekly, if not daily basis, is an increased effort on the part of industry to involve universities in research as well. We have some outstanding examples with which the Hon. Member is undoubtedly familiar, such as at the University of Waterloo, which I will be visiting on Friday this week—

Mr. Nielsen: What time?

Mr. Johnston: —to examine its success first hand. It is also happening elsewhere. It is also happening at McGill with Allelix. It is happening at the University of Quebec with Bell Northern Laboratories. It is also happening at the University of Calgary, to name a few examples that have come to my specific attention. On the whole I would say the picture is a very optimistic one, that the level of awareness of the importance of university research has reached Canadians on a very broad basis. We can look to much more active co-operation and effective applied research at the university level, a level we have not seen in the past to the same extent whatsoever.

MISSION ORIENTED RESEARCH WORK

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State presents a very rosy picture but he did not answer the question. The Statistics Canada figures I refer to show that university investment in and performance of research declined by almost two-thirds from what they were prior to 1982. I asked the Minister why that was the case.

Does the Minister feel in terms of specifics that universities should be making a more mission oriented approach to the very serious economic problems that our country has to contend with for the balance of this decade, and does the Minister have some suggestions as to how the work of the universities might be made increasingly relevant in seeking that goal?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Yes, indeed, Madam Speaker, the mission-oriented research, which I assume the Hon. Member is referring to as applied research as opposed to basic research, is something which the universities are involving themselves in more and more. But it is also terribly important, as the Hon. Member will know, being an aeronautical engineer himself with a great interest in science, and fundamental to the well-being of the entire scientific establishment in this country, that basic research not be forgotten; there must be a major thrust at the university level toward maintaining and enhancing the basic research capacity.

That being said, we have introduced programs, such as the program in micro-electronics unveiled by NSERC earlier this year, which will enable somewhere between 26 and perhaps 30 work stations to establish engineering faculties across this country which will enable engineering students to design very large integrated circuitry which will be co-ordinated through Queen's Control Centre and, probably, will be produced by a number of Canadian corporations and then returned to those universities for testing. There is an example—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—FATE OF MISSING GREEK CYPRIOTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister no doubt will be aware that some 2,000 Greek Cypriots have been missing since the war of invasion of 1974. I presume he is also aware that many of these people have been seen, indeed fairly recently, and we have good reason to believe that at least a lot of them are still alive. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs give the Government's commitment to take up this matter very seriously as a humanitarian issue to see that these people are released from the camps in Turkey and are able to return to their homes and families?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will certainly take note of the Hon. Member's interest in the question and see what can be done on the matter.

In the past week I did have discussions with the President of Cyprus and discussed the situation on that island. I do not say that it was his obligation to raise this question, but it was not raised, nor was it raised in the discussion I had with the Turkish Foreign Minister. In both conversations I was attempting to develop a better understanding of the situation in Cyprus, and particularly to what extent we should recommit ourselves to maintaining our peace forces in Cyprus. But I will examine the Hon. Member's question.

CANADIAN PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, could the Minister comment more directly on the peacekeeping issue itself? There is considerable concern. When there is discussion in the press about withdrawing Canadian troops, which we all want, without the context of the withdrawal of Turkish occupying troops and the establishment of a just settlement in accordance with a United Nations resolution, this does cause concern. Could we have a very firm commitment that the troops will stay until there is a proper and a fair settlement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Canadian peacekeeping forces have been in Cyprus for 19 years. The intention originally in putting them in Cyprus, along with forces from other countries, was to create the possibility for a political settlement. One wonders after that length of time how long it is justified to keep the peacekeeping forces there, particularly when there seems to be rather little progress made in terms of a political settlement. I think it is relevant for countries like Canada to raise this question if only to encourage the parties involved to make some progress in securing a political settlement.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that Canada will continue to play a responsible role as is required by the circumstances. But I think at the same time we ought to be putting some pressure on the parties to reach a political settlement so that these forces can be removed.

SPORTS

COLLEGE FOOTBALL—BANNING OF ATLANTIC CONFERENCE

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. The CIAU has barred the Atlantic Conference from being eligible for the National College Football honours, affecting universities such as St. Francis Xavier, St. Mary's, Mount Allison, and Acadia, which will be ineligible to play in the football finals. Did the CIAU directors contact the Minister before making this decision?

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Madam Speaker, this matter has been under consideration in our Department since July, and I can give my colleague the assurance that our offer to mediate between the CIAU and the Atlantic association still stands. The two organizations have been unable to agree on a game schedule that would be convenient to all universities. As Hon. Members are aware, last year, some last-minute changes had to be made, resulting in a loss of $50,000 plus academic time for students at the University of British Columbia. Madam Speaker, we are maintaining our efforts to finance university associations, but in this particular case, while our mediation offer still stands, it was the CIAU that refused to allow the Atlantic region to participate in the Vanier Cup, and we deplore this.

AMATEUR BOXING—INQUIRY RESPECTING MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. It concerns the doctors' report on the banning of amateur boxing in Canada. Can the Minister, in a short one minute or so, tell us whether she agrees with the banning of amateur boxing in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Madam Speaker, in amateur boxing as in all other sports, associations are governed by a national association that determines the rules for that discipline. In the case of boxing, we have had a commission of inquiry which has reported on its findings and recommended the appointment of a commissioner, but since there are federal and provincial jurisdictions to be respected, the position of commissioner has not been created although there are strong recommendations to do so. We are meeting the provinces at the end of the month, when we will be working on a set of rules of conduct. However, we feel that the rules should apply equally to both men and women in all sports disciplines, including boxing.

TRANSPORT

PRESENTATION OF EIGHTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I regret I must have missed your calling of Reports from Standing and Special Committees. I wonder whether the House would agree to reverting to reports so that the report of the Standing Committee on Transport could be tabled.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I assume that the report deals with Bill C-163, an Act to set up an Aviation Safety Board. If that is the case, we not only would welcome the report but, if the Hon. Member wishes to move concurrence later this day, we will ensure that it is dealt with in all stages today.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to reverting to Presenting Reports from Standing and Special Committees?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I thank the House for its consent. I have the honour to present the eighteenth report of the Standing Committee on Transport.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport; and Motion No. 32 (Mr. Benjamin).

Madam Speaker: Before beginning the debate, I would like to make another preliminary ruling, as I promised to do last week in the House. This time it covers all the amendments, but before I commence my ruling I would like to ensure that the Leaders of each Party have a copy. Since there are so many numbers involved, I think it is very important that Hon. Members have a copy to follow.

I would like to indicate to Hon. Members that I have now had an opportunity to examine all the motions standing on the Notice Paper in amendment at report stage to the Bill now before the House. It is my intention to make a comprehensive statement on all the motions, including those motions to which I had referred in my statement to the House on Thursday, September 29, 1983.

I would first like to refer to the motions that give the Chair some concern about their procedural acceptability. These are Motions Nos. 1 to 23 inclusive, 28, 36, 41, 51, 54, 57, 59, 64, 66, 67, 70, 73, 74, 75, 80, 81, 85, 86, 87, 89, 104 to 117 inclusive, 116 to 126 inclusive, 129, 134, 135, 139, 145 to 147 inclusive, 150 to 153 inclusive, 155, 157, 165, 166 and 172 to 174 inclusive.

Motion No. 1, as I indicated to the House last Thursday, seeks to introduce into the Bill a disguised preamble. Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 13 to 23 inclusive, 28, 36, 41, 51, 54, 57, 59, 70, 80, 81, 85, 89, 134, 135, 146, 147 and 166 go beyond the scope of the Bill, in some cases are substantive amendments to an interpretation clause, and also infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown.

Motions Nos. 6 to 12 inclusive, 64 to 67 inclusive, 73, 86, 87, 139, 150, 151, 155 and 165 are contrary to the principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading and in some cases infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown. Motions Nos. 104 to 114 inclusive, 172 and 173 infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown. Motion No. 129 attempts to introduce substantive changes to an interpretation clause and infringes upon the Crown's financial initiative. Motion No. 145 is consequential to this motion and therefore cannot stand on its own.

Motion No. 152 proposes a new scheme not contemplated in the Bill and goes beyond the royal recommendation. Likewise, Motion No. 153 is contrary to the purpose of the Bill and also goes beyond the royal recommendation.

Motion No. 157 proposes to introduce an entirely new proposition which is contrary to the purpose of the Bill. Motion No. 74 is consequential to Motion No. 157 and therefore cannot stand on its own.

