HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-SECOND PARLIAMENT

4-5 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME III, 1956

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE SIXTEENTH DAY OF MARCH, 1956, TO THE TWENTY-FIFTH DAY OF APRIL, 1956, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

EDMOND CLOUTIER, C.M.G., O.A., D.S.P.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1956

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 16, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SESSIONAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. P. Cavers (Lincoln) presented the first report of the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—APPROVAL OF PERMITS FOR ARMS SHIPMENTS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a short statement about arms shipments. In accord with the policy of the government to give consideration to all applications for arms shipments as they come forward, as I have stated in the house on more than one occasion is being done, yesterday the cabinet approved three such applications for Israel. Those applications were considered in the light of the tensions now existing in the Middle East, as I said they would be when they came before the cabinet, and it was felt that although the basic tensions remained there has been in the last few days some easing of the apprehensions that existed when Sir John Glubb was removed from control of the Arab legion and when there were being some clashes on lake Tiberias. There are now discussions going on as to how the United Nations might intervene effectively in the interest of facilitating a peaceful solution of the problem.

The first of the applications approved was for 1,754 units of 25-pounder ammunition which had been before the cabinet for some time and which has been referred to more than once in this house.

Two other applications were submitted to the cabinet yesterday for defence equipment for Israel and were approved with export permits being granted. One concerned a small order for electronic equipment valued at $1,200 consisting of 40 units for converting wireless sets from direct to alternating current. The other covers $136,361.59 worth of spare parts for Sherman M-IV tanks.

The history of this order is that in 1954 an export permit was granted for an order for Israel valued at $565,071.36 for tank parts without breech blocks or arms. This order has been referred to already on earlier occasions, on January 24 and January 26, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson). Full delivery did not take place during the validity of this permit which expired on July 16, 1955. A new permit with a validity for six months only was approved on July 26, 1955, to cover the undelivered portion of the order originally placed in 1954. The second permit expired on January 26, 1956, with delivery still uncompleted.

Hon. members will remember that in the meantime there was a temporary suspension of all shipments to the Middle East which was imposed on January 20. Application was made on February 3 for a permit to cover the unshipped balance amounting in value to $136,361.59 and it was that application which was referred yesterday to the cabinet and approved.

MIDDLE EAST—INQUIRY AS TO PENDING APPLICATIONS FOR ARMS SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the government has announced this morning a decision in regard to arms shipments, will the Prime Minister tell the house whether there are any other applications pending from any of the countries in the Middle East at this time and, if so, what countries and what applications they are?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There are two applications from the government of Israel which came before the cabinet yesterday and with respect to which decision was deferred. If and when a decision is made on those applications, an immediate announcement will be made to the house.

Mr. Drew: I wish to ask a supplementary question in regard to that. Has the government now adopted a policy of dealing with shipments of arms and military equipment by order in council?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): As I stated to the house, Mr. Speaker, whenever there appear to be political repercussions involved in an application, it is referred to the whole council for consideration.

Mr. Drew: Does that mean that it is political considerations that guide the government in determining how the decision will be made?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): It is the international political situation.

Mr. Drew: Then could we now take it that there is a policy under which the government will not ship arms or equipment unless the cabinet has decided and there is an order in council dealing with it?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No, Mr. Speaker, there are no orders in council dealing with it, but there is consideration given by the cabinet to all those matters, and there is a minute of a decision when it is made by the cabinet.

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask a supplementary question? Does that policy apply to arms sold by the government as well as arms sold by private manufacturing concerns?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): With respect to arms that are sold from government supplies, under the Financial Administration Act they have to be released by the treasury board and the treasury board will refer to council generally any such matter that may appear to affect the international situation.

Mr. Knowles: Can the Prime Minister state what document it is that actually authorizes shipment? Is it the minute of the cabinet or is it the signature of the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): It is the permit that is issued after a decision has been reached.

SAINT PATRICK'S DAY

MR. MCIVOR—GREETINGS TO MR. SPEAKER AND MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of special privilege. We would like to extend to you greetings a day ahead of time and wish you a happy St. Patrick's day. We would also like to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) for giving us a free St. Patrick's day without any parliamentary doings so we can celebrate without restriction to our hearts' content.

[Mr. Drew.]

FIRES

OTTAWA—INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION AND PREVENTIVE MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the federal government take the initiative in calling a special conference of federal, provincial and municipal representatives to consider what specific steps can be taken to reduce the shocking loss of life in this capital area, particularly of children, and to consider also what may be done in regard to the elimination of these substandard homes where so many of these fires occur?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a matter within the jurisdiction of the provinces and their organs, the municipal corporations. We shall give, of course, and we have been giving, consideration to what the hon. gentleman rightly refers to as a shocking situation. We have all been, I think, very much disturbed by the news of these calamities which probably are a consequence of the fact that there are being installed in premises electrical equipment that overloads the capacity of the wiring, and so forth, and I think it is a matter that is deserving of serious consideration.

Mr. Coldwell: I would not have made the suggestion except for the fact that it seems to me the gravity of the situation warrants some unusual action. I know this is largely a provincial matter but, since this is the capital city and 39 lives were lost, action is required.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

GRAIN

BARLEY—INQUIRY AS TO VARIETY LICENSED AS "PARKLAND"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, arising out of the announcement that a new variety of barley known as "Parkland" has been licensed. Can the minister state whether any of this variety will be available for distribution this year and whether or not this variety is suitable for use in the various provinces?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member for Moose Mountain was kind enough to give me notice of his question. I wish to state that seed of "Parkland" barley, developed at the Brandon experimental farm, will not be available for general distribution for seeding this year. The quantity of seed now in existence is about 4,000 bushels. It will be evident from this that a general distribution of that kind could not be made. This will be used for increase on experimental farms and under contract with registered seed growers. It is expected that general distribution will be made in time for seeding in 1957. After this year's production is known, details as to prices and procedure for obtaining supplies will be announced. "Parkland" barley is suitable for use in the three prairie provinces and is particularly well adapted to the black soil zones.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF FINAL PAYMENT ON 1954 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister yet in a position to say when the final payment will be made on the 1954 wheat crop and if it can be made in time to help the farmers finance their seeding operations?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not ready at the moment.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether the minister can say when he anticipates he will be able to make an announcement?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I do not know the date but I will promise to inform the house as soon as a decision has been reached.

WHEAT—REPORTED INCREASE IN PRICES FOR LOW GRADES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister state whether or not any consideration has been given by the Canadian wheat board to increasing the price of low-grade wheat since it has been announced that demand has exceeded available supply?

An hon. Member: Demand?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Prices have been increased recently, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PRECAUTIONS RESPECTING RUSSIAN POLAR EXPEDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence or, in his absence, to his parliamentary assistant. In view of the reports of Russian scientific activities among the Arctic islands, are any precautions being taken or can the minister or his parliamentary assistant tell us whether or not these Russian polar expeditions are entering Canadian waters among the Arctic islands?

Mr. P. T. Hellyer (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should be expected to answer that question.

Mr. Nesbitt: Do I take it from the answer of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence that he will take my question as notice or that there will be no answer?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think I should be expected to answer the question.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, we are entitled to know from the parliamentary assistant, despite the lack of training he appears to be receiving, whether he intends to bring the question to the attention of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fulton: —so that the minister may decide and look into the matter and be in a position to give an answer to the house.

Mr. Hellyer: I will be pleased to bring it to the attention of the minister. I believe the white paper will be brought down in due course which will outline defence policy, and when the department's estimates are before the house members can go into these matters just as thoroughly as security precautions will permit.

Mr. Nesbitt: Possibly I might redirect the same question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am wholeheartedly in accord with the answer just given by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence.

MINTO ARMOURIES, WINNIPEG—INQUIRY AS TO RECONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence. Is he prepared to answer the question of which I gave notice to the minister the other day asking the minister if he would give a statement to the house concerning the fire which occurred at Minto armouries in Winnipeg during the month of January, at which time he said he did not have a report ready? Second, have plans been made to rebuild Minto armouries or is consideration being given to vacating the present site and build an armoury elsewhere in the greater Winnipeg area?

Mr. P. T. Hellyer (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, army headquarters has received the report of the board of officers inquiring into the fire at the Minto armoury on January 22 last.

The fire was apparently caused by an unextinguished cigarette or other smoker's ash which ignited a chesterfield in the sergeant's mess. The preliminary estimate of the cost of restoring the building to its original condition is $470,000; the loss of public stores and equipment is estimated at $50,000; but no estimate has yet been made of the loss of non-public stores and equipment.

The present intention is to restore the armoury to full use. A civilian consultant firm in Winnipeg has been engaged to report on the extent of the work required for this purpose. It will, however, be some time before this report is received and final arrangements made.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a further question of the parliamentary assistant? Is he now prepared to give a report to the house with regard to the accident that occurred to four R.C.A.F. planes in Europe about two weeks ago?

Mr. Hellyer: I am not prepared to make a report. The air force officials have received a report which indicated that this extremely unfortunate accident took place during aerobatic practice. There is little that I can add to what has already been made public on the subject.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED BANNING OF JET AIRCRAFT FROM SPACE USED BY ORDINARY AIR TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the house whether jet aircraft on speed runs have been banned from the air space used by regular traffic as reported in the press yesterday?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): I shall take my hon. friend's question as notice and give him an answer when I am in a position to do so.

TRANSPORT

FERRY "BLUENOSE"—INQUIRY AS TO RESUMPTION OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can he tell the house whether the Bluenose is in operation?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, representing six counties in all, have, I know, a great interest in the subject of the Bluenose. I can merely say what I said to the hon. gentleman the other day, that as soon as I am in a position to make a statement with respect to when operations are to be resumed I shall make it.

An hon. Member: Who knows?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE IN ASKING QUESTIONS ON ORDERS OF THE DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other questions? If not, may I say this. I want hon. members to be quite at ease. I am not relating any remarks I am going to make now to any of the hon. members who have asked questions today. I am speaking generally.

I want to tell hon. members that I think that between their conception of what should be asked at question time and mine there is now such a wide difference that I am afraid we are not pulling in the same direction. I think it is well for me to establish the position which I consider is the one which is now in force. I will not quote all these citations but I will refer hon. members to the following ones in Beauchesne's third edition: 137, 140, 295, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310 and 311; also to Bourinot's fourth edition, pages 310 to 315. I know that hon. members will read those quotations at the first opportunity and will govern themselves accordingly. But for the purpose of my argument today I should like hon. members to bear with me when I read citation 140 which is as follows:

140. A question which could be inserted on the order paper is not allowed on the orders of the day being called.

Then citation 297:

297. A certain number of oral questions are permitted in practice by members, without notice, before the orders of the day are called; but these are merely allowed by courtesy in connection with the business of the house or with very urgent and important matters of public concern. They are always brief, no debate being permitted, and the replies are as concise as possible. The minister interrogated may reply at once or may direct that the usual notice be given. Such questions are governed by the same rules of order as questions of which notice has been given.

In other words, if a question could not be inserted on the order paper, a member cannot ask it before the orders of the day are called.

Then citation 303 reads:

Questions addressed to ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament, or to any matter of administration for which the minister is responsible. Within these lines an explanation can be sought regarding the intentions of the government, but not an expression of opinion upon matters of policy.

It is not in order to ask merely whether certain statements made in a newspaper, are true; but attention may be drawn to such statements, if the member, who puts the question, makes himself responsible for their accuracy.

In so far as those last two lines are concerned—"if the member, who puts the question, makes himself responsible for their accuracy"—I confess I do not know what that means. If a member makes himself responsible and it happens the statement is not accurate, what can happen? In my view, that part is meaningless.

Then citation 307 reads:

A minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for his refusal, and insistence on an answer is out of order, no debate being allowed. A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment upon such refusal. A member can put a question, but has no right to insist upon an answer.

An answer to a question cannot be insisted upon, if the answer be refused by the minister on the ground of the public interest; nor can the question be replaced on the notice paper. The refusal of a minister to answer on this ground cannot be raised as a matter of privilege.

Now, I said that these were the basic rules. I have dug into the various statements and discussions that have taken place, on points of order regarding these rules, which appear in Hansard, and I should like to refer hon. members to them. I will not read these excerpts but I should like hon. members to read the discussion between the Hon. Mr. King and the Hon. Mr. Bennett in 1937, which appears in Hansard, of February 1, pages 422-424; another intervention on January 29, pages 258-259 of volume 1, 1939; another one in 1940, volume 2, July 12, pages 1569-1571; volume 2, July 15, 1940, pages 1596-1597; Journals, July 15, 1940, pages 216-218; another one on March 12, 1942, page 1243; volume 2, March 19, 1942, page 1441; a statement by Mr. Speaker Glen which appears in Journals of March 15, 1943, pages 160-161; another statement in the same year, Hansard for May 28, volume 4, page 3126; then again on June 10 of the same year, pages 3494-3496; then on January 16, 1944, pages 547-549; another on July 25, 1946, pages 3831-3834; again in 1947, February 24, pages 701-702; volume 1, March 5, 1930, page 293; a statement by Mr. Speaker Macdonald on May 29, 1951, page 427 of Journals. I will simply quote this last one.

There is another matter to which I think reference should be made at this time. It is with respect to the procedure regarding the asking of questions. I would refer hon. members to standing order No. 44 which is now our standing order 39. This standing order provides for the placing of questions on the order paper, which is the usual procedure, and should be followed whenever possible.

It has nevertheless been the practice in our house to allow a certain number of oral questions and it is not my purpose to discourage members from asking questions of the proper type as I feel that these questions create a more lively interest in the business of the house.

These oral questions are asked when the orders of the day are called and are frequently asked without notice. I would, however, emphasize that these oral questions should be asked only in connection with very urgent and important matters of public concern and only if it would not be in the public interest to place them on the order paper and receive answers in accordance with the method provided for in the standing orders. They should always be brief. No debate is permitted and the replies should be as concise as possible. The questions should not be prefaced by the reading of letters, telegrams, newspaper extracts or preambles of any kind.

He concluded by asking for the co-operation of hon. members in the observance of these rules. Now, if I were to tell hon. members that not long ago supplementary questions were considered to be prohibited, many hon. members would ask me, "What is the basis for saying that?" Mind you, during the war, in 1943, in a time of emergency and when questions were considered to be of great importance, Mr. Speaker Glen, in discussing a question—which incidentally had been asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), so he will remember it—said:

That is hardly a question that can be asked on the orders of the day and certainly it should not be put. I must point out further that a practice is coming into vogue in the house of putting supplementary questions to elicit answers in addition to those given by ministers. If the rules permitted it, that would be entirely proper; but the rules do not permit of supplementary questions being asked. I have allowed a number of these questions where explanations or statements by ministers might reasonably be requested, in circumstances where the minister would no doubt wish to have his remarks made as clear as possible. But I must point out that the rule is as I have stated.

This was in 1943. I would say about half of the membership of this house was in that parliament of 1943. My arithmetic may not be very good but there is a substantial number of hon. members here today who were in the parliament of 1943. I hope that hon. members will read carefully all the citations I have given and I feel confident that they will do so knowing their interest in the matter. They will see that not only has it been the opinion of prime ministers but also of leaders of the opposition when they have occupied one side or the other during their careers, that questions before the orders of the day are called should be limited to questions of an urgent and important character and should be asked on the orders of the day only if they could not be placed on the order paper without some prejudice being suffered.

I said earlier that hon. members are moving in a direction which is contrary to that which I understand to be the right one because as hon. members know the rules are not being changed by the Speaker. If hon. members wish that the rules be changed there is a proper method to be adopted and that is to have a committee on rules, have the matter decided and have a report made to the house. Were I to receive such a report I can assure you that I would try to interpret the new rules as faithfully as I could. As it is, hon. members are trying to move in the direction of having a question period which is almost similar to that which exists in the United Kingdom without adopting the proper safeguards and without giving more authority to the Speaker to intervene whenever he feels that a question is not in order and also without adopting the method of giving notice which is in vogue in the United Kingdom.

As hon. members know in the United Kingdom there is no such thing as a question without notice. They have a question with two days' notice which is written and the answer may be either oral or written, and arising out of oral questions hon. members may put supplementary questions and it is at the discretion of the Speaker to decide what could be done with the number of supplementary questions. There is also a type of question which is known as a private notice question which is not allowed unless it is authorized by the Speaker and unless, after it has been authorized by the Speaker, notice is given to the minister who is called upon to answer, and even after this procedure has been followed with respect to an urgent question, the minister can still ask for two days' notice after private notice has been given.

Here we have these oral questions which, if I may say so, are sometimes not asked in order to obtain information but are meant to check the day to day operations of the government. According to our rules that type of question should not be asked.

Perhaps the one who has most thoroughly looked into our system of rules and who is thoroughly acquainted with the United Kingdom system is Mr. Harry W. Walker, research worker at the Institute of Local Government, Queen's University, Canada, who wrote an article in "Parliamentary Affairs" at the request of the Hansard Society, at page 461 under the heading, "Question Time in Canada" in which he said:

> A specific example of a procedural device that has been developed from British practice, yet differs radically from current Westminster usage, is the question period in the Canadian House of Commons.

Then later, talking about oral questions before the orders of the day, he said:

> . . . the other is sanctioned solely by custom and usage and probably would be disallowed if attempted at Westminster.

Further down he said:

> The rules governing the kinds of questions that can be asked are the same for both procedures, except that questions asked before the orders of the day are called must refer to "very urgent and important matters of public concern". The definition of "urgent" questions depends upon the ruling of Mr. Speaker. Government ministers claim that too broad an interpretation of urgency is allowed by the Speaker. On the other hand, private members in opposition party ranks complain that too strict a meaning is attached to the adjective "urgent".

Then later he said:

> In Canada, the complexity of the question procedure and its lack of definitiveness usually results in an annual altercation on the floor of the house.

And hon. members are witnesses to that. Then he says:

> Habitually, Mr. Speaker makes a short statement—

I apologize for making mine so long.

> —during the early stages of the parliamentary session to remind the members of the differences between the two procedures to be outlined below. The Speaker tries to discourage the use of too many questions being asked "on the orders of the day being called".

Mr. Walker wrote this in 1951.

> Two general rules for both procedures are that all questions must seek information and there shall be no debate on the answer given. The applicable standing order and a whole line of Speakers' rulings have tended to institutionalize this mild bit of sophisticated hypocrisy inherent in the first rule. It is patent that the main reason for the asking of questions is not pure scientific or academic interest. The truth is that members want to embarrass the government ministers by making the latter reveal, in their answers, governmental ineptitude, mismanagement, and corruption —in short, to put the government party on trial.

As a matter of fact some questions are not designed to seek information from the government but are designed, as one hon. member recently pointed out to me, to "get at the government". On page 464 he refers to supplementary questions concerning which he says they are "taboo" and have been discouraged by a whole line of Speakers' rulings. If he were to come back today I think he would have to correct what he said in 1951, regarding supplementary questions because they are now being asked. He concludes this article by saying:

> No doubt as demands made upon the national government for further intervention into economic and social realms increase, there will be a tendency to place more emphasis on the value of the question time procedural technique as a weapon both to embarrass the government and to maintain watch and ward over the political executive and civil service.

The tendency which he foresaw has certainly existed. I want to tell hon. members that the tendency is being accentuated to the point where we are pulling in two different directions. I have my rules of Beauchesne and Bourinot which hon. members expect me to enforce and yet hon. members are pulling in the direction of the practice which exists in the United Kingdom under different rules. Hon. members should not be surprised if I frequently intervene—perhaps in their view unduly but in my view quite rightly—and if I appear in my interventions to be quite drastic but by virtue of the rules I am supposed to enforce I can assure hon. members that I have been so lenient since I have been in office in relation to those rules that I should not be asking hon. members today for anything but their forgiveness.

An hon. Member: Granted.

Mr. Speaker: Having said that, I simply express the hope that hon. members will look into this problem themselves because I think a problem does exist and the Speaker is put in an impossible position. In view of the situation which has existed some hon. members who have been elected in recent years feel that the practice as it exists today is the right one. They feel that the Speaker is completely off the track when he intervenes on some occasions, and perhaps quite rightly, with the result that we get what I read in this morning's Montreal Gazette where this headline appears, "Speaker Blocks PC Query". I am not blocking P.C. or C.C.F. or Liberal queries. I block a question when it is out of order. In this article there is the implication that I intervene unduly. I am not dealing with the point which was raised yesterday concerning the question of the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) because he is not here today. In any event Hansard speaks for itself.

I ask hon. members to judge the situation and ask themselves if it is a fair position in which to put their Speaker. That is what I ask them. I have no objection if hon. members want to go in a certain direction, but they cannot expect me to give them my blessing with the rules that I have to follow. If they want to change them I suggest that they know what procedure to take.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the explanation which has been given will the Prime Minister consider setting up a committee on rules as soon as possible so that the problem may be considered?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There was a committee on rules that sat for quite—

Mr. Knowles: Ten years.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): —a long period and which made recommendations that were approved by the house as recently as last year. I would suggest that we try to conform with those rules as closely as we can. If we find that they are too restrictive no doubt there will be discussions among hon. members as to the advisability of having a committee set up to consider them. The government will place no obstacles in the way of hon. members because it is not the government that determines what should be the rules of the house, it is the membership of the house itself.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might make a suggestion.

