HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—THIRTY-SECOND PARLIAMENT

32 Elizabeth II

VOLUME XXIV, 1983

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWELTH DAY OF SEPTEMBER, 1983
TO THE NINETEENTH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1983

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

Published under authority of the Speaker of the House of Commons by the Queen's Printer for Canada

Available from Canadian Government Publishing Centre, Supply and Services Canada, Hull, Québec, Canada K1A 0S9.

END OF VOLUME XXIV

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, September 12, 1983

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1105)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1983

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau that Bill C-152, an Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are resuming debate today on a very important piece of legislation that has far-reaching consequences. It relates to the reorganization and the over-all philosophy of economic development policy for Canada. It is very important that this be done correctly because over 1.5 million people are out of work today.

We oppose this legislation. We do not expect to defeat it because the Government is asking us to legitimize something that has been in place for about a year and a half now. The Government had a Bill passed last June which provided for a principal program for the new Department, even before the Department was approved by the House of Commons; which displayed the arrogance of this Government and its disdain for the institution of Parliament. It also indicated the approach the Government wants to take to economic development. It is ignoring the desires and views of Members on both sides of the House in what should be a non-partisan effort. The procedure is a bad precedent because it is asking us to enact something already in place. As well it removes the opportunity for the public and Members of Parliament to have any meaningful influence on legislation.

While we do not expect to defeat this Bill, we do oppose it. I am disappointed the Minister is not even in the House today to hear comments of Members on this side of the House. We are opposing this legislation in order to bring to the Minister's attention some of the legitimate concerns that Canadians and that we on their behalf have. We want to address them to him so he can administer this Department effectively and deal with the important problem of unemployment.

I will be speaking only of the regional economic development, the DRIE aspect. The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) will be addressing those elements that relate to external affairs later on in this debate.

There are three main objections I want to address today. First, the Government is making far-reaching structural changes in government for short-term political purposes. Second, the Government is merging two Departments which have quite different operational objectives and looking into the future will be very difficult to operate. Third, there will be a lack of cohesion and direction in the economic policy of the Government.

Let me be more specific. Beginning two years ago the Government stated publicly and has demonstrated on many occasions its concern that it was not getting the proper political profile for certain of its programs. The federal Government is more concerned about this political profile than the actual impact of the programs under its administration and its public image is far more important than the effect these programs will have on the unemployed and on economic development.

By decentralizing the program in this new Department, the Government will be increasing the grant-making mechanism. This has important ramifications in that the over-all grant-making mechanism will be put under much more political and arbitrary control. This will help the Government in ridings it is concerned about, and there are many of them. This Bill will result in a political boondoggle. There will be more grants. There will be a huge grant budget which will be controlled under one group, the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. Undoubtedly, there will be a large increase in the arbitrary decisions on grants that will be based on overwhelmingly blatant political considerations. It is no coincidence that we have an election coming up some time within the next twelve months. We can expect more Liberals running around the country cutting ribbons and handing out cheques than ever before.

An Hon. Member: You are jealous.

Mr. Wilson: I am not jealous at all, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member opposite says I am jealous. I want to tell you something about one grant. I hope you will take this into consideration the next time you throw a flip comment like that across the floor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that he must address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Wilson: I will bring my remarks directly to your attention, Mr. Speaker. In one day the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) flew to his riding and back in a JetStar. He had a very important grant to hand out, Mr. Speaker. It was for $3,500, about the cost of the jet fuel consumed by going there and back. Why did the Hon. Member go there? What was so important about this cheque? It was not the fact that the money was going to some local community organization. It was far, far more important that he see his picture on the front of the paper. He could have sent this cheque by mail. But he wanted to have stories about him on the radio program that night. This is why he took that $3,500 and wasted taxpayers' money, just to get his picture in the paper.

● (1110)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: As I said, we will see an awful lot more of that over the next little while. When we look at the green spaces on the other side of the House, we will know where those Members are; they are handing out the money of this new Department. We see the Hon. Member over there licking his chops as he thinks about all the cheques he will be handing out in his riding. It may be for 12 more months. Then he will have to watch. He will have to read the papers as a Conservative Member will represent that part of the country.

Let me just summarize this particular point. With this legislation the Government of Canada is distorting a very important structure of Government for clear and blatant political reasons. The new IRDP, Industrial Regional Development Program, announced last June gives the Minister tremendous discretionary powers. It removes the more specific objectives of about half a dozen Government programs and replaces them with one bland program with ministerial discretion to say where the money will be spent and how it will be administered—total ministerial discretion. We can be excused from being too cynical when we consider the uses that might be made of this discretion, but one only needs to look at what has gone on in the past to understand what is likely to happen in the future.

The Minister—again I wish he was here to listen to my remarks—has protested that the whole program will be politically tamperproof—I believe those were his words—because decisions will be taken at local levels. Let us discuss this. We have seen that under that particular program decisions involving over $250,000 have to be referred to Ottawa and decisions over $500,000 will be taken in Ottawa. Thus it is not tamperproof. We do not have to use our imagination too much to understand how local Members of Parliament, particularly some who are in the House today, will be beating local and regional administrators over the head to have their cronies in the Liberal Party favoured by that legislation. This opens up all sorts of opportunities for political abuse. We can see where some of that money, with a little recycling, will end up in local campaigns. This is one of the greatest weaknesses in the grant system of support. I will come back to it later in my remarks.

The second objection I want to address is that the operations of the merged Department will be disrupted by the inconsistent objectives of the two Departments which will form this one Department. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion, DREE, was concerned with regional development. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been concerned with developing internationally competitive industry. These are diametrically opposed objectives. Industry, Trade and Commerce was dedicated to matching the industrial strengths of Canada with international trading opportunities through both export and import displacement. On the other hand, DREE addressed the needs of less developed regions of the country by assisting in the creation of new companies which could be established without Government assistance. There are exceptions to this. I am aware of those exceptions. However, as a general rule those were the two objectives.

● (1115)

ITC was building on strengths; DREE was shoring up weaknesses. It is a different philosophy. There are different problems and different ways of dealing with it. We have to be very concerned in the administration of the Department that we understand what the overall approach of the Government will be.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) or the new Minister of DRIE have not spoken in this debate. Therefore, we do not know how the Government will combine these two different philosophies in the new Department. Both are worth while, but both can be greatly undermined by the attempt to blend the two. We have to know what balance the Minister is going to try to achieve in building the industrial development side and the regional development side, where the priorities are going to be, what industries will be favoured and what industries will be downgraded during the course of the next year or so under the Minister's administration. A key to the success in this merger is that the Minister address these questions so as to give industry some idea of the direction that he proposes to take.

Let me address the third objective, and that is the lack of control, co-ordination and consistency in industrial development policy that can arise out of this merger. If we accept the Minister's statement that decision-making will be decentralized it raises a question as to how regional decisions will be co-ordinated with the broad economic policy of the Government. Reluctant or recalcitrant regional officers can obstruct over-all policy objectives.

Let us not forget that ranking of certain officers in the field is higher than with many of the people in the industry branches and in other parts of the Department here in Ottawa. We are dealing with a bureaucracy here. When people in Ottawa in trying to fulfil broad policy objectives are not able to exert their influence on people in the regions, there will be some breakdown in the administration of Government policy.

The regional officer, being a normal human being, is going to respond to pressures that he feels from the regions. That is why he is there. However, we have to understand how those regional pressures can be co-ordinated with the broad policy approach of the Government. The people in Ottawa are a long distance away, but the people in the regions are right on the spot and there are specific pressures on the regional officers.

We are dealing with a bureaucracy. That bureaucracy is very hard to administer. In analyzing this Bill, I believe that the over-all administration of the Department will become much more difficult. It will become much more difficult to arrive at some broad, co-ordinated economic policy rather than one which breaks down into the political boondoggle I was referring to a few moments ago.

I want to single out one industry that is most affected by this particular problem, and that is the tourist industry. It is composed mainly of small businesses, businesses that will be eligible for smaller amounts of money under the $250,000 limitation where the decision is made in the regions. The sole prerogative for those decisions resides in the regional officers. We have a major ongoing tourism deficit in this country of some $1.5 billion to $2 billion. This will require some national co-ordination to rectify. I fear that this new structure is going to break down that national co-ordination.

I have another real concern. Under the previous enterprise development program there was a financial burden criterion which encouraged that program to favour small business. This is gone under the new IRDP Program. Big business is now on the same footing. We have to know how this will be handled. Don't forget, Mr. Speaker, that big business has the staff, the resources and the time to access Government programs. Small business has not. Time is money to them. When the president, the person who relates to government, is also the chief sales manager and sometimes acts in many other capacities within a small business, he does not have time to spend dealing with governments. I am concerned that when big business is put on the same footing as small business, big business will gain some advantage that it did not have under the previous program.

• (1120)

So what will the criteria for spending that money be? How will the Minister retain control of the programs? What will his strategy be? What sort of industries will be favoured? Because of those questions we must hear from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the House before this Bill is passed.

That brings me to a fundamental difference in philosophy between the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party on the one hand, those two bedfellows in crime together, and the Progressive Conservative Party on the other hand. The other two Parties make use of grants and hand out Government largesse to a much greater extent. We on the Conservative side favour tax incentives.

I would like to summarize in a general way what the difference is between grants and tax incentives. Grants are arbitrary and, as I said, lend themselves to political abuse. Grants distort the economic process because a civil servant or a politician is required to make the decision rather than having the decision made by the broad marketplace. Those who have the expertise or the ability to tap Government programs get a benefit which others who may be less successful at that but more successful as businessmen do not get, leaving them at a disadvantage.

The grant process is too slow. It does not benefit high technology or companies that are seeking research and development assistance. As well, grants create bureaucracies which we certainly do not need today. Tax incentives, on the other hand, are open to all. Only the marketplace determines who will succeed. With a grant, a business gets the money before it is tested by the market. With a tax incentive, there must be some record of success as demonstrated by existing profit in order to make that tax benefit worth while.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there will always be a role for grants to play, for start-ups, for major projects and for certain elements of regional development. However, I fear that the combination of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE under one roof demonstrates a growing desire on the part of the Government to encourage more use of grant money and less use of the tax incentive. This is a process which we on the Conservative side would reverse because we feel that we must return to a more open, more efficient method of dealing with the whole process of economic development.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I feel that it is important for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to come to the House to address this Bill in order to give us an understanding of the direction in which we are likely to go. It is important that he embark upon an educational campaign soon in order to straighten out the misunderstanding in the minds of people across the country and remove the confusion that those people are faced with about what this merger means and how it will benefit them in industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The rules of the House provide for a ten-minute period of questions and answers at this point. Are there any Hon. Members seeking to ask questions or make brief comments?

Mr. Hawkes: I rise on a point or privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is rising on a point or privilege. I presume that it arises from what has immediately preceded.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up a great deal of the time of the House, but I would simply like to bring to your attention and to the attention of Members of the House that at the commencement of the sitting of the House this morning, the bells did not ring in the Confederation Building. Over half of the Members of the House have offices in that building. I wonder whether or not we are in legal session when in fact the Members from that building have not been called to the sitting of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has brought to the attention of the Chair a matter which will be investigated immediately.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Hon. Member. He has indicated that his Party prefers tax incentives to grants. I wonder how the Hon. Member expects new companies, innovative companies, companies entering into high technology that are just starting and that have not been in business before and therefore do not have any tax credits coming to them, will be able to operate if they do not get those kinds of grants, particularly in slow growth areas such as Atlantic Canada or the Province I represent.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has raised this question because it is an important one. During the course of my comments, I did say that there will always be a role for grants to play. I did specifically identify start-ups.

● (1125)

I think what we have to do is balance the grant approach with the tax incentive approach. As an example, in the case of start-ups I believe that if more incentive is provided through the taxation system to encourage people to invest money in new start-ups, that will reduce the need for grants to get companies on their feet. If the companies can be properly capitalized at the start, which is an ongoing problem in this country, then they will not need the grant so much. The ongoing tax incentive will provide the means for the company to be successful and gain the continuing support necessary to keep moving.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of evidence that many of the newest inventions and newest procedures have been begun not by large corporations, which in Canada particularly are pretty stodgy, but by very new companies run by young people just starting out who have very little capital. Certainly they have no tax credits to begin with.

In his speech the Hon. Member indicated that he believed in both, but he made it clear that he and his Party favoured tax credits over grants. Of course, we can all agree that we should have both. I am concerned, however, that if a Conservative Government were to depend mainly on tax credits, we would not get the kind of start-up or the kind of input from new, innovative, small companies which we will need if we are to succeed.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I think it has been very clearly demonstrated in other countries as well as, in a converse way, in this country that you get more start-ups through an attractive tax system than through having a bureaucrat or a politician in Ottawa or in a region saying: "You are going to get some money and you are not going to get some money; you are going to be favoured but you are not".

I was in the investment business and I know the mistakes people can make when deciding which one is going to be favoured and which is not. The people in government, whether on the political side or on the bureaucratic side, do not have the expertise to be able to judge which is going to succeed ultimately and which is not. I prefer to see that decision left to the private sector and to the marketplace.

If we can have a tax system which will encourage innovation and risk taking, then fewer people will come to governments looking for handouts. Speaking on behalf of the Conservative Party, I say that is the type of economy we want to have in this country.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the last speaker. By dealing primarily with the incentive system, whether tax credit or other types of write-offs or incentives, he is basically providing assistance to those who already "have". In other words, "them who has gets". What the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) mentioned to him a few moments ago was that those who were lean and hungry—

● (1130)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member make his point briefly because there are one or two other Hon. Members seeking to be recognized?

Mr. Kristiansen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The question is, why does he insist on favouring—and that was clearly the thrust of his remarks—those who already have a dominant position or a strong position, rather than giving encouragement to those who are lean and hungry, who are inventive, who want to establish small businesses, get them moving and make a productive impact on the economy?

Mr. Wilson: The Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, has totally distorted my comments. I have said on many occasions—I said it here in the House—that if you have a taxation system which encourages people to put money into start-ups of new businesses, you are going to have an immense number of new businesses starting up and they will create tremendous employment in this country. The Conservative Party understands small business far better than the New Democratic Party and far better than the Liberal Party. The Conservative Party has supported small business for years and years and the Conservative Party derives a tremendous amount of support from the small business community.

If I can just refer the Hon. Member to both the Canadian Organization of Small Business and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, who represent small businessmen right across this country, there is no question in the minds of either one of those organizations that they far, far prefer the tax incentive rather than the grant, because with the grant they have to come to Ottawa, they have to plead with government, they have to take government through the whole process and they waste time. They do not have access in nearly the same way as big business. Therefore, by favouring tax incentives over grants, there is no question that we in the Conservative Party are favouring small business rather than big business, which I suppose the NDP are starting to get much closer to than they have in the past.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, my question for the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) is with regard to the reorganization of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. First of all, I would like to congratulate him for being a very articulate spokesman for Thatcherism and Reaganomics in this House. We have all seen how that has worked.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member is entitled to his views and I respect his right to express his views. However, when I see him appointed the shadow minister for Industry, Trade and Commerce, DREE and for the development of the regions of Canada, I become very concerned because I heard the Hon. Member opposite say—and perhaps he can correct me and reassure me as well as the far-flung regions of Canada—that he had some concern with the notion that in the reorganization of that Department there were going to be regional people, not just responsible for regions but people located in the regions, reporting directly back to the Ministers. He said he was concerned that there would be pressure on those regional officers to express regional views. I know that clashes somewhat with the centralist line, but it seems to me that all Parties, all members of the DREE committee, including Hon. Members of his own Party, have agreed many times in committee and in this House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has in mind the time limitation?

Mr. Tobin: I will put the question, Mr. Speaker. All Hon. Members have agreed that a strong regional voice is indeed necessary. It has been renewed with this reorganization. I am concerned that the Hon. Member opposite is saying that under a Conservative government there would be a centralist planning board and no room for regional voices, regional spokesmen and regional questions.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting how the Hon. Members in the other Parties use this ten-minute interlude to distort the speeches of the Hon. Members who have just spoken. I never said that at all. What I did say was that there can be policies which are decided upon by the Government in order to support regional development, as well as the over-all economic development of the country, which can be interpreted differently by regional officers in ways which do not support the over-all policy. That is the concern which I have expressed.

I have asked the Minister to come to the House and tell us how he is going to administer this policy so we can have a co-ordinated regional development policy, rather than have different regions and different parts of the country fighting among themselves and distorting the policy, ensuring that the policy will not work.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period of questions and answers having expired, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East has the floor.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy today, as the House of Commons resumes, to have the opportunity to address Bill C-152, although I would have to say in the beginning that it is rather difficult to speak about something, as the previous speaker has already indicated which has already taken place. We are talking about a reorganization of departments in Ottawa which has already been put in place, so our speeches today are really a reflection on something which, to all intents and purposes, we cannot change.

However, I do believe it is still very appropriate to reflect upon and suggest to the Ministers, and to the Government, that we are concerned and worried about certain things which have taken place with Bill C-152, which Bill has changed the structures of external affairs and trade. I would particularly like to address the Bill from the aspect of its international effects. I feel that this kind of Bill will have serious repercussions down the road as it affects Canadians and as it affects the country of Canada.

As I understand it, the new Bill has set up a giant new Ministry under the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). Under that ministry there are going to be two "minor" Ministries, shall we can them—or are they equal? I am not sure how it is going to operate. One Ministry is called the Ministry of External Relations and the other is called the Ministry of International Trade.

Of course, there is no doubt that when Canada deals with other people and other countries in the world there is a whole multitude of relationships taking place. The problem I have is that by putting the Ministry of International Trade under External Affairs there will probably be an imbalance in the perception and the way the Ministry will operate which I feel could be very dangerous to the human rights of many people around the world. Because the Department of Trade is not out there by itself, is not being directed by a Minister and making its decisions completely on its own but is being handled now by this "super" Ministry, I have a fear that many decisions which formerly might have been made for strict international and political reasons or for reasons which would be related to human rights, or which would involve the humanity part, will now be made for another reason, which will be profit at this particular time for some Canadian firm. The pressure which will be brought against the Department of External Affairs, not for human reasons but for reasons which relate to business and profit, I feel has become entrenched in a way that it was not before.

Since we have gone home for our holiday break during July and August there have been changes in the House of Commons and in the roles of different Hon. Members. At this particular time I would like, as a fellow colleague in the House of Commons, to congratulate the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) for having pulled the plum out of the basket and received the new role of external affairs critic for the Progressive Conservative Party. At the same time, though, I am sure he would be the first to appreciate the fact that I have great difficulty in understanding why that choice was made. One of the writers in The Globe and Mail, Michael Valpy, has said it must be part of the Irish humour of the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, who at the same time I would like to congratulate on his arrival in the House of Commons, for being able to make that kind of choice. Now, if it is a joke, I have not laughed yet; and I am worried. The direction that the Progressive Conservatives have officially taken in external affairs really upsets and worries me as a Canadian, not only as a Member of the NDP.

● (1140)

With all due respect to my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel and I have worked closely with him on the Latin American report and over a number of years in external affairs matters, and he has a view of the world about which I am deeply concerned. He has not spoken yet and I will be very happy to hear his views, but I believe that this set-up of External Affairs being responsible for international trade will be very much to his liking. I believe the Hon. Member sees international relations as being basically concerned with trade.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the subcommittee on Canada's Relations with Latin America and the Caribbean, of which there were 15 Members from all three Parties, 14 Members came to an agreement on the report about how Canada should deal with its neighbours in the Caribbean and Latin America. There was one dissenting voice, that of the Hon. Member for York-Peel, although in the meetings of the full Committee on External Affairs and National Defence there were Members who supported the Hon. Member for York-Peel, all from the Conservative Party. But the report, which I felt was balanced and was prepared only after extremely hard work and an awful lot of study, I feel gave Canadians and the Government a direction to follow in dealing with the people of the Caribbean and Latin America, yet it was opposed by that one Member who is now the Conservative Party critic for external affairs. I do not think that this appointment is a joke, even though Mr. Valpy of The Globe and Mail says it is.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that if this legislation is going to please that Hon. Member, then it is the kind of legislation he probably would have planned himself. I believe the Hon. Member is going to speak later today on this particular Bill and I will be anxious to see just exactly how he will address it. I will be anxious to see whether or not the Hon. Member will see it as an intrusion into the freedom of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make clear decisions on morality and not be pushed by the business side more than others. There are many sides the Minister has to take into consideration when he makes his judgments.

The sub-committee on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean is one of the few groups in this House of Commons which has taken seriously this part of the world and has studied how Canada should relate to its neighbours. All 14 Members of that subcommittee, excluding the Hon. Member for York-Peel, felt that in dealing with countries in Central and Latin America the primary thing to be taken into consideration by the diplomats and the Government is the question of human rights. What are we as a country doing to protect the human rights of the people who live in Uruguay, Peru, Bolivia, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Jamaica, Cuba, or wherever, so that they can live as human beings with the rights and privileges of a human being at this particular time in the history of the world?

In our report we also make the very clear point that trade and investment is another reason Canada is interested in relations with those countries. The world runs on trade and I have no difficulty with that. But we also recommended that in development assistance Canada should be very conscious of the fact that it is to assist and develop the country, not just something to develop and make Canadian industry go. Development assistance or true aid is to aid and assist people, wherever they happen to be, who because of the current economic situation need this assistance. Aid is something that people do not ordinarily want; they would prefer to assist themselves. But at times in their lives, as in ours and everyone else's, aid is demanded.

The point I make concerning this reorganization is that development assistance can now become much more of a tool, let us say, to trade. I repeat, development assistance should be for the human needs of people wherever they happen to be, but I have a fear that what can easily happen with this reorganization is that this will be the first stepping stone to increasing trade. Canada will send off aid in the form of machines and tools or technology which will tie the receiving country into a web they cannot get out of. Everything they do will be directed to the particular Canadian industry involved.

Well, Mr. Speaker, people can ask what is wrong with that. I suspect there are good reasons for thinking a little bit in that direction but my experience, having worked in developing countries and with people in the Third World, is that many times aid programs, because of this effort to try to tie them into trade, did not or do not help those to whom they are directed. The program was imposed by those who want to trade something they have here and are trying to find a market for, but the market is not there because the people of that country have not arrived at that level as yet.

For better or worse, CIDA has been criticized many times for programs which do not work well and reflect badly on the whole idea of aid. But I think that if you looked at those programs which have received the biggest opposition and caused the most conflict, they would be programs which are very closely associated with an aid approach which was attached almost directly to Canadian trade.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this new set-up really does concern me. Is there going to be an unequal pressure now from the Minister of Trade (Mr. Lumley) in the area of external affairs so that human rights, which the subcommittee laid down as the guiding force of Canada's relationships with other countries, and development assistance will now fall out of focus and be forced away because Trade and Commerce have become too predominant in the judgments being made in External Affairs?

There is another thing that concerns me about this Bill. I do not know what the Minister of External Relations means. What is it? Who is it? Why is it? I cannot find in the Bill a definition of what that Minister is supposed to do. I may not have read the Bill correctly but I cannot find that, so I think that by itself is a great omission. What is this Minister supposed to do?

At the same time I would like to congratulate the new Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. Pepin). I hope he will do well in his role, whatever it is. At the same time, I would like to congratulate him for the way he handled the initial news about the Korean airplane incident. As we are all aware, that was a horrendous event and a terrible thing to happen in modern day society. Unfortunately, I still feel that we do not know many of the things about the event. Even today as the papers come in and television reports are made, we receive more information which leaves doubts in people's minds about what was actually happening. For instance, how could a modern airliner with its three navigation systems get that far off course? These questions still have not been answered.

• (1150)

When the news first came out that this tragedy had taken place, that lives had been lost and Canadians had been involved in an international disaster and had died in a terrible incident like this, the Minister of State for External Relations kept giving us whatever information he had but left the door open for further information. I congratulate him for that. There was no immediate closing down of the question.

At the same time, I would like him to rise in the House to explain what his job is, because I do not know what it is and it is not described in the Bill. I can see great conflict arising between the two roles, if they are necessary at all, unless they are clearly defined and divided so that we know the purpose of each. While I think I should know that, I and I am sure most Canadians do not know why there are two Ministers dealing with international affairs or relations.

I will end my remarks by saying that I believe this particular Bill, from an international point of view, causes me grave concern because the whole question of trade, profit and commerce will play too big a role in the judgments made by the Minister of State (External Affairs), other very important conditions to international life, such as human rights and development assistance, and how we deal diplomatically with other nations in the world could be very strictly limited.

Second, I would like the Government or the Minister himself to define for us the role of the Minister of State for External Relations and how it both differs from and relates to the role of Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). Whom are we to believe if their statements and views differ?

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, as the New Democratic Party critic for CIDA, does the Hon. Member know that the new president of CIDA, I understand, will be reporting directly to the undersecretary rather than the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen)? If that is the case, what are the implications of that change?

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I had been forewarned that this was a possibility. The new president of CIDA is Mrs. Margaret Catley-Carlson. I would like publicly to congratulate her on her appointment at this time because CIDA has been without a president for nearly a year. It had been rumoured that the new president would have to report to a lower level in External Affairs. I checked with CIDA to make sure that would not happen. Mr. Jack Shea, the person from CIDA who monitors the House, informed me this morning that she will be reporting to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are other Hon. Members seeking to ask questions? If not, the Chair recognizes the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House today particularly to have the opportunity to respond to many of the criticisms that have been levelled against the regional economic aspects of this particular Bill. However, I must confess that I am not particularly pleased with what I have heard in the House so far today. The reason is that it will have a bearing on our capacity as legislators from every Party in the House to deal with the very difficult economic challenges which Canadians face in the days, months and even years ahead.

Let me be more specific. At a time when we have so many opportunities and challenges ahead of us, I would have hoped that we would see a concrete, positive and upbeat approach by the Opposition showing that they are prepared to work in a constructive manner toward proposing concrete alternatives to the situation that we face today. We did not see this.

The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) gave a perfect example of small, partisan bickering, bringing to the House no new alternatives and looking to confrontation rather than constructive alternatives. He may say that these are many charges, but let me substantiate them by repeating what he said.

First, he said that he is concerned that we are making increased funding available to the most depressed regions of our country. He said that this is merely a political move. One may call any move that we make a political move, but the question is whether it is a move that is in the interest of the people in a particular region. Personally, I do not apologize for our Government's posture in increasing the funding which we are making available to the poorest regions in Canada. Did the Hon. Member have a constructive alternative in this case? Absolutely not.

Second, he is concerned that the new federal economic development co-ordinators who are being appointed in each Province of Canada to deal specifically with economic development problems at the local level will not be able to respond to regional economic problems, or he suggested that they will respond to regional pressures. If that is his criticism, I gladly accept it. If the voices of the regions which reflect the needs of the people in those areas in a concrete and specific way do not come to us, I do not want a part of this particular program.

We are establishing federal economic co-ordinators who will work with the Provinces and the people in the regions in order to develop through co-operation the programs that best relate to the specific difficulties that are being faced by our most impoverished regions of Canada. Perhaps his alternative is to centralize the whole bureaucracy even further in Ottawa. If that is the Conservative alternative, which is what the Hon. Member was saying, then I want Canadians to know that specifically.

A third point the Hon. Member made was that small business will be left out of the new initiatives and that only big business will benefit. What proof does he have for that assertion? Surely by putting the small businesses and the federal economic development co-ordinators together in the particular regions, additional access for small businesses will be created so they can go to the table to negotiate and become involved in the process of setting our regional priorities. It was far more difficult for small businesses from the various regions to come to Ottawa. Instead, we are going to the regions and making this access available. This is a third instance where there is confusion, deliberate misrepresentation or simply total ignorance of exactly what we are trying to do. Again, no constructive alternatives.

● (1200)

Fourth, we have tax incentives versus grants. In essence he said he favours tax incentives to grants. This is a motherhood statement when you look at the record of our Government and particularly at the last budget. What did we do? There were enhanced tax incentives to all businesses and to the private sector in Canada in terms of enriched investment tax credits whereby those companies wanting to expand could receive greater benefits. We also saw a program where research and development was enhanced for the introduction of new technologies. We had before that budget the most generous tax program in the world for introducing new technologies in the private sector. We enhanced those provisions in the budget in a way that will particularly assist small businesses. They will be able to transfer their excess tax advantages to investors to attract new capital.

I am not interested in theoretical arguments about whether tax incentives or grants are best. We all favour a generous tax incentive program that will enable the private sector to set its own priorities, and that is exactly what we have done. Did the Hon. Member propose any alternatives to us? Did he specify where he wants to see small business given additional tax breaks in addition to those already in existence? This is the Member who has been complaining so much in the past about the level of the deficit. I want to see what those specific alternatives are and where we wants to enhance the capacity of small business further.

Let me say something about grants. I prefer, and this Government prefers, that we have tax incentives instead of grants. There is no question about that. But grants do have a very important role to play. Hon. Members should talk to companies that once were very small, such as Mitel, which have benefited from grants and have had opportunities to expand and become very large. Yes, there will be problems with grants. They require a decision by Government. There is not one small-business person to whom I have spoken who would ask us to do away completely with grants that assist small businesses, new entrepreneurs and, those people who otherwise would have no tax advantage to speak of. If you think that every grant we give will result in a successful operation, Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely wrong. We must not be afraid to have certain failures in these areas. By using grants in certain cases we are expressing faith in Canadian entrepreneurs. I make no apology for that. I particularly make no apology for doing that when it comes to entrepreneurs in the developing regions of Canada.

I think we have demonstrated that this approach of the Opposition is not one based on fact or on one dealing with the specific realities of the Bill before us; rather it is one based either on misrepresentation or total ignorance. It is an approach based on an attempt to replace co-operation in solving our national problems with partisan bickering. I hope that as legislators we could determine that the good of the people of Canada, those who send us here, is more important than this partisan approach in dealing with our problems today.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about some of the specifics of this Bill as they relate to our Government's commitment in dealing with the regional economic problems of Canada. Before the reorganization, the responsibility for regional economic development was contained in one Department, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. This was a bold, new initiative and it had many successes under our Government. We have felt for some period of time that this important initiative cannot be left to only one department, that it is one where the responsibility has to be expanded. Therefore, we have attempted through this Government reorganization to create a new Ministry called the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development, "regional" being the important word, and to put the emphasis on the regional aspect of the economic development program.

What does this mean in concrete terms? Instead of just one Minister for DREE as in the past, we will have every Minister with an economic portfolio involved in the regional aspects. Second, we will have the economic and regional development committee of Cabinet with all of the economic development Ministers having the regional aspect as a chief priority on any decision that goes before that committee. What we have done is make the responsibility not that of solely one Minister or Department but one of all the economic Ministers and the very important co-ordinating committee chaired by the Hon. Minister to whom I report. This is a very concrete step forward.

The implementing tool of this type of approach will be, as you have already heard, Mr. Speaker, the placement of a federal economic development co-ordinator in each province. The co-ordinator will be responsible for implementing our programs. Second, co-ordinators will be responsible for reporting back to Ministers on every economic priority of the particular region and Province. They will be co-ordinating and chairing economic development committees involving citizens and, provincial representatives in order to determine what the priorities are in each region. Then at the Cabinet level, those regional priorities can be co-ordinated with our national priorities and national goals. I do not apologize for putting those important decision-making and consultative functions at the provincial and regional level. On the contrary, I applaud this move. I would hope that Members from the Opposition would at least recognize that this is a step forward and has many benefits. It will help us here in Ottawa to determine what our local and national priorities are but more particularly it will help the people in the regions to make their views known.

Another aspect is to replace the general development agreements with new agreements called economic and regional development agreements. These new agreements, to be entered into with each of the Provinces, is another attempt by a federal Government to demonstrate our respect for provincial and regional economic priorities. We feel the way to work these out is in co-operation and consultation with the various regions. My Minister has already entered into extensive consultations with six Provinces. Others are slated for the future.

Another concern I have heard expressed is that we no longer have a regional fund available to devote to priorities as determined by the particular regions and in the particular regions. Let me refute this very strongly. For example, in Atlantic Canada in 1981-1982 the amount of funds committed was $155.9 million. This year, 1982-1983, under the new system we are devoting $214 million, a large increase. Comparable figures for Quebec are rising from $98 million to $124 million; for Ontario, from $33 million to $40 million; and for western Canada, from $94 million to $101 million.

• (1210)

The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre told us that he resented the increases in the funding we are making available. I hope he has the courage to visit the particular regions which have been benefiting and to tell them that we are wrong to be setting an economic priority on their particular development needs.

I do not regret the fact that we are undertaking these initiatives in consultation, co-operation and on a co-ordinating basis with the regions and the Provinces. We will be able to parallel our regional incentives programs with those of the provincial Governments. Is that not the way it should be done? There is no reason that these programs should be in conflict. Surely the interests of the Provinces are our interests when it comes to this type of economic development.

Another aspect which the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre criticized was the fact that we allocated $75 million this year, and at least that many dollars in succeeding fiscal years, to target specifically on DREE-style projects that involve multi-sectoral planning in particular regions. This fund of $75 million will not be subject to the arbitrary whim of the Government because we have set criteria for it. Those criteria are public and the allocation of the funds will be public. They will go—and we have stated this specifically—only to the poorest regions in Canada. The purpose is to give them projects to help them create infrastructure which will aid them in recovery. They will be applied on a graduated four-tier scale basis aimed selectively at particular sub-regions which need them most. We will be able to use these funds to lever and buttress the efforts of the private sector to bring about development. Surely this is the best way to create lasting jobs; surely this is the best way to give people the skills to use the resources of the private sector and work in co-operation with it.

All the changes I have mentioned are, to my way of thinking and certainly to the Government's way of thinking, positive moves in an attempt to deal with the difficult problems we face in Canada today. In addition to these funds, the new system of consultation, the new system of respecting local needs, the new delivery mechanism and consultation method through federal economic development co-ordinators in each region, Canadians should not overlook the fact that we have a system of equalization and economic opportunity in Canada that has been worked out over many years but which I think is a very noble, worth-while and effective approach. It is one in which the six poorest Provinces in Canada receive federal transfers from all taxpayers to bring their standard of living up from between 57 per cent and 79 per cent of the national average to between 90 per cent and 99 per cent of the national average. This is the essence of what Canada stands for—co-operation and sharing. This is something of which we as Canadians can be extremely proud. It is a right and a principle we find enshrined in our new Constitution.

[Translation]

Finally, I would like to say that what we are proposing in the legislation before the House should increase our ability to serve Canada's regions and Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the proceedings today. I do not wish to detract from the opportunity to ask questions of the Hon. Member for Willowdale, (Mr. Peterson), but I would like to point out that there could be a dress or undress problem in the House today. I know there is very little in the records dealing with Hon. Members wearing short sleeves in the House of Commons, but there is a definite reference in Beauchesne to the "conservative, contemporary standards" of dress which are acceptable in the House. Also I draw attention of the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke to some of the debates on dress which have taken place in the House. It would be a sad day when the House of Commons accepts short sleeves—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member referring to the Hon. Member for Kootenay West or the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke?

Mr. Domm: Perhaps I made an error. It is Kootenay East-Revelstoke, is that not right?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No.

Mr. Domm: I apologize to the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker). I am referring to the dress of the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen). This question has arisen in the House of Commons and appeared in Hansard a long time ago. The Speaker at the time said that he would be sorry to see Canada resort to making our policies in short sleeves, referring to the business of the House of Commons. I realize there is a fine distinction between dress and undress—

Miss Jewett: I protest.

Mr. Domm: —but I think we would be treading on rather thin ice if we adopted a policy in the House of Commons which allowed Hon. Members of Parliament to attend in short sleeves while debating issues in the House.

Mr. Epp: What about Flora?

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I am referring to a male Member. I realize there is a distinction between men and women in the House. I would like to refer to citation 244 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads:

> The Standing Orders of the House are virtually silent on the subject of Members' dress. S.O. 28 requires that a Member who wishes to speak must rise in his place uncovered. While the wearing of hats in the Chamber has a respectable historical tradition, Speakers in recent years have frowned on unorthodox headgear. Beyond this, Speakers have enforced conservative, contemporary standards in the House.

I suggest with all due respect that a short-sleeved safari shirt or jacket over top of another shirt is hardly considered to be "conservative, contemporary standards" in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Peterborough raises a matter which is not easily resolved by the Chair. The Chair prefers, if possible, to ask Hon. Members to use their own good judgment, according to their own conscience, on contemporary standards of good taste in the House. I note the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) came into the Chamber in the attire described—and the Chair would not attempt to be more precise—but I also note that the Hon. Member subsequently entered the House with a more conventional jacket. I have no further observation to make.

Mr. Lambert: They are still short sleeves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I feel the point concerning dress has been made. In the interests of the debate and in the interests of Hon. Members, the Chair would like to put an end to the discussion by simply stating that the Chair hopes Hon. Members will at all times observe contemporary standards of good taste in their dress.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I certainly accept your comments in the spirit in which I believe you made them. I would like to correct the record by stating that I happen to be dressed in exactly the same way as I was when I entered the Chamber earlier. Mr. Speaker may not have perceived that; anyone can make a mistake. As to the matter of sexual equality, I would not deign to show my knees in the House, but I certainly think my elbows are as attractive as those of the other gender. I do not see a problem. Apart from that, it is well past the time that we in the House rolled up our sleeves and did some work.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) regarding the tier system about which he talked and how it relates to regional economic development. I am quite concerned that different tiers can occur within different areas of a Province, but I think there is some inconsistency in terms of establishing on what tier a certain area is.

● (1220)

The area that I represent, The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, is on a lower tier of that four-tier level. If the tiers are based on need and the highest tiers have the highest needs, they therefore get the first preference on funds, grants and economic development. As the Hon. Member is the "buddy" Liberal Member for The Battleford-Meadow Lake, he knows that unemployment and economic development is in a very sad state in the northern part of Saskatchewan, especially from Meadow Lake north. In fact, some communities there have in excess of 90 per cent unemployment.

I want to ask whether there is some way of reassessing the tiers and whether they can be re-evaluated. A certain area may have inadvertently been put on a lower tier than it should be. Can that be reviewed and reassessed to a higher tier level?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to receive the representations of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). Having a very specific and close interest in his riding and the good people of that riding, I will certainly undertake to work in a constructive way to ensure that their needs within the over-all priorities are respected.

I look forward to the opportunity of co-operating with him to ensure that the tier system and the approach we are taking of implementing our programs will be effective. I very much welcome his question and his representation on increased collaboration and co-operation in this area.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister. As the Parliamentary Secretary knows, there were other elements of his speech which I found interesting and, of course, some which I found controversial. I will not get into the elimination of DREE, which is really the heart of the Bill before us in terms of reorganization. There are many aspects to it, such as the external affairs merging with the trade aspect. In effect, there is the elimination of DREE. The real question that concerns many people in Atlantic Canada is how attention will be focused on regional problems with the elimination of departments set up to study and resolve them.

My question is not on that broad issue. It is about the element in the Bill that will allow senators to become parliamentary secretaries. I want to ask this Parliament Secretary what justification, under the greatest parliamentary interpretation, is there to have senators become parliamentary secretaries under this Bill? This Member is not a bad Parliamentary Secretary, as far as that goes. Will he use the intellectual acumen that he sometimes displays, stand up in the House and say that the reason this reorganization Bill will allow senators to become parliamentary secretaries, which is almost a contradiction in terms, is that there are no Members on the other side of the House who have the ability, acumen or competence to be such creatures?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have two comments. First, I will take the Hon. Member's comments as a repesentation that he would very much like an appointment to the Senate. I, along with all Members of this House, have been very impressed with many of the representations he has made in the past. We look forward to long service on behalf of the people of Canada from this Member in whatever House.

I want to respond to the preamble in which the Hon. Member indicated that the abolition of DREE will not enable the Government and the people of Canada to focus on regional economic development concerns. I make the following points.

Yes, we have eliminated that one ministry, but we have created a new ministry to replace it. The new ministry replacing it is the one headed by the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston). In that capacity, he will not be working alone; he will be using his role as chairman of the economic and regional development committee of Cabinet to co-ordinate the efforts of all the Ministers who have an economic portfolio. In this way regional development needs will become priorities. There will not be as in the past just one Minister, but many Ministers plus a whole Cabinet committee, plus the ministry itself.

What we have done is augment Cabinet's capacity to deal with the specific issues in the regions, including the region the Hon. Member is particularly concerned with, Atlantic Canada. Second, we have given increased funding to deal with these areas. Third, we have a new mechanism so that decisions are not made on all of these projects here in Ottawa.

We have very strong co-ordinators in each of the regions and Provinces so that we will be closer to the people, closer to small business, closer to provincial needs as determined by the provincial Governments. We will be closer to the people who have the input to make.

Mr. Nowlan: What about the parliamentary secretaries?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he feels that in the last 20 years there has been a substantial playing of musical chairs with, among others, DREE. In 1964 we saw the coming forward of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as the logical spin-off from Trade and Commerce. Ultimately we saw the development of DREE as a full Department. I trust the Parliamentary Secretary will note the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been poured into various regions of the country with, admittedly on his own remarks this morning, little or no effect. He claims that we still have a real problem in Canada.

Will the Parliamentary Secretary tell me how this new section of a Department with provincial commissioners replacing former provincial directors, who allegedly were to work with the provincial Governments, will improve the situation? Will we not see a continuation of the pouring of hundreds of millions of dollars into bottomless wells?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, in responding to the concerns of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), it would be irresponsible for me to claim that every bit of federal money spent in a particular region will produce the benefits that all of us would hope. We are human beings. Just because there is that challenge, it does not mean that we should give up our efforts of trying to maximize the return to all taxpayers, particularly to those in the region affected, those who want the jobs, those who are looking to the projects that we, in co-operation with other groups fund in order to build a better economic infrastructure.

The prospect of failure should not deter us. Rather, as the Hon. Member is suggesting, it is something that requires mechanisms to try to minimize the possibility of failure. This is why I believe that the new system with the federal economic commissioners in the region, working with the people on the spot who best know the priorities, difficulties and concerns, in consultation not only with the provincial Governments and among the federal Departments but with the private sector, with citizens and businesses in that particular area, will minimize those situations in which the return is not exactly what we would hope.

Lastly, and I think this is important, in the last year of operation DREE has a budget of $680 million. This represented only 8.8 per cent of the federal Government's total economic development spending of about $7.7 billion. With this approach, we are not only enhancing the mechanism to ensure that the Hon. Member's concerns are met, but we are also increasing in hard dollars our commitment to our concern for the people in those regions.

• (1230)

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. I appreciate the excellent comments that have been made by all of my colleagues who have preceded me.

The division of DREE into two parts and its burial in two other departments of Government is not a matter for rejoicing in the areas of Canada that suffer most from problems of regional disparity. With the passage of this Bill, the Government's commitment to addressing the problems of regional disparities will reach an all-time low because there will be no one department of Government with a mandate to attack the problems of regional disparity as differentiated from national development.

In economic development there are federal responsibilities, provincial responsibilities and shared responsibilities. The provincial Governments in the wealthier Provinces are better able to discharge their responsibilities than are Governments of less wealthy Provinces. The general development Agreement recognized this and provided for assistance from the federal Government to less wealthy Provinces in order to help them in their development efforts. The weakness of the general development agreement was that it did not provide for the integration of programs in the area of federal jurisdiction into the total development effort of the Province.

Divided responsibility for economic development should be recognized and the need to co-ordinate federal and provincial efforts should also be recognized so that all development activity is oriented to the achievement of common objectives. The federal Government should have a primary interest in regional economic development since it is only through an effective federal regional development effort that Canadians in all parts of the country can achieve reasonably similar employment and income levels.

Also, in the less wealthy Provinces it is only with federal Government assistance that smaller areas of high unemployment and low income can move toward national standards. In addition, the achievement of these goals can mean the reduction of transfer payments and real savings to Canadian taxpayers.

DREE followed a sound strategy when it focused on growth centres within depressed regions, but in later years it has signalled a departure from the practice of building on strengths. A classic example of this occurred in New Brunswick where the Fredericton-Saint John-Moncton triangle was excluded from the 50 per cent tax investment credit. This scattergun kind of approach is inefficient and unreliable. It may involve heavy expenditure on infrastructure and incentives only to have the subject collapse or require permanent subsidization because of conditions in a particular industry or company. Almost inevitably, moreover, the case by case approach ignores provincial planning and priorities. It is not surprising that DREE's greatest success has occurred under the auspices of the general development agreements.

The decision of the Government to allow existing general development agreements and the subsidiary agreements under the umbrella provisions of the GDA's to expire on termination is indeed regrettable. Last year in New Brunswick all of these agreements had expired except one, and that agreement has either expired very recently or is just about to expire. Its replacement is not in effect, and during the budget speech of the New Brunswick Legislature the Premier of New Brunswick underscored the great difficulty he and his departments have had in developing a new framework agreement.

Nothing could be simpler than the general development agreements themselves and nothing could be more appropriate to the needs of the areas being served by the subsidiary agreements than those agreements which in fact are the product of negotiation by the two levels of Government involved. To replace DREE in part with the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development and require it to inflict a developmental dimension on other departments of Government is to ask a fly to chase an elephant.

The fanfare that preceded MSERD is a lot of bureaucratic jargon. Unless the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) personally heads up MSERD and unless he personally leads the attack on regional disparity, line departments of Government in times of restraint have not, and bureaucrats will not, accept any challenge other than the bare bones responsibilities of their departments of Government which now exist.

The absence of a single department or Minister exclusively committed to regional development does not augur well. The mandate to foster development in all regions is doubletalk. It is the negation of a concerted attack on regional disparity. In that sense it can truly be said that MSERD is absurd. The reference to regions in which opportunities for productive employment are exceptionally inadequate is hopelessly vague, and in any case, it appears last among the Minister's principal duties. There is no assurance that the Special Areas Act will priorize genuinely regional as opposed to local underdevelopment.

The principle that all Government departments will be sensitive to regional needs is fine in theory and particularly appropriate now that regional equality is a goal enshrined in the Constitution, but it is meaningless without a specific designation of responsibility within each department. We have strong evidence that the opposite is likely to occur.

An obvious priority for regional development is the identification of possible foreign markets and the establishment of contact with potential foreign joint investors who already have their own market contacts. Yet that portion of the old Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce with international expertise is now going to External Affairs, which is not likely to give much attention to the needs of the Atlantic region per se unless specifically directed.

Moreover, it is clear that the Government has less determination than ever to co-ordinate its initiatives with those of the Provinces. It still has no designated successor to the general development agreements in place across Canada despite the fact that the Department has been in existence for over a year and that the ones completed are not an improvement over the ones which they have replaced. It proposes a regional development fund which invites a political and bureaucratic free for all; a search for sure winners rather than a consistent long-term policy.

The removal of the New Brunswick development office out of the capital city of that Province is a totally gratuitous slap at the ideal of intergovernmental co-ordination. The fact is that economic development in the Atlantic region can occur only when its unique conditions and opportunities are the central focus of policymakers. For example, it is clear that successful enterprises will be medium to small in size and that the most promising new manufacturing opportunities are related to technological changes in its own major primary industries.

There is no reason the Atlantic region should not be internationally competitive in the manufacture of fisheries hardware and marine equipment or a leading innovator in the use of marine resources. There are regions in the world with far less capacity for growth which nevertheless exceed our own accomplishments; the difference is that the development of their potential is a political priority.

Where in this legislation is the impetus for more policy specialization in unique regional circumstances? Nowhere, I fear. In its mad march to win political points and have the federal Government do its own compact piece of work so that all can look at it in wonder, the federal Government has made one basic mistake. Its industrial development program relies almost entirely on resources within provincial jurisdiction. The consultative process is mandatory and important. It is not taking place.

● (1240)

Let me say a word about the federal Government's quest for more credit and visibility in the regional development projects it supports. Within reason this is legitimate but I fear it has become almost an indecent obsession. Clearly, this is a primary motive for the disengagement from general development and subsidiary agreements, even those that have proven their effectiveness. The Senate committee, its Liberal majority included, has concluded that there are very few circumstances where it is best for the federal Government to fly alone, but fly alone is now its primary policy.

What is the source of this obsession? Have the Leaders of the Government developed such a siege mentality in their war with Quebec separatists that they think Canadians will be loyal to the national state only if they are beholden to the federal Government? Is every provincial Government that steals a little more credit than it should working for the break-up of Canada? The Bill will give the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), as the nominal ringmaster of the circus called the Cabinet Economic Development Committee and keeper of the mysterious Regional Development Fund, the legislative power to create a bureaucrat's dream. The federal Government will be able to reset provincial priorities through the powers of the purse and get all the credit for the moneys spent in the region to boot. It will also bear the responsibility and reap the whirlwind.

It may well be that political will rather than the structure of the Government will determine the success of regional development policies, but it does not appear to me as if the proposed changes can accommodate priorities like the following for the Atlantic region.

First, in concert with the provincial Governments, a new emphasis on managerial and manpower training and research and development geared specifically to viable small industries to enable them to compete in national and international markets.

Second, financial incentives for such viable enterprises wherever they can be best located within the region. In other words, treat the region as a region and the provincial communities as communities.

Third, immediate reform of Government purchasing practices, not to favour the inefficient, but to counteract systematic discrimination against smaller and more distant firms.

Fourth, immediate action to identify and seize ocean and marine related manufacturing opportunities where the Atlantic region can become internationally competitive.

I believe this Bill should be amended to define "Underdeveloped region" in terms of its provincial context, to specifically require the Minister to co-ordinate and report to Parliament on the attention being focused by all Government departments on regional underdevelopment and to restore the Government's obligation and mandate to enter into general development and subsidiary agreements with the Provinces.

Hard times have brought us to the end of an illusion that dependency is a satisfactory answer to regional disparity. Not only is it futile, it is defeatist. It assumes that Canada's least affluent region, the Atlantic Provinces, has no real future, that it lacks the resources and the opportunity to establish greater self-sufficiency.

The fact is that modern communications and other technology development provide the opportunity to overcome the large locational disadvantage from which the Atlantic region has suffered for much of the last century. If the Government of Canada does not act now it will be because of the political weakness of the region, a simple but tragic numbers game. Such an attitude would make a mockery of the Government's claim to be committed to national unity and to regional development. I would like to think its intentions are higher, but I do not see it in Bill C-152.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members who are seeking to ask questions? The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I should like to agree with a few of the remarks of the previous speaker. Coming from northern Manitoba, one of the underdeveloped regions of Canada, I agree that the death of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is bad news for people in the underdeveloped areas. I also agree with the Hon. Member's remarks regarding the decision of the Liberal Government not to renew the general development agreements and the subsidiary agreements. One of those was the Northern Development Agreement in northern Manitoba. We were lucky to beat the Liberal deadline and have a new agreement in place worth $186 million to the region over the next five years. The death of that type of agreement is bad news for every part of Canada where there is an underdeveloped region.

The critic for the Conservative Party, who spoke earlier did not speak about regional development and did not talk about special programs for the underdeveloped areas. I should like to ask the Member who just spoke what the Tory position is. Is that Party saying it will reinstitute the Department of Regional Economic Expansion? Is the Hon. Member saying that a Conservative Government would reinstitute general development agreements?

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Hon. Member for his kind comments. Policy is an ongoing, developmental process within this Party. The last words spoken on this matter were spoken by our former Leader in Halifax, Nova Scotia, I believe, when he said that the Party's position was that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would be reinstated. It is difficult to foresee the future but I anticipate that carries with it the general development agreements and matters of that nature.

There is a very real position in development for grants, contributions, loans, guarantees, loan guarantees and tax incentives. I have spoken twice in the House on tax incentives for expenditures for capital and for labour. I think that programs of this nature are extremely important.

Another attractive program that I would mention is the DISC program that operates in the United States. That would be an interesting program for us to consider. It is essentially a free trading area for our great ports along the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard that would enable us to operate assembly plants, to import, without tariff charge, goods made by developing nations of the world and to include Canadian technology and Canadian content in order to help regain some of the world markets we have lost in the last few years. Development of this type of port in the Atlantic Provinces, for example, would be a great incentive to our export trade and would enable us to put more Canadians to work in those Provinces.

I think the jobs would be permanent and that they would expand as our Canadian technology continues to grow. In some areas this is the best in the world.

I appreciate the contribution made by the Hon. Member and I thank him for it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A short supplementary question by the Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Yes, I have a very short supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member spoke about the position his former Leader took when he spoke in Halifax. I wonder if the new Member of the House, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), spoke about DREE and the general development agreements during the recent by-election and, if so, what he said?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is hardly a short supplementary. Does the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) care to comment?

Mr. Howie: I think that I essentially answered the Hon. Member's question when I spoke before. I cannot recall everything that was said during the by-election in Central Nova. As a matter of fact, the by-election was not very well reported in my area of New Brunswick. I read the papers and saw that some 11 Cabinet Ministers went down to help elect a Conservative as the Hon. Member for Central Nova. They were very successful.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member could clarify something. In answer to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), I thought he inferred that under this Bill the reorganization would do away with general development agreements. Did I understand him clearly to interpret the reorganization as suggesting that no more general development agreements would be signed? Is that his position?

• (1250)

Mr. Howie: The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) has correctly interpreted my interpretation of the Bill. I raised the matter with the Minister at the MSERD committee. The Minister indicated he had a schedule to develop new framework agreements, the nature of which he was not able to explain to me, which will replace the general development agreements. The general development agreements have for the most part lapsed. All of the subsidiary agreements in New Brunswick have now lapsed.

During the recent debate on the budget legislation the Premiers indicated they had great difficulty developing a new agreement with the Minister. Being a senior member in the Government department and very responsive to the needs of New Brunswick I hope the Hon. Member will join with me in urging the Minister responsible for economic and regional development to proceed with all due haste to try to put in place some new development agreements to replace the ones which have lapsed in New Brunswick.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I did not ask the Hon. Member what he had or had not talked about with a Minister. Could he show me in this Bill where he sees any change in the statutory position of general development agreements? Could he show me in this Bill where there is anything said which would change the status legally or otherwise of general development agreements?

Further, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member will correct the misinformation which he just gave us, I am sure unintentionally, that all of the subsidiary agreements under the GDA in New Brunswick had lapsed. There is at least one agreement which has not lapsed and which is continuing. There are negotiations on at least three others which are still going on. There has been no decision by anyone, to my knowledge, and I follow this very closely, that there will not be a new general development agreement signed for New Brunswick.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to follow the Hon. Member's question, but I will try to clarify my remarks for him. This Bill abolishes the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which has been the only Department of Government dedicated to the development of regions in the country which suffer from problems related to disparity. Second, it buries the Department and splits it in two. The operative part of the Department now goes to DRIE and the part which dealt with general development agreements, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development, is now a new Department.

The policy announced by the Minister in the new Department is that he is going to let general development agreements die. They have died. They are dying. The one in New Brunswick to which the Hon. Member refers has one remaining component. I accept the Hon. Member's statement that one out of more than 18 remains. It will be news to the Hon. Member but it will die also this year. Then there will be none. When they are all gone, there will be none left. What takes its place?

The Premier of New Brunswick says he is having great difficulty negotiating a new agreement to take the place of the general development agreement. I accept that. It is reported in the press. It is in the synoptic reports of the New Brunswick Legislature. We can stand here all day and quibble about when the one subsidiary agreement is going to die. I would choose instead to urge on all Hon. Members who represent New Brunswick—the Hon. Member is the only one on the opposite side of the House here today, in fact the only one from the Maritimes, and I commend him for his attention and interest—that what we must do is stop playing silly games, get this Minister off his butt and down to New Brunswick to get a new agreement with Richard Hatfield so we can do something for that Province.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I know there are problems in developing a new general development agreement in New Brunswick, but the Hon. Member should know that one of the reasons is that since his last provincial election the Premier has not seen fit, nor his government, to allocate any money for regional development.

My question did not deal with the statutory base of DREE. I was asking the Hon. Member a very clear question. Where does he see in this Bill the statutory base or the statutory position of the general development agreements change? They are not affected at all by this Bill, so the Hon. Member should stop confusing the issues. I would like the Hon. Member to show me where they are changed and if not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked this question before and I have tried very hard to answer it. The abolition of DREE is accomplished in this Bill and a new department, one of the purposes of which will be to deal with the subject of general development agreements, is created. The Minister of that department has indicated that general development agreements will die. Facts are facts. I believe we must stop playing games with words and recognize the fact that general development agreements as we have known them are done. Let us take it from there and instead of playing silly word games, let us get on with the business of building Canada and building our regions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt but the period allotted to questions and answers has expired. The Chair calls to the attention of Hon. Members at this point that the next speaker to be recognized will be the last having a limit of 20 minutes with a 10-minute question and answer period. Subsequent speakers will be limited to ten minutes only.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I see by the clock we are fast approaching the luncheon recess. However, it is a privilege and a pleasure for me to make some remarks on this Bill which is of great importance to a great many of our areas, if not all of them.

I have had the privilege of being member of the committee on DREE for a number of years now and, of course, have questioned many Ministers who have held that portfolio. DREE, I believe, was instituted first, Mr. Speaker, back in 1969. As an Hon. Member representing the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, which, I must say, is not in the highest economic bracket across this great Dominion of Canada—I still say that, although I see smiles from some of my colleagues—I have no doubt that DREE has in the past contributed directly to the disadvantaged areas. I am one of those who share considerable concern at the doing away with DREE in itself as a regular department, and in spite of the wonderful statements made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) this spring and later that it is going to be much better, well, I am from Missouri and am looking forward to seeing the concrete proposals which will be made.

In the past, and again in my particular area, I have been put in a tough spot because half my riding is eligible for DREE, that is, the territorial district of Parry Sound, and the other part of my riding, the regional municipality of Muskoka, has not been eligible. Of course, when you come to that boundary, that borderline, I am going to tell you that the haves and the have-nots take a very dim view of it. However, under this new set-up and tier system, the District of Parry Sound is in territory three which, from reports, will be provided grants which may even be slightly higher. The regional municipality of Muskoka goes into a lower tier but at least will be eligible for capital grants and for other advantages which they were denied before.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, they take a jaundiced view. The mayors of the various municipalities and the regional municipality of Muskoka and, of course, their industrial commissioners feel they have been left out in the cold for a very long period of time and, therefore, should have their place in the sun at the same percentage or on the same tier as the district of Parry Sound. I have assured them that at least they have their toe in the door and they are going to get something. Of course, it depends on the economy.

Mr. Speaker, I see it is one o'clock, so may I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

* * *

NEW MEMBERS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Chief Electoral Officer certificates of the election and return of the following members:

Of Mr. Brian Mulroney, for the electoral district of Central Nova.

Of Mr. Gerry St. Germain, for the electoral district of Mission-Port Moody.

* * *

NEW MEMBERS INTRODUCED

Brian Mulroney, Member for electoral district of Central Nova, introduced by Hon. Erik Nielsen and Hon. George Hees.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Gerry St. Germain, Member for the electoral district of Mission-Port Moody, introduced by Mr. Brian Mulroney and Mr. Chuck Cook.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

WELCOME TO NEW PAGES

Madam Speaker: I also wish to welcome our new group of pages who are commencing their duties today in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Madam Speaker: The House has already applauded the pages who are beginning service today in the House of Commons for the entire year. We hope with all our hearts that they have a good year among us and that they learn a lot from all of us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

● (1410)

[Translation]

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —as you see, a spirit of benevolence pervades the House today. Perhaps you will allow me to say a few words, in addition to the welcome extended from this side of the House to the new Leader of the Opposition. I would like to address a special word of welcome to the two new Members who have just joined the House. I am told that the Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) is perfectly bilingual. Madam Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that, in this House, all Members are on an equal footing and that we on this side intend to be as attentive to his words as to those of the other Hon. Member who has just joined our ranks.

I would like to say a very special word of welcome to the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). I would like to congratulate him on the duties he will be taking up at York University. However, I hope that his responsibilities there will not keep him away from the parliamentary scene, because as emeritus leader his position is a very honourable one and we intend to show him the respect he is due.

[English]

You will understand, Madam Speaker, if I say that, standing in this place, I feel a little bit that we are witnessing the onslaught of history. When I first came into this Chamber we on this side were faced by a very formidable Leader of the Opposition, the former Member for Prince Albert, the Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker. But he stood alone as leader on the other side.

On the other hand, very soon after I stood in this place, I was faced by the Leader of the Opposition who was then Mr. Stanfield. But he was flanked by his former leader, the Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker. It then came the turn of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) to lead his Party. He was flanked not by one but by two former leaders, Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. Stanfield, who stood by his side to assist him.

Now, as we see the Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) take on his duties as Leader of the Opposition, he is not only flanked by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead but also by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who was interim Leader of the Opposition. I dare say there is a third leader—at least his ghost is still in this place and we feel it often—the former Member for Prince Albert who, I am sure, will be here to assist the Hon. Member for Central Nova.

We are very happy to welcome the Hon. Member for Central Nova. I am sure he will forgive us if we say that we have even greater pleasure at the presence in the gallery of Mrs. Mulroney.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member for Central Nova has come a long way from that log cabin in Pictou County. I see that he has put away his rumpled trousers and old sweaters, to be brought out again at the next election. In the meantime it is nice for us in this Chamber to be able to bask in the glow, in the benign smile, of a man who sent such shivers of pleasure down the spines of the matrons all the way from Oyster Pond to Mushaboo.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I can assure him that we on this side of the House will endeavour to be every bit as helpful to him as we have to his many predecessors.

[Translation]

As the great André Siegfried said, if you want to harm someone, too much praise is more effective than criticism. In fact, Madam Speaker, I think there is a Machiavellian plot afoot among members of the Press Gallery who seem to be out to destroy in this way the new Leader of the Opposition—he can count on us to render the plot ineffective. We are certainly not going to praise him excessively, because he is faced with a difficult and a historic task as leader of a party that has played a major role in the history of this country, and he ought to realize that the task that lies ahead will be a difficult one. I want him to know that we wish him the very best.

[English]

I also want to congratulate the members of the shadow Cabinet. I think it is fair to say that never has a more vaporous group of shadows ennobled this place.

This has been an occasion to talk about the man rather than the policies, so he will understand that I have gone on a little longer than otherwise would have been possible.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that we all wish him good luck, good health and, as they say in show business, "break a leg".

[Translation]

In French, the traditional expression is the "mot de Cambronne".

[English]

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in this world of constant flux I am glad to see that there are certain constants. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has maintained his usual gracious and congenial disposition in welcoming the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Before I add my few words of welcome to the new Leader of the Conservative Party, I too would like to join with the Prime Minister in expressing the good wishes of my colleagues to the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), who is now teaching back at my old alma mater, York University—and right away I have written a warning note to all the students there not to pay too close attention. Quite seriously, though, I want to say that we do hope the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead will continue to bring his concerns about the well being of our country to this important Chamber so that we will benefit from his views.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I think the new Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) will understand that in welcoming him I have several reasons for not elaborating on the point. Again most seriously, however, I do welcome him to the House on behalf of my colleagues and I am sure he will understand my comment when I say that I hope his stay will not be too long.

I now want to turn to the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) to say that when he has been in Chamber for some time—we do not know for how long—he will know that he should not expect again the kind of greeting that he received from all sides today. I suspect this is a one and only shot, especially for a leader of a political party. But we do welcome him and wish him well in his personal concerns and in his activities in this Chamber.

● (1420)

I have noted, and for some time knew, that the Member for Central Nova was not only a working colleague but rather close to one of our former leaders in the Province of Quebec, Robert Cliche, an old friend of mine, a distinguished Quebecois and a distinguished Canadian.

I look forward to the days ahead in this Chamber, hopefully even today, when the Member for Central Nova will be just a wee bit more specific on some of his policy orientations. No doubt because of the little publicity he has had in recent weeks we have not had a detailed provision of his policy positions, but when he does reveal them I hope we will begin to note the impact on his life of Robert Cliche. I shall watch with interest.

[Translation]

And once more, I would like to say, very sincerely, as they say in Baie Comeau, bienvenue, bonne chance, but perhaps not too much of the latter!

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, first of all I wish to thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for his gracious and cordial remarks. There may have been some minor political differences between us in the past, as there certainly will be in the future, but nevertheless, I have always recognized that the Right Hon. Prime Minister is a man of great distinction, and I wish to offer him my sincere thanks for his warm welcome here today.

[English]

The Prime Minister has always been a man of great accomplishment and distinction. I was honoured by the thoughtfulness and the generosity of his words today. I wait with bated breath for tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Leader of the Opposition

Mr. Mulroney: But I want particularly to welcome the Prime Minister back from Greece, and the Cabinet back from Central Nova.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I want you to know, Prime Minister, that during the summer, while you were otherwise occupied, it was a very pleasant summer for me. There was one untoward incident, only one. The Liberal candidate in Central Nova persistently referred to a candidate from Quebec who did not live in his riding but lived in a million dollar house rent free, and I defended you, Sir, regularly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I rose to your defence with an alacrity that surprised even me.

I was also delighted and interested to read in the weekend press, Madam Speaker, the fact that the Prime Minister announced he is not a quitter. I want you to know, Sir, that we are behind you all the way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And I say "Hang in there", notwithstanding the urgings to the contrary from some people over there. This Party, and I am sure the New Democratic Party, stands united on at least that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I am delighted as well in having an opportunity of representing Central Nova to be so close to my old friend, the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: It is not a widely known fact—

[Translation]

—but I would like to mention it because it is quite an interesting phenomenon and one of the subjects I am really delighted to raise in the House today—

[English]

—that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Prime Minister and I, all hold degrees from St. F.X. University, and I should point out that the President of St. F.X. is here today. On behalf of the Prime Minister and myself we want to say we did not study economics at St. F.X. under the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I only mention that because the Prime Minister asked me to.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, imagine my surprise and, in fact, my delight, at seeing before me, in the House today, the smiling face of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Before I left Ottawa for my riding in Nova Scotia, I thought that considering the tremendous and increasing popularity of the Minister in Quebec, he would have been drafted for the leadership of the Quebec Liberal Party. I am truly delighted to see that he turned down a Quebec draft, to stay in our midst. That is really good news.

[English]

I want to say a word of thanks as well to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). Indeed, on many occasions the Hon. Judge Robert Cliche, a truly great Canadian, spoke well and eloquently with regard to the qualities of the Hon. Member, and with good reason. Judgment, as Robert Cliche used to say, was always so important. I want you to know that we Nova Scotians appreciate your judgment, Sir, in taking your caucus down to Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It did my heart good to see the socialists spending $90 and $95 a day, and then, Prime Minister, they have the temerity to say things are not going well!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Dear friends and colleagues, Madam Speaker, I know this is a very unusual day, at least for me, but I sincerely wish to thank everyone for the warm and cordial welcome I was given here today.

[English]

My thanks to all of you for your kindness and generiosity. I will try, given the magnificent example set by my predecessor, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), to serve this House and to serve you with honour and distinction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DOCTOR BAL RAM JAKHAR, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA

Madam Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of the House the presence in our gallery today of Dr. Bal Ram Jakhar, who is the Speaker of the House of the People of India.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Just in case the enthusiasm of people who are in the galleries continues, I must remind them that they are not allowed to applaud or to manifest in any way.

I suppose we have passed the time at which we can have Statements by Members. I will immediately go to Question Period.

Mr. Benjamin: Why?

Madam Speaker: The Standing Orders are quite clear.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): With consent.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lalonde: No.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree that we go to Statements by Members?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

● (1430)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR RELATIVES OF VICTIMS IN DOWNED KOREAN AIRLINER

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my first question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

[English]

As the Sea of Japan continues to give up the dead, a result of the recent tragic and terrible international incident, ten Canadians having been killed, could the Prime Minister inform the House and the people of Canada as to the action he has initiated to ensure that massive and exemplary damages are secured on behalf of the grieving families, in the interest of the Canadian people?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, in reply to the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition, I should begin by expressing the deep sympathy of Canadians to the bereaved families of the Canadians who were so tragically killed in an unjustified act of murder by the Soviet airfighter.

We have, as part of our response to this grave incident, conveyed a note to the Soviet Embassy indicating that we would be presenting a claim for compensation. That note was delivered both in Ottawa and in Moscow, and we are currently preparing further steps to support that particular effort to secure compensation. That effort will be pursued not only bilaterally but also with the United Nations and at the upcoming meeting of the International Civil Aviation Organization to be held in Montreal later this week. That effort to secure compensation will be joined by other aggrieved parties, of which Canada is one, including the United States and South Korea.

SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS VISITING SOVIET UNION

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the Prime Minister inform the House, given the fact that so many hundreds of Canadians are presently in the Soviet Union, and given the impact of the commercial air blockade which will be launched against the Soviet Union, of what action he has taken to ensure the safety of all Canadians presently in the Soviet Union, and what contingency plans he may have in regard to transportation when urgently required by them?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think that is a very good question. Since we terminated the regular scheduled Aeroflot flights between Moscow and Mirabel, the fate of Canadians who would normally have travelled back to Canada by these Aeroflot flights has been a worry and a concern. We have extended all assistance to these Canadians, and where they will make other arrangements, as they must, to return to Canada with other airlines, we will assist them financially so that they will not be out of pocket because of this particular incident.

Up to the present there has been no danger whatsoever to these Canadians, and the authorities in Moscow up to the present have co-operated to ensure that they will be able to return to Canada by other methods.

CONTENTS OF DIPLOMATIC NOTE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who indicated to the House that a note securing, hopefully, compensation for the victims of this tragic incident has been delivered in Ottawa and in Moscow. Would the Minister be good enough to table the note so that all Canadians know exactly its terms and what is being sought on behalf of the survivors of these victims?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not think it is normal practice to table these international exchanges, but there is something that I can tell the Hon. Member at the present time, namely, that we indicated to the Soviet Union that we had proposed to establish a claim against the Soviet Union arising from the airliner incident. We have not put any quantification on that claim up to the present time. That is a very difficult thing to do and a rather offensive, in a sense, or unpalatable thing to do when human life is involved. But it has to be done, and we will be undertaking consultations and discussions with family members before we will make a lump sum demand upon the Soviet Union. We intend to do that, and we know that that will be done by other countries as well.

I believe it will take some time and considerable effort to secure results because of the unsatisfactory attitude which the Government of the Soviet Union has taken as a result of this particular incident.

Mr. Stevens: As the House knows, the Minister referred to the contents of the note, and as a rule it is taken for granted that the tabling of the note will be forthcoming.

APPLICATION OF CANADIAN-SOVIET PROTOCOL ON CONSULTATIONS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my second question to the Prime Minister who will recall that on May 19, 1971, he signed a Canadian-Soviet Protocol on Consultations with the Government of the U.S.S.R. in which was included Clause 2 that seems to contemplate the type of incident that has occurred. It indicates that, without delay, there shall be an exchange of views between the two countries on what might be done to improve the situation. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether any steps have been taken under the provisions of that protocol with respect to consultation with the Soviets to determine what in fact transpired, and why the incident occurred?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the then Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of State for External Relations, in the very first gesture of response by this Government asked the Soviet chargé d'affaires precisely to embark upon consultations and to explain the circumstances of the tragic happening. The other gestures taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in dealing with Soviet authorities both here and in Moscow have precisely been doing that, asking for consultations, asking for explanations, asking for reparation, and taking some measures of our own.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that obviously these consultations have not been taking place, would the Prime Minister indicate if, in his view, the terms of the agreement have in fact now been broken? Second, would he consider referring this agreement and related agreements to the Standing Committee on External Affairs of the House so that there can be a meaningful review of what exactly, first, the Government of Canada has done with respect to this matter and, second, what the Soviet reply has been?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as the Soviet Union replies from time to time, the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Acting Minister in his place will be happy to inform the House of the exchanges. It is clear from the earlier answers of the Minister that thus far we have not had an explanation which we deem satisfactory, and on the subject of reparations we have not had a satisfactory answer either.

RESPONSIBILITY OF SOVIET UNION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on the same subject. The Soviet Union has taken a long time even to acknowledge responsibility for this barbarous act.

Mr. MacEachen: They have not done that yet.

Mr. Broadbent: The Secretary of State for External Affairs is saying that they have not done it yet. My understanding is that they have acknowledged that they shot down a plane.

My question, to either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, concerns the question of guilt. Could either inform the House as to whether or not the Soviet Union has in any way acknowledged up to this point moral responsibility for this act and, if not, what kind of follow-up action does the Government plan to take to bring forward such acknowledgement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, up to the present the Soviet Union has not accepted moral responsibility for its action; it has not accepted any responsibility. It has clearly evaded accepting any responsibility. It has clearly transferred the entire responsibility for this event on to the shoulders of the Government of the United States. That is one of the most depressing aspects of the Soviet response. Not only have they failed to acknowledge any responsibility, but they have served notice on the world that they will repeat the incident if necessary. I regard that as a very retrograde statement by the Soviet Union in a context when they ought to be acknowledging responsibility and admitting to the world their guilt in this particular instance.

● (1440)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COMPENSATION ISSUE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, it was precisely in the context of the knowledge that we on this side of the House have had up to this moment, that the Soviet Union had not acknowledged its guilt, that I posed the question that I did. I therefore want to ask the Minister another question in this context. Since the Government has demanded compensation and has said to the Soviet Union that it must acknowledge its guilt, but the Minister has told the House the Soviets are not going to do it, what serious expectation does the Minister have that any compensation for the families or relatives of Canadian victims will be forthcoming? If there is no compensation, what does the Government plan to do?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we have embarked upon a process which I think has to be pressed forward very aggressively in the field of civil aviation, and with respect to compensation we have served a notice of claim. Other countries have served a notice of claim. We know that in a previous example where we sought damages from the Soviet Union we waited for two years before we received a response. I do not think they are going to come forward very easily or quickly. However, I think we have to continue to assert aggressively (a) their responsibility and (b) the necessity of compensation, not only in our direct contacts with Soviet officials, but also at the United Nations and at the International Civil Aviation Organization.

We have to ensure that the weight of public opinion worldwide is registered upon the Soviet leadership so that they will respond. As I stated, up to the present time they have not responded adequately or satisfactorily to the wave of indignation that has swept the world. Neither have their explanations been found plausible in the countries of the West.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CALL FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister has referred to the United Nations and to the International Civil Aviation Organization which is meeting in Montreal this week. Does the Government of Canada have any specific proposals that it plans to take either to the United Nations or to the international body that is meeting in Montreal this week, in order to establish some kind of international changes that might at least militate against the possibility of this kind of horrific action ever occurring again?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, we were, I believe, the first country to propose at the United Nations that an impartial investigation be undertaken by the Secretary General into all the allegations and to counter allegations that have been made with respect to this incident. We are still pressing at the United Nations to empower the Secretary General to have an impartial investigation. Likewise we will press at ICAO in Montreal to secure an impartial investigation of all the facts and also to do what the Hon. Member suggests as a reasonable objective. I think it is an overwhelmingly important objective, namely, to ensure that in the future the rules of international law will be observed and that this incident will not be repeated, because no traveller can travel these routes in the future without some great fear or unease that a similar event will occur. Therefore, procedures to ensure an avoidance are absolutely necessary. We will be pressing forward with those in Montreal and in the other international organizations.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In congratulating the Minister on his appointment, I hope that during his brief tenure he will be able to address himself in a meaningful way to the plight of the unemployed.

Today, following on the heels of a release by Statistics Canada showing an unemployment rate among young people of 19.4 per cent, Canadian Press obtained a document commissioned by the Minister's Department which states "High unemployment amongst youth will be a major factor in keeping the over-all unemployment rate high during the next few years." The document then stated that we can expect one in five young people in this country to be unemployed into 1985. That is unacceptable to this House and to most Canadians. I ask the Minister what he intends to do about this totally unacceptable situation which is full of disastrous consequences for this country.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his kind words of welcome. I would say in return that, knowing he is one of the most compassionate and experienced Members of the House, I look forward to his advice and counsel. I hope that he will be in his position for a very long time to offer me that kind of assistance in the years to come.

There is no doubt that the problem of job creation, particularly for young people, is a pre-eminent and dominant concern of this Government. We do not find, as he does not find, those projections to be acceptable. We are already devoting considerable resources to assist in the employment of young people. This year we are spending something like $1 billion of federal funds for that purpose. The average is something like $2.5 million a day going to these programs to assist young people, both in training and direct job-creation programs. I do not argue for a moment with the Hon. Member that we may simply stay satisfied with that level of effort. We are exploring a variety of options to improve our record in this area.

RATE OF JOB CREATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I hesitate to remind the Minister that unemployment among young people has on average been over 20 per cent since July of last year. This is not a new problem. The Minister knows that during an economic downturn young people are the first to be fired and the last to be hired. Therefore, given the fact that last Friday Statistics Canada indicated a sharp downturn in the economy, a 75 per cent drop in the rate of new employment in this country over the previous four months, where is the economic climate within which the Minister promises to perform for these young people? He has now had a chance to examine the policies of his predecessor and the disastrous policies of his seatmate, the Minister of Finance.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the economy is improving and, along with it, jobs. Something like 300,000 jobs have been created in Canada over the last eight months. Young people benefit from that job creation just as much as others who are unemployed. Not only young people benefit, but women entering the work force. As the Hon. Member knows, we have consolidated our programs in an attempt to connect better with young people and to respond more effectively to the services which they need. If the Hon. Member has alternative programs which he would like us to consider, I would be delighted if he would bring them forward so we could examine them and, if they are of value, accept and implement them.

There is not going to be any immediate magic wand solution in responding to this problem. However, we do have proposals to present. I hope we will be able to do that in the context of the Speech from the Throne. I hope that Members opposite will proceed as quickly as possible with the termination of the present matters of debate before the House of Commons so that we can bring those proposals forward.

* * *

FISHERIES

RESTRUCTURING OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHING INDUSTRY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. My question is related to the disastrous crisis which exists in Atlantic Canada's fishing industry and the Minister's announced unilateral federal plan to form one large nationalized Newfoundland company, including a large part of the Newfoundland offshore fishery. How can the Government expect that its presence in the fishing industry will strengthen that industry when the provincial Government, labour, and the private companies concerned are solidly opposed to the restructuring plan and are solidly opposed to such heavy-handed government involvement?

● (1450)

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would first like to remind my hon. friend that if three or four companies have financial difficulties, I have met with each of them and have asked them why. Believe me, the reasons have nothing to do with Government policies, and they have the honesty to tell me about it. While they are having difficulty, over 700 small companies are in business, are making money, and are managing their business.

As for those three or four companies to which the Hon. Member is referring, may I remind him that the federal Government, and only the federal Government, has put money on the table. The federal Government is the only one. It is not the unions, it is not the companies, it is not the bank, it is not the provincial Government. We are the only ones who have put $75 million on the table. We have put our money where our policy is and where our mouth is.

Mr. Crouse: Madam Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Minister that it is not three or four companies of which we are speaking. Those companies represent some 12 companies throughout the length and breadth of Newfoundland.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT HERRING FISHING SEASON

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): There is another area of fisheries problems, namely, the Northumberland Strait herring fisheries about which the Hon. Member for Central Nova has already expressed his concern over the fact that the fishermen have been cut off from harvesting the fish which are there in abundance and which provide them with their livelihood. I would ask the Minister if he would re-think this situation and extend the season this year until a more thorough review of all the factors can be made.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind Hon. Members about the main fact. The fact is that the biological advice I have received is that that herring stock is in a dismal state, and unless we want to allow the collapse of that stock we should reduce the catch as much as possible. This year I have increased it by 4,000 tonnes. I have extended the period for fishing, and already the catch this year has exceeded the catch of last year. I think it would be irresponsible on my part, since my first responsibility is to the management of the resource, to allow an extension. I met this morning, for instance, with the Minister of Fisheries of New Brunswick and spoke with my counterpart in Nova Scotia, and all of the biological advice indicates that it would be most imprudent to allow over-fishing.

NEWFOUNDLAND REPRESENTATION IN CABINET

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it is in the context of the economic crisis in Newfoundland. There are 43,000 Newfoundlanders unemployed at the moment; 19 per cent of the labour force unemployed at the best time of the year for employment. Within that context, the fishing industry and the offshore industry are in chaos. The Government, conspiring with the Bank of Nova Scotia, has put the three offshore trawler companies into receivership, disrupting markets in the United States and endangering thousands of jobs.

In the middle of this chaos there is no Cabinet representation from Newfoundland whatsoever. Will the Prime Minister tell the House when he will replace the Hon. Member from White Bay whom he dismissed, and the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's who was there for the ten days that shook the world and who has, for personal reasons—we do not know what those reasons are—resigned? When will the Prime Minister appoint a new representative who can begin to focus on some of these problems with respect to the federal Government? When will it be and who will it be? How soon will the announcement be made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the Minister of Fisheries deals with fishery problems in every Province of Canada including Newfoundland. Problems with the offshore, if the Hon. Member is looking at energy, are dealt with by the Minister for Energy for Canada. I would not think it fitting to suggest that this Cabinet is not dealing with Newfoundland's problems because there happens to be no Minister from Newfoundland at this time.

The Hon. Member should be better informed himself of these problems when he suggests that it is the federal Government that has put the companies into receivership. He knows full well that it is the banks that have put the companies into receivership because the provincial Government has not been able to find satisfactory an agreement proposed by the federal Government to solve the problem. Therefore, the banks acted on their own. They did not act on behalf of or at the instigation of the federal Government.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, while the Prime Minister was in the Greek Islands, I was in my own island, Newfoundland, and I know what is happening in Newfoundland. The fishing industry is a failure. The offshore industry is paralysed. Truckers who take frozen fish from Newfoundland and bring back fruits and vegetables are now stopped from doing so. They have not been paid. There is an economic crisis.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, it has already been admitted that there was an agreement between the Government and the Bank of Nova Scotia. Will the Prime Minister produce the agreement between the Government and the Bank of Nova Scotia? Why has the Government permitted or directed the Bank of Nova Scotia to put these companies into liquidation and to cause the problems which are now under way, particularly when the main company, Fishery Products Limited, is owned and controlled by the Canada Development Corporation, a federal company incorporated by the House? Why is the Prime Minister acting to expropriate shares owned by the CDC and to cause these problems by means of a conspiracy with the Bank of Nova Scotia?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about an agreement with the Bank of Nova Scotia. I am informed by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that confidentially a copy of that agreement has been shown to Mr. Peckford. He knows the content of it and it would be for him to object or to make remarks about it.

In so far as agreements that we have made are concerned, the Hon. Member will recall that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans did sign an agreement with Mr. Morgan, the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland—two agreements as a matter of fact. They were repudiated by Premier Peckford, and I think, in fairness, that if the Hon. Member was really on his island and not dreaming, he would know that one does not have to speak Greek in order to realize that Mr. Peckford shares the blame for the disaster in the fisheries industry.

* * *

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM

TARGET STARTING DATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, last week the Government admitted that the recession in Canada was not entirely caused by world-wide pressures but that some of its own policies had helped to deepen the recession here in Canada. Considering that the recession was many times more severe in Canada than in the rest of the industrialized world, I must say, Madam Speaker, that this admission came as a welcome change in the Government's approach to the truth.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last Spring the Government approved 270 special recovery projects. The idea was to create jobs which were to be implemented in early Spring or early Summer. As of last week, Madam Speaker, the Government had only begun 13 of these 270 projects. I would ask the Prime Minister when the Government is going to begin to act.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I have the designated responsibility for the program in question, the Special Recovery Capital Projects. The target for those projects was that they would be begun within six months, which is towards the end of October, and that the expenditures would be made, for the most part, to the extent of 60 per cent at least within two years. That could be March, 1985. I am very pleased with the progress that is being made. As Hon. Members know, these projects were part of the package put forward by the Minister of Finance and were specifically designed not only to create jobs in the short term but to provide much needed economic infrastructure in a number of areas. The jobs were selected on the basis of those criteria.

There are now, a total of 270 projects, Madam Speaker. Originally there were to be only 100. These have been broken down into activities from coast to coast which are currently providing economic stimulation in a wide variety of sectors, and I hope that Hon. Members on all sides of the House share our enthusiasm for these jobs and recognize how important they are and were to the Canadian economy especially during this period of recession from which we are now emerging. In fact they make up a very substantial investment package during a period when investment intentions of Canadians have been shown to be particularly low.

● (1500)

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I think most of us in the House will recall very specifically that there was a promise that those jobs would be on line in early summer, or, for some, even in late Spring. That is another promise which was not kept. I suspect the Prime Minister was hesitant about answering because of the promise that he did keep and that his Government has kept. As a westerner, I remember that 15 months ago in Banff he mentioned that, if he had to, there was one thing he could do, and that was to scare the hell out of Canadians. He certainly has done that.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Two years ago in the House we were reminded that there were over ten million people employed full-time in Canada. Since then over half a million people have lost full-time jobs that will not be replaced. The Government has set specific targets for inflation. Why will it not do the same now for employment? Will the Government set a specific target for employment levels and then bring in concrete programs to achieve that target?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I should like to remind the Hon. Member that Canada is creating jobs at the present time at a faster rate than any other industrial country in the world.

Mr. Crosbie: That is absolute bunk. Tell the truth for a change.

Mr. Lalonde: Under this Government, this was the situation in the ten years between 1970 and 1980. As we are coming out of the recession, we are creating jobs in this country faster than the United States, faster than any country in Europe, and faster than any other industrial country that my hon. friend can think of.

Mr. Crosbie: Faster than a speeding bullet. What nonsense!

Mr. Lalonde: I challenge my hon. friend to demonstrate the contrary. We are very concerned about job creation and we are attacking this problem very seriously and very systematically.

As the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration has indicated, we have created some 328,000 jobs since last November, on a seasonally adjusted basis. Today in Canada there are 800,000 more Canadians at work than there were last November. I invite my hon. friend to remember that record.

[Translation]

RESTRUCTURING OF PROGRAMS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and I also wish to congratulate him on his recent promotion within the Cabinet.

[English]

We respect the initiative shown by his predecessor in office who brought in many fine programs for the creation of employment. We have heard about the 328,000 jobs that have been created in the economy. The Minister recently indicated that he would be undertaking some reorganization of programs in place and that he would be making that announcement soon. I wonder if he is in a position to indicate what that reorganization will be and what impact he sees as far as numbers are concerned, whether it be in money or individuals.

[Translation]

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his congratulations.

[English]

It is true, as was announced in the budget last Spring, that we have undertaken a restructuring and reinforcement of a variety of job-creation programs under the Commission of Employment and Immigration. That consolidation and reinforcement goes into effect today. In effect the old programs have been placed in four major new thrusts of Canada Works, of Career Access, of the Job Corps and LEAD, the Local Employment Assistance and Development Program. Each of those programs is focused on a different area of the job-creation problem. Under these programs we expect to spend between $1.3 billion and $1.5 billion to create jobs in Canada this year and next.

I could go on in some detail to outline the purposes of the programs and the way in which they will operate, Madam Speaker. All Members of the House will receive, either today or tomorrow, a very extensive kit outlining the criteria and the application of those programs, and I urge them to study it with care.

* * *

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

LEVEL OF FUNDING

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have a question concerning farm finances and I will direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister will know that last Spring the Farm Credit Corporation asked for an additional $600 million to meet its demands. The Minister of Finance subsequently approved $250 million, which has virtually all been used up.

I should like to ask the Minister if he has made representations to the Minister of Finance on behalf of the Farm Credit Corporation to obtain some additional funding so that it will not simply become a lender of last resort.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Farm Credit Corporation is a Crown corporation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I am glad to see that even the Leader of the Opposition says it is a good one. I believe it is the eleventh largest lending institution in Canada at the present time. This year will be its biggest ever for lending money to farmers, and 56 per cent of its funds will go to refinancing farmers from the private sector, from the banking institutions and other lending institutions. That is the greatest extent to which we have ever become involved in taking over the responsibilities for loans from these other lending institutions.

I have received a full report on the Farm Credit Corporation but I have not had time to look at it. I will be glad to report to the Hon. Member tomorrow what the position is at the present time.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that I am new to my position so I thank him very much for informing me that the Farm Credit Corporation is a Crown corporation. I was not aware of that before!

ROLE OF CORPORATION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Let me repeat the question, Madam Speaker, and ask the Minister for a yes or no answer. Has he approached the Minister of Finance on behalf of the Farm Credit Corporation for permission for it to meet the needs of the farm community and not simply become a lender of last resort? Could I have a yes or no answer for the Minister?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows the lending policy of the Farm Credit Corporation. I am sure he has studied the legislation and knows that we are following the lines of the legislation as far as we can go.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Whelan: We are lending under the rules and guidelines set down by the legislation.

* * *

MEDICAL CARE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON EXTRA BILLING BY DOCTORS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister will know that many Canadians are reported to be concerned about the rising incidence of extra billing and user-fees. As a participant in the debate on medicare, she is aware of the concern that many Canadians have about it. This is a concern which even the new Leader of the Opposition had to acknowledge finally. Even though he began his by-election campaign by saying that medicare was not an issue, he had finally to admit that it was, although he only came up with half a solution when he did so.

May I ask the Minister if we can expect a concrete proposal to be put before the House, before the provincial Ministers of Health and before the country, in whatever way she chooses? When are we going to get a concrete proposal? Could she give us some timetable showing when we might expect that the babbling will stop and the action will start?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes of course, Madam Speaker. It would have been impolite—and the Hon. Member would have been the first one to shout at me this afternoon—if I had not waited for the provincial Ministers who wanted me to go to Halifax last week to listen to their proposals. But they did not have any proposals to make and I am sorry to say that the meeting was quite a waste of time for many people involved in it. I really regret that they had not done any homework whatsoever. The Canadian Government's position paper was put out at the end of July and in it the position, which is well known by all Canadians, is expressed. The Bill which will finalize it is in the process of getting Cabinet approval right now.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, one way that I suggested the Minister could indicate she is sincere about medicare would be to make a concrete proposal. Another way in which she could indicate she was sincere—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member will ask the question, please.

Mr. Blaikie: —would be to indicate—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Madam Speaker: Question.

Mr. Blaikie: Will the Minister indicate to the House that she is serious about saving medicare—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PREMIER OF NOVA SCOTIA

Madam Speaker: I think I ought to draw the attention of the House to the presence in our galleries of the Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Buchanan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

FINANCE

EFFECT OF LIQUOR TAX

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know from his travels that the price of liquor in the United States, even before he increased his tax by 13.3 per cent, was about half what it is in Canada. This has caused a lot of damage. Will the Minister tell us if he has conducted any studies as to the cost to his treasury caused by the fact that a great deal of liquor is purchased in the United States and brought into Canada either legally or illegally? What is the cost? Has he had any studies?

• (1510)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am happy to see that my colleague travelled in the United States this summer. I stayed in Canada.

Mr. Blenkarn: You know, Madam Speaker, if the Minister had any responsibility for job creation, he would know that jobs could be created in the—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. I must remind the Hon. Member that he is not to comment on the answer of a minister. He must move to a supplementary question, if he has one.

IMPACT ON GOVERNMENT REVENUE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I would like to know if the Minister has any study to indicate how the revenue was damaged in totality by the increase in tax, either the excise tax or the loss in revenue from personal income taxes of people employed in the hospitality industry, or corporate taxes from businesses in that industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have two comments. First of all I would like to say it is rather ridiculous to ask if there exists a study on a tax increase which took place on September 1, and what the impacts were. Even the Hon. Member should realize that his question is preposterous.

As far as the other question is concerned, the Hon. Member knows how much money is raised by governments provincially and federally. I would like to remind my hon. friend that the largest share of revenues coming from taxation of liquor is taken by the provinces, not by the federal Government. Over the last ten years the share of taxation taken by the federal Government on cigarettes and on liquor has gone down, and has essentially been taken over by the provinces.

As far as the impact of such tax increases on consumption is concerned, it is very hard to assess because there are many factors intervening. Price is one, but also changes in consumer behaviour, switches to other forms of liquor consumption and, as far as cigarette consumption is concerned, as the Hon. Member knows, a number of Canadian have, thank God, abandoned smoking, and I would be very happy if there were fewer and fewer Canadians abusing both cigarettes and liquor.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

APPOINTMENT AND RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF STATE (MINES)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Given the fact that there is a long parliamentary tradition requiring the Prime Minister to ensure there is nothing prohibitory in the background of any Member of Parliament or person whom he asks to become a member of his Cabinet, would the Prime Minister tell us whether, during the course of his announcement this summer, he inquired of the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's as to any reasons why he should not be a member of the Cabinet and, if not, why not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, when I propose appointing someone to the Cabinet, I do meet with that person and we have a conversation on various subjects, during which I assess my view of his or her ability to discharge the functions which I plan to impose on him or her. I had that conversation with the Hon. Member.

ACCEPTANCE OF RESIGNATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport is reported in the press to have indicated that she only knew, about an hour or an hour and a half before she was sworn in, the fact that she was to become a member of the Cabinet. I ask the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that this is an unprecedented short term of office for any Minister of the Crown, whether he does not feel there is a responsibility upon him to give us some reason why the resignation was accepted? And when is he going to appoint a replacement for the very important responsibility relating to mines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as to the remarks attributed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, they do indicate that until the shuffle of Cabinet is complete I am still in the process of choosing between different people. We on this side have the advantage of having so many qualified members to become Ministers that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, it is true that some of the decisions are made within days and some are made within hours of their effective appointments. Insofar as the particular Member is concerned, I understand he has the agreement of the House to rise on a question of privilege at 3.15 p.m., and the Hon. Member may receive some answers at that point.

THE ADMINISTRATION

STATEMENT EXPLAINING RESIGNATION FROM CABINET

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, I rise to make a personal statement. I understand there have been consultations—

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I heard the introductory words of the Hon. Member which were that he was rising to make a statement. If it is not a question of privilege on which he is rising, I would suggest the Chair has an obligation to seek the unanimous consent of the House prior to the making of such a statement.

Madam Speaker: I thought the Hon. Member was going to refer to the unanimous consent. I was just waiting for him to terminate his sentence. However, the Hon. Member knows, and I believe he has spoken to some of his colleagues, that he must ask for the unanimous consent of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker. Earlier this morning I spoke to the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and to the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), and asked them to give unanimous consent or find out whether it could be obtained, to allow the Hon. Member to make a personal statement. Their reaction was positive, provided that if the Member for Yukon concluded that the statement required a reply, he would be free to act accordingly. We do not think the statement will be political. We think it will be very short, and that it will be a statement of facts, and in the circumstances, he gave me to understand he would have no objection to a personal statement that was not a question of privilege, provided he would have a chance to reply if he found it necessary.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the Government House Leader is quite correct in pointing out that he did consult with me with respect to the intentions of the Hon. Member in seeking to make a statement. The Government House Leader is also quite correct that I assured him that the Members of the Official Opposition would provide that consent since it was my view, considering the likely nature of the statement which is going to be made, that it affects that Hon. Member's personal privileges as a Member of the House, and on the basis that it is in substance a question of privilege, we do give that consent.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, my views were also sought, and on behalf of my colleagues I indicated that we would likewise give consent.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Statement—Mr. Simmons

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) for his observations. When he interjected, I was about to say I was rising to make a personal statement rather than a statement on privilege because, in my view, it is a larger issue. However, the House can decide that when it has heard me. I was about to say, also, that I understand there have been consultations, as has since been confirmed, and if I do have unanimous consent I would like to proceed with my statement.

Madam Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, let me come, then, immediately to the point of my remarks. In so doing let me welcome the new Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and thank him and his caucus, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and his caucus, my good friend the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko), and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and our caucus, for affording me an opportunity to address an issue which will be of some interest to the House.

I propose to take the next few minutes of the time of the House to provide as full an explanation as possible of the circumstances surrounding my resignation from Cabinet on August 22.

In my letter of resignation I cited personal reasons for my decision. Subsequently, I stated publicly that, since my reasons were private, and without any public dimension at that time, I had elected to exercise a right which I believe is the unfettered right of every person in this country, whether a public office holder or not, and that is the right to discuss one's private matters with others, including the press, or not to do so.

If I may say so with reference to the press, just in passing, I believe the press has handled this issue with the persistence and, with two very glaring exceptions, with the responsibility which has always been its trademark.

● (1520)

I had good reason, Madam Speaker, for exercising that right as you will shortly see. I can tell you now that the private reasons for my resignation relate to a tax matter. I became aware subsequent to my appointment to Cabinet that a recommendation from the Department of National Revenue that a charge be preferred against me in relation to certain unreported income had not been dealt with by the Department of Justice. I shall return in a little while to the background of that recommendation. First let me deal with the matter solely in the context of my appointment to, and my resignation from, Cabinet.

On the evening prior to the day of my being sworn in as Minister of State for Mines I had an indication that an invitation to join Cabinet may be forthcoming from the Prime Minister. On the strength of that indication I proceeded to reflect on the implications of Cabinet membership on my personal affairs and on my family, and to discuss these matters with my wife who, by the way, had the good sense to be born several years ago on this particular day. In the process of that reflection, Madam Speaker, I reflected on the tax issue which had been ongoing for more than two years. Prior to that evening, Thursday, August 11, I had already concluded in consultation with my lawyer that I had reasonable grounds for believing that the legal aspect of the tax matter had been resolved in my favour.

Further, I noted that the indication earlier that evening of a possible invitation to join Cabinet was confirmation, and especially the invitation itself would be even more clearly so a confirmation, that the legal aspect of the tax matter had indeed been resolved. I reasoned that an invitation to join Cabinet would have been preceded by a security check which, among other things, would have revealed any outstanding legal aspects of the tax matter.

I now know that my reasoning was falsely based in two crucial aspects. First, there was no security check prior to my appointment to Cabinet. Secondly, the timeframe indicated to my accountant and me during a meeting with Revenue Canada officials was not adhered to and consequently the recommendation went from Revenue Canada to Justice considerably later than we were assured would be the case.

Hindsight is 20/20. I now realize all too graphically that I should have raised the tax issue with the Prime Minister during our August 12 meeting. I apologize to him and to the House for not having done so. I want you to know, Madam Speaker, that my reasons for not doing so were predicated neither on naive hope nor on treacherous calculation. Rather, as I have said, it was based on two premises, both of which appeared at the time to be eminently reasonable, both of which we now know to have been falsely based.

There were, Madam Speaker, in theory at least, options open to me other than offering to resign. I could have tried to continue in Cabinet; perhaps I would have survived a few days, a few weeks, perhaps indefinitely. Whether or not survival in Cabinet was theoretically possible is entirely beside the point. There is only one way to be in Cabinet—because you have legitimacy, because you have the full right to be there. When I was sworn in, I had that legitimacy. Once the circumstances which triggered my offer to resign arose, I no longer had unbridled legitimacy. Questions would arise. Should I be in Cabinet in those circumstances? If the answer to that question is no, maybe not, even maybe; if the answer to that question is anything but an unqualified yes, then my full legitimacy as a Cabinet Minister would have been abridged, circumscribed, emasculated, compromised.

Then, Madam Speaker, there is the issue of accountability; the public's right to know. I felt it would be wrong to continue in Cabinet once I had learned that the legal aspect of the tax matter was still outstanding, irrespective of whether a charge would ultimately be laid or not. Secondly, there was a fairly easy, pragmatic choice to be made: either to damage somewhat my credibility by resigning from Cabinet so ridiculously soon after my appointment, even if my reasons never became public, or to ultimately destroy that credibility altogether by continuing to hold a position for which I now lacked unbridled legitimacy.

So you see, Madam Speaker, my decision to resign was an important one, yes; a decision with wrenching implications for me and others, yes; but for all that it was not an especially difficult decision for me to make and that is why I, within minutes of hearing of the Justice circumstance, requested the Secretary to the Cabinet to be in touch with the Prime Minister as quickly as possible and, on my behalf, offer him my resignation.

Those who know me well will, I am sure, place the judgments I have made in these matters in the perspective of others I have made over the years. If they do that, I will not be ill served by the resulting conclusions.

Let me return, then, Madam Speaker, to the issue of the Revenue Canada recommendation to Justice. The Department of Justice has now made a determination and I will say in a moment what that decision is. First, you will now see why it was neither prudent nor in my best interests to disclose at the time of my resignation from Cabinet the specific nature of my private reasons for doing so. It was important that I not do or say anything publicly which could have had the effect of interfering with the decision of Justice. Further, only if Justice were to decide to lay a charge would the reasons for my resignation take on a public dimension and I would then be governed by the public's right to know.

Just a comment in passing on the confidential status of personal income tax affairs of Canadians generally. The law clearly provides for that confidentiality. But, any law is only as good as the people who administer it. I can only express the hope that the "highly placed Government source" who reportedly discussed my private tax affairs in public has a more competent, less malicious understanding of his other job responsibilities and of the legal parameters within which he is supposed to be operating.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, the Department of Justice has made its decision. It has decided to lay a charge on the ground of intent to avoid the payment of taxes. This is, of course, not the place for me to state my views on the subject. I will have adequate opportunity to do that in the courts of the land, an opportunity of which I shall be taking full advantage. I am satisfied, and my lawyers are satisfied, that the evidence we shall lead before the courts will exonerate me. I have the profoundest confidence in the ultimate justice of our legal processes. I have every reason to believe that the Department of Justice will take the appropriate initiative almost immediately and I welcome an early opportunity to clear the air once and for all.

I came into public life over 20 years ago, and into elective politics 10 years ago, because I wanted to have a direct say in how things get done in my Province and in this country, because I believed I could contribute to that dialogue and in some small way influence for the better the outcome. That continues to be my belief and my objective.

The tax issue will, without a doubt, occupy some of my attention in the days ahead. I do want you to know, however, Madam Speaker, that it is my full intention, subject only to the constraints of time, to continue to the best of my ability to represent the diverse and important interests of the people who sent me here.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Prime Minister for his understanding and support in this matter. I thank the many friends who have come to my support, and through you, Madam Speaker, I would want to thank my colleagues in this House for allowing me this opportunity to provide this explanation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

● (1530)

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has just completed a fairly lengthy statement which we will want to study with care and if it becomes necessary at all, we may wish to reply tomorrow.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, June 29, 1983, with the exception of three, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson), one of the petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller), and one presented by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) do not meet the requirements as to form.

* * *

[Translation]

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an approved order in council appointing the Hon. Herbert Eser Gray, President of the Treasury Board, the Hon. Roméo LeBlanc, Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Yvon Pinard, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and the Hon. Roy MacLaren, Minister of State (Finance), to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of Chapter H-9 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970 intituled: An act respecting the House of Commons.

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR PROVINCE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant), Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), Spadina (Mr. Heap), Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller), was filed with me on June 29, 1983, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of British Columbia.

If the House agrees, I would suggest that we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings.

Is that agreed?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask the Chair's indulgence in this matter? During our consideration of when objections had to be filed to this matter, it was not clear to us whether it was within 10 or 12 parliamentary days or calendar days. Is the Chair now determining that whatever the time gap is should be calendar days or is it parliamentary days?

Madam Speaker: I will have to check that. I do not have the Standing Order or the legislation at my fingertips. I will have to check that and inform the Hon. Member.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, may I suggest that it will determine whether or not it is in order to accept those objections and have them printed? If it is not in order to accept them, you will require unanimous consent of the House and we will want to consider that before giving it.

Madam Speaker: I had to assume that this was in order since it was referred to me by the Table. However, we can delay the printing of these objections until tomorrow when the matter is clarified.

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR ONTARIO

Madam Speaker: Again it is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield), Windsor West (Mr. Gray), Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), Laurier (Mr. Berger), Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters), Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain), Kitchener (Mr Lang), Guelph (Mr. Schroder) and Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) was filed with me on June 30, 1983. It is obviously within the delays. I do believe that it is parliamentary days. These were filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C.

1972 report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario.

We will delay that in case there is a doubt as to the delay which is permissible.

* * *

INDIAN SELF-GOVERNMENT

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government. I present it in Canada's two official languages.

If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report later this day.

[Editor's Note: For above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

THE CABINET

TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL DESIGNATING ACTING MINISTERS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 46(2), I am tabling, in both official languages, copies of Order in Council, P.C. 1983-2782, designating the acting ministers.

In accordance with recent practice, I ask that this document be appended to today's Hansard.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to have this document appended to Hansard?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The above document is appended to today's Hansard.]

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. BLENKARN—FOREIGN AID—DISCRIMINATION AGAINST TAMIL POPULATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present to the House of Commons a petition which has been signed by some 138 Members of the Tamil Association in Ontario who have immigrated to Canada from Sri Lanka. These people are deeply concerned by the manner in which Canadian foreign aid is being used to discriminate against the members of the Tamil population who still live in Sri Lanka.

MR. WENMAN—VIOLENCE AGAINST RCMP

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition signed by businessmen from Langley, B.C., in my riding of Fraser Valley West, expressing concern over the increasing number of violent actions against members of the RCMP in performing their duties.

The nature of the petition is to bring public attention to the importance of our law enforcement system, especially those individuals entrusted with peacekeeping who are coming under increasing violence from lawbreakers.

The purpose of the petition is to request stricter legislation against those who resist arrest or create violent disturbances in ours and other Canadian communities.

● (1540)

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

[English]

FISHERIES

CRITICAL CONDITION OF INDUSTRY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I rise to move the adjournment of the House on a matter of urgent public importance and indeed grave national concern. As all Canadians are aware, the fishing industry is a major employer on our east and west coasts, and is in process of being paralysed following years of Government neglect.

The critical conditon of the industry is a matter of major national concern because of the one hundred thousand Canadians from coast to coast who depend directly or indirectly on the industry for their livelihood.

The attempted nationalization of the off-shore fishing industry of Newfoundland by the Government, aided by the Bank of Nova Scotia without the consent of the industry, has created further chaos.

The confusion brought about by precipitate government action following on years of neglect and indifference, has driven producers to the wall, deprived fishermen of their livelihood and threatened the survival of a major resource industry.

On the issue of urgency, it is quite clear that the Government has no intention of providing an opportunity to come to grips with this far-reaching issue in a meaningful way.

The Canadian fishing industry is not prepared to accept another long-distance solution imposed by Ottawa, which simply means more centralization, Government intervention, and the takeover by the state of the industry.

Unless we act immediately, there will not be a fishing industry left in this country.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that in deciding whether a motion to adjourn to discuss this matter is in order, the Chair must decide whether the matter constitutes a genuine emergency which is so urgent that it must be considered this very day. Beauchesne states that the matter:

—must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention.

While this clearly is an important matter, the Hon. Member has not convinced me that it meets the exacting standard I have just quoted.

Many Speakers in the past have considered the problem of continuing as opposed to acute problems. The conclusion has, most often, been that however grave an ongoing situation may be, because of its continuing nature the House will have other opportunities to debate it. I refer the Hon. Member to the many citations in this regard.

I just want to note for Members that the manner in which the request for debate was written was much closer to a motion of non-confidence in the Government and it makes it increasingly difficult for the Chair to focus on that particular Standing Order.

I am satisfied that such is the case and therefore I must reluctantly find that this matter does not satisfy the requirements of the Standing Order and I cannot accept the Hon. Member's request to discuss this matter under Standing Order 30.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

INDIAN SELF-GOVERNMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior) moved that the first report of the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government presented to the House earlier this day be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 783, 4113, 4629, 4754, 4785, 4795, 4796, 4805, 4829, 4848, 4853, 4856, 4858, 4866, 4868, 4890, 4908, 4924, 4930, 4934, 4936, 4958, 4965, 4967, 4979, 4983 and 4986.

[Text]

LEGAL ACTION UNDER INCOME TAX ACT

Question No. 783—Mr. Corbett:

1. In the 1978-79 fiscal year, was legal action instituted by the Department of Justice under the Income Tax Act against incorporated companies and, if so (a) how many companies were involved (b) how many were taken to court (c) of those not taken to court, how many settlements were made monetarily favourable to the Crown, excluding costs?

2. How many of the total actions instituted by the Department were against small businesses as defined by the Small Businesses Loans Act (FDBD) and how many were taken to court?

3. Of the total number of cases settled without court action, how many involved small businesses and how many were settled monetarily favourable to the Crown, excluding costs?

4. How many registered partnerships was legal action instituted against by the Department and how many involved doctors, lawyers and accountants?

5. What is the average cost to the Crown of litigation instituted under the Income Tax Act by the Department against small businesses which (a) goes to court (b) does not go to court?

6. What was the total cost of litigation instituted by the Department under the Income Tax Act against (a) incorporated companies (b) partnerships, in the 1978-79 fiscal year?

7. What was the total amount of revenue realized by the Crown as a result of legal action instituted by the Department against (a) incorporated companies (b) partnerships, in the 1978-79 fiscal year and of that realized from incorporated companies, what amount would be attributed to small businesses?

8. What is the average estimated cost to a small business to defend itself against an action instituted by the Department under the Income Tax Act?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1 to 8. The Department of Justice institutes legal action against taxpayers, on behalf of the Department of National Revenue, in respect of the collection of unpaid taxes and the prosecution of tax evasion. The substantial number of cases of tax litigation, however, arise from appeals filed by taxpayers to the Tax Review Board and Federal Court of Canada against decisions made by the Department of National Revenue as to the assessment of income tax payable.

While records of actions and appeals are maintained, they are not kept in the manner posed by the question and the information requested could not be obtained without incurring prohibitive costs and would still be quite incomplete.

See also question No. 2,767 answered January 26, 1982.

IMPORTATION OF FARM MACHINERY PARTS

Question No. 4,113—Mr. Cossitt:

Are parts for farm machinery, ordered by Canadian farmers from the U.S. because such parts were not made nor readily available in Canada, held up by customs officials on arrival at the border for periods of up to and including three weeks and, if so (a) for what reason and is one reason that Canada Customs stated they must first determine that the parts were not to be used for purposes other than agricultural before releasing them (b) does the Government realise that this causes Canadian farmers, particularly those in Eastern Canada, inconvenience and the loss of use of a piece of machinery (c) will the government take immediate steps to alter the process and (i) if not, for what reason (ii) if so, on what date?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): (a), (b) and (c). The Department is not aware of any delays or reasons for delays in releasing parts for farm machinery. Canada Customs musts first determine that parts for farm machinery are not to be used for purposes other than agricultural before releasing them. In this regard, the importer of record must satisfy customs officials at time of entry that the parts are for use on farm machinery.

It should be mentioned, however, that the importer is not always the end-user. Satisfactory evidence, therefore, must be submitted at time of entry in the form of end-use certificates, purchase orders, or similar documentation to substantiate that the parts are for farm machinery. When an importer is without the proper customs forms at time of importation, he can avail himself of the immediate release procedure (bond required) which is normally used when the importation is of commercial nature (i.e. goods for resale). In cases when the importer of record is the farmer and he can satisfy the customs official that the part is for his farm machinery, the goods are documented on a casual import entry and released immediately.

When the legislation stipulates that the parts imported must be for use on farm machinery the Department must ensure that this requirement is met.

The present practice of obtaining satisfactory evidence at time of entry is the best method of ensuring that the parts imported are for farm machinery.

SURVEY OF VACATION TRAVEL BY CANADIANS

Question No. 4,629—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was a firm hired on behalf of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to conduct a survey of vacation travel by Canadians and, if so (a) did the survey look at both domestic and international travel (b) what were the results (c) to what use will the results be put (d) what amount did the study cost?

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: Yes, Traveldata International of Toronto. (a) Yes. (b) Marginal decrease in foreign travel by Canadians and a small increase in domestic travel in 1981. (c) The results of this study will be used in developing marketing strategies to promote the tourism plant in Canada by the Canadian Government Office of Tourism. Other users are the departments responsible for tourism in the Provinces/Territories, and the Tourism Industry in general. (d) $100,000.

DEVELOPMENTAL POTENTIAL OF NEW AIRCRAFT

Question No. 4,754—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was a study done on behalf of the Department of Transport to examine the development potential for the 150-seat new technology aircraft for the 1990s and, if so (a) who performed the study and at what cost (b) what was the purpose (c) what were the major conclusions and recommendations (d) what steps has the government taken to implement the recommendations?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: No.

(a) The Department, assisted by the Development Centre of the Department of Transport and Peat Marwick consulting firm, is preparing a study at an estimated cost of $66,000. (b), (c) and (d) In the process of evaluating the market for this class of aircraft, the Department is working with Canadian industry and negotiating with leading manufacturers of commercial aircraft. No recommendations have been made as the evaluation is still incomplete.

INDOOR ENTRY WAYS FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES AIRPORTS

Question No. 4,785—Mr. Howie:

1. Which Department of Transport airports in the Atlantic Provinces are equipped with an indoor entry way to aircraft to protect passengers from severe cold and inclement weather and which airports are not so equipped?

2. What is the criterion used for determining the need for installation of indoor entry ways to aircraft?

3. Are the Atlantic Provinces discriminated against in this regard and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport):

1. In the Atlantic Provinces only two airports, Halifax and St. John's, are equipped with indoor entry ways to aircraft called "passenger loading bridges".

The following Transport Canada airports do not have passenger loading bridges: Charlottetown, Churchill Falls, Deer lake, Fredericton, Gander Int'l, Moncton, Saint John, N.B., St. Anthony, Stephenville, Sydney, Wabush and Yarmouth.

2. Transport Canada policy is that the Department may provide a passenger loading bridge where there exists an annual passenger volume of 250,000 or more at an airport, and, in addition, at least 125,000 passengers from loading bridge compatible aircraft, enplaning and deplaning annually at the aircraft gate in question.

Air carriers are entitled to install their own loading bridges where an air carrier normally utilizes a particular aircraft gate for at least 35 per cent of the operational day at the airport, or for the busiest 16 hours of airport operation.

3. The Atlantic Provinces are not discriminated against in the national application of this policy.

CANADA POST—INSIDE WORKERS EMPLOYED IN FREDERICTON

Question No. 4,795—Mr. Howie:

On (a) January 1, 1981 (b) January 1, 1982 (c) January 1, 1983 (d) the first day of the month in which this question is answered, how many (i) permanent (ii) casual inside workers were employed by the Fredericton, New Brunswick central mail sorting depot?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Canada Post Corporation Informs me as follows:

Part (a) January 1, 1981:	60 full time indeterminate 11 part time indeterminate
Part (b) January 1, 1982:	67 full time indeterminate 5 part time indeterminate
Part (c) January 1, 1983:	67 full time indeterminate 4 part time indeterminate
Part (d) April 1, 1983:	67 full time indeterminate 4 part time indeterminate

CANADA POST—LETTER CARRIERS EMPLOYED IN FREDERICTON

Question No. 4,796—Mr. Howie:

On (a) December 1, 1981 (b) December 1, 1982 (c) the first day of the month in which this question is answered, how many (i) permanent (ii) casual letter carriers were employed by the Canada Post Corporation in Fredericton, New Brunswick?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Canada Post Corporation informs me as follows:

Part (a) December 1, 1981:	48 full time indeterminate 2 part time indeterminate
Part (b) December 1, 1982:	48 full time indeterminate 1 part time indeterminate
Part (c) April 1, 1983:	48 full time indeterminate 1 part time indeterminate

TRAVEL EXPENSES OF CBC AGRICULTURE AND RESOURCE LIAISON OFFICER

Question No. 4,805—Mr. Murta:

With reference to travel expenses incurred by the CBC Agriculture and Resource Liaison Officer (a) has there been any reduction in travel expenses for this Officer (b) what amount was spent on his travel over the past five fiscal years?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

(a) and (b) It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to Question No. 2,530 answered November 6, 1975.

FIRE COMMISSIONER OF CANADA

Question No. 4,829—Mr. MacKay:

1. Was there recently an investigation into the alleged harassment of staff by the former Fire Commissioner of Canada, Mr. Alex Hope, and, if so, what was the outcome of the investigation?

2. Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to use the services of Mr. Hope as an advisor on the competition being held for the job of Fire Commissioner although there are among the candidates for that competition, persons who have brought charges of harassment against the former Fire Commissioner?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes. Charges are still under examination by the Public Service Commission of Canada.

2. Yes. Mr. Hope was utilized as a technical adviser. He is the only person with the technical competence and knowledge of fire prevention relative to the federal service at the level of the position.

CMHC—HOUSING UNITS FOR INDIANS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 4,848—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1980, what amount was (a) loaned (b) granted for new housing units for native Indian persons in New Brunswick?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: (a) Approximately $3.3 million. (b) Nil.

HOME INSULATION PROGRAM IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 4,853—Mr. Howie:

1. How many New Brunswick households applied for grants under the Canadian Home Insulation Program in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983?

2. How many of the grant applications are not settled to date?

3. How many families, in total, are presently waiting for the applications for CHIP grants to be settled?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. (a) 8,436, (b) 15,439, (c) As of April 27; 2,972.

2. As of April 27 there were 3,297 applications in process.

3. Same as 2, above.

POULTRY PRODUCTION IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 4,856—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1980, what amount was paid to farmers in New Brunswick to assist with poultry production?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): There has not been any direct financial assistance given under the Agricultural Stabilization Board Programs. New Brunswick is a member of the National Marketing Agencies for poultry products, eggs, chickens and turkeys. These supply managed programs are entirely self-supporting and do not receive any federal moneys for their operations.

ASSISTANCE TO FRUIT FARMERS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 4,858—Mr. Howie:

For the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 (c) 1982-83, what amount was paid to farmers in New Brunswick to assist with fruit farming?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Assistance paid to farmers in New Brunswick for fruit farming is as follows:

Order Paper Questions

	(a) 1980-81	(b) 1981-82	(c) 1982-83
Crop Insurance Program	$ 14,329	$ 19,376	$ 20,441
Agricultural Development Subsidiary Agreement II	274,512	225,664	184,014
Advance Payments for Crops Program	—	—	5,939
South East New Brunswick Program	—	—	3,596
Agricultural Stabilization Board	—	70,189	16,489
	$288,841	$315,229	$230,479

ATTACHING CUSTOMER OWNED EQUIPMENT TO TELEPHONE NETWORK

Question No. 4,866—Mr. Beatty:

1. Is the Department of Communications considering requiring that customer-owned equipment attached to the telephone network be labeled as having been approved under Terminal Attachment Program Advisory Committee standards?

2. Is the Government considering a charge of $1 per telephone for the use of the label and, if so, for what reason?

3. What amount per year might be derived from such a program and in what way would that amount be used?

4. Could such a program result in a cost of up to four or five dollars per telephone to consumers?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. Customer-owned equipment approved under the Terminal Attachment Program Advisory Committee standards requires a DOC label under the Terminal Attachment Program of the Department. This program commenced April, 1976.

2. A fee of $1 per label for terminal equipment has been in effect since April 1976 to recover a portion of the costs of the Terminal Attachment Program. Under the CRTC Telecom Decision 82-14 of November 23, 1982 all telephone sets manufactured after June 1, 1983 will have to be DOC certified and bear a DOC label. In view of the increased volume of the telephone sets which will have to bear DOC labels, the label fee applicable to telephone sets has been reduced to 20 cents effective May 30, 1983.

3. The total revenues from the Terminal Attachment Program approximate $300,000 per year. These revenues are intended to cover costs for the services of technical assessment, testing certification and labels for manufacturers and suppliers of terminal equipment attached to the telephone networks of federally regulated carriers.

4. The cost to the manufacturers will be 20 cents per label for telephone sets.

Any additional cost to the manufacturer is the cost associated with attaching the label to the telephone which is estimated to the negligible, with efficient organization and application procedures. The final cost to the consumer is an all inclusive one which will depend on production volumes and market forces.

CLOSED-CAPTIONED PROGRAMMING

Question No. 4,868—Mr. Beatty:

1. How many hours of closed-captioned programming will be (a) produced (b) exhibited by the (i) French (ii) English language service of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

2. Is the CBC employing Canadian or foreign technology for its closed-captioning?

3. Is the CBC employing Telidon technology for its closed-captioning and (a) if so, what equipment is being used (b) if not, for what reason?

4. How many machines for the insertion of closed-captioning in the broadcast signal does the CBC own?

5. When the CBC has programming closed-captioned, does it do the work itself or does it contract to have the work done by others and, if by others, by whom is the work done?

6. What amount will the CBC spend in the fiscal year 1983-84 on closed-captioning for (a) purchasing programs (b) captioning programs (c) other related expenses?

7. Does the CBC have any plans to close-caption (a) its news and public affairs programs (b) House of Commons broadcasts and, if so, what are such plans?

8. Does the CBC plan to take new initiatives in 1983 to provide programming for the hearing impaired and, if so, what are such initiatives?

9. Does the CBC feel it has a special responsibility to provide programs to the hearing impaired?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. (a) and (b) Approximately 250 hours of Canadian closed captioned programming in each language will be broadcast annually by the CBC. The captions for these CBC and other Canadian-produced programs will be prepared by the Canadian Captioning Development Agency (CCDA). U.S. programs scheduled for telecast on the CBC English network will also be presented with closed captions when accompanying captioning is available from the U.S. supplier.

2. The CBC has been using technology developed in the United States for inserting captions in Line 21 of the vertical blanking interval of the television signal. Encoding equipment for this purpose was installed to enable captioning of Canadian programs to become a reality in Canada in 1981, the International Year of Disabled Persons. American-made encoders were purchased since, at that time, there were no Canadian-made encoders compatible with the Sears TeleCaption Adapter, which was the only available decoder. The CBC is now acquiring Canadian encoding equipment which has since been developed. It will enable captions to be decoded in the home with the same decoding device. This Canadian equipment is designed to complement that used by the Canadian Captioning Development Agency (CCDA).

3. The CBC intends to transcode its existing Line 21 captions to Lines 15 and 16 to make captioning an integral part of its Project IRIS teletext service, which employs Telidon technology. The Canadian equipment mentioned in No. 2 above is being ordered from a leading manufacturer of Telidon products for the insertion of CCDA captions on Line 21 and it is designed with the potential for future insertion of captions on Lines 15 and 16 also. Future funding of Project IRIS and availability of teletext decoders at reasonable cost to the hearing-impaired will determine when teletext captioning would be practicable.

4. Three.

5. Closed captioning of CBC programs is done by the Canadian Captioning Development Agency (CCDA) under contract.

6. (a) In 1983-84, it is estimated that some $15,000 will be spent on closed captioning originally done in the United States for American programming purchased by the CBC. (b) CBC expenditures in 1983-84 for closed captioning of Canadian programming will amount to approximately $1,200,000. (c) Related expenses will comprise approximately $300,000, of which some two-thirds has been allocated to cover the one-time capital cost of captioning equipment.

7. (a) The CBC plans to include closed captions with news and public affairs programs as soon as possible. Some public affairs programs have been captioned during the past year, but many of these, like news, are not available in time for captioning to be done prior to broadcast. The CBC considers the addition of closed-captioned news and public affairs to be a high priority objective. Television newsroom equipment for the insertion of news captions is currently being evaluated by the CBC. It is hoped that this evaluation will prove sufficiently promising to permit some closed captioning of news to be undertaken experimentally in 1983-84. The Canadian Captioning Development Agency (CCDA) is also interestred in live, or real-time, captioning. (b) The House of Commons Question Period is currently being presented with sign language interpretation. Captioning will be introduced when a satisfactory method of real-time captioning has been developed.

8. Yes, as outlined in the reply to 7 (a) above.

9. Yes. The CBC believes that hearing-impaired viewers should have access to the same programs that hearing viewers enjoy to the extent that technology and resources can reasonably be expected to make them accessible.

CPP DISABILITY BENEFITS

Question No. 4,890—Mr. Blackburn:

1. With respect to Canada Pension Plan disability applications (a) how many disability applications were made (b) how many disability requests were approved since the inception of the Plan?

2. For each year since the Plan has been in existence, from the time of the first application to the date of final approval or rejection, what was the average length of time for the applications to be processed?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) Approximately 366,000 applications in total have been made for Canada Pension Plan disability benefits which first became payable in 1970. The Canada Pension Plan came into effect in 1966 but no disability benefits were payable until contributors had the opportunity of making contributions for five years, hence no disability benefit was payable prior to 1970. (b) The approximate number of these applications approved for payment is 255,000.

2. The statistics to indicate the length of time required to process a Canada Pension Plan disability application, from the time of receipt of the application to the time of approval or rejection, are available from 1979 only.

Since 1979 the average processing time for Canada Pension Plan disability applications in each year is listed below:

Fiscal Year		Number of days from receipt of application to date of first payment
1979-1980	—	142 days
1980-1981	—	146 days
1981-1982	—	121 days
1982-1983	—	105 days

In addition, it should be noted that 50 per cent of the Canada Pension Plan applications put into pay in March, 1983 took less than 84 days from the time of application to the time of first payment. For benefits approved in April, 1983, 50 per cent took less than 80 days for the same process.

CRIMINAL CODE

Question No. 4,908—Ms. McDonald:

1. For each year since 1970, what were the number of charges, convictions and types of sentences by sex and status (i.e. prostitute or customer) both on a national basis and for major cities under Sections 171, 173, 175, 176, 179, 181, 182, 183, 193, 194 and 195 of the Criminal Code?

2. (a) What are all the details of the internal monitoring of Bill C-127 of the First Session of the 32nd Parliament by the Department of Justice (b) are there any women's groups involved in the monitoring and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): 1. Statistics do not exist in the form requested.

2. (a) The Department of Justice is proposing to maintain a close federal and provincial co-operation with respect to the evaluation of the impact of Bill C-127. Provincial Deputy Ministers responsible for Criminal Justice will soon be contacted to seek their comments and suggestions on a proposed evaluation plan.

The proposed evaluation would seek to determine the impact of Bill C-127. More specifically, it would ask:

1. Is the new law (including its evidentiary provisions) resulting in the improvements it was designed to promote? Are more victims reporting offences, more charges made, more convictions registered? Are trials less onerous for victims? Have attitudes changed? Can the law be administered and enforced effectively?

2. Do major interest groups, the victims, the personnel of the criminal justice system institutions consider that the amendments balance the interests of the accused and the victims? Is there evidence to substantiate their views?

The details of the study will be developed in consultation with the parties involved. A tentative initial proposal includes four parts: (i) a longitudinal study of cases from report to police until disposition, including interviews with key actors;

(ii) a statistical comparison of relevant criminal justice system activity before and after passage of Bill C-127; (iii) a survey of Crown prosecutors; and (iv) a survey of sexual assault centers.

(b) The evaluation strategy provides for consultation with women's groups in general, and more specifically with groups associated with sexual assault centers in Canada. Details of this consultation have not yet been determined.

CPP ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 4,924—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Canada Pension Plan Advisory Committee and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the government?

2. (a) What are the terms of reference of the Committee (b) what matters did it consider in the fiscal year 1982-83 (c) how often did it meet and how often is it required to meet (d) what reports and/or recommendations did the Committee publish in the fiscal year 1982-83?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, per Section 117 of the Canada Pension Plan.

(a)	(b)(i)	(b)(ii)	(c)*
Members as of May 17, 1983	Occupational Representation	Current Appointment	Remuneration to Date During Current Appointment
Arthur, John	Retired Represents public at large	Appt'd: Mar/83 Expires: Dec/85	As of May 17, 1983, no claims submitted yet.
Baldwin, Robert (Chairman)	Labour Representative	Appt'd: Apr/82 Expires: Dec/83	$1,394.50
Broad, Anne	Retired Represents public at large	Appt'd: Jan/82 Expires: Dec/84	$3,018.05
De'Ath, Joan	Labour Representative	Appt'd: Apr/82 Expires: Dec/84	$4,272.66
Dulude, Louise	Self-Employed Lawyer	Appt'd: Mar/82 Expires: Dec/84	$1,120.35
Granger, Robert	Senior Executive Private Industry	Appt'd: Mar/83 Expires: Dec/85	As of May 17, 1983, no claims submitted yet.
Hogan, William	Self-Employed Industrial Safety	Appt'd: Mar/82 Expires: Dec/83	$2,851.55
MacDonnell, Heywood	Chartered Accountant	Appt'd: Oct/82 Expires: Dec/85	As of May 17, 1983, no claims submitted yet.
McCarthy, John	Retired Represents public at large	Appt'd: Apr/82 Expires: Dec/83	$1,144.13
Patenaude, Nicol	Self-Employed Doctor	Appt'd: Mar/82 Expires: Dec/84	$2,177.58
Thoem, Valerie	Self-Employed Management Consultant	Appt'd: Apr/82 Expires: Dec/83	$2,281.72
Unsworth, George	Chartered Accountant	Appt'd: Mar/82 Expires: Dec/84	$2,970.35

* Members are paid a per diem allowance (presently $125 and $175 for members and Chair respectively) for each day they attend Committee meetings or attend to matters related to Committee business. In addition, members are reimbursed for travel and living expenses incurred in the course of Committee business, in accordance with Treasury Board guidelines. The amounts shown in the above list include both the per diem payments and the travel and living expense reimbursements.

(d) All costs associated with the administration of Advisory Committee activities consistent with the mandate set down in Section 117 of the Canada Pension Plan are defrayed by the federal government.

2. (a) Terms of reference as per Section 117(5) and (6) of the Canada Pension Plan state:

(5) It is the duty of the Advisory Committee to review from time to time, as it deems appropriate or advisable, the operation of this Act, the state of the Canada Pension Plan Investment Fund and the adequacy of coverage and benefits under this Act, and to report to the Minister the results of such review.

(6) The Committee shall each year prepare a report to the Minister on its activities during the immediately preceding year, and a copy of such report shall be included in the annual report of the Minister under section 118.R.S., c. C-5, s. 117; 1974-75-76, c. 4, s. 53; 1976-77, c. 36, s. 25.

(b) In the fiscal year 1982-83, the Advisory Committee considered: the level of and eligibility requirements for CPP disability benefits; current and future funding provisions, investment policy and contribution rate under the CPP; the provision of benefits to homemakers under the CCP; and the role CPP retirement benefits should play in the overall retirement income system.

(c) In 1982-83 the full Committee met twice and there were five Sub-committee meetings. Section 117(3) of the Canada Pension Plan stipulates that the Advisory Committee shall meet at least once a year in the city of Ottawa, and at such other times and places as it deems necessary in order to carry out its duties.

(d) Per Section 117(5) of the Canada Pension Plan, the Advisory Committee submits its reports to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the fiscal year 1982-83, the Minister made public the Advisory Committee's report entitled Proposed Changes to Canada Pension Plan Disability Benefits.

VIA RAIL ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 4,930—Mr. Benjamin:

Did VIA Rail Canada Inc. receive notice from customers, agents or employees about passengers having to stand on trains running between Capreol and Hornepayne and, if so, what action is the company planning to provide suitable accommodation to meet the needs of passengers?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of VIA Rail Canada Inc. advises as follows:

VIA has operated one baggage/dormitory coach and one café coach (72 seats) on trains No 7 and 8 and this capacity has been sufficient to handle the demand most of the time. Since the beginning of March, 1983, one additional coach (76 seats) has been added to trains 7 and 8 on eight different occasions. Standees were reported on a few occasions, mostly during weekends.

In order to meet additional demand during the summer one extra coach (76 seats) will be added between Capreol and Hornepayne for the period shown below:

Train No. 7: On Thursday and Saturday from June 1 to June 30, then on Thursday, Saturday and Tuesday from July 2 to September 5.

Train No. 8: On Friday and Sunday from June 2 to July 1, then on Friday, Sunday and Wednesday from July 13 to September 6.

CNR RAILWAY LINE TO CHURCHILL

Question No. 4,934—Mr. Murphy:

1. What amount did the government and the Canadian National Railways spend on the CNR line to Churchill during each of the past five years?

2. What expenditures are being planned for each of the next five years?

3. Have studies been done by the Canadian National Railways and the Government on the Churchill rail line over the past five years and, if so, what were such studies?

4. Are studies being planned for each of the next five years and, if so, what are such studies?

5. Have studies been done or are studies being planned with respect to the use of hopper cars on the Churchill line and, if so, what were/are such studies?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways and Transport Canada advise as follows:

1. Under the Prairie Branch Line Rehabilitation Program, expenditures by the federal Government to the end of March, 1983 on Canadian National's Herchmer Subdivision totalled approximately $29.4 million. Expenditures during the past five years were as follows:

Gov't. fiscal year	Amount $(000)
1977/78/79	2,984
1979/80	6,669
1980/81	5,312
1981/82	5,825
1982/83	8,588

A further $763,000 is planned in 1983 under the current 1983/84 work program to cover the cost of surfacing after rail relay and to install ties in Churchill Yard. Since the inception of the Prairie Branch Line Rehabilitation Program, Canadian National has restricted its expenditures on the Herchmer Subdivision to maintenance accounts and has not made capital outlays.

2. The current rehabilitation agreement between Canadian National and the federal Government expires on March 31, 1984. New funds will be necessary to cover expenditures for items such as bridge rebuilding as well as sink hole and grade stabilization on the Herchmer Subdivision. Canadian National has been instructed by Transport Canada to prepare an integrated multi-year rehabilitation work program jointly with CP Rail for submission during the summer of 1983.

3 and 4. Yes. Concurrent with Prairie Branch Line Rehabilitation work on the Herchmer Subdivision, Canadian National entered into a contract with EBA Engineering Consultants to carry out embankment stabilization research on the line. The consultant's final report, submitted to Canadian National in September, 1982, shows promise, but it has not been resolved what action may be appropriate nor whether provisions will be made in future Federal Government Rehabilitation Programs to provide for continuing or new restoration procedures.

CN is working closely with Transport Canada on this matter and is recommending that at least one more season of monitoring existing test sites be carried out. It appears that the installation of heat pipes would help to control thaw settlement problems in the short term. However, there are too many unknowns with no technical assurance of long-term effectiveness to support the risk of this type of investment at present.

Another major concern is that the unstable subgrade problem is not restricted to the Herchmer Subdivision but also extends south beyond Gillam. There is no point in undertaking stabilization of the Herchmer Subdivision while neglecting the Thicket Subdivision.

5. Yes. The continued instability of the Herchmer and Thicket Subdivisions makes it impossible to guarantee that Canadian National will be able to handle hopper cars on the line to Churchill even with 100 lb. rail.

Transport Canada recently initiated a proposal whereby CN would co-operate with National Steel Car Corporation regarding the possibility of designing a hopper car with a lower centre of gravity and weight carrying capacity suitable for use on the Churchill line and light steel branch lines.

CN is also currently examining programs to extend the existing life of the box car fleet and/or replace the existing fleet with like equipment. Included in this type of program is, for example, the possibility of retrofitting journal brasses to roller bearings.

CANADA LANDS COMPANY (MIRABEL) LIMITED

Question No. 4,936—Mr. Fennell:

Since its inception, by year, what amount of Government assistance, special programs and/or grants were given to the Canada Lands Company (Mirabel) Limited?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): The Canada Lands Company (Mirabel) Limited was incorporated April 9, 1981. Total funds advanced are as follows:

Fiscal Year	($000's)
1981-82	11,301
1982-83	9,917
1983-84	2,214

Order Paper Questions

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO SKI RESORTS IN QUEBEC

Question No. 4,958—Mr. Herbert:

1. In the past five years, did the Government contribute financial assistance or guarantees for any ski resorts in Quebec and, if so, what amount was given or loaned, to whom and under what conditions of repayment?

2. (a) Was a request made for government financial assistance for the ski resort on Rigaud Mountain in Quebec (b) was the request denied and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. In the past five years, the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Industry Trade and Commerce have not allowed Quebec ski resorts any loan guarantees. The Departments have, however, granted financial assistance for five projects in the form of non-repayable subsidies as follows:

Mont Tremblant (1980-81-82) through the Subsidiary Agreement on Tourism Development	$8,000,000
Thetford Ski Club (1982-83) Special employment-related initiative	$ 311,000
Mont Fortin Ski Club Inc. (1983-84) Special employment-related initiative	$ 300,000
Chikanki Ski Resort (1982-83) Special employment-related initiative	$ 20,500
Petite Rivière Saint-François (1982-83) For an audio-visual presentation of the region	$ 23,000

2. (a) No. (b) Not applicable.

NRC INFORMATION FOLDER

Question No. 4,965—Mrs. Cossitt:

Does the National Research Council of Canada publish a grey and black information folder to enclose press releases and information packages and, if so (a) what is the cost per year of publishing the folder (b) what is the purpose of enclosing these documents in a folder of this type (c) what is the name and job designation of the highest official authorizing the publication (d) what is the name of the firm that prints the folder?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned the answer is as follows: Yes.

(a) Approximately $160 per year. (b) These folders are designed to enclose information packages to facilitate their retention in one place and are used for prospective employees. On one recent occasion they were used for a group of press releases pertaining to announcements of Special Recovery Capital Projects for the National Research Council. (c) Mr. Ray Dolan, Chief, Personnel Services Branch. (d) Buchanan Printers, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

NRC BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Question No. 4,967—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the composition of the Board of Directors of the National Research Council of Canada and what is the address and occupation of each individual?

2. What is the compensation and what are all the benefits paid to the chairperson, directors, president and vice-presidents of the Council?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned the answer is as follows:

1. Pursuant to the National Research Council Act (Section 5(1)) the Council consists of a President and not more than 2 other members to be appointed by the Governor in Council.

Members of the National Research Council of Canada

Dr. L. Kerwin
President
National Research Council of Canada
Ottawa, Ontario. K1A 0R6

Dr. R. E. Bell
Rutherford Professor of Physics
McGill University
3600 University Street
Montreal, Quebec. H3A 2T8

Dr. A. Benedek
President
Zenon Environmental Inc.
845 Harrington Court
Burlington, Ontario. L7N 3P3

Mr. W. A. Cumming
Executive Vice-President
National Research Council of Canada
Ottawa, Ontario. K1A 0R6

Mr. R. De Coster
President
Société d'assurance-dépôts du Canada
2172 Parc Bourbonnière
Sillery, Quebec. G1T 1B4

Dr. D. J. Doyle
President
Doyle Tech Corp.
Suite 202
4019 Carling Avenue
Kanata, Ontario. K2K 2A3

Dr. F.E.F. Dunford
Associate Professor
Faculty of Administrative Studies
University of Manitoba
Winnipeg, Manitoba. R3T 2N2

Mr. D. A. Eisenhauer
President
Atlantic Bridge Co. Limited
81 Tannery Road
P.O. Box 1120
Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. B0J 2C0

Dr. U. M. Franklin
Professor
Department of Metallurgy and Materials Science
University of Toronto
Toronto, Ontario. M5S 1A4

Mr. J. G. Fredette
Vice-president—Quebec
Monenco
P.O. Box 6088
Montreal, Quebec. H3C 3Z8

Dr. A. Cabana
Dean
Faculty of Science
Sherbrooke University
Sherbrooke, Quebec. J1K 2R1

Miss J. Clark
Ogilvy & Renault
1981 McGill College Avenue
Montreal, Quebec. H3A 3C1

Dr. B. M. Craig
Director
Prairie Regional Laboratory
National Research Council of Canada
110 Gymnasium Road, U Campus
Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. S7N 0W9

Dr. J. D. Keys
Philip A. Lapp Limited
14A Hazelton Avenue
Toronto, Ontario. M5R 2E2

Dr. P. A. Larkin
Professor
Institute of Animal Resource Ecology
University of British Columbia
2204 Main Mall
Vancouver, British Columbia. V6T 1W5

Dr. G. LeBlanc
Associate Professor Department of Chemistry
University of Moncton
Moncton, New Brunswick. E1A 3E9

Dr. E. J. LeRoux
Assistant Deputy Minister
Research Branch
Agriculture Canada
Sir John Carling Building
930 Carling Avenue, Room 761
Ottawa, Ontario. K1A 0C5

Dr. J. C. Madden
President
Microtel Pacific Research Limited
8999 Nelson Way
Burnaby, British Columbia. V5A 4B5

Dr. P. M. Maher
Dean
Faculty of Management
University of Calgary
2500 University Drive N.W.
Calgary, Alberta. T2N 1N4

Mr. M. P. Smith
Assistant General Manager—Credit
Scotiabank
The Bank of Nova Scotia
Toronto Regional Office
44 King Street West
Toronto, Ontario. M5H 1H1

2. Chairperson, The President is the Chairperson for the Council and does not receive compensation or benefits for this role.

Directors. Section 12 of the National Research Council states:

"12. (1) The members of the Council, other than the President, shall serve without remuneration, but each such member is entitled to be paid reasonable travelling and other expenses incurred by him while absent from his ordinary place of residence in the course of his duties under this Act.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a member of the Council other than the President may, for any period during which he performs with the approval of the Council any duties on behalf of the Council in addition to his ordinary duties as a member thereof, be paid such remuneration therefor as may be authorized by the Council. R.S., c. N-14, s. 12; 1976-77, c. 24, s. 58."

The current rate of remuneration under this clause is $200 per day.

President. Order in Council appointee in a salary range equivalent to DM-1, effective July 1, 1982; $75,360 to $88,670.

Vice-presidents. Salary range July 1, 1982; $58,724 to $74,200.

CFDC BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Question No. 4,979—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the composition of the Board of Directors of the Canadian Film Development Corporation and what is the address and occupation of each individual?

2. What is the compensation and what are all the benefits paid to the chairperson, directors, president and vice-presidents of the Corporation?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows:

1. CFDC Board Members

Mr. Ed Prévost President & Chief Executive Officer, La Brasserie O'Keefe, 990 Notre-Dame West, Montreal, Quebec H3C 1K2	appointed Chairman on April 1, 1983 for five years
Mr. James De B. Domville, Government Film Commissioner & Chairman of the National Film Board, P.O. Box 6100, Station "A", 3155 Côte de Liesse, Montreal, Quebec H3C 3H5	ex officio January 8, 1979 for five years
Mr. Claude Morin, Produits Petro Canada, Public Affairs, 1 Place Ville Marie, 18th Floor, Montreal, Quebec H3B 4A9	appointed member on August 1, 1980 for 5 years
Mr. Claude Bruneau, Corporation du Groupe la Laurentienne, Executive Vice-President, 507 Place d'Armes, Montreal, Quebec H2Y 2W8	appointed member on June 18, 1981 for five years
Mr. David S.R. Leighton, Chairman of the Board, Nabisco Brand Ltd., 1123 Riverdale Avenue S.W., Calgary, Alberta T2S 0Y9	appointed member on July 16, 1981 for five years
Mrs. Muriel Sherrin, Director, Toronto International Festival, 508 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ontario M5V 2B3	appointed member on December 2, 1982 for five years
One vacancy

2. In the case of the Chairman, the Honorarium has been fixed by the Privy Council (P.C. 1982-1411) at $325 per day for activities related to CFDC Board matters.

In the case of the other Board members, with the exception of the Government Film Commissioner who does not receive any fee, honorariums are fixed by By-Law no 1 of the Corporation, approved by the Minister of Communications on March 27, 1982. This fee is $225 per day for activities related to CFDC Board matters. The Council members are reimbursed for any reasonable travel expenses.

The CFDC has an Executive Director who is responsible for the Corporation's operations, rather than an operational president or vice-presidents. The Executive Director receives a salary at the "GIC 7" level, set by the Privy Council (P.C. 1982-4056).

CANADA COUNCIL BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Question No. 4,983—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the composition of the Board of Directors of the Canada Council and what is the address and occupation of each individual?

2. What is the compensation and what are all the benefits paid to the chairperson, directors, president and vice-presidents of the Council?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am advised by the Canada Council as follows:

1. See list below. (It is assumed that this question refers to the Chairman and members of the Canada Council, since there is in law and usage no "Board of Directors" and no "President" or "Vice-presidents").

2. (a) Compensation: (i) Chairman, and Vice-Chairman acting for the Chairman: an honorarium of $325 per day while on Council business; (ii) Members of Council, including the Vice-Chairman in his ordinary capacity: an honorarium of $225 per day while in attendance at meetings of the Council; The Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Members are also reimbursed for actual and reasonable travel expenses. (b) Benefits paid: None.

Members of the Board of the Canada Council

Chairman

Mavor Moore Toronto	University Professor, Actor, Playwright

Vice-Chairman
Jean-Jacques Fortier Montreal	Businessman
Members
Gordon Dowsley Willowdale	Financial Planning Officer
Peter R. Duffield Montreal	Business Consultant
Celia Franca Ottawa	Consultant in Dance Administration
Gerald Fraser Saskatoon	Businessman
Marc Gagné Ste-Foy	University Professor
Nicholas Goldschmidt Toronto	Artistic Director—Music Festivals
Julien Hébert Montreal	Professor of Design & Sculpture
Marilyn Huband Winnipeg	Community Services
William Kilbourn Toronto	Writer and University Professor
Sandra Lynne LeBlanc Calgary	Community Services
Elizabeth McGowan Charlottetown	Community Services
Patrick O'Flaherty St. John's	University Professor
Penny Petrone Thunder Bay	University Professor
Ruth Schiller Osoyoos, (B.C.)	Community Services
Marcel Sormany Edmunston	Retired University Administrator
H. Arnold Steinberg Montreal	Businessman
Norman Young Vancouver	University Professor

TEACHING OF FRENCH IN LOUISIANA

Question No. 4,986—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Did the Government on its own or in co-operation with the Government of any Province make any arrangement with the State of Louisiana to provide the State with French language teachers and, if so, were the teachers sent upon (a) the request of the State of Louisiana (b) the decision of (i) the Government (ii) the Government in co-operation with the Government of any Province?

2. Was there any type of agreement or contract made between (a) the Government and the State of Louisiana (b) the Government, any provincial Government and the State of Louisiana to employ the teachers to teach French in Louisiana and, if so, what were the terms of the contract or agreement?

3. What was (a) the length of time the teachers were contracted to teach the French language in Louisiana (b) the amount of financial compensation or support paid to the teachers during the calendar year (i) 1981 (ii) 1982 (iii) 1983 for teaching the French language in Louisiana, including all travel expenses to and from their starting point in Canada and their destination in Louisiana, the actual wage received for teaching, and any funding for accommodation while teaching in Louisiana?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No. The Government, however, through our Consulate General in New Orleans subsidizes programs of a cultural nature managed by CODOFIL (Council for the Development of French in Louisiana). CODOFIL is an independent organization established by the Louisiana Legislature and subsidized in part by that elective body. CODOFIL is also granted subsidies by Canadian provincial Governments.

2. No. French language teachers are hired directly by CODOFIL.

3. See above.

[Translation]

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—SHOOTING DOWN OF SOUTH KOREAN AIRCRAFT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 30 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the immoral shooting down of a South Korean civilian aircraft by the Soviet Union resulting in a loss of 269 lives including those of ten Canadians. Such a grave event demands immediate government action to ensure the protection of Canadians and citizens of other countries who travel on civilian aircraft on international routes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is asking leave to debate a very grave and important question. Again, I must refer to Beauchesne which states that the specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration for discussion for which the adjournment of the House is sought under Standing Order 30:

—must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention.

I have come to the conclusion that within the terms of Standing Order 30(4) the subject matter of the proposed motion is indeed a proper subject for discussion within the terms of this rule.

May I favour the House with a brief explanation of the procedure. In the circumstances the House may either give its consent that the matter be considered, in which case it will be considered this evening at eight o'clock; alternatively if the House does not give its consent I will ask those in favour of having it considered to rise, and if 20 or more Members rise it will be in order to consider the motion at eight o'clock this evening.

Does the House agree to the urgent debate on this particular matter?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The debate will take place at eight o'clock this evening.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1983

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau that Bill C-152, an Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I had just undertaken to commence my remarks when the lunch recess occurred. As Members are aware, this Bill that we are debating has now been split as a result of our Party's stand.

The present Bill will deal with the reorganization of DREE, or DRIE, as it is now known. I have mentioned this before, and will say it again, that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was a particular Department of great interest to the rural parts of Canada and, of course, to the disadvantaged parts of Canada. This new Department called DRIE—and I hope it does not mean that money will dry up—is just a subsidiary of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I know that right across the country grave concern has been expressed about how important this Department is going to be and whether it will get the high priority it should. Unlike earlier regional development incentives, these grants, loans and guarantees are now available across Canada. That might be a two-edged sword. Whereas DREE areas were specifically allocated to the have-not areas, the new set-up actually provides grants across the entire country, even for the most buoyant economies. To those of us from the smaller areas and out in the country the idea of Metropolitan Toronto and some other big centres being eligible for grants will probably raise some concern. At least we know they are in tier one, meaning that large centres will not get the high percentages available. But industry, which has in the past looked favourably on some of the remote rural areas and has set up in those areas because of the incentives, grants, tax advantages and labour situation which was satisfactory, may say, "With a smaller percentage of grant, we will remain in the industrial heartland where there is a greater pool of labour and where there may be slightly higher taxes." By and large they weigh it in the balance and decide to stay where they are or, in the case of new industry, it locates in those areas. It was for those reasons back in 1969 that DREE was formed and came out strongly in favour of disadvantaged areas. Many of us in rural areas, many of whom represent DREE designated areas, will be looking at this matter with some concern as to whether it will be an advantage in the long run.

● (1550)

The maximum level of support in each of the 260 census districts is determined by a development index calculated on the base of the employment rate which is weighted 50 per cent, 40 per cent on per capita disposable income and provincial fiscal capacity. As I mentioned, there are four different tiers of grants. Of course the first tier is for the entire country. The tier in which a census district is located will determine the maximum sharing ratio, the maximum amount repayable and the minimum approved capital costs. Clearly there are problems with this index.

As I mentioned earlier, one area in my riding, the Parry Sound district, was eligible and will remain eligible under the third tier, whereas the regional municipality of Muskoka, another part of my riding, was not eligible and now becomes eligible on a lower grant basis under the second tier.

There are major problems. The first is that many labour force regions are extremely large, as is the case in my particular riding. It is possible that the high unemployment rate of one census district will be offset by a lower unemployment rate of another. The second problem is that unemployment rates tell only part of the story. It is uncommon, for example, in my riding for the number of unemployment insurance beneficiaries to exceed the official number of unemployed. People do not look for jobs when there are none available. Hence they are not counted among the unemployed. Whereas the unemployment figures show that there are 1.5 million unemployed, when we take into consideration the great number of people who have exhausted their benefits, who have been unable to find work in recent years and who are either eking out an existence with their savings or have had to resort to welfare assistance, we realize that indeed the situation is very tragic.

I am aware that the new Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) mentioned that a very large sum of money has been designated—I believe it is $1.2 billion—over a period of time to provide jobs. Hopefully this will get under way. Also I assume that some of this money will be channelled through the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to provide jobs.

We are aware of how many young people are unemployed. The figures are quite staggering. Earlier I heard a figure of around 20 per cent. Also an announcement was made concerning a special youth department which will zero in on employment and jobs for youth. Let us hope that these jobs will be meaningful and permanent ones, not 16-week or 20-week jobs to qualify young persons for future unemployment payments. I know that young people are very dismayed. Some have almost given up the hope at their young age of obtaining anything in the forseeable future.

The breakdown of the tiers is certainly worth mentioning. Of course, the fourth tier is where the economy is at its lowest, where 5 per cent of the population has the greatest need. I believe the third tier is 5 per cent to 20 per cent and the second tier is 20 per cent to 35 per cent of the population. Of course, the balance of the country comes into the first tier.

This Department must consider the importance of small business. The small business sector, as I understand it and as has been mentioned time and again, provides over 50 per cent of the jobs in Canada. In recent months it has provided the most stimulus for new jobs. I hope the new Department will place particular emphasis upon the small business sector and ensure that funds are available for it. It was mentioned previously that industry by and large prefers tax incentives to grants. I appreciate that, but I want to emphasize that in disadvantaged areas which are endeavouring to attract new industry tax incentives will certainly not be any great carrot for it to locate there. These grants must be available.

Also I hope there will be a greater speed-up in the investigation of applications. As a rural Member I have had many applicants ask me to look into their applications to see what is the holdup. Of course, I have approached the regional offices and I can say that the officers in charge are certainly most helpful. Time and again they have said, "It takes time". Many prospective industries coming into an area cannot wait an interminable length of time. I hope the new Department and its officials will see to it that the applications are processed much quicker.

Another point worthy of mention is the fact that many grants hinge on both provincial and federal co-operation. For example, infrastructure payments are paid percentagewise by both levels of Government. In some cases the municipal Government participates. In the past, as a federal Member of Parliament I have approached officials in the regional office of DREE. They have stated, "Mr. Darling, you do not have to worry at all. We have done everything. It is ready to go. The only problem is that the Province is holding it up." Then I immediately contacted the provincial counterpart and got the same story. They would say, "Everything is fine. We have done everything but the federal Government has not given its royal assent as yet." I guess it is the old story of blaming someone else, but I know the process could be speeded up a great deal if both levels of bureaucracy got their acts together, and if there was any hitch in one or the other they could iron it out themselves. In two or three different cases I have had possible industrialists finally throwing up their hands because of the red tape and the delay. They were told that it would be several months down the road, so they just gave up. I know of several small industries in one area which are still on hold or waiting for something to come up. This is not going to help job creation.

● (1600)

As I said before, I am aware that the federal Government knows how serious the situation is. It knows the state of the economy. Even though we in the Opposition are just guessing, I would assume that in the very near future the federal Government will have to make an announcement of a great amount of money available for job creation.

Apparently the economy is on the upswing, although it was mentioned today that the graph seems to be going down. Let us hope that is a temporary situation. Whether we like it or not, we are in for a pretty tough winter as far as jobs are concerned. The unemployment situation will be very serious for many, if not all, constituencies in Canada.

This morning the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) quoted figures with regard to the sizeable amount of money going to various regions under the new DRIE Program. I believe he stated that for the Province of Quebec, the amount will go from $98 million to $124 million. The Atlantic Provinces will get a considerable boost, from $109 million to $230 million. My Province, Ontario, has the most unemployment in the country. I concede that is logical because it has the greatest population. The amount will be increased from $33 million to $40 million, not a very large sum.

I mentioned earlier that for a number of years I served on the DREE committee. Until a year or a year and a half ago, I assumed that DREE grants were for the same amounts across the board. Eligible districts or regions of Ontario received DREE grants of 25 per cent, give or take, based on the capital cost of equipment, machinery and equipment. In some cases the grants were made having regard to the number of new jobs generated.

When the DREE committee visited the Maritimes, my eyes were opened. Along with other Members of the committee, I visited the great Province of Newfoundland. When I heard that the grants there were not in the order of 25 per cent, as I thought but in some cases as high as 90 per cent, I scratched my head. On visiting New Brunswick, I was again told of very substantial DREE grants. I am aware there is high unemployment in that area, but in parts of the Province of Ontario there are also great pockets of unemployment. The melon was not being divided as fairly as possible. I see you are beginning to rise, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude my remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Member rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? The rules provide for a ten-minute period of questions and answers.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I would ask the Member who just spoke to state briefly the Conservative Party position, if there were in government, as to whether they would keep the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Would they keep the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, as a few members said they would, or would they do away with it, consolidating it into a larger department, as other members have suggested?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been here this morning, he would know that that question was posed by one of his illustrious colleagues and was answered.

Mr. Waddell: It was not answered.

Mr. Darling: It was answered. I will give the same answer. We certainly have supported the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. A great many are now concerned that it is a subdepartment of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I can assure the Hon. Member that I say that definitely we should have a specific Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. It is a very important Department. I could name several other ministries or Departments which do not add nearly as much to the economy as the Department that provides grants and jobs for the entire country, including the Hon. Member's own area.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his answer. To quote him, he said he was one—

Mr. Darling: Of many.

Mr. Waddell: One of many Members who support keeping the Department. Does that mean, as I think it does, that there are others who would not keep the Department? Again I ask him the question so that I can get a straight answer. I do not ask for his own individual position or the position of some or even all Members of his Party. What is his Party's position as to whether they are going to re-create the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, all I can do is to repeat what I have already said. The Hon. Member should have been here this morning. I repeat that I am confident that our Party will see that there is a Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to speak to the matter before the House. It is of considerable importance to a significant area of my constituency, particularly the census division of Brandon. I lament the passing of DREE, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. That Department did succeed, at least to some degree, in redressing some of the regional disparities which have so often hampered the growth of industrialization in Canada.

One advantage of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was to provide incentives for the less industrialized areas, particularly in the Province of Manitoba. It did that in such a manner that a number of jobs have been created since 1969. According to my statistics, 20,000 jobs were created in the Province of Manitoba since 1969. That was the result of some 850 grants totalling $225 million, leading to a total investment of over $1 billion in terms of 1982 dollars.

What concerns me is that the new criteria before the House as part of the DRIE Program as distinct from the DREE Program will mean that large segments of western Canada, particularly my own area of Brandon, and areas such as Selkirk in the Province of Manitoba, will not be eligible under this program as they were under the last program for this type of financial assistance.

I am told that 77 per cent of the projects which occurred since 1969 as a result of DREE would not have occurred under DRIE. That is a very staggering percentage. I am also told that 34 per cent of the expansion that occurred in Manitoba as a result of DREE would not have occurred under DRIE. This means there would be $470 million fewer dollars invested in the Province of Manitoba and a loss of 10,000 jobs; 10,000 jobs during a time of high unemployment. That is something which the Province of Manitoba cannot accept.

Those who established DREE were well aware of some of the peculiar difficulties which exist in western Canada, difficulties which have retarded the even economic development of this country. There are too few large urban centres to serve as markets for manufacturers in our region. We have a tremendous distance to cover before we can produce goods and get them to the large eastern markets. As a result of that distance, we are in a situation where we have to face very high freight costs which will work very much to the disadvantage of local manufacturers in all of western Canada, particularly in the area of Manitoba from which I come, in communities such as Brandon.

• (1610)

In addition, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure all of the Members of the House are aware, Government policies in the past have led to the structuring of freight rates in such a way that we have been encouraged to export our primary goods and we have been discouraged from producing manufactured goods. Unfortunately, there is nothing in this legislation which takes that particular disadvantage into consideration.

As you may be aware, Mr. Speaker, one of the historical by-products of our natural disadvantages has been the growth of a considerable amount of alienation within western Canada. This alienation has resulted in the past in such developments as the secessionist movement in the 1880s which was led by a group called the Manitoba Northwest Farmers' Union. There was also the growth of the Progressive movement in the 1920s, which was a rejection of the traditional Party politics as we know them. In 1935, there was the emergence of the Social Credit movement, which was extremely anti-eastern in terms of its orientation. Even more recently and more disturbingly, in the 1970s and 1980s we have had the growth of a western separation movement. To give credit to the Government that sits across from me in the House, the DREE Program helped to lessen that alienation to some degree. Unfortunately, what it has now proposed will not do that, and in fact, it may lead to an intensification of that alienation.

In my opinion, the spirit which motivates this particular Bill is admirable. That is, there is a desire to streamline the legislation. But unfortunately, the criterion which has been employed is disastrous in its impact upon small communities.

As you may or may not be aware, Mr. Speaker, that the community of Brandon, a city of some 40,000 people, has been placed in the same category or tier, tier one, as the cities of Edmonton, Calgary and Toronto. That means that those people who are interested in investing in our community and people such as elected municipal officials and those responsible for the development of industry within our community are now at a tremendous disadvantage. In the past, they had the opportunity to encourage industries to come to smaller western communities because they could apply for DREE grants and, hopefully, receive them. Any industry coming into our community now is no more eligible to receive assistance than those that exist in larger urban communities. As a result, because of the natural disadvantages which exist, we are not likely to receive the new kind of industry which we are seeking.

It is ludicrous to think, Mr. Speaker, that a community such as Brandon situated in western Canada, a community of only 40,000 people, has the same opportunity to attract new industries as cities with a million people or more.

What is wrong with this program, Mr. Speaker? What is basically wrong with it is that the criterion which has been employed for the establishment of tier one, tier two, tier three and tier four has been too narrowly defined. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the principal criterion that is applied is unemployment statistics. I come from a community which is essentially a small urban market centre serving a fairly large rural area. One of the developments which occurs in such a centre is that out of necessity, and tragically so, we lose many of our young people to larger urban communities. In fact, it has been said that we have had to export our unemployed. The statistics, therefore, are grossly misleading. While we do have unemployment statistics showing less than the national average, what those statistics do not indicate is the number of people who have left to go to eastern Canada, to Provinces such as Alberta and British Columbia.

In addition, another criterion employed in the establishment of tier one, tier two, tier three and tier four is the level of income. I therefore find it very difficult to understand how our community, which Statistics Canada recently indicated was ninety-ninth on a list of 100 in terms of per capita income, could possibly find itself placed therefore in the tier one category.

We need a reclassification if this Bill is to achieve the objective which it purports to achieve. We need a reclassification that takes natural, regional and geographic disadvantages into consideration. Some consideration must be given to the distance factor and to the freight costs which our manufacturers must take into consideration. Some consideration must also be given to the amount of local capital which is available. Unfortunately, under the provisions of tier one, new industries coming to Brandon my community are not eligible to receive financial assistance. Even in the case of expansion, the project must be worth a quarter of a million dollars in order to qualify.

During the course of the campaign for the recent by-election, I visited many small businessmen. I was impressed by their enthusiasm and I was impressed by their spirit of innovation. What distresses me, Mr. Speaker, is that this legislation does nothing to encourage the small businessman. It does nothing to encourage anyone who wishes to expand but has a project that is valued at less than a quarter of a million dollars. Unfortunately, it does absolutely nothing to encourage any investor or any businessman to establish a new venture in the Brandon census district. It therefore seems to me that those who have drafted this legislation have failed to take the natural disadvantages which exist into consideration, and furthermore, they have failed to take the size of communities into consideration size and they have failed to bear in mind that unemployment statistics can be very misleading. Therefore it is important that this Bill be redrafted and, if not, it is important that this Bill be defeated.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak for a short time about this particular Bill concerning regional development and the consolidation of various Government Departments that deal with regional development. A few minutes ago, Mr. Speaker, you heard me direct a question to a Conservative Member as to what the Conservative policy was. I asked him about his Party's policy in this area, not about his own particular opinion. Trying to get an answer on policy from the Conservative Party in Canada is like trying to nail down jelly. As my friends wake up, I say to them that at some point they will have to tell the Canadian people what they stand for.

Miss MacDonald: We did in Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. Waddell: They certainly did not in Central Nova where the Party leader was unable to set down exactly what the Conservative Party policy was when dealing with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

I know that things look rosy for Conservative Members today, but at some point—

Mr. Epp: Were you in Mission-Port Moody?

Mr. Waddell: I was in Mission-Port Moody. The people wanted to get rid of the Liberal Government. But at some point the people are going to ask what we are going to put in its place; another dilettante, perhaps, or a Party with no particular policy? We will wait and see—

Miss MacDonald: What about Vancouver-Kingsway?

Mr. Waddell: We will wait and see what Conservative Members have to offer. So far, they have been unable to enunciate policy. So far, they have been favouring some policies that I think are detrimental to Canadian people, specifically the so-called cruel and harsh restraint policies of Premier Bill Bennett in British Columbia which they have supported under the table. Those things will be debated in the future, but let me say something about this particular Bill. Let me speak about the problem with this particular Bill as I see it. My real concern is with the second part of this Bill, the consolidation of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the DREE Department or the Regional Economic Expansion Department. What I think it means, Mr. Speaker, is that what the Bill will do, in fact, is make Industry, Trade and Commerce a major Government Department responsible for all of the internal business dealings in Canada, to put it broadly, whether large or small business, and the Department of External Affairs will deal with foreign trade as well as foreign matters of state that do not concern trade. I will point out later some of the problems that this will create, but in terms of regional development, what does this Bill mean?

We all want regional development in Canada. At least those of us from the West do. The Hon. Member who last spoke put it very well when he spoke about the need for having development in the smaller towns of Canada and the need to move away from central Canada and get some industrial development in other parts of Canada. In a long and narrow country like Canada, that need has been a consistent problem.

As I understand it, the way this Bill works is that DREE as a Department will be gone and Industry, Trade and Commerce will have project directors in each Province who will assess the regions and the projects and will report to a group in Ottawa called MSERD. It sounds a bit absurd, but it means the Minstry of State for Economic and Regional Development, or MSERD, as only those in Ottawa can say. The idea is that this will plug the regions into a high level of Cabinet and the employment Minister, I think, will then go directly to the central inner Cabinet with these regional concerns. Now that sounds good on paper. That sounds like the way regional development should be created, but there are some concerns. I found out about these concerns specifically last weekend when the NDP caucus held its retreat in Nova Scotia. The concerns were that if the Department of Regional Economic Expansion were abolished—a department created specifically to meet regional needs—and regional Development was put into the larger Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, perhaps some of the principles of regional concern will be forgotten. Perhaps they will not receive as high a priority as if there were a separate Department. That is what Alexa McDonough, the Leader of the NDP in Nova Scotia and other people there, told us. I have heard Members of the House say that in pretty well the same language, today.

• (1620)

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is going to favour the big guy. It will favour the big corporations that it is dealing with and will forget about the little guy who more often than not is involved in regional development and the creation of jobs in the region.

That is why we are concerned and very suspicious about this reorganization, Mr. Speaker. We are suspicious also that the Liberal Party may try to channel more money into, and put more emphasis on, one specific part of Ontario, namely southern Ontario, in order to pick up votes for the election that is coming. It seems that the election, the Government, turns on which Party wins those particular seats.

In sum, the Committee will have to look at whether this kind of scheme, which looks all right on paper, will really work to serve the regional interests.

There is a problem when foreign trade is combined with the Department of External Affairs. If I may paraphrase Lord Durham, we have two great Departments, one looking after affairs of state and the other looking after foreign trade, now in the bosom of one, the Department of External Affairs. It seems to me that this gives rise to conflict very much in the way that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development gives rise to conflict. As an example, take the Korean airliner which has been shot down and the problem that that creates with the Soviet Union; one part of the Department must deal with this problem while the other part of the Department must deal with the grain trade and trade in manufactured goods with the Soviet Union. In this way a conflict is built in. When the Bill goes to Committee it will have to look into that aspect.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there are problems connected with Bill C-152, and we will have to discuss them in Committee. I also think we need an industrial stragegy for all the different sectors in this vast country of ours.

[English]

It seems to me that industrial strategy goes far beyond a Bill like this. It involves an assessment of our strengths in every region, getting development money into the regions, and making a plan. We must make the plan or the private companies, the big multinationals, will plan it for us in the interests of their shareholders. We must make a regional plan on behalf of the whole country. We cannot write off the Government, as the Conservative Party suggests with its new Reaganomics. That is not in the Canadian tradition nor is it in the Conservative tradition if they look at that, but as far as I can see that is what they propose to do.

What we have to do is to take the combination of private and public interests with the small business in the regions. The Government must take over one of the Canadian banks in order to direct capital to job creation and to small businesses in the regions. At the present time bank loans are going to the Domes and to the Nelson Skalbanias of this world. Money is not going to small business in the regions. That is the kind of new policy that the NDP would look for. This is the way to create jobs in Canada.

This Bill is just a tinkering with the existing system which is not working and is not creating jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and answers are not permitted after the eight hour period of debate. Members are limited now to ten minutes. I recognize the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) for showing up in the riding of Mission-Port Moody. He obviously assisted us greatly in winning that seat.

I should like to explain to the Hon. Member that this Party does have a position. One of our positions is to create jobs. That is the policy of the Progressive Conservative Government that will come into force after the next election. The Hon. Member feels that we do not have any policy, but we do, Mr. Speaker; we are developing it. Give us time and we will come in and create jobs. Many auto workers will be behind this Party 100 per cent.

I think this Bill will create more confusion in the business community of the country. We will have a Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and we will have a Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Trade has been moved from its traditional place over to External Relations.