Motion No. 174 seeks to amend the title of the Bill. Our precedents would not permit an alteration in the long title of a Bill unless such substantial changes are made to the Bill that would necessitate a change in the title to reflect the content and intent of the Bill. However, as Motion No. 174 is the last motion to be considered, we will wait until we reach the motion before making a final decision upon it.

In my statement on Thursday last I had referred to Motion No. 61 as giving me some procedural difficulty as to its acceptability. That was at first blush. I have now had a second look at this motion and I feel that it is relevant to the Bill, covered by the necessary royal recommendation and therefore will be proposed to the House at the appropriate time.

However, I have no difficulty in ruling on Motions Nos. 75 and 116 to 126 inclusive. These motions are clearly irrelevant and bear no relation to the Bill as amended by the committee and reprinted at report stage. Therefore they will be removed from the Notice Paper.

I would hope that the procedural arguments that Hon. Members may wish to place before the Chair on the other motions to which I have referred could take place soon. I would suggest Thursday morning at the opening of the day's sitting in order to allow Hon. Members sufficient time to consider the reservations I have just expressed. I will then be in a position to study Hon. Members' arguments and come back to the House with my final decision on the motions.

I will now refer to those motions that are acceptable to the Chair. They are Motions Nos. 33, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 42, to 50 inclusive, 52, 53, 55, 56, 58, 60 to 63 inclusive, 65, 68, 69, 71, 72, 76 to 79 inclusive 82, 83, 84, 88, 90 to 103 inclusive, 115, 127, 128, 130, 131, 132, 133, 136, 137, 138, 140 to 144 inclusive, 148, 149, 154, 156, 158 to 164 inclusive and 167 to 171 inclusive.

• (1510)

As Hon. Members are aware, Motions Nos. 24, 26, 27, 29, 30 and 31 have been disposed of. Motion No. 32 is now before the House. Motion Nos. 33, 34 and 35 should be debated separately and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 37 and 38 should be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 39 and 40 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on 39 will dispose of 40. A negative vote on 39 would necessitate the question being put on 40. Motions Nos. 42, 43, 44, 45 and 46 will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 47, 48 and 49 will be grouped for debate. Motion No. 47 will be voted on separately. An affirmative vote on 48 will dispose of 49. However, a negative vote on 48 will require the question to be put on 49.

Motions Nos. 50, 52 and 53 should be grouped for debate. Motion No. 50 will be voted on separately and a vote on Motion No. 52 will dispose of Motion No. 53.

Motions Nos. 55 and 56 will be debated together and voted on separately. Motions Nos 58 and 60 will be debated separately and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 61 and 62 should be debated together. An affirmative vote on 61 will dispose of 62. However, a negative vote on 61 requires a vote on 62. Motions Nos. 63, 101 and 102 appear to be related and should be grouped with Motions Nos. 103 and 142 for debate. The voting sequence should be as follows: Motions Nos. 63, 103 and 142 separate votes; Motion No. 101 in the affirmative disposes of Motion No. 102; Motion 101 in the negative requires the question being put on 102.

Motion No. 65 should be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 68 and 69 will be debated together and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 71, 72 and 76 will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 77, 78 and 79 should be grouped for debate and voted on as follows: Motion 77 in the affirmative disposes of 78; Motion 77 in the negative requires question on 78; Motion 79 by itself.

Motion No. 82 should be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 83 and 84 should be debated together with an affirmative vote on 83 disposing of 84 and a negative vote on 83 requiring the question to be put on 84. Motion No. 88 will be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 90, 91 and 92 will be grouped for debate with separate votes. Motion No. 93 causes the Chair some misgiving as to its procedural acceptability. However, I am giving the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt and I suggest that it be grouped for debate with Motion No. 94 but that each should be voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 95 and 96 should be grouped for debate but voted on separately. Motions Nos. 97 and 98 should be debated separately and voted on separately.

Again, I have some doubt as to the procedural acceptability of Motion No. 99 but will rule in favour of the Hon. Member. This motion will be grouped with Motion No. 100 for debate and a vote on 99 will dispose of 100. Motions Nos. 101, 102 and 103 I have dealt with when dealing with Motion No. 63. Motion No. 115 should be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 127 and 128 will be grouped for debate with a vote on 127 disposing of 128.

Motion No. 130 should be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 131 and 132 should be grouped for debate and a vote on 131 disposes of 132. Motion No. 133 should be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 136 and 137 will be grouped for debate and a vote on 136 will dispose of 137. Motion No. 138 should be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 140 and 141 will be grouped for debate and a vote on 140 disposes of 141. Motion No. 142 was grouped with Motion No. 63 and others and has been mentioned earlier. Motions Nos. 143 and 144 will be grouped for debate and a vote on 143 disposes of 144. Motions Nos. 148 and 149 will be grouped for debate and a vote on 148 will also dispose of 149. Motions Nos. 154, 156 and 158 should be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 159, 160, 161 and 162 should be debated together but voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 163 and 164 will be debated separately and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 167 and 168 ought to be debated together but voted on separately. Motions Nos. 169 and 170 will be debated together and voted on separately. Motion No. 171 should be debated and voted on separately.

I apologize to Hon. Members for taking so much time of the House with this statement. I suppose Hon. Members understand that it was impossible to do it otherwise. However, as Hon. Members are aware, there were 174 motions to be dealt with, which have taken a good deal of time and study. I have made the grouping, I think it is right, but if Hon. Members who are intimately aware of the content of some of the amendments feel they can make a suggestion to facilitate the grouping, I would welcome that. I ask them to bring it to the attention of the Table officers.

That is the preliminary ruling. I ask Hon. Members to reflect and make their arguments to the Chair on Thursday morning, if that is agreeable.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I thank the Chair and the Table officers for the assistance which this lengthy statement will give us in considering our submissions concerning the acceptability or non-acceptability of the motions which have given the Chair some concern.

I have one concern. Naturally we will harness all of our resources in an effort to address the motions in this statement which the Chair has given today where the Chair has some concerns about their procedural acceptability. However, I would simply point out that the very able Table officers, with all their resources, have been studying these motions since last Wednesday. They have had some five days to come up with this very lengthy statement. We are going to try to make the Thursday date suggested by the Chair, but that only gives us, I am sure the Chair appreciates, two days to do the kind of work that the Table has taken five days to do. It is certainly not balanced. We will certainly try to make the Thursday date.

The other matter gives me more concern. It occurs on page 3 of your statement where the Chair says: "However, I have no difficulty in ruling on Motions Nos. 75 and 116 to 126 inclusive. These motions are clearly irrelevant and bear no relation to the Bill as amended by the committee and reprinted at the report stage. Therefore, they will be removed from the Notice Paper".

I, of course, did not anticipate the concern that would be expressed by the Chair with respect to these numbered motions. I urge the Chair, before removing them from the Order Paper, at least to allow us to make submissions with respect to the conclusions reached by the Chair. It may well be, as I was prepared to do today, that we will agree with the Chair on some of the concerns you raised last Thursday. Before deciding about hearing any submissions that certain motions are going to be removed from the Order Paper, I submit that the fair course to be followed, and I suggest that the Chair follow it in this case, is to hear submissions with respect to that decision before making it unilaterally.

Madam Speaker: I would point out to the Hon. Member that this particular group of amendments is, in my view, so obviously out of order because they do not relate to the Bill as it was reprinted. I can give the Hon. Member an example and I would like to mount those arguments for Hon. Members and I will do so in time. However, they are so obviously out of order that I think much time could be saved if I do mount those arguments and give them to Hon. Members in detail.

• (1520)

If the Hon. Member wants to take time to look at them, I do not mind; but when the Hon. Member has looked at this particular group of amendments, I think he will agree with me that they are so obviously out of order. The Hon. Member can look at them and I will certainly listen to any reasonable argument unless, in mounting all of my arguments, the case seems to me to be so close that I will rule definitively on it.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have simply not had enough time to look at them. The chances are that the care with which you have examined these amendments will compel me to come to the same conclusion, but I would at least like the opportunity to look at them. If I come to another conclusion, I would then like to be able to submit arguments on it.

The last point I make is with respect to those so-called amendments that have been filed under Standing Order 79(6). Nowhere in last week's statement or this week's statement has the Chair commented with respect to the acceptability or unacceptability of those amendments which the Government purports to file under Standing Order 79(6). Are we to assume, in the absence of any comment from the Chair, that the Chair has found them all to be in order? If that is the case, we of course would want to have the opportunity to make submissions with respect to their acceptability.