An hon. Member: A supplementary question.

Mr. Knowles: My suggestion arises out of the remarks made by Your Honour. First of all, may I say that I am glad you have raised what might be called a question of privilege on your own behalf. Whatever we may think of your administration of the rules I do not think the press should picture you as an ogre trying to prevent parliament from carrying on with its business.

However, my suggestion is that those who study this matter by reading the citations and references which you have indicated might also read what Sir Edward Fellowes, K.C.B., C.M.G., M.C., Clerk of the House of Commons at Westminster, has said on the matter of questions. His statement is recorded in a summary of the proceedings of the fourth parliamentary course held at Westminster in May, 1955. These proceedings are contained in a mimeographed document which has been made available to all members of this house who are members of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. I shall not take time to read it all, but perhaps I would be permitted to read one or two sentences since Your Honour has already indicated publicly what I said to you privately yesterday.

Sir Edward Fellowes says that questions, although "ostensibly for obtaining information and asking for action, were really a way of 'getting at' the government". Dealing with supplementary questions Sir Edward said:

> It was by this means that the private members could criticize the government on matters of administrative action and on points of policy which seemed to them unsatisfactory.

I felt it was only fair that this side of the picture should also be on the record today. I am sure we all agree with you that the whole point might be given further study.

Mr. Speaker: With regard to that conception of the use of questions as a means of getting at the government, I think in fairness hon. members should also read "A Question in Parliament", which also appeared in "Papers on Parliament", published by the Hansard Society in 1949. This was prepared by a gentleman who had been 20 years in the parliament of the United Kingdom, sitting on both sides of the house, Sir Herbert Williams, M.Sc., M.Eng., A.M.I.C.E. He said:

> Quite obviously it would be grossly unfair to expect a minister to answer any one of many thousands of questions affecting his department unless he has notice of it.

And then later:

> In order, therefore, that a minister should be in a position to answer questions he must have notice, and the procedure of the House of Commons provided, in the ordinary way, that he was to have a clear twenty-four hours' notice.

In 1946, on a motion by the Right Hon. Herbert Morrison, the time of notice was increased from one day to two days. If notice is given it would be in accordance with the system in the United Kingdom, but I repeat, and these are my last words, if I were to enforce the rules rigidly as they are and thus gain for myself the reputation of being tough I am sometimes given, if I were to be rigid in my interpretation of the rules, I would cut off supplementary questions, I would cut off all questions on policy, I would cut off all questions containing argumentative material. When questions start with "Is the minister aware?" or "Will the minister take action to the end or in order that, etc?" those are all argumentative questions containing debatable matters and should be disallowed.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

A—Department—
435. Departmental administration, $1,777,100.

The Chairman: Hon. members will find this item on page 69 of the book of estimates, with the details commencing on page 532.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Chairman, following a practice of my predecessor I intend first to comment briefly on the proposed expenditures by my department according to the standard objects of those expenditures and then to mention some projects of current interest.

The total estimated expenditures for my department, air transport board, board of transport commissioners, Canadian maritime commission and national harbours board are $142,667,112, an increase of $2,524,391 as compared with 1955-56. The total for my department—excluding the boards and commissions—to which I have just referred, is $120,564,250, which represents a decrease of $776,348. However, this decrease is more than offset by an increase of $4 million in the provision for the railway grade crossing fund.

Under object 1, which covers civil salaries and wages, we have a total expenditure of $38,451,981, which is an increase of $2,100,083, or 6 per cent. This represents 550 additional positions, of which 498 are for the air services branch. Of the number I have just mentioned, 498, 80 are required to staff the marine radio stations formerly manned by the Canadian Marconi Company, and 206 are accounted for by major expansions in our air traffic control operations. A general expansion in the meteorological division to keep abreast of current demands will account for another 75 positions. The remainder are required to meet the normal growth of aviation, telecommunications and marine supply and to discharge our new responsibilities in the north.

The increase in object 2, Civilian Allowances, of $117,456, or seven per cent, is attributable to an increase in salaries, and relates directly to northern, isolation and other special types of allowances.

Object 4, Professional and Special Services, is increased by $206,700 or 17 per cent. Of this amount $90,000 is for stevedoring costs in connection with our northern supply work and $25,000 has been included to enable us to develop the possibility of operating one of the important northern airfields on a contract basis. I do not propose to comment on Travelling and Removal Expenses as I dealt with these last year, and the amount required this year is not materially changed.

Freight, Express and Cartage, object 6, is increased by $88,905, or 13 per cent, in connection with our northern supply work. The sum of $33,000 is attributable to additional costs for transportation of fuel oil and other materials to our station at Cambridge Bay and to the new radio range at Lac Eon, and $11,000 to additional supply costs at Fort Chimo, due to increasing activity in that area.

Telephone, Telegram and Communication Services, object 8, are increased by $337,793 to a total of $3,446,271. This is a substantial sum, but, only a small portion of it is spent for such normal communications costs as telephone calls and telegrams. More than 90 per cent of the total is for the direct leasing of telephone and teletype circuits in connection with air traffic control and meteorological services. Of this year's increase almost $220,000 is for additional wire leases for air traffic control and $60,000 for similar leases in connection with radio aids for flying. The actual amount spent on telephone calls and telegrams will not be substantially different from last year.

Publication of departmental reports and other material, object 9, is a small item and the increase of $7,300 is attributable mainly to the biennial list of shipping, which is to be published next year. The small increase in advertising is explained by the publication of calls for tender, notices of expropriation and aviation notices.

Our purchases of Materials and Supplies under object 12 are down by $188,480 to a total of $6,753,884. We have been able to achieve a number of small reductions but the change results mainly from a saving on materials and supplies for airway and airport operation made possible by various economies, including the use of contract services for certain operations.

Object 13, Construction or Acquisition of Building and Works including land, shows a reduction of $2,500,000, or seven per cent, to a total of $32,418,000. This is attributable to the Canso causeway, which is now virtually completed. In our other fields of construction, small increases under one head offset small decreases under other heads. I shall mention later some specific projects.

Object 14 deals with the Repairs and Upkeep of buildings, and here there is an increase of $219,945. Almost half of this increase is due to our providing for certain maintenance dredging in the St. Lawrence ship channel, and the remainder largely to the increased cost of repair of airport facilities and radio aids to navigation.

Our requirements for Construction or Acquisition of Equipment, object 16, are less by almost 20 per cent because of the completion of work on the two large auto ferries and the approaching completion of the two Newfoundland coastal vessels. These changes more than offset the increase of $450,000 in the provision for construction of departmental vessels.

Object 17, Repairs and Upkeep of Equipment, is up $229,966 or nine per cent. Most of this increase is explained by an increase in the provision for repairs either to our departmental steamers, due to increasing work and increasing obsolescence, or to airport equipment.

Our requirements for Rental of Equipment, object 18, are increased by $56,562 because of the increase in cost of chartering ships for our marine supply work in the Arctic, the provision for the work last year having proved to be insufficient.

The change in the cost of Municipal or Public Utility Services, object 19, largely the purchase of electric power, results from the growing activity of the department, although there are increases for the new transmitter at Goose, certain northern stations for weather services, and increased power costs at such points as Fort St. John and Norman Wells.

The twentieth object of expenditure, contributions, grants and subsidies, is increased by about 19 per cent to a total of $16,158,353. This increase is largely due to the provision for the payments to the Canadian National Railways on account of construction of the Chibougamau branch line, and to an increase of almost $1 million in the payments we expect to make under the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

The remaining objects of expenditure, covering pensions and other general items, do not, I believe, require comment, except to say that under object 33, Deficits of Government-Owned Enterprises, there is an increase of $835,750. Though we expect smaller deficits next year on the Hudson Bay Railway and in the operation of the Prince Edward Island ferry, there will be a substantial increase to provide for the ferry service to Newfoundland.

Item 34 covers Estimated Savings and Recoverable Items which are offset against our expenditures. These include a number of miscellaneous expenditures recoverable from other departments for services operated for them. For example, meteorological services provided specifically and solely for the Department of National Defence represent a recoverable item of over $1,800,000. The total of such items will be $6,159,649, an increase of almost $2¼ million.

I think it would be of some interest to hon. members if I were to refer to some of the more important projects of my department at the present time.

The operations of our canals division will continue at about the same level of expenditure as in past years at just over $6¼ million. Because of the work in connection with the seaway, we are making arrangements for two-way navigation this year in the 14-foot canal near Iroquois on the St. Lawrence. This, admittedly, will give rise to problems as to the handling and control of traffic, but we believe it possible to provide for the satisfactory movement of traffic. So far as canal construction is concerned, departmental expenditures will be reduced by over $1 million because of the completion of certain projects, among which are included the rehabilitation of the St. Peters canal, the providing for two-way navigation near Iroquois, to which I have just referred, and certain larger items on the Welland, Sault and Trent canals.

Turning to marine matters, we have a new program for aids to navigation on the Mackenzie river in order to develop it further as an important water route to the western Arctic. We propose also to carry out some important rehabilitation work at our marine agency at Halifax, and we have plans in hand for the construction of a new marine agency and depot at Saint John, New Brunswick.

Our work in connection with marine supply and patrol in the Arctic increases each year. My officials played an important part in the development of plans for resupply of defence installations in the western Arctic and are at present engaged in studies in relation to the eastern Arctic. We continue to provide and co-ordinate the movement of government sea supply to the eastern Arctic and to send ships north for this purpose. We have been requested to provide a departmental vessel to assist in the special supply and convoy work next summer in connection with the D.E.W. line in this area. These developments account largely for the increase of $325,000 in the vote for steamers' operations.

We have also had a substantial increase in requests for special icebreaking assistance in the St. Lawrence river and gulf and in adjacent maritime areas, including Newfoundland. We have done our best to meet these widely varying requirements, although we are not equipped with enough icebreakers to be able to meet all requests. We have under construction a new medium-sized icebreaker for use in the river St. Lawrence and we expect to start the construction this spring of a similar vessel which will probably be based in Newfoundland and will serve as a marine agency supply vessel there.

We have also completed plans for a shipbuilding program that will give us, over the next four years, a more modern and up-to-date fleet of icebreakers and marine agency supply vessels. For a number of years we have been attempting to carry out an extensive program of icebreaking, northern supply work, provision and supply of aids to navigation, including lighthouses and buoys, and marine agency work generally, and we have been handicapped in our work by not having enough ships suitable for working in ice and by the fact that a number of our agency vessels are old and obsolete and in many cases were originally built for other purposes.

Because of the important responsibilities in respect of shipping that rests upon it, I believe that the department is justified in having a proper and up-to-date fleet. We plan to replace from 12 to 15 of our oldest and most unsatisfactory departmental vessels, and to add certain new vessels primarily for icebreaking purposes. We shall complete this year smaller marine agency vessels for the Victoria and Quebec agencies, a small icebreaker for work in the St. Lawrence river to replace the Lady Grey, and a new lightship for the Sambro station. In addition, we expect to start construction on a new supply vessel for the great lakes, a new, large icebreaker for northern work, and a vessel for St. John's, Newfoundland, that will be able to combine icebreaking and agency supply work. The last mentioned vessel is the one I referred to a little earlier in my remarks. Plans for the other replacements, which will be commenced in subsequent years, are at present under preparation.

I should add that where feasible all new vessels will be strengthened for work in ice and will, if large enough, be provided with helicopter decks that can be used as bases for helicopter operations in the event of emergency. It has now been clearly demonstrated by our experience in helicopter use on our Arctic supply missions, and by our experience this winter in keeping a helicopter on the d'Iberville, that our icebreakers should have a helicopter permanently stationed on them, as this makes possible a much more efficient and economic work program.

As part of a four year program we are calling tenders this year for a new dredging contract to continue the gradual improvement of the navigation channel in the St. Lawrence river from Montreal to below Quebec, by widening and straightening the channel. As a start, a sum of $3,282,000 is provided for the work we hope to carry out in 1956-57.

In the matter of steamship inspection, we have been actively considering the technical regulations applicable to fishing boats, and after lengthy consultations with the industry have developed regulations for fishing craft under 80 feet in length and are at present engaged in consultations with the industry regarding fishing craft over 80 feet in length. Out steamship inspection expenditures will not vary materially, although we are estimating a slight reduction.

In the field of telecommunications, we are continuing a steady and gradual expansion to meet the growing requirements of our country for these services. The vote for the telecommunications division is increased by $811,000 to a total of $17,164,000. The increase is largely with respect to operations. The first section of our transcontinental VOR airway system, from Windsor to Montreal, has been placed in operation. The second section from Toronto to Winnipeg is at present under development. Orders have been placed for equipment to cover the balance of the transcontinental system. We have also ordered for very early delivery four short-range radar sets for air traffic control at four major airports, pending delivery of a larger number of long-range radar sets, which we have ordered to provide transcontinental radar coverage on our airways for traffic control. Our work in telecommunications in the far north is also expanding rapidly as civil and military activities there give rise to the need of new communication facilities. The expected growth of intercontinental flying over northern polar routes, that has already started and seems likely to increase, adds materially to our responsibilities in this field.

So far as the administration of the Radio Act and the regulations made under the act are concerned, we are providing for a small increase in expenditure, but we do not have a sufficient staff to enable us to keep fully abreast in the field investigation of complaints regarding radio interference. We have found it difficult to recruit trained personnel for telecommunications work and are returning to the practice of providing special assistance in training personnel for our own requirements.

In the field of meteorological services, I reported last year that our meteorological staff was opening an additional major station at Banks island in the western Arctic. We hope to complete this year the construction in the Foxe basin area of another new station. When this station is established we will, we believe, have provided about as many major observation posts in the Canadian Arctic as ought reasonably to be expected for the present. We are, however, developing a plan by which the Canadian meteorological services will provide the extensive and specialized weather information that is necessary for the operation of the defence lines in northern Canada, both the D.E.W. line and the mid-Canada line. Our expenditures of $9,112,000 represent an increase of $695,000, which is attributable entirely to operations.

In the field of aviation, the rapid growth of flying, both civil and military, continues. Because I do not wish to detain hon. members unduly I shall not give a full description of what has been done in the past year in the way of airport and airway development, air traffic control, construction of physical facilities and installation of technical equipment. I shall merely mention the fact that we are now well advanced in our program of providing new terminal buildings at the important Canadian airports. Those of Saskatoon and Seven Islands have been completed, while new terminal buildings at Montreal, Quebec, Gander and Windsor are under construction. A start will be made in the course of the present year at Ottawa, Torbay, Regina, Stephenville and Vancouver. A temporary addition to terminal facilities is being made at Toronto and planning in connection with completely new major buildings for Toronto and Winnipeg is also in hand, although it is not intended to commence building operations in 1956. The new airport for Halifax is under construction and planning is under way for new airports for Edmonton and Prince Rupert, though construction is not likely to start before 1957. Our estimates on civil aviation construction are down $1,261,000 to a total of $15,453,000. We believe that under present conditions and with our somewhat limited staff we cannot at this time plan to carry out a more extensive program.

In the field of regulation, in order to cope better with the growing problems of airway control, we shall be doubling our present air traffic control staff, which will increase our expenditures by some $762,000, and we have opened our own traffic control schools at Winnipeg and Toronto where we are training personnel.

We have also taken other steps—in the matter of technical regulation—to promote the maximum degree of safety in the air. We still have under consideration a proposal to set aside certain altitudes on our airways which at all times, and even under good weather conditions, would be used only by aircraft, whose movements would be subject to complete traffic control. As is to be expected, some groups, particularly light plane owners, fear that they may not be able to achieve the higher standards of competency necessary to fly at these altitudes. We think that the difficulties have been somewhat exaggerated, because light aircraft do not normally use these altitudes; and though we are not indifferent to the rights of operators of light aircraft we think that we must give a high priority to all factors affecting the safety of large aircraft which carry a substantial number of passengers.

The national harbours board will be continuing its improvements in our major harbours. Heavy expenditures at Churchill will not be repeated in 1956-57, as the extension of the grain elevator there has been finished; and expenditures at Saint John will also be somewhat lower, although they will still amount to about $845,000. Expenditures of almost $2 million at Halifax are provided for and include a sum of $1,285,000 for the continuation of a new deep-sea pier which, complete with sheds, will cost about $2,500,000. When the volume of traffic warrants it, this new pier can be doubled in length, and additional sheds constructed upon it.

In Montreal the board will continue the works that I referred to last year, namely the extension of two wharves, the raising of the level of the Sutherland pier by 14 feet, the building of a new transit shed, the extension of another transit shed and the carrying out of work on the grain conveyor gallery. The board's expenditures in the coming fiscal year on these works are expected to amount to $5,200,000. The second stage in the board's program of works calls for expenditures this year of $6,146,500 for a certain number of new projects. These consist of:

1. The building of wharves and piers, including the construction of a new grain jetty serving elevators Nos. 1 and 2 for the unloading of the large lake vessels, the raising of the Laurier pier, and the extending of certain oil wharves.

2. Dredging the ship channel in the upper part of the harbour and the approach channels to certain of the oil wharves.

3. Provision of grain receiving facilities from the proposed new jetty to serve elevators Nos. 1 and 2, and changes to grain galleries to serve elevators "B" and 1 and 2, as part of the work to be done to provide for rapid unloading of large lake vessels.

4. Certain miscellaneous items including improvements to the cold storage plant and other facilities of the harbour.

The work of providing an extra lane for highway traffic on the Jacques Cartier bridge, for which provision was made in last year's estimates, was delayed by a shortage of steel. I understand that it is expected that the work will be finished by the end of May, but it is necessary to revote $440,000 for this purpose. The estimates for the coming fiscal year also include a provision of $950,000 for the alterations to the southern approach of the bridge which will be necessary partly because of the raising of the bridge in connection with the seaway and partly in order to speed up the flow of traffic.

The total of these expenditures will be $12,736,500 of which $1,390,000 will be supplied from the board's funds, and $11,346,500 is to be appropriated by way of advances to the board.

At Quebec capital expenditures this year will be increased to $1,687,000. In addition, the harbours board have under development a plan for new facilities at Quebec. These will include accommodation for lakers, and new facilities for grain unloading and storage, including an elevator capable of storing an additional two million bushels. The total cost of this program, which will be initiated in 1957, will be over $5 million.

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that my remarks have been so tedious and have contained so many references to figures. However, it seems to me that it is perhaps desirable that we should have on the record a comparison of the expenditures by objects so that hon. members may see what is taking place in the estimates for this year. I hope that hon. members opposite will find that the credits that my department need for the approaching year are very modest, and that they will pass them with great rapidity.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we are all grateful to the Minister of Transport for giving us this comprehensive statement today. It will be helpful in the study of his estimates. I should very much like to meet his final request. However, I am afraid he is asking too much and that we shall be obliged to have him run the gauntlet for at least a time in connection with these estimates.

Today I should like to place before him certain matters which he either did not touch at all or just barely touched. I suppose it is to be expected that the opposition would concentrate on items coming in that particular category. First, I would suggest that, in the future, steps be taken to make the annual report of the department available before the estimates are brought up for discussion. I realize that the minister tabled his report in typewritten form, I believe, some weeks ago; but unfortunately the printed report has not yet been distributed. The result is that we enter upon the discussion of these estimates without having had the opportunity to review the report of the department itself. It should be remembered that, even when they are tabled, these reports are generally a year or more out of date. The last report I have of the Department of Transport is for the year which ended March 31, 1954. That is practically two years ago. Somewhere in the way the government does business there is a grave defect in that these annual reports are not made available at an earlier date.

Then the minister said nothing about the commission which have been considering the question of coastal shipping. I understand that they have concluded their public sittings and are presumably now working on a report.

When the minister replies to the various questions that are asked of him, I hope he will tell the committee when it is expected that that report will be available and also whether the government anticipates bringing in during the present session any legislation as a result of the recommendations that are made by the commissioners.

With regard to the estimates themselves, it would be inappropriate at this stage for me to go into items in any detail. The minister has explained the figures that appear in the summary of standard objects, and it will be necessary to review his statement before we can deal with them adequately. However, I noticed one feature about these estimates. In quite a few instances there will have been a vote passed last year for, say, $1 million and the actual expenditures plus estimated expenditures to the end of the fiscal year will be, say, $500,000 of that $1 million. However, the vote in the next fiscal year is, in most cases, as high or even higher than the vote for the present fiscal year. I am wondering whether there is not some padding in the estimates of the department in connection with these particular items. Somebody in the department is just giving himself a little extra leeway to be sure he is not short of money.

This department has many more items than any other department. I think there are 67 items for the Department of Transport out of a total of some 537 for all departments. It might be that if the minister went over these items, having in mind the point I raise, it would be possible to effect considerable saving. As examples, I would give him the items which appear on page 568 of the details, having to do with construction services administration, air services. The vote last year was $961,383. The amount spent has been estimated at $860,288. This year the department is requesting a vote of $1,026,700. Another example is to be found on page 571, telecommunications division, radio aids to air and marine navigation. The vote last year was $4,236,555, and there was only $3,979,560 spent. This year the vote is $4,234,725.

