POETRY.

Life's Pauses.

A curious stranger envied in doubt, An interrogation point looking about, A bundle of questions—scribbling more— Cooing and creeping along the floor.

A comma of sunshine, a playtime to see The flower, the bird, the brook and the tree, A vision of childhood—count one for the pause, A ripple of laughter, a golden clause.

A style in the pathway, a summer day, A blissful moment, too sweet to stay, Swift semicolon of youth divine— Count two in tracing the raptured line.

An exclamation, "You! Oh, You!" The same old story, forever new, An arrow's flight to a soul new found, A volume of love in a vowel sound.

A long, a prayer, a marriage vow, A compound word in the chapter now, Only a hyphen, but angel wait, And hush their anthem in heaven's gate.

A gleam of light in the gliding years, A colon of joy in the font appears, A point of hope in the fleeting text— Our line continued in the next.

The sentence finished, a gentle mound By waving grass encircled round, A period here, but not complete, Merely a rest for weary feet.

A rest for the night till the morning wakes, Till the purpling east in glory breaks, Faith writes a dash for the great To Be— Beyond Time's bracket—Eternity.

SELECT STORY.

An 'Old Tym' Love Story.

"How soon do you start?"

"Next Tuesday. John is going too. He could not come over now, but will be over some time this morning to see Ruth. As for me, I must tell my Amy first of all. I must go, now, but my brave little sweetheart; and I will spend every spare minute with you, till I have to leave."

It seemed to Amy as though the sun had ceased to give us light when Paul left; but she bore up bravely, and said nothing to Ruth till John came and told her. Just before noon, Ruth went down to the spring house for water; and when she came back she could hardly see, for the tears that were falling from her eyes.

Amy saw, as soon as Ruth entered the room, what was the matter, and flew to her side to comfort her. In comforting her, comfort entered her own heart. The lovers spent every available minute together, consoling each other and comforting themselves with trying to believe the war would soon be over, and they at home again and settled in the new life. John and Ruth had peace between them, for the first time since their courtship began. Tuesday morning saw the boys march away. Quite a number went with them—two of the Marion boys among the number. Those who were left behind, settled themselves to bear, as best they could, whatever the future had in store for them.

ward, an English squadron, under Admiral Cookburn, entered Chesapeake Bay, and after destroying several other towns, attacked Norfolk; and in the attack Paul fell mortally wounded. He died the next day, leaving loving messages to Amy and his dear ones at home. John obtained permission to accompany the dead body home; and thus the two lovers journeyed back—the living one, and the one who was "faithful unto death." But, instead of the loving arms of his sweetheart, he was in the cold embrace of death. Word had already preceded them of Paul's death; and so they were all prepared, in part, for the terrible shock which was in store for them. All that was sweetest and best in Amy's life died, when she looked on Paul's cold, dead face. She shed few tears; she was too deep a nature for tears to relieve. She would never live her sorrow down—it would follow her always. And in the dust of that grave, she buried all hopes of an earthly home for her own; no other man could fill Paul's place. She must be content to stand alone henceforth. No loving husband to come in at evening; no little children to look in her face and call her mother, and come to her with their childish hopes and sorrows. All was ended now. No, not all—she had a life to live, and to be lived well if she would meet him again; and there were loving parents and sister and brothers to live for. So she shouldered her burden and staggered on; and as time passed, strength was given her from above. The funeral took place from the old church, and he was buried in the little burying ground near by. Dr. Spece chose for his text,—"The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away." This, and—"He giveth his beloved sleep" comforted Amy greatly.

To her he had only gone before; while happiness, for time, was destroyed, there was still all eternity in which her life henceforth would be—

"Always alone, while yours grow old and white, And when you die, I'll follow you, And other worlds in chaos wild are hurled;— Waiting, oh waiting for some godlike morn! Always alone!"

CHAPTER IV.

"Bell! thou soundest merrily, When the bridal party. To the church door his. * * * * *

Bell! thou soundest mournfully, Telling thou the bitter Parting hath gone by."

Life soon settled into its old groove. To a casual observer, nothing seemed changed; but to one person, at least, all things were changed, even the very face of the earth seemed changed to her. John went back and a short time out; and then, after a sordid turlough at home, re-landed and stayed in till the close of the war. He and Ruth postponed their wedding on account of Paul's death, till peace should be restored.