Madam Speaker: I will tell the Hon. Member right away that not all of those motions were found to be in order. If the Hon. Member is referring to those that required a royal recommendation, I can tell the Hon. Member that those royal recommendations were attached to the motions and therefore, in that respect, they would be in order. Some of them have been ruled out of order. In any event, we can all look at this. I will take into account the remarks of the Hon. Member and I will also take into account that on Thursday perhaps Hon. Members will not be ready to present argument and then we can postpone it.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I would like to make it quite clear that none of the proposed amendments filed by the Government under Standing Order 79(6) is numbered. I know the Chair has addressed concerns with respect to some Government amendments that are numbered, for instance No. 116. However, nowhere in last week's statement or this week's statement has the Chair directed its attention, as far as I am aware, to those amendments filed by the Government under Standing Order 79(6).

Before coming to any conclusion on those amendments, I would appreciate first if I could have some indication from the Chair as to whether or not any or all of them, or one or more of them, are acceptable or not acceptable; and second, of course, could I have the opportunity to make submissions with regard to any of the concerns that may be expressed by the Chair on any of those amendments? In any event, I would like to have the opportunity to make submissions on certain of those or all of those amendments which may appear to us to be unacceptable.

Madam Speaker: I will listen to the arguments the Hon. Member has to put to the Chair concerning that. Neither I nor some of the officers of the Table really know what the Hon. Member is getting at, but I am sure that when he makes his presentation it will become much clearer to us.

Before I sit down, there has been a mistake made in the retyping of the ruling and I would ask Hon. Members to look at the paragraph that is numbered three on page 2. Motions Nos. 6 to 12 inclusive, 64, 66 and 67, 73, 86, 87, is the proper version. There was a mistake made in the retyping.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am sorry that I do not seem to be getting through regarding the Standing Order 79(6) question. The Chair has not addressed the regularity or otherwise of the amendments filed by the Government under Standing Order 79(6). I would like to know, as I am sure would other Members, whether the Chair has any concern with respect to any one of those amendments filed under Standing Order 79(6). If the Chair does not have any concern with any of those amendments, then I will, of course, have a global submission to make with respect to their acceptability or unacceptability. If the Chair has any concerns, I would request the Chair to state those concerns now or perhaps tomorrow in the same way that the Chair has for all of the numbered motions that stand on the Order Paper. I am asking for guidance.

Madam Speaker: I would prefer, rather than consulting here without fully appreciating the Hon. Member's question, to let him know what my feeling is on that particular question tomorrow.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, to help clear the anxiety of the Hon. Member Leader for the Conservative Party, I think the Chair has already commented on Government amendments. In fact, two were held in reserve last week and the Chair has since accepted No. 61 but still holds in reserve or considers the advisability of No. 14, which is a proposal affecting the interpretation clause. In fact, those comments have already been made and we will be prepared to submit arguments similarly.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would like to deal with two matters. Both of these matters have already been raised, but I would like to add my voice to them. One is the question of whether or not it is possible to be ready to argue on all of these proposals by Thursday morning. I do seriously question whether everyone can be ready to do that. I hope we can work out a more satisfactory way of dealing with them.

On the question of the acceptability of Motions Nos. 75 and 116 through 126, you, Madam Speaker, referred to having no difficulty with ruling on the motions. I would simply like to ask that there be the opportunity at least to make representation on one of the motions, either No. 116 or one of those numbered between 116 and 126; the same argument would be applicable in all of those cases since each of the motions deals with the same topic but uses somewhat different numbering in order to arrive at somewhat different conclusions. I would hope that at least the opportunity will be afforded to Members to make their representations on those motions and, indeed, that they need not be made repeatedly but could be made on any one of them since each of them addresses the same general topic.

Madam Speaker: I would be prepared to accept that because I fail to see how any of these amendments are relevant to the Bill. I think I would accept one single argument about the relevancy of all of these motions. I do warn the Hon. Member, however, that at first blush and even further than that they do seem to be out of order.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, you have just made a statement that is both long and detailed. Bearing in mind that the easiest thing to do would be to wait for tomorrow's Hansard in order to read your statement, I am wondering if you might ensure that all Hon. Members have the opportunity this afternoon to have that statement in hand so that we can have the opportunity to go through it as we deal with the amendments.

Madam Speaker: Yes, I am told that we have sufficient copies to circulate to all Hon. Members who are interested. I suppose that as usual Hon. Members can get them behind the chair.

Motion No. 32 is now before the House.

• (1530)

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I would like to speak this afternoon on Motion No. 32, which is an amendment presented by the New Democratic Party.

What we are trying to establish is the clear authority of the Canadian Wheat Board over the movement of grain. We have no real opposition to the appointment of a Grain Transportation Agency Administrator, as long as that is the person where the buck actually stops. If there is a problem with grain transportation, that individual should be answerable and responsible for co-ordination and efficiency in the movement of grain throughout the country. Very clearly, whoever the Grain Transportation Agency Administrator might be, he must be answerable to the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board is recognized, Mr. Speaker, as one of the best, if not the best, orderly market systems, in terms of its sales, its record and its representation of the producers of this country. It may very well be the best agency in the world.

Part of the problem, Mr. Speaker, which I have encountered in grain transportation in my own constituency comes, perhaps, from the lack of boxcars and hopper cars to move the grain out of certain areas. There are a good number of elevators each and every year which are plugged for a good portion of the year, either because there have been no cars into the siding to haul the grain out, or rail conditions are so bad that cars cannot be loaded up to full capacity. Meadow Lake in my constituency is a good example of an area where the rail is in such poor condition that a hopper car cannot take out a full load of grain because the track cannot physically stand the weight of the loaded hopper car. However, the important problem is when there are no cars at all. I can think of cases where farmers have to haul grain to many small delivery points which are already plugged with grain, and this causes some very real problems. If the elevator is plugged, the local farmer cannot, of course, haul his grain to that elevator. In some cases farmers for many miles around end up hauling grain long distances in order to sell it, especially if they are under the time constraints of a quota. In most cases in which I have made representations to the Canadian Wheat Board, we have been successful in having quotas extended for a period of time. The Canadian Wheat Board understands that sometimes there is a need to extend the quota because the farmers have been unable to deliver by reason of plugged elevators. This is not the fault of the grain company and it is not the fault of the farmer, but it is the fault of the rail companies, I suppose, because the box cars are not there. Or is it the fault of the Grain Transportation Agency? Is it the fault of the CN or the CP or is it the fault of the grain company? It is very difficult to tell. That is why it is important, Mr. Speaker, that the Grain Transportation Agency Administrator who is put in place be responsible solely to the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board, of course, is responsible to the members who make up that board, the farmers of Canada.

The fact that the elevators are plugged for a good portion of the year indicates some efficiencies which must exist because there are a number of delivery points within the Battlefords-Meadow Lake constituency which do not ship any grain in the wintertime. In fact, there are places like Denholm and Brada and others in various parts of northwestern Saskatchewan which only ship during the busiest times of the year for farmers, which is just before, during and just after harvest, and around seeding time. It seems very unfair to me that there cannot be a consistent flow of grain through the elevators as the farmers hault it in. There are all sorts of reasons why that does not happen right now. That is why I feel that if there is a Grain Transportation Agency Administrator set up, the buck has to stop with that individual. Right now there might be a problem with the grain cars not coming into a certain delivery point. You can call the Grain Transportation Agency and you are told the cars have been allocated. There are so many cars at that siding on Wednesday, for example. Well, on Wednesday the cars do not show up. When a complaint is made, the Grain Transportation Agency says, "The cars were allocated. It is the fault of the rail company. " If a complaint is made to CN or CP, you are told, "Well, we did not have enough cars. We could not deliver them." You are also told that their crews are overworked, that they could not get there, that they have been on a double shift.