Another example is found on page 573 where the vote was for $1,606,828 last year. The amount spent was $1,498,244 and the vote for the coming year is $1,691,165. There is another example on page 587 where the vote for last year was $16,715,151. The department only spent $13 million and yet it is coming back this year asking for $15,453,350. This vote is for airways and airports, construction of buildings, under the civil aviation division. There may be an explanation for each of these items. I ask the minister to bear in mind the suggestion that he may find it would be possible to place more emphasis on what was actually spent during one year in calculating how much is going to be requested for the following year, rather than taking into account what was voted in the first year.

Then also with regard to this year's items, and dealing only with the administration item which of course is the one under discussion today, I notice that in the details on page 532 there is an increase in staff of 51. This seems to be very large. Included in that number is an increase in economists. The minister is now going to have eight economists to advise him at his headquarters whereas last year he had only one. Apparently he needs a great deal more advice this year than last. Many of these economists are quite highly paid, the grade 10 receiving from $7,600 to $8,200. I should like to know just what work all these economists are going to do at headquarters.

Another question which I think is of considerable importance is the fact that the Department of Transport does not have jurisdiction over some of the governmental activities which parliament intended should be under that department. I refer first to Trans-Canada Air Lines. Trans-Canada Air Lines is now under the control of the Minister of Trade and Commerce; it is one of his hobby horses. Under the act setting up Trans-Canada Air Lines we find that "minister" means the Minister of Transport. When parliament established this crown corporation the bill was introduced by the then Minister of Transport who is now the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He has hung on to this corporation ever since. For some reason or other he has been allowed to have this particular governmental activity, although in cold hard fact it should be none of his business and should be under the Minister of Transport.

We find that the Minister of Transport is responsible for Canadian National Railways. Canadian National Railways holds all the shares of Trans-Canada Air Lines. If Trans-Canada Air Lines wishes to borrow money it is given power, under the amendment of 1952-53 I think it was, to borrow from Canadian National Railways. The whole legislative tie-up is meant to place Trans-Canada Air Lines under the Minister of Transport. Why should it be taken away and given to another minister, merely because he wants to have this extra power and will not give it up? It is about time that this greed for power was checked by somebody in the cabinet. I suggest the man to do it is the Prime Minister, himself.

The Minister of Transport has to supply all the airways. He is responsible for the air regulations to control all traffic. The air transport board comes under him, not under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The air transport board was set up primarily to advise the minister, and one would think to advise him particularly with regard to Trans-Canada Air Lines. However, the position is that the Minister of Transport has the air transport board under him and yet away over in another department across the street, under the Minister of Trade and Commerce, is Trans-Canada Air Lines. It is just about time this foolishness was stopped.

Next week the special committee dealing with Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines will be meeting. The Minister of Transport will be sitting there when Canadian National Railways affairs are under discussion. Then, when the affairs of Trans-Canada Air Lines come up, although Canadian National holds all the shares in Trans-Canada Air Lines, out goes the Minister of Transport and in comes the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Marler: Or vice versa.

Mr. Green: The Minister of Transport may stay there, but in any event he will not have very much to say. All the talking that really counts will be done by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Then, we come to pipelines. How the Minister of Trade and Commerce got into piplines, I do not know. He was here all day yesterday fighting a pipelines battle, and the legislation stands in his name. Last year when he was being questioned about pipelines he was not so anxious to have the jurisdiction. I questioned him on July 14, and I am quoting from page 6160 of Hansard. I said:

> This evening I should like to place three or four questions before the minister with regard to the construction of a natural gas pipe line from Alberta to Ontario and Quebec. In order to give the background for my questions I shall have to review shortly some of the events that have taken place. As the minister knows, in 1953 he announced government policy with regard to the piping of natural gas.
> Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There is nothing in the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce having to do with the piping of natural gas, and I do not propose to answer any questions.
> Mr. Green: Well, now, Mr. Chairman, the minister has already answered questions this afternoon having to do with natural gas.
> Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That was this afternoon.
> Mr. Green: This comes under the minister's department—
> Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It does not.

That statement he made should have been the fact but actually it is not. The Pipe Lines Act was introduced and put through this house by the Hon. Mr. Chevrier in his capacity as Minister of Transport. The board of transport commissioners, which has a wide jurisdiction with regard to pipelines, is also under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport and yet we find here again that the Minister of Transport is simply shoved off into a corner and the Minister of Trade and Commerce is taking over this power. It is another case of his seizing power to which it was never intended that he should be entitled. It is about time the Minister of Transport rose up on his hind legs and did a little howling about the way he is being cut down.

Finally, on that point, I suggest that the Minister of Transport should also look into the question as to whether or not he should be the man in charge of the crown company known as Northern Transportation Limited. He told us this morning about the amount of money he is going to spend to improve transportation on the Mackenzie river and yet the boss on the Mackenzie river is the same Minister of Trade and Commerce because he has charge of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited and it has charge of Northern Transportation Limited and the control of transportation in that great area is under this crown corporation and apparently it is not giving very much satisfaction to the residents of that particular district.

Another question to which I would like to have an answer from the Minister of Transport has to do with the control of government ships. A private person who owns a ship has to have it registered and subject to inspections as set out in the statutes, but I understand that government-owned ships are not under the same extensive control. I may be wrong in this and I hope I am, but just a few weeks ago one of the ships of the Department of Public Works, the Hilunga, foundered on the west coast. It turned out that that ship was designed for service in waters within 15 miles of the coast. At the time she actually foundered she was in the waters for which she was built, but she had been en route from Vancouver island to the Queen Charlotte islands and she was not built for that purpose. She should never have been sent on that trip. Somebody was responsible for that ship being taken into waters for which she was not built. I would like to know whether she was registered in the way other ships are registered and whether she had been subject to the regular steamship inspection to which other ships are subject, and whether the laws of the land had been complied with in respect of that vessel.

At the same time, let the minister tell us whether all government ships of other departments are treated as though they were ships owned by a private individual in so far as registration, inspection and rules for operation are concerned. It might be wise to find out also about the ships under the minister's own department. After all, the member of a crew of a government ship is probably a person with a family, a wife and children, and his life is as valuable as the life of a person who is sailing on a ship owned by the Canadian Pacific or some other private company, and these rules are designed primarily to preserve life at sea. There is no reason why government ships should not be compelled to comply in full with all such provisions.

Another point relates to the allotment of channels; for example, for broadcasting and for television. There seems to be some difficulty in that regard. The Radio Act defines a radio station broadly enough to include a broadcasting station and a television station. It gives the Minister of Transport power to make regulations with respect to the operation of these stations. I believe it is wide enough to permit the allotting of channels. In fact, it provides wide supervision. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, however, under another act, is also given certain power and, mind you, it is supposed to deal with the Minister of Transport in some way or another in connection with these matters, but I have heard that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has now built itself up into the position where it considers that it has the supreme authority in these questions and that it should make the decisions while the Minister of Transport and his officials are supposed to run along and do what they are told. There again I hope I am wrong; the minister has his own officials qualified for this work; the law says they are to be the final authority in this field and I hope they are not allowing themselves to be supplanted by this crown corporation.

Finally, I would ask the minister to explain to the committee in detail the part that the Department of Transport is playing in connection with the installation and operation of the early warning lines. He mentioned something about it today but not sufficient to give us any real information. I think he said they had some helicopters working in connection with the D.E.W. line and something was also being done in connection with the mid-Canada line.

Mr. Marler: Not helicopters.

Mr. Green: In the latter case it was not helicopters. I believe the committee should know just how the Department of Transport fits into this picture. Here again very little information is available to hon. members of this house. I would think that the Department of Transport has quite an extensive field, because these lines involve communications. For example, the department has charge of the northwest communications service into the Yukon and I believe also up the Mackenzie river and into other parts of northern Canada. I would think the department would have wide powers in connection with the mid-Canada and the distant early warning lines. We would like to know just what the situation is in that regard.

These are the questions which I place before the minister today and which I hope he will be able to deal with when he makes his reply on this item.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra I was interested in following the minister's explanation of the activities of his department. I think most of us realize that the activities of the minister's department are very broad, certainly too broad for any hon. member to attempt to survey in any completeness in one discussion. However, I think the minister's hope that his estimates will be speedily considered does not recognize the fact that the activities of his department vitally affect the daily lives of a large number of Canadians, perhaps in the kind of world in which we now live to a much greater extent than most of them realize. For that reason I believe that a certain amount of discussion of the activities of this department could be carried on profitably by hon. members.

We hear much more about the activities of other departments, for example the Department of National Health and Welfare, which receives a lot of consideration in this house. But I have been thinking that the activities of the Department of Transport affect almost as intimately the lives and welfare of almost as many Canadians. I have been wondering whether we should not classify this department in the civilian world with what is known in another field as the silent service. So much of what is done is under the surface and most of us are not aware of just how far the activities of the department extend in taking care of us whether we are travelling by land, sea or air, whether we are listening to our radios or watching our televisions, or whether we are doing any one of a large number of things.

I was rather interested in the reference made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra to the field of jurisdiction affecting Trans-Canada Air Lines. I am inclined to agree with the hon. member's suggestion, and this thought has crossed my mind on a number of occasions since I have been in this house, that this particular field of transportation should be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport rather than the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

I am slightly puzzled, in view of the kind of remarks I have heard made concerning the Minister of Trade and Commerce by the hon. member and some of his colleagues, that that particular suggestion should be forthcoming from him. I would have thought, because of the views they hold in respect to the activities of some of the crown corporations, that they would have preferred to have a watchdog within the government watching the activities of some of the other ministers, and perhaps would have urged that the Minister of Transport use his powers in the field of legislation to keep a little closer tab on the activities of his colleague.

There are one or two matters I should like to bring up at this point in the discussion of the estimates and which I believe come within the purview of the Minister of Transport. One has reference to the activities of the meteorological service which has to do with matters of weather. I was quite interested to note that during the recent session of the British Columbia legislature the suggestion was put forward by one member that the meteorological service of the Department of Transport should give active consideration to what should or should not be done in the field of rain-making.

Hon. members may recall that last year on the floor of the house I raised the question of rain-making activities and some question was raised as to whether this was a matter which properly lay within the jurisdiction of parliament and whether I was in order in bringing forward that subject. As a result of the discussion last year I took it upon myself to have some conversations with the Minister of Justice during which I told him that I would like to know a little more about the constitutional aspects of this particular matter. Recently I had a letter from the minister which sets forth an opinion on this matter, and I shall refer to this letter in a moment or two.

Before doing so I should like to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that this matter is causing increasing and widespread concern in British Columbia. As I say, it was raised on the floor of the legislature and, if my information is correct, a resolution was passed calling for the setting up of a committee to investigate this whole matter. It appears that an increasing number of large corporations in British Columbia which operate in a field where they are dependent upon rainfall, either to operate pulp mills or to develop hydroelectric power, are engaging the services of a concern which instals and operates rain-making machines for the purpose of increasing the downfall of rain within a particular watershed.

The problem which arises in the minds of a great many people is as to the right of private concerns altering the precipitation in a particular area. They question whether a company which may hold certain forest rights should have the right to alter precipitation in such a manner that it might affect adversely the operations of a man farming within the same area or of a summer tourist resort operator in the same area. As I say, this question is coming increasingly to the fore in British Columbia at the present time.

I feel that sooner or later the question of where jurisdiction lies in respect to the operating of these machines will have to be decided, and perhaps some regulations issued or arrangements made in regard to how and when such machines can be installed and operated. The letter which I have from the Minister of Justice I perhaps should read in its entirety, because he makes a fairly balanced statement. It says:

> I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that the "weather" if it ever comes to be the subject of legislation, falls within the exclusive jurisdiction of parliament since any such law would surely relate to the general welfare of Canada. We do, as of course you are aware, now operate meteorological services and exchange information with other countries. If any operations are ever undertaken with a view to regulating or controlling climatic conditions, such would almost certainly fall, for legislative purposes, within the exclusive jurisdiction of parliament.
> However, such a generalization as I have thus made does not preclude entirely the possibility that in some circumstances the activities of "rainmakers" might be regarded as calling for legislation by a provincial legislature for local purposes, the licensing of them for example. A province could certainly not enact legislation, however, to authorize or regulate operations which might, in the least degree, affect climatic conditions outside the province.
> As is frequently the case in dealing with questions relating to the distribution of legislative power under the British North America Act, it is not possible to say that certain activities or operations, actual or prospective, fall in the provincial or the federal field for legislative purposes. Such questions can only be satisfactorily dealt with by giving consideration to a concrete legislative proposal.

I am not necessarily suggesting that I think the Minister of Transport should immediately come forward with concrete legislative proposals in this field. However, inasmuch as the existing meteorological services in this country fall within the jurisdiction of his department, I feel it would be appropriate, in view of the development of this activity and in the light of the statement that the Minister of Justice has so kindly given me, that within the activities of that branch certain studies in this connection could very well be carried out. I put that idea to the minister at this time for his consideration.

Mr. Harris: I rise on a point of order. I saw my hon. friend looking at the clock. If he has other remarks to make, I was going to ask that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day, so that an announcement be made.

Progress reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1955-56

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1956, was presented by Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Deputy Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

435. Departmental administration, $1,777,100.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at one o'clock I was about to enter on a discussion of another topic related to the estimates of the Minister of Transport and having to do with the field of telecommunications. I should like to put before the committee the results of certain discussions I have had in my constituency on this matter with particular reference to the manner in which the increasing use of various forms of radio communication is of concern to the fishermen. One of the matters that have been concerning the fishermen is the increasing congestion of the radio frequencies which have been assigned for their use, particularly the one known in British Columbia as the fishermen's band, 2318.

I think it is fair to say that as a result of my discussions I am led to believe that the fishermen themselves would welcome the exercise in some way of a greater measure of control over the use of that band than perhaps has been the case up to the present time. I refer, of course, to some of the rather unnecessary conversations that have been going out over the air waves in the coastal waters of British Columbia. However, there are some particular points I should like to have the minister note at this time and perhaps at some point in the discussion of his estimates he might give us some indication of just what his department has in mind in this field.

Some of the fishermen, particularly those operating the smaller vessels such as the trollers and the gillnetters, object to the fact that some of the larger vessels employ quite high-powered sets and that they use these sets in the course of directing their seining operations with the result that in the immediate area those who have lower-powered sets find themselves obliterated from the air. One suggestion put forward to me by quite a number of fishermen is that if those who have high-powered sets installed require radio communication for purely local operations they should be required to instal what you might call some sort of walkie-talkie radio which would not cause the interference that is being occasioned at the present time.

Another complaint that many of the fishermen have brought to my attention is that under the present regulations those with low-powered sets are being assigned only the fishermen's band and the emergency band and that even though they are licensed to operate only on those frequencies they are still required to pay a $50 telephone deposit in addition to the $10 licence fee. They feel that in this case they are being charged for something which they are not entitled to use as a result of the limited number of bands on which they can use their sets.

There has been a good deal of dissatisfaction in the last year or two with respect to the uncertainty that has existed as to just what the licensing policy of the department is going to be. In particular, a number of those who have been handling the distribution of this equipment feel that they have been put in the position of selling goods with regard to which it was discovered later that they were not allowed to carry out the undertaking they gave to the buyer at the time of the sale. In other words, they sold sets which were capable of operating on a number of bands and discovered later that licences were only going to be issued for the two frequencies to which I referred a moment ago. The result is that they have had dissatisfied customers. I hope that this situation will be straightened out so that the dealers and the buyers of the equipment will not feel they have been placed in a compromising position.

There is another point I should like to mention while I am on this subject. A number of fishermen have told me that they are going to be required to take written examinations as operators of these sets. Their concern arises from the fact that under present arrangements they understand they may have to make a long and in some cases expensive journey to a centre such as Vancouver or Victoria in order to write the examination, and they do not think that should be necessary. I believe this points up something to which the minister referred, namely, that the number of personnel available to carry on this work in the department is not really adequate to cope with the greatly increased use being made of radio facilities, and in my opinion consideration should be given to a fairly large increase in the arrangements and facilities that are provided. Whether that could be done in co-operation with one of the other departments of government such as the Department of Fisheries, I do not know, but I do know that the fishermen in the coastal areas have been accustomed, so far as their actual dealings with the Department of Fisheries are concerned, to having a fisheries officer somewhere within reasonable reach.

I do not need to expand on that point. I assume the minister understands that the Department of Fisheries has its officers stationed in the various fishing areas. If an examination system is to be instituted I believe that some arrangement should be developed whereby, through access to someone stationed permanently in the fishing area or through some arrangement whereby the appropriate officials would go to the fishermen, the necessity for taking these long journeys to a centre such as Vancouver would not arise. I have attempted to outline some of the matters that have been brought to my attention, and I would appreciate it if at some point in the discussion of the minister's estimates he would make a statement with respect to any developments taking place by way of policy in the administration of this particular aspect of his department.

This morning the minister made some reference to the program of vessel replacement which his department is carrying on. I believe he dealt principally with the matter of icebreakers, but his mention of this question brought to my mind a suggestion I should like to put forward. I suggest that consideration should be given, and I think it could be given within the confines of the Department of Transport, to the development of some sort of integrated program for the supply of government vessels.

From references I have heard, I know there are a great many types of government vessels in operation, with a great many types of engines. It appears to me that over the course of years various departments of government have acquired vessels at different times and under different conditions. The result apparently is that, where repairs are necessary, in many cases unnecessary delays are involved because there is no central depot, no standardization of the type of motors and no arrangement whereby parts for vessels from one department are interchangeable with vessels of another department. I think that is a matter of policy that could very well come under the consideration of the Minister of Transport. He may naturally be obliged to consult with his colleagues in other departments where vessels are in operation but I feel that in that field there is an opportunity to effect a considerable saving of public funds and at the same time to increase the efficiency of the operations of the vessels that are on our coasts.

While I am not going to develop this subject at the moment I feel that consideration should be given—as I mentioned in an earlier speech in this session—to the question of having proper rescue equipment on all of these vessels operated by the various departments of the government. I know that the minister's department operates vessels—perhaps I should not dignify them by that term—which are allocated to the rescue service. I therefore believe that within his department he must have facilities for giving this particular matter some consideration.

There is one other matter upon which I should like to touch briefly, Mr. Chairman. It relates to the question that was raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra this morning with respect to the recent loss of the Department of Public Works vessel Hilunga. The question that I should like to have answered is whether or not that vessel encountered a storm without warning when she embarked upon that particular voyage. If that is the case, I would say it points out the inadequacies of our present weather forecasting system on the Pacific coast. From my own observation I would say that the efficiency of our weather reporting on the coast has declined since the years during the war when, I imagine, a good deal of the information was being provided by various operations under the Department of National Defence. I know that last fall, I myself had a little experience of the arrival of unexpected weather. I was travelling out to one of the more exposed points on the west coast of Vancouver island in a light plane and we found ourselves faced with the onslaught of some rather gusty weather. To put it mildly, the situation was somewhat uncomfortable. The adequacy of our present facilities for detecting the onslaught of weather on the west coast comes into question when one hears of a situation like the one which surrounded the loss of the Hilunga which apparently set forth from Bull harbour on the north end of Vancouver island across that sound. Certainly I cannot imagine the captain and the crew of that vessel doing so if they had adequate warning of the expected onslaught of that particular storm. I would hope that the minister might dwell on this question of the inadequacies or otherwise of our weather forecasting system on the western coast.

I think I have about used up my time, Mr. Chairman. I know that there will be certain matters that I shall wish to bring to the minister's attention on some of the items. But if he would take particular note of the two or three larger questions that I have raised and reply either during the discussion of this first item or at the appropriate place in the estimates, I should be glad to have him do that.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Transport, in concluding his remarks, said he hoped that we did not find them too tedious. He apologized for making reference to many figures. He also hoped that the estimates would pass rapidly. I should like to assure him that my observation would be that I took the opposite view on each one of those particular statements. I did not find his reading tedious at all. I found it most informative; so much so, in fact, that I was wondering whether a suggestion at this time would not be amiss that possibly in future when he has copious notes, as he had in this instance, maybe at least one member of each group on this side of the house would be privileged to have a copy so that we could speak more intelligently along the lines that he pursued.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I am not too happy about the way in which the estimates are brought into the house. I am not referring to these estimates in particular. What I say applies equally to most of them. We find ourselves from time to time listening to an excellent discourse on the operations of a particular department. At its conclusion each one of us tries in his best way to bring things into focus in so far as they affect the particular riding which he represents or the dominion as a whole or even the province from which he comes, as the case may be. I would be much happier if, at the conclusion of the minister's address, he were to make a motion to adjourn and report progress so that we would have a chance of understanding more thoroughly what has been said. By the adoption of such a procedure I am satisfied that many of us would have some of our questions answered and would not be obliged to raise them again. The present procedure makes things rather awkward. I am satisfied, in my own mind at least, that the procedure I have suggested would be the better way of doing things.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra this morning made a point that interested me when he drew to our attention the fact that the Department of Transport was not before us at the time of bringing this estimate to the house. I too found the same thing. I phoned this morning. Last night, in fact, after I learned in a circuitous way that the minister's estimates were to be before us today, I searched my room for the 1954-55 report and did not find it, but I found that it had been tabled. This morning—

Mr. Marler: Not this morning; some time ago.