In the spring, after the treaty of Ghent, they were married, and moved into their own little home close by. It was a very quiet wedding, but nevertheless a very happy one. They had buried the hatchet when John first went to the war, and had never dug it up. Amy was now the sunshine of two homes. Plenty of lovers came to woo her. She had a word and a smile for all, but love for none.

The years flew by, bringing to the new home, little nieces and nephews for Aunt Amy to pet; and taking from the old home father and mother. The boys married off, one by one, till Amy was left alone. About that time the western fever struck John, and nothing would do him but they must move West, and Amy go with them. So two years later found them settled in a new home, in a small western village. Here they lived their quiet, uneventful lives; lives so quiet that it took such a long time to find them. John and Ruth saw their children and grand-children grow up around them; and witnessed many a little comedy and tragedy in their young lives. To all, Aunt Amy was a source of wonder and comfort. They all knew her little love story, and it was held as something sacred by them. She never failed to comfort them in their sorrows, and rejoice with them in their joys. When she died, at the age of ninety three, all mourned her loss. She had failed to receive a woman's earthly crown (a good husband and loving children) but her little world was a great deal better for her having lived in it. She had watched a wonderful influence, and always for good.

As she lay in her coffin, with her white, still-hands folded across her breast, some of the beauty of youth came back to her. Hers was a love that never died out, for just before she passed away, looking up into Ruth's face with a triumphant smile, she said, "I shall soon see Paul."

And so she passed from them; they could not mourn her, for she had lived a long and godly life, and was even now receiving her heavenly crown in the presence of the lover who had never grown old. They buried her in the wedding dress which she had never worn; and under the dead hands, "Pale withered hands, that more than four score years had wrought for others," placed the letter she had hoarded as something precious for over seventy years.

Brudner Gardner on Intemperance.

A letter from Harlem, N. Y., signed by three reputable citizens, inquired how Brudner Gardner stood on the subject of intemperance, and asked if he did know that thousands of young men were drifting down to the pools of degradation through the influence of drink.

"Yes, I know it," replied the old man as he passed the letter along. "I know it, and wonder over it, as I am amazed at it. A young man finds himself in good health, has a clear eye and an honest face, and his prospects for the future are full of promise. He can do hope of his father's comfort, his father's pride of his friends. Eberly wishes him well an' ebery bad man stretched out to give him a start in life. I have seen that young man when he started on his race of life, and I felt proud over him. I have seen him when that race was finished—out short by thirty years. De eye had become bleared, an' dim; de face had de look of a beast; by strong limbs trembled; all de sunshine of de past had been drowned out by tears—all de hopes of a thousand friends blasted by disappointment. Drink was de cause—wine, beer, whiskey an' de gutter. De young man who puts a glass of liquor to his lips an' unlooses a snake which an' sartin to bite him—unchains a tiger which will devour him. Drink an' a fiend which smiles and laughs an' sings until its teeth an' fastened into its victim. It an' a dry rot dat cats de heart. It an' a devil dat wot be content with one victim, but it drags families an' friends down to destruction.

Show me a man who is always putting liquor to his lips an' I show you a man who'll sooner or later become a wreck. Show me a youth dat drinks an' I'll write de word 'doctored' arter his name. I'm only a poor ole black man, ignorant an' uneducated, but poor an' lowly as I am, I would not trade places wid de rich white man who has a fondness for drink. I did not mean to deliver a lecture; nor do I wish to be counted among the fanatics who have work'd injury whar dey 'speared to do good. I simply want to be on record as one who's seventy years of life have taught him dat of all de cold clammy snakes which man takes to his brain, break de hearts of friends an' at last make him de victim of a grave neber cared for an' neber visited except wid walls of sorrow, dat serpent called drink an' de worst. It an' new time to go home."

It's sometimes said patent medicines are for the ignorant. The doctors foster this idea. "The people," we're told, "are mostly ignorant when it comes to medical science." Suppose they are! What a sick man needs is not knowledge, but a cure, and the medicine that cures is the medicine for the sick. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures the "do be disease" and the "don't cure." There's no substance about it, no "if" nor "possibly." It says—"I can cure you, only as I direct." Perhaps it falls occasionally. The makers hear of it when it does, because they never keep the money when the medicine fails to do good. Suppose the doctors went to that principle. (We beg the doctors' pardon. It wouldn't do.)