Perhaps some large lobby group could understand what the Government is trying to do, but the medium and small business people do not have a clue nor do they have the money or resources to try to survive in Canada. The failing of the Government is that it is not assisting industries to get started or new businesses to get started and thus create employment in Canada.

The Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development, MSERD, will have offices in every city in Canada and so will the Minister for Regional and Industrial Expansion. A businessman will have to try to figure out which office he should contact.

This whole situation means a proliferation of the bureaucracy. It also allows the Government to circumvent its six and five formula which it claims has been such a bonanza for Canada. It has done nothing for the country, Mr. Speaker, but protect the civil servant.

I believe that one area will benefit greatly from the IRDP grants that come under the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I believe that Cornwall should really benefit under the program. As $300 million has been designated for this, it is about all it can do to carry on a few new industries for a couple of years. What will happen to those industries afterwards is the big question.

Let me go back to some of the responsibilities of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Trade outside of Canada has been removed but Trade and Commerce within Canada has been added. When a company is trying to design a manufacturing facility and to distinguish between what goes out of the country and what stays in the country, it finds out how much it has for export and how much for domestic consumption. It does not assist industry to have to deal with one Department on one subject and with another Department on another. Furthermore, I do not believe the Government should be selling the product. I believe the private sector should be given the incentive to sell its own products. There are no salesmen in Government but there are salesmen in private industry who can sell these products.

The major criticism that we have is that we are going back to grants. Grants have not been successful. Even though we support DREE 100 per cent, it has not been successful in accomplishing the development of further expansion in those parts of the country that require assistance because of a tremendous loss of employment. It has also thrown into this new ministry small business and, Mr. Speaker, small businesses do not have the expertise, the personnel nor the lobby groups. The Canadian Federation of Business and the Canadian Independent Association of Small Business have both condemned this Bill as not giving any assistance to the small business community. And when you realize, Mr. Speaker, that about 85 per cent of the businesses in this country are small businesses, you can see that this is very important to the mass of people out in the country. Therefore, I do not know why the Government has put this change through because it is accomplishing nothing. What it should be addressing is the creation of jobs and putting the emphasis back into the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to create new jobs in Canada. The intent of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was to look after international industries, attract foreign industries to this country and attract Canadians to invest in businesses which could create employment. This is not being done by this new Department. Furthermore, two Departments are being put together which were at odds with each other. Industry, Trade and Commerce was looking after the survival of successful business and DREE was put in place to assist marginal industries to become successful and to create labour in those parts of Canada which do not have their fair share of industrial employment. These two Departments are now thrown together, and who is going to get the emphasis from this Government? I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal Government is intent on reducing the number of businesses because the more businesses there are, the larger will be the consistuency they have to deal with which is unhappy with their policy. I would say very simply that we on this side are very much in opposition to this change. We are very much in opposition to this Bill. It only restructures something for the bureaucracy. It does nothing for the citizens of Canada.

• (1630)

Part of the purpose of this new organization, this new ministry, is to decide to whom and where the money should go. The people who should decide that, Mr. Speaker, are in the marketplace. A bureaucrat who has never been in the private business world, a bureaucrat who has very seldom been outside Ottawa, has no concept of what can be successful and what cannot. There is, through this new organization, absolutely, no co-operation with the provincial Governments, which could help the bureaucrats in indicating what industry can survive in the Maritimes or in northern Ontario and what industry will survive in southern Ontario.

An analysis is needed. Fill-in is needed from the business sector. This responsibility should be left up to the people in the marketplace. What they have done, I believe, is to destroy the benefits we had under DREE and the benefits we had under Industry, Trade and Commerce, which have been thrown together as if in a Mixmaster, hoping that something better will come out. Usually when you use a Mixmaster and mix things up, they come out sweeter. I believe, Mr. Speaker, this is going to come out sour and everyone will be unhappy. The only people it will benefit are those people who are great friends of the Liberal Party.

This is not a sound way, Mr. Speaker, to generate jobs in Canada. Today we have the highest unemployment in this country's history. We are going through a serious recession. We are not out of it yet. We need to remove the money from the bureaucracy and put it back into the people's hands. Grants do not do this. I maintain that tax incentives to individuals who may invest in the small, medium and large business are a direct way to get this country going. It will never survive through the grants system, Mr. Speaker, which is based on political patronage.

I have just one question, Mr. Speaker, and I will sit down. I would like the Minister, at his convenience, to reply to the Auditor General as to what has happened to the $2.7 billion up to March 31, 1982, for which there is little or no accounting. This is something the Government did not finish before it started a new Department.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are sitting on the edge of your chair, which indicates to me that I should sit down. Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on this Bill.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in discussing Bill C-152 we have seen quite a bit of painting, or the use of a large calcimine brush, a whitewashing brush, if you will, on a very large brick wall.

This Bill looks innocent until you start to read it, and then you realize the implications of what is being done. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) participated in this debate and indicated that this is what the people in British Columbia consider his Party should contribute to the improvement of economic conditions and government in this country, both at the provincial and the national levels. Therefore, his rather intemperate remarks with regard to laying out your policy like a supermarket ad indicates the bankrupt policy of the New Democratic Party because it is still saddled with the Regina Manifesto of 1933. That is how they think.

In any event, what are the positions which have greater implications? I suggest to Hon. Members of the House, those who are here, that the amendments to the Financial Administration Act have a great deal more implications than ten times the business with regard to DREE. That legitimizes the present set-up for CDIC, that game of beans under the nutshell, "Now you see it, now you don't", depending on which shell one has moved.

Let us start with this Bill from the beginning. This is a re-organization of the Department of External Affairs. This puts the cap on what has to be the biggest bureaucratic empire which has been put together in the history of the Canadian Government. There is all of External Affairs, all of what had been Trade and Commerce, international commerce, and then on top of that you have what is known as External Relations. The ministerial part of this is a troika headed by a man whose impact on this country during the last three years has been the most disastrous we have ever known.

The former Minister of Finance was responsible for the fiascos of 1980, 1981 and 1982. This country was set back a generation by those budgets. But that is the man who is now being put back in charge of this troika. Then, for some reason or other, it has been decided that after 20 years Industry should disappear. I recall the time under the Hon. Mike Pearson when, with a great deal of fanfare, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was established. The development of industry in Canada was added to the old portfolio of Trade and Commerce. The Hon. Bud Drury was made the first Minister. It made sense at that time and it seemed to work rather well. Then DREE was established in 1969. Well, I have known of a number of pork barrels to be created. I know, for instance, that the archbishops' palace in Quebec City was restored under economic expansion grants when the Speaker of the Senate was the Minister in charge of DREE. It was in his constituency. The Hon. Member can say what he wants; I can see him mumbling in his beard down there. But I saw the big signs.

● (1640)

[Translation]

Restoration of the Archbishop's Palace in Quebec City. Hon. Jean Marchand, Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

[English]

How many soft drink plants were established in various Provinces? How many plants to manufacture mobile homes? One was opened in British Columbia and one was closed in Alberta. There were no discussions with the provincial authorities, nothing.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) on a point of order.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would not wish to mislead the House by saying that the Archbishop's Palace in Quebec City was restored by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. In fact, the present Archdiocese is not at all at the location mentioned by the Hon. Member. I am sure he was mistaken when he said that the present Archdiocese of Quebec City was built by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The buildings concerned were historical buildings.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to accept the correction or comment made by the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier). However, it makes no difference whether what we have here is the remains or the former site of the Archbishop's Palace. The question is, what connection is there with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion which is concerned with industrial development? Is this supposed to help tourism in the area? Mr. Speaker, I think this is stretching things a bit too far. Let us not get carried away! In other cases, hundreds of millions of dollars have been literally wasted, right across this country. Some provinces received more than others. Certain things were done. In my own province, you know what they did for a big industrial park, to get around the maximum of $5 million per facility? They simply put up a fence down the middle of the site, and so they were able to get $5 million for each half.

You know, people are getting cynical. Now, what is being proposed in this Bill is to get rid of the Department of Industry altogether. International trade goes to External Affairs, and becomes External Relations. Now, trade is a specialized subject, and the Minister responsible for this Department may be the best diplomat there is but he is not a businessman. I am not very keen on this marriage of two philosophies, which is just not going to work out. As one of my colleagues said earlier, a nice Cabinet shuffle, a lot of window dressing and bureaucrats who are going to reap the benefits of all this.

Mr. Speaker, before I finish my comments, I would like to say that I hope we will be able to obtain many more explanations in Committee, especially on the third section of the Bill, which intrigues me because I have heard the President of the CDIC testify before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and it just does not fit. They are creating another pork barrel, without accountability.

[English]

That portion, Mr. Speaker, setting up changes to the Crown corporations, will have to be examined in committee with the closest of attention because I have already seen some of the results of the operations without the legal framework. As a matter of fact, CDIC has been, frankly, illegal—maybe not illegal; illicit is a better word—for nigh on two years. We want to see not only legitimacy, we want to see how there will be accountability for moneys and an assurance that they will not be lumping together Canadair, de Havilland, Massey-Ferguson and the other one which I do not know the name of that they have in the portfolio, as well as some others that they may acquire or set up so that everything can be well hidden from the long-suffering Canadian public which has paid and paid and paid billions and billions of dollars through the incompetence of the present administration.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on Bill C-152 regarding Government reorganization. I think everyone will agree, especially the Canadian public, that we cannot think of a group which needs reorganization more than the present Government. As a matter of fact—well, they moan and groan over there but if they spent some time in their ridings, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you will agree, they will have heard the same things we did, and the groans are in support of what I am saying and not in objection. What is actually needed more than reorganization is rejuvenation of the Government of Canada. We are prepared to do that and will be doing so in the very near future, as soon as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) screws up enough courage to call an election.

● (1650)

I would like briefly to discuss reorganization and my concerns regarding the Ministry of Trade entering into External Affairs. As a spokesman for our Party on immigration, I lived through the problem of overseas immigration officers coming under External Affairs rather than the Ministry of Employment and Immigration. In essence, they were answering to two bosses. My sympathies went to the then Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) for the problems he experienced since he was involved with his departmental staff in Canada while the immigration officers, who were making the decisions on the front line in the various embassies and consulates throughout the world, were answering to the Department of External Affairs. Naturally, confusion arose and there was great duplication in attempting to get information about what had happened to an application. Of course, Immigration had to refer to External Affairs in order to go to the immigration officers. As we all know, it was bureaucracy at its finest.

We now see that the Department of Trade will also come under External Affairs. I have had some experience with foreign trade. At one time I worked for the Hon. Claude Bennett in the provincial Government of Ontario when he was the Minister of Industry and Tourism. We were involved in trade matters to a considerable extent. One fact that we discovered about trade was that it was the small businessmen who needed the help with respect to exporting and becoming involved in foreign trade. By and large, if large companies have an introduction from a Government, they have no problems with follow-ups and carrying on foreign trade. They have the wherewithal to hire the expertise and deal with the myriad of details one must go through in foreign trade. The small businessman does not have this capability.

We now find that the small businessman comes under the Department of Industry and Commerce while the trade aspect is within another ministry. Suddenly the responsibilities have been split again, resulting in more confusion within the business community. I feel sorry for the businessmen in this country who already have enough problems filling out all the forms and reports that they must make. They are harried to death by the Government and this simply gives them another Department with which to deal.

Anyone who has recently talked to the staff in that Department will know that they are at their wit's end. They do not know what is happening in their Department, which I believe is probably symptomatic of the present administration. They cannot proceed with programs because of the great deal of uncertainty. They do not know how the program will be administered or by whom. This is a serious situation and I believe that the bureaucrats would much rather stay with the original system than see the Department of Trade go to External Affairs. For that reason, I am very concerned about this change.

Let me talk for a moment about DREE, DRIE and the other famous initials one must get used to when one comes to Ottawa. I am also concerned about the arrangements pertaining to new business. I believe we have all had experience with companies, especially larger companies, moving into areas as a result of incentives. Once the special treatment has been completed they tend to fold their tents and return from whence they came, or disappear.

I hope the new Department referred to as DRIE will spend much more time with small businesses in some of these communities. These are small businesses that have a growth potential and Canada's entrepreneurs, those with good ideas, who can be assisted.

My experience with the Department of Industry and Tourism in Ontario showed that it was the small business sector that needed the help far more than the large industries. Large industries are able to operate on a tax basis whereas the small businesses, while it is fine to give them a tax break, face difficulties if they have no profits. Tax breaks do not mean a thing to them without profits. I am very concerned about small businesses in Canada. Special emphasis should be put on small business and entrepreneurs who need capital to start out and to grow. I suggest that the two major failings of business in Canada today, apart from some of the Government policies, are the lack of capital and poor management. It is incumbent upon us to help especially small business people get started, far more than large businesses which tend to take care of themselves, by providing the growth potential they need.

I can state that small businesses make a far greater contribution to a community, especially smaller communities outside major urban areas where the growth potential is gradual. For example, there is an aluminum industry in Hawkesbury which started out very small. It has grown and hired many employees. This company makes the aluminum tubing for all the Cuban cigars that are smoked today. It is an example of a company that started small and, with the help from the Ontario Government and the federal Government as well, was able to make contacts and to expand. That is an example of a small business in a small community which was provided help and provided employment in that area. As well, it has a certain loyalty to that community which an established large company may not provide once its incentives had expired.

One provision which I appreciate in the new set-up is the classification of all of Canada. Sometimes there are very genuine needs in a community such as I represent which is an industrial community as well as one where people commute to the city of Toronto. There is a genuine need to establish industry in that area as well. There may be the legitimate establishment of an industry because a certain nearby market makes it economical to establish there. They may need help getting started. We must have entrepreneurs in Brampton-Georgetown as well as in Metro Toronto, Parry Sound-Muskoka and all across Canada.

I close by saying that I am greatly concerned about some of the reorganization that is occurring. I am worried that duplications are taking place and that it is causing extra work for the private sector by creating the necessity to become involved with these two different ministries. I am concerned about the confusion and uncertainty that at present exist in the Ministry. Anyone who has had any dealings with it will see that. I hope the reorganization does not go too far before we form the next Government so we can take a more positive look and we can rejuvenate the present structures that we have today.

• (1700)

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) hit the nail right on the head in more ways than one. He described, for instance, this new Department called DRIE. I want to say that for Atlantic Canada it is from DREE to DRIE and there will be no bucks left for our part of Canada. In what a mess we in Atlantic Canada are being placed!

I have sat in this House for a few years. I remember when we had the Atlantic Development Board. It later became the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The Atlantic Development Board was for Atlantic Canada. But all of a sudden we had a new Department that is for Atlantic Canada, for Quebec, it is for here, there and for somewhere else. The resources that were being committed to us were being depleted even then.

I remember also when we had a Department of Trade and Commerce. Suddenly we had another Department imposed upon the Department of Trade and Commerce called the Department of Industry. What a great way to produce additional civil servants in this country. When the Government created that new Department of Industry it gave itself the privilege of hiring people that were the Government's friends. This was done almost without civil service competition. The Government just brought in its friends. After the Department was established, what did the Government do? The Government amalgamated the Department of Industry with the Department of Trade and Commerce. Now we are being told that the only half decent people we have around the world working to assist our businessmen, large and small, are those in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce who will now be mixed up with External Affairs. Rather than opening doors for businessmen around the world they will be going to tea parties and receptions in the hope they can cover all the bases. Where is poor old Atlantic Canada going to end up? On the short end of the stick. Everybody will be involved in either foreign affairs or business affairs but never thinking about the part of the country that needs the dollars. This is especially true of the small businessman whom we see and we hear about and who is facing such desperate straits.

We are looking at the fishing industry which is coming apart at the seams. We have bankruptcies all over the place. Jobs are being lost all over the place. Now the Government is taking the only instrument we had that might have been of some value to the small businessmen. I am not talking about National Sea and other big companies; I am talking about the little companies in my constituency and in the constituency of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc). These companies have been looking after themselves pretty well but they do need help. I am afraid for those fishermen. I am afraid, with this new amalgamation, that there will be less attention given to those healthy fishery operations that do exist. It is not only the small guy who is in trouble in Atlantic Canada, but it is the big guy that is getting all the attention. The small guy is not getting enough. That is the same with all forms of industry. In my constituency there have been too many bankruptcies. Some of those bankruptcies might not have occurred if the small businessman could have had more attention than he was receiving.

This Bill will not help anyone in Atlantic Canada. It is another step backwards. When my leader was campaigning in Central Nova I was pleased he indicated that DREE should be sacrosanct, that it should remain, that it should be for Atlantic Canada, that it should produce the kinds of benefits that give us the chance to be first class citizens rather than the second class citizens we are and have been for some time with this Government in office. The simplest and easiest way to make people in Atlantic Canada first class citizens is to have this Government out that is here now and to have this alternative Government in to give this country some of the stimulation it needs by having sensible tax incentives. These are especially needed for small businessmen, who are the backbone of this country, who are being let down day after day and are being betrayed by this Government that does not care about any form of business. Big business, by and large, can look after itself.

We have to be concerned about the small-businessman who is getting it and has been getting it in the neck for quite a number of years from this Government that does not care about anything or anybody except itself and its friends. It is hard for me to imagine that a Government would involve itself in a company that could lose $1.4 billion in one year. That is almost inconceivable. But that is what happens when this Government involves itself in big business. I hope to God this Government does not get involved in small business, otherwise we will have nobody left to pay taxes.

The other day I had a great revelation. I am always looking to see where defeated Grits go. I was watching a program about the aerospace industry. Who appeared on TV but Barney Danson, the President of de Havilland. Can you believe it, Barney Danson, the President of de Havilland?

Mr. Turner: He was talking about the Arrow.

Mr. Coates: And that is about all Barney would know how to talk about. That is the sad fact of the matter. He was Minister of Defence. He was an army man. He certainly could not have been a very good Minister of Defence because he was defeated. But there he was on the television screen. He was pretty good compared to the Canadair people because he only lost about $425 million. But there it is, another defeated Grit getting his payday at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer in multimillion dollar numbers. There are too many defeated Grits lounging around in big paying Government appointed offices. I hope they enjoy themselves, Mr. Speaker, because they have about one year left. If I know this Government, it will try to run out its term, especially if the guy who is not a quitter stays. Each day, each month, each year, the Gallup poll will show the Liberals going down and down. We may even see the socialists ahead of them before the next election.

Mr. Turner: We have been down before and come up.

Mr. Coates: We have to put some common sense into Government operations. This cannot be done by proliferating the number of bureaucrats imposing themselves on the poor little guy who is trying to make a buck and who is having a hell of a hard time. We have to use some common sense. That is not done by amalgamating Government departments proliferating certain civil servants jobs, nor is it common-sense always to leave out the Atlantic Provinces.

I oppose this Bill. I hope it never gets passed, but if it does, it will most certainly be very detrimental to Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly on this topic. It is of great concern in my constituency. We are one of the few areas in Ontario in which DREE is active. There were three areas: northern Ontario, the Cornwall region and the Renfrew-Pembroke area which were covered by DREE in its true form. The introduction of this Bill is similar to a shuffling of the chairs on the Titanic. Government Members want to show some activity. They do not know where they are going, so they move everybody and everything around. The people who will make the most money will be moving companies in Ottawa as they move, desk by desk, Departments from one building to another.

• (1710)

Many people in the underdeveloped regions of the country felt that DREE would take a special look at their circumstances. In the Renfrew-Pembroke designated area, for example, unemployment runs from 16 per cent to 22 per cent. This is only a matter of 50 miles from Ottawa, the capital of Canada. We do not have to look at the Maritimes and parts of Quebec which have been underprivileged in the sense of economic development for a long time; right here in Ontario, which everyone thinks has the wealth of the country, there are depressed regions.

The people of my area knew the system of obtaining money and attracting industries. Of course, there have not been many industries in Canada to attract in the last few years because they have not been expanding but rather contracting under the present Government and laying off people. We knew the system and we had some success. Now we find that we are lumped in with the majority of the rest of Canada under the second tier. We did not make it to the third or fourth tier where the larger dollars will be.

My constituency is in the second tier, except for two particular parts which fall under the first tier. I am not looking for assistance in the areas designated under the first tier because Kanata and West Carleton are close to Ottawa, have high technology and have done quite well, no thanks to the Government. They have done it on their own. The industries in those two areas have pointed out that the best way to get ahead is by not applying for Government grants because they cost more in accounting and legal fees than the grants are probably worth. By the time they end up obtaining it, there are many strings attached. In depressed areas in Renfrew, Arnprior, Calabogie and Pembroke there has been some success in attracting major facilities, which will definitely increase the number of employed people once they are running at full steam. We were more pleased with the smaller designations under DREE rather than the designations under DRIE which cover the entire country under four tiers.

Another aspect of the Bill about which I am not very pleased is the moving of the Department of Trade out of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and into the Department of External Affairs. I have not played a great role in the Department of External Affairs, but my understanding is that it now has something like 156 undersecretaries and deputy undersecretaries. They are really deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers, but External Affairs likes to have a somewhat different jargon because it is involved with protocol, foreign dignitaries and so on. It is so wrapped up in its protocol, in foreign dignitaries, in the nicety of things and having cocktail parties for each other that it forgets to get down to doing business. One of the beauties of the Department of Trade was that it was all about business. Now that it will be under the Department of External Affairs I am afraid that protocol, cocktail parties and the niceties of intergovernmental exchanges which do not amount to an awful lot of action will be more important than hard-nosed business talk, economic deals or trade between two countries or two industries.

Many years ago the Department of Trade was under the Department of External Affairs. Back in the mid-fifties it was made a Department of its own. Subsequently it was folded into Industry, Trade and Commerce. But trade has developed a great importance in the country. Canada thrives and survives on its trade. At present we participate in trade with Iran. I know we are not supposed to talk about it because we do not have any diplomatic or external affairs relations with Iran; we are not allowed to. They have broken off and we have broken off, but we do participate in trade. Now the Department of Trade will be subjected to the Department of External Affairs. I have heard a great amount of displeasure expressed by public servants in the portion of the Ottawa area I represent. The people in Trade were accustomed to a lot of driving force and trying to get a job done. They were not accustomed to playing around with the rules of etiquette, niceties, getting dressed up and attending cocktail parties. Although External Affairs is very important—it is a necessity—I do not think a quiet, academic type of Department such as the Department of External Affairs should become involved with an energetic, outward going and aggressive Department like the Department of Trade. Certainly Trade should not be subjugated under External Affairs. I am very concerned about this. Also I am very concerned about the triple-headed monster which has been created in the Department of External Affairs and about the 156 deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers, who of course are called undersecretaries and assistant undersecretaries over there. It is just bureaucracy gone wild.

I also have a concern for Canadian businessmen. Canada is encouraging businessmen to get out and expand foreign trade. We need it; it is important to our survival. The biggest impediment to business people expanding, making new contacts and expanding trade or even their operations at home is a lack of stability. Business people want to know what are the rules. They want to know the tax rules and the trading rules. They want to know what people to contact, whether they should go to the trade commission or to the embassy. Over the last number of years every businessman has been completely confused by the income tax rules. They do not know what to do and cannot plan. There are people who do not put money into businesses or who want to expand their ventures because they do not know where they are going. Now another roadblock is being placed before them. The traditional routes for trade or export assistance are being destabilized. It is another impediment to the business community.

It is really an embarrassment for the Government to have to bring in this Bill. Hon. Members on the non-Cabinet benches of the Liberal Party are embarrassed because the Government has deemed that it cannot find people over there of sufficient quality to be Parliamentary Secretaries. It is making an amendment to the Parliamentary Secretaries Act so that it can go fishing for appointed Liberals in the Senate. When it cannot find people in its own ranks, it indicates that the Government or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not have faith in those who have been elected and support him in the House. I think they are very embarrassed about it and that at the very least the Bill should be withdrawn.

• (1720)

I am not happy about the Bill going ahead. What is unfortunate is that the Government, once again without authority of Parliament, has gone ahead, made half the changes, and spent all the money. It got the movers in and moved the furniture. It will create a larger bureaucracy. It is a case of shuffling the chairs on the deck of the Titanic. I do not think it will improve for Canadians either our Department of External Affairs or, more important, our Department of Trade, which should be lean, aggressive and hard fighting.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate even though some compare it to closing the barn door a year and a half after the horse has escaped and thoroughly fouled the barnyard. It is true that most of the damage of the old arrangements which are addressed by Bill C-152 has already been done. However, we have other horses to worry about and there is no indication that this Government has learned any lesson from the mistakes which are addressed in this Bill.

As Hon. Members know, this Bill embraces a New Department of External Affairs Act and makes a number of changes affecting parliamentary secretaries, as was just stated by my colleague for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). Both of these amendments have their disturbing aspects, but I would like to confine my remarks to a discussion of matters tied to the former Department of Regional Economic Expansion because of its special concern to me.

DREE is, of course, dead. It was knocked off in January of last year and the Government has been stomping on the grave ever since without, as has been pointed out, the benefit of any legal authority. Any attempt now to exhume the corpse of DREE would be as messy as the execution.

Members on this side would like an assurance that a serious commitment to regional development will continue to exist. Unfortunately, the evidence does not provide much hope in this regard despite the lip service paid to the subject by the Government benches.

We have been told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) and other Cabinet Ministers that the disappearance of DREE marks a change in federal Government priorities and that it will mean a greater emphasis on development in the have-not regions of Canada.

The Prime Minister for example, told a press conference in January, 1982 that the Government reorganization "will provide a Government-wide focus on regional economic development". He went on to say, "It was no longer acceptable that a single Department be responsible for regional development", adding that all Departments would have to concern themselves with regional development in the new Government-wide approach.

That sounded very desirable. In other words, the Prime Minister was saying that regional development had become just too important to have its own Department, kind of a bizarre statement, I would suggest.

It became so important that it did not need a Department to oversee and co-ordinate the regional incentives of the Government. Although this point of view was later discredited by the Senate report on Government Policy and Regional Development, Cabinet Ministers, to the embarrassment of this Government, continue to mouth the Prime Minister's nonsensical words, that somehow you can improve the delivery of an important service by dismantling the co-ordinating function. The most recent example of this was the Government House Leader who said in the House of Commons on May 27, and I quote:

> Regional economic development had reached a level of maturity which made it necessary to integrate its objectives in the activities of all Departments with an economic input.

That is strange thinking indeed. The word "integrate" means to draw together, to co-ordinate, and yet we see that disbanding of the co-ordinating agency. It makes no sense at all. One can only assume that the Department of Finance, the Department of National Revenue, the Department of Transport and others have not yet reached this so-called level of maturity or they would have been integrated along with other Departments in the regional development scheme. Obviously this line of reasoning is little more than claptrap.

Certainly there is a need to co-ordinate the work of DREE with other Government bodies, but it is testimony to this Government's inability to co-ordinate the activities of its various Departments that when it recognizes such a need, its solution is to take the co-ordinating agency away, to be absorbed by other Departments. That is reverse logic. What we have here is the same old wolf in sheep's clothing. In the process or reorganization, it is the people of Canada who are going to be fleeced.

This was the case with External Affairs and Trade, Regional Development and Industry, and recently the same merger solution was applied to Science and Technology and the new Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. Whenever this Government confronts a problem, rather than streamline and inject efficiency and common sense into the solution-finding mechanism, it creates more problems by creating more agencies and dismantles rather than improves the agencies presently available.

I mentioned earlier that we have other horses to worry about getting away from us. It appears that the Science and Technology horse slipped out of the stable this summer while Members were absent from this place. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) announced in July that he was increasing the importance of his Ministry by reducing its staff by one-third, from 170 to 120, and shipping his former employees off to another Department. That is convoluted logic. The importance of the role of the Minister and his Department are increased by cutting the size of the staff and in the same process not providing improved guidelines and criteria by which the important service is to be delivered. It seems totally illogical.

I read this morning that the new science adviser to the Minister of State for Science and Technology is having a terrible time bringing in people from the private sector to assist him in evolving, managing and administering a comprehensive policy for Canada. That is small wonder when that Minister had to lay off 50 of his employees, shrinking his Department by one-third. What competent and able senior scientific administrators in this country would come to work for a Minister whose Department was faced with that type of scenario? I suppose if the Minister really wants to make science and technology important by this logic, he will reduce his departmental staff by zero. That is exactly how the DREE Program was treated.

Forgive me if I become concerned when the Party that campaigned on low energy prices for Canadians in 1980 now promises to put a higher priority on regional development, and science and technology for that matter, by killing the Department concerned. They lack credibility. What happened in 1980 and what happened with wage and price controls in 1975 will happen again here. We will be promised one thing and get the opposite. It is something like the story the Prime Minister told many years ago. You may not see who was in the wheelhouse and the horizon may be shifting to the extent that you thought you were heading for a new and brighter era, but you would probably not recognize the island where you got off when you finally arrived.

This illogical approach is really at the heart of the mess we have in our country today. It is the reason why, following the two by-elections just completed and in Gallup polls throughout this country, as well as with the excitement surrounding the entry into Canadian political life of a new and exciting leader, Canadians are demanding an election. They are tired of these old folks opposite who implement such illogical solutions to the pressing and important problems of the day. Obviously regional development, like science and development, needs a strong advocate in Parliament. These concerns that we have heard about will only be given proper attention if they are articulated by a Minister who does not treat them as part-time jobs.

• (1730)

The Prime Minister, in announcing the reorganization outlined by Bill C-152, bemoaned the fact that the existence of DREE allowed other Ministers to disregard regional concerns. This may have been the case, but it would have been easier to fix the problem had the succession of Liberal Ministers handled their jobs properly over the years rather than seriously neglecting their obligations.

Over the last decade, DREE spending was allowed to decline in real terms by 27 per cent. It went from 2 per cent of total Government expenditures to less than half of that over the past decade or so. These funding problems were magnified by an expansion of DREE's geographical mandate which went from only the least developed regions to almost all parts of the country. For obvious political reasons, the Government now finds it desirable to have more flexibility in the areas it can choose for DREE spending, as has become the case with DREE in recent years.

It is little wonder that the Prime Minister became dissatisfied with the progress his Government had made in regional development, especially since this watering down of the funding was combined with administrative sloppiness.

The question we must ask, Mr. Speaker, is what is the purpose of DREE or DRIE or any program of extending regional incentives to create new employment opportunities in order to overcome the problems and serious hardships that are faced by Canadians from one end of the country to the other. Is the Government concerned with genuine solutions to these problems or is it more concerned with the short-term political future? Are we merely seeing legislation designed to give ministerial discretion and discretion to Members on the Government side so that they can hand out these millions upon millions, indeed billions of dollars in order to favour their friends and perhaps stroke the palms of certain voters in certain electorates in order to save their parliamentary seats, or do they really and truly care about the genuine needs of the people across the country who are hurting?

As I said earlier and as I say now to conclude, Mr. Speaker, the polls indicate that the tactic is not working. The Canadian people have seen through it. As we move this Bill to committee, I think that it is only fair to conclude by serving notice that amendments will be necessary and that as the Bill presently stands, Members on this side have a very difficult time supporting the Bill.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to point out some of the inadequacies of this Bill because it is an abominable piece of legislation. Although the House of Commons has not approved this piece of legislation, the Government has gone ahead and acted upon it, not caring of course whether or not the Members of the House of Commons will support the Bill because it is confident, I suppose, that its majority will put the Bill through.

I would like to speak first for a moment on the part of this Bill that creates a new External Affairs Department and integrates the trade functions that were formerly with Industry, Trade and Commerce with External Affairs. It helps create a Minister of State for External Relations. That a country can have a Secretary of State for External Affairs and then have another Minister of State for External Affairs boggles the imagination. Surely the Minister who has the responsibility for foreign affairs should have the responsibility for external relations as well.

In addition, there is a Minister of State for International Trade. A three-headed monster has now been created in the Department of External Affairs. It has worked miserably. The administration of the Department is in a shambles. The morale of the diplomatic service which was already bad has been worsened. I would just like to point out that all of this has been done in the face of a Royal Commission report on conditions of foreign service that not for one minute recommended that such action be taken. It pointed out that there was a lamentable situation in the Department of External Affairs, it pointed out the difficulties in morale and discipline that had occurred in administration, and it revealed a very, very unsatisfactory situation in the Department of External Affairs.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appointed the Royal Commissioner, Mrs. Pamela McDougall, a very distinguished Canadian woman, to study the foreign service and bring in a report. She brought the report in. The Prime Minister did not even have the courtesy to see her to discuss the report that he had commissioned through his Government. When she was questioned by the External Affairs Department several months later, she had not even until then seen the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to discuss her report with him. I do not think that she has seen a Minister since. She saw some associate deputy ministers. There is a pack of associate deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers and so on in this Department that numbers in the hundreds. That is how this Royal Commissioner who revealed a very serious situation in the Department was treated.

As I understand it and according to an article in The Globe and Mail of this July, it takes 14 charts for the Department of External Affairs to explain what their new administrative structure is. These 14 charts had to be devised by Marcel Massé who inherited this mess when he became the undersecretary of state of the Department a few months ago. The trade side and the political side are fighting over everything, even as to where the coolers should go, who is closest to the cooler and who is farthest away from the cooler. That is the struggle that is going on in External Affairs now under this new arrangement that creates three Ministers where one Minister existed before.

I am against that, Mr. Speaker. I am opposed to these changes in the Department of External Affairs. I wish I were the critic for that Department. I would attack the move with vim and vigour, I can assure you, and my successor, old slasher, will, I am sure, carry on the vigorous strain of criticism.

An Hon. Member: He wrote a letter and he has reformed. He is not the slasher any more.

Mr. Crosbie: Well, if the slasher is reforming, then verily there is no hope for Canada.

Let me move on, Mr. Speaker, to an even more serious aspect of this legislation which has just been touched upon by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), a very distinguished Member who is moving up in the shadow Cabinet. He is rushing up through the ranks of the shadow Cabinet. His presence is looming longer in the shadows. What I refer to now, Mr. Speaker, is that this Bill of course takes the old DREE Department, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and establishes a new Department, DRIE, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The only thing the Government has done in three and a half years is to change an "e" to an "i". The Department of DREE becomes the Department of DRIE.

When it comes to spending money and helping the less advantaged regions of Canada, the Government has done less than nothing. I am glad to see that the Hon. Member for Humber-Port-au-Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) are listening to me. Both of them are now in competition for the elevation to the post of representative in the Cabinet from Newfoundland. These two fine young gentlemen are in a battle now to see which one of them will be elevated. Of course, there is now a third contender, and he has had considerable experience in matters that the ten-day wonder has had experience in, so perhaps he will beat them out and get there ahead of them. We are all watching with bated breath.

There is today one of the Canadian Provinces that has no representative in the Government of Canada. Perhaps it is better for us to have no representative than to have what we have had because for the last three and a half years we have had a representative of the Government of Canada unable to protect our Province.

Here is what has happened to the Province of Newfoundland because the Prime Minister does not like Provinces that are independent or that have views that differ from his own. Under DREE in 1979-80, the Government spent $76 million, all of it badly needed, by the way. The next year, 1980-81, it dropped the spending in Newfoundland to $46.5 million despite the inflation that had raged since, the Liberal inflation that cut the value of money by a quarter in that period. Then in 1981-82, it cut the spending in Newfoundland and Labrador under DREE to $36.8 million. I heard the absurd Minister of MSERD (Mr. Johnston) say today what great things they were doing with their special program for special projects, a Liberal slush fund for Liberal districts that they still have. This is the spending that they have been cutting, and they have cut it down to $34.9 million in 1982-83, and less than $34 million is to be spent in Newfoundland in 1983-84 under the programs carried on by DREE. That is the progress, Mr. Speaker. The people of Newfoundland are not interested in legislation that establishes DRIE when the spending under those programs in Newfoundland has been cut in half in the last four years. Has Newfoundland become less regionally deprived or disadvantaged in the last four years? Not at all, Mr. Speaker. There are 43,000 unemployed there, as I told the Prime Minister in Question Period today. He would not know that, nor would he care. He does not know what happens in Prince Edward Island or in Newfoundland. He is more familiar with the Greek islands, with Lesbos and Crete, than he is with the island of Newfoundland or the island of Prince Edward Island or Anticosti or Vancouver Island. These are not the islands he is interested in. He does not know that we have 43,000 unemployed.

● (1740)

We do not have a Minister in the Government any longer. Perhaps the Prime Minister is going to shove a Senator into the vacuum that now exists. It will be the first time that a vacuum ever filled a vacuum if he takes one of the Newfoundland Senators and shoves him or her into the Cabinet to represent Newfoundland.

These are the realities, Mr. Speaker—spending cutbacks—in 1979-80 $76 million was spent in Newfoundland, but this year it will be less than $34 million. The Government and the Ministers will go down there and make the announcements unilaterally.

The Minister in this new Department, the Minister for Cornwall—I am not allowed to use his name in the House—is a fine chap. I do not understand why he will proceed in the same direction as his predecessors.

There used to be a General Development Agreement under which the Province and the federal Government, together, undertook certain programs which were usually financed 90-10 or sometimes 75-25. One of those programs was to assist rural development associations of which there are 51 in the Province of Newfoundland. Each received $16,500 per year under the joint agreement while the rural development council received about $70,000. The funding was 90 per cent federal and 10 per cent provincial. That agreement expired at the end of last March and it has not been renewed. It was extended to September 30, but now there has been an announcement that the federal Government is going to move unilaterally. It is going to provide 100 per cent of some funding for the rural development associations themselves under certain programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which do not suit rural development at all.

These are national programs for industrial and commercial development. There is no emphasis on the social aspect as there is in rural development. Each rural development association has to make application, on its own, for funding. This is much less satisfactory. There is no reason in the world why the federal Government should go ahead unilaterally to try to deal with rural development associations in Newfoundland when the whole thing has run satisfactorily for five years under a federal-provincial program. It is being done because the Government no longer wants to work co-operatively with the Provinces. It wants to act unilaterally and to show its muscle.

My time is just about over, Mr. Speaker, but I want to end by referring to the report of the Senate Finance Committee under the Chairmanship of Senator Everett. He has said that this system will not work without some form of intergovernmental co-operation. The Committee recommended against what the Government proposes in the Bill and asks the Government to reconsider the decision to abandon the General Development Agreements. Many of these were Liberal Senators. They said that there are disturbing signs that the Government reorganization, while paying lip service to regional disparities, will be focused on the main chance, so-called megaprojects.

This is a wrong move, Mr. Speaker. It is going in the wrong direction. It is retrograde and I will vote against it. I am entirely opposed to both aspects of the Bill, external affairs and internal affairs. We are being asked to vote on the consequence of despicable actions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, given the event that will take place later this evening, I wonder if we might not now call it six o'clock?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we agree to your calling it six o'clock, and we shall return to the House at 8 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I understand it is the wish of the House that we call it six o'clock and that debate on the special motion will begin at eight o'clock this evening. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 5.45 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—SHOOTING DOWN OF SOUTH KOREAN AIRCRAFT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Leave has been granted for the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 30 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the shooting down of a South Korean civilian aircraft by the Soviet Union and the protection of air travellers.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on September 1 a South Korean civilian aircraft with almost 300 people on board was flying over Soviet territory. At the time it was approached by Soviet interceptors and then it was shot down and some 269 lives were snuffed out.

At the outset of this important debate, Mr. Speaker, I am sure I speak for the sentiments not only of all Hon. Members of the House of Commons but of the people across this country and, indeed, the vast majority of people around the world, when I say that no matter of national security, no concern about the possibility of espionage, no alleged serious commitment to the defence of one's national borders, can ever justify the wanton murder of 269 innocent human beings.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The snuffing out, as I said, Mr. Speaker, of the lives of men, women and children who had bought airline tickets in one part of the world in order to fly in peace and security to another part of the world is a moral abomination, and the message that it is a moral abomination must get through to the government of the Soviet Union, not only from the Government of Canada, but also from all parties in the House of Commons and from the people of Canada.

To compound this deplorable act the Soviet Union, Mr. Speaker, far from acknowledging its guilt, far from stating that a grotesque inhumane error in judgment—if indeed it was an error—took place, has had the moral offensiveness to suggest that if such a flight should take place again in the future it will take the same action again.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that while it is true that nothing now can be done to adequately repay the families of those affected—surely in the community of nations, if the principles for which the United Nations was created mean anything, there is a serious moral obligation on the Soviet Union to acknowledge its own moral culpability, and we, I say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), must continue to pursue that.

It is very easy in politics to become totally cynical. It is particularly easy, I suppose, in international politics, where the complexity of human life is all too abundant, to become even more cynical. However, I say, because I believe it profoundly, that at times—and it should happen more often—morality has a role to play in international politics, in the international relations of human beings as they are gathered collectively in states, and this is one of those times. The Soviet Union must not be allowed to simply cynically hope that this issue will disappear. I repeat, the Secretary of State for External Affairs on behalf of the people of Canada must be persistent in his demand that the Soviet Union acknowledge moral wrongdoing. That is the least that can be done for those ten Canadians and the hundreds of others who have lost their lives.

Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada must continue to pursue the claim which has already been made by the Canadian Government for financial compensation to the families of those affected. Once again, we must not simply sit back and allow the cynicism of the Soviet Government to prevail here in the expectation that soon the world will go back to sleep and forget all about this atrocity.

● (2010)

In addition to these follow-up actions on the part of the Government of Canada that I am suggesting on behalf of my colleagues tonight, Mr. Speaker, the Government, both for the United Nations and for the Civil Aviation Conference which is taking place by chance this week in Montreal, should work on some important additional proposals whose purpose should be to ensure the international safety not only of Canadians but of all people who wish to fly from one part of the world to another.

For example, Mr. Speaker, proposals are needed for an international open skies agreement, the purpose of which would be to provide international monitoring services for flights to help ensure that they stay on course, and for binding agreements among the participating nations concerning the safety of passengers should departure from course actually take place. As well, an international agreement ought to be pursued, the purpose of which would be to ensure that any nation wishing to join the family of international aviation must first provide the commitment to not attack civilian aircraft under any pretence whatsoever.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in my comments so far I have not, except by passing reference, spoken about what the Government has done so far. I have suggested that there is follow-up which would be appropriate in the case of moral condemnation and the demanding of financial compensation. In addition I have made two suggestions I think are important, indeed relevant, to be pursued at the international level, and pursued quickly.

I want to emphasize the morality of what is at stake here. I am aware of the complexity of getting agreement on matters that relate to international bodies, whether it be the aviation authorities or the United Nations to which I said my proposals should be referred, and certainly that is difficult to pursue, but I want to stress that in the final analysis it will not matter much. No international agreement really counts with regard to national behaviour unless the nation in question wants to make it count. That is so fundamental. All kinds of agreements have been designed with varying degrees of effectiveness, and that is why they should not be dismissed, intended to head off regional conflicts or promote co-operation in a whole variety of fields, and to ensure that irrational and inhumane conflict between nation states does not take place. But if a nation state chooses at any point to go to war, it tears up unilaterally an international agreement and nothing can be done about it. A nation state can take any of the wonderful agreements entered into very solemnly at the United Nations and at a given point, if it so decides that it is in its national interest to disregard such agreement, it can do so because there is no authority which can stop it.

Therefore, in making what I think are practical proposals, relative courses of action for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to pursue, I want to conclude by coming virtually full circle to the moral point I made at the outset. That is, the fundamental immorality of the Soviet action. Nothing can excuse the kind of action taken by that pilot. I ask Members of the House to put themselves in the position of flying an aircraft, not just contacting a civilian plane on radar, because those with flying experience well know that the pilot was close enough to visually identify that civilian aircraft. He acted on authority; there is no doubt he had the command, and whatever one thinks of his individual morality, and I sure do not think much of it at all, the morality beyond him is what counts in the Soviet state today. We have to get world opinion mobilized to make very clear that those who run modern societies have to be concerned about human life; that you just do not snuff it out because of a violation of your air space and you think that some spying device might have be present on a plane.

We have to tell the Soviet Union that it is unacceptable to so act, and I would suggest that this is precisely the role for morality in international politics. At times even a great power like the Soviet Union, which in this case has acted quite independent of normal morality, will respond in terms of its own power interests if it sees that the rest of mankind finds its action to be a moral outrage. Even in terms of power politics and the rather cynical calculation of self-interest, what the Soviet Union has done, at whatever level of authority the decision was reached, is unacceptable, and if the rest of the world responds as it ought to morally, and we all say to the Soviet Union that this is unacceptable and we are not going to forget, in the future the Soviet Union might at least think twice before so acting.

Beyond that, in this cynical world in which we are living, if nations come together as a result of this deplorable incident to develop the kind of international instruments I have talked about, maybe not only the Soviet Union but any other state—God protect us all—which might contemplate such action, would also think twice. Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, if we continue with an expression of our moral concern about man's obligation not only to his fellow men and women in his own state, but to all of mankind, we might at some period in the future get a genuine international community established which is totally committed to international peace.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has been prompt and vigorous in its reaction to this brutal violation of all the norms of international behaviour. I am pleased that the comments of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) have exactly reflected the moral outrage that all Canadians have felt as the result of this incident and has also reflected the deep sorrow we all share with the bereaved families.

We have acted not only to reflect the outrage of the Canadian people, which has a world wide reaction, but also to bear in mind at all times the human dimensions of this tragedy, the loss of innocent lives and the bereaved persons who have been also the victims of this terrible act.

● (2020)

On September 1, within hours of this event, my colleague, the Minister of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pepin), summoned the Soviet Chargé to account for this action, describing it as totally incomprehensible and unacceptable. On September 2, I expressed the uncertainty and apprehension which this wanton and seemingly uncontrolled resort to the use of force must cause in the minds of all those who had hoped for an improved level of trust in East-West relations. I also said that the world expects the Soviet leadership, which itself is no stranger to the tragic and senseless loss of life, expects the Soviet leadership to abandon its current stonewalling and come clean about this terrible hit and run tragedy.

That evening, at a special emergency session of the U.N. Security Council, which Canada along with other nations requested, our ambassador who was recalled from leave on this occasion said as follows:

> The deliberate in-flight destruction of this civilian, unarmed, easily identifiable passenger aircraft by sophisticated fighter aircraft of the Soviet Union, no matter where it occurred, is nothing short of murder. It is a flagrant attack on the safety of international civil aviation which should never have occurred and must not be allowed to occur again.

On September 3, I sent personal messages of condolence to all the Canadian families who had suffered a loss and I stated that the grief of those Canadians is made more difficult to bear by the callous and incredible Soviet reaction. To the grave injury they have caused, the Soviet authorities are now adding the insult of a blatant cover-up.

On September 5, in announcing Canadian measures against Soviet aviation interests in Canada, I urged that our action prompt a review by the Soviet authorities on the merits of continuing to evade their responsibility for the deaths of Canadians and so many other innocent passengers.

On September 7, speaking at the concluding session of the Conference on Security and Co-Operation in Europe, my colleague, the Minister of State for External Relations, reiterated in the presence of Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, Canada's now firm demand for an urgent investigation under U.N. and ICAO auspices for the improvement of aviation regulations to prevent a recurrence of such a tragedy; for immediate compensation and for the Soviet Union to meet international obligations of the most fundamental and humanitarian kind.

Our bilateral representations directly to the Soviet Union encompassed first, the stiff diplomatic note presented by the Minister of State for External Affairs on September 1 demanding an explanation; a parallel action in Moscow by our ambassador in that capital and my own direct personal message to Foreign Minister Gromyko requesting his urgent and personal attention to our national demands which I now hope will be backed up by the voices of Members of Parliament speaking in this House of Commons.

Our assessment of the Soviet response is that it still falls far short of what we all expect and have a right to demand. Whether to Canada bilaterally or to the world at large, the Soviet reaction is a form of confession by instalment. Their statements have at least begun to express regret at the loss of human life, although not to us directly, and have begun to replace the initial cover-up with a process of selective disclosure.

I regard the facts of the Soviet case as disputed, the logic distorted and the evasion of responsibility as despicable. Nevertheless, the force of international pressure continues to produce new detail and we as Canadians play an important part in that international process.

Canada has held the Soviet Government to account for the lives lost in this tragedy. We have underlined our demands by action and in every instance we have shown the way by taking the lead as a clearly aggrieved nation. Canada was the first country to suspend Aeroflot's landing rights and no one else has decided on as lengthy a suspension as Canada. Canada was the first country to suspend arrangements to expand facilities for Aeroflot at no small cost to our own Canadian interests. We were the first country to call for generous and immediate compensation for the families of the victims. We also followed that up with a formal notice of a compensation claim to the Soviet Government.

I would like to note the action of other levels of government, unions and private citizens who decided to send a clear message to Moscow. What is very important in this particular case is that individuals and groups are acting independently of national governments to demonstrate their sense of outrage and to call upon the Soviet Government to come clean and take their responsibilities to the world and to provide the required compensation. I would like to mention a few among the private actions taken. For example, the Alberta Minister of Economic Development cancelled an imminent business promotion visit to Moscow; Vancouver Deputy Mayor Bill Yee cancelled the visit of a cultural delegation he was taking to Odessa; Canadian airline pilots and longshoremen have spoken out and taken action to emphasize their solidarity and concern. Canadians from every walk of life in many cities gave vent to their outrage by demanding that facilities for the Moscow Circus be withdrawn.

It is clear that Canada led the way on this issue and that this is recognized by a range of countries who have taken parallel action or who are supporting our efforts in multilateral fora. The United States administration has taken steps to wipe clean the slate of any vestige of Aeroflot activity in the United States. The United Kingdom has announced a 14-day ban on flights to and from the Soviet Union. Japan has announced boycott measures and is expected to take further action. Of course, the Republic of Korea has taken a very strong position in multilateral fora and in bilateral consultations with many states in the interest of concerted international action. The pilots association in Scandinavia and Switzerland have decided on 60-day partial boycotts on flights to the U.S.S.R.

At the United Nations, from the beginning of this tragic episode, the Government has clearly recognized the vital importance of concerted action through the Security Council of the United Nations. When the first details of this shocking act began to emerge on Thursday, September 1, Canada in co-operation with the Governments of Japan, the United States and Korea immediately approached the President of the Security Council to call an emergency session to consider the problem. Of the 13 speakers who spoke on September 2, only Canada put forward a comprehensive plan of action which included first, a full and impartial inquiry to be undertaken immediately by the Secretary General.

● (2030)

Second, a request that the International Civil Aviation Organization carry out a thorough investigation with the aim of improving international civil aviation regulations and practices to preclude any repetition of this horrible act and to demand that the Soviet Union offer immediate compensation to the families of the victims.

Canada, as a co-sponsor of the resolution, has worked diligently with like-minded states to devise a resolution incorporating these points. We have made representations to interested parties both in Ottawa and in capitals in other countries. We have worked unceasingly in New York to ensure the broadest possible support for the resolution. A vote was taken on the resolution at the Security Council not many minutes ago. I am sorry to report to the House that despite our efforts I have just learned that the Soviet Union coldly and deliberately vetoed the resolution. The vote was nine to two, with four abstentions. Only the U.S.S.R. and Poland voted against the resolution. This unsurprising but neverthless inhuman action was taken for one reason only, to save face in spite of the undeniably legitimate demands of the majority. Their decision to veto this resolution calling for an international inquiry under the leadership of the Secretary General now rests with the court of world opinion. But the Soviet veto in New York will not stop nations like Canada in pressing forward their legitimate claims and in taking further action.

At the International Civil Aviation Organization based in Montreal, Canada as an aggrieved party has, with the Republic of Korea, been instrumental in calling a special session which begins later this week on September 15. Our aim at this meeting will be twofold. First, to assign responsibility for the tragedy because the Soviet Union has not accepted responsibility at all up to the present time for what has happened. Second, to develop practical and useful procedures to avoid any chance of a repetition of this terrible action.

We will speak out as strongly as required and we hope constructively. We have drafted a strong resolution for consideration by the special session. We will work energetically and tirelessly to improve the mechanisms of civil aviation to ensure that no passenger, wherever he or she flies in this world, will not have to live with the fear that heat seeking missiles could be aimed at the destruction of passenger aircraft. That is the human objective of all our efforts, not only to feel the sorrow for those who have lost their lives and to share this sorrow with their bereaved families but also to ensure that this terrible event will not occur in the future.

There have been some suggestions that we take broad economic sanctions against the Soviet Union. We have not so far adopted this course. It is important to distinguish between things which are satisfying to say and those which are effective to do. First, we think it is important to keep the Soviet Union enmeshed in the international system, not driven further into siege mentality. Second, the lessons of economic sanctions are that their effectiveness is impaired by damage to ourselves by the actions of others which tend to undercut the sanction, and in the case of the Soviet Union by the continental almost autarkic nature of the Soviet economy. I want to remind you that Afghanistan and Poland have demonstrated to us the difficulties of co-ordinating a sanctions policy among differing countries with different interests and policies. Thus the measures we are pursuing are selective, restricted to the civil aviation sector and managed within a time frame permitting review, extension or withdrawal depending upon events and the behaviour of the Soviet Union.

We have served notice to the Soviets that a claim for compensation is imminent. We have personal contact with the families of the victims, seeking the information we need in the preparation of the claim. We have also been in telephone contact with them and have told them we will assist them in any way possible. Once our consultations are complete, we will decide on a quantum figure for this claim on behalf of the families and submit it to the Soviet Government. I assure you, as I do the families, that should Soviet recalcitrance to discuss the issue continue the issue will move to a prominent place in our entire bilateral relationship.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Whatever sanctions are implemented people are inevitably affected. In this case, the suspension of Aeroflot service has unfortunately caught a number of Canadians in the U.S.S.R. with no direct flight home. We recognized this potential problem from the start but could not let it stand in the way of what the Government considered an effective and appropriate response. To ensure hardship is kept to an absolute minimum, I have asked our embassy in Moscow to provide every assistance to stranded passengers, including financial help to those who need it to get home. I am pleased to report, Mr. Speaker, that so far the problem has been managed. Canadians are booking on other flights and where financial loss has resulted, the embassy has come to their assistance. We will continue to do all we can to keep any discomfort to Canadians to a minimum.

The House is aware that the Moscow Circus was to begin a tour of Canada at the time of the tragedy. It had arrived in Halifax and was preparing for its first show. Public opinion resulted in the decision of Provinces, cities and arena owners to cancel the performances. We respect those decisions.

The Soviet authorities have now decided to take the circus home. We have to let them take the circus home. Therefore, I have decided to permit Aeroflot flights to come into Halifax in order to take the property and the animals back to Moscow and in order to take the performers back to their country. I believe that is an appropriate action at the present time.

I want to conclude by saying the Government is taking a series of measures and initiatives in our bilateral relations as I have described; in western councils, at Madrid, at Brussels and in New York. We will continue to do that. We will press forward at the International Civil Aviation Organization to demonstrate to the Soviet Union that our limits of tolerance went down with that Korean airliner. We want to maintain our demands for compensation for the victims, and we want to ensure by implementing every suitable procedure and regulation that this event will not be repeated.

The world is outraged. The world is in a state of disbelief that an event of this proportion should occur ending the lives, so abruptly and without any warning, of innocent people. The world is in a state of disbelief that the Soviet Union has not come forward and admitted its responsibilities and has not come forward with a clear cut policy to the world and with a free and generous offer of compensation. The world tonight waits upon the Soviet leadership.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2040)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate tonight on a topic which I think is appropriately being brought before the House, I would like to emphasize at the beginning how the tragedy, which has already been referred to so effectively by the mover of the motion and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), could not have occurred at a worse time. At a time when there are international negotiations continuing with the hope that there will be a meaningful agreement with respect to the control and, hopefully, the reduction of arms in the world, we are caught up in this tragic slaughtering of 269 innocent civilians who chose to take KAL flight 007. I say that because, while we are perfectly correct tonight in condemning, as the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has condemned, and as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has condemned, the action of the Soviet nation in shooting down this aircraft, we must always weigh the facts—and I implore the House to weigh them always—to ensure that a proper balance be maintained, and that we do not inadvertently cause something to be said or do something that would jeopardize ongoing discussions with respect to disarmament, in particular the discussions which are taking place in Geneva.

In that connection I note that in the New York Times of only yesterday the following was indicated:

> U.S. negotiators at the Geneva talks on medium-range nuclear missiles have been empowered to make new concessions, according to Administration officials.

Referring to President Reagan it continued:

> —one key official said:
>
> "The President has not taken away Nitze's authority to act, but the timing of any new moves on our part has obviously been affected and the whole atmosphere for the talks has been poisoned by what the Soviets did."

I read that into the record both to indicate the hopeful sign that the U.S. administration does have some grounds to be willing to negotiate and that it is willing to offer those suggestions. I also want to emphasize how this incident, according to that Washington official, has soured the tone of those discussions and negotiations.

If I may I would like to stress this evening that we must in this debate do only what we feel we must do in the condemning of the Soviet action. Let us not in the name of mankind do anything which might jeopardize ongoing discussions that may lead to meaningful disarmament in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I say that because I too would like to add my words of condemnation of the Soviet action to those which have already been offered in the debate. I listened closely to what the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated as being the appropriate actions taken by the Government with respect to the tragic shooting down of the Korean aircraft. But I feel we must ask ourselves, while the debate continues, what are the circumstances. Have we done enough to indicate in the most effective possible way our condemnation of the Soviet action? For example, have we taken in meaningful terms such actions related to air travel that might be considered necessary to show the world's revulsion at the Soviet action?

This afternoon I raised a question on the Canadian-Soviet Protocol on Consultations which was signed by the then and present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on May 19, 1971 in Moscow. We note that various things were enshrined in that agreement which I can only feel that the Government today could call upon the Soviet Union to live up to and to perform. For example, in that agreement surely it is worth noting tonight that the Prime Minister of Canada and the Soviet leaders agreed to consultations embracing international questions including situations causing tension in various parts of the world. The protocol went on to indicate in clause 2:

In the event of a situation arising which, in the opinion of the two Governments, endangers the maintenance of peace or involves a breach of the peace, the two Governments will make contact without delay in order to exchange views on what might be done to improve the situation.

Those are direct quotations from the protocol which was signed by our Prime Minister and the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1971.

Surely we must consider what has been the Government's reaction to the Soviet envoy's response when we asked him to accept a note in Ottawa concerning the possible compensation for the survivors of the victims who were Canadians. Let me read into the record the news account of what was the Soviet response as reported in The Toronto Star:

The top Soviet diplomat in Canada touched off a diplomatic incident here yesterday when he furiously refused to accept a formal note from the Canadian government demanding compensation for the ten Canadian victims of the Korean airliner massacre.

It went on to indicate:

But he angrily refused to accept it in person from External Affairs' top legal adviser, Leonard Legault, and told him to mail it to the Soviet embassy.

Then he added: "I think you've got the wrong address on it anyway. You should send it to the U.S. government."

Then the veteran diplomat who is heading the Soviet mission in Canada until the new ambassador is appointed to succeed the former ambassador stormed off back to the fortress-like embassy. Is that not a startling contrast to the tone of the protocol signed in 1971 calling for immediate consultations between the Soviet Union and Canada if an event such as we are discussing tonight should ever occur? At that time let us remember what the then and present Prime Minister said concerning what he had done in Moscow.

● (2050)

At a press conference in Moscow at the time of the signing of that agreement, the Prime Minister, in talking of the need for Canada to diversify its relations because of the overpowering presence of the United States, stated:

—that is reflected in a growing consciousness amongst Canadians of the danger to our national identity from a cultural, economic and perhaps even military point of view.

Later in that press conference, the then and present Prime Minister said:

—if they can take time to discuss with us the various aspects of policy and various events in the world which might lead to threatening peace, we are very glad for that . . . What I do see is that if areas of tension arise that both parties will consult and both parties will take whatever means they can to reduce these tensions.

He concluded by saying:

I think the first thing that we tried to establish was an atmosphere of confidence, of trust.

In view of what has transpired, earlier today I asked the Prime Minister what he felt had occurred under that protocol. Has there been a violation in fact of the provisions of the agreement? I was rather taken back, and I invite all Members tomorrow to read Hansard, to hear what the Prime Minister said. He said there had been gestures on the part of the Government. To use his words, he said the Hon. Member will know that the then Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of State for External Relations, in the very first gesture of response by this Government asked the Charge d'Affaires precisely to embark upon consultations and to explain the circumstances of the tragic happening. The other gestures taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in dealing with Soviet authorities both here and in Moscow have precisely been doing that, asking for consultations, asking for explanations, asking for reparation, and taking some measures of our own.

I believe that the people of Canada demand more than gestures. They demand more than rhetoric. To date I would suggest that perhaps the Prime Minister only inadvertently, but so aptly used the word "gesture" in replying to questions in this House today.

Let me touch on perhaps the most vital part of this debate, that is our compassion, our sympathy for those who have lost, in the case of Canadians, ten of their family. It is only fitting that as the debate continues, instead of talking about numbers with vague references to people who have been victims that we read into the record the names of these ten who were shot down in cold blood as they proceeded on their trip. I refer of course to Marilou Covey, Toronto; Brother Jean-Paul Grégoire, Laval, Quebec; Mary Jane Hendrie, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario; François Robert de Massy, Hampstead, Quebec; Georgis Panagopoulos, Toronto, Ontario; François Robert, Longueuil, Quebec; Larry Patrick Sayers, Stoney Creek, Ontario; Mrs. Chun Lan Yeh, Toronto, Ontario; Mao San Lim, Toronto, Ontario and Mrs. Chi Man Leung, Hamilton, Ontario.

In paying tribute to those people, perhaps it would be only fitting to read into the record one small quotation from Mary Jane Hendrie, one of the victims, written to a friend a brief time before her tragic "Flight into Darkness", as Maclean's has referred to it. At the time she wrote:

Count your blessings and overcome your hardships. That is what life is all about. The tragic sense of life is that people allow hardship to overwhelm them . . . But I think it is actually an effort to resist that darkness, when it is overwhelming, that is the beauty of human life—

Those were the words of one of the victims of this tragic shooting. As the debate continues I ask Hon. Members to remember not only the names of the ten victims but the words of Mary Jane to which I just referred.

In concluding, I would like to suggest that while the motion of the Hon. Member for Oshawa is most appropriate, as I said tonight, I would like to see a new element of definitiveness in the motion. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that while the motion prompts the debate that we are now engaged in, it does not specifically condemn the Soviets for their action. As a result, I would propose that the motion be amended as follows:

That the period after the word "routes" be deleted and the following words added immediately thereafter: "therefore this House directs the Speaker to convey to the Chairman of the Presidium of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet the unanimous condemnation by this House of the conduct of the Soviet government in the destruction of this defenceless, civilian airliner and the 269 souls aboard."

In proposing that amendment, I would like to recall what already has been said by the Hon. Member for Oshawa and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that they want to send a message to Moscow. If we want to send an effective message to Moscow concerning the matter before us this evening it cannot be fully done by a debate that may run into the wee hours of the morning. It can be done most effectively by every Member of this House standing up and voting as I have suggested in my amendment to show our unanimous condemnation of what has transpired and what we are all condemning tonight.

I notice that the Hon. Member for Oshawa, prompted by some of his colleagues, said there is no vote tonight. If my amendment, is accepted I would ask for the unanimous consent of this House that the motion as amended, which will then be before the House, be in fact voted upon before we adjourn later this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before recognizing the next speaker in the debate, the Chair should bring to the attention of Hon. Members that the motion being proposed by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) is a substantive motion, and in the normal course of events, and in view of the nature of the question now before the House, could only be accepted with due notice being given to the House. However, as the Chair understand it, the Hon. Member for York-Peel seeks unanimous consent to have the motion which he has read accepted by the House at this time. I may have misunderstood the Hon. Member for York-Peel, but I think the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is seeking the floor. I will listen to him for a moment.

● (2100)

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I might be of some assistance to the Chair. What is before you is an amendment to the motion; it is not a motion standing by itself. I would hope that before making a decision as to whether or not that amendment is acceptable, you would want to hear submissions on it. At the moment, the submission I make is that what you have before you is an amendment, not a motion, therefore not requiring notice.

I do not believe, and I so submit, that it is necessary to seek unanimous consent to put that amendment, but it certainly is necessary to seek the unanimous consent of the House as to whether or not we vote on the amendment.

I would think, judging by the remarks made by the Leaders of all Parties in their various roles tonight in the opening of this debate, that Members of the House would certainly want to see this amendment put to a vote so that our feelings, obviously the unanimous feelings of the House, would be conveyed to the Soviet Union through the Chair in no uncertain terms.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, it is certainly evident from the comments I made when moving the motion that if this amendment is deemed to be accepted procedurally, it would have the wholehearted support of Members of the New Democratic Party.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we are debating a very important subject under the provisions of our Standing Orders and, more specifically, under the provisions of Standing Order 30, which clearly indicate that we have here a motion to adjourn the House, which is supposed to be approved as soon as Members have ceased to speak to the motion. I submit, with due respect, that there are other ways of moving a substantive motion on this subject, allowing Members to make their positions known by voting separately on the question. In any case, the approach taken by the Conservative Member who is moving an amendment to the adjournment motion is not, in my view, in accordance with the Standing Orders of the House, and I think it creates a dangerous precedent. I can assure the Hon. Member that we will certainly find other ways, in the course of another debate or through another motion or procedure, to give Hon. Members an opportunity to express their views on this issue within the reasonably near future, but the fact remains that the amendment he wishes to move is entirely at odds with the letter and the intent of Standing Order 30, which we want to see applied in its entirety, and consequently, we have no alternative but to deny the unanimous consent he is requesting for an amendment to an adjournment motion.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, it may well be that the Government House Leader is correct in his interpretation of the rule, although I cannot bring myself to agree with him. But even in the absence of that and given the subject matter of the debate, and given what the already expressed feelings of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) are, the feelings of the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) who has expressed the views of this Party, and those of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) who moved the motion, and given that those feelings will obviously continue throughout the rest of the debate, I would suggest, and I so ask, that unanimous consent be given—and the House can do anything by unanimous consent—to put the amendment as well as to put the question.

S.O. 30

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. President of the Privy Council, on the same point of order.

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member for Yukon does not seem to have understood what I was saying and I am not going to repeat what I said. I have explained why we could not ignore the letter and the intent of standing order 30. However, since he is saying that with unanimous consent, just about anything can be done, I would like to suggest a more intelligent solution. I suggest that the House approve unanimously the words spoken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) this evening in which he condemned, in no uncertain terms, the attitude taken by the Soviet Union regarding the occurrence we are discussing tonight.

Therefore, if the House is willing to state its unanimous support for the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), I think that would be the intelligent thing to do. It is nonsense, however, to ask the unanimous consent of the House for supporting an amendment to an adjournment motion. It does not make sense. I think it would make more sense for the House to say simply, in a unanimous vote, that it fully supports the comments made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his speech this evening regarding the incident a few days ago in which an aircraft was shot down by the Soviets.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would suggest that there are two tasks before you. I have specifically asked that the Chair request unanimous consent to put that amendment. There is obviously support on this side to grant that consent so that our feelings are unmistakably conveyed to the Chairman of the Presidium of the U.S.S.R., the Supreme Soviets, but if that is not the wish of Government Members and they do not want to convey that sentiment in that way, then the Chair is faced with task number two, the need to make a decision as to whether or not the amendment is procedurally acceptable. I would hope that before coming to that conclusion, which the Chair can come to as we move along in the debate if unanimous consent is not forthcoming, that the Chair would want to hear submissions as to the acceptability of the amendment before making a ruling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. In the first instance the Hon. Member for Yukon was quite right in reminding the Chair that the Hon. Member for York-Peel had not presented a motion but an amendment to the main motion. That was my unfortunate choice of words.

The Chair has heard arguments from both sides of the House and I think it would be wise at this point in time to take the matter under advisement and the Chair will render a decision on the amendment before the House at the earliest possible opportunity. In the meantime I would suggest that we resume debate.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that is most acceptable to us, of course, but I have asked the Chair to seek unanimous consent notwithstanding the procederal acceptability of the amendment. I have asked the Chair to seek unanimous consent now to put the amendment and to vote on it, and so I would ask the Chair to request that unanimous consent now with the knowledge that it will likely be refused by Government Members.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I realize you already rendered a decision stating that you wanted to take the acceptability of the amendment under advisement, and that you would subsequently indicate what you intended to do. Perhaps meanwhile, my colleague, if he is in good faith, will agree to hold consultations with the representative of the New Democratic Party and myself, so that we can try to reach agreement on a mutually acceptable text, since it is clear that in this House, we all have the same views on the subject now being considered. I would prefer to avoid spending much more time debating procedural matters. Mr. Speaker, you have just rendered a decision in which you stated that you wanted to take the acceptability of an amendment under advisement, but we can still hold consultations during the next few minutes to find out whether we could not agree on a text that would have the unanimous consent of all three parties.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged by the remarks of the Government House Leader that he wants to have discussions with respect to the phraseology of the amendment, and we accept that sincerely and immediately. However, that does not dispose of the right of Members to ask the Chair to request unanimous consent under these circumstances. That is quite apart from the procedural acceptability of the motion. But I accept in good faith the Government House Leader's suggestion. I would assume that the New Democratic Party would do likewise in order to see if we cannot arrive at a mutually acceptable phraseology for an amendment that could be put unanimously; but I reserve my privilege and my right to request the Chair to put the unanimous consent necessary. Any Member can request unanimous consent to put such an amendment.

• (2110)

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, there are two points at issue here: first, the Hon. Member's right to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to put an amendment, whose acceptability you said you wished to take under advisement. I submit it is impossible to give unanimous consent to an amendment that is not on the table and that has not been judged acceptable by the Chair. We therefore respect that Chair's decision to take this matter under advisement and to see whether the amendment is acceptable or not. That being said, the second point is that we are willing to meet right away with the House leaders, to discuss a procedure that would be acceptable to all three parties in this House, that is, either an amendment, a motion or a text. I am willing to meet right away with the House leaders in order to find a way to give expression, unanimously, if possible, to our feelings about a subject on which there seems to be quite substantial unanimity.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the intervention of the Government House Leader begs the question. The unanimous consent that we reserve the right to speak is to get the motion on the floor of the House. That is the amendment that the Chair is being asked to rule upon subsequently. The right of a Member to seek that unanimous consent is undoubted.

I think it is begging the question at this moment. We will engage in those discussions suggested by the Government House Leader in good faith and immediately, to see if we can arrive at suitable phraseology.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as has been stated in this debate, I think we all recognize that every so often there is a moment in world events when everybody stops: something happens that provides a common thread of response and emotion. Certainly that was the case a short while ago when, truly, there was a shot that was heard around the world and everyone within listening or watching distance stood back with a sense of horror and revulsion at the events that transpired in an area of South East Asia involving a Korean airliner.

In the debate tonight I think it is the responsibility of the representatives of the Canadian people to try, as much as they can, not only to reflect that sense of immediate reaction but also to ask some very important questions about where we go from here. It would be wrong for us simply to express horror, revulsion and indignation without also asking questions about whether incidents like this would be allowed to happen again. Of course, it is easy to condemn, and to say that this is something about which we all have a sense of strained sadness and tragedy; but the key question which was not addressed by that resolution is what we can do to provide protection and security against future incidents.

The issue really is how we say to the hundreds and thousands of travellers who every day, with a sense of security and with confidence, board an airliner to engage in international travel, that all of a sudden, in the darkness of the night, they will not be snuffed out without any reason or rationality. That is part of the issue that this House of Commons must face this evening. It is not simply a matter of reacting to the event; it also means building some further protection and security so that we will have a better sense that those kinds of events will not take place in future.

Any initiative taken by this Government, by this country, must therefore always be considered in the context of the delicate balance of the international system. How do you give full vent to your emotion while recognizing that the world goes on and therefore you must take account of the realities of the world? We must ask how we can nudge and push and persuade the international community to provide a better sense of security than existed before.

We must recognize that there is almost a convergence of events that the tragedy of the Sakhalin Islands brings home in a very vivid and dramatic way. That is, that this tremendous magic carpet that has been made available to us through civil aviation, through international flights taking people around the world by the hundreds of thousands, the tremendous opening of the world so that we can taste and experience the wide variety of life on the globe, is also touched with an element of insecurity and danger. Within each of those areas that we pass through are a lot of concepts, traditions of sovereignty, protection of territory, of military defences that ensure that "What is mine is ringed around with a wall or some kind of curtain of iron or electronic surveillance".

It is interesting to note that we have debated both sides of that issue in the House. There are Members who have said that we must increase our defence, provide for better protection and further reference to our sovereignty, while at the same time we preach the gospel of international interdependence, international communication, commerce and community. This event brings home to us that in many cases those principles have to be brought into harmony; you cannot ignore one at the expense of the other.

This was a civilian airliner carrying passengers on vacation or on business, who had confidence that the system would protect them. Unknown to them, however, they were on a flight of total jeopardy. When they boarded the plane in New York they were confident that the rules established over the years would give them the security they desired or needed. That is the case with all of us when we board an airplane or whatever; we have an implicit sense that all is right with the world. We do not worry until we recognize that there is also a jungle out there where the rules do not apply. There are individuals, and sometimes countries, who say: "I do not believe in those rules of interdependency; I do not believe in those rules of recognition of mutual self-interest and will defend my sovereignty, my territory and my military security to the utmost."

It seems to me that one of the important and necessary lessons of this event is how we can try to provide for an improvement, or progress, so that the tragedy of those lives that were lost may not be repeated. This was the approach taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). In his original statement he expressed the great feelings of sorrow for the families affected and the indignation of Canadians at the wilful, arbitrary and hostile act that was perpetrated. We also recognized that, while feeling revulsion and even indignation, we could not ignore the critical necessity of maintaining the sense of international responsibility and obligation that is inherent in international aviation. Perhaps we can build upon this to provide some further protection for travellers of the future.

My regret about this particular resolution is that it does not encompass that particular spirit. It does not incorporate that sense of trying to forge new international alliances and organizations, rule of law and rule of reason. We must try to use this event and build upon it to bring about even an enhanced and more important sense of it.

● (2120)

I am surprised in part by the Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party who have often expressed those kinds of feelings, whether it be on Central America or on arms control, who have stood for those kinds of principles. They seem to have forgotten that in the words and tone of the resolution which they have presented to us. They have forgotten the critical element, that if we are going to prevent that almost instantaneous spark of conflict which has occurred between the civil, peaceful world and the military world of war, we must provide some protection, some buffer and some rules to make sure that it does not happen again.

I regret very much that the resolution does not contain that spirit, that sense of feeling which we must build upon. We must use our position as a respected member of the international community to do something further.

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. Axworthy: I will come to that because I believe there are a number of initiatives which should and will be taken in order to say that this lesson will not be ignored but will be built upon.

Of course, one of the first opportunities is to address the issue of how effective and valuable are the international rules which now prevail in the area of civil aviation, or, indeed, has the level of danger, the threshold of jeopardy, been raised so high between the increase in armament and the increase in military security to a point where the commerce and traverse of international aviation is now constantly running abut to that particular jeopardy?

As we know, in 1944 the Chicago Convention signed the International Civil Aviation Agreement which required of all nations to establish certain rules of behaviour about themselves and their neighbours, about how planes would fly, one to the other. Most Canadians may not recognize that Canada was one of the pioneers in establishing that rule of law in international flight, that many other countries refused to recognize many of the fundamental freedoms which were established under that convention. Perhaps the most important freedom of the air which was established in 1944 was the freedom of overflight, the right of a plane of one nation to have access over the air rights of another nation in order to go to another destination, a convention which we had signed as a full signatory and which the Soviet Union refused to sign. It was one of the few nations that did not put its pen to the paper to say that it was prepared to recognize that freedom of overflight, that freedom of access.

There is an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to begin to redress some of those neglects of the past perhaps, because on Tuesday of next week, beginning in Montreal, by coincidence, there is the meeting of the International Civil Aviation Organization. At that meeting we will have the opportunity as a country, which we intend to do through the initiative of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself, to bring to that assembly a number of representations as to how we must carefully re-examine the rules and procedures as they relate to civil aviation and determine whether they are sufficient to deal with that new threshold of danger which was so vividly brought home to us just a few weeks ago.

There are a number of technical questions which must be asked. One of the questions which bothers me most, in the way I hope it would bother other Hon. Members, is that voice in the mind which says: "How could it be that a commercial airline straying off course would conduct itself for a period of two hours over hostile territory, followed by fighter aircraft of the Soviet Union, and somehow there was not a recognition and realization on both parts that a horrible mistake was about to be committed and that something had to be done to pull back from that brink of tragedy?"

If you look at some of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, if you go back into the questions of verification and identification, why is it that one pilot cannot radio to another? I mean, how do you wiggle your wings at 3 a.m. in the morning when it is pitch black outside? How do you establish a sense of identification and communication? Where are the rules which establish the proper procedures to ensure that that fighter aircraft pilot and the commercial airline pilot are in some sense of communication? Where does the responsibility lie? Is it on the ground with the controllers? Is it in the air with the two pilots? Surely that question must be asked and must be faced by all members of the international community to ensure that this will not happen again. I believe that is one of the opportunities which must be faced by this country and by all Canadians, because I believe we have a responsibility to represent that particular point of view.

Therefore, while we properly and without question should be expressing the deep concern of the people most fundamentally affected, the families of the victims of that tragedy, and expressing indignation at the transgression of some basic precepts of international civility and sanity, we must also ask some questions about how we can best construct an improved system in the area of civil aviation so that that enormous world which has been opened to us does not begin to shrivel and shrink under the fear and sense of tyranny of the unknown.

In terms of the initiatives which this Government has taken, Mr. Speaker, the suspension of Aeroflot flights into Mirabel, it was quite deliberately chosen because it was carefully within the boundaries of the jurisdiction of civil aviation itself, which clearly brings home the argument that the whole question of reciprocity, of one country being able to exchange its passengers and travellers with another, has to be held in abeyance until that issue is resolved, and the rules established for that particular sense of communication and travel.

The statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs clearly articulated the requirement that until answers are forthcoming, explanations given and responsibility acknowledged, we will not lift that suspension but will in fact continue it. I believe we have provided a sense of leadership and a sense of direction for many other countries which have now followed in our wake by saying: "If you are going to break fundamental rules, then we had better pull those rules back for re-examination."

It is that particular sense of principle that we tried to establish last Labour Day, and which I hope will provide the foundation which we require to take further initiatives in the international community in order to provide for better protection. We will be at the meetings on September 15, the special emergency meetings of the International Civil Aviation Organization, representing a resolution requiring a full inquiry and investigation into the incident of the Korean airliner and the Soviet Union explosion.

Stepping beyond that requirement for investigation, Mr. Speaker, at the assembly itself, the tri-annual assembly, we will also be making the case that the international community, all partners within it, look at the basic fundamental freedoms of international travel, the rules which apply to it and the technical requirements to improve upon it. It would be my hope in the ensuing debate of this House on this particular resolution that Hon. Members of the Commons would express not only their feelings but their sense of commitment to the need for further strengthening and enhancement of the international rule of law, the international sense that you must put into place institutions, procedures, rules and obligations upon all nations if we are to have any kind of interdependence, any kind of acceptable mutual requirement for living together on this particular globe. Whether it is in the field of international civil aviation, refugee problems or arms control, if we do not come to grips with those kinds of issues and come up with answers, then we as people responsible for trying to pull some meaning and sense out of this tragedy in the Sakhalin Islands will have failed in our responsibilities.

• (2130)

So it is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that as the debate on this resolution ensues, the steps taken by this Government do not only express the feelings of the Canadian people but try to go one step further, and that initiatives to build and develop guidelines to provide for protection, security and a greater sense of international responsibility will be supported by Members of this House. Because with the House's support we feel we will have the strength to continue and retrieve something better out of this tragedy that we all so deeply regret.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I know there are a great number of Members of this House who want to participate in this debate and I will not be long. Let me first join with those who have spoken tonight and others who have spoken before this night in offering my condolences to the families of those who have lost their lives on Korean Airlines Flight 007. Let me also identify myself with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Leader of the NDP who introduced this motion and this debate. Let me also identify myself with the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), as well as those of the spokesman on External Affairs in my Party, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

I was a little bit surprised, Mr. Speaker, at the remarks of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy). I hesitate to bring in a partisan note to this debate, but as I sat here listening, I got the impression that somehow it was the system that failed us and resulted in the shooting down of KAL Flight 007. If only we had a better system. Well, Mr. Speaker, humanity, the fundamental human character, provides a standard which says it is simply inhuman to shoot down a civilian passenger airliner. You cannot get over that fact. We have a system. We have international agreements. Supposedly we have a planet made up of human beings not too dissimilar from each other and who find that kind of action repulsive. He says he wants us to join together in working out some new agreement, some new system of recognition, so that this will not happen again. Mr. Speaker, what kind of agreement or treaty can we write which would somehow stop those who have lied about this tragedy, those who gave the order to shoot down a 747 loaded with civilians?

The Minister talks about the goal of a more tolerant, interdependent world. That is recognized as a goal we all seek, but I do not think he is contributing, quite frankly, to better understanding by failing to acknowledge just what happened to Flight 007. The act of murder committed by the Soviet Union in shooting down KAL Flight 007 cannot be condemned in words too harsh. When innocent civilians are killed or injured in a war between armies, by terrorists or revolutionaries in pursuit of political goals, or even by a lunatic or criminal acting alone, we can and do mourn the pain caused by the inhumanity of the perpetrators. But when the act is caused by a deliberate decision of the government of one of the world's superpowers, we mourn the loss of life but we also shudder at the implications for the world.

Accidents happen, Mr. Speaker. Errors in judgment occur. While we may get angry at any loss of life, we can understand the need to forgive when culpability is admitted and regret expressed. But, Mr. Speaker, the shooting down of KAL Flight 007 with the loss of 269 lives was not, according to the U.S.S.R., an accident for which they express regret but a deliberate act which they insist was justified and which they say they would repeat in similar circumstances. That, Mr. Speaker, is frightening because of what it says about the people running this vast superpower.

The Soviet Government, in defending this outrageous proposition, states that Soviet territory is sacred. But this same Government has so far this year alone intruded into North American air space 77 times with military aircraft. Submarines from the U.S.S.R. have intruded into militarily sensitive areas in Sweden and Norway at least three times this year. Now, if the Soviet Union is to be believed or if we look at what they do in practice, of all the earth only Soviet territory is sacred; everything else is available for intervention by Soviet military aircraft and ships.

Imagine the reverse situation, Mr. Speaker. Let us imagine for a moment that a Canadian or American military craft shot down a Soviet civilian aircraft. Imagine what would have occurred? To begin with, within days if not hours we would all know who gave the order. We would know whether it was the pilot, some local commander or the executive. If it was the executive, the Government would fall and be changed immediately. If it was a local commander or the pilot, he would be dismissed instantaneously. We do not know, Mr. Speaker, who ordered the Soviet strike. We do not know if it was the Kremlin, but if the order came from Moscow, what does this say about the people in charge and the system which allows such people to be in charge and to stay there? If the order came from some local military command which the Kremlin is now covering up, what does that say about Soviet military command structures and the ability of the western world to negotiate a believable arms reduction treaty, an enforceable treaty with such a group?

Deplorable as this act of murder is, Mr. Speaker, it does not bring us closer to the Apocalypse. But it does demonstrate that the road back from the abyss will be longer and slower than any of us want or many of us thought.

As the Hon. Member for York-Peel indicated, we must talk. We must not allow this incident to prevent us from talking. We must not allow it to prevent us from pursuing aggressively the road to peace, to disarmament. For that is the only hope for the salvation of mankind. But what we have obviously learned, if we choose to learn it, is that we are dealing with a system, a regime, whose standards, whose morals, whose character is quite different from anything we could comprehend. It means, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that the road to disarmament and perpetual peace is not going to be easy; it is not going to be short. It means, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that in the meantime we will have to maintain, and in fact in Canada's case enhance, our military capabilities. It means that far from taking a step away from involving ourselves in NATO in support of our democratic countries, we as a country must reinforce that commitment in recognition that a democratic country could never perpetrate such a heinous act, and that as long as there are dictatorships of the sort that are now in control of the Soviet Union, we who value democracy, freedom and human rights and who can never justify the wanton taking of innocent civilian lives under any circumstance have no choice but to maintain a position of vigilance and strength.

● (2140)

I believe the history of KAL Flight 007 is known to us. Perhaps more complete detail which we do not know is forthcoming.

The behaviour of the Soviet Union in first denying that there was an airplane, then denying that there was in fact any shots fired at it, finally being forced to admit that it did in fact shoot it down but claiming it had every right to do so, and more horrendously saying that they will do so again, is just and reasonable cause for the House to condemn a government that would allow this to happen and to pass a motion expressing that condemnation to be delivered to our counterparts, the members of the Supreme Soviet in the Soviet Union.

This is not the occasion for a partisan debate about Canada's defence policies or defence position, but I humbly suggest that this event will at least serve some small benefit to Canadians and the free world if we recognize it for what it is, learn the lessons from what has happened and act accordingly in the future. Perhaps we can save innocent lives in the future and save our democratic system. While it will take a long time, perhaps we will reach, through patient negotiation and waiting for the changes which must occur behind the Iron Curtain, that hopeful day in the future when peace is assured for all of us.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in this emergency debate this evening, and to have an opportunity to express my disgust with the crime perpetrated by the Soviet Union some days ago. I feel that whatever our political allegiance, age or nationality, we were all dumbstruck when we heard the sad news and realized that respect for civilian lives had not prevailed among members of the Soviet army in the course of their monitoring of Russian air space. Mr. Speaker, not only did the Soviets commit this crime, they even had the nerve to deny the fact and subsequently to put the entire blame on the United States, and this while they had 269 deaths on their conscience, including 10 Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, after producing lies and denials and inventing a number of scenarios that were positively obscene, the Soviet authorities went so far as to say that in similar circumstances, they would take the same ruthless action.

I think Hon. Members could usefully reflect this evening on the seriousness of these events and on the ruthlessness of the authorities who committed a positively heinous crime against innocent victims, who want to use this incident to play political games, at the expense of the families of the victims, and who are shameless in their reprisal to confess before the international community to a crime that is among the worst in history that I am aware of, and one that has aroused the indignation of the free world at the intransigent attitude of the Communists.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great satisfaction that I listened earlier this evening to the comments made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), who mentioned the measures he has taken on behalf of the Canadian Government, to lead the way in condemning this despicable deed.

Mr. Speaker, our colleagues on the other side of the House are urging us to continue our pressure tactics. I can assure them we shall persist in our endeavours until a full settlement has been reached. However, we also hope to lead the way among members of the international community in keeping the pressure on the Soviet authorities. At the present time, the Soviets are under pressure because of the events in Afghanistan and Poland, but unfortunately, as soon as such events are no longer in the news, observers, politicians and the general public often tend to take the situation for granted, although at this very moment, Soviet soldiers are shooting at Afghan citizens and in fact, the Soviet authorities are muzzling Poland, while now, the record also includes bodies floating on the waves and mourning relatives.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian authorities will continue their efforts. I would like to draw a parallel—perhaps not as serious as the death of ten Canadian citizens—but in January 1978, when Cosmos 954 disintegrated in the skies above our country, the Soviets took exactly the same position. They refused to acknowledge their responsibility just as they are doing in the present case. They did not even want to admit that the satellite was theirs. However, Canada did not despair, did not get discouraged and decided to maintain its position. Pessimists thought we would never get compensation for damages. However, by dint of determination and constant pressure, with a lot of patience and tight negotiating, Canada obtained a satisfactory settlement of $3 million. I can assure the House that in the case we are concerned with this evening, the Government is a hundred times more determined to obtain fair compensation for the victims' families. Actually, I hate to use the words fair compensation for ten innocent victims, and no amount of money can replace a father, a mother, a sister or a brother.

But at least I hope that the Soviets will have the kindness and generosity of trying to alleviate the hardships of those who were stranded on the ground.

Mr. Speaker, I am drawing a parallel with 1978 to show that we have no intention of giving up, to show that this unbreakable wall of the Soviet Union may be cracked, and to say that with Canada's leadership and many other countries' support they will not be able to resist much longer, they will not be able to lie outright to the world and forever expect no reaction. I should think that many speakers this evening will want to extend their condolences to the families and urge the Government to maintain its pressure until certain conditions are met. First, the Soviets should at least have the decency to acknowledge their responsibilities, indeed to confess before the international community, Mr. Speaker. We saw what happened at the Security Council: those hypocrites used their veto to prevent an inquiry into these incidents.

Mr. Speaker, I think that in light of the motion of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) it is imperative to develop practical and useful procedures to avoid a repetition of such barbaric behaviour. Finally, no one will be satisfied in Canada and in the free world until fair compensation has been given to the victims, because the human aspect remains the most significant in the events of the past few days. For a few months now a Soviet propaganda campaign was trying to make us forget Afghanistan and Poland, but in fact their resorting to military force has proved once again that we cannot really take any chances. And that incident has also taught us the frailty of the word freedom.

Deep in my heart, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that all Canadian citizens realized after hearing this tragic news just how frail it was and to what extent the political system and indeed the aggressiveness of certain nations could imperil the existence of many people. I hope that this incident, this accident or this murder, if you will, will give food for thoughts to the community of nations and to all political leaders throughout the world who have weapons, particularly deadly weapons. I think that we should all examine our conscience and that as long as the Soviets themselves do not examine theirs they will always stand guilty in our eyes and nothing will change our verdict of guilt.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise in this most serious debate on a subject of concern to all Canadians. And at the beginning of my remarks, I would like to commend all the Members from both sides of the House who have been in attendance until now. There is in my view a minimum of partisanship and a maximum of good will, a sense of national unity if you like, and above all a determination not to exasperate cold-war tensions, and also a concern for the victims of such a hideous crime as was said earlier.

• (2150)

[English]

The timing of this tragedy has been referred to by my colleague from York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) as well as others. I would simply repeat that in my view this is possibly the worst moment imaginable for something like this to have taken place. As all Hon. Members know, negotiations are now under way in Geneva with respect to medium-range nuclear missile weapons in Europe. My colleague the Hon. Member for York-Peel read from an article in yesterday's New York Times. I would refer to another passage in the same article which indicated that on this issue, namely the question of medium-range missiles, the United States might be prepared to drop its previous demand for over-all global equality in the deployment of medium-range missiles in favour of equality only in Europe. The article also adds that the Soviets might be prepared to consider dropping their demand to include French and British missiles in the medium-range category.

The talks are obviously at a crucial stage because the deployment of American Pershing missiles in West Germany will start in December if some settlement is not reached. All of us here who want a lasting peace in the world are thus saddened, and I think the best word is vexed, that this tragedy may in one way or another not prevent the deployment of nine out of 108 Pershing II missiles on December 15, 1983 in West Germany.

Other speakers have talked about the human side of this incident. I am sure there is no one here tonight who is not——read the many articles on that tragedy. Everyone wonders why such a tragedy has happened a few days ago. Maybe the pilot wanted to save fuel and decided on a shorter route? Maybe there was a hijacking? One may bet on anything, Mr. Speaker. But like anyone else, I ask myself this question: How is it possible to murder as was said in so many words, 269 innocent passengers in such circumstances?

[Translation]

[English]

Robbie Burns, I think it was, used the expression "Man's inhumanity to man." It is absolutely impossible for any Canadian to imagine something like this happening in the way it did.

My colleague from York-Peel read out the names of the Canadian victims. Let me also put them on the record. Marilou Covey, Brother Jean-Paul Gregoire, Mary Jane Hendrie, Francois Robert de Massy, Georgis Panagopoulos, Francois Robert, Larry Patrick Sayers, Mrs. Chun Lan Yeh, Mao San Lim, and Mrs. Chi Man Leung. Let me read what Miss Hendrie's father said:

[Translation]

He said in French, and I quote:

This is murder. For my wife and myself, the most precious person in the world has been murdered.

[English]

Georgis Panagopoulos is remembered by his fiancée, Maryze Jimenez.

[Translation]

—Maryze Jimenez, 19, from Toronto, and I quote:

I do not know what to think.

And I add, and this is not a quote, Miss Jimenez, reservation manager at the Hotel in Toronto, was to join her fiancé soon after his arrival in Korea. They planned on getting married.

● (2200)

[English]

It is my understanding that the brothers and family of Larry Patrick Sayers are desperately anxious that his identification and other materials be returned. Hopefully his body will also be returned to them for proper burial in Canada. I have also been informed personally that his family is anxious that everything possible be done to ensure that such a tragedy never occurs again.

I would like to single out one victim, Mary Jane Hendrie—and I am sure that this could be done for any of the victims—and add a bit to what has already been said about her. I think she was an absolutely extraordinary person. It may give us all a better sense of what happened to refer to one person. She was the eldest of five children. Her two grandmothers have both come to Canada from Dundee, Scotland, to be with the family. She obtained her B.A. Honours degree with distinction from the University of Toronto. She spent a year in Tokyo University in foreign studies. She spoke the Japanese language fluently. She looked hard for a job and found one with an international investment firm. She was on her way to that job when this incident happened. She had won many honours. She received a Sir James Dunn high school scholarship. She had been on a Rotary exchange. She was an expert in synchronized swimming. She ran the fastest mile at the city track meet. The human dimensions of this have hit all of us very strongly.

I would like to quote Marcel Adam of La Presse who put it as well as anyone could in a recent article headed:

[Translation]

The USSR reveals the true nature of its regime

After having brazenly lied about the circumstances surrounding the incident, the USSR, confronted with the overwhelming evidence brought before the United Nations, have finally admitted to having committed that infamous act with which they were charged, but without the least remorse, without the least intention to compensate in any way for the consequences of this mindless crime against humanity.

[English]

Another French editorial appeared in La Presse which I think expressed the feelings of many of us very well. I refer to the article of September 2. It reads:

[Translation]

Governments and nations that still enjoy the freedom to be indignant already condemn and will go on condemning such a vicious attack against a Korean commercial aircraft by a Soviet fighter North of Japan. But in the face of such a brutal and senseless act that has sent to their deaths 269 powerless and unarmed persons, indignation is not enough. What is still needed, as was firmly pointed out yesterday by Ottawa and Washington, is that Moscow provide the world with the necessary explanations.

[English]

The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) made the point very well that we are living in a shrinking world and that we know, each one of us, that the dialogue between the free world and the Soviet Union should be increasing, not decreasing. There are many issues which are vital to the maintenance of a fragile world peace. I do not think anyone in this nation would want to jeopardize that fragile peace. On the other hand, we all abhor and condemn the shooting down of Korean Airlines flight 007. All of us feel that the tragedy was compounded by the continuing refusal of the Soviet Government to accept any fault by its indication that it would do the same thing again in similar circumstances.

Would a peace seeking government characterize this act other than as having been a grave error? Would a peace seeking government not have apologized and offered to provide compensation to the victims' families? This brings me to my final point. What do we do now? What further firm but prudent step should Canada take now? I submit that a reasonable step in the circumstances, assuming the Soviet Union does not accept any fault in this matter, is to close down for an unstated period of time all Soviet flights coming to or going from Gander airport.

I obtained some data from the Department of Transport today which might be of interest to Hon. Members. In fairness I must point out that the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) was in error when he said on September 7 in a press release:

What remains using Gander is a flight that may occur once a month, probably less than that.

I would like to draw the Minister's attention to the figures provided by the Department of Transport today. In July, eight Aeroflot flights landed at Gander; in June, there were five; in May, there was one; in April, there were two; in March, there were two; and, in February, there were two.

An Hon. Member: Where were they going?

Mr. Kilgour: I hear someone asking where they were going. My information is that they were going from Moscow to Gander to Havana, South America, or vice versa. It would be a reasonable further indication of our disapproval of the tragedy and what has happened since. My Party and I salute the Government and give it full credit for the step it took at Mirabel. Hopefully we will take this additional step at Gander with the hope that these flights will be restored quickly. Recognizing that there will be a loss of revenue to people in Gander I hope they will be compensated.

Every Canadian listening to the debate would primarily see it as a moment of national unity. It seems to me that we as Canadians are saying that this is not the way we want the world to be run. We are a young country. We have people from every corner of the world in this land. We want our leaders and our country to behave with restraint, human kindness and compassion and to lead us toward peace. Obviously this act of the Soviets was not an act toward peace. We are as desperately anxious for peace in the world as I know you are, Mr. Speaker. We want a peaceful world, a world that respects opportunity for everyone. That is the message which each and every Member of the House of Commons has received from his constituents. They want us to act wisely but firmly. As I mentioned before, it would be a firm but prudent addition to what has been done if the flights into Gander were stopped.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am not happy but I feel it is important for as many Hon. Members as possible to rise and participate in the debate this evening which has been so properly raised by the New Democratic Party. Indeed it is frustrating for me—and I know it must be frustrating for every Member of the House—to rise to speak about an event, a government and a system which resulted in the deaths of innocent people, ten innocent Canadians and 259 others. It is frustrating because one gains the impression that the words we utter in this Chamber, judging by the reaction from the Soviet Union in recent days, are falling on uncaring, insensitive and perhaps even deaf ears. Frustrating as it may seem, we in the House of Commons as representatives of the Canadian people must stand and be heard in condemning a brutal and cold act of murder.

● (2210)

I appreciate the importance of giving a balanced and measured response to what has occurred. I realize as well that there can be no possibility on our part of sending out any other signal to those in our country and elsewhere in the world that we in this Chamber unanimously condemn this act and label it precisely what it was, that is, murder.

When my colleagues and I condemn the system of government and the mentality that could allow this kind of savage event to occur, we do not condemn a nation, its history or its people. We do condemn the geopolitical reality of today, a reality that began to evolve immediately after World War II when a country grabbed up territory. At that time other old world empires such as the so-called British Empire were disintegrating. At that time France was re-evaluating its role in North Africa. Other free nations were re-evaluating the colonial attitude. We condemn today a political system which at that same time, out of crisis, deemed it necessary to grab up territory and expand its borders.

The kind of paranoia and lack of understanding of the realities in an ever-shrinking world, as my colleague said, which existed in 1945 still exists today. It has allowed innocent people on a commercial airline to be brutally murdered. This was because of the feeling on the part of the leadership of the Russian nation. Somehow even a commercial airliner and innocent lives must fall before the knife of self-interest and the interest of a sovereign state.

The reaction of the Government of Canada has been appropriate. As the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) has asked, there has been a measured response, but it has been a firm response. We were the first nation in the free world to respond in a tangible way and take concrete action.

Some Members have expressed the concern that we not take action that would financially affect the interests of our nation, such as the banning of Soviet Aeroflot flights. I can assure Hon. Members that whether it be in Gander or in Montreal, Canadians do not put a price tag on the integrity of human life. Nor do they put a price tag on the values that we hold dear, values that we have built up in Canada.

I repeat that I find it frustrating to speak. I somehow feel that I am not being listened to. However, we in the free world, especially those in this House of Commons, must avoid any possibility of sending out a divided message. I appreciate and associate myself with the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member opposite. However, because of the desire to express ourselves clearly in condemning the Soviet Union, I would not want, because of procedural questions, to send out any message. I do not believe the Member opposite would want to send out any signal to the Soviet Union that this House is in any way divided. I hope arrangements can be reached to ensure that this House is unanimous in this condemnation.

We must speak. To those who say we must act in even more dramatic ways, I say that we have to accept the real world. I was not around at the time, but as a student of history I can imagine some of the tensions that existed previous to World War II and perhaps to the Korean War. Nations were behaving in a belligerent manner. The tendency was to shoot first and ask questions later. The difference with this event, and I think it is a fair comparison, is that the free world has responded in a unanimous way.

The Soviet leadership must be convinced that the people of this country and every other country in this world, including the people of the Soviet Union, must feel safe when flying on commercial aircraft. All countries must understand that every citizen in this world, whatever political philosophy motivates his government, must not be perceived by his respective government as a pawn to be moved on the geopolitical chessboard in the world today.

As still a relatively new Member of this House, I am pleased that despite the policital differences of the Parties of this House and despite some of the heated exchanges and differences of view that we have had among Members, we can express to a leadership and political force that was formed out of crisis after World War II that we shall continue to say that we will not respond to rhetoric with rhetoric, but to say with common sense and a sense of brotherhood among men of all nations of the world that this kind of bloodshed will always firmly and immediately be condemned by free men everywhere.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party said in introducing this motion for an emergency debate today, nothing, no national security interest, no fear of espionage, no defence of borders can excuse such an act as that committed by the Soviet Union on Korean Airlines flight 007.

Since first learning of the attack, we have been appalled by Soviet actions and reactions; not the actions and reactions that one would expect of what we had thought to be a leading power in the world. At the very beginning there was a screen of silence, total silence on the Korean air carrier having been shot down. Indeed, on September 2, in my first response to the Soviet silence I condemned it and condemned them, as did the Secretary of State for External Relations (Mr. Pepin). I said there should immediately be an emergency meeting of the United Nations Security Council, that Canada should play a major role in pressing the issue forward, that the Council should authorized the United Nations Secretary-General to conduct a full inquiry of the matter and, failing that, a general meeting of the General Assembly should be called. That was a statement I made on behalf of my Party on September 2.

● (2220)

When the Soviet Union continued to be silent and made no effort whatsoever to take any responsibility for this immoral act, as the Leader of my Party described it both on September 6 in his press release and again today, all of us in this House, I think, continue to be shocked by such an aggressive and violent act and by the attitude of the Soviet Union, not just toward the United States or toward any single nation, because this is not a matter between the United States and the Soviet Union, but by its total silence with regard to the rest of the world. This issue is one between the Soviet Union and the rest of the world and, indeed, all humanity.

Almost the final straw, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) as well, came when listening to the television address of the Soviet Chief of Staff, Nikolai Ogarkov, about two evenings ago. I will just read into the record two of the questions and answers that we heard on that evening. The question to the Soviet Chief of Staff was:

> Would it have made a difference if there were more than 2,000 instead of more than 200 people aboard, or would that have been justified in defence of the borders of the Soviet Union?

Marshal Ogarkov replied:

> I suggest that this is just a hypothetical question having no relevance—

Then a little later on, the question was asked:

> If the Soviet Union bears no guilt in this affair as you have said today, why have you not yet told your own people that 269 people died?
>
> OGARKOV: How would we know how many people were on board on the plane? So to report to the Soviet people the number of persons aboard is simply illogical.

By that very statement, Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Chief of Staff did concede what the Soviet Union has up until now, and even today, refused to concede, and that is, that it knew that there were civilians on board.

It is not good enough to say, "Well, they may have been provoked." There may indeed have been some provocation, but one does not shoot down an unarmed civilian aircraft. As I say, there is, I think, no disagreement in the House and no disagreement in the Houses of Assembly of most countries of the world to the absolute basic fact that one does not shoot down an unarmed civilian airliner whether one thinks there was some provocation or whether one thinks there was espionage or whatever.

I recall very vividly that when Israel brought down an airliner, the Soviet Union was very critical, very critical indeed, as we all were. So it has become almost unbelievable that we should have to come here tonight and bring this message to a country, which is a great power in the world and which surely must realize by now that there is absolutely no justification for its act.

Now the final straw is that we have heard that the request to the Security Council of the United Nations that the Secretary General be authorized to conduct a full investigation has been vetoed by the Soviet Union and probably, I understand, by Poland as well. Some people might have said, "Oh, well, there may be other countries, maybe the United States, maybe other countries, that would not want a full investigation because something might come up that they would not want known." I have heard some people say that. Well, that is now out the window. Of those who might have said that, the Soviet Union is the only major power, the nation involved in this tragedy, and it vetoes a request to have the Secretary General conduct an investigation.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that it may be possible for us now to go forward to the General Assembly, and indeed I hope it would be possible to have a special session of the General Assembly called. Even if the House unanimously endorses our motion or another motion further elaborating on it, we still, I think, must insist, and all nations like us in the world, and there are many, that we would want to see a full investigation conducted and the General Assembly called into special session to see if this could be made possible.

So from hearing absolute silence, to denial, to admitting that there were civilians aboard, to saying basically that they would do it again, to now vetoing a request to have the Secretary General of the United Nations conduct an investigation, we are, as many other speakers have said, really left to wonder whether the Soviet Union intends to conduct its further international affairs in a similar vein. Many have remarked that we do not want this terrible tragedy, this unwarranted attack, to colour the relations that nations must continue having together, particularly in the crucial area of arms control and disarmament. It seems to me that one of the good signs indicating that the United States will not allow this to interfere with arms control discussions is that it has not called off the negotiations. Indeed, on the contrary, it has encouraged the negotiations in Geneva to continue. It has not engaged in the kind of rhetoric that would so inflame East-West tensions that such negotiations would become impossible. I hope it does not engage in such rhetoric and I hope that we do not because, as many speakers have said, we must continue to find a peaceful resolution to our conflicts and disputes.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) mentioned that there was not enough that was positive in our motion about what we are to do tomorrow. What do we do tomorrow to ensure the safety of passengers on civilian carriers on international routes including carriers that for whatever reason go off route? Actually, our motion said that we want action taken by the Government to ensure the protection of Canadians and citizens of other countries who travel on civilian aircraft on international routes.

We want Government action to be taken by this Government and other Governments, both in the United Nations and in the meetings of the International Civil Aviation Organization. That is what we are asking for. The Minister of Transport agreed that we must re-examine the rules relating to civil aviation, but all he had to offer was identification and communication. That is very important, but I could not help wondering about it since so many defence experts, particularly in the United States, have said several times over the last ten days that many airlines, Soviet, Cuban, Korean and others, do in fact allow their civilian carriers to participate in surveillance activities of military installations. That is electronic espionage, as some people call it. This comes from particularly knowledgeable people in the scientific defence community in the United States. Unless there are new regulations which will limit landing rights and over-flight permission to aircraft that are not engaging in such activities, then I do not think we can bring the kind of security we want to international air travelers. This is the message that I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) will bring to the meeting of the International Civil Aviation Organization this week.

• (2230)

All of us in the House want to bring, above all—and I think all Members who have spoken so far and I am sure it will be true of the rest—our abhorrence of the Soviet action, our distress at its rejection of any responsibility, our wish that our voices along with the many other voices raised, to the attention of the Soviet Union. We hope they will allow a full investigation by the Security Council and will help all of us, as well as themselves, to ensure that such a tragedy will never occur again.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we had some fruitful talks among House Leaders and I am happy to report an agreement. I would seek unanimous consent to interrupt the debate to allow the Leader of the New Democratic Party to move a motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to interrupting the debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has some procedural concern about the motion before us.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the unanimous consent is to allow us to interrupt debate. We will have a separate motion and then we will revert to the debate. There may then be further consent to something else.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to recognize the Hon. Member at this point?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding, and I am sure the Government House Leader will agree, that there is unanimous consent to interrupt the debate to hear a motion put by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, seconded by the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), and then the question would be put. That is my understanding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion, but before doing so I want to clarify the understanding that was reached. It is an interesting consensus that occurs from time to time in the House, for which the people of Canada, I am sure, are profoundly grateful.

In speaking in support of the motion moved by myself earlier, the House Leader for the Conservative Party, speaking on a point of order, indicated the possibility of the House achieving agreement on an additional motion. As a result, there were discussions involving all three Parties which produced a motion that I wholeheartedly move, seconded by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) as follows:

That the attack on the Korean Airlines passenger plane on August 31 by Soviet military aircraft resulted directly in the loss of 269 lives including ten Canadians;

S.O. 30

That this utterly unjustifiable resort to the use of weapons of war in the interception of defenceless civil aircraft contravenes universally held standards of civilized international behaviour and international law governing civil aviation;

That the Soviet Government has provided neither a credible explanation of the circumstances nor any full acknowledgement of responsibility, appears unrepentant and unwilling to co-operate in international efforts to prevent a repetition of this tragedy;

Therefore, this House expresses its profound sympathy to the bereaved families of the victims;

Condemns the unwarranted attack on the destruction of the Korean airliner on the orders of Soviet authorities;

Demands a full and truthful explanation of this brutal act from the Soviet Government;

Demands that the Soviet Government co-operate fully in any impartial investigation under the auspices of the United Nations and of the International Civil aviation Organization to prevent any repetition of such a tragedy;

Demands that the Soviet authorities immediately offer full and generous compensation to the families of all victims including Canadians; and Directs the Speaker to convey the text of this motion to the Chairman of the Presidium of the U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The debate has been interrupted in order that the Hon. Member for Oshawa could give notice of a possible motion. The Chair has the problem at this point that there is a motion to adjourn before the House. Could this be set aside? Is there unanimous consent to withdrawing that motion and then the Hon. Member for Oshawa could put the motion of which he has given notice. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am not absolutely positive but I believe we have now dispensed with the motion that we had before us. I think that what my Leader moved, seconded by the two other Parties, eloquently says what the House of Commons and this Party hoped would be the outcome of today's debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement that the House do now adjourn?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House is now adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock in the morning.

At 10.38 p.m. the House adjourned without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

THE CABINET

ORDER IN COUNCIL DESIGNATING
ACTING MINISTERS

The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, advise:

1. that in the absence from Ottawa of the Prime Minister or in the event of his being unable to perform the functions of his office, the next senior minister who is in Ottawa and is able to perform the functions of the Office of Prime Minister, be authorized to act for the Prime Minister;

2. that in the absence from Ottawa of a Minister whose name is set out in Column II of an item of the Schedule to this Minute, or in the event of that Minister being unable to perform the functions of his Office, the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of the item be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;

3. that in the absence from Ottawa of the Ministers named in Columns II and III of an item of the Schedule to this Minute, or in the event of both of those Ministers being unable to perform the functions of their Office, the Minister whose name is set out in Column IV of the item be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;

4. that in the absence from Ottawa of the Ministers named in Columns II, III and IV of an item of the Schedule to this Minute, or in the event of all those Ministers being unable to perform the functions of their Office, the Prime Minister or, if the Prime Minister is absent from Ottawa or unable to perform the functions of his Office, the next senior minister who is in Ottawa be authorized to act for the Minister named in Column II in respect of the Office set out in Column I of the item;

5. that where an Office set out in Column I of an item of the Schedule to this Minute is vacant, the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of that item be authorized to act in the Office of the Minister whose Office is set out in Column I of that item; and

6. that where an Office set out in Column I of an item of the Schedule to this Minute is vacant, in the absence from Ottawa of the Minister whose name is set out in Column III of that item, or in the event of that Minister being unable to perform the functions of the Office set out in Column I of that item, the Minister whose name is set out in Column IV of that item be authorized to act in the Office of the Minister whose Office is set out in Column I of that item.

P.C. 1983-2782

LIST OF ACTING MINISTERS

	COLUMN I OFFICE	COLUMN II NAME	COLUMN III ACTING MINISTER	COLUMN IV SECOND ACTING MINISTER
1.	Agriculture	Mr. E. Whelan	Mr. L. Axworthy	Mr. R. LeBlanc
2.	Communications	Mr. F. Fox	Mr. S. Joyal	Mr. E. Lumley
3.	Consumer and Corporate Affairs	Mrs. J. Erola	Mr. H. Gray	Mr. D. Johnston
4a.	Economic Development	Mr. D. Johnston	Mr. J. Chrétien	Mr. E. Lumley
4b.	Science and Technology	Mr. D. Johnston	Mr. J. Chrétien	Mr. E. Lumley
5.	Employment and Immigration	Mr. J. Roberts	Mr. A. Ouellet	Mr. C. Lapointe
6.	Energy, Mines and Resources	Mr. J. Chrétien	Mrs. J. Erola	Mr. J. C. Munro
7.	Environment	Mr. C. Caccia	Mr. P. De Bané	Mr. J. C. Munro
8.	External Affairs	Mr. A. MacEachen	Mr. G. Regan	Mr. J.-L. Pepin

9.	Finance	Mr. M. Lalonde	Mr. R. MacLaren	Mr. H. Gray
10.	Fisheries and Oceans	Mr. P. De Bané	Mr. C. Caccia	Mr. D. Johnston
11.	Indian Affairs and Northern Development	Mr. J. C. Munro	Miss M. Bégin	Mr. J. Chrétien
12a.	Industry, Trade and Commerce	Mr. E. Lumley	Mr. D. P. Smith	Mr. G. Regan
12b.	Regional Economic Expansion	Mr. E. Lumley	Mr. D. P. Smith	Mr. G. Regan
13.	Justice and Attorney General	Mr. M. MacGuigan	Mr. R. Kaplan	Mr. S. Joyal
14a.	Labour	Mr. A. Ouellet	Mr. F. Fox	Mr. J. Roberts
14b.	Post Office	Mr. A. Ouellet	Mr. F. Fox	Mr. J. Roberts
15.	National Defence	Mr. J.-J. Blais	Mr. A. MacEachen	Mr. W. B. Campbell
16.	National Health and Welfare	Miss M. Bégin	Mrs. C. Hervieux-Payette	Mr. W. B. Campbell
17.	National Revenue	Mr. P. Bussières	Mr. C. Lapointe	Mr. M. Lalonde
18.	Privy Council	Mr. Y. Pinard	Mr. D. M. Collenette	Mr. D. P. Smith
19.	Public Works	Mr. R. LeBlanc	Mr. P. Bussières	Mr. P. De Bané
20.	Secretary of State	Mr. S. Joyal	Mr. D. M. Collenette	Mr. F. Fox
21.	Social Development	Mr. J. Austin	Mr. M. MacGuigan	Miss M. Bégin
22.	Solicitor General	Mr. R. Kaplan	Mr. M. MacGuigan	Mr. Y. Pinard
23.	Supply and Services	Mr. C. Lapointe	Mr. R. LeBlanc	Mr. J.-J. Blais
24.	Transport	Mr. L. Axworthy	Mr. E. Whelan	Mrs. J. Erola
25.	Treasury Board	Mr. H. Gray	Mr. M. Lalonde	Mr. A. Ouellet
26.	Veterans Affairs	Mr. W. B. Campbell	Mr. J.-J. Blais	Mr. E. Whelan

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, September 13, 1983

The House met at 11 a.m.

● (1105)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Before proceeding with the debate I should like to draw to the attention of Hon. Members that there are eight motions on the Order Paper at the report stage of Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act. I have examined these motions and have concluded that Motion No. 1, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), should be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 2, standing in the name of the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), and Motion No. 4, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, give the Chair some misgivings concerning their procedural acceptability. Motion No. 2 seeks to repeal Section 9(2) of the Act and substitute a new wording, while Motion No. 4 seeks to amend Section 11(2) of the same Export Development Act. Hon. Members will note that the Bill before us does not propose to amend either section. I refer to May's Nineteenth Edition at page 521:

(1) An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter . . . or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration.

I also refer to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, citation 773(8)(B):

An amendment may not amend sections from the original Act unless they are specifically being amended in a clause of the Bill before the Committee.

I remind Hon. Members of citation 792 which indicates that the rules for admissibility of amendments in committee apply equally to report stage.

On December 15, 1977, as reported at page 1909 of Hansard, the Chair considered a nearly identical case in which the Chair ruled that only the subsection in the Bill was before the House and that an amendment to another subsection of the Act not in the Bill was out of order.

On June 19, 1970, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux said, as reported at page 1043 of Journals:

We must limit amendments to the Bill that is before the House and . . . cannot go behind the Bill in an attempt to amend the statute . . . In this way the Hon. Member is really proposing substantive legislation. He is proposing his own bill, in a way.

I am convinced that both these precedents give ample authority for my ruling that both Motion No. 2 and Motion No. 4 are unacceptable.

Motions Nos. 3 and 5 should be grouped for debate but voted on separately. Motions Nos. 6 and 8 should be grouped for debate but voted on separately. Motion No. 7 should be considered and voted on separately.

● (1110)

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 14 to 22 at page 1 and lines 1 and 2 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"4. (1) The Chairman shall be appointed by the Governor-in-Council and should be a person not regularly employed in the public service of Canada either directly or indirectly or in the public service of any province in Canada and shall hold office during pleasure for such term not exceeding five years.

(2) Three Directors of the Corporation shall be appointed by the Governor-in-Council from among persons employed in the public service of Canada to hold office during pleasure.

(3) The balance of the Board of Directors shall be appointed by the Governor-in-Council and shall be persons not regularly employed in the public service of Canada either directly or indirectly or in the public service of any province in Canada and shall hold office during pleasure for such term not exceeding five years.

(4) Subject to (3) each director not appointed among persons employed in the public service is eligible for re-appointment on the expiration of his term of office, but any such director who has served two consecutive terms during the 12 months following the completion of his second term is not, during the 12 months following the completion of his second term, eligible to be re-appointed a director of the Corporation.

(5) The Vice-Chairman shall be elected by the Board from among its members."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendment before us, Motion No. 1, follows to a large extent the wording of appointments in Clause 4 of the Export Development Corporation Bill. The concept in the amendment is to increase the number of directors in the corporation to 15 and to ensure that the chairman and the vast majority of directors are not employed in the Public Service.

The problem with the existing corporation is that in the majority, the directors are persons employed in the Public Service or working for the Government. The consequence is that we have not had in this corporation the benefit of the real private input that we should have in a corporation of this nature.

The concept of this corporation is twofold. First, it is to give guarantees and insurance to those who would export Canadian products and expedite exports by giving those guarantees and selling insurance to those who export to protect their receivables in the event of non-payment in the foreign country, political disruption, currency exchange matters and so on. That is the first part of the corporation's business.

The second part of the corporation's business is to become a lender, perhaps a lender of last resort, certainly a lender of moneys to expedite the sale of Canadian capital goods in foreign markets.

• (1115)

What we really need in a corporation of this nature are people who are expert in the business world. What we do not need are people who are expert in the wonderful offices of the bureaucracy in the City of Ottawa. What we are really talking about is business and we are talking about how businessmen do business.

I can say from my own experience that this corporation is exceptionally bureaucratic. I say that because in many cases this corporation does not understand that when dealing with persons in the offices there is a necessity for speed, for coming to grips with a business problem. What this corporation needs badly is some real expertise. It needs people from the private field at its board level. It does not need people who are tied up with Government, either provincially or federally.

Perhaps it is necessary that there be people from the Public Service on that board. The amendment provides for three people from the Public Service to be on the board. It does not define who those people should be, but in my correspondence with the Minister I have suggested to him that they be someone from Industry and Trade, someone from Finance and someone from External Affairs. Beyond that, there is no need for anyone else from the Public Service.

The real guts of the problem is that this corporation needs private advice at its director level. It needs private assistance at the office levels in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal and even Ottawa so that that private advice can put some zing back into this corporation.

The corporation has been strongly criticized. First, it has been criticized by the Economic Council of Canada as being an inefficient way of developing and supporting exports. In their study of this matter, the Economic Council is quite critical. The Economic Council feels that there are a number of things that could be done. It feels that this corporation is, in a sense, attempting to squeeze out people who might finance or insure business on a private basis in order to abrogate unto itself that the corporation will be the only insurer and the only grantor of credit in export fields.

The Economic Council points out quite rightly that other countries, such as Britain and France, rely on their own banking systems and that the export development corporations or export development organizations in those countries are essentially guarantee agencies, insurance agencies, agencies that may subsidize some lending but that is the extent of it. The field work is done privately. It is, of course, our view that that kind of thing should be done on a private basis as far as possible. We should have less government, not more government. The way to get less government, Sir, is to make sure that government organizations are strongly biased in favour of private industry. That strong bias may be created by a strong board of directors consisting of people involved in private industry.

While the recommendation and amendment before us is to increase the size of the board and to make provisions for the board, the amendment seeks to make sure that this board consists of 15 persons, all but three of whom are from the private field. Only three members of the board are to be from government.

• (1120)

The other terms of the amendment are almost identical to the present provisions with respect to how the board is to operate and with respect to the term of persons elected or appointed to it. There is no attempt to change the way the Corporation presently acts, other than to make sure that the board of the corporation is essentially a private enterprise board.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, in addressing the amendment put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), I should like to state that there have been hours of debate on the Bill in the Committee. The Members of this Party, who have consistently followed the line of the Committee and brought forward recommendations, have also drawn out the Government on some of the shortcomings that they see in the proposed Bill.

Before I go into that I should like to commend the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) and his colleagues for their concern about our exports and their recognition of what export means to every citizen of this country. We have some concerns about the way the Bill has been drafted and those concerns were expressed by my colleague from Mississauga South in the seven amendments put forward.

The basis of Motion No. 1, as we see it, is to attempt to place in the Export Development Corporation itself those people who have their hands on daily concern for exports. They should have knowledge and an understanding of the needs and desires of their associates in the private sector as to how exports affect this country and its ability to survive.

One of the main concerns expressed in my colleague's amendment is the appointment of the directors. In this Party we think that a board of this size should have majority representation of members from the private sector rather than from the Public Service. Other amendments that we will present will show the rationale for that.

The problem with Crown agencies and their responsibilities in the past has been with their accountability to the Parliament of Canada for their expenditures which come from taxpayers' dollars. We feel that one of the most glaring errors in the drafting of this Bill concerns the accountability of a Crown corporation to the Parliament of Canada for the taxpayers of Canada. The board of directors could be dominated by people from outside the private sector, by people from the Public Service, and this could remove the accountability of the corporation and the ability of the people of Canada, who put up the funds, to control or have knowledge of some of the actions of the Government.

At the moment I am deeply involved in another method of exporting dealt with in Bill C-155, which is taking up a considerable amount of time. On this side we recognize the value of export and the need for Canada to grow as an exporting nation. We must make up the lost ground of the last two or three years with our major trading partner, the United States. Most of us feel that 70 per cent is the amount of our trade with the U.S. As a matter of fact, about 65 per cent to 66 per cent of Canada's trade is done with our friend and neighbour to the south.

● (1125)

We will be pleased to assist the movement of this Bill. We will be pleased to assist in any amendments if, Mr. Speaker, we can be assured that the people of Canada, through the Parliament of Canada, have made the Export Development Corporation accountable for its actions, accountable for its funds, accountable for its liabilities and that there is no concern on this side that something may be running amok and we would have to find that out at a later date. If we could be assured of those things, Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, has put forward in his some seven amendments, we would be only too happy to support the facilitation and movement of this Bill through the House of Commons.

I hope to take part in the debate later on, Mr. Speaker, but now I would like to compliment my colleagues on this side who have served on the Committee over the many, many hours of debate which culminated in the Bill coming to the House at report stage. I would like to thank them for their endeavours.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this suggested amendment which I had the honour to second just a few moments ago, I am pleased that the Minister of State (International Trade) (Mr. Regan) is here in the House. What we are dealing with here is the ultimate responsibility of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), and I am certainly pleased that the immediate Minister of State (International Trade) is with us. I would like to stress that I believe that when we get into questions of trade, we must also think of aid to the developing world. I say that because I feel that we in Canada, have been quite negligent in accepting the reality that perhaps one of the most meaningful things that you can do for many of the countries in the developing world is not so much to give aid, but to trade with them.

Country after country of the so-called poor nations, when you visit them, will tell you: "Rather than give us handouts, it is preferable that you, in a meaningful way, trade with us. Buy our products and we, in turn, will be more than willing to buy what you would like to sell us." I say that because I believe it is very relevant to put that into the context of the activities of the Export Development Corporation. I do not feel that anyone in this House—certainly if there are, they are few in number—would disagree with the concept of export financing, if it is needed.

It is often stated that export financing is indeed needed if we want to remain competitive with our rival, competing nations, be it the United Kingdom, France, the United States or whatever. I am willing to accept that, in a rather haphazard, disorganized way, there has been a lot of undercutting in order to get trade by some of the other industrial nations. As long as I have been in this House, I have always been told by Ministers of Industry, Trade and Commerce, if that happened to be the Department handling the Export Development Corporation, that we in Canada have been urgently requesting and trying to get agreement with other nations to ensure that so-called concessional financing will not get out of control and be overdone.

Having said that, I would like to stress two points. First, I believe that if that rhetoric is true, we must never let up on trying to get better understandings with competing industrial nations to ensure whatever financing we have to route through some agency such as the Export Development Corporation will not be concessional financing. Because if we as a country get into the position where rather than selling competitive goods or services we are really selling finance to some other area of the world, I suggest it is a fool's type of game to get into and in the long run the mounting debt that will roll up in the name of Canada will be extremely difficult to handle.

● (1130)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member, but we are now debating an amendment proposed at report stage and the Chair should remind all Hon. Members that remarks must be strictly relevant to the amendment before the House. I have been following with some attention the remarks by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and my assessment of what he has been saying in the last three or four minutes is that he has been making remarks of a general nature about Canada's trade policies. I would invite him to relate his remarks to the amendment before the House.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Being the seconder of the proposed amendment, I may have overlooked the fact that all Members in the House may not have read that amendment, which of course deals with this question of having more private-oriented directors on the board of EDC.

One of the most relevant things I think we can do in discussing that amendment is to give some background as to why we believe more private director-type personnel should be on the board of the EDC, and that is what I am trying to do. I am trying to indicate, if I may continue, Mr. Speaker, that it is in many instances trade more than aid that developing nations are looking for. Secondly, as I said earlier, all of us would agree in principle that tied with trade you probably have to have some government-type of agency help with the financing. But it is extremely important that that financing not get somehow into the category of simply concessional financing; it is finance you are selling and not trade in the sense of competitive goods and services.

Now, what finer way to guarantee that you get an ECD oriented to competitive, sound practices than to ensure that its board be private-oriented? The average person coming from the private sector, Mr. Speaker, understands what we are talking about here. He realizes that there is always a day of reckoning. If you are paying, as the Government paid today, over 12 per cent for its money and it turns around and lends that to somebody such as the Metropolitan New York subway system at, say, 9 per cent, somebody has to make up that 3 per cent. It is as simple as that. It is a concession, a subsidy. Unfortunately, in our case, when the Government does it through EDC it is ultimately the people of Canada that must cover that 3 per cent subsidy in the example that I gave. So I am saying, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment would at least ensure that we would have more private, if you like, oriented directors on the Board of EDC if it is accepted.

Now, I have said that is only one aspect of the EDC financing that I think a private board could have influence on. The second thing I suggest a more privately oriented board would do in EDC is to ensure that in fact EDC is used only where those private board members feel it is needed. The EDC can very easily become a crutch, as I would suggest it has become for many organizations in Canada. If you are one of the privileged companies which has been getting most of the financing through EDC, it is very easy to get near that company, come up with some kind of proposal, that you would like them to finance, and as quick as a wink you have got your deal, your financing, and it is the people of Canada who pay a tremendous subsidy, all in the name of trade.

Now, I think a private sector person, much more than a bureaucrat sitting on the board of EDC, would understand what I am talking about. If you agree, then I hope that the Minister would accept our proposal and in turn would ensure that that new private orientation does not only help to ensure that EDC engage in only competitive financing, but that it accept what I started off by saying, that it is in fact trade with developing nations that we should be attempting to encourage, not just aid.

On another point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer Hon. Members to a very interesting article called "Development Assistance: Trade versus Aid and the Relative Performance of Industrial Countries", written by Alexander J. Yeats of UNCTAD in Geneva. In this article you will find that Canada's record as a nation that gives trade and aid is extremely poor when you compare it to virtually any other industrial nation in the world. I emphasize, in relation to trade with developing nations. We have shortchanged not only those developing nations but ourselves, and I will hopefully have more to say on this later in today's debate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the motion put forward by the Conservative Party is really to try and make sure that the Government does not appoint the chairman of the Export Development Corporation and all 14 directors, that instead the Government would appoint three directors of the corporation, and the chairman and the other directors would be appointed from the outside.

I listened with care to many of the speeches and I heard the Member who has just taken his seat talking about the necessity of making sure that the other directors are from the private sector. I could accept the fact that some of these directors should be from the private sector, Mr. Speaker, because many private corporations are exporting their goods around the world and many are indeed using the services of the Export Development Corporation. I also think that in principle it is very good to have some people who are not Government appointees from the Public Service on the board of directors of a Crown corporation because it does open it up and make it more democratic.

I do have several concerns with the way the Conservative Party has drafted this amendment because I think they have left it wide open with regard to making it really accountable and democratic in the true sense. The Conservative Party is talking specifically about the private sector. I can accept some of those people on the board as well. However, there is no reference in the motion before us today to the Provinces, and I think the Provinces are very important when it comes to trade. Many of the Provinces have a lot of people very active in the trade field. I think of my own Province, for example, and the tremendous exports from Saskatchewan. I think of British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec and many other Provinces as well. But there is no reference here to having anyone on the board from companies which are apart from Government departments but are Crown corporations. There are many Crown corporations exporting very actively into the world market. There are many corporations, such as the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, Hydro-Québec and others that are also exporting. Perhaps they should have representation on the board of the Export Development Corporation.

● (1140)

The other thing missing here in terms of opening up the EDC and making it more democratic is any specific provision that the workers in the export field be represented. There is no provision here, for example, that one of the directors or two or three of the directors should be people working for the EDC or people who work for companies that export goods. In other words, they could be appointed or elected by the relevant trade unions or whatever may be the case. But I do not see anything spelled out in the Motion to make sure that the working people who produce the goods and services and who make these companies productive are going to be represented in any way whatever.

The other point is that when we leave a motion absolutely wide open and say, such as is stated in Section 3, that the balance of the Board of Directors shall be appointed by the Governor in Council and shall be persons not regularly employed in the Public Service of Canada, either directly or indirectly, or in the public service of any Province of Canada, and so on, we are still saying to the Government that it can appoint certain directors. It does not spell out from where those directors must come. For example, the Government can appoint the Donald Macdonalds of the world. We could have more of the Donald Macdonald's economic commissions. The Government could appoint all kinds of ex-politicians, ex-Liberal politicians—for instance, the Jim Coutts of the world, the Jack Horners of the world, many other former Ministers and former MPs. This could just be another plum for ex-politicians. Once again, the Conservative Party does not spell that out. The Conservative Party leaves this tremendous loophole in this amendment through which you could drive a truck.

I agree with the principle of opening it up and making sure we do not have a chairman of the board and 14 directors who are all public servants because I believe we have to have more democracy and more economic accountability. I think all our Crown Corporations have to reflect the greater sense of reality that exists in this country, and although I agree with those principles, when you open up the appointment of directors but still give the Government a blank cheque to appoint whoever it wants, I am not sure we are solving the problem at all. In fact, we might even be making the problem worse by having a bunch of ex-politicians who cannot get interesting jobs elsewhere running the Export Development Corporation or businessmen who are friends of the Government. I am thinking of the Conrad Blacks of the world—I do not think he would accept the appointment, Mr. Speaker—sitting on the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation.

Mr. Regan: Have you got any more names?

Mr. Nystrom: It might be a way for the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) to repay some of his political debts for contributions to the Liberal Party. Here we have the Conservative Party opening up another possibility of re-electing the Liberals by allowing them to appoint some of their friends to the board of the Export Development Corporation.

There is something else that surprises me about the Conservative Party. I know that in the Constitution debate Members of the Conservative Party talked loud and for a long time about the Provinces and the right to respect the Provinces. The Provinces are very heavily involved in trade. What the Provinces do in trade is very important in the world. I have already mentioned the importance of commodities and products and big companies, such as Hydro-Québec, that are not private. I am very surprised to see there is nothing spelled out, that not even one or two of these directors should be appointed by the Provinces. What we need in this country is more co-operative federalism, more consensus building and greater reconciliation between the Provinces, the federal Government, the private sector, the working people and farmers. But none of that is spelled out whatsoever. All we are doing is choosing between the Government appointing 15 people from the Public Service to run the EDC or the Conservatives saying that three people should come from the Public Service and then the Government can appoint 12 of their friends. I am not sure that is any improvement at all.

I know the Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) would not have drafted a motion like this. I think he would have made sure it was a little more reflective of the reality out there. But the Member from Mississauga South has chosen not to do that. For reasons like that, Mr. Speaker, I have grave doubts about supporting this amendment because I think we might be jumping from the frying pan back into the fire.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I speak in favour of the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Before doing so, let me speak to the remarks just made by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) because I think they are relevant. He feels that by giving greater stress to the appointment of people from the private sector, as called for by our amendment, we will be creating plums to give, presumably, to our supporters after the next election. I would respectfully submit that is not the intent of our amendment. We are trying to give stress to people who have online, front line experience with the private sector, hopefully with the export business. They will bring experience from the private sector rather than exclusively from the public sector.

I would remind the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville that he does not understand his own supporters. Recently a Gallup poll was taken. The question asked Canadians across the country whether they would like to see more stress on the private sector, the same balance as at present, or more stress on the Government sector. Astoundingly from that poll fully 40 per cent of the people who indicated they were supporters of the New Democratic Party favoured greater stress on the private sector. The figure for the Liberal Party on the same question was 30 per cent. I would therefore remind the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville that his Party is now on the free enterprise side of the spectrum and it is the Liberal Party that is more socialist than the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kilgour: As a westerner, that defies all my experience, but I gather that is the case.

Coming to the merits of the amendment, you may well say, Mr. Speaker, that the relevant section as it is worded says nothing about how many people the Government will appoint from the Public Service. I am advised that while the Government has not committed itself on this issue, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) has told my colleague the Hon. Member for Mississauga South in a letter that the Government will need at least six people from the Public Service. At the moment, as you know, four out of seven are from the public sector and that is a pretty good indication of what the Government intends to do in this matter.

The problem with having a majority of public servants on a board such as this, in my respectful submission, is that these people are not able to be truly independent, as lawyers in the House will realize, as boards of directors should be or should try to be. We get things like the CDC—I use the word catastrophe in that instance—where we had the Government trying to get Maurice Strong to replace Mr. Sellers as chairman. It was only because of the courage of the other directors that we managed to get Mr. Sellers from Winnipeg, who I believe is doing an excellent job with the CDC.

The case has been well stated by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). I would urge all Members in the House to consider supporting this Motion.

In conclusion, I must point out that Arthur Donner, the economist, points out in yesterday's Toronto Star:

—Canada's percentage of the world export market declined as the OPEC share rose. In 1970, Canada accounted for 5.9 per cent of world exports declining to 4.3 per cent by 1982.

We have to increase Canada's exports if we are to get our young people back to work. We have to create jobs, jobs, jobs, which is our new leader's fundamental issue. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think this is overstating it, that by putting people on the board of the EDC from the private sector who have experienced with exports, we are more likely to get the EDC to perform better than it has performed to date than by adopting the always leviathan, larger Government role.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks with regard to the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Might I start with a couple of comments to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) through you, Mr. Speaker. Just before the Minister leaves, the Member should be reluctant in future to be so cavalier in naming names of potential Liberal hacks for appointment because I notice the Minister was writing down all those names.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bosley: The other part of that statement is that I do not think Conrad Black would appreciate being accused of being a Liberal hack. I do not think he regards that as his political preference, but the appointment of Conrad Black with his business experience to the board of the Export Development Corporation would certainly serve it well.

● (1150)

The other part of what the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville had to say suggested that he had not read either the amendment or the main motion. The main motion suggests that the Minister shall have complete freedom to appoint whoever he wants from within or without the Public Service, and there has been a practice of appointing some from both.

The purpose of the amendment of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is remarkably simple. It narrows and limits the number of people who may be appointed from the Public Service to the board of the Export Development Corporation. The logic of that is extremely simple. If we believe that it is wise and reasonable—and of course we should believe that it is wise and reasonable—to try to regenerate the Canadian economy through exports, then we should try to make the EDC as responsive as possible to the needs of private sector exporters. Who knows those needs better than those people in the export community?

The argument the Government will presumably advance in order to retain unfettered freedom as to whom to appoint is that it needs to appoint some substantial number of public servants to the board. Presumably the Government will make that argument or it would not be opposed to our amendment. In the case of this particular corporation, independence is perhaps more essential than in the case of any other Crown corporation. I make that statement because elsewhere in the Act there is provision which allows the Government on its own account, of its own volition, at its own expense but using the EDC as its agency, to fund a project of export which the EDC board does not believe makes strict economic sense. In that sense the EDC is in an agency role for national purposes of the Government of Canada.

If it is designed to take a position where the board believes it appropriate that a project is not properly financeable by the EDC, then it ought to follow logically that the single best way to get the EDC to render appropriate judgments as to whether or not something ought to be financed is to separate it as far as possible at the level of the board of directors from the working officials of the government department who do not work for the private sector but are ultimately responsible to the Minister.

The best way for the Minister to obtain the best advice about whether or not a project makes economic sense is for him to recognize that because he already has the authority to require or order that a project be funded where it is deemed not appropriate by the agency, or the best way for him to establish that he takes that responsibility seriously, is for him to separate as far as he can the Ministry and the Minister from any appearance—and I say this without insinuation—of the power to manipulate the board of the EDC. The Minister responsible, a former premier of a province, knows the importance of the difference between appearances and reality in developing public policy, boards and authorities.

What should recommend this amendment to the Government is that the EDC has a very large budget and is extremely important to the Canadian export community. The primary role of that corporation is to serve Canadian exports, not the wishes and the needs of the Minister. The best way to do that in symbolic, real and practical terms is to take the best minds of the export community and put them on the board. To refuse that amendment would be to suggest that the Minister is not interested in the best minds being on the board and presumably is interested in having the appearance of control of the authority by the Public Service of Canada. If that is not his view—and I presume it is not—then I respectfully suggest that he should make that clear to us and the export community by accepting this amendment.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, we have covered a good part of the ground pertaining to this amendment in the previous debates in the House and certainly in committee, but I would like to reiterate a couple of points which I attempted to make before. What is at stake here with respect to Bill C-110 and the amendment of my colleague is really the credibility of this institution. Surely the Government and the Minister know that Crown corporations have become a dirty word to the Canadian public. They reflect upon the credibility of this institution and therefore upon our credibility.

The Canadian public expects much more from the Government than the disasters of Canadair, de Havilland and Maislin and the incestuous operations of a good many Crown corporations. I do not say that Crown corporations should not exist. Perhaps some of them should not, but there is a need and a deserving mandate for many of our Crown corporations. Crown corporations must be seen—my colleague was trying to make this point in a somewhat different way—to be poorer than poor. This is in the interests of the government of the day, of the institution which we represent and certainly of the Canadian public. If one accepts this as a premise, one must accept the fact that when a predominant number of the members of the board of any Crown corporation are public servants, there is a conflict of interest because they are serving two masters. That is a given. By its very nature the board of directors is supposed to represent a point of view independent from management. This is what a board of directors is all about. If the employees of a Crown corporation sit on the board, how can they possibly act in an independent way? They cannot. They are protecting their own jobs, they are protecting their own actions.

This is the fundamental point we are trying to make in the amendment before us. We are not asking that no public servants be represented on the board of directors; all we are saying is that, in the interests of independent thought and to avoid the possibility of a conflict of interest, a majority of the board should be appointed from the private sector.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) asked what was the point of replacing someone from the Public Service with a party hack. We must recognize that there are Canadians who want to act in the public interest of the country. I really do not think that Mr. Jack Armstrong, former president and chairman of the board of Imperial Oil, is a party hack of the Liberal Party. This gentleman is retired from active life in the corporate world. He wants to make a contribution to his country. I believe he will be a very worthy member of the board of directors. I have met Mr. Daughney, the former president of Roxy Petroleum. He is very anxious to make a contribution to this country. There are many others in the corporate world who want to do the same.

● (1200)

I come back to the point that it is truly in the interests of this institution and of the Canadian public that we spare no effort to avoid any appearance to the public of the Government of the day manipulating the operations of a given Crown corporation. That is the bottom line. I say quite sincerely that one way to achieve that is to have the majority on boards of directors appointed from the private sector, people who are truly independent and have no axe to grind.

Strangely enough, in committee the Minister accepted most of what I was saying. In fact, he was quite prepared to consider a board of directors composed of nine members from the private sector and six from the Public Service. Therefore, I am rather surprised that we find ourselves here this morning debating this. I thought the Minister had come to the same conclusion that I had come to, but I guess that is not the case.

When this legislation first came before Parliament, I reviewed what had happened in terms of appointments to the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation over the last 13 years. The present legislation provides for 12 members to be on the board of directors. The chairman and six members of the board shall come from the Public Service and five shall come from the private sector.

In reviewing appointments to the board of directors over the past 13 years, one finds that almost without exception there have never been more than three members from the private sector on this board during that period. I would not want to accuse the Government of being delinquent in its duties, but if one did not know the Government better, one could draw the conclusion that it might be avoiding the appointment of a full complement of directors so that there could be decent representation on the board.

In committee the present Minister, as I remember it, said that we could be assured that as long as he was Minister there would be a full complement of private sector directors on the board. My point is that that Minister may not always be the Minister in charge of the Export Development Corporation; there might be somebody in charge who is less diligent in his duty. We need to spell this out. The Minister said he would sooner not have it spelled out in the legislation. I believe it is important that it be spelled out. I come back to the point that above all we want to ensure that Crown corporations are seen to be cleaner than clean.

There is one other point I want to make. This may come up in a later amendment. I mentioned earlier that the present legislation provides that the chairman of the corporation shall be from the Public Service. I believe that is a great mistake. At the present time, the chairman of the board of directors and the president of the corporation are one and the same. I am not disparaging or reflecting on the gentleman who happens to be president of the corporation in any way, but I believe there are two very separate responsibilities, one as president of the corporation and the other as chairman. For one man to serve in both positions creates the potential for a conflict of interest. He is both servant and master, so to speak.

There is a very different role for a chairman of the board of a corporation from the role of the president. The chairman is responsible for ensuring that the board of directors addresses the policies of that corporation. On the other hand, the president is responsible for implementing those policies. If I am the chairman of a corporation and I happen to be the president, it could be very convenient for me to design policies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. He could continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Thomson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I can address this point later in the debate.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, we spent a great deal of time in committee on this Bill. The Minister came to the committee and was very co-operative. As my colleague mentioned, he agreed with many of the points in this amendment.

I wish to raise a point that I raised in committee as a result of the committee's hearings on Canadair and de Havilland. At one point last spring the vice-chairman of Canadair came before the committee. He stated that the unfortunate circumstance which occurred in that organization was because the Deputy Minister led the board of directors and they accepted any wish that he had. He had lived through a very damaging situation in a Crown corporation. His point was that public servants should not be on the board of directors but should be at the call of the board of directors. That is one point in which we believe. When you have a board with a large number of political appointees, which I acknowledge is tradition in this country, and a Deputy Minister who is working day in and day out with the problem, that board will listen to the views of the man on the job.

Dealing with the first part of this amendment regarding the chairman, this is not disparaging to the current chairman and president of the corporation, who has done an excellent job of running the Export Development Corporation, but they are two separate jobs. The president is the chief executive or chief operating officer and the chairman is responsible for monitoring progress and what is transpiring in that corporation. The chairman should be appointed by the board of directors and the members of the board of directors are appointed by the Governor in Council. The chairman, in turn, should be a second voice who can report to the Minister so that he would not depend only on information being fed to him by a public servant.

I believe the amendment is sound. It would satisfy the fears of the Canadian public with regard to Crown corporations. At least they could see it was not a bureaucracy running the organization and judging its own performance.

• (1210)

That is the first part of our motion. I touched on the second part previously. I have a strong feeling, and the Minister is aware of this, that public servants should be at the disposal of the board of directors whenever they have a meeting, but the directors should sit in judgment of the performance of that organization. It would not be putting the organization down; it wouuld be putting in a second level. It really is staff versus line. I think this is something that the Government should do so that we do not always have to refer everything to the Auditor General because it has gone awry.

I believe, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), that there are some very fine men in this country. There are a great many fine people like Jack Armstrong. I do not know, but I believe that many of those people are apolitical. I believe that many times they are with the Government in power and many times they are against it. I believe there are a great many talented Canadians who would be delighted to serve their country by acting on the board of directors of Crown corporations. It would give them a great feeling of purpose. I believe those people could sit in judgment and could offer wise advice to the Minister about anything that may not seem to be 100 per cent.

The Minister is aware that there are three parts in the Export Development Act. There are general loans and then there are what I call the marginal loans, guarantees and insurance. The granting of some of the marginal loans are political decisions. They are not really decisions to be made by the board of directors but the board of directors could have this explained to them.

The reason I am trying to make these points, Mr. Speaker, is that I feel that to be competitive in this world which has become so much smaller, we must have the best people overseeing and operating our Crown corporations, particularly the EDC. Because through the EDC, Canada can make its mark in world markets. We must all acknowledge that so many countries subsidize their manufacturers in different ways. This is one method that is acceptable throughout the world economy.

Further, we have responsibilities to Third World countries, and I will deal later with how they are accounted for.

I understand the Minister has taken note of what we discussed in the committee. Rather than cutting this down, I will endorse our Party's position. Possibly the president and two of his assistants should sit on the board of directors and 12 other members should be picked from the private sector. The number of members has been increased from 12 to 15. I do not understand the purpose of that other than perhaps for regional reasons. I can accept that because that is important in Canada.

I cannot say that I am against treating a fine retired public servant who is in the private sector the same way as Jack Armstrong. However, I really believe that we want a cross-section of talent from across the country, people who understand the implications of trade, both international and domestic, so that they can be of benefit to the Minister and the Minister can fulfil his mandate to the Canadian public in a proper and acceptable way.

The last matter I wish to discuss, Mr. Speaker, is the matter of the vice-chairman. I believe that the vice-chairman should also come from the private sector. The vice-chairman would act only in the absence of the chairman. I would also like to include a further condition. In the absence of the chairman or the vice-chairman, a member from the private sector on the board of directors would be appointed as an interim chairman.

The Minister has listened to us in committee. I hope that he will listen to us again and make some amendments to present to us with respect to Motion No. 1. I hope he will bring before us changes to his original motion so that we can tell the public that the Government is trying to co-operate with the concerns of the citizens of Canada and that the Government is trying to make the Export Development Corporation a vehicle to create jobs in Canada.

What we are talking about when discussing EDC is jobs, Mr. Speaker—creating jobs through successful Canadian organizations and corporations. This is a vehicle that is helping to solve the unemployment problem. I appreciate having been afforded the opportunity to speak on this Motion, Mr. Speaker, and I will look forward to speaking on other motions that come before the House.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to speak to Motion No. 1 amending the Bill. I would particularly like to do so before the Minister speaks because I hope the Minister will respond to some of the concerns I have vis-à-vis this Motion and the process in general. Since 1979, I as a Member of Parliament have seen several hundreds of Bills go through the House. The process is essentially defective and I wonder if the Minister would respond to it.

At second reading of the Bill, as with so many other Bills, we in the Official Opposition favoured a great deal of the Bill because it is good for the country; but perhaps because we represent different interests in the community than do Government Members, we came back from our ridings with legitimate and bona fide concerns about certain areas and clauses of the Bill. At second reading of a Bill, we point those concerns out and hope that at the committee stage the Government will consider the second reading debate and come forward ready to accept some changes.

There are seven motions to amend this Bill. At the committee stage, however, those motions were discussed and, in effect, rejected by the Cabinet even though the Minister, with respect to Motion No. 1, agreed in principle with much of what was said in terms of whether the board of directors should be predominantly public servants or from the non-public service.

The situation is that the Minister agreed in committee that the board should be composed of people from private industry who have real skills or hands-on experience, and yet now when we come back to the House the motion is rejected. I wonder if the Minister could advise us whether it is he personally who has rejected those motions. Has he rejected these motions because of civil service input, or were they rejected at the Cabinet level? If the rejection came from the Cabinet level, why does the Cabinet not accept his recommendations as Minister? I would apreciate his comments as to whether it was his personal opinion, the bureaucracy input which convinced him, or the opinion of the Cabinet. I am sure that, in private at least, the Minister would agree that there is a great deal of input from Members of the House that is wise, even though that input might come from this Party or from the New Democratic Party or his own backbenchers. Yet that input does not reflect itself in the Bills that ultimately pass through the House.

So, Mr. Speaker, we waste the incredibly valuable time of the House debating motions. There will be seven of them and we will go on for days and days. This is simply because the Government, through some process, is unable to accept reasonable amendments. Perhaps the Minister could comment as to whether or not the Government sees itself losing control if it accepts amendments from across the floor or if the process is defective. Now that we are dealing with parliamentary reform, what does the Minister think we can do to get away from what may be a defective process?

• (1220)

Speaking to Motion No. 1, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) stood up and very carefully and nicely attacked the Conservative Party for trying to substitute private industry officials for public officials, which, in a sense, is true. We have set forth our reasons for that. These people are out in the industry and they understand it better than public servants who have other things to do. He attacked the Conservative Party, but I notice that the NDP have put up no amendments at all. Presumably that Party is prepare to accept the Government position where all members of the board are drawn from the public sphere.

I think the Hon. Member misread the Bill. If I understood him correctly, he was saying that employees of provincial Crown corprorations who would be qualified to serve on the board would be excluded under the terms of the Bill. I do not read the Bill that way. Clearly, our amendment excludes only public servants of Canada, directly or indirectly; in the provincial Governments the only people excluded are direct public servants. Indirect public servants, that is employees of Crown corporations, could be appointed.

In the main motion there is nothing to block the appointment of workers or other people in the community; nor is there in the amendment which would weight the board of directors in favour of private industry.

There is no doubt that in the past the primary problems with respect to the EDC related to the accountability of the board of directors and the knowledge of the operating staff. Over all, the corporation has done a pretty good job, although some changes could be made to make it more effective. Such amendments are being rejected by the Government, however. I do not understand why, in Bill after Bill after Bill, there must be a fight on second reading, a big fight at committee and a big fight at report stage. I think the problem lies somewhere in the Cabinet or in the civil service and I hope the Minister will respond to that so that we will know where the trouble lies.

The problem of accountability is a bad one. There is a situation in Calgary where Petro-Canada erected an enormous building and is now renting space for $10 per square foot. The true cost should be $20 per square foot to cover the cost of construction and $25 per square foot to make a profit. Billions of dollars are being used directly—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville rises on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt but the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) made a very important point about the appointment of provincial civil servants. I read the motion carefully and I think he is in error. I wonder if he would respond to a question on that point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is a rather unusual procedure and could only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville to put a question?

Of course, the Hon. Member who has the floor must agree to receive a question. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Thacker: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills mentioned that someone who is a provincial civil servant could be appointed to the EDC board according to the amendment of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I have read the proposed amendment very carefully. Clause 4(3) reads as follows:

The balance of the Board of Directors shall be appointed by the Governor-in-Council and and shall be persons not regularly employed in the public service of Canada either directly or indirectly or in the public service of any province in Canada—

Clause 4(2) reads:

Three Directors of the Corporations shall be appointed by the Governor-in-Council from among persons employed in the public service of Canada—

I wonder whether the Hon. Member could confirm that under the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South there could not be an appointment made from the public service of any Province to one of the 14 directorships?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, nowhere in my comments did I say that a member of the public service in a Province could be appointed. I agree that this could not take place. I was dealing with Crown corporations, anticipating those Crown corporations in Saskatchewan and Alberta that deal with trade. It will be noted that Clause 4(3) provides that "persons not regularly employed in the public service of Canada either directly or indirectly" are prohibited. I think Crown corporations would therefore be included because of the word "indirectly". With respect to the Provinces the prohibition is restricted only to the public service of any Province.

Mr. Nystrom: Read Subclause (3).

Mr. Thacker: Subclause (3) reads:

The balance of the Board of Directors shall be appointed by the Governor-in-Council and shall be persons not regularly employed in the public service of Canada either directly or indirectly or in the public service of any province in Canada—

I think the word "indirectly" is restricted to the Public Service of Canada and its Crown corporations. With respect to the Provinces, the other people could be brought in. That is the way I read it. Perhaps after my friend has had some time to look into the matter, he would agree. Otherwise this would have read "or in the public service of any Province either directly or indirectly".

I believe the Minister should respond to the criticisms of the Economic Council of Canada. We got the impression from parts of private industry that once the EDC got going, particularly now that it will have more and more funding, and as the bureaucracy grows, it will have the effect of squeezing out private lenders. It seems to me we should be trying to emphasize private lending and saving the resources of the EDC for more of a guarantee function.

What assurances can the Minister give us on that point? I think the board of directors and the executive officers would welcome it if the Minister could tell us what the Government policy will be.

I shall rise to speak on subsequent motions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, this is the second day of the resumption of Parliament after the summer recess. One thing that I discovered in my constituency during the course of the summer, and I presume other Hon. Members did as well, is that whatever the people might feel about the Government of Canada and that there ought to be a change, many fear that the people at large do not have control of things because there is a non-elected Government that has too much influence in the running of the country.

The amendment before us suggests that the number of people from the private sector who serve as directors of this Crown corporation should be increased and the number from the Public Service decreased. I submit that this is in harmony with the feelings of the people of Canada at the present time.

The people feel that a civil servant from any department is a servant of the Minister—in effect, is a member of the Minister's staff. Then why do we have Crown corporations? We have them because they will be independent from the Minister. Why would we have an agency which in its fundamental philosophy is to be independent from the Minister if its board of directors are, in essence, to be the persons who advise the Minister? You really have a contradiction of philosophy if you set something apart from the ministry while at the same time you have persons who are a part of the ministery advising that which you set apart. Therefore, in the cold logic of what we are attempting to do in setting apart an agency from a Minister in order to remove whatever governmental and political influences there might be, it is only natural and just that we also set it completely apart by giving autonomy to that Crown corporation by having its board of directors appointed purely from outside government. The amendment, then, which is one which would reduce the number of public servants who can sit as directors, also makes sense because I believe there is a question of public trust and confidence. The majority of Canadians know that the great hope for our country is going to be an expanded economy. They also know that is going to come when the best talent that we can discover is energized to do the best job for Canadians.

• (1230)

Rightly or wrongly—and I submit to a large extent wrongly—there is a belief that many public servants have not the capacity to fill the talent required. I feel that that prejudice is probably, to some extent, unjustified. However, it is important in an economic recovery of any kind, Mr. Speaker, that the confidence of the people at large be assured. One example of that is that Canadians today have the largest amount of their money sitting in saving funds. Canadians have the largest amount of savings of any other industrial nation of the world. I understand that there is just short of 20 per cent of the cash wealth of this country in savings accounts.

The main reason we do not take our money out and spend it is the question of confidence. We are more confident in having our money in savings than in investments, and I submit that that question of confidence, whether justified or not, is one that is extremely important to the enhancement of our economy. Because there is that belief held by the Canadian people generally that our exports will be better served if we have people from the private sector with exporting experience working in our best interests and enhancing those exports, then we are by that very philosophy likely to have a better export agency in choosing our directors from that perspective.

The other reason for opening up seats on the board of directors to others besides public servants is the search for talent. If we have the best talent, we have the best results for Canada. If we specify that a specific number of public servants are going to be members, we obviously, by that formula, limit the search. What we should be doing is opening up the EDC to talent of the highest quality which we can possibly discover. If we are able to do that, Mr. Speaker, then it seems to me we will have eliminated the right of the Government to influence as well as having sought out the best talent.

The other aspect which I would like to speak on for just a moment is that when there are persons appointed from the Public Service there is the opportunity for political influence. The Minister may suggest that that influence would never be exercised, that he would not do that. However, it is irrelevant whether or not he, as a person, would exercise this influence. The fact is that influence is possible.

Second, there is always suspicion that it is going on even if it does not take place. Those dangers can be avoided simply by ensuring that the majority of persons who are appointed to the board of directors come from the exporting field of the private sector and can serve the philosophies which the Minister has established for the EDC, as opposed to having persons there who are Public Service related. Whether they come from the Minister's department or not, the fact is they are servants of government. The concept is not widely understood among Canadians that civil servants are neutral to politics. The belief is that they are servants to persons and to political parties rather than servants to the country. While it is an unfortunate perspective, the truth is there have been enough incidents in the past to give credence to the Canadian belief that some civil servants do in fact lend themselves to political influence.

Therefore, there is the long-held understanding of Canadians, then, that bureaucrats, by nature, build sandcastles and empires as opposed to being leaner in structure and staffing than do those who traditionally had to work towards a bottom line—they could not have that which they could not pay for. Because in government any time you want something more you simply are able to ask the taxpayers to pay more, the confidence is in those who are operating in the private sector, the belief being that they will run a leaner enterprise.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister should see there is some wisdom in the amendments we are putting forward and should find that that amendment is acceptable. While there is not a great deal that one can add to this particular point—we have gone at it from different angles with different words to express essentially the same thing—we should not but underscore that this point is important, even though there is not a great dimension to which we can expand the concern. If it is the whole nature of a Crown corporation to be removed from government, then surely if we are to have a agency which is removed from government, its board of directors should be removed also by having persons involved other than those civil servants of government. That ought to be the bottom line for the operation of Crown corporations, not just this one but as a general principle.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak very briefly on the amendment because I do not want to become repetitive. We have before us the Export Development Act. We are discussing Motion No. 1 which deals with the appointment of the board of directors. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is probably a greater consensus among Parliamentarians on all sides of this House on the issue of the Export Development Act and the EDC than on most issues. I do not think there are any Members of this House who do not support the EDC and what it is trying to do. We might have some differences of opinion about the exact directions it might take and the exact ways in which it goes about its business, but in general we all support what has been very beneficial to Canada in the past and we hope it will continue to be equally beneficial.

• (1240)

In my usual co-operative fashion I am going to address Motion No. 1 which deals with the various appointments and isolate those areas in which I and my colleagues find ourselves in agreement with the Government. First of all, we have no real objection to the proposed increase in the board of directors of the EDC from a chairman and 11 directors to a chairman and 14 directors. On occasion I have spoken in this House in opposition to increases to boards of directors of Crown corporations and other agencies, but in this particular case I will not belabour that point.

It is nice to see, Sir, that the age limit of 70 has been removed. It is only a few years ago that we put an age limit on senators, and in this particular piece of legislation we are taking the opposite tack and allowing people above the age of 70 to be appointed to the board. As a personal opinion, I think there are very many people 70 years of age and older in Canada who could add much to boards of this nature. We support the five-year tenure for non-government members. I think it is always important in legislation of this type to specify a period of tenure. It is always useful to have a fixed date of termination, otherwise people who may have outlived their usefulness a little bit are not removed because you do not want to do anything to denigrate them. But the opportunity is not there to appoint newcomers who might be able to add more.

We agree with the the provision for the election of vice-president of the board of directors from among the board by the members of the board. The Government finds favour with that proposal which I believe was the same system adopted in the earlier Act before these amendments were proposed.

I now come to the points on which there is some difference of opinion between us on this side of the House and the gentlemen opposite. Our proposals are based on different political philosophy, Sir. In principle, we on this side of the House want to see a greater private presence in the EDC, particularly on the board of directors. However, the gentlemen opposite seem to want to retain a much greater degree of Government presence by having the chairman and a number of directors public servants in the employ of the Government of Canada. There might be some benefit in the Government's proposal in that in the present version of the Act six of the 11 directors must be public servants. This would give people in the employ of the Government of Canada a majority on the board at all times. The Government's proposal seems to eliminate that but it does not specify what number of members should come from the private sector and what number from the public sector. I believe the Government has said its intention is to go along with us and expand the non-governmental side of things, but there is still the possibility that it would appoint all the members of the board from the public sector. I do not think that is the intention but, of course, if the gentlemen from the NDP ever formed the Government I am sure that is what they would do without any hesitation at all. Therefore, I would not like to leave the legislation in a state which would allow them to do that without coming back for the approval of Parliament.

Our proposal, Mr. Speaker, is that there be three public servants on the board of directors. Let me say that I think there should be some people from government there. Hopefully, some of the others who are no longer in the public employ and who will be appointed to the board will have experience in the Public Service or in the political arena. They should have knowledge of how government works. But when it comes to full-time, permanent public employees, I think the three representatives we have proposed are sufficient. There should, of course, be public servants on the board. I have no difficulty with that because they can bring to the board their knowledge of how the Government of the day is operating. I think they would be a welcome addition to the board of directors which on the whole should come from the private sector.

Now, probably the most important change that we propose is that of the chairman. The Liberal Government proposes that the chairman of the EDC board should be a public servant subject to the control of the Minister, a person to whom the Minister can give directions, but we propose that the chairman be an independent person. No reason why he still should not have lunch with the Minister once in a while if that is his wish, but he would not be under the direct control of the Minister. I think that would give the EDC a much greater degree of flexibility and enhance its independence from government. It will then be seen by manufacturers, exporters and importers and all the other people involved in this branch of commerce not just as a branch of government but as fulfilling its proper role as a Crown corporation, independent and at arm's length from government.

In most of the Crown corporations that we deal with as Members of this House we have the same kind of set-up proposed here. That, in my opinion, gives rise to a number of difficulties. When the choice of the chief executive officer is left up to the Government, very often it leaves the board of directors without a real function. Through the chairman of the board the Minister can give directions to the chief executive officer of the corporation and the board does not really have that much say in policy. The main function of a board of directors of any corporation should be to hire and fire if necessary the chief executive personnel. With Crown corporations that is very seldom the case. So you leave a board of directors no real function. Quite often they have extensive travelling privileges and they go flying all over the country or the world, often at Government expense, and they do not really have anything to do. It must be an awfully frustrating job. I do not think that the affairs of Crown corporations such as the EDC should be under the day to day control of the Minister. Rather, it should be flexible and have the private sector way of looking at things. Of course, the ultimate control should lie with Parliament, but through legislation and votes on the estimates rather than by control over the day to day affairs of the corporation by a ministerial appointee.

• (1250)

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to the amendment now before us, I must admit that I have been reaching back to recall some statements made by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) in order to find a clear motivation for the amendment placed before us by the Conservative Party, and I found them. We must remember that we are dealing with an amendment that will change the current wording of Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act. We are dealing with the Bill in such a way that we will restrict to three the number of persons on a board of 15 who could be employed either in the Public Service of Canada or employed, as I understand the amendment, by any provincial Government across the land as well.

The Conservative Party, with a great deal of justifiable and understandable motivation, would like to ensure that there is a broader cross-section of representatives of the various sectors of our economy on the board of the Export Development Corporation. But there is more to it than that, I would submit.

If we look at the Montreal Gazette for May 18, 1983, there is a report of a dinner, an unpublicized event at an east end hotel in Montreal for the closest campaign workers at the PC leadership convention. The now Leader of the Opposition said according to the article: "Oh, there'll be jobs for Liberals and NDPers too," he said in New Brunswick recently, "but only after I've been prime minister for 15 years and I can't find a single living, breathing Tory to appoint".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kristiansen: Nobody can object to the desire, which I am certain is genuine, of a Party that has been in the wilderness for so long that it wants to find a few jobs for the boys.

Mrs. Mitchell: How about the girls?

Mr. Kristiansen: I have not heard them mention much about the girls. Maybe there are a few jobs for the girls too. We will give the conservatives credit for that because we are generous. Just as the Leader of the Opposition is generous about medicare, we are generous with the Conservatives and their motivations.

A statement like this makes us view with some trepidation at the least what the real "real" reasons are for this great surge of generosity on the part of the Conservative Party, which now believes it can taste the victory and power that has alluded that Party for so long.

To be quite serious, Mr. Speaker, there are some very valid reasons for ensuring there is room for many more people from the private sector, from the employee sector and other sectors across Canada, to participate in the governing of a corporation which could be, if it is well managed and directed, important to our future in the export trade. I would hope the Government, whatever Party it may be, will take some steps to ensure that all major sectors in Canada are represented, whether from the federal Government, from the provincial Governments—which certainly have a worth-while vested interest in this—from the corporate sector and many also from labour who have, many of them, played a full part in trying to ensure, particularly in the forest industry, the expansion of our markets. I know the union of which I am still a member, the IWA, has played a vigorous part in pursuing and attempting to expand markets in China and in Japan. It has attempted this also by taking part in many multi-government excursions, worth-while excursions, not jaunts, to see our major competitors in the European market, basically both Sweden and the Soviet Union in the forestry and pulp and paper sectors, to ensure that we capitalize on whatever opportunities we may have available to us to expand both employment and profits. That is a worth-while objective.

I am one of those, distinct from some of my colleagues in the NDP and colleagues in the labour movement, who believes in the principle of tri-partism. The union to which I belong has also long been an advocate of some of the processes involved in that. We believe that if we are to succeed as a country and as an economy, there must be a more functioning partnership between the corporate sector, labour and Government, both federal and provincial. We must have a new social contract if we are to live together, to thrive and become more productive and aggressive in carving out our proper share in the international marketplace.

The motivation must be positive. It cannot simply be jobs for the boys. There is no point to be made with getting away from—I hesitate to use the word gang, but one government, the Liberal Party, which has become notorious for the amount of its pals, whether in government or in the corporate sector, being appointed to vacancies or boards right across the country, and then replacing that government with another machine that is power hungry. They are not power hungry because their machine has got used to it but because they have been absent from the centre of power for so long they can taste it.

The reports of that meeting at an east end hotel in Montreal make the scenario very clear. The story both appeared in The Globe and Mail and the Montreal Gazette. To refer back to The Globe and Mail it refers to the now Leader of the Opposition. It states: "Power is his promise across the country. As the Conservatives gather, he always reminds them that they have no power, and how sweet it would be if they could get power. No, not how sweet it would be, but how sweet it will be." How sweet it is, Mr. Speaker, to hear the PCs discussing their opportunities, their hungers and their thirsts with their colleagues at an intimate meeting in an east end hotel in Montreal. It is very nice of them to hold a meeting in an east end hotel, very nice, if not patronizing.

Patronage takes on a different colour when we are speaking about the kinds of goals the Conservative Party obviously now have.

The article states: "A man shouts", and I will not say his name, "you're going to be Prime Minister", and Mr. M shouts back: "you're going to be a senator."

But there are only so many senators. Vacancies are not suddenly created because senators have to reach a certain age before they retire, unless they decide to get out voluntarily. Knowing some of the people in that august chamber, they are not likely to leave earlier than they have to. That limits the possibilities for patronage appointments. Obviously because of the way the Liberal Party has governed this country for so long, there will be a little bit of a dearth of active Conservatives within the senior positions of the Public Service. Naturally the course of action is to open up all the boards, all the Crown corporations and agencies, so that after the Leader of the Opposition, as the article states, has "been Prime Minister for 15 years and cannot find a single living, breathing Tory left to appoint", then he may be able to become a non-partisan Prime Minister.

I will continue my remarks later, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I must inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

[Translation]

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1:00 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PLIGHT OF HUNGRY CHILDREN

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would like to express my deep concern for the plight of the growing number of children in the Hamilton area—and I am sure in other parts of Canada—who have been observed using local soup kitchen facilities in order to obtain food.

It must be noted that on July 7, 1981, the report of the Canadian Commission for the International Year of the Child, 1979, entitled, "For Canada's Children—National Agenda for Action", included a section dealing with nutrition which called for a federal-provincial conference on issues affecting children, including the problem of providing food to hungry children and the feasibility of establishing non-profit food banks to operate on a permanent basis in Canada for the distribution of surplus food to those in need.

It appears that the most effective method of reaching these children would be through a network of churches and neighbourhood groups rather than through established government agencies, but food banks are needed as central supply depots to supply food to these community groups, and the various levels of government could assist in setting up such food depots.

In light of the recent phenomenon of hungry children in various areas of Canada, I hope the federal and provincial Governments will examine this Year of the Child recommendation in order to try to ameliorate a very disturbing situation.

* * *

THE LATE CLARK TODD

TRIBUTE TO TELEVISION NEWSMAN

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, the world of journalism and all Canadians are saddened to learn of the death of CTV newsman Clark Todd, whose body was found yesterday in an obscure Lebanese mountain village. For several days the shelling in the area was so intense that it took five attempts by the Red Cross and CTV executives to reach Mr. Todd in the Chouf Mountains, just southeast of Beirut.