Mr. Hahn: I realize that. I am beginning a new sentence. This morning I phoned the distribution office in order to discover what had happened to the report, because I could not find it. I discovered that it had been tabled, truly enough, some time ago, but that it was not available in print at this time. That fact in itself may not be such an amazing fault, in view of the fact that possibly a good number of members do not read the report. Certainly all of us who are on various committees do not have the time in which to study it thoroughly. However, there are certain parts of that report in which we would be particularly interested, and if they were made available to us they would save some time at a later date.

I find that another difficulty in connection with bringing up the estimates at this particular time is that the railways and shipping committee has not sat, and of course no reference has been made to the operations of Canadian National, Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships or Trans-Canada Air Lines. Possibly questions concerning the operations of these companies could be better answered in that committee. If the committee had completed its work we might find that our questions were answered and it would not be necessary to bring them up here again.

There was a question the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra brought up to which I take some exception. He said that he did not feel Trans-Canada Air Lines report should be referred to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I can see a certain value in that. It seems to me that Trans-Canada Air Lines, or any other means of transportation for that matter, would have a certain relationship to the Department of Trade and Commerce and possibly the report should be referred to that department. I believe, Mr. Chairman, the right hand should know what the left hand is doing. Actually, that is one of the reasons

I am speaking at this time. I feel that in this particular department there is too much of the left hand not knowing what the right hand is doing.

During the past year certain developments have taken place in my riding to which I should like to draw the attention of the house. One of these developments relates to the Langley airport. This is a civilian airport which is used for agricultural purposes as well because there is a distribution centre there for insecticides. This particular airport requires attention. Certain work has been done during the past year, but it would appear that two more years of continuous work will be required before the airport is put into first class shape. I believe certain representations have been made by organizations there, and certainly I have done likewise, with respect to further financial assistance to make that a good civilian airport. I am wondering if the minister would care to make any comment in this respect, in view of the fact there is no item in the estimates to cover this work. Would the minister care to comment on what his department intends to do with this airport?

The other matter, I mentioned this earlier, is the fact that it was the intention of the government to purchase the White Rock airport for the purpose of making it a secondary airport to the Vancouver international. I was rather hoping the minister would outline to the house something of what is intended to be done at that site during the ensuing year.

During the past years I have drawn to the attention of the department the need for a union depot at a more favourable location in New Westminster to take care of the Great Northern and Canadian National Railways. I am pleased to note that latest reports would indicate a site has been purchased and a depot is to be constructed on that site.

During the latter part of last year it was my privilege to be with the minister at the opening of the New Westminster dock, one which had been commenced before he came into office. It is certainly going to serve that community well, if I can get the right hand of the government to know what the left hand is doing.

There are many problems in my riding which relate to this Department of Transport and with which I could deal at this time, such as the Port Mann shops and the other airports I have mentioned. I come back, however, particularly at this question of the channel in the Fraser river. This matter has been brought to the attention of this house on more than one occasion. It is one that is in need of a great deal of attention. I am fully aware of the fact that the Minister of Transport is not in charge of dredging, but he is in charge of transport in this country. The Department of Public Works is in charge of dredging but because the Minister of Transport is in charge of transport I refer to him the question of keeping open the river channel for transportation purposes.

I find, as I have tried to point out in the past, that we are still having difficulty in trying to keep the Fraser river open. As I mentioned, last year we opened a new dock costing $1¼ million for the purpose of transferring goods to the ships which would take the goods down stream. I have here an article from The British Columbian of January 12, 1956, and headed, "Harbour Business Drops Off Slightly". It reads:

> Port of New Westminster export and import traffic slowed during the year 1955, according to statistics issued today by the harbour commission.
> Export tonnage totalled 876,661 tons as against 910,240 tons in 1954, while imports totalled 27,113 tons as against 45,332 tons the previous year. Ship arrivals were 435 as against 439.
> Although the late fall business was good, the heaviest decline during the calendar year was in wheat exports, down nearly 2 million bushels. Shipments totalled 3,568,000 bushels.

On the surface it would appear that possibly the reason for the decline in the shipping industry, in so far as shipping on the Fraser river was concerned, was largely due to this fall in our grain shipment. But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the whole story because more vessels called than had previously called. We find that more and more shipping is done at half load, and I must say that is not nearly satisfactory. The city council of New Westminster recognized that something had to be done. I notice that according to the annual report for 1953-54, the New Westminster harbour commissioners are one body over which the Minister of Transport exercises some control. The city council realized that there was some difficulty here and something had to be done because the river channel was not being kept open at all times, so they decided to discover for themselves just where the trouble spots were.

I have here another clipping I should like to read. It is from the Vancouver Province of January 13, 1956. It is entitled, "Royal City"—that is New Westminster—"Plans River Soundings with C.N.R. ferry."

> City council will make its own soundings of the Fraser river.
> Negotiations are now under way to install an automatic sounding device on the C.N.R. vessel Canora at a cost between $1,000 and $2,000.
> Federal department of public works is responsible for river soundings but charts are only prepared three or four times a year.
> With soundings taken on the Canora the city would have at least three checks a week on silting conditions in the river.

"The city is interested in the condition of the channel and when we see that silt is beginning to pile up we will be able to do something about it", Ald. R. W. Ballantyne said.

Last fall the port was closed to ships taking on full cargoes for nearly four months.

Possibly the minister would care to comment on this particular statement and perhaps he would tell us if he thinks a harbour should of necessity be closed to full cargoes for four months. In New Westminster we have some of the finest shipping facilities in Canada. We certainly have one of the finest docks, as I am sure the minister will agree. Despite this fact we have reports of this difficulty. I would like to be fair in this matter. The Department of Public Works has been operating under a handicap and has not had dredging vessels available at all times, but today it has. Up to the present time it would appear that the right hand of the government has not known what the left hand was doing. I would like to impress on the Minister of Public Works the need for examining the cause of dredging. His department is interested only in dredging and not necessarily in the cause of dredging. I would not say the minister and his department are completely disinterested in the fact that dredging is being caused by certain erosion which is taking place in that river, but it has become apparent to me that some change should be brought about in view of the fact that I have consistently made charges or complaints in this house that the silting is not being properly taken care of. This has been regularly pointed out by the New Westminster harbour commissioners, too. It is possible that if the Minister of Transport discussed this matter with the Minister of Public Works, as I am sure he must do from time to time, he would discover that the problem has not been completely solved and will not be solved until we get a 30-foot channel down that river with the dredges working on a full-time basis and not merely on an eight hour a day basis. I am not speaking of the labourers working on a full-time basis but rather I am suggesting that the dredge should be used full time.

Some of the facilities I spoke of on this river are the Pacific Coast Terminal, which has 1,200,000 cubic feet of cold storage space available, Canadian Western Lumber Company dock, the Gypsum Lime and Alabastine Company dock, the Searle Grain Company dock, and the Canadian National railway dock at the terminus of the railway. With respect to the Searle Grain Company dock, I might say that one of the reasons given by shipping men for the loss of grain haulings in the last two years was not because we did not have a market available but rather because of the shallow depths of the Fraser river. A ship can only take a partial cargo and then you have to go to Vancouver to get the rest. That is not a very satisfactory arrangement because this continual shunting and paying of fees is expensive. In so far as the dock itself is concerned, we have the Canada Rice Mills and the Overseas Transport dock, and as far as the industry itself is concerned no charge of any kind is levied against the cargo.

The Fraser water harbour is one of the biggest in Canada and has many facilities including the Great Northern Railway coming from the United States, the terminus of the Canadian National Railways and also a spur-line running from the main line of the Canadian Pacific—and trains operate on it regularly, I must say,—as well as the British Columbia Electric Railway line. We have splendid railway facilities and everything else that is required and yet while the rest of British Columbia's shipping is increasing our shipping is decreasing to a degree. I can find only one reason for this and that is the silting in the river itself caused by erosion which takes place upstream. This again points up the problem of what I will call co-operation rather than a matter of the left hand knowing what the right hand is doing on the part of some of the departments of the federal government as well as on the part of the provincial government in solving the problem. I censure the governments, provincial and federal alike, because I find that silting takes place at a point upstream and that this could be corrected if there was not so much bickering between the two governments in trying to assess costs.

In The British Columbian, the New Westminster daily paper, March 3, 1956, issue, we find an article entitled "Channel Target". One or two of the sentences in this article are of importance and I should like to read them:

Discounting certain regular and passenger liners entering Vancouver, New Westminster did receive more than 50 per cent of the deep sea freighters going to Vancouver.

That is rather interesting when you stop to consider it. The article continues:

The 435 freighters visiting New Westminster last year could have unloaded or loaded full cargoes. Most of them handled only part cargoes. Vagaries of the main channel depth during a large part of the year are blamed for getting ships into the "part-load habit".

This is only because so much emphasis was originally placed by shipping men, and has continued to be placed, on the fact that this channel is not open to sufficient depth to permit deep sea freighters to come up at all times. The article continues:

New Westminster desires to attain greater stature as a world port. To do this, misleading channel publicity must be eliminated. The target for safety is a 30-foot ship channel. Our harbour, civic and trade bodies should resume their battle for it by every means possible.

I feel that closer co-operation should exist between the Departments of Transport and Public Works and the provincial government in assessing responsibility in respect to the erosion problem. Certainly the Department of Public Works is responsible for seeing to it that the channel is kept open at all times so that we can accept the shipping that would normally come to us. I do not hold the view held by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra in respect to T.C.A. and pipe lines. I would go so far as to suggest that the report on the river development and dredging should be sent to the Minister of Transport indicating where dredging is necessary and where it is being done. The report would necessarily come through the Department of Public Works. I am satisfied that by doing that it would be of some particular value.

I see my time is about up. There were many other things I had hoped to discuss, but I shall do that either in this committee or in the committee on railways and shipping. I submit that there should be closer liaison between the two departments.

Mr. Enfield: Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss a certain matter rather briefly under this heading and in doing so I will be departing from the rather excellent general nature of the remarks so far in this debate. I should like to deal with a problem of particular importance to a particular group of people. Before doing so I should like to say a complimentary word to the Minister of Transport. He does not receive too many compliments, particularly from the opposition, or when he does there is some sort of rider attached.

An hon. Member: I do not think he needs them.

Mr. Enfield: He may not need them, but I will express them anyway. I find myself in the odd position of speaking for the front-benchers today, being the solitary occupant of that position. I think we all recognize the minister's ability as an administrator and in the house. Gentlemen, could I have your attention? This is important. I have found the minister extremely co-operative when meeting delegations with which I was concerned or when looking into problems concerning York-Scarborough. I am sure that all members have had this same experience.

The question I wish to discuss concerns the transportation of people rather than freight, particularly the transportation of people through, in and around our cities and large metropolitan areas. I intend to deal with the problem of the commuter. This is a very live issue in metropolitan Toronto at this time. The problem of the commuter is a growing one in which the railways are involved because they constitute one extremely important method by which a very grave situation can be corrected. This is a national issue because the problem will continue to grow as long as our cities continue to grow.

I find it rather difficult sometimes when dealing with matters concerning railways to decide where government policy ends and where the internal management of the railways takes over. However, I think in presenting something which embodies a new concept or a new method or idea of operation I would be presenting something which falls within the purview of policy and as such would be a proper matter for the government to consider when dealing with Canadian National Railways or any other railway company.

I should like to deal with metropolitan Toronto, and perhaps hon. members will forgive me for taking this particular example. It is an area with which I am particularly familiar, but I think what I have to say will have a general application wherever this problem exists in the country.

At the present time metropolitan Toronto has a population of about 1,334,000 people, with another 60,000 or 70,000 in the area along the borders. Metropolitan Toronto covers 239 square miles. According to representations made to the royal commission on economic prospects, in 25 years or so it is expected that the population of metropolitan Toronto will double to roughly 2,800,000 people, and that the metropolis will completely occupy some 300 square miles of territory.

Every morning and night vast numbers of people move into and out of metropolitan Toronto. Thousands of these people are driving the cars of tomorrow on the roads of yesterday. Other thousands struggle to get seats on public transportation if and when that is available. In the evening the exit begins and the difficult problem of transportation is in evidence at least twice a day every day.

The metropolitan corporation has grandiose plans to solve the problem. They are considering the building of new arterial roads and subways. We have one subway which cost many millions of dollars and other subways are visualized, as well as new bridges. But the cost of all this will be fabulous. I believe it is estimated that within the next 15 years there will be expended under present plans being discussed by the metropolitan corporation a total of $1,000 million in order to provide means of ingress and egress into and out of metropolitan Toronto.

This is a lot of money and I submit that consideration should be given as to whether these financial resources could not be channelled into some other means of attacking the problem. That is what I want to discuss. It is also a matter of immediate action being taken. The building of arterial roads, bridges and highways takes time. The technical problems involved are tremendous. The problem of obtaining a right-of-way, purchasing land for the project, represents almost insuperable difficulty.

But there are rights-of-way already in existence and it is these I want to discuss. It may be that the solution lies right on our doorstep. What I have in mind would require the co-operation of Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the metropolitan corporation, and the provincial and federal governments. There is in existence already a controlled access, protected, no speed limit right-of-way. I refer to the series of railway lines emanating from a central point in metropolitan Toronto and radiating out in all directions to cover the suburban areas. My question is: How can these be used to help solve the commuter problem?

I think it was Maclean's magazine which contained an article stating that Toronto is now the fastest growing municipality in the world. That statement may be a little ambitious, but it was stated as a fact. I know for certain that the riding of York-Scarborough is the fastest growing part of metropolitan Toronto. An hon. member, I think the hon. member for York West, suggests that it is the second fastest growing area in metropolitan Toronto. I do not know what he considers to be the fastest growing area, and perhaps he can enlighten me.

I want to refer particularly to one railway line which runs through my riding and to indicate how the areas along that line will be affected. You can start at the union station and, heading easterly and northerly, pass through the town of Leaside, a very thriving section of the city and a part of my riding, go on through Don Mills, Scarboro Junction and up through Agincourt, Milliken, Unionville, Markham, and out to the township of Pickering on the east side. You can go north through Leaside to Thornhill, Richmond Hill, Oriole and the places to the north. There are very many lines going similarly to the municipalities in the west, in the northwest and in the north. It is incredible the number of separate areas that can be so served by these lines.

There are, of course, technical problems involved in providing these commuter services. One suggestion I have seen was made by a person called Mr. Taylor who wrote to the newspaper called the Agincourt News. There have been many articles of this nature published in all the Toronto newspapers. His suggestion is that we use something called a rail diesel car. This is a car that holds 85 people. He says it costs 80 cents a mile to operate and has an availability rating of 95 per cent. He says the cars are suitable because they can be operated with one engineer and a conductor and they require no turnaround facilities, that is, they may be operated from either end. This is similar to the rolling stock used in our subways. The whole idea is similar to that of a subway on the surface. The cars will move very quickly, the railway crossings can be thoroughly protected, and an extremely fast and efficient service can be obtained with this type of equipment. The schedules, of course, would have to be integrated with existing services. The present services would have to be adjusted. Perhaps in the beginning it would be necessary only to adjust the existing services and have some new rolling stock, and then additional services could be added as required.

Mr. F. D. Tolchard, who was for many years general manager of the Toronto board of trade, estimated that such a commuter system could carry daily 700,000 people in metropolitan Toronto. That would, of course, be an extremely worth-while objective from the point of view of transporting these people.

Of course, the problem is: who is going to bear the cost? There seems to be something inherently unprofitable about commuter services. Apparently the equipment required is always too costly to make the services pay at any sort of reasonable rate to the public. Apparently people have not, until now, been able to pay sufficiently high rates to underwrite the costs of these commuter systems.

I understand that the attitude of the Canadian National Railways, as represented by Mr. Donald Gordon, on this particular project in metropolitan Toronto is that they are willing to discuss such a plan provided that the cost will be subsidized by the metropolitan corporation and provided, further, that if schedules are commenced and it is then found that the service is not needed, the C.N.R. will be allowed to terminate the particular service concerned. As I say, I understand that is the present attitude of the C.N.R. I do not know what the attitude of the metropolitan corporation is. Whether or not they are prepared to enter into a cost sharing or a cost underwriting arrangement or whether or not they are prepared to subsidize such a service, is hard for me to say.

How could the cost be shared? It seems to me that there are many ways in which the problem could be handled. It seems to me there are many forms of agreement that could be entered into, any of which, of course, would have its problems. The scheme could be operated completely by the metropolitan corporation. To do this they could use the right-of-way on a rental basis. They could either construct rail lines on the present right-of-way or they could make arrangements to integrate with the present services and rent the existing rail lines. The rights of way are the key to the situation. Under such a suggestion the Toronto Transportation Commission could operate the necessary rolling stock. However, I doubt that that would be too palatable to the Canadian National Railways, or Canadian Pacific Railway, who are accustomed to running their own show and perhaps would find it impossible to consider such a method of operation. Therefore, let us consider operation by the railways. This could be done by sharing whatever deficit was incurred. There would have to be a very careful accounting of costs and very careful negotiation as to how the deficit, if any, was to be apportioned among the various parties concerned.

On the other hand, you could take the cost of operating such a system and work out the rates of fare required to underwrite the cost completely, and then the metropolitan corporation could, to the point it felt necessary, subsidize that cost. This seems to me to be the most practicable manner of handling the problem. The rates could be kept at that point at which the commuter could afford to pay. We could keep a careful cost accounting system of the operation of this particular part of the railways operation, and in that way the metropolitan corporation would be protected. It may balk at such a scheme, saying, "We would not have any control over the costs concerned", and they would also no doubt say, "Here we are entering into a continuing expense; we do not know how far it is going to go or how long it is going to last". But all transport is a continuing expense. I cannot think of anything more costly to our municipal corporation than the provision of all these roads, arterial highways, bridges, etc., they have had to build. Consideration of this type of transportation would be very worth while indeed from their point of view.

There is a corollary to such a system which perhaps I am out of order in mentioning in this debate, but I should just point out that in matters of civil defence it would be most useful. Compare the rapid, customary and controlled evacuation of thousands of people, by a system such as I have suggested, with a situation where the same thousands of people are all trying to get on to a series of highways with no control, all at the same time. The customary feature is the important part when you are thinking along these lines, because this is an evacuation that would occur every day and could be carried out in an orderly and completely controlled fashion. The effects on civil defence would be very salutary indeed.

I do not know what the minister's thinking is on this particular subject, or if he has ever had occasion to canvass the idea. It would take a co-operative effort on a shared cost basis, and possibly it may embody a new concept for the railways. I will just conclude by urging the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway to keep an open mind on the subject. I would urge the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. to search constantly for and do research on cheaper methods of handling this type of commuter service for, of course, if such methods could be found and commuter service put on a profitable basis there would be no problem whatsoever. It would simply be a matter of growth and increase in the rolling stock of the facilities concerned. If the minister does have any words of encouragement or information on the matter I would, of course, be most happy to have the benefit of his thoughts and ideas. As I say, it is a very live issue in metropolitan Toronto and the issue will arise again and again in all our metropolitan areas in Canada because this problem of transporting people in and out of cities is with us and with us to stay.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: My remarks in this debate, Mr. Chairman, will be limited to a matter which is of particular interest to my constituents in Three Rivers as well as to the people of the surrounding district which is served through the port of that city.

This afternoon I would like to bring to the attention of the house the fantastic niggardliness of the national harbours board with regard to our port, as well as its obstinate refusal to carry out the improvements made urgently necessary by the St. Lawrence seaway project.

In a few months, this country will begin to reap benefits from the St. Lawrence seaway project. We, the people of Three Rivers and the surrounding district, are anxious to see our harbour receive its share of those benefits.

For this purpose, Mr. Chairman, the port of Three Rivers must be altered altogether and be provided for in the budget of the national harbours board.

The chairman of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, stated recently in Copenhagen that the seaway would triple the volume of traffic through the canal system of the river, i.e. would increase it from 10 to 30 million tons. Consequently, if ports below Montreal are able to handle part of that traffic, they are bound to benefit from this increase. However, in order to benefit by this improvement, a port such as that of Three Rivers must be made a transfer point. At the moment, if the national harbours board persist in treating the port of Three Rivers as they have done since they took charge of it, I doubt very much that our area will derive the advantages to which it is entitled.

At the present time, for instance, there is a lot of wheat being shipped. It is brought down to us from the lakes in very small ships and then loaded on vessels for overseas. Unfortunately, when the deep waterway is finished wheat from below Montreal will be handled by big lakers and Three Rivers does not, as yet, possess the necessary equipment to ensure harbour facilities to those large ships.

The people of Three Rivers do not want to make a show of jingoism, and, like the other towns of this country, they are glad to think that the St. Lawrence seaway project will vastly improve the economic position of all great lakes cities.

Most of the harbours on the great lakes expect a lot of business to come their way. Well, as Canadians, not only do we see nothing wrong with that, but we are glad to see this country of ours develop from one end to the other. However, we do hope that the harbours on the great lakes will not fall into the hands of the national harbours board, or at least that they will not get the treatment the Three Rivers harbour is getting at the present time from the board.