Strong Language.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, in an address to saloon-keepers closes with this strong paragraph: "I tell you plainly that you will meet your customers one day when there will be no counter between you. When your work is done on earth, and you enter the reward of your business, all the souls of the men whom you have destroyed will crowd around you, and pour bitterness in your cup. They will show you their wounds, and say, 'You made them; and point to their unquenchable thirst, and say, 'You kindled it,' and rattle their chain, and say, 'You forged it.' Then their united groans will suite your ear; and with the hands out of which you once picked the sixpences and the dimes, they will push you off the verge of great precipices; while rolling up from beneath, and breaking, among the crags of death, will thunder, 'Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink!'"

Fix up the old orchards.

Old apple orchards that have stood in soil for many years and are not bearing may be renewed and made profitable for many more years. Give them a good pruning by cutting out all dead branches and those that are very low and allow the sun and air to get in. Put in a plow and rip the soil up and no matter if you cut off a few roots, there are plenty more. Do not plow deeper than four or five inches if the soil is an old one. Give each tree a good dressing of stable manure and wood ashes, but do not apply it nearer than 8 feet to the tree. Take the soil away from around the trunk and keep the whole orchard thoroughly cultivated for a number of years. Rye may be sowed in the fall, to serve as a protection in winter and to plow under in spring as a green manure. Winter is a good time to apply manure and there is no time then to draw it out. Orchards renewed in this way and kept well pruned and cultivated generally bear well for many years.

Cleaning Colored Woollens.

Four ounces of white castile soap, four ounces of ammonia, two ounces of alcohol, two ounces of glycerine. Shave the soap in one quart of water over the fire. When dissolved add four quarts of rain water, and when nearly cold the other ingredients. Bottle and keep in a cool place. One cup of this mixture in two quarts of water will be sufficient for ordinary use. Now lay the goods on an old sheet, and iron rapidly and lightly on the wrong side, and then roll tightly on a certain pole or any round piece of wood. If this is carefully done you do away with the creases made by folding. For black silk or cloth dissolve one tablespoonful of borax and one tablespoonful of indigo in one pint of warm water. Sponge the piece well and lay smoothly one above the other, and, if possible, put in the sun to dry. —The Ladies Home Journal.

Take away from the whispers of two lovers the melody which issues from the soul, and accompanies them like a lyre, and what is left is only a shadow, and you say, what is it—only that? Well, yes, child's play, repetitions, laughs at nothing, absurdities, foolishness, all these are the most sublime and profound in the world; the only things which are worth the trouble of being said and being listened to. The man who has never heard, the man who has never uttered these absurdities and poor things, is an imbecile and a wicked man.—Victor Hugo.

Norton's Magic Liniment is superior to any other sold, as there is no dirty soap in the compound (as is the case with others), but is made of clean, concentrating oils. It has no equal for rheumatic pains. It is nice to take for colds, pain in the stomach, in teaspoonful doses in a glass of hot water and sugar. It is the pain destroyer of the age.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The election contest is now well under way. Both parties in this country have men in the field and a strong fight is being made.

The Propyleum is the latest of the societies on the Hill. It is literary and is composed of the young lady members of the College.

Handbook Items.

What's your opinion of private rinks? Last Friday night we had one. It was a new thing in Handok, but it resulted very successfully.

I was much interested in reading "Recent Publications" in the last ACADIAN. Good for Wolfville! But the books referred to are not new to us.

Politics has still a firm hold on the people of Handok. It is discussed very generally. It is astonishing how many different ideas concerning it are afloat.

Acadia College, Mr Starr's Letter and Water Supply.

To those unacquainted with the facts, let me say, that by the general assessment law of 1888, applicable to the whole Province, and by the Town's Incorporation Act of the same year, all colleges, churches and school property is exempted from taxation.

In 1889 the Wolfville Water Act passed, and either inadvertently or designedly, was specially made liable to taxation.

Now let me ask why Mr Starr finds it necessary to warn the ratepayers against the proposal to grant Acadia the same exemptions which similar institutions enjoy in every civilized community?

Mr Bill's Address to the Electors.

To the Electors of King's County. GENTLEMEN,—I beg to inform you that with much hesitation and diffidence, I have thought it my duty at this important crisis in our public affairs to accept the unanimous nomination of the Liberal-Conservative Convention to contest the County in that interest.

By well founded conviction no less than by family tradition, I am a consistent supporter of the main principles of the Liberal-Conservative policy.

In signal and glaring contrast to this reasonable, honorable and constitutional policy the present leaders of the opposition party in Canada, from whose ranks the Hon. Messrs Mackenzie and Blake are conspicuously absent, have espoused under the auspices of certain American financiers and politicians, and have advocated a policy of unrestricted reciprocity.