It is very difficult for most people to understand what is happening in Lebanon, with five or six different pocket wars demonstrating man's continuing inhumanity to man. Many also find it perplexing that the media must be in such a deadly war zone, with its barbarism and massacres, to see up close what is happening. People watching the nightly news in the comfort of their rooms tend to forget the risks which are taken to provide the coverage.

Like all professional journalists who suddenly find themselves in a dangerous region, Clark Todd felt the need to record the reality of the time. It is an uncomfortable decision that newsmen have to make, but if trained journalists do not cover wars, the truth is distorted. Armies lie, governments lie.

Clark Todd, a reporter profoundly dedicated to his profession, felt a responsibility to be where the action was. He did not die in vain. He died for a purpose. He died for the informational and democratic process. In extending our sympathy to the Todd family, I am sure the House would agree that Clark Todd was a good reporter. We shall miss him.

* * *

EDUCATION

ILLITERACY AMONG ADULTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, according to the recently released report of the Canadian Commission for UNESCO entitled, "Adult Literacy in Canada: A Challenge", over four million Canadians are functionally illiterate and 28 per cent of our population do not have the basic skills necessary to handle responsibly the tasks of everyday life. In my home Province of Manitoba there are over 45,000 such people. The existence of such a large group of illiterate adults in a country such as ours is a sad comment, but even more shameful is the finding by UNESCO that the federal Government has all but abandoned adult programs for basic reading and writing skills.

While we pour resources into courses offering specific job skills or retraining, we exclude from these programs those who have not learned to read, write, or do simple arithmetic. We fall far short of countries such as India, Tanzania, and Brazil which are doing a much more effective job of dealing with the problem than Canada, a country with a large and modern educational system.

It is estimated that there are one million adults in our country in drastic need, one million individuals who, without further training, will never be able to participate fully in society. They are doomed to a life of unemployment, welfare, and low-paying infrequent work, unless there is action.

Adult education and basic skills must be an integral part of government programs of skill upgrading and industrial retraining. Approaches to such training must be innovative and non-traditional. The federal Government should establish—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

* * *

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT ONTARIO BROILERS MARKETING BOARD BE PLACED UNDER TRUSTEESHIP

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Madam Speaker, I have here a statement from Agriculture Canada, dated September 12, 1983, in which the General Manager of the National Broilers Marketing Agency in Canada, Mr. Roméo LeBlanc, says that Maple Lodge Farms Ltd of Brampton, Ontario, is now under investigation for having used the name of another company, namely, Cronkhite Poultry Ltd., which operated from an apartment in Montreal, for the purpose of purchasing and selling broilers in Ontario. This company was operating without a warehouse or abattoir and was using trucks leased in Quebec to give the impression that the product had been legally produced in that province.

Since the Ontario Broilers Marketing Board was well aware of this unlawful operation and since the Ontario Broilers Marketing Board tolerated the situation for a number of years in order to keep and distribute more quotas in western Ontario, circumstances permitting, to the detriment of business in eastern Ontario, I would ask the National Broilers Marketing Agency to put the Ontario Broilers Marketing Board under trusteeship until our producers in eastern Ontario, and more specifically the producers in the Saint-Isidore de Prescott area, are treated fairly as far as the allocation of broiler quotas is concerned.

* * *

[English]

YOUTH

CONDEMNATION OF PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH MINISTRY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House have been pressing for some time for a more effective and long-term attack by the Government on Canada's high unemployment. In addition to the current statistics on the Government's poor record at creating jobs, now comes the idea of a Ministry of Youth, with squads of information officers. Moreover, this will not be just another government bureaucracy. It will be, in the words of the paper presented by the Hon. Senator, "... not a new army of traditional civil servants, but people under 25 working on contract for a minimum of two years. Several hundred such workers would be required to cover the whole country". Stopgap measures are not what governing is about. I trust that today's unemployed youth are aware of this latest ploy to win their votes. They want meaningful and permanent employment.

* * *

YOUTH

DEVELOPMENT OF ASPIRATIONS

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, perhaps never before in our history has there been such a vital need as now for Parliament to signal to the people of Canada its deep and firm commitment to address itself to the needs and goals of the younger generation. But while our major concern must, of sad necessity, be that of youthful unemployment, Parliament must pursue with passion, dedication, and imagination all means to encourage, facilitate and develop the legitimate aspirations of all Canada's youthful athletes, artists, artisans, inventors, musicians, poets and writers. Indeed, no field of youthful endeavour can be excluded from our resolve to create in the country an atmosphere in which equal opportunity will be given to all our youth so that dreams may be fulfilled and talents can flourish.

* * *

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

PROVISION OF LONG-TERM CREDIT TO FARMERS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, as the Government is well aware, the demand for long-term reasonably priced agriculture credit is very high. However, the availability of funds for this purpose has been relatively meagre, leaving hundreds of farmers with improved but unprocessed applications.

Historically the private sector has shown neither the ability nor the desire to service the long-term agriculture credit market. Therefore the only alternative is that long-term credit should be provided by the Farm Credit Corporation.

There are three main groups that need long-term affordable credit—the young efficient farmers, to get them started up; the older farmers who would like to sell out and realize sufficient means to assure a decent retirement; and the established farmers, to maintain their stocks, buildings and machinery. To accomplish this a fivefold increase in funding is needed with a provision for refinancing the fixed high interest mortgages issued in 1981 and 1982. Also needed is the implementation of the Federation of Agriculture's agribond proposal and, in order to maintain the country's agriculture capital stock, the FCC must extend its financing to capital items as well as for real estate. Therefore I call upon the Government to take the necessary positive action in this regard.

S.O. 21

• (1410)

HUMAN RIGHTS

ABOLITION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA COMMISSION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the Social Credit Government of British Columbia has abolished the Human Rights Commission in that Province. As a result, women, handicapped people, ethnic and religious minorities have no protection against discrimination. Employers, landlords or business people can now carry personal prejudice over into public life without fear of punishment. Gordon Fairweather, head of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, and a former Member of this House, said "there will be an asterisk beside British Columbia, singling it out as a lesser place for human rights."

At a federal-provincial conference last week, Manitoba's Attorney General said that the British Columbia Government had delivered a "devastating blow to the cause of human rights in Canada". The Federal Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) pleaded with the British Columbia Government to reconsider its action. However, Tory Cabinet Ministers from five Conservative provincial governments held a special news conference to indicate that they would not condemn the British Columbia Government or its action. Provincial Tories have said that they will not speak up for human rights. Canadians now ask if the federal Conservatives will also keep silent rather than offend their idealogical twins in the British Columbia Socreds. Conservative silence is the same as Socred consent.

* * *

ASSASSINATION OF BENIGNO AQUINO

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY TO CANADIANS OF FILIPINO ORIGIN

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 21 to offer my most sincere sympathy to all Canadians of Filipino origin following the assassination of Benigno Aquino on August 21, 1983, as he was returning home to the Philippines after years of exile in the United States. The shock of this barbaric act was indeed felt throughout the world and still remains unexplained. President Ferdinand Marcos, in a broadcast responding to the incident, stated that he was also "deeply and profoundly shocked by what has happened".

The third largest ethno-cultural group represented in our constituency of Parkdale-High Park is comprised of loyal Canadians of Filipino origin. Therefore I would like to join with my constituents of Filipino descent in their sadness and anger over the death of this great man, and add my voice to the international deplorement of such an atrocity.

POLITICAL PARTIES

SUCCESS OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA BY-ELECTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, during the summer months the Government came under some criticism for its six and five program. I think that is rather unfortunate because it has had some stellar successes, if not sometimes unheralded, but nevertheless successes.

In the by-election in Mission-Port Moody, that by-election produced an increase in the size of the Conservative B.C. caucus of 6 per cent. In the process of producing that for our Conservative caucus, the Liberal vote fell to 5 per cent. That, Madam Speaker, is the best six and five program in all of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: That is the kind of six and five program that the entire country is waiting for, and we ask the Government to produce it.

* * *

SHIPBUILDING

DECLINE IN SHIPYARD EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, in spite of the Canadian frigate program, in spite of the shipbuilding special recovery projects, and in spite of the Government's shipbuilding policy, production and employment in Canadian shipyards is the lowest it has been in recorded history. This terrible situation can be laid squarely on the doorstep of the present Liberal Government, in particular of the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. MacLaren) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien).

The Minister of State for Finance has failed to act expeditiously to place into law the Government's new shipbuilding policy, however weak that policy is, and has lost millions of dollars in shipbuilding contracts. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, under the Petroleum Incentives Program, is quite prepared to pay up to 80 per cent of the costs of building and leasing offshore supply vessels and drilling platforms in foreign countries, while unprepared to pay the petroleum incentive grant for ships built in Canada.

There cannot be a dumber policy in Canadian history than one that would see Canadian taxpayers' money used as an incentive to build ships and drilling rigs in other countries. We pay billions to the Japanese to build our ships and rigs, while allowing our shipyard workers to live on unemployment insurance.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

IMPROVEMENT IN CHAMBER LIGHTING

Madam Speaker: I am sure Hon. Members have noticed that, thanks to advice received from our experts, the Chamber is much more comfortable. The lights have been equipped with flare-control barrels, because it was the glare rather than the intensity of the lights that was causing the problem. Those who are sitting in the last rows still have a shadow on their faces, but equipment wil be here and installed within a couple of weeks and they will look as nice as the rest of us in the Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM

LEVEL OF SPENDING IN 1983

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, I hope that perhaps some of the Ministers can shed some light on the important problems facing the country. My question is addressed to the Minister of State for Economic Development who knows that the Special Recovery Fund spending for 1983 is now projected to be $245 million less than was originally promised by the Minister of Finance in his April 19 budget. This means at least 15,000 less meaningful jobs for the balance of the coming year will be created under this program than originally promised. This cutback contradicts the Minister's undertaking to fast-track these projects in view of the unprecedented hardship facing unemployed Canadians at this time.

Why has the Minister allowed these much needed jobs to disappear into thin air? Can he not hold his own against the Minister of Finance to ensure that he meets his commitments to unemployed Canadians? How many new jobs have been created in the past six months as a consequence of this program?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program was designed to spend $2.4 billion—

Mr. Crosbie: Over a hundred years.

Mr. Johnston: —on economic infrastructure programs in almost every part of the country; in towns, hamlets, large cities and rural areas. The projects were selected on the basis of those that had already been planned by Departments for some time in this decade. The purpose was to move them forward so as to put economic infrastructure in place during a period when obviously the investment intentions of the private sector had been much less than one would have liked them to have been. That situation, I might add, has unfortunately continued.

At the time of the budget the Minister of Finance said that 60 per cent of the funds would be expended within the next two years and the projects whould start within a six-month period if they were put on a fast track. They have been put on a fast track. There is a special board operating. There is a secretariat reporting to that board. There is a program management advisory group which is helping Departments to ensure that these projects are brought in on time and within budget. Hon. Members know that when we perceive capital projects of this kind that there is a preliminary project approval.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Answers should be short, as should questions.

USE OF FUNDS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, it is important to know to what purpose these funds are being put. Hopefully they will be used for the creation of long-term permanent jobs as an element of the Minister's economic development responsibilities. Why has the Government been so secretive about the use to which the SRF funds are being put? Will the Minister confirm that this past summer details of the SRF project applications and of the successful projects were given to all Liberal Members of Parliament in a lose-leaf binder, and that those details to date have not been shared with other Members of this House?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am not aware that they have been given to Liberal Members of Parliament over the summer. I can assure Hon. Members that I am prepared to make all that information available to any Member of this House. I thought much of it had been made available. All of these projects have been subject to press communiques and detailed briefings. They have been available to Members on request. I can assure the Hon. Member that I will be more than pleased to supply him with any briefing material that will be of help to him in analyzing these projects. As he said, they do indeed put in place a much needed economic infrastructure and have provided a major incentive to the private sector also to get on board and invest.

● (1420)

I also think that it has been very encouraging for us to see these projects developing, and the jobs that they are creating. In the long term, Madam Speaker, each one of these projects will make a significant contribution to economic recovery by providing more jobs in future.

Oral Questions

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

IMPACT OF REDUCTION IN DEPARTMENTAL STAFF

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, under the Minister's other hat, his responsibility for Science and Technology, he has also managed to roll back his responsibilities from those that were originally envisaged, by laying off one-third of his staff at MOSST, and in the process he has lost his responsibility for NRC, NSERC, and, I believe, the Science Council of Canada. Will the Minister explain how he intends to heighten the profile of science and its important role in enhancing Canada's economic development while he is allowing his own staff to be reduced to zero?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. We have reduced the size of MOSST in order—

Some Hon. Members: He is right, "the Minister".

Mr. Johnston: That is something which it seems to me this Government is always encouraged to do, namely, to make Departments more efficient and more effective in carrying out their missions.

The mission of MOSST now, with the chief science advisory role added, is one that will provide a tight, first-class advisory group on scientific matters for Cabinet, the Government, and the Prime Minister's office, much along the lines, I would suggest, of the role of the chief science advisor in the United States.

In so far as NSERC, the Science Council, and the National Research Council are concerned, those organizations report through me to Parliament, so if the Hon. Member has any questions with respect to those organizations, I am the Minister to whom those questions should be addressed.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR TAX CREDIT PROGRAM TO HELP CREATE JOBS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister will know that in 1979 the Conservative Party used employment tax credits to create jobs, and over 31,000 jobs per month on average were created. I wonder whether or not the Minister will be bringing to the House within the next 30 to 60 days the legislation necessary to put in place a tax credit program for employment. It is the quickest and least expensive way of creating jobs. With one and a half million unemployed Canadians, we need something that is quick and less expensive. Will the Minister bring forward that kind of legislation within the next 30 to 60 days?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we are considering a variety of programs. There are indeed a whole range of them that are somewhat along the lines of what the Hon. Member has suggested, which are interesting. For instance, I could refer to the experience in Great Britain where there appears to have been some considerable success with wage subsidy programs, particularly focusing in on the problems of those who are entering the labour force for the first time.

We do have a variety of programs under review. I will be happy to look once again at the very suggestion which was made by the Hon. Member. I would point out to him, however, that we have been creating jobs at a rate higher than that which he is suggesting that the Conservative Party created.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, that is a tough statement to swallow when there are one-quarter of a million fewer jobs today than there were two years ago. That is not job creation, that is job loss, Mr. Minister. Madam Speaker, I am sorry, but it is sometimes difficult—

Madam Speaker: If it is too difficult, the Hon. Member should refrain from asking questions altogether.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EFFECT OF TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): May I ask the Minister to tell the House what his departmental estimates are for the coming year in terms of job loss due to technological displacement? How many Canadians will be replaced by new kinds of machines in the next 12 months, and what special plans does the Department have that will put those people back into the work force through a decent retraining program? How many people will lose their jobs to machines in the next 12 months?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Madam Speaker, I cannot give the hon. gentleman that information. The reason that I cannot do that is because there is such a wide range of opinions as to what the effect of technological change will be. There are many who do argue, as he has suggested, that there will be jobs lost in the process of technological renovation. There are just as many scholars, assessors and critics of the technology scene who believe that the introduction of new technology will create jobs. In fact there is no consensus on what the impact of technological change will be, either negatively or positively, on job creation. I simply cannot give the Hon. Member the information he asks for because I do not believe that there is a sustained view on that.

The whole impact of technological change on the job market is, of course, a matter with which we are very much concerned. Just last week, for instance, I was able to meet with representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress and the Business Council on National Issues to sign a memorandum which creates, under the direction of the BCNI and the CLC, an institute focusing among other things on technological change, its impact on job opportunities, and the need for training skills for it. This is a matter of continuing concern, but the Hon. Member has asked for a specific answer which I cannot give because I do not believe that there is a consensus to support that answer.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR PROGRAMS TO CREATE FULL-TIME JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. During the two-year period which ended last Friday there was some increase in the number of part-time jobs in the Canadian economy. Will the Minister admit that, during the same two-year period, more than a half million full-time jobs were lost? In relation to that, on the assumption that most Canadian men and women, young and old who want to work, want a full-time job, will the Government, in the next couple of weeks, be bringing in new programs to get full-time jobs for those Canadians who want them?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, Canada is at the present time creating jobs at a faster rate than any other industrialized country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: This is in line with what we have done during the 1970s when, under this Government, Canada created more jobs at a faster rate than any other industrialized country.

If the Hon. Member is asking for a specific initiative, I am very happy to bring to his attention one that does not need to be introduced. It is one that is under consideration before the House at the present time, and it will mean $25 billion worth of investment in this country over the next ten years and the creation of several hundred thousand jobs. It is now before the parliamentary committee. We are expecting that committee's report before the House any day, and I would hope that the New Democratic Party in particular, and the Official Opposition, will support the amendments to the Crow legislation which will ensure that this project proceeds and that we may create jobs all across the country and proceed with that very large investment.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, once again the Minister did not answer the question that was asked. He knows that if a person works for one day in this country, it counts as a job because of the way the Government uses statistics. I repeat that before we had a Liberal Government, Canadians assumed that they would get a job and that it would be a full-time job. It is this Government that has changed that expectation for Canadians.

REQUEST FOR NEW POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister that if the Government is seriously concerned about the rights of men and women to work, will he be bringing in a new policy or program designed to give men and women the right to a full-time job?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as I just said to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, since last November, we have been creating jobs here in Canada at a faster rate than in any other industrialized country in the world. I shall go on repeating this until my hon. colleague and Opposition members finally realize that that is what we are doing in this country. This is indeed a remarkable record. It is true, and we agree, that the unemployment rate is high, and it is because the labour force in Canada also has the highest growth rate of any industrialized country, and we are doing everything in our power to create as many jobs as we can, as soon as we can. It is of course preferable to create permanent, full-time jobs that people can count on, and that is why, when I brought down my budget, I put special emphasis on the importance of creating jobs in the private sector rather than creating temporary jobs through direct job creation programs. However, we realize that the private sector will need time to create all those jobs. Meanwhile, I would again invite the Opposition to pass the Bill amending the Crowsnest Pass rate, and once that is done, the way will be clear for investing $25 billion in this country in the years to come, thus creating the hundreds of thousands of permanent jobs the Hon. Member is referring to.

● (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the answer is not any better in French than it was in English. It is still the same answer.

[English]

INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I should like to ask the Minister if he is aware that at least his officials acknowledge that the Government's policies have been a failure. Last week the Economic Review produced by his officials, and presumably he speaks with them from time to time, acknowledged that it is the Liberal Government's policies of the past couple of years that have exacerbated the depression and have worsened the situation for men and women in this country.

Will the Minister think again about what he has said and recommit the Government—which promised an industrial strategy for the country—to such an idea that would restore in some measure the hopes of ordinary men and women, young and old, who want to be able to get a job and to achieve the dignity that goes with that right?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the document to which the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party refers is one that I have signed and one that has been published under my responsibility, not that of my officials.

Mr. Broadbent: Have you read it?

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member asks whether I have read it. I certainly have. What is depressing about the Hon. Member's behaviour is that he does not seem to hear nor does he seem to be able to read. The document states that among the factors that affected the world recession was the stubbornness of inflation, combined with governments' anti-inflation policies that were geared to beat that inflation.

As the Hon. Member knows, we have known such a thing as stagflation in this country, when we had high unemployment and high inflation.

Mr. Crosbie: And a Liberal Government.

Mr. Lalonde: What we are trying to do—and we have succeeded in reducing inflation—is to build on that reduced inflation and the recovery that we are experiencing at present, to create jobs. Not only are we creating jobs faster in this country than in any other industrialized country but we are also creating jobs faster than we even anticipated in the April budget. That is a good record and I think we should build upon that, rather than walk around like a typical gasconner.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

RATE OF JOB CREATION IN AUGUST

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance will know that the level of employment in this country, based on the figures when the recession commenced in August, 1981, is down by 267,000 jobs, yet the labour force during that period increased by 350,000.

I want to ask the Minister, who boasts of his performance in terms of job creation, how he explains the fact that, given the data released by Statistics Canada last week, only 15,000 jobs were produced in the month of August. This represents a decline of 75 per cent in the level of employment over the previous four months. When the Minister boasts of performance, how does he explain that?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member forgot to mention that Statistics Canada also stated that the unemployment rate in Canada during that time dropped to 11.8 per cent, compared to what it was in the previous month. We have had a drop in the unemployment rate in August. I agree, the number of jobs created during the month of August was less than in previous months, but the important thing is the general trend, and we cannot form definite conclusions on the basis of information for one month alone. Even Statistics Canada was unable to explain, for instance, exactly why the number of new jobs created in the month of August was less than it was in previous months. We shall have to monitor developments in the months to come, but if the Hon. Member would consider the trend that has been developing since last December, he will see that 17,000 jobs were created in December, dropping to zero in January, and subsequently shooting up to 27,000 in February, and then in March, we went from 28,000 to 63,000 jobs, compared to November. There are fluctuations from month to month, and it is important to look at the average figures, which show that there is a definite upward trend since last November.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, it defies logic how the Minister can see any trend in a decline of two-tenths of one per cent in the unemployment statistics. If that is a trend, the Minister had better get some new economic forecasters. The facts are that the rate of employment in this country, that is, job creation, fell by 75 per cent during the month of August. These are the cold, hard facts that face the country today, and the Minister knows that.

PROPOSAL TO CREATE YOUTH DEPARTMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I want to address a question now to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who has a responsibility in this matter. Given the fact that he has seemingly rejected outright as too "gimmicky", I think that is the word he used, the recommendations made by the Liberal Quebec caucus for the creation of a youth department within the Government, may I ask what advice he has for the 600,000 young people in this country who are unemployed? According to a study issued by his Department, they face bleak prospects for the next two years.

Given these facts, and the fact that all he was able to tell the young people of St. John's and the young people of Canada during the course of a conference on youth unemployment—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. I think the Hon. Member will recognize that he has had a good chance to ask the question.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is guilty of an extraordinary misstatement of fact. It is not I who rejected out of hand the creation of such a department; it was the Leader of the Opposition. It is not I who termed it a gimmick; it was his colleague from St. John's.

What I suggested is that I should like to know why the Leader of the Opposition did reject it out of hand. I think it is an idea very much worth considering.

Mr. Crosbie: A bloody gimmick.

Mr. Roberts: I have also been discussing with my colleagues on the front benches, and on the back benches, that approach and alternative approaches which might arrive at the same objective even more efficaciously. I have not rejected the idea, but the Hon. Member's colleagues have. Rather than addressing barbed questions to me in the House it might be more useful for him to talk to his Leader and his seatmate from St. John's.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DISCLOSE PLANS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The unemployment situation in Canada obviously remains in a crisis state. Many people in Mission-Port Moody, like many other British Columbians, and Canadians, have lost their jobs, their homes and their cars. more important, Madam Speaker, they have lost their dignity, and families are suffering.

Can the Minister tell the House exactly what long-range plans the Government has to end unemployment and to put Canadians back to work so that they may regain their dignity, along with their families and their communities?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to welcome the Hon. Member and say how pleased I am that he has addressed his first question in the House to me. I hope he will address many more questions to me and also many which are as perspicacious as the one he has just posed.

As I indicated to the House yesterday, in this year we are directing something like $1.5 billion to job-creation efforts. I do not believe, and I hope he does not believe, that there is one simple, single, precise response which will create jobs. We are trying to create them with a whole variety of programs.

I described to the House yesterday how the variety of programs used in the past have been brought together and reinforced. I suggest the Hon. Member look at the material that was delivered to his office in that regard. If there is something specific he would like to do in the short term and immediately, it should be to intervene with the Government of British Columbia to re-establish some rather important programs like the Employment Bridging Assistance Program. These were very useful in creating jobs in British Columbia but unfortunately, in my view, the provincial Government has withdrawn from them.

● (1440)

Mr. St. Germain: Madam Speaker, I did receive the information on the Canada Works Program. It should create ten or 20 jobs in my riding.

NEED FOR LONG-TERM JOBS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): With respect to my supplementary question, the people of my riding and the people of Canada want to know, Madam Speaker, when exactly—and I repeat—when exactly will the Minister truly create something long term? These are band-aid programs, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, these are not band-aid programs. I do not call 328,000 jobs a band-aid. They are not a mere handful of jobs. We have not waited for programs. We have, over the past year, acted, and it would be very much in the interests of the hon. gentleman's own constituents if he could persuade his colleagues on that side of the House to allow the Crow rate legislation to proceed and pass in this House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: —because that legislation will create thousands and thousands of jobs in British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

EDUCATION

ACCESSIBILITY TO POST-SECONDARY INSTITUTIONS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the Minister knows, the situation of Canadian youth has reached crisis proportions. Jobs are not there, and now entry to post-secondary educational institutions is being denied thousands upon thousands of qualified students everywhere in the country. Will the Minister, and through him, the Government, urgently consider the establishment, with the provinces, of a joint emergency fund to meet this national crisis in post-secondary education so that the goal of accessibility is not totally eroded?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member no doubt knows, the Federal Government is contributing very, very large amounts to post-secondary education. As a matter of fact the average is between 55 per cent and 60 per cent of the cost of post-secondary education, while the provincial governments are contributing only about 30 per cent to the cost of post-secondary education. It would seem to me that, if additional funds are required in that regard, the provincial governments should be expected to do their share and carry their share a lot more than they have in the past.

I have indicated that in spite of our large deficit we would continue this year and next year to increase our contribution to post-secondary education by 6 per cent and by 5 per cent. As the Hon. Member knows, there are several Provinces across the country which have frozen their contribution, their total contribution to the post-secondary education, or have increased it very, very little. I am pleased that the Hon. Member is as concerned as I am about the situation of youth unemployment and youth education and training. I would hope that her urging in that regard, and my own support of her recommendations, is going to be heard by provincial governments.

Oral Questions

EMERGENCY FUNDING REQUESTED

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the Minister, when he was Minister of National Health and Welfare is the one who changed the funding formula to block funding and put the Government into the position it is in today. Will the Minister, therefore, since this Government does have some responsibility for the replacement of the pre-1977 formula, in taking this degree of responsibility, pursue immediately with the Provinces an emergency agreement? I am not speaking now of the next step in funding, but of an emergency fund. Otherwise, as I said, the principle of accessibility, which I thought the Government believed in, is going to be almost totally eroded.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the concept of block funding in 1976 was introduced under the pressure and representations of the Provinces. They all insisted that the system be changed, and even today—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Well, the New Democratic Party seem to be making noise about this now, and they would be the ones objecting about confrontation with the Provinces. We are trying to co-operate with them and this is what we have done. This is what we are still trying to do. At the present time the fact is that the Provinces will not agree to go back to a 50-50 cost-sharing arrangement. They want to have the so-called flexibility which they are talking about, to allocate the funds as they wish.

As far as an emergency fund is concerned, Madam Speaker, I remind the hon. lady that in the last year we have allocated for the purpose of job training of young people, in particular, the largest amounts we have ever allocated in this country. This is money which has been allocated and is being spent now. We have not waited for the urging of the NDP in that regard. We have acted, and we will continue to act.

* * *

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FEDERAL SUPPORT FOR MANITOBA AMENDMENT

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Government of Manitoba is proposing to amend Section 23 of the Manitoba Act of 1870, which will partly reinstate the status of the other official language in Manitoba and so provide certain provincial government services in the French language. Given the controversy surrounding this proposal, and the extremism and hostility which have characterized much of the reaction exhibited by the Official Opposition in Manitoba in the past few weeks, does the federal Government intend to reinforce its support for the amendment as introduced by the provincial Attorney General and concurred in by the Secretary of State? And if so, in what manner?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very difficult and important question, one to which I have been giving some thought. I am prepared to share these thoughts with the House.

It seems to me that the record of this Parliament as regards the recognition and entrenchment of both official languages is very good. Every party in this House has been supportive of the Official Languages Act, and I believe that when the Government of Manitoba, along with the Government of Canada and Société Francophone des Manitobains, reached an agreement for an entrenchment into the Constitution of the two official languages, there was a great satisfaction on all sides of this House at the progress shown. I would want to find some way, hopefully a multi-party agreement, of influencing the Government and Legislature of Manitoba to continue with the very progressive steps which had been taken some months ago.

I am at a loss as of now as to what the best approach would be. I am thinking of perhaps proposing a resolution which could be sponsored jointly by the Leader of the Official Opposition and myself, or by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, in which this House would enjoin the Legislature of Manitoba to rethink the opposition which is mounting against this very progressive and, I must say, very, Canadian legislation. However, I have not yet raised it with the Leader of the Opposition. I probably will seek an appointment with him within a few days to see if there can be some progress in this regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

DATE AND SUBJECT OF MEETING WITH PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I would just like to say that whenever he would like to have an appointment with me, my door will be wide open, especially, of course—

An Hon. Member: Get to the point!

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare that I will get there in due time.

In view of the answer given by the Right Hon. Prime Minister, my question is as follows: Does he intend to meet within the next few days with the Leader of the New Democratic Party and myself, because in that case, I would be delighted to prepare immediately for a meeting on a subject he would like to see handled with generosity and respect. The question therefore is, when the Prime Minister would like to see us, so that we can receive him in a manner appropriate to the circumstances.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Madam Speaker, I think we should take advantage of this opportunity. I shall be delighted to meet the Leader of the Opposition, perhaps within the next 24 hours—tomorrow afternoon if he is in town—and to see whether a resolution would be the best way to express our common position to the Province of Manitoba or whether he would, for example, prefer to take a bilateral approach, since a number of his friends are in the Opposition and they are, in Manitoba, the ones who are opposing this measure for the entrenchment of bilingualism. He may favour another approach, instead of a joint resolution. However, if the Leader of the Opposition is willing to see me, I will try to see him tomorrow afternoon, perhaps, with the Leader of the New Democratic Party, or as soon as is convenient for both leaders.

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, we are of course always prepared to meet the Prime Minister, especially in the knowledge that any initiative by the Government will respect the fact that this is an area of provincial jurisdiction. We will want to handle this properly. I realize it may be difficult for the Prime Minister to give a definite answer, but the definite question is the following: Do we have an appointment for tomorrow afternoon? If so, I will be delighted to attend, at his convenience.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, of course, let us make it tomorrow afternoon, and meanwhile, the Leader of the Opposition could perhaps find out more about the nature of the issue in question. It is true that the question is being debated before the Manitoba legislature, but the Leader of the Opposition is also aware that this is a constitutional matter involving the Manitoba Act and the interpretation it was given by the courts nearly 100 years ago. It is not only a provincial matter but of concern to all Canadians and especially to those who entrenched the Bilingualism Act in the Constitution. I believe that this aspect of the matter demands that we, the federal Parliament, make our position known. But, once again, if the Leader of the Opposition can get better results by talking to his friends in the Opposition in Manitoba, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the resolution. Perhaps the best thing would be for him to convince Mr. Sterling Lyon and others who are opposed to this measure to make a broader view and see the importance to Canada and its future of entrenching the agreement that was concluded several months ago.

● (1450)

[English]

Madam Speaker: I just want to remind Hon. Members that the Speaker finds herself in a quite delicate situation because appointments should not be negotiated in the House. However, taking into account all of the factors, and I think everyone has those factors in mind, I will let it go for a while. But I just want to warn the Hon. Member for Osahwa that negotiations on appointments can be done outside the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I agree, Madam Speaker. As far as my fellow members are concerned, I would like to say that we have no reservations about taking part in this meeting to discuss a subject that is very important to Anglophones and Francophones across Canada.

* * *

[English]

SOCIAL SERVICES

CUTBACKS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower, who is probably aware that social service programs in British Columbia, for example the Renfrew Collingwood Seniors and Handicapped Centre in my riding, are being cut back by the cruel restraint program of the Bennett Social Credit Government. Is the Minister aware that the result of his new job creation funding announced this week, which abandons public programs for business programs, is another blow, in fact a double whammy if you like, for these social service centres in British Columbia? Will he agree with me that this reliance on the private sector for job creation really makes him and his policy no different from the Bennett Social Credit policy, or indeed their federal allies, the Mulroney Conservatives?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Could we have a bit of silence in the House?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, while the Hon. Member put his question to the Minister of Manpower, I think he meant it for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I was not able to hear all of his speech given the noise around me, but I think I caught the drift of it. I would say we are anxious as a Government to provide a context in which the private sector will create jobs, and we are also conscious of the need for direct action on the part of the Government to create jobs.

I did not understand the specific allegation or specific question. I will look at his remarks in Hansard and try to reply to them at length, but I did not hear much of what he said.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

APPOINTMENT OF FORMER MINISTER OF STATE (MINES)—NATURE OF SECURITY CHECK

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A necessary ingredient of the many factors to be considered prior to a Cabinet appointment has been, among other things, a police check and tax check of the potential appointee and a searching verbal examination of the candidate by the Prime Minister himself. These are essential to the integrity of the Government and the morality of the whole system, I suggest.

The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's now says that in his case no such police or tax check took place. I ask the Prime Minister, is this true? If no such checks took place, why not? If such checks were made, why did his tax problem and potential prosecution not turn up?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct that various checks are generally made. They are made either before or after the appointment. The Hon. Member shakes his head. If he will hear me out he will realize it is true that checks are made in the sense that if the Commissioner of the RCMP or Deputy Minister of National Revenue finds that there is something that should be reported to the Prime Minister about a Minister who has been in office a period of time, this report is made. So the checks are made as a matter of course, and they are ongoing.

In this particular case, Madam Speaker, it would have been preferable had I known the results of the checks before the swearing-in of the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's, but I did not. The Hon. Member yesterday explained the circumstances in which he did not inform me of certain facts, and his justifications were laid before the House. In my case I am sorry that I did not request or await results before proceeding with the appointment. It would probably have saved the Member some embarrassment and myself some embarrassment. But the substance of the matter is that the checks were made and they resulted in the resignation of the Hon. Member, for reasons known.

It is important to underscore the fact that in no sense was the public aggrieved or was the common weal imperiled. As soon as the facts became known, the Hon. Member offered his resignation and I accepted it.

Mr. Lawrence: That is an astounding statement for a Prime Minister to make. Just astounding. What a dereliction of duty.

DEPARTMENT'S DECISION TO INSTITUTE PROSECUTION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I then ask the Prime Minister how long had the recommendation to prosecute been in the Department of Justice before the decision to prosecute was made? When was the decision to prosecute actually made and when and from whom—obviously now far too late—but when and from whom did the Prime Minister actually become aware of the decision to prosecute?

● (1500)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as far as I am aware, but I would perhaps defer to the Minister of Justice to correct me if my facts are wrong, the decision to prosecute by the Department of Justice was made yesterday or today. I believe the Minister of Justice was informing me earlier that the information had been laid today.

Mr. Crosbie: That is not the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore, they probably made the decision yesterday.

In so far as the further question is concerned, I believe it had to do with when I was aware. I was aware yesterday that they were going to prosecute. I believe that is why the Hon. Member made his statement yesterday. I was made aware about an hour ago that, in fact, they laid the information today.

An Hon. Member: Five charges.

CONFIDENTIALITY OF TAX INFORMATION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's pointed out the law guarantees the confidentiality of income tax information. He alleged that the confidentiality of his information was breached by a senior government official. Has the Prime Minister investigated the Hon. Member's charges, and can he give the House the assurance that no one on his staff was the senior government official to whom the Hon. Member referred?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot give assurance about things that I know not. I can simply say that if the Hon. Member is talking about staff in the Prime Minister's office, they were not aware of any facts before I was. I was made aware by my officials just after they spoke to the Hon. Member from Burin-St. George's at the time the officials met with the Hon. Member. The Member phoned me, as is well known, and offered his resignation. I phoned the Governor General and recommended that he accept it.

I cannot know if the leak came from the Hon. Member. I do not know who would have had the tax information. Certainly my Department does not have the tax information.

The Member would know that it is always a very delicate matter to inquire into the background and records of any Member of Parliament. The principle of the independence of Members of Parliament force us to be very chary of inquiring into the background of any Member of Parliament.

An Hon. Member: Not on the Government benches.

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly I have no taste for doing that. I am sure no members of my staff have the means of doing that.

[Translation]

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Monday, September 12, 1983, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTIONS

Madam Speaker: Regarding the question posed yesterday by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) about the objections to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, the delay is of 30 calendar days and the delays in the two objections raised yesterday were properly observed. Therefore, they should be made into an appendix. We would like to follow the usual procedure and append them to Votes and Proceedings. Does the House give its unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HENDERSON—REMARKS OF MR. WILSON

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Madam Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order arising out of a statement made in my absence yesterday. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) made certain charges against me which I feel should not go unanswered. I am certain the Hon. Member would not wish to mislead the House by accusing me of obtaining the use of a JetStar to travel to and from my constituency in one day for the purpose of presenting a grant.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Now that I know what the Hon. Member's point of order is all about and his having given me notice that he wanted to raise a point of order, I have looked at Hansard and I must tell the Hon. Member that he does not have a point of order. This is a matter of debate and it can be debated ad infinitum; but it is not a point of order.

Order Paper Questions

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. SKELLY—ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House of Commons a petition from several hundred residents of the Sechelt Peninsula requesting that the House, during consideration of objections to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, consider their request to remain within the North Island-Powell River electoral district on the grounds that they were not able to make presentations to the Electoral Boundaries Commission when it sat in British Columbia. Hearings were held long distances from the Sechelt area and it would be the residents' request that they be allowed to remain with electors who have a community of interest.

MR. TAYLOR—CLIFFORD ROBERT OLSON

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to accede to the wishes of 2,000 more Canadians who herewith petition the Government and the Hon. Members of this House to move rapidly in order to pass Bill C-671, an Act respecting the execution of Clifford Robert Olson. This individual deliberately planned and killed 11 innocent youths and now brags about it and tries to profit from his murderous acts. These petitioners believe that such an individual has no right to continue to live; and in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,803, 4,846, 4,847, 4,851, 4,852, 4,860, 4,896, 4,939, 4,968, 4,987, 4,995 and 4,999.

[Text]

CMHC—FUNDING OF RENTAL UNITS

Question No. 4,803—Mr. Howie:

In the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 (c) 1982-83, for how many rental units was Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation funding provided in (i) Fredericton (ii) Toronto (iii) Vancouver (iv) New Brunswick (v) Quebec (vi) Ontario?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

Order Paper Questions

Rental units that have received funding from CMHC

	1980	1981	1982
Social Housing—Subsidy Assistance
Fredericton	42	119	33
Toronto	2,878	3,227	2,588
Vancouver	3,498	2,896	2,024
New Brunswick	650	653	495
Quebec	8,295	6,698	7,455
Ontario	8,107	8,308	8,119
Market Housing—Direct Rental Loans
Fredericton	—	—	19
Toronto	—	—	1,964
Vancouver	—	—	1,999
New Brunswick	—	—	53
Quebec	30	24	1,264
Ontario	76	88	6,439
Mortgage Loan Insurance—Rental Properties
Fredericton	147	168	131
Toronto	7,565	8,195	5,518
Vancouver	2,591	2,905	1,425
New Brunswick	715	503	474
Quebec	22,067	8,613	7,442
Ontario	14,576	16,648	13,885
Rehabilitation of rental properties under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program (RRAP)
Fredericton	73	46	232
Toronto	21	32	851
Vancouver	1,278	723	762
New Brunswick	3,305	3,291	3,254
Quebec	16,887	13,849	14,070
Ontario	1,887	2,303	4,623

Note: This excludes the many thousands of units funded in previous years for which subsidy support and federal loan guaranties are still provided by CMHC.

RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Question No. 4,846—Mr. Howie:

From April 1, 1980, how many existing housing units for native Indians in New Brunswick have been improved or repaired by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation funding?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

CMHC funded the repair and improvement of 232 housing units on reserves under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program from April 1, 1980 to April 30, 1983. CMHC does not maintain a record of native non-native clients served by the program off reserves.

CMHC—NEW HOUSING UNITS

Question No. 4,847—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1980, how many new units of housing have been constructed for native Indians in New Brunswick?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

CMHC has not funded the construction of any housing units to Indians on reserve. CMHC does not maintain a record of native/non-native clients under the Rural and Native Housing Program (Section 40 of the National Housing Act) that operates off reserve. However the delivery agent for the program in New Brunswick advises that 66 newly constructed houses have been provided to native clients.

CMHC—SENIOR CITIZEN HOUSING

Question No. 4,851—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1980, how many loans were made for the construction of senior citizen housing projects in (a) Fredericton (b) York County (c) Sunbury County, New Brunswick?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

National Housing Act (NHA) Loans approved for senior citizens' projects, January 1, 1980 to December 31, 1982:

	Loans	Units	Beds
(a) Fredericton	2	30	70
(b) York County*	2	30	70
(c) Sunbury County	—	—	—

* Includes Fredericton city

CMHC—CONSTRUCTION OF NURSING HOMES

Question No. 4,852—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1980, what amount was loaned by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in New Brunswick for the construction of homes to care for senior citizens?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

CMHC has not made any direct loans to nursing homes in New Brunswick since January 1, 1980. However, subsidy assistance under Section 56.1 of the National Housing Act at an estimated total of $1.9 million per year has been approved for 490 hostel beds for nursing homes since January 1, 1980 in that Province.

CANADARM

Question No. 4,860—Mr. Fretz:

1. Was the Canadarm on display at a recent gathering of the Liberal Party of Canada in Niagara Falls, Ontario?

2. Was the display mounted at public expense and, if so, what were the costs involved in the (a) shipping of the Canadarm to Niagara Falls (b) setup and dismantling of the display?

3. Was the public invited to view the Canadarm?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned the answer is as follows:

1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

FBDB LOANS

Question No. 4,896—Mr. Riis:

What was the number of loans provided by the Federal Business Development Bank to businesses located on leased Indian band land in British Columbia in each year from 1978 to 1982 and, by year, how much did the loans amount to?

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism): The reply for the Federal Business Development Bank is as follows:

	Number	Total amount
1978	9	$ 1,657,650
1979	25	1,513,800
1980	10	485,093
1981	3	133,254
1982	—	—

HALIFAX VESSEL TRAFFIC MANAGEMENT CENTRE

Question No. 4,939—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of Transport propose to construct or acquire facilities to house the expanded operations of the Halifax Vessel Traffic Management Centre and, if so, what are such facilities?

2. Were alternative proposals for sites and/or facilities for the expanded operation of the Centre considered and, if so (a) what were such proposals (b) what was the cost of each alternative proposal?

3. What would be the cost of renovating or improving the building now housing the Centre to an acceptable level and standard, in order to accommodate the expanded operation?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Subject to Treasury Board approval, Transport Canada proposes to construct a new operations building to house the Halifax Vessel Traffic Services Centre on available Crown property at Shannon Hill overlooking Bedford Basin and the Narrows.

2. Two options were considered from a cost point of view:

(a)		(b)
Chebucto Head
Construction:
New operations building		$ 736,000
Waste, water, demolition, etc.		145,000
		$ 881,000
Electronics		$ 216,000
	Total	$1,097,000
Shannon Hill
Construction:
New operations building		$ 736,000
Remote site conversion		146,000
		$ 882,000
Electronics		$ 196,000
	Total	$1,078,000

3. The cost of improving the Chebucto Head Facility for the Halifax Traffic Centre has been estimated at approximately $140,000 more than the $1,097,000 required to construct a new operations building.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION

Question No. 4,968—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the composition of the Board of Directors of the Canadian Commercial Corporation and what is the address and occupation of each individual?

2. What is the compensation and what are all the benefits paid to the chairperson, directors, president and vice-presidents of the Corporation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The composition of the Board of the Canadian Commercial Corporation, and the address and occupation of each individual member of the Board are as follows:

Mrs. Sonja I. Bata,

Director, Bata Limited, Don Mills, Ontario

Mr. Claude T. Charland

Assistant Deputy Minister, Trade Development, Department of External Affairs, Ottawa

Mr. John H. Dickey, Q.C.

Sr. Partner, McInnes, Cooper and Robertson, Barristers & Solicitors, Halifax

Mr. Roland Giroux

Hon. Chairman of the Board, Consolidated Bathurst Limited, Montreal

Mr. Walter A. Hadden

President, Champion Spark Plug Company of Canada, Limited, Windsor

Mr. Raymond V. Hession

Deputy Minister of Supply, Supply and Services Canada, Ottawa

Mr. J. E. Gorse Howarth

President and Chief Executive Officer, Canadian Commercial Corporation, Ottawa

Mr. Angus A. MacNaughton

Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Genstar Corporation, Vancouver

Mr. Gerald E. Shannon

Assistant Deputy Minister, International Trade & Finance Branch, Department of Finance, Ottawa

2. The compensation and benefits paid to the chairperson, directors, president and vice-presidents of the Corporation are as follows:

Order Paper Questions

Directors

Each director from the private sector and not selected from among persons employed in the Public Service of Canada, Crown Corporations and agencies, is presently paid a fee of $350/day for attendance at each meeting of the Board, or one of its committees, or for each day, or part thereof, of any other service to the Corporation. Public servants receive no extra compensation for their services to the Corporation. In addition, all directors are reimbursed for reasonable travelling expenses incurred in connection with the work of the Board.

President (Chairperson)

The President's classification is outside the G-i-C/DM framework and, as such, is confidential under regulations issued pursuant to the Statutory Instruments Act. The President is also chairperson of the Board.

Vice-Presidents

The two Vice-Presidents are senior civil servants. Their employment categories are EX2, in one case, and FS3 in the other. (The EX2 salary range is—as of July 1, 1983—$56,090 to $65,990 and for the FS3 category—as of April 1, 1983—$47,434 to $63,907.)

RELEASE OF SERVICEMEN DUE TO DIABETES

Question No. 4,987—Mrs. Cossitt:

In the past five years, were any individuals released from service in the Canadian Armed Forces because they were diabetic and, if so (a) how many (b) in each case, what was his/her classification (c) what is the justification for considering diabetes as a reason for discharge from the Armed Forces during peace time?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): To provide a reply for the past five years as asked in the question would entail a manual search of thousands of files for which the Department does not have the necessary resources. A manual search has been conducted for calendar year 1982 and the data for 1982 is as follows:

(a) Eleven.

(b) Plumber gas fitter—one

Radar plotter (Sea)—one

Medical assistants—two

Infantrymen—three

Artillery—one

Safety systems technician—one

Vehicle technician—one

Weapons technician—one

(c) Since diabetes mellitus is a chronic and progressively debilitating disease and since it is not possible to guarantee the necessary condition in the Canadian Forces where a diabetic would have regular meals, rest, sleep and protection from injury with the concurrent risk of infection which would have potentially serious implications for a diabetic, employment for such an individual would be very limited. Neither heavy physical work for sustained periods nor front line defensive duties even for short periods could be considered. In addition, the medical resources required by the insulin dependent diabetic such as sterilization of insulin injection equipment, refrigeration for storage of insulin and sophisticated laboratory facilities could not be guaranteed in potentially hostile environments, nor in fact, in the majority of postings/positions in the military environment.

The final medical category awarded to diabetics is determined by the clinical condition and treatment requirements for each individual. The career disposition is determined in each case by the limitations imposed by his/her medical condition.

HMCS "ORIOLE"

Question No. 4,995—Mr. Clarke:

Will the training ketch "Oriole" be taken out or has it been taken out of service in Esquimalt, British Columbia and sailed through the Panama Canal to the east coast of Canada and, if so (a) on what date will it or did it leave Esquimalt (b) on what date did it or will it arrive at east coast ports (c) what is the purpose of the visit to east coast ports (d) how long will it be absent from Base Esquimalt (e) what is the estimated cost of the trip and the stay in eastern Canada, including fuel, victuals and wages for the crew?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): The training ketch HMCS Oriole has not, nor is planned to be taken out of service. However, consideration is being given to include in the 1984 schedule of operations a cruise by the Oriole to the Atlantic to participate as a Canadian entry in a gathering of the International Fleet of tall ships planned for Halifax and Quebec City during June, 1984.

(a), (b) and (d) Since the details of this possible participation are still in the consideration stage further information cannot be confirmed.

(c) Purpose of the cruise, if approved, is given above.

(e) If this cruise is approved the only additional cost that would be incurred and would be different to training operations in the Pacific, would be for the use of the Panama canal and port services in the non-Canadian ports which the ships might visit during transit.

DND—RADIO BIOLOGY RESEARCH PROGRAM

Question No. 4,999—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Department of National Defence contract for a continuation of a radio biology research program with the University of Ottawa at a cost of $189,453 and, if so (a) what was the amount of the original contract and what was its purpose (b) was the first contract simply underestimated or was it expected at that time that there would be a gross overrun?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Yes. (a) and (b) This is an original contract. Previously the research program on radio-biology was conducted in-house utilising National Research Council (NRC) facilities. However, since NRC required the space occupied by the DND scientists the decision was made to contract this work to the University of Ottawa. This is a continuing program and the contract will be renegotiated yearly.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if questions No. 4,557 and No. 4,663 could be made orders for return, those returns would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that questions No. 4,557 and No. 4,663 be deemed to have been made orders for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

CHAIRMAN OF CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

Question No. 4,557—Mr. MacKay:

1. Since his appointment to the office of Chairman of the Canadian Dairy Commission, did Mr. G. Choquette undertake travel abroad and, if so, in each case (a) what was the date of departure from and return to Canada (b) what was the routing and final destination and what were the stopovers (c) what was the (i) mode of transportation (ii) name of the carrier, including whether it was a charter or government-owned aircraft (iii) class of ticket used (d) what was the cost of transportation and the total cost (e) what was the purpose (f) what were the names of persons accompanying Mr. Choquette?

2. Since the appointment of Mr. Choquette, did the staff of the Canadian Dairy Commission undertake travel abroad and, if so, in each case, what was the (a) name and job title of the official (b) date of departure from and return to Canada (c) routing and final destination and what were the stopovers (d) mode of transportation (e) name of the carrier, including whether it was a charter or a government-owned aircraft (f) class of ticket used (g) cost of transportation and the total cost (h) purpose of the trip?

3. In the past three fiscal years and in the fiscal year 1982-83, by year, what was the travel budget of the Canadian Dairy Commission and what was the actual expenditure for travel?

Return tabled.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 4,663—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. While on government business, did the Minister of Agriculture accumulate a travel bill of $156,903 for the fiscal year 1981-82 and, if so, was this an increase of approximately $47,000 from the Minister's travel bill for the fiscal year 1980-81?

2. Does this figure include the travel costs of any ministerial assistants or officials from the Department of Agriculture who accompanied the Minister in his travels and, if not, what were their travel bills?

3. (a) To what functions and/or for what reasons did the Minister travel in 1982 (b) what modes of transportation did he use (c) in what class of accommodation did he travel?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to have the opportunity to speak to the amendment to this Bill. This amendment shows faith in free enterprise, and through the appointment to the board of largely non-civil servants it is paying tribute to the free enterprisers of this country.

The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), a member of the NDP, spent practically his full ten minutes just before lunch projecting that the PC Government after the next election would use this section for patronage purposes. The New Democratic Party has been in bed so long with its Liberal counterpart that it has become inhibited by patronage disease. My only comment to members of the New Democratic Party and members of the Liberal Party is expressed in the words of the poet who wrote: "All is yellow to the jaundiced eye".

I want to deal with the real reason own Party wants to change this section of the Bill. The Bill will provide the Government with an open cheque to appoint whoever the Government would like to appoint. It could appoint only public servants. I realize there are some excellent public servants, but there are also some real duds. If we are to have this corporation at all, I think the people on its board should have some knowledge of business and know something about the export and import business, not someone who has lived in the shelter of the Public Service all his life. Public servants may have a lot of book knowledge, but most of them have never had to meet payrolls or find ways and means of keeping businesses going. Their pay cheques have come from the Government at the end of each month over their years of service. To appoint such individuals to a board of directors to handle export business would be suicidal as far as improving export business in Canada is concerned.

● (1510)

First let me indicate that we need people on the board of directors who have some knowledge of business, have had to meet payrolls and know that a business needs something coming in in order to meet its bills. The board of directors requires someone who has knowledge of business, if the business is to be kept intact. Most public servants—there may be a few—have not had that experience. Second, we need people on the board with ordinary, everyday horse sense who can adjust their thinking to the particular items before them.

I would like to relate a story concerning red meat. It comes under the red meat section of the federal Meat Inspection Act. Public servants in the City of Calgary had an opportunity to use good, ordinary horse sense but they did not do so. As I have already indicated to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), I think this story is a disgrace to the Department. I hope the Minister in charge of this particular Bill will not condone this type of behaviour on the part of the board of directors or public servants who will be dealing with the export of Canadian goods.

A merchant in my riding operates an excellent food store in which is located a meat counter. He had the opportunity to provide an order worth $100,000 to another Canadian who had a boat built in Japan. The food was not going to Japan; it was to supply that Canadian boat. It was a different thing entirely. Even if it were going to Japan, good, ordinary horse sense should have been used. When the merchant visited the export people in Calgary he was told that he could not fill that order. He asked why and was told that in the first place he did not have a wholesale permit. He said that he was a wholesaler and that he had a wholesale licence. They told him that even in that case he could not do it because he sold fresh meat over the counter in his store.

This law was put into the books in 1903. It is antiquated, it is ridiculous, it is crazy. Simply because a man sells fresh meat over a counter should not deny him the privilege of dealing in the export business. He was not taking meat from the counter to fill that order. His meat is inspected like that of anyone else.

In the second place he was told that he required an export licence. He indicated that that was fine if that was provided in the regulations and asked how he could obtain one. The public servant told him that he could not get one. When he asked why, he was told that it was because he sold fresh meat over the counter. Anyone in business would not have stopped there, but they closed the books; they told him that he could not make the deal.

Then what happened? Canadians and Albertans lost the benefit of a $100,000 deal because the shipbuilder felt that he could not monkey around with it all day, all month or all year. He went to Japan where he filled his boat with supplies. People in the export business require good, ordinary, everyday sense. That is not evident in the Department today. We lost that business. The farmers lost that business. The merchants lost that business. Canada lost the work involved.

The Government talks about providing money for employment but this is an example of employment being denied as a result of a silly, crazy rule passed in 1903. The Minister of Agriculture will not change it because his bureaucrats have said no. Will we have people like them on this board? The board should be able to indicate that a rule such as this is not sensible and change it. It should be able to remove such an antiquated law from the books so that merchants can obtain similar orders and sell their meat. Then other men who sell meat over the counter could become involved in the export business. They would not provide meat from their counters; that is for customers who go to their stores. The meat which the merchant in my riding sold over the counter was for people from the Cochrane area. He could have taken meat from the packing plant and sent it to wherever he wanted.

Often people who are appointed by government are afraid to speak. They think they are under the control of the minister who appointed them. That is not good enough in our country today. We want people on this board with some business knowledge and ordinary horse sense who are prepared to meet the challenge of providing Canadian goods to the markets of the world to increase the buoyancy of the economy.

This board could also tackle inspection problems. For years there have been provincial and federal inspectors. If their methods or standards were different, I could understand it, but I have been told by the federal department and its inspectors and by the provincial department and its inspectors that each use the same standards. Is it so difficult for two governments to get together so that they will not duplicate the work? As long as merchants are following the standards and providing meat to other countries as set out in the Act, there is no problem, but provincial and federal inspectors with the same training continue to do the same work. It does not make sense. In some cases federal inspectors travel to a packing plant to inspect meat under the federal Act. At the same time provincial inspectors inspect the same meat under the provincial Act. How ridiculous can we get!

We should ensure that taxpayers' dollars are used sensibly, not in this ridiculous way. We want a board that will tackle the problems. Under international trade agreements Canada certifies meat products for export to foreign countries and meets the requirements of the importing country. This is sensible. If we are to export meat or other goods to Japan, Korea, Europe, Spain or England, we have to meet their requirements. A board of directors composed of businessmen with ordinary horse sense will ensure that these requirements are lived up to. I support the amendment.

● (1520)

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in debate on this Bill at the present stage because it provides an opportunity to bring a perspective to bear that I think is needed as a matter of simple justice. Several of my colleagues have already alluded to the need for ensuring that the Export Development Corporation is responsive to the needs of the private sector, and we have argued for an amendment to the Bill which will ensure that the board of EDC is not dominated by public servants.

I want to comment on this matter from the point of view which was expressed by the private sector three years ago when a special committee of this House sat to consider the advisability of establishing a national trading corporation. As a member of that task force, I listened for a period of about a year to the views of various Government agencies and a great many private corporations and individuals on all sorts of questions affecting our international trade.

Among others, we heard at considerable length from the Export Development Corporation. In fact, EDC gave an excellent briefing to the committee on its role and functions, as well as on its organization and history. I would like to indicate for the record that the officers of EDC who spoke before the committee showed an excellent and proper understanding of their assigned role and seemed well aware of both the nature and the reasons for the legislative restrictions placed upon EDC by Parliament.

The Export Development Corporation as presently set up is a proprietary Crown corporation. That is, it can be sued in its own name, although it is an agent of Her Majesty, and it has authority for autonomy over its own operating budget. These features distinguish it from some other kinds of Crown corporations. One of its powers is to decide at the board level whether to accept or reject an export financing proposal put before it, even if that proposal is put to it by the government of the day.

Let me quote from the testimony of the senior vice-president for corporate affairs for EDC when he spoke before the special committee of this House just over three years ago. As he explained the feature of EDC's relations with government, he said:

> If a proposal were to come to us and it were to be a size or an amount or there was some other aspect of the contract that would present a liability beyond that which the board of directors judge prudent to undertake in light of the corporate resources, but in the opinion of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce it was in the national interest to enter into this kind of contract, there is a facility for the government, through the Export Development Act, to take on these kinds of risks and loans.
>
> There have been a number of these. They have ranged from contingent liabilities from sales of wheat on protracted terms to atomic reactors where there is a questionable capacity of the borrower to discharge its debt.

It is clear to me that a conflict of wills between the government, with its aims and wishes, and the board of the Export Development Corporation, with its mandate and aims, is not only possible but was contemplated in the framing of the Act as it presently reads. Furthermore, we have the assertion of a senior officer of this corporation that such conflicts have in fact actually resulted in the government having to assume a risk which the EDC board refused to assume. Let me quote again from the same officer of the EDC about the role and function of EDC. In outlining the intent of EDC in providing export insurance, he said the role of EDC was, and I quote:

> —to foster international competitiveness to exporters of Canadian goods that are competitive in terms of price, quality, delivery and service. What we are talking about here is putting Canadian exporters in a position of competitive equality.
>
> They are supposed to be able to compete in terms of the excellence of their product and selling activities and the like, and we follow on by providing a financial facility. The objective of this is to improve Canada's balance of payments. There has to be a net benefit accruing to the Canadian economy as a consequence of this.

Let me emphasize that last statement: There has to be a net benefit accruing to the Canadian economy as a consequence of what EDC does. Already it is clear that EDC has, as it should have, a responsibility to ensure that its activities are of public benefit. That is what is meant by benefiting the Canadian economy. It means that EDC is not in the business of providing benefits to private companies for their own sake. Rather, it has a clearly assigned public responsibility to provide benefits to private companies, if they are competitive producers, only if such benefits are also public benefits. To this extent, the corporation does exactly what we would want it to do. It administers money on the Crown's behalf to secure a public benefit.

At the time EDC appeared before the special committee of this House on a national trading corporation, its board of directors included several public officials, including the Governor of the Bank of Canada. This fact does not disturb me, nor do I think it disturbs my colleagues. When public money is being administered, responsible public officials should scrutinize its expenditure, just as we do here in Parliament.

The vice-president who explained EDC's role and structure also told the committee that these individuals, meaning the public sector directors on the board of EDC, were balanced by private sector directors. He said:

> These individuals are representative of a general constituency in which we engage, but this is augmented, indeed it is a major contribution, by the private sector directors, who present a regional aspect, if you will, throughout the country. You will find representatives from Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, the East Coast, in a variety of industries, and they lend their business experience. When the board of directors acts, it acts as a board of directors, and comports itself as a board would in the private sector. They separate their departmental activities, if you will, from those of the corporation. They act as corporate directors in all respects.

In light of what I have recalled for the benefit of Members who may not have had the time to follow deliberations of the special committee of this House which examined the feasibility of a national trading corporation, it should be clear why my colleagues and I are urging an amendment to the present Bill which would ensure that the Board of EDC is primarily composed of appointees from outside the public sector. Let me list the reasons very briefly.

First, as several of my colleagues have said, the private sector is a more likely sector in which to find the kind of expertise in assessing business needs and economic benefits than the public sector. However, I would like to add that this is by no means to underestimate or undervalue the wealth of talent available in the public sector. It is still true that the private sector trains its members to assess economic benefits straightforwardly and without the tendency to compromise with competing public policy aims.

Second, as the EDC officials explained to a committee of this House in the words I quoted earlier, the directors should be able to resist Government pressure to act like a private board of directors in the interests of the corporation and its shareholders. What better way to ensure that they are able to do so than to make certain they are not civil servants, that their careers do not depend upon pleasing the Government, and that when a conflict arises between the proper goals of the corporation and the wishes of the Government, the directors themselves are not in a conflict of interest situation.

Third, after a year of listening to evidence all across Canada from those who actually engage in the business of exporting from Canada, it was clear that the majority did not want a national trading corporation. Time and time again they pleaded for an Export Development Corporation that could meet more demand and more kinds of demand; but they did not want a government trading corporation.

To ensure that EDC does not become the substitute for a national trading corporation which the Government appears to have given up trying to create directly we in this House should ensure that now, while we have the opportunity before us to consider the composition of the board, we accept the wisdom of the Canadian exporting community and the wise explanation of its role and nature given by EDC three years ago and adopt the amendment before us.

● (1530)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I participated in the committee hearings with the Chairman presiding where the President of the corporation as well as other officers were present. I look back upon the minutes of the Finance Committee meeting No. 143, dated May 26, 1983, and I recall earlier discussions involving my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), who at the time had made certain observations about the composition of the board of directors and also about the necessity of having the chief executive officer come from the private sector. At the meeting that I attended in which this matter was discussed at length, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South, was not present because I believe he was out of the country on other public business.

I thought that I had an agreement with the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) and with the chairman and presiding officer of the corporation that the amendments would be brought in and that the Minister would have no objection to bringing in amendments which were in keeping with the sentiments which had been expressed by my colleague and myself. Those sentiments were that the majority of the directors on the board of the Export Development Corporation should be from the private sector first. That was agreeable, but what has happened is not in keeping with that.

An amendment has been put in which allows all of the directors to come from the public sector. That is a horse of a different colour. It is simply an old bureaucratic drafting trick. There is no way that we find it acceptable when all that we should have in this Act are words to the effect that if we objected to an entirely public slate, it would be stated that the Opposition agreed to the amendment to the legislation in Bill C-110. No way.

I would like the Minister to talk about this because he knows very well that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and myself have made a point of issue of this. Yet at the last meeting of the Finance Committee, the Minister and the officers of the corporation had in principle accepted the points we had put forward. However, in the drafting of the amendments that have come forward, and presumably have been adopted late in June at a committee meeting where I was not present as I was out of the country—

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: He gets around!

[English]

Mr. Lambert: Other Members were out of the country too. The Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) would draw attention to his presence in the House this afternoon by that kind of an extraneous comment.

However, Mr. Speaker, I will come back to this matter. The carrying out of what was understood to be the principle of the amendments in the committee is halfhearted and, I think deceptive. We are not interested in seeing a majority of the board being from the public sector. That should never happen, but that is the kind of amendment that the Minister has brought forward. That is the kind of amendment that was brought forward and passed by the committee on June 28, per incuriam, I am sure, by most of them.

The same thing applies to my objection to having the chairman as the chief executive officer of the corporation. This is a great Canadian practice. I would simply like to point out that at two of the major Canadian public Crown Corporations, Canadian National Railways and Air Canada, the chairman and the president are not the same person and it is the president who is the chief executive officer. Do we now have ducks on one side and drakes on the other?

I put before the committee that the reason that the chairman should not be the chief executive officer of such a corporation is that he must bring a certain neutrality or objectivity to the deliberations of the board, particularly where there are public interests involved. If one person is the chairman, the president and the chief executive officer and presides at a board meeting, it is that individual, male or female, who will set the pace and influence the meeting and carry the day. Other directors, whether they represent public interests or private interests or the interests of the shareholders, let alone the corporation directors, are at a very grave disadvantage.

I for one, as far as my philosophy concerning business administration is concerned, favour a more objective chairman than the chief executive officer. One could say that when the president or the chief executive officer is given the right to preside at meetings where the chief executive officer's performance should be judged and in fact may be at issue, it is almost like giving the devil permission to judge his own deeds.

To that extent, I find the proposals contained in the Bill to be contrary to what seemed to me to be the agreement, and I said so in committee hearings at page 143:29 in my answer to a remark made by the chairman when asked about whether the officers could be excused. The chairman said:

No, I would think at this point I do not see any further need. Mr. Lambert?

● (1540)

My answer was as follows:

No, as far as I am concerned . . . and I think I can speak for my colleague, Mr. Blenkarn . . . you have taken care of my problems and Mr. Thomson's and Mr. Blenkarn's. As far as we are concerned, this should be it.

All I can say is that we should not trust the Government any further than it can be thrown because it is precisely what was brought in on June 28 which negates all of that. I will stand here and argue until we get some changes.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to Bill C-110 which has been proposed by our hon. colleague on behalf of the Conservative Party begs only one question, which is basically: "Do we want the Export Development Agency to be run by public servants in an area that is so crucial to Canada's development and employment all the way through the line, or do we want to have the opportunity to draw on the expertise of the private sector as it exists right across the country?" We have some of the top managers and people who are presently sitting on the boards of some of the largest corporations in the country doing extremely well, and they know how the private sector works.

If I may, I would like to refer to the Export Development Corporation's presentation to the Special Committee on the National Trading Corporation which was set up a couple of years ago. It should be enlightening to all Members of the House to learn that the Export Development Corporation's statement of corporate purpose is as follows: to foster international competitiveness of exporters of Canadian goods and services that are competitive in terms of price, quality, delivery and service; to assist in improving Canada's balance of payments; to optimize the Canadian content of Canadian exports; and to contribute to the formulation of and to complement Government trade policy.

These are the most important: to encourage maximum private sector involvement consistent with the requirements of international competition in the provision of financial services related to exports; to conduct the affairs of the Corporation in accordance with commercial principles and to maintain the Corporation in a sound financial condition.

This was presented to the Special Committee by the Export Development Corporation. This is what it is recommending. How better to follow the recommendations in the proposals submitted than to seek as many competent private sector individuals to sit on the board of directors or, indeed, to appoint one as chairman of the Corporation?

The nature of the Public Service is one which I admire as it involves people who dedicate their lives and their careers to service in Canada. I sincerely applaud the dedication of many public servants, particularly the career public servant. The career public servant works for the masters in Government, the masters being in this House of Commons and being the Government of the day, carrying out the policies and directives of the Government of the day, whether it be left-leaning, socialist, God forbid, or whether it be private sector oriented.

The Export Development Agency itself has clearly stated that it wants to encourage maximum private sector involvement. It only begs the question, then, on the amendment: Why not seek, across Canada, maximum private sector involvement and get some of these titans of industry involved in the Export Development Agency?

We all know that many corporations like Avco and Brascan and many others have been built up across Canada from virtually nothing. They involve the kind of people who have spread their wings with their investments completely worldwide. They know what is required for a small businessman who is starting out. They knew the problems involved when they first decided that they would export to another country in the western world. They went through the mill. Why not draw from this experience? Why say that this burden is to be put on the public servants when their master is the Government of the day and when they are so susceptible to pressure and to direction from Government? Why not allow the private sector people, those who understand as they have been through the mill, to sit on the board of directors of the Export Development Agency? It is a golden opportunity in this sector, particularly when we consider the kinds of loans and exports involved. It is crucial to the balance of payments of Canada. If we do not have a proper and good balance of payments with exporting, we all know what happens to our economy.

I am not suggesting for one moment that a certain number of career civil servants from certain departments, possibly from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, from the Department of Finance or maybe from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, should be excluded. I am only suggesting that enough, perhaps three or four, be appointed so that there is a window on the Export Development Agency so that the Government then knows what is going on.

We see this example every day. One need only look at companies like Syncrude or Suncor as they relate to the development of the tarsands. One sees this every day because the federal Government, through Petro-Canada, owns a percentage of the Syncrude development. A Member representing the Government is sitting on the board of directors so that there is a window an input on the operation of the Government's corporation itself. We can see many other examples. We see it with the Suncor plant located north of Fort McMurray because the Government of Ontario, which owns a percentage of the Suncor operation, has a senior member of its civil service, a career civil servant, sitting on the board of directors. It does not demand more than a window on what is happening in the day to day operation of the Suncor plant. That is as it should be for the Export Development Agency. I can think of many men who would be very capable and who would give of their time to the Export Development Agency knowing what it means to Canada.

The board of directors sets the policy and the chairman of the board, of course, directs the board. Once these people are drawn from the private sector, it then follows that the chairman of the board cannot be the executive director of the company at the same time. The chairman of the board may be involved in a number of corporations across the country. Board members may be involved in directorships of a number of companies or a number of banks, with a clear understanding of what is required when a small businessman approaches and says, "I have widgets that I want to export to Iran, or Syria or Brazil, and I need some help in financing because I have 180 days to wait before I receive my money". They know that that small businessman, intending to get into the export market, must go to the bank with a guarantee that he will be paid. He must then borrow on term financing. All of this is required. People who sit on boards of large corporations across the country understand this. I sincerely doubt that the senior career civil servants in certain sectors who would be appointed to the board would have the same understanding as a businessman and as an entrepreneur who is to go out and seek markets in the world for his goods produced in Canada, goods which provide jobs, homes and security for families.

I think that all Hon. Members should seriously consider the amendment that we are proposing and adopt it.

• (1550)

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this legislation has been before the House for 17 months. I read the speeches of May of 1982 to refresh my mind as to just what was said at second reading. I found that in that particular debate there were four or five very constructive speeches made by the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), as I believe was mentioned here today, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), and the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). I happened to be the fifth speaker. I tried to be constructive in my speech as well. I say these things to emphasize that what we are dealing with concerns one of the great opportunities of our nation to bring the attention of this country to the fact that the world has become one and that the trading relationships between the various countries of the world require new institutions, different from those we have had in the past, to try to improve this relationship of trade.

In the motions that are now before us at the report stage, I see evidence that some of the proposals made 16 or 17 months ago have been brought forward again as motions. Most of those motions deal with the efficiency of the Export Development Corporation, which is now to be made into a big institution to facilitate trade through credit. However, as has been heard from one of the previous Hon. Members, we in this part of the House in particular are very concerned about what is obviously an extension of a practice which has developed over the last 30 years of using these so-called Government agencies simply as a rest home for civil servants to reach a higher salary level with better working conditions than those found here in Ottawa. These remarks were made by my seatmate a little while ago because they are of serious concern to him. I could back him up to a certain degree by saying that, in my judgment, the most successful example in Canada of where Government and private enterprise have worked out best in co-operation involves a firm started 30 years ago in Alberta to build a pipeline system around the Province. Nearly 90 per cent of the shares went to the ordinary citizens of Alberta, not to foreigners from Saskatchewan. The citizens of Alberta had the first chance, over-subscribing many times. The management went to private enterprise sectors which had a minimal number of shares, and the Government of Alberta took two shares in the corporation. Therefore, it had a right to two directors on the board. Therefore, great control was given to private enterprise, and the two directors from the Government side were there to provide a window in order to protect 90 per cent of the shareholders.

One should look back 30 years and examine the corporation which has grown into a multi-natured giant today. If one considers the $5 shares that the public bought back in 1950 and the dividends received over 30 years by the shareholder who invested $5 thirty years ago, the shares having been split and split, one will realize that he has received a dividend of very close to a 100 per cent a year on his $5. In other words, he has received an average of $5 every year for the $5 he invested. That is why one cannot persuade Albertans to sell off any of those shares. The secret was that the Government organized it and gave confidence to the people that there was someone from the Government protecting their investment. However, it involved the wherewithal, the know-how, of the management teams comprised of producers and distributors of oil and gas.

This company, as we all know now, is very large and all across Canada. I can use an example, evidence, that in no way must one have a majority of Government civil servants controlling a company when the main purpose of it is to serve the people investing in it. The public interest is protected by serving the public interest well and efficiently, rather than with the number of civil servants which the Government has been able to hire. Quite seriously I suggest that some consideration be given to the experience of my seatmate, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

I want to conclude with some of the remarks that I made 16 months ago. At that time I raised the issue that in the Bill there was a clause allowing the Corporation to borrow money by any means. I congratulated the Minister for his being so lucky as to have such a clause included. The one thing that has destroyed individuals, small businessmen, large companies and Government in the last 30 years has been the cost of interest. If one can use techniques to get interest at a reasonable rate into any individual's or company's hands, big or small, then everyone benefits.

The monetary theorists, who have so much say around Ottawa, and every one of the western industrial nations, use interest rates as a device to hold down inflation. However, the quantitative figures show that inflation is the cost of interest. Therefore, inflation is the interest. Last year in Canada, in 1982, 62 per cent of the total costs of 200 of the largest corporations was the payment of interest. For 3,000 years civilizations have periodically risen in revolt against high interest rates. Canada is now in that stage and has been for a long time. Therefore, if one can include in an Act a phrase allowing one to borrow money by any menas, then the corporations, which are really speaking, although it is not formal, under this amendment, can find ways of using such a clause to obtain money at lower interest rates.

The technique of the small business development bond was mentioned on this side of the House, placed in the budget by the Clark administration. That can be used. The lawyers in Justice say that "by any means" means to include the small business development bond. In the last 17 months, with all the amendments that have been put through the House giving to the Farm Credit Corporation, to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, to the Export Development Corporation, the right to borrow by any means, there has not been an occasion when they have ever used that principle.

• (1600)

What we say in Parliament, and what we can prove by quantitative evidence is workable, is that the people who guide the Government are inhibited by the Department of Finance which says that that technique cannot be used.

There are other techniques for borrowing money at lower rates that have been put forward by Parliament on many occasions. These have obtained the support of Ministers but they never appear in the laws and amendments that are passed by the House. Even though the legislation gives the right to borrow by any means at half interest rates, no one is ever allowed to use that authority. There is always a clause to provide that approval must be given by the Department of Finance.

I think the challenge to the Minister is the same as the challenge to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister in charge of Housing, and that is, to grapple with this dragon, the Department of Finance, and show it that Parliament wants the interest rates to come down so that these companies can succeed.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to intervene briefly in the debate to make one or two points. I am pleased that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) is in the Chamber as he will particularly appreciate an example which I would like to draw to the attention of Hon. Members. Many of us have seen occasions when a useful corporation or institutional process was overweighted with Government bureaucrats and appointees.

I want to add emphasis to the comments of the 15 or 16 Members of the Opposition who have spoken on the Bill this afternoon—not a word has been heard from Members on the other side—and draw to the attention of the House a painful experience of which the Minister will be very much aware. I am sure he will recall, with some misgivings, when he was Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia, the actions of the then Premier of the Province of New Brunswick. That gentleman thought that it might be a good idea if his Province, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, took a closer look and got a tighter handle or greater control on the Maritime Transportation Commission. This was one of the finest, near-government, industrial, institutional tools available to the private sector in the Maritime Provinces. It was run almost exclusively by directors and employees drawn from the private sector. The Minister has not looked at the names of the board of directors since the time of his regime.

Mr. Regan: It did not happen in my day.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, it did. The Minister should go back and do some homework. It was a finely-tuned, knowledgeable, institutional process at work serving industry, processors and those who had to move goods. It supplied detailed and up-to-date information and took a lead in forming policy. Now it is virtually a dead mechanism and functions only as a clearing house for information. That has been the case for the last eight or ten years and it happened because the institutional process was overweighted with Government bureaucrats and because the Premiers of the day felt that they wanted more than a window on the industry—they wanted control.

That body no longer functions as was the intention when it was set up. It is no longer in a position to take a lead because it reflects only the view of Government and not the view of those who would use it.

As has been said, the Minister of State for International Trade surely cannot be in disagreement with the intent and spirit of the amendment offered by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Surely he cannot take the position that only Governments can run things. Surely he does need three members of the board of EDP to come from the private sector so that it can have a window on what are essentially issues and processes in place to assist the private sector. Surely the Government does not need 9 of 12 members of the board to provide a window on this process. Surely there is a balance—perhaps 5, 6 and 6, which would make it a 13-member board. Let the board elect a chairman. There is advantage, there is merit and, indeed, long-term wisdom in relying on the developed expertise of the private sector to manage and develop the policy directions of such a vital and massive organization as the Export Development Corporation.

In the annual report of the EDC for 1982, in the left hand column on page 6, there is a discussion of the purpose of its operation as established by Parliament. It exists to develop Canada's export trade through the provision of insurance, guarantee and financing services. At the same time, under the Financial Administration Act there is another facet. The corporation is ordinarily required to conduct its operations without parliamentary appropriations. In practice this means that EDC is expected, in pursuing its purpose, to conduct its affairs in accordance with commercial principles and disciplines and to maintain a sound financial condition. It has been our sad experience that we less frequently trust the private corporate sector to achieve those goals than we do the Government departments and Crown corporations.

As of March 1, 1983, the board of directors included Mr. Cloutier of National Defence fame. Do Hon. Members know how much money we wasted and how many mink hats we bought for 11,000 or 12,000 women in the Canadian Armed Forces? I will not mention things like the Bonaventure overruns and money wasted in defence spending. He is represented as a great president, a great man from the Canadian corporate world, Mr. Speaker. He probably sold newspapers as a young man, and that was probably his last experience with free and private enterprise. As for Mr. Cohen, what more can I say? That is not so much a window, Sir; that is a storm window. Marcel Massé—well, he has done a good job in culture and in some other areas.

● (1610)

Mr. Blenkarn: How about business?

Mr. Forrestall: How about business? What is his business track record? With Jack Armstrong we come to the first of the private sector appointment. He had a distinguished career with Imperial Oil and he was a member of the board of directors of many very successful and highly reputable Canadian firms. Then we go to Daughney, a businessman, highly successful in his own company with a high reputation throughout Canada for his business acumen, his adherence to good corporate practices, a good addition—an awful Grit, mind you, but beyond that he has some good corporate sense. Then we go right back into the Government sector with Montreuil; G. K. Bouey, another great Canadian businessman; R. Johnstone, a deputy minister, going all the way from clerk 5 to deputy minister, a great Canadian but not a businessman. With A. K. Stuart finally we go back into the private sector. Six directors out of the nine are from the boardrooms of Crown corporations, the departments of Government, and three from the private sector. A reverse of that surely is a simple proposition with which the Minister of State for International Trade can find sympathy and can accept when it comes time for his contribution to this debate.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure this afternoon to be able to participate in this debate dealing with the Export Development Corporation and the amendment which has been proposed to the Bill by our colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, the original intention of the Bill on the formation of the Export Development Corporation was to ensure that the people in manufacturing in Canada who were undertaking export transactions with foreign countries were assured of their security in those countries with which they were dealing. There was a commitment by the Export Development Corporation to ensure the worthiness of the clients with whom the various manufacturers and entrepreneurs of this nation were dealing. If there were problems with finances or problems due to political disruptions, then, indeed, the Export Development Corporation ensured that the Canadian companies which were involved in these transactions were going to be adequately compensated for their efforts and, in the ultimate sense, Canadian workers and Canadian business would not suffer.

Probably the Export Development Corporation, in that particular sense, fulfilled a very worth-while gap which might have existed before as far as the confidence of businesses in this country was concerned in dealing with foreign nations which perhaps were not as stable as our own. However, now it appears that the present Government, and the Minister responsible for this corporation, envisage a larger role for the Export Development Corporation.

First of all, I would have to question the validity or the necessity of expanding another bureaucratic machine of this Government. We have too often seen what the expansion of roles of corporations which have been established by this Government has meant to the Canadian economy. I believe I can say without fear of very much contradiction that a substantial portion of this great gross debt which the nation faces today of $31 billion is due in substantial part to the mismanagement of these major corporations which this Government has allowed to happen.

I feel that what we should be trying to accomplish as Canadians, as parliamentarians and as law makers in this House, is just the opposite. We should be attempting to accomplish and create a situation whereby Crown corporations are much more efficiently managed and much more tightly controlled. Before I get into the mechanics of how that might take place with reference to the Export Development Corporation, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am pleased to see that interest has been expressed in this area by the present Minister of State for International Trade as he is indeed a fellow Maritimer and one who should have a very deep ingrained sense of responsibility for ensuring that people in the Atlantic Region of Canada are given a fair opportunity of having access to a market, which would have very positive consequences if properly executed.

Atlantic Canada, particularly the Maritime Provinces, is geographically a part and extension of the New England states. We look to—that great vast market in New England of some 40 million or 50 million people. The opportunity for export into that part of the region by the Maritimes is just fantastic, and I feel it should not come as any sort of revelation to anyone with the slightest bit of imagination that people with some foresight and initiative, who were placed in a position of substance in a corporation such as the Export Development Corporation, might be able to exploit the advantage which we have as Atlantic Canadians, as Maritimers, and break into that market in New England.

One example which comes to mind immediately is the development of the silicon industry in Atlantic Canada. I feel that that is almost a natural for our area. The Maritimes, as you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, are largely unpolluted, and the silicon industry, being an extremely clean industry, would fit in very naturally with the sort of atmosphere and environment which we currently enjoy in Atlantic Canada. We do not have pollution now, and we do not want any more, as the saying goes. In that regard, it is necessary that we have people of vision, people who have a proven track record, not people whom we would normally associate with CIDA and not people whom we would normally associate with the monstrous Canagrex legislation and not people with whom we envisage we are now going to associate in the expanded role of nationalization, of socialization of the fishing industry which this Government seems so intent on pursuing in Atlantic Canada. No, Mr. Speaker, we do not appreciate the stumbling blocks which the bureaucrats have consistently placed in the way of bringing new technologies and new industries into this country by FIRA, for instance. This has not been in the best interests of Canada, Mr. Speaker, and I become very concerned when I hear of an expanding role on the part of the EDC.

● (1620)

We have seen socialization move to such an extent in this nation tht we have very nearly become neutered in our abilities to expand and promote in a country with some of the greatest resources and greatest potential of any nation on the face of the earth. We are faced with a massive bureaucracy, due solely and entirely to this Government, to its discredit. But let us now take the opportunity to develop something positive rather than something negative. Let us fill those positions on the EDC board with people who have proven track records from the private sector. The private sector in this country is what has made Canada great. The very fact that this Government has been unable to destabilize it, unable to undermine those foundations, is indeed a tribute to the ability and stability the private sector has brought to this nation over the years.

It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that in order for this Government department to succeed it is important that we put people in those jobs who have imagination, not people who have only tomorrow to think about and the end of the week when they pick up their pay cheque from the taxpayers of the nation. We do not want people in those jobs who are there solely to create circumstances to justify the continuance of their own positions, and I strongly urge the Minister to consider the proposal put forward by my colleague and place competent, qualified people from the private sector who know what they are doing.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell)—Crown Corporations— (a) Capitalization of Corporations (b) Use of letters of comfort; the Hon. Member for Mississauga-South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Crown Corporations—(a) Canadair— Manufacture of executive jet aircraft—Government funding (b) Government position; the Hon. Member for Kootenay-East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker)—Energy— (a) Sales of western coal in central Canada (b) Request for cost study of coal use.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take this opportunity to comment on Bill C-110 and on the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). We have heard a great deal of debate and concern expressed by Members who have spoken about the way in which the Government of Canada seeks to assist Canadian businessmen in doing business overseas. I am convinced everyone here is concerned about the same thing, that Canada is competitive and able to take advantage of the opportunity which exists and realize our fair share, as much as we are able, of markets which exist for our products in other countries. Having said that, I think we need to re-examine for a moment what the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan) has been trying to do. He simply made a proposal to increase the number of Members on the Export Development Corporation Board from 12 to 15. The fundamental purpose of that change is to ensure a broad-range representation on that board and ensure it works as effectively and as thoroughly as possible, and to assist Canadian business people.

The amendment by the Hon. Member says that the Government should ensure that of those 15 members no more than 3 should come from the public sector. That in itself, Mr. Speaker, I think is a very serious affront not to this political Party or that political Party or whatever group happens to form, from a political point of view, the Government of the day, but an affront to a Public Service which has shown itself through the decades to be both highly competent, willing and able to work with the Government of the day in implementing Government policy. I say that not as a defence of a Liberal Government, I say that as a defence of and a respect for the civil service of this nation.

I became somewhat concerned, Mr. Speaker, when I heard a few minutes ago the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), perhaps less diplomatically I would suggest than some of his colleagues, describe the Public Service of this country in a very unflattering way, in my estimation. The Public Service of Canada is based on the merit principle, and my mind reckons back to a newspaper article of May 11 when the Conservative leadership was still on and a candidate for that leadership, one Brian Mulroney, now the Hon. Member for Central Nova, the Leader of the Opposition, said at that time that when he becomes leader and when he becomes Prime Minister—a presumptious statement—

Mr. Forrestall: He has and he will.

Mr. Tobin: —there will be room for people of other political persuasions in this country to fill important roles in the Public Service but only after he has exhausted every single Tory in Canada. That, Mr. Speaker, is an amusing kind of statement which we tend to make in politics, but I hope it was only said in jest because if this proposed amendment is made in the spirit of ensuring that only three people whose abilities and service to this country are based on merit, not on partisan affiliation, can be allowed to serve on the board whose job is to assist Canadian business in doing business overseas, then I am a very disappointed man.

Let us look at some of the people from the public sector who should or could serve on that board, and who would be absolutely vital to ensuring that whatever private sector representatives are there, they are able to do as complete a job as possible. Who are some of those people? A representative from the Bank of Canada, perhaps the governor. That to me is a key Public Service appointment if this board is to be effective and not merely a bit if window dressing; a representative of the Minister of Trade's Department, of course; a representative from Industry, Trade and Commerce, of course; and a representative from CIDA, and this Department works with CIDA.

Mr. Dick: Pork-barrel.

Mr. Tobin: The Hon. Member's view of doing business overseas is politicized and is seen only through partisan eyes, Mr. Speaker.

If Canada is going to be successful in doing business, it is fundamental that a representative of the Department of Finance be on that board as well. These are key Government Departments which need to be represented. I want you to understand, Mr. Speaker, why I speak as I do today. If the Hon. Member for Mississauga South or any Member of this Party or any Party moved a motion to say that at least six members of the board had to be public servants, I would equally be opposed to having quotas. I think that what the Minister has provided is an increase from 12 to 15 members, and what he has said is that those 15 members should be the best people we can find, be they public or private, they should constitute as much as is possible the best mix of people to work together to enhance Canada's ability to do business overseas.

Mr. Forrestall: We will find someone to represent Newfoundland.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, that is the other key point, and I am glad the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has raised that point. I hope that raising the number of people on the board from 12 to 15 would not make it an exclusive prerequisite of an appointment but, rather, that as much as possible, if not the Provinces then certainly the regions of Canada, each of which has different and various resources, skills, products and expertise to offer, might perhaps be better represented on this kind of an advisory board.

● (1630)

In closing let me say again that I for one would be very concerned if a motion were moved that there must be six public servants, that there must be a quota, as I am now concerned to hear the Conservative Party saying there must be at least 12 to 15 appointments filled by the private sector. We in the House must get back to the notion that we can—

Mr. Taylor: Socialism.

Mr. Tobin: No, not socialism but, rather, the mirror principle that we can best function when none of us becomes a blind, repetitive parrot for the extreme wing of our own extreme doctrinary position of our own particular philosophies. Is it not a rather embarrassing position to be standing up pounding one's fist across the way, saying that at least 12 of 15 key positions must be filled by those in private enterprise? It is a page from an extreme doctrine, a bible that is carried around. I thank God I am not in a position to be a member of a Party which would take a position as the NDP might that at least 12 of 15 positions must be filled by those in the Public Service. I repeat that we must find the best mix and the best people based on the merit principle.

Once again I warn the Conservative Party and the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) that the eyes of the people of Canada, now that he has entered the House, are very closely following his every utterance. The eyes and the ears of the people have seen his charismatic front and they want to know how deep it is. I would suggest that it is so shallow that I could walk across it with only a pair of slippers on and not even get my ankles wet. I warn him today that if I were made Prime Minister of this country, there would be room for merit only after every known partisan Tory has had an appointment. I shall warn him that the certainty and the cockiness with which he entered this Chamber will be deflated rapidly and much to his disappointment, and, of course, much to my delight.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Methinks the former speaker was preaching for a call. There is a vacancy in Newfoundland, I understand, in Canada's newest Province, and the great rhetoric that we have heard today, the great spirit of protection for the Public Service, will sit very well with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as he now shuffles a very small deck in Newfoundland as to who can be and who cannot be in the one Treasury Board seat that is left. You were very, very impressive, Brian. We all look forward to your progress in the days ahead.

Of course, being very serious, I would first of all like to say to the Minister that I have been very impressed with his energy and activities since he assumed that portfolio. It was my pleasure to be in the Philippines last weekend to meet with the Speaker and with the Minister and Vice Minister of Energy there and to hear their complimentary words about the Minister's recent visit there with a significant number of very substantial business personalities from this country. On that trip they did business, and that is what his job is all about. Really, that is what the CDC is all about. It is a vehicle that is geared to assist our people in big business, in medium-sized business and in small business to move our products to the markets of the world. For, after all, we are traders. In many ways we are free traders. We are determined as exporters, as a basic exporting nation, to try to get our goods to the four corners of the earth. That is the case, and the EDC is a very significant vehicle because there is all kinds of competition out there by other nations against our goods. I am sure that the Minister realizes that more and more every day. Certainly, the more one visits the Pacific, the more one realizes just how difficult it is for our business community to compete against the emerging nations. It does not just involve Japan in the Pacific anymore; it involves the Republic of Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong and Singapore. It is also starting to involve Indonesia and the Philippines. We must be there every day. I believe that the Minister, from his many experiences with the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, as Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia and in his present position, has a grasp of what is needed. However, I suggest that what is needed is not a bunch of civil servants, on this particular board.

One of the really sad things that I see about this nation that is not in evidence in many other nations is that we do not use all of the talent that we have available for as long as it is available. We have a system where everyone must sort of put one foot in the grave and the other on a banana peel once he becomes 65 years of age. There is a wealth of experience existing in Canada found in chairmen of boards and banks and in the small, medium and large industries in our country that is not being utilized.

The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) pointed out a very significant example of what happened in Alberta with only two Government Members on a very significant board. I say to the Minister, let us go out there. I do not really believe that we can go to the sectors and ask businessmen to go on boards when there is any possibility of a conflict of interest or an unjust advantage to others in the same industries. However, I think that there are chairmen and presidents from Bell Canada and other corporations. One of the companies that the Minister and I both know very well is Northern Telecom. I happen to have the good fortune to have a Northern Telecom plant in my constituency. The Minister happened to be the Premier of Nova Scotia at the time that that plant was established. We both know what the then Chairman, Mr. Scribner, did for Canada. We know what Walter Light is doing for Canada now and Ben Benato. We know what others, especially in that sector of industry, know about the international marketing of products. As the Japanese often say, "Marketing is everything". Through vehicles like the EDC, we must assist those companies to get in there and meet the very heavy competition in the international world; for instance, Northern Teledon, without the same breadth and depth of a company like Seaman's, going in and beating it five times out of six. We must have people sitting on the EDC to be able to process applications with the snap of a finger. We do not want weeks and weeks of delay, double checking and looking to see that every T is crossed, which is the art and the style of civil servants. We have to give the background and the confidence to those people out there when they are in Singapore, in Germany, in Norway, or wherever they are, of knowing that they are going to have a board of directors, indeed, EDC, that will be with them all the way and will help and not hinder them. I think we have the kind of Minister who realizes that. I think the amendment is a good amendment. I think that puts you, Sir, where people cannot accuse you of political patronage when you are looking for directives. I think it puts you in a position where you are forced to be non-partisan, because everyone will be watching you and saying, "Let us see if the Minister is going to some big Grit or if he is going to give the private sector an opportunity and appoint the first best person who is available who is not implicated or involved in any way at this moment in his life." I think then we will be satisfied. The Minister will be satisfied. But, far more important, the people who are selling for us, earning the tax dollars for us so we can pay our other bills will be very confident in the Minister, they will be very confident in the Government and they will produce new jobs for the people. That is the bottom line for all of us right now and that is my contribution to the debate, Mr. Speaker.

• (1640)

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a few observations and interjections. If we really want to try to debate and perhaps govern properly by the use of the parliamentary process, the Government might listen to what has been said. The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for International Trade who is responsible for this Bill, has perhaps in his own words just brought up the very compromise which would get this matter moving if the Government would like to agree. The Hon. Member was upset and somewhat concerned that we needed a broad range of people. He felt that if we had 12 of the 15 from the private sector it may not be a broad enough range. I, on the other hand, say that if you have a majority from one group, one institution, being the Public Service of Canada, that that would be too restrictive and not be a broad enough range.

Mr. Tobin: Agreed.

Mr. Dick: The Hon. Member felt we should have a person from the Bank of Canada, a person from the Department of Trade, a person from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, a person from the Department of Finance, a person from CIDA and someone, perhaps an officer of the company itself appointed to the board of directors. That adds up to six.

Mr. Tobin: That's a minority.

Mr. Dick: If the Minister and the Government wanted to make progress, why would it not accept six directors covering all the important departments from the government services? That would leave nine to come from outside government services. Perhaps one might indicate that of those nine not more than two would come from any one province. All the Provinces are interested in trade. This would ensure fair regional distribution. Representation would not be all from the finance sector on Bay Street in Toronto or all from the manufacturing sector in Toronto or all from some other area. But that is the type of compromise I am thinking of. If we are really serious in trying to make government work, this is a way to compromise and trade off a little bit, and I think through that process we sometimes get the best result. I would invite the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary to go part way on this suggestion. Even at this stage, and perhaps with all-Party consent, we could agree to the Government's own amendment if it would go part way, as long as majority representation would be from the private sector. Otherwise we will have people paid by the taxpayer, public servants, controlling the public Crown Corporations, and it becomes a bit incestuous to have them controlling a publicly owned corporation because they have something at stake. It is too narrow a base. Therefore, I recommend that the Government consider a halfway measure between the position as drafted in the Bill and this amendment. I think that might be of some assistance.

I want to put one example on the record about why I feel it is important. I was very frustrated on one occasion with an industry in my own constituency and an industry that was based in Nova Scotia, namely, Pioneer Electric. Through Canadian Patents and Development Ltd. this company got rights to market ground detectors for hospital operating rooms. The device was invented by the National Research Council people. It was an extremely important device. Ten to 15 years ago people died on operating tables. Death was put down to heart fibrillations, but it was not heart fibrillations, it was electric shock. So much equipment was attached to people in the operating process. With a little electric leakage from each machine enough current was finally built up so that a person was electrocuted. What was developed at the National Research Council and what Pioneer Electric and Canadian Stackpole's Measurment Engineering division in Arnprior had the right to do was to market the device and pay royalties to CPDL. Unfortunately, after they paid a little over $100,000 in royalties, a firm set up in Clearwater, Florida copied the patents which CPDL had. These patents were registered in the United States. An investigation was started as to whether we should stop them. I have three legal opinions from American patent attorneys who said that Canadian Patents and Development Ltd. would be successful in their suit. But they were controlled by employees of the corporation and other members on the board who were public servants. Only a few were from the private sector. They did not have enough gumption to go ahead. If they had paid $60,000 they would have made another $100,000 in royalties from the successful sales. Instead, no prosecution took place. The other people in Clearwater ended up stealing our patent, going ahead and expanding further. They were subsequently bought out by a company called Square D. Square D is a big electrical contracting firm. Square D up to that point in time had been buying 60 per cent of the manufactured product from Canadian Stackpole and Pioneer Engineering. We lost the market. Since this technique was developed, every hospital operating room in North America and around the world had to have one of these devices. It was a tremendous market and we blew it because we were too timid.

If we had had a few more aggressive businessmen on the board, they might have taken that further step and assured the manufacturing rights for Canadians, not letting them slip away as in this case.

I suggest a compromise be considered. The Parliamentary Secretary said we do not want too narrow a base. If we have too large a majority from the public sector, it would be too narrow a base. But perhaps we could have a group from the public sector covering those six important departmental areas and the other nine directors spread fairly well across Canada, maybe two from Quebec, two from Ontario, two from Nova Scotia, one in Saskatchewan or one from Ontario, but not more than two from any one province. This is my suggestion. I am not bound to it; I am just making a suggestion. If the Government wants three for any one province, they can have three. I wanted to make the point that it should be spread out across Canada to ensure that we do not have too small a base from which to work. I think the Government should consider it. Perhaps we could get on to the next amendment; hopefully the Government is willing to make some movement.

● (1650)

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise to lend a few observations to this very important debate on our approach as Canadians to the promotion of export trade and to the established and recognized role of the Export Development Corporation in achieving those goals. In particular I rise to speak to Motion No. 1, sponsored by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), which takes a rather different approach to the structuring of the board of directors of the EDC than that put forward in the present legislation. The proposal of my colleague would ensure a dominant private sector emphasis on the board of directors. Of course we assume that these people would be well qualified in their disciplines, would represent an appropriate cross-section of the business and corporate community and would ensure that the EDC fulfil the objectives we all wish as Canadians. This is a very important agency of Government which, throughout the past decade or more of its existence, has made a number of errors, many of which have cost Canadian taxpayers dearly.

I will get into specific examples of those errors in a moment, but I think it is important to ask ourselves what is the role of the Export Development Corporation. Should it be a promoter of Canadian trade in other parts of the world for the benefit of Canadians? Should it be an extension of our foreign aid initiatives, perhaps operating on the same principle as the Canadian International Development Agency to assist the emergence and development of less privileged nations around the world? It is important for us as Canadians, particularly in these difficult economic times, to realize that our first obligation is to get our own economic house in order and put Canadians back to work. As our level of prosperity improves and as Canada is restored once again to the point where we can make genuine technological, scientific and social contribution to the needs of those less fortunate than ourselves, perhaps we can put an increased emphasis upon foreign aid.

The purpose of the EDC at this point in time should be to enhance and increase the opportunity for Canadian businesses to penetrate more aggressively markets around the world and thereby overcome the serious unemployment crisis in Canada. If that is to be our goal, we must ask ourselves whether the EDC has been effective and honest with its masters, the Parliament and the Government of Canada, in submitting to the House cost analyses so that Canadians know on an annualized basis whether there is a net return for the moneys expended by way of loan guarantees and other forms of assistance to Canadian corporations. I mean a net return; in other words, for every dollar spent by Canadian taxpayers they should know whether there has been a multiplier effect operating in that we received more than a dollar back to be used toward the needs of Canada and toward a solution to our serious unemployment problem. If we want to make the EDC an instrument of foreign aid, that is fine, but let us face up to the truth and tell Canadians that that is what it is.

I will turn to the question of the amendment and whether the board of the EDC and its president and chief executive officer, Mr. Cloutier, has been doing an effective job over the years in ensuring that this goal is achieved. Personally I find it repugnant to watch, as we did in recent years—not in the last year or so—colossal advertising campaigns by the Export Development Corporation geared to Canadian consumers. I never understood why there were full-page ads in national and local newspapers and television advertisements promoting the aims and objectives of the EDC. Those initiatives were an absolute waste of taxpayers' money because they were directed at the wrong market. What difference does it make if the Canadian television viewer or newspaper reader is sold on how great is the EDC? Its customers are the corporations of Canada. They should be the benefactors, and ultimately the workers of Canada. If one examined the philosophy behind those advertising campaigns, one would realize that they were nothing more than a glorified back-slapping exercise on the part of the Liberal Government in its attempt to brainwash Canadians into believing that everything it does is for the good of every last one of us. As with many of the travesties to which the Government has exposed Canadians in the name of advertising, it was absolutely unnecessary. It is an example of the kind of decision private sector members of the board would never have permitted. It was an absolute waste of taxpayers' money which did very little to achieve the goals of the EDC.

For a moment I would like to look at what has happened in the Canadian mineral industry over the past 20 years to 25 years and to what extent the EDC has contributed to the situation. In 1950, nickel world-wide was produced by three countries—Canada, the U.S.S.R. and Australia. The Sudbury basin in Ontario produced sulphide ores, and laterite ores were produced in New Caledonia, Australia. As of last year the inventory of nickel producers world-wide rose to some 25 different nations producing and refining nickel. Many of these refineries were subsidized by government largesse, much of it extended by this nation to promote the development of mining activities in other parts of the world. If we believe that the EDC should be an instrument of foreign aid, then that is a very admirable gesture. But we have increased the production capacity of nickel to the point where we are on the verge of seeing the Canadian nickel industry collapse. The same is true in the case of copper, coal and many other mineral industries where we used the instruments of CIDA and EDC to help, aid, abet and build ports and new projects around the world. I am not saying that we should not do this. I am saying that we should analyse whether there is a net benefit or a net cost to Canada inherent in such initiatives.

I would like to refer to a particular example concerning a coal mining project in Indonesia about which the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) crowed quite loudly on May 4 of this year. Canada was signing an agreement through the EDC to finance the development of a major new coal mine in Indonesia. In fact, the Minister was present in Jakarta for the signing of the contract under which Canadian companies would receive certain spin-off benefits in relation to the development of the coal mining project in southern Sumatra, Indonesia. The fact of the matter is that we are aiding and abetting the creation of an additional nine million tonnes of coal production capacity in another country. That country requires in return that it be given access to an equivalent dollar value of business in Canada. In other words, one of the terms of the deal under which we guaranteed low interest financing for the opening of that new coal mine in Indonesia is that it does a reciprocal amount of business in Canada. There is no net gain for Canada in such an initiative. This new mine will exceed the production capacity of one of the largest mines in British Columbia of which there are only three or four. I will be taking my seat in a moment, but let me first indicate that we will in fact experience a net loss. We will lose many jobs as a result of the additional competition which this mine will pose.

In conclusion I would suggest that if the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation included a healthy dose of representation from the private sector, we would take a much more quantitative approach to determining whether these kinds of decisions are wise, because in that case Canada would emerge as a net loser.

• (1700)

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the presentation of this Bill is an expression of interest in international trade and the vehicle by which it could be accomplished.

However, the Bill is only an expression of mechanics, not an expression of policy as it has been exercised by the Government. I would like to discuss that policy as it relates to this Bill and to international trade in general. I hope that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) will take the time to listen. I fully appreciate his total duties and responsibilities, but I would like to get this message to him because Atlantic Canada is deeply concerned about a situation which is now arising in our international trade with the United States.

As a result of representations made by the State of Maine, the United States Department of Trade has undertaken hearings and has made recommendations on the basis of information gathered at those hearings to the effect that there should be a 17.9 per cent duty-type impost levied on white potatoes shipped to the United States from eastern Canada, as far west as the Great Lakes.

What is the impact of this ruling? It is a virtual embargo because of the level of the assessment which has been made. It is a virtual embargo upon the exportation of potatoes from Canda into the United States. This breaks the spirit of trade relations which have existed between Canada and the United States.

I want to make clear that I have tried to get information on the meetings to be held in the United States to give further and final consideration to the impost which has been imposed upon us. To this point, I have not been able to find anybody who had at their fingertips information on a succession of meetings which will consider the subject matter. I have not been able to find anybody who can tell me whether we can or cannot make representations on behalf of Canada at these hearings. That is a situation which is intolerable. It defines a policy which is unacceptable to Canadian agriculture which must have export trade if it is to survive.

I want to point out something else. If we are to survive economically, we must have a better balance of trade in the horticulture industry. We have reached the point where, with the United States alone, we have approximately $700 million annual deficit in trade of horticultural products.

There is a traditional trading pattern in commodities which are traded throughout the world. There is a world price or continental price and commodities are traded on the basis of that price. In Canada only when vital emergencies arise do we have the authority to impose any constraint of trade upon any of our GATT partners, only when the Department has declared a real emergency in a particular commodity.

Let me cite an example. The British Columbia potato industry is very detrimentally affected by the importation of potatoes from the State of Washington. Our Government has said that it is not possible to establish that dumping operations are taking place as these potatoes come from the State of Washington to the Province of British Columbia. In spite of this, we are found guilty of dumping and damage in the United States, according to the recent ruling of the Department of Trade and Commerce in that area.

More hearing are to be held. I believe the final hearing of the international trade commission of the United States is to be held on October 30. If the horticultural industry of Canada does not have the total support of information and legal advice from the Government of Canada, with all the statistics to back it up, we will be faced with a further unfavourable ruling. This will occur if we cannot present our case as the situation exists at the moment.

I cannot get from the officials responsible for this operation the scheduling or subject matter of these meetings. I am very disappointed. It makes me think that this Bill may be just more window dressing. Is that what it is, or will it play to a particular segment of Canadian international trade and ignore the agricultural sphere of Canada?

The agricultural sphere has traditionally been put in a second rate position in the trading pattern of this nation. We have traded off this item in return for some import regulation, export regulation, or something else. The Government has said consistently and persistently that it will give the United States better access to Canada with the foods it produces in return for which we hope to get a better opportunity to export some manufactured goods. This has continued to the point where we cannot stand embargoes such as the one presently being imposed upon us by the United States. It is not an embargo by name, but it is virtually an embargo.

In an effort to defend ourselves against this action, we do not know what formula has been used to arrive at the figure known as a constructive value in the United States. We know that shippers in Canada have been accused of dumping. Internationally, dumping is accepted as the shipping of a product abroad at a lesser price than it would be shipped to a domestic customer. The shipping industry in Canada would have to be nuts to do any dumping. Why sell abroad at greater commercial risk at a price lower than you would sell in Canada?

I have been directly involved with that industry almost since birth. Any dealer in the potato industry who ships potatoes from Canada to the United States does so because the market is better there; he will get more money for his product than he could get in Canada. Therefore, under the literal international interpretation of the term "dumping" we are not guilty of it in any way, shape or form. I have confidence that our dealers have economic sanity even in restricted markets.

I wish to say to the Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, that ever since the transportation capability has existed allowing us to exchange food products with our neighbours to the south, we have had what is known as a continental market and a continental price. If a commodity produced in Canada is marketed, it is under the influence of the continental price, not a Canadian price per se. If the ruling handed down by the United States Trade Department is imposed, it will reverse the accepted trading patterns between these two nations which has existed since the earlier trade in foods, particularly horticultural products.

We have been accused of dumping. However, in the assessment of dumping, I would ask whether the sale was made today, six months ago, two months ago and whether the market was at the same level at which it is today. Did the investigators take into consideration the possibility of a future sale? Did they understand the difference between an f.o.b. sale and a delivered sale? Is that the way they arrived at the fact that M. Rose and Sons is accused of dumping to the extent of 20 some percentage points? If it was in fact guilty—Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is running out. I wonder if I could have unanimous consent to make a very few brief remarks to conclude?

• (1710)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent for the Hon. Member to extend his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be.

Mr. McCain: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank Members of the House.

If M. Rose and Sons was in fact guilty of conducting most of its trade during the last year with the United States and if in fact it sold at a price that was 22 per cent or 23 per cent less than what the Canadian market could afford, M. Rose and Sons would not be in business today. It is as simple as that. The very fact that M. Rose and Sons is still in business contradicts the accused margin of dumping.

Is the Marshall Company in Ontario guilty of dumping by 41 per cent? If it had in fact dumped into the United States at 41 per cent less than the Canadian market could have afforded, its officers are certainly candidates for an insane asylum and they must today be bankrupt by virtue of their idiotic trade policies.

The conclusions which have been reached contradict all logic, Mr. Speaker, and I appeal to the Minister of State for International Trade to ensure that this matter have the highest possible profile and support for the representations to be made.

I am being parochial when I mention potatoes because potatoes are the bread and butter of my community, but I am not being parochial when I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are further representations ready to be made by further commodity producers in the United States that might in fact have the same capability of getting protection from their Government which will interfere with the exports of Canadian agricultural products across the board. If the decision is unfavourable to Canada with respect to potatoes, then one can expect equally unfavourable decisions with respect to other food products which may be shipped to them.

I appeal to the Government and to the Minister that we do now activate every force that the Government has at its disposal to try to use the goodwill which we have established in so many ways in the United States to establish the innocence of the commodity trade as it relates to potatoes and as it will later relate to other commodities and to accept the traditional fact that commodities are marketed world-wide, not in relation to cost in any given year nor in relation to storage costs or shipping costs or any other costs but are internationally marketed between Canada and the United States and the world on the basis of the price that prevails on the date the sale is made. If we begin to interfere with that, Mr. Speaker, then I say to you that Canada and the United States will be in positions of extreme difficulty with respect to trading on a very broad basis. This is not acceptable.

We in Canada from coast to coast must ask that the Government make the strongest possible representations on this matter to the authorities of the United States who I believe want our good will and are probably not aware of the ultimate consequence of a single item. When looking back 13 years, we find that it is an item of which we have imported more from the United States in volume than from any other nation. We have imported more from them in 10 out of the 13 years. We have spent more in the United States on potatoes than they have spent in Canada in 11 out of the 13 years. Even with potatoes, the balance of trade is, on average, well in their favour. I ask that these representations be made and that the matter be taken seriously by the Cabinet.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, although I have listened to this debate all day, I did not intend to speak to this Bill until the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible for this Bill, spoke, and he began speaking using rising decibels—

Mr. Regan: No, he is not my Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Friesen: Someone said that he was the Parliamentary Secretary and I took his word for it. He began speaking to this Bill using rising decibels. I suppose that being from Newfoundland, he wanted to make sure or at least hope that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), from the bowels of the PMO, would hear that there was yet another Member from Newfoundland who might qualify for a Cabinet post now that two of them have been discarded in the last month.

The Hon. Member was concerned about the proposal that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), presented to the Minister regarding the membership of the board of directors for the Export Development Corporation. The Government proposal ensures that the majority of those members are drawn from Government offices, the bureaucracy. My colleague proposes that a majority of them be drawn from the private sector. My friend from Newfoundland wonders what is wrong with having most of them come from the Government offices. There is nothing morally wrong with that. However, the fact is that that usually does not work very well. It is not that it has been without success, but the batting average is probably not very good.

The reason that the success rate is not very good is that there is a difference between the mind-set of those members on a board of directors who come from Government offices and that of those who come from the private sector. They have different mind sets, different philosophies, different reasons for being there and, perhaps, different ideologies. Mainly, they have different reasons for being there.

A Government official's reason for being on a board of directors is very simple and very honourable, and it is to protect the taxpayers' money. He wants to make sure that the investments are secure, that they will be above reproach, that he will not fall under any kind of criticism and that the Government will fall under a minimum amount of criticism as a result of these investments.

Goodness knows I wish some of these people would have had some say in the investment in the Maislin Corporation and in a few other large grants that the Government has made outside of the parameters of these lending agencies. Obviously the lending agencies had nothing to do with those kinds of grants.

The reason the Government official is there is to make sure that the investment is secure, and if it is secure, to avoid political criticism and mistakes as much as possible, and that is a good reason for his being there. However, that is not the function of that organization. That is not why that organization exists.

Obviously the investments ought to be as secure as possible, but there are other ingredients to an investment corporation and one other ingredient is that there ought to be some risk. Those two principles do not mix very well when there are two opposing kinds of people on the board.

● (1720)

Let me use as an illustration the national banks that are now in many cases riding herd on some of the companies that are in trouble across the land as a result of the recession. Here is company "X" with, let us say, $2 million worth of capital investment. It is now just at the point of having as much debt as equity. The banks get nervous and the bank bureaucracies are no different from Government bureaucracies. They get twitchy. What do they do? Do they come and say, "Let us get some creative people in this organization to help you out so that you will have a better cash flow"? No, they send out a bank auditor who knows nothing about the business and whose one purpose is to make sure that the bank's investment is secure and not to make sure that the company will succeed. They want to retrieve as much as possible of the bank's investment.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that that kind of mentality is parallel to or at least similar to the kind of mind-set that the Government official has when he sits on a board of investment such as this. The board member from the private sector, however, has an entirely different approach to business. Obviously he wants his investment to be secure—no one is in business to lose money—but he also has a willingness to take a creative risk. He does not mind risking in order to succeed, if necessary.

On a national scale, one of the problems in this country is that we do not risk easily enough. That is why we have billions of dollars of foreign investment in the country. Per capita, Canadians have more money in the bank than any other country in the world. Canadians do not want to take risks and prefer the safe route. The Export Development Corporation cannot succeed if it has the mindset of a Government bureaucracy that is afraid to take a risk.

There is another reason why it is not good to have a majority of Government officials on the board of directors. It was indicated in a different way by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon). He pointed out that not too long ago the Export Development Corporation funded a coal mining venture in Sumatra for which Canada would provide the equipment. In the process, Sumatra will become competitive with the coal mines of British Columbia. I suspect that if a majority of the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation had had the marketplace in mind rather than the immediate sale of equipment, they would not have funded a mining operation that would cut out domestic interests. This is an investment on an international scale that in the long run will hurt the domestic market.

I submit that if there were more members from the private sector on the board of directors of the corporation and they were sensitive to domestic trade, an investment would not have been made that would cut off trade within Canada.

For these reasons the amendment submitted by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is a good one. I would ask Members of the Government to be open-minded about the whole proposition. There was a day when the Party opposite had the marketplace and free enterprise as its hallmark. It has shifted its focus and is now looking at security by way of Government departments and Government officials.

I support this amendment, Mr. Speaker, because it would introduce some creativity into the investment market for the Export Development Corporation.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), first of all I want to thank all Hon. Members who have spoken on it today. There have been some excellent interventions and only a few things have been expressed with which I can seriously disagree.

I believe that the interest exhibited in the importance of the export industry is heartening and appropriate in relation to the role exports play in the creation of jobs in Canada. I am sure you are cognizant of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that, more than any other advanced industrialized country, Canada depends on the sale of goods and services in overseas markets for the standard of living we enjoy. It would not be available to us if over two million Canadians were not employed as a consequence of exports. I believe we can do even better than we have to date to develop export markets for our goods and services.

The intention of the amendment is the provide the Export Development Corporation—which is one of a number of ways in which the Government assists exporters in this country—to do a better job than it has been able to until now.

Before I enter into a discussion of what has been said and attempt to react to some of the comments made, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to congratulate the Hon.

Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), who participated in the debate, upon his nomination as shadow Cabinet critic for international trade. During his time in Parliament he has been an outstanding Member and I know he will bring great ability to the job. I look forward to his comments and assistance in this particular task.

I also want to congratulate his associate critic, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), who also spoke in the debate. He also has made a mark as an able Member in his time in the House. I am gratified that people who are constructive and able have received these assignments for what I consider to be a very important portfolio.

During the time that the Bill was in committee it received very careful consideration and lengthy examination. A number of other Hon. Members opposite have shown interest in the subject in committee and in the House. I particularly commend the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who has shown a very keen interest in the Bill and in bringing forward suggestions for ways in which it could be improved, according to his judgment. I want to emphasize that because, even though I am unable to accept the particular amendment that he has proposed, I agree and applaud the principle of greater private sector participation in the Export Development Corporation. I propose to follow that principle in my dealings with the board.

I cannot agree, however, with the principle of codification or, if you like, a statutory quota for how the board of directors of a Crown corporation should be made up. I do not believe we should tie the hands of future Governments with reference to how appointments are to be made. Appointments should be made from the private or public sector according to the talent that is available at a particular time and according to the ability of the people available. That is a principle that has been followed traditionally in all Crown corporations, I believe.

I have always thought that if we are to have Crown corporations—and certainly the EDC is one that is necessary for reasons that are plain—we should set them up so that they can operate with the flexibility of a private company and with as few strings as possible. That is the way to achieve the healthy atmosphere of private enterprise in a Government-owned company.

I want to emphasize that while the Export Development Corporation is vital for its work in financing our exports, no one should be under the illusion that it is the only organization that is financing exports. It finances only a very small portion of total Canadian exports. The vast portion of this financing is done by the private banking system, as it should be. We have the situation, however, that the banks are often unwilling or unable, for good reason, to do the long-term financing that may be required to enable us to achieve the major overseas sales which bring a great number of jobs to Canada and benefits to our companies. It is in that area primarily that EDC has the greatest validity, and I believe that most Hon. Members of the House recognize its importance in that regard.

• (1730)

I would like to say, in response to the concerns of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, which have been reflected by other Hon. Members who have spoken on this matter, that I agree with the principle that the majority of directors of EDC should come from the private sector. I feel it is a good idea, and as long as I am minister I can assure him that I will do all I can to ensure that that will be the case, that the majority will be appointed from the private sector.

I believe that in enlarging the board to 15, we are not only making it possible for us to be in the position of ensuring a majority from the private sector, but also of ensuring the regional representation of which some Hon. Members have spoken as well. That, I believe, is also important. What I do want to say, however, is that the public sector directors who participate on the board, in my opinion, do a very valuable job, and I feel their work is important. There seems to have been some misconception by one or two Hon. Members who thought these directors were people who came from the EDC itself. That, of course, is not the case. It is not a question of employees running their own organization. It is, rather, the importance which has been recognized by successive Governments of having the key financial agencies of Government represented by able people on the Export Development Corporation, if it is going to have the full co-operation of those branches of Government and be best able to serve the exporters of our country.

I would like to say that I have found the private sector appointees, the directors, who do an excellent job on the board, and the public sector directors, to be working in harmony with each other. There has not been a case of a split between them. Indeed, they work in close co-operation and it makes a good mix. I feel that we would make that mix better if, as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has suggested, we see to it that an over-all majority of directors come from the private sector. However, I do want to emphasize that in my considered opinion it is valuable to the goal which we all share to have the Department of Finance recognized on the board, to have the Bank of Canada represented, and to have CIDA represented, because in many instances we have co-operation between the Export Development Corporation and CIDA in what you call a "trade-aid" program, contracts which are part aid and part trade. As well, because of the fact that the new Department of DRIE, or Industry Trade and Commerce as it has been called, is responsible for the operation of the industries within the country, and the liaison with the private sector in that regard, it is important that that Department also be represented on the board. Therefore, I believe there is the need not only for three public sector directors, as the Hon. Member has suggested, but for five or six—but not more. I do agree that with the larger board, the rest of the appointees should tend to come from the private sector and that that is something which we will pursue.

I did have an element of dispute with the words of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) when he spoke on this subject. I thought that his words touched on being frivolous when he talked about political appointments and said that people on the board from the private sector—and we are seeking to increase the number from the private sector—were there as political hacks. I do not feel that any Hon. Member who examines the membership of the private sector members on this board would conclude that that is the case, and I hope that it will not become the case. I hope that private sector directors will be appointed in the future by various governments according to their expertise in export, their experience and what they have to contribute from the private sector in that regard. I would be very surprised if an Hon. Member can point to some member of the Export Development Corporation board of directors and suggest that that is not the case. I can assure Hon. Members that we are going to continue to see to it that people are appointed who will contribute, whether they are Conservative, Liberal, NDP or "neuter", if you like.

I would like to move on, Mr. Speaker, to say a word in relation to the remarks of the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Regan: I thank Hon. Members for their generous attitude in allowing me to conclude my remarks. I will attempt to be very brief. I do want to say that the Hon. Member for York-Peel was concerned about concessional financing, and we are all concerned about concessional financing. I believe that Canada has followed, and should follow a policy of attempting to get firm international agreement on consensus rates so that exporting countries will not waste their resources in trying to outbid each other on the level of the financing percentages. I feel that is wasteful and ill-advised and Canada cannot afford to get into that sort of spending race. I feel that our policy of strongly pursuing international agreement is very important. However, we have gone beyond that and said that when there is an important opportunity which is of net benefit to the Canadian public, where it is shown to us that a competitor is breaking the consensus or offering a concessional rate, we should examine whether it is in the interests of Canada to match that. And in examining whether it is in Canada's interests, one would have to determine whether the jobs which would be created were a better price than the other sort of job creation on which we spend money through various Government departments, and whether the net benefit to Canada makes it worth-while. Above all, our primary effort should be get international agreement in order to avoid that.

I am sure that Hon. Members would pardon me as a Maritime member if I took just a moment to agree with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) who spoke of the potato situation and the dumping investigation which is under way in the United States. I would like to associate myself with the concern of the Hon. Member and say that we have made representations at the highest possible level. I have written directly to Mr. Baldrige, the American Minister of Commerce, as well as making representations to other members of the American Government, about the seriousness with which we regard this investigation and how ill-founded we consider it. We believe that the trade in potatoes has been accurately described by the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte and that, indeed, the generous attitude which has characterized Canadian-American relations in the last year should prevail so that the United States realistically recognize the fact that we usually buy more potatoes than we sell and recognize the way in which this trade has historically operated.

I do want to say a word of thanks to the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) for his words of commendation on my work in this Department and to say that he knows well the importance of export with Northern Telecom located in his constituency. I am happy that during my time as premier he and I were able to co-operate together in enticing Northern Telecom to that location, with all the benefits which have gone to Amherst in the intervening years as a consequence.

The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), who spoke at the last, gave an example which bothered me. He said it is bad when we finance the export of machinery which results in another country, which was formerly or could be in the future a market for our product, ending up building a factory with that machinery which will compete against us. While that does look sad at first blush, I believe that, like the Japanese, we have to be realistic and recognize that if they do not get the machinery from us, then they will get it elsewhere and that trade is a moving target. The country we sell something to today, as it progresses and develops, we will sell other things to in three years' time. You can never count on always having a continuing market for the same product and we must always adjust in that regard. I think probably if the Hon. Member looks into this in more depth he will see there is justification for the financing of machinery in that circumstance.

● (1740)

Finally, Sir, I am grateful to Hon. Members because I have trespassed on their time, but I cannot vote for the amendment. I ask Hon. Members to vote against the amendment, but I do express my thanks to the Hon. Member for the spirit contained in the amendment that there be greater participation on the board by the private sector, and I assure him that I will see to it that that is the case. I believe that the Canadian businessmen who are doing so well, who set new records last year and this year in exports will, with the assistance and support of all Members of this House, continue in that valuable work.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, if the House would indulge me I would like to ask the Minister whether he would discuss the matter I raised with him concerning the chairman and chief executive officer?

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for not having dealt with that matter but I take the same position in relation to that as I do on the codification of where directors will come from. I believe the amendment we gave in committee, which provided that there will be a chairman as well as the president and that the directors can come from wherever, meets the spirit of the concern, and as far as I am in a position to say today it will be my intention and my effort to seek to have a chairman who is from the private sector established with a president from the public sector, or vice versa.

I want to say, with reference to what the Hon. Member mentioned about how some companies operate, that my experience has indicated to me that in the private sector you find at different times almost every combination. Some companies have one person who is both president and chairman, others have a chairman who is the chief executive officer and not the president, and others have a president who is the chief executive officer. I think that flexibility exists in the private sector and is suitable in this instance also, but I do favour the principle of the separation of president and chairman of the board and I agree that one of them should be from the private sector.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will pleased say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. It appears to be getting very close to six o'clock. Inasmuch as the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) are here in the Chamber, there might be a disposition on the part of the House to move now to the adjournment debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement that we now proceed to the adjournment debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CROWN CORPORATIONS—CAPITALIZATION OF CORPORATIONS. (B) USE OF LETTERS OF COMFORT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I missed my opportunity to speak on the motion on Bill C-110 but I have my opportunity now to talk about a very similar subject, that of Crown corporations and the Government's practice of providing letters of comfort.

For myself and many of my colleagues this all came to light this spring when we had the unfortunate experience of witnessing one of the greatest financial travesties in this country, namely the collapse of Canadair and de Havilland. In my riding, Mr. Speaker, the people do not understand how much $2 billion is, let alone $500 million. In their minds that would be enough money to build industry to create jobs not only for every person in my riding but possibly for two or three surrounding ridings.

On June 22, 1983, I asked the Minister whether it was common practice to operate Crown corporations by letters of comfort. At that time I got no answer. Upon checking through the two Crown corporations I referred to, I found this had been carried on over an extended period of time. This, Mr. Speaker, to the citizens of this country is as immoral as printing money without coming before this House for approval. If you are going to have borrowing bills, then this method of providing money should be dealt with in the same way.

Letters of comfort, Mr. Speaker, are guarantees from the federal Government to Canadian and international banks. This is not only taking capital out of the country, it is also taking the interest on that capital out of the country. It increases the debt we owe to the rest of the world as well as to Canadians, and I feel this practice should be stopped.

In the Bill we have just been discussing, which we object to, Mr. Speaker, there is no accountability to the House of Commons. The same situation pertains to these letters of comfort. On June 22, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to table in this House the number of Crown corporations financed by letters of comfort. I would like to extend that. I not only want to know the number, I would like to know the names and I would also like to know the individual amounts. The reason I cut the question short is that Madam Speaker is so in tune with what is happening she cuts us off rather quickly and we have to be very concise with our questions, and sometimes we do not the entire question in.

To me, Mr. Speaker, receiving a letter of comfort is the same thing as taking money out of the back door of the bank. In that way no one seems to know about it. There is another method that perhaps the Government could use instead of letters of comfort, that is through computer mystique, computer disappearance. Perhaps that is how the Government should be getting the money to run these Crown corporations. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, but it is a thought. Now that we have nailed them down on this one, they will find a new method. But any time, Mr. Speaker, that the Government goes into the taxpayers' pockets and removes $1.4 billion, in the case of Canadair, it must be accountable to the House of Commons.

It would be marvellous for Canadian corporations and small businesses to be able to operate under letters of comfort, Mr. Speaker. Can one imagine what would happen if a proliferation of letters of comfort were allowed? Supposing a small businessman having trouble went to his Member of Parliament and said, "I require a letter of comfort because my company is almost in bankruptcy." Where would it stop?

● (1750)

Let us take another example. In every Department of Government, there are hidden corporations, some of which we have not even been able to locate. There is a budget put down in the Estimates by which Departments are supposed to live. Those corporations could funnel more cash into that Department through the back door, thus increasing budgets over and above the original Estimates.

I do not know how many other games are being played and perpetuated on the Canadian public. However, I do not believe this is the only one. Furthermore, from June 22 to this day, I do not have a record of what this money is, what has been going out, how much and to whom.

Let us take another example of a letter of comfort, and truly a letter of comfort as it is used, involving $34 million more for Maislin Transport. That is another letter of comfort, another name for a guarantee. That one went down the tube.

I must really ask another question. How many other guarantees are out to the private sector that have never come before this House because they are too small in amount to be considered? I think the Auditor General is aware of this situation. He is watching for it. However, it is something he cannot track down because it is done outside of his terms of reference. He must check the audits of the Department. He does not even have the right to audit Crown corporations until the Opposition stands in the House and demands that it be done.

I would therefore like to see the entire Government format changed, the financial responsibility changed, and letters of comfort discontinued. In order to prove this point, I would today like to see the list I requested on June 22 with the updated information I requested.

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the issue of letters of comfort has been discussed at some length over the past year, especially at the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. Consequently, much of what I am about to say has already been reported to that Committee.

As Members are aware, it is the Government's current policy to issue letters of comfort only in those instances where Parliamentary authority for a guarantee does not yet exist but where it is the Government's intention to seek such authority. Approval to issue a letter of comfort is given by Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Treasury Board and subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) of the terms and conditions of the borrowing in question.

Letters of comfort have been used in the past to assist both Canadair and de Havilland to borrow funds until such time as guarantees could be issued. de Havilland, for example, borrowed $70 million on the basis of a letter of comfort issued on December 24, 1976 by the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, for the production of the Dash-7 aircraft. The letter of comfort, with an expiry date of December 31, 1980, was extended to September, 1981, at which time it was no longer required. Appropriation Act No. 4, 1980-81 authorized the guarantee of loans to de Havilland to a limit of $450 million and no further letters of comfort have been issued for de Havilland.

Canadair has used letters of comfort since its purchase by the Crown in 1976 when an operating line of credit was issued to Canadair covered by a letter of comfort issued by the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Challenger program was approved by the government in October, 1976, and financial arrangements were made for a further line of credit supported by a loan guarantee authorized by Appropriation Acts No. 5, 1976-77 and No. 3, 1977-78.

In June, 1978, refinancing of the guaranteed loan and the Challenger special operating line of credit was enabled through the issue of a letter of comfort.

By March, 1979, an additional loan was secured by a letter of comfort and an increase in cash requirements by September, 1979, resulted in a loan guarantee authorized by Appropriation Act No. 1, 1980-81.

By April, 1981, the company identified further cash requirements and Treasury Board recommended an additional letter of comfort to be issued and replaced upon Parliamentary approval of further loan guarantees. In September, 1981, Treasury Board again recommended further interim letters of comfort to be replaced upon Parliamentary approval of loan guarantees. This authority was obtained in Appropriation Act No. 4, 1981-82, with the result that the interim letters of comfort will either be replaced by the guarantees or will be allowed to expire.

Currently, there are two outstanding letters of comfort for Canadair supporting two loans totalling $130 million (U.S.). The total value of loans, either guaranteed or supported by letters of comfort, are within the Parliamentary authorized $1.35 billion guarantee ceiling.

There is one other letter of comfort outstanding, bringing the total to three at this time. This letter of comfort was issued to support a $150 million loan in Canadian funds of Ridley Terminals Limited, a company 90 per cent owned by National Harbours Board. The letter of comfort was issued on September 14, 1982, and is currently in the process of being replaced.

I hope this clarifies this issue. It is not this Government's intention nor practice to use letters of comfort—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but the time allotted to him has expired.

CROWN CORPORATIONS—CANADAIR—MANUFACTURE OF EXECUTIVE JET AIRCRAFT—GOVERNMENT FUNDING. (B) GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on June 15 last, I had occasion to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr Bussières), who reports to the House for the Minister of State for Social Development, with respect to Canadair Limited and certain moneys that had been transferred on that date to Canadair in the amount of $240 million.

Your Honour will recall that in December of 1982 the House advanced $200 million to Canadair. In June of this year we advanced $240 million. Of course, following the question placed on June 15, there were a number of meetings with the Public Accounts Committee where Canadair attempted to explain itself through the new owner of that company or the purported owner of that company or the imputed owner of that company, an organization calling itself the Canada Development Investment Corporation, a corporation that has yet to receive any Parliamentary authority, but one authored and operated by one Joel Bell of National Energy Board fame.

All of the evidence brought to the Public Accounts Committee indicated that we had only given a short term transfusion to Canadair in June. We gave it $240 million then. Mr. Bell admitted that the money was virtually all spent when the Corporation received it and that indeed, by this fall sometime, he would have to bring the leukemia victim back before Parliament for another transfusion.

Therefore, it is with that in mind that I was prompted to ask the question of the Minister of National Revenue, because what is presently being done at Canadair, in terms of the losing operations of that Corporation, involves the building of executive jet aircraft. That, of course, is a real matter of social policy. That executive jet aircraft should be built is clearly important to help those less fortunate corporate executives go back and forth across the country. I say back and forth across the country because unless the new 601 carries only four passengers, it cannot get beyond across the country. It is designed to carry 20 people. But with four aboard it can go as far as the U.K.

● (1800)

Speaking to the social policy, I thought it would be fair to inquire in the House, and perhaps get an explanation from the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary, as to why we should spend $25 million a copy to build aircraft that cannot be sold, but we do put a price tag on them of $11 million. The subsidy really for the social purpose of Canadair is only somewhere between $14 million and $15 million a copy. Of course, that also would bring into mind the social purpose when one examines the new sales of Canadair this year. Indeed, by June Canadair had yet to sell a new airplane and make a new sale for 1983. I suspect Canadair has still not made a new sale. The effect is that while we operate this company and while we would this aircraft and while we have the social responsible aircraft flying around—

Mr. Blais: Canadair will not sell any if you go on saying what you are saying.

Mr. Blenkarn: —as white tails which are rented from the Pepsi-Cola people, we have a situation where they cannot be sold for what they cost to produce.

Somewhere along the line it is imperative that we receive in the House some accounting from this Government; some social accounting perhaps. This corporation has been successful building water bombers and drones. It has good contracts to make parts for the Boeing 767. It makes parts for the F-18, I believe, and it has other possible work it can do. But in terms of the Challenger program it has been a total financial catrastrophe. Yet even the other day the new president of this corporation spoke glowingly and optimistically of the market for the Challenger. We must know, Sir, having put in $200 million in December, $240 million in June, and we are likely to be called on again for another transfusion, where are we going? Where is this corporation going? Where is the Government going with the taxpayers' money? It is the responsibility of the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary, or whomever is going to answer for the Government, to give us some answers today. This situation cannot go on forever. We must have a rationalization of the aerospace companies owned by this Government and managed by this Government. The Government presumably has confidence in the management though most of us on this side do not. Except for the president, the management is in place. The Government presumably has confidence in the directors even though most of them are political friends of Government. They have all been reappointed. The Government has the matter in its control. The Government must answer.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised and dismayed by my hon. friend's incessant attacks on Canadair and its Challenger executive jet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bloomfield: I only wish he could have attended a recent Canadair seminar for the people who own and fly this outstanding aircraft. He would have found a confident gathering. Canadair's customers are happy with the aircraft and Canadair is on the comeback trail.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bloomfield: No one denies that Canadair has had its problems. But that is no reason to lose our nerve and abandon our effort as a country to participate in this important industry. What we have to do, at least what we on this side of the House believe we have to do, is strengthen the industry, improve its management, lower its operating costs and pursue profits.

● (1805)

Indeed the plane has cost more than the Government was told would be needed, but that money has been spent and the issue now is to get back what we can. CDIC believes that the Challenger will play a major role in Canadair's future. Challenger customers are confident as well. A headline in The Gazette earlier this month declared: "Customers Give Challenger Jet Top Marks". After interviewing users the reporter wrote, "the people who fly the plane say they love it". A similar note was sounded in the September issue of the Business and Commercial Aviation magazine which carried a lengthy cover story on operator assessments of the Challenger.

For the record, the cost to Canadair of building a Challenger today is less than the price at which the plane is being offered for sale today. This covers all costs except interest, but interest costs will occur whether or not the plane is built. I challenge not only the Hon. Member opposite, but his new leader as well, to declare whether under those circumstances they believe production should be ended. Instead of playing the game of innuendo, why do they not have the courage to say where they stand? Moreover, let me remind them that the biggest impediment to future sales of the Challenger is the doubt created in the marketplace when the Canadian media and Opposition Members attack the plane. This makes prospective customers uneasy.

The reasons for government support of Canadair are clear and straightforward. Canada has to export to live. Canada needs high productivity. Canada needs jobs. The Challenger plane is largely exported, earning United States dollars for us to pay for the other things we import. Canadair is a high technology, high productivity company. It provides thousands of jobs at good pay for skilled Canadians. Does my hon. friend opposite want to destroy all this? Is this the policy of the Official Opposition?

At the Committee hearings Hon. Members obtained a wealth of information. In addition they have been promised a further report from CDIC before the end of the year on the future plans for the Challenger program. There have been problems at Canadair, but the situation is steadily improving. It is unfortunate my hon. friend is so fixed in his antagonism to the Challenger and to Canadair.

ENERGY—SALES OF WESTERN COAL IN CENTRAL CANADA. (B) REQUEST FOR COST STUDY OF COAL USE

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, it has been almost three months since I raised a question in the House concerning the use of western Canadian coal to supply eastern Canadian markets. On June 16 I pointed out to the House, and specifically to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), that Canada imports approximately 16 million tonnes of coal every year from the United States. We import all that coal despite the fact that we are one of the world's great coal producers. We pay an enormous price for that imported coal. Each year a billion dollars flows out of the country to pay for that imported coal. Along with that billion dollars we lose approximately 30,000 jobs in Canada.

In return for that enormous loss of jobs, what do we get? We get massive pollution problems because imported American coal has eight times the sulphur content of Canadian coal. This extra sulphur goes directly into acid rain. In spite of these enormous costs and consequences, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources refused even to give the question a serious answer. Instead we were treated to the stupid response that Canada's rail facilities could not handle both coal and wheat at the same time, something he said changing the Crow rate would improve.

If the Minister knew his geography, he would know that the main problems of the rail transportation system are in western Canada. In southeastern British Columbia and in Alberta one has to travel large distances before one hits the main traffic of the railway system. This would not affect rail transportation in any way whatsoever.

I gave the Minister notice of the question. If he had tried to find out something about it, he would have discovered that the change in the Crow rate would have absolutely nothing to do with shipping coal east on southern railway lines. He might even have found out that the Japanese, one of our major customers, have demanded that their Canadian suppliers absorb cuts in both the sales of coal and its price. I would have thought the possibility of 30,000 new jobs in Canada and the saving of $1 billion flowing out of this country would have been worth at least that much work on the part of the Minister. Perhaps, because most of these jobs would be created in western Canada, the Minister, like his colleagues, simply does not care.

● (1810)

On behalf of all Canadians, particularly the unemployed miners in western Canada, I again ask whether the Minister will have his Department carry out an extensive study to determine the feasibility of using western coal to supply eastern Canadian markets as a replacement for imported American coal? Will the Minister ensure that such a study includes the very real costs of increased acid rain as a result of using imported American coal?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Hon. Member I want to assure him that I share his concern that quantities of western coal are not being utilized in central Canada. I point out to him that there is a large body of coal in eastern Canada, namely the Maritimes, which would like to find its way to market in central Canada as well.

Unfortunately the Hon. Member refuses, intentionally or otherwise, to accept some of the arguments which are economic in substance. Earlier today we heard from the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), who at one point in his career was the Premier of Nova Scotia. On numerous occasions he tried diligently to attempt to get eastern coal into the markets of central Canada. Unfortunately, he was not successful, primarily because of the economics of shipping the coal from eastern to central Canada. Likewise, the argument holds for shipping coal from western Canada to central Canada.

Due to the size and geography of this country, Canada has long been a coal trader. During 1982, Canada exported 16 million tonnes of coal valued at $1.2 billion and imported 15.7 million tonnes at approximately $1.2 billion. While Canada is currently a net coal exporter both in terms of volume and value of coal, exports have been forecasted to grow in the future and imports are expected to drop.

I wish to assure the Hon. Member that I will take under advisement his suggestion, and pursue it with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). However, I do not want the opportunity to go by without saying that we have already looked at the various possibilities. The Hon. Member must remember that Ontario Hydro is not owned or operated by the Government of Canada, but by the Province of Ontario. It is they in their wisdom who will determine whether they will purchase coal from western Canada, in his instance, or in my instance, from eastern Canada.

The Hon. Member makes a valid point that the Government should consider re-examining this. I assure him I will raise this point with the Minister. If anything can be done, I am sure this government will attempt to do it in order to assist not only the people of western Canada but of eastern Canada. As he knows, it would provide much in terms of job creation at this time in our economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.15 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, September 14, 1983

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1405)

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CONDEMNATION OF SOVIET UNION POLICIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the avowed objective of Soviet communism is world domination. The Soviet bureaucracy does not care how long it takes or what means it uses to achieve that end. One tactic is fifth column activities. For instance, while the Soviets have been testing and piling up missiles, their fifth columns have been hypocritically and cleverly inducing as many people as possible in the NATO countries to protest the building and testing of missiles. People sincerely interested in peace have been cleverly induced into supporting this Soviet planned unilateral disarmament.

The Soviets have tripled the number of missiles that NATO countries possess, and have been testing and testing, until now their aim is 90 per cent improved over what it was two years ago. Their accuracy was tested when the Korean passenger plane was destroyed with one of their missiles and 269 innocent people, including ten Canadians, were murdered.

Yes, let us work for peace. Let us do everything possible to avoid a nuclear war, but let us be realistic. Canadians do not want a nuclear conflict. Canadians do want a world-wide reduction of nuclear armaments, a reduction that will apply to all nations and one that will be balanced, mutual, and verifiable.

* * *

BILINGUALISM

EROSION OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE RIGHTS IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I was extremely pleased yesterday with the readiness of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to meet with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of the NDP to prepare an all-Party resolution requesting the Legislature of Manitoba to entrench official bilingualism in that Province.

I fully support that initiative and hope that it proceeds quickly. On the other hand, I would like to remind the House that minority language rights are still threatened and under attack in other Provinces in this country.

In Quebec, my Province, the present government will not agree to entrench rights, especially the opting in to Section 23(1)(a) regarding linguistic minority education, which is in the Constitution Act of 1981. Over the years this same government has continually eroded minority language rights in that Province. Let us move ahead in Manitoba, but let us not forget that minority language groups in other Provinces have problems as well, and give them some consideration too.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

PLIGHT OF INDUSTRY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, Canadian farmers face extinction. B.C. newspapers have headlined the distressed condition of agriculture in that Province. A thousand Okanagan fruit growers have demonstrated their frustration by rallying with hundreds of tractors, clogging highways on Labour Day.

The cry at the farmers' rally, repeated by the B.C. Minister of Agriculture, seeks imposition of temporary tariffs on imported fruits and vegetables when there is a domestic surplus. The most obvious response thus far from Canada is in a notice that Okanagan farm organizations have been charged under the Federal Combines Investigation Act. This extremely questionable action imposes an additional financial burden on farmers facing personal ruin.

Underlining the crisis, the area August jobless rate reached 14.2 per cent, up from 11.7 per cent a year ago. With unfair foreign competition threatening the demise of the last remaining fruit canning plant in the Okanagan, and with agriculture in disarray, this statistic can only worsen unless immediate action is taken.

Farmers are perplexed to read in their newspapers headlines such as "Auto import curbs hit local dealers". These farmers are simply asking the Government of Canada for treatment equitable to that provided auto and textile workers. They demand that government commit itself to the survival of agriculture, and act in their defence.

S.O. 21

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY ON WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, there is a particularly iniquitous piece of legislation being considered by a committee of this House, namely, the proposed Bill that will bring about, if passed, changes to the Crow rate. Up to this point the Conservative Party of Canada has been prepared to accept the principle of changes in the Crow rate, something that the New Democratic Party has consistently opposed.

It was remarkably refreshing to learn last night that once again the Conservatives have done a 180 degree reversal in policy and are now prepared, for at least three years, to leave the Crow rate as it is. We hope that after three years passes they will make another three years' extension. We will remain consistent in that position on that issue.

Now that they have made this change, we would like them to support the other arguments of the NDP on this Bill, namely, to split it up into three sections. One dealing with rates—let us get rid of that. The second is on the important question of upgrading rail and port facilities. We should proceed with that immediately. The next portion concerns the resolution of the ownership of an important 50,000 acres of coal land that lie in British Columbia. We in this Party say that that land should go to British Columbia, and we want Tory support on that as well.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry, but the Hon. Member's time is up.

* * *

● (1410)

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—POSITION OF THE PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, yesterday evening, the Progressive Conservative Party made another about-face on its position on the Crow's Nest Pass rate. On May 12, 1983, the Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and Progressive Conservative critic for transport said, among other things, that the members of his Party had always taken the position that improvements to the existing statutory rate should be made and that he realized something had to be done to improve the situation. In the same statement on May 12, he also said that most producers were prepared to pay more than the statutory freight rate. Finally, he made a proposal that farmers should be allowed to decide whether payment should go to the railroads or to themselves. Yesterday evening, however, the same Member for Vegreville, speaking on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, made a proposal supporting a return to the status quo. This is contrary to what I read in a letter the New Leader of the Progressive Party sent me in July, in which he supported the position taken by the Member for Vegreville on May 12, 1983, in this House.

In June 1983, in Terre de chez nous, Mario Dumais wrote an editorial under the following headline:

"One party, three policies".

Madam Speaker, from now on, we should say: One party, four policies!"

* * *

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

LACK OF NEWFOUNDLAND REPRESENTATION IN CABINET

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I rise to express on behalf of the people of Newfoundland our profound sense of outrage over the events that have transpired since the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) was so shoddily fired from his post as Newfoundland's representative in the Cabinet. Arising out of the statement in the House by the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) on September 12, and the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) incredible admission in the House yesterday, we now know that the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's was appointed to the Cabinet without the normal security check.

The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), prior to making appointments to his Cabinet, submitted a list to the RCMP and the Department of National Revenue. It was only after clearance by these two agencies that appointments were made. That such a practice was not followed in the case of the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's is, to put it mildly, incredible.

However, the result of this "Mickey Mouse" performance is that Newfoundland is not represented in Cabinet at a most critical time in its history. The fishing industry is in a state of bankruptcy and chaos and talks on the offshore have broken down. These problems are exacerbated by the fact that Newfoundland officially has one in five unemployed, the highest unemployment rate by far of any province.

This is a scandalous and unacceptable situation for which the Prime Minister and his colleagues stand condemned, not only by the people of Newfoundland but by the people of Canada.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DELAY IN DELIVERY OF PENSION CHEQUES TO WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I would like to alert Members of Parliament to a very serious example of blatant discrimination that occurs against western Canadians, more specifically against war veterans and their families who live in certain areas of western Canada.

Many war veterans and their families depend upon the War Veterans Allowance, disability pensions, and widows' pensions to meet mortgage, utility and other financial obligations. However, in areas of western Canada these cheques regularly arrive late. In most parts of Canada war veterans and their families receive their federal cheques within two or three days of mailing, yet in certain parts of western Canada the mails result in delays of up to one week for hundreds of veterans and their families. The anxiety, frustration, and in some instances fear that result from these repeatedly late cheques are both unnecessary and unacceptable.

These veterans were prepared to die for our country, and many have suffered for many years as a result of their service. These veterans and their families deserve better recognition and treatment. I urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Bennett) to end this act of blatant discrimination, and I encourage all Members of the House of Commons to bring pressure on the Minister and his Department to right this very serious wrong which is being perpetrated against Canadian war veterans who have made their homes in western Canada.

* * *

● (1415)

MULTICULTURALISM

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADA HERITAGE DAY

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, in 1974 on the first Monday in August, the Hon. Horst Schmid, then Minister of Culture in the Alberta Government, officially proclaimed the first Heritage Day in Alberta.

This multicultural event has exploded in Alberta as a day and weekend of celebration of the music, the dancing, the dress, and the food of the various ethnic groups which now form the Alberta society.

This year in Edmonton alone nearly 500,000 people attended the two day heritage festival held at Hawrelak Park to enjoy the music, dance, costumes, and food of the 52 ethnic groups that participated. It was a wonderful expression of the multicultural roots and customs of Canada's diversified peoples and their unique Canadianism.

The time has now come to make the heritage festival a national event. Indeed, it is my intention to bring forth before Parliament a Private Member's Bill to declare the first Monday in August an official national holiday designated as Canada Heritage Day.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TAXES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that the number of unemployed in Canada last month was 1,365,000. He will also realize that the recovery is far from vigorous and it may falter. The recession is still with us.

In view of the fact that Statistics Canada has reported that the incomes of Canadians are shrinking because those incomes have only risen 4.8 per cent in the last year while the inflation rate has been 5.6 per cent, and in view of the need for consumers to spend more in order to encourage employment and investment in growth, will the Minister now eliminate the tax increases and levies that he imposed on the consumer in his April budget? This includes the Canadian ownership special levy, or grab, that he is continuing to levy on oil products, which will take $400 million more from Canadian consumers this year and $900 million more next year which the Minister wishes to turn over to Dome. Will the Minister now announce that he is reversing those impositions on the consumer in order to help the recovery?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all I should like to wish my critic well in his new functions. I am sure we will have a pleasant time together over the next while. I should like to wish him well in that position, for a very long time indeed.

I should like to say to the Hon. Member that our 1983 forecast is to the effect that the real personal incomes of Canadians will grow next year, and will continue to grow significantly. It is true that they will not grow significantly in 1983 and, indeed, that personal disposable income will be somewhat less than inflation, as has already been the case for part of this year.

I would remind my hon. friend, however, that those who have analysed the situation have indicated that the provincial taxes this year have increased much more than the federal taxes. A large part of the problem for consumers arises from the very significant increases in provincial taxes in the provincial budgets.

If my hon. friend goes to the April budget he will find that there have been practically no federal tax increases this year. If he reads the budget he will find, on the contrary, that there have been measures to alleviate taxes in several respects. The federal tax load for this year is not increasing in a way comparative to that of the Provinces under their various provincial budgets.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I have the impression that we are in the federal House and not in one of the ten provincial legislatures. We can do nothing about what the provinces do with their tax rates.

By the way, I should like to thank the Minister for his pleasantness. I like to choose my own dancing partners, however, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1420)

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO CONSUMERS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister, who just stepped all over my foot. In your budget of April, you did not index the child tax credit threshold which is going to give you more revenue this year. You did not index the tax exemption for dependent children. You put a sales tax on cable TV. You have increased the excise tax on alcohol by 13.3 per cent, and tobacco about 15.8 per cent, and you are still collecting $400 million more for Dome Petroleum.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: My question—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Order please. I wonder if the Hon. Member is ever going to get to a question. The first question was terribly long. I allowed it because it was the lead question. However, apart from that the Hon. Member has to learn to be briefer.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, as I was saying, my question is this: will the Minister reverse these steps, to assist the consumer? Will he stop heading for the "hypocrite of the year award" with a 15 per cent increase in the tobacco tax when he has a 6 and 5 program which he is supposed to be carrying out?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to let my hon. friend choose his dancing partners, as long as he lets me call the tune.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I feel the question still deserves an attempt at an honest answer in spite of the allegation by the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, has forgotten to refer to the fact that in the budget of last April we increased our expenditures very significantly in order to help alleviate the situation of the unemployed. We have started a national recovery program which means $4.8 billion of expenditures, half is being used to help the private sector get back on its feet and hiring Canadians, and half is being used in direct government programs of job creation, whether through the launching of a number of national projects across the country or through job-creation programs.

These projects are going on now, and they show up in terms of the number of jobs that have been created. As I indicated yesterday, we are in this country, and have been since last November creating jobs faster than any other industrialized country, including the United States. That is a fact and we want to accelerate, if possible, that process so that we will be able to alleviate the difficult problems which many, many Canadians are facing.

Mr. Crosbie: This Government has been calling the tune for 20 years and the Canadian people are paying the piper, with 1,365,000 of them unemployed.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, yes. You want the question; you will get the question.

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): When is the Minister going to take steps to help the Canadian consumer, particularly in view of the fact that his deficit figures, we are told, are going to be considerably better than has been indicated? And when is he going to give us the new, latest, more modern deficit figures which we have been promised?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this must be the first time I have ever heard a Conservative say that the deficit of the government will be less than I expected. Last year, they were going on nonstop about the fact that the figures I announced were much lower than the actual deficit. This year, they have decided to take another tack. The main thing is that the beneficial effects of the measures we took in the last budget are now making themselves felt. We brought inflation down more than we expected. We are now creating more jobs than was forecast, the Canadian economy is growing faster than we said it would and short-term interest rates in Canada are lower than in the United States. In fact, the bank rate is now at the same level in Canada and the United States, which is something we have been unable to achieve for a very long time, including the period during which the Hon. Member was Minister of Finance, which fortunately lasted only a few months.

* * *

● (1425)

[English]

INDUSTRY

PROJECTED DISAPPEARANCE OF EMPLOYMENT IN MANUFACTURING

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Economic Development. The Government report which was leaked this summer, called "The Rocky Road to the 1990s", said that one-quarter to one-half of the existing jobs in manufacturing were going to disappear by 1990. The report sets out a number of impediments to job creation and growth: the Foreign Investment Review Agency, the National Energy Program, a restrictive tax framework and excessive regulation—a litany of government policy errors in the last 15 years—things we have resolutely opposed on this side of the House for those same years.

Can the Minister give us any hope that the Government recognizes that these massive policy errors are going to be turned around in order to achieve the three million to four million jobs the same report says must be created by 1990?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the document to which the Hon. Member makes reference indeed was leaked and became quite celebrated. It stimulated, I think, a good deal of healthy debate in the community, with respect to the opportunities as well as the challenges which confront society as we move into a new technological era. There are issues raised in that report designed to do that very thing, stimulate debate on some of these issues, but that is only one aspect of the report, the part to which the Hon. Member makes reference.

As I have mentioned a number of times, it was in fact not a study; it simply brought together much of the conventional wisdom of the day and the questions society must confront, issues, I might add, which we hope to air in detail at our Canada Tomorrow Conference which will be held in early November, and which I hope a number of Members on the opposite side of the House will attend.

We see the future as providing enormous opportunities, but at the same time we have to recognize we are going through a period of adjustment. That paper raises those issues, and I am glad to see that the Conservative Party, too, is finally addressing some of these matters which are of great concern to some of the people currently in the work place. But we feel those fears are exaggerated and that there are opportunities. Yesterday my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, made reference to those opportunities on the one hand as against some of the—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That answer is much too long.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, it is hard to imagine any healthy debate from the same tired old crowd who have been there for the last ten years and have not changed at all in that period.

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH MICRO-COMPUTER FACILITY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, let me be more specific about something which has been in front of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for the last year. Wang Laboratories have been negotiating without success for over a year for the establishment of a micro-computer facility in Canada. They have not had any success at all because of the DREE/ITC merger, and what has been described by one of the Wang officials as policy cast in jello, and a lack of urgency in addressing the proposal. Will the Minister commit to the House that he will act on this proposal with some sense of urgency to bring much needed jobs and new technology to Canada?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I will take note of that question on behalf of the responsible Minister. I would not rely at all upon the preamble, and the assumptions and statements made by the applicant company. To my knowledge the applications are treated expeditiously and effectively and to the satisfaction of the constituency that the Department serves. Nevertheless, I will raise the particular case with my colleague.

* * *

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NOT PRESS FORWARD WITH LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General who is aware of the extraordinary and unprecedented opposition to his proposed security legislation, from civil libertarians, to Attorneys General, to chiefs of police, and now, after months of silence, we even have a few brave Conservative Members of Parliament, much to their Leader's horror, who have expressed some opposition to this legislation.

In the face of the growing opposition to this police state legislation, will the Minister finally acknowledge that this project is in fact totally discredited, and allow the Bill simply to die on the Order Paper?

• (1430)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Far from it, Madam Speaker. The Bill is now before a committee of the Senate, which is giving it serious attention. The Hon. Member himself had an opportunity, I believe, to appear before the Senate committee.

I look forward to the work of the committee, to its report. I can assure the Hon. Member and the House that the Bill will not be dropped, but, rather, that the Government will respond in due course to the recommendations of the Senate committee.

SURVEILLANCE OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General, who should be aware of the fact that any Bill which subverts the rule of law and denies parliamentary accountability will not get through this Parliament without a very tough legislative battle.

How can the Minister possibly justify the inclusion in the Bill of Clause 18, one which would allow the new Security Service to spy on Canadian citizens who, by the Minister's own admission, pose no threat to national security whatsoever?

How can the Minister possibly justify the inclusion in the legislation of such a draconian and unwarranted provision?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I reject the Hon. Member's characterization of the Bill. I am looking forward to the very sensible and healthy debate that is taking place in the Senate. I think the Senate has distinguished itself by not having any of the rhetoric of the type in which the Hon. Member has been constantly engaged since the Bill was brought forward. I think that he is way off base, and the work that is taking place in the Senate demonstrates that fact.

* * *

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF WRITS OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Today the Law Reform Commission released a report recommending the long overdue abolition of writs of assistance and their replacement with telephone warrants or "dial-a-writs" which still, by the way, pose a very serious threat to civil liberties.

Pending the early tabling of a Bill, as promised by his colleague, the Minister of Justice, to abolish writs of assistance, will the Minister at least immediately withdraw all outstanding writs of assistance in the hands of RCMP officers?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that the writs of assistance are required, until some other measure is introduced, for a wide range of drug investigations and operations. I recognize the weaknesses of the writs of assistance, but until some satisfactory substitute is produced I am not prepared to see them abandoned by the RCMP. I think that the war the RCMP is waging against drug trafficking in this country is too important to be dealt with on the kind of political basis that the Hon. Member is suggesting.

I appreciate the good suggestions of the Law Reform Commission, but until they are translated into sensible legislation that is acceptable to this House I am not prepared to see drug traffickers profiting from the absence of effective measures for dealing with them.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SWEDISH PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

Madam Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of a delegation from the Swedish Parliamentary Standing Committee on Cultural Affairs, which is headed by Mr. Ingrid Sundberg, its Vice-Chairman.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

SMALL BUSINESS

REPORTED DECLINE IN JOB OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Small Business. While the Liberals, who form the Government, were busily bailing out such corporate giants as Canadair, Dome, Massey Ferguson, Maislin, and others, a recent survey concluded that the small business sector was losing between 350,000 and 400,000 jobs a year, more than all other sectors combined.

First, is the Minister aware of these facts? Second, in fairness, has he recommended to Cabinet, as we would, realistic incentive oriented job creation programs aimed specifically at small business, the largest potential employer in Canada?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism): Madam Speaker, I think that the questioner should be appraised of the fact that 65 per cent of the new jobs being created in this country at present are in the small business sector, and that is largely due to the policies of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, that answer is an absolute joke, because the facts speak for themselves.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact—and I repeat my original question—that a recent survey indicated that between 350,000 and 400,000 jobs were lost in the small business sector, and I called it the largest potential employing sector in Canada, has the Minister made any recommendations to Cabinet for realistic incentive oriented employment programs, as we would? I asked him that question. He did not answer it. I repeat it. Now please answer that question.

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism): Madam Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that I believe in small business. I believe in initiative. I believe in hard work; I believe in the work ethic, and so does this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that I will be standing up for small business in this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIVE PEOPLES

NECESSITY FOR SKILLS TRAINING

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The native peoples, as the Minister well knows, experience the highest rate of unemployment of any group in Canada. They need skills training, and they need jobs. The Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s dealt very specifically with this problem. As a matter of fact it made 11 recommendations in this area.

First, is the Minister aware of the specific recommendations made by the Task Force? If so, which recommendations does he support? Finally, has he had discussions with his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, with regard to the implementation of any of the recommendations contained in the report?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, may I take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member on his appointment as the critic for the Department for which I am responsible. I wish him all the best.

I would say that there has been a great deal done by the Government in collaboration with the Minister responsible for employment and immigration. For one thing, several millions of dollars were set aside and fenced off out of a recent NEED Program to create employment opportunities for the Indian people, and they took full advantage of that, by a marked stimulation, for instance, in the employment generation through the housing area.

As well, in his budget a few months ago, the Minister of Finance indicated an additional $40 million added to the NEED moneys, which then totalled over $60 million in new moneys this year for housing over and above the amount that was already there, $80 million, which almost doubled the entire moneys spent on Indian housing within one year. That created a tremendous number of jobs within the Indian community, as well as addressing one of the most serious social problems facing the Indian people, that being housing which is not adequate in terms of isolated areas where water, sewers and infrastructure and things of that kind are required.

In addition, we now of course have a Minister responsible for the Economic Development Fund, with offices set up in Winnipeg, and now already beginning to consider loans under the Economic Development Fund. Applications from the natives will be coming in very shortly and, I think, decisions made.

Therefore, when one combines all these initiatives with many of the other policies that the Indian people cannot—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I could have gone on forever, John.

Madam Speaker: Ministers will have to make an effort to be more brief. These answers are really too long.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I appreciate getting my briefing on the floor of the House of Commons. The Minister recited, chapter and verse, what he is doing. He did not answer the question. I asked if he was specifically aware of the recommendations of the Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s. None of the subjects which he discussed here on the floor of the House were referred to in this particular report. Specifically, I am asking what recommendations from this report with regard to skills training and the education of the native peoples he has come to grips with.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree that the essence of all those recommendations involves the tremendous emphasis which must now be placed on skills training for native peoples so that they can participate on an equal footing with the rest of Canadians in job opportunities as they open up. I have just enumerated some of the policies that we are now adopting. I could refer to others, in the sense of grant moneys for retraining slots in close proximity to hydro-carbon development. In the Territories we are expending $20 million in training for natives. All is in keeping with the spirit and essence of all those recommendations to which the Hon. Member has referred. I am prepared to go through each one and send him a progress report.

* * *

● (1440)

[Translation]

COPYRIGHT

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION IN FORTHCOMING SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Madam Speaker, I would like to take advantage of the presence in the House of a group of Swedish parliamentarians, members of the Committee on Culture, to direct my question to the Minister of Communications.

The Minister is well aware of my abiding interest in copyright matters, and I would like to ask the Minister whether the legislation to revise the Copyright Act will soon be tabled in Parliament, and whether, by any chance, Canadian artists can expect to see this new legislation in the next Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as you did yourself, the Hon. Member mentioned the presence in the House of the Parliamentary Committee on Culture from Sweden, and I am delighted to see that they are visiting Canada during this international communications year.

The copyright question is clearly an issue that today has international ramifications. It is a matter of concern to many countries, which have started a thorough review of their copyright legislation because of the enormous technological advances that are endangering the author's copyright. The same is true in Canada, and not long ago, I had a chance to discuss this matter quite thoroughly with my colleague, the new Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and we shall very shortly be submitting a joint position on this question to our Cabinet colleagues.

* * *

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR COVERAGE OF PART-TIME WORKERS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Commission of Inquiry into part-time work has recently confirmed that part-time jobs are increasing as full-time jobs are being phased out and disappearing. Seventy-two per cent of these part-time workers are women, many raising their children in poverty. They earn low wages, receive few benefits, and lack job security. Many do not even have unemployment insurance. Since the Minister apparently cannot provide full-time jobs, will he at least amend the unemployment insurance regulations to cover part-time workers, as the Commission recommends?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I have not read the report in its entirety but I have looked at a summary of it. I am conscious of the recommendations that have been made to us. I am taking them under advisement and looking at them very seriously.

In some instances there may be some simplifications and exaggerations in the report of the present situation. I am extremely concerned about the possible use of part-time employees by employers in a way which does not provide the kind of basic protection that people employed in Canadian society should have.

We will be examining the report with some considerable care to see if we can act upon recommendations that it makes.

* * *

CANADA LABOUR CODE

APPLICATION TO PART-TIME WORKERS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour my supplementary question is directed to his Parliamentary Secretary. Last spring the previous Minister of Labour refused to answer my question on the necessity to change the Canada Labour Code as it applies to part-time workers until the Commission on part-time work had reported. Will the Minister now amend the Labour Code to extend protection to all part-time workers under federal jurisdiction? As well, will he remove restrictions that deny part-time work to workers in the Government and which denies them the right to unionize?

[Translation]

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, the Commission's report was published on Wednesday, September 7 of this year. The Minister has received the report but would like to postpone any specific comments on the Commission's conclusions and its recommendations until he has had a chance to examine the report in greater detail. We know that the Commission identified a number of major problems concerning part-time workers, the most important one being the absence of statutory definitions and also of provisions relating to pension and social benefits. The Minister will therefore proceed to examine these points in detail.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

SUBSIDIZATION OF FUEL USED BY AEROFLOT PLANES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Under the National Energy Program's oil import compensation program, Canadian taxpayers have been subsidizing Russian passenger planes which land at Mirabel and buy fuel from Petro-Canada for the return flight to Moscow. Can the Minister tell us whether Canadian taxpayers will continue to subsidize these Russian planes after the 60-day embargo on Aeroflot flights is lifted, considering the fact that ten Canadians were among the 269 innocent people shot out of the skies by the Russians?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I will look into the question. Of course, there are no Russian planes coming to Canada for the next 60 days. What the Hon. Member is asking after that is to keep discriminating or treating the Russians in another fashion than the other airlines, forever. I do not know if it will be six months or forever. It is a question we must look into. However, the embargo is for 60 days and there will be no Russian planes coming into Canada, so the problem is not material at this time.

Miss Carney: I would suggest that a country which shoots commercial aircraft out of the sky possibly could be subjected to special treatment.

POSSIBLE AVENUE OF COMPENSATION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, considering the fact that the Russians are apparently reluctant to pay compensation for the deaths of these Canadians and others on board the downed Korean aircraft, is there some way in which compensation could be extracted through higher fuel prices, such as the oil export charge on Russian planes refuelling at Mirabel?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we certainly cannot do that for the next 60 days.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—RESPONSE TO REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR RELATIVES OF VICTIMS IN DOWNED KOREAN AIRLINER

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He may know that the Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. Kornienko, has stated that there will be no compensation payable with respect to the downing of the KAL 007 aircraft. Mr. Kornienko added, "I view the question as irrelevant."

Would the Minister indicate to the House if there has been any response to the note that was delivered to the Soviets and, in the event that the Soviets have said no to compensation, as appears to be the case, what further steps will the Minister be taking to guarantee that there will in fact be compensation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member's interpretation of the Soviet spokesman's statement may not be fully accurate. The Deputy Foreign Minister said that compensation should be paid, but not by the Soviet Union. What I have read is an acknowledgement by the Soviet Union that there is a liability, an obligation, that must be met.

I do not think it is unusual to have this response because we had a similar experience some time ago with respect to a claim affecting the Soviet Union when, in the initial stages, the Soviet Union refused to accept any responsibility whatsoever. I never thought that the Soviet Union would come forward very quickly and acknowledge a responsibility and express a willingness to provide compensation. We intend to continue our efforts, and hope to meet the same success as we did in the past.

Mr. Stevens: Surely the Minister is not suggesting to the House that there is any other nation responsible for the downing of this jet than the Soviet nation?

REQUEST THAT CONTENTS OF DIPLOMATIC NOTE BE TABLED

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, would the Minister now table the contents of the note that was delivered to the Soviet Union? There are many precedents for tabling such notes, including the tabling by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead of the note with respect to Afghanistan.

Second, would he indicate specifically to the House what the further steps were which he referred to Monday night, when he said that he would be taking further steps to secure compensation with respect to this matter?

● (1450)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, with respect to further steps, we have begun and will continue consultation with the bereaved families on the question of compensation. I think that process has to be undertaken, no matter how unpleasant it is, particularly for the bereaved families. Once we have completed that process we intend to make a claim in a single presentation to the Soviet Government. That is our bilateral approach. Other nations as well, including the United States, have indicated that they will be making a claim; the South Korean Government has done the same thing. I believe that we will all have to proceed bilaterally and keep pressing forward the legitimacy of this particular compensation claim.

I want to correct the Hon. Member if he concluded from my statement that I inferred that the Soviet Union had no responsibility or that another nation or the airline had responsibility. It is quite the contrary. I believe the Soviet Union has full responsibility which it has not yet acknowledged. But what the Soviet Union did, or its spokesman, in the statement was to admit that compensation should be paid. In this case, if I read correctly, they viewed that it should be paid by somebody else, not the Soviet Union.

* * *

FISHERIES

COLLAPSE OF EAST COAST COMPANY

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Due to the recent financial collapse of a major East Coast fish company, can the Minister assure the House that the groundfish inventories presently held by the bank's receivers will not be dumped at lower than market prices on the existing market, and therefore avoid a fish price war among East Coast companies?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am happy to report to the Hon. Member that there is no evidence to suggest that fishing companies are engaged in a price war. I would even add that it would be most irresponsible to suggest that because this is what—

Mr. Crosbie: The Bank of Nova Scotia is.

Mr. De Bané: This is exactly what I think is most reprehensible, to give a signal to the buyers in the United States that our sellers are engaged in a price war. What an irresponsible statement.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): She asked the question.