It seems to me that the coming of the deep waterway provides the national harbours board with a great opportunity as well as a justification to carry out needed improvements in the Three Rivers harbour. It surely could not be accused of wasting money if it made these vital improvements, for the Three Rivers harbour is a natural harbour which needs no maintenance work as far as dredging is concerned, as is the case with the Quebec and Montreal harbours. It is a deep-water harbour. As a matter of fact, it is from 30 to 65 feet deep. Besides there is practically no tide and the current is not very strong. Opposite Three Rivers the St. Lawrence is about a mile wide. Therefore, even the largest ocean-going ships which sail up and down the St. Lawrence river can easily move around and even turn about, which makes for extremely easy navigation. Finally, Three Rivers harbour is one of the few ports in our country where ships do not have to be towed when mooring at the wharf or sailing out. This is a very important feature for shipping companies, and one that can mean a substantial saving for them.

As I just said, capital expenditures to improve the facilities of the Three Rivers harbour would surely not be a waste of money. The people of Three Rivers are ready to do their share in developing their harbour. We are now putting a final touch on legislation which will make it possible to put up a bridge between Three Rivers and Nicolet county. The building costs of this bridge, which will run to $12,500,000, will be carried by private enterprise, and there is no doubt that once the bridge is built, the industry of Three Rivers and the whole district will be able to use the harbour facilities of that town if they are available.

It is therefore a pity to find that the national harbours board is the only one not doing its share. This is all the more surprising since the harbour of Three Rivers is the only Atlantic port under the jurisdiction of the board, which has brought it a profit in the past few years.

Mr. Chairman, may I quote figures that I gathered in the brief submitted by the city of Three Rivers last summer to the board of inquiry on coastal shipping in Canada. I quote:

> When the national harbours board took over in 1936, the accounting value of capital assets amounted to $7,547,100 and accrued surplus to $2,913,113.
> Between 1936 and 1953 (table 1), the national harbours board derived from the harbour of Three Rivers an operating revenue of $4,570,086.86 and spent on administration and maintenance $730,181.45, leaving an operating profit of $3,839,905.41.

This is an enormous sum when compared with what the national harbours board is getting from other Atlantic ports.

> In 1947, the surplus account is regularized and there is an increase in the books of $1,270,150.06 without the capital assets account being affected.
> In 1952, the surplus account is again regularized through a decrease of $2,521,283.54, as well as the value of capital assets, which decreases from $7,897,797.03 to $5,450,921.99.

I again quote the brief of the city of Three Rivers.

> An analysis of the financial statements published by the national harbours board shows that Three Rivers harbour alone—

I repeat the word "alone".

—among all the harbours on the Atlantic and the St. Maurice, has managed to achieve a net operating surplus.

In fact the last official report published by the national harbours board in 1953 supplies the following details:

Harbour	Deficit	Surplus
Halifax	$ 8,201,444.07
Saint John (N.B.)	9,278,467.04
Chicoutimi	2,819,897.84
Quebec	27,060,829.33
Three Rivers		$836,586.81(1)
Montreal	9,282,276.24

(1) A downward adjustment of the surplus of $2,578,613.76 in 1952 has affected the accumulated surplus.

And during that time, namely—

From 1936 to 1953, the national harbours board has invested for capital improvements in the Three Rivers harbour the sum of $594,058.

Most of which was spent two years ago for the construction of a shed.

An analysis of capital expenditures in certain harbours of Canada (Table II) for purposes of comparison for the years 1936 to 1953 is attached hereto.

It should be noted that in the harbours of Halifax, Saint John, Chicoutimi and Quebec the national harbours board has spent for capital improvements $6,692,991, $9,820,529, $68,492, $3,942,457 respectively, against $594,058 for Three Rivers, the only harbour showing a surplus.

A few days ago, in a dispatch from Ottawa, the Canadian Press announced the 1956 budget of the national harbours board. As far as Three Rivers is concerned, we read to our great disappointment that the national harbours board was not at all concerned with Three Rivers harbour and that it would continue in 1956 to treat it with its usual niggardliness.

Let me quote the figures stated by the Canadian press:

Amounts budgeted for the various harbours under the jurisdiction of the board are as follows:

Montreal	$12,736,500
Halifax	1,942,000
Quebec	1,687,000
Saint John (N.B.)	845,000
Vancouver	649,000
Other ports	200,000
Port Colborne	80,000
Prescott	40,000

And finally, Three Rivers is put down here for $35,000 and yet it is the only port which has returned a profit.

I should think, Mr. Chairman, that these figures clearly show that the national harbours board is not being fair in its dealing with Three Rivers harbour. This is a ridiculous situation. Here we have the national harbours board, making money out of Three Rivers harbour, seemingly unable to invest more than $35,000 in it, whereas the Department of Public Works is spending unquestionably justified amounts of money on docks in very small harbours which bring in no revenue whatsoever to that department. Such is the case at Blanc-Sablon where it is spending $150,000 on a dock extension, at Mechins where $100,000 are being spent on the rebuilding of the dock.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Are you opposed to those projects?

Mr. Balcer: Absolutely not; I am in favour of them; I only wish the amounts were larger and, at the same time, that as much be done for Three Rivers harbour.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): You had implied that those expenses were apparently not justified because there was no return on the investment.

Mr. Balcer: That is quite false and my hon. friend knows that this is not what I meant.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): It is what you said.

Mr. Balcer: I definitely did not say that. I am particularly happy of this opportunity—

Mr. Lesage: We have a good government.

Mr. Balcer: —to request that our harbour at Three Rivers be treated in the same way and that the national harbours board, which makes a profit out of Three Rivers harbour, take a good look at it and see for itself in how many ways the harbour could be improved, so as to allow it to keep its rank as one of the leading harbours in Canada, especially after the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Balcer: And the required improvements could be carried out at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Marler: I should like to ask a question of the hon. member since he intends to broach another subject. He spoke at length of the money spent at Three Rivers and on other harbours in Canada, but he has yet to point out a single improvement urgently required at Three Rivers harbour. Could he tell us what are those needs he has referred to.

Mr. Balcer: I thank the minister; I was just coming to that.

Mr. Marler: Good, I am away ahead of you.

Mr. Lesage: You are thinking of the Shawinigan bridge.

Mr. Balcer: No. In 1936, at the time the national harbours board took over the control of the Three Rivers harbour, the total length of the wharves was 7,400 feet, and there were 8 transit warehouses with an area of 175,000 square feet. In 1956 equipped wharves measured 7,650 feet, which means that from 1936 to 1956 only 250 feet were added. Surely, Mr. Chairman, it cannot be claimed that a great effort was made in those 20 years. As far as sheds are concerned, there are 229,000 square feet in 1956 compared to 175,000 square feet in 1936, which is an increase of some 50,000 square feet.

Mr. Lesage: Where is the need?

Mr. Balcer: Grain elevators were filled to the limit last summer, as well as an adjoining shed. From June on, Three Rivers shippers had to turn down business due to the lack of storage space and accommodation.

Again I urge that appropriate sheds be built at Three Rivers harbour. One built a few years ago is already inadequate. For instance, last year, last spring I should say, carbide was shipped by a Shawinigan Falls company and they had to use tarpaulins to shield the goods which were left on the wharves, because there was no room inside the sheds.

It does not make sense, Mr. Chairman. I protest against the national harbours board policy of always waiting until the situation has become practically desperate before making the least improvement.

I believe it would be only fair to Three Rivers stevedores, and to the manufacturers and the whole population, if those in authority went ahead and made improvements which would give a bit of favourable publicity to Three Rivers harbour and attract new customers and new shipping lines.

The minister asked a while ago, what was required to be done to Three Rivers harbour. This is one of this country's main eastern ports. However, it lacks all equipment, heavy or light, for handling cargoes. It is left to the stevedores to supply the cranes they may need.

Three Rivers harbour is the only one to show a profit, and the national harbours board should use some of this profit to equip the port and enable it to hold its own among the other national harbours once the St. Lawrence seaway project is carried out.

Up to now, Three Rivers harbour has got along and the stevedores there have not lost too many contracts. But it is precisely because the seaway project will soon be a fact, that we want to have the necessary equipment to receive the huge grain ships which we hope to see coming down to us from Montreal.

The royal commission of inquiry on coastal shipping in Canada has been holding hearings all over the country. We hope for the sake of Three Rivers that, as a result of such inquiry, coastal shipping on the great lakes will be restricted to the North American fleets, so that lakers may carry cargoes down to the ports of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec where they could be transshipped, so as to encourage the development of new industries in this area and bring prosperity to the cities located on the banks of the St. Lawrence below Montreal.

We wish every success to the great lakes ports, we wish them to double, treble, quadruple or even quintuple their shipping activities, but we ask for a fair treatment from the national harbours board. We ask them to show a little more foresight. We ask them to bear in mind what the situation is going to be once the St. Lawrence seaway is completed. Finally, we ask that the necessary steps be taken to ensure the prosperity of Three Rivers harbour, the only port which has shown a surplus.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): May I put a question to the hon. member for Three Rivers? If I understood correctly, he said a moment ago that he favours the restriction of coastal trade and wants maritime transportation to be limited to ships of Canadian registry. Shall we infer that he is stating his party's policy?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, this matter is now being considered by the royal commission on Canadian coastal trade. I simply recalled a wish expressed before that body when the corporation of the city of Three Rivers submitted its brief. I need not state my or his party's policy since the commission has not yet completed its work.

Mr. Lesage: There is no need for the hon. member for Three Rivers to state our policy.

(Text):

Mr. Decore: I should like to draw to the minister's attention a matter which I have raised previously and which has been raised by the hon. member for Athabaska as well as other hon. members from Saskatchewan. I am referring to the Canadian National railway line which runs east from Edmonton through Redwater, Smoky Lake, St. Paul and up to a point called Heinsburg. It stops there and there is an unfilled gap of some 38 miles to a point called Frenchman Butte in Saskatchewan. Then, that line continues from Frenchman Butte in Saskatchewan to North Battleford and on to Saskatoon. It is very difficult for me and a lot of other people to understand why this particular gap has not been completed. The information I have is that the terrain is not at all difficult. Although I am personally not acquainted with the topography there my information is that it is typical of the topography to be found in eastern Alberta. Although it is generally expensive to build railways, this is not difficult terrain.

This railway line goes through the most thickly populated rural area in western Canada. There is a lot of mixed farming there, and the result is that a lot of the goods coming from the east has to come by way of Edmonton and back again. On the other hand, farm produce, grain and other farm products being shipped out must go west first and then back east again for hundreds of extra miles. As I say, it is difficult for me to understand why this particular gap has not been filled. This railway line goes through the Redwater oilfield which is one of the richest oil sectors in western Canada. There are salt mines there that could be developed. As I say, it is difficult for me to understand why this gap has not been filled since it does go through one of the most thickly populated areas in western Canada and it is not difficult terrain.

I have raised this matter, as the hon. member for Athabaska and other members have in this house. I raised it for the first time when I came to this house in October, 1949. I brought it to the attention of the then Minister of Transport, Mr. Chevrier, who said, as reported on page 1233 of Hansard, volume 2, second session, 1949:

> I thank the hon. member for Vegreville for his interest in the unfilled gap between Heinsburg, Alberta and Frenchman's Butte, Saskatchewan. The Canadian National Railways have been giving some careful study to this line, not only in 1949 but in 1948 and 1947; and, I must tell my hon. friend, they have it fairly high up in their priority list.

Then, the minister went on, and at the end he made this statement:

> ....I can tell my hon. friend that tne discovery of the oil wells and the salt mines are two features which should add considerably to the chances of construction. They certainly should add to the economic advantages. The best I can say at this time is that the Canadian National Railways have the matter under careful review and they have it fairly high up in their priority list.

I was wondering whether, for the benefit of those people out there in Alberta, the minister could say to what extent Canadian National Railways have given this matter consideration. What is their feeling on the matter now? I was wondering whether or not the minister would think it desirable on his part to push this project and have this gap completed?

Mr. Herridge: I listened with considerable interest to the minister's introductory remarks, but like other members who have spoken I am somewhat disappointed that we did not have a printed copy of the department's annual report before these estimates were considered. Before proceeding with what I want to mention this afternoon I must express my appreciation of the courtesy of the minister and his officials in giving consideration to any matter that I felt it wise to bring to their attention. This does not mean the minister gives you all you request, and I shall have more to say about that later on the various items, I must give the minister credit for saying no in such a way that you feel he has done you a favour.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to deal this afternoon with the concrete things that come under the Department of Transport, but rather I am going to enter the rarified atmosphere of constitutional ambiguities. I was asked to raise this question by a good number of people in my constituency who support the various parties in this house because they think it is a matter that should be corrected.

The matter I intend to raise concerns the rights of navigation on the Arrow lakes, which are an extension of the Columbia river and are about 135 to 140 miles in length. Navigation on that portion of the river which is navigable has been carried on since Thompson discovered the river in 1811, first by the Hudson's bay bateaux; then in 1866 steam navigation was commenced from Northport to north of Revelstoke. The Kootenay Steam Navigation, and later the Canadian Pacific Railway operated a fleet of ships, stern wheelers, on the river for about 60 years. The last of those ships belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the steamer Minto was laid up in April of 1954, to the great regret of all the residents along the lakes who were very sorry indeed that the provincial government of that day failed to go in with the federal government fifty-fifty toward the $60,000 subsidy that was considered necessary by the C.P.R.

Because of my fond memories of that ship I cannot help telling a short story of the early days in connection with that boat. Going down the lakes one day on the vessel was one of our early Anglican clergymen who was reading his Bible. The skipper went up to him and said, "Padre, does the good Lord say anything about the old steamer Minto?" The clergyman said, "Just a minute, captain. Let me have a look. I am quite sure the good Lord would not overlook such a good vessel as this." At this point the clergyman turned back to the beginning of his Bible. He said, "Here it is captain, right in Genesis"; and he read, "and then the Lord made all creeping things".

As I said before, we were extremely sorry to see that vessel discontinued, and we are very pleased that we have a substitute service in the ferry Arrow Park now operated by the provincial government of British Columbia. When the steamer Minto ceased to run the government of British Columbia called for tenders for the operation of a service between Arrowhead and Robson. The Interior Tug and Transport Company were the successful tenderers, and received a subsidy of $60,000 per annum. They operated for about 12 months and then fell into difficulties and finally, last fall, the provincial government bought the company out, bought the vessel and is now operating it.

What I have been asked to raise arises out of an incident that occurred last summer. I might explain that when the vessel Arrow Park commenced operation it also took over a run formerly undertaken by the steamer Beaton. Consequently the steamer Beaton was laid up. Last summer the Revelstoke chamber of commerce wanted to charter the Beaton for a run from Arrowhead to Beaton in order to attend a district conference of chambers of commerce at Trout Lake that was called to discuss the Jumbo pass proposals in connection with the route of the trans-Canada highway. They were informed by the captain of the steamship Beaton that he was unable to leave the dock, I am informed, owing to an order issued by the provincial government of British Columbia. I believe this order was issued as the result of some clause in the provincial ferries act.

This order forbids anyone to operate a vessel for passenger purposes on the Arrow lakes. Now, what does that mean? It means in the first instance that the steamer Beaton, which only two or three years ago had $125,000 expended on it for repairs and improvements, is tied up at the dock. The investment, so far as the owners are concerned, is lost. Second, it means that there is no opportunity provided for organizations who wish to charter or rent this or other small vessels to go on trips which in no way interfere with the scheduled run of the ferry Arrow Park. In view of the provincial government operating the ferry Arrow Park, a service about which we are pleased, I can quite understand they want to protect the revenues of that vessel; but our people cannot understand why the government should forbid the steamship Beaton and other small craft from providing passenger service for excursions and for emergencies which in no way conflict with the ferry Arrow Park and could not be undertaken by the ferry Arrow Park because that vessel is on a scheduled run.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this is unfair to the owners of the vessel. I might say I am placed in a somewhat unusual position this afternoon. I am all for the public ferry service that is being operated on the Arrow lakes by the provincial government, and recognize its usefulness. We in this group are very fair indeed, and we want to be fair to all economic interests. Furthermore it is not to the advantage of any district, whatever your political opinions are, to have a vessel of the type of the steamer Beaton tied up at a dock unable to undertake any passenger service when that service could be of value to the district on certain occasions.

I mention this matter because of the numbers of people of all parties who have asked me to raise it. They are of the opinion that there must be some misunderstanding. They think it is an entirely unnecessary regulation. I do not see how it can be constitutional that a provincial government under some section of a provincial act can prevent companies or individuals from operating passenger services on navigable waters such as the Arrow lakes and sections of the Columbia river. When the Kootenay Steam Navigation Company was operating and when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was operating on the lakes and the river, the steamer Beaton was operating on another run, and various small craft were chartered from time to time for excursions and for emergency purposes.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister of Transport to inquire into this question to see if it is a constitutional act on the part of the provincial government, and to see if some arrangement cannot be made for this and other vessels that are required for excursions and emergency trips to operate on navigable waters which we understand come distinctly under the jurisdiction of the federal government. I have the correspondence and other documents on my desk, and I should be only too pleased to hand them to the minister if he should require them.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this item, and I shall direct my remarks particularly to the Minister of Transport. It is my feeling that the minister is performing his duties with the same degree of efficiency and vision as his predecessor. The problems he must face are unique and involved, and are created largely by the upsurge in the nation's business caused by our natural growth and the atmosphere which has been created for this gigantic expansion. The minister has demonstrated day by day both inside and outside the house his ability to handle the affairs of this department which are so extensive.

This afternoon I should like to deal with one particular phase of transportation, and in doing so I refer particularly to the railway line between the two great cities of Toronto and Montreal, which line passes through Kingston, which I consider to be one of the greatest cities in Canada. This line is most important for more reasons than one, and I predict that in the future it will increase in importance as the traffic between these two large cities of Toronto and Montreal increases. This line running along the north shore of the St. Lawrence river services a great number of small cities, towns and villages, containing a large number of residents and the many large and small industries for which the area is so well known. This particular line will become more important with the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway.

This part of eastern Ontario covering the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, up to Ottawa and down to Kingston, has been described as the golden triangle. Therefore, I submit, more attention should be paid to the transportation services being provided in this area than has been the case heretofore, and more particularly the railway services, because these services can be the backbone of the development of industry along the north shore of the St. Lawrence.

One result of the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway has caused a great deal of concern to railway engineers and administrative officials. Towns, villages and industries have had to be moved and provision has had to be made for their re-establishment in new locations. The engineers and members of the administrative staffs of the C.N.R. are to be congratulated upon the lead they have given by their knowledge, know-how and vision which enables them to cope with this situation. This problem has been more extensive because other arteries of traffic have had to be diverted, which creates problems for the C.N.R.

Living as I do in this area I can say that there have been very few complaints from residents with respect to the activities of Canadian National railway officials. However, something has come up within the last couple of days. The Post Office Department has called for tenders for the transportation of mail by vehicular means from Belleville to Kingston and from Kingston to Brockville. Undoubtedly this will provide better service for the Post Office Department or these tenders would not be called for. At the same time it will improve the mail service for the areas between Toronto and Montreal, particularly between Ottawa and Kingston.

But this indicates to me that there may not be another train service provided between Montreal and Toronto and Toronto and Montreal to take care of intercity traffic, more particularly businessmen from Trenton, Belleville, Napanee, Kingston, Brockville, Prescott and Cornwall who might be desirous of going either to Toronto or to Montreal in the morning and returning home the same day. I am trying to point out that if there was a train leaving Montreal in the morning at a reasonable hour, and also one leaving Toronto at about the same time, such a service would be complementary to the one now provided whereby a train leaves Toronto and Montreal around 4 or 4.30 in the afternoon and reaches the central region around 6.30 and 8 p.m.

We now have the evening service, but it might be more to the advantage of the railways and satisfy their need for extra traffic, as well as the persons who live in the region who might like to make daily trips, if this additional service were provided. I am directing my attention more particularly to the possibility of a better morning service which now reaches the halfway mark at around 2 o'clock going both ways and another between 3 and 4 o'clock going both ways. The benefits to be derived from such a service have been brought to my attention by the 1955 report of the Canadian National Railways, where I find this statement on page 7:

There were fewer passengers in 1955 than in the previous year. The number of intercity passengers was up slightly, despite a reduction in immigrant and military travel, but this was more than offset by a drop in the number of commuters—

I should like to digress for a moment to say that in that central area between Toronto and Montreal live many people who work in Kingston. They live in Brockville or Belleville and travel back and forth night and day. A modern service would facilitate their getting to work and would relieve traffic on the highways which are overtaxed at the moment.

The report goes on to say:

—largely the outcome of modifications to suburban service authorized during the year. The increase in patronage of intercity passenger trains was in part a sign of generally more buoyant business conditions. It was also in part a measure of the company's endeavours to stimulate rail travel—new standards of passenger accommodation and meal service, faster intercity and transcontinental train schedules, all-inclusive package tours and incentive fares for midweek excursions and family trips.