This I take to be a fair, plain and true statement of the essential fundamentals, such before the country at this momentous time,—an issue that goes to the root of our national existence,—an issue that asks us to decide whether we will continue in the "path of empire" under the protecting wings of the British supremacy, or whether we will sell our magnificent country and our glorious birthright for the privilege of being swamped among the heterogeneous necessities that go to make up the present level of American democracy.

Personally, I may be permitted to regret that an older, more experienced and sber exponent of Liberal-Conservative policy and aims has not been selected to lead the van in this country; but, apart from this consideration, I yield to no man in the sincerity of my political convictions and the patriotism of my political motives.

exposition of my views and policy in regard to purely local and county matters, because it is obvious that in serving your interests I will be serving my own. Outside of questions affecting the general policy and integrity of the party, I reserve to myself the amplest liberty to support such proposals and further such reforms, by whomsoever introduced, as will in my opinion best promote the material interests and welfare of the constituency.

Apologizing in advance to those of the constituency upon whom I may be unable to call owing to the limited time at my disposal,—relying upon the steadfast cooperation and active support of my friends, and trusting with confidence that the wisdom of the policy and soundness of the principles we profess, and the patriotism of the aims and motives which influence us will ensure the success we anticipate and which our cause merits.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen, Your obliged and faithful servant, C. R. BILL.

ABREAST OF THE TIMES!

NEAT, NEWSY, INTERESTING.

It has been the aim of the publishers of the ACADIAN in the past to present to its readers a county newspaper second to none, a newspaper that will demand a circulation on account of its merit. How well we have succeeded rests with our patrons to judge.

Interesting Features: Editorials: Timely topics discussed from an independent standpoint—"honest, independent, fearless."

Correspondence: Correspondence on matters of public interest invited—the people's forum.

Local News: terse, accurate and comprehensive. Furnished by a staff of wide-awake correspondents from different parts of the county.

Current Events: The ACADIAN keeps its readers in touch with the leading events of the day in an accurate and readable form.

Crisp Articles: Bright, interesting and original, by some of the best literary talent of the Province.

Literary Selections: Selections from famous writers, carefully made with an eye to variety and brightness—alone worth their subscription price.

All go to make THE ACADIAN for 1891 most attractive.

Hymeneal.

Chalmers' Presbyterian church, Lower Horton, was the scene of a very interesting event on Wednesday last. The principal persons on that occasion were Miss Jennie Green, of Avonport, and Fred J. Faulkner, of Grand Pre. Rev. Mr. Ross, pastor of the church, made the happy couple one. Miss Hattie Just presided at the organ. Messrs Fred Crane and W. A. Woodman acted as ushers. The bride was very becomingly arrayed in a brown dress with brown velvet toque trimmed with ostrich tips and was attended by Miss Clara Faulkner, who looked very pretty in a myrtle green dress with hat to match; Mr. John Green, brother of the bride, did duty as groomsmen. The church was tastefully decorated with evergreens and flowers. Arches twined with hemlock brightened with flowers spanned the main aisles and another and larger arch directly in front of the pulpit, from which was suspended a handsome ball of evergreens and white flowers. Large bouquets of pampas blooms stood on each side of the pulpit. Immediately after the ceremony, this being the first marriage in that church, Mr. Ross, on behalf of the congregation, presented the bride with a family bible and pastor accompanied with a neat cherry stand that looked as though made to hold it. The weather was anything but pleasant, and the large number present to witness the ceremony testifies to Miss Green's popularity. The ACADIAN extends hearty congratulations.

Golden Wedding.

Monday evening, 20th ult., about twenty-five friends gathered at the home of Mr and Mrs William Reid to offer their congratulations, it being the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. The evening passed very pleasantly, with games, all were highly entertained with music by a select choir. Mr and Mrs Reid were presented with ten dollars in gold, and the following address:

Port Williams, Jan. 26th, '91

Mr and Mrs William Reid:

DEAR FRIENDS,—We meet you to-night at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of that most important event—your wedding day in an event that does not often fall to the lot of man. It is with a great deal of pleasure that we extend to you our congratulations on the attainment of your Golden Anniversary. As it is customary on such occasions for friends to give some memento by which to remember the event, we ask you to accept of this piece of gold, not for its value but as a small token of our friendship and esteem. You have our best wishes that your remaining years may be bright and happy; and when you are called to exchange this life for another, and appear before the Judge of all the earth, may you hear that welcome plaudit: "Well done good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy lord," and together walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem.