Mr. De Bané: I am happy to report that our companies are behaving responsibly. When we saw a weakness in the market this summer, the Government immediately established a program to buy the cod stocks. The market has firmed up. At the moment the price of cod blocks in the United States is $1.16 to $1.18, while last year it was $1.08. At this moment our major competitors in Europe are short of stock. This means that there is also an upswing for Canadian exporters in the European market.

* * *

LABOUR RELATIONS

AUSTIN AIRWAYS LIMITED DISPUTE

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour whose office indicated he would be here this afternoon, I would like to direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. The Canadian Airline Employees Association approached him in late July to ask for ministerial consent to lay a charge of bad faith bargaining against Austin Airways Limited before the Canada Labour Relations Board. Prompt attention to this request might have prevented the necessity of a strike which began on August 23, a month after the Minister was contacted. Could he tell the House if the Minister intends to help resolve this situation by permitting the Canada Labour Relations Board to hear the charge and, if so, when will his consent be given?

[Translation]

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I wish to take the Hon. Member's question as notice, and I shall advise the Minister accordingly.

* * *

[English]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL PRICE FOR BARLEY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who speaks in this place for the Canadian Wheat Board. He will know that a poor corn crop in the United States has pushed up world barley prices by more than 30 per cent, which means that there is now room for an increase in the initial price for barley. Since higher initial payments will be received by farmers, there will be increased economic activity right across the country. Can the Minister tell the House if a recommendation for a higher initial price has been made to Cabinet, and when farmers will know whether that will be forthcoming?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question I would like to confirm that the Canadian Wheat Board brought forward an assessment about the changing conditions in the feed barley market. I am happy to report to the House that the market has substantially improved during the latter part of the summer, so we might be in a position to do a full assessment. However, I would not want to move on a matter as important as this until I have had the opportunity to consult with the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board who is presently abroad and should be back shortly. We will be meeting as soon as he returns. I hope we will be able to bring forward a recommendation to Cabinet so that we can take advantage of the new barley prices and give a further payment to farmers in that area.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

CANADA EMPLOYMENT CENTRES—POLICY AFFECTING FUNCTIONAL ILLITERATES

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Canada Employment Centres have established a policy that denies functional illiterates with grade six or less education admission into Manpower programs supported under the Skills Training Act. Why is this policy in place when there is absolutely nothing in the Act denying access to functional illiterates or people with below grade six education?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I will have to check and give him a detailed answer at a later date.

EXCLUSION OF INDIANS FROM EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, while the Minister is checking into that I wonder if he could also check into why treaty Indians are being denied access to academic upgrading programs in exactly the same way under the same Act, with the statement by Manpower officers that this is being covered under Indian Affairs funding, when Indian Affairs funding for Alberta is $85,000 to cover academic upgrading for 40,000 adult Indians? Could he also check into that?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I will check to see if the assertions of the Hon. Member are accurate, and reply to him directly.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL PRICE FOR BARLEY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who answers for the Canadian Wheat Board in the House. His previous answer causes great difficulty for farmers in western Canada because open market prices are so low. If the initial price is not increased directly, they will find that the profits they should be taking this year will not be there. I hope the Minister will say that he will act quickly in increasing the initial price so that western farmers can finally take advantage of some better markets.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I thought my answer clearly indicated our intention to take the Wheat Board proposal and act upon it with a recommendation to Cabinet as soon as I have had the opportunity to consult with the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I should point out at the same time that the Wheat Board has already extended the quota for feed barley on the export market, which provides a further delivery for farmers in that area. We are already taking action through the Wheat Board to respond to the improved conditions in the world market.

Mr. Schellenberger: It is important that that price increase come quickly.

FARMERS' CASH REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, since last year's barley pool is not closed yet, and since there will certainly be losses in that pool, will the Minister assure western farmers that they can in fact assume that the Government will fulfill its obligations under the Canadian Wheat Board Act to cover the loss so that they can get some desperately needed money into their hands from this year's better prices?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is no question that the opportunity to improve the financial position of farmers because of improved markets is one to which the Government will respond with a great deal of speed. The methods and techniques of doing it will be based upon the consultations I have and the recommendations we make to Cabinet, but there will be action in that area. I can assure the Hon. Member that it is a matter of extreme and critical importance to us, and that we will respond as soon as we possibly can.

* * *

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

TEXACO OIL COMPANY'S INCREASE IN PRICE OF GASOLINE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns the fact that Texaco, a major oil company, is reputed to be increasing the price for gasoline by between one cent and four cents per litre, or by as much as 18 cents per gallon, in the Ottawa area and throughout the Ottawa Valley. There are indications that other companies will likely follow suit. In fact, that is the history. Is the Minister aware of this? If not, will she make herself aware of it? Also, will she examine the question from the point of view of the Combines Act as to whether there is an offence and, as the protector for consumers, whether this increase is justified, as was done when examinations were made by her in other capacities?

• (1500)

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that such an investigation is under way. Because of the circumstances I am unable to comment, but I can assure the Hon. Member that my Department is keeping a very close watch in this area.

COST TO CONSUMERS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister. I have a supplementary question with respect to her position as the protector of consumers. If the increase is justified by the companies because of circumstances with which they satisfy the Minister, will the Minister consider consulting with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to see whether the surplus that exists in the Petroleum Compensation Fund, or the surplus which now exists in the Canadian Ownership Account with the Government, might be used to reduce the cost per litre to consumers of gasoline?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, of course I accept the Hon. Member's representation, but he is pre-supposing a judgment, and I am not in a position to make that judgment at the moment. Certainly, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I am very concerned about the fluctuation of gasoline prices in this country.

* * *

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, September 13, 1983, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR ONTARIO

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Kitchener (Mr. Lang), London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield), Guelph (Mr. Schroder), Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel), Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters), Red Deer (Mr. Towers), Calgary North (Mr. Wright), Ontario (Mr. Fennell), and Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C. 1970, to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario.

I would like to apologize to the Hon. Members who signed this objection since, through an administrative error, this objection was not announced to the House when it resumed its sitting on Monday. However, I am assured by the Hon. Member for Kitchener that these objections were filed within the time limit. Therefore, with the permission of the House, we will proceed with filing these objections. If the House agrees, I would suggest that we follow past practice and print the text of the objections as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am afraid that in the hubbub that followed the Question Period and while you were making that statement from the Chair, I did not hear it all. With the permission of the House, you might provide me the courtesy of reading what you said and providing any necessary consent or observations tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: These are objections signed by the Hon. Members for Kitchener, London-Middlesex, Guelph, Lac-Saint-Jean, Cochrane-Superior, Thunder Bay-Nipigon, Red Deer, Calgary North, Ontario and Scarborough Centre. They have been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C. 1970 to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario.

I apologized to Hon. Members because these objections were not tabled in the House on the day that the House resumed its sitting. Apparently the objection was filed with the Clerk or with the Table, but for some reason that document was not seen by anyone. We were, therefore, not aware on the first day of the sitting that we had this particular document in our hands. The Hon. Member for Kitchener inquired about these objections. Upon research, we found the document.

The Hon. Member for Kitchener tells us that the document was filed on June 30. Therefore, as is customary, we take his word for that. I have therefore asked the House if I may file these objections and print the text in today's Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have not seen them. Permit me the courtesy of having a look at them and providing a response tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: As the Hon. Member wants.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

TABLING OF MEMBERSHIP OF CABINET COMMITTEES

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 46(2), I would like to table the membership list for Cabinet committees. In accordance with recent practice, I also ask that this document be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Madam Speaker: Shall we have this list of Cabinet committees appended to today's Hansard?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, may I ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) whether there have been any changes as a result of Cabinet changes in the names of acting Ministers and second acting Ministers? If so, will the Minister be tabling that in the House of Commons?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, there have been changes in acting Ministers.

[Translation]

If I am not mistaken, we tabled the list in the House a few days ago. I will check. However, if we did not, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that the list will be tabled as soon as possible. I think the list was tabled, however. I remember seeing it, and it did contain a number of changes.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Editor's Note: For above document see Appendix A.]

Mr. Paproski: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council a question. Can the Minister please advise the House what Minister is in charge of the new sports pool, not Loto Canada or Super Loto but the new sports pool that we passed just before the recess?

Mr. Pinard: If the Hon. Member has a question on this subject, the new Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) will be pleased to answer it.

Mr. Paproski: Is she in charge of the pool?

LAW REFORM COMMISSION

TABLING OF REPORT

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to lay upon the Table of the House in both official languages a copy of the report of the Law Reform Commission of Canada entitled "Writs of Assistance and Tele-warrants". I ask that this report be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

* * *

PETITIONS

MR. SHIELDS—QUALITY OF SERVICES OF ALBERTA BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in the riding of Athabasca. The purpose of the petition, signed by 169 residents of the City of Fort McMurray, is to register their dissatisfaction with the quality of service being offered by the Alberta Broadcasting Corporation. This company has removed the parliamentary channel from the lower band, as well as CBC North, to make room for the Pay-TV stations, which must be subscribed to. In addition, due to the increase in the tax on cablevision contained in the April, 1983 budget, the cablevision fees have gone up by 11 per cent. Therefore, not only are my constituents receiving less service, they must pay more for that reduced service.

The nature of this petition is to request that Parliament intervene by persuading cable TV stations to put the parliamentary debates on the lower band so that the citizens of Fort McMurray who do not have converters can continue to view them without being forced to pay for a converter.

The petitioners hope that in Madam Speaker's examination you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency of their plea and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral of this petition to the Standing Committee on Communications at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I rise on a brief point of order. I just want to clarify and be more precise. I have checked, and in answer to the question posed by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) the list of acting Ministers was tabled last Monday. Therefore, it is in the public record. If the Hon. Member refers to Hansard the list is appended.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I thank the Minister.

* * *

• (1510)

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Order Paper Questions

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,599, to 4,614 inclusive.

[Text]

MINK CREEK MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,599—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Mink Green Municipal Drain in the Township of Bromley, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

Assistance to the Township of Bromley for the construction of the Mink Creek Municipal Drain was approved by the management committee for the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement on December 3, 1982 in the total amount of $64,110 to be cost-shared equally (50/50) by Canada and the Province of Ontario.

SNAKE RIVER MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,600—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Snake River Municipal Drain in the Township of Bromley, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

Assistance to the Township of Bromley for the construction of the Snake River North Tributary Municipal Drain was approved by the management committee for the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement on December 3, 1982 in the total amount of $46,544 to be cost-shared equally (50/50) by Canada and the Province of Ontario.

SNAKE RIVER UPPER HARRIS MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,601—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Snake River Upper Harris Municipal Drain in the Township of Bromley, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

Assistance to the Township of Bromley for the construction of the Snake River Upper Harris Municipal Drain was approved by the management committee for the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement on December 3, 1982 in the total amount of $233,180 to be cost-shared equally (50/50) by Canada and the Province of Ontario.

SNAKE RIVER SOUTH FORK MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,602—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Snake River South Fork Municipal Drain in the Township of Bromley, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

Assistance to the Township of Bromley for the construction of the Snake River South Fork Municipal Drain was approved by the management committee for the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement on December 3, 1982 in the total amount of $160,760 to be cost-shared equally (50/50) by Canada and the Province of Ontario.

CULL-DONOHUE MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,603—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Cull-Donohue Municipal Drain in the Township of Bromley, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Cull-Donohue Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

RICE MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,604—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Rice Municipal Drain in the Township of Bromley, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Rice Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

READY-CAHILL MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,605—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Ready-Cahill Municipal Drain in the Township of Bromley, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Ready-Cahill Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

CAHILL MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,606—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Cahill Municipal Drain in the Township of Bromley, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Cahill Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

GRAHAM McLEOD MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,607—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Graham McLeod Municipal Drain in the Township of Ross, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Graham McLeod Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

COTNAM MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,608—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Cotnam Municipal Drain in the Township of Cotnam, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Cotnam Municipal Drain, which is located in Pembroke Township will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

HEALY MacPHERSON MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,609—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the existing Healy MacPherson Municipal Drain in the Township of Elmsley, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Healy MacPherson Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

McNEELY-LIGHTBODY MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,610—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the McNeely-Lightbody Municipal Drain in the Township of Montague, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the McNeely-Lightbody Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

GLEN ELBE MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,611—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Glen Elbe Municipal Drain in the Township of Elizabethtown, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Glen Elbe Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

GREER MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,612—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Greer Municipal Drain in the Township of Elizabethtown, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Greer Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

LYN PETTEM MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,613—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Lyn Pettem Municipal Drain in the Township of Elizabethtown, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Lyn Pettem Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

Order Paper Questions

CREEK ROAD MUNICIPAL DRAIN

Question No. 4,614—Mr. Dick:

Will the Government be contributing more funds to the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement to assist in the construction of the Creek Road Municipal Drain in the Township of Front of Leeds and Lansdowne, which is urgently needed as it will be of great benefit to agriculture in the area, and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned:

At this time, Canada is not considering an appropriation of supplementary funds and the Province has expressed, in writing, a similar position on this issue. Assistance for the Creek Road Municipal Drain will be subject to the availability of surplus funds within the present total funding limit of the Agreement.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if questions Nos. 4,800 and 4,962 could be made orders for returns, these returns could be tabled immediately.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that questions No. 4,800 and No. 4,962 be deemed to have been made orders for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

COMMUNITY SERVICES CONTRIBUTION PROGRAM

Question No. 4,800—Mr. Howie:

1. For the program year (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983 to date, what amount was expended under the provisions of the Community Services Contribution Program in (i) Fredericton (ii) New Brunswick?

2. For each year, what were the names of the projects supported and what was the amount awarded to each project?

Return tabled.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Question No. 4,962—Mr. Benjamin:

1. With regard to the Farm Credit Corporation and its operations in the Province of (a) Manitoba (b) Saskatchewan (c) Alberta, for the required review of loan applications and/or loan agreements between farmers and, or through, the Corporation, which individuals and firms are authorized to perform legal services, give legal advice or opinions, review applications and/or agreements, or to act in any other legal or review capacity on behalf of and/or for (i) the Corporation (ii) clients of the Corporation (iii) individuals attempting to or actually negotiating loans or other agreements with or through the Corporation?

2. For each of the (a) individuals (b) firms (i) on what date did they first become eligible to do this work or perform this service (ii) for how long a term are they eligible?

3. Was the individual or firm appointed for a fixed term and, if so (a) what was the term (b) on what date and for how long has the term been renewed and, if not renewed, for what reason (c) how often and on what date has the eligibility been reviewed?

4. Was the individual or firm appointed for an indefinite term and, if so (a) for what reasons (b) are reviews made and (i) if so, how often and on what date (ii) if not, for what reason?

5. What are the (a) general (b) specific criteria for the selection of these individuals and/or firms for the performance of, or the eligibility to undertake, these duties?

6. What are the review criteria, if any?

7. Are reviews undertaken and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so (i) how many individuals and firms have been reviewed (ii) as a percentage of total eligible and total reviewed, how many have not received renewals (c) how has each individual and firm met, failed to meet and/or surpassed the eligibility criteria?

8. For each individual and firm, broken down by (a) local area (b) town and/or city (c) region (d) FCC region (e) province (Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta) (f) the three provinces in total and for (i) actual dollar amounts, and as a percentage of the total actual dollar amount, by grouping (ii) actual number of clients and/or transactions, and as a percentage of the total number of clients and/or transactions, by grouping, what was/is the amount of work carried out, worked on, and currently in progress?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, as this is the third parliamentary secretary I have had to deal with, I would like to give him a challenge. Question No. 2,042 asked by myself on January 29, 1981, with respect to the total cost of the Prime Minister's December, 1980—January, 1981 world tour and what percentage of the total cost of the trip will be paid by Canadian taxpayers has not been answered to date. As this is information that every Canadian should be entitled to, I would implore the Parliamentary Secretary to do whatever has to be done to come clean with the Canadian public.

Mr. Evans: Madam Speaker, I realize the urgency of the Hon. Member's question and I certainly will look into that immediately. I should note, however, that to this date, 4,244 questions have been answered, it being almost 85 per cent of all of the questions that have been asked of the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I would ask, Madam Speaker, that all notices of motions for production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the notices of motions for production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding Order No. 207 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra) moved that Bill C-407, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (cruelty to animals), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to stand at last and say a few words about this Bill to the House. It is one that had its first reading over three years ago on May 2, 1980, and I hope that it is not a measure of the esteem that the House has for our friends from the animal kingdom that it has taken over three years to arrive at this debate.

I should say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill does not touch upon laboratory testing or experimentation with animals. Great advances have been made in medical research through the controlled laboratory testing of and experiments on animals. This important aspect of the situation was discussed in some detail this week by a well-known columnist, none other than Ann Landers. In reference to the alleged cruelty to animals in research laboratories, that well-known columnist observed, probably speaking about the United States of America, that 13 million dogs and cats alone were destroyed in shelters in that country last year because no one wanted them. As well, Mr. Speaker, she pointed out that:

> Animal experimentation made it possible to immunize millions of children, all over the world, against polio, diphtheria, mumps, measles, hepatitis, etc. Add to that list every person who receives an antibiotic to fight infection, insulin for diabetes, anti-inflammatory agents for arthritis, chemotherapy for cancer, medication to control hypertension and drugs for the treatment of mental illness.
>
> Every person who has undergone the replacement of a joint, or the reattachment of a severed finger or limb, kidney dialysis, heart surgery or organ transplantation owes a debt to animal experimentation.

Those procedures are carried out under controlled circumstances, and I point out again that they are not the subject of the debate today. We should recognize that the alternative to using animals in laboratories is of course the use of humans, which use I have not heard advocated. I quote now from the Bill:

> The purpose of this Bill is to enlarge the scope of subsection 402(1) of the Criminal Code prohibiting cruelty to animals. This is done in three ways; first, it expands the application of these provisions to anyone who causes wilful or negligent injury to an animal. Second, it provides that an owner cannot permit negligent or wilful damage to an animal or bird and, third, it imposes a duty on the part of owners and those in control of animals to provide them with suitable maintenance.

> This will mean that owners and others who are keeping animals will have to provide a standard of care such that the animals' health cannot be impaired by the actions of that person or of strangers. Moreover, this expansion of the subsection will make it more enforceable as it will clearly encompass negligent as well as wilful behaviour in regard to the care of animals or birds.

Now, the present Section 402(1) of the Criminal Code does list a number of offences, but some of the definitions are too skimpy. In order to detail the proposed changes, I would like to read the first three paragraphs of Subsection 402(1), which read as follows:

> Everyone commits an offence who
>
> (a) wilfully causes or, being the owner, wilfully permits to be caused unnecessary pain, suffering or injury to an animal or bird,
>
> (b) by wilful neglect causes damage or injury to animals or birds while they are being driven or conveyed,
>
> (c) being the owner or the person having the custody or control of a domestic animal or bird or an animal or bird wild by nature that is in captivity, abandons it in distress or wilfully neglects or fails to provide suitable and adequate food, water, shelter and care for it.

Those are the first three paragraphs, Mr. Speaker, of Subsection (1) of Section 402.

The proposal that I make in Bill C-407 is a very simple one and it is that those three paragraphs be repealed and be substituted by three subsections which would read as follows:

> (a) wilfully or negligently causes unnecessary hardship, privation, suffering or injury to any animal or bird,
>
> (b) being the owner or a person having custody or control of any animal or bird, wilfully or negligently permits unnecessary hardship, privation, suffering or injury to be caused to such animal or bird,
>
> (c) being the owner or a person having custody or control of any animal or bird, abandons it in distress or wilfully or negligently fails to provide suitable and adequate food, water, shelter and care for it.

● (1520)

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, the comparisons are that the old Code refers to pain, suffering or injury, whereas the clause I am proposing uses the terminology "hardship, privation, suffering or injury". After all, pain is a matter of subjective definition and hardship and privation would extend that definition.

The word "negligently" has been added in all three paragraphs because wilful action was the only provision made in the old wording. The original provision referred to wilful neglect while being driven or conveyed. That is now eliminated because it is included in the new definition of hardship, privation, suffering or injury.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the new wording expands the definition of animal or bird by the use of the word "any". This means that now the animal concerned does not have to be a domestic or wild animal but would be any animal or bird.

I ask the support of the House for this Bill which will be to the benefit of our furred and feathered friends. I hope all Members of the House will feel as charitably about this as I do.

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I think we all appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke) in bringing this Bill forward, and I should like to make a few comments on it.

The Bill under consideration proposes to make minor amendments to the Criminal Code provisions dealing with cruelty to animals. The proposal's key feature is to make a negligent act of cruelty to an animal a criminal offence. Very few negligent acts with respect to human beings are governed by the criminal law, so I do not see why we should afford more protection to animals than we do to people.

A criminal offence generally requires an actus reus and a mens rea. The act must be committed plus the person committing the act must have the required intention. Where a person does not intend the consequences of his act or does not have the necessary mental state to understand that the act is wrong, he is generally not punished by the criminal law. There are few exceptions to this rule.

The Criminal Code currently defines criminal negligence in Section 202(1). The Section states:

> Everyone is criminally negligent who
>
> (a) in doing anything, or
>
> (b) in omitting to do anything that it is his duty to do,
>
> shows wanton or reckless disregard for the lives or safety of other persons.

Subsection 202(2) adds:

> For the purposes of this section, "duty" means a duty imposed by law.

This same type of recklessness is contemplated by Section 402 dealing with cruelty to animals due to the application of Section 386.

Section 386(1) provides:

> Everyone who causes the occurrence of an event by doing an act or by omitting to do an act that it is his duty to do, knowing that the act or omission will probably cause the occurrence of the event and being reckless whether the event occurs or not, shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Part, wilfully to have caused the occurrence of the event.

If Section 402 is read completely and in the context of Part IX of the Code, it is apparent that advertent negligence or recklessness is already included. Further, by the operation of Subsections 402(3) and 386(1), proof of simple negligence is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof of advertent negligence or recklessness.

Subsection 402(3) states:

> —evidence that a person failed to exercise reasonable care or supervision of an animal or bird thereby causing it pain, suffering, damage or injury is, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, proof that such pain, suffering, damage or injury was caused or was permitted to be caused wilfully or was caused by wilful neglect, as the case may be.

Since negligence means the failure to exercise reasonable care, the current Subsection 402(3) would appear to accomplish the intended purpose of the proposed amendment.

The Hon. Member has mentioned that the Government's policy with respect to criminal law is to reserve its use for conduct for which other means of control are inadequate and inappropriate. The Provinces have enacted legislation with respect to cruelty to animals which focuses on protection and rehabilitation of the animal rather than punishment of the owner or custodian.

The Provinces have also enacted legislation imposing certain standards of care where animals are used for research.

The current Criminal Code provisions are more than adequate to deter and punish those who deliberately or recklessly harm animals. There is no need for amendment. The proposed amendments add little to the current law.

May I also point out that it is premature to consider any amendments to the Criminal Code at this time, especially unnecessary amendments. The Members of the House of Commons are well aware that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) is currently involved in a fundamental and comprehensive review of the Criminal Code, in the course of which Section 402 will be considered. The Criminal Code was originally enacted in 1892, and since that date there have been a continuous series of patchwork amendments. The criminal law review is aimed at the enactment of a modern, responsible and effective criminal law for Canada based on consistent and fundamental principles. This review has been undertaken in co-operation with the Ministry of the Solicitor General and in close consultation with the Provinces. The recommendations of the Law Reform Commission of Canada will be reviewed and a detailed examination of all substantive and procedural aspects of Canadian criminal law will be conducted.

Each section of the present Criminal Code will be examined in light of the principles stated in the Criminal Law in Canadian Society which were discussed by the Hon. Member. The sections will also be reviewed with regard to the numerous amendments that have been proposed but not adopted and their intended purpose.

The consideration of minor amendments to seldom used sections at this time is likely to lead to more patchwork legislation. The consideration of Section 402 will be thoroughly dealt with by the House when undertaking its analysis of proposed amendments resulting from the criminal law review process. I would therefore suggest that the proposed amendments be dealt with at that time.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to support the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke) who presented Bill C-407. I find it somewhat refreshing that after days, weeks, and months of debate on important economic issues, we set aside time for topics that some people may consider frivolous. The Bill before us shows some sensitivity for living creatures other than human beings.

As Parliamentarians we have shown our concern for a quality environment in various pieces of legislation that we have debated over the years. These indicate a genuine interest in the preservation of a quality environment.

There have also been some very strong statements on human rights from both sides of the House, so I find it refreshing that today we are attempting to make changes to the Criminal Code that would provide greater safety and better protection for the animal and bird kingdoms.

I want to use this occasion to extend this debate into an area that goes a bit beyond the intent of the Bill in some respects, and that is the matter of laboratory testing and experimentation and the use of animals for this purpose. I think, perhaps, the most offending industry in this area would be the cosmetic industry. I was alerted, and I assume all Members of Parliament have been alerted many, many times, to what many people feel is a questionable use of animals in the testing of items such as cosmetics and toothpaste. I flag the attention of Parliament by mention of the Draize test, which is a test used on rabbits, animals which have no tear ducts. Perfumes of various kinds and various kinds of cosmetics are squirted in the eyes of rabbits to see the reaction over a period of time. I suppose this is to see what would happen if, for instance, Chanel No. 5 was squirted in someone's eyes, what they could expect in terms of some physiological reaction.

● (1530)

I simply use this, Mr. Speaker, as as example of the kind of tests through which we put various kinds of animals in our experimentation with all sorts of technologies and substances and the like. I would like to draw the attention of Parliament to the efforts of a particular group called, "The International Wildlife Protection Association". This is an international organization based here in Canada which takes this argument a little further, saying that if Parliamentarians are indeed concerned about protecting animals and birds from neglect, from various sorts of hardships, then perhaps we should give some attention to wildlife in that same vein. The International Wildlife Protection Association has for years raised the question with respect to the killing of wild animals for pleasure, such as trophy hunting, and it has written to Members of Parliament and has asked us on many occasions to question that kind of behaviour in a country such as ours.

I remember very distinctly, as a young man growing up in the Kamloops area as a hunter at the time, taking advantage of the abundance of wildlife in our area. We would go out hunting in the evenings and normally have occasion to encounter many, many deer. Yet as the years pass there are fewer and fewer wildlife of all sorts to be seen. I do not believe there is any question but that in many cases indiscriminate hunting practices have resulted in the reduction in many of our wildlife species. I simply flag this issue on their behalf for Parliamentarians, that indeed if we are as serious as this Bill would indicate about domestic animals and their protection, we should give that same consideration to wild animals and question the matter of hunting and killing of wild animals for pleasure only. I am not questioning the concept of taking the lives of wild animals for food by those who need it and use it in their traditional lifestyle, but I do want to question the matter of the killing of wild animals for pleasure, particularly as emphasized by the trophy hunter.

I would also like to mention, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill touches on a very critical question for those who are interested in the animal world and the need for their protection. There is one other aspect of this issue having to do with kangaroos. I know that kangaroos are not usually a topic we get into here in Canada, but we do import kangaroo products into our country, both in terms of hides and meat, as well as various decorations made, presumably, from kangaroo feet and ears, and the like. In Australia three million kangaroos are killed annually, legally. In other words, they are killed by using proper hunting techniques and in appropriate seasons. What I would like to flag, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that three million kangaroos are killed illegally in Australia and, to a large extent, I believe that Canada is a recipient of this illegal trade, the hides and paraphernalia associated with the killing of kangaroos.

I applaud the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra for bringing this Bill forward. I support it, together with my colleagues, and will say that perhaps this is just the beginning of a much longer debate around the topic of protecting both domestic and wild animals and birds.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I think the House owes a debt of gratitude to the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) for bringing this matter to our attention. I would like to think that there is a means whereby we could have this Bill, which some might consider defective in certain respects or with certain shortfalls, referred to an appropriate committee for study, improvement and adoption.

I was really quite astounded, Mr. Speaker, I did not believe my ears at first, when I heard the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) say that it was "inappropriate"—I believe that was the word he used—for Members of Parliament to bring forward proposals to amend the Criminal Code at this particular stage because, he went on, the Government was already revising the Criminal Code. Where else, Mr. Speaker, from which quarter, should proposals to amend the Criminal Code come if not from this House?

The Law Commission, I agree, should certainly make its proposals. However, to suggest that Members of Parliament should be muzzled or be told to sit down and be quiet because the Government is coming forward with a complete revision of the Criminal Code is, to my way of thinking, just typical of the arrogance of this Government! I listened in disbelief that anyone in this House would suggest that we should not bring forward matters of concern to us.

The date on this particular Bill is May 2, 1980. This Bill is three years old. How long has the Criminal Code been under revision? I venture to say it has been under revision for a long time, and if the comments made during this debate cannot contribute to the revision of the Criminal Code, Mr. Speaker, we are wasting our time here and we are receiving messages from the other side of the House that that is exactly what we are doing. This House has no relevance in the eyes of the Government, otherwise an Hon. Member would not stand up and read such a speech, which was prepared for him—because I cannot believe that that particular Member would have written that speech himself, honourable Member that he is. I cannot believe that he would put those words together in his own mind. It must have come from some official in the Public Service who wanted that message put across, "Don't worry us. We've got the Criminal Code under control. Now, don't you upset the Criminal Code cart because we are busy with it and we will come up with the appropriate amendments when the time comes. You just sit back and think about something else."

An Hon. Member: "We will do what is good for you."

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is right. I did mention some of the shortcomings of this particular Bill. None of us are particularly keen, I am sure, about reptiles. There may be some who like lizards, some who like boa constrictors, and that kind of thing. However, I believe we should broaden the meaning of term "animal", because a reptile is not an animal according to the proper dictionary definition. We should, perhaps, broaden the meaning because I am sure this is what the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra had in mind. This is a humanitarian Bill for the animal world. I suppose that is about the best way I can put it at the moment. I am sure the Hon. Member would want the provision he is trying to have included in the law cover reptiles as well as birds and animals.

● (1540)

I think it is an excellent notion to include those who, through negligence, cause harm to animals, birds or reptiles. We have no provision within the rules, as I understand them, for proposing amendments to these Bills but I do feel that if it could be taken to committee, that particular amendment might be added.

I was very pleased to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). He revealed a completely new aspect of his attitude towards the living creatures of this world in his comments just a few minutes ago. I was delighted that he should think of those frightful experiments which are carried out on wild animals by the cosmetic profession.

I cannot let this occasion pass, Mr. Speaker, without making some comments about killer whales. There is a school of do-gooders, I guess you call them, who feel that no animal should be kept in captivity. No animal should be subjected to the spectacles that we all enjoy such as circuses. We enjoy watching trained horses, trained bears, and we enjoy learning about killer whales. They are amazing animals, Mr. Speaker, and we had one out in Victoria which suffered a fate too horrible to mention in ordinary circumstances, but I feel compelled to mention it now.

Some of these do-gooders, to the best of my knowledge, tried to release that killer whale from its pool in Sealand in Victoria. They went down as divers to cut the wires at the bottom of the pool so this killer whale could gain his freedom in the Strait of Juan de Fuca. Something seemed to have disturbed them or they did not get the dimensions of the killer whale right. The killer whale went down, nosed around, got his head caught in the wire and was unable to come up to the surface to breathe. That whale drowned because of the deliberate act of some vandals who claim to be concerned about the welfare of wild animals.

How can we know how to treat wild animals if we cannot study them and see what they can do in performances and how grateful they are for the care that is given to them? That there should be no wild animals in captivity is a nonsensical notion. They have to be properly cared for, and no zoo that I know of would dare open to the public without proper zoologists and people trained in animal care. We have a very special team of people at Sealand in Victoria who know how to deal with these sea mammals, and I cannot express too deeply the horror that struck me when I heard that that animal had been drowned. There was this great creature to which I had the good fortune to actually talk and to stroke and touch, it came up to see me when I was down by the side of the pool. It was a magnificent feeling, and some vandals had the audacity to cause that animal to drown.

Attempts are being made to restore that show at Sealand in Victoria and there has been a great furor about people getting killer whales from somewhere else and bringing them to Victoria.

I see the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) is here now. I hope he is blushing for having suggested that we should not even discuss amendments to the Criminal Code.

To come back to the killer whales, I do feel that when care and proper treatment of these wild animals is fully understood, and licensed if necessary, and registered trainers and caretakers of these animals are in place, then it is no offence whatsoever and should not be an offence to have them in captivity.

So, Mr. Speaker, if there is any possibility of making a motion on this particular Bill, with its strengths and defects, I would move, if I can without being out of order, that the subject matter of this Bill be referred to an appropriate committee of the House. If so, I so move.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The summer vacation causes me a problem in the sense of my memory as to the applicable rules. I think it is in order, but I would require a seconder. I see the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is so kind as to second the motion. That, I think, is going to be a votable motion. Under Private Members' hour this particular subject matter will continue until 4.13 p.m. Should there be a necessity to advise Hon. Members as to the procedure before that time, I will rise again after the next speaker. Otherwise, there seems to be no difficulty as to the procedure proposed by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I, too, welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-407, a Private Members' Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke). The intent of the Bill is most admirable. No one can argue against the need to protect animals from unnecessary suffering, and I congratulate the Hon. Member for raising this issue in the House.

I was particularly concerned that this was another attempt to downgrade and be critical of the work done on animals in experimental laboratories, and I called the Member to ask his feelings on this. I was particularly pleased to hear from him by telephone and in his remarks here today that he appreciated the role animals play in medical research and the contribution they make to a better understanding of medical and surgical problems and the opportunities they give to make very positive contributions to our health and ability to fight disease. I can give personal assurance of that having taken part in a great deal of basic research work done on cardiac surgery at the Hospital for Sick Children. I worked there with Doctor William Mustard. A great deal of the duties of a resident is to carry out the various operative procedures on these animals, and I can assure you that the greater part of a resident's life at that time was to provide intensive care for these animals, and throughout the succeeding days after the operation these animals received the very best, most intensive and skilful care. This was to ensure that they would survive and be comfortable and, indeed, to show the efficacy of a number of these operative procedures which have now become standard and which contribute immensely to the welfare of many young patients, changing that aspect of surgery. I therefore congratulate the Hon. Member, the proposer of the Bill, for having had foresight and understanding as far as that particular role is concerned.

● (1550)

The Bill proposes to amend the Criminal Code provisions with respect to cruelty to animals, namely, Subsection 402. The alleged purpose of the amendments is to enlarge the scope of Subsection 402(1) by expanding its application to anyone who causes wilful or negligent injury to animals or birds. I am stressing "wilful or negligent". The amendments also provide that an owner cannot permit wilful or negligent damage to an animal or bird, and imposes a duty on owners or those having care or control of animals to provide them with suitable and adequate food, water, shelter and care.

In my own reading and study of the Bill as it was presented, I thoroughly agreed with the spirit that it represented. However, in studying the Bill with the help of the legal experts of the Department of Justice, I found that the legal implications placed certain problem before me. At the moment, taking into consideration the thoughts expressed by lawyers, I find that the amendments, in comparison with the present Criminal Code, should be considered unnecessary.

A close reading of the current Criminal Code provisions indicates that the type of conduct the Bill seeks to make criminal is already prohibited. For example, subsection 402(3) states that with respect to the present paragraphs, Subsection 402(1)(a) and Subsection 402(1)(b), "evidence that a person failed to exercise reasonable care or supervision of an animal or bird thereby causing it pain, suffering, damage or injury is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, proof that such pain, suffering, damage or injury was caused or was permitted to be caused wilfully or was caused by wilful neglect, as the case may be". Negligence is the failure to exercise reasonable care. Thus, adding the words "negligently causes" to Subsection 402(1) would be redundant.

Although Section 402 currently uses the word "wilful", the word has a special meaning and is not limited to intentional acts. Section 402 is located in Part IX of the Criminal Code. Section 386, also in Part IX, provides that for the purposes of this Part of the Code, certain types of conduct are deemed to be "wilful". The Section provides that "everyone who causes the occurence of an event by doing an act or by omitting to do an act that it is his duty to do, knowing that the act or omission will probably cause the occurence of the event and being reckless whether the event occurs or not, shall be deemed, for the purposes of this Part, wilfully to have caused the occurrence of the event". Thus, recklessness is covered by the provision and "recklessness" means advertent negligence.

Very few crimes carry responsibility for simple or civil negligence. It is not clear what type of negligence is being proposed. Again, from a legal interpretation and legal study, one finds that the Criminal Code defines "criminal negligence" in Section 202 as follows: "(1) everyone is criminally negligent who (a) in doing anything or (b) in omitting to do anything that it is his duty to do, shows wanton or reckless disregard for the lives or safety of other persons". Subsection 202(2) states: "for the purposes of this Section, "duty" means a duty imposed by law". This duty must arise by virtue of a statute or a common law. There is no reason to impose a higher standard of care for animals than for human beings. Nevertheless, whether the negligence sought to be made criminal by the proposed amendments is advertent negligence, that is, recklessness, or simple inadvertent negligence, both types of conduct are already adequately covered by Sub-sections 386(1) and 402(3).

The proposed amendment also seeks to change the wording of paragraph 402(1)(a) from "unnecessary pain, suffering or injury" to "unnecessary hardship, privation, suffering or injury". It is impossible to determine what constitutes "hardship" for an animal by any objective standard. Of more importance, however, is that "privation" is defined in the Oxford dictionary as "want of the comforts or necessaries of life". How can we determine what the "comforts of life" are for an animal, as opposed to "necessaries"? There is no objective test.

Animals, by their very nature, can take care of themselves if left alone. We have raised the standard of life for animals by bringing them into our homes, feeding them, grooming them and taking them on family vacations. It cannot be said that a farmer who lets his dogs and cats run free and sleep outside is cruel. Animals and birds are equipped to provide themselves with the necessaries of life. People cannot be said to be negligent if they fail to do so. Furthermore, upon whom is the duty to provide the necessaries of life to animals imposed? Wild animals and stray domestic animals have no owner or custodian to be responsible for them. The question raised is: "Am I my neighbour's dogkeeper?"

Furthermore, do we wish to make it a crime punishable by a maximum fine of, say, $500 and/or six months' imprisonment for failing to provide "comforts" to an animal as opposed to "necessaries"? Not even in respect of humans is it a criminal offence to fail to provide the comforts of life. Under Section 197 of the Criminal Code, it is only an offence not to provide the "necessaries of life."

In any event, the current wording, "pain, suffering, or injury", should encompass the type of discomfort sought to be prohibited. In addition, Paragraph 402(1)(c) states that "everyone commits an offence who, being the owner or the person having the custody or control of a domestic animal or bird or an animal or bird wild by nature that is in captivity, abandons it in distress or wilfully neglects or fails to provide suitable and adequate food, water, shelter and care for it". Thus, it is already an offence to fail to provide the necessaries of life for an animal. There is no need to impose any higher standards.

● (1600)

The wording of the proposed amendments is very similar to many provincial statutes dealing with cruelty to animals. The provincial statutes are designed to prevent cruelty to animals and protect and relieve animals from such cruelty. The owners or custodians of animals can be ordered to change their practices or the animals can be taken from them. The purpose is to protect the animal and not necessarily to punish the owner or custodian. For example, the Ontario Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act has as its object the prevention of cruelty to animals and their protection and relief therefrom. For the purpose of the enforcement of any law or statute in force pertaining to the welfare of or the prevention of cruelty to animals, every inspector and agent of the society or an affiliated society has the powers of a police officer. An inspector or agent of the society may obtain a warrant to search a building or place for animals in distress, or where he observes an animal in immediate distress he may enter without a warrant any premises or building or place other than a dwelling house. Other Provinces have similar legislation.

If our concern is for the animal, then the provincial provisions are sufficient. The Criminal Code should remain unchanged in focusing its concern upon the moral culpability of the actor. Therefore, the proposed amendment is considered unnecessary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the Hon. Member to speak, may I indicate that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) has made a proposal, the effect of which is that the Bill be withdrawn and the subject matter be referred to a committee. I want to put that in the formal language of the House simply so that we can proceed in the proper fashion.

Accordingly, Mr. Munro, seconded by Mr. Kilgour moves an amendment thereto

That the motion be amended deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor: "Bill C-407, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, cruelty to animals, be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice".

In the usual fashion I would ask the House whether it is the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

May I remind Hon. Members that at 4.13 p.m. this segment of Private Members' hour will be completed. Should debate on the amendment collapse between now and then, I will put the question. If, at 4.13 p.m. the Hon. Members are still pursuing debate on the subject of the amendment or on the main motion, there would then be no opportunity to put the question and we would proceed on to the next order of Private Members' Business.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, as a person who has spent most of his working life concerned with the care and welfare of animals, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak in this debate. I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for bringing to the attention of the House and therefore to the attention of the Canadian people the fact that there is a sensitivity to the welfare of all animals.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member who proposed this Bill when he said in his opening statement that the only alternative to using animals in testing and experimentation is to use the human that this is not exactly the case. There are many alternatives now being studied which would replace animals in experimentation. I am thinking of such things as tissue culture, microbial units and biochemical test. Of course, we now have the simulator and the computer.

I would like to point out to the House that experimental institutions which perform animal experimentation and various organizations which are concerned with animal welfare are vigorously pursuing the use of these kinds of alternatives. As a person who has spent quite a bit of my life doing and supervising animal experimentation, there is nothing that I, and I am sure many of my colleagues, would like better than to see the day when we would not have to use animals at all for experimentation. However, until such time I think we have to look at what is available to us and, up to this moment, we must use animals because they are the only biological model which we presently have. I would like to reiterate that there is nothing I would like to see more than the time when we can completely exclude living animals from experimentation.

I would also like to bring the thought forward to the House that it is man himself who demands safety tests, which makes it necessary for us to use animals at the present time. Of course, we look to the idea of replacing this with other kinds of models in the future.

For those in the House who are not familiar with what a simulator or a computer can do, it is now quite possible by way of computer to develop a model which is completely representative of the respiratory system or cardiovascular system. Therefore, instead of having to use innumerable live animals, it is quite possible to develop a computer program which allow us to make variations in our experimental design which could be measured on this simulator. For example, it is possible for medical students today to have a computer which they can program to determine what will happen if they use a certain drug. Previously, they would have to had to use a patient and decide to inject this drug into the patient or wait until a suitable patient with that certain cardiovascular defect came into the clinic before having the opportunity to treat that patient.

Computers can now be designed to simulate that patient. If the medical student's treatment does not work and he receives a signal that the patient died, it is only the program that did not work. One can imagine the possibilities for replacing animals by experimentation by this type of computer.

I would also bring to the attention of the House the fact that we are not allowing animal welfare to fall into disrepute without some kind of surveillance or control. There are two areas with which I am concerned. One is animal experimentation. Canada has the only volunteer organization which is composed of people who are controlling animal experimentation. It is called the Canadian Council on Animal Care. A question presently being asked is whether things should be regulated by law or whether people should be educated so that they recognize their responsibilities and do not need laws to guide them. I believe that if people are properly informed and can decide on that information, it is quite often evident that the rules they establish for themselves are at an even higher level than those established by the law. When laws are made it must be kept in mind that they must be enforceable. With respect to animal welfare, a law which was passed to control how animals are treated would have to be enforceable. People would simply abide by the minimums of the law. In my experience they have said that what they are trying to do requires a much higher level than that established by the law. This is the kind of surveillance we have with the Canadian Council of Animal Care in scientific institutions in Canada. I am quite convinced that this is working and will continue to work to the betterment of animal welfare.

● (1610)

Of course, the second group of animals with which we are concerned are domestic animals, pets, wild animals, animals in zoos; in other words, animals in general that are not covered by the group which controls animal experimentation in scientific institutions. At this point I would like to draw the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies to the attention of the House. It is an umbrella group with which other humane society units in the country are allied. Its major concern is to look after the welfare of animals. It has a very close relationship with the federal Government when it comes to looking after animals being slaughtered, animals in transit or any animal which falls under the control of the federal Government. It is also concerned with animals in exhibitions. It is interested in animals being slaughtered, what happens to them when they are being transported to slaughter houses and at the time they are being slaughtered.

What interests me about the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies is that it has a great interest in education, an area through which sensitivity can be developed starting in elementary schools and through the secondary school system. Certainly I remember in elementary school Humane Society Day which occurred once a year. We were given buttons to wear which read, "Be kind to animals". We were given pictures of animals, and very often someone visited our school to tell students about the need to care for animals. This is the basis for the development of sensitivity. All the laws in the world will not ensure that animals are properly cared for, but if we can develop such a sensitivity in young people in the early stages, by the time they reach the point where they own animals, view animals in zoos or, if they are professionals, use animals for experimentation purposes, they will have that sensitivity and laws will not be needed to govern their activities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but as I indicated earlier, it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 24(2) to interrupt the proceedings at the hour of 4.13 p.m.

Moving to the next order of Private Members' Business, shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding order No. 425 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POWER TO TAKE BLOOD SAMPLES

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West) moved that Bill C-625, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (power to take blood samples), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to allow for the testing of blood samples for blood alcohol levels in the case of motor vehicle accidents. Drivers are not now subject to blood alcohol testing when suspected of driving while impaired.

I would like to read the following excerpt from a letter of Mr. John Steward:

> My son is dead! Peter Graham Steward, aged 23 years, three months and 11 days has been killed. A boy entering adult life, a boy with a blameless life, hard working, reliable and essentially good right through. This lad, my youngest son, was murdered by an unthinking and totally uncaring man, a man who had so soused himself in whisky and beer that he had shed all vestige of manhood, amounting to an uncontrolled and dangerous state of mental awareness.
>
> The boy whom we had loved from the moment of birth, our youngest son, so full of promise and love himself for his Mum, Dad, brothers and sisters was no more, gone forever, gone to the world from which he came to us all, leaving behind broken hearts and numbed minds asking why, why? His fiancee and impending marriage plans destroyed, his brothers and sisters, hopelessly trying to find comfort in each other, Mum and Dad, with an ache that is beyond comprehension by those who have never suffered such a loss.

It continued:

> The police hands are tied, the doctors under threat of prosecution, and the guilty one, a host of lawyers will defend him, and without proof, clinical proof, the murderer goes free.
>
> The time has come that no government should tolerate such inequity in laws. Too many are dying on Canada's roads, and many are victims of protected murderers with large and terrible weapons of destruction on four wheels.
>
> I appeal to the Government to right this appalling injustice.

The murderer in this case has continued to drive freely on our highways ever since that tragic day in 1977.

I could quote figures from many jurisdictions throughout Canada, but I will just take one to indicate the volume, and scale of tragedy, sorrow, anger and pain. In the Province of British Columbia alone in 1982 there were 24,000 accidents with injury or death. There were 600 deaths and 34,000 injuries. In 20 per cent of all accidents with injury, one or more drivers were drinking. In 40 per cent of all accidents with death, one or more drivers were drinking, and 10 per cent to 20 per cent of all drivers injured in accidents had been drinking. Studies by the Attorney General's office showed that in the evenings 6 per cent of all drivers legally impaired had over .08 per cent blood alcohol levels and 6 per cent who had been drinking had between .05 per cent and .08 per cent blood alcohol levels.

When parents and families suffer such a loss, first comes the anger, then comes perhaps even revenge, but ultimately they say that above all they want justice and that anything which we enact must be enacted with that motive. They have indicated this to me, so it makes somewhat of a difference that justice be applied.

In 1980 a study of 1,500 cases involving drinking drivers showed an over-all conviction rate of 87 per cent. When blood alcohol testing was involved, 90 per cent admitted their crime and pleaded guilty. When no testing was involved, only 70 per cent pleaded guilty. We are talking about 20 per cent more people. It has been demonstrated that blood alcohol testing will, hopefully, save lives. It certainly saves time and brings these matters before our courts and through to justice.

● (1620)

Where does concern for this particular area start? I suppose we want to lay blame first of all. Maybe blame is where it does start. Certainly blame should first be placed on the social disease of drunken driving. Second, and equally important, there must be accountability and restitution. That should be the result and responsibility of the person who perpetrated the crime, who bent his arm one time too many.

As a result of this tragic incident, I drafted Bill C-625 before us today. I have named it the Steward amendment. I do not have a right to put a name on the Bill, but I am naming it that because it was his personal tragedy that struck me so deeply that I felt we must begin a course of action.

This is not just in Canada. It is also in the United States. President Reagan has declared war on drunken driving and has formed a presidential commission. Across Canada, citizens' groups have been provoked to action by their horror of such wanton carnage. They have been formed to lobby for such legislative changes, not just in this House of Commons, but in the Provinces across the country. One such group which many Members have heard from is Sally Gribble's MADD organization, "Mothers Against Drunk Drivers". On their behalf I presented this year a petition signed by 7,000 Canadians who want to see the law changed and see justice found in this area.

Since 1978 when the Bill in its first form was presented by me as Bill C-428, substantial and significant support has been building for it across the country. Many organizations have expressed support in principle for this Bill. As long ago as 1978 I received letters from the Attorneys-General of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario. Also in support have been the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, The Canadian Medical Association, the Australian Medical Association, the Salvation Army, Casabello Wines and the Canadian Automobile Association. Since that time many other groups have begun to express their opinions. They have been expressing concern over this Bill and its ramifications. Taking compulsory blood samples from drunken drivers who kill is a legal, moral and social problem with legal, civil libertarian and medical aspects. It is not an easy problem to legislate, but there are some small steps that we can take. This Bill is one of them. The Government of Canada's avowed policy on criminal law, as stated in its recent publication "The Criminal Law in Canadian Society" embraces the following, and I quote:

> The purpose of the criminal law is to contribute to the maintenance of a just, peaceful and safe society through the establishment of a system of prohibitions, sanctions and procedures to deal fairly and appropriately with culpable conduct that causes or threatens serious harm to individuals or society!

With this promise and commitment, a loophole in Canadian law exists that allows drunken drivers involved in accidents to escape detection by breathalyzer and thereby escape prosecution. Drivers often feign injury to avoid taking the breathalyzer. As the President of the Canadian Medical Association notes:

> It's becoming a common dodge. People who are in the know, know that they can feign injury and avoid the test.

If they feign injury in an accident, they are sent to hospital, thereby avoiding the drunken driving breathalyzer test.

The attitude of civil libertarians to this issue is that mandatory blood tests would be a violation of individual rights. That maybe so to some small extent. However, I feel strongly that the taking of an innocent human life is a far greater violation not only of an individual right but also of the most sacred principle of natural and positive law, the right to life of that person who died as a result of the actions of another person.

Legislators and the legal profession have recognized this fact. This study, which was begun in the mid-1970s, has resulted in the Law Reform Commission publishing working paper 29, "The General Part Liabilities and Practices", which included a proposal to change the Criminal Code to create a new category of offence called criminal intoxication.

Three years ago the Conservative Government of Manitoba actually enacted such a Bill. The Social Credit Government of British Columbia has legislation due to be proclaimed October 1 to institute mandatory blood alcohol tests for suspected drunk drivers involved in accidents. The Saskatchewan Conservative Government Vehicles Act, 1983, Section 168(1), provides that a medical practitioner, registered nurse or qualified lab technician may be allowed to take a sample of blood if the police officer, on reasonable and probable grounds, believes a person had consumed alcohol or drugs and was operating a motor vehicle within the preceding two hours.

It is not just our Provinces or this country which have been acting in this sphere in the last five years. The California vehicle act, Section 13353, provides that, and I quote:

—any person who drives a motor vehicle upon a highway shall be deemed to have given his consent to a chemical test of his blood, breath or urine for the purpose of determining the alcohol content of his blood if lawfully arrested for any offence allegedly committed while the person was driving a motor vehicle under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

Some people ask about the constitutional validity. The constitutional validity of taking blood samples to determine impairment was upheld in the Constitution of the United States in the case of Schmerber v. California. In Western Australia, the Road Traffic Act, Section 66 (2), provides that a patrolman can allow a medical practitioner to take a sample of the offender's blood for analysis.

In light of recent legislation by Provinces, increased public awareness, intensified legal interest and further study, I would like to recommend that it is well past time for action by this House of Commons on this subject.

This is not new. We are not plotting new ground. We are responding to a reality of lifestyle and a reality of tragedy. As I mentioned, in one Province alone there have been 600 deaths, 240 related to drunken driving. What is the delay in this legislation? Since I first proposed this legislation, which has sat around for a long time, I have received a lot of constructive advice. For example, I received from Ernie Hawrish, a lawyer friend in Saskatoon in whom I have great faith, a suggestion that perhaps this Bill needs further amendment and suggestions. He says that perhaps there needs to be a section for appropriate fines and imprisonment as well as an extension of the range of persons qualified to take such tests. Others have suggested that the question of the use of the material gained in such a test as evidence needs further discussion.

It is my request to this House of Commons today that this Bill, which is an idea, be referred to the standing committee. I would like to hear testimony. Let us hear from MADD and the Stewards about the tragedy of the victims. Let us hear from those who cannot have returned what has been taken. Why would the Government not grant this? Why would the Government not want this for Canadians? This is the initiative of a Private Member but it should have been an initiative of the House of Commons of Canada. This is not a bipartisan political issue, it is a human issue. Why does the Member on the Government side who is told to respond to this matter not get on to it right now? Do not delay it three months or six months or three years or five years while people die all over our highways.

● (1630)

Whoever has been assigned to respond to this Bill should stand up right now. Do not talk it out. That person knows how to make a simple reference of the subject matter now. He has the necessary information. He should make this reference now. Do not talk it out. No more talk is required, only action is required. It could be your son, it could be your daughter, it could be your family, it could be you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Blood Samples

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, one cannot help but be moved by the words of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). I may say that I too am struck by contradictory feelings as much as anyone else in the House. I can speak from the position of having suffered through a personal tragedy when my own son was killed in a car accident. I suppose in a sense it was fortunate that the driver of the car who killed my son was not impaired. I am no stranger to tragedy as it involves car accidents. I myself some 30 years ago was involved in a car accident which left me paralysed.

The Hon. Member said not to talk this Bill out, to do something about it now. Like him, my first reaction is, of course, to respond by saying: Yes, it should be done now; yes, it should be done quickly. I say to my dear colleague that my heart is with him in principle and that my heart is also with the Steward family and the many others that he mentioned during his discourse.

It would probably be appropriate to call this amendment the "Steward" amendment, and perhaps some place in the legislation that name could be mentioned as testimony to the tragedy that this family has suffered needlessly. How many other families are there like this across Canada?

To proceed right now in the light of the information that we have would be the expeditious things to do. It could very well be that this Private Member's Bill should go through immediately and that Parliament should act today.

Some Hon. Members: Let us do it.

Mr. Parent: I say that, Mr. Speaker, with full knowledge of what has gone on and what could continue to go on. Yet I truly wonder if all of the information that we could have has been gathered. We can study things until they virtually just dry up and go away, but this type of thing will not dry up and will not go away.

The Hon. Member mentioned some things that are happening in the different legislatures across the land as well as in different countries. During my brief remarks I hope that the information I bring forth will add weight to that information which he has already presented to the House.

In southern Ontario, there is a program called "RIDE". I wish that I knew the precise meaning of those four letters, but it means something to the effect of rid impaired drivers from the roads of our Province.

Mr. Darling: Maybe "entirely" is the last word.

Mr. Parent: That would be a good word to have there. From time to time we read in the newspapers that we will be infrining upon the individual rights of the people of Canada. I stand shoulder to shoulder with Hon. Members and say, what about the rights of the victims? What about the rights of the grieving families that are left behind? What about the young lives that are snuffed out because some men and women consider it more important to drink themselves into a stupor than to care for their fellow man?

The Minister has told us, Mr. Speaker, that it is his intention to introduce legislative changes dealing specifically with blood sampling and impaired driving in the very near future. I wish there could be a date upon that introduction. I am of the opinion that it would be wise to wait until we gather all of the information that is necessary so that we can proceed together to draft legislation dealing with this matter. One might say that this afternoon is the time to do this. I think perhaps we would get better legislation if it were indeed discussed in committee. I for one would be more than happy to take part in such discussions.

Let me address myself, Mr. Speaker, to some recent developments which have occurred at the provincial level regarding blood sampling. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West, mentioned that to date some Provinces have introduced bills dealing with blood sampling. He mentioned Manitoba, British Columbia and I believe Saskatchewan. In the case of British Columbia, the provisions have been proclaimed and will come into force in a matter of a few weeks. I would like to quote directly from Section 220.2 of Bill 69 which provides that, where a peace officer on reasonable and probable grounds believes that a person has:

(a) within the preceding two hours driven a motor vehicle or had the care and control of a motor vehicle on a highway or industrial road, and he may require that a person provide a blood sample.

(b) consumed alcohol

Section 220.3(1) provides that a person who without reasonable excuse fails or refuses to comply with a demand commits an offence.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West, suggested that one of his lawyer friends would like to add certain fines to that. I believe that that could possibly be a good way to proceed.

Section 220.2(2) states that where a person is incapable due to physical or mental trauma of comprehending the nature of a demand, a blood sample may be taken from that person without a demand being made. I agree with that. I agree that at the very least that should be done.

Public outcry in Saskatchewan has been sustained since the major traffic disaster at Webb in the summer of 1980 in which 22 lives were lost and breath samples could not be demanded from the dirver because of his physical condition. Bill 81 with the amendments to the Vehicle Act received third reading and Royal Assent by the Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan on June 2, 1983. In many ways that law is the same as the law of British Columbia.

● (1640)

Section 168(3) makes provision for a case where a peace officer, on reasonable and probable grounds, believes that a person has consumed alcohol or drugs. The drugs that are being used today are not an entirely new phenomenon and perhaps this should be included in the proposed legislation. It also provides that where the officer believes that a person within the preceding two hours has driven or had the care and control of a motor vehicle and is incapable of providing a sample of his breath, the peace officer may, subject to Subsection (4), by demand made to that person, require him or her to provide sufficient sample of blood that, in the opinion of the person taking the sample, is necessary to enable a proper analysis to be made to determine the proportion, if any, of alcohol and/or drugs in the blood and to accompany the peace officer for the purpose of enabling the sample to be taken.

Section 168(4) states that where a person is, in the opinion of the peace officer, incapable of understanding the nature of a demand for a sample of his blood, the peace officer may cause a sample of his blood to be taken without a demand. I agree with that.

Section 168(5) makes it an offence for any person without reasonable excuse to fail to comply with a demand to provide a blood sample.

James Garner, Saskatchewan Minister of Highways and transportation, has stated that the Saskatchewan provisions would be proclaimed into force on October 1, 1983.

Both of these Bills raise questions—which could be answered if we had the information available—as to whether they are constitutional in light of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Let us look at the situation in some other countries. The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West dealt with the law in California where I believe he said that anyone who drives on the highways there, by the mere fact of driving an automobile, consents to having a blood test.

He also referred to Australia. Each of the Australian states has a provision for a screening test of blood alcohol concentration. The purpose of this test is the same as our roadside testing provision in Section 234(1) of the Criminal Code. Persons "passing" the test are generally released from the obligation to undergo breath analysis or a blood test, whichever may be appropriate, for evidentiary purposes. Each state law in Australia contains a provision for the determination of blood alcohol concentration by the use of a breath analysing instrument. It is the primary means of ascertaining blood alcohol concentration in each Australian state and territory. The police in each state may require a person to submit to a breath analysis if it appears from the screening test that the percentage of alcohol in blood exceeds, or in some cases equals, the prescribed limit. It may also be required if a person refuses or fails to provide a sample for a screening test. Although the primary means of ascertaining blood alcohol concentration throughout Australia is by breath analysis, there is provision in each state for blood tests in certain circumstances.

The Hon. Member did not mention that in the United Kingdom recent amendments were made as a result of the recommendations in the Blennerhassett Report in April, 1976. Breath tests are now accepted for evidentiary purposes as the principal means of determining the blood alcohol concentration of drivers. Prior to the amendments, breath samples could be required solely in connection with a preliminary screening test; only the results of blood or urine analysis could be adduced as an evidentiary sample.

Enforcement of this legislation proved difficult, particularly as it related to the screening tests. Blood or urine tests of many accused were clearly over the limit, yet legislative loopholes allowed them to continue to drive undeterred. Changes sought effective enforcement and the whittling down of technical defences. The power of the police to require a breath test was extended to cover persons who had been in charge of a motor vehicle. In addition, it attacked the "hip flask"defence so that drinking after an accident could not be used to disguise impairment before the accident. It is almost incomprehensible to me in this day and age that people, having been in an accident where other individuals were maimed or killed, would have the effrontery or would be so heartless as to drink more alcohol so that it could not be proven whether they were drunk before or after the accident.

Their Road Traffic Act of 1972, as amended, makes provision for a constable to demand that a person submit to a breath, blood or urine test in addition to a preliminary breath screening test. Section 8(1) of the legislation provides that, in the course of an investigation whether a person has committed an offence under section 5, which is driving, attempting to drive or being in charge while under the influence of drink or drugs, or section 6, which is driving, attempting to drive, or being in charge with blood alcohol concentration above the prescribed limit, that is .08, a constable may require him to provide two specimens of breath for analysis by means of an appropriate device, or to provide a specimen of blood or urine for laboratory test.

The amendments permit the result of a breath test to be used for evidentiary purposes. When the roadside screening test proves positive, a second breath test, rather than a blood or urine sample, is the normal means of providing evidence at the police station. This change was supported by medical experts who proposed that blood or urine sampling should be replaced by breath analysis. The new breath-testing provisions enable police officers to determine the alcohol content of blood within minutes and removes the need to send for doctors to administer blood tests.

Section 8(4) of that legislation states that if the provision of a specimen other than a specimen of breath may be required, the question whether it is to be a specimen of blood or urine shall be decided by the constable, except that if a medical practitioner is of the opinion that for medical purposes a specimen of blood cannot or should not be taken, it shall be a specimen of urine. Section 8(7) provides that a person who, without reasonable excuse, fails to provide a specimen when required to do so, is guilty of an offence.

Section 8(8) provides that, on requiring any person to provide a specimen, a constable must warn him that failure to provide it may render him liable to imprisonment, a fine, and disqualification. That is precisely what the Hon. Member's lawyer friend said might be done. If the constable fails to give the warning, the court may direct an acquittal or dismiss the charge, the issue being whether prejudice had resulted from failure to give a warning. Some of our friends claim that individual rights are being trampled upon, but at least they have access to the courts which is more than the victims of the accident have.

The subsection obviously contemplates that a person may be convicted though no warning is given, so the warning cannot be a requirement of the offence. However, if a person is charged with failing to provide a specimen, absence of a warning is relevant to the issue of reasonable excuse.

Section 9 gives additional protection to hospitalized persons. It provides that, while a person is at hospital as a patient, he shall not be required to provide a specimen of breath for a breath test or to provide a specimen for a laboratory test unless the medical practitioner in immediate charge has been notified and that it shall be for the provision of a specimen at the hospital. However, if the medical practitioner objects on the ground that it would be prejudicial to the proper care and treatment of the patient, the requirement shall not be made.

● (1650)

It seems abundantly clear, Mr. Speaker, from what has been said by my colleague and myself, that there are a number of options available regarding the acquisition of blood, and this House and the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs should have the benefit of the comparative review of blood sampling legislation which is being carried out by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the officials within his Department before embarking upon proposals to amend the Criminal Code in this area.

It seems that Hon. Members on the other side are taken with the fact that we are taking time to discuss the Bill as it is now. I suggest to them that the proper place for discussion of this Bill and the principle of this Bill—and I say this with all respect to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West—could best be done in committee. If it does go to committee I, for one, will gladly support it there.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by expressing my sympathy, through the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), to the Steward family who so tragically lost their son through impaired driving. The slaughter on our highways by drunk drivers is a terrible thing and our laws are certainly not tough enough. I, like many Canadians, have lost a close family member through drunk driving. A cousin of mine at the age of 17, on his high school graduation, was killed in an accident caused by drunk driving, so I know very personally the tragedy which this causes to families.

We do know some of the very specific technical problems which result because of the loopholes in our current laws. There are drivers who are unconscious after an accident and avoid a breathalyzer test which would end up in their being convicted. This reduces the chance of obtaining convictions. There are also people who seek to evade criminal responsibility by faking unconsciousness. This is another loophole with which we have to deal. Our laws do need considerable revision. I take this problem very, very seriously and I believe we do have to address some of the objections which have been raised by people who take a different approach. I do not agree with them all, as I will point out; however, I feel their objections have to be considered. Civil liberties associations, for example, have raised protests on grounds of self-incrimination through blood analysis. I do not accept this objection because I feel that driving is a privilege not a right. When one goes to get a driver's licence one does not receive the right to drive under all circumstances. You accept certain obligations and I believe one of them is, obviously, not to drink. Another is to subject yourself to laws which ensure that drunk drivers are kept off the highways.

That being said, it does not mean that a blood test is the best means of dealing with the problem which we have to face. There is a possibility of using different kinds of equipment, for example, new equipment which will enable a breathalyzer test to be taken from unconscious persons. There is a possibility that saliva and urine samples can be used to give adequate information. Certainly, if these means can be effectively developed, and there are technical questions about them, they would be a better means of dealing with the question than using blood samples. We have to consider the problems, for example, of hemophiliacs and of infection caused by taking blood samples. We do not want to add to the list of victims in our search for a solution.

I would agree, then, with the intent and the spirit of this Bill. However, to give it second reading as it now stands would be to give agreement in principle to a particular method of control, that is, with blood tests, and that would be to prejudge the technical question as to what is the best method of obtaining the necessary information. Blood tests may be the answer, and if that is shown I would be quite willing to support compulsory blood tests in those cases. I would agree, then, to reference of the subject matter to committee, but not the Bill itself. I believe this would be an effective thing to do.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to argue that we need to take a more comprehensive approach to this problem. The Hon. Member's Bill deals with obtaining a conviction after the fact. Of course, we want justice to be done, but surely the more important problem is to get drunk drivers off the roads. We do have laws now. We do have punishments, although they are not tough enough. But there are other things we can do to see that the punishments we mete out are successful. Something we could be doing, for example, on conviction for impaired driving, would be to impound the motor vehicle, not just take away the licence. We have the problem of people who are convicted once and who, therefore, are identified as problem drivers, as drunk drivers, but they continue to go out and do it again.

There are other means which we really must be considering in dealing with the actual problem of getting impaired drivers off the road. To do that, Mr. Speaker, we need a whole array of amendments, not just this Bill. I do have some concrete proposals to make. I am studying this problem and I feel we must address it in a very serious way.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would support reference of the subject matter to committee, not the actual Bill itself. In the alternative, I look forward to dealing with it when the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) brings in his amendments which will, of course, be referred to committee. He has promised amendments to the Criminal Code this fall on impaired driving.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I too salute the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). I believe this is a Bill which is doing all Canadians a service and I feel we should all be very grateful to him for bringing it here today. The Hon. Member referred to some statistics, Mr. Speaker, but I do not believe he mentioned the figure of 18,000 Canadians killed by drunk drivers in the previous six years. Another figure is that 50 per cent of automobile accidents which occur involve a degree of liquor. The Hon. Member might well have indicated that the OECD has pointed out that Canada has the second highest fatality rate of the 24 member countries. We are exceeded only by France in that regard. The record in Canada is absolutely deplorable.

The Hon. Member gave us the case of the Steward family. May I very quickly mention a case of a constituent in an adjacent riding to mine whose daughter, aged 22, was riding in a vehicle on a divided highway. A car came down the wrong side of the divided highway and there was a head-on collision which killed this girl. The driver of the other vehicle was ultimately charged with impaired driving. The tragedy was that the girl's body was taken away for autopsy. This mother had no rights whatsoever with respect to her daughter's body. The man driving his car down the wrong side of the divided highway was not required to take a breathalyzer test.

Numerous speakers have referred to that type of situation and it seems to me this case, like the one mentioned by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West, underlines dramatically what is wrong with the law at present. I speak as somebody who has been involved with impaired driving cases, both as a Crown attorney and as defence counsel, on many, many occasions.

Up to 1976, Sir, we had essentially just the impaired driving section. The problem with that was that once 1976 came along and we brought in the breathalyzer sections, some, and to be fair not all, of the judges took the view that the impaired driving section had in effect become a "dead letter". There have been cases, I think it is fair to say, where people who have been falling down drunk have been found not to be impaired. Therefore, all of the problems have fallen back on the breathalyzer sections. As has been pointed out here today, those sections are inadequate because you simply get up after an accident and say you are sick or you banged your head. Without plugging this loophole the law will remain grossly defective, so I submit it is high time we did so.

● (1700)

Many references have been made to legislation in Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta. I quote from the Toronto Star of August 26, where we have the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) reported as saying:

> Some people are against it because they think it is an unwarranted interference with the human persons. But it's the only way we have, when a person is unconscious or perhaps feigning unconsciousness to avoid a (breath-analysis) test, of actually getting a reading of the blood-alcohol level.

He also indicated that he favours mandatory blood tests for drivers who refuse or are unable to give breath samples.

The question I would put to my good friend, the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent), is: Why is it that all of the information is not in? This Bill can, of course, be amended in committee, so why can it not be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, which I remind him has nothing to do, at the moment at least. There is no reason why it could not take this reference, presumably starting next Tuesday; no reason why the matter could not be considered by them.

What is more important than this matter of impaired driving, in particular the defects in the present legislation? The Minister told us that we must waif for the department to study the matter. Sir, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West has been studying this matter for six years and there is probably not a Member in this House who has not had a victim of impaired driving come and see him or her. I submit that the matter has been studied to death and it is time to do something rather than continue to talk about it. This is absolutely crucial to people in all parts of Canada, to groups like Parents Against Impaired Drivers, MADD and many other organizations which have been formed recently because of the slaughter of Canadians as a result of impaired driving.

If the figure is correct, 64 per cent of Canadians think Parliament is unimportant. We can do no greater service for Canadians as a whole, and for the victims of impaired driving in particular, by actually doing something instead of talking and talking and talking about this problem.

So without further ado, Sir, bearing in mind that if someone gets up on the Liberal side after I am finished, knowing the time available, and talks this Bill out, then I think they will be doing a disservice to their fellow citizens, and bearing in mind the comments of the Hon. Member for Welland that we can refer the subject matter of the Bill to the committee, I therefore move:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
>
> Bill C-625, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I urge Members opposite, in particular the person who has been assigned to get up and talk the Bill out, to reflect on what they are doing and to refer the subject matter to the committee. They have nothing to lose, Mr. Speaker, and the Canadian people have everything to gain if they will do this on behalf of their fellow citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: The Government said no.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that my friends on the other side of the House, who constantly suggest the Government is somehow trying to muzzle them, would in turn suggest that a Member on this side of the House should not have an opportunity to speak after they have had the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Huntington: You are just talking out the Bill.

Mr. Daudlin: May I suggest through you, Mr. Speaker, that with respect to the motion which has been made, for all of those reasons which I know can or might be supported by Members on all sides of the House, I and many other Members of this chamber have been involved in another Private Member's Bill which was sent to a committee which I had the privilege of chairing. I refer to the Hon. Member who sponsored Bill C-653, the Farmers and Creditors Arrangements Act, which has the declared support of all Members of this House but which has given an enormous task to the committee because in fact we did not have the opportunity or the benefit of having a ministry do the kind of work-up that is done on all of these Bills in a totally non-partisan manner in order that we can reflect properly and carefully before we come up with legislation.

I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that all of us could emotionally support the urgent and pressing nature of the arguments which have been made by the Hon. Members who preceded me. But I would prefer, having had the kind of experience to which I allude, to have the benefit of all possible examination and work-up of legislation in advance of our giving it to committee as opposed to tying up Members almost ad infinitum in trying to do the kind of work done behind the scenes for us.

In addition, I might try to add a few words with respect to the comments made by my friend, the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent). He started to point out some of the difficulties in which we might find ourselves were we to proceed too quickly. Might I suggest that as far back as 1952 the United States Supreme Court, when dealing with the case of Rochin v. California, indicated that a search of a suspect's stomach for concealed narcotics by forcing an emetic agent down his throat, causing him to regurgitate, violated the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment. The court likened the search to a coerced confession, focusing on the police brutality evident in the search. The opinion cast doubt on the validity of any unconsented search extending below the surface of the body.

Because that happened in the U.S., Mr. Speaker, it can obviously have little authority, other than persuasive, in Canada. But it does commence to point out that in fact there may be different ways and means of achieving the ends which the Hon. Member who commendably brought this Bill forward sought to achieve.

The State of New York passed the first implied consent statute in 1953. It was conceived as a means of facilitating the cause of chemical evidence in driving while intoxicated prosecutions and, at the same time, avoiding any constitutional limitation that might apply to the tests. The statute provided that anyone driving a motor vehicle in New York was deemed to have consented to a chemical test for intoxication at the direction of any police officer who had reasonable and probable cause to believe that the driver had been or was intoxicated. There was no requirement for arrest, and in the event that the driver refused to submit, his driving privilege would be revoked.

● (1710)

The new law tested in New York Supreme Court the following year in Schutt v. MacDuff. The facts were straightforward. The New York Commissioner of Motor Vehicles revoked the plaintiff's licence when he refused to submit to a blood test requested by a police officer following the arrest. After his acquittal on the drunk driving charge, the plaintiff brought an action challenging the revocation of his licence and the validity of the implied consent statute on four grounds: in the first instance, that it violated his right against self-incrimination; in the second, that it violated his right against unreasonable search and seizure; third, that it violated his right to due process of law; and finally, that it violated his right to equal protection. The last ground was rejected without hesitation, but the court held that the implied consent law did not infringe the plaintiff's privilege against self-incrimination. The court agreed with the legislature that the privilege or qualified right to drive could be conditioned upon waiver of the right against self-incrimination.

Since the statute permited the suspect to refuse testing, he could choose either to waive his privilege against self-incrimination or forfeit that privilege to continue driving in New York. Concerning the waiver by a person who is presumably drunk, the court held that the right against self-incrimination was inapplicable because the chemical evidence was non-testimonial.

The court further rejected the plaintiff's contention that the test constituted an unreasonable search under the fourth amendment. Since the officer had arrested him before directing the test, the search administered through the test would be reasonable as incidental to lawful arrest. The court further reasoned that any search conducted under the statute would be a consensual search because it permitted the driver to refuse. The ability to refuse obviated the need to inquire whether the test would be administered without actual consent.

The court did, however, uphold the plaintiff's claim that his driver's licence had been revoked without due process of law and found the statute to be unconstitutional on that ground. The finding of unconstitutionality rested, in effect, on two defects in the legislation: first, that it lacked the requirement that a person be under lawful arrest at the time he refused the test; and, second, that it lacked any provision for a hearing on the grounds for revocation.

The defects cited by the court were subsequently remedied and the following year the New York Supreme Court upheld the statute in Anderson v. MacDuff.

In 1954, the United States Supreme Court, in Breithaupt v. Abraham, held that a blood test conducted on an unconscious driver did not violate the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment despite the suspect's lack of consent. The court distinguished the stomach search in Rochin by noting that a blood test was a minor intrusion into the body to which many people voluntarily subjected themselves each day. Unlike the search in Rochin, the blood test was not brutal and offensive and did not constitute conduct that shocks the conscience. On the authority of Breithaupt, chemical tests were thought to be permissible as long as police did not use excessive force in administering them. Both those cases, Rochin and Breithaupt, were decided before the court held that the fourth and fifth amendments were applicable in respect of state proceedings. The court clarified the fourth and fifth amendment issues in Schmerber v. California in 1966, which is now the leading U.S. constitutional authority on chemical tests for intoxication.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

[English]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that the third Bill which was to be discussed this evening has been withdrawn. If there is unanimous consent, I suppose this debate could be continued up until the hour of six o'clock p.m.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, there were discussions earlier among the three Parties as to what should happen at this point in time, given the fact that the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) has decided not to proceed with his Bill at this time. The agreement at that time was that the Chair should call it six o'clock.

Mr. Forrestall: I think, Mr. Speaker, that you will find consensus for calling it six o'clock at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Is the House disposed to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5.15 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX A

(See p. 27106)

MEMBERSHIP OF CABINET COMMITTEES

Communications

Chairman	Mr. J. Roberts
Vice-Chairman	Mr. S. Joyal
Members	Mr. A. J. MacEachen Sen. H. A. Olson Mr. A. Ouellet Mr. R. LeBlanc Mr. G. Regan Mr. M. MacGuigan Mr. D. Johnston Mrs. J. Erola Sen. J. Austin Mme C. Hervieux-Payette

Economic and Regional Development

Chairman	Mr. D. Johnston
Vice-Chairman	Mr. J. Chrétien Mrs. J. Erola
Members	Mr. E. F. Whelan Mr. A. Ouellet Mr. F. Fox Mr. P. De Bané Sen. H. R. Argue Mr. G. Regan Mr. E. Lumley Mr. L. Axworthy Mr. C. Caccia Mr. D. Smith

Foreign and Defence Policy

Chairman	Mr. A. J. MacEachen
Vice-Chairman	Mr. G. Regan Mr. J.-J. Blais
Members	Mr. J.-L. Pepin Mr. E. F. Whelan Mr. F. Fox Mr. P. De Bané Mr. R. P. Kaplan Mr. C. Lapointe Mr. E. Lumley Mr. L. Axworthy Mr. C. Caccia Mr. D. Collenette

Government Operations

Chairman	Mr. Y. Pinard
Vice-Chairman	Sen. H. A. Olson
Members	Mr. A. Ouellet Mr. R. LeBlanc Mr. J.-J. Blais Mr. M. MacGuigan Mr. P. Bussières Mr. C. Lapointe Mr. S. Joyal Mr. B. Campbell Mr. R. MacLaren

Labour Relations

Chairman	Mr. Y. Pinard
Vice-Chairman	Sen. H. A. Olson
Members	Mr. J. C. Munro Mr. H. Gray Mr. A. Ouellet Mr. R. LeBlanc Mr. J. Roberts Sen. H. R. Argue Mr. L. Axworthy Mrs. J. Erola Sen. J. Austin Mr. S. Joyal Mr. R. MacLaren

Legislation and House Planning

Chairman	Mr. Y. Pinard
Vice-Chairman	Mr. M. MacGuigan
Members	Mr. J. C. Munro Mr. E. F. Whelan Mme M. Bégin Mr. P. De Bané Mr. G. Regan Mr. R. P. Kaplan Mr. E. Lumley Mr. S. Joyal Mme C. Hervieux-Payette Mr. D. Smith

*N.B. The Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Finance are ex officio members of the Cabinet Committees on Economic and Regional Development, Foreign and Defence Policy, Government Operations and Social Development. All Ministers are free to attend meetings of these Committees.

80132—6

Priorities and Planning

Chairman	Mr. P. E. Trudeau
Vice-Chairman	Mr. A. J. MacEachen
Members	Mr. J. Chrétien Mr. H. E. Gray Mr. M. Lalonde Mr. R. LeBlanc Mr. J. Roberts Mr. G. Regan Mr. Y. Pinard Mr. D. Johnston Mr. L. Axworthy Mrs. J. Erola Sen. J. Austin

Public Service

Chairman	Mr. P. E. Trudeau
Vice-Chairman	Mr. Y. Pinard
Members	Mr. A. J. MacEachen Mr. J.-L. Pepin Mr. H. E. Gray Mr. M. Lalonde Mr. D. Johnston Mr. S. Joyal

Security and Intelligence

Chairman	Mr. P. E. Trudeau
Vice-Chairman	Mr. A. J. MacEachen
Members	Mr. J. Chrétien Mr. M. Lalonde Mr. J. Roberts Mr. J.-J. Blais Mr. M. MacGuigan Mr. R. P. Kaplan Mr. Y. Pinard Sen. J. Austin

Social Development

Chairman	Sen. J. Austin
Vice-Chairman	Mr. J. C. Munro Mr. M. MacGuigan
Members	Mr. J.-L. Pepin Mr. R. LeBlanc Mr. J. Roberts Mme M. Bégin Mr. F. Fox Mr. R. P. Kaplan Mrs. J. Erola Mr. C. Caccia Mr. S. Joyal Mr. B. Campbell Mr. D. Collenette Mme C. Hervieux-Payette

Special Committee of Council

Chairman	Mr. Y. Pinard
Vice-Chairman	Sen. H. A. Olson
Members	Sen. H. R. Argue Mr. M. MacGuigan Mr. P. Bussières Mr. C. Lapointe Mr. B. Campbell Mr. D. Collenette Mme C. Hervieux-Payette Mr. D. Smith Mr. R. MacLaren

Treasury Board

Chairman	Mr. H. E. Gray
Vice-Chairman	Mr. M. Lalonde
Members	Mr. J.-L. Pepin Sen. H. A. Olson Mr. A. Ouellet Mr. B. Campbell
Alternates	Mr. C. Lapointe 1st Alternate Mr. R. MacLaren Sen. H. R. Argue Mr. P. Bussières Mr. D. Collenette Mr. J.-J. Blais

Western Affairs

Chairman	Mr. L. Axworthy
Members	Mr. J. Chrétien Mr. J. C. Munro Sen. H. A. Olson Mr. E. F. Whelan Mr. J. Roberts Mr. P. De Bané Sen. H. R. Argue Mr. G. Regan Mr. E. Lumley Mr. D. Johnston Sen. J. Austin Mr. D. Collenette

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, September 15, 1983

The House met at 11 a.m.

● (1105)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, September 13, consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Hon. Members will remember that Motion No. 2 and Motion No. 4 were ruled out of order last Tuesday. The House will now proceed to Motion No. 3 and Motion No. 5 which are grouped for debate but will be voted on separately.

● (1110)

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 23 to 26 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"11.(1) The authorized capital of the Corporation is one billion one hundred dollars divided into ten million and one shares with a par value of one hundred dollars each."

Motion No. 5.

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 39 to 41 at page 3 and lines 1 and 2 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"14. The aggregate amount of borrowings of the Corporation pursuant to sections 12 and 13 shall not exceed the amount equal to ten times the aggregate of the paid in capital and earned surplus in the accounts of the Corporation."

He said: The effect of the amendments before us today, Mr. Speaker, is to control the borrowing authority of this corporation. The House will recall that when we considered this Bill on Tuesday last, we dealt with the question of whether the corporation should be controlled by independent, private enterprise people on its board of directors. That, apparently, was not the real wish of the Government.

Now we have a worse situation the question of control over the corporation. In the Export Development Bill there is a provision that the corporation have an authorized capital of $1 billion. Then Clause 11 of the Bill provides that the corporation can borrow ten times its authorized capital, so at the present time the corporation could borrow on its own account, without ever coming to Parliament, an amount of $10 billion. It does not matter how much money is subscribed to the corporation by the Government; the essence of the problem is that if the Government gives the corporation the authority to have authorized capitalization, from then on the borrowing of the corporation is not tied to the money in its bank account. It is not tied to the capital and surplus actually paid into the corporation but is tied only to its authorized capital. That is the most ridiculous situation one could ever imagine, Mr. Speaker. The reason for the amendment is to ensure that under no circumstances are we going to allow borrowing against just authorized capital. What we must insist upon, if we are going to have any sense of direction in this corporation at all, is borrowing against subscribed capital or earned surplus.

The borrowing or leverage arrangements of trust companies, banks and the like are tied to the subscribed capital and surplus. For example, we will allow a trust company to borrow 20 times against its paid-in capital and surplus but we will not allow a trust company to borrow against its authorized capital. The point is that you can incorporate a company for $1 million but you do not have to put the total, incorporated, authorized amount into the company till. When I began practising law these used to be called $3 companies; now they should be called $1 companies—you just put in enough to buy one share.

Essentially the Bill provides that you can borrow not ten times what you have in the company but ten times what the authority of the company is, no matter whether any money is paid into the treasury or any shares are subscribed. The only way that the House of Commons can responsibly control the borrowing activities of the Export Development Corporation is to control its authorized capital.

The House will recall that the Chair ruled Motion No. 4 out of order. I want to say to the Chair that I agree that the motion should have been ruled out of order. It was placed on the Order Paper only to point out to people reading it and understanding the Bill that what we really want is some sort of control over the borrowing of this corporation. The way to have that control is by the percentage of leverage against the paid-in capital and earned surplus of the corporation. We would be satisfied with ten times paid-in capital and earned surplus.

● (1115)

However, the Government does not want any controls on this corporation. The Government wants to be able to borrow without ever coming to Parliament for approval. The Government wants to be able to borrow against authorized capital and to give itself $10 billion additional borrowing authority, to borrow against the credit of the people of Canada, the taxpayers of Canada. This Government says: "Just increase the capitalization of the Export Development Corporation by increasing the authorized capital from $1 billion to $2 billion, and we get $10 billion more borrowing authority". Without ever coming to Parliament again, without this House ever having an aye, yea or nay as to how the Government borrows money, it receives the right to borrow $10 billion. That, Sir, is totally unacceptable.

We were elected to this place to control the borrowings, the taxing, the public purse, yet this Government in this legislation wants to take away that control and give it to a board of directors, largely civil servants, to do what it damned well feels like. That is unacceptable. No Member of Parliament can accept this provision in this Bill. The only way the amendment could be put is to alter the demand of the Government, and we have altered that demand. We have said: "Whereas you have $1 billion of authorized capital, pass this amendment and we will give you $1 billion plus $100, and that will control your borrowing. That will keep you in line, and that will show some discipline". This cannot continue. Parliament must have control over the money borrowed on the credit of Canada, and unless Parliament has that control, what is the point of Parliament?

The Minister may say: "Well, Parliament has control. If Parliament votes this $2 billion authorization, then Parliament in effect is authorizing $20 billion of borrowing authority in total, and, therefore, Parliament has the right to vote on $20 billion of borrowing authority". That is what we are asked to vote on. The trouble is that that borrowing authority goes on forever until it is used up and never again, until the corporation has borrowed its $20 billion, will we ever see any report or have any right to control the activities of this corporation.

This corporation has a tremendous lobby going for it. We all want to make sure that Canada exports goods, capital goods, because the export of goods means jobs. Heaven knows, Canadians are looking for places to work, worth-while work, good work, and exports of goods mean jobs for Canadians. But what jobs are created for Canadians if the resources of Canada are squandered and wasted? While we might be able to finance at low rates goods for export to other countries, it is we Canadians who must use our work and effort to pay for those subsidized rates.

● (1120)

Somewhere along the line there has to be a balance and there is no evidence presented in any of the committee reports to indicate how competent the directors of this corporation have been in financing and building up Canada's trade. Indeed, not long ago we had nearly 6 per cent of world trade; we are now approaching 3 per cent.

The Government says this money is needed to finance the export of capital goods. Sir, this corporation lent money to 62 companies in Canada last year to finance sales of trade goods overseas. Half the money went to two companies. In its analysis of where we should be going, the Economic Council of Canada made some serious criticisms of this corporation and how it operates. Professor André Raynauld, who was head of the Economic Council of Canada at one point, has said that this corporation is out of control. What we have to do, Sir, is put some parliamentary control back in place. We cannot go on any longer allowing a board of directors to borrow almost any amount against authorized capital without any control by Parliament.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some enthusiasm to support this motion before the House. I believe what we are talking about here is absolutely critical to the future of Canada's export trade and whether or not we are going to become active players on the world trading stage.

I must say that past performance of the EDC does not encourage one to be enthusiastic about the future role of Canada in the international marketplace. As my friend has pointed out, the funds from the EDC which were to assist Canadian firms to enter the international marketplace have not been handed out in a fair and equitable fashion. In other words, when 50 per cent of all the funds go to two large Canadian companies, and we all know of dozens and dozens of Canadian firms who would enjoy getting involved in the export marketplace and are unable to access those funds, I say that the EDC is not fulfilling the mandate originally given to it to encourage Canadian firms to operate in the international marketplace.

I like this particular motion, Mr. Speaker, because it brings some accountability to this Crown corporation. I believe it is crucial that the EDC become more active because I can recall a number of contracts where the Canadian firm has been the lowest bidder and these contracts could have provided hundreds and hundreds of jobs to certain parts of Canada; yet we lost those contracts because of the financing arrangements other bidders were able to produce that were better than what Canada could produce through the EDC.

I believe the EDC must appear before the appropriate committee of Parliament on a regular basis to explain its behaviour during these critical times. It has now lost any real sense of what is required of it. It has become very much unaccountable for its deeds. I believe the time has come when Members of Parliament must not only request but indeed demand more accountability from Crown corporations and Government departments per se. The reason I say that is that all of us have numerous examples where Government departments and bureaucrats have really lost sight of what their role is.

I want to use a typical but specific example in this context. The middle of July, 1983 saw a major washout of the Trans-Canada Highway in the Rogers Pass area of British Columbia. That is to be expected in the mountain passes of Canada, in that very rugged part of our country, but because of a closure which lasted for many days, businesses that depend upon the movement of travellers through this country for only a few weeks of the year saw that livelihood fall away around them as travellers going east and west simply stopped for too many days.

There were accusations hurled about at the time that the officials in Parks Canada did not have an action plan to put into place to create a bridge which would stop this closure. The co-operation between provincial and federal authorities could have been considerably better. As a result, so many people in tourist and hospitality businesses as well as related small businesses providing the necessary infrastructure, the restaurants, the laundries, the entertainment facilities and so on, lost that crucial piece of business during that important season, at this critical time in Canada's economic history, so that today there is evidence of number of bankruptcies that would not normally have occurred.

• (1125)

Of more importance is the fact that this situation need not have occurred had officials representing Parks Canada acted more appropriately and with more haste with regard to the concerns of those surrounding businesses, and if the people that they employ had kept these concerns more in the forefront of their decision-making.

I raise this matter because I raised it with the Minister responsible. Of course, there was no response; he just simply ignored this Member of Parliament from western Canada who is speaking out on behalf of hundreds of businesses that have been devastated in that particular area of the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret the necessity of interrupting the Hon. Member. The point he is making is interesting, but perhaps he could indicate to the Chair in what way it is related to the two motions now before the House.

Mr. Riis: You bet, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will do just that. What we are discussing in this particular motion concerns bringing some accountability to Canada's Crown corporations. I say that because, unquestionably, a situation has developed in our country that has resulted in Government per se being too far removed from the real world. Here we are asking to control the borrowing authority. We are simply asking, as Members of Parliament concerned about export trade, about the Export Development Corporation, that if that corporation, in the best interests of Canadians, wishes to have more funds at its disposal to assist Canadian firms and workers, that it come to Parliament and make its case. That is all we are asking, that this Crown corporation, which is critical to Canada's future, come to Canada's Parliament and make a case for more funds. If it made the case, its request would be granted.

Over the years we have seen the Export Development Corporation of Canada becoming rather arrogant. We have seen this corporation losing sight of its real mandate. When one hears that in the last year the Export Development Corporation assisted only some 60 firms in this country, then I believe that in terms of Canada playing its role on the overseas economic stage, one realizes that we have missed that opportunity. If there is one thing that we must do in this country, it is to bolster up that Crown corporation, to give it support as a Parliament.

When I hear the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) telling me that we will open our floodgates and encourage more relationships between Canada and the U.S. in the field of foreign trade, I begin to worry. To add even more foreign trade to what is already going to the United States is essentially putting more of our eggs in that single basket. It is in Canada's interest to open up overseas markets in Europe, Southeast Asia and the Middle East and not necessarily to increase trade with the United States.

• (1130)

Another point which I believe needs to be made while talking about the Export Development Corporation is that if freer trade with the United States is opened up, there will be a migration of American branch plants out of this country. In other words, rather than create more jobs and more opportunities in this country, we will see a net job loss in Canada as a result of liberalizing trade with the United States. Many American subsidiaries are operating in Canada now simply to get around our existing tariff walls and the like. We will see at net loss of jobs perhaps at a level that would astound most Canadians.

In closing, I suggest that there is no shortage of examples of the necessity of Government departments—Crown corporations more specifically—becoming more accountable to the people of Canada through Canada's Parliament. This motion simply asks for more accountability. I do not believe there are many Members of the House of Commons who do not feel that so many of our Crown corporations are out of control and not necessarily acting in the best interests of Canadians and Canadian workers. There is very little difference between the Crown corporation and the corporation next door. Surely if we are going to have Crown corporations there must be more reason for their existence than simply creating a corporation to compete with fellow corporations in both the national and international marketplace. Therefore, I support this motion which is before the House today because it attempts to bring more accountability to Canada's Crown corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Before I recognize the next speaker, the Chair feels that this is a good time at the resumption of our session to remind Hon. Members that they should not cross the floor between the Member speaking and the Chair. I assume this is meant as a courtesy to the Member who is speaking so that he can command the undivided attention of the Chair.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on Motion No. 3. Having spent the morning reading "The Rocky Road to the 1990s", I suggest that the Government is putting the cart before the horse. It is asking Parliament to increase its borrowings by approximately 2.5 times before it sets forth an economic policy which indicates what we will be trading. Our objection through Motion No. 3 is that the Government is asking for too much on a carte blanche basis.

The Government is trying to use its letters of comfort which it has used in the past when going ahead to issue funds out of the treasury without ever coming to this Parliament. This is the same procedure.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has simply requested that, instead of proceeding with $2 billion paid-in capital, to go to $1 billion and $100. The reason for this is that Crown corporations presently have adequate funds for all potential trades. We are simply requesting, as we have on a number of Bills, that appropriations come before the House of Commons. This is too global in approach; we want more specific terms of reference. We want to know what the Government has done with what we have allowed it to spend before it proceeds to spend on a carte blanche basis money of which we are not aware and which even the Auditor General has difficulty finding. I do not refer to the Export Development Corporation in this regard.

Before continuing I would like to commend the Export Development Corporation. I recently had a case in my riding where a small company was having difficulty arranging financing. If the bank took on the finance it came out of the owner's credit loan from that bank. A senior vice-president of the Export Development Corporation stepped in at my request and has resolved the problem to his satisfaction. I appreciate that type of co-operation extended by Government departments to the Opposition.

Furthermore, I believe this is an area where the Export Development Corporation can be of great benefit to this country. While there is little likelihood of large corporations being developed, there is greater potential for the development of smaller corporations. Due to today's global trading, a small corporation can exist only when a large portion of its output goes to international trade. The problem does not lie so much with the Government but with many people in the country who are not aware of what is available to assist them in merchandising their products.

I would also point out that many small organizations have difficulty arranging loans because they do not have the lobby groups representing them or large corporate sectors acting on their behalf. Therefore they must be assisted through the Department of DRIE, formerly Industry, Trade and Commerce.

With respect to Motion No. 3, I believe the Government is going too far when asking for this much of an increase at this time. We are losing track of what $1 billion is. A billion dollars is $1,000 million. This increase which permits the Government to go $10,000 million into debt is a tremendous amount of money for the House to give carte blanche. The entire Bill permits the Government to borrow up to $60 billion. That is approximately one-third of our total national debt according to the latest figures. I believe that rapidly increasing these amounts for the benefit of one sector will leave nothing for other sectors.

These increases should be made on an annual or semi-annual basis. Perhaps we could discuss it in a limited debate, so that if there is a reasonable amount being requested and we understand its purpose and what the corporation will do, it could be acceptable. However, we object to increases in 2.5 multiples in order to assist the Minister so that he will not have to return to the House.

He did make a point to me which I can acknowledge. He said: "When you are in Government you will not have to come in front of the House". He is a Member who realizes that they are in their dying days of Government and that this will be of benefit to Canadians through a great Party, the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada.

Let me talk about Motion No. 5 for a moment. This method is logical, reasonable and used in every financial institution in Canada. They not only take their paid-in capital; it is based on paid-in capital together with earned surplus. This gives them an even broader base on which to borrow funds. It goes beyond $20 billion if we allow this provision, which we are not going to. It gives EDC the right to borrow ten times $1 billion plus ten times the earned surplus.

● (1140)

I have to speak in favour of the Hon. Member's motion. It is economically sound. I believe the Auditor General would approve of this approach. I believe all of Canada will approve of this approach. I know the Provinces feel we have gone too far. Let us take a look at this particular allegation. Have the Provinces been brought into the discussion? My Province accounts for approximately 50 per cent of the funds required by EDC. Has Ontario been brought in? Has the matter been discussed with the Deputy Minister or the Minister of Industry and Trade for the Province of Ontario? I am sure this Province would agree that this is asking too much at one time.

We have to stop running and start walking. We have to start analysing. We have to start looking at where we have been. What has got us into this mess today? The paper to which I have referred this morning "The Rocky Road to the 1990s" written by the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), has brought it all out. He said that FIRA has been a stumbling block. He said the National Energy Program has been a stumbling block. He enumerates all the things this Government has done in the last 15 years which have caused this severe recession and severe unemployment.

The Government is putting the cart before the horse. The Government must present to this Parliament an economic policy that will broaden international trade. The Government must show this Parliament how it will create jobs. The Government has not yet done anything despite its statements and suggestions from the opposition.

We must defeat this Bill because of this section. The Minister should be reasonable. He should reduce the amount requested and ask for a reasonable amount, the amount required at this time. When he requires more, he should come back to this House of Commons and make his request.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the Bill before the House today suffers from a disease that has become part and parcel of the philosophy of this administration, namely, inflation.

[English]

This is not a new Bill. When this Bill was drafted Cabinet approved the proposals with regard to changes to the Export Development Act. Inflation was rushing along rampant at a rate between 10 per cent and 12 per cent per annum. If that had continued then, of course, in five or eight years it blows totals all out of proportion.

That is why we have this proposal for $2 billion in authorized capital. There is no need for that. Who is going to take up that capitalization? Will it be farmed out to CDIC as well for operation? I am sorry I do not have last year's annual statement here to see if there is an accumulated surplus, but we should see the leverage that is available to the EDC for its borrowings. My colleagues the Hon. Members from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and Ontario (Mr. Fennell) have said that if these proposals ultimately go through it is conceivable that the Export Development Agency could borrow up to $60 billion or even, if you want to cut it back, $50 billion. If you have one corporation able to do that, there goes parliamentary control immediately. There is no control whatsoever.

What about considering the annual report? That is hindsight on operations two years ago. There is a psychosis in the bureaucracy of this Government that it should not be accountable to Parliament. This administration supinely follows that dictum. Parliament represents the people of Canada and has the ultimate authority. The way legislation has been brought forward, and this particular piece of legislation is a case in point, it removes from Parliament one more area of control. The general taxpayers of the country are not aware of that. Polls say that Parliament, to them, is of no great concern. First, most people do not understand Parliament. Second, as long as nobody has a Bunsen burner, or to put it another way, to put an old matchstick on their soul, they are not concerned. Nobody is borrowing their particular odds. But on the whole, when people ask about the expenditures and the demands of Government upon the average taxpayer, is it realized that almost 50 cents out of every dollar earned in Canada goes to Government at some level?

The recipients of Government largesse are not the ones who will complain. But the ones who are producing, the salaried people, the hourly-rated people—I do not care where they are—are being squeezed and squeezed beyond all reason. This Bill is part of that philosophy. It is Government, big Government. EDA is just part of the apparatus; it is just one of the Crown corporations.

We can go through the list of Crown corporations. There is no control. They do not want control. They are bureaucrats of the Government's own making and they tell Government what should be done and the public be damned. I have a classic example. I know a number of officials in this corporation, many of them very able men. I am not being patronizing when I say that. However, the corporation does not require this authorization. It does not require this power. It should come to Parliament and explain the situation if it needs more authority. With this Bill, the corporation will not have to come back to Parliament for authorization or accountability until the year 2050, if ever.

• (1150)

This is one of the most glaring and outrageous examples of bureaucratic gall. My colleague's amendment states $100 more, one more share. This is a procedural tactic so that we can debate this section. I attended the committee hearings but I have not yet seen the case made for an increase in capital. Right now there is unissued capital. There is authority in subsequent clauses to borrow. In his other amendments, my colleague has given a balance. He states ten times leverage, which is what was asked, but we have added surplus to the outstanding capital which is not included in the government's proposal.

I implore Hon. Members, if there is any time when we can be serious and come back down to earth, it is to accept my colleague's amendment. The Government's proposals with regard to the share structure and the potential volume of borrowings by the EDC are just not acceptable. They are ludicrous.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some concern regarding what is being asked by the Government as far as the Export Development Corporation is concerned. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) made an excellent argument regarding our concern about what is being asked for in this Bill.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has put forward very reasoned and reasonable amendments. According to the 1982 annual report, the corporation has substantial retained earnings. In 1982 it accounted for $186.1 million of shareholders' equity, which I presume can be re-borrowed. The Government of Canada increased its budget for share capital during that year by $115 million, bringing the total to $465 million. During that year, EDC borrowed $787 million through a mix of public issues and private placements in the international marketplace.

Given its present authority, it does not need anywhere near the amount being asked for in this Bill. It is as if the Minister is saying to Members of Parliament: "Gee, we don't want to bother you too much, you are too busy; as a result, we will ask for sufficient capital for years and years into the future".

Having been a Member of Parliament for a number of years, I would like to be bothered more. Members have lost control over Crown corporations which have been created in abundance in the last number of years and, as mentioned by my colleague, we have lost control over the public purse.

The deficit is incomprehensible, not only to those in my constituency but I am sure to constituents all across the country. We are getting into the $30 billion range. Last year it was over $20 billion. In his budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said in a very optimistic fashion that if this Government is allowed to continue, it will be over $20 billion for the next five years.

Why should we be concerned when in this Bill the Government is just asking for authority to increase the authorized capital of the corporation from $1 billion to $2 billion? It is because when we look deeper we find there is the opportunity to borrow ten times that authorized capital. In effect, we are adding $10 billion to the borrowing authority of this corporation, something that it has shown it does not require.

It would be nice if the officials of the corporation could come before Parliament when the estimates are being considered. They could tell us whether the authority is inadequate. If that was the case, it would mean that exports from this country were moving at a very rapid rate and that businesses, large and small, require that kind of financing being made available to this corporation in order to get into world markets.

We all recognize that world trade is very difficult, particularly in a recession. Many countries have a high rate of advanced manufacturing capabilities. They compete with us in the world markets. Many of those countries have substantially more amounts of capital available than we do and can move into those markets. Therefore, we require a very efficient and capable corporation to assist businesses in this country to move up into those markets.

The value of EDC is not being questioned. What is being questioned is the authority of Parliament to have that corporation come before us and give us the reasons why we ought to move more of the taxpayers' money into that account. That is what is being questioned.

When we look at the statistics for world trade, it is depressing to note that we are not advancing our percentage of world trade as we should be. We are falling behind our traditional proportion, dropping from 6 per cent to 3 per cent. This is very noticeable in the agricultural sector. We used to have a large share of the world market, well over 25 per cent of the world grain market in exports. That has dropped substantially and is now well under 20 per cent. At the same time the Americans, one of our chief competitors, have increased their share of world trade from something in the neighbourhood of 25 per cent to well over 50 per cent. That has been accomplished by very hard-nosed selling, bargaining and the use of export credit.

We in the agricultural sector have pleaded with the Export Development Corporation to assist us in that area, but very little assistance has been forthcoming. If you look at the record for last year, only 62 companies were assisted, with most of the money going to the manufacturing sector. What, then, do we have? We have now created another Crown corporation to deal with agriculture, Canagrex. Looking at the statement of this corporation, one finds that it had 613 employees to contract 62 loans last year. There were one and a half employees for each insurance account. It seems to me, looking at those statistics, that there would be sufficient employees to allow for expansion and that we would not need another corporation with another $12 billion worth of capital from Government assigned to it to create another group of employees to do exactly what this corporation should be doing.

• (1200)

That is why the amendment that is before us is so important. It is important so that we as Members of Parliament, the stewards of the taxpayers' money, can ask in-depth questions dealing with how these corporations are operating, why they require the staff levels they do have and why this corporation requires offices in five cities across the country to do so little business—although the value of the business it does do is great; and why, with all that capital, they showed only about $1 million profit last year.

Perhaps the answer to some of these questions can be found in the way those corporations operate. The requirement for efficiency in a Crown corporation does not seem to be as great as the requirement for efficiency in the private sector. That is why the amendment that was lost on Tuesday was so important. It proposed having the private sector more involved in the operation of this corporation because the private sector has learned how to be lean and efficient and to operate in a proper business manner.

We are saying that this corporation should be the vehicle to assist us in international trade. We would like to see the private sector more involved. We believe that this corporation ought to come to Parliament once in a while when it is asking for refuelling in order that we can decide whether it needs its oil changed or whether we should just tune it up a little bit.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with and what we are not dealing with needs to be established lest there be any misunderstanding.

Mr. Keeper: That is a good idea.

Mr. Malone: Obviously, what we are not dealing with is the question of whether or not export is of value.

Mr. Keeper: It is.

Mr. Malone: What is not at issue is that particular question.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that over the weekend the members of this caucus met at Mont Ste-Marie. The members of the NDP caucus, of course, met at Mount St. Helen's and they are now continuing to blow their top.

What is at issue is the question of accountability and the question of control. Essentially, that is all that is at issue. That issue is of such magnitude that it raises the hackles of the Auditor General of Canada to the point where three Auditor Generals have worked on the theory that the Government has lost or is near losing control of the public purse.

Control of the public purse is the reason for Parliament's existence. That reason dates back to the time of King Charles and the debates that then took place and the referendums thereafter dealing with who would have control of the purse of Parliament. The question of parliamentary control and where this fundamental power exists is central to the whole issue. If power is to reside in the people of a democracy, then they must exercise their power through their representatives in Parliament. If any sum of money, Mr. Speaker, irrespective of its size, is out of the public eye and out of the control of the people's representatives, then democracy has been diminished and Parliament has been thwarted.

According to Auditor General Kenneth Dye, what exists today is a situation in which the massive growth of corporations owned by the federal Government has created a $34 billion layer of Government that is largely hidden from public view and not properly accountable to Parliament. In the particular amendment before the House of Commons today, we are essentially attempting to make it impossible for one more Crown corporation to borrow without telling the people of Canada why it needs some $10 billion.

The other issue that must be stressed is that need has not been established. The amount of borrowing power that is available today to the Export Development Corporation has not been utilized to its fullest extent. It does not spend the amount it asks for, yet if the amendment is not accepted, we are allowing it to borrow twice as much. Surely no corporation should be given a blank cheque for borrowing to the maximum of $10 billion unless it comes to the people's representatives to demonstrate need. If need cannot be demonstrated, blank cheques up to $10 billion should not be granted.

One of the great difficulties that we face in a democracy today is that people have become insulated and shockproofed through ignorance of what numbers actually mean. Numeral names without relationships remain mere names. What is a billion? What is a trillion?

The very first experience I had as a Member of Parliament in 1974 in a House of Commons committee was when I was on the energy committee and Dome Petroleum were arguing that they could not advance certain projects on the northern Arctic coast because there was not a large enough volume of gas present. At that time I asked what the known reserves were. The witness said that it was 16 trillion cubic feet. I asked him how large reserves had to be before he could develop them, and he said 20 trillion cubic feet. Using simple mathematics, 16 from 20 means that he was only four short. The fundamental question was, what is a trillion?

We ask that question today. Pieces of paper are covered with notations showing how many billions of dollars we are in debt, and the public is insulated. It really does not matter to the average Canadian whether we are $34 billion, $10 billion or $134 billion in debt because the numbers are meaningless.

A million dollars in $1 bills laid end to end will go from where you are, Mr. Speaker, to a community 80 miles away. A billion dollars in $1 bills laid end to end will go from Vancouver to Halifax and back two and a half times. We are allowing the Export Development Corporation to ask for ten times that amount without once demonstrating need.

Surely if Parliament is to discharge its responsibility to the people, then control must be exercised. As reported in an article in The Globe and Mail:

> Mr. Dye said that, this year, he had been able to get all of the information he required for his audit but that some of it was obtained only with great difficulty. Information on the purchase of Petrofina by Petro-Canada was not easily obtained for his audit of the Energy Department or on CN Marine for his audit of Transport Canada, he said.

● (1210)

As another Member mentioned earlier, when it comes to Crown corporations there is a feeling that it is the money of the Canadian people that is involved. In more than one audit of the Government of Canada, the Auditor General has said that he has great difficulty finding out the spending of various departments and that extends through Crown corporations. Surely it is the obligation of Parliament, the principal court of the land, to make sure that there is a visible accounting of the people's money. The Auditor General should not have a difficult time but, rather, should have an easy time identifying the need and ensuring that there is control and accountability.

The report in The Globe and Mail of Wednesday, December 8, 1982 went on to say:

> Even when Parliamentary safeguards are in place, Crown corporations do not always follow them, the report said. In 1981, for instance, Air Canada was required to tell the federal Treasury Board, which watches over public spending, of any plans to make a major investment.
>
> On Sept. 4, Air Canada spent $4.5 million to buy into another aviation company. It notified the Treasury Board, the report said, on Sept. 3.

According to the rules, the relevant department must be informed in advance, yet $4.5 million was spent in one day, less than 24 hours' notice having been given.

With assets of approximately $67 billion, liabilities of over $57 billion, annual expenses of over $30 billion and with more employees than Government departments, the Auditor General came to the conclusion that Crown corporations require an improved framework to make them accountable to Parliament and to the Government.

What my colleague is asking is that a measure of the accountability requested by the Auditor General be required. Whether the average Canadian understands what a billion dollars is or not, he knows that the country is spending foolishly and beyond its capacity. That accountability must be provided, and to that end I submit that the amendment should be passed.

I see that you are making some gesture toward me, Mr. Speaker. Are you telling me that my time is nigh? That is too bad, because I have only dealt with the first few dollars and we have a billion or ten to go.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, the authorized capital of the Export Development Corporation will increase from $1 billion to $2 billion as stated in Bill C-110. The ceiling for loans and insurance written under the authority of the EDC, the corporate account, will rise to $20 billion from $10 billion.

Whenever the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) concurs in a recommendation from the board, the Government can contribute capital to the corporation. There is no parliamentary control on contributions; the Government just puts up the money. The Minister of Finance has the absolute right to subscribe to the capital of the Export Development Corporation. The Government can make loan advances that are deemed not to be of a commercial or proper risk by the board of directors. The Government will, if these amendments are passed the way they are, be entitled to up to $10 billion for unacceptable loans. This kind of accountability cannot be allowed to continue. Parliament and Parliament alone should have control of the public purse.

Crown corporations are not well received by the Canadian public. Lack of praise is not unfounded. Prime examples are Canadair and de Havilland. Canadians associate Crown corporations with the glaring problem of accountability to Parliament for expenditures, which, of course, are funded by taxpayers' dollars.

An extensive study done by the Economic Council of Canada strongly criticized the corporations. Many improvements need to be made. The Export Development Corporation must be made accountable for its actions, funds and liabilities. When the Government wants to put capital in the corporation the Government should produce a new estimate and money vote allowing it to purchase shares in the corporation. At the present time, capital is injected into the corporation by the Minister of Finance approving a request from the board of directors, without a parliamentary aye, yes or no.

The provision in the existing Act allowing for a special fund where the Government can take up loans and advances that do not meet EDC specifications should either be abolished or, in the alternative, no Governor in Council advance should be made without the approval of Parliament. The amendments increasing the fund available for Governor in Council advances to $10 billion should be eliminated. The present provisions of the Act allow for $2.5 billion of Governor in Council advances of which roughly $700 million of the authority is used.

At the present time EDC has borrowing authority of $10 billion. As of December 31, 1982 it had used only approximately $4.5 billion of its authority.

Mr. Speaker, the Government should support Motions Nos. 3 and 5 as tabled by the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) so that there will be proper accountability in this Crown corporation.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is incomprehensible that a so-called responsible Government should present legislation such as this to Parliament. I well remember when I first came to the House of Commons that the ceiling on the UIC fund was $800 million. We encouraged the Government of the day to put a ceiling on the fund so that there would be some form of accountability to Parliament but it did not see fit to do so. As a result, after 11 years the UIC fund now spends $12 billion. That is why it is so important that somehow or other we hold the Government accountable for a Crown corporation. This is of fundamental importance to our democratic way of life. If we do not accomplish that, then the whole parliamentary system will break down. Economic freedom will be lost if corporations like this are not held accountable for their actions. It is this sort of thing that makes Canadians very apprehensive.

Years ago Canadians never asked: "What are we going to do about our national debt or about our Crown corporations?" Today, however, they find that governments are allowing the situation to develop where Crown corporations can borrow money in the markets of the world, perhaps at a favourable rate, and they use that money in a way that the Canadian people object to.

● (1220)

Perhaps the best example I can give is that last summer the Export Development Corporation was borrowing money at 9.875 per cent. At the present time the proposed requirements of the Farm Credit Corporation have been cut back by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). He did this unilaterally. Legislation was passed in this House in the spring which would allow the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow up to $600 million on the money markets of the world. However, the Minister of Finance cut back that amount to $250 million. If ever there was a time in Canadian history in which the farmers require money, it is now; yet there has been a cutback by the Minister of Finance. Here we have the Government allowing a Crown corporation to enter into, shall we say, dubious loans without the scrutiny of Parliament. This is what this exercise is all about. We have to be able to hold the Government responsible, and the only way in which the Canadian taxpayer or the Canadian citizen can hold the Government at bay on any of these issues is through the Parliament of Canada.

Through this legislation which is being proposed we are losing that control. We do have a medium of control if this amendment presented by my hon. colleague is accepted and it is important that Parliament has that control. I am not speaking just as a member of the opposition; I am speaking as a member of a political party which feels it is a government in waiting and that within several months, possibly, it will be taking power. We anticipate that we can live within those restraints, and in bringing in that kind of legislation we are going to give confidence to the Canadian taxpayer, confidence in the system which is not there at the present time.

Yesterday, an individual from the farm survival group who is living in Ontario told me he had lost faith in Canada, in the parliamentary system and in politicians. The only way, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to re-establish that faith in the minds of the Canadian electorate is to bring in responsible legislation so that Canadians know that what is being done is done for their benefit. We are not talking about exporting. The importance to Canada of exporting has been emphasized time and time again, Mr. Speaker. However, we must have a degree of fairness in these deals. We have the right to know what has been happening. We have to know what actually is taking place. We have to know that the Export Development Corporation is going to be held responsible.

There is a human characteristic which possibly is evident in all of us, whether we be Parliamentarians or otherwise; we all like to build empires. I have a feeling that within the Export Development Corporation there is a great deal of empire building taking place. Why would one need 613 employees to deal with approximately 62 applications last year? That is ten individuals for one application all year. Does this really make sense to you, Mr. Speaker? It certainly does not to me. There were applications for 900 insurance policies last year. That is one and one half insurance policies for each individual all year. This is not just for the current period of time spent working on them, but this is for all year. I believe, Mr. Speaker, we should be able to see just exactly what is happening there. If ever we are going to have a frugal government, if ever we are going to have a frugal operation within our way of life, then we have to be able to hold these Crown corporations accountable to the Canadian people. Otherwise, we find the system is taking too much out of the public purse and there is not enough left for private business and the people in private enterprise.

I mentioned earlier that the Export Development Corporation was able to borrow money last summer for 9.875 per cent. I would like to know how it was done. I commend them for it. But why today, if the Export Development Corporation can borrow money at that percentage rate, has the interest rate for the Farm Credit Corporation gone up to 13.5 per cent? I feel that in a great many cases our own private businesses and our own Canadian people are suffering as a consequence of what the Crown corporation is doing.

We have to recognize that the Government in its wisdom can enter into agreements which the Export Development Corporation cannot do, and the best example I can give is the $295 million which was really loaned to New York City by the Crown corporation. It was not enough; it fell short of the Bombardier contract. The Government of Canada guaranteed another $627 million to finance LRC in the City of New York. If we can do that for the City of New York—this is all done at 9 per cent interest—why can we not do something like that for our own people in small business? Why can we not do it for the farmers? Why did this individual who was in my office yesterday have to pay 13.5 per cent for his financing while at the same time this situation is happening? These are things which I believe the Canadian people should have an opportunity to take a look at. We have to know exactly whether or not we are getting value for our money with the operation of EDC.

I see, Mr. Speaker, my time is up. I thank you for the opportunity to be able to present my case before you at this time.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the debate today and I support the lack of necessity for increasing the capital of the Export Development Corporation to any great extent. The argument advanced by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that the corporation should be more accountable to Parliament makes sense to me. I agree with the arguments advanced by several Hon. Members in my own party to the effect that one gets more efficiency in other ways than just simply by having a large board of directors and making available all this money.

When I spoke on one of the earlier motions I made the argument that the only real competition today between trading nations is in the field of the cost of capital or the lending rate. We have the ridiculous situation, when one is operating a government-run development corporation, of having that development corporation borrow from the treasury of Canada, which has to go into the markets of Canada and collect the money at 11 per cent and 12 per cent. Then in order to compete with the other trading nations of the world the corporation must provide concessional interest rates. It has to do this to stay in business.

I spoke the other day of the necessity of matching other countries on the interest rate, but going out in Canada in a way which will provide money at half the current interest rates. We have made clear here in the House over the last two or three years how it can be done, and which we made clear in the budget for 1980 can be done by enunciating the principle of the Small Business Development Bond. What I am going to do today is to refer to some practical experience which I have had and which deals with this very subject.

• (1230)

One of the great opportunities that exists for Canadians today is in the field of trade. We are good at it. For one reason or another very few nations of the world have any political hostility to us, and this gives us a great advantage. But more than that is required. Modern trade is a new subject for governments and for most of our businesses. We need an approach different from what we had in the past. For instance, the approach to a socialist nation is vastly different than that to a private enterprise nation. All our thinking here is to simply set up a development corporation that can only think of competing by lending money. I am saying there is a much cheaper and more effective way of achieving this goal.

Let me put on the record again what I think everyone in Canada knows who follows these matters, that our nation pioneered a new concept in 1960 by going out to a nation which had no money and saying: "Buy our products and we will give you three years to pay the money back; the interest rate will be the same as we have to pay in Canada".

But there was another ingredient of that policy which no one noticed. On behalf of the Canadian people and the then Canadian Government I gave my word to the Chinese Government that we in Canada would put all our efforts into helping the Chinese sell their goods around the world so they would have enough money to pay for our wheat. At first we dealt through correspondence and so on, but this was so slow that eventually I got an invitation to go there and talk to their minister directly about these techniques in 1964. I announced in the House, Mr. Speaker, that I was going at their invitation to discuss these matters. Out of these discussions came the idea that the best way to get around their difficulties was that there should be privately-run international trading companies set up in Canada and other countries which will come into China and find out what they could produce and go out and sell it for them. At the beginning there were just a few of those companies, mostly Japanese, but Canadian companies did get into it. I got the support of the banks to set up one here in Canada, but it was set up under such conditions that it was impossible to carry on. They simply wanted a "name" man at the head of these companies.

These are international trading companies, Mr. Speaker, and for efficiency they have to be very small, just a few people. Now, what big "name" man in Canada is going to come into a company which has to wait three or four years before they get any income? There is always a negative cash flow in the first three or four years of a private trading company. So eventually I set up a company based in the United States and we spent $400,000 running schools for Chinese technocrats and civil servants on how to utilize the products they wanted to buy. We spent time going all over the world trying to make arrangements to sell Chinese goods. The $400,000 was spent running the school in Peking for their technocrats and then they had the right to pick the product from which country they liked.

I do not have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when I started this business with China the total trade in and out was $400 million a year. Today it is $70 billion. This was done with almost no capital at all. I had estimated $1 million was required to carry us through but we did it for $400,000. I will not tell you what the income has been since, but the sales amount to billions of dollars every year and this company takes a very small fee which is very remunerative in the long run.

I give you this background because the idea is that it must be of mutual advantage to both sides. As a private company you can deal directly with that Government agency without thought of any political consequences either way. But if you have a Government agency dealing with it, you have to meet the political situation on both sides. What I am trying to get at here is that, sure, there are some political parts to play in this training operation, but that company succeeded way beyond my wildest expectations and did very well until Government began interfering. I do not want to tell you what the interference was, but it was as funny as Sam Hill.

If you are trying to develop trade in Canada, Mr. Speaker, use the technique of using your money in the development corporation to back up the fellows with ideas on how to do it. They will then bring more money back in than you can ever get trying to compete in this interest rate competition around the world.

As an example of what I want to suggest, you will find out very soon in international trade that if you follow the principle of mutual advantage and you are dealing with nations which have a long way to go on know-how, you have to spend a good deal of time and effort getting their know-how up to a level where they can make the right decision. You have to know a good deal about the needs of every nation. The needs of China, as an example, are well known. They are desperately short of fibre. Well, who can produce fibre? We can here in Canada. Brazil can. We can get it all over the world. The Chinese can produce it themselves. So any person dealing with a country like that which needs fibre has to think in terms of how their own people develop that fibre most efficiently and look for new markets. China still needs fibre in many forms and there is no one really making it in Canada. We have all this know-how in fibre to go out and develop the capacity in that country and at the same time help meet their needs and their shortage of fibre right now. Increasingly western countries are going into China and doing this.

We have tremendous know-how in many fields. The greatest and most pressing need in China today is for water to drink and to wash themselves with in the cities. The water table below Peking has dropped six metres in the last 20 years. They are frightened. You do not go there with the idea of selling billions of dollars of some product; with one billion Chinese, one widget a piece makes a big deal. You go there with the idea of how you can help them make money. The way they can make money is by taking the tremendous know-how that Canada has and making sure that the amount of water they have can be used several times. Canada leads the world in its knowledge of recycling pure water. Take that knowledge, give them the ability to deliver a good standard of living and to go out and make money, and then just look at the opportunities for trade with all countries of the world, including Canada.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that it is not the amount of money this corporation has; it is what this group of people do with it that counts. I am putting forward some practical advice in the hope that the Minister will make sure that his staff reads about this type of thing, and I will be glad to provide them with any details they want to know. If I cannot provide it, there are a thousand other guys who can.

• (1240)

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the discussion today is centring on amendments to the Export Development Act. This is not an attack on exports. No one questions the need to increase Canada's exports. Canada is capable of producing a great deal beyond its own needs. Canada thrives on exports. Canada must have exports. What we are discussing today is parliamentary responsibility, the responsibility of Parliament and Parliamentarians, over the expenditure of public funds. That is the discussion, despite the designation of the Bill.

My comments today are of a variety of sorts, but the first thing I would like to say relates to the form of the Bill as reprinted following the committee consideration. It is defective in a way which makes it rather complicated to deal with.

The original Bill, as brought forward at first reading on April 30, 1982 contained the text of the original Act face to face with the amendments thereto. I know that on page 1a of this Bill it states that the Bill as distributed in first reading form may be used for purposes of comparison. I would be happy to send the original text up to Your Honour so that you may see it, and I suggest that with all the automated equipment at our disposal, the amendments in the original text ought to be included in the Bill as amended, having gone through the committee. It is much simpler to have on the right-hand side of a bill the text of the section of the original Act that is being amended. Therefore, I think the procedure of not including the original text in the form as it comes from the committee ought not to be continued. I think we should have that before us.

My second comment is as to language, unfortunately, dealing specifically with the amendment that we have before us. I am delighted to see that the proposed amendment as put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), does not contain the bad English found in the original Act. The amendments that we have before us merely carry forward that bad English from the original text. Reading from the original text, referring to Clause 7, we find that Section 14 at present reads:

The aggregate amount of borrowings of the Coporation pursuant to sections 12 and 13 and outstanding shall not exceed an amount—

I am concerned about the words "and outstanding". I am sure that if Your Honour were to compare that with the French version, you would agree that the French text is comprehensible. It is understandable. The words "and oustanding" in English, because of their improper placing, make that particular Section idiotic. The French version is:

[Translation]

Le total non remboursé des emprunts de la Société faits en application des articles 12 et 13—

That I can understand, but I certainly cannot make head or tail of this blunder in the English version.

[English]

The aggregate amount of borrowings of the Corporation pursuant to sections 12 and 13 and outstanding—

Why, in good sense, in ordinary Oxford English, does it not state, "the aggregate amount of outstanding borrowings"? It is as simple as that. That damned silly "and outstanding" is ridiculous. That was my second comment and I do hope that somewhere along the line the English version will conform more closely to the French text.

The Export Development Act was intended to create a corporation which would basically assist by insuring loans in order to enhance the opportunities of Canadians to export. It was an insurance scheme. I knew of its application while serving in Central America, where I had a fair amount of involvement with the Export Development Corporation in connection with a bid being made by what is now Northern Telecom to instal a microwave system of telecommunications from Panama right into Mexico. I will not mention the difficulties the company faced in dealing with the Export Development Corporation at that time concerning the underwriting of bids being put forward. That is a story in itself. However, at that particular time the Export Development Corporation was designed to insure against losses of loans made privately by the corporation. Advance of funds, that is loaning, was another matter. Now the Export Development Corporation has gone into the business of financing. Why, in the name of all decency and sensible business practice, is it not possible for a corporation that wants to export to go to the bank to borrow and then be allowed a tax concession for having taken that risk? That is the proper way to carry out business, not to run to the Government for another $1 billion at, as someone has said, 9.875 per cent when money elsewhere is at 11.75 per cent. We all remember what happened to Bombardier. It nearly lost the contract in New York because there was just a chance—and the anti-dumping tribunal of the United States, or whatever it is called, had to examine the matter very carefully—that Bombardier was gaining an advantage over an American corporation. It was the American corporation that raised the matter involving the installation of the system in New York. Bombardier could easily have gone to the private lending institutions in Canada, had its loan insured under the EDC and been able to write off its payments of interests, if you like, or make some sort of deal in the tax system. Bombardier could have stood up on its own feet and said: "We got that contract, we will fulfil it, and there is no danger whatsoever of anyone contesting it. The Canadian people, furthermore, are not financing it."

In Canada we must return to the situation where private corporations are proud to stand behind their product, to go out and sell it, to instal it and to have coverage of insurance for their loans at the bank and tax write-offs, if you like, for the interest that they may have to pay. Or some other formula; but I am not trying to rewrite the Tax Act. That is an approach which is completely forgotten in this particular Bill.

Another of our worries, returning to the matter of the responsibility of Parliament and Parliamentarians, concerns the expenditure of public funds. We have run into this matter all too often. It is time that we restored the responsibility of Parliament by putting a very firm cap on borrowings and a requirement that the Export Development Corporation return to Parliament from time to time in order to justify its expenditures. It should not become an autonomous creature in this country through Government action so that it can impose and load debts upon the next two, three or four generations, debts for which we ought to be ashamed.

● (1250)

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, today we are discussing the amendment of a section in the Export Development Act that touches the very root of democracy. Instead of making the authorized capital $2 billion, as in the Bill, this amendment reduces it to $1 billion and $100. While the amendment does not cure the Bill of a very bad precedent, it does make it better than it otherwise would have been.

I want to commend the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for bringing in this amendment because it touches the very heart of Parliament, which is accountability, responsibility and control of the public purse.

When Parliament was first brought about, everyone appeared to speak there. That was probably the truest Parliament possible since there was direct representation from the people. As societies and populations grew, a method of sending the representative of a number of people was devised, but the basic principle of representing the thinking of the people to the greatest possible degree still remained. We now have one Member representing 50,000, 100,000 and in some places 300,000 people. There is a responsibility for that Member to secure the thinking of the people he represents.

This is done in a number of ways. It is sometimes done through the election process when a Member stands for certain principles and the people support him. But that is not the whole story. I believe it is necessary to go to the people periodically to secure their thinking in order that their wishes might be expounded on the floor of the House.

This particular section of the Bill does just the opposite. It gives a group of appointed people the authority to spend money that has not been authorized by the representatives of the people. I say that is basically wrong. We are becoming too far removed from the entire concept of actual parliamentary representation. Many Members now say that they will give leadership and tell the people what is good for them, but that is not democracy. That is what we see in Moscow where the people are told what is good for them whether they like it or not.

Our country has a parliamentary system under which the Government should be reflecting the thinking of the people. I want to tell the Hon. Members of the Government that this section does not reflect the thinking of Canadians. The polls have shown that Canadians are heartsore over what has been happening. The present Government is no longer representing what the people want. It has been telling the people what is good for them for a number of years and this Bill is a typical example of where the Government has given authority to a group of appointed people to spend money that has not been authorized by the House of Commons or the Senate. That is basically wrong. That is why I say the Hon. Member for Mississauga South should be commended not only for doing a service to the people who sent him here but to the people of Canada who, in a true democracy, have control of the purse.

It may be asked how this unauthorized borrowing takes place under this section. According to the Bill, the authorized capital is $2 billion. Another section which we are also discussing authorizes the Export Development Corporation to borrow ten times that amount, or $20 billion. That is $20 billion in expenditures which are not authorized by the representatives in Parliament. I feel very strongly about this issue because it is at the very heart of Parliament.

A few months ago I was at the Commonwealth Conference along with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). It was an excellent conference. One Sunday the organizers of that conference decided to take us to Runnymede where King John signed the Magna Carta. I was thrilled to have the opportunity to stand on the very ground where King John signed that Magna Carta, the basis of British liberty, and I took pictures of the statue and the actual Magna Carta.

The Magna Carta signing was not in a building as many people believed but out in the open. King John was too smart to let people enclose him in a building. He stayed out in the open where he would have an opportunity to get away. The Government is also leaving an opening to get away, because while the $2 billion must be authorized by Parliament, what about the $20 billion? The Government is just as devious as King John was in trying to leave a loophole to get away from parliamentary procedure which has made this country great. This Bill goes to the very heart of Parliament.

At Runnymede the barons confronted King John, saying that they did not want him spending money unless he had the representation from the people whose money he was taking. Today, the Government should not be spending money unless it has authorization from the people to whom the money belongs. They or their children will have to pay the debt for generations. I do not know what we can do for those who have not yet been born, but we who are here have the responsibility to make sure that we make the Government accountable. The purpose of this amendment is to make sure that the Government is accountable and that we have control of the public purse.

We have much to do to regain complete control of the public purse. I ask the Minister to let us take this important step in honour of the people of Canada and the Magna Carta, so that we may carry on the thinking of our forefathers who wanted a parliamentary system in this country where the people's views are represented. They did not want a government which tells the people what is good for them, as King John was doing. They did not want a government which said it would spend money that it was not authorized to spend. No matter for what purpose it is, the principle is wrong. All moneys expended by a government should be authorized by the people because it goes to the very heart of Parliament. It is control of the purse that we want and which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South seeks in proposing this amendment.

I see that it is now one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I should inform the Hon. Member that his allotted time has expired, and the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) when we resume debate after three o'clock.

[Translation]

Order, please!

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1:00 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—CHANGE IN POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, the Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), has a very peculiar vision of the Crowsnest Pass rate. In fact, his position changes from day to day—not necessarily for the better—and this applies to the positions taken by his colleagues as well. During the last race for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party, some candidates expressed opinions they must be hard pressed to maintain today, since the Progressive Conservative Party has now taken the position that the Crow's Nest Pass rate must not be changed. For instance, the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said during the leadership campaign: We cannot upgrade railway transportation in western Canada if we leave the Crow rate intact. The users' share in the cost of transportation must be increased. As for the newly-elected leader, he also maintained that the Government was on the right track. He said repeatedly that although the then Minister of Transport should be a little more flexible, he was on the right track with Bill C-155. He said that farmers were prepared to pay for improved transportation and that this legislation was gaining acceptance. I would ask them to read again a release from Canadian Press dated May 31 and to explain to Canadians why, although the arguments remain the same, their position has changed. The new leader has shown he has little to offer Canadians in the way of consistency.

* * *

[English]

SMALL BUSINESS

RATE OF BANKRUPTCIES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I would like to express my deep concern for the small business community of this nation which has been hardest hit by the Government's economic mismanagement.

If small business is expected to remain a dynamic and innovative sector of our economy, the serious problems facing small-businessmen must be addressed. They continue to be taxation, government regulations and paperwork, high interest rates, and access to capital.

The record tells all. In the first seven months of 1983, 6,122 businesses were forced into bankruptcy. More jobs have been lost in the small business sector in the last two years than in all other sectors combined. Something must be done to reverse this trend as small business is, and will remain, the lifeline of our economy.

S.O. 21

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—CALL FOR RELEASE OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I rise on behalf of the parliamentary group on Soviet Jewry. Conditions for the Jewish community in the Soviet Union deteriorate further. Emigration has slowed to a trickle. Those refused exit visas are harassed, and anti-Semitism is the daily fare of Soviet propaganda.

Our parliamentary group will continue to monitor the plight of Soviet Jews, to work directly with them and, on their behalf, to report on developments and to press the Soviet Government to respect basic principles of human rights.

Today, September 15, marks the halfway point in the prison sentence of Anatoly Shcharansky. He was arrested on March 15, 1978, and falsely and unjustly convicted of alleged spying. He was sentenced to 13 years in prison. Shcharansky's only desire is to be reunited with his wife in his homeland. He is the victim of Soviet efforts to suppress and eradicate all vestiges of Jewish communal life.

Recent events have again heightened distrust of the U.S.S.R. We call on the Soviets to show that they can live by the standards of the international community. We call on the Soviets to free Shcharansky. We pledge our efforts so that Shcharansky and all others like him may enjoy fundamental human rights.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, before I read my statement, may I congratulate the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson). I am sure all Members of the House welcome his appointment as chairman of the parliamentary group.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—RESIGNATION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): The resignation yesterday of Prime Minister Begin of Israel marks the passing of an era. Mr. Begin has lead his Government through a turbulent period in the history of the young State of Israel. Many of us in Canada, like many Israelis, have not always agreed with all of his policies, but we have also noted his many accomplishments. In domestic affairs, for example, he has been instrumental in creating the circumstances in which the Sephardic population of Israel has been able to find its political voice.

Without question, however, Mr. Begin's major accomplishment was to achieve peace with Israel's largest and most important Arab neighbour, Egypt. At Camp David, he, together with the late President Sadat and United States President Carter, persevered in difficulty, lengthy negotiations because they knew that the future of their people and their countries lay in peace, and they were prepared to take the risks and pay the price which peace entailed. Their commitment to peace in the face of obstructions and condemnations led to the signing of a peace treaty after decades of conflict. This historic breakthrough, Madam Speaker, was a gift from Mr. Begin and Mr. Sadat not merely to their own citizens but to the cause of world stability.

Let us salute Mr. Begin, wish him well, and express our hope that his successors will have the strength and the necessary response from their neighbouring countries to carry forward the peace process which Mr. Begin, on Israel's part, began.

* * *

FOOD AND DRUGS

SIDE EFFECTS OF BIRTH CONTROL PILLS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, in April, 1983, a 20-year-old Toronto woman died of complications from the birth control pills she was taking. The complications which led to her death were neither new or unusual. Past experience with the pills indicated that side effects like those which killed this woman were likely to occur in a certain number of users. No one, it seems, told Carol Rosenberg, or perhaps she would be alive today.

It is not enough to expect that doctors and pharmacists will provide patients with adequate information about the possible side effects of the drugs they are given. This would be ideal, but experience has shown that it simply does not work. A recent study found that nearly half of all patients misunderstood the verbal instructions they received about their medications.

The Canadian Pharmaceutical Association produces detailed information sheets about the effects and possible side effects of virtually every drug sold in Canada, but distribution of these sheets by pharmacists is voluntary and more the exception than the rule. The Consumers' Association of Canada has been asking for four years that pharmacists be required to provide this information with each and every prescription they fill. I think it is about time the Government acted on this recommendation.

* * *

OFFICIAL REPORT

WORDS USED BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I chose not to raise a point of order or a question of privilege on some discourteous comments made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), because the Leader of the Opposition has been quoted as saying that he wants to bring civility to politics and because, as a new Member, he may not understand the rules and practices of this House.

During the Question Period on Tuesday he made some comments to the Minister of National Health and Welfare which were heard by Members on this side and seen on TV by many Canadians. Those who heard the hon. gentleman's remarks and subsequently saw the "blues", the informal Hansard record, it was clear that what was said in the House was changed in the official record. Whether it was changed by the Leader of the Opposition, or his staff, or by Hansard itself, is for Madam Speaker to determine. But one way or the other someone tampered with the words.

Also, the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition could only be described as ill chosen and discourteous. This may be the stuff of politics in a public hall, but most Members try to avoid it in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I wish to rise—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member may raise his point of order at three o'clock. The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen).

Mr. Cullen: Madam Speaker, the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition could only be described as ill-chosen and discourteous.

Mr. McGrath: You are not going to allow him to continue, surely? Madam Speaker, we have no chance to reply.

Mr. Cullen: This may be the stuff of politics in a public hall, but most Members try to avoid it in this House.

I would suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that he owes the Minister an apology or, at the very least, an explanation for his intemperate remarks.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN MISSION-PORT MOODY CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my constituents in Mission-Port Moody regard the unemployment problem as the number one issue in Canada today, and so they should. Some 14,000 people received unemployment insurance benefits in my riding during August. Hundreds more have exhausted their benefits, and many have given up looking for work.

● (1410)

This situation is tearing at the very fabric of our society. Families are suffering, young people are becoming restless, and human discontent is growing. The Government simply continues to dream up band-aid programs. These billion dollar band-aids only mask the real severity of the problem. People do not want short-term jobs just so they can requalify for unemployment insurance. They want long-term work and real pay cheques.

The Canada Works Program announced recently will provide about 15 to 20 jobs in Mission-Port Moody. This is little comfort for the 14,000 unemployed people in my riding. The Canadian people want this Government to call an election so that they can elect a new Government that will stimulate confidence and allow the private sector to create long-lasting jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE—COST OF REMOVAL FROM HOMES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise in this House once again the matter of urea formaldehyde foam and call the attention of the House to the fact that the National Home Owners Advisory Council is meeting today in Ottawa.

In spite of the assurances and glib statements of the previous Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs concerning amenities and improvements for people who have urea formaldehyde foam in their homes, the Government has failed in a number of areas to provide a remedy for those suffering from this problem.

The Government promised to pay home owners who had UFFI removed from their homes an additional $500 grant under the Canadian Home Insulation Program, by the end of 1983. To date, although applications are moving forward, no money has been put up by the Government to cover these applications. It is time that happened.

The second serious omission is that the Government committed itself to providing removal procedures for brick homes, in many of which it cost an exhorbitant amount to remove the material. It has failed to provide any remedy in that area. The last item is that in many homes it is costing far more than the money available, the measly $500 grant, to remove that material. In many homes it is a matter of a health problem, and it is time the Government provided an opportunity under the Income Tax Act to deduct the balance for income tax purposes. It is time the Government fulfilled the commitment it made earlier this year to people with urea formaldehyde foam in their homes, and acted on this very important issue.

* * *

INCOME TAX

REQUIREMENT THAT SENIOR CITIZENS PAY QUARTERLY INSTALMENTS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it is a matter of concern that senior citizens of this nation are expected to pay quarterly instalments of their income tax to Revenue Canada. I am referring particularly to that group of senior citizens with an income that at most generates marginal income tax payable to the federal and provincial Governments. It is known that those who continue to have an income in which employers deduct their taxes at source are spared this quarterly exercise of calculating their income and estimating their income tax.

I recommend to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that they ask their officials to review this system of quarterly tax instalments to see if another method of reporting income can be arranged for Canada's seniors, perhaps with a basic ceiling of income below which, regardless of the source of income, income tax returns may be submitted only once each year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FINANCE

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF TOBACCO TAX

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, effective September 1, 1983, the federal Government increased taxation on cigarettes by 15.8 per cent. In 1982 more than 60 per cent of the price of a package of cigarettes was made up of federal and provincial taxes. In 1982, here in Ontario, for example, federal and provincial taxes on the manufacturers' wholesale trade price of 36.8 cents were 365 per cent. In 1982 the federal Government received $1.15 billion in cigarette tax. Why a further 15.8 per cent now?

I can tell you why not. First, the tobacco growers receive only six cents of the price for a package of 20. Tax increases will seriously damage the industry and force bankruptcies in this area of agriculture. Second, this increase, along with last year's increase, will cost Canadians upwards of 2,500 jobs at harvest time because of a reduction in sales. Third, personal wages in Canada are now increasing slower than inflation. Fourth, six and five. Where does this 15.8 per cent increase relate to six and five? Lalonde's elastic rule.

I call on the Government to reconsider this latest tax, look at the detrimental effect on the tobacco industry and employment, and then withdraw it.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EMPLOYMENT

WOMEN'S ACCESS TO TRAINING PROGRAMS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns his Department's training and retraining programs which are designed, I would say, more to perpetuate unemployment than to provide jobs. For instance, there is a new program called PATH, for women, which is to lead to careers in non-traditional areas. In the Kingston area, where there are at the moment 3,000 unemployed women, the PATH Program has just been reduced from 20 to 15 places because only women with a grade 12 or better education can qualify. Similarly, in word processing courses, a woman has to have a 50-word per minute typing speed before she can qualify. Neither of these qualifications is necessary.

When will the Government remove these completely unnecessarily restrictive requirements so that the benefits of retraining and training in these new technologies will not be limited to a chosen few, but made available to the majority of people who will otherwise be condemned to long-term unemployment?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is incorrect in her general assertion at the beginning of her question. The purpose of these training programs is indeed to train people in skills which will provide them with useful and continuing employment. I am happy to have her representations about specific criteria which she feels are being applied in the Kingston area in a way which is retrogressive. I will be happy to look into those allegations, check to see if there have been changes in the criteria which have been applied, and see whether they are constructively directed. I thank her for her representation.

RETURN OF FUNDS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, what is happening in Kingston as a community is happening in every community right across the country. The Government's attitude seems to be that if it can just throw a lump of money at retraining, suddenly all of the problems of the unemployed are going to be resolved. Last year, for example, the Government committed approximately $50 million to industrial retraining in Ontario, and $27 million was returned unused. At a time when unemployment is running at half a million in Ontario, only 20,000 people were able to take advantage of that program. Does that not prove to the Minister that the program simply is not working? Why was that $27 million returned unused? Why was it not applied to more people? Has the Minister looked into it? What are the reasons for not taking up that money?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am a bit puzzled by the Hon. Member's attitude. With one breath she suggests we are not doing enough, and then with another breath she says that our approach seems to be to place money in response to the problem. Of course we are directing funds to the problem because it is an extraordinarily important problem for Canadians.

The Hon. Member asked specifically about the fact that certain funds have not been taken up. The reason, and this has been a factor particularly in Ontario, is because many of the job-training programs require the participation and co-operation of private sector employers to give the training that is required. Having just come out of the recession, many employers find themselves in a constrained financial position and are not able to devote the overhead resources to that kind of training, in their view. Therefore, the reason for the lack of pickup is the reluctance on the part of some people in the private sector to take advantage of the programs at the present time. I very much hope that some of the recent publicity which has been focused on that problem will lead other employers to come forward with proposals and take up the programs that provide the kind of training that is needed.

BRITISH AND JAPANESE TRAINING SCHEMES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, what the Minister does not seem to realize is that the approach of the Government is not working in the field of retraining, no matter what he does. What is needed is a total re-examination of the whole issue.

● (1420)

Other countries are doing much better than Canada in this regard. They seem to be much more imaginative in coming to grips with retraining to meet the challenges of the technological age. I would like to ask the Minister, since I understand that the Cabinet committee on social policy is looking at the British scheme for training and retraining youth, whether or not that program will be introduced here in Canada, and when. Second, has the Minister also looked at the joint industry-government model in Japan to see whether or not their system of industrial workers being allocated 50 days each year for training and retraining could possibly be utilized in Canada?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I do not think it is the case that whatever we do will not work. I do think it is true that the Hon. Member will say that whatever we do is not working. The fact is that we are looking at the British example, as she has suggested. I would also point out to her that under the Career Access Program there already are job-subsidy programs which assist young people by providing work and training at the same time. That program is already in place under the Access Program and can be utilized for that purpose.

We are, as well, looking at the experience of other countries such as Japan, as she has suggested. I am not entirely sure that the Japanese experience can be transported to the Canadian environment. We are looking for ideas and possible programs in every environment, not only the United Kingdom and Japan.

TRANSPORT

REVIEW OF MARITIME FREIGHT RATE ASSISTANCE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister responded to a letter dated August 17, 1983, from Premier Hatfield, sent on behalf of the Council of Maritime Premiers, in which the Council condemns the unilateral federal freight rate assistance review which, in the Council's words, "jeopardizes the continuing operation of many companies and therefore the many thousands of jobs dependent on Canadian markets"? If the Prime Minister is aware of this communique from the Council of Premiers, what has been his response to this very serious concern of the Maritime Premiers?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question I would like to point out to him that that study was commissioned purely to determine some objective facts about the important economic impact that freight rate subsidies have provided over many years. We believe that the Maritime freight rate subsidies have been a very important tool for helping the development of business in the Atlantic region. The study was commissioned simply to examine the facts relating to that in order to determine what the future might hold and how that economic impact could be continued.

Both the Prime Minister and myself have received the communique from the Premier of New Brunswick. My office has been in touch with his office in an attempt to meet. I myself hope to be in the Atlantic region next week to hold meetings on this very important issue. If the Hon. Member could use his good offices to have Mr. Hatfield respond to the request we have made of him, I am quite prepared to meet with him next week when I am in New Brunswick, to discuss this very important matter.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I thank the reshuffled Minister for part of the answer to that question.

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport if he himself has received the Hickling study? If so, did he in fact receive it last Friday, has he had a chance to review it, when does he intend to make it public, and can he assure the House that, regardless of what is in the study, there will be no further unilateral federal moves in this matter which would adversely affect the fragile economy of Atlantic Canada and, perhaps even more important, destroy hope for future growth?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as I pointed out in my response to the Hon. Member's question, it is this Government which has strongly supported and endorsed the application of the freight rate program in the Atlantic region as a major measure for economic development. We do not intend to change our position on that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: As to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, yes, I have received the draft of the report. I am now reviewing it and giving it the serious consideration that it deserves. The reason I am going to the Maritimes next week is to talk to the people of the Atlantic Provinces, where this matter should be talked about.

* * *

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

RECOMMENDATION THAT LIBRARIES SHOULD COMPENSATE AUTHORS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications who knows, I am sure, that there were demonstrations organized by Canadian authors in a number of cities today. I am sure the Minister knows that the average income earned by professional writers in Canada is only $3,000 a year and that many of them are living in poverty. A number of countries in Europe have implemented systems that provide for compensation to authors when public users borrow books from public libraries. This idea has been endorsed by the Applebaum-Hébert Commission and by the Canada Council, and in a speech to the authors made by the Minister, some 16 months ago, he indicated support for that idea as well. I wonder if the Minister could tell us when he will do more than talk about it and will begin to implement that policy.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member has indicated, this is a question that is of interest to me personally. I have indicated my interest, not only to the Writers' Union some months ago, but also to the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee and to the Provinces.

The Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee has come up with a solution that differs markedly from the proposal made by the Canada Council. As far as the Provinces are concerned, since the Provinces do have jurisdiction over libraries, provincial officials feel that it is a question of importance to them and they have indicated that any scheme that is implemented should only be implemented with the full consent and co-operation of the provincial Governments.

In the meantime the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has before it the Applebaum-Hébert review committee report with the solution that was propsoed by Applebaum and Hébert. I have sought that committee's advice on how we should go about implementing its report. The committee have indeed favoured me with their recommendations regarding broadcasting, and I am very much looking forward to their favouring me with their recommendations regarding the specific plan of fair payment to authors.

I should point out to the hon. gentleman that this is part of the more general problem of ensuring that creators of all kinds, be they authors, sculptors, painters, or producers of cultural products, be treated fairly in the marketplace and receive a fair return for their creative activities.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that when representatives of the Writers' Union met with one of the Minister's very senior officials a few days ago, they got the impression that they were being stonewalled and that very little if anything had been done by the Minister or his Department to put some program in place. The Minister has said that libraries fall under the jurisdiction of the Provinces, but I cannot imagine that any provincial Government would object if the federal Government would fund a program to provide money for authors each time a consumer borrows a book.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I would again ask the Minister when the Writers' Union may expect something definite, rather than the kind of runaround and talk which they have been getting from the Minister.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I think it is very easy for the hon. gentleman to suggest that the federal Government should simply rush in and put up some additional funds. There are a number of problems involved with that.

As far as the Canada Council is concerned, it has full liberty of action in dispensing its funds in the way that it sees fit. If the Canada Council feels that this is the priority, it can indeed on its own motion set up a fund to pay to the writers. On the other hand, if I were to give funds to the Canada Council and earmark them for this plan, there would be an immediate reaction on the part of the cultural community, and quite properly, to the effect that I was giving policy directions to the Canada Council, something which I obviously ought not be doing.

I am suggesting to the Hon. Member that a number of groups have come up with different solutions to this problem. The Writers' Union has come up with one solution, the Canada Council has come up with a different set of proposals, and the Applebaum-Hébert Report, which is presently in front of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, has come up with a different solution.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member that the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture get on with the work of examining that chapter of the Applebaum-Hébert Committee Report, that they examine and analyse the different proposals that have been put before the committee and, having done so, that they make recommendations that the Government will indeed consider.

WRITERS' UNION PROPOSAL

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Communications and concerns the same subject. The Minister has indicated that, in his view, there are a number of schemes which need to be clarified, understood, and decided upon. Surely the Minister is aware, is he not, that the Canada Council, virtually all of the arts and cultural communities in the country, the library associations and everyone who is associated with this proposal, agree that the Minister should implement the proposal put forward by the Union? Is that not true? After ten years of discussion and two years of personal commitment, why is the Minister still stonewalling these people who make, on the average, $1,000 per year?

• (1430)

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, indeed, I am very interested in learning the position of the Hon. Member. As I told him before, I brought this whole matter up at the federal-provincial conference. There is an obvious interest on the part of the Provinces. If I could implement a scheme which would affect the National Library of Canada, I do not think it would be a solution to the problem. The main users and those responsible for libraries are the Provinces.

If a scheme is to be introduced, it should obviously take the provincial interest into account. Obviously the Provinces, which put money into the libraries, ought to make a contribution to setting up the scheme. That is why I brought the matter to the attention of my provincial colleagues in May, 1982, when I asked for their opinion on how such a scheme should be implemented. I am willing to pursue the matter with them.

I would also suggest that it is not good enough to say that a scheme ought to be implemented; I say to the Hon. Member that he and his colleagues who were Members of the Standing Committee on Culture and Communications should look at the scheme proposed by the Writers' Union of Canada, the proposal of the Canada Council, and the proposal of the Applebaum-Hébert Commission. If I were to go ahead and implement a proposal that differed from them in some way, I am sure the Hon. Member would be the first to say that I had not consulted Parliament before devising a scheme, that I had complete disregard for the Applebaum-Hébert Commission report. That report is presently before the committee of which the Hon. Member, as critic for his Party, is a member.

APPLEBAUM-HÉBERT COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, the Minister hid behind the Applebaum-Hébert Commission report for two years without implementing the proposal. If he refers to page 207 of that report he will see that the Commission is on record as urging him to implement any proposal rather than no proposal.

It is not my position that these people are interested in; it is the Minister's position. That is why they allege the Minister reneged on his commitment. The Applebaum-Hébert Commission wants the Minister to do this; why doesn't he?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, it is basically because a number of options are open to us. The copyright legislation is an option. It is one that many people wish to cast aside, however, because if this right were put in the copyright legislation, payment would be made to all authors, independent of nationality. Our interest is in devising a scheme which will bring greater returns to Canadian writers. That is the objective of the exercise.

The Hon. Member suggests that I implement any proposal—that any proposal is better than no proposal. I suggest to the Hon. Member that a reasonable proposal would obviously require provincial participation. A proposal that does not include provincial participation is not, to my mind, a reasonable proposal.

* * *

THE ADMINISTRATION

APPOINTMENT OF FORMER MINISTER OF STATE (MINES)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it is in two parts. Specifically, did the Prime Minister, prior to the appointment of the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's, specifically ask him whether there was anything in his past that would be an impediment to his joining Cabinet?

Second, as a general policy matter is it the Prime Minister's position that the onus is on the individual to come forward and disclose anything in his past that may be detrimental to his joining Cabinet and that there is, therefore, no obligation on the part of the Prime Minister to make inquiries in that regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe I answered a question in about the same terms, that was put to me on Tuesday of this week.

Mr. Crosbie: No, you did not.

Mr. Trudeau: Also, Madam Speaker, if this is a period in which to ask questions of urgent and pressing necessity, then, if the question is urgent, I wonder why it was not asked in the past two or three days.

Third, there are questions on the Order Paper which ask more or less the same thing. Therefore I take it that members of the Opposition want questions answered on the Order Paper rather than in this way.

Miss MacDonald: What are you afraid of?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And fourth, Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is playing the clown, as usual. This is a matter of some urgency and I think the people of Canada are entitled to expect a high standard of conduct from Members who serve in Cabinet, whether he thinks so or not.

ROLE OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): As far as all Members of the Cabinet are concerned, has the Prime Minister satisfied himself that there is nothing in their past that would bring discredit on the Government or cause it embarrassment? Has the Prime Minister assured himself of that? If he has not done that to this point, is he prepared to make inquiries and make sure that such is the case?

Mr. Crosbie: Or does he care?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is a new question and the answer is yes. I have assured myself of that.

I repeat the first answer, that this is no longer a matter of urgent necessity.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

RATE OF FARM BANKRUPTCIES

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Many of us who represent agricultural constituencies have been besieged by phone calls from local farmers who fear that they may lose their farms in the near future. Does the Minister agree that far too many farmers in Canada are experiencing a severe financial crisis; that the number of farm bankruptcies has reached and surpassed an acceptable level; that the indications are that the number of those farm bankruptcies will continue to grow this autumn?

Furthermore, would the Minister indicate whether he feels that Canadian farmers are now in a better or worse financial position than they were a year ago?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, you have heard all those questions, but if I were to answer them all it would take up the rest of the Question Period.

First of all, one only has to check the commodity markets for Canola seed, barley, soybeans, corn and all these crops, to see that the price has increased by nearly $100 per tonne in the last three months, and more so in the last few weeks.

Those farmers who have taken care of themselves through the proper use of marketing agencies and so on, do not find themselves in financial difficulty. They are doing all right. From his past experience the Hon. Member knows full well what I am talking about.

In general, farmers will find that they are better off financially at the end of the year, although there are some whom neither the Hon. Member nor I can do anything to help. Some need financial help and it will be given to them.

If the Hon. Member would ask the great banking institutions of this nation to come forward and assist, instead of asking that, the great Crown corporation, the Farm Credit Corporation, to take over the obligations from the private lending institutions, it would be better. They have the jurisdiction and they have a duty to help these people.

When I compare agriculture in Canada to any other country in the world, it is the best off—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

LEVEL OF FUNDING

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that since he reassumed his portfolio in agriculture, farm bankruptcies have increased by 400 per cent, and that last year alone net farm income decreased by 25 per cent.

In view of the fact that the Minister has no legislation before the House to deal with this matter, is he prepared to increase the necessary funding to the Farm Credit Corporation so that some of these situations can be looked after? An additional $300 million at least is needed.

Is the Minister prepared to bring in agribonds as he promised? Also, is he prepared to ask the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Agriculture to reinstitute committee meetings on Bill C-653?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member well knows what the rights of Members of the House are. It is beyond the authority of a Minister to say to a member of a committee what he shall or shall not do. It is up to Members to do what they want to do in Committee.

The Hon. Member knows my stand on Bill C-653. I support the principle of the Bill; I have said that publicly, and I have said it in the House.

The Hon. Member said that $300 million extra is needed for the Farm Credit Corporation. I met the Chairman of the Corporation this morning to discuss the applications he has received, where the money is going, what is being done with it, and how it is being lent to farmers at the present time. The Hon. Member knows as well as I do that it you loaned some farmers $1 million you would not be doing them a favour. That is because of the position they find themselves in with the product they are marketing. That is mainly the case in the beef industry and the pork industry. These are in a distressed position and have been for many years. This is also the case in the United States. Because of commodity prices, farmers are finding themselves in a bind.

If the Hon. Member has any suggestions about how they can be financed without resorting to a straight welfare operation, I should like to know.

• (1440)

AGRICULTURE

STABILIZATION PROGRAM SOUGHT FOR BEEF INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the continuing depressed state of beef prices and the beef industry, generally, with low returns for their cattle this fall, as well as the continuing increases in input costs, could the Minister report on the progress he made with the provincial ministers this past summer? I understand they have met two or three times with the officials. Could the Minister tell us what the prospects are of establishing a very meaningful and effective national stabilization program for this hard-pressed industry which is so important to the whole economic vitality of the rural areas of Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member, I received a report from my Deputy Minister who attended the last meeting, I believe, on September 9 in Winnipeg. There were four Provinces which seemed to be in favour of some kind of a plan, but they are not in agreement on what kind of plan it should be. We will have to come forward and submit a plan, because they said if I did not develop a plan, they would develop one. So four out of ten is not a very good batting average even though it includes the vast area of Canada where the majority of beef is produced. They are not any closer to forming that kind of national program for pork, either. They want a different kind of plan, but they had not come to any kind of agreement as of September 9.

* * *

BANKS AND BANKING

PROFITS OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who will know that at the moment nearly 1.5 million Canadian workers and their families are living on UIC or welfare. Many more are being asked to take wage cuts, or very modest increases. Those small businesses and farmers and fishermen who are still operating are literally on the edge of bankruptcy in many, many cases. Yet we know that the chartered banks of Canada are in a position where their profits are likely to increase beyond 1981, the most successful year ever. These embarrassingly high profits now have placed Canadian banks with a return on assets of 200 per cent greater than the average banking industry.

On June 15 the Minister of Finance said what we need is even more profits. Does he stand on that, or how high do the profit margins of Canada's banks have to go, at the expense of the consumers and the small business sector, before the Minister of Finance takes some kind of action?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to forget the fact that there was a drop in profits last year and that this year's increase in profits should be seen in relation to the losses suffered last year in the industrial, manufacturing and financial sectors. I made it quite clear when I brought down the budget that if we wanted to have a steady economic recovery in this country, it was essential that private sector profits in Canada should be allowed to rise to their historic levels and thus become far more subtantial than they were last year, otherwise the recession would continue. Profits have continued their upward trend and risen considerably this year, I am happy to say, because this is going to mean job creation and a stimulus for the Canadian economy, as we have been able to observe for a number of months. With the increase in profits, there has also been an increase in the employment rate across Canada, and today, more jobs are being created in Canada than in any other country in the world. I may also point out that in the past few days, the banks have adjusted their rates to their customers' advantage, for instance, a number of banks have lowered their mortgage rates.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, with all due respect to the Minister, he is absolutely incorrect. If one looks carefully one will see that what is happening is that the banks of Canada, during their grab for profits, are retarding any real recovery in this country. As small entrepreneurs and individuals struggle to play their rightful role in Canada's recovery, the chartered banks are not providing the necessary funds to those groups.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF BANKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The banks themselves have said that the reason for their embarrassingly high profits this year is the excessive spreads in interest rates, which are higher today than they have been for many, many years. Is it not time for the Minister of Finance to meet with the banks and ask them to be less "grabby" when it comes to profit margins, in order to provide some needy capital on which to build Canada's recovery?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe it would be important for the Hon. Member to stress that, in spite of his assertion, Canada has known, since last November, the largest economic turnaround of any industrialized country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: That is a fact. Canada this year will have known a rate of growth in real terms of 7.4 per cent, according to current forecasts, and that is again a record rate of growth in this country. The Canadian economy is advancing extremely well at the present time. Consumer confidence is higher today than it has been for the last 18 years. We have seen today the latest figures on retail sales, and these figures have shown the consumer confidence which we have noticed in the surveys. Retail sales have increased quite significantly over last year. The economy is, therefore, moving extremely well, we are creating jobs, and we must keep on doing so.

As far as the specific question of the Hon. Member is concerned, I was due to meet with the presidents of the banks this week. Unfortunately, I was unable to do so. I will, however, have an opportunity to do so soon.

* * *

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

PASSAGE OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, while the banks really continue to refuse to co-operate with the small business sector, one specific sector which has already been mentioned as being particularly hard hit, that is, the agricultural sector—the small farmer, rancher, orchardist and fruit producer—is having a very difficult time obtaining the necessary funds from Canada's banks. If the Minister of Finance is serious, and other Hon. Members of this House are serious, they will do whatever they can to ensure that Bill C-653 is introduced into this House for passage as quickly as possible—and the Tories should stop holding up this Bill in committee—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the House appreciates this enjoiner, but this is not the time for it. The Hon. Member should be asking a question.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Is his government prepared to provide speedy passage for Bill C-653? And what action is he, as Finance Minister, with some responsibility to the farmers of Canada, prepared to take in this respect?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like again to repeat that we have provided this year, for instance, to the Farm Credit Corporation, a larger amount than at any time in its history be several hundred millions of dollars. The Hon. Member refers to Bill C-653. The Minister of Agriculture has very ably answered this question. It is in the hands of the committee, and I remind my hon. friend that it was a Liberal Member of Parliament from this side of the House who has been sponsoring this Bill—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —and who has been supporting it. We have supported this Bill ourselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT

PARTICIPATION OF QUEBEC MUNICIPALITIES IN FEDERAL JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

On August 11 of this year, the Prime Minister wrote to his Quebec counterpart, on behalf, and expressing the wishes, of the municipal governments of Quebec, to confirm that the Government of Canada was prepared to conclude an agreement with the Government of Quebec on the conditions for participation by Quebec municipalities in federal job creation programs. Could the Minister inform the House today whether he has received a reply to this proposal from the Government of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if there was one, I did not hear about it, but I will find out and will give the Hon. Member his answer tomorrow.

Mr. La Salle: I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker.

Since the legislature in Quebec will start its new session within a few weeks, and since it will probably be asked to legislate on direct or indirect grants from the federal Government, can the Prime Minister at least give us the assurance that, in the interest of all concerned, he will publicly announce the federal grant proposals that might help Quebec get back on the road to economic recovery?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I think the main points of our position on the subject are known. When the Hon. Member refers to provincial legislation, I think there is some misunderstanding. We do not need the permission of the provincial government to allocate funds in the Province of Quebec or anywhere else. However, certain institutions, including municipal governments, come under provincial jurisdiction, and I think the situation was created when the provincial government threatened to penalize municipalities that dared to accept funds from the federal government for job creation. The problem is not a matter of legislation but of justice. The province should let us give funds for job creation directly to the municipalities. If it refuses to do so, it will be just too bad for the municipalities, but not for Quebecers, because we will find other ways of spending these funds. That being said, Madam Speaker, if the Quebec Government wants to know what kind of applications are being made by the municipalities, we have no objection to discussing them with the Government of the Province of Quebec, but once again, although these municipalities come under provincial jurisdiction, Quebec citizens are also Canadian citizens, and we intend to exercise our right to allocate funds as we see fit.

● (1450)

[English]

GARRISON DIVERSION

UNITED STATES CONTRACT TO CONSTRUCT LONETREE DAM

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. A U.S. Environmental Protection Agency study has been highly critical of the Garrison Diversion Project, but the U.S. Government has just ordered a contract to start construction on the Lonetree Dam which, if completed, could damage Manitoba fish and hurt commercial fishing. What action is the Government taking on this latest development?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the U.S. Government is fully aware of the Canadian Government's position in relation to the Garrison project. It is the position of this Government that it is unfortunate that the U.S. has undertaken the action with reference to that specific dam without the whole question of the Garrison matter being settled with Canada.

NON-CONSULTATION BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, Canadian Government officials state they were not fully consulted and they feel the U.S. is determined to complete the project. Can the Minister find out why we were not consulted, and will he have the Prime Minister contact President Reagan to find out why we ware not being consulted, as the U.S. policy is to build first and consult later?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, it is true that the Canadian Government was surprised to learn of the U.S. plan for the awarding of the Lonetree Dam contract but we have, as I have already said, indicated to the United States in the past our concern on this matter. We continue to believe that consultations are the most effective means of resolving Canadian concerns, and I can assure the Hon. Member that Canada's firm position on this matter will continue to be communicated to the United States.

MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question on the same topic to the Minister of the Environment, and I would also like to wish him well in his new portfolio.

Last week the Minister was in Washington to discuss various issues with his American counterparts. During those discussions the topic of the Garrison Diversion Project in North Dakota was brought up. Could the Minister tell the House the gist of the conversation and whether he was able, in the course of those discussions with the Secretary of the Interior, James Watt, to obtain commitments from the Americans regarding protection of Canadian waters?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, yes, we did have an opportunity to meet with the Secretary of the Interior in Washington and took that opportunity to register, as clearly and as strongly as possible, the concern of Manitobans and of the Government of Canada in this particular issue. The Secretary of the Interior did indicate that, as long as he holds that position, the extent of the American inititative would be limited to the construction of the Lonetree Dam. That is the extent of the commitment he was willing to give.

POSSIBLE DANGER TO MANITOBA WATERS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, given the fact, as the Minister has pointed out, that contracts for the construction of the Lonetree reservoir portion of the Garrison Diversion Project were awarded in late August, can he tell us what steps he and his Department are taking to ensure that our neighbours to the south will not proceed beyond phase one of the current design? More important, will he tell us what steps he is taking to get the U.S. to agree that this giant water project should be redesigned and re-authorized so that it will have no adverse effect on the waters and fisheries of Manitoba?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has outlined exactly the representations I made to the Secretary of the Interior and which have repeatedly been made by our Ambassador in Washington. It is my intention to continue in this line of representations, as already indicated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

* * *

THE PRIME MINISTER

INQUIRY RESPECTING FUTURE PLANS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As a considerable number of his colleagues have been spending a great deal of time combing the bushes for delegates for the convention which they believe to be just around the corner, I was wondering if the Prime Minister would outline to the House whether his plans for the months ahead include leading his Party in the next election, so that his colleagues can either make a flat-out push for delegates, or get back to the job of looking after the affairs of the country as they should be doing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I know that question is inspired by the cordial and friendly relations I entertain with the Hon. Member. I know nothing about people on this side combing the bushes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: Read the papers.

Mr. Trudeau: But I would point out to him that the Leader he supported went into the taverns, high schools and junior schools to get delegates to vote for him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Madam Speaker, this is known as a fact; I am not quite sure why the Tories are ashamed of it. It is their Leader who got people from the taverns, young people from the recreation centres—

Mr. Epp: Jean Chrétien was contacted.

Mr. Chrétien: I am here, ask me a question.

Mr. Trudeau: —so that they could vote.

Mr. Crosbie: The question is about you.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: What is the nervousness on the other side? I have been asked—

Mr. Beatty: We are afraid you will go.

Mr. Trudeau: I have been asked a question by a member of their own Party who happens to be also the Chairman, I believe, of Chairmen, and they should show some respect for his concern.

Mr. Hees: Madam Speaker, is the Prime Minister not aware that it was often very difficult for our new Leader to get into the taverns and the schools because there were so many Liberal Cabinet Ministers pushing their way in to try and get delegates from those who were assembled? No one came to the Liberal meetings; they went to the Conservative meetings to try to convince them to vote for them at the next convention.

Madam Speaker, does the Prime Minister not realize that the result of that campaign produced a magnificent Leader which his Party would give anything in the world to have today—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Where is he?

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —and he is the reason why the Prime Minister will be moving out of 24 Sussex Drive in the near future?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, on this I would agree with the Hon. Member. The result of that campaign was to produce a magnificent Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I hope the Hon. Member is not implying that the preceding Leader was not magnificent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I certainly was not.

Mr. Trudeau: But, Madam Speaker, we only hope that this magnificent Leader will be able to tell us, for instance, what policy he is taking on medicare, on the Crow, on Manitoba school rights, and all these various subjects. He is magnificent to look at, but we hope he will be magnificent to hear.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SOVIET AIRCRAFT INTRUSIONS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Soviet military aircraft have violated NORAD air space 77 times this year, including three Soviet military aircraft which have been intercepted off the eastern coast of Canada.