I am not blaming the employees of the rail companies. However, the point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that there is not a whole lot of co-ordinating going on. It seems quite often that the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing. The only thing which the local elevator agent sees, and the farmers see when they want to haul their grain, is that there are no cars there and they cannot haul their grain to a plugged elevator. The farmer usually gets upset with the local elevator agent, who in turn has to pass it on to someone else, or he tells the farmer whom he should contact, and quite often the Member of Parliament for that area is contacted. We, as Members of Parliament, try to make representations as best we can to the grain companies themselves, because they allocate the cars out to the different blocks. We deal with the transportation agency, which tries to be very helpful. In fact, it goes out of its way to be helpful, but sometimes the situation is beyond its control. We also deal with the Canadian Wheat Board. It is very happy to accommodate and extend the crop year if just cause can be shown. We also have to deal with CN and CP, which seem to be more interested in the main lines and commodities which they can haul to maximize their own profits, especially in terms of Canadian Pacific. It is more interested in upgrading the rail lines in order to haul coal than it is to haul grain because hauling coal is where the real money is.

I suppose that the point we are trying to get across by presenting Motion No. 32 is that there is a need for better co-ordination and better service in the transportation of grain. That can best be accomplished by the producer agency, which has worked so well for so many years in the Canadian Wheat Board. We have heard some Hon. Members of the Conservative Party who have spoken in the House today being very critical about a producer organization, which has in fact worked so well. They made comments which at least the Conservatives viewed as insulting about the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Council. The Conservatives say that they want to preserve the Crow rate for a three-year period. But certainly their actions in this House do not portray that as being their real desire. They might say it, but they are not carrying it out. They say they want to save the Crow just as they say they want to save the Canadian Wheat Board. But what we see is that the Conservatives and Liberals together do the opposite through the amendments they propose or by not supporting the amendments we in the NDP move to strengthen such agencies as the Canadian Wheat Board, which has done a very good job for producers for a good many years.

• (1540)

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see my time has come to an end.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to echo some of the statements made by my colleague and emphasize a few other reasons as to why we are asking that the Grain Transportation Agency Administrator be made an employee of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The producers know the value of having the Canadian Wheat Board market their grain. In fact, even people writing Canadian history have recognized both the uniqueness and the strength of a marketing agency such as the Canadian Wheat Board. I would like to refer to a comment made by Donald Creighton, a historian, who wrote in Canada's first century. He was talking about the enthusiasm and energy grain growers were putting into a giant new co-operative marketing venture, the Wheat Pool, which only a few years ago they had given to political action. He was referring, of course, to the progressive movement. The Wheat Board had proved to the farmers' complete satisfaction that a single selling agency could do more for them than they could do for themselves through ordinary commercial channels.

It is important to recognize the benefits that western Canadian farmers have received from the Canadian Wheat Board. The largest proportion of wheat, oats and barley is produced in the western Provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, with a small proportion being produced in British Columbia as well. The farmers of western Canada are ever mindful of, and grateful for, the fact that the Government of Canada, through an Act of Parliament, has given to the Canadian Wheat Board the sole authority to export wheat, oats or barley grown in their area. Over the years the Canadian Wheat Board has come to handle 90 per cent of the grain exported from Canada.

It is a unique and very important institution to western Canada, Mr. Speaker. By pooling the farmers' grain, the board ensures that the farmer gets a return proportionate to the amount of grain he has delivered. Contrast that with the open market situation which is subject to wide price fluctuations over a short period of time. Farmers did not have access to information which would allow them to make the type of marketing decisions most beneficial to them, but they found that through the Wheat Board they were able to get the best price for the grain. The system had smoothed over the hills and valleys, as it were. That is especially important when you consider some of the northern rural areas of Manitoba.

Because of their presence at committee hearings or because they have availed themselves of the opportunity of looking at briefs, Members will be aware that the Canadian Wheat Board itself indicated its concern regarding the original proposal and the powers of the Administrator as envisioned under the Act without our amendment. The Canadian Wheat Board, like any other sales organization, must control the shipment of its own product in order to ensure performance. For these reasons the board has always held the view that over-all control of the system as developed in co-ordination with the industry should be administered by the board.

Our amendment, Mr. Speaker, seeks to enhance Wheat Board control over the sale and transportation of grain. I might add that the board still feels that the system operates most efficiently and effectively if grain transportation is fully co-ordinated by the major sales agency. It should be clear, Mr. Speaker, that we view any further reduction in the board's ability to co-ordinate transportation as a step backwards for the sales program involving western Canadian grain exports.

I think those words have to be taken very seriously, coming as they do from the major farm marketing agency. Farmers have found it beneficial to work together in a marketing agency such as the Canadian Wheat Board. I also hasten to add that as a Member of Parliament I have always found the board, its commissioners and officials, to be very accommodating. They are always ready and able to ensure that we are provided with the best information. Also, the Canadian Wheat Board has been very accommodating in providing farmers the opportunity to visit, be briefed by and to understand the operations of the Wheat Board. I have taken constituents from my riding of Dauphin-Swan River to Winnipeg and we have been provided a tour by the Canadian Wheat Board. Our farmers have had the opportunity to ask questions of board officials, any questions they might have about their permit book, Wheat Board surveillance of crops, how the board is organizing the transportation system, any questions about the block shipment or about turnaround time for cars getting back to the elevator sidings. We have found these officials to be very helpful. I know that even as Members of Parliament, we have had occasion to drop in there. We have had the opportunity to ask questions and to be provided with the answers.

● (1550)

In the West, we have confidence in the Canadian Wheat Board and have been pleased with what it has been doing. Our amendment wants to ensure that this type of work will continue. That is the intention of the motion, that the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board over the movement of grain remain.

I notice that Your Honour is rising at this time, so I just want to make it very clear—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired and he may continue only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I also enter the debate on the very important amendment that has been introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). As Hon. Members have previously indicated, the preservation of the Canadian Wheat Board is essential if western agriculture is to remain a healthy and viable industry in western Canada.

The role of the Wheat Board in western Canada is indeed unparalleled anywhere in the world. It is a unique organization, one which should be preserved. We are therefore afraid of what exists in the Act, not so much what is specifically stated but, rather, what is implied, and the powers that it would give the Government to change the Wheat Board in the future by Order in Council. Our concern is that the Wheat Board could be changed by Order in Council at some time in the future and its authority and powers over transportation eroded. We must only consider the experience of VIA Rail to know that this is not an empty fear but, rather, a real fear.

There have existed, especially with VIA Rail, instances where the Government, through Order in Council, has really taken measures that have reduced the effectiveness of VIA Rail. We are not the only ones who have expressed this fear. Mr. Jarvis, the Chief Commissioner of the Wheat Board, when he appeared before the Committee on Transport considering Bill C-155, stated the following:

> I am going to be more specific now. Our strong concern is that with the establishment of a grain transportation agency by Bill C-155 and under Section 97(b) of the Canada Grain Act, further powers could readily be shifted by Order in Council from the Canadian Wheat Board to this agency at a later date. These powers could include those the Board currently has under Section 21(k) of the Canadian Wheat Board Act which allows the Board to operate the block shipping system.

It is a concern of the Wheat Board which Mr. Jarvis' testimony to the committee brought forth. He went on to state the following:

> —because we should have realized any new agency would not be content to simply split the car fleet, but rather, would keep looking to expand its own powers.

Therefore, Mr. Jarvis raised two ways in which the powers of the Wheat Board could be eroded. One would be through Orders in Council. Second, the new agency which is being established, would seek, as do many agencies and bureaucracies, to expand its powers and put pressure on the Wheat Board and its ability to fulfil its important role. Not only is the Wheat Board concerned, but, as well, the Wheat Pools, the Famers' Union, the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee, and significant and knowledgeable individuals have all expressed the same fears about Section 13.

It is essential that the Wheat Board have the ability to direct traffic to make certain that, with regard to the grains it has for sale and the customers it has located, the transportation system is there to meet those orders and needs. For example, in the Wheat Board's submission it is stated:

> Currently about 85 per cent to 90 per cent of all producer deliveries of grain in western Canada are to the account of the Canadian Wheat Board. Competing successfully for international contracts and executing them to the buyer's satisfaction requires flexibility and decisiveness. Decisions regarding transportation availability during contract negotiations cannot await a decision by another body. In addition, often there is information which the customer regards as highly confidential and some information which could expose Canada's competitive position.
> The Canadian Wheat Board, like any other sales organization, must control shipment of its own product in order to ensure performance. For those reasons the board has always held the view that overall control of the system, as it is developed in co-ordination with the total of the grain industry, should be administered by the board.