I can see from the statistics of the railway that the Canadian National Railways, particularly, in their passenger services, depend a great deal upon the commuters. I believe that the commuter service has not been fully developed, though it has a good possibility of being developed. When we consider that our railways are of such value to passengers and that there were fewer passengers last year than in the previous year, while at the same time we had more population in this country and a greater national growth, we must also consider the other side of the picture, how these passengers are travelling.

One of the best examples would be the bus lines in certain areas, and particularly in those areas in competition with the railways. The bus lines have been running a service that begins when you step into the terminal and continues until you step off at another terminal. My remarks might indicate that there should be a little salesmanship on behalf of the railways, but I feel that when you go into the bus terminal, of which several have been constructed between Toronto and Montreal, you generally find a modern terminal. It is not only attractive to the eye but comfortable for the passengers using the buses. The officers in charge have sufficient space to carry on their duties. There is a good baggage room. There are waiting rooms in some cases that are excelled only by high-priced restaurants. The washrooms are modern and comply with very strict health regulations.

On the other side of the picture, if we turn to page 11 of the report of the Canadian National Railways for 1955, we find under the heading "Property and Service Improvements"—where I presume stations would be dealt with—it states:

In 1955, as in other recent years, substantial capital expenditures were made to improve the railway's equipment and facilities in order to provide better service at lower cost. Much of this investment is based not merely on considerations of immediate return but also on the management's duty to provide a sound foundation for growth. The full benefits of expenditures made under this broader criterion will be realized only over a period of years extending far into the future.

Sometimes it is a good idea to provide better service at lower cost. That might be done in dealing with certain phases of the business. At the same time—again I am particularly referring to this area between Toronto and Montreal where train travel has a preference—you can get a sleeper on the train and have your meals on the train, which some people prefer to travelling on the buses and stopping at terminals. In any case the services in competition with the railways are continually attracting more passengers, from among the public of Canada, as they did a few years ago in regard to freight. This tendency will probably continue because, among other things, the people will be attracted by the terminals, which are not only attractive to the eye but also cater to their comfort. Therefore I suggest that under this item of capital expenditure there should also be added improvements to stations and station facilities, and particularly improvements to those facilities in areas where there is a great travel potential.

In this area between Toronto and Montreal, outside of the two metropolitan cities, I do not think there is any station to be proud of. In most instances they are not exactly attractive and their services are inadequate. I would refer particularly to the Kingston station. This has been talked about by politicians and other authorities for a period of over 30 years, but so far very little has been done. During the war an addition was constructed to the west of the station to take care of the increased passenger services during that period, when so many soldiers were located in the Kingston area. This part of the building is in very bad condition. As a matter of fact, the other day there was a hole in the centre of the hardwood floor that you could put your foot through; and this was at a time when people were asked to pass through it. The waiting room is about as uncomfortable as any waiting room could be.

I have had a good deal of experience in going to police stations and interviewing clients who are held in custody, and I must say that their waiting rooms are much more comfortable. The office space in that station, as it appears to a layman—I do not know how it appears to a specialist—seems to be too small. There is no restaurant; and this is very important in this area because the location of the station in the city of Kingston is unique. Formerly it was a long way out of town. The city industrially has passed it by now. There is no restaurant service, and there could not be any very close because the railway property extends for approximately one and a half blocks from the station area. The washrooms—and I hate to say it—are of a type that would be considered as standard only in a country with very low living standards.

I therefore make this request and this suggestion in accordance with what has been noted under "Property and Service Improvements" in the report of the Canadian National Railways; that the minister, through his liaison with the Canadian National Railways, again bring to their attention that the stations generally should be improved, but particularly in the city of Kingston. This city is enjoying one of its greatest rates of growth, both in population and the extension of military services in that district, as well as in industry, that it has ever enjoyed. I felt that the discussion of this item today might be as good a time as any to bring the matter to the attention of the minister, the officials of his department and other people who may be interested in it.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, there are various matters which one might discuss under item 1 of the minister's estimates, which concern one of the most important departments with which this committee has to deal. For instance, there is the matter of freight rates that is of particular interest to us in the maritimes and on which one could use the whole 30 minutes for that purpose alone. I do not propose to deal with that today because there will be other items later on, particularly under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, when we can deal with that matter more extensively.

There are one or two matters related to water transportation to which I wish to make reference, and in case the minister may feel that I am somewhat unkind or harsh in some of the statements I may make later, perhaps I should start out by being at least complimentary, and while not indulging in fulsome praise I am sure the minister would welcome any kind words whatsoever from me on an occasion such as this. I do think it is fair to say, as one coming from the maritimes, that we appreciate the improved service being given by the Canadian National Railways, particularly in the inauguration of what one might almost call that new train, the Ocean Limited. We have heard a great deal about the Super Continental travelling across Canada, and we have also heard a great deal about the Canadian, almost the Royal Canadian, of the C.P.R., but I want to say that I think one of the crack trains in Canada today is the Ocean Limited. With its improved service, its modern accommodation, it is something of which we in the maritimes are all proud and for which we want to give full credit to the minister and the department.

The hon. member for Kingston has just been lamenting the fact that people do not travel as much by train as they did at one time. I think that is rather regrettable; and since the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra pointed out this morning that the Minister of Transport has no responsibility for T.C.A. I am sure he would not mind someone attempting to sell railway transportation, because it does not compete with any other conflicting service of his own.

There was a time, I think, when people thought it was smart to travel by air. Today I think it is smart to travel by train, and the only people who should fly are people who have to. There is nothing more comfortable or better than the train service which we get in this country supplied by both the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre says "in some parts of Canada". Perhaps we are more blest, but in any event I do commend the minister for this particular service. When I refer to the Ocean Limited I also include the other trains operating on the run from Montreal to Halifax, and I commend not only the physical equipment but the dining car and operating crews of whom the minister may well be proud.

I could perhaps make some rather adverse comments on the menus which are supplied in the dining car service. When I do that I am not being critical of the crews themselves. I think it is rather unfortunate that the menus are supplied from the head office in Montreal, because when you go on board the train on the 1st day of the month and see chicken pie on the menu, you know you are going to see it on the menu on the 31st day of the month. A little change in that regard would be helpful, and is certainly one which would also be appreciated by the stewards and all those operating on the dining cars. Many of them have said to me, "If you ever get a chance, tell the minister how terrible this thing is; tell him that we should be given a little latitude and the opportunity to display a little imagination."

Having dealt with land transport, perhaps we might turn our attention to the gr marine areas which surround the maritime provinces and in which I, of course, am particularly interested. I am not going to recapitulate the history of ferries, of which I know the minister must be heartily weary. In fact we are all in full sympathy with the minister for having come into the department at this time and to inherit the derelict messes for which he is now responsible. I wonder how he can smile. I wonder how he keeps his good looks. I wonder why his hair has not turned snow white.

Mr. Marler: I am smiling at the strong words of my hon. friend.

Mr. Nowlan: The strong words I may use are only those words which I am permitted to use under the rules of the house. If I could use the language which is used outside the house it would be much stronger than anything even the genial chairman now presiding would permit me to use.

I shall deal for a moment with the ferry Bluenose. I am sure we are all familiar with the past history of that almost ancient institution, the keel of which was promised in 1949, which we were told would be in operation in 1951 and which last July the minister told us would be operating very shortly.

At that time he was having trouble with worm gears, and he continued to have trouble with worm gears during July, August, September, October, November and December. Then he was faced with the dire possibility, in fact the probability, that the Bluenose would be frozen in the St. Lawrence and a roar would go up from the maritimes the like of which had never been heard before. Some of you who have read history know the story of the escape of the Tallahassee, that confederate cruiser which came into Halifax harbour during the civil war, sneaked out the eastern passage with federal gunboats waiting for her and made good her escape. The escape of the Bluenose from Lauzon and down the St. Lawrence river is comparable only to the escape of the Tallahassee, let me tell you. However, the Bluenose escaped and she got down into the deep water of the Atlantic at least.

Mr. Marler: Is the hon. member likening himself to a gunboat?

Mr. Nowlan: Likening myself or the Bluenose? At any rate, then there was a question whether or not she would go into operation. I say quite seriously, Mr. Chairman, that it would almost appear as if the department and the minister did not have the intention of operating the boat last fall or this winter. There was a great deal of public opinion stirred up about it, and finally the boat went into operation at the end of the year.

When it did, suitable passenger accommodation had not been provided at Yarmouth, and there was another case which would indicate that, despite the long chapter of delays, despite the fact that seven years had elapsed since the boat was first proposed, there was no intention of putting it into operation at least until next spring because the Minister of Public Works was somewhat humiliated by having to construct hasty shelters, build wooden walks over the mud and do a whole lot of other things so people could get on and off the pier and on and off the boat.

At any rate the boat finally got into operation. Speaking of the poor accommodation, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that back in 1952 the predecessor of the present Minister of Transport said at page 2282 of Hansard that his colleague the Minister of Public Works was purchasing that year—that was 1952—the land for the erection of the terminal piers and facilities at Yarmouth, that progress was being made during that year, and that they would be completed long in advance of the time the boat would be ready for operation. Of course it did not require a great deal of prophetic vision to say they would be ready before the boat was ready for operation, but unfortunately the prophet in that case fell down as he did in so many other cases.

As I said, the boat got into operation, and then this sad and sorry story starts all over again. You know, Mr. Chairman, as far as the story of the Bluenose is concerned, those of us who are older will remember going to the movies many years ago and seeing the Saturday night thrillers. There was always one chapter each night and then the thriller was postponed until the next Saturday night with the heroine facing disaster and the public left in a great deal of consternation and wonder as to what was going to happen.

The story of the Bluenose is exactly like those old thrillers. Something happens from one day to another to keep the public in suspense as to what is going to happen next. The boat was in operation for a little while. Then there was a report that she had suffered damage to perhaps one propeller. Then the boat was continued in operation. Then there were reports that she had suffered damage to perhaps the other propeller. She still limped on, back and forth, between Yarmouth and Bar Harbor. Then finally a couple of weeks ago it was announced that she would be taken off and sent to Saint John dry dock for repairs.

She went into dry dock for repairs. Then last Tuesday—Tuesday of this week—in reply to a question from me, the minister stated that the repairs to the Bluenose had been completed the preceding day and that he would announce as soon as possible when the schedule could be resumed. I asked him again this morning, Mr. Chairman, when the Bluenose would be put back in operation again and he said he would inform the house as soon as possible. Again, Mr. Chairman, you get this thriller situation, this being kept in suspense. The minister dealing with this matter is maintaining the very best traditions of Hitchcock, the great dramatic director of thriller movies, in keeping us in suspense as to what is going to happen next with respect to this craft.

I think the minister should deal with this matter. I think he should have dealt with it today. We were told there was damage to the propellers. We were told last Tuesday that the repairs had been completed the day before; that was on Monday of this week. It is perhaps a matter of three hours' sailing time from Saint John to Yarmouth. Why has the boat not been put back into operation? Why has the schedule not been resumed? Why is the minister today, on Friday of this week, in respect of a boat on which repairs were completed last Monday, not able to tell us when it is going to resume operations? Somebody says that perhaps Dan Riley can tell us. I do not know. There are only two reasons, Mr. Chairman. Either this is being used as an excuse to discontinue the operation, which I suggest the minister did not want to start anyway, or else there was far more serious damage done to the boat than has been intimated by the damage to the propellers.

It has been reported in the press, or at least there have been letters in the press—I refer to the Halifax Herald—this week saying that one propeller was damaged. They kept that quiet. There were reports that the other propeller was damaged. They wanted to keep that quiet because the chapter of errors was so horrible. Therefore they continued to operate her with a twisted propeller, and as a result they developed a torque, whatever that may be. I understand it is a twist or warp perhaps in the shaft. The minister may therefore be faced—and I hope he will disabuse our minds on this point; I hope I am wrong—with the dire possibility of having to take out those worm gears again. I am fairly sure it cannot be so, because the minister could not look as benign and happy and cheerful as he does right now if that were the case.

Mr. Marler: I was thinking that the worm gears and the hon. member's imagination were working overtime.

Mr. Nowlan: It is no imagination to the people of Yarmouth, Mr. Chairman, who have been waiting for this service for six years, who have had it operating for two weeks and now the Minister of Transport cannot tell them when it is going to start operating again. I wish the imagination of the Minister of Transport would start working, and that he would tell us when it will start. I will give him the opportunity. If he wants a crystal ball, perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce who operates the T.C.A. for him will lend him the crystal ball in order to tell us when he will start it again.

Mr. Nesbitt: He has it out on loan now.

An hon. Member: It is up in Laurier house.

Mr. Nowlan: It is all right to treat the matter humorously here, but it is no laughing matter as far as the people in western Nova Scotia are concerned. They were cut off almost entirely from travel service this summer because of a combination of circumstances, for some of which the minister was not responsible. Because of the strike on the Princess Helene there was a time when you could not get out of western Nova Scotia except by motor car, because the only other way you could get out was by T.C.A., which was booked up far in advance.

Through the department the minister chartered the O.K. Freight Service, which was to supplement the carrying of fish and other perishable products to Boston owing to the undue and absolutely inexcusable delay in putting the Bluenose into operation. The second the Bluenose came back the minister took a quick glance at his crystal ball and discontinued the subsidies to the O.K. Freight Service. Now he has told us that he can not be sure whether he is going to restore any service. The fishermen and others in the western part of Nova Scotia are absolutely cut off from any ferry transportation facilities whatever. I think the time has come when we should know definitely when this service is to be started again.

One could discuss the charges which are imposed on truck traffic on that boat, but I think that is perhaps an illusory matter at the moment. Why discuss charges which the minister imposes on trucks when he has not a boat in operation with which to carry the trucks? I understand that after today there will be no further discussion of these estimates for some little time, probably. I hope that by the time we come back to them the boat will be in operation. Then we will be able to discuss these rates. I have telegrams here from several shippers who have used the Bluenose service, and they find it cheaper to bring their materiel over to Saint John, across to Digby and back to Yarmouth rather than to bring it by truck on the Bluenose.

These were not the promises which were made when this service was first instituted. Then of course there is the question of the final cost of this boat, which the minister can give us when we are discussing the details of his department. So much for the moment for the Bluenose which somewhere, somehow, some day, we hope will resume operations between Yarmouth and Bar Harbor.

Incidentally, when the minister deals with this matter I should like him to tell the committee whether the damage to the Bluenose was occasioned by the fact that they did not put fenders around the pier at Yarmouth because they did not plan to start operations this winter. That at least is the report from those who are familiar with the situation, that all you had at Yarmouth was a cement pile, this pier out there in midstream, and that is why we had damage to those two propellors; that the fenders should have been installed before the boat was put into operation. That is another question which can be determined when we come to the details.

Certainly nothing could have been more unsatisfactory than the statement which was reported to have been made by the minister to the press; I refer to the Halifax Herald. No quotes were used, but the statement was to the effect that they were not sure whether the damage to the propellors was done by a collision with the pier at Yarmouth or by collision with the pier at Bar Harbor or a collision with some submerged object in midstream. The captain and crew of the Bluenose are able and experienced seamen. No boat could suffer damage such as that without the captain and the crew knowing fairly well where it happened, and you would not be as indefinite in your description as the statement which was reported to have been given by the minister to the Halifax Herald in explaining how this damage occurred.

So much for transportation in the western part of the province. I turn for a moment to transportation in the eastern part and the other ferry service, the William Carson, which was to operate between North Sydney and Port aux Basques. The minister discussed that matter fully when we discussed his estimates in July of last year. Without going into the details I simply want to repeat again the information he gave us that day. The minister said he estimated, or that his departmental officials estimated, that when the William Carson was completed the cost would be $11,500,000. He also said at that time that he never could find out where anyone had ever suggested that the estimated cost would be less than $7 million, because he said that was not the original estimate supplied by his departmental officials. If the minister will look at Hansard of May 16, 1952, he will find that his predecessor in office told this committee that the cost of the William Carson would be $6 million. Then it went up to $7 million, to $7,500,000 and finally we were told last July it would cost $11,500,000. I should like to know whether or not that includes all the costs, or whether the Canadian National is also making a further contribution.

I wonder how much more is to be expended in so far as the harbours are concerned. How much more is to be paid for dredging; how much more for harbour construction? How much more is to be paid for the experts who have been brought in for consultation? Then, Mr. Chairman, in dealing with the William Carson, one must not forget the containers piled in a field at North Sydney. This winter we had the heaviest snowstorm we have had in a hundred years. We have had over 100 inches of snowfall on the level this winter. I wonder if these aluminum containers are heavy enough to maintain that weight of snow. A year ago we found out, for some reason which I cannot understand but apparently there was a reason for it, that in order to equip the William Carson the department built 500 aluminium containers in which to move the freight. These containers cost almost $1,000 each, and for over 2½ years they have been piled in a field near North Sydney. These containers cost approximately $500,000, and whether or not that is part of the $7,500,000 expenditure I do not know.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, including the expenditures on the vessel itself, on the harbour at North Sydney and on the harbour and dredging at Port aux Basques, last July the minister estimated that the total expenditure on this project would be $21,760,000. Here we have an expenditure of $21,760,000 to operate a ferry between North Sydney and Port aux Basques. Where is that ferry now? It is a beautiful boat.

An hon. Member: Who knows?

Mr. Nowlan: We do not know where the Bluenose is, but at least we have some idea, I hope, as to where the William Carson is. This boat was named after William Carson. I looked up the encyclopaedia this morning and learned that although he was not one of Newfoundland's sons, he was a distinguished man who came to Newfoundland and made a tremendous contribution to that province in the early part of the 19th century. I can tell you this, that he would find it a lot easier to get to Newfoundland in the days when he came there than he would today if he had to travel on the William Carson.

This boat is equipped to carry 250 passengers, with staterooms of the most palatial kind. It is equipped to carry scores of automobiles on automobile decks. What is she doing? She is cruising back and forth presumably, Mr. Chairman, if she has not broken her propellers or had some other mishap like the Bluenose, between North Sydney and Argentia carrying a few hundred tons of freight. Her passenger accommodation is empty. Her 250 staterooms are empty and gloomy and the automobile decks are also empty and gloomy.

Those who come from the sea remember the story of the Marie Celeste, a ship that was found drifting with her sails set and fully equipped but without a living soul on board. Something had happened to the passengers and something had happened to the crew. They had all disappeared. The William Carson, Mr. Chairman, is the Marie Celeste of the Department of Transport and make no mistake about that. It is all very well for us to laugh, but if anyone ever read this in any of the comic books he would never believe it. No one could ever conceive that such a thing could happen, even with a government that is as old and decrepit as this government. You would not think such a thing could happen.

Mr. McCann: You are just a kid.

Mr. Nowlan: Here you have this palatial liner, which cost twice as much as it should and which every expert in Newfoundland, every mariner on the Atlantic coast advised against, running back and forth carrying a little freight to Argentia. It would be a lot better for the department to put her in the mothball fleet like the royal navy does and charter a couple of small freighters. They would be able to carry just as much freight back and forth, and do it as efficiently as this white elephant.

I could go on, but I see it is almost five o'clock and this debate must stop. Two years ago in reply to a question by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra about experts, the Minister of Transport said—and I am only paraphrasing—the Department of Transport had the best experts in the world. Referring to this ferry he said it was a combined land and sea operation, and that was why there were experts from the Department of Transport to look after this matter. Then last year we were told that not only did we have experts in the Department of Transport, but we had experts from the Department of Public Works and experts from the Canadian National. All these experts got together, and do you know what they finally did? On September 24 a press conference was held by the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Public Works and that lineal descendant of John Sebastian Cabot who first discovered Newfoundland, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. They gave out a statement in which they said they had consulted this British expert whose name was R. D. Gwyther. The press report went on to say this:

> Great was the satisfaction of the ministers that the British expert had confirmed their belief that the dredging operations at Port aux Basques had not ruined the harbour.

Is it not wonderful? We have the experts from the Canadian National, the experts from public works and the experts from transport, and they bring in an expert from Great Britain who says, "Thank God, boys, you did not entirely ruin the harbour but you spent $23 million".

Mr. Marler: I would say that was a very liberal paraphrase, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order; it is five o'clock. Shall I rise and report progress?

Item stands.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

QUEBEC NORTH SHORE AND LABRADOR RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 148, respecting Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company—Mr. Brisson—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: This bill comes to us from the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

On clause 1—Extension of time for completion of line.

Mr. Green: This bill is entitled an act respecting Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company. In the year 1947 this house passed a private bill incorporating that company, and it was set up as a subsidiary of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. The act passed at that time gave the company the power to construct a railway from Seven Islands on the north shore of the lower St. Lawrence up into the iron ore deposits where the boundaries of Labrador and Quebec meet. In addition it gave the company power to extend that railway right through to Ungava bay.

The charter is one containing very wide powers. For example, the company was given the right to generate electric power, to operate telegraph and telephone systems, to operate vessels, construct hotels, to establish and operate a motor vehicle service, and even to construct pipe lines. In addition, the company was given the right to acquire, own, maintain and operate aircraft and other aerial equipment. The section of that original act which is pertinent to the discussion today is section 19, which reads as follows:

The company may, within five years after the passing of this act—

The act was assented to on May 14, 1947.

—commence to construct the line of railway, and may within 10 years after the passing of this act—

That would be at any time up to May 14, 1957.