The United States Government has recently established a $650 million active contract with Mitre Corporation of Boston to evaluate and enhance the DEW Line. Is it the Government's intention to increase Canada's capacity for surveillance and reconnaissance along our boundaries and, specifically, to enter into a bilateral program with the United States to update the efficacy of a northern warning program to ensure that Canada is adequately protected from such violations?

● (1500)

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his question and congratulate him on his recent elevation within his own Party's caucus. I might indicate to the hon. gentleman that the premise of his question is not accurate. There has not been any entry within Canadian airspace by any Russian aircraft. Indeed, there have been some incursions within an area called the Canadian Air Defence Identification Zone. Those were incursions that were identified by Canadian aircraft, and the individual aircraft were escorted from that particular Canadian Air Defence Identification Zone. Indeed, that is not Canadian sovereign airspace.

In terms of our participation in the improvement of the Distant Early Warning System, the hon. gentleman knows that my predecessor last year identified the fact that the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States are presently in negotiations relating to Canadian participation in the modernization of the Dew Line. Those are negotiations that I am following very closely, but at this time I would not care to comment any further on that.

MEETING OF INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): As a result of the tragic destruction of a Korean Airlines 747 by a Soviet fighter jet, the world now knows that we can have the capacity to monitor radio conversations of both commercial and military aircraft as well as to track their flight paths. In order to warn any commercial airliner that strays into Soviet airspace in sensitive zones, will the Government initiate measures at the International Civil Aviation Organization emergency meeting in Montreal to establish new international agreement on procedures regarding sovereign airspace incursions, including mandatory visual identification and central command control, before action by the sovereign nation, and also a ground-to-air communication and warning system by allied agencies to prevent further loss of life and further destabilization of an already tense international climate?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): As the hon. gentleman knows, Madam Speaker, there are presently rules of engagement that we have negotiated with the Americans under the NORAD arrangement, and those rules are presently in place and are effective. In terms of our dealings with civilian aircraft, I have listened to the hon. gentleman's representations. I will be pleased to discuss them with the Minister of Transport and other Ministers involved on this side of the House relating to those issues in order to review those representations, both in light of the system that presently exists and any improvements that might be brought forward.

* * *

[Translation]

PETITIONS

MR. SHIELDS—QUALITY OF SERVICES OF ALBERTA BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on Wednesday, September 14, 1983, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTIONS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I would like to raise three points of order with which I can deal very quickly. The first relates to the objection filed under the provisions of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) and which the Chair raised yesterday. Having had the opportunity to review the matter, we gladly provide our consent to the acceptance of the objection, notwithstanding the apparent irregularity attendant upon it.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent that these objections be printed in Votes and Proceedings?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—S.O. 21 STATEMENT OF MR. CULLEN

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, my second point of order relates to the rather ungentlemanly and intemperate remarks of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) in the unavoidable absence of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney). I can inform that normally docile and ovinelike Member that I will carefully look at the blues, draw his remarks to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition, and if any response is necessary, it will be made when he returns to the House.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: My third point of order relates to House business. I would ask the Government House Leader to lay on us the business for the remainder of this week and as far into next week as he can take us.

While he is dealing with House business, will he explain to the House why the chairman of the Agricultural Committee, who is the Hon. Member for Rimouski-Témiscouata, (Mrs. Côté), I believe, or the vice-chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the House, the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent, refused to call a meeting of that standing committee to deal with Bill C-653, to which reference was given by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap who, in dealing with it, represented the position of this Party in a totally false fashion? He knows or should know that it is the Government chairmen of that committee refusing to call meetings that is the real reason for our being prevented from dealing with Bill C-653.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as far as the last part of the question is concerned, I shall look into the matter. Regarding the Business of the House, today we shall resume consideration of Bill C-110, postponing debate on Bill C-91 and Bill C-12. Tomorrow, we will consider all objections regarding the reports of the Electoral Boundary Commissions for the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, Newfoundland and the Northwest Territories. All objections will be considered tomorrow after Oral Question Period, which means that the debate on these objections will start tomorrow at noon, after Oral Question Period, and will be interrupted at 3:00 p.m. tomorrow afternoon. The Parliamentary House Leaders have agreed to ask the Chair not to report to the Chief Electoral Officer until the debate is terminated, at a later date to be determined by your humble servant.

Regarding the Business of the House for next week, on Monday, we shall resume debate on the Export Development Bill, assuming that debate on the Bill will not have been completed, and I am referring to Bill C-110, to be followed by debate on the Public Works Bill, that is, Bill C-91. The House is aware that debate on second reading of this Bill has already started. Later next week, if we finish the second reading stage of Bill C-91, we shall resume second reading of Bill C-12, the Bankruptcy Bill. This will probably keep us busy until Wednesday, when we shall be considering private members' business. Next Thursday we should be able to complete consideration of one of the three pieces of legislation I have just mentioned. If we have done so before then, I shall advise my colleagues opposite of the Business of the House for next week Thursday at the appropriate time.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, with regard to the question of Bill C-653, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) noted during the Question Period that he was in support of the principle of the Bill. Given the fact that the Minister of Agriculture supports the principle of the Bill, the New Democratic Party supports the principle of the Bill, and it is now apparent that the Conservatives are prepared to support the principle of the Bill, although belatedly, would it be possible to have the Bill returned from committee and dealt with in Committee of the Whole in order that we might expedite its final passage?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I shall consider the Hon. Member's suggestion.

[English]

Madam Speaker: I need an order of the House so that the debate on the electoral boundaries objections could be terminated at three o'clock, I believe the President of the Privy Council said. Does the House agree to this particular proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Under the law, as the Chair is fully aware, I am sure, the debate must be commenced on those objections. However, it will certainly not be terminated by three o'clock. It will be subject to further debate, after having complied with the law.

Madam Speaker: Therefore, the House agrees, and it is so ordered, that the debate will be adjourned—I am sorry for the bad use of that word—at three o'clock.

• (1510)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my point of order is about the debate on the objections to the electoral boundaries. The President of the Privy Council mentioned the objections from a variety of Provinces, including Quebec and British Columbia. There were probably others. It is not clear to me, however, whether we will be dealing with them seriatim or whether they will be mixed and anyone can rise having objections under Quebec, then British Columbia and then Ontario. I think clarification on that is required.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker. As soon as they are recognized, Hon. Members will be able to express their views and speak to the objections of their choice, whatever the province. That is why we do not want the debate to be terminated at 3:00 p.m., since we realize that not all Hon. Members will be able to speak tomorrow, considering the number of provinces involved. However, as the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), pointed out, by law, we have no choice but to start the debate, and we want it to cover all the provinces and territories I mentioned earlier, but, as the Hon. Member pointed out, when a Member is recognized, he is free to speak to the electoral boundaries of a constituency in any of the four or five provinces and territories I mentioned before.

Madam Speaker, you are entirely correct when you said that the debate will be adjourned at 3:00 p.m. tomorrow, with unanimous consent. However, I want to make it clear that no report will be made to the Chief Electoral Officer before the debate is terminated in the House.

* * *

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—S.O. 21 STATEMENT OF MR. CULLEN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I raised a point of order during that part of our proceedings which is set aside for 90-second statements by Members. You did not permit me to proceed and said that you would hear me at three o'clock.

I raised the point because the hon. gentleman, the Member for Sarnia, it seems to me, was violating the rules and should know better because he was a member of the special committee which drafted that rule, which is very successful and is now in use.

Will the Chair permit that part of our Standing Orders to be used for Members to sneak in what legitimately should be a question of privilege or a point of order, and thereby deprive the person involved the opportunity to reply? I think that is a very serious matter. If that is allowed it will destroy that provision, just as Standing Order 43 was destroyed by abuses.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. I did not raise that point in my observations previously because I felt that the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) would be doing so. However, I agree that it is an abuse not only for the reasons stated by himself but in this case compounded by the unavoidable absence of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney).

However, past precedents will show that when any allegations or charges of changes to Hansard are made in the House, they are invariably made either as a question of privilege affecting the rights of all Members concerning the accuracy of Hansard or, more properly so, as a point of order. But they are certainly not smuggled in under the experimental rule permitting statements.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, Opposition Members may suggest all they want about the contents of statements made on this side of the House, but our Members are free to say what they please about the subjects they wish to raise. If the Leader of the Opposition is not happy about this, he is perfectly free to make a similar statement. Where is he hiding? We have not seen him here today. I hope he will come back and take advantage of the provisions of the Standing Orders which allow him, not only to ask questions but also to make his position known and to express his views, and perhaps the 90-second statement would be a good way for the new Leader of the Opposition to let the country know where he stands on certain issues. Therefore, instead of telling us what to say during those 90 seconds, perhaps Hon. Members opposite should urge the new Leader of the Opposition to take advantage of this opportunity to let Canadians know where he stands on certain issues.

Madam Speaker: I must say to the House that as I listened to the statement made by the Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), it did not seem to me that his statement was out of order. I felt that the Hon. Member was commenting on words he heard spoken in the House, but I will look at the statement in question to find out whether it reflects the objections raised by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I must say it is sometimes difficult for me to interrupt an Hon. Member. Today, for instance, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) used his 90 seconds to praise Mr. Begin, which is entirely admirable in itself, but, strictly speaking, is not allowed according to our interpretation of the kind of statements that may be made between 2:00 p.m. and 2:15.

As I listened I thought that after his eulogy of Mr. Begin, he might make some kind of statement or express an opinion or comment on the situation in Israel, but he still had not done so when his 90 seconds had expired. In a way, the Hon. Member's statement was entirely out of order, but it was difficult for the Chair to interrupt the Hon. Member, because I did not know whether he was going to go on to something else or not. Nevertheless, I shall look into the matter. Up to now, the 15-minute period has been put to very good use by Hon. Members, and I think they will agree that the Chair must continue to enforce the rules applying to such statements as strictly as possible.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, bearing on your last words, I want to make it clear that I am one who does not believe that statements serve any use at all in this Parliament. I think they are nothing short of empty words with no motions attached. Members of Parliament are elected to ask questions, speak to motions or to make motions. Giving speeches that are as effective as speaking on a platform from the back of a caboose that is going from Frobisher Bay to Sachs Harbour in the middle of the night while the cactuses are growing in Arizona, about females, eradicating poverty in the world and doing the things that we all know, such as kissing the flag and hugging Canada, is of no use at all if Members of Parliament cannot have a vote and then be accountable for their actions.

One simple way to look at this is that we continue to do things to which we can put motions, or instal electronic voting in the House, such that we can then be accountable in a much faster way for what we do as individual Members from wherever we are elected. We should stop giving empty speeches that do not mean anything at all.

Madam Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member's views will be studied but perhaps they would be more welcome in the committee studying procedure.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,646, 4,728, 4,895, and 5,001.

[Text]

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON PRICE MEASUREMENT

Question No. 4,647—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Was an Advisory Committee on Price Measurement set up to advise Statistics Canada on its review of the concepts, methods and priorities being used by Statistics Canada to measure price changes and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what expertise does each member have in the area of price measurement (c) does the Committee have a fixed time frame or will it continue to meet indefinitely (d) what were the specific terms of reference (e) what is the budget for the committee and how will it be spent?

2. Does Statistics Canada have an in-house committee which examines similar issues on an on-going basis?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. Statistics Canada has established a Price Measurement Advisory Committee whose prime function will be to advise and consult with the agency on price measurement related issues, of both a conceptual and technical nature.

(a) and (b) The members of this Committee were selected because of their expertise in the measurement of prices and/or the measurement of economic variables. They are: John Bossons: Head, Institute for Policy Analysis, University of Toronto; Erwin Diewert: Professor, University of British Columbia; Michael McCraken: President, Informetrica Ltd; Claude Montmarquette: Directeur, Centre de recherches en développement économique, Université de Montréal; Gilles Paquet: Dean, Faculty of Administration, University of Ottawa.

(c) The Committee has been set up for an indefinite period of time. It has a rotating membership with one-third of the members being substituted annually.

(d) The specific terms of reference were as follows (i) To advise and consult with Statistics Canada in price measurement issues of both a conceptual and technical nature; (ii) to advise Statistics Canada on research priorities in the area of price measurement;

(e) The budget for the operation of the committee for the fiscal year 1983-84 amounts to $12,500. It will be spent as follows: honoraria, $2,500; travel, $10,000.

In addition, the Reseach Committee could initiate research projects up to a total budget of $50,000 for the fiscal year 1983-1984.

2. Statistics Canada has established an in-house review committee whose function is to examine the 25 research papers presented at the Price Measurement Review Conference held November 22-24, 1982. This committee is reviewing the recommendation contained in the research papers and evaluating their validity and feasibility of implementation. This review process will be completed by December, 1983.

PARKS CANADA—TRENT SEVERN WATERWAY

Question No. 4,728—Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton):

1. Were any capital projects cancelled by Parks Canada in the Trent Severn Waterway (CORTS) to reduce the current spending estimates by $12,312,000 and, if so, which projects?

2. Which projects remain after this spending cut?

3. Was the money reallocated and, if so, to where?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. No.

MERRYFIELD HAY CO. LTD.

Question No. 4,895—Mr. Riis:

What was the status of the annual lease payments from the Merryfield Hay Co. Ltd. to the Deadman Creek Indian Band for the leasing of hay land for each year from 1976 to 1982?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The Merryfield Cattle Co. Ltd. holds separate leases on the Deadman's Creek Indian Reserve for Parcel C and Parcel D. The status of the rental payments made for each lease follows:

Parcel C—Annual rental in the amount of $2,410 per annum was received for the years 1976, 1977 and 1978. We have no record of having received any rent for the years 1979 to 1983 inclusive but understand that some rent during this period was paid directly to the Deadman's Creek Indian Band.

The Department does not have a record of payments which were made directly to the Band.

Parcel D—The Department received rent of $4,500 for 1976, $4,650 for 1977 and $4,550 for 1978. We have no record of having received rent for the following years but understand that some rent was paid during this period directly to the Deadman's Creek Indian Band.

We understand that the Merryfield Cattle Co. Ltd. is now in receivership and that the Deadman's Creek Band Council is considering alternatives for the future of Parcel C and Parcel D.

DELIVERY OF NUMISMATIC COINS

Question No. 5,001—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Is it the policy of the Royal Canadian Mint to entrust valuable Mint coins to Canada Post Corporation regular delivery?

2. Were losses sustained by the Mint in the past year and, if so, what were such losses?

3. How does the Mint ensure that the intended recipient receives the coins?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The Royal Canadian Mint has been delivering its regular numismatic coins by parcel post since April, 1981 in the U.S.A. and since August, 1982 in Canada. Prior to August, 1982, all shipments in Canada were via registered mail. Gold numismatic coins are delivered by money packet.

2. In 1982, the Mint wrote-off $6,798 for replacement of 1982 regular numismatic coins. By using parcel post in 1982, from January for U.S. orders and from August for Canadian orders, the Mint saved $305,200 in postage which more than offset its losses.

3. Clients report to the Mint coins which are not received. Replacements are sent by registered mail. All claims are monitored.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I would like to compliment the Parliamentary Secretary on his new appointment. I am sure he will be an improvement on the previous one.

Question No. 4,336 was placed on the Order Paper by myself on May 19, 1982, a year and four months ago. It is a fairly simple request to the Department of National Defence to explain why they have been so prejudiced against one Lieutenant Geoff Wright. There must be an answer available after 16 months of pondering. I would like to know why the Government does not produce it.

Mr. Evans: Madam Speaker, I had discussions earlier with the Hon. Member on this particular question. I promised to pursue the matter with the Minister of National Defence and I will get back to him as soon as I can.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

● (1520)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 3 and 5 (Mr. Blenkarn).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I believe the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) has the floor.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, to refresh Members's memories, let me read Motion No. 3:

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 23 to 26 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

11.(1) The authorized capital of the Corporation is one billion one hundred dollars divided into ten million and one shares with a par value of one hundred dollars each.

Motion No. 5 reads:

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 39 to 41 at page 3 and lines 1 and 2 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

14. The aggregate amount of borrowings of the Corporation pursuant to sections 12 and 13 shall not exceed the amount equal to ten times the aggregate of the paid in capital and earned surplus in the accounts of the Corporation.

The explanation of this, as I see it, may be stated quite simply. The Government proposes, as you will know, Sir, that there be $2 billion in authorized capital for the corporation and that the aggregate amount of borrowing of the corporation shall "not exceed an amount equal to ten times the authorized capital of the corporation". Therefore, if you put the Government's proposal against our amendments, the Government proposes to allow the corporation to borrow $20 billion without further parliamentary authorization. That is the basis of our strong objection, the objection taken by other Members in the debate——and that is the essence of my speech. The position taken by our caucus, Mr. Speaker, is that the authority to allow expenditures as vast as those we are discussing today should remain with Parliament. It is up to us, as elected representatives of the Canadian people, to vote on the monies that are to be spent as proposed in this Bill.

[Translation]

[English]

The fundamental objection which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has made is that there is no parliamentary control on contributions. The Government just puts in money, any amount of money up to $2 billion, and then it has the absolute right to subscribe to the capital of the EDC and there will be no further voting upon it. Whether or not the EDC receives the money from the Government without our amendment—that is up to the $2 billion—this measure would give the EDC the right to borrow on the credit of our country to the extent of $20 billion. We say——this kind of accounting, if you will, cannot be tolerated if our country's finances are to be at all sound.

[Translation]

[English]

We say that if we pass this Bill the EDC—I do not think there is a Member in this House who has anything but support for the EDC in its concept of assisting the exporting of goods—can borrow $20 billion to finance any sort of project. In passing, let me mention the Algerian project which was the subject at a television program shown last week, CTV'S W5. The project, as I understand it, is basically a monument to the Algerian revolution financed by the Canadian taxpayers through the EDC by an enormous subsidy in terms of interest rates. I wish every Canadian could have seen W5 and heard the comments made by the EDC spokesman. It is an example for each and every one of us that instead of giving $2 billion carte blanche we should be showing greater parliamentary control over what the EDC will be doing in the years ahead.

Let me also cite in support of this amendment a study done by the Economic Council of Canada in 1982 entitled "A Study of Government Credit and Credit Guarantees to the Private Sector". On page 60 the conclusion in the relevant section reads:

> We have noted that there are in general few deficiencies in the markets for these instruments.

Speaking about credit insurance and the like:

> The private sector, however, could be encouraged to fill the remaining gaps through a reorientation of EDC activities towards reinsurance and refinancing. Disregarding the support accorded by foreign countries to their own exports, more appropriate instruments than subsidized export credit could be used to achieve the government's macroeconomic objectives. Although it would be desirable for all countries to abandon simultaneously their export subsidy program, this seems improbable at the moment and Canada must continue to offer export subsidies for strategic reasons.

Mr. Evans: Where is the complication?

Mr. Kilgour: Also in support of the amendment, for the information of the temporary Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), is the study done—

Mr. Evans: I will be here a lot longer than you are in Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Kilgour: —by Professor Andre Raynauld who I see is the president-elect of that professional body of economists, the Economic Association of Canada. He is a former Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada and a former Liberal MNA in the Quebec National Assembly. Speaking about the EDC, Professor Raynauld said, "It is rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient." I understand from my colleague for Mississauga South that Professor Raynauld goes on in his study to compare our Export Development Corporation with like corporations and agencies in other exporting countries and does not draw favourable conclusions.

Many points have been made in this debate and I am trying not to duplicate them, but let me touch on the question of authorized capital. Normally a trust or a loan company is entitled to lend a multiple of its subscribed capital and earned surplus. EDC does not have that type of limitation. Its limitation is a multiple of authorized capital. As I mentioned before, the consequence of this, if our amendment does not pass, and even if it does to a limited extent, is that it does not matter at all how much money the Government in fact contributes as capital to the corporation; borrowings are a multiple of the capital authorization. The effect of the Government's proposal here would be to increase the authorized capital to $2 billion, so that its authorized borrowing can then be $20 billion. Our amendment is simply to reduce the capital to $1 billion from $2 billion and to try to limit the amount of unauthorized—that is, unauthorized by Parliament—borrowing that the EDC may do.

● (1530)

I urge Members opposite to support us so that Parliament can, in a small way, reassert its control over the public purse.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in joining in the debate on the amendment now under consideration, I want to emphasize for all Members who have not had an opportunity to date to read the provisions of Bill C-110 how vitally important the amendment we are now discussing is to the whole operation of the Export Development corporation. I say that because it has become almost usual in dealing with the Government with which we now live with Canada to talk in terms of a billion dollars or half a billion dollars. It is not as it was, perhaps ten years ago, a matter of sinking in to the Members of this House the money grab that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) is attempting to make in the Bill before us.

The money grab I am referring to is, of course, what my colleague commented on, the provision we are now dealing with calling for a total capitalization in the Export Development Corporation of $2 billion. When you multiply that by ten, and that is the way this Bill works, you are considering that the Government is asking for $20 billion of lending authority, which in turn means borrowing authority. Let us never forget that. A government cannot lend a nickel without raising it from the taxpayers of this country or borrowing. We are considering $20 billion of borrowing authority to be lent to various concerns around the world. That is what is before us.

Members should take the time to read this Bill. I notice that the socialists are not even getting into this debate. That is typical of them. They have no appreciation of money when it is not their own. As long as it is taxpayers' money or debt rolling, they somehow remain mute in this House. They could not care less. It is time that we fingered that irresponsible group which they are in this House and throughout the nation.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. While the Member berates us, I wonder if he would stand and honestly acknowledge the fact—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I do not think it would be helpful for me to remind the Hon. Member what might constitute a point of order. However, I must indicate to him that debate is not a point of order, and that is what he is entering into.

Mr. Stevens: You are a good Speaker, Mr. Speaker.

I am trying to press Hon. Members to take an active interest in the amendment under consideration. To put it into perspective let me say that when we are talking about a $2 billion capitalization for the Export Development Corporation, it in turn triggers $20 billion of available funds. The Government of Canada would either have to borrow those funds or otherwise raise the money. That $20 billion is to be re-lent to other people.

Let us put this into perspective. Perhaps the most relevant country to look at is the United States of America. It has an institution that might be compared to the Export Development Corporation called the Export-Import Bank of the United States. Looking at the September, 1981 statement, we see that the total paid-in capital of the United States counterpart to the Export Development Corporation is $1 billion. This Government is asking the people of Canada, through this Parliament, to accept as an authorized capital for our corporation, for openers, twice the size of the total paid-in capital of the comparable institution in the United States, the Export-Import Bank in 1981.

The United States is 10 or 11 times the size of Canada in terms of Gross National Product. One would think that an institution there, with money resources such as this Government wants for the Export Development Corporation, would have capital of $10 billion. In fact, it has $1 billion in capitalization.

My second point is that not only is the capital in the Export-Import Bank in the United States in the fiscal year September, 1981, only half of what this Government feels it needs in its gluttony and greed, but the total of its borrowed funds is $16 billion. In the clauses now under review, we are considering an authorization of capital of $2 billion, a total commitment of $20 billion, which is twice the total paid-in capital of the Export-Import Bank in the United States in 1981. In gross terms, the $20 billion figure is approximately 25 per cent larger than the total outstanding commitment of the Export-Import Bank in the United States in 1981.

I hope I have put this into perspective. Surely all of us in this House agree in principle that if we can have a plan to increase exports from Canada to the countries of the world, we should support it. Nobody is challenging that. The real question is twofold. First, can we do it and ensure that Parliament can keep control of the spending that is entailed in the program? Second, can we do it in the most efficient way possible? Let me touch on those two questions.

If the amendment that my colleague is suggesting is not accepted, reducing the authorized capital from $2 billion to $1 billion, which is still 50 per cent more than paid-in capital in the American counterpart, it will mean that that extra half billion dollars multiplied by ten, which is $5 billion, is to all intents and purposes lost from the control of this House. In the name of Canadian taxpayers, what is wrong with us as Members of Parliament saying, "It may be that in future you will need an extra $5 billion, but do not ask us to give you the blank cheque on September 15, 1983. We will give you the running money you may feel is needed for the coming months or years, but come back to the ultimate authority, the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada and ask once again for that extra $5 billion. Don't expect us to simply give it to you without questions asked." That is what this debate is all about.

• (1540)

I would suggest that if the Export Development Corporation's American counterpart, the Export-Import Bank of the United States, can get by and can break into the world export markets to the extent that it has without the type of capital that is being contemplated in the Bill that is now before us, surely it behooves us to turn to the Government and simply ask, why it cannot do likewise. Why does it need such lavish financing from the Parliament of Canada when its main competitor in the United States has much less?

The Minister of State for International Trade is shaking his head. I would like to ask him if he has taken it upon himself to go to the Export-Import Bank of the United States. Has he personally talked to its executives to find out how they can operate in such an effective way by getting levered exports as compared to the over-financing that our Export Development Corporation often engages in? It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the present Minister of State for International Trade has not done so. I understand that, in learning his job, he has not seen fit to make the most obvious comparison with the counterpart to the Export Development Corporation in the United States.

If I had more time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to let Members know where the money that will possibly be authorized with the passage of this Bill will actually go. Who gets the benefit of it? Who are the chosen indirect recipients of these funds? Many of us would be most startled to hear who is on that list, but I see that my time has run out. I would only ask that, before we in the Opposition meekly pass the provision that we are asked to pass and before Government Members who are like trained seals pass it, we bear in mind that it is just not needed. It is like signing a blank cheque on behalf of every taxpayer in the country. We have seen from past experience how irresponsible the Government has been when handling people's funds. Let us not give it more than it absolutely needs.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to place a few comments on the record respecting this Bill and specifically the amendment that is before the House this afternoon. The question of the need for more exports is not at issue. Anyone who has seen the effect that exports have had on the Canadian market will see that the evidence is fairly clear that we are without question a major trading nation and that that has a very direct effect on the wellbeing of every Canadian. That matter is not at issue.

I would also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is not at issue that Canadians endorse every effort made by Government to increase, enhance and encourage exports from Canadian manufacturers and primary resources. Those of us who are from agricultural regions, specifically those from western Canada, are constantly made aware of the effect of Government participation on the sale of primary products, be they forest products or agricultural projects. So the second issue that is not in question is the matter of the need, and in fact the desirability, for Government to encourage that economic activity.

It is clear, though, Mr. Speaker, that the export world has become more sophisticated. I would suggest that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) take a look at our embassies and consulates abroad. I am sure he is aware of the fact that it is no longer sufficient that we simply have as part of that operation a trading arm only, but rather that it must become much more specific in terms of the commodities or the products involved.

Additionally, the world of trade is, without question, being affected by the world economy today. In fact, many of the world's economies are having difficulty or have gone through a period of difficulty now that recovery has started to take hold. Various protectionist attitudes and measures and non-tariff barriers have become part and parcel of the export business in the last year. Those have always been present, but I think, particularly since the last GATT negotiation, that we have seen a much greater proliferation of non-tariff barriers, for example, than those agreed to through the GATT. One needs only point out as an example the difficulties that occurred with the negotiations relative to agricultural products which go back to the early days of GATT and which have always been a strong area of contention. The argument has always been made that each area of the world would like to have the right to self-sufficiency in food production.

There are certain factors with which all of us would agree. However, the question that is before the House today in this amendment is whether or not the amount of money requested, $20 billion, which would increase the borrowing capacity of the Export Development Corporation, is being requested and scrutinized in the proper manner. For example, I do not know how amenable the Minister is to changes that would provide that funds requested would come under closer scrutiny of Parliament. I believe that the Minister, with his experience as former Premier of a Province in Canada and now as a Minister of the Crown, is aware that Canadians have raised very serious, substantial and, I believe, valid concerns regarding the accountability not only of Government and its departments and its operations but specifically of what has literally become a spin-off of Government, namely, Crown corporations and, in this case, the Export Development Corporation.

Canadians are asking a very serious question, and that is, how best to control not only the increased numbers of corporations but in fact the money that these corporations are able to borrow in the name of Canadian citizens. It is very difficult for Canadians to understand their total indebtedness as Canadians when one factors in the indebtedness or liabilities that Canadians have toward Crown corporations. For example, the Minister knows that every time his Estimates come before the House, he must appear before a parliamentary committee. He is grilled at that committee, although some of us would suggest insufficiently, but the process does take place and at least there is some accountability to Parliament of the moneys to be expended.

Some of us who have looked at parliamentary procedures argue that a procedure should be put into place that would look at possible expenditures before the fact. The Huntington-Lachance exercise in parliamentary reform is one such attempt to create a model that would allow us to judge before moneys are spent whether or not moneys spent on certain projects could not in fact be spent more wisely.

What is before us today is another attempt by the Government to carry liabilities which are totally on the backs of the Canadian public without addressing the concern had by the Canadian public for accountability. I feel, and I am sure every Member in the House and most Canadians would agree, that the attempts made by Ministers to reach accountability within their own departments is an ongoing and difficult task as Government has grown, but it is of even greater difficulty for Members of the Opposition, and specifically the Canadian public, to find out what the total liability of Canadians is, not only from Government but from Crown corporations as well.

I would urge the Minister to examine the points that have been made and address himself to those points and seriously to consider how amendments could be brought forward that would give some accountability back to the Canadian public, specifically in the Bill before us.

• (1550)

That is not the only area of accountability that should be examined through seed money for corporations or small businesses too start up. Governments have a role—unfortunately, I think to great a role—in choosing winners and losers in the corporate field. Too often it is small corporations unknown to the Government and run by individuals of tremendous entrepreneurial spirit that do not get any Government help. This may be because they have not asked for any, or have not asked in the correct way or they are not known to Government. Other corporations that appear here constantly asking for grants, loan guarantees and so forth, may not do much to create jobs.

The glaring example of this for almost all Canadians, Mr. Speaker, is the Maislin bail out. That did not create jobs for Canadians. The $34 million that was put into the corporation might have done a great deal for a small corporation or for the Canadian trucking industry. Why should we protect jobs in the United States through that company?

I am concerned about how we can address the question of accountability in the Bill. I am tired of Ministers coming before the House at Question Period and in committee saying, "That is a question we cannot answer because a Crown corporation is concerned. When it comes before the committee, then ask the question." Ministers should be responsible; they should have accountability.

The amendment that has been proposed addresses that question, Mr. Speaker. If that amendment is not acceptable to the Minister, I suggest to him that any amendment is acceptable to us which brings back accountability to the Minister and to the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Progressive Conservative motion. This motion is very important to democracy and to the Parliament of Canada.

[English]

As the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) says, the important thing about the amendment before the House is the matter of accountability. I think it is time for a lot more accountability from Crown corporations in this country. It is time for more accountability when it comes to giving power to Members of Parliament to scrutinize Crown corporations.

The Province that the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) and I come from, has a special committee of the legislature which is called a Crown Corporations Committee. The annual reports of Crown corporations are referred to that Committee and the heads of those corporations are called in and questioned. In that way the activities of the corporations are scrutinized and votes are held on whether they are doing the right and proper thing. That is the kind of practice that should be followed at the national level.

The amendment before the House is a small step in that direction. It limits the borrowing that the Export Development Corporation can make without coming back to Parliament. As drafted by the Government, the Bill would allow the Government to borrow up to $20 billion before coming back to the House for approval. The effect of the amendment would be to reduce the authorized capital from $2 billion to $1 billion, and that is a step in the right direction.

In this country, Crown corporations have played a very important role and will continue to do so. We have a lot of them and we need them. The important thing about them is that they must be accountable and more responsive to the wishes and needs of the country. Crown corporations like the CNR and others are very distant from the Parliament of Canada.

I suggest that, as has been the case in Saskatchewan, we refer the annual reports of Crown corporations to the relevant committee. The CNR annual report goes to the Transport Committee, and so does the Air Canada annual report. Perhaps we should do the same thing with all the other Crown corporations so that we could scrutinize them carefully.

The other thing that I believe we need is a reformation of this institution so that Members and committees have more power to direct Crown corporations to do what they think is best. We should have some power over setting their priorities and agendas and we should be able to work with them on important issues of the day. I think that is an important step that must be taken.

[Translation]

Our country needs a more democratic system. Mr. Speaker, I think that the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Prime Minister's Office have too much power and the same applies to the Privy Council and the Executive. This is certainly too much power for a majority Government, because with a majority Government, it is the Government that does practically everything there is to be done in the country, without any recognition for the importance of the common Member of Parliament—

[English]

—before looking at the point of view of an Opposition Party or whatever.

For these reasons I think we should support the motion that is before the House and try to make Crown corporations more accountable to the public. In saying that, I take nothing away from the importance of Crown corporations. We need the Export Development Corporation and we should strengthen it. Canada must become more aggressive in promoting exports. In many ways we are the boy scouts of world trade, not nearly as aggressive as the Germans, the Americans, the French and the Japanese. Our share of world trade has fallen drastically in the last 20 years. If I remember correctly, we used to have about 4 per cent of world trade, and now we have about 2 per cent. For these reasons we must become increasingly aggressive.

In the past, the Export Development Corporation has often assisted larger enterprises and forgotten some of the smaller enterprises. I need only remind you, Mr. Speaker, that about 60 per cent of jobs in Canada are provided by small business. That shows how important it is that small enterprises be promoted. If there is a healthy small business climate, then a lot more jobs will be created for Canadians.

All this could be achieved more easily if we had greater accountability for Crown corporations and a better reflection of the country in the board of directors. There must be greater co-operation between the federal Government and the Provinces and a better approach to trade and exports. This amendment would go some way to make the EDC a better Crown corporation.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in the years that I have been in the House of Commons I have watched the emphasis of interest shift. Sometimes it has been on international affairs, sometimes on energy, at other times on the environment. When the tide of public interest on issues shifts, that is where Parliament tends to focus.

I think that focus is well placed in this particular Bill. For the past two years the focus has been on the economy. It is one thing to talk about the tragedies of the economy as we have done again and again, but I think we must start looking for ways to correct our economic ills.

This focus is not only demonstrated in the House of Commons. This summer the Premiers met and a clear message came out of their consultations. That was, that we must concentrate on international trade. If we are going to work our way out of provincial deficits and national deficits, if we are going to maintain the standard of living we have become accustomed to, it is going to be in this field of trade. The message from that sounding board of our Premiers is a correct message. Their focus in the economy on trade and the itinerant reality of exports is important to all of us, to be wary of, to be aware of, and to enact such Bills as this particular Bill.

● (1600)

Like everyone else who has spoken, I speak in favour of the principle of the Bill. I am in favour of the motherhood issue of exports and of increasing those exports by as many means as we can find. Economists throughout the western world, no matter whether it is Canada, the United States, Britain or France, have brought back into our economic vocabulary the words "productivity" and "growth". A decade ago the words "productivity" and "growth" were out. Those were bad words. We were in an energy crisis. We were in an environmental crisis. Therefore, those were "downer" words and did not receive any emphasis. Today, however, they are respectable words.

How are we going to create more jobs in Canada if we do not increase our productivity? How are we going to sustain the jobs we have? Therefore, we must increase our productivity. We must increase the development of new industries and growth in the industries we already have onstream. But what are we going to do with an increased productivity, an increased growth, how are we going to create and sustain these jobs, if, in fact, we cannot sell in international markets the products of our efforts? Therefore, again we come back to this all-important word "exports". I am in favour of increasing exports from Canada. I am willing to do almost anything. There is, however, one thing which I will not export, and that is my democracy. I will not export my responsibility to the people who sent me here. I will not export my accountability in this House of Commons. And that is what this Bill is doing.

I know the Minister is an enthusiastic and energetic Minister of Trade. I have seen that enthusiasm. I know he has been in politics many, many years. I am sure that on some days like today he feels it is too many, it is too long, it goes on and on. He wants to get on with the business and he wants to expand his ideas. However, in that impatience which comes in dealing in a democracy and with a democracy, he must not allow this further erosion. I know this Minister knows the delicacy of the democratic structure. I was in India with him when there was an emergency. He saw the emergency. He saw how a government went a little too far in its hurry, perhaps, to go in the right direction. We cannot let the very, very important democratic principles which he has stood for and, I believe, continues to stand for, be brushed aside for the sake of expediency. He cannot allow that to happen to him. An uprooting of the democratic mode of accountability is found in this Bill.

I remember not too many years ago, as a younger politician, hearing someone make the statement, "What is a million dollars?" We have now gone from "What is a million dollars?", to "What is a billion dollars?", and today we are standing in the House and saying, "What is $10 billion? Just give it to them." For what? For export. We are all for exports, but that is not good enough for me. As much as I like this Minister, as much as I do not trust this Government, or do trust this Government, I certainly cannot write a blank cheque like this for any purpose no matter how good the cause. Even if it is a cause of humanity, a cause of aid, I must still know, if I write that cheque, that in fact there is a measure of accountability which I can be responsive to and responsible for. That is not going to happen in this particular Bill, as far as I can see.

Before I came here I started out as a young, idealistic teacher. I used to teach history in school. Maybe it was because of the political instincts I had, but when it came to the section on democracy, I taught it with a very special verve because I felt so strongly about it. I can remember going back in that old history book and talking about how the king had all the power and how it must be taken from him by the Magna Carta and how we exchanged, for the right of giving him money, the capacity to gain control and accountability. Accountability, how? Through a House of Commons, through a Parliament. We talked about that word "Parliament", a place to speak, a place to be accountable. That particular accountability evolved to our parliamentary structure, our parliamentary system. However, I have watched, and I am watching in this Bill, not the evolution of Parliament, not a Parliament where the people of the nation have a chance for accountability and to speak, not an evolution to see that power grow, but in fact that power being taken away from us. It passes from the king to Parliament, and then from Parliament it is passed back to the Cabinet, then from the Cabinet it is passed back to the Prime Minister. That is bad enough, because our whole system has gone that way, back to a prime ministerial type of government, a government of the PMO. But we are moving this one out even beyond the PMO. We are moving this out to some unaccountable Crown corporation which I cannot reach, I cannot touch and I cannot bring to accountability.

No matter how pure that organization is, it is going to make mistakes, this wonderful organization into which the Government seems to be so willing to put all its faith and to which it throws this handout, because neither is this corporation accountable to the Government. The control is not direct enough. There is only an indirect control. That form of accountability can be abused, and it has been abused. Mention was made earlier today of the $100 million monument which we built with Canadian tax dollars, a monument to the revolution in Algeria. I wonder if there is any person who would contribute 10 cents to that monument if they were given the opportunity. But they are not being given the opportunity, because that has been taken outside our parliamentary jurisdiction. That responsibility is given to the Export Development Corporation which I cannot reach and which I cannot touch. I can say something in this place, but I cannot get through to the corporation.

I wonder how many people would want to give $600 million to the Soviet Union after it shot down the aircraft and killed those ten Canadians and some 260 other persons. I wonder how many would want to raise tax dollars, tax pennies, to build a pipeline in the Soviet Union. I believe not very many, Mr. Speaker. However, the Export Development Corporation thought we should. I should like to tell the Export Development Corporation that I want to give it some direction so that perhaps we can give some of that money to our friends who are in need, and we have many friends in need. Perhaps we can give to some of our friends who in fact can regenerate the economy and regenerate jobs in Canada in a different way.

We are missing the whole great Pacific Rim. We hardly touch it. Why does this Government and this Minister not put a whole new concentration on the Asian Pacific Rim? That is where the opportunity is. Above all, Mr. Speaker, I say in conclusion that Canadians must realize that this is the devolution of our democracy through the impatience of a government which has been in power too long, and of a Minister who has been in politics too long, and we cannot let them get away with this. We must maintain accountability to Parliament. Therefore, we must have this amendment which has been brought by the Conservative Party to preserve democracy in the House of Commons.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I was inspired to speak this afternoon by some of the comments which were made by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). I would like to begin by congratulating him on his new appointment as the shadow cabinet minister responsible for watching over the Liberal Government in the area of external affairs. Although I congratulate him at the outset, I would also like to put forth a note of fear that such a person, if a Conservative government were ever to be elected in Canada, would be representing our country throughout the world. It would make me feel sick in my heart to think that someone like that would actually pretend to represent the humanitarian ways, the progressive ways which we have in Canada.

● (1610)

Mr. Beatty: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) rises on a point of order, and justly so. It has been my practice to allow Hon. Members to proceed a certain distance before I interrupt them, but when a point of order is raised on the floor obviously the matter is taken out of the hands of the Chair and I must rule on it.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, surely that diatribe we are hearing against my colleague who is not in the House at the present time is out of order as it relates in no way to the Bill. What the Hon. Member is doing is expressing concern over foreign affairs, which has nothing to do with the EDC. Surely that sort of personal abuse bears no relationship whatsoever to the amendment before the House at the present time.

Mr. Manly: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the conduct of foreign affairs has a great deal to do with export development.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It may, but that is not the context in which the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) was making his comments. I noted that the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe was quite cautious in pointing out that his own point of order dealt with the subject of relevance. In that regard I invite the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake to take the floor again, perhaps with some awareness that relevance is important.

Mr. Anguish: Yes, relevance is very important, Mr. Speaker, and that is really what inspired me to speak. I think many of the speeches given over the past few days by the Conservative Party have been irrelevant. You can only listen to the same thing said in different ways so many times before it becomes irrelevant as well. It does not matter how many people are saying it if they are making the same point. I believe that is irrelevant, and I do not believe I was going anywhere beyond the relevance of the Bill as compared with what other speakers were doing.

It is sometimes easy for the Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker, to talk out of both sides of their mouth. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) was saying that the question was not more exports. I disagree with him. I think the question is that we need more exports in this country so that small businesses thrive and manufacturers can expand their markets. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) very adequately pointed out that at one time Canada had about 4 per cent of world trade and now we have only about 2 per cent. In my constituency we produce a great number of things which are exported. I am thinking of the minerals in the northern area and timber which is produced and exported. It is also an oil producing area. Even more important is the agricultural base of my area. I am thinking of the positive contribution to our balance of trade which is made by our grain exports. If we do not really need more exports, why are the Conservatives arguing that EDC should not be a strong agency to improve our export position in world trade?

It is very easy to talk out of both sides of their mouths when they talk about a large export product such as grain and then talk about the Crow Bill and jump in bed with the Liberals. They want to put through Bill C-155 so that it costs the producers of western Canada about $1 billion a year more, yet they say publicly that they do not support this Bill. Are they against exports in that area? I certainly think they are, judging by their activities in the committee. That does not get perhaps as much publicity as it should with regard to the Conservative Party position.

If we do not have a strong EDC, Mr. Speaker, what is the alternative? Is it foreign ownership? Would the Conservative Party prefer to have the situation we had back in the mid-1970s when 99 per cent of the oil-refining industry in Canada was foreign owned?

Do they want a manufacturing and industrial section over 50 per cent foreign-owned? You cannot have it both ways. The Conservative Party has to make a decision at some point in time about whether they want us to become a vibrant country where we can produce more materials which can not only be sold in our domestic markets but through a strong export market as well. Do they want that or not? This indicates to me, Mr. Speaker, that they do not really want that.

They do not want accountability either. The Conservative Party has never stood for Crown corporation legislation which would make corporations such as the EDC accountable to the people of Canada. These corporations should be reporting to a committee on Crown corporation where not only the EDC but others would have to be accountable on a monthly or at least a yearly basis. The Conservatives are quite free in spending the individual taxpayer's dollars but, just like the Liberals who have been in power much longer than they have, they are not so keen on spending the billions of dollars in deferred corporate taxes. As they said in the Committee on Transport when the Crow Bill was before them, they do not owe taxes to the Government. It is deferred tax. The question was asked, well, if it is deferred, why is it noted as deferred tax on your annual statement? They said, well, we do not owe it, it is only deferred.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, is there no rule of relevancy at all? Is the speaker going to ignore this entirely? This speaker has not addressed the legislation before us in the last five minutes.

Mr. Anguish: I think the way the Conservative speakers have been addressing themselves to this Bill shows very clearly that they have that sort of Bay Street attitude. They want the best of both worlds. They jump in bed with the Liberals on some legislation, behind the closed doors of the committee, such as on Bill C-155.

Mr. Andre: Now we know why you are at 16 per cent.

Mr. Anguish: They will do the same on the EDC, but when it comes to the public, when they have their public forum to speak to the people of Canada, they are opposed to the Liberals. They do not want anything to do with them. Well, you cannot be in bed and out of bed at the same time. Eventually they will have to make a very basic decision as to what they are going to do.

The reason they can get away with this, Mr. Speaker, is the fact they have no policy. They have a good looking leader, he is confident and articulate, but they do not have any policies. So when they are in one meeting they can say one thing out of this side of their mouths, and when they are in a public forum like the House of Commons they can say something else out of the other side of their mouths. Well, if they ever become the Government of Canada, heaven forbid, I think it would be very distressing for the people of this country to find out that they base themselves on opinion polls. If the polls say one thing one day, that is the side they are on. If it is something else the next day, they are on the other side.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, the matter of relevancy has been drawn to your attention twice. We have heard about the Crow rate, forestry, oil, minerals and opinion polls. First of all, none of those things can be financed by the Export Development Corporation, and this is an amendment to a specific section dealing with the capitalization and how much borrowing the EDC can do. I do not think the man has read the Bill, I do not think he has a clue what he is talking about, and he is just rambling on. Perhaps he should pick up the Bill; relevance is sometimes considered.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the EDC, the amendments being proposed—

Mr. Beatty: You have been gonged.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have to indicate to the Hon. Member that comment on previous contributions to debate has generally been regarded as being in order. I am aware that the general thrust of the Hon. Member's address tends to be more, if I may say, politically or Party oriented. But I do not think I can find him out of order in that regard. He is utilizing his opportunity to comment on speeches made by his predecessors who have had the floor, and so far I find that he is in order in that regard.

• (1620)

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Member stood up on a point of order to say that I was not saying things that were relevant. They are very relevant to the Bill. It is another example of the Conservatives picking what they want to hear, putting that forward and covering over all the other things that are important and relevant to making this country operate in a good, sound and vibrant economy. Instead of playing with pieces of legislation such as the Export Development Corporation amendments set before us, the Conservatives should get on with some progressive work, which should be coming from them as it is in their name, but they are neither progressive nor conservative. I do not know how they ever came to the name itself. However, I think they should try to be a little more constructive and add to the debate so that we can form legislation, if in fact they want to form legislation, which is not only good for the credibility of this Parliament but also good for the people of Canada.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, methinks the Hon. Member doth protest too much, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, or whatever it is. It looks as though he has decided to resurrect his run at the leadership of the New Democratic Party. He spoke at some length about being constructive, but he did not at any point make any constructive contribution to this debate nor to the amendment that my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has placed before the House this afternoon. It demonstrates a rather strange nervousness on the part of the New Democratic Party and the Government Members, that they have in fact turned their attack on the Progressive Conservative Party in opposition. One wonders what the NDP would do if we were called to a vote where we might bring down the Government, whether it would support the Liberal Party—

Mr. Anguish: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, is this speech really relevant?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member's point is well taken. He will know that I defended him a moment ago when he took occasion to comment on previous speeches. As much as I would defend, in the Chair, the Hon. Member for the Battlefords-Meadow—

Mr. Beatty: Meadowlark.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): —"Lake", I think, I think I must extend the same protection to the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I think that many of us would be pleased if the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake would begin his leadership campaign immediately. It would advance the cause of his Party tremendously from its present position in the Gallup poll.

I would like to speak to the Bill because that is why I originally sought your attention this afternoon. The motion before the House would reduce the amount of authorized capital of the Export Development Corporation from its requested two billion one hundred dollars to one billion one hundred dollars divided into ten million and one shares with a par value of $100 each. The purpose of this is also, in the process, to restrain the total amount of moneys that can be guaranteed by the Export Development Corporation by way of secured loans to $10 billion, roughly speaking, rather than $20 billion. The whole objective of the amendment as put forward by the Progressive Conservative Opposition is to make the Export Development Corporation more responsible and accountable to Parliament and to restrain it in some of the exercises of exuberance which, in fact, in some cases, have not produced a net balance of trade in favour of Canada but, rather, have represented a net cost to the taxpayers of Canada.

I want to use the balance of my time to illustrate my point by referring to one case which I will preface by a recent comment made by Professor Andre Raynaud of the University of Montreal, who said that the Export Development Corporation > —is rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient.

Yesterday I made the point that we must decide whether the Export Development Corporation is to be first and foremost interested in advancing Canada's opportunities around the world, which is an important goal in these difficult economic times, or whether it is to be an instrument of foreign aid. The case I want to use to illustrate what I consider to be the hastiness and secrecy which we in this House sometimes find so repulsive, is one involving the financing of two major projects in Ireland. One involves the construction of an aluminum refinery by Alcan Ireland, and the second involves the opening of a new copper-zinc mine in the country of Ireland by Tara Mines Limited, which is affiliated with Cominco Inc. These two projects were first initiated in 1975 and 1976. In the case of the Alcan smelter, it is just now coming on to line largely because of a number of serious labour problems and delays which have occurred throughout the construction phase.

Therefore, when these two projects were brought to my attention by a constituent back in 1979, I wrote to the President of the Export Development Corporation, Mr. Sylvain Cloutier, to provide more details as to who was the recipient of the Canadian work that was being financed with some $30.6 million in the case of the Alcan project and $30 million in the case of the Tara Mines project. I asked if he would provide an inventory of the Canadian recipients, some idea as to regional distribution in Canada and the benefits to be gained by Canada in relation to the cost of guaranteeing or the risks of guaranteeing this amount of money, some $60 million. I did so because my constituent, who had formerly been a citizen of Ireland, had lost, with his father, the family business because of the labour instability which he had experienced in Ireland.

I will not make a value judgment as to whether Ireland is a more or less secure place in which to invest from the point of view of labour stability than Canada, but I might say, as reflected in a letter which I wrote to Mr. Cloutier in 1980, that under the Trade Union act of Ireland (1906), trade unions in Ireland are immune from any court action being lodged against them for a violation of labour contracts. My constituent, who had lost his business because of some rather nasty problems relating to an attempt to unionize the family business, asked the question as to whether Canada had considered the risk to Canadian capital in seeing it used to finance a major aluminum refinery, in that case, which would, at the same time, present additional competition to our major Alcan smelter at Kittimat in British Columbia and the anticipated expansion of Alcan's activities in Manitoba. My constituent was concerned as to whether the Export Development Corporation had considered that this capital might be at considerable risk because, as his experience at least had shown, many businesses and industries in Ireland had been disrupted by illegal labour walkouts against which there was no defence or recourse before the courts of Ireland.

I do not know if the allegations are true, but I think it is important that we have an opportunity to consider questions of this nature before the House before major amounts of money are put at risk in other nations. More important, I think that we should have an opportunity in each major project of this sort to examine the officials of the Export Development Corporation or the Minister responsible as to the costs and benefits that are entailed in each one of these major undertakings.

Therefore, in my letter to Mr. Cloutier, dated August 21, 1980, I stated: "In view of the ongoing labour strife within the Republic of Ireland", which at that time had already delayed the project by many months, "and in particular the extended labour dispute which has closed the Alcan mining site at Aughnish Island in the County of Limerick, I must put to you the following questions".

These are the questions that I addressed to Mr. Cloutier:

1) What is the total value of all loans which have been extended by EDC to industrial ventures in the Republic of Ireland?

2) Will you provide me with an inventory of all goods and services provided by Canadian firms in relation to these guaranteed loans, and will you also provide me with an unequivocal assurance that all such funds guaranteed by Canada have been used to finance purchases from Canada?

3) Have all repayments been made regularly and in accordance with the original terms of agreement relating to each of these EDC sponsored loans?

● (1630)

I must say that Mr. Cloutier was quite prompt in his reply but he was very superficial in the terms of the nature of the information he gave me. As most Crown corporation presidents do, he gave me the usual gobble-de-gook about what a great institution he was in charge of and about all the great benefits it created for the Canadian people.

However, when it came to answering my questions I received no information other than that Canada had guaranteed loans for a total of $60.6 million and an assurance which I will read from the relevant paragraph. He stated:

I can assure you that EDC closely controls the financing and ensures that payments are made to the Canadian exporter for the goods and services for which financing is made available.

It is rather revealing when Mr. Cloutier continues to state:

In order to respect the commercial confidentiality of the Canadian companies involved, we are unable to provide you with a detailed list of the Canadian suppliers; however, some of the major items supplied to these projects from Canada include grinding mills, compressors, steam generators, filters, instruments, conveyor systems, valves, pumps, electrical equipment, structural steel and engineering and design services.

The President concluded by stating:

I hope this information will be of use to you.

As they usually assure us:

If there is anything further you may wish, I would be glad to hear from you.

The point is that we get absolutely nothing which would be of use to a Member of Parliament in determining whether these guaranteed funds are really being used to enhance the needy industries of Canada. It is all covered up under a cloak of secrecy, using the argument that these corporations must be respected in terms of corporate confidentiality.

While we realize there is a need for corporate confidentiality, I will conclude my remarks by asserting that I think any Crown corporation that is going to do business outside our country with the gratuity of the Canadian taxpayer to facilitate the conduct of that business must be prepared to have many of its financial records and transactions scrutinized by the House. It is not merely a matter of the private domain of competition between one corporation and another. This is a case where public servants do not have to disclose, nor do the Members appointed to the board—some of them from the benches of the Government and the Liberal Party particularly—have to disclose to the House or the Canadian people the basis upon which such decisions are made. They do not have to report to the House on the return of individual products to Canada in terms of jobs created relative to the potential interference with the world competitive market by starting a new industry in other countries.

I believe that it is high time that we made the directors of the Export Development Corporation accountable to the House and that businesses which want to obtain the benefits of this very generous low interest financing had better be prepared to be more forthcoming in telling the Canadian people what they are doing and letting us in Parliament decide with much greater precision whether these investments are well secured on behalf of the people of Canada.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity this afternoon to make a few comments on Bill C-110 which deals with the Export Development Corporation. I will open my remarks by quoting from the excellent statement made earlier this year by one of my colleagues who said, "There are millions of bureaucrats around and they seem to proliferate like mosquitoes in a fever swamp with about the same contribution to human happiness."

The efficiency and quick decision-making of the bureaucracy are legendary to each of us in the House. Nowhere is this more evident than in the case of the Export Development Corporation. Here we have an organization with 613 employees which did business with only 62 exporters. This is approximately ten employees for every single customer. We have all heard of Government inefficiency, but I believe this example is absolutely the tops. It must top all the stories that I have ever heard. Not only did the employees obviously work long hours late into the evening dealing with the massive influx of work from these 62 customers, they probably had to work overtime as well to handle the 900 export insurance policies that they wrote up in the year 1982. What about productivity and efficiency? Apparently these are of no importance.

My colleagues and I are trying to press home to the Minister the fact that there needs to be some kind of monitoring of this situation. The taxpayer is kept ignorant of facts such as these and that is why we keep seeing the Government re-elected and why examples of gross Government inefficiencies are dragging this country down. Strangely enough, the more we seek some kind of monitoring and some kind of controls from this side, the more the Minister singlehandedly rejects our criticism and goes against our stand that only Parliament should have control of the public purse.

I do not wish Members of the House to think that I am against the basic principles of the Export Development Corporation. In fact, there is probably greater consensus among Members of the House on this particular issue than on most issues that we can think of. It is true that we cannot have a healthy economy without a strong export component. All measures taken to facilitate export from Canadian manufacturers have my full support and the full support of our Party. However, there is a fundamental difference in the way that my colleagues and I in the Progressive Conservative Party approach this important issue.

It could be stated this way: when it comes to efficiency, to cost control and to productivity, the private sector, because they are survivors, are infinitely superior to the multitude of non-elected officials who have never had to meet a payroll. What we are seeking is relatively simple. More representatives from private enterprise should be present on the board of directors of the Export Development Corporation. Why is this better? It is so mainly because such people can make hard-nosed decisions to increase the effectiveness of the corporation without fear of losing their jobs. That is important. The number of ministry representatives must be held to a minimum. To give the reason for this, let me reiterate the remarks of my colleague, the Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), who said two days ago, "You really have a contradiction of philosophy if you set something apart from the Ministry while at the same time you have persons who are a part of the Ministry advising that which you set apart." In other words, why create an Export Development Corporation at all? After all, is the object of having Crown corporations not to remove political influences? How can this be done if the board of directors is largely made up of political appointments? It is difficult to remain impartial when it comes to making a decision which might displease the highly placed political person who put someone in his high-paying job.

The Canadian on the street is not a firm believer in the impartiality of the civil servant. Unfortunately, there have been enough incidents involving conflict of interest in the Public Service that most Canadians are wary. This is not to suggest for a moment that there are not public servants who are talented and eminently suited to performing the tasks required as a board member. However, I feel it is necessary to reassure the Canadian taxpayer that his hard earned dollars are being used to advantage, especially in the export market where there are so many pitfalls. I believe there is a long held understanding that bureaucrats by nature build sand castles and empires with excessive staffing and abundant funding from the lining of the taxpayers' pockets. The examples which I mentioned earlier do nothing to dispel this notion. What does a bureaucrat do when he needs more money? He just rings the bell and the public comes running. The private sector person, by contrast, runs a leaner show. He has to, and he requires minimum staffing. As a taxpayer, Mr. Speaker, and representing thousands of taxpayers, I would rather see more directors from the private sector.

● (1640)

I realize that I have belaboured this point, but the Minister needs to realize that I believe thousands of Canadians, perhaps millions, hold similar views, and they are not to be dismissed arbitrarily.

The Export Development Corporation is, in the words of Professor Andre Raynauld of the University of Montreal, words quoted already this afternoon but I want to quote them again:

> —rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient.

These are harsh words, no doubt about it. They are not entirely unfounded. After all, this huge corporation with its offices in many major cities made a whopping $14 million in insurance business for exporters. The tenth largest general insurance company in Canada took in $128 million in premiums last year. The EDC then is just a bit player despite all the hoopla.

What then are the main thrusts of my speech today? First, that any amendments to the Export Development Act be made with the efficient use of the taxpayers' money in mind. Perhaps thought could be given to reduction of staff and elimination of unused office space.

Second, that representatives from the private sector be increasingly prominent on the board of directors and that there be no irrelevant representation. For example, in all fairness, CIDA should not be represented on the board.

Third, that representatives from the Public Service be limited to no more than three. Too many government departments' involvement can only lead to mass confusion, and we have enough of that already.

Fourth, that any appointments from the private sector be free of any taint of political patronage that is overly blatant so that such appointees are not in danger of being characterized as "political hacks."

I am pleased, though, that the Minister responsible has endorsed the idea that more representation from business and industry will be considered. We hope he will act. I trust that the Minister will give due consideration to the points which I have just raised.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of points I want to make in continuing this debate. First, let me say that I support the thrust of the amendment under consideration because it is tackling a real difficulty with the Bill as it is presented to us, namely a difficulty of what we might call actuarial soundness in the proposed capital arrangements upon which EDC lending should be based.

Let me acknowledge, however, that given the kind of inflation to which we have almost grown accustomed in recent years, there may be—and I am sure there are—many cases where capitalization assigned by statute to Crown corporations has not been increased to account for inflation. That is to say, capitalization has been eroded from what was intended in the legislation presently governing Crown corporations.

There could be an argument in some cases for increasing capitalization to keep the power of some Crown corporations in line with what was intended for them. Given the trade figures for the current year, one might think that EDC is one of those corporations with a claim to an increase of its capitalization. In the abstract, I can see some merit to such an argument because I can see the need in the case of certain other Crown corporations, such as the Farm Credit Corporation, for greater lending ability than has been granted to them. One might go further and say that since the Farm Credit Corporation is permitted to lend 25 times its authorized capital and EDC is permitted by statute to lend only ten times its authorized capital, then EDC's claim for an increase in its capital is greater even than Farm Credit's. And yet, Mr. Speaker, it is a question of actuarial soundness that underlies my own reservation about the Bill now before us. The Farm Credit Corporation is told in any given year how much it may borrow in total from the Consolidated Revenue Fund and from capital markets. A part of what it secures from the Consolidated Revenue Fund comes to it as the year's portion of its authorized capital. That is, out of what comes to it, part has to be repaid at a given rate of interest and a much smaller part does not have to be repaid nor is interest charged on it for that is a contribution to the corporation's authorized capital. The Farm Credit Corporation Act sets the ceiling on authorized capital, and each year a portion of this authorized capital is actually contributed to the corporation. The ratio of borrowed to contributed funds is 25 to one. This is much higher a ratio than the ten to one permitted to EDC, but there is a very good reason for the difference. That is, even in bad times such as these, Farm Credit's lending is backed by land, productive land, land from which our food will be coming as long as there are Canadians to eat food. The backing for Farm Credit's lending is therefore very secure.

The same cannot be said for the Export Development Corporation. Its whole reason for existing is that private companies manufacturing in Canada are not financially powerful enough to shoulder the risk of exporting into foreign markets beyond the reach of Canadian courts and Canadian law. Left to their own devices, many and probably most Canadian manufacturers would not be able to export because the business risk of exporting with the attendant uncertainty about payment would be an unacceptable risk. EDC exists because it is considered—and properly so—to be in Canada's interest, that is, in the public Canadian interest to export abroad. EDC exists because it is necessary for it to exist in order to secure that public benefit. It is a state run insurance scheme.

Now there is much to be said for certain kinds of state run insurance schemes, although there is also much to be said against them. We on this side of the House have spent considerable time on Tuesday arguing the dangers of Civil Service control of the board of EDC, with the associated conflict of interest that can result from attempting to realize the aims of the Corporation and also other unrelated aims of the Government which those civil servants serve and to which they are answerable. That is one danger. There is another danger, the danger of thinking that because EDC is a Crown corporation, it can be backed by the whole wealth of Canada. That is patently false. All actuarially based systems are based on calculated risks. Actuarial soundness means matching risk to statistical experience. It also means having a margin to play with if your statistical experience is proved false by new experience.

Lloyd's of London offers a perfect example of how this works in practice. Its insurance rates are set competitively, but upon the basis of known losses in the past. A year of great disasters may throw off the statistical averages and cause Lloyd's to lose a great deal of money. But Lloyd's is backed not simply by the premiums it holds on hand against losses but by the entire wealth of its partners. It is probably statistically possible for Lloyd's to go bankrupt in any given year, leaving the company bone dry and all its backers utterly ruined. But because it is actuarially sound, the company is very unlikely to suffer such a fate.

Well, Canada should not be in any danger of going bankrupt either, yet the Government of Canada backs our chartered banks to the hilt. It also backs its own agencies to the hilt. How many times can the risks backed by the Treasury of Canada be spread out and increased and multiplied before there is a question of actuarial soundness to face? This year, if I recall figures that have been generally quoted, there may be as much as $500 billion in questionable loans made to governments around the world, perhaps $800 billion. The point is that there is a good deal of risky business shared by western banks and western governments in the world. Canada, both through its private banks which secure their funds from Canadian citizens and through its Government, which backs the banks, has shouldered a considerable share of the risky business in the world. Because of the recession, there is also a great deal of international competition for the business available in the world and a temptation to get a good share of that business, even at the cost of offering easy and risky credit.

● (1650)

I would like to know that the Canadian Government is not extending its risks unduly in a time of recession, building up EDC as an instrument for concessionary credit and increasing its world-wide exposure at this time of financial uncertainty.

Therefore, I find myself in agreement with the amendment proposed by my colleague for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and urge Members to consider carefully whether we as a Parliament have either the information or the actuarial reasons to authorize the increase in capitalization sought by the Government.I say no, and I urge support for the amendment now under consideration.

Export Development Act

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the amendment concerning the lessening of capitalization of the Export Development Corporation put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), I would like to say at the outset that my concern and the concern of Members on this side of the House in general, and I think it is the principal concern, is the accountability of this Government to Parliament, or rather the lack of it. It is not the principle of EDC but its accountability. The people of Canada by poll do not trust this Government or its leader.

Bill C-110 as proposed empowers the Governor in Council, which we all know means the Leader of the Liberal Party, to appoint the chairman and board of directors to the Export Development Corporation. Having been appointed, this group of bureaucrats then reports directly and only to the Minister of Finance for approval to borrow money and to buy and sell bonds, not to this House of elected representatives who are the watchdog of the public purse. Not since the fedual barons were called by the King to extract tribute have we had a government which has bypassed the parliamentary system in this manner.

Under this arrangement, the Government of Canada is able to make decisions regarding export transactions and can appropriate money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to do so, all without any regard to the wishes of this House. Can we trust this Government to make the best possible deals and to do so in the most efficient way? Only 28 per cent of Canadians by poll have that faith, but we on this side of the House have a great concern that this Government, with its dismal record of organization, would have trouble regulating a two-car funeral, which would probably end up costing ten times what it should, and even then it would shy away from accounting to Parliament.

Mr. Beatty: They would lose the corpse.

Mr. Stewart: My colleague says they would lose the corpse. I will admit that this Government is adept when it comes to skirting Parliament, but in most other regards, it is less than efficient. What about the EDC? As has been pointed out by some of my colleagues, it has more employees than customers. I thought corporations were bad when they had half as many. In 1982 the corporation dealt on loan account with 62 exporters, one customer for every ten employees. The corporation also deals with insurance. There are 1.5 insurance policies for every employee. That is the epitome of Liberal efficiency.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has a different definition of efficiency than I do. That is not surprising since my experience has been in the business world while his preoccupation has been with non-economic matters such as the Constitution, bilingualism and Canagrex, which is nothing more than state control of agriculture, as well as a host of other Crown corporations which have drained the national Treasury while in the process having achieved the objective of, as I have always termed it, taking the national strictly down the slippery slope of socialism. My hope is that we have not arrived there already.

Another concern that I have is with the number and type of companies that are receiving assistance. When the EDC subsidizes the operations of INCO in Guatamela and Indonesia, it results in a loss of jobs in Sudbury. The EDC finances forest development in Poland, Iran and Peru while the forest industry in British Columbia languishes. We have seen the amount of respect the Prime Minister has shown to residents of that Province, particularly those in Salmon Arm.

By financing these types of operations, which by the way is concessionary financing that is certainly unavailable to domestic purchasers, the EDC is in effect supplying a form of foreign aid through the back door and without parliamentary approval. How many times have Members on this side stood up in dismay about what has gone on in CIDA, and those who sit on its board? Does New York need our foreign aid? The Algerians have certainly put it to good use with its phallic symbolized monument.

What we would like to see in this Bill and in numerous others is increased accountability, not less, and decreased capitalization, not more. We want to see the Government accountable to the Members of this House. Do we trust a Prime Minister who appoints a Privy Councillor for life without checking his credentials any more than we trust what is going on in EDC? How many more Liberal skeletons are rattling in the closet?

Will the operations of the EDC be audited by the Auditor General? No. The bureaucrats will continue to answer to the Liberal Cabinet. We would like to see increased participation by the private sector in the affairs of the EDC. Not only would we like to see no more than three bureaucrats on its board of directors, but we would like to see encouragement given to private sector financial institutions, such as the Schedule B banks, to fill the needs of Canadian exporters who find themselves disadvantaged in terms of export trade financing. There is nothing like free enterprise, and in many ways the EDC circumvents and skirts that.

We have a corporation that has transactions with but 62 companies on loan account, yet has offices in all the major centres in Canada. Surely this state of affairs is unjustified. As it is now, Parliament is unable to control further inefficiency and unnecessary growth. There is absolutely no accountability.

Canadians have become increasingly subjected to government by Order in Council and have been overwhelmed by Crown corporations, the instruments of the Prime Minister's socialist policies, policies that deepen an already severe recession from which Canadians are just now beginning to recover. This is not surprising when you consider that under the proposed legislation, the EDC will be able to borrow as much as $20 billion without so much as acknowledging the existence of Parliament.

The National Citizens' Coalition in its recent publication called for an end to socialism. It advocates the disbanding or selling of the country's more than 400 Crown corporations and the restoration of responsible control over the public purse and Government spending. That is exactly what Members on this side advocate. Such action would do more to reduce the crippling national debt and promote economic recovery than any six and five program could ever do.

The inefficiencies and unaccountability of the EDC exemplify all that is wrong with this Government today. In fact, the EDC often shows about as much initiative in collecting credit information about prospective clients as does the Prime Minister in picking and screening Members of the Cabinet, the body that monitors the activities of Crown corporations. For that reason, and the facts mentioned by my colleague who spoke before me, I applaud any move to restore accountability and to streamline the operations of any Crown corporation. I have no trouble supporting the amendments of my colleague from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Freedom of Information—MacBride Commission report. (b) Government policy; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Garrison Diversion—United States contract to construct Lonetree Dam. (b) Non-consultation between governments; the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes)—Education—Content of school manuals. (b) Funding sought for English textbooks.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and Motions No. 3 and 5 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak again to Bill C-113, on this occasion to amendment No. 3 put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). It would have the effect of restricting the authorized capital of the Export Development Corporation to some $1 billion. In fact, it will keep it at the present level instead of doubling that level as proposed by the Government in the Bill it has put forward.

● (1700)

It is perhaps distracting for Government Members to have to listen to this debate. Maybe they thought that Bill C-110 was a piece of routine legislation that would be passed very quickly because there was nothing unusual or untoward contained therein. However, that is not the fact. The legislation that has been brought before us contains some very important principles, and I think it is important that the matter be debated at some length and that the principles involved be fully expounded.

The importance of the requested increase in capitalization is not that the amount of stock in the corporation will be doubled. That is simply a routine bookkeeping matter. What is important is the leverage involved because the amount of money that the corporation can borrow and lend and the volume of insurance business in which it can engage are tied to the capitalization by a factor of some ten to one.

The first reason we object to the proposal put forward by the Government is that we have had it on good authority today from none other than the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) that the volume of outstanding loans is somewhat less than $5 billion; less than half of those authorized with the present capitalization of $10 billion. The Government can double its volume of business without having to come back to Parliament.

So often we have seen the Government come back to ask for more money without any real need for that money. The money is something that it may or may not need in the years to come. I would suspect that what has happened here is that when Government Members were making certain changes to the Export Development Act, they said that they would throw this in at the same time just in case they need it ten years down the road, at which time they will not have to go back to Parliament. That, Sir, is not good enough.

The main reason why we object to the increase in the authorized capitalization and the increase of the ability of this Crown corporation to make loans and engage in the insurance business is that, as has admittedly been said before, it will remove parliamentary control over that Crown corporation. All accountability to the House and to the citizens and taxpayers of Canada will be lost until such time as the volume of business expands and Government Members will again have to come back to the House. Parliamentary control will be lost for a period of ten years in all probability.

The Government is asking for carte blanche authority to double the volume of business of the Crown corporation. In effect, Sir, it is asking for a blank cheque of some $20 billion. When trying to explain what that amount of money means, Members of the House have often described how far that amount of money would stretch if it were in dollar bills and put end to end. They have said that it would stretch from here to eternity and back again 16 times. I believe that we must look at that amount of money in terms that we can understand. It is about a third of the public revenue of Canada.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) estimated that the deficit this year will be some $30 billion, so this is a significant portion of the estimated deficit for this fiscal year. In round terms, it is perhaps about a quarter of the entire public expenditure of the Government of Canada. We are looking at an awful lot of money. Quite frankly, Sir, I do not trust the Government with that amount of taxpayers' money. I would like to see it come back to Parliament from time to time to explain its proposals for how it will use that amount of money.

There is a board of directors for the corporation in place and the Government plans to appoint more members to that board. Undoubtedly, the majority of the members of this board of directors, if not all of them, will be competent people in their own right and will try to do what, to their way of thinking, is the best thing to do to protect the interests of the Canadian taxpayers who foot the bill or might eventually become liable. However, we must remember that everyone is human and can make mistakes from time to time. In the case of the Export Development Corporation, even if the members of the board of directors used their discretion to say that this piece of business is something they could not engage in, the Ministers involved could override them. I believe that there is considerable potential for abuse within the Export Development Corporation unless from time to time it has to come back to the House or committees thereof to explain its need for funds.

There are different types of abuse that could occur. Probably the abuse least likely to occur is the handing over of money or the making of guarantees to somebody who happens to support a particular political Party, undoubtedly the Party in office at that time, or that business would be transacted because of personal friendships or the like. That type of abuse has not been completely unknown in the past, but I do not think that that is the main area of potential abuse.

I will give you an example, Mr. Speaker, of the type of abuse that I am worried about which I think is likely to happen and would occur when the Government would like to hide mistakes. Say, for instance, there was an aircraft corporation that was getting itself into severe difficulties. It had been in difficulties before and it did not want to come back and publicly ask for more money because there was an election to be conducted in the near future. It would be very embarrassing to have this corporation bailed out once more by the Government with the full glare of publicity upon it. What could happen is that moneys could be made available through the Export Development Corporation. A deal could be made with some countries to sell these aircraft at fire sale prices and the balance would be picked up through the Export Development Corporation. The Government would be buying time over the election period in all probability. That is the type of abuse that, in my opinion, is most likely to occur.

If we look at the past practices of the corporation, we will see that it has tended to concentrate on large loans to large corporations rather than on a number of smaller loans to a number of smaller businesses. I would prefer to see it the other way around. I believe that if the corporation had to explain to a parliamentary committee what it was doing once every few months, we might see a greater emphasis put on the making of a larger number of loans to smaller businesses. That is the area in which the Export Development Corporation could best use the funds that it has available. A large corporation which has done a lot of export business in the past should have established means of financing its business. That financing is much more difficult for a new company to obtain.

I could go on a great deal longer, and in fact I intend to do so the next time this matter comes up for debate, Mr. Speaker. I believe that it is well worthwhile putting some of these fears on the record.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, and amendments 3 and 5 as moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Motion No. 3 calls for a reduction of the authorized capital of the corporation from $2 billion to $1,000,000,100. I submit that this is a step in the right direction, as is Motion No. 5 which seeks to curtail the borrowing authority.

● (1710)

On this side of the House we are very much concerned about this Bill. We believe that Parliament, and Parliament alone, should have control over the public purse. I say this because of our fear of what is happening to the finances of Canada.

When I served as Chairman of the Public Accounts Comittee I remember that Canada's Auditor General—at that time the late Mr. James Macdonell—stated in his 1975 report that "the Government has lost or is close to losing control of the public purse." Massive deficits year after year showing expenditures greatly in excess of income served to buttress Mr. Macdonell's comments. His successor, Mr. Kenneth Dye, has made similar comments in his report.

In the Bill before us there is another expansion of Crown corporations and the Public Service of Canada. On the one hand, the Government talks about restraint, yet this Bill proposes, in its explanatory notes, to increase the number of members of the board of directors from 12 to 15. It is this kind of what I call left-handed restraint, multiplied over and over throughout Government, which is bringing this Government and this country to its knees.

I grant that someone should be on the board from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, from the Department of Finance and certainly from the Department of External Affairs, but I see no reason why the other board members should not be appointed from private industry. In my view the total number of members should be 12, not 15. After all, this is supposed to be an Export Development Corporation, and who knows better than the directors of private companies that Canada must increase its exports or die, economically. If anyone doubts that statement I would ask them to speak to the management personnel of Atlantic Canada's fishing industry today where Canada's high costs—the result of the mismanagement of the economy—is making it extremely difficult for Canadian fish exporters to compete against the fish exports to the United States from Denmark and Norway.

Private businessmen know what we are facing because they have taken knocks in the marketplace. Unfortunately, that same statement cannot be made of the people who have come up through the ranks of the Public Service and who have grown up through Ottawa's bureaucracy.

This corporation simply cannot be all things to all people. Its job should be to expedite the sale of Canadian products by ensuring receivables and assisting, and only where absolutely necessary, the financing of those sales. If the chairman came from the private sector then, in my opinion, there would be better control over the real objectives of the Crown corporation such as I have outlined.

Should the Bill be implemented as proposed, then I submit this Parliament will have lost control over its finances. I say this because it is an obvious fact. Whenever the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) concurs in a recommendation from the board, the Government can automatically contribute capital to the corporation. What is happening here is that the Government simply puts up the money, while there is no parliamentary control over the amount or where it is to be spent.

If the proposed amendments to the Act now before the House are carried—and Motions Nos. 3 and 5 are defeated—then Parliament, in effect, gives the Minister of Finance carte blanche to subscribe to the capital of the Corporation without any debate in Parliament. Furthermore, the Export Development Corporation, whether it receives money from the Government or not, has the right to borrow on the credit of Canada to the extent of $20 billion.

Even more serious than that, if these amendments are passed, Mr. Speaker, will be the Government's right to approve up to $10 billion for unacceptable loans. This type of executive power brings to mind other unauthorized Government loans without the approval of Parliament, such as those made to Maislin, Canadair, de Havilland and Petro-Canada, to name a few.

As a result of the proliferation of Crown corporations and an extension of their powers, it is estimated that governments now control, directly or indirectly, at least one-quarter of the reproducible capital stock of the Canadian economy. Publicly owned firms lack the flexibility to achieve maximization of resource utilization under their control. They also lack specialization in managerial input as well as in risk-taking. Greater difficulties are also experienced in controlling public officials charged with monitoring public entities. Studies have indicated that production efficiency contraints are far more effective in private firms.

This is only one of the big worries in Atlantic Canada today. I suppose it is one of the big ones ever since July 4 when the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) announced his unilateral federal plan to form one large Newfoundland company by pumping in some $75 million in federal cash, plus a debt conversion of $80 million in Bank of Nova Scotia equity. The resulting company would be about 80 per cent federally owned as the Canada Development Corporation—another Crown corporation which is 48 per cent federally owned—has 40 per cent ownership of Fishery Products. It is a great mish-mash, Mr. Speaker. The new company would own 16 fish plants and 65 fishing trawlers. Even Liberal Members are worried about this move, as was evidenced by the question asked in this House by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell).

Privately owned companies are asking how the Government will ensure that the new nationalized Newfoundland company will not compete unfairly with private firms in Atlantic Canada. An even bigger worry is that the Government has not given any assurance that the Newfoundland fishery will never become a Crown corporation or that it will never be operated by another Crown corporation, the Canada Development Investment Corporation. Given the Government's propensity for nationalizing and socializing Canadian industry and for establishing unlimited, unbridled and uncontrolled Crown corporations, I submit that anything can happen.

I ask the Government to consider carefully its amendments to the Export Development Act before it proceeds with this expansion in what has been called a bureaucratic monster. Borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, it is extending its tentacles and its empire into an operation that I submit is both costly and inefficient.

This corporation was organized, in the first place, to ensure export transactions. That was the basic motive. It confirmed the credit worthiness of foreign customers to the producers and guaranteed to resolve payments from foreign countries which might be held up because of political interference. In my view this is the most important business the corporation can do, and it should simply continue doing those things for which it is best equipped.

Finally, Sir, if the Bill is approved it will be interesting to see the type of bureaucratic extension that will take place. At the present time the Export Development Corporation maintains classy offices in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax and a head office in Ottawa. The corporation has 613 employees at present. That is almost 10 employees for each separate loan customer or 1.5 employees for each insurance account. This gives some idea of the lack of productivity of the corporation. No wonder we are deeply in hock as a nation.

In many aspects this corporation is a classic example of Canadian bureaucracy gone wild. From that point of view alone, its operations should be placed on a checkrein.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley).

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today Madam Speaker referred to this riding as Fraser Valley East. It is nice to get it straight. At least now I know where I come from.

• (1720)

Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to stand again and speak to this Bill. Yesterday we debated Motion No. 1. presented by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and today we are debating Motion Nos. 3 and 5. Ironically, Motion No. 4 was ruled out of order, or not in order. I make no comment on the Speaker's ruling because the main motion did not involve an amendment or that section in particular. With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I am going to discuss in terms of Motions Nos. 3 and 5 the relevant section in the Bill, not an amendment to the section, because it is critical to understanding why our feelings are so strong about Motions Nos. 3 and 5.

Perhaps it would be appropriate, in terms of discussing what is essentially a dry subject, to try to put some face on the numbers which are involved. If one reads the annual report of the Export Development Corporation one will find the following paragraph, which is useful to the argument today, Mr. Speaker. It reads:

> Retained earnings, thus, accounted for $186.1 million of shareholder's equity at the close of 1982. The Government of Canada increased its paid-in share capital during the year by $115.0 million bringing that total to $465.0 million. Accordingly, total shareholder's equity at the end of the year was $651.1 million which maintained the debt to equity ratio of approximately 7:1 which has prevailed for some time.

I make that reference, Mr. Speaker, because I believe it is important to understanding this Bill, exactly what powers lie in the hands of the Minister and what powers lie in the hands of the Export Development Corporation, given where it stands. The law, as it is now, creates an authorized capital for the corporation of a billion dollars. The law, as it is now, creates borrowing approval for the authority of a multiple of ten times that authorized capital. This means that the corporation could today be borrowing up to $10 billion. As it stands today, the paid-in equity by the Government of Canada, indicated by the corporation itself, is $465 million, in other words, less than half the authorized capital already in the law. The borrowings of the corporation, Mr. Speaker, are less than $5 billion as compared to the authorized potential under the existing law of $10 billion.

The corporation itself in the paragraph I read, Mr. Speaker, indicated it is proud and likes the ratio of 7 to 1. It therefore seems quite clear to me, and should be clear to anyone in this Chamber, that the first question one must ask, when we are being asked to increase numbers, is, "Really, do you need the increases?" Corporations' net borrowings, Mr. Speaker, are growing at a rate of less than $1 billion a year. The Government of Canada's potential for putting in more equity still remains at something like $535 million. In other words, there is at least five years more growth of business available to the corporation, as it stands today, without an amendment, without any of the Government's amendments. That, Mr. Speaker, in the face of the section which allows all that borrowing and all that paying up of the capital—and this is the section to which I referred earlier—all of that, is to be done by the Minister in absolute secrecy, without ever coming before Parliament, either for approval of the additional paying of the capital or without any approval for the increased borrowing.

That is why Hon. Members on this side feel so strongly about the debate which is currently taking place. Anyone, I believe, would understand that if the corporation were coming before Parliament annually for the money it takes from the taxpayers through the Governor in Council, and the liabilities it imposes on the taxpayers of Canada through its borrowing, and was saying, "Here is what our track record is. Here is what we did last year on those things, and here is what we are going to do this year on those things", the way departments do, we might have more sympathy for a request for more than when we have no way of knowing until well after the fact what has been done and what liabilities have been incurred on our behalf.

Add to that secrecy the fact that what is already in the law allows the corporation to do twice what it does, it is difficult I suggest, Mr. Speaker, to understand why a further expansion of that authority to use public money and to borrow with public backing in secret, relatively, is necessary or appropriate. The Bill which is before us proposes in the name of the Government that that billion dollars of authorized capital be increased to $2 billion, which has the effect of allowing the total in borrowings to go up to $20 billion—and I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the borrowings currently stand at roughly $5 billion—and continues the practice of allowing the Governor in Council to pay up that working capital, if necessary, in the Government's view, without ever coming before us. So you have a situation at the moment whereby the corporation has the potential for an additional borrowing of over $5 billion without a change in the law, and an additional $500 million without our ever knowing about it. Yet we are being asked to increase the potential borrowing beyond what is currently borrowed by $15 billion and increase the potential for investment of capital by $1.5 billion without ever coming to us.

Mr. Lapierre: It is planning.

Mr. Bosley: The Hon. Member opposite, Mr. Speaker, says, "It is planning."

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What devious plans are those?

Mr. Bosley: Hon. Members on this side, Mr. Speaker, wonder, given the track record of this Government in terms of what the Hon. Member opposite would refer to as "planned" interventions in the Canadian economy and elsewhere, whether in fact it is not now time, simply put, to say Parliament ought to be returned to the position of knowing before the money is spent or approved. Perhaps that way we would avoid some of the fiascos which we get into because not enough people know early enough. Someone else in the system, because he or she does not have to come to Parliament to get approval, says, "Let's do this", and someone else says, "Fine. We have not a lot of time in Cabinet. Approve it by Order in Council." The examples of that are legion.

I do not know how long we are going to have to debate the principle of this. In fact, the tragedy is that we have to debate the principle that Parliament ought to know before the money is spent. It must surely be ironic to people in the galleries, or people watching, Mr. Speaker, or to anyone who follows parliamentary debate it must be incredible, that the Government has the capacity to increase the debt, the contingent liability of Canadians, by $15 billion, as is proposed in this Bill, without ever coming to Parliament for authority to do it.

Canadians understand that governments spend money. Canadians understand that governments raise money. Canadians understand that every year there is a budgetary process of some sort, as weak as it is.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): It varies.

Mr. Bosley: Yes, the credibility of that process varies. It seems to be declining, I should say, Mr. Speaker, in the current context of government. However, at least there is some presentation to Parliament of numbers, even if in many cases Parliament never gets to vote on those numbers because they are Estimates which are referred to committees and are adopted whether they come back here or not. At least there is the presence of some semblance by the current Government of parliamentary authority over spending. In this case it is stunning, at the very least, for the Government to ask Parliament to double the potential borrowings and the potential gifts by the Government to the board of the corporation for investment. None of us have any objection to export financing. It is important. But to be asked to double the authority when only half the existing authority has been used—only half, according to the Department's own figures—when the rate of take-up of those authorities is about 10 per cent of the authority per year, when in fact there is apparently five years of authorities left, is surely beyond credibility, that the Government expects the House to sit still and take this Bill.

The Government so far, Mr. Speaker, appears to be unwilling to concede on any of the amendments moved by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, any of them, and it is important to take all the amendments as a package in order to try to begin even the semblance of some parliamentary control over funds expended on behalf of the people of Canada to improve our exports. Every Canadian wants to improve those exports. Surely Hon. Members in the Government party, Mr. Speaker, understand that it is equally important for Canadians that they get a chance to see how their funds are expended, since they are their funds, directly and indirectly, in order to help those exports. Surely that is the principle on which Parliament was founded, and surely Members opposite can come to their senses pretty quickly on this point, Mr. Speaker.

● (1730)

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, we have been debating this Bill and the amendments for the last few days and I guess the Members opposite, if they have been listening at all to what we have had to say, know that we feel very strongly about the thrust of Bill C-110. It really does not have to do with trade, as everyone knows. In spite of the fact that our friends from the NDP would have the public believe that because we are opposed to Bill C-110, we are not in favour of trade, Bill C-110 does not have to do with trade at all. However, it has everything to do with fiscal responsibility and the lack of accountability to Parliament and the role of directors of Crown corporations. That is really the issue here.

There is no one in this Chamber who does not believe that Canada has to have trade. We live or die by trade. Over one third of our gross national product comes from trade, and everyone in this Chamber knows that the EDC has done a pretty good job of promoting trade in Canada. That is not the issue, Mr. Speaker. The issue is fiscal responsibility, accountability to Parliament and the people of Canada, the taxpayers, and the role directors should play in Crown corporations. That is what we are talking about when we debate this Bill and that is why we have taken such a very strong stand against this Bill.

When you talk about fiscal responsibility and the Liberal Government, it reminds me of kids in a candy store. We will have a little bit of this candy and a little bit of that candy. Is there any sense of priority at all? The Liberals can be all things to everyone in spending money as long as it is not theirs. What is a couple of billion dollars on Canadair? Nothing very serious. Or $500 million for de Havilland? A paltry $125 million lost on Consolidated Computer. The Liberal Government did not even come before Parliament with Consolidated Computer. The Minister responsible did not even know that it existed let alone that it lost $125 million. Then there is VIA Rail, $700 million. Just a drop in the bucket. Then the grandaddy of them all, PetroCan, $7 billion. But we should not worry, it is ours. However, what I would like my fellow Canadians to know is that the $30 billion deficit this Government has created is also ours. That is ours, as well as PetroCan.

To come back to the point, the public knows that there is something terribly wrong with the administration of Crown corporations in Canada, and that is what we are talking about in Bill C-110 this afternoon. They know there is a lack of fiscal responsibility, and this is why I find it incredibly difficult to understand the view of the Minister. He stood up the other day and said, yes, he agrees with a great deal of what has been said. He agrees that there should probably be a greater representation from the private sector on the board of directors, and he agrees that there should be a greater element of accountability to Parliament. But does he do anything about it? Nothing, absolutely nothing. He just stonewalls us.

There is no willingness to amend this legislation. The Liberals have no intention of amending this Bill so that the EDC will be accountable to Parliament. After all, why should it be accountable to Parliament? What is Parliament? Why should the Government be accountable to an ordinary bunch of Parliamentarians? It is a lot easier for them with their majority to trample all over the Parliamentarians, and that is what the Liberals are going to do on this Bill as sure as we are sitting here. This Government does not care, it simply does not care. It will not hold itself accountable to the Canadian people except at one time, that is, election time.

Here is a Bill before us which increases the ability of the corporation to go out on behalf of the Canadian taxpayer and borrow or put at risk $60 billion. Good grief! It is staggering. The Liberals say, "We will look after your best interests, folks. You need not worry. The Liberals are at the helm. Not to fear, we will protect you. We will spend that $60 billion and we do not need to bother coming back to Parliament and ask an ordinary bunch of Parliamentarians what it is all about. The people of Canada, they are not entitled to know anything. Why should they know? After all, it is only their money."

What we have in so many of these Crown corporations is what I guess you would call a linear type of relationship. The Crown corporation reports to the Government and then the Government, in a sort of half baked way, reports to Parliament. It is a straight line: Crown corporation to Government to Parliament. But what gets reported to Parliament really and truly? The Hon. Member opposite smiles, Mr. Speaker. He knows what gets to Parliament: zilch. The only time anything comes before Parliament is after the fact, after we have lost $125 million on Consolidated Computer, after we have spent $700 million on VIA Rail, after we have lost $2 billion on Canadair.

These are small embarrassments to the Government, but if it were sincerely interested in having this institution of Parliament function in a responsible way, it would include Parliament in the decision-making process. Instead of a linear relationship, we would have a triangular relationship where Government and Parliament were equal partners together with the Crown corporations in achieving the given objectives and mandate they have. That is a concept and philosophy which is completely foreign to the other side, I know, because they fundamentally do not believe in this institution. They do not believe they should be held accountable to Parliament regarding the money they spend.

Did they ever come before Parliament and present a financial plan for any corporation to let the Canadian people understand what is going on? Oh, no! They say, "We have to so confuse the issue as not to disclose the real facts about what happens in these Crown corporations. To do so might create some public debate. It might cause some real, true concern with the Canadian people. They might start to react to some of these enormous losses. Therefore, the picture is to be clouded." Oh, people will be told what happens after the event. However, the Government will never really come clean and tell them what its plans are for the future.

● (1740)

Therefore, what this Bill is about and what our amendments are about has everything to do with fiscal responsibility, accountability to Parliament, and the role of directors in Crown corporations and their responsibility to the people of Canada. That is what we are fighting about, and that is why we will not support Bill C-110. Gentlemen, you will have to trample on us with your majority.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to follow my colleague from Calgary who has done such an excellent and thoughtful job of presenting our concerns with Bill C-110. As he has very clearly said today, our concern is that Parliament be allowed to participate in decisions that affect Canadian people. Those are the nuts and bolts of the whole debate. That is what we are trying to address and discuss today. We on this side of the House feel that that is absolutely essential.

We are not, as such, discussing the Export Development Corporation, even though that is the legislation with which we are dealing. We are discussing the principles surrounding that particular corporation and what the Bill is trying to accomplish. We are not questioning the value of exports to Canada. Certainly, no one would understand that more than someone like myself who represents an agricultural riding where exports are important, an area where we depend on exports of grain, beef, various agricultural products and on exports of natural gas and oil, all of those things that make our economy what it is, including the lumber industry.

We understand the values of exporting. We understand the importance of that particular industry and goal, I guess one could call it, in terms of my particular riding. However, we are very concerned that Parliament, meaning both sides of the House, be allowed to have some input, some opportunity to consider and discuss something that we feel is very important to the Canadian taxpayer.

Essentially, what is being questioned at this time is Parliament. We as individual Members of Parliament are being questioned as to our ability to protect the interest of those people whom we represent from coast to coast or, as the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) would say, "from sea to sea to sea". We are being requested to stop and look at how the taxpayer's money is being spent, to consider whether it is being spent wisely. We are also looking to the accountability of the Civil Service, employees of Crown corporations. That is another group which must respond to the taxpayers of the country because it is spending the taxpayers' money. Ultimately, it comes down to ourselves as Parliamentarians because we must carry the responsibility for it. Even though it is slightly removed from Parliament, it is still a very important issue and one for which we must take responsibility. Therefore, we on this side of the House attach great importance to Bill C-110 and the amendments that we put forward today.

Something that happened over the summer made me realize the importance of how we approach and handle the entire issue. A poll indicated that a very large number of Canadians did not feel that Parliamentarians were representing them or protecting their interests. As a Member of the House I had to stop and think about the implications, the significance. So often we on this side of the House feel extremely frustrated simply because we cannot get at the information we need from the opposite side of the House, whether it be concerning a Crown corporation, a department or a particular ministry. We have that frustration and it is no wonder that the Canadian people who are sitting out there without the day to day exposure that we have in this Chamber are frustrated and feel that this place is not responding to their particular needs. We can only respond to their needs when we as Parliamentarians, collectively, have the power to do something about it or to react to a given situation concerning the taxpayers' dollars. That is why Bill C-110 is so important.

In Clause 5 of the Bill to be amended, Section 11(1) presently reads as follows:

The authorized capital of the Corporation is two billion dollars, divided into 20,000,000 shares of the par value of one hundred dollars each.

The amendment which has been brought forward by my colleague would change Section 11(1) to read as follows:

The authorized capital of the Corporation is one billion one hundred dollars, divided into ten million and one shares with a par value of one hundred dollars each.

It is really simple when one considers it. It is a system of mathematics. Essentially, as the Bill now reads, we are looking at 20 million shares and two billion dollars. The amendment suggests one billion dollars and ten million and one shares. Therefore, it has all been cut in half. That does not seem too significant when one speaks in terms of the one billion dollars versus the two billion dollars, but when one considers the multiplier factor which the Bill in fact represents, one discovers that the one billion dollars turns into ten billion dollars, and were it to sit as it presently does in this Clause of Bill C-110, it would mean 20 billion dollars. Therefore, we are trying to call that particular Crown corporation, the Export Development Corporation, to a little more accountability by this Chamber and by the Members and people who work and have interest in what goes on in this particular institution. Therefore, the amendment becomes very significant. We are trying to prevent the Export Development Corporation from increasing its capital at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers without debate or any form of presentation to the House where we as Parliamentarians might have an opportunity to respond.

In a sense, by pulling it back and creating this debate, we will accomplish more than just holding that responsibility, holding that Crown corporation to some sense of obligation to this place. We will also be increasing the public awareness of the activity of the EDC, and that is significant in and of itself because Canadians need to know what is going on. Information is a very valuable tool and we can only have such information when Parliament starts to become involved with and respond to given activities.

We hope that our amendments put forward here today will prevent abuses involving the expenditure of public funds. The amendments would increase the ability of Parliament to control or at least have some say in the activities of the Corporation as to what it does with taxpayers' money. That is very important because today the EDC is involved in some fairly risky areas. It carries on much activity in the Third World. Of course, there are financial difficulties there. I understand that allowance has had to be made for rescheduling payments with regard to a significant number of the loans, totalling in the neighbourhood of $128 million since 1980. I understand the present principal and interest of $66 million or a little better is overdue, according to the last annual report, so it is becoming more and more significant. I suggest that $66 million of overdue principal and interest should be of interest to the Canadian people and they should have some opportunity to discuss it, have some input and an opportunity to think about the implications of what has been happening to their money.

• (1750)

A major concern to us as Parliamentarians is that public funds are being used. We therefore believe that the public should have some opportunity for input and that these decisions should not be made by bureaucrats behind closed doors but should very much involve this place.

I see that my time has expired. I have several more comments I would like to make but I simply want to end by saying that we feel that this Bill affects all Canadians. The principle of exposure, ideas and discussion of what is happening is fundamental to this institution. Only with that proper discussion can we as Parliamentarians begin to have a purpose and genuine function throughout the country.

Mr. John Kushner (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words with regard to this Bill. I am very disappointed at the Government's attempt to double its authority from $10 billion to $20 billion. As well, it is passing on the responsibility for this expenditure to the bureaucrats rather than to Members of Parliament to perform their elected duties.

I am greatly worried by the attitude of the EDC. It is more concerned about assisting foreign countries than the Canadian people since the money it spends to assist Canadian businesses in foreign countries is a great expense to the average Canadian taxpayer today. We must sometimes question whether this Crown corporation is actually assisting more foreign countries who are our enemies than those who are our friends. I suggest that it is dangerous to give the Crown corporation a further blank cheque in addition to the money it already has.

A good example of how Crown corporations act can be seen with Petro-Canada in Calgary. It constructed a 50-storey building in Calgary, most of which has been leased far below its cost. In fact, it has effectively hurt commercial businesses in Calgary which have built accommodation for the needs of commercial business in that area. I can only conclude that the Government is completely losing control and is no longer governing the country by giving the bureaucrats the authority. In doing so it is destroying free enterprise in the private sector. It is difficult to determine how many Crown corporations there really are. Investors, along with the business community and Canadians generally, have lost confidence in the Government.

In order to get the country rolling again we must restore that confidence in the business community. This can only be done through a change in Government, and the sooner it does so the better for every Canadian.

We are faced with a very serious situation of businesses going bankrupt. It will take a long time before businesses can be restores, and while many say the economy is improving, I must question where this is happening. If it does in fact revive, it will take time to get the country going again. The backbone of this country, the farmer, has practically been destroyed. It is a shame that we have allowed the agricultural community to deteriorate.

I have no doubt that the Government is completely out of touch with the realities of this nation and has gone completely out of control. There are over two million unemployed Canadians at this time for whom there is not much hope. In the meantime we are addressing ourselves more to foreign trade for which this Crown corporation is a trough to Liberal cronies. That is not necessarily my opinion but a matter of record. It is one of the reasons why this mismanagement cannot be tolerated any further.

This Government continues to pass on its responsibilities in the democratic process as the elected watchdog in this country and gives more power to the bureaucrats than to those of us who have been elected to scrutinize the expenditure of tax dollars.

I appreciate the opportunity to express some of my views which are not only mine but those of my constituents. It is time to oust the Government and get the country going again with a new Government and the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party as our next Prime Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall we call it six o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION—MACBRIDE COMMISSION REPORT. (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my complimenting you on the ease with which you have pronounced the name of my riding. It is getting better every time you say it.

Before the recess of Parliament last June, I rose to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) about the Government's attitude toward the MacBride Commission report which was commissioned by UNESCO some years ago.

In fairness, that is a report that has not had much publicity in the world, certainly not in this country. It has great implications both for Canada and all other countries. It involves the freedom of the press or, in counter distinction to that, control of the press.

● (1800)

The MacBride Commission Report paid for by taxpayers around the world, but mostly by western countries, has a very contradictory position. On the one hand, it espouses freedom of the press, and on the other it calls for more balanced reporting from the countries of the world. Those countries, what we call Third World countries, are particularly intrigued by the notion embodied in this report because they would then look for government controlled information centres which would sanitize all news reports emanating from a particular country and make sure all correspondents, journalists, reporting from a country would have to vet their reports through a government information agency to the outside world.

I can understand, and I say this very honestly, the feeling of those Third World countries and their attitudes. They are very often offended, embarrassed and sometimes feel betrayed by the kinds of reports that foreign journalists write regarding the conditions of their countries.

But freedom, political freedom, rests on journalistic freedom and the freedom of the press. There is no greater authority than John Milton who spoke about this 340 years ago when he wrote an article entitled "Areopagitica". At the time he was inveighing against the House of Commons in England which in his words wanted to "license" books. But a Member of that Parliament, a Member of the Government, was criticizing the Government for the policy of licensing, as it was called at that time. Milton pointed out that we ought to look through history, and at the authorship of that kind of policy. Second, we ought to look at the kinds of people who introduced that policy. We do not have time now, but it would be worth our while to make those kinds of comparisons today. Who authors that kind of an idea today in terms of licensing the press? Who is it around the world who controls the press? Do we want to contribute to that kind of policy?

My question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in June asked what Canada's position was regarding that report. It is not enough to disagree with it. I want to know what Canada is doing to set out a bulwark against that kind of policy. I noted with interest that a kind of sub-committee of that group, the New World Information Order, was set up to introduce the kind of technological changes that would be brought about. The director general is meeting this week with representatives from around the world. Canada's representative to that body is Mr. John Meisel, a highly respected man in this country, Chairman of the CRTC. What kind of position did our Government lay out in front of Mr. Meisel before he left for that meeting? Was it simply a point of disagreement or was it a matter of opposition? Are we as a government, are we as a country, are we as a Parliament, not only going to disagree but oppose that kind of a measure?

I noted with interest that Canada has this year given another instalment to the International Program for the Development of Communications, the body to which I have just referred. In July or August this year a grant of $260,000 was given. The United States has given $850,000 but the United States has put that money in a trust fund so there can be some kind of accountability to show what that organization will do, that organization which is supposed to implement the curtailment of the muzzling of the press around the world.

● (1805)

The Government has a responsibility for accountability to the people of Canada. It should tell us its position and why we are paying to support a program that could curtail freedom of the press and, therefore, curtail political freedom around the world. What is the position of the Government? Will it not only disagree with that program as it has in the past, thankfully, will it also oppose that kind of program?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to answer the question put by the Hon. Member of the Opposition, I would, first of all, like to situate the report by the International Commission of Enquiry on Communications Problems and then discuss the position we took on this issue. I think the Hon. Member's picture of the report is not quite clear.

The Commission, as we all know, was created by the UNESCO General Conference in 1976. A number of experts, including one Canadian, Mrs. Betty Zimmerman, who was then Director of Radio-Canada International, were asked to sit on the Commission, which was chaired by Mr. MacBride. The Commission submitted its report in 1980 at the 21st General Conference of UNESCO in Belgrade. However, the Hon. Member ought to realize that the MacBride report was not adopted by UNESCO. Some of the recommendations it contained were the subject of a resolution adopted by consensus, inviting the Director General, Mr. M'Bow, to undertake, and I quote:

—to undertake or direct the studies and analyses required for the formulation of concrete and practical proposals for the creation of a new world order of information and communications.

Let me reassure the Hon. Member by reminding him that the provisions of Article 14 of this Resolution list the principles on which this new order could be based. These include freedom of the press, which the Hon. Member himself already mentioned, and the article also covers the compatibility of this new order with the basic principles of international law laid down in the United Nations Charter.

Consequently, the Canadian Government does not consider the MacBride Report as authoritative as the Hon. Member seems to think it is, but takes the position that it should be seen as one of the elements of a broader body of documents on international information and communication. Canada has always had a keen interest in the problems caused by imbalances in the field of information and communications, and we are particularly aware of the importance of the problems encountered by developing countries. As an expression of this interest, we supported another resolution at the UNESCO General Conference in Belgrade, a resolution that created the International Program for the Development of Communication (IPDC), which is aimed at responding in a concrete manner to the expectations of many countries.

The Hon. Member asked us to find out what was going on. We are in an excellent position to do so, since Canada was elected to the Intergovernmental Council of the IPDC and has taken an active part in its work. We have contributed $250,000 to the Program's operating fund. At the present time, the Program appears to be making a very valuable and highly esteemed contribution. However, I would like to give the Hon. Member the assurance that throughout this debate, Canada intends to defend the principles of freedom of the press and freedom of information, as we have defined them ourselves in the Canadian Constitution.

[English]

GARRISON DIVERSION—UNITED STATES CONTRACT TO CONSTRUCT LONETREE DAM. (B) NON-CONSULTATION BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, today I questioned the acting Secretary of State for External Affairs on what plans he has made regarding the present stage of Garrison in the United States, particularly concerning the Lonetree project. I received the same non-committal, no-action answer that I have been receiving over the past many years. If something is not done quickly and if this Government does not immediately launch a strong and forceful protest to the United States Government we can expect to see the Garrison diversion project fully completed with no second thought given toward the harmful effects it will have on Canadian waters.

On September 6 the United States Government announced that a $5.82 million contract had been awarded to begin construction of the Lonetree reservoir dam and dykes. This construction project is a principal part of the over-all proposed Garrison water project which has been objected to by Canadian officials, and particularly Manitobans, for many years.

● (1810)

The fact is that if this project is completed, it will be harmful to our waterways as well as to Manitoba's fishing and agricultural industries. The project will not only cause our industries to suffer but will also result in a violation of the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty between Canada and the United States.

The serious effects this project will have in Canada have been stated many times, most recently in a detailed study prepared by the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States. The agency has reported that it is unable to support any portions of the project that drain into the Hudson Bay Basin and lead to Manitoba waters. It is also skeptical that a proposal to redirect water through a reservoir will prevent contamination of the Hudson Bay Basin.

Because the American Environmental Protection Agency has stated its support and agreement with the Canadian position on this issue, it would seem there is no alternative but to demand that this project not be completed. On numerous occasions, it has been proven that there exists a hazard to the waters of Canada, regardless of United States safeguarding proposals such as revised plans and fish screens. The risk is still far too great.

The Department of the Interior of the United States quietly approved the awarding of the dam construction project. Officials of that department are planning to celebrate the awarding of the Lonetree contract on September 19.

Why was Canada not notified of this decision? The awarding of the contract is a signal that the United States is planning to continue to complete this project, a project that will be detrimental to Manitoba. Why are the Canadian and now American recommendations and objections to the completion of this project being so blantantly ignored?

It seems that as soon as a new finding is publicized stating the harmful effects of the Garrison water project, the United States Government allots more money for its continuation. It would seem to me that somewhere along the line we are having a breakdown communications with our neighbour.

This issue has been going on for five decades, and for five decades the United States has seemingly been intent on completing Garrison for its benefit with little concern for Manitoba. The awarding of the Lonetree contract is further evidence that our objections are going unheard, or perhaps that they are not reaching the officials in the United States who are capable of ordering the termination of this project.

I must, therefore request that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) contact by telephone as quickly as possible the President of the United States to inform him directly of our opposition to this project and to demand that construction be halted immediately. Furthermore, it should be brought to the President's attention that before any plans which may involve the welfare of Canada are finalized and given the go ahead in the United States, we in Canada should be contacted and consulted.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank the Hon. Member for his continued interest in this matter. Recent developments including increased Congressional appropriations for Phase I and the awarding of the construction contract for the Lonetree reservoir have been closely monitored by the Government through the ambassador in Washington. We are in close touch with the Government of Manitoba at the official level.

United States authorities have assured Canada of their commitment to the IJC recommendations of 1977 and similarly, Congress has stipulated that no funds or authority under current appropriations would be used for construction of features of the GDU which would pollute, introduce foreign biota or destructively increase or decrease the rate of waters flowing into Canada. Consultations agreed to by both Governments have begun with the objective of ensuring that construction features will be designed to achieve this result. It is regrettable that the recent award of the Lonetree reservoir construction contract came before a satisfactory conclusion to these consultations had been achieved.

Every opportunity has been and is being taken to ensure that Canadian concerns are fully understood by Congress and by the administration. To mention only some of the most recent actions, a technical meeting was called in Ottawa on July 20 which included responsible officials from North Dakota, Washington, Manitoba and Ottawa to examine in detail technical concerns related to Phase 1 of the GDU including the Lonetree reservoir. This meeting appeared to have established a basis for further policy level discussions which had been envisaged for this autumn. When it became apparent that the U.S.A. intended to move ahead with Lonetree before all Canadian concerns had been addressed and resolved in the consultative process, Ambassador Gotlieb met with senior Department of State officials on August 19 to convey high-level concern regarding not only the implications of the Lonetree contract award but also its effect on the consultations related to the balance of Phase 1.

• (1815)

We continue to regard consultations as the most effective means of resolving Canadian concerns over aspects of the Garrison project. We expect an early resumption of consultations to examine remaining technical concerns, including necessary modifications of the Lonetree reservoir. Further representations are being prepared in consultation with Manitoba.

Finally, last week the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia), was able to receive assurances from Mr. James Watt, Secretary of the Interior of the United States, that the most threatening features of the original Garrison plan, known as Phase II, would not be built.

EDUCATION—CONTENT OF SCHOOL MANUALS. (B) FUNDING SOUGHT FOR ENGLISH TEXTBOOKS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to bring to the attention of the Government once again my concern about the lack of appropriate educational material, in particular textbooks, in the English language for use in our schools.

As a Member of this Parliament I have lived through the period when the Government insisted on a new Constitution for Canadians, partly for substantive reasons and partly for symbolic reasons. My predecessors lived through a period of this Parliament when they dealt with the issue of the Canadian flag. We have been told by the Government on many occasions that it was necessary to have a state-owned oil company called Petro-Canada, partly for symbolic reasons or reasons of national identity.

As I stand in this Chamber I have absolute, certain knowledge that in the schools of this nation, from kindergarten through university, there is a shortage of educational material written by Canadians for the use of Canadian students in the English language.

[Translation]

The situation is not the same for francophone students. In French schools in the Province of Quebec and throughout the country, the situation is not the same. Textbooks are written by French Canadians for Canadian students, in French.

[English]

We can trace that development back to the time when the late Right Hon. Lester Pearson was Prime Minister of this country. The absence of suitable learning material for French language classrooms was recognized by that Prime Minister and the Government of the day, and there was a concerted effort, largely marshalled through the Office of the Secretary of State, to correct a bad situation.

French-speaking students in this country today, from kindergarten through to university, have instructional materials prepared by French-speaking Canadians for their use. They are not dependent upon Paris or other French-speaking sources for most of their educational material. We have not concentrated our efforts on behalf of English-speaking students in this country, however. All any Member of Parliament has to do is phone the local school board and ask what proportion of the education material currently being used in the classroom today has been written and/or published by Canadians for the use of Canadians, whether the subject be mathematics, physics, social studies, English or whatever.

It is my contention that if we in this Parliament really care about the issue of Canadian unity and the issue of Canadian identity, then it is long past time for us to take that concern seriously and support a Government that is willing to take that concern seriously and to provide programs—not simply programs on paper—with dollars attached. We must ensure that students in the future, wherever they are in this country, will be able to benefit from educational material prepared by Canadians for Canadians. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Bossy), in his response to this petition, to perhaps stand up and give us one small indication of the Government's commitment to that endeavour.

● (1820)

Canadian publishers some two months ago asked for Government assistance to simply create and provide to school boards throughout Canada a directory of available educational material which is written and published by Canadians. All that is, Mr. Speaker, is a list of available material so that when school boards face ordering decisions for educational materials they have one place to go to get a list of available Canadian material.

If the Government of Canada were to provide the small amount of funding required to provide such a list, then those local school boards in the smaller centres of this country, such as Moosomin, Saskatchewan, or small places in Newfoundland and throughout this land, could immediately increase the proportion of Canadian material which is used in those schools. The longer term goal would be more expensive and more time-consuming, the creation of more Canadian educational material in the English language.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary stand in this House this evening and make the commitment to at least put forward that small amount of money which would be required to create that kind of a directory?

Mr. Maurice Bossy (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, before dealing explicitly with the questions posed by the Hon. Member, I think it is important to point out that we are in agreement with the general principles enunciated in the Association of Canadian Publishers' study, namely, that young people must be presented with opportunities and materials which will enable them to learn in depth about their country, culture and heritage as a necessary first step to becoming fully functioning citizens of Canada. This sentiment echoes that of an earlier landmark examination of the state of teaching, research and publication about Canada, the report of the Commission on Canadian Studies. That study, the first two volumes of which were published in 1967, found that the neglect of Canadian studies in our schools, colleges and universities was a lamentable, even deplorable, feature of Canadian education.

The recommendations of that Commission have resulted in a number of responses by various agencies and Departments of the federal Government, some of which bear directly on the areas of concern addressed by the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member's first question was based on the findings of the Association of Canadian Publishers' study which indicated that only 50 per cent of the school boards surveyed—766 in all—have a policy on the use of Canadian studies learning materials and that only 20 per cent of the local school boards have a policy on the local development of learning materials. The Hon. Member notes that the study was based on a sample of boards in English Canada and he asks if the same situation applies in French Canada. To our knowledge there has not been a similar study of school boards serving the French speaking population of Canada. The Association of Canadian Publishers' document explicitly states that only the English language school boards of Quebec were included in that study.

With respect to another question posed by the Hon. Member in his earlier remarks to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Department of the Secretary of State has no knowledge of any specific program funded by the Government of Canada which operated in the late 1960s for the creation of materials for textbook purposes in the French language in Canada.

However, there have been some steps taken by this Government to increase opportunities for Canadians to lear about their country, in both official languages, and to encourage greater attention to Canadian issues and concerns. For example, the Department of the Secretary of State established a Canadian studies program which has, since its inception in 1978, done much to support learning materials development projects for use by the educational community. This program has provided $5,281,000 since 1978 and the Government hopes for its continuation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock in the morning.

At 6.26 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, September 16, 1983

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1105)

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

TRADE

UNITED STATES ACTION AGAINST EXPORTATION OF CANADIAN POTATOES

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, during the past year the United States Department of Commerce, through its agencies, has been investigating the nature of trade in potatoes between Canada and the United States. It found that there was some reason to consider that there was both dumping and damage in shipments to the United States.

I submit that there was probably evidence under the letter of the law to substantiate those findings. I also submit to you that the traditional commodity trade between Canada and the United States has been going on nearly a century, and the nature of the business concerned was not taken into consideration as the letter of the law was applied.

I think it is imperative that all Ministers of the Crown who may be interested in agriculture or international trade should make the strongest possible representations to their counterparts in the United States, because this will be a benchmark decision. While it only relates to potatoes, it opens the door for comparable applications for consideration of dumping or damage under United States law by other commodity groups in the United States. It also gives Canada an opportunity to interfere with imports of horticultural products from the United States.

Any final decision by the ITC, which I understand would be reached on November 18, could be very detrimental to our historic trade practices—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

* * *

PARLIAMENT HILL

DEMAND THAT PEACE CAMP BE REMOVED

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, enough is enough. I am referring to the eyesore out on the front lawn of the Parliament Buildings. It started off several months ago in one far corner of the lawn as an innocent little encampment of protest against Cruise missile testing. Now the Peace Camp has mushroomed into an unsightly and seemingly permanent fixture along the main walkway, and it looks like a rather shabby garage sale.

I am absolutely in favour of freedom of assembly and the right to protest on Parliament Hill, 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 52 weeks of the year. But I should remind Hon. Members that my Deputy Leader, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), said in this House last June that peaceful demonstration is one thing, and permanent squatting is something else again. For that matter, why not allow the Farmers for Survival to camp out in their tractors on the front lawn? Or we could invite university students who cannot find accommodation in Ottawa to pitch tents out there. That makes about as much sense as allowing the Cruise missile protesters to continue to spread their wares all over Parliament's showpiece front lawn. That Peace Camp is growing like a weed.

The point I am making to you, Mr. Speaker, is that somebody should tell these people to clean up their act, more in keeping with the decorum of this place. It is a pretty crummy-looking first impression of Parliament Hill the way it is.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EFFECTS CAUSED BY SHOOTING DOWN OF KOREAN AIRLINER

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the recent action of the Soviet fighter shooting down a civilian Korean airliner over the Sea of Japan, which resulted in the loss of 269 lives, ten of them Canadians, is a cowardly act of barbarism which has few parallels in its magnitude in peacetime's civil aviation history.

By unanimous resolution, Members of the House have condemned this action, demanded a full and truthful explanation from the Soviets, called for a full and impartial investigation under the auspices of the United Nations and the International Civil Aviation Organization, and have demanded generous compensation for the families of Canadian victims, one of whom was from the Algoma district. No one in the House, however, can fully appreciate or feel the anguish, grief and despair of the parents and loved ones of those ten innocent Canadians who lost their lives in this senseless act. Our hearts go out to them at this time in sympathy for the loss of their loved ones.

The long-term implications of this tragedy are very serious as well. Good relations between nations and peoples are based on trust. This is especially true in the disarmament negotiations going on this Fall in Geneva. This incident has seriously damaged trust of the Soviet leaders in the minds of all Canadians.

* * *

• (1110)

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMMATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA BUDGET

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians in all provinces are assessing the impact of government restraint programs in B.C. which reflect the Liberal-Conservative monetarist approach of fighting inflation by penalizing poor people, pensioners, minority groups, tenants, workers and small business people. The brutal Bennett budget has attacked almost every sector of society. Yet we have heard no protest from Conservative MPs who obviously support their fellow Socreds.

An Hon. Member: We are federal.

Mrs. Mitchell: In addition to attacks on workers and human rights, B.C. budget cuts have hurt women and children, the disabled and low income people, in particular. Funding for women's centres, transition houses, health collectives, planned parenthood, and daycare services, have been cut drastically. Termination of community support services will result in permanently damaged children who will require very costly institutional care. Pensioners will pay more for hospital care while their rents go up and subsidies go down. Persons on restricted welfare payments lose incentive allowances for valuable community work.

What can the federal Government do? Moneys budgeted for cost-sharing of social services should be re-allocated through the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) to self-help community groups. Winter job creation programs must be revised for all provinces, Mr. Speaker, to include jobs in community services.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry for interrupting the Hon. Member, but the time allotted to her has expired.

* * *

INDUSTRY

WAGES OWED MAISLIN COMPANY EMPLOYEES

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Twelve months after receiving an emergency $34 million loan guarantee from the federal Government, Montreal-based Maislin Industries Limited is on the verge of bankruptcy. Apparently the company has run out of money for its operations. The company has laid off all but a few of its 3,500 employees and now Alan Maislin, the company vice-chairman and former president, has resigned and is supporting the employees in their fight to get moneys owed to them in back pay.

Secured creditors are owed $59.4 million. The Canadian-Imperial Bank of Commerce moved to protect its $38.8 million interest by calling the loan. The National Bank of Canada is owed nearly $7 million. The unsecured creditors are owed $18.3 million.

In Quebec and Ontario outraged employees of the main domestic subsidiary, Maislin Transport Limited, form picket lines. One Montreal group has learned that its pay cheques will not be honoured.

Surely laid-off workers should have first priority over secured creditors and unsecured creditors. The financial security of workers who have lost their jobs and are owed back wages should be our first concern. If we are unable to secure full payment of back wages we should try to ensure that at least a partial payment of up to one month's wages will be issued to all workers who have entitlement.

Perhaps the Government can help ensure that priority be given to these workers and, if necessary, legislation should be passed to provide workers with at least up to one month's back wages and allowances ahead of all other creditors—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret interrupting the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF JOB-CREATION FUNDS TO LEEDS-GRENVILLE CONSTITUENCY

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) has allocated for my riding of Leeds-Grenville the sum of $100,000 under the Canada Works Program, and nothing under the LEAD Program, for job creation. According to the Minister's figures of 7.1 per cent labour surplus for Leeds-Grenville, the unemployment rate is not high enough for additional allocation of funds to be made under LEAD or Canada Works. This figure is totally inaccurate and does not reflect the actual number of individuals who are actively seeking employment, exhaustees, those collecting social assistance benefits, or those new entrants to the labour force in Leeds-Grenville.

For the Minister's information, the labour surplus rate in my riding is 16.2 per cent, based on data provided to me by his own CEC officials. Surely the Minister has not abandoned the over 16 per cent unemployed in my riding and withheld funds so that larger allocations can be made to Liberal ridings in an attempt to bring about an increase in their decreasing popularity? I would hope that all unemployed are treated equally and fairly and not cast aside because they are constituents of an opposition Member.

I ask the Minister to reconsider his calculation of allocation of funds to accurately reflect all of the unemployed people, not just those receiving UIC, and provide the people of Leeds-

Grenville with the funds they so desperately need to meet the demands of the additional 9 per cent unemployed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA PEACE PLAN

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House that the foreign ministers of nine Latin American countries have agreed on a plan for peace in Central America, calling for regional negotiations, disarmament, and a cutback in foreign advisers.

The four Contadoran countries, Columbia, Mexico, Panama, and Venezuela, have made peace proposals before, but this is the first time that the foreign ministers of Guatemala, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Nicaragua and Honduras have endorsed such a plan.

Details of the framework agreement are not known yet but the main objectives are the following: first, immediate and progressive disarmament after an inventory of armaments in the region; second, a reduction in the number of foreign military advisers; and third, a permanent dialogue between governments and their internal opposition movements to lead to precise electoral processes.

• (1115)

The Contadora group stresses the efforts to bring Central American conflicts to the negotiating table and eventually to use ballots instead of bullets to settle differences. At this time the document has gone to the governments of nine countries for approval.

The group is calling for foreign governments to refrain from military intervention and to co-operate by carrying out concrete actions of assistance. In this light I call upon the Government of Canada to support formally, in a much more obvious way, the efforts of the Contadora group and, through every diplomatic force available, to push for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from the area.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

PACE OF ECONOMIC RECOVERY—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance who made an extraordinary speech here last night in Ottawa, and I want to refer to it. He said; "We have a recovery second to none in the world so far." My response would be—stop the world, we want to get off. The Minister said, "A moderation in the pace of economic recovery is not only acceptable but helpful."

I ask the Minister if it is Government policy to moderate the pace of economic recovery even though 1,365,000 Canadians are unemployed, even though 66,000 are exhausting their unemployment insurance every month, even though the income of Canadians is shrinking because the cost of living is going up more than their salary gains? Is it the Minister's policy deliberately to keep Canadians unemployed and to continue these conditions, in light of his statements in his speech last night?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made several wrong assertions. The first one is that this speech was not made last night; it was made at noon yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: The rest of his assertions are of the same category. They are just all over the lot, having little relationship to the facts. The incomes of Canadians are not going to be shrinking this year, they are going to increase.

The only really true assertion the Hon. Member has made is that Canada is experiencing a recovery comparable to none in the rest of the world. This recovery in Canada is greater than that in any other industrialized country. For the first two quarters of this year, Mr. Speaker, we have had an increase in growth at the rate of 7.4 per cent on an annual rate, which is a record. In both the United States and in Canada there will be a moderation in the rate of increase in the course of the next year, and the year after. For instance, we expect next year that the rate of growth will be in the 5 per cent range in real terms, which is a very good rate and, as I said, will be at least as high if not higher than that in the U.S. or any other country.

The policy of the Government is to have the highest possible rate of growth to aim at creating the highest possible number of jobs and to reduce unemployment as fast as we can. But we do not want to be in a situation where the end result will be higher inflation and higher unemployment. We want to have both low inflation and high employment, and this is what we are working toward.

Mr. Crosbie: Someone should introduce the Minister to Walter Gordon, who was saying exactly the opposite here yesterday.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's statement is this: "A moderation in the pace of economic recovery is not only acceptable but helpful." If you are going to moderate the pace of economic recovery, you are going to have less employment, less business investment and the like. Does the Minister realize there has been the biggest drop in business investment since World War II, down to 11.5 per cent of total spending? Does he realize that, if we are having the largest rebound, it is only because we have had the largest fall and that we lost 595,000 jobs during that fall?

• (1120)

Is it the Minister's policy deliberately to moderate the so-called recovery and therefore worsen the statistics that I have given him? Is it or is it not the policy, what he said yesterday? Is that his policy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): The policy of the Government is not to deliberately moderate the rate of recovery. The policy of the Government is to have the highest possible rate of growth with the lowest possible rate of inflation. It is essential that both be taking place together. What I have indicated is that in that process, by pursuing that very high rate of recovery, it is unavoidable that the economy will not be able to sustain as high a rate of growth as the one we have known in the first part of this year, and that we will have a steady and sustainable recovery rather than having a flash in the pan type of recovery which might last for a few months and then lead us into a situation where we would again have a surge of inflation and would be brought back into recession. Surely the Hon. Member understands that.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, we have a Minister of Finance who neither understands nor cares.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): I refer again to page 4 of the Minister's speech. He said he took the opposite view from those who were worried about the lagging pace of recovery moderation in the United States. He said, "A moderation of the pace is not only acceptable but helpful".

In view of the fact that we have 267,000 fewer jobs now than we had in August of 1981, and in view of the fact that only two-thirds of our industry is operating and one third of our capacity is not operating at all, when will he stop his Pinocchian exaggerations that do not deal with the facts, and do something to help the people of Canada and our economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend is indeed extremely selective again. I remind him that today we have 800,000 more Canadians at work than last November—

Mr. Crosbie: Out of work.

Mr. Lalonde: —300,000 more jobs on a seasonally adjusted basis than last November, and that Canada has been creating jobs at the highest rate of any industrialized country since last November.

I remind my hon. friend that if he indeed wants to co-operate in achieving a high and long term rate of growth in our country, he should push for the early adoption of—

Mr. Crosbie: A new Government.

Mr. Lalonde: —the measures dealing with the Crow rate, which will mean $25 billion of expenditures in Canada in this decade and over 300,000 full-time, permanent jobs, which will have a very beneficial effect all across the country. We are waiting for the Tories and the NDP to wake up to this and help the country grow even faster than it has grown in the past.

PROJECTIONS OF FUTURE GROWTH

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to address my question to the Minister of Finance. The Minister's convoluted propaganda is about as ridiculous as the logic of the Russians when they accused the Americans of shooting down Flight KAL 007.

The Minister paints a very rosy picture in spite of the bleak situation involving the mining, oil and gas, agriculture and other sectors. I merely want to ask the Minister how he squares his predictions with the projections in an internal government document called "Strategic Overview for the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion 1984/85 to 1987/88". I would like to quote only one line from the document. It states:

> Low levels of capacity utilization, weak balance sheets and high real interest rates will dampen business investment, at least for the first half of the decade.

How does the Minister square his rosy projections with that statement?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I may refer the Hon. Member to the projections made by a large number of private organizations and to those contained in the last budget I brought down in April. If the Hon. Member cares to look at the situation as it has been developing over the last few months, he will realize that today, the economic situation is more favourable than I had anticipatd in the budget hardly six months ago. The performance of the Canadian economy has been better than was expected by all economic forecasters at the beginning of this year. I have great confidence in the energy of Canadians and in the production capacity of the Canadian economy. I am also confident that as a result of policies determined by the Government, in co-operation with provincial governments, the Canadian economy will experience a very high rate of growth in the years to come. I think my hon. colleague should also consider how the international community has judged the Canadian economy. He will realize that to investors throughout the world, Canada is still a very attractive country, from every point of view.

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has been displaying confidence for three and one half years, but nothing has happened. He reflected on that last night when he said, "We have a long, long way to go yet."

● (1125)

PREDICTION OF LOWER EXPORT GROWTH

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, this same leaked government document states that, over the medium term, export growth may not match advances in imports and that recent record surpluses in Canada's merchandize account owe more to the depressing effects of the relatively more severe recession in Canada on imports than to superior export performance. How does the Minister expect to give Canadians hope for the future when there are no long term solutions coming forward to address these very devastating predictions of his own Departments?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of State for International Trade will be happy to provide the Hon. Member with additional information. I would remind him that last year, we had the greatest trade surplus in Canada's history, and that this year, our trade surplus is expected to be even greater.

[English]

The trade surplus of Canada in the last two years will have been at record levels. We intend to pursue, through the dynamic policies put forward by the Government in terms of export trade, this excellent record and continue the policy by which Canada will be one of the largest trading nations in the world, taking into account its total production. I think we have a good record to go on, and we will build upon that.

* * *

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION AGREEMENT

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the constitutionality of the Cruise missile agreement is now to be tested in the Federal Court of Canada, has the Canadian Government informed the Government of the United States that the Cruise missile agreement will have to be suspended until there is a final court ruling on its constitutionality?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would imagine that the U.S. would be kept informed of this by the offices of their own ambassador. However, the question seems premature to me. We have no reason to believe that the question will not be settled finally, very soon. Indeed, I would welcome that it be settled. If it is not settled by December, the Hon. Member could ask a question again and it would be pertinent.

Miss Jewett: I thought the Prime Minister would follow his own previous practice of suspending discussions and so on when a constitutional matter is before the courts. I would hope that he would still do that.

REQUEST FOR HALT IN PLANS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in addition to suspending the Cruise missile agreement pending the final court ruling, will the Government also halt any further plans and preparations for Cruise missile tests in northern and western Canada until there is a final court ruling on the constitutionality of the agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about suspending discussions on the matter when it is before the courts, and she is the one who raises discussions on the matter when it is before the courts. As far as the Government is concerned, it has taken a decision and has announced a policy. That stands until the courts strike it down.

We are not in a process of testing now, and the Hon. Member knows that. The tests, if they take place, would only be in the new year. That is why I say the question is premature.

* * *

THE PRESS

FUTURE OF DRAFT NEWSPAPER BILL

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Is the draft newspaper Bill dead? If not, what Minister is responsible for it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet formally assigned the Bill. It will eventually go to the new Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but there is no question of dealing with it in this part of this session of Parliament. Therefore I have not formally advised her as yet, but I plan to do so in writing in due course.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW MEASURE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the Bill was ostensibly released this summer in order to solicit public opinion on it. In view of the fact that the public opinion expressed has been almost overwhelmingly in opposition to the Bill, will the Government now reassure those who feel that the Bill is an attack on freedom of press in Canada by announcing that it will not proceed with the Bill in its present form?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I know that views were expressed on the pros and cons of the subject matter of the Bill. That is why we released it, so public opinion could be expressed. However, the decisions are not made by the public but by Members of Parliament, and in due course even the Hon. Member will have to decide whether freedom of the press is threatened in this Bill, as he suggests, or if it does make some sense to prevent the press being more and more controlled by small monopolies.

* * *

• (1130)

THE ECONOMY

NATURAL GAS EXPORTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It deals with his statement that the slowdown in the rate of recovery is not only acceptable but helpful. He referred to the trade surplus, but he ignored the fact that our trade surplus comes from reduced imports, reduced demand, rather than exports. What comfort does he draw from the fact that our natural gas exports are running less than 50 per cent of market contracts, with an outlook for a further sagging in the future, and what comfort does he get from the fact that 40 per cent of the drilling rigs in this country are idle?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what was remarkable during the course of the last recession is that Canadian exports held up so well compared to the situation in practically every other industrial country.

Mr. Crosbie: Others are doing better, you turkey.

Mr. Lalonde: In our country we have been able, in spite of a world-wide recession, to maintain a very high level of exports while our imports declined considerably indeed. But if you look around at other industrial countries you will find that both imports and exports have gone down. Here in Canada, thanks in part to the aggressive policy of our companies and also the support provided by the federal Government, we have been able to maintain our export levels in spite of the world-wide recession.

The Hon. Member is right. The gas exports are still low compared to what we could sell if the demand were there in the United States. But, as she knows, we have taken steps, together with the Provinces and the industry, to speed up the pickup in gas export authorizations by reducing prices of additional natural gas. Some additional delivery has taken place, and we expect that with the recovery in the United States the demand for natural gas will increase significantly. There is not much that we can do as long as the demand in the United States is not there for additional gas. This is what is taking place at the present time, and the outlook for the future seems more encouraging.

INCREASE IN BUSINESS BANKRUPTCIES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. Our concern is that the very rosy picture he paints is just not true. For instance, in the oil patch things, are so bad that PetroCan has had to put its Challenger jet up for sale.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: What comfort does the Minister get specifically from the fact that business bankruptcies in the first seven months of this year are double the rate they were two years ago?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that as we get out of the recession, the general economic situation is going to improve. However, if the Hon. Member is referring to the situation at the beginning of 1983, compared with two years ago, obviously, the bankruptcy rate will be higher at the beginning of 1983 than it was at the start of 1981, when we were experiencing a period of very rapid growth. I would therefore invite the Hon. Member to look at more recent statistics which indicate that there has been a very substantial drop in the number of bankruptcies across Canada, and this is a clear indication that the economic situation has improved very substantially. I would also invite her to consider, not only the number of bankruptcies but also the number of new businesses that were set up in Canada this year. The Hon. Member will see that the number of new businesses far exceeds the number of bankruptcies, that the Canadian economy is showing remarkable growth and that she should have greater confidence in the drive and enthusiasm of Canadians today.

* * *

[English]

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

LEVEL OF FUNDING

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Bearing in mind that the loaning funds in the Farm Credit Corporation are virtually exhausted, has the Minister asked the Minister of Finance for assistance to refund the Farm Credit Corporation? What was that Minister's answer, and how much money did he ask for?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the funds are not exhausted and I have not asked for any more funds at the present time.

Mr. Beatty: The Minister is exhausted.

CORPORATION'S LENDING POWER

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Bearing in mind that we are only halfway through this fiscal year, that farmers are having a great deal of difficulty obtaining funds through the Farm Credit Corporation, that there is a record number of bankruptcies among the farm community, how can the Minister stand there and say the funds are not exhausted when the funds are not available at the farm level? Would the Minister tell us whether or not there is going to be a continuation of loaning power by the Farm Credit Corporation throughout the remaining half of this year equal to that of the average of the previous two or three years?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, let me outline the amount of money that would be loaned by the Farm Credit Corporation, that Crown corporation which is the eleventh largest lender in Canada. I really appreciate the support we are getting from the Tory Party for a Crown corporation because I had another Crown corporation I was supporting in this House and I got condemned for it. They seem to have forgotten that there are ten other corporations, private corporations, that lend money in this country, and they have far more funds than the Farm Credit Corporation. We are taking over their responsibility from them in the lending field—

Mr. Malone: Answer the question.

Mr. Whelan: —because 56 per cent of our loans this year are taking over the loans which the private institutions made to farmers, whereas normally it is 17 per cent of our loans. This will be the largest lending year we have ever had for the Farm Credit Corporation in Canada.

If the Hon. Member wants to make representations, I suggest that he go to the Treasury branches in Alberta—another Crown corporation that lends money to farmers in his own Province—to see if he can raise more money there. He could go to the private banks and see if he can get more money from the private banks in Alberta, to loan to the farmers. Alberta has had one of the biggest years ever with the Farm Credit Corporation this year. If he wants to check the facts he will find that is so and he will find out that we are doing a pretty good job.

* * *

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PRICE OF GASOLINE—ATTACK BY MAJOR OIL COMPANIES ON SMALL FIRMS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It follows in light of the announcement of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission that Imperial Oil has once again ripped the consumers in this country from stem to stern in using Suny Oil as a fighting brand to fight gas wars almost by proxy. Imperial Oil was also one of the major players in the $12 billion rip-off of Canadian consumers as shown in the revelations in the Bertrand Report.

Would the Minister be prepared to call the heads of the major oil companies in Canada to her office to extract some concessions from them? One of them would be that there be no more targeting independent oil companies in an attempt basically to discipline and destroy them, and that she seek from those oil companies an immediate roll back in the retail price of gasoline, which is far too high.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in my reply the other day in the House—the Hon. Member could not have been in the House or he would not be asking the question—I indicated that there is an inquiry under way and that it would be premature of me to make any suggestions as to what measures should be taken until that inquiry is completed. I do agree with the Hon. Member. We are, as consumers, very much concerned about the price of gasoline. Let me assure him that the moment we have the results of that inquiry we will let him know and take the appropriate measures.

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF INDEPENDENT FIRMS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer is totally inappropriate. The terms of reference of that inquiry do not pertain to the present situation. During these recent gas wars there has been a definite attempt by the major oil companies to drive independents out of business. There is no doubt they have fought those battles on a regional basis, having consumers pay high prices in one area, and subsidized gas wars to discipline and remove independents in other areas. What action is the Minister going to take to protect independents and ensure that consumers get a fair price on gasoline before they are gone? I think the Minister should be prepared to acknowledge in this House that by the time—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has asked his supplementary. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that we are as concerned as he is. That is the reason the inquiry was launched. I do assure the Hon. Member that those matters to which he referred are very much within the purview of the present inquiry. We are again, I repeat, very much concerned, and we will take the appropriate measures if and when the inquiry indicates that those measures are required.

* * *

• (1140)

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Under the Western Grain Stabilization Program will a payment be made to farmers, will it be made before the end of the year, and what will be the amount of that payment?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to answer that question at this time.

* * *

GARNISHEE, ATTACHMENT AND PENSION DIVERSION ACT

DELAY IN PROCLAMATION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Bill C-38 was passed by the House 14 months ago, and Parts II, III and IV have not yet been proclaimed. What is the cause of this unusual delay?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, litigation involving this legislation is presently in the courts. As Hon. Members may know, there is a dispute between the Department of Justice and the House of Commons as to whether Members and employees of the House of Commons are affected by that legislation. That has had consequences for the general proclamation of the legislation. There is a case now in the courts on which I cannot comment, but I hope that the matter will be resolved shortly by the courts, if not in some other fashion. It may be that we ought to seek further legislative clarification on this. I might consult the House Leader and my Opposition critic in the next week or two to see whether we can arrive at a legislative clarification so that this spectacle, which might be considered rather unedifying by the people of the country, would not continue to be dragged on.

SOURCE OF OBJECTIONS TO PROCLAMATION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that the Bill was passed in some parts unanimously and that, to some degree, there was unanimity throughout its entire passage, could the Minister of Justice explain whether it is Members of the House or Senators who are objecting to the proclamation of the Bill, or does it come from officers of the House?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there may or may not be Members who are taking positions on this; I am not aware of that. The primary difficulty is that officials of the House, I think acting in pursuance of the tradition of parliamentary immunity from various kinds of legislation, have taken the position that Members of parliament and employees of Parliament should not be touched. I would not like to say that this is not a matter of importance. The point precisely is that I think Members had one intention when the legislation was passed. It is now running into these difficulties, which I quite agree with the Hon. Member have to be clarified within the next few weeks.

TRADE

INADEQUACY OF ANTI-DUMPING LEGISLATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It is a question which may well be directed to the Minister of Trade, but I believe it is the Minister of National Revenue who handles it. How can we possibly effect the kind of economic recovery in Canada about which everyone speaks as being necessary, when the Anti-Dumping Tribunal and the anti-dumping legislation are totally inadequate, when the steel industry is already being subjected to tremendous pressures from dumping from at least 12 other countries in the world, and when the result of this dumping is an increase in unemployment and a decrease in productivity? When will we get some adequate legislation to protect our manufacturers from the totally inadequate legislation which currently exists?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member ought to know that responsibility for our antidumping policy legislation lies with the Minister of Finance. He should also remember that during the past two years, the Government has been considering a number of changes in our anti-dumping legislation, and thirdly, the Department of National Revenue regularly responds to requests for anti-dumping investigations from various sectors of the Canadian economy, including the steel industry, the heavy equipment sector, and so on. We carry out the investigations as quickly as possible, preliminary analyses are made fairly regularly, and we try to be as effective as we can.

[English]

PRICE OF AUTOMOBILES IMPORTED FROM RUSSIA

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, let me then direct my question to the Minister of Finance. How can a Lada car, which sells for approximately $12,000 in Moscow, be sold for under $6,000 in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the allegation of the Hon. Member is correct, there are ways of dealing with it. The Minister of National Revenue has said that one can put a complaint before the Anti-Dumping Tribunal for the matter to be examined. A number of products have been examined and measures have been taken by the Government to counteract such dumping. Every year we have taken steps in that regard. If the Hon. Member has a complaint, he should register it before the Anti-Dumping Tribunal.

As far as his reference to the steel industry and its problems is concerned, again I invite the Hon. Member to adopt the Crow legislation. It would mean orders for steel production which will help the steel industry in the Hamilton area quite significantly.

INCOME TAX

INFORMATION DEMANDED ON TAX RETURN FORMS

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The House will recall that last spring when the income tax forms came out, I raised a question about the additional information sought on that form for the first time. Has the Government studied the issue? Is it prepared to take any decision soon, because the new form will go to the printers soon?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, further to representations made by the Hon. Member, we have indeed made a careful study of the information concerning the manner in which individuals are identified on their tax returns. We subsequently decided to cut the number of data used to identify the individual. For instance, the indexed income for the last three years which appeared on the tax return and was a matter of concern to the Hon. Member, will not appear on next year's return. In addition, we had two numbers to identify the same individual, in addition to the spouse's number. The individual's social insurance number and the spouse's number will be retained, but the third number we added will be removed.

* * *

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF NEWFOUNDLAND REPRESENTATIVE TO CABINET

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Of course he is aware that there is a convention that each Province be represented in the federal Cabinet. It is now almost three and a half weeks since the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's resigned. Does the Prime Minister intend to appoint a Newfoundland representative to his Cabinet? If so, when? If not, will he at least appoint a Parliamentary Secretary so that there will be somebody over there with some official responsibility?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been a tradition of as wide as possible geographic representation. I have that in mind and I am considering how I will exercise my privilege. There is no convention or duty to inform the House how the Prime Minister's prerogative will be exercised. I will do that in due course.

INQUIRY RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister intend to appoint a Newfoundland Member of Parliament to his Cabinet so that that Province, at a very critical time in its history, will be represented in the Government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the Hon. Member's interest. I know he himself is not personally interested in the job, nor I in him.

Mr. McGrath: I am prepared to wait.

Mr. Trudeau: He says that he is prepared to consider it—

Mr. McGrath: I said that I was prepared to wait.

Mr. Trudeau: If he is prepared to wait, what is the urgency of the question?

* * *

AGRICULTURE

FATE OF AGRI-BOND PROPOSAL

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Why was the Minister of Agriculture turned down by the Minister of Finance when he asked if he could enter the bond market for additional FCC funds?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance did not turn me down.

FUNDING FOR FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Agriculture was not turned down, was he ignored? If that extra money is not forthcoming, does the Minister believe the Farm Credit Corporation has sufficient funds to enable farmers to carry on their business?

• (1150)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I take it for granted, from all of the questions that are in support of the Farm Credit Corporation, that the Conservative Party has changed its view toward Crown corporations and that its Members want it to be a big Crown corporation. It is a very big one already and they would like the Farm Credit Corporation to be even bigger.

Again I say that the Minister of Finance has given more money and more authorization to the Minister of Agriculture to give to the Farm Credit Corporation than ever in the history of the country. The Hon. Member asked if I was turned down. We have $250 million—

Mr. Epp: You asked for $600 million.

Mr. Whelan: We asked for more than that, but I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he gets everything that he asks for. I am sure that no one in this society gets everything he asks for.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTION BY STATE OF FLORIDA AGAINST CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is prompted by news reports from this morning and yesterday concerning the decision made by the State of Florida to re-lay charges against Sidney Jaffe and that, in the event that his application for parole is successful, he will be re-arrested. This whole affair, beginning with the abduction of Mr. Jaffe, has cast very serious questions upon the quality of justice administered in that State and the fairness of the judgment of the Attorney General of that State. Accordingly, I would ask the Prime Minister what the country of Canada is prepared to do in terms of retaliatory action against conduct which is so unacceptable to us?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right when he states that the conduct at the basis of the Jaffe case is completely unacceptable, not only to Canada but to other civilized nations. We have taken the strongest possible exception to that action and I have attended many meetings devoted to this purpose, including quite a number of meetings with American officials.

The case is still in the legal process in the United States. The Government of Canada has commenced a legal action for habeas corpus in the Federal Court of that country and I believe that we must see through to the end the legal process which we have begun. Mr. Jaffe has the right to his own forms of legal process. His goals are not precisely the same as ours, although obviously his goals and our goals do overlap considerably.

I believe that it is very important, Mr. Speaker, because we are taking a stand based upon legality and upon civilized life, that we follow all of the legalities in this case ourselves.

* * *

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

AMOUNT OF GASOLINE PRICE INCREASE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The major oil companies have moved the price of gasoline up 15 cents per litre. One cent per litre is worth $250 million to oil companies—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please state his question?

Mr. Skelly: Is the Minister prepared to sit back and wait while the oil companies take almost $5 billion out of the pockets of consumers, or would she be prepared to have her Department inquire immediately into the question of what a fair retail price for gasoline would be, and then attempt to have the oil companies roll their prices back to that amount?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have attempted twice to answer the Hon. Member's question, and I shall try for the third time. I will make it perfectly clear that the inquiry that is under way now will, I hope, produce the kind of statistics that will lead to measures that will be fair to all, to the oil companies and to the consumers.

I believe that it is fair to comment that much of this increase is due to increases in taxes which are, of course, at the provincial level. Let me make it very clear that this is also part of the problem.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT CANADA-UNITED STATES EXTRADITION TREATY BE SUSPENDED

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice and concerns the same subject. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if, in light of the shocking and contemptible attitude that has been displayed in the Jaffe case by the State of Florida, he would give serious consideration to suspending our extradition treaty with the State of Florida so that people do not have to face the quality of justice that is obviously administered in that State.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I certainly share the feelings of frustration that the Hon. Member has expressed with the State of Florida. Our extradition treaty, however, is not with the State of Florida but is with the Government of the United States. I do not think that the proper reaction at this stage would be to follow the course of action that my hon. friend recommends. I believe that we have no alternative at the moment but to place our emphasis and to put our priorities on the legal process because, after all, the legal process is what has been departed from by those who have seized Jaffe and put him in prison in Florida.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—DOWNING OF KOREAN AIRLINER—REJECTION OF CANADIAN NOTE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and, of course, it concerns the tragic downing of the KAL 007 flight. As the Government has attempted to give notice of a claim for compensation to the Soviet Union with respect to the tragic loss of ten Canadians and others who lost their lives on this plane, would the Prime Minister indicate what further steps the Government plans now to take, bearing in mind that it has twice been insulted by the Soviet Union, first when it refused to accept delivery of the mere note with respect to compensation and then sending it back by courier.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware of the fact that, while the Soviet Union has made the meaningless gesture of returning the note, neither our concern nor our claim will melt away like a seven-day wonder.

Some Hon. Members: It was not a meaningless gesture.

Mr. Regan: Rather, we intend to pursue our claim in that regard. The Hon. Member will recall that the Soviet Union originally rejected the claim for compensation made at the time the satellite Cosmos disintegrated and fell into Canadian territory. I point to that incident as a precedent with relation to their initial reaction.

Specifically, the Government will not only reiterate its position again to the Soviet Union but it will pursue its actions through ICAO, meetings of which are being held in Montreal at the present time, and whatever other measures appear to be appropriate.

REQUEST THAT SANCTIONS AGAINST SOVIET UNION BE INCREASED

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs who surely will recall that 269 souls lost their lives in the shooting down of this aircraft. It is not simply a bit of metal, which is what the Minister's comparison referred to. Would the Minister indicate what, in concrete terms, the Government will do to step up the sanctions against the Soviet Union, and as well applying them to Iron Curtain countries that appear to be supporting the Soviet Union, such as Poland and Czechoslovakia, at the Security Council of the United Nations, and now at ICAO in Montreal? Would the Minister say specifically if he is prepared to do something about stopping the flights to Gander, and will he stop the flights of the Polish airline LOT through Mirabel and the Czechoslovakian airline CSA through Mirabel, airlines which are simply circumventing the present restrictions on Aeroflot?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, I fear that the honourable and distinguished Member, with his new assignment as critic for foreign affairs, would perhaps need to consider very carefully whether the reaction of the Government should be against other countries than the country that caused the infraction, the U.S.S.R. I believe that that would be a very unwise policy for us to follow. Rather, we will continue to make strong demands against the Soviet Union for compensation.

I would point out to the Hon. Member that Canada was the first country to take sanctions and that it has taken stronger sanctions than other countries in relation to this matter, partly because of the fact that the lives of ten Canadian citizens were lost in this disaster. I do find the position taken by the Hon. Member strange in view of the fact that his initial reaction was that Canada should not over-react and should do nothing to damage the disarmament talks.

Official Report

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

LEVEL OF FUNDING ALLOWED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Provencher, and is directed to the Minister of Finance. Farmers have never had as much trouble when trying to finance their operations as they are having now. Legislation that was passed in the House last Spring allowed for borrowings by the FCC from the money markets of the world of up to $600 million. The Government saw fit to cut that back to $250 million. Why did the Minister of Finance cut that back?

● (1200)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I cut nothing back. The legislation the Hon. Member refers to is the maximum authorization. I want to remind the Hon. Member that we have provided to the FCC this year larger funds than it ever had in its whole history. I think that is a pretty good record of our concern for the farmers of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has served notice on the Chair of a point of order.

* * *

OFFICIAL REPORT

EDITORIAL CHANGES MADE TO ORIGINAL TEXT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the point of order I have for your consideration arises out of the remarks in a statement made yesterday by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) which in itself was generated by an exchange during the Question Period last Tuesday.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) asks where the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) is; he is unavoidably absent today with commitments of long standing.

An Hon. Member: And the day before.

Mr. Nielsen: The statement was based on an exchange arising out of an exchange between the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Leader of the Opposition last Tuesday. The root of it lies in the allegation by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton that alterations were made in Hansard, something which I have always considered to be a very serious matter.

Before embarking on the substance of the point—I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare in her seat—I can assure her, on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition, that he has always had the highest respect for that Minister, who I see is leaving the House now. I can assure her that that is backed up by the several telephone calls that the Leader of the Opposition has made to her office, which I am sure her staff has informed her about, in the hope that she would—I see the Minister playing her imaginary violin—in the hope that she would call back, but she has not yet done so.

Official Report

The words of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton yesterday will be found on page 27140 of Hansard in the right-hand column, as follows:

—it was clear that what was said in the House was changed in the official record. Whether it was changed by the Leader of the Opposition, or his staff, or by Hansard itself, is for Madam Speaker to determine. But one way or the other someone tampered with the words.

As the Chair and Hon. Members are well aware, these alterations in Hansard are permitted so long as they in no way change the sense of what was said and are for the purpose merely of correcting grammatical errors or correcting errors that were made in the transcription of the words uttered in the House.

As I undertook to do in the House yesterday, I have examined the "blues" very carefully. The original "blues" set out the exchange in this fashion:

UNE VOIX: Accouche!

"Une voix" is the equivalent of "An Hon. Member". The identification of "Une voix" of course was the Minister of Health. Beside her name appears the single word "Accouche".

Then the intervention of the Leader of the Opposition appears this way in the original of the French text of the "blues":

M. MULRONEY: Madame le Président, je dirai à l'honorable ministre de la Santé nationale et du bien-être social qu'en parlant d'accouchement, ça s'en vient, Monique ça s'en vient!

That was the original of the French text of the "blues".

Both of those interventions were altered. The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton is quite correct if he asserts they were altered. He can make his own judgment as to whether that amounts to tampering in a moment. The word appearing after "une voix" "Accouche", was altered to "Accouchez". Then in the intervention of the Leader of the Opposition, the original words were "Ça s'en vient. Ça s'en vient Monique parlant d'accouchement, Monique, ça s'en vient!" The alterations there were that the first words "ça s'en vient" were deleted, the second group of words "ça s'en vient" were deleted, the word "Monique" was deleted, and later on in the sentence again the word "Monique" was deleted; and this was substituted therefor—I have already read what was substituted therefor.

That, to my mind, Mr. Speaker, is an extensive alteration to Hansard and one which again, in my view, is not one of those which is customarily permitted with the objective of maintaining the accuracy of the original Hansard.

While those alterations were made, I have ascertained and can assure the House that the Leader of the Opposition did not make those alterations, nor did anyone on the staff of the Leader of the Opposition make those alterations. The alterations themselves, in their entirety, were made by the editors of French Hansard.

In order to put the editors' actions in a proper light, I hasten to assure the House that, with my extensive knowledge of the French language, the substance of what was said was not altered; but the repetitious nature of the exchange on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) saying that is not true. If he is accusing me of lying, he should stand up and say so or intervene in this debate.

The final version of Hansard in the French text at page 27064 renders the printed text as follows:

UNE VOIX: Accouchez!

That is an alteration. And:

M. MULRONEY: Madame le Président, je dirai à l'honorable ministre de la Santé nationale et du Bien-être social qu'en parlant d'accouchement, ça s'en vient!

We can see that it is quite different from what was actually said on the floor of the House.

To compound the difficulties, the French version of Hansard, as the Chair is aware, is not translated into English until very, very much later in the day. The text of the English translation is never available for checking until the next day, when we receive the printed version. The English translation in its original—I am citing from the "blues"—appears in this fashion:

AN HON. MEMBER: Get to the point!

MR. MULRONEY: I am getting there, Monique! I am getting there, do not worry, Monique.

That is the original translation which, again, has been altered, as far as Mr. Mulroney's intervention was concerned, in this fashion. The entire original "blues" sentence has been deleted and the following substituted therefore in English:

Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare that I will get there in due time.

The final printed version of Hansard renders the exchange in English at page 27064 as follows:

• (1210)

AN HON. MEMBER: —

Which, of course, is the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin).

Get to the point!

MR. MULRONEY: Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare that I will get there in due time.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, again relying on that very familiar knowledge which I have of the French language, in order to bolster what I have said about the terminology which was used, I quote from Larousse Dictionnaire in anglais and français. The French word "accoucher" is a medical term:

To be confined, to lie in, to be delivered, to accouche; to give birth to.

Then it goes on, and this is the sense in which the exchange took place, of which I am sure the Minister is aware:

To bring forth; to spit it out, to cough it up; out with it!

And that was the sense of the exchange yesterday, Mr. Speaker. That is what was intended, and while I do not intend to get into the exchange which took place between the Minister and the Leader of the Opposition before coming into the House that day, I am sure the Minister will recall the bantering which took place between herself and the Leader of the Opposition before coming into the House which gave rise to the term "accouche" in the first place.

Miss Bégin: That is not true. I did not say that.

Mr. Nielsen: However, I can assure the Minister that that was the sense in which the exchange was generated—"Get it out, spit it out, bring it forth, cough it up, get on with it!" It is often used in this House. Again, I want to reassure the Minister of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition has the highest respect for her and has been trying to get in touch with her since last Tuesday to tell her that personally.

The serious part of the whole matter, Sir, is the alteration of Hansard to the extent which occurred. I have no doubt that the intentions of the editors of French Hansard were of the best. However, I think that what happened here went a little beyond what is usually accepted as permissible in the privilege of Hon. Members to make alterations in Hansard. I would also suggest that in future when editorial changes are made to the text, they should then be resubmitted to Hon. Members for their checking, because in this instance that extensively altered passage was not resubmitted to the Leader of the Opposition, or to his staff, for double checking. It seems to me only fair, so that Hon. Members can judge whether an editorial insertion is in keeping with what they feel they said in the House, that those "blues" should be resubmitted to the Hon. Member concerned before they are printed in final form.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen). However, my first reaction is that we hope this matter could be terminated without too much further extension of comment and debate. The Chair will certainly look into the matter of the allegations with regard to Hansard.

The Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, without wishing to dwell on the impropriety and heavy-handedness of the incident that took place in the House, I would like to make it clear that since the House resumed its sittings, I have never met the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) before going into Oral Question Period. I accept apologies when they are due, but I also am very particular about the truth.

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated when I raised this issue originally, I did not raise it under a question of privilege nor a point of order. I simply wanted to call it to the attention of the House. I did not, frankly, want to make it a cause célèbre, as it seems to have become.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would like to observe that the Chair is concerned about the use of this new Standing Order in this way. If a matter is truly a matter of a point of order, it is perhaps preferable to raise it as such.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to do what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) has indicated he wanted to do, bring a little civility to the situation. I tried to soft pedal it by simply calling to the attention of the House the fact that Hansard is not to be altered. I believe the House leader for the Official Opposition has indicated that there have been extensive changes. I indicated a couple of things, one, that I thought that someone had made the alteration. I believe it goes a little bit beyond changing a word. I fell the sense of it has been changed. Certainly, for Michèle Tremblay, who writes for Le Journal de Montréal, and Mr. Michel Gratton, who writes for Le Droit, there was no question in their minds about what the meaning of this vulgar phrase was. That is the terminology which has been given to it. However, all I asked for was an indication or acknowledgment that Hansard had been changed, that that was not what was appropriate and that either an explanation or an apology should be given. I think that has been done.

I commend the House leader for the Official Opposition for trying to make the best of a poor case. I think he has done the best he could. I do not want to extend it, either, Mr. Speaker, but I can assure you in the future that if extensive changes like this are made by the Leader of the Opposition, or anyone else, I will raise it on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) obviously did not hear me. I said on more than one occasion in raising this point of order that there were no changes made by the Leader of the Opposition, either in the French "blues" or the English "blues". We did not even have an opportunity to see the English "blues". Nor were any changes made by any member of the staff of the Leader of the Opposition. The changes which were made, all of them, both in the French text and the English text of the "blues", were made by the editors of French Hansard in the one case and by the translators in the other case, not by the Leader of the Opposition or any of his staff.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I must say I do accept what the House Leader for the Opposition says. He says it was not changed by the staff; it was not changed by the Leader of the Opposition. I accept that because we accept Hon. Members' words in the House. That is the way we bring civility to this place. I am quite prepared to accept that the change was not made by the Leader of the Official Opposition. It just seems to me that Hansard went a little bit further in editorializing here, not changing words but changing meaning.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this point the Chair would appeal to Hon. Members to think twice before extending the discussion.

Does the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) want to be recognized on this point?

Mr. McGrath: No, a new point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for St. John's East on another point.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—USE OF S.O. 21 STATEMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with the substance of what the Hon. Member has said. It has to do with what I consider to be an improper use of Standing Order 21. I raised this matter yesterday, Mr. Speaker, as a point of order, and Madam Speaker indicated that she would examine what was said and rule on it. She gave me an indication she would rule today. I merely want to ask the Chair if the Chair is now ready to rule on that point of order. If not, I do not want this to stand as a precedent because otherwise this kind of clear abuse will destroy the intent of Standing Order 21.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this point the Chair is taking the whole matter under advisement, especially the matter relating to Hansard. As far as the ruling with regard to Standing Order 21 is concerned, the Chair is not prepared at this point to make further comment.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair has any comment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is not in a position to make further comments in regard to the matter raised by the Hon. Member.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,661, 4,818, 4,946 and 4,993.

[Text]

TRAINING OF RCMP PERSONNEL IN CHILE

Question No. 4,661—Mr. Stewart:

At any time since 1967, did the RCMP send any personnel to Chile for training of any nature and, if so (a) what were the dates and what was the number of personnel involved (b) what type of training was involved?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Insofar as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are concerned: No. RCMP personnel did, however, visit Chile in 1975 and 1982 as participants in the annual end of year trip taken by all members of the Senior Management Course from the National Defence College, Kingston.

INVOCATION OF DIPLOMATIC IMMUNITY

Question No. 4,818—Mr. Beatty:

1. Was diplomatic immunity invoked by countries to avoid prosecution for alleged violations of Canadian law, including traffic violations, in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 and, if so, on how many occasions for each country?

2. What was the nature of each offence and in which municipality did the alleged infraction occur?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) In 1981, 38 Diplomatic Missions requested the cancellation of 169 traffic violations and five Missions invoked diplomatic immunity for five other offences.

(b) In 1982, 39 Diplomatic Missions requested the cancellation of 240 traffic violations and six Missions invoked diplomatic immunity on six occasions for other offences.

2. The 169 traffic violations cancelled in 1981 included parking violations (132), speeding (28) suspension of a driver's licence (4), impaired driving (3) and failure to wear a seat belt (2). The other offences of 1981 consisted in shop-lifting (3), fraudulent use of a cheque (1) and illegal use of the mail (1). The traffic violations occured in the Ottawa/Hull area (146), in the Montreal area (15), in other parts of Ontario (7) and Alberta (1). The five other offences took place in the Ottawa/Hull area.

The 240 traffic violations cancelled in 1982 consisted of parking infractions (220), speeding (14), failure to wear a seat belt (4), impaired driving (1) and the use of studded tires (1). They occured in the Ottawa/Hull area (217), in the Montreal area (15), in the Toronto area (5), and in Vancouver (3). The other offenses consisted in shop-lifting (4), fraudulent use of a cheque (1) and possession of a small quantity of marijuana (1). Five of the latter offences took place in the Ottawa/Hull area and one in Montreal.

The Department considers that disclosure of the names of the Missions concerned would not be in keeping with Canada's obligation under Article 22 of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations requesting the host country to take all appropriate steps to protect Missions from disturbance of their peace or impairment of their rights.

SHOAL LAKE

Question No. 4,946—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Did the Government recently meet with the Government of Manitoba to discuss the matter of Shoal Lake?

2. Was the City of Winnipeg invited to take part in these discussions and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. With respect to the Shoal Lake issue, the Government is represented at both the "all party negotiation" meetings and at "technical review committee" meetings.

The last negotiation meeting was held in Winnipeg on March 22, 1983. Representatives from the Province of Manitoba, Environment Canada, the Band, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the City of Winnipeg were in attendance.

A technical review meeting was held in Winnipeg on May 5, 1983, to discuss sewage and solid waste disposal. The meeting was attended by representatives from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Health and Welfare Canada, the Band and Environment Canada and the Environmental Protection Service (E.P.S.) Winnipeg. In addition, Mr. Hamish Gavin, Environment Canada, Winnipeg, met with the City of Winnipeg and the Province of Manitoba on March 2, 1983, and May 6, 1983, to discuss the waste disposal issue.

2. Yes, see response to part 1.

INCOME SECURITY PROGRAM—TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES

Question No. 4,993—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of National Health and Welfare intend to transfer any employees now involved in the administration of Income Security Programs from Halifax to Sydney?

2. What are the names of the departmental employees subject to transfer from Halifax to Sydney and what is their classification and salary level?

3. What benefits will be provided by the Department to employees subject to transfer from Halifax to Sydney?

4. What rights will accrue to the departmental employees who will not accept transfer from Halifax to Sydney and what alternate employment will be provided?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare will transfer any of its indeterminate staff now employed in the Income Security Programs' Nova Scotia Regional Office from Halifax to Sydney should they elect to relocate with the office.

2. See list below.

3. Those employees electing to transfer to Sydney will be eligible: (a) for all benefits provided under the Treasury Board Relocation Policy (July 8, 1982); (b) to compete for Public Service positions in Halifax for a period of 12 months following transfer.

4. Those Halifax indeterminate employees unwilling or unable to transfer to Sydney will have the following rights:

(a) They will be eligible for transfer to any available equivalent positions, for which they are, or can become, qualified, within the Income Security Programs' Branch anywhere in Canada.

(b) They will be eligible for retraining where the probability exists that a position will be available which requires the new expertise, and the employee will successfully complete the training.

(c) They will have staffing priority within the Department and the Public Service as a whole for a period of nine months prior to the relocation of their division and twelve months thereafter.

(d) individual counselling will be provided to all employees with respect to: (i) their rights as employees faced with a reorganization and, (ii) what additional benefits they may be eligible to receive under the Superannuation Act.

List of National Health and Welfare Employees
Eligible for Transfer to Sydney, N.S.
as of June 28, 1983

Employee Names	Classification & Level	Salary Range
Dempster, M.	PM 6	$41,062 to $46,353.
Burns, S. M.	PM 4	$29,289 to $33,005.
Dewan, A. F.	PM 4	$29,289 to $33,005.
Legg, L. G.	PM 4	$29,289 to $33,005.
MacMillan, B.	PM 2	$24,741 to $27,872.
Murray, J. A.	PM 2	$24,741 to $27,872.
O'Quinn, A. C.	PM 2	$24,741 to $27,872.
Richardson, G. M.	PM 2	$24,741 to $27,872.
Noade, S. A.	AS 4	$28,571 to $31,793.
Walker, D. M.	AS 3	$26,451 to $29,513.
Ryan, B. J.	AS 2	$24,818 to $27,781.
Karlich, F. A.	AS 1	$22,304 to $25,826.
Lewin, J. W.	FI 2	$26,011 to $29,166.
Dempsey, D. C.	CR 5	$21,923 to $23,976.
Innes, J. C.	CR 5	$21,923 to $23,976.
Oldham, M. M.	CR 5	$21,923 to $23,976.
Poore, A. A.	CR 5	$21,923 to $23,976.
Porter, L. M.	CR 5	$21,923 to $23,976.
Raftus, V. E.	CR 5	$21,923 to $23,976.
Strople, D. E.	CR 5	$21,923 to $23,976.
Vautour, D. S.	CR 5	$21,923 to $23,976.
Beck, G. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Burns, H. F.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Cameron, K. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Camus, S. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Casson, E. P.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Crandall, J. V.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Flanders, E. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Hamilton, R. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Jewers, G. R.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Jones, G. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Joudrey, R. J. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
McDermott, L. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Mackenzie, S. L.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
MacKenna, M. A.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
McNeil, H. I.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Munroe, D. B. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Pumphrey, C. J.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Purcell, N. P.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Rutka, N. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Shirley, E.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Skier, V. L.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Tucker, N. M.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Young, K. P.	CR 4	$19,315 to $21,121.
Darrington, D. M.	CR 3	$17,401 to $19,015.
Marriott, L. E.	CR 3	$17,401 to $19,015.
MacDonald, M. A.	CR 3	$17,401 to $19,015.
McManus, H. D.	CR 3	$17,401 to $19,015.
Belliveau, C. L.	CR 2	$14,583 to $15,826.
Creaser, S. L.	CR 2	$14,583 to $15,826.
Daye, V. M.	CR 2	$14,583 to $15,826.
Jacquemin, V. F.	CR 2	$14,583 to $15,826.
Martell, R.	CR 2	$14,583 to $15,826.
Martin, E. N.	CR 2	$14,583 to $15,826.
Raine, R. C.	CR 2	$14,583 to $15,826.
Themens, J.	CR 2	$14,583 to $15,826.
Sanford, D. B.	DACON 4	$18,978 to $20,752.
Adekayode, K. A.	DACON 2	$14,925 to $17,236.

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act

Employee Names	Classification & Level	Salary Range
Rice, B. A.	OEMEO 4	$18,239 to $20,588.
MacInnis, W. M.	OEMEO 3	$16,676 to $18,813.
Mitchell, C. E.	OEMEO 3	$16,676 to $18,813.
Chaddock, P.	STOCE 2	$16,380 to $17,866.
McCarthy, T. G.	STOCE 2	$16,380 to $17,866.
Mifflin, G.	STSCY 2	$17,991 to $19,671.

Note: Salary Range as of January 1, 1983.

[Translation]

Mr. Evans: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

● (1220)

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSIONS' REPORTS RESPECTING QUEBEC, ONTARIO, BRITISH COLUMBIA, NEWFOUNDLAND AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

The House proceeded to the consideration of objections to the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for the Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, Newfoundland and the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order affecting the conduct of the debate on these reports. The Chair will recall that yesterday a House Order was passed by unanimous consent. Its text is to be found at page 6155 of yesterday's Votes and Proceedings. It was ordered:

That, on Friday September 16, 1983, upon reaching Orders of the Day, the House shall take up and consider the objections to the Reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for the Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia and Newfoundland and for the Northwest Territories;

That, at 3:00 o'clock p.m., consideration of the objections shall be adjourned; and

That the reports of the Commissions be referred back to the Chief Electoral Officer when consideration of the objections is completed by the House.

Sir, my point of order relates to the procedures to be followed by the House in dealing with Members' objections to the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Provinces of Newfoundland, Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, and the Northwest Territories. The House Order passed yesterday stipulates that the objections be taken up and be considered between the end of Routine proceedings today and three o'clock p.m. However, Mr. Speaker, the House Order failed to stipulate the manner in which these objections would be dealt with. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), rose to seek clarification of the procedure to be followed and the Government House Leader indicated the objections would not be dealt with seriatim but that any objection could be addressed in any way by any Member.

I submit, Sir, that the rules and practices of this House do not permit objections to be considered in this manner unless the procedure is clearly spelled out in the House Order. Looking back to the procedure followed in 1966, one can see that the practices of the House were to consider each objection to each report individually.