Again, the statement by Mr. Jarvis brings forth another important point. The Canadian Wheat Board must have the flexibility to meet transportation demands almost on a day to day basis. It cannot await the decision of another body. The creation of this agency which Bill C-155 would create, is really only the creation of another layer of bureaucracy. It is just another actor who must be consulted and brought into the picture. It is complicating matters and, in the end, will have a negative effect on the Canadian Wheat Board being able to perform its duties, duties which it has performed so well in the past.

Not only is the Canadian Wheat Board's submission clear on this point, so was Mr. Gibbings', the former Chief Commissioner of the Wheat Board, when he stated in his presentation to the Transport Commission hearings:

> The board's marketing success depends on its ability to make day-by-day or even hour-by-hour decisions on grain movement. Its flexibility must not be compromised.

We maintain that what we have in front of us today, the section that we wish to amend can, and, indeed, most probably will, compromise the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to fulfil its role.

In Bill C-155 we really find an attack on western agriculture. There are three basic and main pillars in western agriculture. All three of them are attacked, in one way or another, by Bill C-155. The first pillar of western agriculture involves the Wheat Pools, the cooperative effort of the vast majority of farmers in western Canada who pool their efforts together through their organizations, their Wheat Pools. The second major supporting pillar is the Crow rate. The third is the Canadian Wheat Board. All three of them are under some form of attack by Bill C-155. Mr. Gibbings, in his submissions, makes this clear when he said:

● (1600)

> We have a group of individuals in the GTA and in Transport Canada whose abstract economic principles tell them that the grain industry has gone the wrong way over the past hundred years. They want to see the transportation system in a certain configuration, and they expect farmers, and the grain companies, the Wheat Board, and the Wheat Board's customers to adjust to accommodate it.

Mr. Gibbings concluded by saying:

> I suggest the reverse approach be taken. Let the transportation system develop to meet the needs of the people who are using it. That is the approach that makes real economic sense, and the Government should allow it to proceed by keeping bureaucracy out of the grain business. The Government has repeatedly stated that it will not remove existing responsibilities of the Canadian Wheat Board; yet it proposed to open the door to do so with the expanded Grain Transportation Administrator provided for in Bill C-155. If the Government is sincere, why does it not demonstrate this by eliminating the new agency, thereby firmly locking the door on the possibility of the board's effectiveness being eroded at the whim of individuals who are not responsible to grain producers or their customers.

Mr. Gibbings has the same fear that the Wheat Board will be under attack and will have its power eroded over time by what is in Bill C-155. As Mr. Gibbings pointed out in his submission, there are those who consider the development of western agriculture to have gone the wrong way in the last 100 years. They want to reverse it. Who are they? They are the grain companies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time allotted to the Hon. Member has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to this motion which has the effect of making the Grain Transportation Agency an employee of the Canadian Wheat Board rather than an agency of the Government. I should commence by saying that we are not particularly pleased to have to resort to this type of amendment simply to make the agency an employee of the Canadian Wheat Board. We would prefer that it not be set up as an ongoing entity at all.

In order to make the House understand our position, I would like to point out the background of the present Grain Transportation Agency. Members will recall the years 1976, 1977 and 1978 when we had three bumper crops in a row. Along with those bumper crops there was a combination of labour strife, bad weather, mountain slides and late starts in the shipping season in those ports that freeze up. Above all, there was a tremendous shortage of cars for moving grain.

The railways had not purchased any new grain cars since approximately 1952. Therefore, the fleet of cars was getting old. The existing cars were not maintained, and normal additions were not made to the fleet when those cars were wrecked or removed from service because of their age. The grain companies assumed there was something wrong with the way the Canadian Wheat Board was allocating cars when these problems occurred. No one asked the simple question as to why there were not enough cars being supplied by the railways. The initial pressure was put on the Canadian Wheat Board, whose duty and function it is to arrange for the allocation of cars from the number that are available. Since there was some concern that there was an unfair allocation of cars, the Grain Transportation Authority was established.

That agency used most of the staff from the Wheat Board. It conducted some experiments with allocating cars differently, but I would remind the House that ultimately it reverted to exactly the same method of allocation that was in place before it came into existence. It appears that the agency became useful since figures show that while exports dipped to 18 million tonnes in 1978, it was up to approximately 29 million tonnes by the end of the 1982-83 crop year. However, I think it should be made clear that this increase was not a result of having a Grain Transportation Agency. It was achieved by having people from the Wheat Board continue the allocation system which was used prior to the experiments, which did not prove anything. The old allocation system is still being used. The basic reason for this increase was that there were 8,000 more hopper cars. As a result, more grain could be moved. It was as simple as that.

We have some fears that including the Grain Transportation Agency under this Bill and calling it by a slightly different name will lead to less efficiency. Its chief function seems to be that of taking some of the heat from the grain companies which they used to direct at the Wheat Board. The fact is that the Wheat Board personnel still does most of the work, therefore, it makes eminent sense to keep the Grain Transportation Agency under the Wheat Board, which is an agency which farmers are familiar with and have come to trust.

Our Party as well as the farmers have doubts that a permanent agency will benefit producers. For instance, rather than 18 employees, we understand that the new agency intends to have a working staff of some 35 professionals. We are not sure what they will do, but any new agency whose priority is to double the amount of staff begins to create questions in the minds of people about what sort of power it is attempting to grab and what extra influence it is attempting to impose.

I do not think we should stray from the very straightforward basics of marketing grain. I will point them out because I believe they are fundamental to the kind of car allocation and transportation arrangements that are built into the system. The first priority is to sell the product. Once that potential market is found it must be established which grains and what kind will be purchased in that market. The next step which sometimes causes problems is getting the right grades, the right grains and the right amounts at the right point on the right day. To do that, the marketing agency has to have full control of the process. If it does not, if it is shifted over to another agency as is proposed in this Bill, the chief function and the main reason for that agency to exist is downgraded and undermined. That is why we are afraid of that kind of agency being established on a permanent basis. We think that as a co-operative, short-term entity it functioned and showed that the Wheat Board was fair in its allocation of cars. The facts speak for themselves. The agency ended up adopting the original methodology which the Wheat Board used. This tells me and virtually all observers in western Canada that there was nothing much wrong with the system they had in place. It was eminently fair. It tells me as well that we should look again at setting up an agency that is separate and distinct, otherwise we have one more potential impediment to the completion of that all-important sale of grain from the farm to the final buyer.

• (1610)

We urge Members on both sides of the House to reconsider this agency and to support the amendment which would put it back under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, which has done an excellent job in the past and can continue to do so.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Consumer and Corporate Affairs—Removal of urea formaldehyde from Manitoba homes. (b) Manitoba Government's non-compliance with regulations; the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields)—Employment—Denial of access to training for grade six educated workers. (b) Policy inquiry; the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett)—National Defence—Canadian Forces Base Chatham, N.B. (b) Prime Minister's statement.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport; and Motion No. 32 (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: While I am on my feet, may I have the permission of the House to deal with Motion No. 25 in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin)? The matter was raised on Thursday of last week and again on Friday.

As explained in Citation 792 of Beachesne's Fifth Edition, "the rules concerning the admissibility of amendments at the committee stage . . . are applicable to motions in amendment moved at the report stage of the bill".

Since the House, in its wisdom, agreed to Motion No. 26 on Thursday, September 29, 1983, Motion No. 25 would now have the effect of amending what the House has already agreed to.

Beauchesne's Citation 773(2) states that:

> An amendment must not be inconsistent with, or contradictory to, the bill as so far agreed to by the committee, nor must it be inconsistent with a decision which the committee has given upon a former amendment.

Further, Beauchesne's Citation 774 says, in part, that:

> If it appears during the course of discussion that an amendment or new clause which has been moved is out of order, then the Chairman directs the committee's attention to this fact and withdraws the amendment or clause from further consideration by the committee. As examples, the discussion of an amendment or clause brings forward the fact:
>
> (1) that the question raised thereby had already been decided by the committee;
> (2) that the amendment was inconsistent with the previous decision of the committee—

For all these reasons, I now have to rule that Motion No. 25 is out of order and should not be proceeded with further.

Motion No. 25 (Mr. Benjamin) withdrawn.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before you complete your ruling—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has ruled. The Chair is not prepared to hear argument reflecting upon a decision of the Chair. The Hon. Member was given opportunities on two days last week and again today to raise any further arguments which the Hon. Member had in mind. He did not do so. He did not take advantage of the opportunities, and the Chair has ruled.