—complete the said line of railway, and if within the said periods respectively the said line of railway is not commenced or is not completed and put in operation, the power of construction conferred upon the company by the parliament of Canada shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the said line of railway as then remains uncompleted.

I might point out that the shareholders of this railway company consist of certain individuals most of whom are Canadians. Among them they hold 140 shares. The balance of the issued shares, numbering 19,860, are held by the Iron Ore Company of Canada Limited, so that in effect this railway company is owned exclusively, with the exception of a certain number of qualifying shares, by the Iron Ore Company of Canada Limited. That company is owned by various groups amongst which, I believe, there are three Canadian companies: the Hollinger North Shore Exploration Company, the Labrador Mining and Exploration Company and the Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines. Between them these companies hold 25 per cent of the issued shares of Iron Ore Company of Canada Limited.

Mr. Marler: Are we talking about the Iron Ore Company?

Mr. Green: Yes. This company is the owner of the railway company. The remaining 75 per cent of the shares of the Iron Ore Company of Canada Limited are owned by M. A. Hanna Company, Hanna Coal and Ore Company, National Steel Corporation, Republic Steel Corporation, Armco Steel Corporation, Wheeling Steel Corporation and Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company, all of which are United States companies and are, I believe, centred in the city of Cleveland. In any event the control is centred there.

The bill which comes before the house today seeks to extend the time within which the company can build to Ungava bay for a further period of ten years. If the bill becomes law this railway company will in effect have been given the franchise for 20 years to build this line from Seven Islands to Ungava bay. They have already completed the line into Schefferville which is, I believe about 375 miles. That is where their huge iron ore deposits are located, and of course it was for the purpose of getting at these iron ore deposits that the railway was built. They are now asking for an extension for a further period of ten years during which time they can complete the line from Schefferville up north of Ungava bay.

The questions which came up in the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines had to do with the wisdom of granting an extension for that length of time. I do not think there was anyone on the committee who felt it would be unreasonable to give this company some extension, but some of us believe that it should not be given an extension, of 10 years at this time. We suggested that it be given an extension of five years. Mind you, that would commence from the year 1957 so that in effect the result would amount to an extension of six years from the present time. But if the company is given a 10-year period it would mean that for 10 years they could, if they saw fit, simply hold this power and yet not take any steps to extend the railway to Ungava bay.

Actually their main objective was to get at the iron ore deposits at Schefferville. I would doubt that their main object was to extend the line to Ungava bay. Extending the line to Ungava bay is not the main business of this company at all. It is simply an additional prospect of business.

Those of us who questioned this long extension felt that it was unwise under the circumstances to give this company what might amount to a stranglehold over the country north of Schefferville for a period of ten years. Why should the company not be content with an extension of five years, and then if they had any idea of extending the line, let them come back to parliament? Parliament would at least have the right to review the situation.

This is not like a Canadian National Railways extension. There have been different bills put through in recent years permitting the Canadian National Railways to construct branch lines. In each case this has been done in the national interest. Take for example the extension from Sherridon to Lynn Lake in northern Manitoba, the extension from Terrace to Kitimat in British Columbia, and the extension which is now being built into the Chibougamau country in Quebec.

These extensions were all made in the national interest, but in the case of the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company you have a corporation whose main interest is to get at its own iron ore deposits. The company is not motivated by the national interest at all; in fact it is controlled in Cleveland. This is a United States corporation controlled in Cleveland, and it is under no obligation to develop this particular part of the country in the national interest.

Mr. Durrell is the vice president and general manager of the Iron Ore Company of Canada, and when he appeared before the committee I asked him whether I was right in suggesting that the company could just sit and hold this right to extend the line during the next 10 years and do nothing. The question and answer, to be found on page 17, were as follows:

Q. If you had an extension for 10 years, from 1957, not from 1956, really for 11 years, then you would not necessarily have to do anything whatever about seeing to that railway for 11 years; yet your right would exist. Isn't that correct?
A. That could be right if there was no traffic.

Mr. Carrick: Would the hon. member read the next question and answer in order to get a clear picture. On a point of order, my submission is that by reading only the part he has read the hon. member has not given a complete picture. Read the next question and answer.

Mr. Green: I am reading from this evidence the part which is pertinent to my argument. If hon. members wish to read other questions and answers they are at perfect liberty to do so. The point of order raised by the hon. member for Trinity is ridiculous. It is not a point of order at all.

Mr. Rowe: Just a point of opinion.

Mr. Green: The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe suggests it is just a point of opinion. The reason this matter is important is that there are great prospective developments in the area north of Schefferville. Mr. Durrell explained to the committee that there is an iron ore-bearing strip running in a northwesterly direction right up to Ungava bay, and to the east and running parallel to it is a base metal strip.

Other companies are now exploring in this district. A press despatch just four days ago reported that Lake Shore and associates were planning an exploration program in this portion of northern Quebec. When the bill was under discussion in the Senate, Hon. Mr. Power had this to say, and I quote from page 135 of the Senate Hansard:

Perhaps a line there would not be a very remunerative proposition at the present time, but things are moving so rapidly in that section of Canada that there is no reason why construction should not proceed rapidly.

The section north of Schefferville may very well become one of the most important mining areas in the country. If we are to have the position that this Iron Ore Company, controlled from Cleveland, Ohio, and having a right of way into its own iron ore deposits, has the right at any time during the next 10 years to build further, then I suggest to the committee that there is a great danger that the Iron Ore Company may have a stranglehold upon any potential competitor in the area north of Schefferville.

I submit that it should not be given that right, certainly not for a period longer than five years. No one is objecting to them being given an extension for that length of time. I do not say they would stop other iron ore development to the north by other interests—they might be only too glad to have traffic for the railroad, and I hope that would be the case—but why should this parliament hand them a blank cheque for a period of ten years?

There is no rhyme or reason in granting an extension for that length of time. It was said in the committee that I was trying to compel them to start construction at once, but there was nothing of the sort. I am simply saying that if they are given an extension of five years it will mean that they will have had 15 years in which to build this line. If toward the end of that time they indicated that they were intending to go ahead and complete the extension of the line they would have no difficulty getting the right to do so from this parliament. In the meantime other people who were carrying on development work in that area would not be under the handicap of having to go hat in hand to the Iron Ore Company of Canada in order to be sure they would be able to get out their minerals.

I think we should keep in mind that this Iron Ore Company of Canada is not doing any processing of this ore. They are simply taking it out of the Canadian ground and shipping it away. I inquired about this of Mr. Durrell, and I should like to quote the questions and answers to be found on page 26, as follows:

Q. What is your total production for this year?
A. For 1956, 12 million tons. We hope to establish 12 million. But that is problematical. It depends upon too many other factors.
Q. Out of 12 million tons, between 8 million and 9 million will go to the United States?
A. Yes. We also import quite a bit of ore from the United States into Canada. At present the Steel Company of Canada has an interest in a mine in the United States and they get a lot from there.

Previously Mr. Durrell had said they would probably sell 2 million tons this year in Europe and 1 million or 2 million tons in Canada. I then asked:

Q. Is the ore which you sell smelted by your company in any way?
A. The ore we sell is just raw ore.
Q. You are merchants of raw iron ore?
A. That is right.

If this company were processing ore in Canada they might have a greater claim to this extension for a further period of 10 years, but they are not. They are just digging it out and shipping it away, and Canadians are buying back at least some of that iron ore from the United States in the form of finished steel. I do suggest that it would be wise on the part of this committee to change this bill to provide that the extension shall be for a period of five years rather than 10 and I therefore move:

That clause 1 be amended by deleting the word "ten" in line 9 of the bill and substituting the word "five" therefor.

Mr. Carrick: Mr. Chairman, I should like to come directly to the point before the committee, the period of time. It seems to me that this committee should deal with the matter on the basis of the evidence given before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. Mr. Durrell, the vice president of the company, stated that it would take at least three years for the company to decide whether ore had been proved in sufficient quantities to warrant the construction of the railroad, and that it would take six years to construct the railroad.

It is through extremely difficult terrain north of Schefferville to Ungava bay. If I might have the indulgence of the house, I shall quote what Mr. Durrell said on those particular points. The question the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra put to Mr. Durrell, immediately after the part he has himself read, on page 17, is as follows. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra asked:

Q. Have you any particular objection to getting an extension of five years instead of ten years?

A. Having in mind the length of time required to make surveys, five years is not enough.

As recorded on page 18, the hon. member for Lambton West asked this question:

Q. I wonder whether from your own knowledge or from the knowledge of your experts—supposing you were to start the railway extension—you could say how long it would take. Suppose, for example, you start next year.

A. It would take a minimum of four years unless of course we did something like we did on the other section, that is, flew in all our supplies at a fantastic cost.

Q. If you had an extension of five years from next year, that will give you six years will it not?

A. Yes, but we would require at least two or three years to make surveys before starting construction.

A little later on, as indicated on the same page, the hon. member for Lambton West asked:

Q. Suppose you were granted a five year extension together with the year ahead of us, which would give you six years, could you complete the project in that time?

A. No, we could not. We would not be able to make our surveys and complete it.

As recorded on page 19—and this is the last I shall read—I asked the witness the following:

Q. Have you in mind any estimate of the time likely to be needed for this construction?

A. My understanding is that it would take at least six years.

Q. Would you feel justified in commencing the construction of the railway right away? I understood you to say earlier that the date of beginning construction depended upon exploration to be carried out in the northern territory.

A. There is nothing at the moment to justify the construction of a railway. Surveys show areas which may be suitable for mining development, but so far, as I said, we know of nothing which would justify beginning construction.

Q. So in addition to the six years you think it would take to complete the project you would need to have a period of time in which to consider whether it would be justified to begin construction?

A. It would take at least three years to locate sufficient tonnage.

I think the evidence before the committee makes clear beyond any doubt that a minimum of nine years would be required by the company. Mr. Durrell, the vice president, himself says that the five years proposed in this amendment is not sufficient. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has mentioned in this house that the granting of this extension of ten years would give a stranglehold to this company. It is difficult for me to see how there can be any stranglehold when any other company could apply to this parliament for a charter to construct the railway.

The question was asked whether this company had an exclusive franchise, and of course the answer is no. There is nothing to prevent any other company from making application for a charter and constructing a railroad if it so desires. Under the Railway Act if any company did so, this company would be obliged to connect up with that railway and carry the goods south from Schefferville to Seven Islands.

My submission to the house is that it is introducing irrelevant circumstances to argue that our judgment on the question of the length of time should be affected by the question of who owns this company. The matter before the house is not as to whether it is a good or a bad thing for Americans to bring capital into this country. Perhaps I should mention that Mr. Durrell's evidence was that this railway company had spent $123 million in construction of the railway from Schefferville to Seven Islands. In addition, the Iron Ore Company of Canada had spent an additional $132 million. He gave a total figure of $255 million. Neither the railway company nor the Iron Ore Company has taken a cent out of this investment or received any return on it to date.

Mr. Cavers: Like other hon. members who sat on this committee, I heard the evidence that was adduced by Mr. Durrell, who was called as a witness for this company, and I think it must be accepted that his evidence was given in a very straightforward manner. He stated that in the beginning his company had shown great confidence in the area by investing large sums of money in the development of the iron ore area and in pushing the railway from Seven Islands to Schefferville.

He stated in his evidence that opportunity had been given to four Canadian insurance companies to invest in this development, and that the offers had not been accepted. So I feel that this company has shown its good faith in the development of the area by pushing the railway line from Seven Islands through to Schefferville during the first period of ten years.

The company now wishes to extend its line farther to Ungava bay, and it is not for its own purposes alone that it intends to do this. When questions were put to Mr. Durrell he said the railway would endeavour to carry any passengers and any other freight that was offered in that area; and it must do so under the provisions of transportation legislation in this country. The area has not yet been proved. As has been said by the hon. member for Trinity, it will be necessary for surveys to be conducted, taking over a period of three years, before this line can be undertaken. The completion of the line will take from five to six years, making a total of not less than eight years. I believe that reasonable businessmen would hesitate to undertake a proposition of this kind if they were limited to a period of five years during which they would be obliged to complete this portion of the line.

The bill says they must complete this portion of the line within a period of 10 years. I believe it is important to provide this type of transportation into the northern part of the province of Quebec. This company does not ask for a subsidy. It is not asking for the investment of any public moneys in this enterprise. All it asks is the opportunity to complete this line within a period of 10 years, which seemed reasonable to the majority of the members of the committee.

Mr. Hodgson: Like the previous speakers, I sat on this committee. I was also a member of the committee in 1947 when this company came before this parliament originally to obtain a franchise to build this railroad. At that time the company assured the committee that 10 years was a long enough period to complete this railroad. In that respect they have not lived up to their obligation, but these things are sometimes estimated wrongly.

Nevertheless the company has built some 355 miles of this railroad at a cost to it of $123 million. Like so many other companies in Canada, it is owned, controlled and operated by United States interests, and the ore, as we know, is being shipped to United States ports for use in the manufacture of steel in United States factories. This is one more example, as far as I can see, of this government giving control of a great land mass and a potential mining area into the hands of Americans. By owning the railroad and having built it over half the way, the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company has three strikes against any other company which might be a potential producer of minerals in that area.

The company has come back to parliament, and I understand the purpose of the bill is to extend the time limit for another 10 years. The members of the committee in 1947 were not all the same members of the present committee, but they were the same kind of people with the same thoughts. This committee will sit next year and five or six years from now whether or not the present members are still members of it, and I think those who are members at that time will be just as good thinkers, just as enlightened, and will have the interests and welfare of Canada just as much at heart as we have.

It seems to me that five years is long enough to extend the period of time when the company was so sure 10 years ago that they could build the whole line in 10 years. The present extension is to commence after 1957, and if they are given five years it will really mean that they will have six years to extend the railway. When Mr. Durrell was giving evidence to the committee he was asked this question by the hon. member for Lambton West, as found at page 18 of the proceedings of the committee:

> Q. I wonder whether from your own knowledge or from the knowledge of your experts—supposing you were to start the railway extension—you could say how long it would take. Suppose, for example, you start next year.
> A. It would take a minimum of four years unless of course we did something like we did on the other section, that is, flew in all our supplies at a fantastic cost.

This is the vice president of the company. He is a man who should know what he is talking about, and I think he does. He stated that they could build the railway in four years without going to the extra expense of flying in equipment and supplies. In another place in the evidence he also said that it would take two or probably three years for the surveys. That makes a total of six years. The amendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra would give the company their full quota of six years.

In any event, if the company made a reasonable start within the period of five or six years and then came back to parliament again there is no doubt in my mind that the same committee and this same parliament would be willing to extend the time for two or three years or even five years more to allow them to complete the line. There are many other companies prospecting in that territory. Since the bill came before parliament the stock of one company has dropped about $1 a share. Probably they have been talking to some of the Liberal members who seem to be so interested in pushing through the 10-year extension.

As a Canadian I do not like to see a whole area of our country, probably 300 miles square, all of which is a potential mining area, tied up or handicapped in any way whatsoever by any company irrespective of the country from which it comes, and at the same time I think we as Canadians should protect and save some of our resources for the use and benefit of Canadians. It seems to me that year after year we have seen one bill after another of this type come before parliament. It appears that we are all too willing to hand over our resources to people from the United States.

This is probably a small matter compared with some of the bills that come before the house, but let us make a start now to conserve some of our natural resources and the wealth of this country for Canadians of the present and the future.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, before I get into the main stream of the discussion on the bill I should like to say a few words respecting something that arose during the debate on second reading of the bill on Friday, March 2. The bill was sponsored by the hon. member for Saguenay. When the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra asked him to give an explanation of the bill he made that explanation in the French language. I happened to follow the gentleman who sponsored the bill, and when I rose to my feet I made this observation as found at page 1778 of Hansard:

> . . . I listened to the explanation of the hon. member for Saguenay with a great deal of interest but very little comprehension. However, I imagine he would be at the same disadvantage if I addressed the house in my mother tongue, which is Gaelic, so I make no apologies for not understanding him.

That was more or less thrown in for kicks, Mr. Chairman. I imagine there is nobody in the house who is more tolerant on any subject than I am. I know that most of us who cannot speak French regret it, but we just did not happen to be born in a part of the world where it was necessary.

My main reason for raising this question, and I do not do this very often, has to do with an editorial that appeared in a Montreal paper, Le Matin, on March 12, 1956. The editorial in the French language was sent to me by a friend of mine in Montreal. I had it translated by one of the translators in the building, so there is nothing wrong with the translation. I want to read that editorial, Mr. Chairman, just to show how one can be misinterpreted.

The Deputy Chairman: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the debate at the moment is on an amendment with respect to whether the time limit shall read 10 years or five years. I am not sure in my own mind whether the point which the hon. member for Cape Breton South wishes to raise is of the nature of a matter of personal privilege, in which case the committee of the whole is not the place for it, or whether, as I think is perhaps more likely, it deals with whether or not clause 1 of the bill shall pass in which case, not having heard the editorial, I would express the opinion that it might be in order on the clause but I do not think it is in order on the amendment. The hon. member, who has the editorial before him, will understand the point I am making and will most likely be able either to agree or disagree with me on that particular issue.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I could have raised this matter at the opening of the house on a question of privilege and held up the house when there was perhaps something important to come before it. I figured that this was a better place to waste time than on the orders of the day or at a time when the house was liable to be busy. It is a question of privilege and it has to do with the very debate as a result of which the bill was sent to the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I hesitate to appear to be harsh with the hon. member, for whom the whole house has great affection and undoubtedly the house would like to see rectified on a question of privilege any matter concerning which the hon. member might feel he was injured. However, in view of the remarks he has just made, I feel it is my duty as chairman of the committee to rule that he would not be in order on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, and I doubt if he would be in order in committee on a clause by clause discussion. But if his remarks deal with whether or not the bill as a bill should pass I am sure they would be in order in the debate on third reading of the bill. Perhaps others who have knowledge of the material that the hon. member has would like to express an opinion. At the moment it is my view that he is not in order in pursuing the matter.

Mr. Gillis: You have not heard it yet.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, might I perhaps be allowed to say that it seems to me difficult to rule now that a matter arising directly out of a previous debate in connection with this bill would not be in order at this stage. Since the hon. member has gone this far, perhaps the best way to judge the matter, Mr. Chairman, would be if you were to permit him to continue to read the editorial. Then Your Honour would have it before you and the rest of us would have it before us, and a decision could be made. It seems to be difficult to decide these points until we know what the editorial is.

The Deputy Chairman: From the remarks which have already been made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the introductory remarks in which he quoted part of the previous debate, I submit it is obvious to members that the editorial to which he refers does not deal with the question as to whether an extension of time should be for five years or for 10 years. We are in committee. But even though we are in committee on a private bill, and although some members might perhaps think we might relax a little bit under those circumstances, I still feel that I am bound by the standing order which states:

Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

The item or clause under consideration is the amendment that the word "ten" in line 3 of clause 1 be deleted and the word "five" substituted therefor.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I will just say this. This editorial is a falsification of the records of this house. If newspapers can take material that is put on record in this house and use it in any way they see fit out in the country, it is nearly time the members of this house found out about it. I am not going to pursue the matter any further now. You will get it on Monday, on a question of privilege.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not like to butt into the speech of an hon. member on my own initiative but I think I should say that, under the circumstances which he has just described, it would be his duty to bring the matter before the house when the Speaker is in the chair, not when the house is in committee of the whole.

Mr. Gillis: How can you rule something out of order that you did not hear? It is not like you, Mr. Chairman. As a general rule you are a bit flexible and understanding. There is such a thing as getting a bad lunch sometimes.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Knowles: Maybe he did not have any breakfast.

Mr. Gillis: With respect to the subject matter before the committee, namely an extension for 10 more years to the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway, may I say that of course the mistake that was made by this house was made in 1947 when the first franchise was granted. At that time I happened to be one of those who moved an amendment that the subject matter should go to a committee for the purpose of the committee studying it and determining whether or not the Canadian government should at least hold the transportation lines in that area in the interests of the Canadian people, as the province had already given away or leased the resource.

The 325 miles of that line have been completed and it is operating and making money, according to the evidence before the committee. The same company makes application to extend that line from Knob Lake to Ungava bay. Their lease does not expire until next year. They still have a year to go. They come before this committee and state that they are not sure whether a railroad is needed in there or not, that they have not made the survey and they do not know what is there. They say it may take them three to six years to do that survey. In the meantime, however, they have the whole area tied up so that no one else can go in there and do anything else with it.

Mr. Marler: I do not think that is right, surely.

Mr. Gillis: That is according to the evidence given before that committee, as I read it. If it will take them three years to do the survey and they still have another year to go, that is four years. This bill does not become operative until 1957. That means there are four years in which they do not have to do anything except survey. The hon. member down there mentioned six years; that it might take them six years before they are sure whether the line is necessary or not. In the meantime they may hold that lease for ten years and the survey may show that it would not be profitable to build the line in there for the purpose of taking out iron ore and so on. But in the meantime the franchise is let and the territory is tied up. If it is going to take them four years before they can determine whether a railway is needed, what is the hurry about the extension of the franchise? Why is everybody in such a hurry?