I do not want to take up too much of the House's time with this but I will refer you to one specific example of this procedure. At page 4424 of Hansard for April 28, 1966, the following words are found:

MR. SPEAKER: On February 15 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with me in the following terms:

I will not read the motion. He then went on to say:

This is objection No. 11 and can be found at page 22 of the pamphlet distributed to Hon. Members.

At page 4432 of Hansard for the same day we see that the debate on this objection is completed and the House moves on to consider the next objection. The Speaker's words on that occasion were as follows:

THE ACTING SPEAKER (MR. RINFRET): Has the house concluded its consideration of objection No. 11 concerning the province of New Brunswick?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER (MR. RINFRET): The House having considered this objection, it will be my duty pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof. We shall now proceed with the consideration of the objection concerning the province of Alberta, Objection No. 2, found on pages 2 and 3 of the pamphlet.

In 1976, the next debate on the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, the Government House Leader anticipated procedures which would have to be followed and moved a motion before each debate that permitted objections to different reports to be considered at the same time. Examples of these motions can be found at pages 11706, 12363 and 12412 of Hansard for 1976. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read one of those motions into the record for sake of comparison with yesterday's House Order. It is to be found at page 11706 of Hansard for March 11, 1976:

That at 8:00 p.m. this day the House shall take up consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Nova Scotia;

That, after completion of consideration of the said report, the House shall take up consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for British Columbia, but, if consideration of the report for Nova Scotia has not been completed at 8:40 p.m., the said consideration shall be adjourned and the House shall proceed forthwith to consideration of the report for British Columbia; and

That, after completion of consideration of the said report for British Columbia, the House shall take up consideration of objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Alberta, but, if consideration of the report for British Columbia has not been completed at 9:20 p.m., the said consideration shall be adjourned and the House shall proceed forthwith to consideration of the report for Alberta—

That motion was agreed to on the following page of Hansard for that day. At page 12363 of Hansard for April 1, 1976, the then House Leader, Mr. Sharp, said:

MR. SHARP: Mr. Speaker, hopefully, I will have the agreement of the House to approve a motion which appears under notices of motions at page 13 of today's order paper as follows:

That, on Monday, April 5, 1976, the House shall continue to sit between 6.00 p.m. and 8.00 p.m.;

That, on Tuesday, April 6, 1976, the House shall not adjourn until the completion of the business provided for in this order;

That, on the aforementioned days, no private members business shall be taken up;

That, on the aforementioned days, the business taken up shall be the consideration of objections to reports of Electoral Boundaries Commissions;

That all objections to any given report be considered at the same time;

That the objections or groups of objections, as the case may be, be considered in the order in which the objection or first objection in the group, as the case may be, was laid upon the table; and

That during the consideration of any objection or group of objections, as the case may be, no member shall speak more than once, nor for more than twenty minutes.

At that time the then Hon. Member for Grenville-Carleton was the Opposition House Leader and he said:

Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader has discussed the matter with me and we are prepared to consent.

Consent was had on that occasion. I would also ask the Chair to look at page 12412 of Hansard, April 2, 1976 where again the point I make is quite clear.

As you will note, Mr. Speaker, the House Order used in 1976 provided for separate consideration of the objections to each report. This is the most important point, Sir, because the rules of the House hold that only one question may be before the House at any given time. Citation 411(3) of Beauchesne—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member. He is overwhelming in his eloquence and the Chair might be prepared, without offending the Hon. Member, to indicate that he has put a very persuasive case and does he need to put it further?

Mr. Nielsen: I just need 60 seconds, Sir. I want to cite to the Chair Citation 411(3) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which supports my contention that such matters have to be dealt with separately.

I suggest, Sir, that because no provision was made in the House Order yesterday to call the objections and reports separately, each objection to be considered today must be called individually and the debate then adjourned on each by 3 p.m. not only to meet the terms of the House Order passed yesterday but the established practice of this House. Furthermore, Sir, I am somewhat concerned about the procedure that was followed earlier this year with respect to the objections on which debate has already commenced, and therefore I would ask you to consider the acceptability of the procedures followed, particularly on March 18, 1983, when objections to the reports for the Provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba were considered.

Thank you, Sir.

● (1230)

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with care to what the House Leader for the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) has said and I do believe that it is entirely proper to group together objections of this kind and to debate them in that way. That was the situation earlier this year when we examined the objections with regard to the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for other Provinces. Certainly that was the case on June 17, at which time we examined the reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan. Objections with regard to both of those reports were given at that time and debate was, as is provided in the House order for today, adjourned to a later date.

The purpose today, obviously, was to open debate on these matters so that all who wished to speak could speak today and to continue the debate at a later time. I suggest that the House order stands on its own. The House order is clear and the procedures are entirely in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is in the hands of the House. To the best knowledge of the Chair, the House order does not specifically state that they must all be debated together. I would like to have a copy of the order, if I may. However, it seems to me that if the House wishes to consider items individually, seriatim, then that would be a normal and appropriate way of proceeding.

The House order reads as follows:

By unanimous consent, it was ordered,—That, on Friday September 16, 1983, upon reaching Orders of the Day, the House shall take up and consider the objections to the Reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for the Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia and Newfoundland and for the Northwest Territories;

That, at 3.00 o'clock p.m., consideration of the objections shall be adjourned; and

That the reports of the Commissions be referred back to the Chief Electoral Officer when consideration of the objections is completed by the House.

The House order does not specify that they must all be discussed at once. The Chair is quite prepared, if that is the wish of the House, to accept the motions seriatim as proposed, and suggests that we get on with the debate. Are there any further comments?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the understanding is, of course, that all of the reports are open and that all of the statements of objection are subject to debate. I think the House order is quite clear that debate will commence on all of these items and that it will resume at a later date with regard to all of these items.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has made a ruling that the House order states that they shall be considered in the course of the afternoon. It does not specify that all are to be debated at one time. That is not in the House order and unless there is unanimous agreement that that should be the case, the normal parliamentary procedure would be to consider the items seriatim. I suggest that we would need unanimous consent of the House to vary a normal agreement.

The House order, in the opinion of the Chair, does not specify that all items should be considered or be open for debate at the same time. Short of a specification in the order, the Chair is quite prepared to accept the argument of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Accordingly, we will discuss objection No. 8, I believe. Shall I dispense with the reading?

Mr. Nielsen: You might identify the constituencies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The objection to provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Northwest Territories is as follows:

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970), consideration be given by this House to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Northwest Territories, laid before this House by the Speaker on Friday, June 3, 1983, on the grounds set forth hereinafter:

1. The Commission failed to give adequate attention and consideration to geographical, political and demographic factors when planning the redistribution of electoral boundaries within the Territories, factors which are specifically provided for by subsections 13(c)(i) and 13(c)(ii) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to be included in the terms of reference of the Commission.

2. In particular the Commission continued to exclude the Municipality of Tuktoyaktuk and the adjoining Beaufort Sea coastal area from the electoral district of Western Arctic although the economic, cultural and transport related ties of this area are with the Mackenzie Delta in the Western Arctic rather than with the main body of the Nunatsiaq electoral district.

3. The Commission did not give adequate consideration to all of the representations made to the Commission during the public sittings that were held in the months of March and April, 1983.

4. And such other objections that the undersigned Members may consider applicable in order to carry out the spirit and terms and conditions of the Act in question.

Is it necessary for me to read the names of the Hon. Members who have signed?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, again I seek clarification. We now have at least three suspended discussions with regard to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan. Am I to understand from Your Honour's ruling that these matters are to be dealt with seriatim—according to the information which was conveyed yesterday, although I do not see it in the House order, concerning Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, Newfoundland and the Northwest Territories—that we will conclude debate on Quebec today—

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —and conclude debate on Ontario?

Mr. Nielsen: No, no.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am seeking clarification on this matter so that the record will show that we are not concluding the debates on any of them. We are having a ragtag and bobtailed sort of mess created here by not dealing with them conclusively, one at a time, in the order that was—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Chair can set the Hon. Member straight. There is an item before us. It is open to debate. This afternoon the House will deal with the items listed for debate. The matters that he has raised are not listed for debate this afternoon. The debate will be adjourned at three o'clock.

Mr. Nickerson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was of the impression that we were to proceed this morning with objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point of order has been raised, and by the House Leader for the Hon. Member's Party. The Chair has clearly ruled that what is before us are the objections to the Nunatsiaq electoral district. That is the item before us. That is the item open to debate.

Mr. Nielsen: That being the report that was first tabled; and we will be taking these in sequence as they were tabled with the Chair. That might help to clarify the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no Hon. Members rising to be recognized—the Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

Mr. Nickerson: If the Chair would kindly allow me to continue with my point of order, I was saying that in conversations with my colleagues this morning I was of the understanding that the procedure was to proceed with the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario. As a consequence, I do not have my notes with me and, being the Member for the Northwest Territories, I am most interested in engaging in the debate of this particular objection.

I would therefore request unanimous consent of the House that consideration of the objection to the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Northwest Territories be held over until later this afternoon.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that is perhaps a suggestion which will lend itself to acceptance by the House, particularly as the Hon. Member on the Government side, the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), who has filed the objection, is not with us today. The House might want to consider what has happened thus far, the commencement of the debate under the law, and consent that this debate now be adjourned to be taken up at some later date.

● (1240)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Accordingly, we will adjourn the debate on the previous item. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed by agreement to the next item, the objections related to the federal districts in the Province of Quebec. If it is the wish of the House I will read the objections, but shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, as long as we are clear that they will be dealt with seriatim. I think the Chair would help us by identifying each of the reports as they were filed with the Table so they will be taken in that order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the Chair will be permitted a few moments before replying to that. Meanwhile, the debate concerning the objections to the Province of Quebec could commence. At the earliest opportunity perhaps the Chair could set that on the record in order to assist the Hon. Member for Yukon. Are there Hon. Members seeking to be recognized at this point?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I know from talking to some of my colleagues from Quebec that they had not anticipated this. I wonder if we could "prorogue" for five minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Verdun-St. Paul (Mr. Savard) seeks to be recognized. The Chair recognizes him at this point.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun-Saint Paul): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity today to make a few comments on the readjustment of electoral boundaries. On February 17 of this year, I appeared before the Commissioners to submit objections concerning my constituency of Verdun-Saint Paul, which I have represented in the House since 1977. I drew their attention to some minor changes regarding my constituency. My purpose was to draw their attention to these changes that would enable me to maintain proper representation of this constituency in Parliament. I feel the changes are in accordance with the Elections Act, and I earnestly hope that the Commissioners will endorse my recommendations and so keep parishes and communities intact.

The changes I am proposing are aimed solely at maintaining the natural identity of the constituency, and as such, they also meet the population requirements as defined by the Commission. After several meetings with my constituents, I was told by everyone that the Commission definitely had to respect the wishes of the people.

At the meeting on February 17 of this year, a number of Members concerned by the adjustments appeared before the Commission to support these recommendations and provide additional information.

Mr. Speaker, today, I would like to talk about the history of my constituency. The town of Verdun is more than a hundred years old. When the history of Montreal was written, the author may not have had much to say about the history of this very small piece of land. The fact is, that although the land was parcelled out some time ago, it was not developed until much later. Until the beginning of this century, the town of Verdun was a swamp flooded by the St. Lawrence for most of the year.

The present town occupies a narrow strip between the St. Lawrence and the Lachine Canal, and it was not until 1852 that the town began to take shape. Nowadays, Verdun has a very high population density, although there has always been a ban on buildings over three stories high. Only Ile-des-Sœurs has allowed the construction of modern apartment highrises during the last few years. Within a period of 100 years, Verdun's population has grown from its initial 200 inhabitants to its present number of 80,000, a case that may be unique.

Like all towns, the population of Verdun is made up of members of the working class, led by a middle class elite—relatively speaking—a small aristocracy of upstanding citizens. Today, Verdun has made a name for itself in more than one field, but on the whole, its leaders have been content with modest aspirations. As the town developed, it always kept its identity as a parish. If we are to understand the significance of such statements, I think it is essential to recognize that the attitudes, traditions and habits of communities that develop in an urban environment are fundamentally different from those in rural centres.

It is common knowledge that in smaller centres, there is a trend towards movements, groups and associations that tend to attract people with common interests. This very typical tendency is often due to a very definite desire and motivation to acquire the mechanisms, institutions, tools and means to renew, in some cases, and to improve and develop in others, the community's social, cultural, economic, athletic and other resources. Verdun has 21 churches, including 7 Catholic churches and 14 Protestant churches, the latter representing 7 denominations. Over the years, a school administration has developed with components representing communities that have worked together and developed in the same environment in the course of time.

Economically speaking, Verdun was able to develop its territory by taking advantage of the land available on Île-des-Sœurs and bringing in service industries which provided jobs for local people. The entire community always has direct access to its federal Member of Parliament and the Commission should realize that it must respect the identity of this community and refrain from further enlarging its territory, bearing in mind that part of the territory of Montreal, namely Côte-St. Paul and Ville-Emard, is already part of this federal constituency.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I earnestly hope that constituencies that have objections will be allowed to ask for a new adjustment before the changes proposed by the Commission are accepted, so that we can have a chance to submit the views of our constituents.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think it is incumbent upon the Chair to explain to the House that as an occupant of the chair I am unable to enter into debate. Even if I were not presently in the chair, the regulations prohibit my expression of any comments during debate.

Since the matter is rather a technical subject, I thought it would be acceptable to the House if some other Hon. Member took up the objection which I raised in reference to my own riding. That being the case and provided the House is agreed, I would recognize the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) for that purpose.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I consider it an honour to be a surrogate in this particular instance and because it makes such eminent good sense I am quite happy to make the point.

The riding of Lachine has been so named for 15 or 20 years. The new name proposed by the Commission is "Jacques-Cartier". It is the same name as one of the provincial ridings within the boundaries of the present Lachine. Accordingly, it is the recommendation that the name "Lachine" should be adopted to avoid any confusion with the provincial seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I repeat the procedure that the House has adopted and was adopted, as I understand, by unanimous consent. It is that rather than proceed by Province, objections will be dealt with seriatim in the order that they exist in the hands of the Chair. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) raises the point which I feel is important to the House. My understanding is that we are not proceeding by grouping of Provinces but rather by the order in which they appear in the hands of the Chair seriatim.

Therefore, the next objection which I have in fact deals with the Province of Ontario, which is irrelevant in the procedural sense, and would deal with what I would expect to be the riding called Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

• (1250)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. First, with respect, we are not proceeding in the manner in which we were proceeding by consent but in accordance with the rules. That was the ruling of the Chair.

Second, it is my understanding of dealing with matters seriatim that each of the reports in the order in which they reached the Table are to be called. We have dealt now with the Nunatsiaq. We have dealt with the Chair's riding and we must now, I would suggest, proceed to identify the ridings for which reports have been filed in each of the other cases where objections have been filed in the Province of Quebec in the order in which they were laid upon the Table.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. When I used the word "seriatim" yesterday, I intended it to mean Province by Province as indicated in the agreement that was reached yesterday. However, since the "seriatimness" of the proceedings—if I may use the term—has been changed, and I quite see that this does make eminent sense, may we have now the order in which the various objections were tabled so that we may have some time to prepare? That could be done between now and two o'clock. The Speaker does seem to have a whole list and I would be interested to know whether I shall be on my feet with respect to Esquimalt-Saanich in British Columbia today or some time next week.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps in order to allow the Chair an opportunity to consider the procedure, as well as the Government, and since it is very close to one o'clock, Hon. Members might wish to call it one o'clock and come back at two o'clock and deal with the matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the proposal made by both the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) may make sense.

Let me explain to Members that what I have in hand are objections raised in the order in which they were received by the Chair. That is to say, they will move from one particular riding to another in that order and we will necessarily be crossing provincial boundaries as we proceed with debate. The Hon. Member for Yukon indicated, quite rightly, that the Deputy Speaker made his ruling to the effect that we would proceed seriatim. The word seriatim in this case means in the same order as the objections were received by the Chair.

Perhaps I can be of some use to Hon. Members if I were to take a moment just before one o'clock to follow the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich and read to Hon. Members the list of ridings which are under consideration. I am going to have a problem with that—I will recognize the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) in a minute—because the manner in which these objections have been provided to me is such that the name of the particular riding is not given within the form of the objection. One has to draw a conclusion by reading, in some cases, the list of signatories to the objection, and in that fashion being able, hopefully, to guess correctly which riding is under debate.

I think in the circumstances I ought to ask the Table officers if they would be so kind over the period from one o'clock to two o'clock to make sure that by two o'clock I am able to provide the House with an accurate, updated list of the ridings to which objections have been made in the order they have been made, in accordance with the ruling made by the Deputy Speaker earlier.

I think the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich is very much in order. Perhaps with the co-operation of the Table officers the list of ridings could be made available in photocopy form in both languages and put on the desks of all Hon. Members by two o'clock.

If that is agreeable to the House I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on a point of order, and certainly I think in the circumstances I would want to entertain the suggestion that we call it one o'clock as soon as everybody is ready.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, if we are going to call it one o'clock, there is no problem. I wanted to make a remark on the constituency of Lachine, the matter presently under discussion. While originally I was under the impression that I could make my remark at any time up to three o'clock, if under the new set-up something is to be concluded and I cannot get back to it, then I raise that problem. However, if we are going to adjourn at one o'clock, let us leave it until two o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If I may deal with that, the Hon. Member is quite correct. Under the ruling made by the Deputy Speaker earlier, we are going to dispose of these objections riding by riding. At the end of the debate in the case of each and every riding, I would then indicate that the debate is adjourned on the subject matter of that riding. When the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil indicates that he would like to comment on the subject, in this case regarding Lachine, that is in order and it would be important that he have the opportunity to do so before the Chair declares the debate on that riding is adjourned.

If, then, the House is agreeable to calling it one o'clock, we would understand that at two o'clock debate will reopen and continue on the subject matter of the riding of Lachine. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly, I will call it one o'clock.

I see the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to note that we are dealing with objections on a provincial basis, not on a constituency basis. It was my understanding that we were dealing this morning with NWT. That was put aside for later consideration. We have been dealing with the Province of Quebec and I assume we will continue with that. It seems to me that we are going on a province by province basis because the objections are filed on that basis. I see you are shaking your head, Mr. Speaker, but it is my understanding that the way we should deal with these objections, on a provincewide basis and we will go on with whatever province is next on your list, Ontario or whatever. In other words, we will deal with them on a province wide basis. Everybody who wants to speak on the objections which they have on that province has that opportunity to do so. It does not preclude adjourning the debate for further consideration at another time. That seems to me to be the most orderly way to do it.

I think the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) just wants to know when the B.C. objections would be heard so he would have an opportunity to debate his objections at that time. I hope that is the basis on which we will proceed after lunch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to make clear to the Hon. Member and to any other Hon. Member who may be either suffering from a misunderstanding or who may wish, indeed, that we would proceed in the fashion as described by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) that in fact, we are not proceeding in that manner. That was determined in the ruling made by the Deputy Speaker previously in the Chair. My understanding is that Hon. Members understood me clearly and understood my predecessor clearly. We are going to proceed riding by riding without distinction of provincial boundaries. That is the ruling made already.

I will give Hon. Members an example of how we will proceed. The debate currently is on the riding of Lachine in the Province of Quebec. It will be followed by debate, although it is not clear from the format, on the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, in the Province of Ontario. That will be followed by a debate on the riding of Rimouski-Témiscouata, in the Province of Quebec. The following after that will again be Quebec. The following after that will be a riding in the Province of Newfoundland. It is clear to Members that they will be proceeding by ridings without reference to provincial boundaries.

I repeat again the debate will continue at two o'clock on the subject matter of the riding of Lachine.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, if I may contribute a little to this debate, what seems to be quite confusing to Members is this. I was under the impression that we would proceed province by province. I think we could certainly agree at least to proceed district by district within provinces, which will make more sense. If there are Members who want to make representation, at least they will be aware at a certain time in the day or at a time later that their province will be called. They will have to wait their turn if they want to speak about a certain district within a province.

• (1300)

I would just like to put on the record for supplementary consideration during the lunch hour that we will not jump from one region of Canada to another one. I put to my good friend with whom I co-operate all the time, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), whether it would not be more orderly if we proceeded district by district but within each province of Canada.

I will not participate in the debate. I want to listen to it, though; I am very interested in listening to my colleagues. I made no representation; I only signed one for a colleague of mine in the Province of Quebec. I think we would proceed more orderly if we proceeded province by province, eliminate the possibility of debate within a province and then move on to another province. I have no strong feeling on that, but I wanted to submit it for consideration during the lunch hour.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think there has been a great deal of confusion here. That confusion is unnecessary because yesterday when the House order was put forward and given unanimous consent, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) was asked by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) how we would proceed, and because the debate was on a Friday, there were Hon. Members who would not be here but who would want to participate in the debate. At that time the President of the Privy Council indicated precisely what was the meaning of the House order.

As reported on page 27151 of Hansard, the question by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich was:

> Madam Speaker, my point of order is about the debate on the objections to the electoral boundaries. The President of the Privy Council mentioned the objections from a variety of Provinces, including Quebec and British Columbia.

There were probably others. It is not clear to me, however, whether we will be dealing with them seriatim or whether they will be mixed and anyone can rise having objections under Quebec, then British Columbia and then Ontario. I think clarification on that is required.

Then the President of the Privy Council, who drafted the House order which was passed unanimously yesterday, responded by saying, as reported at page 27152 of Hansard:

Yes, Madam Speaker. As soon as they are recognized, Hon. Members will be able to express their views and speak to the objections of their choice, whatever the Province. That is why we do not want the debate to be terminated at 3 p.m., since we realize that not all Hon. Members will be able to speak tomorrow, considering the number of Provinces involved. However, as the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) pointed out, by law, we have no choice but to start the debate, and we want it to cover all the Provinces and Territories I mentioned earlier, but, as the Hon. Member pointed out, when a Member is recognized, he is free to speak to the electoral boundaries of a constituency in any of the four or five Provinces and Territories I mentioned before.

The confusion we now have has arisen for some reason, but there is no doubt in Hansard what was the intent of the President of the Privy Council when he put forward that motion. The explanation was clear prior to its being given unanimous consent by Hon. Members of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: After, after.

Mr. Evans: I would like now to call it one o'clock and perhaps prior to two o'clock we could come to some agreement as to the precise meaning of this so that we can commence the debate as intended at two o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In response to the remarks of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, obviously it is to the benefit of all Hon. Members of the House the decision be made now so that Hon. Members coming in at two o'clock will know where they are going.

May I in the briefest way indicate to Hon. Members what has happened. The Hon. Member for Yukon rose. He referred to various aspects of procedure and made various quotations from authorities on the subject. He sought a ruling from the Deputy Speaker as to whether or not objections to ridings would be debated seriatim, as he said, in the order they were presented to the Chair. The Deputy Speaker ruled that they would be in that order. That means there will be a transfer from one particular province to another. That ruling is perfectly clear.

As the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) suggested and as I think the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is suggesting, the House may decide that it should go a different way, by grouping ridings by province. The Chair has no difficulty in that regard. What I am faced with, however, is that my predecessor has made a ruling and obviously I will not overrule it. Hon. Members can easily find a way out. If by unanimous consent they wish to proceed in another manner, there is no difficulty. I thought it would be a courtesy to the House to have the decision made before the lunch hour so that Hon. Members could return knowing what is happening.

Mr. Prud'homme: One o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: One o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Then I have to say, as I have already indicated, that we will proceed on the ruling which is in effect as of this time. At two o'clock Hon. Members will find on their desks lists of the ridings in the order in which they have been handed to the Chair for the purposes of debate. If the House decides on some different approach at two o'clock, so be it.

It being after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair with some relief until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.06 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock, Hon. Members who were present at that time will recall that there were several points of order raised as to the manner in which the House might best proceed for discussion of the objections which have been provided to the Chair, and now to the House, related to electoral redistribution in the various provinces of Canada.

This morning, my predecessor in the chair, the Deputy Speaker, had ruled on a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the ruling in effect requires that discussions in the House proceed, not by province nor grouped by province, but seriatim by riding in the order in which the objections were brought to the attention of the Chair.

Following that, several Hon. Members suggested that it might be more convenient if the objections to the individual ridings were raised and dealt with province by province. Since it is not the intention of the Chair to overrule the ruling of my predecessor, it would then be a matter for unanimous consent if the House decides to proceed in some fashion different from that ruled on by the Deputy Speaker.

I would like to make one thing particularly clear to all Hon. Members. It may lurk in the minds of some Hon. Members that if an Hon. Member does not raise an objection to the Electoral Boundaries Commission redistribution of ridings today, such an Hon. Member may in some fashion lose some right or prerogative which he might otherwise have.

• (1410)

It is the intention of the Chair, just prior to three o'clock, at which time the House Order calls for an adjournment of the debate, to read the list of ridings, whether grouped by province or not is irrelevant, and to indicate that debate on objections to those ridings will adjourn and has been adjourned as of three o'clock.

Further debate is entirely in order but to underline the point I am making, no Member, whether present or absent, whether he or she speaks or does not speak to the subject matter of an objection to a riding, will in any way lose his or her right to entertain or to enter into debate at another time, subject of course to the usual proceedings and the matter being again brought before the House.

At this moment I have before the House debate on the subject of the riding of Lachine in the Province of Quebec. I would point out to Hon. Members that it is a particularly interesting case as it happens to be the riding I have the honour to represent, but I am not allowed by regulation or by Standing Order to enter into discussion in that regard. In that case I would proceed to recognize the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert).

I am also aware that in one particular case one of the Ministers of the Crown has a flight to catch and will ask whether she might seek the unanimous consent of the House to accommodate her in that regard.

I will now recognize Hon. Members on points of order so that we may proceed.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, you have stated what the intention of the Chair is to be at three o'clock. With great respect, I suggest that that initiative is a Member's initiative and not that of the Chair. It was my intention, and I so conveyed it to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans), that I would be rising at five minutes to three to make a suggestion to the House, which I think will be acceptable, as to how to deal with these matters by three o'clock, by unanimous consent.

With respect to the Hon. Minister who has an airplane to catch, we would be very pleased to accommodate her if you would be disposed to call the objection she is interested in prior to the calling of any others.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I commend you on the clarity with which you defined the situation. Prior to the luncheon adjournment you indicated that it might be possible to have a list of the objections by electoral district or riding distributed to every Member. I wonder if it has been possible for the Clerk to arrange for that to be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I refer Hon. Members to the projected order of business for the day. The Clerks at the Table have accepted the request made earlier through the Chair that the series of objections be made available to all Members of the House. They are in the order that I have described, that is, by time reference to when they appeared in the hands of the Chair. Unless the House chooses some other mechanism of doing business, that would be the order in which I propose to continue.

That leaves me a problem and perhaps I can resolve it by suggesting that if the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil is agreeable to the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Yukon, we would put aside debate on the riding of Lachine for the moment and allow the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) to proceed with the objection in which she is interested.

Is that agreeable to all Members of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the convenience of being able to present my objections this afternoon and I thank Hon. Members of the House for their kindness.

I rise today on a matter of supreme importance to my constituents. I might add that I had promised them that today was going to be the day I raised these objections, and they are most keen to hear them.

I might add as well that I am doing what I think is the most important thing a Member of Parliament is elected to do, and that is to protect and fight for the people we represent.

There are few more solemn bonds in our national institutions than those between the electors and the elected. To the elected official, the people in the communities he or she represents are not numbers on a StatsCan ledger, or social insurance or telephone numbers. They are not a faceless collection of nondescript human ciphers. Our constituents are the women, men and children we meet in our offices, on the street, in the schools, stores and businesses, at the untold number of meetings and social gatherings we attend. They are real people with real concerns, opinions, and attitudes. They have something to say and it is my job to listen and bring their concerns to the House. We must see that whatever subsequent action that may be required is taken to make government represent fully their interests and satisfy their wishes.

It is true that the women and men elected to represent a constituency by necessity assume a sense of geographic parochialism. In most cases it is a sense of home and family. One does not arbitrarily toss a dart at an electoral map and declare an intention to run for office and then pretend to truly represent the people residing therein. We are elected not because we hope to descend from on high and offer our services to the people we hope to represent. No, Mr. Speaker, we must be totally a part of the people, chosen through their collective wisdom as the person they feel most comfortable with as their voice in the larger institution of government.

Consequently, a Member of Parliament regards the people of his or her riding with not only respect, a sense of service and a desire to better their lives, but with a certain reverence much akin to the sanctity of the family. Each and every person who resides in my riding is important to me, no matter what his or her political affiliation, regardless of whatever disagreements there may be with my particular views on any number of issues. Let me assure you that they let me know! As in any family, differences exist, but the bond of commonality, of shared interests and experiences, transcend the strains which may occur from time to time.

So, Mr. Speaker, I stand here today in this chamber, so distant in geography and daily experience from the people of Nickel Belt, to come to the defence of communities in my riding which threaten to be orphaned—literally orphaned—by the electoral distribution process.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I never thought I would find myself forced to justify to the higher powers the inclusion, the continued membership in the Nickel Belt family, of the Town of Nickel Centre, the east side of the community of St. Charles and surrounding townships. I can only compare this situation to the Mayor of Toronto having to argue that the CN Tower is part of Toronto, or the Mayor of Montreal arguing that the Olympic Stadium is in Montreal, or the Mayor of Ottawa having to convince others that Parliament lies within the national capital. This is no exaggeration or histrionics, Mr. Speaker. Nickel Centre is as much a part of Nickel Belt as is Walden, Valley East, Onaping or Whitefish, where I reside.

Mr. McGrath: All aboard.

Mrs. Erola: Come aboard! We would love to have you but there are no fish there, unfortunately.

St. Charles, Mr. Speaker, has been placed in what can only be described as a totally ludicrous situation. On one side of the street a person who needs to contact his or her federal representative would, as is now the case, come to my office in Sudbury, while his neighbour on the other side of the street would have to go to Kirkland Lake, a locality, pleasant as it is, as different in makeup as Calgary is to Sudbury.

What I find most surprising, and I must say disturbing, Mr. Speaker, is that in the original redistribution proposal, Nickel Belt was threatened with the loss of the town of Onaping Falls. We dealt with that through proper channels. This community is not only bonded to the Nickel basin communities by reason of geography and commerce, but is actually a member of the regional municipality of Sudbury.

This proposal to lop off a limb of the Sudbury tree was vigorously and vehemently opposed by me and hundreds of concerned parties from the entire region. We made our representations very forcefully and I am pleased to see an obvious absurdity has been corrected. However, you can imagine my surprise when the changes were unfolded and I was faced with an identical situation by the proposal to take the Town of Nickel Centre to a patently unnatural electoral family.

● (1420)

Nickel Centre, like Onaping Falls, is also a member of the regional government, with all the attendant interlocking services which governments of a region offer. While Nickel Centre, I might add, takes pride in its individual character, it is nevertheless an integral component of the regional municipality with its focus being the City of Sudbury. It looks to the Sudbury population centre for its commercial interests, its transportation needs, its media coverage and information systems.

To suggest that the people of Nickel Centre should or could cut themselves out of the Sudbury basin orbit and then develop an arbitrary affiliation with the riding of Timiskaming, with its nucleus in Kirkland Lake, is really quite silly to the residents of the area. It would be laughable if it were not such an affront to the years of traditional association these citizens cherish with their fellow citizens in the other Sudbury basin communities.

I am quite sure that the designers of this anomaly could not have done so deliberately, having an awareness of the on the street impact which such a change would create. I point now to another town, that of St. Charles.

[Translation]

As far as St. Charles is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I must say that a community divided is a sad sight to see. As I pointed out earlier, this proposal means that this community and its neighbours, in a relatively isolated area, will be divided in two and forced to seek political representation in two geographically separated areas, namely Kirkland Lake and Sudbury. In addition to the inconvience to residents in the eastern part of the village, the entire community is affected by this confusing situation.

[English]

While this suggested alteration may have been made in a well meaning way, I urge the commission to look more closely at its implications and to restore the cloven Town of St. Charles in its original fullness and vitality to the Nickel Belt constituency.

A point I must make, Mr. Speaker, in this discussion, and the reason I am here today defending my constituents on the more vulnerable outer flanks of Nickel Belt, is that there is an apparent disproportionate allocation of population among northern Ontario ridings. The reason Nickel Belt has been nibbled at in various redistribution schemes—and I might add this is not the first crack—is that my riding has the largest population base of the northern Ontario ridings, and Timiskaming to the northeast has the least. Consequently, when the commission went shopping for more electors, it was obvious that I was the prime candidate.

I suggest to the commission, Mr. Speaker, that the allegedly inadequate population base in Timiskaming, which has prompted the quest for electors, is a skewed and inaccurate picture of the current population figures in my neighbouring riding of Timiskaming. It is my honestly held belief, and I feel this belief is shared also by the current sitting Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), that the 1981 census was taken at a time of abnormally low population levels, in a territory which is cyclically prone to fluctuation due to the boom and bust of the mining cycle in that area.

I will argue that the population today is substantially greater than it was at the time of the census, and I will go even further to suggest that before the next election or the implementation of redistribution, whichever comes first, I know that the measures of this Government to maintain and expand the industrial, commercial and agricultural base of Timiskaming will continue to bear results, and Timiskaming's population will increase accordingly.

I would add, Mr. Speaker, that while one may expect the most populous riding to be picked on when it comes to justifying the continued existence of a riding, or creating a new riding configuration, the population figures of my riding do not exceed by a remarkable amount those proscribed by law. I will be very specific. The Electoral Boundaries Readjustment

Act stipulates that the electoral quota for the riding should be 82,143. However, if one considers that the Act permits a variance of 25 per cent plus or minus that figure to an upward maximum at 102,679 and a low of 61,607 Nickel Belt at 85,000 fits quite comfortably in the middle and very much within the guidelines.

However, the damage inflicted on the cohesion of my riding by the random search for numbers—and I say "random", mere numbers—far outweighs any cosmetic, statistical advantage gained in shoring up the figures of less densely populated ridings. If the goal is to preserve 11 or 12 northern Ontario ridings, I firmly believe more logical and less disruptive alternatives exist.

In making the case for preservation of portions of my riding which are threatened by redistribution, I have the added confidence of knowing that there is virtually unanimous local opposition to the proposed changes. I would say that the reaction to the boundary changes contradicts and refutes the conclusion of a recent Gallup survey that Canadians believe their Parliament is irrelevant. The response to the redistribution proposals has been overwhelmingly negative and, I might add, very emotional, indicating to me that the people's attachment to their riding runs deep and has a very personal significance.

Let me put on record just a few of the comments I have received. First, from the Township of Ratter & Dunnet, I quote:

> It would create a great hardship for the voters to have to adjust to such drastic changes. The Timiskaming constituency office is located in Kirkland Lake, this being some 200 miles away from Warren, making it practically impossible for residents to meet with their MP.

From Phil Bonhomme, councillor of the Town of Nickel Centre, I quote:

> Logic dictates that radical shifts create chaos, additional costs and leave the public in a state of frustration.

From the Corporation of the Township of Casimir, Jennings and Appleby, I quote:

> I am sure you can appreciate the effect it would have on our small community to have our town cut in half by this decision to use the Highway 535 to determine the boundary of these ridings.

From the Regional Development Corporation of Sudbury, I quote:

> It is our strong belief that if the Regional Municipality of Sudbury is to continue to strive for economic diversification, it must do so as a strong and united force, especially in its dealings with the senior levels of government. To lose the Town of Nickel Centre to the Timiskaming riding would result in a fragmentation of this united front, thereby creating a negative impact on the region's economic development aspirations.

From a brief submitted by the Town of Nickel Centre, I quote:

> The entire Sudbury regional community is astonished by the commission's decision. There has been no advance notification of the commission's intention to remove the town from the Nickel Belt riding, nor was there an opportunity for a public hearing on this latest proposal. There is a deep feeling that the community's interests, both present and traditional, affecting the Town of Nickel Centre, have not been respected.

In addition to the representations I have just quoted are resolutions from the councils of the Regional Municipality of Sudbury, Capreol, Onaping Falls, Walden, Valley East and the City of Sudbury. I have received a tide of personal letters from concerned citizens, not only from the affected areas but from all parts of Nickel Belt, reinforcing the obvious kinship the communities of my riding feel for each other. I have received petitions containing hundreds of names which I am prepared to submit to the House.

I cannot adequately express, Mr. Speaker, how strong the feelings are in opposition to this proposed change, a change which I must restate came completely unexpectedly, a change which we feel is so ridiculous it could not have been anticipated at the hearing of the Commission. This is our last chance to fight for the continued harmony of the communities of Nickel Belt and I cannot help but feel as if one of my own, one of my family, is about to be taken away. We are threatened by an absurdity, a Kafkaesque predicament.

[Translation]

There is no logic, no sensitivity to local dissatisfaction with the decision to draw the boundary between Nickel Center and Nickel Belt through the middle of St. Charles. I cannot and will not believe that the Commission cannot understand that this mad chase after figures to meet certain quotas will never justify the distressing state of affairs that would result if this proposal were to be implemented.

• (1430)

[English]

I know each Hon. Member feels fiercely protective of his or her constituents, as do I. I know they can appreciate when justice or reason is, or in this case is not, being served. I know the commission in its wisdom will take another look at this proposal and recognize that it makes no sense whatsoever and will restore Nickel Belt to its original state.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Hon. Members for giving me this time to present my objections.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, if there is a disposition, and if there are no other participants in the objections raised by the Hon. Member, we would be happy to have the debate with respect to that objection adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate, item No. 19. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few words to the debate commenced by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mrs. Erola). I appreciate her concern with the redistribution which occurred in her constituency.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. My apologies for interrupting the Hon. Member, but the Chair has made an error. Following the remarks by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) there is a period of ten minutes for questions and answers should any

Hon. Members wish to avail themselves of that opportunity. I neglected to indicate to Hon. Members that opportunity is available and perhaps I should correct that immediately.

Questions and answers dealing with objection No. 19 and the address made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Then, debate. The Hon. Member for Algoma, with my apologies.

Mr. Foster: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to add only a couple of words to the remarks by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt because I have received the same representations, as I am sure other Members from northern Ontario have, on the objections of the Towns of Nickel Centre and St. Charles. I am sure the Commissioners will take into account all those representations made by the Hon. Member.

I just want to make a few comments generally about the process because, although we were rather frightened with the original maps published for northern Ontario where we seem to have a great deal of difficulty with the redistribution process, I think with the exception of the Nickel Belt riding and the obvious difficulties which the Hon. Member has outlined today, there has been a general acceptance by other Members in northern Ontario that the final maps prepared dealt generally very well with the representations and suggestions made at the hearings last January in Sudbury and Ottawa. Indeed, the Commission, I think, did an admirable job in establishing an average population for the 11 seats in northern Ontario at 70,993 people, whereas in southern Ontario it was about 15 per cent more, or 83,449 electors per constituency based on the 1981 census. That takes into account the vast size of the constituencies, the difficulty of drawing lines and getting a reasonable balance of size and community of interests, and the possibility of the Members serving those constituencies after they are elected. For example in my own constituency they recommended that a large portion of the area north of Sault Ste. Marie be put in with the Kapuskasing-Cochrane-Superior riding, and indeed they responded to those representations, I think, in a very good way.

I believe the vast majority of Members in the north are quite satisfied with the redistribution, with the exception of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. I am sure the representations that she has made here this afternoon so effectively will be taken into account by the Commissioners in their final proclamation of the electoral boundaries. I think it is important that Members not only say when there are objections but also when things are right, because sometimes boundaries tend to be changed if nobody stands up and says what is right about the redistribution.

There are a couple of small, technical objections which I would like to make concerning the Algoma riding. I am generally very happy with the redistribution which has taken place, mostly because it represents a continuation of the existing boundaries and it is very confusing for people who are not very conscious of political boundaries to have those changed every ten years. Of course, they are not only changed federally but provincially.

There are a couple of small, technical suggestions I would like to make to the Commission in drafting their final boundaries, and one is the Carscaden poll which is located immediately adjacent to the Town of Onaping Falls in the Nickel Belt riding. I ask that it be located within the Nickel Belt riding because of the community of interests, the geography and the general means of transportation between those areas.

Likewise, in the City of Sault Ste. Marie, at the opposite end of my constituency towards the West, in the drawing of the boundaries between the Algoma constituency and the City of Sault Ste. Marie constituency, I think it would really simplify matters a great deal if they were to run the boundary line between the two constituencies along People's Road from the second line to the city boundaries just to make it more simple and easy for people to remember where the boundary is and to easily identify it. I would like to see those two small amendments taken into account by the Commission in their final boundary determination.

I think the process has worked fairly well this time. It has been generally responsive to most of the ten Members in the north, if not to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. But I am sure they will be considering her objections.

I think we as Members recognize that when you are dealing with 88 per cent of the land mass of the Province of Ontario and trying to carve up northern Ontario into 11 constituencies, it is a difficult task to bring together a community of interests to a manageable size and to take into account transportation routes and systems, media systems, distribution of information and all the rest of it. I think that on the whole they have done a very good job in the north, and I just want them to know that so that in any additional changes they make those suggestions and recommendations will be borne in mind.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be a brief one but it does arise from the concerns expressed to the House by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mrs. Erola). If the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario were to take seriously and answer the grievances presented to the House by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, the vast region of northern Ontario, one of the very important resource regions of this country, could be facing once again the dilemma and agony we faced at the last redistribution, namely the loss of another seat.

• (1440)

Some Hon. Members in the House will remember the last redistribution and the extreme disquiet and dismay that was felt by the Members of Parliament for northern Ontario and the people they represented, not simply on the question that one Member of Parliament might not have a seat and could not continue on. That was not the issue. The issue involved the northern part of the Province of Ontario which, in terms of its land mass, in excess of 50 per cent of the Province, has always felt at a grave disadvantage in seeing that it has its fair share of interest from the national Parliament of this country.

I want very quickly to repeat what the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) said and indicate to the House that I think the work done by the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario, as it applies to the north of the Province of Ontario, was exemplary in every way. It did an outstanding job. It was responsive, sympathetic and understanding. I can just give one example without boring the House with details. There were some suggestions in its first report which my constituents found to be unacceptable. Certain community of interest principles were seriously violated. I, and representatives from these communities made representations in Sudbury. The Commission responded positively and every recommendation that was put forward was accepted, because it was acceptable and it recognized a basic principle that we in northern Ontario all must accept, and that is that if we want to retain our level of representation, there must be a little give and there must be some take.

That is what bothered me so much when I listened to the speech of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. Here we are not speaking of a constituency being picked on. We are not speaking of a constituency being dealt with in some kind of random fashion. We are not speaking of being fiercely protective of our own little constituency in terms of population. What we are speaking of is a region of this country that deserves to be represented in the Parliament of Canada. I suggest that those interests go far beyond whether a community in one corner of one constituency of northern Ontario will be relocated in another. There is a larger issue here, and it is for that reason that I have risen to speak in the debate.

I said that the Electoral Boundaries Commission was responsive in Sudbury, but there were those who made representations in Sudbury along the lines of "Do not in any way touch my constituency; do not alter it in any fashion whatsoever because I have become very attached to it, it is mine; it belongs to me and leave it the way it is". I found that kind of representation to be reprehensible. I heard it again today and I think it is unacceptable. At the end of those proceedings in Sudbury, I commented to the Commissioners; "if you listened to the arguments that you have heard here today of not touching one constituency that has a rather larger number of persons than other constituencies, if you were to follow that pattern, then northern Ontario would again suffer the loss of a constituency". All of the Commissioners nodded their heads affirmatively and quite vigorously, agreeing that that would be the exact outcome.

There is no comparison between the present Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario and its predecessor which drew up the boundaries with which we had to deal in 1979. This is an enlightened Commission which was responsive, doing an excellent job. The one in 1979 was close-minded, doing severe damage to northern Ontario. We are still suffering from the effects of its decision which was a totally unnecessary one.

Because it is so directly related, it might now be a good moment to pay a word of tribute to the late Hon. R. K. Andras, who took such a profound and deep interest in the whole region of northern Ontario for which he had responsibility. When the Electoral Boundaries Commission made its unfortunate decision, I remember well how the Hon. R. K. Andras, in this very House, drafted a Bill which would have allowed northern Ontario to retain its level of representation. Only in the dying moments of the debate, because there was not enough time allowed, and because we needed unanimous consent and someone would not give it, did we fail. However, I want to pay tribute to a man who not only had a great national constituency and was an outstanding Parliamentarian in terms of representing his own riding, but also one who, when it came to paying attention to his regional responsibilities and doing it in a way which was genuine, coming from the heart, demonstrated that kind of leadership which is difficult to replace. We sadly miss the Hon. Bob Andras in northern Ontario.

I will close by saying again that the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario has done good work. If it listens carefully to what the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt said and it can make some modest changes to meet her demands, that is fine. However, if it must reduce northern Ontario by another seat, then I say to the Commissioners: "Reject totally and out of hand the representations made by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions or comments?

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, when I came to the House of Commons in 1965, I had a small, neat, compact constituency of only 55,000 square miles. After the redistribution that took place in 1969, my constituency expanded to about 75,000 square miles, but the Commission did so by taking the heart of the constituency out so that when I wanted to go from one end of the constituency in a north-south direction to the other, I had to go through the constituency which was then represented by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior who was then the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay. The next redistribution took my constituency to a size of 155,000 square miles. The proposed redistribution will reduce it to about 150,000 square miles.

The prospect in my constituency has been massive increases in size. The problem is that there has been no one centre in my riding. What I have is a group of small little towns scattered so that there is no one centre one can go into with a view to being able to capture the attention of the bulk of the population.

We have accepted the fact that this constituency has grown with such tremendous force over the last 20 years because the price of doing so has been to allow northern Ontario to maintain more seats than it might otherwise have had under another kind of distribution system. Our dilemma is that our population is marginal from the point of view of holding 11 seats. Furthermore, the population tends to be concentrated in particular areas, leaving vast areas with relatively small populations.

What we have come down to is the classical trauma of northwestern Ontario in a redistribution period. The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) mentioned the last redistribution. It was very traumatic for us because it cost us a seat in northern Ontario, reducing our representation. I think that in terms of regions the size of ours, we were about the only region in Canada to lose seats. It meant an enormous shuffling around of constituency boundaries and it caused enormous difficulty to constituents in finding out to whom they were to go. It also made it very difficult for Members of Parliament to discharge their customary duties.

We now have a situation where the redistribution that has come about has been accepted, by and large. We recognized from the beginning, when the process started, that we would have to accept distortions in the representation in order to be able to maintain 11 seats in northern Ontario. I recognize, representing the largest seat in terms of area in northern Ontario and also one of the highest average populations in northern Ontario, that I would not obtain relief from the kind of geographical expansion that has taken place. Other Members accepted the fact that they, too, would have to accept existing and perhaps additional distortions. I think that is a fact of life of northwestern Ontario. If we wish to maintain the kind of presence we have been able to create in northern Ontario, we must accept these distortions and their consequences.

• (1450)

The last point I would like to make is that one of the factors which made it easy for us in northern Ontario to deal with this redistribution was that the Commission in Ontario published reasons for its decisions. There is a section in the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act that calls upon Commissions to publish the reasons in their reports upon which they make their decisions. That was the result of a Private Members' Bill that was sponsored by myself and the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) which we were successful in having passed.

This is really the first redistribution in which the Commission for Ontario has taken those recommendations seriously. If one goes over the report that it made, one can find that in each case for each region and many ridings individually reasons are given for the particulary selection of boundaries as well as justification of their decisions.

I have had an opportunity to review the action of Commissions in other Provinces and quite frankly their performance has been spotty indeed, to put it mildly. Many of them have put in the minimum possible to conform with the law, which leads me to believe that decisions in those cases were arbitrary, irrational and indefensible because the Commissions could not be bothered to put the reasons for these decisions in place.

It strikes me that one of the good things about the Ontario Commission and something that leads us in northern Ontario by and large to accept the results of the Commission is the fact that it published in detail—more detail than any other Commission—the reasons it had taken certain decisions. This meant that when we came to appeal certain aspects of its decisions, we had all the data that was required to be able to do that. We were able to have arguments and discussions with the Commission that made sense as a result. Therefore, I want to commend the Ontario Commission for what it has done in general and I want to join with the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) and the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior in supporting the over-all directions it has given us in northern Ontario.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have one question to ask my hon. friend for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). When he was referring to prior Commissions being arbitrary, I assume he was referring to it in terms of northern Ontario and not all of Ontario. I want him to know that there is some considerable distress that this current Commission, which I also acknowledge is a good one, has broken up such ridings as Nepean-Carleton and changed the boundaries of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and others. That occurs. However, I assume his remarks were directed to northern Ontario in terms of the last Commission?

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): No, Mr. Speaker, my remarks were really directed to those Commissions which looked at other provinces and did not publish reasons for their decisions. I recognize with the Hon. Member that there is distress at decisions of the Commission. Inevitably there could be no choice because populations shift, constituencies no longer hold the same amount of population and new relationships are established. At least in Ontario, in each of those cases, the Commission has clearly set the principles that governed its decision and has specifically outlined the reason for specific boundary changes in many cases.

In some other provinces which I shall not mention, the Commission gave absolutely no reasons at all. Instead, they said it was just a general principle and what have you. My condemnation is for those Commissions which not only did not follow the letter but the spirit of the law. I want to praise the Ontario Commission for having given an example to them all.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have one question for the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). Let me preface it with the remark that in comparison to some of us, at some 150,000 square miles he still has a relatively small constituency.

I understand that there are 11 federal districts in northern Ontario. This afternoon we have had the benefit of listening to presentations from four of the Members from that part of Canada. The score seems to be one opposed to the recommendations of the Commission and three very much in favour of the recommendations. Would it be unfair to ask if the general consensus among the remaining Members from northern Ontario, most of whom are on the other side of the House at this time, unfortunately, is that they are indeed satisfied with the recommendations of the Commission and that the view of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mrs. Erola) is very much a minority view?

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be fair to say that we all expected distortions to take place, particularly in the Sudbury basin. The reason for that is that it is the largest concentration of population in northern Ontario.

I used the example of my own constituency in terms of the rest of northern Ontario as a great distortion in itself. However, I would think it would be the general consensus in terms of northern Ontario that we by and large support the over-all direction of the Commission. I would stand with the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior to say that if there are in fact changes that can be made in the Sudbury basin around the seat of Sudbury in Nickel Belt without causing distortions to flow out throughout the rest of the area of northern Ontario, we would then support those.

But we do recognize that because of the location of population in northern Ontario there will be this tension between the allocation of seats in northeastern Ontario. It would be my judgment that the bulk of the Members would support the recommendations of the Commission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my own view it is within the ambit of the responsibility of the Chair to propose that debate be adjourned on Item No. 19, but the remarks made earlier by the Hon. Member for Yukon indicated that he thought perhaps the motion ought to come from the floor of the House. The Chair is disposed to either procedure. Does the Hon. Member for Yukon wish to make the motion or shall I handle it from the chair?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, it should come from the floor and I will make that suggestion, that consent to adjourn this objection be had.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Since I wish to protect those who follow me in the chair, I might say that it is my understanding that it does not need to come from the floor. However, we do not need a procedural difficulty in that regard.

May I have a proposal by an Hon. Member that debate on Item No. 19 be adjourned? It is so moved by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), seconded by the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert).

Accordingly, we will revert, under the agreement discussed earlier, to Item 10 which concerns the riding of Lachine in the Province of Quebec and on which the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) indicated he wished to speak.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make in support of the objection which you yourself have filed under the provisions of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act concerning your own riding of Lachine.

I have found it somewhat difficult to understand the insensitivity of the Electoral Boundaries Commission to the objections that have been raised by Members concerning name changes. Of course, you are my neighbour, Mr. Speaker, and have raised an objection which is very similar to the objection which I have in my own riding. We each have a name by which the constituency is well known. Yours is the riding of Lachine and my riding is Vaudreuil.

The Electoral Boundaries Commission makes some relatively minor adjustment to boundaries but then decides to change the name of the constituency. If in each of our two cases the name change had some logical reason and would not cause confusion, I suppose we would not be raising the objections at this time. But as you have pointed out in your objection, the principal provincial constituency within the proposed federal constituency of Jacques-Cartier being also referred to as Jacques-Cartier will inevitably lead to confusion.

I represent a riding presently called Vaudreuil which covers the whole of one constituency and much of two other provincial constituencies. The one provincial constituency is called Vaudreuil-Soulanges. What does the Electoral Boundaries Commission decide to do? It gives the federal constituency the same name as one of the provincial constituencies, that of Vaudreuil-Soulanges. If that is not going to cause confusion, I do not know what is. I believe it is exactly the same in your case, Mr. Speaker. I am certainly not discussing boundaries. I have asked the Commission to explain to me why it would take such an action; why it would not leave things well enough alone. Vaudreuil at the present time is the name of the Marquis de Vaudreuil who was the first Governor of New France born in Canada. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Electoral Boundaries Commission respect your objection and my objection and leave our names alone.

● (1500)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans). I believe that if you were to ask, you might find a disposition in the House that each of the remaining objections that have been filed and were to be debated by three o'clock today be deemed to have been debated and that debate on each of the remaining objections that were to have been dealt with by three o'clock be deemed to have been adjourned. I believe that is acceptable to the House.

Mr. Evans: There is such an agreement, Mr. Speaker. Just for clarification let me say that that gives rise to the situation where each of the objections raised up to three o'clock and each of those not yet physically debated would be open for debate when debate is resumed at a later time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is a small difference in the wording of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans). I see the Hon. Member for Yukon nodding his head in agreement. The motion to adjourn debate would apply not only to those items which have not yet been raised or noticed for debate but also to those which have been debated as well. As I understand it, that is the agreement of the House.

It is so moved by the Hon. Member for the Yukon, seconded by the Parliamentary Secretary. It would follow that it being three o'clock, pursuant to Order made Thursday, September 15, 1983, consideration of the objections now before the House or having been put before the House up until this time or still available for debate at some future date, are deemed to have been adjourned and all outstanding objections are deemed to have been considered and adjourned.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, deemed to have been debated and adjourned. I believe there is a legal requirement for debate to have occurred. The deemed clause has to refer to the debate, that is, they have to be deemed to have been debated and deemed to be adjourned in each case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Yukon points out the use of the word "debate". The expression used in the form that I read is "considered". We will take it as read that that includes the meaning of the word debate.

It being three o'clock, the House may wish to proceed to the next order of business pursuant to Orders of the Day. I understand the Bill under consideration is Bill C-110.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, September 15, consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 3 and 5 (Mr. Blenkarn).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House last dealt with this question, the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner) had the floor. In the circumstances, some Hon. Member may wish to indicate that the time of the Hon. Member be reserved, otherwise it is lost because he is not present to continue his debate.

Mr. Forrestall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that indication. If that could be agreed by the House, it would be appreciated by the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kushner).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I see an indication that it is. It is understood that at the next suitable opportunity the Hon. Member for Calgary East will continue his remarks and that the normal ten minute period of questions and answers would follow as it would in the ordinary case.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, to avoid any confusion as we go on, I am sure the distinguished Member would enjoy his normal course of intervention plus the ten minute question and answer period. But I think we are on ten minute speeches at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate. The Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight).

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in the debate on Motions Nos. 3 and 5 put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). The amendments to the Bill as we are debating them in Motions Nos. 3 and 5 call for the authorization of capital to the Export Development Corporation to be reduced from $2 billion as requested in the Bill to $1 billion, $100. Motion No. 5 lumped with Motion No. 3 for debate is the borrowing by the corporation. Basically that will limit the corporation to borrowing up to what it is worth. I am sure all Members on this side of the House, if they are at all concerned, would not have a corporation borrowing more or being allowed to borrow more than it is actually worth. Most bankers would have trouble with that if I came to them with that type of request. I am sure the taxpayers of Canada would expect us to operate a Crown agency in the same manner.

When it comes to Crown agencies and to the experience we have had in this House over the past number of years, even the Secretary of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) is on the public record as saying that he believes accountability of any expenditures of taxpayers' money must return to the Parliament. Also, that the Parliament of Canada must be able to scrutinize on behalf of the taxpayers the loans and operations of Crown Corporations and Crown agencies.

Let us take a look at the experience we have had over the past few years. In 1982-1983, we see that Canadair, a Crown corporation, lost some $1.4 billion; de Havilland lost $265.2 million; and VIA Rail lost $449 million in 1982. The estimated loss for VIA Rail for 1983-1984 is a horrendous $755 million. These are the taxpayers' concerns with regard to the accountability of Crown agencies in the expenditure of their money. It is not our money, Mr. Speaker, it is not the Government's money, it is the money belonging to the taxpayers of Canada. We can look at Canadian National which had an exceptionally poor year and lost money. Air Canada should not be compared with the other Crown agencies I have mentioned because for the first time in six years it has experienced a loss in its operations.

Let us come to one Crown agency that most Canadians deal with and are familiar with. I am speaking of Canada Post, which lost about $300 million. Taxpayers of Canada are saying, they are reiterating it to us as their Members of Parliament—and I am sure they are mentioning it to Members on the Government side—that there has to be some form, some way, some method of making these bodies more accountable for the expenditures of taxpayers' money. The people deemed to be entrusted with this responsibility must justify their actions to the House of Commons or to the Parliament of Canada.

Legislation says that Crown corporations must file reports within three months of the end of their fiscal year. Let us look again at Canada Post. It is perhaps not a good example but it is an example which the people of Canada understand and deal with daily. Canada Post is now some 14 months overdue in the filing of its annual report.

We have heard during this debate that the Canadian Export Development Corporation will be called before a standing committee of the House of Commons and in that way will have to justify last year's operations. If we have legislation which allows Crown corporations to delay the filing of their annual reports for some 14 months, certainly the scrutiny of their books would be considered to be after the fact. There is not much that I or any other Member of Parliament could do in "after the fact" scrutiny when they are 14 months out of date. Approximately 65 per cent of Crown corporations or agencies do not meet the three-month deadline for filing annual reports at the close of the fiscal year.

● (1510)

In the consideration of this Bill there has been much discussion about the implementation and establishment of a similar organization under the direction of another Minister, namely Canagrex. The only difference between the establishment of Canagrex and that of the Export Development Corporation is Clause 29(4) of Bill C-85 which gave birth to Canagrex. It reads:

> The accounts of Canagrex shall be audited annually by the Auditor General of Canada and the Auditor General may, where he deems it necessary, conduct a comprehensive audit of the affairs of the Corporation.

We see that as a step in the right direction. My understanding is that there is certainly a difference between a comprehensive audit and a general audit, as is the case with the EDC. A comprehensive audit provides the ability to go into the deep and internal operations of each department, the expenditures made and the ability to point out almost daily operations, either corrections or adjustments, whereas general audits are basically the balancing of numbers, taking a look at audit sheets and saying that the numbers are correct as they appear.

With the sad experience which Canadians have had, I do not suppose the Export Development Corporation is one that comes to mind. As we all know there are a great number of Crown corporations, some 300 of them. This does not necessarily bother me or Hon. Members on this side of the House. There is a great deal of employment in Crown corporations. Some 263,000 people are employed in such corporations. But in looking at the operations of Crown corporations, according to the 1982 report under the section entitled, "Matters of Special Importance and Interest", the Auditor General indicated:

> Yet, in the aggregate, they represent a hole in the taxpayer's pocket, resulting, as they often do, in a consistent negative return on investment.

While I know that the Auditor General is not talking about the Export Development Corporation and that that corporation does not enter into the same area as many agencies to which he referred, it must be incumbent upon those of us who are entrusted with the care of taxpayers' dollars, which they work very hard to earn, to have the ability to bring in a check, to bring to question and then change the activities of any Crown agency that is requesting, as is the EDC, a very substantial increase in its borrowing ability.

That borrowing ability amounts to a huge borrowing bill. For example, my Province of Saskatchewan has a $2 billion plus budget. Under the proposed Bill to reorganize the Export Development Corporation, there is included a borrowing ability which could be from $40 billion to as high as $60 billion. There is no recourse in the legislation to bring before Members of Parliament any accounting, with the exception, in fairness, of the annual report. If we go over annual reports of the past, as I have mentioned, we are lead to say that as much as we on this side recognize the value of trade and the energy and ability of the people involved in the EDC, to counterbalance and justify our existence here there must be some way of holding the corporation responsible to the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell you how delighted I am to be here and to be able to speak to the House for a few moments today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is a pleasure to follow my good friend, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), whose speech I listened to with great interest, and at the same time to see the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) in the House to hear his Bill debated. It is becoming almost a precedent when the Minister responsible stays in the House for a debate, particularly on a Friday afternoon. I think he should be commended for being here. Also I am pleased to see the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) in the chair. We serve together on the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, and what I will say in the few minutes I have relates to the work of that committee and the issue of accountability.

I wanted to say those things at the outset because the Minister should understand that there is no objection from this Party, indeed from any Party, to any reasonable effort made by the Minister of State, the Ministry, any of his officials or any Crown corporation to increase trade. It is a trite to say about our country that trade is its lifeblood, but without it the country would wither and our standard of living fall; we would not enjoy the quality of life we have come to expect. It is not that quality with which I am dealing. The amendments deal with a matter of importance which is equally coming to the fore in terms of the operation of this place, the role of Hon. Members on all sides of the House of Commons and their place in the scheme of government—that issue is accountability.

Export Development Act

The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) spoke yesterday in the debate. As reported at page 27157 of Hansard he said:

—the question that is before the House today in this amendment is whether or not the amount of money requested, $20 billion, which would increase the borrowing capacity of the Export Development Corporation, is being requested and scrutinized in the proper manner.

That is the issue. For 18 months I have had the privilege of serving with other Hon. Members on the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure of the House of Commons, the parliamentary reform committee. We have concluded—and I draw this particularly to the attention of the House and the Minister—the seventh report of that committee, entitled the Huntington-Lachance report, the report of a Conservative and a Liberal both of whom directed and guided the committee to its unanimous conclusion that with respect to Government accounting generally and with respect to Crown corporation accounting particularly, it was hopelessly inadequate and something had to be done. The purpose of this amendment concerns in the context of Bill C-110, an objection to this lack of accountability.

● (1520)

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read from that signal report, the seventh report of the special committee which deals with this issue. I am reading as follows from Paragraph 3 of the seventh report:

Your Committee feels that "accountability" is fundamentally important in a parliamentary democracy. The Committee is united in its commitment to establish a better system to permit the House of Commons to exercise greater influence in the examination of public expenditures and finance. The mechanisms we propose will permit the House of Commons and its committees to exercise new influence on the business of government. It is important to stress that this Committee is seeking for Parliament an increased influence—

And influence is underlined—

—in the analysis of governmental policies, not direct control of the Government.

Parliament is not the executive nor is the executive Parliament but there is an influence which Parliament should bring to bear. Continuing on, I quote:

The Committee fully accepts that the Executive must be free to make its judgments and to govern, subject of course to maintaining the confidence of the House of Commons.

That was the broad statement made with respect to that. As a result of that, the committee has proposed the establishment of a government corporations and agencies committee among others.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster mentioned that there are well over 300 Crown corporations. Some of them are Crown corporations as we understand them to be, some are Crown corporations created by Crown corporations, some are Crown agencies and some are subagencies. God knows that they proliferate, although Parliament does not know nor does the Government. This lack of accountability is something the Canadian people simply will not tolerate.

It is not that Crown agencies per se are bad. Some of them are quite necessary, but we are hopelessly at sea on the question of accountability, and something must be done about it. Accountability must be given back to this institution which is the only institution to which the public has some input, however indirect, with respect to the accountability of the instruments of government.

We on that committee learned about how these agencies had been created and we were struck by the fact that a serious gap occurred because not all Crown corporations, not even those as defined in the Financial Administration Act, table annual reports that are made the subject of the mandate of the Auditor General. The system is clearly one that developed early on and is now inadequate.

As the influence of government moves through Crown agencies and departments the likes of which I have described, it becomes absolutely essential that each agency and department be made subject to the concept of accountability to Parliament, a concept which was basic to the establishment of Parliament in the first place.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I support the amendments we are dealing with, amendments 3 and 5, and that is why I believe the Government ought to think twice about what it is asking Parliament to approve for a corporation which has generally carried on a good and essential service in the operation of the Government of Canada.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to be afforded the opportunity to speak today on the amendments to Bill C-110 as proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), because I believe that what we are debating today goes to the very core of the responsibility of every Member of Parliament.

We as elected representatives of the country are empowered with the responsibility of protecting the public purse by ensuring that safeguards and controls are put in place for Parliament to be accountable to the taxpayers for the spending of every one of their dollars. I take that responsibility very seriously, as I am sure does every Member in this Chamber.

The mandate of the Export Development Corporation is to facilitate and develop Canada's export trade by providing insurance, guarantee and loan facilities. I am sure there is no Member in this Chamber who would argue with the fact that trade is of the greatest importance to the country. We are a nation that should exploit its trade possibilities to the limit. We produce goods and services beyond those which we as a nation can use ourselves, and it is therefore vitally important to our economy that we seek out those markets for export purposes.

The fundamental purpose of the Export Development Corporation is to assist our manufacturers to seek new customers on the international marketplace and to ensure and guarantee that the exporter will receive payments for these sales. These manufacturers must be protected from non-payment by foreign purchasers who may be unable to pay for their imports due to internal economic and political strife in their own countries and, of course, many other economic fluctuations.

Our manufacturers must also be able to compete with other countries to enable them to take advantage of that export market. The corporation, through its loan guarantees at lower interest rates, enables more competitive offers to be made.

As I have stated, the matter of developing our export market is not the concern that is before us today. I am concerned with the efficiency with which the corporation functions and, more important, the accountability to Parliament for the corporation's expenditures, its operation and its administration.

The Export Development Corporation was described by Professor Andre Raynauld of the University of Montreal as "rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient". There is a great deal of merit to that statement when one looks at the number of employees employed by the corporation. EDC employs over 613 people, almost ten employees for each separate loan customer or one and a half employees for each insurance account. With statistics of that kind, I would question the productivity of the corporation and indeed the efficiency of its administration.

I turn now to the amendments that are before us today. These amendments were introduced for the purpose of bridging the gap created by some glaring inadequacies of accountability that are present in this Bill and to effect some measure of parliamentary control over a Crown corporation.

We have seen, time and time again, blatant examples of Crown corporations administering taxpayers' money at their own will without the discipline of good, sound management, while incurring huge losses and plunging the country deeper and deeper into debt. The scandalous situation surrounding Canadair, which has incurred losses of some $1.4 billion, is a prime example of how some Crown corporations are mismanaging the taxpayers' dollars that come from what is thought of as a bottomless trough, the public purse.

I believe it is absolutely imperative that we bring back to Parliament effective control over the public purse. We must work toward this goal at every possible opportunity.

The amendments that we are debating today, if they were to be adopted by Parliament, as I would urge that the House do, would indeed prove to the Canadian people that we as Parliamentarians are putting into place those safety nets that will ensure a certain degree of control over taxpayers' money.

As I understand it, Bill C-110 is a request for approval of, among other things, the increase of capital authority to the Export Development Corporation from $1 billion to $2 billion. This would give the EDC the authority to borrow up to ten times against that capital authority. That would give it the authority to borrow $20 billion. That is $20 billion worth of borrowing authority which is beyond the control of Parliament and is on the credit of Canada. In other words, the Export Development Corporation will have the authority to borrow huge sums of money without ever having to come to Parliament for approval and without being accountable to the Parliament of Canada for the administration of the spending of those funds. I find that totally unacceptable.

Slowly but surely through legislation of this kind, we are seeing the erosion of Parliament's control over Crown corporations. If this Bill is allowed to proceed in its present form without the adoption of these amendments, we will see the further erosion of Parliament's control over Crown corporations and their ability to spend tax dollars without being accountable.

• (1530)

It is essential, in my view, that Parliamentarians recognize this problem and bring it to the attention of the Government at every possible opportunity, in every possible way. I value most deeply the responsibility placed in me as a Member of Parliament by the electorate, to ensure that their interests are well served, and unless there is that accountability to Parliament, I as a Member of Parliament am not fulfilling my responsibility and duty to the constituents of my riding.

The Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability stated:

> Accountability is the fundamental prerequisite for preventing the abuse of delegated power and for ensuring instead, that power is directed toward the achievement of broadly accepted national goals with the greatest possible degree of efficiency, effectiveness, probity, and prudence.

I believe most strongly that there is a need for effective legislation that will allow scrutiny and control over the expenditure of public funds, which is something we do not have with any degree of adequacy at present.

A poll taken recently showed that 64.6 per cent of the general public had little or no interest in the work of the House of Commons, which I find most unfortunate, and it is something which saddens me deeply. I believe that to a great extent, this indifference, this apathy toward Parliament, displayed by the majority of the Canadian people, comes from their loss of confidence in the Government and in the parliamentary system.

The taxpayers of Canada no longer feel that they are getting value for their dollar, and indeed why should they? There have been many, many examples of Parliament's losing control over the constant growth of its size and its expenditures. It is up to us, as Parliamentarians to demonstrate to the Canadian people that we are desserving of the trust placed in us by the electorate; that we demand that Parliament have ultimate and absolute control over expenditures and that Government departments and Crown corporations be accountable to Parliament for all their activities.

I believe it is time for these Crown corporations to be accountable to their shareholders, the taxpayers of Canada, for efficient management of their administration and appropriated funds.

The amendments that are proposed to Bill C-110 are the first steps toward bringing back some degree of accountability to the Parliament of Canada. I would urge all Members to vote in favour of these amendments.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I deeply oppose this Bill and support the amendments. Two issues are involved: one is responsible management and the other is accountability to Parliament. We have heard many Members on this side of the House articulate their position on these matters.

In fairness, however, I want to make it clear that my criticism is not criticism of the Export Development Corporation. In my community the relationship between a large company, Babcock and Wilcox Industries Limited, which employs a great number of people and this Crown corporation has been a good one. In Cambridge, where at a certain point in time unemployment was well over 20 per cent and where Badcock used to employ some 2,000 people, now, because of the recession and Government policies and serious mismanagement, this company employs under 1,000 people. The domestic market for Babcock products has shrunk to almost zero.

From the perspective of my community it is very, very important that sales be significant, particularly those of Babcock and Wilcox in our community, so that people can be employed.

I should like to read a couple of paragraphs from a letter written to me by the President of that company. They read:

> Our major competition is from companies such as Mitsubishi in Japan, Combustion Engineering in the Untied States, and Babcock Power of the United Kingdom. These companies have spent a great number of years systematically developing markets throughout the world. One of the key parameters in this development has been financing, particularly government supported financing from Japan and the U.K.
>
> On a large capital project, the financing can be more important than the products, many of which may be evaluated relatively equal by the customer. Our competition has realized this and has worked heavily with their governments to provide the type of financing necessary. B&W Canada also works with EDC to put together the necessary equipment packages and financing packages to meet the challenge of the international market-place.
>
> The result has been impressive. The co-operation between EDC and B&W has been key to the level of success achieved so far in the much publicized Dendro project in the Philippines.

I have to say, on the basis of my experience within my community, that the issue has absolutely nothing to do with this particular Crown corporation. Why I have advised this particular company that I oppose this Bill concerns the issue of accountability to Parliament.

Let me say at the beginning that the magnitude of the borrowing in the amount of $20 billion is so staggering that it almost defies one's ability to comprehend such an exceedingly large sum of money. To allow a borrowing of $20 billion without any accountability to Parliament is the closest thing I can imagine to giving a blank cheque. It is an incredibly large amount of money. Surely the onus has to be on the Government to justify its need for such a prodigious sum of money as $20 billion.

The EDC is what is classified as a Crown corporation D. It is my understanding that the further down the alphabet a corporation comes—and I think they go to D—the more commercially viable they must be. In other words, the expectation is not that they are an instrument, necessarily, of public policy, but that they be commercially viable. I understand that Polysar and such Crown corporations as Air Canada are—

Mr. Cullen: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speyer: I have just been corrected by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) and I accept what he says about the accuracy of the designation of Polysar. I find it incredible, if this particular Crown corporation is to be commercially viable, that it does not honour the rules of any corporation that deals in commerce. One of those has to be that you borrow against subscribed capital. One of the provisions of the Bill, unbelievable as it is, is that it refers to unauthorized capital.

To put this in terms that I understand a lot better, Mr. Speaker, if a person makes an application for a mortgage, he normally has to put up a minimum of 25 per cent of the money, by law, before the mortgage is given. With respect to trust companies, the Act does not refer to authorized capital but says that the money has to be paid-in capital and there must be that much, plus the surplus.

If we are going to honour commercial traditions, as this particular Crown corporation should, I find it unbelievable that the money is not paid into the till, if I may use the words of the street.

In my view, the borrowing must be against subscribed capital. What is unacceptable is that the corporation will be able to borrow an additional $10 billion without Parliament's consent. As I said earlier in my remarks, the onus is on the Government to demonstrate a need.

I have looked through the Minister's speeches and those of other Members of the Government in an effort to find out why, at this point of time, we need a further $10 billion. It is such a prodigious sum that it is the closest thing I can think of to writing a blank cheque. No clarification has been forthcoming, however. Why do they need that amount?

The other thing that concerns me and my constituents is the fact that the Crown corporation would not be accountable to Parliament for the spending of that money. That is, I suppose, the essence of my concern. There is a secondary, but as important a matter to me, and that is with respect to the EDC and when the Government, as a matter of public policy, chooses to spend money on a particular project which may very well be too risky for the EDC. Under this particular Act the Government, as I say, when it believes that it is in the national interest, can, by Order in Council, pledge the credit of the people of Canada to a further $10 billion, which is an incredible amount of money, even without EDC approval.

● (1540)

I would have a lot more confidence in such a policy in circumstances where the management was controlled by a private board of directors. Indeed, I was very, very surprised, on the one hand, and I do not believe we have received an explanation, on the other hand, when the Minister said, in answer to the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) on June 27, that consideration had been given to a balanced board, and I believe I am quoting him accurately as having said, "We were kind of thinking of a balanced board, as Mr. Thomson had suggested, and we like the idea of six from the Government and nine from the private sector". If that appealed to the Minister, I would like to how why that has not been forthcoming as an amendment to this particular Bill. It would certainly be attractive to Hon. Members on this side of the House, especially in circumstances where the Government itself can spend money pledged against the credit of the people of Canada where it is too risky for the EDC. That is the particular area which concerns me a great deal, Mr. Speaker.

I conclude my remarks by making the simple point that my criticism is with regard to accountability to Parliament, of which there is very little, and responsible management. At the same time I would like to make it clear that within my community there have been excellent relations between Babcock and Wilcox Canada, which used to employ 2,000 persons, and the EDC.

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join today with my colleagues to debate Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, to speak against the Government and bureaucratic excesses which this Bill in its present form will allow, and to speak in favour of the reasonable and sensible amendments put forth by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

As you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, the Export Development Corporation was originally organized to ensure export transactions. This is very worthy, in other words, to provide Canadian producers with credit insurance, insuring the credit worthiness of their foreign purchases and sales, and to protect the producers against problems of non-payment from foreign countries because of political interference and so on. Of course, all of this we applaud.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the corporation's business is to become a lender, perhaps even a lender of last resort, certainly an important lender of moneys to expedite the sale of Canadian goods in foreign markets. That is the Export Development Corporation's necessary mandate, but it is even today a mandate which carries with it very little accountability to Parliament and to the taxpayers of Canada.

What the Government proposes to do with this Bill is to make the EDC even more unaccountable to Parliament. One would hope and expect that an agency which is charged with the disbursement of huge sums of money to be an effective and efficiently run body. Let us look briefly at the management of the corporation to see if that is so. The facts raise serious questions as to the efficiency of the corporation because there are at present some 613 employees of the Export Development Corporation. Last year, in 1982, the corporation dealt in loan accounts with 62 exports. This represents one customer for every ten employees.

Mr. Clarke: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Gilchrist: What bank does anyone know of which has ten employees per customer? Do Canadian taxpayers not have a right to an explanation of and correction of such waste of their dollars? The corporation, as I have previously pointed out, is involved with insurance. It had slightly in excess of 900 separate insurance policies placed during 1982. That is approximately one and one half insurance policies per employee. And we talk about productivity! In many senses this corporation is bureaucracy gone wild, and from that point of view alone should it be carefully examined. In these difficult times Canadian taxpayers cannot—and I suggest will not—afford such extravagance. These facts alone should cause the Minister to be seriously concerned with the efficiency of the operation of this Crown corporation.

How can a corporation which has transactions with but 62 companies justify offices—elegant offices—in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax, together with a head office here in Ottawa? Does nobody in the Government care about taxpayers' dollars? Parliament should be seeking more control of bureaucratic waste, not less control. Liberal Members should be demanding that the Cabinet exercise more control over waste and inefficiency, not sitting back while billions more taxpayers' dollars are assigned to this huge tax dollar gobbling machine. But no, Parliament will have even less control than it does today if this Bill passes.

Let us look at one part of the present Act which clearly illustrates how we, as Parliamentarians, have literally no control over the actions of the corporation. I will refer to Section 31 which reads:

> Where the Minister reports to the Governor in Council that
>
> (a) the Board is of the opinion that a proposed loan or guarantee of the kind described in section 29 would, if made or issued, be for a term or in an amount of excess of that which the Corporation would normally undertake in relation to any one export transaction . . . and
>
> (b) in the opinion of the Minister it is in the national interest that the proposed loan be made or guarantee issued, > the Governor in Council may authorize the Corporation to make the proposed loan or give the proposed guarantee, as the case may be.
>

Effectively, loans of this nature can be made by the corporation up to $2.5 billion, and all that is necessary is an Order in Council, even if the corporation's executive itself decided the loan was not worthy. Obviously, Parliament is not necessary in this kind of an arrangement. The present arrangement whereby the Government of Canada can decide to take on export transactions by Order in Council, to take huge sums of money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, put the matter through as an advance without any parliamentary debate or question, is just incomprehensible. This type of arrangement and back room government must be stopped and not expanded.

Under Section 32 of the Export Development Corporation Act, as mentioned, the limitation of the Government to enter into Section 31 type transactions is $2.5 billion, as I have noted. The Government's effort in Bill C-110 is to increase this allowable amount for Cabinet generosities of dubious or questionable transactions to $10 billion. Remember, this $10 billion would be for the backroom boys in Cabinet to give out loans which the EDC itself had decided were bad risks. Can you believe that, Mr. Speaker? In effect, the Canadian people could be involved in more Algerian muniment deals, or Russian pipeline deals, as the Government may wish, to the extent of $10 billion without an aye, yes or no by any vote, by any Parliament, at any time. We on this side of the House cannot accept this section. No Member of Parliament should vote for this type of approval of borrowing and advancing vast sums of money with no strings attached.

Let us for a moment, Mr. Speaker, look at the concept of subscribed capital, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer), pointed out a moment ago. Normally a trust company, loan company or bank is entitled to lend a multiple of its subscribed capital and earned surplus. In other words, if it has a million dollars in capital it may be permitted to issue some multiple of that amount, say, $10 million. The Export Development Corporation does not have that type of limitation. Its limitation, Mr. Speaker, is a multiple of authorized capital. In other words, the Government need not put up the money, as private lending companies must; it only has to say it has the capital. The effect of Bill C-110 is to increase the authorized capital to $2 billion, and the consequence of this manouvering is that the authorized borrowing has increased to $20 billion. There is no requirement for the Government to subscribe for capital stock in the corporation. The subscriptions are meaningless. The borrowing limit now is to be $20 billion.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that the way this Bill stands, the Government can spend $20 billion through the EDC without as much as a single word from Parliament, in effect giving the people of Canada no say in the spending of $20 billion of their hard-earned tax dollars.

The people of Canada expect their elected Members to oppose the hidden spending granted by this Bill and I urge all Hon. Members to do so when the vote occurs.

• (1550)

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am opposed to the amendment and cannot accept it, primarily because of the grouping together of these two amendments and the amount involved in Motion No. 3. The amendment would in effect leave the limits simply as they are and this Bill, which has been before the House in one form or another for some 18 months, would be denied its basic purpose. The other amendment, which of course has the effect of making the Export Development Corporation a subject of debate here in the House on individual loans, is simply not the best way to operate if we are going to be helpful to the exporters of the country.

I thank a number of the Hon. Members who made constructive suggestions, and I would like, at this stage, to comment on some of the remarks made. I also want to say to those who have expressed a concern about the amount of the increased loan limit, I want to emphasize, that it is obvious we must have an increased limit because of the success of the corporation and because it is coming very near to the limit of authorized loans at the present time. That is why it is rather urgent that this legislation move forward. But I believe it is the responsibility of a Minister in this House to listen to Members on all sides who have suggestions, and if any accommodation can be made by altering the amount of the increase, I am prepared to consider some alterations. But I am not prepared to change the principle under which the EDC has operated successfully for ten years, a success reflected by the attitude of industry in this country.

If you go to the exporters, Mr. Speaker, you will find they are well satisfied and anxious that this Bill move forward so that the corporation is able to get on with its work. I regret the fact that some Hon. Members, and I say some, seem to be playing politics by talking about all sorts of other Crown corporations with reference to the efforts of exporters to improve the standard of living in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: We have had speeches from a number of Members saying what evil things Crown corporations are, how many of them have lost money, and matters of that type. The hard, cold facts are that the EDC has never had a money-losing year in its entire operation. That is a matter of great laughter for the Hon. Member. In 1982 it had a $1.1 million profit, in 1981 it had a $2.2 million profit. I think if there was to be any criticism at all, it could be that it should not be making profits because of the fact that if it is going to best help the exporters of the country, then it should perhaps be taking a slightly greater risk in order to bring about the maximum amount of sales and therefore the maximum amount of jobs in our country.

Mr. Kempling: What is the return on investment?

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) compared it with the U.S. Exim Bank and spoke of how their method of lending money was preferable. I want to point out that that bank has to have conditional approvals in many instances, and that is a system under which exporters cannot efficiently operate. They never know if the loan is going to be approved. It is a substantial disadvantage. I also want to point out that statistics comparing the size of the United States with the size of Canada and the amount of their loans are not realistic because of the fact that this country is much more dependent upon sales abroad than is the United States. There is no country amongst industrialized countries more dependent on trade than Canada. We count on our exports for more than 31 per cent of our Gross National Product. We would not be able to have the standard of living that we have if we did not have the exports we have.

Some people have also been critical of the number of clients of the EDC and the fact that they are small in number and all of the loans are made to a relatively small number of organizations. What is not taken into account—and an Hon. Member referred to Babcock and Wilcox—is that many of those loans affect the sales of a great number of sub-contractors, as often happens with a company like Babcock and Wilcox. That is why we are hearing from the exporters of this country, because a great number of them are affected, not just a few. It is also often the case that a consortium is involved.

Here we have a system which has worked well for ten years, Mr. Speaker. Why do these tinkerers always want to change something that is working well? I believe that if something works well you leave it. Here is a Crown corporation which has never had a loss, which is well run, which is servicing the exporters of this country in a way that pleases them, and it has to come here because it is nearing its loan limit and also to expand the board so that, as Hon. Members opposite desire, there can be more members from the private sector.

Today we found the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) using up the time of the House, instead of letting this Bill go through, in talking about the makeup of the board and the number of private members on the board and wondering why we did not codify it. He did not even read the Hansard record of the debates of two days ago or he would have heard exactly the position we have taken, that we guarantee to provide more private members, indeed a majority, but we are not prepared to codify the division between private and public sectors on any Crown corporation because that would not be a useful thing to do. It would be useful if Hon. Members at least prepared themselves by doing their homework before deciding to hold up the Bill further.

I also want to say a word about the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton who just spoke and read at some considerable length something that sounded as if it had been written for him, although I am not prepared—

An Hon. Member: Scarborough East.

Mr. Regan: Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist)? I am sorry if I had the constituency wrong.

Mr. Gilchrist: You had the writing wrong, too.

Mr. Regan: Well, I do not know. I asked who the author was in the midst of it because I always found the Hon. Member much too intelligent to believe that he would be saying what was indicated. What he suggested here, Mr. Speaker, is that we should destroy the essence of the success of the Export Development Corporation and make it a plaything for politicians. He wants every loan of any magnitude made overseas for the sale of Canadian goods and services a subject of debate here in the House. You have the situation of an arm's length Crown corporation, and his own Members have said in relation to the members of the board from the private sector that they are not political, and a system which has worked well and resulted in a tremendous growth in our exports, but he wants instead approval by Parliament in relation to these big loans.

He also said there should never be such a thing as a Government account loan, with which I disagree. He referred to what he considered a horror, the Algerian monument deal. The Hon. Member might be interested in knowing that that was the purchase of Canadian Engineering services and materials, which resulted in a great number of jobs in this country. It is a fabulous success which has helped the esteem of Canada in Algeria and a great number of successive sales as a consequence. So I suggest some of the Hon. Members opposite stop talking out of both sides of their mouths. They stand up to say piously that they are in favour of exports, but then hold up the Bill and knock the Export Development Corporation. The Export Development Corporation is a first-class organization helping the exporters, solidly supported by the private industry in this country, and only opposed by the Conservative Party.

• (1600)

We have now been at the report stage for two and one half days, if my memory is correct. I suggest to Hon. Members that it is time to get on with passing the Bill and not trying to change the basic structure of something that has worked well for ten years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke). The Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) has already been recognized.

Mr. Gilchrist: I would like to ask a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are no questions permitted, according to the rules, at this stage.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Minister's non-political remarks. I must say that they raised a few questions in my mind. I heard him speak of the profit the Export Development Corporation had made, and it was as large as $2 million in one year, he told the House. However, he did not tell the House what the profits should have been relative to the investment of the Government in the corporation. I worked out the return on investment to be less than half of one per cent. That, for an investment on the part of a Government which pays 12 per cent to 16 per cent or whatever per cent interest on its debt, is a shocking performance. It is just incredible, and no person in business could ever exist with that kind of performance.

The Minister also told the House that the corporation was close to the end of its borrowing authority now, whereas the EDC, with borrowing authority of $10 billion, as of the end of the last fiscal year had used less than half, leaving it with $5 billion in the kitty still to use, and of its currently authorized $2.5 billion Governor-in-Council advances, only $700 million has currently been used.

In rising to discuss Motions Nos. 3 and 5 I wanted to illustrate the importance of the debate and the importance of the financing of Crown corporations in general. These two amendments are proposing to cut back the Government's proposal in Bill C-110 for borrowing authority because they want a multiplier of ten times the share capital authorized. That would be $20 billion instead of the current $10 billion. The amendment is proposing to cut it back to a slight increase over the present $10 billion borrowing authority. The other amendment concerns the authorized capital, which could be any amount. It is the amount of capital that one can raise and spend that is the important feature. Therefore, this perfectly reasonable amendment in Motion No. 5 proposes to cut the borrowing authority back to ten times the aggregate of the paid-in capital and earned surplus, a much more reasonable figure.

Let us consider this situation involving Crown corporations for a moment. The particular corporation under discussion, the EDC, is one of 23 Crown corporations known as proprietary Crown corporations and listed in Schedule D of the Financial Administration Act. That is a reasonable number, but these 23 corporations have been rather prolific and have amongst themselves 114 subsidiary companies and 58 associated corporations. Altogether, the Government has identified 306 Crown corporations which employ some 263,000 people and which had assets, at the end of the last fiscal period, March 31, 1982, of $74 billion and liabilities of $63 billion. The Crown corporations are already $63 billion in debt, and in this one Bill the Government proposes to increase the total borrowing authority of one Crown corporation by $35 billion.

The Crown corporations themselves, at $63 billion, owed as much as the total budgetary estimates for the whole Government of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982—an incredible amount. The amendments we are discussing today propose to control the amounts of these borrowings.

The Bill proposes a total increase of the borrowing authority of the EDC from $27 billion to $62 billion, an increase of $35 billion. The Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) explained that $1 billion or $10 billion was a large amount. I will give an example which I usually do not use in this Chamber to describe exactly what $1 billion is because today we are discussing a total of $35 billion in extra borrowing authority. If one had commenced on day one of the year zero A.D., in the first year of our Lord, with $1 billion and had started spending it at the rate of $1,000 a day, or $365,000 a year, an income exceeding that of most people we know, I am sure, such individual would today, on September 16, 1983, have over a quarter of a billion dollars left to spend, $276,311,-000. That would be the amount left, after 1,983 years, of $1 billion only. Here we are discussing $10 billion.

This problem of the Crown corporations is not a new one. I know Your Honour has studied the problems of Crown corporations at some length when you were a member of the Public Accounts Committee. Over the past seven years, I can tell the House that there have been many attempts to study, control and improve the accountability of Crown corporations. The Auditor General has mentioned this in many of his reports, the Government itself has conducted studies and commissions have dealt with Crown corporations. Many reports of the Public Accounts Committee have commented and made recommendations on handling and accountability of Crown corporations. There have been Bills introduced into Parliament. Today, we might ask ourselves where all of that has brought us. The progress was so feeble that the Auditor General was moved in his last report to make three pertinent recommendations, which I would like to read into the record as follows:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

I have already referred to the enormity of the dollars involved with these corporations.

Another recommendation in the current report of the Auditor General is as follows:

> Broad legislation for the accountability of Crown-owned corporations should be developed that will include provisions relating to each of the elements of authorizing and mandate, financing, directing, controlling and reporting. Such legislation should provide that these corporations be subject to comprehensive audits.

That is a very interesting subject. The other current recommendation on the same subject is as follows:

> Parliament should give attention to issues surrounding control and accountability of those mixed enterprises and other entities and associates in which the Crown is a shareholder.

I want to make it clear that my comments in the debate are not in any way to be construed as a criticism of the EDC itself. The Auditor General himself had kind words for the EDC. It is one of the better run Crown corporations. To its credit, the executives of EDC appeared before the Public Accounts Committee on the subject of comprehensive audits. The EDC is an example of one of the good corporations that accepted and enjoyed a comprehensive audit. It was prepared to come and tell the committee and other Crown corporations what benefits were available to them if they agreed to a comprehensive audit.

● (1610)

The danger is that some Crown corporations will become instruments of Government policy rather than being allowed to run as they are. Because the amount of credit being proposed for this Crown corporation is as large as it is, that danger is multiplied many times. If the Crown corporation that becomes an instrument of public policy is successful, the Government will take credit for its success. But when things go badly, such as in the recent example of Canadair, the Government is all too ready to blame the civil servants, the executives or management of the corporation, or something else, such as the Opposition, the weather, or whatever comes into its mind. While the reports on the Canadair issue are not yet forthcoming from the Public Accounts Committee, it is my own presently held view that the Government is trying to make the management in that case the scapegoat and take the heat off what was obviously a determined Government policy. I see you rising, Mr. Speaker, and I will end my remarks now.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to this debate. As we know, the amendments with which we are dealing are motions No. 3 and 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). These amendments should be allowed to pass and be added to the Bill.

I listened very carefully to some of the Minister's remarks and I found his attitude rather strange. I might say that I have a high regard for the EDC and the people who run it, and that is what concerns us. My concern, and I think that of many of my colleagues, is that we do not trust the Minister and the Cabinet with what they are trying to do to EDC. When we look back upon some of the other fiascoes we have seen in Crown corporations and some of the messes which have been created by Consolidated Computer, Canadair and others, we are concerned that this not happen to EDC. That is the reason for my colleague's amendment, which seeks to codify the number of directors from the private sector who should be on the board of directors of EDC. We simply do not trust what the Government will do, and that is the basic problem. The Government could indicate that there will be a predominance of directors from the private sector in the first year and then change it all around in the next year in order to suit its own purposes. That is how devious the Government is.

One statistic of EDC which concerns me is the small number of accounts which it handles. The Minister said that the 62 members of the private financing export club have a lot of spin-off work for subcontractors. While it is true that there is much subcontract work, and I can remember sitting on the Finance Committee several years ago when EDC would not handle anything under $1 million , I am amazed to find that it still has a very small select clientele with which it deals. I believe that is deplorable.

There are many small and medium sized corporations in this country which could be involved in the export business. In fact, the Government has suggested that the small and medium sized business sector is the engine with which to turn the economy around and employ some of the 1.5 million unemployed. What greater way to achieve this than by involving many of those companies in export financing? One needs only to talk to some of those small and medium sized companies to find out what results they had from discussion with EDC. It is a shock to find that it does not seem to be interested. I had a personal experience with this before I became involved in Parliament. I had an experience in an export venture. We called EDC, which said it would return the call. We called it again, but we never heard from it. We eventually arranged the whole deal with a merchant bank in London, England, over the telex. While we still made our sale we could not do it through the EDC. In the final analysis I discovered that EDC was not interested in the size of the deal we put together. It amounted to only a few hundred thousand dollars, which may be nothing to the EDC but a great deal to a small company. For that reason I want to see more directors and a greater diversification of directors from the private sector on the board of EDC.

I am somewhat shocked at the number of employees which it has for the number of its clients. In commercial terms the ratio of approximately 10 EDC employees for every client it handles is ridiculous. While I am aware that export work is specialized and needs specialized knowledge, I can say that there are many companies in the private sector which do just as technical work as EDC, looking into financing of export sales, but certainly do not have that employee-client ratio.

If we look at this in straight, crass commercial terms, the EDC today is employing about $741 million in its capital account. The Minister has said that it made $1.1 million in its operations last year. This is absurd when considered as a return on investment because any board of directors or management group in the private sector which employed $741 million in capital and had a return of $1.1 million would be thrown out of the doors at the next shareholders' meeting. The Minister said that the greatest thing about EDC is that it has not lost any money. I hope that it would not lose money with all the backing of the Government of Canada it has. We should realize that when it goes to the private money market to borrow money it borrows it at a preferred rate, which is a better rate than the private sector has because it has the covenant of the Government of Canada behind it.

One place where it earned its money last year was not on its operations but on the insurance that it sold. That insurance is five times the cost of comparable insurance in the private sector. In other words, if the company wants its financing it must buy its insurance. That is where the EDC made its money, and not on its operations.

Why did it not make money on its operations? I would like to see a complete analysis of the sales that it made and the deals that it has refinanced. How many times is a deal refinanced and still called an asset? I would like an answer to that question. While some people may make comparisons such as putting the capital account of EDC into the bank where it would receive 10 per cent and therefore make approximately $100 million by doing so and comparing that to the $1.1 million which EDC made, it is only part of the mumbo-jumbo which people who do not know business like to deal with. I prefer to deal with the real world. In this case I can sense another Canadair or Consolidated Computer deal, and any number of others we have seen as a result of this increase in capital.

I am also concerned that control is being further removed from Parliament. Our only defence is to put in an amendment to urge that more private sector people be appointed to the board of directors and the vice-chairman of the board to be elected by the board preferably be someone from the private sector so we can have some kind of balance. I just do not trust the people in the public sector who are on a myriad of these Crown corporations with which we have all sorts of problems. I hope that we can convince the Minister to change this provision so at least we can keep whatever bit of sanity there is in the EDC.

● (1620)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in rising to speak for ten minutes on this clause dealing with the Export Development Corporation. I would point out that of all Parties in this House ours is most interested in the stimulation of trade. We want to see as little government intervention as possible. We want to see as much foreign trade as possible. In principle, we support this kind of measure in terms of promoting the solid progress of any kind of export development. What we object to is the kind of open ended financing which the Government wants for this corporation.

I repeat, in terms of concept, if there is a way in which we can stipulate foreign trade and help Canadian companies grow and let a government corporation like this be a facilitator of foreign trade for our Canadian companies that will provide jobs for Canadians, we are all for it. However, I think we could list examples where this concept has turned out to be the reverse, where it has hurt and cut out Canadian jobs rather than stimulating them.

I listened with interest to what the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) said a few moments ago in defence of the Algerian monument deal consummated a few years ago. He said, "The Algerian monument deal was a fabulous success" quoting the Member sitting behind him from Montreal who is Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. It was a fabulous success, we heard. Let us assume, in terms of providing jobs for Canadians, that that project did that. It provided jobs for design engineers, for fabricators and so forth. But what was repugnant to Canadians at the time, and still is today, is that through Canadian Government financing, support financing, that deal went through at something like 9.5 per cent interest. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is listening very carefully. I think he will agree with me that the deal went through at about 9.5 per cent interest at a time when Canadians were financing businesses and homes at rates ranging from 18 per cent to 24 per cent. If it was good for the Government of Algeria, why could we not provide financing for Canadians at the same rate? That is what was repugnant to Canadians. It was not the fact that a deal had been struck with Algeria. It was the kind of concession made to a foreign Government when there was no room for Canadians at the same time for a concession of that kind.

The Minister also objected to the fact that some Members would like to see an examination by Parliament as to the kinds of deals made with foreign Governments. I can understand his reservations. I do not think that Parliament should examine every precise detail. There should not be that kind of intervention.

Two years ago we discovered almost by accident that Canada helped to facilitate a deal with the Soviet Union selling partially refined uranium which, in turn, would complete the refining process and then sell it to other countries. Is that kind of facilitation in the best interests of our country? Should we sell uranium to the Soviet Union which in its process can then sub-trade that produce to the Federal Republic of Germany, to Argentina, to Italy or to some unfriendly countries? Is that in the best interests of Canada?

We had an example today in the House. One of the Members from Hamilton raised the issue of Lada cars. In Moscow, Lada cars sell for $12,000. In Canada they sell for $6,000.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Some of the NDP people drive them.

Mr. Friesen: Is that providing jobs for Canadians when an export corporation can help put together a deal whereby a foreign product can be dumped on the Canadian market at 50 per cent of the price tag of its sale in its own country and in the process cut out jobs in the steel industry and in the automobile industry? As my friend, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) said, the NDP Member who raised the subject ought to know that Members of his own Party are driving those cars. We wonder about that. That is why we have questions about that kind of activity. But what we object to most is the change in the role and the size of this corporation. It used to be a kind of insurance company so that Canadian companies dealing with a foreign company would have insurance in case a deal fell through after delivery had been made and payment was not forthcoming. Insurance would be there so the company would remain solvent and it would get its money.

Now, by the provisions in this legislation, that will be only a small appendage, only a small part of that business. As my friend, the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) mentioned, insurance happens to be the money-making side of the corporation, even though the interest of the corporation is now in financing. With good reason we can understand that the return on investment is only about one-half of 1 per cent.

The other objection we have is the size of the corporation. It is mushrooming out of all context to its previous role. It looks so innocent to see a provision in this clause which says this corporation wants to have an infusion of $2 billion. The general public may not understand that that $2 billion mushrooms to a total of effective financing of $62 billion. With $2 billion it extends by tenfold the borrowing authority of the corporation on its own. You already have $22 billion there. Then the Cabinet is allowed a $10 billion override above that. If the corporation decides there is a deal that is not in the best interests of the corporation but the Cabinet likes it, Cabinet can override the decisions of the corporation to the tune of $10 billion. Then the Cabinet can give an extra $10 billion in loan guarantees outside the purview of the decisions of this corporation. As well, there is $20 billion in insurance that can be added on top of that. What looks like a $2 billion infusion of capital is actually a $62 billion extravaganza now at the disposal of this corporation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): How much?

Mr. Friesen: This is why we object to the lack of parliamentary control over the activities of this corporation. The $2 billion we can perhaps understand. But the $62 billion is out of all reason. If the corporation wants to do business to the tune of $62 billion, we think it should have to come back to Parliament for approval at certain stages before it can spend that kind of money for insuring that kind of money. Therefore, we have introduced these amendments which would limit the amount the corporation can do, so that Canadian taxpayers will not be in a state of jeopardy as a result of the open-ended financing which is now available to the Export Development Corporation.

• (1630)

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, various speakers for my Party commenting on this Bill have endeavoured to make it clear that we are very much in favour of increasing Canada's exports and export capability. We very much recognize that in the world of international trade today the utility of the Export Development Corporation or a corporation of that type to help in the financing of international transaction is very useful, in fact perhaps even essential given the competition from other countries. The fact that we are in favour of export financing and the fact that we recognize Canada must compete are insufficient reasons for the Government to ask us to set aside our responsibilities as Members of Parliament and the other considerations as responsible Parliamentarians that we should bear in mind and simply rubberstamp what the Government is asking us to do. There is simply too much borrowing authority asked for in the Bill. Simply too much is being asked for, with no opportunity for Parliament to call to account, to discover or to exercise any sort of control over how the borrowing authority is utilized.

Whether we are talking about taking tax dollars from Canadian citizens and spending them or pledging the assets of Canadian citizens for a loan, the effect is exactly the same. There is no difference in substance. Yet for some reason one would get the impression that the Government thinks there is. I am sure it would never ask the House for $60 billion in cash taxing authority and say, "Never mind how it will be spent; just give us the $60 billion cash and we will spend it wisely". I do not think the people of Canada would tolerate that; the Government would not ask for it. But in essence that is exactly what is happening here.

Since I have been a Member of Parliament for the last 11 years, there has been a constant issue which started before I came, that is, the question of how we control Government spending. There has been a prevailing feeling substantiated by evidence and a concern expressed by responsible Canadians from all walks of life about the nature of Government spending and the controllability of Government spending. Over the last few years the portion of the Gross National Product being spent by Government continues to grow in spite of what are apparently the best efforts of Government to try to control it. We have had task forces, royal commissions and any number of investigations by Government agencies, non-Government agencies, private institutions and academics looking into the fundamental problem of how to control Government spending. The solutions have been varied. Some have been introduced by Government—the envelope system in Cabinet and so on. There has been a consistent theme from everyone who has proposed solutions, whether it be the Lambert Commission to which the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) referred earlier or the Glassco Commission, that there has to be openness about Government spending. The people have to know how much is being spent and how it is being spent. In other words, there has to be accountability to Parliament. That has been the fundamental bedrock. That in itself will not bring Government spending under control, but without it there is no hope of bringing Government spending under control. That has been the consistent theme of everyone who has looked at it.

This Bill is simply inconsistent with that consistent theme. This Bill indicates that we as Parliamentarians will delegate to this independent body the authority to spend $60 billion. We certainly will have no right to intervene in that spending, none whatsoever. We will not even be able to find out how it will be spent. I know, I have inquired of this particular corporation in the past about a number of transactions, only to be told, "I am sorry, these are commercial transactions and there is confidentiality involved because of the commercial nature of the transactions". Merely being a Member of Parliament, only having been elected by the citizens who are responsible for the money that corporation is spending, does not give me the right or ability to find out how it is being spent! No one shall know except themselves.

It is a source of frustration and indeed anger that so often we have a position or philosophy with which the Government agrees, such as the question of accountability, responsibility or openness about spending. I am sure no one on that side would say that be is in favour of keeping Government spending secret. No one would say that he is in favour of the public not knowing how its money is being spent. They would all insist that in fact the public should know and Parliament should know. I am sure that is the position of the Government. In spite of that position, it produces legislation like this saying, "But in this instance, so as to help trade and to give this corporation more money we want you to delegate your right to control the public purse and give this separate non-accountable group the authority to borrow and spend $60 billion". That is simply unsatisfactory. Also I would suggest that it is very shortsighted in terms of the Government's other responsibilities.

I have heard Ministers of Finance say to the House and to the public that the difficulties they had controlling the Canadian economy, influencing it or doing things about interest rates, unemployment and growth, were that the federal Government's direct spending as a portion of total Government spending had been decreased; that in fact the amount of spending through the Consolidated Revenue Fund which was not statutory and over which they had influence and the decisions they could make were relatively limited. A great deal of Government spending is established by statute. Their flexibility is very limited and, because of that limited flexibility, they are unable to exercise the kind of control and beneficial regulation of the economy which they might choose to do. If that is the case, why in blazes is the Government delegating to this separate group, over which it will have no day to day control, the authority to spend $60 billion? How can it rationalize the two positions? Yet we get that constantly. How can it justify this kind of Bill in the face of its decision not to proceed with the Crown Corporations Bill introduced in 1979 by the Clark Government which had in fact been written before that? How can the Government justify this extraordinary amount of money to this Crown corporation when we do not have legislation which allows the House to exercise the responsibility on behalf of taxpayers that taxpayers expect of us? One could perhaps forgive this legislation if it had been preceded by a Crown Corporations Bill that would provide that authority.

• (1640)

I regret to see that you are rising, Mr. Speaker. I was just starting to clear my throat and get warmed up. Perhaps I will have another opportunity to speak.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak on the amendments to the Bill to limit spending by this Crown corporation to $1 billion from $2 billion in terms of capital expenditure.

One of the problems that is faced by this country is the problem of debt. I believe that it is increasingly becoming a concern of the constituents of the country, and more particularly the taxpayers of the country, that spending, particularly by the Government we have had for the last 15 years, has gone out of control. It is interesting to note that when I came to the House in 1979, the total debt of the country was something like $78 billion. I am now given to understand that the total debt of the country is something like $160 billion.

Mr. Kilgour: Are you responsible for that?

Mr. Gustafson: No, I am not responsible for that. That is a pretty dramatic increase in debt and I believe that that is what we are talking about in the type of amendment that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is endeavouring to put forward. We are endeavouring to control this type of exaggerated spending.

I would first like to point out that in terms of the Export Development Corporation and international trade, our Party stands very positively in favour of getting into the export markets to create trade which would bring to the country a balance of payments that would be in the best interests of the country.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have had the pleasant experience of being appointed the critic for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board is a good example of a Crown corporation that has had a very positive effect on the country. In fact, export trade in wheat has brought a surplus to the balance of payments of the country of some $6 billion, with very direct credit, I believe, first to the producers of the country and also to a well run Crown corporation.

If that were to be the end of the story, it would be a very positive story. However, that is not the end of the story. There are some 306 Crown corporations in the country, the accumulated debt of which I understand is in excess of some $62 billion. I can say that the taxpayer is very concerned about the country's ever-escalating and accumulating debt. If this trend is to continue, we must ask ourselves what the outcome will be. Will it be a situation in which we give credit to those who do not need credit? I personally believe in charity. I am all for it. I believe that there is a definite need for charity when we know that we are helping the starving.

Mr. Forrestall: It begins at home.

Mr. Gustafson: But it begins at home, that is right. This Crown corporation happens to be one that has not used the full extent of the credit in its coffers. It is my understanding that there was some $500 million worth of credit available that was not used. Yet the Government is seeking an extension which goes even beyond the portion that was not used by the Crown corporation. Because of this, we must certainly strike a balance when seeking out new opportunities.

One would say that we stand only to criticize the direction taken by the Government. One would immediately ask what positive direction we would give to an export corporation and what kind of positive effect we feel it should have on the country. I am certain, and it looks very positive from a political standpoint, that within a few months, there could be a change of Government, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: The direction that the country is taking could be changed from one of ever-increasing debt to one that is very, very positive. It will become very important that agencies such as the Export Development Corporation have a positive influence on primary producers, not only in the areas of agriculture, timber, mining and other resources but that it have a very positive effect on every area in which the primary producer is involved. I believe that that is our number one responsibility.

An Hon. Member who spoke earlier complimented the Export Development Corporation on the fine job that it has done. That is important, but it is also important to continue in a positive way, not in a way which will create even greater debt for the taxpayer. It is important to create a climate in which the primary producer can do his job and put his goods on the export market in a way that will have a positive effect upon the nation of Canada and a positive effect upon the primary producer. This is most important to the farmer, someone who is familiar with the hard work that goes into production at the primary level. I believe that it is very important to the producers that we have the responsibility for handling the funds that are so necessary.

In the past few years, we have seen an economic downturn. If there has ever been a time when it has been important to handle the finances of the country in a very delicate and concise way but in a way which is responsible, now is the time. We do not see from this Bill that the Government is doing that. We do not see that the Government is carrying out its responsibilities when calling for excess amounts of money to be used. There is a possibility of doubling the authorized capital of $1 billion and ten times that makes a total of $20 billion worth of taxpayers' money that could be used in extending credit, which would throw the country further into debt.

I believe that the time has come when we must take a very, very close look at the creation of debt that the Government has been involved in. We must turn that around and create a positive involvement in export sales, which will have the positive effect of building up the country and lessening the load on the taxpayer. We should build for the future of this great country and the generations that are to follow.

• (1650)

Let us look positively at the future, Mr. Speaker. Let us look forward in a way that would not enslave our taxpayers and put them further into debt so that when we come back here in five years, we will not be dealing with $200 billion as opposed to $160 billion but, rather, that we can look at the positive side of the sheet and say that Canada is strengthened economically, to the benefit of all its people.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate because we are dealing with what is, potentially, one of the most serious problems facing the country.

I want to put it on record that there is not one Member of the Progressive Conservative Party who is not madly in love with the Export Development Corporation. We believe in it; we believe it helps Canadians with their exports, but we do not believe it should be abused in the way the Government proposes. It is an important institution which helps us compete in the export market.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, just because we believe it is a good and important institution does not mean that we should not criticize the attempt to administer different areas of the corporation in ways with which we disagree. We believe it has done an excellent job over the years and will probably do a better job in years to come—especially when this Party forms the Government, as we hope will be the case.

We should not abuse such important institutions or allow them to fall into disrepute because of the manner in which we manipulate them for the purposes of the Government—purposes, I might add, which the Canadian people are sick and tired of.

Let us consider one of the main reasons why the Progressive Conservative Party is so popular in the polls today and why the Liberal Government is so unpopular. It is because the people are sick and tired of the Government spending money which it does not have, and thus creating a larger and larger national debt. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not going to be around to pay it off, but his children will be. Fortunately, they are going to inherit a few million dollars, but the average Canadian realizes that his children are going to have to struggle. They should not be faced with even greater taxes imposed by future Governments in order to pay off mammoth debts created by the present Government because of its incompetent financial management.

That is the key thing to remember, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are worried about the deficit and the unrestricted borrowings by this Government. The deficit this year will be $28 billion, give or take a few hundred million here and there.

Let us see what the Government is trying to achieve through this Bill and what the amendments would stop it from doing. At present the Export Development Corporation has paid up capital of $700 million and is entitled, under the present legislation, to borrow a total of $4.7 billion; right there it has $5.4 billion. Then there is insurance of about $2 billion. I am not sure at this date how much there is in guarantees but say about $2 billion. There is also the Government account; to cover instances when the Export Development Corporations says, "There is no way we want to touch that lemon" but the Cabinet says, "Oh, yes, this is politically desirable." That account is around $700 million, I believe. It ends up with commitments of around $10 billion.

Under the present legislation the Government has the right to continue to expand its borrowings up to approximately $27 billion, so we are $17 billion away from a complete ceiling. What would the Government's rights be as a result of the amendments? It wants to increase the paid up capital to $2 billion. At ten times that for loan purposes, it would end up with about $22 billion. It wants $10 billion set aside for the Cabinet to pass Orders in Council on its own account after the Export Development Corporation turns applications down but for political reasons the Cabinet thinks the corporation should let them go through. That brings it up to $32 billion. The Cabinet wants to have another $10 billion on top of that so that it can give loan guarantees to people like Maislin—perhaps not Maislin, but to various other organizations, for something that other bankers have turned down. That brings it up to $42 billion. Then it wants a $20 billion proviso for credit insurance. The total is about $62 billion, Mr. Speaker. It has now only used up to $10 billion of its allowance of $27 billion, so it is $17 billion short. However, it wants to increase its rights to $60 billion before it has even used up that other $17 billion.

When we consider that in the last 20 years it has used up $10 billion, we must ask if the Government is going to become completely crazy and spend all of the excess before it is kicked out of power. It has to call an election before February 18, 1985—18 or 19 months from now. Unless every Member of Cabinet proved to be a drunken sailor on a spending spree, it would be impossible to blow that amount of money in the time left to the Government.

The people of Canada do not trust the Government now because of the way it handles money. When it only has 19 months left to be in power, why should the people give it the right to give loan guarantees of $20 billion here, insurance guarantees there and to order things on its own account up to such a mammoth amount? Why does it not come back to Parliament every one or two or even three or four years to get approval for these things?

If we open this up to the amount of $62 billion that, along with the deficit and along with the other Crown corporations that are entitled to build up deficits, all of which comes back on the shoulders of the Canadian taxpayer, then it is no wonder people are worrying about the future.

That has not happened yet. Canada is a country of great promise and it will have even greater promise when we get a new Government. In other countries which had promise, where Governments have gone berserk like Brazil, Jamaica, Turkey, Argentina or Mexico, the people are having to pay the price of governments borrowing more money than even optimism, hope or the good fortunes of those countries will make possible to be returned in future.

It is foolish for us to fall into that trap. Being cautious, we do not want to give a spendthrift Government the right to be more of a spendthrift. The Canadian public is very upset at the way the Government has spent the money and how it has increased the national debt in the time it has been in office. We, as Members of Parliament, have a right to try to protect the public purse on behalf of taxpayers instead of giving the Government a blank cheque which would allow it to spend for years, even if it were to spend prudently.

We encourage the Export Development Corporation to seek parliamentary approval every second year or perhaps every third year. We would like to examine these matters in a much detailed manner.

I am sorry that my time has run out, Mr. Speaker, because there are many more matters for which I have great concern.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock Monday morning, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 5:00 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, September 19, 1983

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1105)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, September 16, consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 3 and 5 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to address a few colleagues on amendments Nos. 3 and 5 to Bill C-110. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), deserves a great deal of credit for moving these amendments because by doing so he is drawing to the attention of Parliament a scandalous situation. Canadians are all too aware of the mounting deficits incurred by Crown corporations. Canadair, de Havilland, the Post Office, Consolidated Computer and VIA Rail have all made headlines recently as deficit-ridden corporations. As each corporation makes the headlines, the question arises as to how it could have happened. The blame is ultimately shifted to Parliament and it is to Parliament that Canadians look for redress. But, Mr. Speaker, no redress is found because Governments have given away Parliament's authority for reasons of political expediency.

• (1110)

Bill C-110 is designed to place the Export Development Corporation well beyond Parliament's reach. If the legislation passes without our amendments in place, then we have given the EDC an extremely long rope, and if it hangs itself on that rope Parliament will have very little to say about it.

The problem with the legislation is quite simple. It increases the authorized capital of the Export Development Corporation from $1 billion to $2 billion, which in turn increases the EDCs borrowing authority from $10 billion to $20 billion. Hence the EDC will be free to borrow as much as $20 billion before having to trouble itself with Parliament again. We cannot accept that, Mr. Speaker.

What is perhaps just as galling is the fact that there does not appear to be a particularly good reason for increasing the authorized capital or the borrowing authority at this time. The Export Development Corporation's 1982 annual report set out existing authorized capital at $465 million and borrowing at less than $5 billion. Both figures are less than half existing limits. Why, we might well ask, do the limits need to be doubled? I believe it behooves the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) to provide the House with a full explanation for not accepting Motions Nos. 3 and 5.

In addition to this explanation, Mr. Speaker, the Minister should ask himself if the EDC will receive entirely the wrong message from that legislation. Despite the statistics, it remains a time of restraint. The federal Government cannot let the deficit rip in good time as well as in bad. There comes a time, and I suggest that time is near, that the Government must start trimming its sails as the private sector opens theirs.

The Export Development Corporation has not been a model of sleek efficiency. Last year 613 employees were on hand to cope with 62 exporters. Two of these exporters accounted for 50 per cent of the funds. That is almost ten employees for each customer, Mr. Speaker. In addition to the 62 customers, the EDC employees wrote up approximately 900 export insurance policies or about one and a half policies per employee over a one-year period. I am not launching an attack on the EDC, Mr. Speaker. I am simply pointing out that additional borrowing authority is neither necessary nor advisable. If the signal from the Government to the EDC is one of: "Here is an extra $10 billion on top of the $5 billion you have yet to use", then where is the incentive to run a lean operation? The EDC would have more credit than it could use and neither the EDC nor the Government would need worry about Parliament for a long, long time.

We have seen that the track record of too many Crown corporations has not been good. These corporations have escaped public scrutiny precisely because of legislation like Bill C-110. We on this side are of the opinion that the public has had quite enough of this and wants to see Parliament reassert control. No control is possible if the Government continues to use its numbers to ram through legislation which sidesteps Parliament. The Auditor General has already referred to Crown corporations as a subgovernment.

Part of what the Auditor General is getting at is the new relationship which is becoming too much the rule, the new relationship between the Government and Crown corporations. Parliament is excluded from that relationship because Parliament has been legislated out of an active place in the Crown corporation's existence. The time to halt this slide into irrelevance is now, and one positive step would be to adopt Motions Nos. 3 and 5.

• (1115)

Before concluding, however, I believe it is worth our while to see how the Export Development Corporation's United States counterpart has operated. After all, the Minister of State for International Trade has recently concluded that our trade interest lies chiefly with the United States. The Minister might then wish to go a step further and see how the Americans operate. I wonder, as an aside, if one of the high school classes in my riding of Northumberland could have reached the same conclusion about Canada's trade policy at a great deal less cost to the taxpayer.

The Export-Import Bank of the United States is a rough counterpart to the Export Development Corporation. That bank has paid-in capital of $1 billion and borrowings of $16 billion. What is proposed in Bill C-110 is authorized capital of $2 billion, twice the amount of the United States counterpart, and borrowing authority of $20 billion, a great deal more than the Export-Import Bank. Who is the Government trying to kid? Our population is one-tenth that of the United States, and our trade volume is considerably less, yet the Americans are operating at less potential cost than is proposed in Bill C-110.

I suggest that it is time to put Canada's tax base into perspective. The taxpayers of Northumberland naturally want to see Canada's trade expanded, and we all do, but not at any cost. If the Government's intention with Bill C-110 is to increase the dollars available to subsidize loans to foreign purchasers, then I am even more adamantly opposed. It is not much of a sale if the selling price is less than the cost. Surely to goodness, it makes far more sense to use the taxpayer's dollars to assist Canadian enterprises which can or could make bona fide overseas sales. Monuments in Algeria do not help the unemployed in the county of Northumberland.

The Canadian people have made it abundantly clear that they want Parliament to tighten its control over runaway expenditures. People are sick to death of scrounging for rent and mortgage payments while reading about billion dollar deficits. Accountability is a must, and Bill C-110 cripples that. We on this side do not expect to be able to stop the legislation, but there can be little reason for the Government not to adopt Motions Nos. 3 and 5. I strongly urge it to do so.

• (1120)

Mr. Bill Wright (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this morning to speak to Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Corporation. I am also pleased to see the Minister here since it is relatively unusual to see Ministers in the House day after day listening to comments for or against their Bills.

The amendments presented by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) are in Motions Nos. 3 and 5. Motion 3 proposes to reduce the authorized capital from two billion, one hundred dollars to one billion, one hundred dollars. Motion 5 is to limit the borrowings so that they do not exceed ten times the paid-in capital and surplus of the company.

If we look at some of the statistics related to the Export Development Corporation, we see that it now has an authorized capital of one billion, one hundred dollars. It has a paid-in capital and surplus of $651 million and its earnings in 1982 were approximately $1 million. In order to earn that $1 million it placed $2.46 billion in loans in 1982 through 63 transactions. There were 613 employees to carry out these 63 transactions. In other words, there were ten employees for each transaction.

When we study this information further we find that for the $651 million which the Government has invested in this corporation it only earned $1 million in 1982, which represents one-quarter of 1 per cent return on capital. What Canadian could operate a business with a .25 per cent return on capital? In effect, this means that it is an inefficient corporation. There are no checks and balances in this corporation, which I will expand upon in a few minutes when I talk about the paid-in capital versus authorized capital.

There is no efficiency lodged with EDC because of this provision. Since there is no efficiency built into the corporation, it does not have to obtain a reasonable rate of return on its capital. Yet the citizens of this country are subsidizing this corporation when it receives a return of .25 per cent on its capital.

I believe the Minister said that no industrialized country in the world is more dependent on exports than Canada. While I admit that we are dependent on exports, I suggest that his statement is not true. Technically speaking, Japan is more dependent on exports than Canada. Certainly we are dependent and need exports, but to say that no industrialized country is more dependent than us is an overstatement at least.

Where is the need for this increased lending? EDC has not demonstrated that it needs to increase its authorized capital. It is not using all that it has at the moment even though we disagree with some of the provisions. When a private sector corporation seeks to increase its authorized capital, it usually demonstrates the need. This is not so with Government organizations such as this. In effect, the Government wishes to remove this control of borrowing authority from Parliament and lodge it with the bureaucracy which is then not accountable to Parliament.

If we look at some of the corporations that the Government has set up, we can see some very peculiar things. One can think of Petro-Canada and what a great corporation it is for Canadians. Its potential loss this year will be approximately $15 million. It has laid off 25 per cent of its staff over the last year. It recently negotiated the leasing of 240,000 square feet in a building which it leased in Calgary last year at $21 a square foot. The building has been empty since that time and Petro-Canada is offering to sublease the building at zero rent; one only has to pay the operating costs for the space. That is the "efficiency" built into the bureaucracy by this Government.

• (1125)

We do not have to look much further than Canadair which lost $1.4 billion last year. If that is not bad enough, the new corporation which the Government intends to set up to oversee these corporations, the Canada Development Investment Corporation, will take on all of the debts of Canadair amounting to $1.35 billion. The Canadian people have to pay that sum. We now have to assume Canadair's debts. This is an example of efficiency in Crown corporations.

We can talk about de Havilland which lost approximately $364 million in 1982 and will have a substantial loss again this year, as will Canadair. We can talk about CIDA. CIDA provides loans to other countries. At the end of the Government's fiscal year, it is not unusual for the Government to give countries which apply for loans more money than they ask for. This is done because the agency wants the money spent before year end, otherwise its allotment could be cut back. This is the "efficiency" built into these Crown corporations. There are no checks and balances. There is no control. We in this Party are trying to restore that control. We do not think the additional capital is needed.

The Government wants borrowing authority ten times the authorized capital. Motion No. 5 by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South seeks to restrict that borrowing to ten times the paid-in capital. That will put a balance and check into the corporation so that efficiency would become the norm rather than the exception. The corporation will have to attempt to increase its earnings. This will allow it to loan out more money based on its built-in surplus. At the moment there is no indication that the corporation has to earn any money.

We are not opposed to the principle of the Bill, but we are opposed to some of the provisions. The amendments moved by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South are worth-while motions.

I would like to conclude by reading a couple of points from the Auditor General's Report. Since 1976 various Auditors General have been indicating their concern about the lack of accountability of Government organizations. The first quotation is this:

> In the majority of Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective. Moreover, co-ordination and guidance by central government agencies of financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations are virtually nonexistent.
>
> This, together with the results of a prior year's study of similar practices in departments, led the Auditor General to express the deep concern that Parliament—indeed, the Government—had lost, or was close to losing, effective control of the public purse.

The Auditor General's report goes on:

> Parliament's involvment both in establishing and overseeing Crown-owned corporations is essential for effective accountability.

At the present time Crown corporations are not accountable to Parliament. Only Members of Parliament are. Unless we bring back that control, we will lose complete control over Government spending.

• (1130)

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the Export Development Act for a few moments and to refer specifically to the Export Development Corporation, which provides yet another example of a branch of Government that is out of control and no longer accountable to Parliament. The fact of the matter is that the Export Development Corporation is rapidly on its way to becoming a bureaucratic nightmare. It has a history of making unsound loans to foreign countries, borrowing and lending money at ever increasing rates, extending its empire, and involving Canada in deals which are both expensive and can be proven very inefficient. For instance, the corporation quite often does business for the Government of Canada and, under the provisions of the EDC, can authorize up to $2.5 billion just by Order in Council, a decision of Cabinet, a decision that never comes before the elected representatives of the country. As of December 31, 1982, the Government spent $753 million of taxpayers' money in this manner—Orders in Council.

But this is only the beginning of an horrendous nightmare. There are some 613 employees of the corporation. They have offices in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax, with their head office in Ottawa. This translates into almost ten employees for each separate loan customer. This is a fine example of Government mismanagement and economic inefficiency. What bank, what trust company or what lending institution could exist on a ratio like that? It is little wonder that we are burdened with the billion dollar deficit figures which continue to restrict and impede our economic recovery.

For instance, after investing $691 million of public capital, the corporation was able to show a profit of only slightly more than $1 million. This type of gross ineffectiveness is unacceptable to this Party and I am sure to the people of Canada. To make matters worse, we Parliamentarians have literally no control whatsoever over the workings of the corporation.

It is the serious question of accountability which I would now like to address by analysing a number of inequities that arise out of the Export Development Act. To begin with, I would like to discuss Section 11(2) of the Act which reads:

> Where the board recommends that the Minister subscribe for unissued shares of the corporation, the Minister may, if the Minster of Finance concurs, subscribe for such shares at par as he considers desirable and there shall be paid to the corporation the amount of each subscription out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such amounts as the board requires.

In other words, this authorizes the Government to treat the matter as statutory, as law, effectively eliminating the possibility of a parliamentary vote. We have seen examples of that in the not too distant past. As usual it means that taxpayers are denied the basic rights of a democratic society, and their hard-earned dollars are displaced at the whim of yet another bureaucratic monster.

Also I would like to draw attention to Section 31 of the Act which reads:

> (1) Where the Minister reports to the Governor in Council that
>
> (a) the board is of the opinion that a proposed loan or guarantee of the kind described in Section 29 would, if made or issued, before a term or in an amount

in excess of that which the corporation would normally undertake in relation to any one export transaction, person, country, government or agency thereof or in relation to a particular export transaction, person, country, government or agency thereof, and

(b) in the opinion of the Minister it is in the national interest that the proposed loan be made or guarantee issued, the Governor in Council may authorize the corporation to make the proposed loan or give the proposed guarantee, as the case may be.

In effect, loans of this nature may be made by the corporation, by the convenient method of Order in Council. Once again parliamentary authority has been drastically superseded and the current Government has managed to go one step further in eroding the magnanimous institution known as Government.

While continuing its assault on parliamentary tradition, the Government simultaneously manages to interfere at an alarming rate in the business of the private sector. This is very disturbing to our Party. It is by now quite evident that a great deal of the activities currently delegated to the Export Development Corporation could successfully be turned over to private enterprise with the proper reorientation and structuring, where the dollars would be spent with far more justification than, as referred to earlier today, in monuments built in Algeria. Also the funding has been conducted on a narrow basis with a great deal going to limited sources.

In conclusion, the Progressive Conservative Party looks upon the Export Development Corporation, as it does all other Crown corporations, with a great deal of scrutiny and concern for control of the public purse. There is a serious need for increased control by Government and increased accountability to Parliament as recommended by the reports of the Lambert Commission, the Auditor General and the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I am afraid from time to time that these reports go unnoticed by the Government.

The present structure of the corporation being discussed today is not conducive to efficiency and cost accountability. Funds must not be allowed to be granted solely by Order in Council or a decision of Cabinet behind closed doors without proper parliamentary debate. For this and many other reasons, the arrangement currently prevailing must be eradicated by amendments in favour of a structure more accountable to Canadian taxpayers.

We have had enough of monuments being built at taxpayers' expense. We have had enough of Crown corporations spending at will the dollars of Canadian taxpayers without a word being said in this place about where such decisions should be made. I am sure Hon. Members on the Government side as well as those on the Opposition side would like to know more than Cabinet knows about decisions concerning the spending of taxpayers' dollars. We hope there will be sufficient amendments to the Act we are discussing today to return accountability to where it should be, here in Parliament with its elected Members, whose sole job it is to represent the constituents who sent them here to speak on their behalf.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on behalf of my Party to the amendments now before the House. The entire question of the Export Development Act and the institutions for which it provides are very important to the country. Anything concerning the relations of a modern state such as Canada with other countries and states is important. Naturally I am interested in different parts of our relationships with other countries. The export development part is extremely important. Another area of particular interest is the matter of international aid. Both these areas are closely linked.

I have difficulty accepting some of the facts which the Progressive Conservatives bring forward about the misuse of aid. The example which has been given repeatedly of a monument in Algeria—unfortunately I have never seen it—is a poor example of Canadian aid; but I know of hundreds of examples where aid has truly helped and brought about better lives for many people. I would say that a broader look in this regard is required.

In so far as these amendments are concerned, I think we are at a small logjam. Yesterday I travelled through a portion of Quebec and saw some logs. As soon as I saw them I remembered the stories about logjams. In a logjam, the logs pile up because certain logs will not break loose. If someone finds the logs causing the problem and dynamites them or uses some other means, the logs begin to move again. With regard to this Bill, if the Minister was willing to discuss some concessions with the Opposition, we might be able to get out of our present logjam and get this Bill moving again.

• (1140)

There are basically two problems with the amendments now under discussion. The first is that the Government is asking for $2 billion in this Bill and the Opposition is speaking to $1 billion. As others have mentioned, $2 billion is a large amount. I wonder whether there is a possibility of the two sides coming to an agreement and rather than $1 billion or $2 billion, there could be a meeting of the ways somewhere in between. It is necessary to reach a compromise in order to get the Bill moving. Possibly we could speak about $1.5 billion and agree to such an amendment.

I suggest that the Minister and the Opposition think in those terms. Possibly we could find a middle of the road solution which recognizes the Opposition speaking against the $2 billion in funding, but at the same time satisfying the Government.

There is a second matter holding up the passage of this Bill. Here, too, a compromise could be reached. The Opposition is asking that the majority of the directors be from the private sector. I can see that as something the Minister could accept. Everybody who would be a director would be a Canadian. I cannot see that the ministry would suffer if people were selected from both the public and private sectors, with the majority from the private sector. I do not see any difficulty with that. If we want brains, skills, history and experience, the Minister should be conscious of the fact that that kind of Opposition move is an interesting point of view. I do not think the Bill or Canada's relationship with other parts of the world would suffer.

I ask the Minister to look seriously at the two problems I have mentioned and to work with the Opposition in finding a solution in order that we can clear up the logjam and get the Bill under way. What is important is that we live in a very mobile, rapid society. International society is moving at a great speed. Anything that stops Canadian input into the world society causes a problem. It is a problem that we face and one which affects every Canadian.

This Bill could be moved along with compromise between the Opposition and the Government. All of us want to see an Export Development Act put in place, one that will bring about international relationships between Canada as a modern nation state and other modern nation states.

This is a complicated world and this is a very complicated situation. Even if we bring in more people from the private sector as directors, I do not think that will be an absolute solution. I do not see that in our modern times. If the brains, skills and goodwill are there, the Minister should consider appointing the majority of directors from that area of the country. We will not lose anything in the long run.

The Minister should also consider the fact that the Opposition is opposed to the $2 billion figure. It is just too much. At the same time, the Government is considering cutting back on our aid program. I suggest if we could cut back with this Bill, some of those funds could be used for aid programs. If the Minister and the Opposition could discuss these points, I feel that the Bill could move forward. That would be for the good of us all. It would be the right thing to do.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-110. The tragedy of Canada is that the federal Government continually demonstrates that it has no feel for the mood of the country and has no apparent desire to understand the psychology of its people. This is the product of a Government that is stale, having been too long in office. For more than a decade the only thing important to this Government was to appeal to central Canada's electoral majority, ignoring in the process any necessity to relate to the yearnings of the people generally.

Ignoring people has become the mark of this Government. We have seen this in a number of issues of the day, such as metrication and in the objectionable, insensitive manner in which it has pursued the legitimate goals which pertain to Canada's two languages, as well as in the national energy policy. We have seen this in the Government's mammoth appetite for spending which has produced deficits so large as to be unimaginable just a few years ago. We have also seen it in Government interference and the injection of regulations into nearly every aspect of the life of the individual and the business community. Unfortunately, we have seen it in the divisive nature of its dealings with the Provinces and other areas.

Now, when the people of Canada are crying out for governments to truly show restraint by paring their expenditures and demands on the Treasury, the national Government of Canada persists in maintaining its extravagances and its waste based on a detailed commitment to control the economy and the nation.

The single act of restraint by this Government was the enactment of the six and five legislation. Having done so little in the direction of reducing its commitment to spending the nation into poverty, this Liberal Government now shows through every piece of legislation which it puts before the House and the nation that its real intent is to expand its influence and its control over Canadians in every aspect of their lives. This is at a time when people throughout the world are begging governments to back off. In Canada we saw this desire of the people demonstrated in Saskatchewan, which rid itself of a burdensome socialist Government. The people of British Columbia made that same point in re-electing the Government headed by Premier Bill Bennett. For those who may not show much interest in what happens outside of central Canada, I might point out that the main issue in that election was the question of Government spending. If elected, the NDP proposed to provide more programs, fewer constraints and to spend more, which has been the tradition of that Party wherever it has achieved power. The people of British Columbia soundly rejected the NDP platform, supporting Mr. Bennett's call for a leaner, more efficient Government service, more accountable to the people.

The necessity of greater accountability was identified last fall by Canada's Auditor General, who said:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of Government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of Government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

It is because of this focus of accountability that we are being most critical of Bill C-110. It is within the areas of restraint and accountability that the Government has been most irresponsible in carrying out its mandate.

● (1150)

Bill C-110 is another example of this. Let us look at what it attempts to achieve. It would alter the current structure of the board of directors, thus increasing its power. It would increase the number of directors that the Government can appoint to 15 from 12 to reflect Government priorities. It would give full authority to the Export Development Corporation to take property as security. It would double the authorized capital to $2 billion of taxpayers' money. It would permit the corporation to borrow up to $20 billion for any of its purposes. It would permit the corporation to accept insurance liabilities up to a further $20 billion. It would expand the definition of the types of transactions in which the Export Development Corporation may involve itself. It would give authority to the corporation to subsequently alter an agreement or guarantee which had been undertaken on the direction of the Governor in Council.

It is interesting to observe that any loss, expense or default which may ensue would be chargeable to the taxpayer through the Consolidated Revenue Fund. Elsewhere in the Act there is a built-in authority for the Cabinet to intrude and force upon the corporation actions which may not be in its interests or in the interests of Canada as a whole. All of this is done outside the purview of Parliament.

Bill C-110 will increase from $2.5 billion to $10 billion the amount of liability which the Cabinet can impose upon the corporation by Order in Council, and always without going to Parliament for approval. In this, as in so much of its legislation, the Government bypasses Parliament with a blank cheque provision. According to Professor Andre Raynault of the University of Montreal, the Export Development Corporation is "rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient."

The amendments to the Bill that we have put forward are designed to restore the degree of accountability to Parliament which is a necessary ingredient of parliamentary democracy. We would leave the authorized capital at $1 billion and, most important, to bring rational economic considerations into play, we would restrict the corporation's borrowings to ten times the actual paid-up capital, plus any earned surplus.

Our friend to the left said that he did not appreciate the references to the Algerian monument to Marxism. I believe this incident requires repeated emphasis because it demonstrates the length to which the Export Development Corporation can go if it is allowed a free hand, given too much money and the licence to spend money to create its own priorities. We are not impressed by such deals as the Algerian monument to Marxism. The Export Development Corporation lent that country nearly $100 million at 7 per cent interest at a time when Canadians were paying 20 per cent or more. Restricting the amount of the borrowing authority of the corporation would certainly serve to curb this type of excess which so offends Canadians.

Financing of the Export Development is obtained by the corporation borrowing on the credit of Canada on the international money markets so as to finance the sale of Canadian goods. With the Government guarantee, the corporation is able to borrow money on the international market at a cheaper rate than any commercial borrower. The farmers of Canada would ask the Government why the Farm Credit Corporation, which is so restricted in capital that it is no longer making loans in some areas, has not been given the authority to borrow on the capital markets of the world at a favourable rate so that it can service Canadian farmers to a greater degree.

It is the purpose and responsibility of the elected Parliamentarians of Canada to exercise control over the purse strings of the national treasury. I find it difficult to understand the reluctance of Hon. Members opposite to accept that democratic principle.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak in this debate concerning Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, and the motions moved by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I find myself in my place in the House of Commons debating a piece of Government legislation which seeks to circumvent the prime responsibility of Parliament. Once again, I find myself in opposition to another Liberal attempt to deny Parliament its historical right as guardian of the taxpayers' funds.

What I find particularly obnoxious is that the federal Government can produce funds like pulling rabbits out of a hat for the Export Development Corporation for activities the public is not even aware of, while on the other hand it has difficulty providing funds to the Farm Credit Corporation for Canadian farmers who are in real need.

At first glance one would believe that Bill C-110, a Bill to amend the Export Development Act, and particularly Motions Nos. 3 and 5, are truly comparable to the motherhood issue. After all, who could speak against the export of capital goods from Canada and therefore the creation of much needed jobs? But we must also realize that there is something far greater at stake here, and that is the role of parliamentary authority and control of the public purse.

Fiscal responsibility and the lack of accountability to Parliament is the real question raised in this Bill. The Bill allows the Export Development Corporation's board of directors to spend $60 billion dollars without accounting to Parliament until after it is spent. The people of Canada are beginning to ask questions about how the Government has spent and is spending their money. Because Crown corporation after Crown corporation has lost the confidence of the Canadian public, people want parliamentary control of public funds. It is not unreasonable to expect that appropriations should come before the House as they are required, but not with this blank cheque approach. The House of Commons has lost control over Crown corporations, to say the least. We do not even know how many there are, let alone how much money is involved or for what valid reasons they are doing business. No one is questioning the validity of the EDC. What is being questioned is the authority of Parliament and our ability to question the spending of public funds before, not after, they are spent.

It is difficult to imagine what $60 billion really is, but I am told that just $1 million in $1 bills laid end to end would stretch from this Chamber to Sharbot Lake, a community in my riding 80 miles away. Just imagine how far $60 billion in $1 bills would go.

We are now considering $20 billion of borrowing authority to be lent to various concerns around the world. The Farm Credit Corporation needs another $300 million but the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) say no. The amendment we are dealing with today reduces the capital to $1 billion, $100 instead of authorized capital of $2 billion.

We hear a great deal of flak from Government Members about what a PC Government would do. Mr. Speaker, this Party has for some time, including 1979 when we were the Government for a short period, promoted parliamentary reform. Parliamentary procedures must be put in place that scrutinize expenditures before they are spent rather than after.

● (1200)

I urge the Minister responsible to consider these amendments to this Act and to start the process of giving some accountability back to Members of Parliament and, therefore, to the people of Canada. Year after year the Auditor General warns that financial management and control of departments and agencies is well below acceptable standards. The raising and spending of money goes to the very heart of the role Parliament plays. My colleagues and I are determined that this institution shall retain the integrity and responsibility with which it was originally endowed.

Recently I read in the local press that over 50 per cent of the Canadian population believes that the role of Parliament in our society is limited. With the current situation which the federal Government is trying to develop, I see this situation deteriorating, not improving. Fiscal accountability is fundamental to the rights of Parliament. Unless that responsibility is strengthened and preserved, I am afraid the institution we know as Parliament will cease to exist.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, has pointed out, among other things, the lack of private sector businessmen to sit on the reconstituted board of directors of the Export Development Corporation. Our desire to place businessmen on the board of directors of the EDC is to inspire a sense of reality in the decisions of the Crown corporation. As has been stated on several occasions in this House, the monument to the Algerian revolution which was financed by Canadian taxpayers is an example of where the isolated world of the civil servant lacks credibility.

In the same vein, I shake my head in disbelief when I witness this Government's response to the agricultural community. My Party has advocated on numerous occasions policies which would help farmers who are currently caught in the web of high interest rates, policies which would provide long-term credit at affordable interest rates. However, the Minister of Finance does not believe that farm bankruptcies are occurring, and he does not believe that the current situation in which a farmer finds himself when he approaches major lending institutions is cause for concern. It was reputed earlier this year that a mid-eastern country offered Canada money at 7 per cent interest to be repaid with food supplies, and the Government refused. The Minister of Finance is said to have stated that we did not need it.

The Government now wishes to develop a new wrinkle in deficit financing for its Crown corporations. Currently, a trust company or other financial institution must have money in the till to do business. They are able to borrow in ratio to their paid-in capital and earned surplus. This Act will allow the Export Development Corporation to borrow ten times its authorized capital. In layman's terms there may be only one dollar in the till, but the company is authorized to borrow $10 billion even if it has nothing with which to back this borrowing. The federal Government will allow this to occur. This represents no control whatsoever and is totally irresponsible.

The federal Government can find money to build monuments to a revolution in Algeria, but when the federal Government is requested to provide the necessary funds to help the average Canadian farmer produce food and hold off bankruptcy, a condition which has not developed through any action on the part of the farmer but through the high interest policy of the Government, the federal Government states that current funding is adequate.

Past experience dictates that parliamentary control of spending is necessary. Out of the 62 companies which received EDC financing last year, three companies received more than half the total. EDC has no business financing foreign development which will jeopardize jobs in this country. However, it would be remiss of me to claim that a double standard exists because I do not believe this Government operates by any standard of conduct. This Government could regain some stature if it would allow Parliament its natural historical prerogative of accountability for the taxpayers' dollars.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, you will have heard in the last few days a number of speakers rise in their places in this House and address themselves to Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Corporation. The reason, Sir, that a number of Hon. Members have been rising to speak is in the dim, fleeting hope that somehow or other the Government might get the message that there are major things wrong with the Bill which it is presenting to the House. We hope, like advertising with its repetition, that with the repetition of that message to the Government it will finally sink in. I have been watching the response of Government Members this morning and I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I really do not see the dawning of any recognition on their faces as yet. I can hope and I can pray, and I trust that they will come to that recognition before this debate is over.

The amendments which have been put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) are really worth while considering. There is no question but that they would improve this Bill. Beyond the amendments which the Hon. Member has put to the House, there are ramifications in this Bill which extend well beyond Canadian trade policy, well beyond the Export Development Act itself, well beyond Crown corporations, and which come to the fundamental reason why this House exists and what parliamentary tradition is all about. It goes to the very heart of our system of government.

I would like to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, right at the outset, that we all understand, appreciate and value the position of trade policy in our over-all operations, in our economy. We know how important it is. We think there should be greater emphasis by the Government on creating the proper economic climate, the proper environment in this country for an expansion of Canadian trade policy. Not that it will be limited, not that it will be restricted, but that it will be expanded. That will mean a stronger economy. It will mean more jobs. It will mean greater prosperity in this country. It is necessary, indeed, that Government provide that climate as much as possible. It is, therefore, not a question of trade policy which is under scrutiny or attack here. It is the provisions by which the Government is trying to bring about the extension or the amendment of the mandate of the Export Development Corporation.

As we have seen, the Government intends to double the authorized capital of the Export Development Corporation. This means that the corporation will then be able to borrow up to $20 billion as opposed to the original $10 billion which it had been authorized to borrow. The Government may also now make insurance commitments by Order in Council which are not of a proper commercial nature. It will be able to make these commitments up to a ceiling of $10 billion instead of the original $3.5 billion. This will all be done without any parliamentary approval.

That is what I meant when I said that this Bill goes much beyond trade policy or the Export Development Corporation or Crown corporations. It is the fact that the Government is trying to do this without proper parliamentary approval, which I oppose most strongly and which my Party opposes most strongly. It is in an effort to redress this situation that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, has put forward his proposals.

As elected officials representing Canadians from coast to coast, we as Hon. Members of this House have a responsibility to see that the public purse is scrutinized at all times. That is where Parliament began. That is the foundation upon which it was laid. And, Sir, not only are parliamentary expenditures to be scrutinized, but it is to be shown to the people of Canada that those expenditures are not being abused. Because, after all, it is not our money or the Government of Canada's money; it is the hard earned income of millions of Canadians which is being discussed here.

● (1210)

There will be people, Mr. Speaker, who would like to ask whether the borrowers who are able to take advantage of the borrowing measures under the EDC are going to get more preferential rates than, say, the small business community in Canada. More importantly, will the small business community of Canada ever know what those preferential rates might be? So much of this is done in secrecy, Sir, without the scrutiny of Parliament. If one were to look, as has been mentioned here many times, at some of the readily available examples of spending which have not been approved by this House or even come before this House, then one can see the potential for abuse which lies in the Bill as presented to us. It becomes very clearly visible. Some of these examples have been mentioned on a number of occasions and I wish the Government would take them to heart.

The fact is that Canadair lost $1.4 billion and that was never allowed to be scrutinized by Parliament. de Havilland lost $226 million, Via Rail lost $440 million, and Canada Post lost $300 million. There was no scrutiny by the elected Members of Parliament of those Crown agencies which together lost a total of over $2 billion. No one here in this House of Commons or in a parliamentary committee had a chance to examine that situation, and these are just four of more than 300 Crown corporations presently in existence.

Sir, I would like to refer to a statement made in the Report of the Lambert Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability some four years ago. The Report warned the Government of what would happen if the essence of accountability was further eroded. Commissioner Lambert said this:

> In examining the bewildering array of Crown agencies we have found that existing provisions for classifying them and for accountability for each category have been rendered obsolete. The resulting state of confusion, if left unattended, will seriously impair the value of these agencies as instruments of public purpose and do further damage to the tenuous and sometimes obscure accountability links that . . . they now have with the Government and Parliament.

He talked about the obscure accountability links and said they were in danger of being further eroded. Despite this warning the Government is now seeking to increase the funding available to another Crown corporation which is not adequately accountable to Parliament, and more importantly not accountable to the Canadian taxpayer; and we on this side find this simply unacceptable.

The importance of having Crown corporations strictly accountable to Parliament, Mr. Speaker, was emphasized once again in the Auditor General's Report last fall, which said this:

> The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of Government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for over-seeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

I see you are rising in your place, Mr. Speaker. In closing, I just want to reiterate that what the Auditor General was talking about was the fundamental responsibility of Parliament to be accountable for the expenditure of funds. I remind you, Sir, and through you the Government, that King Charles I lost his head because he refused to acknowledge the supremacy of Parliament. I predict, Mr. Speaker, this Government will lose not only its head but its position to your right, Sir, because it continues to ignore the supremacy of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my friends on the Government side and to my left in the New Democratic Party may find this almost impossible to believe, but I had no intention of speaking on Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, including the amendments put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Coming as I do from the world of broadcast journalism, I never exported anything except perhaps ideas. I have never even had relatives who were remotely connected with the Export Development Corporation, at least that I know of. So I have not had the benefit of learning the intricacies of the exporting business, nor do I serve on the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. So Hon. Members can see from my credentials that I enter this debate with a pristine pure mind, without prejudice, without biases cluttered up by technicalitities.

I must say that I do believe in the principle of an Export Development Corporation in terms of its benefits to the Canadian economy, and the Government must create a climate to expand our trading opportunities.

What has brought me to my feet today, Mr. Speaker, is a weekend's reflection on the many excellent points made by my colleagues in their interventions on Bill C-110 during last week's deliberations on the subject. Members from one end of this country to the other, from the Western Arctic to Erie in my part of southern Ontario, all sounded alarmed about the implications of this legislation if this House passes what the Government wants in connection with the EDC. The two buzz phrases which caught my attention over and over again were "Crown corporation bureaucrats" and "no control by Parliament".

Well, Mr. Speaker, I may not be an expert in high finance but I do know something about the danger to our democratic way of life, particularly the damage to our rising defict, when Crown corporations run by bureaucrats run amok. As one who has watched and reported and loved Parliament for 25 years, I know of, and indeed fear, the prospect that we as elected representatives may have literally no control over the actions of this Export Development Corporation. Even if the average citizen on the street has not the slightest idea of what the EDC is or does, that person understands one thing very clearly: a Government money grab. I wonder how the man or woman on the street would react to the prospect of this Liberal Government allowing the EDC to make loans in the billions of dollars without myself or any other Member of Parliament needing to approve them. That is something that every Canadian citizen can and should know.

What we have before us in Bill C-110 is a bureaucratically controlled mechanism, which means that the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael), the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), the Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff), the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald), the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) and any of the other Hon. Members here would not be able to vote upon this and we would be regarded as totally unnecessary. Well, I am sorry, Mr. Minister, but my constituents in Hamilton-Wentworth just will not buy that complete lack of a parliamentary safeguard. Otherwise, why are we here if the House of Commons cannot question and control the Government's spending powers?

Bill C-110 touches the very heart of Parliament. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), put simply and eloquently why we on this side are so concerned about the accountability and control of the public purse when he said:

● (1220)

Our country has a parliamentary system under which the Government should be reflecting the thinking of the people. I want to tell the Hon. Members of the Government that this section does not reflect the thinking of Canadians. The polls have shown that Canadians are heartsore over what has been happening. The present Government is no longer representing what the people want. It has been telling the people what is good for them for a number of years and this Bill is a typical example of where the Government has given authority to a group of appointed people to spend money that has not been authorized by the House of Commons or the Senate. That is basically wrong.

The section to which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River was referring, is the one that we are trying to correct. Just to refresh the memories of Hon. Members and to point out the importance of the amendments before us, let me read Motions Nos. 3 and 5. Motion No. 3 states:

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 23 to 26 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"11.(1) The authorized capital of the Corporation is one billion one hundred dollars divided into ten million and one shares with a par value of one hundred dollars each."

Motion No. 5 states:

That Bill C-110, An Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 39 to 41 at page 3 and lines 1 and 2 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"14. The aggregate amount of borrowings of the Corporation pursuant to sections 12 and 13 shall not exceed the amount equal to ten times the aggregate of the paid in capital and earned surplus in the accounts of the Corporation."

The explanation, as I see it, may be stated quite simply: the Government proposes that there be $2 billion in authorized capital for the corporation and that the aggregate amount of borrowing of the corporation shall "not exceed an amount equal to ten times the authorized capital of the corporation". Therefore, if one puts the Government's proposal against our amendments, one finds that the Government proposes to allow the corporation to borrow $20 billion without further parliamentary authorization. That is the basis for our strong objections, the objections taken by many Hon. Members in the debate.

Several Hon. Members have pointed out that it has become almost routine when dealing with the Government to speak in terms of "a billion dollars" or "a half-billion dollars" or "hundreds of millions of dollars", figures which are almost impossible for the average person to comprehend; yet here in this Bill the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) is attempting a money grab of gigantic proportions.

The provision with which we are now dealing calls for a total capitalization of the Export Development Corporation of $2 billion. When one multiplies that by ten—and that is the way the Bill works—one is considering that the Government is asking for $20 billion of lending authority which, in turn, means borrowing authority. That money comes from the taxpayers of this country. The Liberal Government proposes to accomplish this without parliamentary accountability because the Export Development Corporation does not have its spending scrutinized by Parliament. It is not required to table an operating budget, a capital budget or even to provide information on the size of its payroll. The mind boggles.

Earlier I mentioned the proliferation of Crown corporations in this country and how their spending can run amok. Let me conclude these brief remarks by quoting Professor Andre Raynauld, who is president-elect of the Economic Association of Canada, former President of the Economic Council of Canada, and a former Liberal M.N.A. in Quebec. This is what Professor Raynauld says about the Export Development Corporation:

> It is rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient.

A poll taken during the summer indicated that a large number of Canadians consider Parliament to be irrelevant. People do not feel that Parliamentarians are representing them or protecting their interests. That is what we on this side are determined to do in connection with Bill C-110. Through our amendments we are determined to make the Export Development Corporation accountable to the people. That is why I, as well as many other Members of Parliament concerned about control over the public purse, decided to enter the debate today. I thank the House for its attention.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take part in the debate on Bill C-110. I am delighted to have the opportunity to speak on Motions Nos. 3 and 5, the amendments which were put forth by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). The amendments to the Bill call for an increase in the capitalization of the Export Development Corporation. Of course, we wish the amount to be reduced from $2 billion as requested in the Bill.

When it comes to Crown agencies and the experience we have had in the House over the past number of years, our main focus of attention should be accountability and control of the expenditure of taxpayers' money.

The amendments brought forth have been introduced for the purpose of closer scrutiny by elected Parliamentarians to correct the inadequacies of accountability that are present in the Bill as it stands. The increase of capital authority to the Export Development Corporation from $1 billion to $2 billion should be further reviewed. This would give the Export Development Corporation the authority to borrow up to ten times against the capital authority. Is this really warranted? This means $20 billion worth of borrowing authority. In total, the Bill will increase to $62 billion the amount of money that the Export Development Corporation can borrow, lend and insure, all without adequate parliamentary scrutiny and control. The Government is asking for a blank cheque, and the answer should be no.

Although there may be good reasons for this extra borrowing authority, the purse strings do have to be tightened. As the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) stated in the House earlier in the debate, the Export Development Corporation is not the only organization that finances exports; the vast majority of this financing is done by the private banking system, as it should be. We must see to it that it stays that way in the present Bill. As it stands, these huge sums of money will be borrowed without having to come to Parliament for approval and there will be less accountability by the administration for the spending of these funds.

Surely through legislation of this kind we continue to see the erosion of Parliament's control over Crown corporations. Has the Government not learned anything from its past experiences? Has it such a short memory as to forget Canadair, which I believe was in the red to the tune of $1.4 billion, and VIA Rail, which lost $449 million in 1982? I understand that VIA Rail forecasts a loss in 1983-84 of some $755 million. de Havilland lost $265.2 million last year. The Post Office has reduced its usual deficit and I believe this past year it was only $300 million, and this with its greatly increased postal rates.

I recognize and support the fundamental purpose of the Export Development Corporation to assist our manufacturers and small businesses to seek new customers in the international marketplace. On this point, most Hon. Members will agree. The difficulty in the first place, is that there is no requirement that the authorized capital be in the accounts of the corporation; that is, both used and unused authorized capital.

The recent Economic Council report, "Intervention and Efficiency", devotes a full chapter to the subject of export finance and the Export Development Corporation. Government members opposite would do well to read the report, as its thrust is to scale down and reorient the Export Development Corporation and not to enlarge it. Seven of the report's 31 recommendations relate to the Export Development Corporation. One recommendation is that the corporation do less direct financing and that the private sector do more. We could not agree more. The focus of the Economic Council report, as I interpret it, points to a greater say by Parliament in the operations of the corporation. What the amendments propose to do is in the spirit of the report, as the Export Development Corporation presently does not have its spending adequately scrutinized by Parliament. It is not required to table an operating budget or information on the size of its payroll. Moreover, it borrows money in the name of the Canadian taxpayers without seeking parliamentary authority to do so.

● (1230)

The corporation is quite large, with 613 employees. In 1982 it dealt in loan accounts involving 62 exports. It had one customer for every ten employees. As well, it had just over 900 separate insurance policies in 1982 which represented 1.5 policies per employee.

The Government has approximately 306 Crown corporations employing over a quarter of a million people. I believe these corporations have assets totalling close to $75 billion and liabilities of $63 billion. This Bill will increase the borrowing authority of this particular corporation by $35 billion.

I want to assure the House that our Party is dedicated to improving Canada's trade performance and expanding its participation. It is not, however, dedicated to increasing the lack of accountability and control that characterizes the EDC and other Crown corporations.

Indeed, given that there exists the capacity within the existing EDC financing limits, further study hurts no one. As a Crown corporation, EDC should become as commercially viable as possible. As an instrument of public policy, it demands accountability, scrutiny, responsibility and good financial accounting. Would we not be irresponsible if we were to allow for this magnitude of borrowing?

The more the corporation grows, the more it will gobble up tax dollars. The larger the borrowing, the greater the risk. The taxpayers of Canada, particularly in my riding, no longer feel they are getting value for their money and they have good reason. There have been too many instances of Parliament losing control over the constant growth of its size and expenditures.

I conclude my observations by urging greater responsibility and scrutiny in relation to the present Bill. I believe the amendments are sound and should be adopted. Finally, the Export Development Corporation as a governing policy instrument should not be abused.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of the amendments proposed by a Member of the Conservative Party of Canada. I do so with a certain sense of knowledge that our nation of Canada in which we have so much faith needs to do more in terms of exports.

I am reminded this morning that in 1968, when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office in this country, Canada exported more goods and services than did the nation of Japan. I stand here some 15 years later with the knowledge that Japan today exports twice as much as Canada. That 15-year period of history is an indictment of the Liberal Party of Canada and the policies which it has put in place in this country as they relate to exports.

Today we are dealing with Bill C-110 and two amendments proposed by the Conservative Party of Canada. What is the essence of Bill C-110? In its basic thrust, the Liberal Party of Canada, the Cabinet and the Prime Minister are asserting to Canadians that they want to continue in the direction they have been heading and double the amount of money that is flowing to this corporation. The Government has indicated that it does not want to do so with taxpayers' dollars but with borrowed money. It has the mistaken belief that taxpayers' dollars are not at risk by simply turning around and borrowing money.

I say to the Minister that there are lessons which should be learned from history. I remind him again that this nation exported more than Japan 15 years ago and that Japan now exports twice as much as Canada. Surely the message the Government should learn from that is that we have been on the wrong track as an exporting nation in terms of our policies. Surely we should not have to stand in the House to deal with a Bill which would simply double the amount of money being spent on those policies. Surely 15 years is long enough to make the Government realize that it has been on the wrong track and should not be asking to double the amount of money that it is spending in that direction.

This Bill exemplifies the basic thrust of the Liberal Party's policies over the last 15 years. It represents a denial of the democratic process because it turns power and authority over to appointed bodies with increasing frequency. There are now approximately 239,000 Canadians employed by the federal Government who work in Government departments that are accountable to Parliament's elected representatives. Crown corporations, which are removed from the control of Parliament, employ some 262,000 Canadians. More Canadians are employed by Crown corporations than by the federal Government.

As I sat here listening to the interventions of Members of our Party this morning, I asked myself what the difference between a democracy and a dictatorship was. There is really very little, if any, difference between the two in a governing sense. Governments of both a dictatorship and a democracy make rules which can take away people's liberty and lives. This is done through criminal laws. As well, these governments pass rules, regulations and laws which take property away from people. The classic example of that is the tax law through which the Government can take a portion of one's goods or money. This is done both in a dictatorship and a democracy.

Therefore, if the powers of a governing dictatorship and democracy are the same, what differentiates a democracy from a dictatorship? The essential difference between the two is simply the ballot box. In a democracy we give a group of people, whether a municipal council, provincial government or federal Parliament, power to take away our lives, liberty or our property in whole or in part. In a democracy these people are elected on a regular basis for perhaps two, three or four years. Those people to whom we give that power are held accountable through universal suffrage, the freedom to vote. That is a very precious principle and I suggest to Liberal backbenchers opposite that it is a very important principle. When people are given the power to remove our liberty or to take away some of our goods or money, we have that vote which holds them accountable. If they do not proceed in a fashion which their electors feel is appropriate or correct, they can throw them out at their next opportunity to vote.

● (1240)

What happens when we give that power to an appointed group, when we give it to a Crown corporation, in this case the Canadian Export Development Corporation? Those appointees are not voted into office, and therefore they cannot be voted out of office. In this piece of legislation before us today we are giving this group of people the same powers that we give to governments, and it is done through the medium of a Crown corporation which is not accountable to Parliament. We are setting up a small, mini-dictatorship. We are transferring powers from Canadian voters to appointed bodies. We are transferring them from a democracy to a dictatorship. That has been the characteristic of the policy of the last 15 years by the present Prime Minister, the present Cabinet as well as preceding Cabinets.

We in the Opposition consistently attempt to enunciate that principle with the greatest clarity possible. We say to the backbenchers opposite: "You have a role and a responsibility. You can participate in the erosion of democracy, you can go into the privacy of your caucus or stand in the public glare of this chamber and say to the Prime Minister and to the Cabinet that democracy is the most important principle at stake. It must be protected. The good of the nation requires it and you can hold the Cabinet accountable."

Time after time after time we are disappointed because the backbenchers of the Liberal Party will not hold the Cabinet accountable. This supposedly small piece of legislation which sits before us today would empower an unknown group of 15 people to put the taxpayers at risk to the tune of $62,000 million; or to express it another way, to the tune of $62 billion. That amounts to better than two-thirds of total federal spending this year which will be put into the hands of 15 unknown people who cannot be ousted through the ballot box procedure. It is transferring $62,000 million to a dictatorship.

I urge all Members of this chamber to hold this Cabinet accountable and to vote for the amendments proposed by the Conservative Member of Parliament for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak today to the amendments to Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act.

At the outset I want to make it very, very clear that the Conservative Party is fully committed to increasing foreign trade.

Mr. Regan: Baloney.

Mr. Wilson: This has always been an integral part of our policy. In fact, the Hon. Member opposite who just said baloney will have to recognize and acknowledge that in 1979 the Conservative Government first made it a provision to have a Member of cabinet fully responsible for foreign trade, and I had the honour to be that first Minister.

It is very clear that the Conservative Party is very much in favour of increasing foreign trade. Increasing foreign trade is the best way possible to increase employment. The way to increase employment is either through domestic or export business. Clearly the increase in domestic business will continue in a normal pattern; sometimes a little faster and sometimes a little slower, but a normal pattern of growth. If we can increase our share of foreign trade by a small percentage in proportion to the over-all export business in the world today, it can have a very large and significant impact on Canada's economy.

Our opposition to this Bill is very clear. It has nothing to do with our position on foreign trade. It does not reflect any weakening in our resolve to increase foreign trade as part of our over-all policy. Our opposition is based on the concern that we have over the accountability of Crown corporations to this Parliament.

It has been very evident over the past few years that this accountability has slipped, and slipped drastically. The Canadair example is a text book case of how Crown corporations should not be run. There are some clear strains in the Canadair case that apply directly to the Export Development Corporation, and I will be coming to them in a minute, Mr. Speaker.

Bill C-110 asks for a blank cheque for the Government and for the Export Development Corporation. It is asking for borrowing authority that could last quite conceivably for the balance of this decade. I want to point out what Professor André Raynauld of the University of Montreal said. When referring to the Export Development Corporation, he said it was "rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster". That, I think, says it all. That is something we have to be very aware of and very sensitive to. I hope the Minister is taking account of these observations being made about a corporation under his authority.

The EDC Act normally comes before Parliament about every three or four years. If this Bill goes through in the form proposed, we will probably not see the EDC Act before this Parliament for the next eight or nine years, probably not before 1990. What we are asking for is reasonable control over this Crown corporation. In Motion No. 5 we have asked for a ten to one borrowing ratio on paid-in capital and surplus. Motion No. 3 requests that that authorized capital be limited to $1.1 billion. The current surplus today is close to $200,000. What we have here is an over-all paid-in capital and surplus of $1.3 billion. Ten times that is $13 billion. That means there would be borrowings authorized of $13 billion.

Let us look at what the borrowings are today which total about $4.3 billion. What is the concern? Why are these two amendments, a combination of amendment No. 3 and amendment No. 5, restrictive on the Crown corporation? We have to ask that question and we have not had an answer from the Minister.

We are asking for a borrowing multiplier also on paid-in capital and surplus. The Government has said it wants the multiplier on authorized capital which means capital that is authorized but not necessarily paid into the company. There is quite a significant difference and a very important difference. We have seen how Canadair, as an example, operated on a very low equity basis, borrowed an awful lot of money from banks, from the Government and from international investors, and got into a tremendous amount of trouble, so much so that we had a disaster on our hands and a write-off of $1 billion in taxpayers' money that was invested in Canadair.

If the Government is going to run the Export Development Corporation in the same way as Canadair, we could quite conceivably have another disaster on our hands because there is not that proper check and balance so necessary in running a financial corporation. The Government has not learned the lesson. The Government wants to run this company on fresh air, the same way as it ran Canadair on fresh air. You cannot run a company primarily on borrowings; you have to have that solid equity base. That is why we want to have the borrowing multiplier related to solid equity capital being invested in the company. I am not referring to equity capital in some Minister's mind who says: "Some day we may invest in that company, but not necessarily today". The Minister has not answered that question. He has not stated why the Government is not prepared to base its borrowing requirement on hard cash which it is prepared to invest directly in the corporation. I hope he will respond to that in due course.

● (1250)

The fifth amendment would ensure that the borrowing base is money in the company, not out there in an airy-fairy way in some person's imagination. When I look at the details of our amendment, I realize it is more generous than what I originally thought the Bill was allowing. I wondered why we were making an amendment that was more generous. I thought the borrowing multiplier would be based on paid-in capital, and we proposed paid-in capital plus surplus. Then I read it more closely and discovered that it was authorized capital. I look forward to the Minister's explanation on this.

I recognize that there can be some debate on the third amendment. Should the authorized capital be $1.1 billion as we have proposed or $2 billion as the Government has proposed? There is a $900 million difference which represents, with a ten times multiplier, $9 billion of borrowing.

The borrowing of the corporation today which has been built up over its life is approximately $4.5 billion. The difference between what the Government wants to put in and what we want to put in is equal to two times the total amount of borrowings built up over the many years the company has been in existence. That is excessive. It is not responsible and does not demonstrate that the Government is learning its lesson from giving Crown corporations a free hand to run away for three years to ten years before being called to account in Parliament. That is the fundamental issue we are facing today.

I would like to look a little more closely at this area. The growth in borrowings according to the annual report was about $800 million in 1982, the latest year for which we have figures available. That $800 million can be supported by an increase in the capital base of the company of $80 million. The existing authorized capital is $1 billion. That will support borrowings of $10 billion. The borrowings today are $4.5 billion, so there is a tremendous gap between the existing position of the company and where it can go under the current authorized capital, but a tremendous increase over what it wants to do in the next few years.

There has been a lot of pressure put upon us, which I am sure has been instigated by the Minister and his staff, by the exporting community to get the Bill passed because we will reach a crunch where it will not be possible for the EDC to lend any more money to support exports. The Minister has yet to say when that crunch will come. The implication left with us by these people is that it will come in a very few days. I say to the people who are putting this pressure on us that they should show a responsible attitude toward the control of the Export Development Corporation, encourage the Government to show that responsible attitude, and we will show a responsible attitude toward the passage of the Bill. We are reasonable people. We feel that foreign trade should be strongly developed, but we will not roll over or step aside while the Government rapes Parliament and takes taxpayers to the cleaners once again with irresponsible action and uncontrolled operations of Crown corporations.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, lest Hon. Members opposite feel we can move, let me assure them that we will not move until some reason is brought to bear on their apparent unwillingness to move even a little in the direction suggested by the amendments of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I wish more Government backbenchers and indeed some of its frontbenchers, apart from the distinguished three who are here, were present to listen to the arguments being put forth. Then when it comes time to vote on these important matters, they might not simply react to their Whip or Leader, but possibly might find it a useful occasion in which to exercise their best judgment.

I want to deal just briefly with some of the recommendations concerning the question of accountability, which is our fundamental concern and fear. Also I would like to deal with the size of the borrowings and the extensions provided in the Bill. They are mind-boggling. In fact, they are more than that; they seriously put into question the capacity of a country the size of Canada to deal with this amount of money. If we look at our weighted borrowings, Government debt, public and private debt for the first 116 years, we realize that the Government is doing more here than government process has done since the mid-1800s. It behooves us to look very closely at it.

The Economic Council of Canada considered these questions in its report on intervention and efficiency. It made a number of recommendations. I will deal with those which pertain to the Export Development Corporation because I think they are important. Its recommendations, among others, included the suggestion that the EDC should gradually, not abruptly, move toward providing export credit re-insurance, leaving the field of insurance where it belongs, in the private sector. It further recommended that the EDC serve as the insurer of last resort. Historically it has been attempting to do that, but the Bill before us takes it out of that category and places it in an entirely different position. It is not a lender of last resort, it is not an insurer of last resort. Indeed, Hon. Members over the last several days have indicated that in fact it is becoming a lender of first choice in opposition to the private sector.