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on another point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Chair will recall, and the Chair agreed with me last Thursday or Friday, that this matter would stand until Madam Speaker was prepared to make her ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A ruling has been made with regard to this.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will you please return to your seat?

Mr. Benjamin: What for?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer)

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, there are a few things that need straightening out.

Mr. de Jong: First Tory today.

Mr. Mayer: It sounds as if we needed a central recording agency for those people to the left to keep them in line.

Mr. Mazankowski: The NDP Members are nervous.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) says the NDP Members are nervous. They ought to be nervous with their performance to date on this very important Bill on behalf of farmers which they have so badly misrepresented to producers. I must say I do not need any lectures from these weed growers, such as the Hon. Members for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) and Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), and I do not know where else they come from.

An Hon. Member: Tell us.

Mr. Mayer: We have them going, Mr. Speaker. When you strike a responsive note, you get a little bit of noise from them.

Mr. de Jong: You have a great imagination.

Mr. Mayer: Members of the NDP talk about supporting the Canadian people and what it means to be a producer in the West and to have the Canadian Wheat Board sell on behalf of producers—

An Hon. Member: Don't get rattled.

Mr. Mayer: I happen to have had quite a bit of experience with quotas and what it is like to sit in a grain truck in a line-up. In fact, when I was a little guy of about 12 years of age, that is how I learned to drive a truck. My dad used to take me to town and leave me in the truck, and I would get a chance to drive a length of the truck in front as one moved ahead in the line-up. I do not need any lectures from those characters to my far left on what it is like to have the Canadian Wheat Board and what the quota system means. I suspect that not very many of them even know what the block shipping system is. They have blocks between their ears but I do not think they know very much about a block shipping system. I think that is evident in their performance this summer in committee.

Mr. Miller: Sit down.

Mr. Mayer: As I said, it was a real treat for me as a little guy to think that I could drive a truck for 20 feet or 30 feet with a load of grain on it.

Mr. de Jong: What a great contribution.

Mr. Mayer: Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, the real disappointment was—and I do not know whether any of the Hon. Members to my far left have ever experienced this—when you got very close to the elevator door and had a chance to dump your load of grain, the elevator agent would come out and say, "I am sorry, there is no more room. You will have to come back tomorrow." I know what that meant to my dad who was hoping to be able to sell some grain to pay bills. I know about all those things. I do not need to have lectures from the hon. gentlemen to my left. Anybody who grows up in western Canada knows the problems of raising grain, knows the vagaries of the market system and knows full well the value of the Canadian Wheat Board.

An Hon. Member: How is your relevancy coming, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Mayer: Again, Mr. Speaker, I would submit that all the NDP is doing is attempting to raise a political ruse. Our record in terms of this Party in supporting the Canadian Wheat Board is well established. For the NDP to engage deliberately in what I consider to be scare tactics in so far as this particular clause in the Bill is concerned is nothing more than political cray fishing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gustafson: Our Leader was in Regina yesterday.

Mr. Mayer: My friend from Assiniboia said their Leader was in Regina yesterday.

Mr. Gustafson: No, our Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: Our Leader. I can understand in both cases. When their Leader is in Regina they are nervous. Wait until the next election and see how they bring him out. I can also understand that when our Leader is in Regina they are nervous. I know he pointed out that we are going to sweep the Province in the next general election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: I look forward to that, Mr. Speaker.

Let me point out a couple of things. One of the things the Official Opposition did during the committee hearings—and I agree there is some concern over the power given to the Administrator—was to have the length of office of the Senior Grain Transportation Administrator reduced from seven years to a term of four years. I think that is a step in the right direction. I think that will address some of the concerns which the NDP may have with regard to the length of time the Administrator will be in office, as well as some of the powers he may enjoy on behalf of the producers. Second, if the NDP is really concerned about democracy and that the Administrator should not have such powers, why does it not raise the issue of the type of appointment which the commissioners for the Canadian Wheat Board have? On the one hand Members of the NDP are saying that they do not want the Administrator because they think he will be an agent of the Government and will have too much power, but let me point out that at least the Government of the day will have the chance to reappoint the Administrator every four years. However when it comes to the commissioners of the Canadian Wheat Board, let me read you, Mr. Speaker, what their tenure of office is. Part I of the Canadian Wheat Board Act reads:

3(3) Each commissioner holds office during good behaviour but may be removed for cause at any time by the Governor in Council, but no commissioner shall hold office beyond the age of seventy years.

● (1620)

There is a little inconsistency. If they are really concerned about the length of office of the Administrator, I would like to see them be consistent and carry the same concern over to the office of the Canadian Wheat Board commissioners. There is nothing contradictory between having an Administrator and having the Canadian Wheat Board. If we think about it, it can enhance the kind of work the Canadian Wheat Board does so well.

I would like to look at what the Pools indicated in their brief under the section entitled, "H. Grain Transportation Agency Administrator". They said:

The Pools accept the formal establishment of a Grain Transportation Agency Administrator with co-ordinating functions and powers.

Then I would like to refer to a question which was put by Mr. Benjamin to Mr. Jarvis, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board. By the way, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) gave Mr. Gibbings a very nice promotion. He has since retired as a commissioner for the Canadian Wheat Board, but he referred to him as the former Chief Commissioner. Mr. Gibbings served western Canadian agriculture in a very distinguished way. He was the former distinguished head of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, but he never served as the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board. I think the record should be corrected in that regard.

Mr. McKnight: He also served as a director for the Royal Bank.

Mr. Mayer: That is true, he is a director for the Royal Bank.

I would like to refer to Proceedings No. 127 at page 22 of the Standing Committee on Transport. At that point Mr. Benjamin was speaking—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member should refer to Members by their constituencies.

Mr. Mayer: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is reported as asking:

Do you feel it was a mistake to establish a Grain Transportation Agency?

His question was posed to Mr. Jarvis, who replied:

We have said in the brief that we find, in relating to the Grain Transportation Agency and the prime function that it plays, and that is splitting the rail car fleet, the available fleet, between board and non-board grains and among the companies for non-board grains, that this has not been cumbersome and it has worked, as far as we are concerned.

I think the evidence is there that it has worked. It is one of the major factors in the increase of grain exports from 18 million tonnes to 29.2 million tonnes. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) made that point well, except he was not smart enough to understand what he was saying. I thought he made a very eloquent argument in favour of the Grain Transportation Agency. One of the more thoughtful speeches of that group to my left today was the one by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). He made quite a thoughtful presentation. He really came down with an argument in favour of the Grain Transportation Administrator and against the amendment of the Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Jarvis continued:

What we wanted to underline here is that if there is any contemplation to transfer more power from the Wheat Board to that body, then, of course, we would be opposed to its existence.

That is not what this clause in the Bill does. I do not understand what is their concern about this. Let me read what the GTA said about a grain transportation agency. It indicated that there was never any serious question raised as to the continuing need for a body to allocate cars between users and to co-ordinate over-all movement. Based upon the GTA's experience, it was its view that such a body must have the following characteristics. I do not want to go through them totally, but I will summarize them. First, it must be neutral, that is neutral as far as the committee is concerned. It does not have an axe to grind. It is there to co-ordinate and to get all the players together, including the railways which the NDP, in its blind adherence to dogma, want to lock out of the room. I do not understand why the NDP would not want to have them in the room so that they could grab them by the scruff of the neck, shake them up a little and say, "Why don't you guys perform?" They want to keep them out of the room, the same as they wanted to keep the truckers out of the room. First, it must be neutral. Second, it must have a clear mandate. That is what this section is doing. The agency must be responsive to the needs of the grain handling and transportation industry. It must have accountability to the industry. Most important, I would submit, is that the agency must be equipped to deal effectively with the concerns of grain producers. That is the main thing this Party has tried to address in its concerns over the Bill, that we must stand up for the producer.

I do not understand Members of the NDP. I do not understand why they would not be in favour of more producers on the Grain Transportation Committee. On the one hand they say they will block the Bill, hold it up and use everything they can to kill it. Yet, when they rang the bells last Thursday, I think almost half their Members were away. Now we see them proposing amendments which will strengthen the Bill. They are going to make it a better Bill. They talk about our being inconsistent. I could get into that if I had enough time, but we have been entirely consistent in our position from day one on this Bill. I suspect that Members of the NDP are squirming a little because they cannot get their act together. They have Members from British Columbia who are under a lot of pressure to support the Bill. They want parts of the Bill, they do not want other parts of it. They should make up their minds.