Also the report recommended that the EDC continue to provide direct financing for Canadian sales abroad, but only when there is reason to believe that the private sector is unable to provide the required credits. Also it suggested that public financing should be made available only under terms and conditions commensurate with the risks involved, and the cost of such assistance, including the opportunity cost of the funds used, except in cases where it is deemed necessary to take into consideration the export support programs of other countries.

It further recommended that the gradual withdrawal of the EDC from most direct lending activities should be accompanied by an increased concentration of its efforts in the fields of credit insurance and bank guarantees. The corporation should also stand ready to provide refinancing facilities for private lending institutions engaged in export financing. There were eight or ten fundamental recommendations that in fact made sense, all of which pointed to the general problem of Government supplanting that as a policy or principle. Also it recommended that the Government should continue its efforts at meetings of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to obtain an international agreement to limit further subsidized export credit. I will deal with that matter a little later.

May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—CONTINUING OCCUPATION BY TURKISH FORCES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, nine years have passed since Turkey invaded Cyprus, an independent country and a member of the Commonwealth and the United Nations. The continuing occupation of almost 40 per cent of the territory of Cyprus deprives many Cypriots of their human rights, and hinders the negotiations between the two ethnic communities to work out a formula to live compatibly in peace with each other. The occupation has effectively prevented the United Nations from investigating approximately 1,600 missing persons taken hostage during the days of the invasion, despite repeated resolutions to that effect.

Canada on many occasions in the past has condemned military rule and foreign occupation of sovereign countries, but in the case of Cyprus no such stand has taken place. I respectfully request that our Government demonstrate a more just and courageous position toward Cyprus by voting in favour of all resolutions in the United Nations aimed at condemnation of the continuing occupation of Cyprus, and seeking to resolve the human tragedy of missing persons. Unless the Cyprus problem is resolved according to the principles of self-determination of sovereign nations, the cause of democracy, freedom of all nations, and human rights for all people of the world, will not be sincerely served.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

DEMANDS ON BUDGET

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, since 1959 the Farm Credit Corporation has been a valuable tool for farmers in their quest for funding. However, the demand now for Farm Credit Corporation funds grows faster than the Corporation's budget. The Farm Credit Corporation recently asked the Government's permission to borrow $600 million on the financial market, but was allowed to borrow only $250 million. The amount is already spoken for. This action by the Government confirms that it does not understand the importance and need for Farm Credit Corporation money in agriculture.

If the Government is truly concerned about jobs it had better look at the agricultural industry, an area where its action, or lack of it, is causing unprecedented bankruptcies and unemployment. In the short term, the Farm Credit Corporation should be allowed to borrow all the funds it needs. In the long term, an agribond system must be introduced, that is, if the Government is concerned about saving agriculture.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—REFUGEE DENIED PERMISSION TO ATTEND PARENT'S FUNERAL

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, approximately seven years ago Lilia Karp and her husband, Lev Karp, were allowed to leave the Soviet Union, but only after considerable pressure had been exerted by President Ford, Secretary of State Kissinger, and Senator Hubert Humphrey of the United States. The difficulty Mr. Karp had found himself in was that, in his home in Moscow, he had endeavoured to teach Soviet technocrats a number of the new western technologies. By leaving Russia he was able to escape the pressure of the KGB. He and his wife are now living in North York with their two children.

On August 22 the mother of Lilia Karp died in Moscow. Upon learning of her mother's death Mrs. Karp sought to go to Moscow but was unable to obtain Soviet permission. Last Saturday morning Lilia Karp learned of the death of her father who, according to her, died of a broken heart because he was unable to have his daughter with him at the funeral of the mother. The funeral of the father is going to be held next Saturday.

I urge members of the Soviet Embassy here to work with the Karps to ensure that Lilia Karp can be in Moscow for her parents funeral. This is not a time for politics. This is a time for humanity.

PARLIAMENT HILL

PURPOSE OF PEACE CAMP

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, on the last sitting day one of my colleagues in the House of Commons complained about the aesthetic damage caused by the Peace Camp on the lawns of Parliament Hill. Probably many people agreed with that. However, I would like to say that if an atomic weapon of the size of the Cruise missile, which can carry a 200-kilaton bomb, which is equal to 200,000 tons of TNT, which is equal to 400 boxcar loads of high explosive, fell on the lawn of Parliament Hill, this building and all the buildings around here would be vaporized. Everybody in this building would likewise disappear.

We would be the fortunate ones because, within the one kilometre to 1.5 kilometre range in Ottawa, all buildings would be pulverized, destroyed, and left in ruin. Within three kilometres, 90 per cent of all people would die. That would include all of downtown Ottawa, as far away as the Governor General's home, and would include Hull and Vanier.

A firestorm would take over for 80 square kilometres and suffocation from heat, and a lack of oxygen would leave the people in Gatineau, Kanata and Old Chelsea dying or dead. A firestorm would start the forests of the Gatineau Hills on fire. Finally, there would be a crater 600 metres across and 75 metres deep where the House of Commons now stands. The demonstration is a bit messy, but what the people there are trying to say is, "stop in the name of humanity".

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member's time is up.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

THE FIGHT AGAINST ACID RAIN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I want to express my pleasure at the recent signing of the U.S.-Canada agreement to track long-range pollution, the Captex project. I note that this is the first act of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia), and I hope that this will be far from his last.

In looking more closely at this experiment, however, I wonder about its real significance. Do we not already know that acid rain comes from the valleys of Ohio? What about the Minister's caution against attaching undue significance to the experiment? What does that mean? Has he that little confidence?

I trust that the Minister will be more optimistic, forceful, and more representative in bringing this vital issue to the attention of his cabinet colleagues. That means more money so that we may have a higher profile and the issue will have the true representation it deserves. In other words, we must put our money where our mouth is.

S.O. 21

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—THREAT TO DEALER NETWORK

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, the jobs of 1,000 employees, and the future of 125 White Farm Equipment Ltd. dealerships across Canada and their employees, will be in jeopardy if the Government of Canada does not take action to ensure that the company continue in operation. It is understood that the Government has refused to consider the offer of the U.S. division of the company which submitted the highest bid, and favours the sale of the technology for the axial flow combine to Massey-Ferguson. Such a move could result in the dissolution of the White Farm Equipment dealer network in Canada with consequent bankruptcies and/or substantial financial loss, and the elimination of hundreds of jobs for those employed by the dealers.

In addition, well over 100,000 farmers across Canada who own White equipment would be unable to take action on the guarantees covering their equipment, would be unable or find it difficult to obtain repairs and at the same time be faced with the situation where their equipment will have little if any trade-in value. This matter is urgent and requires immediate action on the part of the Government to negotiate an arrangement to ensure the continued operation of the company.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF LEV AND INA ELBERT ARRESTED BY KGB

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I want to raise with the House of Commons a problem which confronts Lev and Ina Elbert, in Kiev in the Ukraine. You will recall when we were in Moscow I raised with Soviet officials the problem of Lev Elbert, in as much as he had been improperly arrested and jailed simply because he wanted to leave the Soviet Union. I raised that question with them as a result of his wife having come all the way from Kiev to meet with me in Moscow.

When she arrived back in Kiev, she was arrested after KGB agents walked in and picked a book off the bookshelf, opened it, and found some substance which they claimed to be drugs. Her husband is now under detention. He has done no wrong except to ask that he be granted the privileges and rights that are afforded each world citizen under the Helsinki Accord. She is on a hunger strike. She is going to die unless some action is taken to try to right this terrible wrong. I ask each and every Member of Parliament to write today to the Supreme Soviet, asking them to look into this matter and find some reasonable humane solution.

S.O. 21

● (1410)

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

OPPOSITION TO IMPORTATION OF RUSSIAN-BUILT LADA CARS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, on November 16, 1982, I moved a motion under Standing Order 43 urging the Canadian Government to take all necessary steps to protect Canadian workers from the unfair competition of the Russian-made automobile, Lada, because many of its parts are made in prison camps and it is manufactured by non-union workers.

A few days later I received a telephone call from someone who would not give his name and who spoke broken English, who wanted me to rescind the motion, and I told him that I had no intention of so doing. He was quite angry and advised me that it would be much better if I did not move any further motions of that kind. I advised him that I intended to continue to deplore and publicize the slave labour of the communists, not only in manufacturing Lada, but also for invading Afghanistan, imprisoning Walesa in Poland, et cetera. He banged down the receiver. Premier Davis of Ontario has now asked Ontarians not to buy Soviet made Lada cars because of the shooting down of the Korean passenger plane, which again indicates the low value the communists place on human lives.

I urge the Canadian Government to prevent the importation of Lada cars or, at the very least, impose a tax or duty that would make their retail price competitive with the vehicles manufactured in countries where the workers receive a living wage for their work.

Why should Canadians help the Soviet communists who would, at the drop of a hat, invade northern Canada just as they invaded Afghanistan—if they determined that we could not defend ourselves?

* * *

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

LEGALITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA BUDGET LEGISLATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, on July 26, this year I wrote to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) about the British Columbia budget legislation as being an assault on human rights and fundamental justice. I said that in my opinion parts of it could violate the due process clause of the Canadian Charter of Rights. I have a reply from the Minister dated September 13. The Minister refuses to state an opinion as to the legality of the legislation. In my letter I had asked that he give aid, through the Department of Justice, to litigants who want to challenge the legislation in court. The Minister refused to do that as well, saying that the court program is restricted to language cases. It seems to me, Madam Speaker, that this is in conflict with what the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) said this summer, and it also makes it very hard for the little guy to fight the legislation in the courts.

I urge the Government to do more than simply monitor the British Columbia legislation because as an assault on human rights in Canada, it could be a foretaste of things to come. I urge it also to give aid to people who would like to launch a case to test the constitutionality of that legislation.

* * *

AIR SAFETY

DEMAND FOR PUBLIC INVESTIGATION OF ACCIDENT AT GIMLI, MANITOBA

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, there seems to be an urgent need for a public inquiry into the crash landing of an Air Canada Boeing 767 at Gimli, Manitoba, this past summer, because this aircraft is reported to have taken off with insufficient fuel to reach its scheduled place of landing, with some 69 people aboard.

In the United States there is a tradition of holding public inquiries over safety matters in air travel. In contrast, in Canada there is a "behind closed doors" approach, with that information only becoming public if the president of Air Canada wishes. It should be noted that Members of Parliament will be denied access to the evidence given at the Gimli investigation.

As a matter of public safety in air travel, the Government owes Canadians an open public investigation, with the press in attendance. For an Air Canada jet to be allowed to take off with insufficient fuel is a serious matter in the minds of Canadians. If the Government sits idly by and watches the seven-man commission study this incident behind closed doors, with five of the committee being paid employees of the Boeing company, it will be guilty of a dereliction of its responsibility to the Canadian public. It would be like asking five engineers of the General Motors Corporation if the car they designed is safe. The public of Canada will not accept this Air Canada coverup.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—THREATENED LIQUIDATION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. For months the Minister has been sitting on the problem related to White Farm Equipment. To date, there does not seem to be any resolution of the problem other than the fact that an order appears to be imminent, or has already been given, for the liquidation of the company. This will result in the loss of dealers and the loss of Canadian White equipment line, leading to the loss of many jobs. What has the Minister done to date to avoid this disaster?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will recognize that we are not one of the lenders in this specific transaction; all we are is an insurer. The court has appointed a receiver to look at various proposals.

What we and the receiver have been trying to do since the situation first came to our attention has been to find somebody we thought would be interested in operating White Farm Equipment as a viable operation. We have been hoping for someone who, first of all, would try to preserve the dealer network of which the Hon. Member speaks; second, the technology to which the people of Canada contributed almost $5 million and, third, the jobs in Brantford which we think are very, very important. At this point I am advised that no viable offer has been put forward, as determined by the receiver.

MINISTER'S MEETINGS WITH INTERESTED PARTIES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I understand that a request has gone to the Minister for a joint meeting of all dealers, Borg Warner who has some financial interest in the matter, U.S. White, the Province of Ontario, and the Minister's Department, to resolve any outstanding problems. To date the Minister has apparently refused a joint meeting to resolve the question of technology leaving the country, and so on. Why has he steadfastly refused to this?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): First of all, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the situation is under the control of the receiver. I have already met with the dealers and I have met with the UAW. I have had a number of meetings with respect to this situation.

I want to emphasize to the Hon. Member that the receiver is in control of the situation.

TAKE-OVER OFFER BY MASSEY COMPANY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, despite the fact that the Minister assures us that there has been no offer, it is my understanding—and I stand to be corrected—that Massey has offered $500,000, as opposed to U.S. White's offer of $9 million, for the take-over of the company. Apparently this is being ignored and the push for liquidation is coming from the Minister's office. This totally ignores the fact that many pieces of equipment will be rendered obsolete and that the jobs which dealers provide will be gone forever if another company takes over.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that to fulfil his court appointment the receiver must obtain the greatest recovery to the secured lenders. The Government of Canada is not a lender—I repeat, the Government of Canada is not a lender; it is only a guarantor. The Hon. Member should address his question to the receiver.

We have requested that the receiver do his utmost to find someone who will operate White Farm Equipment as a going concern to protect all the interests the Hon. Member has raised.

With respect to the offers put forward by the receiver—it is the receiver who has rejected the offers put forward to date, not the Government of Canada.

REQUEST THAT TECHNOLOGY BE RETAINED IN CANADA

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I appreciate the response the Minister made to my colleague, but surely, where the Government is the guarantor, it will have some input as far as the decision made by the liquidator is concerned.

The Minister said earlier that one of his concerns was that the technology developed in Canada might end up in the United States. Can he advise whether the Government has considered the sale of the company assets, excluding the technology rights, to White U.S., or having the CDC or some other organization purchase the technological rights to the axial flow combine and then licensing the U.S. company to construct the combines in Canada, thus keeping the technology here?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to refer to the several questions asked by the Hon. Member for Brant before the summer recess, he will find my response then was the same as it is now. We have done everything we can to ensure that someone will take over this company as a going concern and keep that technology in Canada. Canada has already invested over $3 million and has committed $5 million to the development of this leading-edge technology in Canada. We have also guaranteed on behalf of the people of Canada an additional $10.5 million so obviously, Madam Speaker, we are extremely interested in keeping the company viable to create jobs for Canadians.

MINISTER'S ROLE

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, has the Minister recently sat down with the liquidator and discussed the problems of this company with a view to trying to determining a scheme to retain the operation and technology in this country? Does the Minister realize, for example, that if this company goes into liquidation, all those guarantees which were given by the company, and by the dealers, will disappear? What will the Government do in that event? What will happen to those guarantees?

● (1420)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I believe if the Hon. Member would like to check with the receiver and with the Ontario Government he will find out it was the Government of Canada, and myself as an individual, who tried to precipitate a decision on this issue over six months ago, in order to try to preserve that technology for Canadians, as the Hon. Member has recommended.

* * *

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

TASK FORCE REPORT—RECOMMENDATION ON CANADIAN CONTENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There has been a lot of discussion since the House resumed its sittings about the need to create some additional jobs for people who need them. The Government has had in its hands for over four months a task force report on the automotive industry in Canada, which outlines how we could get an additional 35,000 jobs on a fairness principle, if the Government cared to act. Has the Minister finally made a recommendation to the Cabinet on the basic principle of this report, which is, if the automotive producers are going to sell cars to Canadians, they must start using Canadians to make some of them? Has the Minister made that recommendation to Cabinet? If so, when can we expect an answer from the Government?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that during the month of August the Government of Canada did respond to several recommendations of the automotive task force report, most of which were very well received by the industry.

With respect to the very specific question of content, that decision has not been made as yet, and we are undertaking negotiations with the Japanese automobile companies at the present time.

SITUATION VIS-À-VIS AMERICAN, JAPANESE AND GERMAN COMPANIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, what the Minister has said is that the Government has dealt with all the peripheral matters and has not come to the guts of the issue. Today, as the Minister knows, General Motors Corporation is celebrating its Seventy-fifth Anniversary in this country, and the American corporations, General Motors, Chrysler and Ford, accepted the principle some time ago that, if they are going to sell to Canadians, they have to use Canadian labour to produce those cars and parts. If it is good enough for General Motors, Chrysler and Ford, why is it not good enough for Toyota, Datsun and Volkswagen? Why is the Minister not making that recommendation to his Cabinet colleagues?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member, I assume, was at the Seventy-fifth Anniversary ceremonies this morning. He will also know that General Motors has made a request to the United States government to exempt it from the basic restrictions so that it can import 290,000 cars from Japan for the North American Market. Is the Hon. Member now expressing the view that we should endorse the position of General Motors with respect to importing cars from Japan?

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SUPPORT CANADIAN CONTENT RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that what he has just talked about, of course, was action taken in the United States. General Motors, as well as the other companies, in terms of this country, has said it accepts the principle, and if the Government will act on it, in terms of other producers, General Motors has said it will increase its level of production in this country. Therefore, if the Minister and the Government are concerned about fairness for Canadian workers which will provide 35,000 additional jobs coast to coast, when is the Minister going to make that recommendation to his Cabinet colleagues? When can we expect some action from this Government on that?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would not want the Government of Canada, acting on behalf of a country which depends on its export market for over 30 per cent of its GNP, to act irrationally with respect to a decision on content, which could hamper our sales to Japan and to other countries around the world. Obviously, we are most concerned about jobs in the automotive industry, our largest manufacturing sector. As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, I believe there are something like 15,000 more automobile workers working today than there were a year ago. I believe that gives some kind of indication that the Government of Canada is very seriously concerned about jobs in this most important sector.

* * *

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—SPARE PARTS FOR FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Minister must not be allowed off the hook on this very serious issue because it is just not good enough for these 100,000 farmers to have their question go to the receiver. These people are on the hook as far as repairs are concerned. I am wondering, Madam Speaker, just exactly what action the Minister is going to take in order to protect those farmers, to ensure they will have repairs, and that the Government will live up to that obligation which it has to supply parts for ten years.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I will not take the time of the House to repeat all of the responses I have already given to this very important question raised in the House. I do want to reiterate one of the points I made, however. It was this Government, and this Minister, who tried to bring this situation to a head over six months ago in anticipation of what would happen today, knowing that the longer we waited the worse it was for the Canadian industry. Therefore, we have used the levers of the Government of Canada which were available to us.

With respect to the parts situation, Madam Speaker, we made arrangements with the receiver and with some of the lenders to ensure that those parts were available during the summer, and we still feel that situation will be rectified. What is more important is that we find some individual or consortium which is willing to take over White Farm and take advantage of the investment the Government of Canada has already made, in order not only to protect the dealers of western Canada and to ensure that parts are available to the farming community right across this country, but to also use the leading edge we have in the technology, which was financed by the people of Canada, for our long term benefit.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE OF TEN-YEAR PARTS SUPPLY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is the Minister going to guarantee that there will be a ten-year time frame in which there will be protection for the farmers for parts?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I do not believe that any Minister of the Crown can undertake that kind of guarantee. We have power, but I do not believe we have that kind of power.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND REPORT ON SIZE OF CANADIAN DEFICIT

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. However, in his absence I would be inclined to address it to a candidate for his job.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Chair should ban such blatant campaigning in the House, Madam Speaker.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who will be aware of the IMF report released in Washington which indicated that, of the seven major industrialized nations, Canada's deficit was the highest of those nations in proportion to the size of its economy. As the Minister will know, because of his background in finance, this has an adverse effect on interest rates and employment capacity. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House how his Government proposes to correct these disastrous policy errors which have been so clearly censured by the IMF in an international report last week?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have not had the opportunity to read this particular report by the International Monetary Fund. The Fund does annually make comments on the economy of its members and, in the absence of reading it, I cannot put the particular comment on the deficit in context.

Mr. Nielsen: Why have you not read it?

Mr. MacEachen: However, I would think one would have to probe much more deeply than the simple relationship between the size of the economy and the size of the deficit itself. There are other important factors which bear upon the matter, including the savings rate in Canada which, in comparison with other industrialized countries, particularly the United States, is quite favourable and permits the borrowing authorities in Canada to manage the debt without any undue effect on interest rates. I do not feel the size of the Canadian deficit has had that effect. If that were the relationship, then the Leader of the Opposition would have to explain why it is, with current levels of deficits, interest rates have consistently come down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REPAYMENT OF DEBT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Notwithstanding that little homily, Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister will know that the IMF specifically blamed the Government of Canada for a deficit which has been incurred by expansion in the public sector. There is where the expenditures were made, without any job creation capacity. That is what it is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The IMF zeroed right in on the profligate spending of this Government. That is the reason it gave for its negative report on the economy. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us, in light of that—

An Hon. Member: Schefferville.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Wait for it. Simmer down.

• (1430)

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, to the Hon. Member who just yelled "Schefferville" may I just say firstly I received a letter—one paragraph—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Madam Speaker: I am sure everyone enjoys the Hon. Leader of the Opposition's barbs, but this is the time for questions.

Mr. Mulroney: I was just about to say, Madam Speaker, that I received a commendation from the Government across the way for our handling of Schefferville and Iron Ore.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In light of this direct and devastating indictment, Madam Speaker, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us what plans the Government of Canada will be introducing with regard to paying down that debt and to making sure it does not cripple the interest rate structure and job creation in this country? Can he tell us that today, please?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, that is a big mouthful the Leader of the Opposition wants to get in a simple answer. In his budget the Minister of Finance has maintained the deficit within limits. He has indicated it was his intention to reduce that deficit over time, and I believe what has happened in the Canadian economy in the past year, the rate of growth, the relative decline in interest rates, the renewed confidence in the business sector, has justified the approach the Minister of Finance has taken to the deficit. I would be very suprised, Madam Speaker, if the International Monetary Fund has made the kind of judgment and used the kind of headline language the Leader of the Opposition has used—

Mr. Nielsen: You better read the report.

Mr. MacEachen: —with respect to the operation of the economy.

I would tell the Leader of the Opposition, just by way of another little homily he will get accustomed to if he comes into the House more frequently—

Some Hon. Members: Where is the Prime Minister?

Mr. MacEachen: —than last week, that the OECD itself, in the course of the past several months, has graduated the Canadian economy to the top rank of economies in the world which have managed so well that they are able to participate in the renewed recovery. So maybe the Leader of the Opposition would take a look at the OECD report.

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—GOVERNMENT'S APPROACH TO RECEIVER

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has he or his Government, either officially or unofficially, directed or placed an objection to the receiver's selling the White Canada interests to White U.S.A. or TIC U.S.A.? Either officially or unofficially has the Government directed the receiver?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): We have not directed the receiver, Madam Speaker, but yes, we have indicated to the receiver that we do not favour that particular proposal that went forward.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, that being the case, the Government directing the receiver, the Minister stood in this House and said it was not the problem of the Government, it was the problem of the receiver.

REQUEST THAT LIQUIDATION BE DELAYED

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, the manufacturing in Canada by another combine manufacturer of the axial-flow combine will only mean that, instead of a three-month combine run at Massey-Ferguson, there will be a three-month run out of which two months are conventional and one month will be axial-flow, and the jobs that would have been in the White plant are gone with no increase in jobs in Massey-Ferguson. Will the Minister use his good offices and take this opportunity to delay the disbandment of White until either an organization of White dealers in Canada, or some of the provincial Governments with investments in this operation, have an opportunity to make an offer to the receiver?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, there are two parts to the Hon. Member's question, and I totally agree with the second part. My officials right at this very moment are sitting down with a very important player in the whole process, trying to encourage that particular company to get directly involved with respect to taking it over as a going concern. I have also suggested to the dealers, and I have even indicated in my response to the Minister of Agriculture of the Province of Saskatchewan, that if they are prepared to put something forward we are prepared to assist in every way we can.

I think it is important to note, Madam Speaker, that not only has the Government of Canada some objection to the proposal indicated by the Hon. Member, but so does the Government of Ontario. But the receiver, who does not report to the Government of Ontario or to the Government of Canada, in his own judgment found that there were some deficiencies in the particular application. I understand, as I have not personally met with the receiver, that it would not only require another $1 million from the Government of Canada on top of our $10.5 million already, but also there would be no assurance that it will be operating as a going concern for the period of time that this colleagues have advocated. So I suggest the Hon. Member and his colleagues take a look at the proposal; I would be very interested to see if they are really endorsing the proposal the Hon. Member has put forward.

* * *

FINANCE

INDEXED SECURITY INVESTMENT PLAN

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance in the absence of the Minister of Finance. I think it is perhaps his first time to answer a question, so I would like to congratulate him publicly on his appointment.

Can the Minister tell the House whether it is the Government's intention to proceed with the Indexed Security Investment Plan to be in effect as of October 1, 1983?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I want first to thank the Hon. Member for his kind words. I have worked with him in the past and I look forward to continuing that relationship in the future.

Regarding the Indexed Security Investment Plan contained in the budget and subsequently outlined in detail and developed with the business community, it is our intention to bring forward that legislation with the amendments to the Tax Act which will, we hope, be tabled later this calendar year.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON TAX CHANGES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, would the Minister clarify whether he is going to allow a major change in the Income Tax Act to be put into effect on October 1 without even introducing the legislation in this House of Commons? Is it the pattern of the Government to continue the policy of making mammoth changes in the Income Tax Act, and the treatment of capital gains in particular, without even bringing the legislation to the House of Commons? Is that the way the House of Commons will be treated and the way we are going to have tax legislation treated, and is that his idea of parliamentary accountability?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that such are not the practices of this Government. We would not engage in such procedures. We shall follow the usual practices of the House and, the good form of parliamentary procedure in that regard. I would add, however, that it is our intention to bring forward the legislation as rapidly as possible as one of many stimuli to encourage the private sector to invest more in productive capacity so as to help ensure that long-term jobs are created in our economy, a goal which I am sure both myself and the Hon. Member opposite share.

* * *

TRADE MARKS AND PATENTS

PROPOSED CHANGES IN DRUG MANUFACTURING LICENCES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I congratulate her on assuming her important new portfolio.

The Minister's predecessor recently proposed changes to Canada's Patent Act which would result in a very dramatic rise in the cost of pharmaceutical drugs to all Canadians as well as massive increases in the cost of provincial pharma-care programs. For example, a drug commonly used by diabetics which costs $280 in the United States costs $14 in Canada as a result of compulsory licensing.

Will the Minister reassure the House and the consumers of Canada that she has no intention whatsoever of responding to the blackmail, effectively, of multinational drug companies and caving into their demands, and immediately scrap the plans of her predecessor which amount to nothing less than an attack on the elderly the poor and sick of this country?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would like to reassure the Hon. Member that his concern is mine as well, and that raising the cost of these drugs would indeed have a very real effect on provincial budgets and on those people in Canada who can least afford to pay the bill. These concerns were expressed to me last week very, very vividly by my various provincial counterparts with whom I met in Whitehorse at our annual federal-provincial conference. I would like to reassure the Hon. Member that these are considerations that we are weighing in our deliberations.

• (1440)

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I would hope that the Minister would in fact scrap these proposals.

FORMER MINISTER EMPLOYED BY DEPARTMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): I have in fact learned this morning, Madam Speaker, that former Liberal Cabinet Minister, Martin O'Connell, is still, today, on the payroll of the Minister's Department, advising the Minister and her Department on these proposed changes when the Minister, himself, was in fact a paid lobbyist for the pharmaceutical companies in question. I now call upon the Minister to explain to the House how she can possibly justify this blatant conflict of interest continuing under her portfolio. Will the Minister not fire Martin O'Connell immediately and bring some sense to the Department—

Mr. Nielsen: Standard practice for the Government.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): —and put an end, once and for all, to this attack on compulsory licensing in Canada?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): On the contrary, Madam Speaker, Mr. O'Connell has provided a very valuable service to this Department because we must have a very balanced view of what is required in the field of research and development in pharmaceuticals in this country, and, conversely, what the effect would be on the consumers. I think that that balanced view is being provided to my Department at the moment.

* * *

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

EXCLUSION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY FROM PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of Transport, relates to his Crow legislation. As he knows, the Crow Bill which is before Parliament specifically excludes, from the receipt of any benefits the British Columbia Railway, which, in turn, would deprive farmers in the Peace River country of British Columbia from receiving any benefits in getting their grain to market. Indeed, it would deprive farmers in the Peace River region of Alberta from using the interchange with the BCR to get their grain to the closest point on the West Coast.

Notwithstanding the deliberations and discussions of the committee on the Crow Bill, has the Minister undertaken thus far to speak with the Government of British Columbia, specifically, and with the railway, as to the kind of arrangement that can be made to embrace the British Columbia Railway in the national system; in other words, to remove from it the stigma which it now has of being a foreign railway?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, let me first say that never will I stand aside the functioning of any committee of this Commons. I think it is very important to ensure that the Commons committee, which travelled across the country and heard a wide variety of representations, be heard and that we carefully listen to its proposals and advice. So, unlike the Hon. Member, I do not put it aside. In fact, in front of the committee I clearly indicated that I would be both willing to listen to its views on the issue, and responsive, as to how we might proceed. I look forward to the recommendations or amendments that the committee would like to put forth.

As far as the British Columbia Railway being a foreign railway is concerned, that is not the case. However, the British Columbia Railway does not recognize the jurisdiction of the federal Government in transportation, particularly the obligation to be under the regulatory jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission. If the BCR wanted to undertake that kind of commitment it would then be much easier for the Government of Canada to reciprocate and therefore deal with it in a way similar to other railways. Therefore, if the Hon. Member wants to indicate to the British Columbia Railway its responsibility, then he can be assured that we are certainly willing to undertake those kinds of discussions.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET WITH RAILWAY AND PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, like the Minister, I am very much interested and hope that the Minister will eventually listen to the recommendations which will come from the committee meeting on this particular question. However, I am concerned about the indecent haste with which the Government wishes to push the legislation through the House and through the country. Therefore, I would repeat the question: Does the Minister presently intend to sit down with the British Columbia Government and the BCR within the next two to three weeks to discuss what possible role they would be playing in co-ordinating the kind of transfer of benefits that will flow through the Bill?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am aware that, according to the Hon. Member's philosophy, change must come slowly, if not at all. However, I would remind him that the matter has in fact been before the country for over two years. Furthermore, the committee of Commons has been undertaking hearings, beginning last spring, going through the entire summer, and has now been meeting for virtually ten hours or 12 hours a day for the last two or three weeks. I would hardly describe that as proceeding with undue haste. In fact, I think what is really at stake is the necessity to reach a decision on the Crow legislation so that we can go ahead and create the jobs that the Hon. Members of the Opposition say they want to create. It is that forestalling of the legislation which is the major detraction of job creation in the country at the present moment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PENITENTIARIES

LEGAL POSITION OF DOCTORS TREATING INMATES ON HUNGER STRIKE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I have now been reliably informed that there are other prison inmates who will require unwanted medical services, or die. What action is the Government taking to protect medical doctors from criminal, civil, and internal professional disciplinary actions if they act in accordance with the Government's wishes to save these inmates' lives?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the result in a case of this kind obviously involves a combination of law and medical practice. I have given my advice to the Solicitor General in this case, and I can say that it is our advice that it is our responsibility, as a Government, to try to keep these prisoners alive as long as possible. However, that depends on the ethics of the medical profession. That is one of the factors which the Solicitor General must take into account. The Hon. Member may want to raise this matter with him in dealing with this problem. Therefore, it is not something that can be resolved by law alone. It is something that must be resolved by law in keeping with the ethics of the medical profession.

Mr. Lawrence: I will then direct my supplementary question to the Solicitor General. The Minister of Justice said that one of the major factors could be the question of the law, and I thought I was addressing my question to the chief law officer of the Crown.

FUTURE TREATMENT OF INMATES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, because I gather the one medical practitioner who did act on the one occasion will not do so again, has the Solicitor General been able to find any other medical practitioner who is willing to treat these other seriously ill inmates, against their wishes? What guarantees has he been able to give to any such doctor who is willing to come forward to provide life-saving services?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am not certain if the Hon. Member is speaking of cases other than the one involving the Dukhobor inmates in British Columbia who have engaged in a fast. The advice I have received from the Department of Justice, from my colleague, the Minister, is that it is our responsibility to try to keep them alive. The Hon. Member is right. We have been having difficulties finding doctors who are prepared to do this, although the law, according to my colleague, is very clear. Therefore we have appealed to the Canadian Medical Association to assist us in locating doctors who are prepared to help us keep people alive, those who are fasting within the correctional service of Canada. So far as I know there are medical practitioners who are now available in British Columbia and who are prepared to assist us in keeping inmates alive. That is very much my own preference.

As we are custodians of these individuals during a relatively short period of their lives, that duty is one that I have accepted gladly. I have made every effort through the correctional service and on my own to locate medical practitioners willing to do this.

Mr. Lawrence: What guarantee is there?

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

GRANT MADE TO VANCOUVER UNEMPLOYMENT ACTION CENTRES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower. He will know that about ten days ago the Minister of State for Social Development in the other place gave a cheque of some $600,000 to the Unemployment Action Centres in the Vancouver region which, as far as I know, have listed no telephone numbers or addresses, which would then mean that those who need it the most, the hard-core unemployed, would find no relief at all, which the $600,000 was supposed to provide to them. What demands were made on the people receiving the grant in order to make certain that those who need the help the most will receive it?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, while the Hon. Member addresses his question to the Minister of Manpower. I take it that he means the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I take it, also, that he is making an allegation that the information which is necessary for people to fully use the services for which the grant was given has not been made available. I have only his representation to that effect. I will check to verify if that is indeed the case and, if so, will correct it.

* * *

● (1450)

LABOUR RELATIONS

AUSTIN AIRLINES STRIKE AT TIMMINS, ONT.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Since August 22, some 16,800 person-hours of employment have been lost by 105 striking employees of Austin Airlines of Timmins, Ontario. They and their union, the Canadian Airline Employees' Association, have been forced on strike to retain their basic union security clause because the Minister of Labour failed for two months to answer the union's legitimate request for the ministerial consent required to proceed with charges of bargaining in bad faith against their employer under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code.

Why did the Minister wait so long, for two entire months, until last Thursday, to give his consent to proceed with these charges, thus causing the strike, and only then after the union threatened to demonstrate as they did today on Parliament Hill?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that I acted as quickly as possible, as soon as I was told about this case. I can also inform the Hon. Member that hearings are to be held during the first week of October, and I hope these will be satisfactory, not only to the people who are lodging a complaint but also to the Hon. Member.

[English]

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, that is from July 26 when the intervention was requested until September 15, last Thursday. Is that as fast as the Government can move when the livelihood of that many people are at stake?

* * *

CANADA LABOUR CODE

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Will the Minister give us his assurance that the proposed legislation, namely, the amendments to Parts III, IV and V of the Canada Labour Code, as promised by two previous Liberal Cabinet Ministers in this Parliament, will be introduced immediately? More particularly, will he guarantee the establishment of the Rand formula as a minimal union security provision in the Canada Labour Code, thus preventing countless other costly disputes of this kind? Will he bring it in now, or immediately after the commencement of the new session which we all expect very soon?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I intend to table amendments to the Canada Labour Code during the next parliamentary session, and I hope the Hon. Member, and indeed all Members of this House, will support these amendments which have been eagerly awaited by the labour world.

* * *

[English]

CANADIAN HERITAGE

THEFT OF PETROGLYPHS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is the Minister as concerned as I over the theft of Canada's archeological treasures, specifically, the Indian artifacts stolen from the petroglyph site of the Hartley Bay Indian Band in B.C.? Has he asked the Solicitor General and, through him, the RCMP, to investigate these thefts fully?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern because it is a truly tragic occurrence when artifacts of this tremendous significance to the history of the Indian people, which have the appreciation of Canadians generally, have apparently been stolen.

I have made note of it. Because of the press reports last week and the Hon. Member's comments on it last week, I have made inquiries in my Department. There is correspondence being directed to my colleague, the Solicitor General, to see if the RCMP might stimulate their efforts to find what can be done about it, in terms of discovering the people who appropriated these valuable artifacts.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT FURTHER THEFTS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, will the Minister tell us what measures he has taken to assure us that the desecration of Canada's heritage will not recur?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, he is away this week, but I intend to raise this fundamental question with Dr. David Ahenakew, head of the Assembly of First Nations, as soon as he returns. I intend to find from him, after he has had a chance to consult with some of the chiefs in whose territory many of these artifacts are, recommendations as to what further can be done to protect these artifacts. As soon as we have those recommendations I will be pleased to let the Hon. Member know.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

STATISTICAL DATA ON WORKERS REPLACED BY MACHINES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I was somewhat shocked to discover the other day that the Government of Canada keeps absolutely no statistics on the number of Canadians who are currently being replaced by machines. Could the Minister tell us whether he has plans to keep such statistics in the year ahead? If so, could he give us some of the details of those plans?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I do not think that the Hon. Member is quite accurately remembering the questions which he put to me last week. He asked for the estimates of the impact of technological change on employment within the economy. I told him quite frankly that, in my view, there was no consensus on the degree to which either jobs would be created or replaced by the implementation of new technological processes. He now seems to be redefining his question in simply a rather narrower form to that of machines and putting it in terms of statistics which he claims we are not collecting. I do not know exactly what he means by that question.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, for a political Minister from Ontario, a bad memory is probably a good attribute.

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF JOBS LOST THROUGH TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, in modern Canada workers are being replaced by new technology. Can the Minister of Employment and Immigration tell the House how many Canadians will have their jobs replaced by new technology this year? Can he tell us how many were replaced last year, and can he give us an estimate of how many people will be replaced by machines in the year ahead? That is the question I had asked and the one to which I would like an answer. I understand that new jobs are also created, but I simply want to know how many people will be replaced by new technology. Will the Minister give us an answer to that?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I cannot very easily lead the Hon. Member out of the Alice in Wonderland world in which he lives. The mere fact that he has repeated his assertions three times that the introduction of new technology indeed causes unemployment or loses jobs does not make it true. In fact a very large number of critics in the employment scene deny the accuracy of the statement he has just made. He can believe it if he wishes, but he should not expect me to respond to a question which I do not believe is sustained in verifiable fact.

* * *

AIR SAFETY

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO ACCIDENT AT GIMLI, MANITOBA

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. This past summer there were two very serious air traffic disasters, one involving a DC-9 which came down on American soil, and the other involving ad Boeing 767 which came down in western Canada at Gimli, Manitoba. As the lone Government voice from the West, as Minister in the House, would he advise us if he believes it is necessary that there be a public inquiry into the Gimli air accident?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I certainly agree with the sentiments of the Hon. Member that those two accidents caused a good deal of concern on the part of Canadians. I believe that we are reacting in a way which will develop the examination for which he is asking.

As he may know, Air Canada itself has commissioned a group of experts to look into its safety procedures. As a major shareholder of Air Canada, I expect to have that report in my possession within a matter of days and that the results of that report and whatever corrections it will request would be immediately undertaken by Air Canada. I would also like to report to the House that I have asked the departmental officials to undertake a major audit of the operating activities of Air Canada. That will commence at the end of this month, and we will have a full report. That would obviously be a matter of public disclosure at that time.

I would like to take this opportunity to say that when it comes to the issue of examining and having public inquiries on air safety matters, there is a bill to establish a new air safety board presently before the Transport committee. If the Opposition were to co-operate we could get that legislation through very quickly and into the House so that we could have a proper mechanism under which public inquiries could be undertaken.

COMPOSITION OF INVESTIGATING TEAM

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Does the Minister believe that the appointment of a seven-member commission, five of whom are employees on salary with the Boeing aircraft company, is an upfront, honest attempt to look into the 767 air disaster in Gimli, Manitoba? Does that sound like an honest, upfront and open investigation into the safety of the Boeing 767, when five of the seven are from the Boeing aircraft company?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as I pointed out, the Aviation Safety Bureau, which is an operating division of the Department of Transport, is presently investigating the incident in Gimli itself. That, however, is a sub part of a larger audit that we will be doing of the entire Air Canada procedures. As I have already said, we will be making that whole report available to Members of this House if they so request.

● (1500)

There can be absolutely no compromise when it comes to air safety. We have already introduced measures based on the Dubin Report which have dealt with some 75 of its recommendations. I certainly recognize the tremendous importance of that issue, but I do ask for the co-operation of the Opposition, who have a responsibility as well. If the Opposition will co-operate with us, we will bring that air safety board Bill to this House as quickly as possible and have it passed on a Friday afternoon. Then there will be a proper mechanism in place.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PLIGHT OF PEOPLE EXHAUSTING BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On Saturday last, of the 20 people I saw in my constituency office, seven were unemployed. Every single one was about to run out of UIC benefits. For me, this is a pattern that has been followed over the last 18 months on almost every single Saturday. These people will not be able to find a job in Hamilton. No one is hiring. Welfare will not provide them with sufficient money to meet their commitments. What can I tell them?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we all know that unemployment levels are much, much higher than we would like them to be. We all know the difficulties and the personal trauma that causes to a whole range of our population. What we have been doing in this Government is trying to create jobs in the Canadian economy essentially in two ways—through tax changes which encourage the private sector to create jobs, and through direct action. There is direct action in government programs, both through the Special Recovery Projects and also direct programs in my Department aimed at creating jobs.

I wish very much that at the moment we could provide a job for every single Canadian who wishes to have one. We have succeeded in those programs, not as far as we would like, but we have succeeded with them. We pointed out to the Hon. Member, I think last week, that something like 320,000 seasonally adjusted new jobs have been created in the Canadian economy, largely, I believe, because of the kinds of programs we have adopted.

If the hon. gentleman, who stood up and with emotion and sincerity indicated the plight that unemployment is causing in his constituency, could suggest specific things to me which we are not doing, that we could do that will have an impact, I will be delighted to hear him.

Miss MacDonald: Don't cut back on Canada Works.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT OF PRIME MINISTER OF UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties concerning Prime Minister Thatcher's visit next week. If it would be the disposition of the House, I would propose to go to Motions immediately, read the Motion and have it concurred in.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to that disposition?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Collenette moved:

That the House shall adjourn at three o'clock p.m. September 26, 1983;

That the address of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, to be delivered in the House of Commons on September 26, 1983, at four o'clock p.m. before the Members of the Senate and the House of Commons, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an Appendix to the House of Commons Debates of that day and form part of the records of this House; and

That Prime Minister Thatcher's speech, attendant and related remarks be made available to the media for transmission in the usual way by the House of Commons broadcast system.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the proposal of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Collenette)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

PETITIONS

MR. HERBERT—NORMALIZATION OF SITUATION OF MISS CILÉ MERVIL IN CANADA

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, I wish to submit a petition from 1,000 constituents, most of whom are from Rivière Beaudette, a petition that was initiated by the mayors of the area, the town councillors and the parish priest.

They are asking, on humanitarian grounds, to have the status of Miss Cilé Mervil in Canada made legal so that she can remain in this country lawfully and without fear, with the possibility of becoming a Canadian citizen.

[English]

MR. McDERMID—FOREIGN AID—DISCRIMINATION AGAINST TAMIL POPULATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present to the House of Commons a petition which has been signed by members of the federal riding of Brampton-Georgetown and other concerned Canadians. These people are concerned with the discrimination and abuse being experienced by the Tamil population who live in Sri Lanka and are asking that aid be suspended from the Canadian Government until such time as an independent body has investigated the situation in Sri Lanka and feels that human rights have been restored.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,751, 4,876 and 4,994.

[Text]

COST OF NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENT

Question No. 4,751—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Was a full page, or nearly full page, advertisement placed in mid-March in a number of Canadian newspapers by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources entitled "Petro-Canada Is Growing To Serve You Better" and with a centrepiece "BP Now, Petro-Canada" and, if so (a) what was the total cost (b) in which newspapers was it placed and how often in each (c) by newspaper, what amount did each placement cost?

2. (a) Who designed the advertisement (b) what was the design cost (c) what was the advertising agency's fee?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows:

1. No. However, in March of 1983, Petro-Canada Products Ltd. commissioned a series of advertisements designed to inform the public of the BP reidentification program. (a) $377,213.17

(b) and (c) Ontario

Newspaper	No. of Insertions	Cost per Insertion
Barrie Examiner	4	$ 350
The Belleville Intelligencer	4	360
Brampton Daily Times	4	330
Brantford Expositor	4	380
Brockville Recorder and Times	4	290
Cambridge Daily Reporter	4	350
Chatham Daily News	4	355
Cornwall Standard-Freeholder	4	395
Le Droit	4	1,993.17
Guelph Mercury	4	365
Kingston Whig-Standard	4	379
Kirkland Lake Northern Daily News	4	370
Kitchener-Waterloo Record	4	534
London Free Press	4	930
Niagara Falls Review	4	360
North Bay Nugget	4	300
Orillia Packet and Times	4	350
The Oshawa Times	4	375
Owen Sound Sun-Times	4	410
Pembroke Observer	4	370
Peterborough Examiner	4	360
Port Colborne News	2	4,930.36
St. Catharines Standard	4	500
St. Thomas Times-Journal	4	345
Sarnia Observer	4	380
Sault Ste. Marie Star	4	413
The Stratford Beacon-Herald	4	355
Sudbury Star	4	385
The Toronto Globe & Mail	3	13,077.53
The Toronto Star	3	15,997.84
The Toronto Sun	3	5,215
Walkerton Herald-Times	2	467.79
Welland-Port Colborne Tribune	4	355
The Windsor Star	4	715
Woodstock-Ingersoll Daily Sentinel Review	4	340
Burlington Post Smiths Falls Record News Strathroy Age-Dispatch	2) 2) 2)	7,825.14 (combined total cost)
Hamilton Spectator The Ottawa Citizen	4) 4)	30,728.65 (combined total cost)
The Lindsay Post Simcoe Reformer	4) 4)	7,849.36 (combined total cost)

Quebec

Beauce, Nouvelle	2	$ 450
Chicoutimi, Progrès-Dimanche	2	1,460
Courrier Frontenac	2	510
Le Devoir	3	1,799
L'Écho de la Tuque	2	450
Les Échos Abitibien	2	450
L'Éclaireur Progrès	2	450
La Frontière	2	450
La Gatineau	2	450
Le Guide	2	190
Hull, Le Régional	2	600
Le Journal de Montréal	3	7,320
Lac Saint-Jean	2	450
The Montréal Gazette	3	8,621.90
Le Peuple Courrier	2	450
Le Pharillon	2	450
La Presse	3	7,422.13
Le Radar	2	450
Sherbrooke Record	4	1,071.61
Le Soleil	4	4,735.48
Le Touladi	2	450
La Voix de l'Est	4	1,012.49
La Voix Gaspésienne	2	450
Dimanche-Matin Dimanche Dernière Heure	2) 2)	7,704 (combined total cost)
Le Quotidien Le Journal de Québec	4) 4)	16,608 (combined total cost)
Sherbrooke, La Tribune Le Nouvelliste	4) 4)	18,966.52 (combined total cost)

2. (a) Baker Lovick, Calgary, Alberta; (b) approximately $30,000; (c) the Advertising agency's fee was a standard agency commission.

GREAT LAKES SCIENCE ADVISORY BOARD

Question No. 4,876—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Great Lakes Science Advisory Board under the International Joint Commission and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. (a) What are the terms of reference of the Board (b) what matters did it consider in the fiscal year 1982-83 (c) how often did it meet and how often is it required to meet (d) what reports and/or recommendations did the Board publish in the fiscal year 1982-83?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. The Great Lakes Science Advisory Board (known as the Research Advisory Board until November, 1978) is made up of an equal number of American and Canadian members. Presently there are two vacancies on the U.S. side. (a) (b) (i) (ii) See list below. (c) Salaries of Board members are not paid by the Board but are the responsibility of their respective employers.

Travel expenses of those members of the Board who are employees of federal, provincial or state governments are paid by their respective employers. Travel expenses for other members of the Board are paid by the Board.

Order Paper Questions

	1978-79	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	Total
Canadian Members:
P. Foley	—	—	—	—	—	—
G. Francis	443.80	929.65	1,775.14	701.00	732.65	4,582.24
H. Harvey	—	—	—	—	1,235.70	1,235.70
G. LaRoche	—	—	—	—	2,754.57	2,754.57
W. Neff	—	—	—	—	—	—
R. L. Thomas	—	—	—	—	—	—
G. Vaillancourt	—	—	—	—	2,593.63	2,593.63
U.S. Members:
D. Bacon	—	—	—	—	—	—
V. Bacon	—	—	—	—	614.04	614.04
W. Cooper	—	—	457.63	650.94	947.35	2,055.92
D. Frey	—	—	—	—	1,515.48	1,515.48
H. Humphrey	—	—	—	—	—	—
R. Loehr	1,255.57	1,483.17	—	—	1,785.97	4,524.71

(d) No other direct funding is provided; however, certain secretariat costs, such as office supplies, stationery, ect., are covered by the regional office of the IJC.

2. (a) The Great Lakes Science Advisory Board (SAB) was established pursuant to the provisions of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1978 (Agreement). The primary role of the SAB is to assist the International Joint Commission (IJC) in the exercise of the powers and responsibilities assigned to the IJC under the Agreement.

The stated purpose of the Parties (The Governments of the United States and Canada) is to restore and maintain the chemical, physical and biological integrity of the waters of the Great Lakes basin ecosystem. In accordance with this general purpose, and the provisions of the Agreement and the terms of reference of the SAB, the SAB shall be the scientific advisor to the IJC and the Water Quality Board (WQB).

The SAB, on behalf of the Commission, is responsible for developing recommendations on matters related to research and the development of scientific knowledge pertinent to the identification, evaluation and resolution of current and anticipated problems related to water quality in the Great Lakes Basin Ecosystem.

(b) Matters considered by the Great Lakes Science Advisory Board: Polynuclear aromatic hydrocarbons, polychlorinated styrenes and dibenzofurans, diazinon, toxaphene and linoane, asbestos and silver, fish community data bases, sediments as a source of toxic chemicals, metal speciation, epidemiological models, environmental mapping, air sampling methodology, and several issues related to objectives development.

(c) There are no set number of times that the Board Must meet in a given year however the Board meets an average six times yearly.

(d) In the fiscal year 1982-83 the Board published two reports: the Annual Report, special report on aquatic systems objectives in the Great Lakes.

Great Lakes Science Advisory Board

Canadian Members	Expertise	Term
Dr. Paul Foley (Acting Canadian Chairman) Research Coordinator Pollution Control Branch Ontario Ministry of Environment Toronto	Chemical Engineering Drinking Water Wastewater Treatment	September 1982— January 1985
Dr. George Francis Department of Environmental Studies University of Waterloo Waterloo, Ontario	Conservation and Resource Environmental Impacts Socioeconomic Implication Policies	September 15, 1980— December 31, 1983
Mr. William Neff Assistant Technical Director The Canadian Chemical Producers' Assoc. Ottawa	Chemical Engineering Industrial Waste Treatment and Design	October 15, 1980— December 31, 1983
Dr. Guy Vaillancourt Department of Chemistry & Biology University of Quebec at Trois-Rivières Trois-Rivières, Quebec	Aquatic Ecology Thermal Pollution Temperature Effects Biota	February 17, 1982— February 17, 1985
Dr. Richard Thomas Director Great Lakes Fisheries Research Branch Department of Fisheries and Oceans Canada Centre for Inland Waters Burlington, Ontario	Geochemistry Sediments	February 17, 1982— February 17, 1985
Dr. Harold Harvey University of Toronto Toronto	Ecology Acid Rain Fish Biology	January 1, 1983— January 1, 1986

Dr. Gilles Laroche Vice President Vit-Vitaille-Viron Inc. Montreal P.Q.	Environmental Physiology Aquatic Toxicology	January 1, 1983— January 1, 1986
United States Members	Expertise	Term
Professor Vinton Bacon 3M Company St. Paul, Minnesota	Civil Engineering Water Resources and Sanitary Engineering	February 25, 1983— December 31, 1985
Dr. Harold Humphrey Michigan Department of Public Health Lansing, Michigan	Epidemiology	January 1, 1981— December 31, 1983
Dr. Raymond Loehr Professor of Engineering Cornell University Ithaca, New York	Engineering Nonpoint Source Application on Land	February 17, 1982— February 17, 1985
Dr. William Cooper Department of Zoology Michigan State University East Lansing, Michigan	Biologist Aquatic Ecologist	January 1, 1981— December 31, 1983
Mr. Dale Bacon 3M Company St. Paul, Minnesota	Chemical Engineering	January 1, 1981— December 31, 1983
Dr. David Frey Department of Biology Indiana University Bloomington, Indiana	Linnology Micropaleontology Systematics	November 1, 1982— December 31, 1985
Vacant Position
Vacant Position

CANCELLATION OF BP CANADA ACCOUNTS

Question No. 4,994—Mr. Beatty:

How many customers of BP Canada have asked that their accounts be closed as a result of the purchase of BP by Petro-Canada?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows: Between November 1, 1982 and June 30, 1983, 186 holders of BP Canada credit cards requested cancellation of their accounts. No record has been kept of the reason for these cancellations.

Mr. Evans: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 3 and 5 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock I was discussing Bill C-110 and some of the very pertinent recommendations that have been made to Government and to Canadians in general with respect to the efficiency, if you will, and the expenditure of public funds. The difficulty faced by Members on this side, as I was indicating, is the question of accountability; the efficiency and the degree of efficiency with which the Government spends our tax dollars; the degree of efficiency it attaches to the credits that we extend and the degree to which the EDC conducts its operations with respect to insurance.

The Economic Council of Canada has had a number of things to say to us and I was in the process of dealing with some of those recommendations, and in the few minutes I have left I would like to continue. I had started to deal with the role the EDC plays with respect to other countries, the need for the Export Development Corporation to be the last resort, if you will, for lending, for insuring and so on, and the need for the EDC to get out of the private sector. We were talking about meetings of the OEDC, for example, concerning other nations and the absolute necessity for our Government to obtain some agreement from our trading partners to limit further subsidization of exports. In the absence of such an agreement, which is the case and continues to be the case today, the Council strongly recommended the following, and I commend its remarks to Members opposite:

—that Canada use subsidized credit only—

I emphasize the word "only".

—in cases where there is a sufficiently strong presumption that it will facilitate the opening of new markets . . . for Canadian products.

● (1510)

Or, it recommended that Canada use subsidized credit in cases where it could be demonstrated that the present share of these markets for Canadian products would be increased substantially. These points are directed toward the role of the Export Development Corporation. It is that concern which prompts the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) to bring forward his amendments with respect to the legislation.

It is not and should not be the role of Government to continue these high level subsidies. It should be the role of Government to assist where assistance is needed. It is a matter of some regret that the distinguished Minister would not in fact accede to one or two of these points in principle and effect that acceptance by way of further changes in his approach to this piece of legislation.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add my comments in support of Motions Nos. 3 and 5 which were brought forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and to those just made by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

The question that should be addressed immediately as we look at Bill C-110 is whether or not we are for or against international trade. It should be made perfectly clear that no one on either side of the House is against increasing Canadian trade as far as possible and reasonable in an economic sense. A previous speaker indicated that at present we have around 3 per cent of the international trade market, whereas a short time ago we had nearly 6 per cent. Obviously there has been a decline relative to other countries, despite the fact that all countries face the same serious economic recession.

I have three main points which I would like to make. In contrast to questioning whether or not we are in support of or against trade, I think the essence of the entire Bill and in fact the motions is the question of accountability. In their own ways many speakers have addressed this specific point. Technically the motion limits the amount of money the Export Development Act would allow to be spent without Parliament having to be consulted again.

In the Bill before us the agency is required to have a one in twenty capital case. We are suggesting that that is too high, that it should be one in ten. In addition, we are suggesting that the capital base should in fact be a real one, not one that is just promised by Government. In other words, the Government would have to put its money where its mouth is and infuse those funds directly into the agency. Those are two valuable recommendations in an effort to try to make the agency more accountable, although I would have to admit much less accountable than it should be to Parliament and to the people who, in the end, are responsible for the disbursed funds.

The total amount represented by the Bill would be $62 billion of additional financial ability on the part of the agency. It will take several different forms, but I think the total amount is staggering. We are discussing $62 billion and will probably be finished with the Bill in several days. Then, as elected Members of Parliament, we will never have an opportunity to address it again and Canadian taxpayers will be responsible for those funds in one way or another.

One of the most pungent comments on the accountability factor was made by the Auditor General in his report of 1982. Many references have been made to it in this debate, but I would like to quote one particular comment:

> In the majority of Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective. Moreover, co-ordination and guidance by central government agencies of financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations are virtually non-existent.

According to the Auditor General of Canada, control and direct responsibility are non-existent. He made several recommendations in general about Crown corporations and their impact on the Canadian economy. It is indeed difficult to deal with something we are expected to understand and manage at arm's length without becoming directly involved in the day to day operations, losing control once we appropriate funds and give the initial legislative authority.

Also according to his report, the Auditor General suggested:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

Also he suggested:

> Parliament should give attention to issues surrounding control and accountability of those mixed enterprises and other entities and associates in which the Crown is a shareholder.

He suggested a number of other things which expand on the basic principle that we should make every effort to involve Parliament in the activities of Crown corporations.

There are numerous specific examples which could be quoted when we are trying to make the case for accountability. Over the past year we have probably had more than our share of these examples. All of us can relate personally to the things that have happened. One of the most interesting examples occurred at the end of 1981. There was an awareness of the activities involved in supporting Consolidated Computer and of the fact that the firm sold its assets for $100,000 when in fact the Government had loan guarantees of $125 million. That was a significant loss. Another example which has received high public profile lately is the Government's involvement in Canadair. To date we have a financial commitment of $1.836 billion. This figure is composed of a $46 million purchase price and loan guarantees of $1.35 billion, with an equity infusion not too long ago of $440 million. The Canadair story is well known so I will not expand on it.

Another example is the involvement of CIDA when it spent $1.4 million on a fisheries vessel which was supposed to cost only $308,000 to purchase and to refit. The Government of Columbia refused to accept the vessel after it had been refitted at the cost of $1.4 million because it was found unsuitable for its purposes.

In February, 1981 CNR, another Crown corporation, spent $66,000 to purchase advertising space to wish CPR, its chief competitor, a happy birthday. That is a small figure compared with the Canadair figure, but these specific examples give us a sense of the kind of management that exists in Crown corporations and the way public funds appropriated to them are being disbursed. While it may not be a large sum in the total problem, $66,000 could go a long way toward making individual Canadians who are experiencing difficulties more comfortable. I say that with particular reference to some farm and other business enterprises that I know from personal experience are having a great deal of difficulty at the present time.

● (1520)

It is difficult to deal with a business operation at arm's length. That is what we, as the elected representatives, are doing. We are dealing at arm's length with over 400 Crown corporations at the federal level and many more at the provincial level. In dealing with those organizations at arm's length, we have lost a degree of direct involvement and an understanding of that business operation.

When public funds are being used by these corporations, we in Parliament ought at least to have the financial accountability that should come with good management. We have lost that. All we ask in these amendments is that we not give the carte blanche which the Government has been giving to these Crown corporations over the past number of years. We are asking that they back up a little. We say that half of what the Government is asking for is plenty to last the corporation for at least the next decade, particularly in view of the number of cases it is involved with presently. There are not that many; 62 last year. We want an opportunity to look at this again before this Government agency spends that additional amount of public funds.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my voice in support of the two motions presently being debated concerning the Export Development Corporation, specifically Bill C-110. As elected representatives of the people of Canada, we are accountable to the electorate. We are responsible, at least we are supposed to be, for the vast sums of money that flow through the hands of this Government.

As my colleagues who have already spoken on this issue have indicated, we are not against the fundamental purpose of the Export Development Corporation. Nothing could be further from the truth. What we are concerned with is the total lack of accountability that we as elected representatives have over the actions of the Export Development Corporation in particular and over Crown corporations in general. This is a matter of fiscal responsibility pure and simple.

Bill C-110 appears to be something we see all too often around this place. It is a carefully crafted piece of legislation, designed by bureaucrats hired by the Liberal Government, legislation that neatly does an end run around Parliament.

Parliament has become a terrible nuisance to this Government and to the ruling mandarins. It is something to be handled and manipulated, all the while giving the impression that it, Parliament, is still the voice of the people and that the best interests of the citizens are being looked after. Nothing could be further from the truth. The way in which this Bill is drafted is typical of legislation we continually see which pretends to "control" Crown corporations.

Last week, during the debate on Motion No. 1, we saw how this Bill proposes to edge out the private sector and can place a preponderance of bureaucrats on the board of directors. This establishes the power. Bureaucrats have almost as much disdain for self-made, successful private sector businessmen as they do for Members of Parliament.

It is interesting to speculate upon the expertise that could be called upon by the bureaucracy and appointed to the board. For example, I wonder if someone will find their way on to the board who previously worked for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This is a Department I have some familiarity with, and it is not uncommon to find capital projects completed with up to 500 per cent overruns. We do not have that problem in Indian Affairs any longer because we cannot get the computer print-outs. That is how they solved it. The bureaucrats responsible for these overruns are still on the job. If they had been civil engineers working for a city or town, I dare say they would have been fired.

Will they call upon the experts who presented us with Canadair? Will they second to EDC the civil service geniuses who masterminded the PetroCan takeover of Petrofina? Will they draw upon the wisdom of those who allowed the Canadian taxpayers to lose $125 million on Consolidated Computer? Will they appoint to the board the now fluently bilingual Ed Clark because of his gift to Canada of the National Energy Program?

The track record of bureaucrats handling finances both in Government departments and Crown corporations is lamentable. It is difficult to feel any confidence in this type of management. It is no wonder that we rise in this place day after day and scream for some vestige, some shred, some tidbit of accountability. It is no wonder that 64 per cent of Canadians feel that Parliament is irrelevant. I am willing to bet that 64 per cent of Members of Parliament feel that Parliament is irrelevant.

In Motions Nos. 3 and 5 we see how it is proposed to open the purse strings so that billions of dollars in borrowing authority will be available for the board of directors to dispose of as it sees fit. We have heard from other speakers today that this amount of borrowing authority will last at least until the end of this decade. It is far more authority than is needed.

It is interesting to note how the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) has so easily fallen prey to his own bureaucracy. In June he stated to the committee that he had complete confidence in his officials. He admitted that he does not keep a watching brief on outstanding loans. He trusts that his officials will alert him well in advance of any loan default. It sounds very similar to the Canadair fiasco. I would be willing to bet that the Minister will wake up some morning and read about an EDC loan default in the newspaper; that would be the first inkling he would have of the problem.

In June the president of the corporation revealed that just in excess of $20 billion had been loaned out over the past 20 years by EDC. Of this sum, only $1 million has been written off and there is a provision for a further $4 million in write-offs.

I have great difficulty believing that we are in that good a position. What about the $202 million the EDC has loaned out to Poland or the $260 million to Czechoslovakia, just to mention two loans that I think will be difficult to collect? Should we not, realistically, have more than $4 million set aside for defaults? Our amendments attempt to set out some parameters of accountability and responsibility for EDC. In the light of past failures by Crown corporations in this regard, why would it not be reasonable to accept them? One would think that those presently responsible for EDC would be delighted to share this responsibility in light of present world economic conditions.

Presently developing and eastern European countries owe in excess of $700 billion to western banks and governments. Obviously great care must be exercised in lending further sums to these countries. Is it unreasonable to expect Parliamentarians, as the taxpayers' representatives, to want to scrutinize the finances of EDC from time to time? It is simply good sense. Therefore, I urge all Members to support these amendments which will, I am sure, make the EDC a much more careful and responsible public corporation.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, some of us have just gone through the throes of research and attempting to pressure the Government, not with respect to this Bill but another Bill which is before the House. One of the main grounds on which we were attacking the Government's proposed security legislation, inside and outside this House, was because there was a complete lack of ministerial responsibility and accountability to Parliament. I rise today to speak on the Bill relating to the Export Development Corporation because I think the same very high principles apply to it as are applicable to the security agency legislation.

● (1530)

I know comparisons are odious—and I do not care what anyone else in the House may say about the Minister; I think he is a good fellow and I like him—but I should like to point out to him the differences in attitude that we sometimes see. Does the Minister want to be outdone by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan)? The Solicitor General has withdrawn, or is not going to proceed, with the security agency Bill in this session. It is not going to come before the House. The Solicitor General has seen the error of his ways in regard to ministerial accountability and accountability to the House and, quite sensibly, has indicated that there will be some very drastic changes in that Bill.

I beseech the popular and ever loving Minister in charge of this Bill to see the writing on the wall, and, levity and humour aside, to appreciate the very serious aspects of this. In respect of the importance of the House and the integrity and morality of the democratic parliamentary system itself, he should see that there should be the fullest accountability not only to Parliament but to himself. In the past we have all seen the ways that Crown corporations can use to get the Minister and the Government into very hot water and into deep trouble.

The truth of the matter in regard to the Export Development Corporation is that it simply is not accountable to Parliament. That is wrong and the Bill should be changed to make the corporation fully accountable to Parliament. The Export Development Corporation spending is not adequately scrutinized by Parliament as a whole, and it should be. It is not required to table an operating budget; it is not required to table a capital budget; it is not required to give any public information or information to the House or any committee of the House on the size of its payroll. Those things are very definitely wrong, Mr. Speaker. It can borrow huge sums of money in the name of Canadian taxpayers, the taxpayers' children and the taxpayers' children's children without seeking parliamentary authority to do so.

I suggest to the Minister that if the Bill goes through in its present form, the Export Development Corporation will be able to increase the capital of the corporation from Government funds, and in order to do that, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) need only concur in a recommendation from the board. There will be no parliamentary control on contributions. The Government just puts up the taxpayers' money and the board of directors of the corporation can spend it almost any way it sees fit.

If this Bill is passed, the Minister of Finance will have the absolute right to subscribe to the capital of the Export Development Corporation. There would be no further voting—that is it, the end; fini, no reference to this House and, perhaps, no reference to the Minister. I say that that is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

Not only that, but the Export Development Corporation, whether or not it received the money from the Government, has the right to borrow on the credit of Canada to the extent of $20 billion. That is the amount of the authorized capital, not even the paid up capital of the corporation, and there is no accountability to this House, no accountability to Parliament and no accountability to the public. That is wrong and should be changed.

Another provision is that the Government can make loan advances that are deemed not to be of a commercial or proper risk nature by the board of directors itself. If these amendments are passed, the Government will be entitled to authorize up to $10 billion for what, in the ordinary, economic trading and commercial sense, would be unacceptable loans. Therefore, in effect, the Governor in Council, without any vote by Parliament ever again, can make $10 billion deals without an aye, yes or no on any vote by any Parliament at any time.

Can you tell me off hand, Mr. Speaker, how many zeros there are in $1 billion? You would have to think about that. Most of us will never see that kind of money in our lifetime. This Bill will increase to $62 billion the amount of money the Export Development Corporation can borrow, lend and insure without adequate parliamentary control. It will double the authorized capital; that means that the Export Development Corporation can borrow up to $20 billion instead of $10 billion. It will double the authorized capital; that means that the Export Development Corporation can insure up to another $20 billion instead of $10 billion. The Government can make loans, not of a proper commercial nature, to a limit of $10 billion instead of the present $2.5 billion. The Government may now make insurance commitments, not of a proper commercial nature, to a ceiling of $10 billion if the Bill is passed, instead of the present $3.5 billion.

Mr. Regan: It makes jobs.

Mr. Lawrence: The Minister interrupts to say that this makes jobs. It may well make jobs although I do not think it has made many jobs up to now. But surely, if that is the point the Minister wants to get across to the Canadian public and the House of Commons, what better attitude could he or should he take than to say, "We will make a complete revelation; we will make a commitment now that these matters have to be authorized by Parliament and the House of Commons." The question is not whether the Export Development Corporation is going to make jobs with this extra money; the question is whether the people's representatives have the right to decide whether it is going to have the money to make the jobs. That is the point.

According to one authority "the Export Development Corporation is rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient". That is not rhetoric from a politician; that is no argument even from a Conservative politician in this House; Those are the words of an academic expert who has studied the Export Development Corporation. That is the warning from Professor André Raynauld of the University of Montreal, and it is pretty strong language.

The point is that that empire building, that involvement of Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient, can be done with no further authorization, approval or even debate in the Parliament of Canada. I say to the Minister, fie on you! Shame on you! That should not happen.

Seven years ago an Auditor General noted that in the majority of Crown corporations audited by him, "financial management and control was weak and ineffective. Moreover, co-ordination and guidance by central Government agencies on financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations, is virtually nonexistent".

The Minister perseveres in this arrogant and unfortunate attitude. I appeal to him now to make the necessary changes in the Act or to agree to the Conservative Opposition amendments which would make the Export Development Corporation accountable to Parliament.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, according to the Minister responsible for Bill C-110, it deals with the creation of employment. Since everyone wants desperately to create in Canada additional jobs of a permanent nature, this Bill therefore allegedly becomes sacrosanct. This Bill, of course, deals with the export of products from Canada, and since everyone is clearly desirous of endorsing, improving and extending the exports from this nation, everyone should clearly favour this Bill. So the story goes. This Bill, Mr. Speaker, symbolizes, probably more so than anything we have seen recently, an attack upon the principles of Parliament. The roots of this place lie in the fact that we here demand that the Government account for what it does and that we control the purse strings. Without that financial control, this place would not exist. If it did not exist, democracy would not exist in Canada. It is because this piece of proposed legislation, by way of amendment to the Export Development Act, attacks those basic principles, that I am opposed to the Bill itself.

• (1540)

We have heard from some of my colleagues who have detailed the problems which the Bill presents in terms of quantum, in terms of money. So often in this place we become accustomed to hearing about very substantial sums of money. Even the authorized capital in itself, as altered by this Bill, should be enough to make the ordinary Hon. Member of Parliament—certainly, the ordinary citizen—sit up and take notice, since we are talking about two thousand million dollars. We have shortened this figure to $2 billion. If we use the expression "trillion", we could probably deal with but fractions rather than full dollar amounts. However, in essence we are talking about an authorized capital of two thousand million dollars, to promote, we are told most assiduously and diligently, the export of Canadian products.

The $2 billion is not, however, the end. The corporation itself, made up of and controlled by public servants, may borrow ten times the $2 billion, or twenty thousand million dollars. The corporation may, in addition, guarantee and insure for an additional twenty thousand million dollars and, under circumstances where even the public servants determine that it would be inappropriate for this corporation to guarantee or to provide insurance, the Government may, by Order in Council, direct that that guarantee and that insurance be provided to the extent of $10 billion, or ten thousand million dollars. That is the difficulty, Mr. Speaker. We are now talking about gigantic amounts of money which are beyond the control of this House.

I can recall so vividly questions being asked and answers being given with respect to the Farm Credit Corporation here in this place, where $300 million is considered to be a very substantial injection into the backbone of this nation, into its agricultural area, the farming community. All Hon. Members and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) deal with that rather large amount of money with great care and attention. It is, after all, to be used by the farming community. Yet when we deal with exports, we are dealing with $52 billion, and we do so with the greatest of ease, without concern. Somehow our regard for values has been damaged and shifted by an immunity which we have developed to the value of money. We come to think of it as the Government's money, and everyone knows that everyone should have a piece of the Government's money. The sooner the Government spends it, the better off we all will be. But the Government has no money. The value of this nation is mortgaged in order to provide these funds for the purposes outlined in this Bill and, Mr. Speaker, neither you nor I nor any Hon. Member who is now alive and in this House will be living at the time that these obligations are paid.

I know that one might enter into a fanciful argument and say that this Crown corporation is distinct from Government, and, indeed, while it might go out and borrow $20 billion, as it is authorized to do, it could default and never pay off those obligations. Therefore, what we are really looking at is just the capital which is ultimately injected into it. You know, Mr. Speaker, and I know, that whatever this Crown corporation incurs in terms of liability will be paid, not with government money, because there is none, but with the money of the people of this nation. It disturbs me to think that in such a cavalier manner this House can take this piece of legislation and deal with it in the fashion which the Minister responsible for it would have us believe we should.

We know that not long ago this corporation provided the funds necessary for the development of a rather interesting architectural structure in Algeria, and it may well have provided, as it did, a lot of employment for a lot of Canadians who were there. It also provided an opportunity for the export of cement from Canada because a lot of it was made of concrete and reinforcing steel. The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that we have not been paid. We may never be paid. And we do not know what the interest on that loan is. The reason I mention that one incident is that it typifies the separation from this place of those who make the rules and authorize the loans, and the people in this place who were elected by the people of Canada have no authority to demand and to obtain the vital information we should have with respect to the operation of our Crown corporations, including this one.

I urge Hon. Members of the House, Mr. Speaker, to examine carefully the proposals which we have offered by way of amendment, and have some regard not to the desire of the bureaucrats to further extend their authority and dominance on the political and financial scene of this nation, but rather to display some concern for our children, our grandchildren and our great grandchildren and future generations of Canadians who will be bound to pay the debts which we permit this corporation to incur if we pass this Bill in its present form.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I am rising late to speak in respect of the Export Development Corporation Bill, but I would like to mention briefly some experiences which I have had personally with a young, vibrant company bidding for world markets. Just last week I was invited to the first promotion of their deal abroad. This happened to be a company which is in the business of manufacturing paint. The company had sold 43,000 gallons of paint to the Barbados. Over two years ago it applied to the federal Government for some promotional assistance, not just to the Barbados but to other countries, and to further research its product, which it was already doing with its own money. But it received no Government help whatsoever. Yet we find that of the 62 companies which received financial assistance last year from the Export Development Corporation, 3 received over half of the total funds allocated. This gives me a great deal of concern. Are we helping the right type of people, the people with initiative, the little guy? I think too many of our Government departments, not just the EDC, are looking for the giant who has made his way and is receiving today the lion's share.

● (1550)

I think the Minister is a pretty good fellow, Mr. Speaker. We talk about fishing and about growing potatoes in the Maritimes. While I come from Ontario, we get along very well with the Minister, and I think he really tries. But I honestly think some of his department officials bypass some of these very dedicated entrepreneurs who want to make their own way.

I cannot be critical of the EDC alone because these problems occur with the Department of Industry also. I had a chap come to me not too long ago who wanted to manufacture stick fertilizer for plants. He is struggling along and he was lucky enough to win several contracs here in Canada which had been filled by fertilizer sticks imported from the U.S. He secured a contract from Loblaws, IGA, National Grocers and Canadian Tire. Yet he was totally turned down by the Department. He had created 15 to 20 jobs and would have gone to 45 or 50 jobs, but the Department ignored him. He did not have this, he did not have that. Probably he did not have the right firm present his application. This chap was finally helped by the Government of Barbados in promoting his product abroad. It is a very viable product, so what are we doing wrong? What is the EDC doing for people such as I have described here? The Government of Barbados helped this chap promote this product, yet two years ago the EDC had turned him down.

That, Mr. Speaker, is where I can be very critical, not just of the EDC but of too many of our Government departments. We ignore the entrepreneur who wants to try and who has done a lot for himself. As speakers from this side of the House have pointed out, and apparently we are the only ones talking about this, we have to put some meaning in the Bill for the small businessman. I think it is self-explanatory when three companies received over half of the moneys allotted through the EDC. This is why we are trying to bring in some amendments to the Bill which will have some meaning for the community. We are not going to deny our big entrepreneurs, but we want to think of the smaller people who are striving and working against a market which has been captured by the big financial giants throughout the world. They are getting bigger and bigger all the time. We believe in the small Canadian entrepreneur and we want to promote him also.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that before this Bill passes the House we will have something in it for the individual who wants to help himself, who is out there trying to help himself, fighting big business and big bureaucracy. I hope that when we finish with this Bill we can say we have accomplished something for these people who are very, very important Canadians.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my remarks today to the concerns of the public as I have witnessed them during the last few months, particularly during the period of time in which I was a candidate in the byelection in Brandon-Souris in the spring of this year. One of the things I found at that time, Mr. Speaker, that distressed me, and the explanation for which can be found to some degree in this Bill, was a growing amount of distrust of Government among the public at large, a considerable amount of distrust of the civil servants who work for the Government, and there is particularly a demand by the public for more accountability by Government and its employees, accountability, Mr. Speaker, first of all to this Parliament and, second, and perhaps even more important, to the people of Canada as a whole.

It seems to me, from my studies of Canadian history—and I have devoted a considerable part of my life to that—that there has never been a time in Canadian history where there has been such distrust of Government and, quite frankly, so much concern about the importance and relevance of Parliament. I think one of the reasons for this is the growth of Government, first of all, the growth of the Civil Service, second, and, perhaps more germane to this discussion, the growth of Crown corporations, which seem to a very large degree to be operating in a world of their own, independent of scrutiny from this Parliament. It seems to me that there is an inherent danger in this particular piece of legislation. This particular Crown corporation will have the opportunity to become even less responsive to the will of this Parliament and hence to the will of the people of Canada than certainly we would wish, and certainly less than the people of Canada would wish.

It is not, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada have any particular distaste for any one form of Government. They recognize the role of many forms of administration, but they hold very much as a bottom line the necessity that the arm of Government, in this case, a Crown corporation, must be accountable in every way feasible to the Parliament of this land and hence to the people of this land. Unfortunately, as I understand this Bill, the EDC is going to be permitted to a very large degree to act independently of the will of Parliament. There is only the most minor accountability required of it in the sense that it must present an annual report to this body. In addition, as I understand the legislation, there is a further provision within the Bill which means that the Cabinet, by Order in Council, can act, if it wishes, even independent of the will of the EDC. It seems to me that in doing so it separates the executive arm of Government even further from the legislative arm and the will of the public.

One of the results of this, Mr. Speaker, is that we have discovered, just on the eve of this Parliament reconvening, that a large percentage of the public, far too great a percentage in my estimation, some 67 per cent if I remember correctly, have come to the conclusion that the actions of this Parliament are not of particular importance to them. In fact, they have come to the conclusion that Parliament to a substantial degree is becoming irrelevant. I, and I am sure most other Members of this House, would of course quarrel with that conclusion, but it seems to me that as a result of the manner in which we have drafted our legislation in the past and the manner in which we have administered the country, particularly in the realm of Crown corporations, demonstrates that we ourselves have encouraged the public to reach that conclusion. By comparison, in 1962 there were only 28 Crown corporations operating in Canada, and at that time they were largely, and I think reasonably clearly, accountable to Parliament. Today we have more than 300 Crown corporations, and I daresay that there are many Hon. Members who are not exactly certain as to the number of Crown corporations.

• (1600)

Mr. McDermid: Not even the Government knows.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): The amount of money being controlled by those Crown corporations has grown astronomically, and almost in direct proportion there has developed a gap between those Crown corporations and Parliament as a whole, and hence, the public. As a result, many people have come to the conclusion that the real authority within the land rests in a place other than here.

It seems to me that all Members of the House, those on the other side as well as those on this side, have a very pressing need to correct that concern. One of the ways we can do that is by ensuring that all Crown corporations be made more directly accountable to this Parliament and by amending this piece of legislation to ensure that the Export Development Corporation reports more directly and immediately to the House than is proposed. In particular, the provision by which the Cabinet, the executive arm, by Order in Council, could make loans which might well be contrary to the criteria established by the Export Development Corporation, permitting it to operate in an independent and perhaps irresponsible manner, must be amended.

If the public is to recover the faith it once had in Parliament and in the parliamentary process, then we as Parliamentarians and all those who are part of the governmental process must seize upon every opportunity which is given to us to seem to be answerable to the public. We must also be able to provide the public with as much information as it seeks so that people are able to evaluate the doings of Parliament and, of course, the actions of Crown corporations as well. It seems to me that the Government has strayed from that objective. Instead of making Crown corporations more accountable to the public, it has done the opposite. The end result is that we have had more Crown corporations than the public desires. We have had more Crown corporations operating independently of the public and of Parliament than the public desires. Therefore, the impression has been created that there is an arm of Government which is operating independent of the will of the public. In doing so, the Government has very much contributed to its own demise as far as the public perception is concerned. We have an opportunity to rectify that at this point. It seems to me that we will not make great strides in that direction until not only is there a change in philosophy, but a change in Government as well. However, in the meantime, we have an opportunity, in amending this particular piece of legislation, to ensure that those who spend the money raised by the taxpayers of Canada are accountable, first of all, to the Parliament of this land and then, second, to the electors who send us here.

We also have a very real responsibility and opportunity to ensure that those who spend the money of the taxpayers of this land are spending it in a way which is consistent with the objectives provided for EDC by Parliament. It is therefore imperative that there be a greater degree of accountability than there has been in the past and that the process providing the opportunity for Cabinet, by Order in Council, to spend money in a manner which may be contrary to the wishes of the Corporation, which we specifically requested and which was established for that purpose, be now amended.

In conclusion I say that it is of utmost importance that Parliament amend the legislation so that the Crown corporation becomes more accountable to this body and hence to the will of the public.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible to me that the public has not become more aware of the magnitude of this Bill. I have not seen a headline which states that "another Crown corporation is now enabled to borrow $50 billion". Why? I wonder why this has not become news to Canada from coast to coast, and it concerns me. I wonder why the public of Canada would not be interested in the fact that here we have a Bill which will put $50 billion out of reach, out of touch, with the elected representatives of this nation. Is that not news? Fifty billion dollars is a lot of money. Yes, I can understand that people are enthralled that there will be improved export opportunities and expanded export credit, and that principle is one with which I think few if any in the House quarrel. However, the principle of secrecy with regard to the administration of the money is one with which I think all Canadians should become familiar.

I am amazed at some of the approaches that have been taken concerning the Bill. Last week we heard the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) saying that jobs and not ownership was the issue in the Maritimes. I think that his remoteness from the Maritimes, his complete lack of understanding of the Maritime problems, is perhaps the explanation why his Party now has the same number of Members as it had five, ten or 15 years ago, and one less than it had 25 years ago. Members of his Party just do not understand.

Mr. Lapierre: How many more do you have?

Mr. McCain: I said that his Party had one less. It will stand in that same position. In the ten minutes I have at my disposal I do not have time for the Hon. Member's frivolous interruptions.

I would like to say to Your Honour that ownership is not the issue in Atlantic Canada because the Canadian investors have been inclined to put their money within sight of the tower in Calgary or the CN Tower in Toronto, and if they cannot see it or smell it from there, then it is not the place to put money. Fortunately, we do have some foreign investors who are interested in putting money into industry in Canada, and they have been quite successful. We need them in Atlantic Canada, and we welcome them. We resent the interference by FIRA, we resent the interference by Government, and we resent the slow procedures to which they must succumb in order to receive the assistance which is supposed to be public money for public investment in the nation of Canada. We have one, for instance, now in the process, which was supposed to have been approved. First it was approved by FIRA. I do not know why, because it is a foreign company, but I thank FIRA for its approval. Then it was to be approved for a DREE grant sometime in June. Now we are in mid-September, and the answer as to when it will be approved is not there. No, the Maritimes want jobs and do not care who invests the money as long as they get a fair opportunity to work at a reasonable wage.

I am concerned about this corporation and its historic way of functioning in Canada. This is because any information that we have been able to collect does not indicate that the Maritime industry has been favoured with any important amounts of this money. I am concerned about the way it functions. I am concerned, for instance, that we do not have a shipbuilding industry in Atlantic Canada because this organization exported ships to the much greater advantage of the purchaser than ships could be sold to Canadians, whether involving Canadian steamships or Kent line ltd. or whatever it may have been. The capital investment for a ship built and operated in Canada was not as attractive as that for the ship bought by offshore owners and operated in and out of Canadian ports. This is most unfortunate. I wonder how many credits were extended by this corporation or will be extended to such companies as Enamel and Heating or Enterprise Foundry. I am wondering how many credits will be extended by the corporation to the fish processing industry, to the agricultural processing industry, to the fresh fish industry or to the fresh agricultural products of Atlantic Canada. Will the money be made available to them and will it be on terms that they can accept? The initial terms of the corporation would not meet the needs of the buyer of food products as they were exported from Atlantic Canada.

• (1610)

I think it is time that we began to look toward Atlantic Canada. I would suggest that the expenditure of federal moneys in Atlantic Canada is under political control since there is a Minister appointed for each Province. He certainly has the authority to say how, where and when money will be spent by the federal Government in Atlantic Canada. Whether it is for roads or industry, the minister can exert pressure to spend the money as he sees fit. Will that pressure still be there? How will we be able to determine whether ministerial pressure has been exerted to serve the friends of the Government? This has occurred in other areas, and will it happen here? We will not know if this will happen in this corporation because of the secrecy involved in this deal.

I submit that if we cannot have public examination of this corporation we should at least have in camera meetings in committees of the House of Commons, with a free licence to roam, investigate and know what is going on. That is the least that should be extended to elected Members of Parliament. There will be six people hired on the board of directors who will be working for Canada, with another three appointed from outside the Public Service. I believe that the elected people should be able to know how the six hired members and three appointed members are working on behalf of all of Canada and whether they are paying proper attention to those industries which need it the most, including the fishing industry which I have mentioned.

Will this corporation emphasize food exports as a nation with a heart and with consideration not only for the hungry people abroad but also for those people at home who make their living from these industries? I question whether the lake group would be facing as many difficulties at this time if CIDA had picked up a reasonable portion of product and exported it abroad. Would any fish processor in Atlantic Canada be in circumstances as difficult as those in which they are at present if we had offered more fish as food, through CIDA, to help the starving millions of this world. I believe that is our role. Without a mechanism for reviewing this structure we will never know how much attention has been paid to the industries and countries which need help and whether the corporation is performing a job that is acceptable to Canadians.

For example, I wonder if there is any possibility for exports for Entreprise Foundry in Sackville, New Brunswick, which recently suffered the misfortune of an economic demise. Last Friday, the Province of New Brunswick assumed responsibility for the management and operation of that plant for a year on a trial basis. Will the Export Development Corporation look at that industry in order to determine if there is a market for its product which could be aided by export credit? Is the EDC prepared to extend the terms and conditions which would make it possible for this industry to thrive and prosper as it once did, or will it be treated with another freight raise, with the removal of the Maritime freight rate benefits as the western farmers are being punished with the change in the Crow rate?

I say to the Government that it is imperative that this organization direct its efforts toward those parts of Canada that need help the most, whether it be in shipbuilding, steel, fish or agriculture. I hope there will be a special effort made to seek export opportunities for our products.

Let me reiterate that the least the Government can offer this House is the opportunity to hold in camera meetings to discuss fully the details of the use of 50 billion tax dollars.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott)—Energy—Fluctuations in Ontario gasoline prices. (b) Impact of tax on prices; the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—Veterans' Affairs—Request that a commemorative medal be struck to honour Dieppe veterans; the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy)—Canada Labour Code—Protection of workers' health—Introduction of amending legislation. (b) Timing of introduction of amending legislation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motion 2 Nos. 3 and 5 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this very important debate today. Before I begin, however, I think I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the work that was done on this particular Bill by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He has spent a considerable amount of time on this Bill and has worked quite closely with our caucus and other interested groups from the public who have a great interest in this particular piece of legislation. I wanted to put it on the record that we in this Party are very pleased and wish to thank him publicly for the work he has done.

Let me quote what the Auditor General said last fall. He said:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of Government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of Government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

That is what we are debating today. In the four and one-half years that it has been my privilege to be here in the House of Commons representing the constituency of Brampton-Georgetown, I have seen Bill after Bill, Act after Act, come before the House which has slowly eroded the responsibility of a Member of Parliament. It is embarassing for a Member to return to his riding and be asked by a constituent about certain matters. We have to say that we do not know because it had never been discussed in Parliament and was something taken on by a Crown corporation which is not accountable to Parliament. Obviously we are here to represent those who have elected us, but we are unable to do so. This is another Bill which is slowly eroding that accountability that we all want.

This Bill will increase the amount of money that EDC can borrow, lend or insure without adequate parliamentary control to $62 billion. Each time I hear the figure of $62 billion mentioned I see those who are employed by EDC drooling in the galleries. They can hardly wait to get their hands on that money. This legislation is the Government's answer to accountability to the people. It wants to pass one Bill so that it can obtain $62 billion and never return here to account for the way it is being spent.

I agree with the Minister that the issue is jobs. There is no doubt that in many instances money from EDC does provide jobs. I happen to have a company in my constituency, namely, Northern Telecom, which does take advantage of the Export Development Corporation from time to time. I am sure their latest contract signed with Turkey has preserved jobs and provided some extra jobs. No doubt the EDC will be somewhat involved in that particular venture. I want to make it very clear that we are not against the Export Development Corporation. We are not against its making wise loans, guarantees, insuring exports; not by any stretch of the imagination. Our concern is the accountability to the taxpayers of this country. That is the number one issue we are debating here today. I believe the amendments introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, will go a very long way in providing that much needed accountability in Parliament.

● (1620)

The Export Development Corporation has come under some criticism for its management, not without justification. It is hard to comprehend that a corporation with 613 employees had only has some 62 loan transactions. When you take a look at the recent past, loans of $2.5 billion went to only four companies, one getting a loan of $1 billion. Of the jobs created from that particular loan—and I am referring to the Bombardier loan for subway cars—40 per cent of the jobs are in the United States. Yet we are lending money for that project. Not all the jobs are created here in Canada, as the Government would lead us to believe.

Mr. Ferguson: The subways are in the United States.

Mr. McDermid: I go into the bank from time to time to borrow money and to pay it back. But I do not know a bank that has ten employees for every loan it hands out. This is certainly not the case in the communities I represent, and I am sure that is not the case in the Hon. Member's community either. Yet that is a fact where the Export Development Corporation is concerned. It has ten employees for every loan processed.

The insurance end of the corporation issues insurance policies at an annual rate of 1.5 policies per employee. Let me emphasize that; one and one-half policies for each employee. Any insurance company that did that would go broke. Amazingly enough, the corporation makes money on its insurance policies. It does not get a great return. I believe it is a very small return. The entire profit of the Export Development Corporation is around $1 million on capital of $619 million, which is a return of some one-tenth of 1 per cent. We have to ask ourselves, while we are handing $62 billion, as outlined in this Bill, to the Export Development Corporation, will it handle those funds wisely and with proper business acumen? That is the question we are asking today. We, as elected Members, would like to have some responsibility in saying whether or not the EDC is doing that. Representatives of the EDC may or may not appear before a parliamentary committee to explain their actions, justify their expenditures, their borrowings, the loans that they have made for export financing or for insurance, transactions that in many instances are questionable at best.

I conclude by saying to the Minister and imploring the Minister to take a look at our motions and to accept them because we are as anxious as he is to get on with the job of creating more employment in this country, and of improving our export position in the world today. But for heaven's sake, do not take this responsibility out of the hands of the parliamentarians because we are elected to do the job of protecting the public purse.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate today, particularly as it relates to the amendments put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). If one analyzes the two amendments, Motions Nos. 3 and 5, it becomes very clear immediately that all we on this side of the House are attempting to do is to point out the need and the responsibility that all Members in this House of Commons have regarding accountability for the taxpayers' money being spent in various enterprises and initiatives undertaken by the federal Government. We should always remember as Members of this House of Commons that the money is not the Government's money. Every dollar we deal with from Ottawa and spend somewhere belongs to the citizens we represent. It is their money. Our citizens have agreed, by our system and the system of government that has evolved, to pay taxes so that we as Members of Parliament can operate the Government for the public good.

Let us look at how this responsibility is being effected today in this Bill. All we are attempting to do with these two amendments is to make the Government more accountable. How can we accept Bill C-110 which will allow the federal Government never to come back to Parliament for authority to spend billions and billions of dollars in areas about which most Canadians have no idea?

Let us examine the Export Development Corporation for a moment. It is not required now to table an operating budget. It is not required to table a capital budget. It is not even required to table in this House of Commons the size of its payroll, the number of people working for it.

When loans, loan guarantees and projects by the Export Development Corporation are applied for, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has the absolute authority to say yes or no. In my opinion that opens the door to abuse immediately. We have to bring accountability back to this House of Commons.

A recent survey across Canada showed that people felt Parliament was irrelevant. I do not feel that Parliament is irrelevant. I do not feel that any Member on the government side or any Member on this side of the House wants to be looked upon as being irrelevant. The Export Development Corporation as it stands, if this Bill goes through, may borrow money in the name of the Canadian taxpayer and of his or her children without coming to Parliament and saying "Ladies and gentlemen, do you concur with the Export Development Corporation borrowing this kind of money for these kinds of projects?" I wonder what the people in my riding or, indeed, in any riding would say if they had a chance to review some of the projects and the money to be spent thereon by the Export Development Corporation?

This Bill could give the Export Development Corporation, whether or not it receives money from the Government, the right to borrow on the credit of Canada, on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada, to the extent of $20 billion. Even if the House of Commons does not agree, even if the Minister of Finance does not agree, the corporation is given authority in the Bill to borrow on its own initiative $20 billion. Indeed this will put Canadian taxpayers and their children further into debt. It sounds preposterous. It is like a man giving each of his sons a blank cheque and saying, "Go to it, boys." We are giving a blank cheque to the Export Development Corporation on the taxpayers' account. Not only that, the EDC, whether or not it receives money from the Government, has the right to borrow $20 billion.

• (1630)

Just as serious and perhaps even more so is the provision in Bill C-110 whereby the Government can make loan advances which are deemed not to be commercially viable by the board of directors. In other words, the board of directors of the EDC may turn down a loan as not being commercially viable or proper, and the Government can step in and say to that agency, "You will make this loan". We can let our imagination run riot on that one for a moment.

In total the Bill will increase to $62 billion the amount of money the EDC can borrow, lend or insure, without adequate parliamentary control. It doubles the authorized capital of the EDC. This means that the EDC can borrow up to $20 billion instead of $10 billion. There is a limit now of $10 billion, and the Government wants to double it to $20 billion. Doubling the authorized capital means that the EDC can insure up to $20 billion instead of $10 billion. Now the Government can make loans of an improper commercial nature, such as erecting another monument somewhere at the cost of $15 million or $20 million. It can do this to the limit of $10 billion instead of $2.5 billion. The way it was under the old Act, the Government could only waste $2.5 billion, not $10 billion. Now the Government may insure commitments which are of an improper commercial nature to a ceiling of $10 billion instead of $2.5 billion. It is ever escalating. Without coming to Parliament the Government will be able to increase its equity in the corporation to $2 billion rather than the current $1 billion.

What has been said over the years about accountability? Accountability is the bottom line. Each one of us in the House of Commons represents approximately 100,000 people. We are accountable to those 100,000 men, women and children in our constituencies for the way money is spent by the Government. What has been said over the past few years? Four years ago the Lambert Commission, in examining the bewildering array of Crown agencies, found that existing provisions for classifying them and for accountability for each category had been rendered obsolete. Also it indicated that if the resulting state of confusion was left unattended, it would seriously impair the value of these agencies as instruments of public purpose.

What did the Auditor General of Canada have to say? According to his report he said:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Malone: Perhaps we could seek unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Shields: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the House for its generosity in allowing me to continue. I will try to wrap up in a few short minutes.

Let me return to the question of accountability and the quotation of the Auditor General, " . . . Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds." In civic elections such as the ones that will be held in my Province next October, in school board and hospital board elections, the primary concern of the electorate in small and large communities is accountability—"Where is my tax dollar going, how is it being spent, how much have you received in taxes, or are you spending it wisely on my behalf?" We in the House of Commons represent people from coast to coast. The people out there do not understand or fathom $20 billion. They understand $500,000 or $1 million, but when it gets to billions of dollars, it is just numbers. In fact, many of us sitting in the House of Commons do not understand what is a billion dollars. We are putting our children into hock every time we allow unrestrained and unaccountable spending in Crown corporations.

Also the Auditor General indicated in his report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1982 that the time for reports and discussions had passed and that the time had come for meaningful action to be taken to increase the accountability and control of Crown corporations. We have continually seen reports tabled in the House of Commons over the past ten years, urging all Members to get accountability of Crown corporations into the House. We are not doing it. We are derelict in our duty. The Government brings in Bill C-110 which further erodes accountability. Our two amendments, if accepted, would move toward accountability. They are small steps in that direction because it cannot be done overnight. Is it too much for the Government to accept?

• (1640)

I will close with a brief summary of the management of the corporation. On the surface, the EDC appears to be doing something right. After all, it is one of a few Crown corporations that actually declared a profit last year. It earned a profit in spite of being a highly inefficient organization.

In 1982, the EDC had 613 employees, loan transactions with 62 companies and slightly in excess of 900 insurance policies. Can any Member of this House who is familiar with business name a bank which has ten employees for every loan that it makes? Of course not.

Mr. Bradley: The Small Business Development Bank.

Mr. Shields: That may be. I have not looked at that one. Can anyone on the Government benches name an insurance company in the private sector that issues insurance policies at an annual rate of 1.5 policies per employee? Can anyone on the Government benches name a bank or insurance company with so few customers and so many offices across this country?

The Government makes money on its export insurance coverage, but fails to market that insurance adequately. Only a small handful of corporations receive the benefit of an EDC subsidy. Little is being done to expand this circle. Let us look at the actual profit of EDC. It has unlimited financing. With every debt that it incurs, it delves into the pocket of the taxpayer. Last year the actual profit was $1 million on capital of $961 million, a rate of return of 1 per cent.

I hope that I have made my case to the Members of this House. We must get accountability back where it belongs, with the voters of this country. The closest link to the voters is the House of Commons, the Members here. We must listen to and take heed of the warnings of Auditors General and reports commissioned by this Government on accountability. We must get accountability back in Parliament. The two amendments that we proposed are a small step toward reaching that goal. I urge Members on all sides of the House, regardless of Party affiliation, to move toward getting accountability back into the House of Commons where it belongs.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I want to pick up on the theme which has been discussed by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). The Hon. Member has really zeroed on the most important aspect of the Bill. We are not just debating Motions Nos. 3 and 5 which the Progressive Conservative Party has put forward at report stage and which would control the borrowing of Crown corporations, but, more important, the whole question of accountability of Crown corporations. This was focused on by the Hon. Member for Athabasca. I want to pick up that theme because it comes close to hitting at the base of why we are here in Parliament to represent our constituents. When Members of Parliament return to their ridings, they find that their constituents are frustrated and unhappy with the system and also quite often with our performance here in the House of Commons. Our constituents feel removed from what is taking place here, the spending that goes on.

When Parliament was set up, a major role envisaged for it by the drafters of the Constitution must surely have been that of a sounding board where problems could be discussed by those elected to this place, people from different occupations and backgrounds, and where they could have some say with regard to Government spending. That has not happened. That is why there is so much frustration. The people have no input. As a Member of Parliament, I am frustrated because I do not have the input which I believe I should have.

This Bill highlights the fact that a Crown corporation can increase the amount of money it can borrow, spend, lend or guarantee without coming to Parliament. The Auditor General is the only real safeguard which the taxpayers have over Government spending. He has the authority to take a good look at Government spending, regardless of which Party is in power. Last fall he indicated the depth of the concern that is being expressed in my riding. He said, and I quote:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of Government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of Government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

That really hits at what we are discussing today. Unfortunately, little has been done. When a Crown corporation like EDC asks Parliament for greater authority, we must certainly look closely at the request. That is not the right direction. It is making things worse. It will only increase the sense of alienation and frustration in this country. The Export Development Corporation is certainly not all bad. It has a place. It does do some very positive things in the context of the guidelines set down for it. We all know that. The spending of the Export Development Corporation is not adequately scrutinized by Parliament, and it never has been. It is not required to table an operating budget, a capital budget for information on the size of its payroll. Who, including yourself, Mr. Speaker, could go to the bank and borrow a substantial amount of money without telling the bank manager what it was for? Who could ask the bank for what is, in effect, a blank cheque and receive money to use as he wanted, without showing any cash flow or without telling the bank when and how the money would be paid back? Of course no one could do that but this is the kind of thing that we are seeking for the Export Development Corporation.

● (1650)

The corporation may borrow money in the name of the Canadian taxpayer, his children and his grandchildren, without seeking parliamentary approval. That just is not right, Mr. Speaker. Because we have allowed this to happen, we find ourselves in a very serious financial situation.

Bill C-110 would increase to $62 billion the amount of money that the Export Development Corporation can borrow and lend and insure without adequate parliamentary control. Doubling the authorized capital means that the Export Development Corporation can borrow up to $20 billion instead of $10 billion. Doubling the authorized capital means that the Export Development Corporation can insure up to $20 billion instead of $10 billion. The Government may now make loans that are not of a proper commercial nature to a limit of $10 billion instead of $2.5 billion. The Government may now make insurance commitments that are not of a proper commercial nature to a ceiling of $10 billion instead of $3.5 billion. Without coming to Parliament, the Government will be able to increase its equity in the corporation to $2 billion in place of the current $1 billion equity.

We are talking in terms of billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, and I think the Hon. Member for Athabasca indicated quite eloquently that his constituents just do not understand those figures. I suspect that no one in this House understands those figures, except to appreciate that they are very large and that someone has to pay the money back at some time. We are concerned that our children and grandchildren will have to do that and that they will blame us—and rightly so—for not having had adequate control.

The way the Export Development Corporation is going it will rapidly become a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, expanding its empire and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient. That is always a problem when dealing with the amounts of money that we are talking about.

While the Export Development Corporation has done a number of good things, it has not always spent money in a way that is in the best interests of taxpayers. For example, it financed the International Nickel Company of Canada developments in Indonesia and Guatemala thus jeopardizing jobs and potential jobs in Sudbury and in Thompson, Manitoba.

Mrs. Erola: It is protecting those jobs.

Mr. Murta: It has also financed forest development projects in Mexico, Poland and Peru, and these developments will compete with Canadian forest products. Of course, this always happens with industries that are competing on a world basis. It demonstrates that while we in Parliament can indicate how we feel about the situation, we have no direct control over the company or how it spends this money.

The Export Development Corporation helped finance the construction of a monument to the Algerian revolution. I point this out just to show the kind of situation that a Crown corporation as large as this one can become involved in.

Before I close, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the Official Opposition is adamantly opposed to any Crown corporation being given substantial amounts of money or the potential to use substantial amounts of money without adequate supervision by Parliament. This place must be supreme; Parliament must be the last resort, the debating Chamber where concerns such as those which I have just mentioned can be discussed with the people who are spending the taxpayers' money. We must be sure that we are getting the value for that money that the Canadian taxpayer expects.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the amendments proposed by this Party to Bill C-110, let me do as my colleagues have done and pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He has made an outstanding contribution in proposing these amendments in order to make sure that we will have better legislation when the debate concludes.

This afternoon we are attempting to present to Members of the Government what we believe to be improvements to the legislation. We can assure the Government that we will continue to speak until a good number of the amendments are accepted for the betterment of this legislation and so that the Government and this Crown corporation will be held more accountable.

In itself, this legislation illustrates the vast difference in approach to governing between the Liberals and this Party. A vast difference exists between the Progressive Conservative Party and the Liberal Party of Canada in regard to accountability. That is proved by the amendments that we have proposed.

We believe that every tax dollar spent on behalf of the Canadian population must be accounted for in this Chamber, rather than through Order in Council where the taxpayer has no input.

We are continually told that Canada is a trading nation; that we must export more; that 30 per cent of our GNP is derived from exports and that this is important for employment. Of course, we agree with that and I assume all Hon. Members do. But the Export Development Corporation attempts to take the approval of Canadians for export activity as approval for itself. We do not believe that the corporation has the right to that glory as there are many players who are involved in developing an export market for Canadian products.

Referring to the Export Development Corporation, Professor André Raynauld of the University of Montreal said:

—rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire, and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient.

● (1700)

Simply from that aspect alone, we believe in the amendments which have been proposed in Motions 3 and 5. Parliament itself must have more say in the direction of this funding. He compared our Export Development Corporation with like corporations and agencies in other exporting countries, and the conclusions which he drew were not favourable.

An extensive study was also done by the Economic Council of Canada, which examined the role of government in business and export financing, under the directorship of André Ryba, the director of the financial marketing group. There have been numerous studies, and the majority of them have been very critical of the activities of the Export Development Corporation. When we analyze why the corporation was originally organized, we find it was organized to insure export transactions, in other words, to sell credit insurance on Canadian products, insuring the creditworthiness of their foreign purchasers, together with insuring Canadians against problems with payments from foreign countries. The corporation presently carries on with this business, and in my view that is the most important aspect of the corporation itself. This portion of the business seems to be highly profitable. Indeed, the gross return on the insurance business in the year 1982 was $10,535,000. When you consider that the gross profit before administrative expenses for the entire corporation was only $26.5 million, the insurance business, with very little money involved, represented an excessively large portion of the gross profits of the corporation.

The corporation has been exceptionally hard to deal with for some exporters. First of all, it requires blanket coverage on all of the exporters of foreign business unless a particular country is excluded. Second, the corporation does little to give credit information and it is exceptionally slow in ratifying that information for the new customer of the exporter.

It would appear from the corporation's statement that the number of insurance policies outstanding for global comprehensive insurance was some 853. Presumably this global comprehensive coverage often involves other matters where there are specific insurance transactions, guarantees and the like. But if the total number of transactions or guaranteed arrangements for insurance are added together, there are only 963 policies at year-end. The people buying these policies paid about $14 million in premiums to the corporation. Under no stretch of the imagination can this be deemed to be an extensive export guarantee insurance program. EDC is a small insurance company involved with a relatively small number of clients.

Let us deal next with the loan business. The loan business, financing capital equipment, is handled on two sides. It is handled, first, on EDC's own account and, second, in EDC's special account for the Government of Canada. Let us deal first with its transactions on its own account. Effectively, what happens is that an exporter sells a product like a Twin Otter to a purchaser. The purchaser wants to buy the aircraft on time. The Export Development Corporation gives favourable financing. This financing is concessionary financing, financing that is certainly not available in Canada to any domestic purchaser. The money for the financing is organized by the Export Development Corporation, borrowing on the credit of Canada on the international markets to finance the sale of Canadian goods. With the Government as the guarantor, the corporation is able to borrow on the international market where money is cheaper than that which is available to any ordinary commercial borrower. Everyone knows that when you are selling a product, you not only sell the product but you also sell the financing. Financing and pricing are interchangeable. You may pay more for a product if you can finance it at a lower rate of interest. It is clear that the concessionary financing acts as a subsidy to the vendor of products and/or as an inducement to the purchaser of products, and if the concessionary financing in fact costs the exporting country or its citizens money, then the financing acts as a system of foreign aid. On the corporation's own account, the corporation has a total of 596 outstanding loan accounts on its own.

The second item of business which could be charged to the corporation is business which the corporation does on behalf of the Government of Canada. In this respect, the Government of Canada, under the provisions of the Export Development Act, can authorize activity up to $2.5 billion by Order in Council. The consequence is that if the corporation does not like a transaction, then the Governor in Council can provide money by Order in Council up to that total of $2.5 billion, and make the deal directly.

As other Hon. Members have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, the Export Development Corporation maintains classy office facilities in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax, together with its head office here in Ottawa. The corporation has some 613 employees, almost ten employees for each separate loan customer, or one and a half employees for each insurance account. Is this not a fine example of productivity? We should be ashamed of that. Again, with this legislation the present Government of Canada is not asking it to be more accountable to Parliament so that, hopefully, we could change that productivity cycle.

In many senses, Mr. Speaker, this corporation is a bureaucracy gone wild, and from that point of view alone we should make sure the activities of that Crown corporation are analyzed and scrutinized more closely by Parliament.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to be able to speak today on such a very important Bill as Bill C-110. As most Hon. Members in the House have done, last week I returned from spending some time in my riding. We have had the opportunity of travelling to all parts of our ridings to listen to the concerns of our constituents.

I would like to say to you at this time, Mr. Speaker, that one of the questions which was asked of me was, "What power does a Member of Parliament have?" That is one of the concerns that was voiced, whether I was talking to people in the Moosonee area, or down in the Verner area, or in the central part of my riding. What can a Member of Parliament do? I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, at this time, with Bill

C-110 in front of us, it is certainly an opportune time for an Hon. Member from northern Ontario to be able to speak on behalf of his constituents.

When we are looking at a Bill, a Bill which will increase to $62 billion, the amount of money which the EDC can borrow, I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is a concern. Like most Hon. Members here in the House, today and on Friday I received Canada Works Program approval for local employment assistance. On the one hand, the Government is willing to borrow $62 billion and on the other hand it is giving to ridings such as Timiskaming only $229,000 in order to create jobs. Unemployment in northern Ontario, where I come from, is now at 13 per cent. It is the same for my colleagues from the west and my colleagues from the east. How can we tell our people that this Government is going to borrow $62 billion and yet is doing very little for the unemployment situation in this country?

I would like to continue on, Mr. Speaker, and refer again to my riding, the riding of Timiskaming in northern Ontario. Once again we can see that this Government, through the EDC, has financed Inco developments in Indonesia and Guatemala, jeopardizing jobs not only in Sudbury and northern Ontario in general but also in the central part of Canada, the industrial base. I say to you, Sir, that this Government has shown it has no thought for Canadians.

• (1710)

The doubling of the authorized capital of the EDC means it can borrow up to $20 billion. The unemployed people of Canada would certainly enjoy having some of this money put into job creation in this country rather than seeing it leave Canada. In the words of Professor André Raynauld of the University of Montreal, the EDC is:

> —rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire and involving Canada in transactions ands negotiations that are both costly ands inefficient.

I would like to refer to a few of those transactions at this time, Mr. Speaker. The EDC has financed forest development projects in Mexico, Poland and Peru, which will compete with the Canadian forest industry. Does everyone here realize the problems we are faced with in the forest industry of Canada? Why is this money not put into our own industry? The EDC helped finance the construction of a monument to the Algerian revolution. Once again, what about Canadians in the forest and mining industry who have been laid off and whose unemployment insurance has run out? Would this money not have been better spent on helping Canadians who are in trouble?

At a time when Government borrowing costs were in the range of 16 per cent, EDC arranged a 9.7 per cent loan for $563 million U.S., or about $700 million Canadian to assist Bombardier in the sale of subway cars to New York city. Forty per cent of the jobs created by this deal are in the United States. Can you imagine, a loan at 9.7 per cent? What about the individuals across this country who have lost their homes, businesses and farms? Would they not have loved to have had money at 9.7 per cent interest? They would still be in business today. I can go on and on, Mr. Speaker. Last fall the Auditor General noted that Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of Government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of Government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds. Not only are the constituents in my riding and across Canada concerned, but the Auditor General has expressed his concern in his report.

I might say to the Hon. Members on the other side that the concern we have for Canadians is not a laughing matter, Sir.

The private sector role is too weak. The mandate of EDC is to help Canadian exporters. Most Canadian exporters are private sector concerns, while the EDC board is top heavy with bureaucrats. The present Act calls for 12 directors, six of whom are to be public servants. In a letter of May 30 to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs wrote that the Government has long held the view that the key ministries which have a direct interest in EDC activities should be members of the board, that is, Mr. Speaker, External Affairs, Finance, the Bank of Canada, CIDA, IT&C, and DREE. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) on June 9, in a letter to the Minister, outlined the Progressive Conservative view on this. He said:

> There seems to be, in our view, many Members from the Public Service on the Board. We would concede, perhaps, that there should be someone from Industry, Trade and Commerce; there should be, perhaps, someone from External Affairs; there should be, perhaps, someone from the Department of Finance. Other than that, in our view, the rest of the members of the Board of Directors should be from the private sector.

That is what we believe in, Mr. Speaker. The private sector is the people who will make this country grow. It would certainly do for this Government to take a second look at the concerns in this country.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity given to me today to take part in this debate. In initiating my remarks I would like to point out how pleased we are on this side and how thankful we are for the work done by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) on this Bill. He has done a tremendous job in marshalling this Bill through the House and in ensuring that the responsibility is taken by the Government.

I come from a predominantly rural riding, Mr. Speaker, and we are very concerned about the operation of the Economic Development Corporation and about this Bill C-110. We have concerns in my riding about the fish industry and what the EDC has done in the past and what it will do in the future. That is a major concern. We are concerned about agriculture, dairy products, tobacco, grain, and even peanuts.

I have a very large industry in my area, Mr. Speaker, the largest steel plant in Canada, Stelco. The last speaker pointed out very ably what the EDC is not doing for organizations such as that. We ask why EDC needs to be expanded and why it needs this money. What has it done for rural Canada? We are told we have Canagrex to help the agricultural people sell their products abroad. Now we are told that EDC supposedly is working on agricultural sales as well as other export sales. If so, why Canagrex? If Canagrex, why expand EDC? Where do the two come together? We see the need in rural Ontario for assistance in selling our export products, our agricultural and industrial goods, but we would like the Government to get its act together and come with one vehicle to do the job. One doing the job effectively is better than some 300 doing it ineffectively.

We note from page 6 of the nineteenth annual report that the purpose of the EDC is to facilitate and develop Canada's export trade through the provison of insurance guarantees and financing services. The report states, "It exists to help Canadians compete effectively for economically sound exports". I am sure that the Chairman of the flue-cured Tobacco Marketing Board would have liked to have seen that quotation put into effect long ago.

● (1720)

Bill C-110 has two major thrusts. The first is to develop the operational capacity of the Export Development Corporation and, in so doing, the Government seeks to expand the borrowing capacity of the corporation without need for further reference to Parliament and without need for further paid-in capital. The second major thrust of the Bill is to alter the current structure and powers of the board of directors, the number of directors being increased from 12 to 15, and the requirement that six directors be public servants being dropped. However, the Export Development Corporation is not accountable to Parliament now, without the expanded provisions that would make it less accountable. The EDC does not have its spending adequately scrutinized by Parliament. It is not required to table an operating budget, a capital budget or even information on the size of its payroll. It may borrow money in the name of all Canadian taxpayers without seeking parliamentary authority to do so. We wonder why we are elected by our people in our constituencies to come here to ensure accountability in this place, only to find a Government that is expanding corporations and taking away that accountability from individual Members of Parliament. This type of accountability, the Liberal accountability, cannot be allowed to continue.

Seven years ago, the Auditor General noted:

In the majority of Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective.

Four years ago, the Lambert report noted:

In examining the bewildering array of Crown agencies we have found that existing provisions for classifying them and for accountability for each category have been rendered obsolete.

Last fall, the Auditor General noted:

Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of Government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of Government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

The time has come for meaningful action to be taken to increase the accountability and control of Crown corporations, not to expand willy-nilly as we see being done by the Government. The amendments proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South are a step in that direction, and hopefully not a step that is too big for the Government to take.

Productivity is in question when we consider the expansion of the EDC. In 1982, the 613 employees of the EDC had loan transactions with 62 companies and placed slightly in excess of 900 separate insurance policies. We heard about this earlier today, but it is an unbelievable statement that 613 employees were required to make loan transactions with 62 companies. Last year, the EDC made loans or facilitated bank financing in the amount of $2.5 billion. Of that amount, $1 billion went to Bombardier, $200,000 went to de Havilland, and $100,000 went to Spar Aerospace. Thus, three of the 62 companies that received EDC financing last year received more than half the total money.

Mr. Regan: How many subcontractors did they have?

Mr. Bradley: As well, the EDC has not always conducted transactions that are in the best interests of Canadian taxpayers and their children. One of the things we heard today concerned EDC's financing of Inco developments in Indonesia, jeapardizing the jobs in Sudbury and Manitoba. As well, we heard that the EDC has financed forest development projects in Mexico, Poland and Peru, developments that will compete with Canadian forest products. We heard about EDC financing of the construction of a monument to the Algerian revolution. At a time when Government borrowing costs were in the range of 16 per cent, the EDC arranged a 9.7 per cent loan of $653 million U.S., which is about $700 million in Canadian funds, to assist Bombardier in the sale of subway cars to New York City. Forty per cent of the jobs created by this deal were in the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Bradley: The farmers of my country and my riding would have loved the Farm Credit Corporation to come down and offer us money at 7 per cent, under the going rate. Those jobs would have been in Canada, by Canadians.

The recent Economic Council report entitled "Intervention and Efficiency" devotes a whole chapter to the subject of export financing and the EDC. The thrust of the report is to scale down and reorientate the EDC, not to augment it. Seven of the report's 31 recommendations pertained to the EDC. The Economic Council found that few credit and insurance gaps exist in Canada. It questioned whether or not EDC needs to be involved in insurance and in financing when the private sector is able to meet the need. The Economic Council recommended that the EDC do less direct financing and that the private sector do more.

A major question in the minds of many of us is whether the EDC is effective in its role. Canada is a trading nation. We have heard that 30 per cent of our Gross National Product is earned through trade, and that figure would be much higher if we had our fair share of world trade.

In 1968, the year that the Trudeau Government took office, Canada's share of world trade was 5.74 per cent. By 1981, this figure had fallen to 3.8 per cent. I see that Your Honour is signalling that my allotted time is about to expire. I have just a couple more points that I would like to put across if I could have unanimous support of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Patterson): The Hon. Member seeks unanimous consent. Is the House agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bradley: Thank you so very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank my colleagues on the other side for offering me this opportunity to carry on to make a couple of small points. I will try to bring it to a point—

Mr. Dingwall: Be nice.

Mr. Bradley: —and be nice to the Government, as I am being requested.

As I was saying, in 1968 Canada's share of world trade was 5.74 per cent. In 1981, the figure had fallen to 3.8 per cent. In 1968, Canadians exported more than the Japanese, yet today Japan's share of world trade is now twice that of Canada's.

The PC Party is dedicated to improving Canada's trade performance. It is not, however, dedicated to perpetuating the existing lack of accountability and control that characterizes the EDC and other Crown corporations. We will support the EDC if it becomes more accountable. We will support any corporation that assists us in export trade if it is more accountable. However, the track record is not that good. Including loan guarantees and other aid, Ottawa lost $125 million as a consequence of its attempt to prop up Consolidated Computer during the 1970s. The Government's financial commitment to de Havilland to date totals $751 million. The Government's financial commitment to Canadair to date totals $1,836 million. In 1982, Canadair lost $1.4 billion, the largest corporate loss in Canadian history. It even went down to a level where an Alaskan State Senator was sentenced to three years in jail for accepting and purchasing a bribe in relation to the potential purchase of a Canadair water bomber. However, the salesman was finally dismissed by Canadair, not for his alleged involvement in the bribe but, rather, because after four years as an employee of Canadair, he had not made a single sale.

• (1730)

We find that in February, 1981, CNR spent $64,244 to purchase advertising space wishing the CPR, its chief competitor, a happy birthday. In 1977, the CBC spent $2 million for radio and television stations valued at only $800,000. In February of 1981, Petro-Canada purchased Petrofina for about $1.46 billion, or $120 a share. At the time of the purchase the shares were trading for $90, or $30 less per share then paid by Petro-Canada. In November, 1982, as revealed by the Globe and Mail, Petro-Canada paid rent for eight months on a vacant 24-storey office building in Calgary. On the day that the Post Office became a Crown corporation, the Government helped employees celebrate by providing $300,000 worth of free coffee, doughnuts and souvenir envelopes.

That is why we on this side are concerned about the accountability of Crown corporations. That is why we are moving these amendments to make the Export Development Corporation more responsible. We hope that our colleagues on the other side of the House and to our left will agree with us when we say that we must become more responsible in the House and that we must do it by starting now with Bill C-110.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that I personally very much support the Export Development Corporation per se. It is obvious that Canadian businesses, particularly the small business sector, need assistance to export their products. Our market in Canada is sufficiently competitive to be able to compete in the world market. The Export Development Corporation, through Bill C-110 amending the Export Development Act, does not address itself to assisting the export of Canadian goods abroad. In fact, there are a number of examples which show how these amendments are detrimental to the Canadian business climate and Canada as a whole.

While my colleagues have been talking about the lack of accountability, which is probably the most important issue in this regard and which I will return to in a few moments, there are other issues as well. For example, the role of the private sector is too weak. As well, EDC is poorly managed.

Let me give a few examples of what the EDC has done in past years. For examples, the EDC has financed Inco developments in Indonesia and Guatemala, thus jeopardizing jobs in Sudbury and Manitoba. It has financed forest development projects in Mexico, Poland and Peru, developments that will compete with Canadian forest products. The EDC helped finance the construction of a monument to the Algerian revolution. Imagine that! At a time when Government borrowing costs were in the range of 16 per cent, the EDC arranged a 9.7 per cent loan of $563 million U.S., which is approximately $700 million Canadian, to assist Bombardier in the sales of subway cars to New York city. Forty per cent of jobs created by this deal are in the United States and not in Canada. The list of bad deals by the EDC goes on. It is unbelievable that there will not be a decrease of the bureaucratic involvement in running the EDC.

By now all Canadians must surely know that the more bureaucrats involved in a business venture, Crown corporation or any form of agency or business, the worse that organization will operate. One need look no further than Canada Post to see that it is not very profitable, being an organization run by bureaucrats and the Government. While the list goes on, I have only ten minutes and I must move on to other areas.

One difficulty is the fact that the private sector is not involved. Let me quote the following passage from the Economic Council of Canada from its report entitled "Intervention and Efficency":

Canada is perhaps the country with the least private sector participation in export financing decisions.

It went on to say:

In most of the 17 countries studied, the negotiations for granting export credit are also left to the private sector.

The private sector must participate more in the decision-making process of the EDC. The Liberals, however, believe that the bureaucrats who govern most govern best.

Surely Canadians have found out by now that this is not the case. Canada was built on the free enterprise system, on the initiative of the private sector and on the risk-taking of the small and medium-sized businesses, not organizations such as EDC being run by bureaucrats.

I return to my original statement to say that I support the EDC in itself, but instead of increasing the percentage of bureaucrats it is time to increase it with private sector participation. The main shortcoming of this Bill is the lack of accountability to Parliament and to the taxpayers. Let us not forget that it is the tax dollars that are being used, and therefore the taxpayer should have the absolute right to know exactly what is going on. The Export Development Corporation is not accountable to Parliament. It is not required to table an operating budget, a capital budget and information on the size of its payroll. It can borrow money in the name of Canadian taxpayers and their children without seeking parliamentary authority to do so.

Let us examine the track record of a Crown corporation which the Government trusts so implicitly with Canadian taxpayers' hard earned money as a glaring example of a bureaucracy going wild. The EDC has 10 employees for every loan customer. It issues insurance policies at an annual rate of 1.5 policies per employee. While the actual profit of EDC last year of $1 million sounds very large, that $1 million profit was on a capital of $691 million, which is a rate of return of less than one-tenth of one per cent. No private sector business could exist on less than one-tenth of one per cent profit.

As well as making numerous unsound loans to foreign countries, some of which I have pointed out, many export orders have been lost because of the corporation's inability to match financing from other sources. An example of this is the loss of a $17 million export order to build an iron foundry in Saudi Arabia because of EDC's stiff requirements for financial guarantees from the buyer and more attractive financing terms from a West German company. Other examples are available to Members and to the public at large.

The PC amendment to the Export Development Act calls for a reduction of authorized capital for the corporation from $2 billion to $1 billion. Even after the amendment, this is still 50 per cent more than the paid-in capital of its American counterpart, the Export-Import Bank of the United States. If the Export-Import Bank can carry out its responsibilities without the amount of money this Government is asking for, then it is imperative that we, as elected representatives of the Canadian people who are being asked to finance this venture, demand of the Government why this additional funding is needed and, more important, where it is going and how it is getting there.

Who will reap the benefits of this money grab? According to the Economic Council of Canada:

Large corporations are the big winners in the export subsidy game. It's a myth that loan subsidies from the EDC are mostly aimed at giving exports that initial push or assisting small and medium-sized companies.

That is a myth. Unfortunately, it is always the same large corporations that benefit from EDC assistance. I can prove that very quickly by simply stating that last year the EDC loaned the sum of $2.5 billion. Out of that $2.5 billion, $1 billion went to Bombardier, $200,000 went to de Havilland and $100,000 went to Spar Aerospace. This means that three out of the 62 companies that received EDC financing last year received more than half ot the total money. What is happening to the part of the private sector which needs assistance most, namely the small and medium-sized business sector? Once again it has been ignored by this legislation and the amendments to it. Not only is it being ignored but it is being damaged and hampered by the fact that this Government continues to spend hundreds of millions of dollars upon hundreds of millions of dollars in attempting to assist the so-called very large often multi-national conglomerates by letting small and medium-sized businesses drop dead right and left.

● (1740)

A recent survey about jobs concluded that between 350,000 and 400,000 jobs a year in the past two years, have been lost in the small and medium-sized business sector. Does the Government come up with any employment tax incentives for small and medium-sized business? No, Sir, It is busily bailing out Canadair, Massey-Ferguson, Chrysler, multinationals—some of them not even Canadian-owned—Maislin and Dome Petroleum. Hundreds of millions if not billions of dollars are being spent, and the Liberal Government has the audacity to say that it is creating temporary make-work projects in Canada at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars to the taxpayer. What kind of temporary make-work projects are they? They are unproductive, costly and temporary. That is just what they are, temporary rather than permanent. It is in the small and medium-sized business sector that full-time jobs can and should be created. Small and medium-sized companies are the ones that create the most jobs by far, yet we are seeing a dramatic decrease of employment in that sector. Small and medium-sized companies can export just as easily as large companies if only there were some form of assistance by the Government.

Let me quote from the Auditor General's report of last fall on accountability. It reads:

Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framwork that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

Broad legislation for the accountability of Crown-owned corporations should be developed that will include provisions relating to each of the elements of authorizing and mandate financing, directing, controlling and reporting. Such legislation should provide that these corporations be subject to comprehensive audits.

Parliament should give attention to issues surrounding control and accountability of those mixed enterprises and other entities and associates in which the Crown is a shareholder.

The time for reports and discussion has passed. The time has come for meaningful action to be taken to increase the accountability and control of Crown corporations. The PC amendments to Bill C-110 are a step in this direction.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to this debate to show my concern over what the Government has proposed in terms of the rearrangement of the Export Development Corporation.

I do not have to reiterate what many of my colleagues have said about the lack of control exercised over this particular monster of a bureaucracy. The EDC does not have to come to Parliament for prior approval of its spending. It does not come to Parliament with a statement of its activities. That is understandable in a sense because many of the negotiations carried out by this corporation have to be kept confidential as a result of the potential commercial interest involved.

As we know from the amendments we have tabled to this Bill, Mr. Speaker, we feel there could be much better accountability to Parliament of this corporation's activities. Having said that, like my colleague the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek), I am equally concerned over the track record of the EDC, particularly since it appears to be that only large, usually multinational, corporations benefit from the loan guarantees or the high-risk loans being made. In other words, it would appear that those companies mostly held together by the strings attached to the regulations and the wisdom of the Government—those companies which have an open door to powerful offices in Ottawa—are the ones considered for these kinds of guarantees.

No one would argue that this kind of lending facility is necessary. No one would argue that because of the importance of international trade to our economy we must have some kind of an institution to facilitate this trade, particularly in a world where our private institutions are not very effective in accepting their responsibility. They should be making it possible for domestic industries to have the necessary financial instruments to pursue aggressively market opportunities offshore. In fact, when it comes to the small and medium-sized businesses, I would also venture to say that our financial institutions, the banks are not acting very responsibly in fulfilling their mandate to make sure our small and medium-sized businesses have the necessary venture and risk capital available so as to maintain a healthy domestic economy. Nor will the money available from our banks provide our small and medium-sized businesses with the means to venture and seek out export opportunities.

Canada is a trading nation, as my colleagues have said. Thirty per cent of our Gross National Product is earned through trade. It can be said that we no longer live in a perfect world. It is becoming increasingly difficult for any nation, particularly a highly industrialized nation such as Canada, to compete in world markets. Many things have happened since 1968 when Canada had 5.74 per cent of world trade. Canada now has only about 3.8 per cent of world trade.

We have seen the evolution of trading blocks, not just among industrial countries, the EEC probably being the most important. We have also seen trading blocks emerging in the developing world. There is the South American trading block, and trading arrangements in the Asian countries are factors that now have to be put into the equation and that inhibit the trade of a country that likes to consider itself a free trader, economically, politically and culturally independent. That is why we have often said we should not be afraid to look at the potential of joining in a North American economic trading arrangement. It could include Mexico and Canada, together with the United States. It would give us access to a trading bloc which is about the right size in terms of economy of scale in comparison with some of the other trading blocs with whom we have to compete.

● (1750)

Also we see a great drive toward state to state trading. Some industrial countries, which do not enjoy our particular political system but have integrated and centrally controlled economies, prefer state to state trading. They use this arrangement as an effective tool to blackmail western countries. I use that word advisedly; that is exactly what is happening. In other words, communist and socialist countries like to tell our traders that if they could change their political system and the state could show a greater degree of ownership in the economy so that there could be state to state trading, they would open the doors and make themselves accessible. We ought to be very careful not to fall for that trap. We know that during the energy crisis certain arrangements were made. It was the excuse for Petro-Canada to be incorporated. We needed access to supplies from some countries which used that political tool very effectively. That is why we had to have a state oil company to deal with other states in terms of international trade.

We are on a very slippery slope. When we look at this particular Bill and the role of the Export Development Corporation in terms of facilitating international trade on behalf of Canadian industries, we ought to keep that in mind. For example, EEC purchased about 5 per cent of its nickel requirements from the Soviet Union. In one year, last year, that percentage went from 5 per cent to 20 per cent. The state to state relationship, particularly in the European economic sense, had something to do with this. At least it was partially the result of having a nickel industry in Canada, which at one point literally dominated the world market, reduced to roughly a 15 per cent or 20 per cent share. Some of the nickel we are not selling has been stockpiled and has caused disruptions in the production of nickel, such as the shutting down of mines and unrest. The policies of the Government through the EDC have developed new production facilities in other parts of the world at the expense of Canadian workers and the Canadian industry.

These are some of the distortions in the marketplace to which we have to react. The Export Development Corporation is a tool that could be used intelligently and innovatively to help our industries compete. Unfortunately, according to the record, large corporations are helped by the EDC. Usually such corporations are totally integrated. As my colleague indicated earlier, they are of a size which literally prevents them from going broke because the failure of any of these large corporations impacts on the total economy and because of the heavy exposure of the banks to them. Quite often throughout the debate we have expressed our concern about corporate takeovers or corporate cannibalism, as I like to call it. As a result of the bail-out business in which the Government has been involved over the last couple of years, large corporate entities are literally dictating and controlling the economic fortunes of the country. If they get into difficulty, they simply come to Government and say, "You cannot afford politically to let us go down because of the impact on the total economy". In some cases banks are coming to the Government together with their clients and saying, "One of us might have to go down with this company, so we have no choice but to bail it out".

We do not wish the EDC to be a lender of last resort instead of companies being bailed out in the normal fashion where Ministers have to come before the House to bare their souls. We do not want behind the scenes dealings involving the Export Development Corporation which, as I said earlier, does not report to Parliament; we would never know of the bail-out.

I am concerned with the incredible contingent liability which the corporation is permitted to chalk up on behalf of Canadian taxpayers. I am concerned for my children because they may have to pay back some of these liabilities some day. That should be of concern to us all. The average listener to today's debate should know that the measures in the Bill increase the high risk transactions of the corporation from $3.5 billion to $10 billion and loan guarantees from $2.5 billion to $10 billion. I want the Government to understand that this must be a concern to us. We would prefer to have these measures properly studied and discussed with the private industry, which deserves a larger role in deciding the activities of the EDC. This is not built into the Bill. We do not think the private sector has a large enough say in what the corporation does. Quite frankly, average Canadian citizens would prefer a measure such as this being brought in by a government in which they have more trust and confidence than the present Government.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is only one minute remaining, I wonder if I might call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is understood that the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) has been recognized for debate and therefore will be automatically recognized tomorrow at eleven o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—FLUCTUATIONS IN ONTARIO GASOLINE PRICES. (B) IMPACT OF TAXES ON PRICES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to address the House again on the subject of the negative impact of federal taxation on Canadian oil prices.

When I first raised this matter before the summer recess I was told by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) that the federal Government does not control the price of gasoline at the pumps. I would suggest that it has much more control over the retail price of gasoline than it has over the many Crown corporations it has established over the past few years. I was also told that gasoline pricing agreements are not negotiated with a view to what taxes provincial Governments place on gasoline. In other words, the decisions on pricing and federal taxation are made without consideration of the end cost to Canadian consumers.

• (1800)

Recently it was revealed by a combines branch lawyer that Imperial Oil took complete control over the retail prices charged by Suny's Limited, one of its agents, last Spring to end the gasoline wars in Ontario. In August of this year, another price hike took place. The industry maintained that a shortage of gasoline was behind this increase.

The director of the combines branch investigated this increase and found no evidence of price fixing or of the industry's claim of a shortage. Both instances were investigated by officials of the federal Government. Obviously the Government felt it had the authority to investigate. If it has no ability to control prices, then why is it trying to do so?

It is obvious the producers and retailers are not making undue profits from gas wars and general price fluctuations. On September 15, the Toronto Star quoted Rick Hallisey of First Manhattan Securities Limited as saying, and I quote:

> It's so bad that I think by the end of the year, Canada's chartered banks will collectively become the largest owners of drilling rigs in the country, directly through foreclosures or indirectly by becoming shareholders in troubled companies.

With only a few cents per gallon profit, the retailer is doing little better. The largest share of the price of a gallon is still going to Government taxes. This being the case, the federal Government must acknowledge its share of the blame for unduly high prices and price discrepancies across the country.

A look at the immense damage done to our tourist industry this summer alone by the high cost of gasoline should be enough to cause a review of the oil taxing policies. I understand that in eastern Ontario the number of tourists was down this summer by somewhere over 7 per cent. This was the best summer we have had weatherwise for years. It is time for the Government to show by example that it wants to keep energy prices down.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to take issue with some of the comments made by the Hon. Member. He is forgetting a number of factual points. For example, when the Minister indicated to him in Question Period that the Government of Canada does not control the price at the pumps he was quite correct. However, the Hon. Member refuses on all occasions to accept the fact that the provincial Governments in this country have a very prominent role to play in the pricing of gasoline. Through their various treasuries they have the opportunity to place excise taxes on gasoline. In my own Province of Nova Scotia, that is very excessive. However, it has been a tactic in this House for Members of the Opposition, particularly the Conservative Opposition, to lay the blame for prices which may be inflated from time to time at the door of the Government of Canada.

I would like to point out an inconsistency in the Hon. Member's statement of May 27 relative to the Government role. On the one hand he complained that the Government has too much control over the price of gasoline. On the other hand, he used selected low and high prices to imply that the Government was not sufficiently involved in the marketplace. The point to be emphasized in relation to his confusion is that there is no direct Government involvement in the retail gasoline marketing process in either Canada or the United States.

The total of federal taxes on a litre of gasoline sold in the Province of Ontario is 8.63 cents, not 60 cents a gallon as claimed by the Hon. Member. In the Province of Ontario, the federal Government receives about 18.8 per cent while the "big blue machine" of Bill Davis in the Province of Ontario receives 28.6 per cent. Of course, industry receives 52.6 per cent. There is quite a difference between what is received by the federal Government, the provincial Government and the industry.

● (1805)

I have to repeat, however, that the Hon. Member and other Tory Members from Ontario are using this argument in such a way that all the facts are not being put before the Canadian people. Let us recognize, once and for all, that the provincial Governments—the so-called good guys, as the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) would designate them—have a responsibility as well. It is to them that the mass of Tory Members should look. They should try to have the provincial Premiers reduce their excise taxes to a level comparable to that imposed by the Government of Canada.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—REQUEST THAT COMMEMORATIVE MEDAL BE STRUCK TO HONOUR DIEPPE VETERANS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, June 23, I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) why the Government did not strike a medal or at least provide a black ribbon for the courageous Canadians who served in the Battle of Dieppe. The Minister replied, as shown at page 26720 of Hansard as follows:

> Madam Speaker, traditionally medals are struck to commemorate participation in campaigns, not usually for participation in specific battles.

I realize that medals are normally and usually struck to commemorate campaigns, but Dieppe was not a normal or usual battle; it was a very special battle insofar as Canada is concerned. The battle of Dieppe in 1942 involved 6,000 soldiers, 5,000 of whom were Canadian troops. In addition, eight RCAF squadrons participated by adding air support. There were 3,000 Canadian casualties, including 907 Canadians killed and 1,946 Canadians taken as prisoners of war. This unusual invasion of the continent by Canadian Forces should be sufficient reason for special consideration.

This sacrifice of so many Canadian lives was not without benefit; from the lessons learned at Dieppe thousands of human lives were saved in the D-Day invasion which took place two years later. This saving of human lives in the battle that took place some two years later is unusual too and, therefore, another valid reason for striking a medal.

Canada has a small population compared to those of many other countries in the world, and the fact that 5,000 Canadians and eight RCAF squadrons formed the core of the invading force at Dieppe in a world-wide war, with many giving their lives and many others suffering for the balance of their lives from wounds, is good reason to veer from the usual and to strike a medal or at least provide a black ribbon.

The rule is that medals are struck to commemorate campaigns. If there were no exceptions we would not require a rule, and certainly the battle at Dieppe, headed by Canadians, the casualties that Canadians suffered, and the thousands of lives of allied forces that were saved in the D-Day invasion, provide sound reasons for making this exception to the usual rule.

Dieppe—manned by courageous Canadians—stands out predominantly as a Canadian star shining for freedom for the peoples of the world. I urge the Minister of Veterans Affairs to strike a medal for the Canadians who participated so nobly in the battle of Dieppe. By doing so, no one will be hurt and these splendid Canadians will be properly recognized.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to reiterate the statement of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, namely, that traditionally in Canada medals are struck to commemorate participation in campaigns and not usually for participation in specific battles. It is true that in the last century, bars were added to campaign ribbons to commemorate certain battles. For instance, participants in that particularly disastrous battle for the British Empire at Inkerman, received a bar to the Crimean war ribbon with the name "Inkerman" engraved on it. I would like to make the point that when a medal is struck, a distinctive ribbon is designed with it, but traditionally ribbons are not struck independently.

● (1810)

The point the Hon. Member is making about the significance of the Battle of Dieppe is certainly well taken. It is especially meaningful to a Hamiltonian who continues to grieve the loss of 197 fellow citizens and the wounding of 78 others from the Royal Hamilton Light Infantry Regiment. On the other hand, it must be remembered that Canadian servicemen contributed very significantly to other battles, such as the D-Day invasion in which at least three times as many Canadian servicemen participated and incured as many casualties as at Dieppe; the crossing of the Rhine, the Battle of the Falaise Gap, the battle for Caen, all in northwest Europe, and not to forget the Italian campaign in which many significant battles were fought.

When one looks at the wonderful record of Canadians in World War II, and also in World War I, such as the Battle of Vimy Ridge, where the Canadian Army suffered casualties in excess of 50,000 men, the whole question of what action should be given additional recognition becomes very complicated.

However, the matter was settled in 1951. Canada, Britain and all the other Commonwealth countries agreed that no further recognition would be made for action which had taken place during World War II.

CANADA LABOUR CODE—PROTECTION OF WORKERS' HEALTH—INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION. (B) TIMING OF INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise at this time to again speak about an item which I have brought up in this House a number of times, most recently on June 16, 1983, three months ago. At that time I asked the former minister of labour when we would be getting legislation to protect the workers who come under federal jurisdiction. We were promised over three years ago that there would be changes to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code and that in those changes there would be more protection for workers who come under federal jurisdiction.

As one individual in this House of Commons, and I think I speak for many others, I am concerned that this Government has been in power for over three years now, that we have been told over and over again that we would be getting new legislation and yet we still have not had the legislation presented to this House. We have not even been given details by the Department as to what might be in the legislation.

In contrast to that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the House what the New Democratic Party has done. After the 1980 election we set up a special task force which went to all parts of this country. We made a report over a year ago called "Graveyard Shifts, or Life and Death at the Workplace". We made recommendations which I think the federal Government should be following, first, that all workplace jurisdiction which is covered by the federal level should come under the auspices of one department, not the 17 different departments and agencies which are now responsible for various aspects of occupational health and safety.

We also suggested that workers should have the right to know what is in their workplace in terms of chemicals and pollutants. They must know the dangers which exist in their workplace. They should also have a right to participate in the changes and improvements which should take place at the various work sites. Finally, of course, they should have a right to refuse work which is dangerous and threatening to their health.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, coming from the mining industry, that work is always dangerous. But in some instances, some work is more dangerous. When that is the case I think the worker must know what the dangers are and be in a position to try and change that where it is possible to do so. When the danger persists, the workers must have the right to refuse to work in that particular circumstance without losing income or losing their employment altogether.

One of the aspects of the legislation we think must be presented to this House, and must be presented quickly, is that the federal Government must provide adequate testing to make sure we know what substances contain; the chemicals and the pollutants which are coming into the workplace on a daily basis. Right now these workers do not know what they are dealing with. They do not know what is in the paint, the tar or the chemicals in the workplace. They do not know what the harmful effects of those chemical pollutants might be. That is an area in which the federal Government can do testing. If you leave it to each of the Provinces, a Province like P.E.I. which may only have 10 or 20 people working in a certain industry, obviously that testing cannot take place. However, in the country as a whole, where there may be 2,000 or 3,000 people in a particular industry, the federal Government is in a better position to do some basic testing to provide for increased knowledge on the part of workers.

● (1815)

Those are the concerns I have, Mr. Speaker. I ask again that the Government proceed with this legislation as soon as possible and that we not be told again by the Minister or his representatives that we should pass the legislation as soon as possible even though we have yet to see it. Rather, the Government should work with the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party to provide legislation which will protect our workers' lives. I think that is a goal this House should set for itself, a non-partisan goal for Members of all three Parties.

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for bringing this matter to the attention of the House. The Government hopes to introduce a Bill to amend the Canada Labour Code early in the next session of Parliament. Part IV of the Canada Labour Code addresses occupational safety in health and, in general, applies to employment and working conditions in industries, businesses and Crown agencies that are subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada.

The amendments to part IV of the Canada Labour Code are intended to continue the initiatives of 1978. At that time the federal Government was one of the first jurisdictional authorities to introduce the assured right to refuse dangerous work and joint participation in safety and health committees. These continued initiatives will include, we hope, a representative advisory council on occupational safety and health, mandatory provisions for joint safety and health committees or worker selected safety and health representatives in all workplaces, an increased emphasis on the rights and duties of employers and employees, and other requirements associated with modern day concepts and principles concerning occupational safety and health.

The Committees would permit a formal avenue of communication, Mr. Speaker, by which the worker and his employer could act co-operatively to ensure a safe and healthy workplace. The promotion of joint participation by labour and management on occupational safety and health issues supports the current concept of self compliance or regulation which will, to a certain extent, permit the third party safety officer to concentrate more fully on program support activities.

Part IV is currently subject to any other Act of the Parliament of Canada and this can create confusion for workers and employers. For example, in the federal jurisdiction there are nine federal departments or agencies administering 16 separate Acts that are concerned in varying degrees with safety and health. The significant departments and agencies include MOT, CTC, AECB, EMR and the Treasury Board.

Part IV currently extends to approximately 600,000 workers in the federal jurisdiction but does not apply to approximately 100,000 employees who are subject to other Acts.

With respect to the Ocean Ranger, the subject of offshore jurisdiction is a complex one, and until the Hickman Royal Commission tables its report it would be premature to comment.

The 250,000 public servants are subject to the occupational safety and health policies and standards established by Treasury Board which are administered on the board's behalf by Labour Canada for occupational safety, and Health and Welfare Canada for occupational health. It is certainly the view of the Government and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) in particular to ensure equal and adequate occupational safety health protection for all workers, be they protected by the Canada Labour Code or any other statute. The Hon. Member should know that those employees who are not subject to the protection of Part IV are generally protected by a variety of other statutes and regulations administered by other federal authorities.

It is the intention of the Government to develop the most effective and economical arrangements for ensuring occupational safety and health protection for all federal workers. The Minister of Labour, together with his colleagues and respective officials, are examining the existing arrangements to that end.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock.

At 6.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, September 20, 1983

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1110)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, September 19, consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 3 and 5 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I take part in the report stage of Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act. I am probably close to being the seventieth speaker at this stage of the Bill. I have now been informed that I am the eighty-eighth speaker, which indicates to us, we who are quiet, rational, deep-thinking people on this side of the House, that there is something very wrong with the whole trend, nature and drift of what the Liberal Party is leading Canada into. The Bill could have been through the whole process away back had the Government not been so intransigent on matters that are essential not only to the thinking people in Parliament, but also to those who are now becoming deeply concerned over the behavioural pattern of the Government and the effect it will have on future generations.

In effect, the amendment concerning the Export Development Corporation is the continuation of a massive interventionist mindset that is destroying the country. We will have to dismantle and restructure something that will once again pump life, creativity and that magic of the soul and mind back into the Canadian people.

I can remember a Deputy Minister coming to me after our Government failed, saying: "Ron, you are very vocal and outspoken on the national energy policy; please lighten down your rhetoric, because we have computer models that tell us exactly what we are doing." The trouble with computer models designed by these academicians is that they are all based on assumptions, the assumptions never being exposed to a wide enough body of thought to ensure that they are accurate. The corporate sector knows that computer models involve a high-risk situation. If we spread the activity, the thinking, the mindset and the innovative power of the nation more broadly into well disciplined sectors, then we would have a chance. However, these computer models are designed by academics who have never worked in the workplace, who have never been responsible for balancing the accounts and for meeting payrolls or protecting working capital in a wealth-creating organization. These are the people who are planning our lives and planning these corporations in all of this massive intervention in the Canadian mind.

One can understand interventionism on the part of the federal Government or on the part of a provincial Government if it is for the purpose of redistributing wealth. But this academic machine which is supported and nurtured by the Liberal Government is intervening in the creation of wealth. Everything it has done in this field proves that it is not working and is destroying the vital sector that produces the tax revenues that can support the very enviable social structure of which we are so proud.

• (1115)

What is at risk is the social structure we have built over the decades. We are not creating the tax revenues to pay the bills. We know as individuals that if we spend more than we receive we face the poorhouse. This nation is spending more than it has created and more than it has generated. We are listening to these academics and putting them in control of these Crown corporations where they believe they have all the answers. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that they do not have all the answers.

The behaviour and performance of Canada and of Crown corporations in the last decade surely has warned us that we must stop this nonsense. Through this Bill the Minister is asking for the control of some $50 billion in spending powers outside the purview and accountability of the elected representatives of the people. These Crown corporations are creating a subgovernment of control for key bureaucrats and friends of the Liberal machine outside the purview and behavioural patterns laid down by the central agencies. Many of these things are avoidance practices just to get around central agency of Treasury Board rules and regulations.

A small example of this is that the Bank of Canada, which has a very special position in the structure of Canada has a magnificent exercise room in its basement for its employees. It can find $210,000 to spend on equipment in that basement room for 700 people. It can find $14,000 here and $10,000 there to subsidize the superintendent in that work room. If this happened in the private sector it would have to go through a board. It would have to come out of the working capital and be accountable to the tax auditors and the chartered accountants association who work to standard accounting principles and practices. It would have to be accountable to the taxpayer and would be depreciated and justified. However, because this is a Crown corporation those actions can take place in the confines of a room and that type of expenditure can take place and does take place all over the country.

We have tabled report No. 7 from the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure in the House asking for a new committee structure and new strengths so that we can examine more effectively this whole level of subgovernment that is being built. This Bill is simply adding to that along with Canagrex and CDIC.

CDIC will probably be the noose that hangs this nation. We are delivering massive powers and massive resources to an enclave of people outside the accountability parameters of the House and this country. The behavioural patterns that will take place will shock the people of this nation within five years, if they have not already done so. One only has to look at the pattern of the players and how they have behaved in and out of the private sector and in and out of Government, Cabinet and the bureaucracy. They seem to have a refusal or an insane desire to beat the game, to play outside the rules of behaviour.

With this type of legislation we in this country are dealing with this whole matter of the struggle between the interventionists and the behaviouralists. I stand before you and my colleagues in the House, Mr. Speaker, to say proudly that I am a behaviouralist. I believe that if we do our job in this country and in the House and define the standards of behaviour, equity and fairness that we want and set rules that punish those who do not deliver to those standards of behaviour, that is all we can do in a free society.

We are not doing that job. We are yielding to those and that mindset that exists with the bureaucracy and socialistic ranks in the country. The academics and people who have never balanced accounts, met payrolls and payables, all of these people who have come from the land of academia and the universities, think they know how to do it better than the rough and tumble world of trial and error. You can see the mood of Thatcherism that is taking hold in Great Britain. That country went through this whole exercise and even the rank and file in Great Britain now recognize that there was something seriously wrong. You cannot have anything for nothing. It will take blood, sweat, tears, work, toil, mindset, attitudes, innovation, savings, thrift and frugality if we are going to lift ourselves up and afford the standard of living and social welfare we expect our system to maintain.

● (1120)

The interventionism in this type of legislation and in this Bill is the hangman's noose for equality of life in Canada. What the Government is doing is delivering us farther and farther down the road. The Government will not even allow a proper balance of directors from the private sector in this corporation. There is a memo that lists the directors. There are six senior public servants, very able men, men of high academic ability, of far higher intellect probably than I but they are certainly short on the rough and tumble experience of life that I have. I think the type of rough and tumble experience that is available from the private sector would be a very good balance to have in these Crown corporations.

Let us take a look at B.C. coal development. I had a senior civil servant come to me and say: "Ron, have you looked at the list of directors of that corporation that is spending $1 billion?" Right at the top of the list it shows four senior civil servants. This is not a 50-50 public-private mix, Sir. When you get these Crown corporations, such as the EDC, entrenched and given special powers outside of the laws and rules that apply to the rest of the country, you are dead because the nature of man, the acquisitive, power-seeking nature of man, is such that man will abuse everything that he touches and forget why he was put there.

We are no longer creating Crown corporations as instruments of public policy. We are creating environments of power and acquisition for individuals that have risen up through the ranks of the Liberal Party and the Government of Canada. I stand here and say that unless this House accepts its responsibilities, gets back to a standard of accountability in this area and allows proper examination of this whole Crown corporation structure, we are not going to be able to pay our bills. We will lose face internationally. That fact is already in evidence. It is time some of those people on the Government benches heard this plea. If not they should go to the people to get it changed so we can save what we have.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, at the report stage.

We are dealing with two amendments in particular. But I think those amendments must be viewed in the context of the total Bill. Essentially, the Act seeks first to expand the operational capacity of the Export Development Corporation by increasing the borrowing authority of the Government through the relevant corporation without reference to Parliament, and, also, by increasing the amount of high risk or bad business transactions the Cabinet can approve—from $3.5 billion to $10 billion in the case of insurance, and from $2.5 billion to $10 billion in the case of loans and guarantees.

Second, the Bill seeks to alter the current structure and powers of the board of directors of the relevant corporation. I submit to you that those changes are minor, certainly in terms of increasing the accountability of the corporation to Parliament and through Parliament to the Canadian people.

Before I get into the particular amendments, I want to stress for my own part that we on this side of the House are not against Crown corporations per se as an instrument of public policy. They can be an effective vehicle for promoting a given public policy of the Government, indeed of the country, if that vehicle is used wisely and within limitations. It is necessary from time to time for Government to create a structure or bureaucracy which can operate on a day-to-day basis at arm's length from control by politicians and bureaucrats alike. Government needs to minimize such interference so that the people concerned can get on with the job. That is why I for one take particular pride in the fact that it was the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada that created Canadian National Railways under Prime Ministers Borden and Meighen, the CBC under Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, and later the National Film Board and many other Crown corporations which could be mentioned.

● (1125)

The particular Crown corporation we are debating is a classic case of what I was talking about concerning the Government's abuse of Crown corporations as an instrument of public policy. The real enemy of Crown corporations is not the Opposition, is not even the Crown corporations themselves, but rather the Government. Through mismanagement and incompetence it has been debasing the credibility of Crown corporations. It has been disgracing them in the eyes of Parliament and in the eyes of the public through waste and undemocratic practices.

The Government, most especially in the last three years, has been using Crown corporations—and again the EDC is a case in point—to hide massive deficits. It funnels much of its public debt through Crown corporations to make the books look better than they otherwise would. It has used Crown corporations to circumvent Parliament and to aggrandize the bureaucracy. The federal deficit this year is in the neighbourhood of $30 billion according to the Government's own figures, but if Crown corporations were not abused in the way they are, I submit that that figure would be a lot worse.

The Auditor General has said that the use of Crown corporations by the Government has, in effect, created a whole layer of subgovernment largely out of control and beyond the reach of Parliament. There has been little accountability. Crown corporations have assumed a life unto themselves. They have been sheltered from parliamentary scrutiny, from media scrutiny and from public scrutiny.

The case which I know best because it relates to my region, the Atlantic Provinces, is that of Canadian National. Canadian National has been hiding its books from the Auditor General, from the Government and from Parliament. The Auditor General expressed outrage about the way in which the Abegweit, the CN Marine vessel that crosses between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick on the Northumberland Strait, was financed by the Government through CN Marine, a division of Canadian National. He demanded of CN to see its books. The Chairman of Canadian National, however, told the Auditor General where to go.

This typifies the extent to which Crown corporations have assumed a life unto themselves—beyond the control of Parliament and beyond the control of the public. At least corporations in the private sector are responsible to something or someone, be it a board of directors, market realities or, for that matter, the boundaries imposed by profit and loss factors. Now, more and more because of government incompetence, not because of the nature of Crown corporations themselves, Crown corporations are becoming the new political despots in Canada, responsible to no master.

I think there is a legitimate role for an entity like the Export Development Corporation because trade is crucial to Canada. We were once, and could still be, one of the great trading nations of the world. Thirty per cent of our Gross National Product is earned through trade as it is, despite the record of the current Government since 1968.

● (1130)

In 1968 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office, Canada's share of world trade was 5.74 per cent. By 1981 the percentage had slumped to 3.8 per cent. That slump represents hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars in trade lost to this country—lost to our Gross National Product, lost to the people of Canada. It also represents a loss of thousands of jobs in every part of the country dependent on trade.

Why have we lost ground? Why are we taking a back seat to Japan, Germany, the United States, France and even Britain and Italy? The situation is directly attributable to a lack of strategy, a lack of over-all planning by the Government in concert with the private sector. It is related to our paltry research and development effort. It is related to a lack of appreciation by the Government, working with the private sector, of the importance of research and development, that is, the creation of new goods and services so as to help Canada break into world markets. The problem is attributable also to the lack of a real trade promotional campaign.

The Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) was Minister of Trade in the Diefenbaker Government. As Minister of Trade, he was a superb salesman, a salesman par excellence. He realized the importance of the private sector in breaking into new markets, cultivating those markets and helping Canada to compete on an equal footing with the best of them throughout the world. He helped the private sector through Government buraucracy, by working hand in hand with the private sector to unleash the entrepreneurial creativity in the country. He had imagination, creativity, drive and verve. He, his Department and the Government of the day had with the private sector just plain get-up-and-go.

I want to conclude by stressing that in my own little Province of Prince Edward Island trade represents 9.6 per cent of the gross domestic product. It is expected that the corresponding 1982 figure will have zoomed to 10.8 per cent. The strong showing is not due to the bureaucracy of either the provincial or federal Government. It is due to the creativity, imagination and verve of the entrepreneur who is encouraged by Government to unleash his creative capacity.

In tiny Prince Edward Island, trade generated $102.8 million in revenue for the Province in 1982. So the trade potential is there. But the potential will not be realized through this Act, nor will it be realized through the Export Development Corporation but, rather, through the creative juices of the private sector encouraged, not prevented, by Government.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to rise having listened to the Hon. Member who just completed his speech to say that there is a large element of truth in what he said. However, we have to take a serious look at the dilemma which confronts any nation that has historically relied on its ability to trade. From my experience in promoting and working toward getting a trading corporation, I believe it is necessary to present a much stronger Canadian face in world affairs. That Canadian face has to be a co-ordinated effort. In a most sophisticated world, I do not believe that it is possible for each individual small entrepreneur somehow or other to luck his or her way into the world markets.

I believe there is the need for a great deal more co-ordination and co-operation between Government efforts on the one hand, as exemplified in this instance by the Export Development Corporation, and business that has the capacity to seek, find and exploit—using the word "exploit" in its broadest possible term—available world markets. In doing that we also have to recognize the nature of a changing world.

In addition to our attempts to secure world markets, we have devoted a considerable amount of time, effort and money to try and improve the self-reliance of many of the nations with which we previously traded. I use the term "trade"; it may not be the proper term because trading leaves the impression that it is a two-way street. What I am talking about are countries to which we sold in one way to another products or materials that were originally Canadian, manufactured or indigenous Canadian raw materials, and we bought very little back. There was very little to purchase from them. We consistently stress with them, and they with us, that we should be seeking ways to make them more self-sufficient, to improve their indigenous capacity in order to make it possible for them to provide not only for themselves, but in the case of many smaller countries to provide a sufficient amount of excess capacity within their country so that they too may enter the world of trade.

If, as I put it is the case, it seems reasonable to draw the conclusion that our trading partners—in actual fact countries to which we have sold—should develop a capacity to manufacture and produce for themselves, those markets will become somewhat less available to us. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot on one hand strive to make the world a more equitable place, helping countries which previous to now had very little in the way of manufactured capacity and indigenous food-growing capacity achieve that aim, and then bemoan the fact that you can no longer sell to them those things you have encouraged them to make for themselves. We have to begin to take a much different approach to this. Our biggest complaint at the moment is not that we do not sell sufficient offshore. Surely our biggest complaint at the moment is that our economy has stagnated. The economy is not operating in such a way as to guarantee that here in Canada there will be jobs for Canadians who need them. That is our primary problem.

As we look at the question of the Export Development Corporation, we have to look at it within the context of an ever-changing world. Those countries that historically relied on their ability to manufacture and to sell to others are today facing difficulties, every single one of them. Therefore, it is not unusual that we should also face difficulties. We have to balance our desire to develop a much more sophisticated manufacturing capacity with making that capacity sufficient to meet both our own domestice requirements and some of the existing world requirements. We will not meet all of them, only some. Therefore, we must be selective in choosing the areas upon which we place our emphasis. We will have to be very careful when choosing in which areas of expertise and competence we intend to work most assiduously in an effort to try to make those areas and their products attractive in terms of world purchasing.

● (1140)

I find it mind boggling to note that we would be running something in the order of a $900 million deficit in food sales over and against our purchases; this in a country like ours which no doubt has the capacity to meet all of its own requirements if we so desired.

An Hon. Member: What about citrus fruits?

Mr. Deans: No, generally speaking, all of our own products. I admit that we cannot grow everything, but we can meet all of our own basic requirements if we were to set our minds to it. I admit that we cannot grow everything that is grown in the world, but I do not admit that we need to be exporting or importing much of what we are capable of growing if we are not now growing it in sufficient quantities, whether it be beef or any other product we are currently producing.

I believe that rather than bemoaning our loss of markets we must look at how we can achieve self-sufficiency in our own economy. We must take a look, for example, at how we can bring about a much more rapid advancement toward the goal of energy self-sufficiency so that we do not have to import into the East Coast literally millions of barrels of oil on a regular annual basis when in fact we have within our own country the ability to meet that demand.

Mr. Huntington: Under the National Energy Program?

Mr. Deans: I am not arguing whether or not that should be done under the National Energy Program. I am simply saying that we must set our minds to those questions. There is no point our pretending that somehow there is an over-growing market some place outside of Canada that will simply absorb all of our capacity and that somehow we are entitled to a larger share of that market. We are only entitled to get what we reasonably can achieve.

It is quite clear to me—and I say this to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington)—that the biggest stumbling blocks in the way of increasing our ability to sell abroad are the multinational corporations located in Canada whose head offices consistently have refused to allow their Canadian subsidiaries to seek and service those markets. They have created the single largest stumbling blocks to our drive to increase our ability to sell abroad.

Hon. Members need only look around themselves to determine to their own satisfaction that, in the overwhelming majority of cases where a subsidiary has been established in Canada, that subsidiary was established simply and solely for the purpose of meeting the need of the Canadian domestic market and, more specifically, has been excluded from seeking markets anywhere else. That is the case with the U.S. subsidiaries and is equally true in the case of the subsidiaries from Europe and, I suspect, will also be true in the case of the subsidiaries established from Japan as they become more prevalent. Canada will be treated as a sales territory and nothing more. The mandate given to the corporations established here will be a mandate to satisfy the domestic requirement and no other. I believe we are failing to speak to the serious problems that that will create in our country.

I believe the truncated nature of our industry is clear, and so I am suggesting that we stop bemoaning our inability to match the statistical information that previously flowed over the years; that we stop bemoaning our loss of markets and start addressing the fundamental problems that face us. One of those fundamental problems is that we do not take advantage of our ability to be self-sufficient in the areas where we are able to be so; and another is that we are being denied, as a result of the multinational nature of major corporations, any opportunity to seek those markets even if they were available.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to speak at the report stage of the Bill to amend the Export Development Act, especially after listening to the words spoken by the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I was already familiar with his philosophy on the importance of international trade, because I sat with the Hon. Member when a special committee of the House was formed to examine the international trade situation and to consider how trade structures could be made more effective, with a view to establishing a rapport with owners of small and medium-sized businesses and making them aware of the importance of our world markets.

If we consider that over 26 per cent of our Gross National Product depends on our export markets, it is clear that no one in this House can afford to ignore the importance of international trade and our substantial trade potential. Furthermore, I believe that the Government has also been made aware of the need to develop our export markets in a number of different areas. I am thinking, for example, of transportation and communications. Canada ranks among the most advanced countries in the world in these extremely specialized fields. I must say I deplore the attitude of the Progressive Conservatives who insist on taking an ultra-conservative approach and on providing criticism that is always on the negative side.

When the Committee tabled its report on the feasibility of forming a national trading corporation, we felt at the time that this country had the potential for exporting roughly $10-14 billion worth of manufactured goods and capital projects, a figure that could mean increasing our exports by 15 per cent over present levels. If existing factories and small and medium-sized businesses were better informed about the possibilities of international trade, there was, in fact, a potential for $8-12 billion. That was one of the conclusions reached by the Committee, which heard an impressive amount of testimony, considering the fact that 450 witnesses testified before it in the course of 270 meetings. We examined the entire organizational structure at the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and made recommendations. Regarding the Export Development Corporation we are discussing today, which provides financing and insurance services to Canadian exporters and foreign buyers of goods and services, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce made a survey to determine to what extent the Corporation, which is a tool at the disposal of small and medium-sized businesses, was known in Canada. The Chamber of Commerce informed us that 63 per cent of the business people surveyed were familiar with the Export Development Corporation and 29 per cent made use of its services. Some of the respondents mentioned that certain interest rates were too high, and there were all kinds of other considerations, but I am mentioning this one, because I think it is particularly important. I made enquiries at the departmental level to find out whether it was true that the Corporation made or guaranteed loans only in the case of large companies. In fact, according to the transactions for which assistance from the Export Development Corporation was received, 80 per cent of a total of 1,300 firms were classified as small and medium-sized businesses.

• (1150)

I think this clearly confirms the Corporation's concern for helping small and medium-sized businesses. Furthermore, in 1982, 44 transactions out of 110, that is, 40 per cent of the businesses involved, were for amounts of less than $1 million. I think that is a very important point.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on for some time about the role of the National Trading Corporation that was being considered at the time by the Government, an agency that would help small and medium-sized businesses. Its structure was to be that of a shared enterprise, that is, its equity base would be provided by the Canadian Government and the private sector. The report I have here refers to the financing and start-up operations for this Corporation, and I must say it is rather disheartening to hear the Conservatives complaining again today about international trade, when the same Members refused to approve this report when it was tabled here in the House.

As for the Corporation's financing, I would like to mention here that the federal Government was to assume a 40 to 50 per cent equity position in the Corporation, with private corporate investors providing the other 50 to 60 per cent. It was to be a tool, a pipeline as it were from small and medium-sized businesses to international markets. It would identify countries and prospect markets for specific products. It was a tool for small and medium-sized businesses, but the Progressive Conservative Party was opposed to the report's recommendations.

I would just like to take a few minutes to mention something. Yesterday I was listening to the Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) who was criticizing the Government for its approval of financing for Bombardier. I think he should be delighted, because if Canada is to continue to expand its high technology markets and maintain its position in the transportation industry, it is absolutely vital that the Canadian Government should intervene in the case of transactions worth nearly $1 billion, involving the manufacture of special trains for the New York subway. We are talking about the production of 825 subway cars over the next five years, and I think that instead of criticizing the Government, the Hon. Member should bear in mind that this is a $1 billion contract, and that one billion dollars' worth of manufactured products exported abroad means 43,000 jobs. This particular contract means jobs for Canadians. Are we supposed to let the competition, French or German interests, win the contract for producing those goods? I think the Government acted wisely in protecting jobs, expanding the Canadian technology industry and awarding the contract to Bombardier, a Canadian company. Maybe if the company had been in another province, the Conservatives would not have been as upset, but I challenge the Conservatives to come to Quebec and say what they said about Bombardier, a company that happens to be in the Province of Quebec and that is going to create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on about our Crown corporations. I am not blind to their defects, and I am convinced that administratively speaking, there should be more control, but I would challenge those people who criticize Canadair. When the federal Government acquired Canadair, it provided 700 jobs. Today, that number is 7,000, people who are working on the development of our high technology industry, and as a result, today, the Province of Quebec has almost 50 per cent of Canada's aerospace industry, and that is because the Canadian Government invested in Canadair.

[English]

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care to the hon. gentleman who just took his seat, and I am amazed that he seems to have missed the whole point and thrust of this debate. No one, Sir, questions the need for, or indeed the good work of, the Export Development Corporation. That is not at issue here. It has done good work. The hon. gentleman mentioned the Bombardier sale, and that is only one example of many which could be cited in this House to justify the continued existence of this very important corporation.

However, what we are talking about here, Mr. Speaker, is parliamentary accountability. That is what this debate is all about. That is what Motions Nos. 3 and 5, put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), are all about. They would have the means of introducing some degree of control and accountability into the operations of this corporation. Surely we as parliamentarians have a responsibility to ensure that these Crown corporations are not allowed to operate out of control, but that they will in fact be accountable to the taxpayers of this country through their representatives in this House.

The Government, by this Bill, seeks to expand the borrowing capacity of this corporation without the need for further reference to Parliament. That is what the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) was talking about, and that is the issue before the House. That is what we, as the Official Opposition, are putting forward as argument, and a very valid and important argument it is. It goes to the very guts, the very heart and soul of Parliament.

Last year, Sir, the Auditor General in his report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1982, said something which deserves to be repeated because it sums up the whole rationale of this debate. It sums up the whole rationale of the arguments which have been put forward by the Official Opposition. I quote from that report:

> Parliament is becoming further isolated from an increasing portion of government activities. The growing practice of using Crown-owned corporations to conduct a widening range of government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

As my colleague the Hon. Member for Capilano has said, that, Sir, is the issue. That is what this debate is all about.

We recall that a few years ago the late Auditor General of Canada, in one of his reports, expressed his concern that Parliament was in danger of losing control over the purse strings of public expenditure. I believe, Sir, that we have in fact lost control. I believe we have arrived at a point in time where we have lost control. That loss of control is exemplified very dramatically by this Bill which is before the House, which would render this Crown corporation virtually unaccountable in terms of the substantial increase in borrowing authority which it has been given.

This House is currently operating under provisional rules which were brought in by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. That committee has been sitting for 18 months now and no subject has taken more of the time of that Committee than the subject of accountability, control over Government expenditures and how Parliament can regain the control it had over public spending. I do not have to recite the growth of the national debt, the growth of the deficit, the hidden deficit. That has all been put on the record. But the deficit will still grow, the hidden deficit will still grow and the national debt will still grow unless and until Parliament regains control over public spending.

● (1200)

The Special Committee has submitted nine reports to this House. We are currently operating under the recommendations of the third report in the form of provisional rules. The House will have to make a decision on those recommendations and provisional rules by the end of the current parliamentary year. The Hon. Member for Capilano co-chaired a subcommittee of that Special Committee together with the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), and they brought in a report which would in a very comprehensive and meaningful way go a long way toward restoring parliamentary control and Government accountability. That report is before the House and it makes very important recommendations which complement the work the Committee did and submitted to the House in its fifth and sixth reports.

That report, Sir, recommended among other things the establishment of a Government corporation and agencies committee. I listened to the Hon. Member for Capilano and obviously modesty prevented him from quoting his own recommendations in his own subcommittee report, but I think they are worth putting on the record:

> Your committee believes that the proposed financial accountability structure would not be complete without a committee devoted to scrutinizing the activities of agencies which are Crown-owned or Crown-controlled or in which the Government has an interest. Collectively these represent one of the most important, expanding and least understood sectors of Government operations. It is essential that there be improved parliamentary oversight of the complex machinery governing such bodies, the number and variety of which is bewildering even to exports in public finance.

They go on to say this if further evidence of the serious gap in accountability to Parliament which must be addressed.

In 1962, Mr. Speaker, there were 28 Crown corporations in Canada controlling $8.4 billion in assets. Today in 1983 there are over 300 Crown corporations employing 263,000 people with assets at the end of the last fiscal period of $74 billion and liabilities of $63 billion.

Mr. Huntington: We do not know the contingent liabilities.

Mr. McGrath: As my hon. friend suggests, we do not know the contingent liabilities and we will not know them until these Crown corporations are made accountable and answerable to Parliament through a special parliamentary committee.

The Auditor General of Canada has referred to this as a subgovernment. I say it is a parallel government and it is being used as the device to circumvent Parliament because of Parliament's preoccupation, and rightly so, with the expanding deficit and the expanding debt. For hon. gentlemen to suggest that in some way by presenting arguments to support a return of accountability to this House we are in fact criticizing the work of the Export Development Corporation is to read something into the speeches from this side of the House which in fact is not fair. Member after Member who has stood in his place in this House has talked about accountability and the need to hold this Government, of all Governments in our history, accountable. Because if there was ever a Government which is out of control, if there was ever a Government which has brought Parliament to a point where it is virtually on its knees and helpless to control spending, it is this Government and it stands indicted for what it has done to this Parliament.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate on the amendments to Bill C-110. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), spoke passionately about what the function of Parliament is. I must say, Mr. Speaker, to try with the ten-minute rule we are confronted with at this stage of the debate to explain the implications of Bill C-110 is almost as Herculean a task as explaining Einstein's theory of relativity to a grade school student. It is really very, very difficult to do. But surely in the debate which has gone on there must be a couple of thoughts which have sunk into those on the Government side. There is a fundamental concern in the country, certainly in this House, over this question of accountability and amending the Act so that in the new structure of the Export Development Corporation there is no provision whatsoever for the private sector to participate.

We can get carried away, Mr. Speaker, here on the floor with rhetoric. Sometimes we get politically passionate and throw epithets across the floor. But as sure as the birds fly south in the winter and come back north in the summer, if my colleagues on the Government benches were sitting where we are, if they could muster their forces and/or get their rhetorical skills going which have laid mute and dormant so long as they have sat on Government benches, they would raise their voices against an amendment to this Act which, among other things, is going to increase the amount of high-risk transactions and bad business risks that the Cabinet, not Parliament, can approve from a $3.5 billion limit to a $10 billion limit. Or to have Cabinet approve loans and guarantees from a $2.5 billion limit, which is pretty high in anyone's language, to a $10 billion limit.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that $10 billion is just about the figure in the present Prime Minister's first budget in 1968. I think the records will show that the total budget of the Government in 1968 was something like $10.5 billion. We know that inflation and the escalation of prices have devalued the dollar by over 50 per cent, so a dollar in 1968 is certainly less than 50 cents today, perhaps closer to 30 cents or 40 cents; those statistics are there somewhere.

As my friend the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said earlier, no one is criticizing the sincere and good work, in large measure, of the EDC because Canada is a trading nation. What we are criticizing is giving an additional blank cheque to a Government which by its proven record, let alone the commentaries of experts, has lost control. We are complaining about the Government, not really the EDC.

The Government is floating this Bill and we are right to condemn it because it not only increases those limits I mentioned, but it will allow the EDC to double its borrowing capability from $10 billion to $20 billion, and in effect double its capability for insuring risks from $10 billion to again $20 billion. These are Gargantuan figures even in light of this Government's profligate spending. As I said, the Prime Minister's first budget in 1968 comprised a total of $10.5 billion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you can hear the rhetoric about how figures confound and how can any of us appreciate billions of dollars? It is almost incomprehensible. But the interesting thing about this debate is that you do not have to take the word of the members of the Opposition, no matter how reasoned, rational and logical they are. You can ask the professional commentators in the economic world who have assessed Government spending. I start with one of the leaders from Quebec, an ex-president of the Economic Council of Canada, Mr. André Raynauld, who also had a later vocation a Liberal MNA in Quebec before he resigned or did not re-offer, and then became a Professor of Economics at the University of Montreal. Not only is he a well respected Quebecer, but he is also a well respected Canadian in every capacity, except sometimes concerning his political coloration, but that is always open to proselytization. With a man of his intellect, his mind, I am sure he will join those hundreds of thousands of others in Quebec and come on board so that they can be there after the next election and enjoy a responsible Government doing responsible things.

● (1210)

Before getting carried away with rhetoric, I want to quote what Mr. Raynauld, the ex-president of the Economic Council from 1972 to 1976, said in commenting on the EDC. He said that it is "rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient". That was said before the Bill even came onto the floor of the House. What would he say today? Your Honour has heard other Hon. Members mentioning what the Auditor General, who is no great partisan of this Party and who, in effect, is a servant of the House of Commons, said seven years ago with respect to Crown corporations.

My friend the Hon. Member for St. John's East has spoken of the expansion of Crown corporations. My friend the Hon. Member for Capilano spoke of the subterranean government of Crown corporations and its massive expenditure. What my friends did not mention is that when one speaks of Crown corporations, and not just the amount of expansion from 1962 to today, one finds the ridiculous situation that there are now actually 263,000 employees in Crown corporations today as compared to only 239,000 in all federal departments excluding Defence. There are actually more people employed in the Crown corporations of the land than in the federal departments of the land. That is how they have expanded, yet seven years ago the Auditor General said that "in the majority of Crown corporations audited financial control and management is weak and ineffective".

Four years ago the Lambert Report, which was supposed to deal with fiscal responsibility, stated that "existing provisions for classifying Crown agencies and for accountability for each category have been rendered obsolete". Just last fall, the Auditor General said:

> —the growing practice of using Crown owned corporations to conduct the widening range of Government activities has so strained the capability of the existing accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and expenditures of public funds.

In its report entitled "Intervention and Efficiency"—we have spoken of the massive intervention of the Government—the Economic Council stated:

> Canada is perhaps the country with the least private sector participation in export financing decisions. In most of the 17 nations studied, the negotiations for granting export credit are left to the private sector. This is not the case in Canada.

Having just given those quotes from no one in this Parliament who may be partisan and wearing a political stripe, but rather from independent commentators, starting with André Raynauld, it is clear why we have expressed and will continue to express concern over the fact that Crown corporations and their fiscal accountability and responsibility to this Parliament are running rampant.

Surely the Members of the House, certainly we on this side, have received a message from the people out there. I hope, and I cannot hope too much, that Members on the Government side will also start to get the message from the people of Canada. They can call it what they will, they can call it anything in the Gallup Poll, but the one basic lesson I think the people of Canada are telling politicians, particularly federal politicians, is that they have had it up to here—and by "here" I mean up the neck, up to the gorge—with a Government that is spending taxpayers' money, thinking it can spend money better than people can spend it themselves.

We must redress that situation in the House of Commons. The original historic purpose of the House, indeed its only reason for existence, involved the battle of the purse, the power of the purse. The barons and lords came together on the common green and tried to check the authority of the King. That is the history of this place. Unless Hon. Members start to pay attention to history, then I can tell the House that in the future history after the next election there will be an awful lot of Hon. Members, good friends of mine, who will not be around to worry about division bells.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in the debate on these particular amendments, I am reminded of a few comments by a new Member, one who has just taken his seat in the House of Commons in the last few days. The new Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), in reflecting on part of his life, said to the press: "The harder you work, the luckier you are".

I thought about those words because they are ones upon which we and perhaps the Government should dwell. I was struck by those words because throughout this country there are countless numbers of citizens, taxpayers, who have diligently applied themselves and attempted to make a success of their lives, only to be frustrated by a Government that zeros in on any initiative that they may have shown.

People often speak to me personally about the problems National Revenue raises with them, because the Government is constantly in need of raising money. They frequently tell me that some of the expense accounts that they present are rejected and decisions are rendered whereby it would appear that in order to gain some redress to their grievances appeals must be made. In many instances it is not sufficient to embark on a costly appeal. This is an annoying factor with so many citizens who must produce the revenue that the Government must have if it is to carry on.

I comment in that vein because the Government has embarked on a course, on the one hand, to ensure that justice is done and that everyone pays his fair share of taxes, and that is fair enough; but on the other hand, what I detest and what many people in Canada reject is the wanton way in which the Government is quite prepared to spend that hard-earned money. This is the conclusion that so many people have reached. When one sees the result of a survey showing that 64 per cent of Canadians feel that Parliament is irrelevant, it is no wonder that they reach that kind of conclusion.

You and I, Mr. Speaker, and the rest of the Hon. Members who have had occasion to sit on committees or participate in debates realize that our contribution as Members toward the accountability of the expenditure is really insignificant. In many instances we come into the House and must rubber stamp the expenditure of billions of dollars inside of a few hours. Anyone who has sat in committee realizes that questioners have perhaps an allowance of five minutes each. Regardless of how diligent an Hon. Member might be or how much research was given to the subject, can Your Honour honestly tell me that anyone can cross-examine a witness within that time? That is the situation with Government expenditures.

● (1220)

Let us take the case of a Crown corporation, such as CNR, appearing before a parliamentary committee. In this case, of course, an official from the CNR would be there. We are supposed to examine, inquire and somehow justify what that corporation is doing within a couple of hours. What a mockery that is!

In this instance the Government comes to us to ask for more money so it can just hand it to another corporation which it says it can handle. After all, the Government says, these are senior officials.

I am reminded of what happened with the banks. The banks, which should be providing a lot of this financing, have pulled back in many instances. I think of some of the loans they have provided to other countries only to find that they are suffering losses. While many believe that we in Canada have to pay for the risks that they take, what happens in the case of a Crown corporation? When there are over 300 Crown corporations in this country, how can Members of Parliament, no matter how our membership is divided in the House, possibly examine those corporations? I remind Hon. Members that each questioner is allotted five minutes, and of course the following Member would not necessarily follow the same line of questioning since he may feel he has a problem that should be examined. What kind of an examination can we conduct on behalf of the taxpayers of this country?

The Government is asking for a blank cheque to hand over to this Crown corporation. In the process of governments becoming too big in the drive for socialism and expansion into every branch of our endeavours in this country, we have forgotten one ingredient. It is that someone has to pay for all of these activities somewhere along the line.

It has become very convenient to hide these activities in a Crown corporation. People who have had occasion to attend a hearing for a rail line abandonment will know that one of the problems faced by the poeple who are affected is that they are confronted with a host of financial experts in the Crown corporation, whether it be CN or CP. These are trained people who have the books and can produce evidence to prove their case. What accountability do these individuals have who are hidden in the Crown corporation? Those people who are affected walked away knowing in their own minds that their situation is not right, yet they do not have the resources to prove the contrary. As Members of Parliament we have to stand here and say that we are also helpless.

How many times have we seen a $1 item introduced in the House? If that is not a cover-up by the Government, I do not know what is, but at least it is introduced in the House so that we have an opportunity to express our concerns on some of those items. What are we to do about the billions of dollars thrown out to the Crown corporations even though the Government may believe it can justify it as being the only way?

I heard the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) boasting about some expanded exports. The fact is that perhaps exports could or could not be expanded through research and development. It may just be a cover-up for a Government that does not really have a policy. Accountability of Crown corporations is a PC policy. The press, for once in its life, should say that we do have policies on different matters, and that is one of them.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to take part in this debate not because it is a pleasant task but because of the importance of the issue that is currently before the House. I sometimes wonder just how much good it does to put up a sustained and vocal opposition to various measures that the Government brings before us. I believe that when issues are presented the decisions, generally speaking, have been made and are irrevocable. The Government and its supporters just sit by stoically, sometimes listening, wishing it was all over so they could get ahead with the business and do whatever they want to do.

I rise today to put on the record my support for Motions Nos. 3 and 5 that are currently before the House. I believe they have been adequately explained and argued by Members of this Party. If anything that is said would have an effect on the Government, it would already be obvious that the Government had listened and given some attention to what has been said.

However, I want to give my personal support to these motions that were moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). There are those who say that there is nothing more to be said. However, I rise to say that I support the motions wholeheartedly and without equivocation. I believe that in considering a bill such as this, the points that have been raised and emphasized so strenuously are not only necessary to place on the record in order to explain the adverse effects of what is being done, but they also indicate that there is wide and determined opposition of the course which the Government is following.

This Bill concerns a Crown corporation. On many occasions in the House we have discussed the desirability or otherwise of adding more corporations to the list that already exists. Although I am aware that this corporation is already in operation, Crown corporations and their operation in our system of government have been criticized and challenged. Yet we find that there has been a multiplication of Crown corporations over the last few years. I am greatly concerned that there is a continuing attempt by the Government to broaden the powers of these Crown corporations and to remove from Parliament the opportunity and the right to challenge the activities of such corporations and the way in which the Government is governing this country. It has already been stated in the debate that this type of opposition has been registered not only by Members of the Opposition but also by successive Auditors General. Statements have been placed on the record pointing out that they are extremely concerned about the increasing powers being granted to Crown corporations, removing the responsibility of Parliament, taking them beyond the touch of Parliament, and therefore there is very little, if any, accountability to the elected representatives of the people of Canada.

● (1230)

Crown corporations have been referred to as a subgovernment. One of my colleagues this morning has referred to the situation as a supplementary type of government. It seems to me that it is not only improper but immoral for a government to move in the direction of removing from Parliament the means and opportunity of challenging those operations which we feel so strongly are not acting in the best interests of Canada or the Canadian people.

Let us look at the issues before us this morning. Motion No. 3 reads:

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 23 to 26 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

11. (1) The authorized capital of the Corporation is one billion one hundred dollars divided into ten million and one shares with a par value of one hundred dollars each.

Motion No. 5 reads:

That Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 39 to 41 at page 3 and lines 1 and 2 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

14. The aggregate amount of borrowings of the Corporation pursuant to Sections 12 and 13 shall not exceed the amount equal to ten times the aggregate of the paid in capital and earned surplus in the accounts of the Corporation.

These motions are placed on record because we are concerned that we are granting Crown corporations the right to spend additional funds and possibly increase the deficit beyond anything that is proper and realistic. Again I come back to the matter of accountability. There is, I am sure, abroad in the country a feeling among the general population that the Government itself is not acting in a responsible manner in the financing of its activities and is going it alone, seemingly with the idea that no limit whatever should be imposed on the Government presently in power.

As I meet with people in my constituency one of their main objections is to the huge deficit facing not only the present generation but succeeding generations, a responsibility and burden that they will not in any way be able to bear. I keep hearing that we are mortgaging the future of our children and our children's children and that they will have to try and pick up the pieces, not only for what the Government is spending today but also for what it will be spending in the days ahead.

We are not objecting to the Export Development Corporation itself. We feel it is a Crown corporation that is worthwhile, and in many respects it is responsible. But the credibility of the EDC is very fragile. What we want to do is place this corporation in a position where there will be no questions raised at all, where it will be carrying on responsibly and in a way that can be accounted for. We are making these recommendations and advancing these arguments because we are interested in saving the reputation of an organization that is doing a good job, and we want it to keep on doing a good job in the interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-110 during report stage, this time on amendments put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), namely Motions Nos. 3 and 5.

Today the Government is asking this Parliament, which is supposed to be the guardian of the country's purse strings for the dollars that are put into the treasury by the taxpayers, to allow the Export Development Corporation to have control over some $62 billion of taxpayers' funds. The taxpayers would ultimately be responsible for these funds. The Government is asking that the Export Development Corporation and the inner circle of those who make up the frontbenches of this Liberal Government be given effective control over some $62 billion. But the taxpayers of this nation have no way of knowing what happens to that money, how it is spent or how it is misspent. Parliament will have no authority to approve spending by the EDC. There will be no accountability whatsoever on the part of the Government to Parliament for this money. This is basically the issue we are dealing with.

The Government is asking Parliament to increase the authorized capital of the EDC from $1 billion to $2 billion. It is asking this House to increase the high-risk lending insurance cost from $3.5 billion to $10 billion. It is asking this House to increase loans and loan guarantees on the part of the Export Development Corporation from $2.5 billion to $10 billion.

We have heard on occasion in this House a number of Members on this side saying how effective they feel Crown corporations can be. I would have to concur basically in what they have said. There is no doubt that there are some very effective Crown corporations and civil servants who have served the people of Canada very well over the years. But there are misuses and abuses of the power vested in a good number of Crown corporations.

Indeed, this Government would be hard pressed to tell the people of Canada how many Crown corporations there are in existence. It has been reported by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson), that there are something in the neighbourhood of 300 Crown corporations in existence. I have heard it reported that there are over 400 Crown corporations. A few tales of horror are well known to us and I intend to deal with those momentarily.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, would leave the authorized capital of the EDC at $1 billion. He would have the borrowing restricted to ten times the amount of capital actually on hand. I think the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is being extremely generous to this Crown corporation which has great control over the purse. If I were in his position, I would take a somewhat harder look at how he is proposing the dollars might be controlled and spent.

• (1240)

Certainly the amount of accountability to Parliament and to the people of the nation cannot be overemphasized. The Government has a responsibility which it has been very reluctant to exhibit over the last number of years. It does not account for how money is spent. Over the months and years the Government has been in power, we have seen a constant drain on the taxpayers' pockets. We have seen the deficit rise to a projected $31.3 billion this year alone. The figures are astounding. The current cost of interest on public debt in 1983 will amount to $700 per capita, or $1,800 per taxpayer. The gross debt will be $6,400 per capita or $16,200 per taxpayer. The interest alone on our debt for 1983 will amount to a whopping, staggering $17.6 billion. In any other forum, whether it be the private or the public sector, that would be scandalous. The House has been treated to this spectacle, and the country has been treated to the mismanagement of Government for such a period of time that today we almost offhandedly accept a debt which will require interest payments in 1983 of $17.6 billion.

The Government spends $274 million every day, 365 days of the year, with no time off for Sundays; that is $11 million per hour or $190,000 per minute. During the time it took the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to deliver his budget speech last April, the Government spent $19 million. Fathom it: $19 million was spent by the Government while the Minister of Finance delivered that catastrophic budget speech of last April.

The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) said that Canadian taxpayers have had it up to the gorge. I will add to that. Canadian taxpayers have not only been gorged; they have been gouged consistently by the Government, and it continues to do it in a haphazard, willy-nilly, unabashed, unashamed way. This Government has gout of the public purse. We as taxpayers and as Canadians will be paying for years to come. It is time Canadians had the opportunity to treat themselves to a government which can gain control of the public purse, gain control of the deficit, and indeed start to reduce it, with the final goal in mind of eliminating it.

As history will show anyone who cares to look at it—and obviously that is not the case opposite—there is no better vehicle available to us than the free enterprise system which built the nation and provided the greatness of today, although Hon. Members across the way have continuously tried to erode those foundations. If I were in a position to provide any sort of advice to which the Government might listen, it would be the same advice that hundreds of thousands, indeed millions, of Canadians would deliver to the Government if they were given the opportunity to do so—and that day is soon coming—namely, that free enterprise does work. Free enterprise so that it can work!

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate very briefly in the debate on Bill C-110, which deals with amendments to the Export Development Act. I am sure the House appreciates that because of the nature of the Bill it permits and indeed invites wide-ranging interjections and debate on the subject.

I want to take this opportunity to compliment the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for the manner in which he led the debate. Also I want to compliment other speakers on this side of the House who have participated thus far.

I am sure many others will have comments to make. Hon. Members on this side of the House and I am certain Hon. Members on the Government side, if they want to be honest with themselves and with their constituents, will agree that the Canadian public is extremely concerned about the manner in which Canadian Crown corporations have been operating.

At the outset I want to make it perfectly clear that I have no personal axe to grind with the Export Development Corporation. During the past ten years or so since coming to this place to speak and work on behalf of the constituents of Elgin, I recall a number of occasions on which I have had the opportunity to negotiate on behalf of constituents, companies, businesses and so on, with the Export Development Corporation, out of which a number of successful conclusions were reached. I do not want to leave a false impression. There have been other occasions when representations were made on very reasonable and worth-while ventures that would have resulted in economic activity within the community, throughout southwestern Ontario and indeed beyond, and had these ventures been brought to a successful conclusion, economic activity would have been enhanced in the general area and we would have been able to create additional jobs.

The operation of the EDC is before the House—and I suppose in some respects it has unfortunately become the whipping boy for all Crown corporations in the country—because we have Bill C-110 before us which deals with the EDC and provides us with an opportunity to make comments. The Export Development Corporation is the export trade arm of the federal Government.

It is extremely important to have a look at the general performance of Canadian business and industry in the export field. We recognize that Canada is a trading nation. Canada has to be a trading nation because of its vast resources. I notice in a StatsCan release yesterday that there are now 25 million Canadians in this country. Consequently our domestic population is not such to sustain an active, economic, sound business and industrial sector. Because of our nature, it is extremely important that we be very aggressive and successful in the export field.

• (1250)

Thirty per cent of our Gross National Product is earned through trade. That figure would be much higher if Canada was getting its former share of world trade. For example, in 1968, the year that this Government really took office under the present leadership, Canada's share of world trade was 5.74 per cent. By 1981 this figure had fallen to 3.8 per cent. In 1968 Canadians exported more than the Japanese, yet today Japan's share of world trade is twice that of Canada.

In the ten-year period between 1970 and 1980, the average annual growth rate of Canadian exports was 4.4 per cent, the lowest of any major industrialized nation, and less than half the 10 per cent growth rate that prevailed between 1960 and 1970. In contrast, during the same 1970-1980 period exports grew by an annual average rate of increase of 6.7 per cent in Italy, 7.5 per cent in the United Kingdom, 8.9 per cent in Japan, 6.9 per cent in the United States, 6.8 per cent in France and 5.8 per cent in West Germany.

Publicly the Government likes to point to the rosy and rather successful performance of the last two years. However, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the internal documents which are very much available from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, you see that it takes a rather less optimistic view, but certainly more realistic. I want to place on the record a paragraph from the document I referred to, and I quote:

> Over the medium term, export growth may not match advances in imports. Recent record surpluses in Canada's merchandise account owe more to the depressing effects of the relatively more severe recession in Canada on imports than to superior export performance.

The Government as well fails to point out that Canada had a $13 billion deficit in fully manufactured goods last year. It is estimated that eliminating that deficit could create in the vicinity of 250,000 jobs. At a time when we have more than 1.5 million people unemployed, certainly any move by Government to create additional jobs would be a move to be taken very seriously.

It is interesting to note that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association estimates that 2.7 million jobs could be created by regaining our 1970 share of world trade. That is a very significant figure. A major reason for the decline in our share of world trade and our deficit in manufactured goods is our productivity performance.

Over the past few years, our industrial productivity has been rising at the slowest rate of any major industrialized nation. Between 1977 and 1982, our industrial productivity rose by only 0.3 per cent compared to 27.6 per cent in Japan, 22.6 per cent in Italy, 17.9 per cent in Sweden, 22.3 per cent in France, 19.5 per cent in Denmark, 14.7 per cent in Germany, 18.2 per cent in the United Kingdom and 3.6 per cent in the United States. In 1982 productivity in Canada actually declined by 2.8 per cent.

A major cause of Canada's poor productivity performance is our poor research and development performance. Expenditures on research and development in Canada are only equal to 1.2 per cent of the Gross National Product, compared to 2.4 per cent in the United States, 2 per cent in Japan, 2.3 per cent in West Germany, 2.2 per cent in the United Kingdom and 1.8 per cent in France. Among the major industrialized nations only Italy, at 0.9 per cent, spends proportionately less on research and development than Canada.

I am only just commencing my remarks, but I see, Mr. Speaker, you are indicating to me that my time has expired. Because of the nature of this debate, I am quite certain that as other amendments come along I will have the opportunity to make a few more comments.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, this is an important Bill because it deals with the Government's main responsibility, namely the accountability of the Government to the taxpayers with regard to the spending of money. It is important, not in the sense that we are talking about taxes collected, but about the ability of the Government to borrow.

I find it strange that we are discussing a Bill like this which talks about tens of billions of dollars, a tremendous amount of money, when a sector in the country involved in exports, the agricultural sector, is not being addressed by the Government. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, a major portion of the economy which exports is not able to remain competitive and maintain its level of exports.

I have been in the Transport Committee, Mr. Speaker, for what seems like forever. If I refer to you as "Mr. Chairman", it is because I am used to looking at the chairman of that committee. As an aside, I must say that he has done a very good job. He certainly has the respect and admiration of the members of the committee in dealing with a very tough Bill, the Crow legislation. That is an aside but I thought I should bring it in.

Mr. Wise: Which clause are you on?

Mr. Mayer: My distinguished colleague asks what clause we are on. For the information of the House, and I am sure Members are waiting breathlessly to get on with this Bill next week, we are on Clause 56, I believe. There are 14 more clauses. Therefore, we are making tremendous progress. I again pay tribute to the chairman and the other members of the committee.

To get back to the Bill, I find it strange that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is afraid to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for some financing assistance if we have a Bill in front of the House which authorizes the Government to borrow billions of dollars. Where does the Government intend to get this money? I assume it intends to get it from the marketplace.

This Bill would permit the Government to borrow a large amount of money in the marketplace. If that is fair, I suggest the Government should look at some of the farm financing that is needed. There are certain priorities and that should be one of them.

Many suggestions have been made in terms of how we can substantially assist farmers with regard to financing. One is the agribond process which would allow farmers to finance at a favoured rate of interest. It would keep farmers in business. Farmers are major users of capital. That is one reason they have become so efficient. Farmers have increased their efficiency over the last number of years and have done so largely with the use of capital. This Bill talks about capital. If this Bill is going to allow the Government to go to the marketplace and borrow large amounts of money, it will put pressure on other sectors of the economy, namely agriculture. These sectors will be in jeopardy in terms of their ability to compete and maintain exports. That is important.

There are many considerations in this Bill, with overshoots and spin-offs as far as other parts of the economy are concerned. I find it difficult to understand why developing methods of financing, concessional financing and other fancy things should be a priority, when we have a major sector of the economy that is in dire need of new innovations as far as financing is concerned. I refer to farm financing.

I see it is fast approaching one o'clock. May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR CANADA—RESPONSIBILITY TO LINK OTTAWA WITH PROVINCIAL CAPITALS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, our national carrier, Air Canada, has been neglecting the Quebec City region with respect to its links with Ottawa. Indeed, we now have only one direct flight between the two cities. It leaves Quebec City at 2.15 p.m. and the return flight leaves Ottawa at 4 p.m.—not very appropriate hours for businessmen. And what is more, this direct flight was cancelled last summer, from June to September. They argue that the flight operates at a loss. Yet, Québec Aviation Ltée has been using a small aircraft for three daily return flights between Quebec City and Gatineau and it is considering using a bigger aircraft. On that route, Québec Aviation Ltée has replaced Quebecair—better known as Air Tricofil in Quebec—which was operating at a loss because that company had lofty visions which prevented it from using smaller aircraft. Air Canada seems to have the same problem as well. Obviously, operating such a direct flight with an aircraft designed to carry over 100 passengers is a challenge to reason. Air Canada's responsibility is to link Canada's capital with other Canadian capitals and large cities. At this time, Air Canada flies directly from Ottawa to Vancouver three times a day, to Winnipeg five times a day, to Montreal eight times a day, to Toronto 14 times a day, but only once a day to Quebec City and only ten months of the year. Travelling time between Ottawa and Quebec City, with one stopover, is four hours and twenty minutes.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time is up.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—GOVERNMENT APPROACH TO RECEIVER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Industry (Mr. Lumley) justified the non-acceptance of a $9 billion offer for White Farm Equipment by White U.S.A. by saying that Canadian technology would have to be protected and that a "very important player" was being encouraged to make an offer. Is this player Massey-Ferguson or another such company? If so, and if such a deal were made, it would be a back door method of eliminating White Farm Equipment and betraying the dealers and farmers who handle and own White equipment.

As for protecting Canadian technology, I wonder why the Government is not equally concerned or even more concerned with protecting Canadian farmers and Canadian dealers. Dealers are small businessmen, many of whom will be forced into bankruptcy if White Farm Equipment goes under, leaving more employees without jobs. Canadian farmers are just hanging in there now without having the federal Government nullify their investments in White Farm equipment which range all the way from $29,000 to $100,000 or more. Such action would be the last straw for hundreds of farmers who would go into bankruptcy.

If the Government does not withdraw its orders to the receiver not to accept the offer of White U.S.A., and White Farm Equipment Limited does go under, the responsibility will rest squarely on the Government and the Minister. Foreign investment in Canada is good when it helps the people by keeping an important company liquid, enabling farmers, dealers and workers to prosper. Will the Government recognize for once that Canadian people are more important than technology?

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMEMORATION OF SOVIET-INDUCED FAMINE IN UKRAINE

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, over the weekend I had the occasion to have discussions with Canadians of Ukrainian origin. After hearing the facts they put before me, I believe that between seven million and ten million Ukrainians were starved to death on the orders of the Government of the U.S.S.R. during the deliberately organized famine of 1932-1933. The Government of the U.S.S.R. directed a special annihilation policy aimed at the destruction of the Ukrainian nation, thereby committing genocide as defined by the U.N. Genocide Convention.

Canadians of Ukrainian and other origins from behind the Iron Curtain commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Soviet-induced famine in the Ukraine. I ask the Department of External Affairs to make representations to the United Nations requesting official recognition of the 1933 famine in order to provide future generations with permanent documentation of this premeditated genocide. Further, on this sorrowful anniversary of the Ukrainian holocaust, I ask that the Government of Canada increase its assistance to hunger-stricken countries anywhere in the world, regardless of political or economic affiliation, in order to avoid repetition of a fate similar to that suffered by millions of Ukrainians in the peaceful years of 1932 and 1933.

* * *

VIA RAIL

PLEA FOR RESTORATION OF TORONTO-HAVELOCK SERVICE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) has justifiably questioned the wisdom of the 1981 Via Rail service cuts. This comes as no surprise to members of the Opposition since the Canadian Transport Commission recommended that Via Rail service be continued until the completion of a full hearing. This recommendation echoed the advice of the Railway Transport Committee which concluded: "Accordingly, it is the decision of the Committee that, pending the outcome of this further review, the Toronto-Havelock service shall not be discontinued."

What is surprising, however, is the Minister's plan to re-establish Via Rail service on the Winnipeg to Edmonton line, a line which just happens to be in his riding. This represents an act of political appeasement contrived in an attempt to retain the Minister's seat in western Canada.

It should be noted that the Minister said he is restoring the Winnipeg to Edmonton line because, and I quote the Minister, "I don't believe Via can just be a corridor railway," adding that, "it has to service transportation needs." I remind the Minister that Peterborough once had the use of the six daily passenger trains which serviced the Havelock-Toronto route and, with the stroke of a pen, his predecessor abolished the last train on that route by an Order in Council, against the wishes of the Canadian Transport Commission and without any public inquiry. It is blatantly obvious that, should the Minister refuse to open hearings on the Toronto-Havelock Via service, crass politics are at work in his mind.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the Hon. Member has expired.

* * *

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—SEVERANCE PAY OWED EMPLOYEES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, after several years of financial difficulty, White Farm Equipment Limited appears to be close to liquidation in one form or another. It is a tragedy that this historic company, once known as Cockshutt Plough Company, will in all likelihood cease to exist as a company.

In human terms it is an even greater tragedy that 900 employees, many of whom have worked for the company for many years, will find their jobs terminated. This will be yet another severe blow to the economic wellbeing of the City of Brantford.

I fully appreciate that the Government is not to blame for the chaotic financial condition in which the company finds itself, but in view of the fact that the Government of Canada guaranteed bank loans to the company in the amount of about $6 million, and in the interest of common decency, I prevail upon the Government to honour the company's financial commitments to its employees, namely, to guarantee the $3 million in severance pay to White Farm Equipment employees, to guarantee that all vacation pay and all other outstanding benefits owed to the employees will be paid to them, and to make every effort to find other meaningful employment for the 900 White Farm Equipment employees in Brantford.

I would also ask the Government to form a task force comprised of labour, management, and farmers to look into the future viability of the Canadian farm implement industry. If the Government can help the banks, then surely the Government can help those employees. I ask for nothing more and nothing less than simple justice.

* * *

EDUCATION

FEES CHARGED TO FOREIGN STUDENTS AT CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the fees charged to foreign students studying at Canadian universities is a matter of growing concern. Since education falls within the jurisdiction of the Provinces, it becomes the responsibility of institutions within provincial Governments to set fees for foreign students.

At the federal level there is a growing sensitivity to the hardships suffered by non-scholarship foreign students. The federal Government does provide support to some developing countries through the Canadian International Development Agency. The CIDA plan sponsors between 700 and 800 students per year for studies related to ongoing development projects. Through the Commonwealth Scholarship Program, CIDA also sponsors another 300 students per year, 70 per cent of whom are from developing countries. These students are exempt from the foreign student fee differential in all Provinces but Alberta and Quebec.

● (1410)

The benefits to Canadians from such a practice is the establishment of good will with developing countries. It also exposes Canadian students to citizens from around the world, providing cultural and idea enrichment. Since Canada's official development assistance program is constrained by limited resources to support only those students whose studies are related to their country's developmental priorities, it is requested that the Government continue in its effort to negotiate lower fees for foreign students applying to Canadian universities.

* * *

INCOME TAX

DELAY IN REFUNDS TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, after analyzing over 800 inquiries from my constituents regarding long delays in receiving their income tax refunds, it has become clear that those refunds which are in excess of $1,000 have been deliberately recycled a number of times for no apparent reason but to delay the refunds. This has contributed to a delay in the processing of these same income tax returns of anywhere from five to seven months. These refunds belong to individuals who formerly were working in high paying jobs in construction and mining operations, who have since been laid off. The delay in issuing these refund cheques has in many cases caused people who are unemployed and have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits to borrow, or seek welfare.

It appears that this cash starved Government was and still is deliberately delaying the processing of the larger tax refunds to assist in its cash flow problems. This sleazy practice must stop immediately and must be severely condemned by this House of Commons.

S.O. 21

SOCIAL SERVICES

NEED FOR SOUP KITCHENS TO FEED THE HUNGRY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, hunger in Canada has become a major problem. In major urban areas across the country, from Halifax to Vancouver, volunteer agencies have set up soup kitchens to provide thousands of hungry and hard-pressed Canadians with the semblance of a meal. Facilities for meals and shelter have been overtaxed for the past two years and little relief is in sight. It is indicative that the people who use these services are not the alcoholics and derelicts of past years, they are the young unemployed, middle class men and women and their families, and the transients who criss-cross the country with their families in tow, looking for work and shelter.

The scale of the hunger we are seeing reflects a major breakdown in our social assistance network. It is a cause for national shame. It harks back to conditions which existed in the 1930s, conditions that most of us hoped we had left behind years ago. In the United States, where a similar problem of hunger exists, President Reagan has appointed a national task force to study the problem.

Here in Canada, I think it is time to ask what our Government is doing about this problem who is affected; what are the dimensions of the problem; and what is the situation in the rural and under-developed regions? The federal Government bears a major part of the blame for the present depression and must deal with its effects. Hunger and malnutrition are not necessary in such a rich and productive country as ours.

* * *

INCOME TAX

DELAY IN REFUNDS TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, as a result of a one month delay in mailing blank returns and a two month delay for computer reprogramming, 1982 income tax refunds have been badly delayed. Last week I received a call from a constituent who filed her income tax return in January and still had not received her refund cheque. The bank was threatening to seize her car, and she was going to lose her job.

I have hard evidence to suggest that the delay in receiving an income tax refund may have been a major factor in the commission of a serious crime in my riding.

It is clearly Liberal Party policy to delay income tax refunds in order to solve the Government's cash flow problems.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lewis: I call on the Government, I call on the Liberal Party, to reverse that policy in order that the Canadian taxpayers, who are supporting this bunch, will receive their income tax refunds on time.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CANCELLATION OF "NEIGHBOURLY NEWS FROM THE PRAIRIES" PROGRAM

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, it has come to my attention that a CBC radio program with a 43-year tradition of serving rural residents in Saskatchewan and Manitoba has been terminated by the CBC in Winnipeg. The last broadcast of "Neighbourly News from the Prairies" will be heard this coming Sunday. This has happened despite the fact that the Agricultural and Food Advisory Committee to the CBC asked that the broadcast be continued; this despite the CBC's supposed commitment to its rural listeners, and this despite the fact that the decision is in direct opposition to the wishes of the thousands of rural listeners who have become accustomed to the uniquely country flavour of the weekly news broadcast.

The decision has promted about 200 phone calls of protest to the program's host, who resides in my constituency of Brandon-Souris. Numerous weekly newspapers, including those in Boissevain, Minnedosa, Steinbach and Altona, and dailies in Brandon and Winnipeg have criticized this callous decision. This decision shows a lack of understanding of the needs and attitudes of rural listeners in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Similar neighbourly news programs are carried by the CBC in British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes, and the program should also be continued in the Manitoba/Saskatchewan region.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who, I am informed, is to be in the House. I would therefore like to stand down and try to catch your eye later.

* * *

INDUSTRY

MAISLIN TRANSPORT LTD.—STATUS OF GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is right behind the curtain there, if he would come into the House. I hate to bring the schoolboys back into the classroom.

My question relates to the Maislin bail-out of last summer. What is the current status of the $34 million guarantee which the Government extended to Maislin last year? Has the Government been called upon to honour this guarantee? And, if not, when does the Government expect this to occur, and by how much?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the company applied for, I believe it is called a Section 11(1) under the United States bankruptcy laws, which puts the whole situation in limbo for about 90 days. There has been no call on the guarantee by the Government of Canada of $34 million at the present time.

Mr. Nielsen: Not yet.

Mr. Wilson: That gives us no indication as to whether there will be any money called on. I would appreciate it if the Minister would make it clear in his answer to the next question.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, it is clear that the Maislin bail-out has been a total disaster. The Conservative Party has opposed this right from the start, from before the bail-out was provided. It is abundantly clear that this has been a major policy mistake which was motivated by clear, partisan, political motivations. Since the Minister said shortly after his appointment to his ministry that there would be no more bail-outs of a similar nature, does this clearly imply that he believes now that the bail-out was a major policy error?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all I reject totally the premise of the Hon. Member's question—

Mr. Wilson: The officials were against it.

Mr. Lumley: —in terms of the political implications of Maislin. Maislin was Canada's largest international common carrier. There were 2,000 Canadian jobs at stake. I realize that is not important to Hon. Members in the Conservative Party—

Mr. McDermid: Most of them in the United States.

Mr. Lumley: —but we felt they were very important at the time. Second, if I recall the questions from the Hon. Member's colleagues in the Conservative Party yesterday, they were asking me to bail out the White Farm Equipment company. Make up your minds over there. Do you want us to help these companies out, or do you not?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Offence is the best form of defence, Madam Speaker. The Minister did not respond to the question which I asked him and there was a very clear reason why, because he feels awfully uncomfortable with the action which the Government took a year ago.

FUTURE OF SERVICE INDUSTRY COMPANIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Minister will not admit that this was a major policy error, why did he move so quickly to turn his back on the decision which had been taken by his predecessor? And would he state under what circumstances would the Government now enter into a bail-out of a service industry company, that is, a company which is dependent on other companies for its business?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all I feel no more uncomfortable with my answer than the Hon. Member does with the flip-flopping of policy with respect to the industrial restructuring which he and his colleagues have advocated over the last period of time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: I am surprised that the Hon. Member has not asked me any questions about the Chrysler Corporation. Without the help of the Government of Canada, the Chrysler Corporation, and the 11,000 direct jobs would not have been maintained. Why is he always focusing on one particular company?

With respect to his question on the industrial structuring of the service sector, Madam Speaker, there is already a great deal of assistance for the service sector, such as from my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Business, who is responsible for the Federal Business Development Bank. Industrial structuring takes place all the time, Madam Speaker, and we think that one of the major reasons why there has been a substantial number of job recalls and job creation in the private sector in the last year is because of these policies advocated by this Government over the last couple of years.

● (1420)

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—IMPLICATIONS FOR SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Business. Because of the uncertainty surrounding the possible liquidation of White Farm Equipment Ltd. which would adversely affect 100,000 farmers in Canada, not to mention the potential loss of hundreds of jobs within the dealership network, which is composed of small businesses, as the Minister responsible for that sector what is he doing to rectify this problem? More specifically, what recommendations has he made to Cabinet or his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in this regard?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member had paid attention to yesterday's Question Period he would have heard the answers given by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, with regard to White Farm.

An Hon. Member: He was not here.

Mr. Smith: He may or may not have been here. The Minister is monitoring the situation very closely to see what can be done to keep that company going.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, that answer indicates just how little the Minister knows or cares about small business, so I will direct my supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on the same subject.

GOVERNMENT'S RECOMMENDATION TO COMPANY RECEIVER

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Minister confirmed that he and the Government could not interfere in the decision made by the receiver for White Farm. Later in the same Question Period he went on to contradict himself by stating that he had in fact indicated to the receiver that his Government did not favour the proposed purchase of White Canada by White's TIC Division in the U.S., even though it had submitted the largest bid of $9 million.

Can the Minister clarify his obvious contradictions in yesterday's statements and, at the same time, tell us why he is opposed to approving this U.S. takeover which would not only save hundreds of jobs in Canada but would inject much needed capital into an ailing industry?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we now have a second member of the Conservative Party up on his feet in Question Period today asking for a bail-out of a firm, when his lead critic just criticized me for bailing out another firm. Please get your positions straight.

Again, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member did not read yesterday's record. What I said yesterday was that the responsibility for the recommendation to the bankruptcy court rests with the receiver, not with the Government of Canada. We are not a lender, we are a guarantor. I did not say that we did not make a recommendation to the receiver.

The recommendation we have made to the receiver, and I will repeat it because the Hon. Member was not listening yesterday, encompasses three things. First of all, find someone, an individual or a consortium, who will undertake to operate that company as a going concern, second, to protect the dealer network right across Canada, which is very important, as advocated by his colleagues; and third, to preserve the leading edge technology which the people of Canada, through this Government, have financed. Finally, Madam Speaker—and I think the Hon. Member should again read the record—we are very confident that we are going to find someone, because two years ago when this company was bankrupt it was this Government which brought 1,000 jobs onstream by resurrecting this company in the city of Brantford and protecting the existing dealer network. It was certainly not through following the policies the Hon. Member and his Party are advocating.

* * *

THE CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO CABINET DECISIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning the Government's decision on the Cruise, and beyond that the much broader question about the applicability of the Charter of Rights to a range of Cabinet decisions. Yesterday the Minister of Justice, in a statement outside the House, implied that decisions by the Cabinet affecting the rights of citizens can be made independent of the Charter. Section 32(1)(a) of the Charter says that. This Charter applies to the Parliament and Government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament.

Would the Prime Minister confirm that what this means is that decisions by the Cabinet affecting rights are exactly the opposite to what the Minister of Justice has said, and indeed they do come within the framework of the application of the Charter of Rights?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, as I am sure the hon. gentleman knows, there is a tradition which has been built up over generations in our society that there are certain kinds of questions which are not reviewed by the courts. If the Hon. Member wants to attach those to decisions which were traditionally made by the prerogative of the Crown, by the executive, in many cases that would be the situation. But the fact is that in light of the Charter that boundary line may need to be re-established. That is what the courts are about and that is why we are asking for an appeal in the case to which I am sure my hon. friend is referring, to try to clarify what this boundary line is.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, some Members in this Parliament, when they voted, including, I thought, the Prime Minister of Canada, believed that we needed a Charter of Rights in fact and in part to put checks on executive decision making. That is what the Charter was all about, I say to the Minister of Justice.

GROUNDS UPON WHICH CRUISE MISSILE DECISION WAS MADE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I ask the Prime Minister again, and I ask him not to shift responsibility to the Minister of Justice, if the Government wanted to ignore its own Charter of Rights when it dealt with the Cruise issue, why did it not act under the terms of Section 33 of the Charter, the "notwithstanding" Section, and bring a Bill before Parliament for debate on the Cruise, and by such action avoid the Charter but by such action act correctly and legally, instead of what it is doing now.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking for an interpretation of the Charter. He knows perfectly well that, first of all, it is not within the rules for the Government to express legal opinions.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister just did it. He did it outside the House yesterday.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the courts are the proper forum to determine the meaning of the Charter. The Charter has been tested in the courts several times already, by various parties. I think it is natural for the Government to test the limit of its authority and see how the courts will interpret it. I am not here to give an interpretation of the Charter. I want it to have the fullest authority possible, but surely that is not dependent on me; that will depend on the courts, and that is where it will be decided.

SECTION 33 OF CHARTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I ask for a very straight answer from the Prime Minister on this question. Would he agree that in the interesting negotiating process that led up to the establishment of the present Charter one of the compromises reached was Section 33, the purpose of which was to give parliamentary bodies, this Parliament, or parliament at the provincial level, the right, if you like, to go around the Charter, but that executive action would still remain within the framework and be covered by the Charter, and that it was so written that way? If he agrees that was the process which led to the present writing, would he also agree that what the Government ought to have done if it wanted to remain clearly away from the claims of the Charter was to have brought a Bill before the Parliament of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member shows a grave misunderstanding of the intentions of the Government. It certainly did not want to go around the Charter. It did not propose Section 33, but it was compelled to accept Section 33. In fact Section 33 was put forward by the NDP Leader in Saskatchewan who felt that Governments should be able to extract themselves from the operation of the Charter. That was the origin of Section 33. We do not like it on this side. We hope that some consensus in Canada will eventually get rid of Section 33 which was put in the Charter by virtue of an NDP Government.

Mr. Broadbent: What about Sterling Lyon and a few others?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, we can talk about Sterling Lyon and a few others as the Hon. Member asks, if he wants to ask me questions about Sterling Lyon, but now he is talking about Section 33. I think it is a regressive Section but it was necessary to reach a compromise, as he knows, because some Premiers did not want the full Charter.

We want the full Charter to apply, we are not trying to go around it, we just want the courts to decide—

Mr. Broadbent: You are going around it now.

Mr. Trudeau: We want the courts to say publicly what the Charter means, and the Hon. Member would know that if I were to say the Charter means this, he would say, "Go to the courts". That is what we are doing, Madam Speaker.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF VISCOUNT THOMAS OF TONYPANDY, FORMER SPEAKER AT WESTMINSTER

Madam Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of the House to the distinguished presence in our gallery of the Right Hon. Viscount Thomas of Tonypandy, whom Members will remember as George Thomas, the former Speaker of the House of Commons of Great Britain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

● (1430)

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ISSUANCE OF CHILD HEALTH RECORDS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In a newspaper report over the weekend a term was quoted whereby, supposedly, the Minister is thinking of issuing a "health passport". I am wondering, as are many of my constituents, just how this passport will work, and will all Canadians be asked to carry this passport? Will the Minister please elaborate for us?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am very surprised to have a chance to answer immediately—

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, surprise, surprise.

Miss Bégin: —and to explain that in a few weeks we will be issuing to the families of Canadian diplomats—and maybe that is why the press gave it the name of "health passport"—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: —and to our Armed Forces, a little booklet for their children. It is called "Child Health Record", and it is to keep track of smallpox, chicken pox and measles shots, and what not, and it has nothing to do with anything that would be imposed on Canadians. It has nothing to do with medicare or the new Canada Health Act, as I have clearly said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCOME TAX

DELAYS IN PROCESSING TAXPAYERS' RETURNS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister will know that thousands of Canadians are still waiting for their income tax refunds. The delay in processing this year's refunds was a direct result of a one-month delay in sending out the blank returns and a two-month delay while the computers were reprogrammed. Now it is to late to do anything about the 1982 returns. What steps are being taken by the Government to ensure that there are not these unconscionable delays in the processing of 1983 income tax returns?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member brought up the subject. I listened carefully to the preamble to his question in which he mentioned the exact causes of the delay in mailing or processing income tax returns, and in fact, departed from what was said by his colleague from Athabasca and from his own earlier statement, both of which were entirely irresponsible in their conclusions as to the reasons for the delay. I would like to point out that today, 98 per cent of income tax returns have been processed and that over $6 billion has been refunded to Canadian taxpayers. We were sorry about the fact that the delay in passing legislation in the House caused the delay in processing income tax returns. We are taking every possible step to ensure that next year, we shall be able to process returns as quickly as possible and expedite the mailing of tax refunds to taxpayers, as has been our custom in the past.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, that is not what the Director of Taxation for P.E.I. said last January 7.

AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. The Minister is on record as saying that he wants to "end the uncertainty over our tax laws and let affected taxpayers know precisely where they stand". That is what he said last December 7. The Minister of Finance tabled the budget on April 19. It is now five months later, and the enabling legislation has still not been brought forward for debate. When will the Government bring forward for debate the income tax legislation in order to eliminate administrative delays, to allow for effective tax planning, and to eliminate delays in processing the 1983 income tax returns?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I welcome the eagerness of the Opposition to deal with this particular legislation. I remind the Hon. Member that the Ways and Means Motions are before the parliamentary committee on finance. I invite the committee to deal quickly and effectively with those measures. I can tell him that, as soon as the Crow legislation is passed by the House, I will be very interested and eager to introduce the Bill—

Mr. McDermid: Blackmail.

Mr. Lalonde: —dealing with taxation, at the first opportunity.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—CONDEMNATION FOR SHOOTING DOWN KOREAN AIRLINER—CANADIAN POSITION AT UNITED NATIONS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to the opening of the General Session of the United Nations this afternoon. Would he indicate to the House his commitment that he will use his speaking opportunity next week to express the views of the Parliament of Canada with regard to KAL Flight 007, as unanimously adopted by this House? Further, would he indicate whether the Government has any plan or strategy to bring the entire matter surrounding the murder of those passengers before the Assembly for resolution?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I intend, of course, to deal with the question of the airliner in my address at the United Nations. I will certainly consider his suggestion that I use as much of the resolution as was unanimously adopted by Parliament in the expression of those views. No decision has been taken as to whether it would be appropriate at this stage to make an attempt to put this particular item on the agenda of the General Assembly. Discussions are going on with other countries as to whether this would be an effective step to take at the present time.

REQUEST FOR STRONG CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question relates to the last part of the Minister's answer. Surely the Minister would admit that, given Canada's involvement in trying to persuade the Security Council to deal with the matter, which the Soviets vetoed, Canada certainly has an obligation—if it does not believe the Soviet Union is in fact stonewalling on the issue, as many people do—to press forward as far and as hard as possible to persuade the United Nations to deal with a matter of such international importance and of such repugnance to all citizens of the world?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have no difficulty with the comment made by the Hon. Member. I think we all share the repugnance. We were among those who asked that the matter be dealt with by the Security Council. The conclusion of the Security Council was unfortunately vetoed by the Soviet representative. Now there is a question as to whether the insertion of this particular item on the agenda of the General Assembly would make an effective contribution to the situation, particularly in light of the fact that the matter is presently being dealt with and will be dealt with in Montreal at the General Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

There is no difference between us as to the depth of our repugnance. It is a question as to what is the most effective step that could be taken in present circumstances.

USE OF GANDER AIRPORT BY SOVIET AIRCRAFT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs whose Department has indicated that it is reviewing the situation with respect to the landings of Soviet aircraft at Gander Airport. Would the Minister indicate whether his Department is in a position to recommend the closing of Gander to further Aeroflot flights and, second, has it taken the precaution of at least attempting to monitor what is being carried on these planes as they land and then leave from Gander?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, there have been no flights at Gander, or stop downs at Gander, since the particular declaration was made terminating the Aeroflot flights to Montreal. There have been no flights except the particular flight that I thought was justified, to return the circus to Moscow. I should add that, apart from the Aeroflot flights that were regularly scheduled, the number of flights that have used Gander is very limited. I think there were only one or two flights in 1983, up to the present time. There have been no other flights, to my knowledge, since we announced the termination of the regular Aeroflot flights.

LANDING RIGHTS AT GANDER—COMPENSATION FOR KOREAN AIRLINER VICTIMS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he answer two questions? First, have there been no further Soviet flights because they have chosen not to come into Gander, or has the Government told the Soviet Union that its landing rights at Gander have ended?

Second, in view of the fact that the editor-in-chief of the Soviet Communist Party newspaper has indicated that there will never be an apology or any compensation for the victims of the KAL 007 tragedy, would the Minister indicate what further steps will be taken by the Government to ensure that compensation will be forthcoming, in view of the fact that it has practically been laughed at in its first two attempts just to deliver a note indicating a hope to seek compensation?

• (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the present circumstance is that the Soviet authorities have not formally requested permission to come down in Gander for any flight. That is formally. I had intimation that they might have asked for permission for Mr. Gromyko en route to New York, but that was not dealt with because the request has not been made. But there have been no flights up to the present time, to my knowledge, and each of them will be dealt with on their merits since the number of flights is so limited that it does not seem to me to add materialy to the action we have taken at the present time.

The Hon. Member will also realize that we have suspended, or delayed, signing a memorandum of agreement between the Government of Canada and the Soviet authorities with respect to the future use of Gander as a refuelling base. That action itself has rather adversely affected the future prospects, at least for the moment, for Gander. In the circumstances I feel that I have taken sufficient action with respect to Gander to demonstrate the attitude of the Government of Canada.

With respect to the compensation, I do not think that this will be an issue that will be quickly resolved. There are countries such as the United States, Canada, and South Korea, that are all making the same claims against the Soviet Union. I have explained to the Hon. Member the steps that I have already taken. If there are further steps that would prove to be effective in order to secure compensation for the families affected, then I would be prepared to consider those steps.

* * *

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—FUTURE OF COMPANY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and it concerns the White Farm situation. He indicated in a previous answer this afternoon that negotiations had been going on yesterday and were going on at the present time. I want him to know that not only I but the vast majority of workers at White Farm do not want TIC to regain control of that company. They had nothing but one fiasco after another for two years while TIC owned it.

Why is a viable company such as Linamar Machines of Guelph, which was a former minority owner, not upfront in the bidding and not being encouraged by the Minister, his Department or his officials, to submit an acceptable bid to take over the company and make sure it remains Canadian, operating in Canada, and in Brantford?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of all of the details of each of the offers, but my understanding from the receiver is that there were deficiencies in each one of the offers. The company which the Hon. Member suggests would certainly be acceptable to the Government of Canada as long as it wanted to undertake the three criteria that we basically have recommended to the receiver which are; one, operating it as a going concern; two, making valuable use of that leading edge technology; and three, protecting the dealer network.

If there is another offer of which we are not aware, we would be happy to have a look at it. I know that the receiver, who has been very co-operative in this whole process, would be most interested in looking at any offer coming forward from any company.

MONEYS OWED TO EMPLOYEES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, the Government guaranteed 90 per cent of the loans from the banks to the White Farm Equipment Company to keep its head above water. TIC owes the workers on average anywhere from $4,000 to $8,000 in back pay, vacation pay, other fringe benefits, and severance pay. If the company should go into liquidation—and it does appear as if it is heading in that direction—will the Government give the same guarantee to the employees that it gave to the banks? Why not have equal justice for all in a situation like this where 900 employees may very well be turfed out onto the street with no money whatsoever and no recompense whatsoever?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): First, Madam Speaker, like the Hon. Member, we hope that liquidation will not be necessary. Second, with respect to the money owed the employees, if I am not mistaken I think that the receiver is under some obligation and has funds to pay things like vacation pay. Under the Bankruptcy Act, the directors are responsible for salaries owed to employees and the Enterprise Development Board which reports to the Government of Canada through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has a representative on the board. Thus we are partly responsible for those salaries, and I am confident that any moneys owing to the employees will be resolved.

I might just add that my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, has talked about the Bankruptcy Act being a Government priority whereby workers will be treated as secured creditors. I would hope that every Member in the House will be supportive of changing the Bankruptcy Act in this regard.

* * *

SENATE REFORM

ATTENDANCE OF LIBERAL COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it is based on the fact that out of six members of the Joint Committee of the Commons and the Senate reviewing the Senate reform question, out of the six Liberal Members of the Commons who should be attending those committee hearings there have been only two today in Edmonton, and indeed the attendance of Liberal Members has been rather atrocious throughout these hearings. In view of that, I question the sincerity of the Prime Minister and the Government—

Madam Speaker: Order. At the present time I am questioning whether that question is in order in the House since the Hon. Member is seeking information about committee meetings. As he knows, those questions should not be asked in the House of Commons.

Mr. Nielsen: Not at all, Madam Speaker. If my question had been heard in its entirety it would be apparent that I was not seeking information about committee hearings. The question I am—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It simply was not apparent after several sentences. I would urge the Hon. Member to go right to the heart of the question and then I would know if it is in order.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure Hansard will show in both interventions of the Chair that I was on the word "question".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: My question to the Prime Minister—if those jackals over there will simply calm down—is if he is serious about Liberal attendance at the meetings, will he ensure through his responsible Minister, the Minister of Justice, that Liberal Members of the Commons attend those committee meetings so as to enable the committee to do its work?

Madam Speaker: Order. That question is obviously out of order.

* * *

[Translation]

THE ECONOMY

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND REPORT

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday in the House, the Leader of the Opposition referred to the report of the International Monetary Fund with respect to the economic situation in Canada. Madam Speaker, I do not know whether the Leader of the Opposition actually read the report. In any case, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether, as the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday, there was a reference to the situation in Canada and whether in referring to this country's deficit,, there was not also a reference to Canada's economic recovery?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thought the Hon. Leader of the Opposition went away last week to do his homework on the economic situation. I am sorry to say that the Leader of the Opposition either failed to do his homework or he is really a very poor student.

He referred to a report of the International Monetary Fund that was published Sunday, and he made a number of statements regarding Canada's deficit. If the Hon. Member had bothered to read the report, he would have seen that the document does not indicate anywhere that Canada has the largest deficit of the seven major industrialized countries, and furthermore, the report does not provide any classification or ranking of countries according to the relation of their deficit to the Gross National Product. On the contrary, the report says more specifically, on page 39, that Canada—

Madam Sepaker: Order, please! We are trying very hard to keep questions short, and the same should apply to answers.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, it is clear the Leader of the Opposition misled the House yesterday on the subject we are discussing. The report clearly indicates that Canada, and I shall quote in English:

[English]

—have gone further in re-establishing conditions for sustainable growth and have consequently provided their economies with greater scope for expansion—

[Translation]

Compared to countries like France, Italy and a large number of smaller industrialized countries.

* * *

● (1450)

[English]

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT LTD.—OFFER BY UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, the reason the Liberals are so happy is they found out we were just better than Italy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. This is Question Period.

Mr. Malone: You don't need to correct me, Madam Speaker; I am not NDP.

I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Yesterday the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster asked:

Has he or his Government, either officially or unofficially, directed or placed an objection to the receiver's selling of White Canada interests to White U.S.A.—

—to an offer from a United States company.

The Minister answered:

—we do not favour that particular proposal—

My question is why?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Very simple, Madam Speaker. The Opposition, which is very concerned about government deficits, will understand this because the net result of that application would mean we would lose $8 million already and would have to add another $1 million to the pot if that application were acceptable. I am sure the Hon. Member would understand the reasons for that.

INQUIRY RESPECTING REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, the same question was asked and the same answer was given with respect to TIC, and again my question is why?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I am sorry, Madam Speaker. I am not aware of the Texas Instruments Company question. I do not recall it ever being asked of me.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PLIGHT OF PEOPLE EXHAUSTING BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister may know that yesterday I raised the plight of people in my constituency who are about to run out of unemployment insurance, who have been looking for but cannot find jobs because there are no jobs, and who cannot pay their bills because the welfare payments they get, or are about to get, will not be sufficient to meet their commitments. In what way does this plight in which they find themselves contribute to the over-all economic recovery which the Government tells us is on the move and is showing signs in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is obvious there are still a large number of people who are facing very difficult personal situations. Even in times of very high prosperity in this country we have known people who have lived in poverty and have had to face very difficult situations. I have a great deal of sympathy for those people who are facing such situations. But what the record shows is that the Canadian economy is growing at the present time faster than any other economy among the industrial countries. We are creating jobs faster than any other industrial company.

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Come off it.

Mr. Lalonde: Indeed, we have succeeded in cutting inflation by half in the course of the last year. As a matter of fact we have reduced inflation more than any of the largest seven industrial countries. We are doing everything we can to help the plight of Canadians who are facing difficulties, by stimulating the economy.

Mr. Nielsen: Rubbish.

Mr. Lalonde: But I cannot guarantee to the Hon. Member that he will not be able to identify Canadians even in the best of times who will be in difficulty. I am afraid this is what we must face. What we should do through our social security programs is to try to help those people, and this is what we have done as a government, contrary to a lot of provincial Governments—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the Minister indicates that the Government is working as hard as it can to create jobs. In the meantime, given that we cannot produce a sufficient number of jobs today or next month, or let us say even by this time next year, to meet all of the needs of the people who are unemployed and looking for work, will the Minister recognize the need to extend unemployment insurance benefits to those who are legitimately out of work, who are looking for work and who cannot find work, during this period when the Government has no programs that will meet their needs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Unemployment Insurance Program is already running a large deficit. He also knows that welfare programs, the social assistance programs, are under provincial responsibility and that social assistance programs are there to help people who are in dire straits. My hon. friend should realize that we, as a federal Government, have maintained the social net in this country. We have maintained the social programs, contrary to what has happened in a lot of other countries and contrary to what has happened in a lot of Provinces.

I submit to the Hon. Member that the points he raised should be raised in the provincial Legislature of Ontario—

Mr. Deans: This is where they should be raised.

Mr. Lalonde: They should be asking the provincial Government of Ontario to do its share—

Mr. Deans: These people are unemployed, damn it.

Mr. Lalonde: —in terms of helping people in providing adequate welfare payments—

Mr. Deans: Social insurance was never intended to be pulled back.

Mr. Lalonde: —and providing them with adequate money. At the same time I invite my hon. friend's Party to support the Crow Bill—

Mr. Deans: Sit down.

Mr. Lalonde: —and create those jobs that we need and provide for the investment of $25 billion in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

SMALL PRINT USED IN TELEPHONE BOOKS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I have received copies of petitions from the Townships of Somerville, Anson, Hindon and Minden, Fenelon Falls, Verulam, and many others. They deal with the new print in the 1983 Bell telephone books for the Lindsay-Peterborough area. Will the Minister speak to Bell Canada and ask that company to assure her that this print will be larger so citizens can read the directories? I hope this matter comes within her Department.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not at all sure that it does, but I will certainly take the matter under consideration and look into it immediately.

* * *

SHIPBUILDING

PIP GRANTS—LOSS OF JOBS IN SHIPYARDS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will be aware of the growing concern about the PIP grants program rewarding Canadian entrepreneurs by forcing them offshore for leasing purposes. I ask this question because we now know that in the first six months of this year we lost some 5,869 jobs in Canadian shipyards. Is the Minister giving consideration to the modification of that program so as to keep these jobs here at home in Canadian shipyards?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I always take the representations of the Hon. Member seriously, and I will examine his representation.

CONSTRUCTION OF DRILLING RIGS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. Would he take a look at what he considers a representation in light of the imminent loss of $250 million in new construction for three jack-up rigs for exploration work off the East Coast of Canada alone, three rigs which in turn might provide some 1,800 new jobs for East Coast and river shipyards?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the answer is the same as for the first question.

Mr. McDermid: He doesn't know.

* * *

MULTICULTURALISM

REDUCTION IN SIZE OF CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the new Minister of State for Multiculturalism. First I want to congratulate him on his appointment to the Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: The Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, or what is known as the CCCM, is responsible for providing an ongoing source of consultation to the Government on matters pertaining to the development of Canada's multicultural policy, based on the broadest possible representation. Of course we on this side of the House would very much agree with the basic concept of that particular body.

Why or how is the Minister carrying out a reduction in the size of the Council from the 100 members that it had, to a proposed 25? Why the number 25, and how does the Minister expect to get that broad cross-section of opinion so necessary in this area?

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I worked with him for many years going back to the transport committee, and I am sure we will continue our good relationship.

With respect to the CCCM, the Cabinet did agree in July, following a unanimous recommendation by the CCCM, to reduce the effective working group of the Council to 30 members, not 25 members. That, I repeat, was a recommendation of the Council, and the Government responded to it. The name of the Council will change to the Canadian Multiculturalism Council, which will be a little easier to say. With respect to the operations of the Council, we feel 30 members will be a more effective body in discharging its obligations and giving advice to the Minister. As to the nominees for that Council, that is subject to the normal consideration and consultation.

• (1500)

PETITIONS

MR. HERBERT—NORMALIZATION OF SITUATION OF MISS CILÉ MERVIL IN CANADA

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on Monday, September 19, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

MR. McDERMID—FOREIGN AID—DISCRIMINATION AGAINST TAMIL POPULATION

Madam Speaker: The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) on Monday, September 19, does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—S.O. 21 STATEMENT OF MR. CULLEN—RULING OF MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would like to make a few remarks on the point of order raised in the House by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) concerning a statement made by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) under Standing Order 21.

I believe at the time the statement was made I said to the House that it seemed to me the particular statement was in order. However, having reread it in Hansard, it seems to me that it was extremely borderline and that perhaps it would have been better dealt with under a point of order, since the major complaint of the Hon. Member was that some modifications had been made to Hansard. However, Hon. Members had a chance to reply and to rebut, so I am satisfied that no Member has been frustrated in his right to express his views.

I thank Hon. Members for pointing out this particular case. It is not always easy for the Chair to know what will be the conclusion of an Hon. Member's statement. Some preambles to the questions they want to raise are longer than others. Sometimes the Chair waits patiently and realizes that perhaps the statement was not entirely in order. However, with the help of the House from time to time, I will be able to maintain the objectives of that particular Standing Order. I think we are doing pretty well under it. I will try to check Hon. Members sooner, although I am very reluctant to intervene too soon because I like to give Hon. Members a chance to express themselves.

[Translation]

Regarding the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) in which he protested changes made in Hansard, saying that they went well beyond those allowed in the course of normal editing, I realize that the Hon. Member is not questioning the impartiality or integrity of those who are assigned to transcribe and revise the Debates, but he nevertheless implied, as did the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) in his statement, that the changes made in the transcript went well beyond the limits allowed in editing Hansard. I may remind Hon. Members that Hansard is not a verbatim transcript of the Debates. It is a transcript in extenso of the Debates and obviously, in the case of repetition or for a number of other reasons such as more specific identification, it is acceptable to make changes so that anyone reading Hansard will get the meaning of what was said.

The rule is that when Hon. Members correct their blues, they are not to change the substance or meaning of what they said but only try to improve comprehension of the text. That is the rule and the same rule applies to those who edit Hansard. They must not go beyond their obligation to make a sentence more readable, since there is, after all, some difference between the spoken and the written word.

After reviewing the record and considering the comments made in the House on the days following the occurrence, the Chair is of the opinion that Hansard of Tuesday, September 13, provides, in both versions, a full and objective account of the proceedings. The substance was not materially changed, and the form is the prescribed one. Hon. Members will be aware that calling someone by name in the House is not permitted, certainly not by the person's first name, for the very simple reason that we must know who is meant. There might be three or four Moniques, and we might have five or six Erics, but we only have one of those, no doubt about that. And we do not need more than one.

The editors of Hansard have to change the text so that the reader knows who is meant. In the present case, we had someone who was called by her first name. It was therefore necessary to identify that person as being the Minister of National Health and Welfare. There was also the element of repetition, and furthermore, the sentence was very short. Usually we delete repetitions. When a person is speaking, there is of course a tendency to say the same thing twice, but these repetitions are not reproduced in Hansard. For all the reasons mentioned, the editors of Hansard did the best they could in the circumstances. I looked at the text from every possible angle, but I really do not see how I could have improved on what was produced in the final editing. In my opinion, the final edition of Hansard, considering the freedom given the editors, is objective and was done in the best interests of the House.

The Hon. Member for Yukon suggests that we resubmit the blues to Hon. Members if the editors feel that substantial corrections are necessary. Now we may do that in cases where there is a reasonable doubt, but this will complicate the work of the Hansard editors enormously and also delay the printing and translation of Hansard. So, if Hon. Members agree, and considering the fact that incidents of this nature are rather uncommon, we shall continue to trust our editors.

Point of Order—Mr. McGrath

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I thank you for that ruling. One thing however occurs to me, and that is that, to use this case as an example, the French transcript went to the office of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) for vetting, for correcting. Subsequently it went back to the editor unchanged, and it was changed by the editor. He, the editor, had to exercise a value judgment after a value judgment had been exercised by the Hon. Member, who made no change. You, of course, today have exercised a value judgment with which I wholeheartedly agree, but it denies the Member from exercising the same judgment, because the Member himself or herself could come to a judgment entirely opposite to that exercised by the editor in making the changes subsequent to the vetting of the transcript by the Member; and of course the Chair can come to a judgment the same as that of the editor but quite different from that of the Member.

In order to ensure the utmost fairness, I think as far as humanly possible the transcript should be resubmitted when changes have been made subsequent to the examination by the Member whose transcript is in question.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is concluding exactly the contrary to what I have concluded, that we should continue to have confidence in the editors because, as I have explained, it delays the process enormously if we resubmit the "blues" to the Hon. Member. The Speaker is there to make those judgments, and I have made one today. As the Hon. Member says, there has been no unfairness. I think Hon. Members might inform themselves as to what is admissible and what is not. If the Member in question had been better informed, he probably would have corrected that sentence himself.

● (1510)

However, I think we have done really well despite all of the discussions we have had. I cannot promise that we will re-submit the "blues"; I will only say that in so far as it is humanly possible, we will do so.

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I do not want to belabour the point, but those of us on this side of the House would like to study your ruling a little more carefully and perhaps have this matter discussed through the normal channels. I believe that this kind of discussion, the bargaining or whatever, should not take place on the floor of the House. Perhaps we could discuss this matter with you and also through the normal channels.

Madam Speaker: It should take place on the floor of the House. It is a point of order. There is no other way but to discuss it in the House. I would be very reluctant to discuss it behind the curtains.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I am sorry, I was not talking about the particular point of order. I was talking about the general point that flows from the specific question raised by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen). Perhaps that could be dealt with among House Leaders or whatever.

Madam Speaker: I am in favour of anything that will help House proceedings.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT OF PRIME MINISTER OF UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You may recall that yesterday we had some discussion about the visit on Monday of Prime Minister Thatcher. We put through a House Order. It became evident among discussions with the House staff that there would not be enough time to make the necessary physical arrangements between three and four o'clock on Monday. Therefore, after consultations between House Leaders there has been an agreement that we would have Question Period at eleven o'clock on Monday morning, to be followed with the normal Routine Proceedings until one o'clock. The House would then adjourn until 4 p.m. Therefore, the House Order of yesterday should technically be rescinded.

The new House Order would read as follows:

That on Monday, September 26, 1983, the House shall meet at 11 a.m. and the order of business shall be that usually followed on a Friday, provided that the House shall adjourn that day at 1 p.m.;

That the address of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to be delivered in the House Chamber on Monday, September 26, 1983, at four o'clock p.m. before the Members of the Senate and the House of Commons, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an Appendix to the House of Commons Debates of that day and form part of the records of this House; and

That Prime Minister Thatcher's speech, attendant and related remarks be made available to the media for transmission in the usual way by the House of Commons broadcast system.

I might add that this means some Ministers who will be in meetings with Mrs. Thatcher will be unable to be here for Question Period. I am sure Members will understand that.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, that is agreeable. That order is not a copy of what the Minister was kind enough to provide to me, but I listened carefully to the wording and it is acceptable to us.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree that the order of yesterday be discharged and be replaced by the one just read to the House by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Collenette)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It is so ordered.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,718, 4,971 and 4,996.

[Text]

CMHC TASK FORCE

Question No. 4,718—Mr. Fisher:

1. Was Mr. Donald Matthews of London, Ontario appointed to head a study of Canada Mortgage and Housing operations and, if so (a) on what date (b) on what date did the study end (c) how many days did the study function in total?

2. Were any other persons appointed to act as staff on the inquiry and, if so, in each case (a) what was his/her name (b) for how many days did he/she work on the study?

3. What amount was paid for fees for personal services to (a) Mr. Matthews (b) any extra staff (i) per diem (ii) in total?

4. Were additional amounts paid to (a) Mr. Matthews (b) any extra staff for receipted expenses and, if so, what were the amounts?

5. Was Mr. Matthews a candidate on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party in the Constituency of London East in the general election in (a) 1972 (b) 1974?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. Yes. (a) July, 1979. (b) The study ended on October 15, 1979 and the report was submitted on October 26, 1979 to the Hon. Elmer MacKay, the then Minister responsible for CMHC. (c) July 15—October 26, 1979 (104 days).

2. Yes. (a) and (b)

Patrick E. Brady	7 days
Mac D. Campbell	4 days
Michael A. Goldberg	5 days
G. E. (Ernie) Jackson	2 days
Richard R. Lebeau	6½ days
André Pigeon	11 days
Donald M. Smith	2 days
Lawrence B. Smith	18 days

The services of F.W. Graves and Thomas S. Sloan were also retained but they were not paid on a per diem basis.

3. (a) (i) $300 (ii) $11,700, (b) (i) Varied between $300 and $500 (ii) $21,150.

4. (a) Yes—$5,533.75, (b) yes—$10,807.67.

5. (a) Yes, (b) no.

CANERTECH INC.

Question No. 4,971—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the composition of the Board of Directors of the Canertech Conservation Inc. and what is the address and occupation of each individual?

2. What is the compensation and what are all the benefits paid to the chairperson, directors, president and vice-presidents of Canertech Conservation Inc.?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows:

1.

Name	Address	Occupation
Lorne D. R. Dyke	1003, 213 Notre Dame, Winnipeg, Manitoba, R3B 1N3.	President and Chief Executive Officer, Canertech Inc.
Wilbert H. Hopper	P.O. Box 2844, Calgary, Alberta, T2P 3E3.	Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Petro-Canada.
David P. O'Brien	P.O. Box 2844, Calgary, Alberta, T2P 3E3.	Senior Vice-President, Finance and Planning, Petro-Canada.

2. Information is proprietary to Canertech Inc.

COAL INDUSTRY STUDY

Question No. 4,996—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Is the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources paying $142,656 to establish the prinicpal parameters governing the effectiveness of flocculants to remove particulate matter in coal washery effluents and provision of criteria for the preparation of superior flocculants for specific application and, if so, for what reason?

2. Will this study be in connection with an attempt to convert Cape Breton coal?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

1. Yes, EM&R issued a contract for $142,665.52 to Raylo Chemicals Ltd. of Edmonton, Alberta to establish the parameters governing the effectiveness of flocculants to remove particulates matter in coal washery effluents and provision of criteria for the preparation of superior flocculants for specific applications.

This scientific research and development contract is part of the continuing effort to support the Canadian coal industry by provision of environmentally acceptable techniques/materials for use in Canadian coal preparation plants.

2. No.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 3 and 5 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, it gives me some pleasure to be able to speak on this Bill this afternoon. As all Members know, since the opening of the doors for the fall part of the session of this Parliament we have been dealing with this Bill. We in the Progressive Conservative Party have stood against the Bill as written. This is the eighth day we have put forward speakers, which demonstrates to the House and to those who are concerned, as most Canadians are, that this is an extremely important Bill.

By and large our criticisms of the Bill have related to three general areas. These three general areas take as their first assumption the importance to this country of trade. We welcome the opportunity to speak on the Bill. I cannot think of any theme which has occupied the minds of Progressive Conservative Members more often than the importance of trade to this country, of being able to be world competitive, being able to develop products and services which will stand us in good stead as a trading nation of the world. We have spent time on this Bill to ensure that our objections to it as written are clearly understood.

There are three reasons we are opposed to this Bill. Speaker after speaker has tried to indicate as clearly as possible to the Government, not often listening, why those three criticisms are important and ought to be considered by the Government when it makes it final speeches. First, we have dealt with the Bill itself. We have dealt with it in terms of the corporation. Speaker after speaker has pointed out that the request by the Government to double the capital authorization of this corporation is far beyond what is necessary, an actual doubling of the capital authorization. That is why the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) indicates clearly recognition of the need for credit, the need for insurance, the need for the corporation to be able to assist in our exports, and allows for growth in that opportunity. It does not simply double without any further parliamentary control the capital authorization of the Export Development Corporation.

Also with respect to the corporation, a number of Members in this Party have pointed out, hoping that the Minister responsible and the Cabinet generally would pay attention, that there are criticisms, honest, clear and sincere criticisms by people in this country who use the services of the EDC, that it is wanting, particularly with new customers. Surely it is new customers that this country is interested in when it comes to export. It is with new customers in particular that we have had difficulty making sure that the corporation plays a role that is efficient, that does not have undue delays and is open and accessible to people who want to export from this country to other countries of the world.

We know the importance of jobs and world competition which this country has to engage in over the next 20 years. That is why we have been unimpressed. When it comes to dealing with the corporation, the Government simply will not listen to fair and honest criticism made not only by us but by citizens, companies and corporations in this country which tries to use its services.

There has been a second area of criticism and concern, one which the Government would do well to pay closer attention to. That is the question of the role of Crown corporations in the country. This Bill raises once again a question which has always been an important one to the country, and that is the role of Crown corporations, particularly those Crown corporations that deal with economic development and economic growth.

● (1520)

There is no question that, certainly in the early and middle parts of this century, we have had a proud record of what Herschel Hardin, in a book he wrote some ten years ago, described as the importance of public entreprise to the future of Canada. It was a proud record, but if I could, Mr. Speaker, I would like clearly to explain why we take objection to the way Crown corporations have not been used by the Government but have been abused by the Government.

In 1962, 21 years ago, there were 28 Crown corporations in the country which controlled $8.4 billion worth of assets. Twenty years later there were 300 Crown corporations employing 263,000 people with assets of $74 billion and liabilities of $63 billion. Those are enormous figures, Mr. Speaker. For example, the $63 billion that is owed by the 300 Crown corporations in the country is equal to the total budgetary request of the Government for the last fiscal year.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, Crown corporations have assumed a role and an importance far beyond that which Canadians understood it to be. If I may, Mr. Speaker, let me indicate that the point I make is not a point that comes only from the Progressive Conservative Party. I direct your attention and the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, to the Auditor General's Report of seven years ago to which the Government paid absolutely no attention. At that time, the Auditor General in his Report said:

> In the majority of Crown corporations audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control is weak and ineffective. Moreover, co-ordination and guidance by central Government agencies of financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations—

I emphasize the following words.

> —are virtually non-existent.

The Auditor General said that seven years ago.

These sentiments were echoed in the Lambert Report which said the same thing. What those reports basically said and what I say to you today, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government has so abused the principle of Crown corporations that we no longer have the ability to control those things which we have created. I quote from the Lambert Report, which was an excellent report as many Members may recall. It said:

> In examining the bewildering array of Crown corporations we have found that existing provisions for classifying them and for accountability for each category have been rendered obsolete. The resulting state of confusion, if left unattended,—

This report was written seven years ago.

> —will seriously impair the value of these agencies as instruments of public purpose and do further damage to the tenuous and sometimes obscure accountability links that, in varying degrees, we already have with Government and Parliament.

It is not foolish or silly of me to indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, the second concern of our Party with respect to this Bill. That concern raises a question that the Government has been unwilling to deal with for these many years, and that is the role played by Crown corporations which try to help rather than hurt. For example, those of us who have supported certain Crown corporations in our time have always been clear on one principle about Crown corporations, and that is that they had objectives which were publicly arrived at and which were operated by a board consisting of people primarily from the private sector so that they be run in a businesslike and efficient manner. That principle has been reversed by the Government. At every turn of the road the Government seeks to remove Crown corporations from the scrutiny of the House and the public.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the third area of criticism this Party has for this Bill lies in the area of control by Parliament. Our ability now to control 300 Crown corporations through the House and its committees has, as the Auditor General has said on more than one occasion, been rendered obsolete. The power that Parliament has to control Crown corporations goes to the very heart of what the parliamentary system is about. All of the rights that you enjoy on our behalf, Mr. Speaker, arise from the power of Parliament to control the public purse.

Anyone who says with a straight face and a clear eye that today, after 15 years of Liberal Government, Parliament can control $74 billion worth of assets from 300 Crown corporations is a stranger to the truth, because to do so is not possible. In fact, the Government has become so inured to resolving the problem that it finally invented a Crown corporation to control Crown corporations. That, Mr. Speaker, is why we stand against this Bill and will continue to do so.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise and speak on Bill C-110 after hearing the comments made by my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie). It shows that the Conservatives from the east, the west and the middle of Canada all feel the same way about this abuse of legislative process that puts more and more money in the hands of Crown corporations.

I feel that the Conservative position is not one that is opposed to Crown corporations simply because they are Crown corporations. We believe that there is a place in our society for Crown corporations. All we want is to be sure that they are accountable and that they are accountable to Parliament. After all, we bring them into the world and we should look after them. We should see that they act in a businesslike and reasonable manner and we should see that we do hear from them as to their financial manoeuvrings, their profits, their losses and the work they are doing.

There are several things about this Bill that we do not like. We are against the legislation that exists as well. However, this Bill would increase the borrowing power of this particular Export Development Corporation from $10 billion to $20 billion. That is a great deal of money. It will be done without any referral back to the House to find out what will be done with the $20 billion that the corporation would then be able to borrow. It increases the ceiling for loans and guarantees far beyond what it is at the present time.

I would also like to point out that the EDC is not required to table an operating budget, it is not required to table a capital budget and it is not required to provide us with any information on the size of its payroll. Given those three factors, it is very difficult to believe that we are not giving it a blank cheque to do what it wants.

I would like to quote from the Report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1982, at page 47, where he said, inter alia:

> The time has come for meaningful action to be taken to increase the accountability and control of Crown corporations.

This Bill goes in the exact opposite direction. I really do not see why we should have to tolerate this absolute disregard and defiance of what the accountants tell us is the problem.

● (1530)

I would like to speak for a moment of what has happened with Canadair, the famous Canadair, which was taken over by the Government, along with a Toronto firm, de Havilland, so that it would have what it referred to as a viable air industry which it hoped to sell to private industry when it was finished with it. The Government bought the firm for $46 million. It gave the firm a loan guarantee of $1.35 billion and equity infusions of $440 million. One of our complaints about this firm, of course, is that the board of directors is dominated by Government appointees, the chief one being the Hon. J. P. Goyer, the former Solicitor General and former Minister of Supply and Services. In both of these positions he was a member of the Liberal administration. Along with two other appointees of the Government, he was left to run Canadair. These three appointees have been spectacularly unsuccessful in this operation, Mr. Speaker. They have lost $1.4 billion. One could wonder how much cheaper it would have been to do almost anything else other than to appoint these three people to those positions.

Some people believe that it is a great thing to be sent to the Senate. It costs a lot of money. If you were to reckon that a Senator receives $50,000 a year, and that there are 100 Senators, the amount of money Canadair lost in one year would keep the Senate running for 280 years. This profligate spending amounts to 280 years of the existence of the Senate. However, if you would like to spend it all in one year the way Canadair did, you could pick 280 of the largest cities and towns in Canada and get them to expand their councils to 100 people and give them each $50,000 a year. That is the kind of bill you could pay with the money which Canadair managed to lose in one year. It is an astronomical amount of money to consider.

There is one individual who has kept his role in this pretty quiet, that is, the current Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). When we first got into the Canadair project, particularly the Challenger aircraft, he was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Today I was looking through the records of the House of Commons. The public accounts for the fiscal year which ended in March of 1919 showed some interesting figures from the time of Confederation, which came about in 1867, to 1917, 50 years later. The Canadian Government had managed to get into debt to the extent of $112 million in 1869, in two years. It then went along paying its way to a fair degree, and it was in 1917, three years into World War I, that it managed to get in debt up to the $1.3 billion which Mr. Goyer and his friends were able to lose in one year. What it took to run the country for 50 years, they managed to run up in the form of a loss in that one year.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was very proud in the early days of the Challenger program. On February 10, 1977, he had been that Minister only since September. He said, as reported at page 2934 of Hansard for that date, and I quote:

> I have only been holding that position since September—

He meant the position of Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He went on to say:

> —I announced that Canadair in Montreal would undertake a program for the construction of a revolutionary executive jet, the LearStar. If the program becomes productive, we will directly create some 1,500 jobs at Canadair in Ville Saint-Laurent, which means more jobs than on the Olympic sites during the construction of that so popular stadium in Montreal. Unfortunately the press did not often mention it. And not only those 1,000 jobs directly related to Canadair.

It is only of passing interest that he managed to lose 500 of those jobs in one paragraph. However, there he was, boasting, and we put up with that boasting day after day in the House. Every time the subject was brought up, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would have more to say on it. He said on March 8, 1977, as reported in Hansard at page 3763:

> I could go on like this, Mr. Speaker, in many other fields. However, I might talk for a few seconds, with your permission, about the famous LearStar jet project. I was asked questions in the House this afternoon on that matter. This is becoming one of the greatest success stories in the history of industrial development in Canada.

Such naivete, Mr. Speaker, is unbelievable, at that stage of the negotiations and of the operation of the Crown corporation. He continues:

> Within three months, we have already sold 71 aircraft at a cost of some $5 million each.

He goes on to say:

> Today, less than six months after Canadair first became interested in that project, 60 orders with deposits have been placed and contracts signed. . . . by the end of 1977, a total of 131 aircraft will have been sold, the minimum required for that project to be completely profitable.

This is at March 8, 1977, Mr. Speaker, and he claimed that by the end of that year we would be breaking even on the entire project. That indicates very clearly, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty you have when people who understand very little about the operation of business get into a controlling position of business and are able to delude themselves the way in which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was able to delude himself at that time. Again he said on March 8, 1977, as reported at page 3763 of Hansard, and I quote:

> . . . of the 79 sales made so far, only two or three are for the domestic market. All the others are for export. So we have a great advantage. This project is creating jobs in Canada and the high-quality finished product is being sold around the world. This is one example of the job of work the government is doing in an effort to maintain our capability in the field of high technology while increasing our exports abroad.

Of course, we all know the Federal Express story. The Government lent Federal Express the money to buy its planes and it lent a company the money to build the planes. Therefore, both the vendor and the purchaser were being financed by Government money, and in the eyes of the Government that made for a great success story. It was selling planes. To finance both sides in a deal like that is a mug's game, and it should have been known at the time. In fact, it turned out to be worse than that because, far from buying the planes, Federal Express held the Government to its contract and was able to settle without taking the planes and was given a plane, and I believe it was $4 million, just to let the Government out of a bad contract.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention something which happened considerably later. It was illustrated in The Canadian Military Journal in the winter of 1981, some four years later, when everyone in the country, except the Minister, knew what a failure that program was. The Minister, whose name is mentioned, at the time of the Challenger roll-out was quoted at page 18 as saying, and I quote:

> . . . that he had warned them, (with tongue in cheek) that "if the airplane doesn't work, you will all be out of a job and so will I.
>
> I'm glad the Challenger is such a tremendous success, so now our jobs are secured".

I do not know if the Minister's job is secure or not. I understand he is trying very hard to get another one. But we will find that out within the next few months. However, these frivolities from people such as the Minister—and there is no indication that the Government has become any more hard-headed about it—and the frivolities from politicians in such positions, has cost the Canadian taxpayers $1.4 billion, and I would ask Hon. Members of the House to consider very carefully why we should extend a line of credit to the EDC from $1 billion to $2 billion in order that they can lose money even faster than Canadair, even though it is hard to believe that that is possible.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and the arguments which he has advanced. Surely he does not take himself seriously, nor does he take his argument very seriously. How can the hon. gentleman be at odds with the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) who, before the Hon. Member for Victoria rose, indicated that he fully approved of the role which EDC played, that Canada cannot survive in an international environment without the promotion of exports, and how instrumental EDC has been in promoting exports and creating jobs within Canada?

In today's marketplace, Mr. Speaker, there is no question but that if you wish to strengthen your manufacturing capacity you must sell abroad.

Mr. Malone: Who says?

Mr. Blais: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) says, "Who says?" the fact is, he knows full well that the industry which supports his constituents would not be able to survive were it not for exports. Of the grains grown in Canada, 66 per cent are exported. The only way I can suggest there is any relevance for the Canadair issue in this debate is because the Hon. Member for Victoria wanted to tie the aerospace industry into exports. It is true that in the aerospace industry, which now involves approximately 40,000 workers in Canada, 80 per cent of that industry's production is for export. The hon. gentleman knows that, he was the critic for National Defence. Having followed the evolution of dossiers in National Defence, he knows how important exports are in maintaining a defence production manufacturing base in Canada. Yet he finds objections to a doubling from $1 billion to $2 billion of the line of credit of the EDC in order to facilitate the financing of exports. I just do not follow that sort of reasoning.

● (1540)

The other point I just cannot accept from the hon. gentleman is his castigating the Canadair Challenger. He criticizes the Government concerning certain actions which might have been taken in the past relating to the financial arrangements of Canadair. That has been done before in this House and in committee as well. But what he was saying, Mr. Speaker, is that somehow the Challenger was a poor investment. I personally was involved in that from my very early days in Government and I look back upon it with a great deal of pride because there was a very high risk at the time and the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the now Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien), identified that risk. But this Government and Canadair assumed the risk, and as a result we now have the Canadair Challenger which is the single most effective executive jet rolling off a production line today.

The hon. gentleman knows very well that the Lockheed JetStar is now no longer produced and that the only competition for the Challenger is the Gulfstream III. The international community recognizes that in terms of fuel efficiency, range, passenger comforts, economy of maintenance and performance, the Challenger is superior to any of the competition.

Mr. Blenkarn: You know better than that.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, 20 civil aeronautic records have been broken by the Canadair Challenger. I do not know whether it is because he is from Toronto and the Challenger is manufactured in Montreal and the old competition between those two metropolitan centres is at play, but the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has given himself a mission of attempting to defeat the success of the Canadair Challenger in the Canadian market.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Blais: This is to the detriment of the workers, not only those involved with Canadair but also in the whole supply network, some of whom are in the hon. gentleman's own riding.

I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, the fact that has to be learned here is that Canadian technology is superior once Canadians take the trouble to develop it and bring it into the marketplace. We have had some losses with the Challenger, but in effect that money did not disappear into thin air. It went into development costs, paying suppliers and workers in Canada, and it provided us with the best aircraft of its class anywhere in the world. That is a fact. But what is happening because of the Opposition's criticism of that aircraft? I was in Bromont, Quebec, to open the new blade and vane plant that General Electric built as a major part of the offset program for the purchase of the CF-18 from McDonnell Douglas. That offset is valued at close to $500 million within the next 15 years. I spoke to people who utilize executive jets, from the U.S. as well as from Canada, and they asked me, "What is the matter with you Canadians? Why is it that you criticize your own best technology? We are hesitating about buying Challengers." I asked why. They said, "Because we do not know if you are still going to be in production by the time we reach the mid-life of that particular aircraft. We do not know whether people on the other side are going to want to maintain production of the Challenger. That is why we are concerned about making an investment of over $10 million." That is the point they were making, because they say that when they fly an aircraft, they just do not buy it for today, they buy it for the next 25 years and they need to have spare parts and logistic support, and they have to know that the aircraft is going to be in production. Well, Mr. Speaker, I told them right there and then that as far as this Government was concerned, we were going to keep the Canadair Challenger in production.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: However, Mr. Speaker, I said I wanted them to get to their friends on the other side of the House who were destroying, through their vituperative attacks on Canadian technology, our ability not only to save jobs in Canada but also to make Canadian technology available and popular in the international market. The narrowmindednesses of those power-hungry individuals on the other side of the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: —never ceases to amaze me because even though they may figure that one issue may be politically advantageous in the shortrun, the next 18 months or two years, they forget that Canada does not operate in the short term. Canada addresses its future to the long term. We want to ensure not only jobs for today and tomorrow, but we want to ensure the existence of an industrial structure in this country which will ensure jobs for the next generation.

We are competing with the whole world to create those jobs in Canada here today for the future and one of the areas is the aerospace industry. Why? Because it is an export sensitive industry. That is why the Government and the Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, indeed every Province in this country, wants to find located within its boundaries—what? The aerospace industry. Even Nova Scotia does. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) will know full well that as a result of this Government's policies we have established in his Province a capacity in the aerospace industry that is—yes, IMP, and you know full well the reasons why IMP is developing.

Mr. Forrestall: My God, you were in diapers when IMP started. What are you talking about?

Mr. Blais: All I am saying to you, Mr. Speaker, is that EDC is essential if we are going to tap the international market. If we do, we are going to need money, and if the hon. gentlemen opposite think that in their short-term political interest they can make political points, I call upon them to think about the long-term future. It is their children who are going to be living in Canada, not just those of the Members on this side of the House, who are of course going to be in Government for some time to come.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The debate has gone along quite well and we have, I think, as a general rule in the Chamber, respected the rules with respect to relevancy. I find it somewhat astonishing that a responsible Minister of the Crown would rise, take up 13 minutes of House time, and make absolutely no reference to the matter in front of us. Nor did he even make any reference to the Bill in general concerning the EDC. I think that perhaps there is some point beyond which the leniency of the Chair should not in fact properly go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member is, in the Chair's opinion, absolutely right. The Chair takes great care and pain to exercise the utmost leniency in determining whether a Member's remarks are relevant or not to the subject matter at hand. On many occasions the Chair sits quietly and gives the benefit of the doubt to the Hon. Member who has the floor, because it is anticipated that sooner or later the Hon. Member will deal with the heart of the matter. That happens regularly, in many speeches. However, in the matter involving the last two speakers, the Chair must say that they strayed somewhat far from the subject matter now being debated.

● (1550)

First, I should remind Hon. Members that we are dealing with the Export Development Act and motions which seek to amend two clauses thereto, and that some reference was made to them late in the speeches, I must say, but very little reference has been made. It turned out that the debate dealt with another Crown corporation altogether. In recognizing that the Chair has some difficulty in applying the rule of relevancy, and that Hon. Members are indeed seriously attempting, by illustration, to make valid points in debate, I would invite them to come back to the heart of the matter.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the Bill before the House and the amendments we are considering today, since they concern a fundamental principle—that is quite clear—namely, that Parliament must retain control over the expenditures of Crown corporations. I was listening earlier to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais), whom I would like to congratulate on his new duties. The Minister inferred that the Progressive Conservative Party was more or less indifferent to the importance of Canadian technology and the expansion of Canadian industry. I did not particularly enjoy listening to the malicious and inappropriate comments the Minister of National Defence made before the House. The Minister did not, of course, deal with the contents of the Bill but reminded Hon. Members that the Export Development Corporation had made it possible to accomplish a great deal and, in doing so, had provided a stimulus for Canadian industry.

The Hon. Members opposite know perfectly well that we are entirely aware of the importance of Canadian exports, and that we want those exports to increase. We realize, Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this bill, that it is important for Canada to have access to foreign markets. We are in favour of such markets, and we support the Government provided—I think all of us and all Canadians will readily understand this—that Parliament retains control over the expenditure of public funds. It was true yesterday, and for the last 15 years, and especially the last 5 I must say that we have never seen a Government that has been so eager to dilute and diminish the power of Parliament to control expenditures. The Government is not alone in this building today. Parliament is here and it consists of all Canada's elected representatives. I believe that the responsibilities of these representatives consist in ensuring that public funds, that tax monies collected by the Canadian Government, are spent in a useful and positive manner and in the best interests of Canadians.

That is the principle we are defending in our debate on this Bill and in the amendments we are proposing. We want to make Government Members understand that Canadians want Parliament to have its say when their money is being spent and we mentioned examples including Canadair without challenging the desire of any Government that is supportive of its industry to promote companies like Canadair and the products it has to offer on the world market. But to go so far as to allow a company like Canadair to misrepresent its financial situation in Cabinet and to let it get away with padding their order books . . . I think the Minister of National Defence, like all those other Hon. Members, would be well advised, if they have the courage to do so, to demand that this company at least come clean before a Government that has made it possible for them to make a number of extraordinary accomplishments in the aerospace field. However, if we respect our commitments to our constituents, we cannot allow our corporations to deceive the Government in order to obtain subsidies, and thus cause the public to raise a number of questions for which there is every justification but no answer.

That is why, in the interests of all Canadians, we are emphasizing the basic principle that Parliament must retain control over the expenditure of public funds. This should be abundantly clear to Canadians watching us today, Mr. Speaker. But why, and especially in recent times, are Hon. Members opposite who, like me, are not in Cabinet, leaving it up to the ministers to decide whether or not to give Government support to this or that Crown corporation? Those Hon. Members, like myself, are entirely aware of the increased deficits of Crown corporations. But these corporations do not have to ask Parliament for appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, we know perfectly well that under any Government, representatives, directors and chairmen of corporations are appointed by Cabinet. The chairman of Canadair or Air Canada is not appointed by the Member for some obscure riding but by Cabinet. We all know that. As a result, these people have no obligation to ask for appropriations and have them approved by Parliament. This institution should have responsibility for the expenditure of public funds—that is what Canadians want to know and what they deserve to know. This Government could not care less how public monies are spent by these Crown corporations.

This lack of control on the part of the Government is unacceptable and reflects—I challenge anyone to say otherwise—irresponsibility on the part of a Government that professes to respect the individual. That is the battle we are fighting in the House, Mr. Speaker, and we are being criticized because we insist and demand that Parliament control the expenditures of these corporations. Is this not perfectly legitimate? Mr. Speaker, I have always felt that the expenditures, the massive loans these corporations must contract and which are endorsed by the Government, are just a blank cheque, and they are under no obligation to get prior approval from the House, whose Members are accountable to the people. That is precisely the question which we are raising today, which we raised yesterday and which we will continue to raise as long as necessary because, deep in our conscience anyway, we feel the obligation to ensure that this wanton spending of public funds be stopped, Mr. Speaker. We simply have to insist that this Government refrain from taking decisions in the inner sanctum of Cabinet and from disregarding altogether the opinion of those who have been elected to defend the views and the interests of the population.

That, Mr. Speaker, is why we are asking today to this Parliament, to this House and to Hon. Members who perhaps fail to grasp the significance of our claims that the House be given control over Government spending, because of course the Government is spending the money collected from Canadian taxpayers. With respect to the powers of Crown corporations, we have seen too many examples in recent years—particularly the deficits of Crown corporations and those of the Government—not to seek to regain control by moving amendments to this Bill. Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that we are all in favour of unlimited development, but we insist that the corporations responsible for such development be held accountable to the elected representatives.

I happen to think that it is a legitimate principle and that we have to uphold it in the House. It is a debate and an objective which we must pursue in the best interests of the Canadian people. Contrary to the views expressed earlier by the Minister of National Defence who said that we could not care less about Canadian technology and industrial growth, God knows they have no lesson to teach us when it comes to job creation. It is all very well to talk about creating temporary employment, but what Canadians want are permanent jobs! They also demand responsible management, which they have not had these last few years.

In our amendments and our arguments, we are asking and demanding that the Government give Parliament some control over the spending of the taxpayers' money. We ask, and justifiably so, that Canadians be protected, and not by the Government but by the House of Commons, which indeed played such a role a long time ago and should keep on doing so. However, the Government is trying to grab more and more power as we have seen in other areas, but in this case, if we have anything to do about it, Parliament will not lose its control over the expenditure of public funds. Mr. Speaker, these are the comments that I wanted to make and felt I had to make in the interests of Canada and the future of Canadian industry.

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to make a few remarks in the House concerning the Export Development Corporation. I believe that it would be reasonable for all Members of the House to consider the EDC within the context of what we as Canadians want to achieve over-all on the economic plane. When considering our great strength in Canada we must realize that we depend on our exports above all else for our economic strength. More than any other western country, Canada is an exporting nation in which 30 per cent of our Gross National Product comes from our exports. This is higher than the level in Japan, the United States or any other western nation.

During the past year we have seen the results of strong policies in this area. We have had a record surplus on our trade account. I believe that this record only shows the direction in which we should be heading. Instead of being a success with which we should be satisfied, it indicates to me that since we have succeeded even in these difficult times we cannot sit back on our laurels. We have an opportunity to go ahead and make even greater inroads into international markets of the world. I believe this can be accomplished by setting a new economic target for Canada.

We have many new good news themes coming forward today. For example, interest rates are down and inflation is down. Unfortunately, unemployment is at an unacceptably high level. What direction must be followed in the future in order to resolve these problems? I would suggest that the six and five program, which was very successful, was a defensive measure. We will have to control inflation and keep that defensive measure in place, but the sign of a good team is a balanced offence and defence. I believe that our offence should be on the export side. I would suggest that all Canadians could support a measure under which we work in a non-partisan way as Canadians from every part of the country to try to increase our share of international trade over the next several years from the present level of 3.6 per cent to 4.6 per cent. This is a positive measure which I believe all of us could support.

What should be done specifically? It is not enough to say that we must increase our share of world trade by one percentage point over the next several years. I believe an integral part of the specific measures we should follow to achieve this goal is making the private sector in Canada competitive in the world marketplace. The Government cannot do that. It will be producers in Canada who will determine their ability to compete in world markets. However, part of that competition comes from the public sector for the private entrepreneurs in our country. Part of that support is represented in the EDC.

Every country in the world has some type of body which supports its exporters. It is the Export Development Corporation which is the subject of the debate today. Much of the debate focuses on the fact that our exporters and the EDC itself have been extremely successful in the past. The fact that we want to expand the resources of the Export Development Corporation is an indication of what truly is a Canadian success story and something of which we can all be proud. I am not talking only about those of us in the Government, but about all Canadians from coast to coast.

The fact that we need extra funding for the Export Development Corporation means that we are on the road to achieving that goal of increasing our share of world trade. The Opposition has argued in part that this is an enormous sum to be spending. It has talked about Crown corporations running amuck. However, does the Opposition suggest to us that there is any country in the world where this type of support to the private sector, in terms of concessional financing and insurance against risks, is carried on only by private institutions without the help of public funds? No, they do not. Even the Opposition would have to agree that this is a role which is best performed through the public sector, or at least that we have not found an alternative.

I have listened to many Opposition comments on this subject. I would have to agree with the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) and the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) who have said that their experience with EDC has been one of general satisfaction, and even in some cases enthusiastic satisfaction, for the role that has been played.

We can talk of many success stories. For example, I saw in today's paper that Mitel has undertaken a public issue of $20 million using the new research and development incentives under the previous budget and taking advantage of scientific research investment contracts to raise this $20 million from the private sector in order to increase its capacity to become a world scale producer. Mitel is just one of the many success stories we have in Canada. Public sector support went into the creation of Mitel by way of grants. We have co-operated with Mitel in developing tax incentives, which work on an on-going basis. Certainly the type of service performed by EDC in helping it export to various countries in the world is a valuable complement to what will be an even stronger economic future for Canadians.

There are developments taking place around the world, and one which I welcome is the recent appointment of James Medas in the United States. He is the former Special Assistant to President Reagan and is now the Deputy Assistant Secretary in the State Department. His sole responsibility is to deal with Canadian-U.S. issues.

The United States takes approximately 70 per cent of Canada's exports and provides us with about two-thirds of our imports. The United States is more than a trading partner, it is a close ally when it comes to determining the strength of our economic sectors.

I look forward to a closer co-operation with the United States in resolving the problems which we have experienced over the past several years. I believe we should be concerned about signs in the United States where there are over 60 Bills in Congress aimed at the freedom of Canadians to do business in the United States. This is of no small concern, but with the appointment of this particular individual and with an increased emphasis by our Government, led by our dynamic and outward looking Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), I believe that we will be able to resolve these problems in a way that is even more salutary than in the past, in a way that will take us to the goal of which I spoke, increasing our share of world trade from 3.6 per cent to 4.6 per cent.

• (1610)

What are some of the criticisms that have been leveled at us by the Opposition? The Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) gave a very impassioned speech about Government spending being too high. He wants us to reduce taxes. None of us, I suppose, will ever be satisfied with the level of taxes in this country. But when you compare his statements with some of the statements made by other Members in the Opposition, they are somewhat different. For example, the finance critic for the Opposition want to see us use the extra funds, those from the increase due to the lowering of the level of the deficit and the fact that our economic circumstances turned out better than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) predicted in his April budget, to help consumers. I beg your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, but could you inform me as to how much time I have left?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired. He may continue if there is unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peterson: I can say that this may be a mixed blessing. But it is with a great deal of pleasure that I continue, Mr. Speaker. It is important to point out to Canadians that while we all support the ideal of lowering taxes and lowering Government deficits, even the Opposition does not have a solution in its hands on how to do it. The finance critic said, "We will use these extra funds to stimulate consumer spending." The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) demonstrated his preoccupation with the fact that the deficit was too high. How do you decrease the deficit if you decrease taxes? We all want to get business rolling. I would suggest that one of the most important things we can do is to assist specific measure that will help our economy grow. The best way I see of doing that is to assist our export-oriented producers. They are the ones who have demonstrated that, on a world basis, they are competitive, that they can meet the tests of productivity on an international scale. What better way to do it than to increase the funds and resources available to an institution with a proven track record, namely, the Export Development Corporation?

Hon. Members of the Opposition have indicated at times that they feel the EDC might not be sufficiently accountable to Parliament in terms of its spending.

Mr. Blenkarn: You have got it.

Mr. Peterson: I think the Opposition must look at the facts. After all, it was a Conservative Government that inaugurated the system under which the EDC's capital budget and its reference levels would be approved by an elaborate departmental process. That was a Conservative measure that is being followed by the EDC.

Second, we know the EDC must go through the Estimates process. If it has a loss ratio which has to be made up by a Supplementary Estimate, that goes to committee. Members of Parliament then have an opportunity to explore in depth all of the spending of the EDC. In addition, we have the office of the Auditor General, a very effective mechanism for evaluating the effectiveness of Government programs. We have the audit committee which reports to the Auditor General's office. The Department of Finance, again, can be examined through the Minister on what happens in EDC under any of our provisions because the Minister of Finance must approve any new borrowings or EDC prospectuses.

The corporation's programs have also been the subject of a comprehensive audit. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) knows that a comprehensive audit is a very thorough undertaking by very competent public officials to ensure that the money is being spent effectively in our economy.

These are many ways in which the EDC is held accountable to Members of Parliament. It would be a shame for us, Mr. Speaker, at a point when our exports are leading in many ways our economic recovery, when, to me, they offer the greatest potential for economic recovery in the future and for an expansion of our growth, to cut back on what is a very strong, and I can say I am proud of it, Canadian success story.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett)—Transport—Provision of alternative service to communities affected by Via Rail cutbacks. (b) Communities without service; the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields)—Energy—Incentives for oil sands projects. (b) Government offer; the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—Trade marks and patents—Proposed changes in drug manufacturing licences. (b) Former Minister employed by Department.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-110, to amend the Export Development Act, as recorded (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and Motions Nos. 3 and 5 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am happy again to participate in this debate on yet another amendment to the legislation regarding the Canadian Export Development Corporation.

I want to say at the beginning that I and my colleagues in the NDP, generally speaking, support the thrust of the Conservative amendments to this Bill, including this one, not because we accept the simple argument, and what some of us would think is the simple-minded argument of some, that any expanded public role or state intervention is wrong per se, because it is not. Rather, we support the thrust of the amendments before us because we believe in the safeguarding and creative processes of governmental and public accountability.

To those Members of the Conservative Party who share this rationale, and I know there are many of them, I say we agree with you. But to those other Conservatives, particularly B.C. Conservatives, such as the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish) and the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) and, in fact, most B.C. Tories who are the blood brothers, bed partners and policy partners of the Conservative Government of British Columbia, the Social Credit Government of British Columbia—I must say that I cannot and will not agree with their demonstrated purpose which is to centralize public authority and to destroy even the existing mechanisms of public accountability of Crown corporations and public policy.

The B.C. Social Credit Government, the B.C. Conservative Government and all the P.C. Members I have mentioned, who have on a number of occasions gone public making it clear they are all one and they essentially believe in the same things, are part and parcel of a government policy in Victoria which has disbanded the legislative committee on Crown corporations. Meanwhile, some of the federal Tories have the unmitigated gall to say in this House that they want desperately to see the same kind of committee in order to bring our federal Crown corporations under control.

They cannot have it both ways. They and their friends in British Columbia have disbanded the legislative committee on Crown corporations, thus destroying the very kind of agency which their colleagues in the federal Parliament have advocated.

Do they speak with a forked tongue, Mr. Speaker, or are they simply confused? I prefer to believe that, because they are honourable men and women, the latter is the case. But Canada at this time of economic difficulty and challenge cannot afford such gross confusion that says "nonaccountable state intervention and irresponsible heavy borrowing by Crown corporations and Government agencies is okay as long as it is us Tories and Socreds that do it, but it is the devil's work and the road to ruin if done by anybody else." They cannot have it both ways. We can look at the record in British Columbia to see what these people do when they have the power of government. That Government, essentially a Conservative Government, has gone from $4 billion to $14 billion or $15 billion in Crown corporation and agency debt in less than eight years. There has been an increase in that Government's Crown corporation debt by over 350 per cent in less than eight years. That is what a Conservative Government has done in the Province of British Columbia. Often this is based on totally false projections of market growth and revenue potential despite some very informed warnings to the contrary. Conservative words and actions just do not jibe. They talk one line and they follow another. They are not bad guys, just confused.

• (1620)

Saul Alinsky once said that the secret of successful social action is to get people to do the right things for the wrong reasons. In the case of this Progressive Conservative amendment, the Official Opposition is advocating doing the right thing for the wrong reason. But because we would never question its motives in the House, we will likely support most and possibly all the amendments in order that we may do the right thing for the right reason—to provide greater parliamentary control and public accountability, and not simply because of blind dogma.

The "tinker toy" approach of the Liberals to government must be stopped. Growth for the sake of growth is just plain dumb. I fully agree with my Conservative friend who decried the number of bureaucratic academics in Government. To that I would add the excessive number of lawyers and others, whom I would call woolly-headed idealists abounding in the circles of Government and many other institutions across the country. By "idealists", I am referring to those lawyers and academics who fall into the trap of thinking that simply because a law is passed something has actually been changed. Anyone with experience in the real world knows that that just ain't so. Unless we have the will to perform a function, unless we have enforcement mechanisms, unless we have our roots down deep in the marketplace and in the realities of the world, nothing happens simply because a few words in the law have been changed. It just does not work that way.

There has been some talk and debate, going slightly beyond the amendment generally addressing some of our export and development strategies for trade. One example of export and industrial strategy has to be the joint decision of the Government opposite and the Conservative Opposition to launch the pre-build pipeline, an issue they would like to forget. That was part of an export strategy. They have fallen flat on their faces with that, as they have fallen flat on their faces with Northeast Coal in British Columbia, a combination of provincial Government and federal Government bungling. They gave the United States exactly what it wanted. We built a pre-build pipeline at our expense to sell our gas at cheap prices to the United States. They gave up all our leverage, as Canadian Governments have often done, for future bargaining over trade and other matters. Then they squeal because the Americans keep coming back and saying, "Cut your prices, cut your prices". We keep lowering the prices because we have no leverage left. We have no guarantees. The lever which could have been used to strengthen our economic position was thrown away. Both the Liberals and the Tories were compliant partners in the whole process.

Now we see the Conservative Government of British Columbia and the federal Liberal Government, with regard to Northeast Coal, using taxpayers' money to subsidize the export of a non-renewable resource. As was the case with the pre-build pipeline, our Japanese customers are now saying that they must have a lower price, and we have no option but to give it to them because we have thrown away whatever leverage we might have had. How long do we have to listen to these Liberal and Tory bunglers? They throw away our leverage.

One does not play poker in the international marketplace with all one's cards face up. The other guys do not play the game that way. Canada has that kind of absolutely stupid reputation. That Party on the Government side and the Official Opposition on this side still have the same naive attitude they have displayed time and time again—give the store away and wonder why others take advantage of us. I for one and some people in business and labour with whom I have been associated, who know a little about bargaining on both sides of the table, do not believe that we can throw away all our bargaining power and then have the unmitigated gall to complain because the rest of the world does not hand something over to us on a platter. There has to be an end to this kind of jackass, stupid bargaining. We should get on with the job of developing a country which works and of which we can be proud.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, in following so shortly after the comments of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Peterson), I am pleased to join the debate and to emphasize once again that the issue is not one of trade, that the problem is not trade. It is the issue of parliamentary accountability that has plagued this Parliament. More than any other, it distinguishes the Party for which I speak this afternoon from the Party which represents the Government. I will be referring this afternoon to the continued proliferation of Crown corporations and the lack of parliamentary accountability.

The Auditor General noted seven years ago that the majority of Crown corporations lacked financial management and fiscal control. Four years ago the Lambert report indicated that existing provisions for classifying Crown corporations and the accountability of each had been rendered obsolete. Just one year ago the Auditor General warned Canadians that the growing practice of using Crown corporations to conduct a widening range of Government activities has so strained our accountability framework that Parliament may not be able to exercise its fundamental responsibility for overseeing receipts and disbursements of public funds.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are dealing with Bill C-110, an Act to amend the Export Development Act.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why don't you read the amendment?

Mr. Blais: It is part of the accountability process involved in this particular Act. The reason the Hon. Member is debating this Bill is that a provision is built into the Act that every now and again we have to come back before the House in order to change it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Obviously the Minister is making a speech.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is it accountability or lack of accountability? Bill C-110 is now the battleground, and the amendments proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) have set out the position of this Party extremely well.

Mr. Blais: That is why we are here.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): I tell the Minister opposite that the vast majority of Canadian people support our position that Parliament must ultimately control the purse strings of the nation. Quite frankly, Canadians are fed up with billion dollar deficits and lame excuses. They are tired of the stonewalling and backpedalling on the Government side. People work too hard for their money to see it squandered by Crown corporations without so much as an explanation or without coming before Parliament.

• (1630)

We see in Bill C-110 all the elements of one more Crown corporation slipping away from Parliament's control. The Export Development Corporation has at present $10 billion in borrowing authority and $1 billion in authorized capital. Of these limits, less than $5 billion has been used up in borrowings and less than one-half of the authorized capital has been paid in.

We on this side fought the suggestion that the limits should be doubled, and we did so for a very good reason. If the Export Development Corporation needs more borrowing authority or more capital, the EDC should come to Parliament, ask for and justify that request. The Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) disagrees. He says that it is tiresome and inefficient to come to Parliament to justify the expense, and if a Minister is responsible, then what is the problem of the Opposition? Our problem has been the experience of the past. Our problem is the Post Office, VIA Rail, de Havilland, Canadair, Eldorado Nuclear, and I could go on. Name any Crown corporation. Year after year the deficits mount and the questions go unanswered. Meanwhile, the public goes on paying and praying. Motions Nos. 3 and 5 as well as Motions

Nos. 6 and 8, seek to keep the Export Development Corporation on a responsible track.

Bill C-110 proposes to increase the limits of a discretionary section of the Act from $3.5 billion to $10 billion. Under this section, the Cabinet may overrule or override a decision which the board of directors of the EDC has judged not to be in the best interests of the corporation. Not a good deal for the corporation is defined in the Act as one that "would, if entered into or issued, impose upon the Corporation a liability for a term or in an amount in excess of that which the Corporation would normally undertake." Should the corporation make the decision, the Cabinet may yet decide, good deal or not, whether it chooses to approve the transaction, and it is free to do so under these provisions of the Bill. It can overrule the board of directors which it has set up. Needless to say, if the transaction proves to be a dead loss, the taxpayers are obliged to make up that loss, or the deficit.

We believe that $3.5 billion, even with today's money, is ample. Should it not be sufficient, the Government owes it to the taxpayers of Canada to come before Parliament to ask for more. There is no indication, however, that $3.5 billion is an inadequate total at present. Less than half this amount has now been used. Why the unseemly scramble for an almost threefold increase? Does the Government have more Algerian monuments in mind, or are we to become a corporation of speculators, par exellence, a superman?

The motions before us simply wish to give the Members of this House an opportunity of review, and nothing is more fair than that. The Minister has tried to downgrade this debate, as has the Parliamentary Secretary, by attacking the Opposition for not caring about trade. Of course we care about trade. Of course we are concerned with our export business, and sometimes the deficit. However, this debate is not about trade. It could have and would have taken place over any other piece of legislation seeking to remove a Crown corporation a little further from the responsibility of Parliament.

I would be rather derelict in my duties and responsibilities to my constituents, as would any Member of this House, if I did not stand in my place and make every effort to protect their hard-earned dollars. Canadians have seen from experience what happens when Parliament's control over the purse-string is weakened. Deficits and red ink financial statements are now the order of the day. It is time that stopped. We on this side have proposed amendments to put a halt to this continuing erosion of our dollar. It now behooves the Government to demonstrate that it too has respect for the taxpayers' dollar by accepting these amendments. I urge the Government, in this last minute of my time, to do so.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, at this stage in a debate it is sometimes difficult to bring a lot of new information before the House. However, when a Government is determined to resist change and resist improvements to a Bill as much as this Government, it is sometimes necessary to emphasize the points you want to make.

The amendments we are dealing with, Nos. 3 and 5 put forward by the Conservative Party, deal with the authorization for capital borrowing of the Export Development Corporation. A couple of main issues spring to my mind when we think of the Export Development Corporation. One is, as other Members have suggested, trade. Some Government Members try to make it appear that we on this side are opposed to trade. If one examines some of the facts as to what has happened with regard to trade during the last 15 years that this Government has been in power, one finds some very interesting figures staring one in the face.

At present about 30 per cent of our Gross National Product is derived from trade. We appreciate that. Others have indicated the importance of that.

Mr. Blais: Talk about the trade surplus.

Mr. Halliday: The Minister talks about the trade surplus raw materials and grain products and does not mention the surplus in manufactured goods, which is way down. In 1968, the share of world trade that Canada enjoyed at that time was 5.74 per cent. In 1981, 13 years later, it was down to 3.8 per cent, close to a 50 per cent drop in the proportion of world trade that this country enjoys. That is no credit to the present Government. It indicates its lack of concern about the trade this country should be enjoying.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association looked at this problem from a different point of view. It indicated that if we were to regain our share of world trade to the extent we had in 1970, just 11 years ago, we would create 2.7 million jobs. That is the number of jobs that would have been created during the past 15 years if the Government had had a true concern about trade and not just trade in raw materials and other products which do not produce many jobs, like the manufacturing sector does.

We might ask ourselves why we have had this poor trade performance. A few moments ago we heard from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Peterson). He tried to justify the present status of trade that he believes we are enjoying. He failed to acknowledge that the significant drop from 5.7 per cent to 3.8 per cent is probably because we have suffered from a lack of productivity in this country over the last number of years under this Government. We may ask why we have suffered from a lack of productivity. It probably boils down to one most significant point, which is the fact that the present Government, although it is trying to recoup its position now, has, over the years, failed to recognize the need for spending money on research and development in science and technology.

● (1640)

I well remember that when I first came to the House about nine years ago, the then Minister responsible for science and technology was trying to tell Canadians that we did not need to spend money on research in science and technology, that all we needed to do was to buy the research from the United States or from some western European country. The attitude of the Government was that money did not need to be spent on science and technology. As a result, we now see that we are spending 1.2 per cent of Canada's GNP on science and technology compared to the United States which spends 2.4 per cent of its GNP on science and technology and Japan which spends 2 per cent of its GNP on science and technology. It is not surprising, therefore, to anyone who analyses the trade situation, that one of the major reasons for our difficulty is the fact that we as a country under the present Liberal Government have not been willing to spend any significant amount of money on science and technology.

Trade is the main consideration here today. The other consideration is the issue of Crown corporations. These are the background problems which lie behind the Bill that is before the House today and the amendments we are trying to introduce to this new legislation.

When looking at the issue of Crown corporations, one interesting fact that comes to mind is that they employ some 263,000 persons. That is over a quarter of a million persons. Yet I am sure that Canadians do not realize that Government Departments themselves employ fewer people than that. There are fewer public servants employed in Government Departments than in Crown corporations now. That is how far out of hand and out of control the Crown corporations have got, and many successive Auditors General have told us so. There are now roughly 25,000 more people employed by Crown corporations than by Government Departments. That, of course, does not take into account the 84,000 people in the Armed Forces.

One cannot help but think about the waste that has been shown to us over the years by the successive Auditors General with respect to Crown corporations. My colleague who is here in the House this afternoon, the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), told an interesting story some years ago when I was a novice in the House. It was before the 1979 election, I believe, Mr. Speaker, and at that time he said that, in his view, it only took two documents to win an election. One was a description of how our tax dollars are spent and the second was the Auditor General's report. I believe that the Hon. Member for South Shore knows what he is talking about. He has campaigned in perhaps seven or eight elections.

Mr. Crouse: Ten.

Mr. Halliday: Ten elections, I am sorry. He said that all he had to do was to bring to the attention of his electorate in South Shore the manner in which tax dollars are spent by Crown corporations, for example, and the waste that occurs there. A research document that was prepared prior to this debate gave 18 horrendous examples of how Canadian tax dollars were wasted by the various Crown corporations.

Another interesting aspect of today's debate is the subject of the failure by the Government to be responsible to Parliament for some of its expenditures. This has been discussed a great deal during this debate. However, when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) spoke a few moments ago, he did not even refer to that point. We are making it one of our major points, yet the Minister did not acknowledge it as being an issue. He spoke as if the accountability of the Government was not of concern to the people. I was disappointed that he did not make some reference to that particular complaint that we have.

The other major issue that I would like to touch upon for a moment or two, Mr. Speaker, in the time that is remaining to me, is the lack of private-sector involvement in Crown corporations. I will first acknowledge that the Bill before the House will improve that situation somewhat as far as the Export Development Corporation is concerned. Before, there were to be 12 members on the board, at least six of whom were to be public servants. We will now have 15 members on the board, apparently with no requirement in the legislation for some of them to be public servants, yet the Government has said that there will be six of them nonetheless.

I had an interesting experience this past weekend which I cannot help but recount. I had the occasion to be at a banquet with one of the leading Liberals in Ontario. He happens to sit on the board of one of the country's prominent Crown corporations. He told me that what bothered him most about Crown corporations was their failure to have the private sector adequately represented on their boards. I found it interesting, in light of the debate we are now having regarding EDC, to hear this gentleman who is one of the strongest supporters of the Liberal Government indicate that his principal criticism of Crown corporations was their failure to meet the increasing need for more input from the private sector.

The same issue was, of course, raised by the Economic Council of Canada. It realized as well that that problem exists, and its document entitled "Intervention and Efficiency" states on page 51:

> Canada is perhaps the country with the least private-sector participation in export financing decisions.

That corroborates what my Liberal friend told me at lunch the other day, and that is, that we need to have more input from the private sector.

Perhaps I may close, Mr. Speaker, by reading something which sums up the situation surrounding Crown corporations. As I am sure you have heard before, Mr. Speaker, Professor André Raynauld of the University of Montreal said that Crown corporations were, and I quote:

> —rapidly becoming a bureaucratic monster, borrowing and lending money, making unsound loans to foreign countries, extending its empire, and involving Canada in transactions and negotiations that are both costly and inefficient.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, in echoing the words of the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), and especially his last words, I would have to say that the bureaucratic monster referred to by the professor whom the Hon. Member quoted has already come into existence. We have the monster. It is now time to find somebody who can slay the dragon.

If the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) is to be used as an example of how we secure accountability, particularly when it involves something like $50 billion to $60 billion of taxpayers' money, suggesting to us that accountability comes when the legislation is amended is the height of irresponsibility and is an example of just exactly what this debate is all about and the reason why the Government has screwed things up in this country so badly for so long.

The people of this country require and desire some real accountability and recognition.

Mr. Blais: Has the Hon. Member ever heard of Estimates?

Mr. Coates: Estimates? Before the Hon. Minister came here, we knew what Estimates were and we knew how they were debated and we knew something about the accountability of Ministers for the money they spent. I wonder how many times since the Minister has been on the Treasury benches he has appeared before Members of Parliament to be accountable for the moneys that were his responsibility and were spent by him.

Mr. Forrestall: Three times in seven years.

Mr. Blais: Three times in one year.

Mr. Coates: Three times. That is an example, Mr. Speaker, of exactly what I am talking about. There is no accountability. The Government is out of control. A $31 billion deficit is the end result of the Government being out of control. That is what we are talking about here today. The Government layers on another $30 billion or $40 billion that it wants to move around at its whim and pleasure for its friends, and we say that there is no responsibility to the taxpayers of the country. We say that we need to get things under control so that Parliament does have something to say.

● (1650)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which refers to the question of procedure and Estimates. There are usually Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates As, Bs and often Cs. In most instances I have appeared before committees in order to defend Estimates, either the Main Estimates or Supplementary Estimates As, Bs or Cs.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, that is just a spurious point of order. It is another example of the Minister not really being serious about what this debate is all about. That is a sad fact of life. Here we are debating a piece of legislation which could involve at least $50 billion of the taxpayers' money, which will be lent to various people. Some of it will be returned, some of it will not, if this corporation's past history is any example of how one can blow money totally. Yet, the Minister is getting up and suggesting to us that every once in a while there are some Estimates which come before us. That is true, but for a very limited period of time. You reach a deadline, and it does not make any difference what you are talking about during that period of time, all of a sudden Parliament spends two, three, four or eight hours voting, just rubberstamping, with no real control by the Opposition which is faced with a majority Government. It is the worst kind of democratic dictatorship there is when a majority comes in and just forces all the expenditures through in a limited number of hours. Hon. Members of Parliament on this side of the House are given no opportunity at all to speak to and be concerned about most of these issues, especially the overspending which is exemplified by a $31 billion deficit.

Mr. Blais: Why did you not change the rules when you were in power?

Mr. Coates: We, as Members of Parliament on this side of the House, have made some very reasonable amendments. We have made some proposals which would improve the Bill, which would guarantee protections to the taxpayers which do not exist now, and if the Government were responsible, it would take seriously those amendments and say, "All right. You want more protection for the taxpayer, we all should want more protection for the taxpayer and so we will accept a degree of accountability which does not exist in the Bill now." The amendment would be accepted, and then we would really be able to take this Government seriously. But you cannot take a government seriously when you tell it what its failings are, when a person as non-political as the Auditor General backs up your argument, and it still rejects out of hand any aspect of the proposals which you bring forward in the form of amendments.

We talked about the greater involvement by the private sector on the board. The Hon. Member for Oxford just laid out some of the criticisms which exist about our country as compared with others. There is no one in this Party who does not want to assist the private sector companies to become better traders than they are at the moment. Any way we can do that, we are anxious to do it. That is what it is all about. That is where the jobs are.

Someone was talking about reducing the deficit and at the same time giving people back more of their tax dollars. That can happen, Mr. Speaker, if we take the almost two million people who are unemployed today and give them jobs. And if we can assist the private sector to go out and get the contracts, wherever they might be, and produce the jobs here, then we will get the people off the unemployment rolls. They will not then be a drag on the state. They will be an asset to the state. There will not then be a $31 billion deficit. We will be trying to bring our budget into balance. However, if we are going to be the captives of a bureaucracy sitting on this board, as they are in every other Crown corporation, then I say, Mr. Speaker, we run the risk of another Canadair, another de Havilland, another one of the myriad Crown corporations which just mess things up and which have a bunch of incompetents at their head because this Government does not know how to get beyond the pork barrel. The only people who end up on boards are defeated Grits.

Mr. Blais: That is not true.

Mr. Coates: As the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker said when he was in the House, "They know how to win their war against poverty"—

Mr. Berger: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman referred to defeated Grits on the boards of Crown corporations. I would like to ask him if David Culver, the President of Alcan, who is the Chairman of Canadair, is a defeated Grit.

Mr. Coates: I will ask the Hon. Member if he remembers a fellow by the name of Barney Danson, who is now Chairman of de Havilland, who ran up something like a $446 million deficit last year, and who, when he served in the Armed Forces, was in the Army? He knows as much about de Havilland and aircraft as my son, who has never flown in one.

What the Grits had better get out of the habit of doing is just finding soft chairs for every defeated Liberal, and I will tell you that after the next election you really will be lonely because you are not going to have a government in Canada, and there is not going to be any—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Order. I am sure the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates) realizes that remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. Maybe I got carried away a little bit.

An Hon. Member: Now you are speaking the truth.

Mr. Coates: There are many Liberals who are almost more fortunate in being defeated than by being elected, because they end up in some form of heaven, or at least as close to heaven as you can get while you are still on earth, by being appointed a director of some Crown corporation. And if you do not end up in a Crown corporation, you end up in the other place, which is even lovelier, because that is the way to go to heaven while you are still on earth.

Mr. Epp: Especially for the member from Yonge and Bloor.

Mr. Coates: To come back to this Bill and the reality of the day, we must face up to the fact—

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would like to call to the attention of the Hon. Member that, even allowing for the interruptions, the time allotted to him has expired.

The Minister of National Defence is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Yes, Mr. Speaker, simply to point out to the House that the Hon. Member should recognize heaven, having been in limbo for two and one half years.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence had better improve upon his humour or the possible art of making jokes, because he is really not creating any special image for himself. He is no Rodney Dangerfield, that is for sure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there agreement for the Hon. Member to continue?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue his remarks.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the willingness of the House to give me some additional time and I believe I would like to go back, not to the partisan aspect of my speech, but to say just how seriously we, on this side of the House, take this particular piece of legislation. It is important because of the possibility of creating employment for those people in this country who right now feel they have little or no hope of entering the labour market again. What we are saying, Mr. Speaker, is that this can be done with all kinds of built-in production for the public and without in any way interfering with the effectiveness of the legislation in question. As a matter of fact, if there were greater private sector participation on the board of the EDC, there would be all kinds of possibilities which will never exist if it is loaded with public servants. They are not out there every day fighting for their lives, trying to get contracts which will keep their companies in operation. They are sitting here in their glass houses surveying all they control.

• (1700)

What we seriously recommend is to put into place business people who know what it is like to have to go out there and fight for a contract. They need the EDC to be of assistance, not a hindrance. They need to know what it is going to do for them and that it has to account for what it does to the Auditor General and the Parliament of Canada. We do not have that now, but if we receive that, then I think this Government will make a degree of progress which does not seem possible at this moment in time, and we will be much more satisfied that the Government at last realizes what has been happening in this country and will then know how to get it moving in the proper direction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 3. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 5. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to Motion No. 6 and Motion No. 8 which are grouped for debate but will be voted on separately.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-110, An Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 14 by striking out line 11 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall not at any time exceed 3 billion 500 million and 1".

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C-110, An Act to amend the Export Development Act, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out line 38 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall not at any time exceed 2 billion 500 million and 1".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the House will know, and I hope the Minister now appreciates, that this Party is 100 per cent in favour of increasing Canada's trade. Indeed, if we were in Government we would not be falling behind in our share of world trade the way we have done under this Government. Our trade would be growing and expanding and we would be using the private sector and the ability of private entrepreneurs to supply the financing, the go, the insurance and the capacity this country so badly needs. The issue is not trade, the issue is accountability to Parliament. Parliament cannot under any circumstances give any government a blank cheque. Parliament cannot vote money for no definite purpose other than the amorphous purpose to supply to some group of bureaucrats in the future some day, somewhere, the right to take without a vote ever again money to support a program, whether it is good, in the sense that Parliament would approve it, or not.

Sir, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) has been here most of the afternoon and he said we could vote on appropriations for money to be put into the EDC, which would presumably be available to the Government to spend as it desires with respect to export promotion. The Minister will know that that is not the case. Once this Bill is passed, the Government will be able to draw down $62 billion in one form or another by either subscriptions to capital or through loans by the corporation, by insurance placed by the corporation to cover export goods or by loans made by the Governor in Council to people who, as the corporation's own directors have said, are not credit worthy, or by guarantees made to people who, as the Corporation's own directors have said, are not credible.

Sir, this Bill gives the Government $62 billion worth of authority, and any Member of Parliament who allows this Bill to go through the way it is is not fulfilling his duty to his constituents, the people of Canada. This is a heinous Bill, which under no circumstances should ever pass this House of Commons. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in the last group of amendments over 80 Members of Parliament speaking for the Progressive Conservative Party spoke out and demanded accountability. I say to you, Sir, that those Members will again rise and speak out demanding accountability. We will continue to rise and speak out demanding accountability because we will not have Parliament become a rubber stamp for $62 billion without any further votes, just on the basis of something that some Minister and his henchmen in the Civil Service may decide is in our best interests.

Under no circumstances, Sir, can this Bill be proceeded with in the way it is. These proposed amendments will at least partially control the rape of the public Treasury and the credit of Canada. We must pass these amendments or work out something with the Minister or the Government to come to grips with the problem. we cannot go on forever debating the contention that Parliament is meaningless and this Government has the God-given right, because it is Liberal and trade is a wonderful thing, to grab $62 billion and use it as it sees fit.

Sir, dealing with Motions Nos. 6 and 8, the Government presently has the right to endorse, guarantee and insure up to a limit of $3.5 billion by Order in Council alone activities in the nature of trade which the directors of the EDC find improvident or poor deals. How that legislation ever came to be in place is beyond me. How any previous Parliament could have ever given the Governor in Council the right to go out and sign Canada's endorsement on promissory notes right around the world is beyond me. I remind Your Honour that these are promissory notes which the directors of the Export Development Corporation find to be the kind with which Canada should not be involved. However, that is what the present Act states. Under Bill C-110, the Government wants the right to extend this guarantee provision, this insurance provision, ordered by Order in Council alone, to $10 billion. The amendment brings it back to reason, back to the $3.5 billion. It does not go far enough. The amendment should abolish the right to make guarantees without coming to Parliament. However, that is as far as one can go when one is amending a piece of legislation, according to the rules of the House.

● (1710)

Then the question comes to us: Does the Government need this money? How does it use these guarantees? The fact is that while it has the right to go out in the world markets and sign improvident promissory notes and give improvident guarantees, which even its own directors and its own officers say are not fair, are not good and amount to bad business for Canada, it has done so to the extent of $460 million. It still has the authority, under the existing legislation, to guarantee over $3 billion worth of trade notes and receivables and the like without the Bill going through.

One of the key principles of legislation demanding money from Parliament is that there be a need for the money. The Government cannot, under any stretch of the imagination, show the need for the guarantees and the kind of activity described in Motion No. 6. It still has over $3 billion of the right to give insurance and guarantees by Order in Council, without ever coming to Parliament, under the existing legislation; yet the Minister, without any thought at all, without ever explaining either in committee or in the House why he needs this guaranteed right, is coming to Parliament to ask for $10 billion worth of the right to sign promissory notes and make guarantees. He does not need that authority. There never was a need for that authority. There is no demand for that authority. No Parliament should have ever given the authority in the first place. To demand what he wants is totally and absolutely obscene. It is the kind of request that should be torn out of the Bill. I would expect the Minister in this debate to stand up and withdraw the whole section because he should know that this business of guaranteeing insurance claims, receivables and promissory notes that are not within the concept of the requirements of a prudent board of directors is the kind of guarantee that no one should allow.

I notice that Your Honour is rising. I will ask the consent of the House to continue because, unfortunately, these amendments are both separate and grouped for debate, and I would appreciate some help.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to extend his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House. Motion No. 8 is different from Motion No. 6 in that it deals with another activity by the Government. Under Motion No. 8, the present Bill provides that the Governor in Council have the right to take money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund up to the extent of $2.5 billion and to lend that money to foreign companies, foreign countries or people to finance foreign trade. I want to read into the record of the House the terms of the loans as follows:

31. (1) Where the Minister reports to the Governor in Council that

(a) the Board is of the opinion that a proposed loan or guarantee of the kind described in section 29 would, if made or issued, be for a term or in an amount in excess of that which the Corporation would normally undertake in relation to any one export transaction, person, country, government or agency thereof or in relation to a particular export transaction, person, country, government or agency thereof, and

(b) in the opinion of the Minister it is in the national interest—

The Minister can make those loans from the Consolidated Revenue Fund right now to the extent of $2.5 billion, and he wants it to be increased to $10 billion. What he is asking us to do in Bill C-110 is to give him $10 billion so that that money will never again have to come to a vote in Parliament. The Bill carries on until the money is all spent. It is a statutory amount in the Estimates. One never votes on it, one cannot dispute it. It is like the old age pension. One cannot say anything about it unless there is a change in legislation. It is statutory. He wants the right to have that amount of $10 billion so that by Order in Council it can be lent to whoever for whatever period. That is the way it will be. Right now the Government has the right to spend up to $2.5 billion. The Government has lent $711 million as of its last end of year. Therefore, as of its last end of year, it had roughly a $1.8 billion leeway.

The Government may state that it has commitments to give to foreigners, that it has agreed to give, for example, the people of New York City $600 million of Canadian money at 9.7 per cent. I want to say to Your Honour that the New York deal was turned down in large part by the directors of the Export Development Corporation, but the Cabinet, so businesslike, so competent, so capable, so careful with the money of the taxpayers of Canada, wanted to lend to the city of New York, which was at one point, I believe, virtually declared bankrupt, $1 billion. It therefore had to come up with $650 million from the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada needs to help the poor, deprived people of New York. The Government of Canada therefore has a commitment, according to the Minister, to take out of this $2.5 billion allowance that extra $650 million or so to give to the city of New York. Even if the $650 million is taken against the limit, there is still a great deal of a limit there.

There should not be any limit there. If the Government of Canada wants to make grants, loans or advances through Cabinet order, then it should come to this House and present an estimate, a Bill, and allow Parliament to vote with respect to the money so that Parliament would have some say as to the purpose of the money.

What we have here is a Bill which gives the Government the right to use the money any way it wants. There are really no restrictions. Any transaction in any agency, government or corporation does not have to be proven to be for the benefit of Canada. As long as the Minister says it is for Canada's benefit, then it is and we rubberstamp it. Under these two provisions there is the right to go to a total of $20 billion. That is unconsionable.

● (1720)

If the Minister were to come to us to say that the Government will need $500 million of taxpayers' money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to promote a particular job or project, we could work out a system whereby the money could be expedited for that project or system. But to give any government, even if it happens to be a Progressive Conservative Government, this right not only this year but next year and in the years to come is wrong because a government is only that. The Members of this House are the representatives of the people of Canada. They have the obligation from the time Parliament was first created to grant or refuse funds to Her Majesty. It is our obligation as Members of Parliament to fight for that principle and to insist upon it.

I point out that that is what this debate is about. It is not about exporting or foreign trade. It is about one thing, the fact that government must be accountable to Parliament and government does not have the right to demand a blank cheque of Parliament. It matters not what the cause is. Export is quite a valid cause, but the cause does not matter. The Government does not have the right to ask this of us and it does ask this of us in this Bill. These amendments must be supported, and I would appreciate the House giving them its support.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is clear in general terms to Members opposite why we on this side have reservations about the Bill before us. It is question of accountability to Parliament of a Crown agency to control a very significant chunk of public money. This Bill would give it control of a very much larger chunk of public money as well. In itself, the request for more money might make some sense, although I must say that so far I do not believe that the Government has had the courtesy to try to present any sensible case for asking for such a huge increase in the ceiling put upon EDC by statute.

I say to Government Members opposite that if there is a sensible case to be made why the Export Development Corporation needs so much increase in the ceiling, to please make it. I know that some of my colleagues on this side are concerned that EDC is being used by the Government to become another foreign agency, particularly since the Government wants to have a CIDA representative on the board. I must say that I personally may be less alarmed about the question of EDC acting as a giver of foreign aid since I was convinced by the hearings of the Special Committee on the National Trading Corporation three years ago that concessionary financing is a virtual necessity for our export community. I mean that I do not regard concessionary financing as a form of foreign aid. It is a form of promotional financing offers, such as other countries make in their credit mixed packages and such as we must make if we are to sell abroad on many major projects.

Perhaps it does cost the country money in a way, but if properly handled it is the kind of public cost that should be repaid by public benefits such as an increased revenue base for Government.

All of which is to say that I could see certain kinds of arguments that the Government might have in mind as reasons for asking now to have the ceilings on EDC increased by so much. But the Government does not appear to want to grant us the courtesy of making these or any other kind of sensible arguments to convince us that the money limits it is proposing for EDC are really needed for the corporation's exercise of its proper purposes.

What is of very great concern on this side of the House is that the Government appears to treat the Act we are being asked to amend as a form of spending authority. It appears to want Parliament to approve enormous increases—in fact a tripling or quadrupling—in the authorized capital and loan limits on EDC, yet without going through the formal and, I suggest, sacred process of getting formal spending authority from Parliament. What the Government appears to be proposing is that the Parliament of the people, which has grown through the centuries precisely because it has held the power of the purse strings, should step aside and allow a Crown corporation to determine, in consort with the bureaucrats of the Treasury Board and the PCO, how and when to spend a big chunk of the taxpayers' money.

This is just not acceptable. We may have the greatest respect in the world for the talents and good judgment of civil servants and Crown employees, but the fact remains that this Parliament exists, as it has always existed, to provide a check upon the Crown and its employees. The bureaucrats may have good judgment and might exercise good judgment, but when it comes to making decisions about spending public funds it is not their judgment to make. It is ours, even if we exercise judgment poorly.

It seems to me to be a fundamental principle of our parliamentary system that no funds—not even one single penny—can be properly spent without some sure and certain parliamentary authority. Merely passing a Bill that increases the statutory ceiling for EDC's capitalization does not confer any kind of spending authority at all in my view. If that is so, then the Government's apparent belief that EDC can receive new appropriations of its authorized capital merely by Order in Council and without a parliamentary appropriations Bill is wrong. If it is wrong, then we should ensure, as custodians of the public purse, that we get this matter cleared up before we make any changes in the statutory ceiling on EDC.

Let me repeat the point. In my view, no matter how good the judgment of bureaucrats may be, when it comes to spending public money, it is not up to them to decide that public money may be spent. At the very most, it is the proper job of the bureaucrats to decide how this money will be spent once we here in Parliament say that it can be spent. Once again I say that even if we exercise bad judgment about spending public money, we here in Parliament are the only body in the land that can exercise any judgment, good or bad, about spending public money. That power to grant or to withhold money from the Crown is a power belonging to the people and held by us in trust as their elected representatives. This is not merely some vague or colourful historical theory. This is the actual fact, constitutionally recognized, and we are sworn to uphold the Constitution that recognizes it. We are also pledged, by our act of faith with our electors, to maintain for them the power to grant or withhold money from the Crown.

Time and again in Parliament we on this side object to the kind of attitude displayed by the Government toward the spending of public money. It is almost the whole of what was meant when we talked about bypassing Parliament. It may be in the nature of governments to want to exercise power without any controls. Apparently, it is in the nature of many people at any rate. But it should certainly be in our nature as Parliamentarians to want to oppose that tendency of Government.

We have grown accustomed to watching Members on the other side of the House bark like trained seals when their Cabinet bosses tell them how to vote. However, even given that whimpering, cringing response, we should expect that Government Members who are afraid to challenge their Cabinet bosses here in the House would sit down privately with them and explain the limits to them. Something very important is leaching out of our system of government if Parliament goes along with the trampling of its control over the public purse.

Therefore, my colleague for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has proposed amendments that would deny the Government increases in the ceilings that it wants to use as a signed blank cheque. What I would like to see is an Export Development Corporation that serves the needs of Canada's exporting community in a broad sense. I suspect I may be less restrictive than some of my colleagues in my understanding of what kinds of functions properly fall in this mandate. And yet, equally with them, I want to see EDC preserved as an instrument that serves only our export aims, and not our unrelated foreign policy aims. It is merely a failure of imagination or administrative competence if the Government cannot manage its foreign policy aims without corrupting the functions of agencies like the EDC. At the moment, however, EDC is not short of money or of borrowing authority. If we accept the amendments of my colleague from Mississauga South, we are not going to starve the corporation. What we are going to do is to say, as a Parliament, that we are not sent here to give away power over the public purse but to retain it and to exercise it. And so I say to Members opposite, that whether they want to speak in private to their Cabinet overlords to persuade them to accept our amendments or withdraw the Bill, or whether they are willing to stand up and be counted here in the House, they should in either case accept and support the amendments proposed by my colleague.

● (1730)

I think it is clear to all Members opposite that the public has not been impressed with their stewardship of the public purse and their management of the country's economic affairs. It is no good blaming mismanagement on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Cabinet if Members opposite continue to vote with them and never act as they were sent here to act. So I say to Members opposite that we look to them to act as we do, ensuring that the parliamentary controls over EDC are not weakened but that we begin to reassert our historical authority over public spending. I urge support of the amendments proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in joining to support this amendment I should like to say that it is of basic importance that Members opposite really understand what they are doing even if they do not understand the proposals that my colleague has made with regard to Bill C-110. Somewhere along the road we do have to put a ceiling on government spending. There is absolutely no way that we can allow governments or government Crown corporations to continue to grow in the direction in which this Government has been allowing them to go now for approximately 18 years, and more especially in the last three or four years.

We are not speaking against exports. Many of my colleagues have stated that we are not debating that issue at all. We recognize that there is ample room for more export than we have ever had before because we have a $20 billion deficit and because our industries are running at only about 80 per cent capacity. Therefore, there is ample room for business to catch up in Canada and get the show back on the road.

It has not been a lack of funding that has created this situation, it has been a lack of initiative and the political climate provided by the Government in order to facilitate the exporting of what we can do best.

Unfortunately, many Canadians, and I would even suggest that perhaps a large number of bureaucrats, are not even aware of the numbers or the names of many Crown corporations in Canada. I remember when AECL was before the Public Accounts Committee. Each day Government Members would come in and give an increased number of Crown corporations. You would remember that, Mr. Speaker. It was an embarrassment to them. I would wager today there is not a Canadian, in the Civil Service or elsewhere, who would be able to put an exact figure on the number of Crown corporations we have. As a result, we have to exercise some kind of control over that.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House the question put on the Order Paper by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). The question was answered on June 29. There we have Petro-Canada, a Crown corporation. It is just a baby as far as Crown corporations are concerned. But yet there are 33 subsidiaries to Petro-Canada at the present time. It has exploded. This is what happens unless you can exercise some kind of control over a situation like that. Further, we find one individual in particular has 23 directorships on Crown corporations. It is a massive business for the bureaucrats in which to get involved. I would hope that Members opposite would recognize just exactly what they are doing.

If the system had been working, if we had an example, then I could go along with it, and I am sure my colleagues could too. But between 1977 and 1982, Canadian productivity rose by just .3 per cent, whereas in Japan it rose 27.6 per cent; in Italy it rose 22.6 per cent; in France it rose 22.3 per cent; in Germany it rose 14.7 per cent; in the United Kingdom it rose 18.2 per cent, and in the United States it rose 3.6 per cent. But here in Canada our productivity rose .3 per cent. Extending the amount of money that is provided to this Crown corporation will not resolve the problem.

We recognize one of the great institutions that we have in Canada, which I believe has a lot of credibility, the Economic Council of Canada. In its recent report, on page 51, we find this:

Canada is perhaps the country with the least private-sector participation in export financing decisions. The governments of most other industrial nations encourage bank participation in this area, more so than does the government of Canada. In six of the industrialized countries examined, the supply of primary financing is left completely in the hands of the private sector, which may, however resort to public rediscounting facilities. In most of the 17 countries studied, the negotiations for granting export credit are also left to the private sector. This is not the case in Canada, where direct negotiations take place between the EDC and the foreign buyer. When the banks are invited to participate jointly with the EDC in long-term financing, they often complain of being denied access to all the information and to the negotiations, and of being presented with ready-made proposals.

This is exactly what I was saying earlier when I said I do not think that any of the bureaucrats really have all the basic knowledge and information required in these situations.

The Economic Council report devoted a full chapter to the subject of export finance and the EDC. The Government Members on the other side of the House would do well to read the report before performing on cue before the proposed amendments are put to a vote. The thrust of the report is to scale down and reorientate the EDC, not to augment it. Seven of the report's 31 recommendations pertain to the EDC.

The Economic Council found that few credit and insurance gaps exist in Canada. It questioned whether or not the EDC needs to be involved in insurance and in financing when the private sector is able to meet the need. It observed that Canadian exports are not as heavily subsidized as exports in other countries, and what subsidies do exist find their way to a very limited number of firms. It recommends that the EDC do less direct financing and that the private sector do more.

These are the recommendations made by the Economic Council. I hope Members opposite will pay attention to them:

We recommend that the Export Development Corporation gradually move towards providing export credit re-insurance, leaving the field of insurance proper to the private sector. We further recommend that the Export Development Corporation serve as the insurer of last resort to close any gaps left by the private sector in the supply of export credit insurance.

We recommend that the Export Development Corporation continue to provide direct financing for Canadian sales abroad when there is reason to believe that the private sector is unable to provide the required credits. Public financing should be made available only under terms and conditions commensurate with the risks involved and the costs of such assistance—including the opportunity cost of the funds used—except in those cases where it is deemed necessary to take into consideration the export-support programs of other countries.

● (1740)

We further recommend that the Export Development Corporation's gradual withdrawal from most direct lending activities be accompanied by an increased concentration of its efforts in the field of credit insurance and bank guarantees. The Corporation should also stand ready to provide refinancing facilities for private lending institutions engaged in export finance.

We recommend that the federal Government continue its efforts, at meetings of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, to obtain an international agreement to further limit subsidized export credit. In the absence of such an agreement, we recommend that Canada use subsidized credit only in cases where there is a sufficiently strong presumption that it will facilitate the opening of new markets, or that it will increase the market share for Canadian products.

We recommend that, in the absence of an international agreement to further limit subsidized export credit, the federal Government consider the advisability of matching foreign export-support programs that currently have no equivalent in Canada and of providing assistance to domestic firms which must compete with imports that have benefited from foreign subsidized credits.

We recommend that the private sector be encouraged to supply direct export credits to Canadian producers even when a public subsidy is deemed necessary. The federal Government, through the Export Development Corporation, should assume the cost difference between the preferential conditions offered and the conditions that would have prevailed had private financing been offered in the absence of public support.

We recommend that the Export Development Corporation manage separately those of its activities that are intended to expand markets for Canadian products. We further recommend that provision be made for greater co-ordination between the Export Development Corporation and the Canadian International Development Agency whenever their activities overlap.

I apologize for reading these recommendations. I know it is always boring, but I wanted to bring to the attention of Hon. Members opposite what the Economic Council of Canada indicated. I thank the House for the opportunity to present it at this time.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I support Motions Nos. 6 and 8 in the name of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), and I want to give the reasons for saying so. Government Members might be somewhat surprised by the manner in which the Official Opposition is speaking out on this Bill. They might have felt there would be a period of time in the House when Opposition Members would make their case and then silently slip away into the night. I am sure that was the Minister's hope. The reason the Official Opposition is so adamant and that many of its Members are speaking on these various motions is that the Bill has finally given us a vehicle with which to press home the point that Canadians are not satisfied with the financial accountability the Government has applied to the use of taxpayers' money.

Whether one speaks about the Export Development Corporation, other Crown corporations or the daily administration of Government itself, Canadians across the country are concerned about the lack of accountability. Unless Government Members are willing to make some changes and to come to some understanding on the motions that have been moved, they might have to sit for some period of time yet to hear the case we are making on behalf of Canadians. We intend to keep making the case.

Motion No. 6, which was adequately described by the mover, would allow the Government of Canada to increase the limit on promissory notes to $10 billion from the present $3.5 billion. When one looks at that motion, it is interesting to note that the Government has come to the House of Commons with a request to increase the limit to $10 billion when in fact it has not expended the present limit. I understand it has expended about $460 million, leaving over $3 billion or roughly 80 per cent of the present limit. Surely the first question which must be asked is why the Government wants to increase the limit if the present limit has not been expended in the first place.

The Government cannot simply be given a blank cheque, because our past experience with its profligate spending and its desire to operate outside Parliament or away from the scrutiny of Parliament would allow it to do so again in spades, even more than what is presently in place. The Government has not been able to expend the limit, yet it wants the limit increased. The Minister and his supporters do not give us the reasons for this.

I ask Government Members whether or not they have asked their Minister why he wants it increased from $3.5 billion to $10 billion. If they have asked him, which I doubt, even more important, are they able to explain to the Canadian public why the Export Development Corporation, through the Government, needs a $10 billion limit rather than the $3.5 billion which is not being totally used at present? I am sure they have not asked the Minister about this.

It is not only the Opposition which should hold the Government accountable. Government Members should hold their own Ministers accountable, and I suggest they are not doing it. I do not know why the Government would want to come to Parliament and request an increase in the limit when at present it is only expending 20 per cent of the $3.5 billion. This is what we are being asked to do.

Motion No. 8 would allow loans through the Consolidated Revenue Fund to be increased from the present limit of $2.5 billion to $10 billion. Again we find that the Government has not reached the present limit in this respect. It is at some $700 million as against the $2.5 billion limit. I will not make the argument again about why it asks for more when even this profligate Government has not expended it to the limit. What is more important is that we would allow these expenditures from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. If the Canadian public does not understand what is the Consolidated Revenue Fund, let me indicate that it is a fund that has been financed by Canadian taxpayers. It is a pot of their money. The Government is saying that it wants that limit without a vote in the House by elected Members of Parliament. This is what the Government is after.

I ask Government Members whether they have asked the Minister how they are to explain back home an expenditure of up to $10 billion without any parliamentary vote, without any parliamentary discussion, without any parliamentary scrutiny. Have they asked, or do Government Members simply relish their reputation for asking nothing, seeing nothing, hearing nothing—

Mr. Friesen: But spending everything.

Mr. Epp: They want to be allowed to sit on the right side of the Speaker; then life is complete for a Liberal. It is a little more complicated than that.

● (1750)

Yesterday I had an opportunity to have a discussion with a number of representatives from the private sector, people from the United States, Australia and Canada. The purpose was to have an exchange between people in the private sector and people in the public sector in terms of accountability, how Parliament functions and how it should function. Executives of the private sector simply cannot understand how Members of the Crown and executives of Crown corporations are not literally put on the griddle by their supporters on a constant basis, asking reasons why something was done in such and such a way and what is the bottom line. They cannot understand it, and neither can Canadians.

A recent poll indicated that for many Canadians Parliament is irrelevant. There are reasons for that. I will not go through all the reasons. However, I suggest that Parliament only became relevant in Britain when it was able to hold accountable those who were in charge. The reason Parliament is not important to Canadians today is that they see that that function has been largely lost by Parliament. Nobody is more to blame than the Government opposite.

There are all kinds of emoluments or certain perks that Members of Parliament may have, but do not question the real issues, such as how the Government is spending the taxpayers' money. That is the real issue. The Minister, fine chap that he might be, knows that all he has to do is to ride out the storm and eventually it will be a $10 billion limit here, a $10 billion limit there, a $60 billion limit on EDC. What can he do then? He can go and have his party with the boys at EDC. He will say, "Boys, it was a long, hard battle, but here's your money. I got it for you."

I am being very blunt with the Minister. I say to him that it is high time that this Government came to grips with that accountability question. I see you rising, Mr. Speaker, I am sure in anticipation of my next sentences. I simply say that if the Government wants Parliament to become relevant, then let it become accountable and be willing to come under the scrutiny of accountability which I believe the Members of this House are willing to give it.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the third time on Bill C-110, this time on amendments Nos. 6 and 8 proposed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I do so following the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I say to that Hon. Member that I wish I had thought of many of the words he contributed and to congratulate him on his speech. I would like to follow on what he has said because the Minister is present.

I should say to the Minister that if he would see his duty in terms of parliamentary control over spending the way he sees his obligation as a Minister to be here when his Bills are before the House, which is unusual for Members of the Liberal Cabinet, we would not have a problem. What is frustrating about this issue, and we have debated several of these issues, is that we appear to be butting our heads against the brick wall on an issue that ought to be fundamental to any Member of any government in Canada.

The Hon. Member for Provencher put the figures on the record. Let me just repeat them briefly. The funds already available under the section which amendment No. 6 deals with are $3.5 billion, of which just over $460 million have been taken up, the funds available under amendment No. 8 are $2.5 billion, of which $1.4 billion have been committed but only $711 million have been advanced.

Just as important is the fact that there is unused authorization, which makes a mockery of the suggestion that more authorization is needed. Just as important, if in other sections of the Bill we were talking about the EDC in terms of its own transactions needing greater authorization, we are in this case talking about transactions which the EDC cannot finance. In both cases we are talking about either insurance guarantees or loan guarantees which require the approval of Cabinet over what for the sake of reference may be called the Cabinet's own account. Let us be clear about what that means.

The Cabinet has proposed that we consider increasing authorizations beyond what appears to be necessary in accounts the very nature of which is that the decisions to spend those moneys will not be taken by an independent or semi-autonomous Crown corporation, but will be taken directly by the Cabinet, because they are not good for proper business transactions in the sense that they are too great or beyond the scope or outside what the EDC believes it can do.

We have a marriage of two principles here. We are being asked to consider increasing authorizations well beyond needed funds, based on the existing experience, to be spent in secret by the Cabinet. All Parliament will ever know is after the fact. It ought to be a simple matter to get it clear to a Minister of the Crown that everybody in this House wants to see Canadian trade expanded. This debate will go on forever about the trade aid question. There will be times when it will be necessary to use forms of EDC financing, forms of EDC guarantees, forms of CIDA aid assistance to make deals. Everybody in the business knows that. Everybody in the world is competing on those terms.

When the Cabinet has a proposal that would be good for Canadians business in its view, one that would require funds to be advanced under these sections, those sections which the Cabinet has authority over and which it believes would be good for Canadian industry and trade and job development, the principle espoused in the Bill is "We will do it, but we do not dare trust telling Parliament in advance about making those extensions of Canadian liabilities the qualities of the deal. Later we will tell you what we used your money for." The principle that ought to be near and dear to the heart of the Minister is that Parliament authorizes the spending of the money and therefore Parliament ought to consider deals that are beyond the business scope of EDC. If we cannot deal with the scope of the internal matters that relate to EDC, surely to goodness when those deals involve direct Cabinet approval because they are beyond the scope of EDC, those are exactly the situations which ought to be before Parliament for its scrutiny.

It is really that simple. Perhaps nowhere else in this Bill is this principle more important than in the sections governed by these amendments. The principle is this. If the Minister believes that selling something Canadian to another country is in the best interest of that industry and of Canada and he proposes to guarantee it, if he wishes to avoid creating the impression that there is something to hide in that deal and avoid creating the impression that the Government proposes to create more fiascos of the nature we have seen in the last little while after the fact, then let him say one of two things now. Let him say that the Members of the Opposition are right, that Parliament should see deals that exceed the EDC natural disposition before they are made so that the Minister can get the best wishes of Parliament. Second, the Minister could say to the House that the EDC needs authorization 7, 8 or 9 times what already has been spent, or that those changes are not necessary in any sense of normal business practice.

● (1800)

I note the clock, Mr. Speaker, so through you, I would say that the Minister must come to recognize that the opposition on these points of fundamental principle will not go away. Parliamentary control over spending is far too important.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—PROVISION OF ALTERNATIVE SERVICE TO COMMUNITIES AFFECTED BY VIA RAIL CUTBACKS. (B) COMMUNITIES WITHOUT SERVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, on December 15, 1981, after the infamous announcement made by the then Minister of Transport indicating that it was his intention to axe 20 per cent of the nation's rail services, which threat he in fact carried out, I asked the Minister what he would do to provide alternate services to such communities as Minto and Chipman, Napodogan and Juniper, Plaster Rock and McGivney and others. He informed me that bus service would be provided to those communities that were left without alternate sources of transportation. That was on December 15, 1981, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday we were treated to an announcement by the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) that in effect there may have been some mistakes made by the former officials of VIA Rail which were, of course, sanctioned by the then Minister of Transport, and that he would ask VIA Rail to take a look at the cuts that were made with a possible view to restoring two of those lines, one of which was the Edmundston-Moncton run which would service a great many of those communities I just mentioned.

I was pleased to hear that the Minister is making that recommendation to VIA Rail officials, and I would anticipate that not only will he ask that they review it, but will suggest in strong terms that they positively favour the re-establishment of that particular run between Edmundston and Moncton. I shall listen with a great deal of interest to the Acting Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. No doubt he will address himself to that particular question as it is indeed of particular relevance to the question I posed to the Minister back in 1981.

I would also like to hear the Acting Parliamentary Secretary address himself to the other major cut that was made to the railways in New Brunswick, primarily the elimination of the VIA Rail service, the Atlantic Limited, which was certainly one of the most popular trains in the nation at the time and which carried approximately 240,000 passengers annually, the elimination of which left southern New Brunswick and area virtually without connection to Upper Canada and to points west.

I would like to read from an article that appeared in The Telegraph-Journal on October 7, 1981, and I quote:

Modern new trains will be coming to the Maritimes in the summer of 1983, Federal Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin said here Tuesday—

He said:

"That's why I'm willing to gamble. Popularity is a very, very difficult thing in life, so I'm willing to take two years of flak because people in the Maritimes and in the West, in two or three years from now, will ride in their LRCs and they'll say this guy Pepin wasn't so crazy after all, was he?"

According to The Telegraph-Journal, Mr. Speaker, he went on to say that:

—he is anxious to hear the reaction of people in Moncton and Saint John a few years from now when the light, rapid, comfortable (LRC) trains are introduced. He said he would like to hear them say "Mr. Pepin was not so nuts after all."

● (1805)

The summer of 1983 has come and gone and so have the hopes and aspirations of all of those in Saint John and Moncton and other areas which might have taken the word of the Minister and hoped that they would be riding on LRC trains. But in fact this did not materialize, just as the Minister of Transport of the day has dematerialized.

The comment to the now Minister would be that I would hope he will actively, even if it is in a political way, pursue the possibility, in a very positive manner, of re-establishing the Edmundston-Moncton route, as we have been pressing for, and also pursue the re-implementation of that most popular train, the Atlantic Limited, which created such a beneficial service to the residents of southern New Brunswick as it carried passengers from Moncton through Sain John to Montreal. Those people have been left without direct transportation to Montreal. They now have to travel hundreds of miles backwards to get to Montreal if they are going to take the most economical form of transportation. Who can afford air fares now, except those of us who are subsidized by the citizens of Canada so that we can travel back and forth on Air Canada?

I would leave the House with this thought. The decision that these services be eliminated must rest with the CTC. Just get those trains on and when we form the government we will ensure that they stay on.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his concern about this vital matter. Undoubtedly he is expressing the concerns of many constituents who have spoken to him about the cuts in rail services to their communities. However, I believe in all honesty he would admit that he is glossing over the problems which led to the decision VIA Rail had to make several years ago to cut some of its services. It was facing an increasingly large operating deficit which was in the neighbourhood of half a billion dollars a year. The Government had to make a decision to either continue to pour money into the operating losses or cut some of the services, take some of that money and put it into spending for new capital equipment which would enable VIA Rail at some future date to have new capital equipment with which to better serve the Canadian people and attract the kind of passenger traffic which is necessary to make it a viable service.

I am sure we have all heard of the huge amounts of money it costs to transport each passenger. I am not the parliamentary secretary for this Ministry, but I believe that every time a passenger pays $1 for rail transportation the Government contributes $4 or $5 in addition.

The present Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) has directed that efforts be focused on achieving four main objectives: an improved national system of rail passenger services coast to coast; improved service to regional areas; increased operational efficiency and improved financial performance; and encouragement of feedback from the public generally and from other affected parties on Canadian rail passenger services. He is holding a meeting in Edmonton on September 29 with his provincial counterparts to discuss these matters and, hopefully, he will come up to the kind of judicious solution we expect from him. Thank you.

ENERGY—INCENTIVES FOR OIL SANDS PROJECTS. (B) GOVERNMENT OFFER

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, on June 2, just prior to the summer recess at the House of Commons, I asked a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). I suggested that the development of the oilsands creates thousands of jobs in virtually every sector of the Canadian economy, and particularly in Central Canada. I wanted to know whether the offer being made to BP and PetroCan on the Wolf Lake project in northeastern Alberta was being made to other oil companies to develop the vast resource of the oil sands industry in northeastern Alberta. His reply was that they could make an application and it would be reviewed by the Minister. He went on to say, and this is something to which I take serious objection:

● (1810)

Of course one of the problems is that many of the projects in the past were based on an ever-increasing international price for oil. We see now that the price has gone down so the economics of these projects are not the same as they were two years ago.

Most of the difficulties are not because of the tax propositions we have put forward.

Today in Calgary the Minister of Energy and his Alberta counterpart announced that the $300 million Cold Lake project will go ahead. The reason the project is going ahead, Mr. Speaker, and I am reading from the press release, is that the federal Government will provide earned depletion allowance and waiver of payment of the petroleum gas revenue tax until the company has recovered its capital costs in accordance with federal budget provisions announced in April, 1983.

The Minister has the audacity to stand in this House, Sir, and say to me that the economics of this project are no longer feasible, and then in a press release today, to get maximum political impact in Alberta, particularly in northern Alberta, he says that they have waived the PGRT, a tax which damn near killed the industry in western Canada and the western basin.

When I asked this question I suggested that there were thousands and thousands of jobs available if the Minister would get off his posterior and get those oil sands developed in northeastern Alberta. He states in the press release that 700 direct jobs will be created and filled primarily by residents of the Cold Lake region. Another 90 permanent jobs will result from the operational phase of the project.

My point is, Mr. Speaker, that if the Government with its national energy policy had offered this deal to Imperial Oil in the very first place we would have a $12 billion construction program in northeastern Alberta developing one plant in Cold Lake, and another $12 billion plant north of Fort McMurray developing the oil sands in that area. Rather than 90 permanent jobs each plant would create 2,000 permanent jobs. Rather than a construction force of 700, we would have a construction force of ten times that size. When we get up and ask the Minister of Energy questions concerning the effect of the PGRT on the industry in northeastern Alberta we continuously get these shuffling evasive answers and that is just not good enough. In fact, Mr. Speaker. I will not use another term which is unparliamentary but it is certainly evasive. I would think that you can imagine what I would like to say.