Let me put on the record what the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), a former distinguished Minister of Transport, said when the Bill was introduced for second reading on May 12. He said:

> The statutory freight rate, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, is tantamount to a constitutional right for the producers of Canada. If it is to be traded or bargained away, the end result should be something as good as, or something better in place than, we have had before. Looking at this Bill, and notwithstanding the so-called "good intentions" of the Minister, we are not ending up with anything as good as, and certainly not anything better than, what was the case before.

That has been our consistent position throughout the whole debate on the Bill and throughout committee proceedings. Let me reiterate by indicating that we are in favour of the Grain Transportation Agency for the reasons I have outlined. We think it will enhance the work of the Canadian Wheat Board which is needed and vital. As a result of that, we will not support the amendment.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks this afternoon by saying that I represent only a few farmers in the northwest corner of my constituency, but I represent a large number of railway workers, both working for CPR and CNR, who have a very vital interest in an efficient transportation system. They have a very vital interest in seeing that the railways operate as efficiently and as actively as possible. When railways do not move goods, whether it be grain or anything else, workers in my constituency are laid off.

I find it strange that the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) suggested that Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party did not have their act together and have not been consistent while Members of the Conservative Party have been consistent from the beginning. The Hon. Member should remember that Members of my Party said from the beginning that we were opposed to the Bill, that we would not support the Bill and that we would do whatever we could to impede or stop its passage.

I also remind the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette that the Bill has been on the Order Paper and debated for months. A couple of weeks ago after many dozens or hundreds of speeches by Members of the Progressive Conservative Party, we heard a proposal by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) that the provisions of the Bill be stood over for three years. If anyone has taken time to decide what to do about it, it is Members of the Progressive Conservative Party!

We heard a great deal about the Canadian Wheat Board, the Pools, the National Farmers' Union, the Advisory Committee to the Wheat Board and what they have supposedly said. It has been suggested that they are not opposed to the Bill. I would like to quote from a statement by Mr. Jarvis, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, who said:

> Our strong concern is that with the establishment of a Grain Transportation Agency by this Act (Bill C-155), and under paragraph 97(b) of the Canada Grain Act, further powers could be shifted by Order in Council from the CWB to this agency at a later date. These powers could include those the Board currently has under Section 21k of the Canadian Wheat Board Act which allows the CWB to operate the Block Shipping System.

● (1630)

I said at the beginning that I am not an expert in this field. However, if I understand English, Mr. Jarvis was saying as politely as he could that the Wheat Board is happy with the present situation and that it does not want any more power given to another person or agency which will mean in effect taking power away from the Wheat Board.

I remind Hon. Members that the Canadian Wheat Board was established by the Conservative Government of Bennett in 1935. It established it because it came to the conclusion, a conclusion shared by almost all prairie grain producers, that the sale of grain to private agencies, with all the up and down speculation every day, left the farmer with the short end of the stick. That Government wanted orderly marketing of grain, and that is what the Canadian Wheat Board does.

In its presentation to the standing committee which dealt with this Bill, the Wheat Board currently markets about 85 to 90 per cent of all producer deliveries of grain in western Canada. In order to do this, it says, and I quote from its brief:

> The Canadian Wheat Board, like any other sales organization, must control shipment of its own product in order to ensure performance. For these reasons the Board has always held the view that overall control of the system, as developed in co-ordination with the industrty, should be administered by the Board.

The Government is proposing to give more power to the Administrator, who is not a representative or an employee of the Wheat Board. Keeping in mind that what Mr. Jarvis pointed out could happen under the power which the Government holds through this Bill and the Canada Grains Act, we can see why the Wheat Board is worried about what will happen. Again I quote from the presentation of the Wheat Board to the committee:

> The Board still feels that the system operates most efficiently and effectively if grain transportation is fully co-ordinated by the major sales agency. If this is not permitted, it should be clear that we view any further reduction in the Boards, ability to co-ordinate transportation, as a very serious step backward for the export sales program for western Canadian grains.

I do not know how the board can make its position any more clear than in the paragraph which I quoted and in the statement of Mr. Jarvis. The board feels very strongly that it must maintain the control of the shipping, sale and delivery of grain which it markets for Canadian farmers.

As the board indicated, it markets between 85 and 90 per cent of all grain produced in western Canada. That is why we moved this amendment, to make it clear that the Administrator is responsible to the Canadian Wheat Board. With this amendment we intend to assert the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board over the movement of grain. As the Bill now stands, it would erode the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board. That would be a mistake. It would impede the ability of the Wheat Board to control the grain car fleet, something we say is essential.

If you have an Administrator who is not an employee of the board, the board would not be able to control its block shipping system as it has until now. The block shipping system now permits the board to ship grains of a specified grade or quality or a blend of grades and qualities to meet the needs of its customers.

Let me reiterate what was said by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and answer some of the complaints of the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette. The reason farmers could not deliver their grain to the elevators in the past and why it has been better lately is not that there is a grain Administrator. The failure in the past was not the fault of the Wheat Board. The reason the situation is somewhat better is that we have 8,500 more hopper cars. That made the difference in the ability of the farmer to deliver. The board has been able to move the grain out of the elevators to the ports, something it could not do before.

The block system, as it has worked until now, permits the board to ship grains of a specified grade or quality or a blend of grades and qualities to meet the needs of its customers. Without this ability, sales of Canadian grains for export by the Wheat Board could suffer. Our competitive position would certainly be weakened. The Wheat Board made that point in its submission to the standing committee.

The movement of grain could be delayed by having an outside agency, or Administrator, without the day to day knowledge of sales and the grades, quantities and location of grains in storage, to assume control of the grain car fleet. The Wheat Board must be able to call the grain it needs, when it needs it, and be able to assign cars to the points where it knows it is stored. the proposal in this amendment meets the needs of the Wheat Board which, in turn, meets the needs of grain producers in western Canada. That is why we have moved the amendment.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: I certainly appreciate the welcome being given to me by the comrades on my left. I am sure the reason so many Members of the NDP are rising to speak is that so few had the opportunity during the Transport Committee hearings to make their concerns known. Most Members on this side who represent rural western Canadian ridings took part at one time or another in the hearings that were held throughout the summer months.

I am sure I heard the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), the agricultural spokesman for the NDP, correctly. If not, it will show up on the "blues". He said he would just as soon not have this agency at all. He said that if he had expressed his concerns properly, he would have said that he would just as soon not have this agency. That means that the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre was saying that he would just as soon not have four producers on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee and just as soon not have a feed grain user.

Mr. Althouse: I didn't say that.

Mr. McKnight: I think it will show up that the Hon. Member said, "If I had my way, we would just as soon not have this agency." When we start from that point, it is a little disconcerting for those of us who would like to have moved an amendment about the amount of grain we would like to see in western Canada, transported in an efficient manner in the best interest of producers.

Some of my colleagues pointed out part of this, that there is a lot of concern about these appointments. The Chief Commissioner and the other four Commissioners are appointed. They are responsible to the Minister. They are Canadian Grain Commission appointments. These appointments are all made in the best interests of the producers.

Some of the amendments to this Bill that were accepted in committee were put forward by our Party. They have to do with authority, duties and functions of the transportation Administrator, through the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. It says "promote reciprocal and other arrangements between the railway companies to facilitate the efficient and reliable movement of grain for the purpose of maximizing producers' returns". I presume the NDP are against the phrase "for the purpose of maximizing returns to the producers". I think those of us on this side have much more faith in the ability of the producers to make their feelings and concerns known to any government that happens to be in power if their returns are not being maximized and are suffering through some regulation or action taken by either an appointed or an elected person. The producers in my part of the country and their part of the country were certainly able to make their views known.

• (1640)

I had some responsibility, along with the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), for establishing the four-year trial period with the Senior Grain Transportation Authority. That was established because we travelled across western Canada and consulted with the Alberta Pool, the Saskatchewan Pool, the Manitoba Pool, the private grain companies, the railroads, the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Grain Commission, the employers' union on the west coast and the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. Everyone we met with encouraged us, under the auspices of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who was then Minister of Transport, to establish in a formal way this body called the Senior Grain Transportation Authority and put in place someone who had some authority to allocate between board and non-board grains.

To go back in history, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member for Lisgar can correct me if I am wrong and elaborate on this, but I recall that when we first started that study in 1979, it was necessary to ship three cars of grain to the west coast to get one car load of the particular grain that was required. That meant that if a carload of No. 1 grain was required, it took three cars to be sure that No. 1 was received because they would end up with a car that contained No. 2, a car that contained No. 3, and a car that contained grain that was lower in protein. These were the concerns that were expressed to us by the system participants whom we consulted with and indeed, Mr. Speaker, by the producers. We felt then, and we still feel, that it is necessary that the Senior Grain Transportation Authority be led by a neutral body and that the co-ordinator or Administrator establish the direction and the fairness that is required so that every producer in the West who tries to deliver grain and has an opportunity to deliver grain has equal access to the system.

Another thing that was done at that time in a very formal way at the cost of Canadian taxpayers was that the railing for the movement of grain passed Thunder Bay. When the Seaway froze, grain moved past Thunder Bay to the Ports of Halifax and Sorel and Saint John. That was done under the auspices of the Administrator of the Senior Grain Transportation Authority or, as that position was then called, the co-ordinator. By doing that, Mr. Speaker, the movement of grain continued throughout the year and did not stop when the Seaway was frozen. Hundreds of thousands of bushels of grain moved by rail from Thunder Bay to ports in the eastern part of the country.

Some of the Hon. Members on my extreme left have spoken about this Party. At least the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who just spoke said that the Canadian Wheat Board was established by a Conservative Government. That is something we have known for a long time and is something of which we are quite proud. However, as those Hon. Members spoke, they have accused us of not being very firm and of changing our minds in this debate. I would like to take this opportunity to read from House of Commons debates of Friday, May 13, 1983. In fairness, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) did not say that about me, and I guess he knows why. On that date, the Hon. Member for Regina West said, as reported in Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a short, quick, to the point question for the Hon. Member. Does he support the position of the Government that the grain producers should pay increased freight charges for shipping grain, or does he believe those freight charges should remain at the statutory grain rate level?

I answered:

> Mr. Speaker, if I had to choose between the Bill as presented and the statutory grain rate as it exists now, I would be forced to choose the statutory rate.

A little further on in the debate, I was asked a question by the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis). He asked whether we felt there was adequate funding of the movement of grain. My answer was:

> —if this Bill goes through as it is, to the farmers in western Canada, and if they will listen I will explain. I feel, and my Party feels, that the $651.6 million is certainly generous enough, at least until 1985-1986. It is certainly the benefit of the Crow. If it were protected in inflated dollars rather than in constant dollars, I think that would be sufficient for the railroads to continue moving grain.

I think that is consistent, Mr. Speaker, with what my Party has put forward since the beginning of this debate.

I would like to draw to the attention of Hon. Members something of which they may not be aware. The Canadian Wheat Board does not—I repeat, does not—sell all the grain that is sold on behalf of producers in western Canada. The Canadian Wheat Board sets the price of the grain that is sold and it completes coutry-to-country contracts and contracts with other corporations.

All of the grain that is sold is not sold by the Canadian Wheat Board. It is sold by agents of the board, and those Hon. Members who are cognizant of the Wheat Pools in western Canada should know that those Pools have a company called Excan and that company is in the business of making export sales of grain on behalf of the Canadian Wheat Board. While it is doing so, it is making a commission, it is making a dollar. The producers of western Canada are well served because there is another sales agency that is taking action on their behalf.

It is not only the Canadian Wheat Board that is involved in the business of selling grain. That is why we need an authority that is neutral and that cannot be accused of acting in the sole interest of any of the system participants on the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. That is why we feel that the Administrator of the Senior Grain Transportation Committee must be neutral and must be independent. There is more at stake here than the Canadian Wheat Board's fear that some of its present powers may in the future be taken away.

As I said when I rose, I am sure that the grain producers in western Canada have the ability to make their feelings well known in a very strong and forceful manner to anyone, whether elected or appointed, who impinges upon their ability to move grain and receive a profit from it. That is the simple reason why we find it very difficult to support this motion.

There is an amendment that I put forward in committee which my colleague will be putting forward later on in debate. The motion that I put forward in committee dealt with the duties of the Grain Transportation Administrator and reads as follows:

The provisions of this Part respecting the duties and functions of the Administrator do not restrict the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board under the Canadian Wheat Board Act to make available the quantities and types of grain necessary to achieve sales commitments on behalf of and in the interests of producers.

I think that sums up our concerns, Mr. Speaker, and our belief that the way the Bill is presently written with the duties and authorities of the Administrator placed where they are serves the best interests of the primary producers of grain in western Canada.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in opposition to the motion before us put forward by Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party. When we look at the question of the growing and selling of grain, the factors of maximizing production and maximizing sales in the international marketplace are all very directly related to the nation's ability to transport and move its grain. What this country needs is an efficient transportation system which will move as large a volume of grain as any of our producers have the capacity to grow. And seeking that objective, it becomes paramount that we have a system of transportation co-ordination which is autonomous with that of marketing. We must have a system which is neutral in relation to that of marketing, because when one takes a look at the whole question of transportation, the enormous complexity of that question must be borne in mind. It is not simply a case of getting a hopper car from some country point to port. There is also the question of the very large number of grades in any one specified grain. The numbers are enormous.

● (1650)

Transportation has to be co-ordinated with the ships coming into port. It has to be co-ordinated with the capacity of the rural points to deliver. I challenge those who believe there is no issue in terms of grain transportatioan to put the simple question to the rural farmers on the Prairies, those permit holders, "Are you satisfied with today's transportation delivery system?" I know intuitively that the overwhelming answer will be a rejection of the notion of complete satisfaction, because virtually every community believes there can be an improvement in transportation.

Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party have been arguing essentially with an illogical set of logical-sounding logic. What they are in effect saying is that ducks are good swimmers. "Les is a good swimmer. Les is a duck." Quite frankly, what they are telling us is that the Canadian Wheat Board is good. We in the Conservative Party are saying that some of the authority which the Wheat Board now has ought to go into a special agency, therefore, we are attacking what is good. The argument simply does not hold, Mr. Speaker. There are many examples of good in which we make divisions. Automobile dealers may have a specialized truck lot apart from their car dealerships. A doctor may practise as an M.D., apart from those who are dentists. If we look at our society we see that in every profession there are examples of good being divided, and a specialization of good would probably equal more good. Hon. Members in the New Democratic Party would have us believe something else. They would like to have us believe that because the Canadian Wheat Board is good—and there is no argument against that—if we did anything at all to remove what is presently within the authority of the Wheat Board to some other agency, that we are attacking what is good. That kind of logic simply means that all NDP Members are ducks and none of them can swim. That simply is not borne on by the facts.

The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) earlier this day said that in 1978 the transportation system in this country was a mess. Little did he know that he was making the case for having a specific agency, because it was in 1979, the following year, that such an agency was set up and there was a very significant improvement in grain transportation on the Prairies.

Mr. Althouse: Because we ordered cars three years before that.

Mr. Malone: I do not know how I would get along, Mr. Speaker, if I did not have the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre helping me. He said it was because they ordered the cars three years before that. That is the point. If in 1979 we had put up the agency and then ordered the cars, it might seem that, well, it is the cars, all confused. But, no, they were there three years before. Yet the Hon. Member said in his speech that in 1978 the system was a mess. Then in 1979, one year after the three years with which he starts, when the agency is in place, he tries to say, "Well, it does not have anything to do with the agency. It was all due to the cars which were ordered three years sooner." That kind of debating, Mr. Speaker, by Hon. Members of the NDP is called "squirrel-cage debating". It means that the faster they run the more they stay the same. There the Hon. Members of the NDP are pedalling away in their squirrel cage, trying to make Canadians believe that somehow the Conservative Party is attacking the Canadian Wheat Board. That is just pure balderdash, and it ought to be recognized as such by Canadian farmers everywhere.

We have indeed 8,500 more hopper cars. We also have an agency which is able to give its full attention to co-ordinating those cars into an active transportation system. Members of the NDP like to speak a lot on this particular Bill. They like to speak when they are recognized. They like to speak when other people are recognized. I would like to challenge them to ask a question in a questionnaire distributed among their farmer permit-holder constituents: "Do you believe, when you have a transportation concern, that you will get more attention by calling the Canadian Wheat Board rather than the transportation agency?" I believe, at least in the area which I represent, there is a belief today that the Canadian Wheat Board is a good agency, but that, in the question of transportation, when it comes to getting action, it is much more effectively done when someone's full concern is focused solely on the question of transportation.