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra moved that we curtail the time to five years. I do not think his amendment is what it should be. It is cutting down the time all right, but it does not provide that any construction should be commenced. I think he should have said "a time limit of five years with construction to commence within a reasonable time". I think even five years is too long to tie up a whole area like that. Someone else may want to go in there.

As I said when the bill was up for second reading, as far as I am concerned the iron ore resources have been leased by the province. We could not do anything about that matter. But in my judgment the future of steel is tied up with these iron ore resources in Newfoundland, and steel is basic to the whole economy of this North American continent which is a highly industrialized section of the world. The country that controls those huge resources in the future is going to control the future of the North American continent.

I believe the Canadian people should have had some stake in that area, but the province has leased the territory. The mining companies built mining towns, and they are run as mining towns. They own the transportation system in the area. This is our last chance, I believe. I know that the Canadian National Railways have done a good job this past year. They made a profit for the first time in many years. They have streamlined their operations. I think it is still not too late for us to consider whether or not we should give the Canadian National Railways an opportunity of going into that area and at least holding 300 miles of railroad as a stake in the right of the Canadian people.

Transportation has a great deal to do with the development of an area. If the Canadian National Railways were in there, with the facilities and the research experts they have, and if they built that road, they might develop the area in the interests of the Canadian people. As for myself, I think that suggestion should still be given consideration. I do not think we should even tie that area up for five years, in the hands of people whose main interest in this country is not inspired by patriotism or a desire for the development of the country. Rather their interest is to siphon off its raw materials and sell them back to us at the highest possible price. That is my opinion.

The five years is a modification of what the bill asked for, but I still do not like the idea of handing over completely 635 miles of railroad line to people who are largely financing that undertaking with United States capital and, who are in my judgment, tapping the very life stream of North America in these iron ore resources.

I believe we should still consider giving the Canadian National Railways an opportunity of going in there and building a line. If the line becomes unprofitable in the years that lie ahead, certainly it will be unloaded on the Canadian National and they will have to pay the bill. I think now is the time to give them a chance to go in there and do some development work. I hope that before this bill finally passes, the minister or someone will tell us whether or not the Canadian National Railways were ever given an opportunity to bid on it. Could they do it, and would they? I know they could because they have the facilities. I still think they are the people who should build that line.

I will vote for the amendment because five years is better than 10 if you are doing to tie up the territory without any assurance of development so far as the railway is concerned. This merely gives them the right to hold that area pending their exploration, and 10 years from now they may tell you they are not going to build the line there at all. I have given my opinion, and I do not wish to delay the house any longer. However, I hope you are in the chair on Monday, Mr. Chairman, when I rise on a question of privilege to straighten the record of this house on the first part of this debate.

Mr. Byrne: At the outset I want to say that if the Canadian National Railways are going to undertake any large extensions within the next few years there are definite areas in which ore bodies of lead, zinc and so on have been established, and in which those extensions should be undertaken. In my opinion the Canadian National should not be permitted to go into the far northern part of Quebec to build a railway when another company has already undertaken to do so.

My principal reason for rising is that I resent Conservative members taking the attitude that when government suporters are not prepared to force free enterprise into some project that is not economic at the moment, they are in effect selling Canada short and selling out our resources to huge United States companies. It looks as though the only people in this house who have any sympathy now for capital and the great things it is doing for our country are the people on this side of the house.

Mr. Bell: United States capital.

Mr. Byrne: The Social Credit party apparently does show some consideration for capital, and just as long as they leave out the funny money aspect I believe they do know the economic facts of life.

Some hon. members have referred to United States capital. Certainly United States capital is coming in. Capital represents an accumulation of labour, and capital investment in this country can do nothing but raise the standard of living for the working people. I first read this type of discussion in the Toronto Tribune. If we in this country were to be judged by association, as they are in the United States, I would probably be known as a communist. I want to say that this type of thought originated with the labour progressive party. It is nonsense to talk about capital coming in and taking out the resources of this country. It is developing the country, and I for one am going to support this.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Byrne: Yes.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Where is the raw material coming from for that enormous development in Kitimat?

Mr. Byrne: Yes, that is a very good question. It comes from South America and is being manufactured in this country. We have heard so much nonsense here that perhaps I am speaking a little bit strongly. This company has spent a large amount to build the railway to Schefferville, because it was necessary in building up the project. Most of the transportation of supplies was done by air. They have shown that the line will be a very expensive project. The terrain is very difficult, and no one showed that it was economic to move ahead at this time. If the line were completed to Ungava it would mean that the iron ore would be going out through Ungava for export. The objection the Conservative party has is that this ore is going out of Canada for manufacture. Certainly if the line were completed to Ungava the iron ore would be exported, because it is unlikely that it would be brought away around by water down to Canadian ports. These hon. members are inconsistent.

I would take more time and say more if it were not for the fact I should like to see this bill passed this afternoon.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: As I said last night, Mr. Speaker, Monday will be private members' day. On Tuesday, we shall take second reading of the Canadian Farm Loan Act; second reading of the Industrial Development Bank Act, and as hon. members will recall I said that both of these would go to the banking and commerce committee. Then we shall take the resolution with respect to the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister tell us yet when it is intended that the debate on the budget will be resumed? Will it be before Easter or after?

Mr. Harris: I am sorry, but I cannot be positive about it. I will hope to be by Monday.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GILLIS—REFERENCE TO EDITORIAL IN "MONTREAL-MATIN"

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): May I have the indulgence of the house a minute or two, Mr. Speaker, to do something that will save time on Monday? Hon. members heard my reference to this editorial which, in my judgment, falsifies the records of this house. If I have your permission to continue, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I may say that I have already placed on the record the short paragraph upon which this editorial was based. The article was sent to me from Montreal by a friend of mine, and I have had it translated. It is from the Montreal newspaper Matin and is dated March 12, 1956. I am going to read this just to show hon. members how badly editors can twist discussions in the house. It starts off like this, "Mr. C. Gillis and the French Language"; that is the caption. The article reads:

> A little more than a year ago, a group of C.C.F. members, Messrs. Regier, Argue, Winch, MacInnis, and even the great leader, Mr. Coldwell, delivered on Maillardville and the province of Quebec a series of speeches which proved once more that this party does not forgive us our anti-socialist attitude.
> According to those people, it was clear that we should expect straightforward centralization.
> And, now to celebrate the anniversary of this demonstration of hatred against us, another C.C.F. member, Mr. Clarence Gillis declared—

I want you to note that word "declared".

> —that the advent of a socialist government would mean not only one government, but also one language.

There was no declaration along those lines.

> A member from the province of Quebec, Mr. Lomer Brisson (Saguenay), had just explained in French the purpose of a certain bill. After he had finished talking, Mr. Gillis rose to say that he had listened to the explanation of his colleague with a great deal of interest, but very little comprehension. "However," he added, "I imagine he would be at the same disadvantage if I addressed the house in my mother tongue, which is Gaelic, so I make no apologies for not understanding him."

As I explained a few moments ago that observation was thrown in for kicks. It was put in a jocular manner.

Mr. Harris: And was so taken by everyone.

Mr. Gillis: I think everyone in the house understood that. The report continues:

If Mr. Gillis has no apologies to make because he did not understand the French-speaking member, he should not boast about it. And he shows a wrong attitude and a strange spirit of Canadian citizenship when he compares French with Gaelic and puts them on the same level.

I am sure my Scottish friends will like that. It says further:

Gaelic is a foreign language in Canada, but French is not. We know that Mr. Gillis is a highly experienced politician, and he is certainly aware that the rights of the French language were guaranteed by the Quebec Act and the British North America Act; he was merely being impertinent when he spoke thus.

A year ago, Mr. Coldwell, the leader of the C.C.F. party, stated, after the blunders which he and his party members had made, that his party would be the first one to defend the present status of the two official languages of parliament. It seems that Mr. Gillis does not share this opinion.

The only comment I have to make, Mr. Speaker, is that all ethnic groups have their quotas of screwballs and it seems they are not lacking in certain sections of this country.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should not pay too much attention to that newspaper.

It being four minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

PRINTING BUREAU—OUTSIDE WORK

Question No. 282—Mr. Purdy:

1. Did the department of public printing and stationery have certain work in respect to printing, binding, lithographing and other work done outside the printing bureau for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1955?

2. If so, what was the value of such work and the amount allocated to concerns in each province?

Answer by: Mr. Pinard:

1. Yes.

2. Value $4,048,307. Allocated to concerns in each province:

Alberta	$ 10,722
British Columbia	3,081
Manitoba	50,728
New Brunswick	71,746
Newfoundland	805
Nova Scotia	8,414
Ontario	2,751,482
Prince Edward Island	1,200
Quebec	1,134,050
Saskatchewan	8,585

IMPORTS OF UNITED STATES FLAX

Question No. 287—Mr. Argue:

1. What quantities of United States flax were imported into Canada, during each month since August 1, 1955?

2. What duty, if any, was collected in each of these months?

Answer by: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

1 and 2. Imports of flax (item 1751) from United States:

Month	Bushels	Duty collected
August 1955	46,267	$ 4,628
September	15,531	1,553
October	—	—
November	—	—
December	—	—
January 1956	123,613p.	12,361p.

CASE NO. 41—SUPREME COURT APPEAL

Question No. 288—Mr. Knowles:

1. Did the Minister of National Revenue appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada against the judgment of the Exchequer Court of Canada, dated July 31, 1952, in the case of No. 41 (or Mr. "W") v. the Minister of National Revenue?

2. If so, was this appeal withdrawn?

3. What was the basis of settlement under which the appeal was withdrawn?

Answer by: Mr. McCann:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. There was no settlement. The decision of the exchequer court was allowed to stand and the appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was withdrawn on the advice of the deputy attorney general of Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 19, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BRYCE—REFERENCE TO EDITORIAL IN "MONTREAL-MATIN"

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Friday the 16th the member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) read into the record an editorial appearing in a Montreal newspaper. As will be seen from the quotation on page 2247 of Hansard of that date a part of the editorial stated, "Gaelic is a foreign language in Canada".

As a Scotsman whose mother tongue is Gaelic I resent any newspaper in this country making that kind of statement. The history of this country will show, from Cape Breton island on the east coast to the far-flung coast line of British Columbia, that Scotsmen pioneered in the settlement of this country. In western Canada, for example, had it not been for the Selkirk settlers with such names as Sutherland, Matheson, Gunn and McLeod, the development of western Canada would have been greatly hampered in the progress that was made in that part of this great country. I trust that no newspaper in the future will be so ill advised as to make the kind of statement that compels me to get on my feet today and protest.

THE BUDGET

TABLING OF BUDGET PAPERS

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the budget papers in connection with the budget to be presented tomorrow night and move that they be published in today's Votes and Proceedings and tomorrow's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: By leave, is this motion agreed to?

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

PROVISION FOR FURTHER ASSISTANCE IN FAMILY SETTLEMENT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement regarding immigration. With a view to contributing to the maintenance of the level of immigration and in furtherance of the policy of keeping families united, the government decided, several months ago, to make assisted passage loans available for the wives and children of immigrants. With the same end in view, the government has now decided to recommend to parliament in the supplementary estimates for 1956-57 that, from April 1, 1956, assistance in family settlement be paid to each immigrant or settler at the rate of $60 a year for each child under 16 years of age residing in Canada and supported by him during the first year while family allowance is not paid in respect of such child.

This assistance will be available only to immigrants landed for permanent residence in Canada and to Canadian citizens returning to settle permanently in Canada.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND HOURS OF POLLING

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 205, to amend the Canada Elections Act (hours of polling).

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. gentleman explain?

Mr. Noseworthy: The purpose of this bill is to extend from six p.m. to seven p.m. the hours of polling at by-elections held during the months when standard time is in general operation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

NATIONAL GALLERY—PRICES PAID

Motion No. 38—Mr. Diefenbaker:

For a copy of all invoices or other records revealing prices paid for each and every painting or picture purchased for $500 or more for the national art gallery, since January 1, 1950.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand that the hon. gentleman has decided to proceed with this motion, notwithstanding the point I raised the other day. If that is the case, I have no objection.

Mr. Speaker: There is supposed to be no debate at this stage.

Motion agreed to.

Motions for Papers

BANFF NATIONAL PARK—GONDOLA CHAIR LIFT

Motion No. 41—Mr. Johnston (Bow River):

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged, during the past two years, between the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and Banff parks superintendent and/or other citizens, relating to the erection of gondola chair lift to the summit of Sulphur mountain in the Banff national park.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the minister has asked me to allow this motion to stand. If it is agreeable to you, I will do so.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

WESTERN PIPE LINES, LTD.

Motion No. 42—Mr. Coldwell:

For a copy of all memoranda, correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada and Western Pipe Lines Limited, since January 1, 1949 to date.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES, LTD.

Motion No. 43—Mr. Coldwell:

For a copy of all memoranda, correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada, or any department thereof, and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, since January 1, 1951 to date.

TENNESSEE GAS—MIDWEST TRANSMISSION

Motion No. 44—Mr. Coldwell:

For a copy of all memoranda, correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government of Canada and Tennessee Gas Transmission Company Limited, and, or, Midwest Transmission Company Limited, since January 1, 1951 to date.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—CONTRACTS

Motion No. 45—Mr. Coldwell:

For a copy of contract or contracts, in the possession of the government, regarding the sale of natural gas between Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited and Tennessee Gas Transmission Company Limited.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—CONTRACTS

Motion No. 46—Mr. Coldwell:

For a copy of contract or contracts, in the possession of the government, regarding the sale of natural gas, between Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, and Northern Natural Gas Company, (Omaha, Nebraska).

KENT COUNTY—HUNTING AND FISHING

Motion No. 47—Mr. Murphy (Lambton West):

For a copy of all agreements and leases, from 1947 to date, between any department of the federal government and all lessees of Indian lands or other lands and waters in the county of Kent, particularly concerning fishing and hunting privileges and rights, and for a map or maps showing such leased areas.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether this motion could be allowed to stand until the hon. member who is moving it is here.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

[Mr. Speaker.]

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

FLOOD DAMAGE, SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I rise on a question of privilege. On February 6 I had a return for all correspondence, telegrams, memoranda or documents exchanged between the federal government or any department thereof and the premier of Saskatchewan or any department of the Saskatchewan government from June 1, 1955, to date in respect of flood damage in Saskatchewan during 1955. My information, sir, is that there is other correspondence between the department of agriculture in Saskatchewan and this government. I wonder whether I might have a more complete return.

[Later:]

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of the question of privilege which I raised earlier. Would the minister be prepared to table a wire from the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan to him dated September 21 and his reply of September 29; also a letter from the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan dated October 6 and the minister's reply of October 11?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when the question of privilege was raised I did not consider that it had to do with me or my department. The order that was issued, I think, was provided for through the Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard) and I am sure that everything that is on our file will be referred there to be reported when the order is brought down.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this correspondence has to do with flood damage. I wonder whether the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) would take notice of the situation and provide a complete answer to my question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough), who knows what correspondence he has in mind, could put on the order paper another notice of motion asking precisely for those documents.

WATER POLLUTION

ELDORADO MINING, PORT HOPE—STATEMENT ON ACTION TAKEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Have any complaints been received about pollution caused by the waste material at the refinery of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited at Port Hope? If so, could the minister give the house a statement?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, so far as I know the government has received no complaints. However, complaints were filed with Eldorado Mining and Refining. Some ten days ago the Toronto Telegram published a statement about the situation and in the light of that article I asked Eldorado for a statement which I will now read.

The radioactive hazard in the residues of the Port Hope refinery is quite negligible. If the residues were ingested, the result would undoubtedly be harmful. However, it has always been the practice to dump the residues in a fenced area, which prevents access by the public. There is, however, an arsenic content in the residues which has given some trouble. Up until about a year ago the refinery residues were dumped in an area a few miles north of Port Hope. The effects of weathering have caused a leaching of some part of the arsenic content of the residues and this has found its way into an adjacent stream.

Late last summer protests were received from farmers whose farms bordered on this stream. It was claimed that the waters of the stream had an adverse effect on livestock. While it was the opinion of the management of the Port Hope refinery that the drought which prevailed in the district last summer was mainly responsible for the poor condition of livestock, the possibility of harmful effects from arsenic was also recognized. Accordingly, a settlement was made with the several farmers who made claims against the company. These settlements were arranged through the company's legal adviser in Port Hope.

The residue area referred to in the previous paragraph has not been used for the past twelve months. A new dumping area is now in use which is located on the shore of lake Ontario. I understand that the permanent and summer residents in the vicinity of the new area were proposing to hold an indignation meeting because of alleged hazards. As noted above, there is no radioactive hazard in the residues. Moreover, since the new refining process went into operation last June the arsenic hazard has been eliminated since the arsenic residue is now in an insoluble form; that is to say, it cannot be leached by weathering.

FLOODS

SASKATCHEWAN—STATEMENT ON ACTION TAKEN IN KAMSACK AREA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on February 28 the hon. member for Yorkton directed a question to me as to what action has been taken to prevent a recurrence of the floods on the Assiniboine river in the Kamsack area in Saskatchewan. In reply I may say that no action has been taken by the Department of Agriculture to prevent the recurrence of floods along the Assiniboine river at Kamsack in Saskatchewan as this is considered to be the responsibility of the provincial government and so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned no application for assistance in this regard has been made by the provincial authorities.

TRANSPORT

FERRY "BLUENOSE"—RESUMPTION OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in answer to questions by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings regarding the Bluenose, I said I would keep the house informed as to resumption of service. I am glad to be able to say that the Bluenose resumed service from Yarmouth today.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED BANNING OF JET AIRCRAFT FROM SPACE USED BY ORDINARY AIR TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I should like also to reply to a question asked by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton). On Friday he asked whether I could inform the house "whether jet aircraft on speed runs have been banned from the air space used by regular traffic, as reported in the press yesterday". The reply is that the Department of Transport has taken no such action.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF DIFFERENT FORM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked a question with reference to elections under section 36 (1) of the Income Tax Act. It is the opinion that a special form to be provided by the tax division would not be warranted. We do feel that some reference to the alternative methods for the taxation of these lump sum payments should be indicated on the T.4 summary and supplementary, to advise employers and employees of the provisions of this section. This matter will be attended to in drafting the forms for the coming year.

The 1955 edition of the employee's income tax guide contains a paragraph wherein it is stated that:

> If you received a lump sum payment out of a pension fund during the year, the amounts must be included in your income for the year but may be subjected to a reduced rate of tax. For further information on this point, inquire at your district taxation office.

In addition to this note, assessors are directed to assess the taxpayer at the rates most beneficial to him when such a lump sum payment is included in income. This is done whether or not the taxpayer has elected to be taxed under the provisions of section 36 (1). That means that it may be spread over a period of three years at the effective rates.

GAINS ARISING FROM PURCHASE OF SHARES AT LESS THAN MARKET PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Are the gains taxable that arise when a company gives a shareholder the right to purchase additional shares at less than the market price? If not, is the government considering taxing such gains?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): This is the type of question that I shall be glad to discuss on my estimates or in the budget debate.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DORVAL—INQUIRY AS TO FIRE AT R.C.A.F. HANGAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence. Can he say what caused the fire in the Royal Canadian Air Force hangar at Dorval this morning and what the total loss is estimated to be?

Mr. P. T. Hellyer (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, preliminary reports indicate that the fire started in a section of the building where stores were kept. It will undoubtedly require a full investigation. The R.C.A.F. fire marshal and the one from the Department of Transport are already there looking into the matter.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Is the fire out?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

WILLIAM SEMENICK—REPORTED TRANSFER FROM B. C. PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I have not been able to give him notice of it. Perhaps he can take this as notice. Has his attention been called to the news item in today's Globe and Mail with regard to the transfer of William Semenick from the British Columbia penitentiary? It is alleged here he is being transferred in fear of his life. Can the minister give us some information on that situation?

Mr. Speaker: This is precisely the sort of question that should be discouraged.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Perhaps I did not put my question clearly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member put his question so clearly that he gave us a great deal of information, and I am sure we will all look at the newspaper to which he has referred to find out what is in it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: The first question has not been asked.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order. Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let us not generate more heat than one can control.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

AGRICULTURE—REPRESENTATION AT FORTHCOMING MARKETING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Has the Minister of Agriculture invited to the forthcoming agricultural marketing conference representatives from the main farm organizations in this country?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated to the house the other day, the conference which is being called is being called as a result of discussions which took place at the December conference. It was decided there that the kind of gathering they desired for the purpose in hand was a meeting of the ministers of agriculture from the different provinces, together with any officials the ministers decided to bring to meet with the department here.

HYDROCARBONS PIPELINE LIMITED

The house in committee on Bill No. 151, to incorporate Hydrocarbons Pipeline Limited —Mr. Weaver—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Knowles: There are a few words I wish to say on clause 1, but if the sponsor wishes to speak I would be glad to yield to him. If not, I may say that when the hon. member for Churchill spoke to this bill on second reading, he had occasion to refer to a relationship that might exist between this company and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. I began to wonder whether there might be any more connection than the one the member indicated when he spoke on March 2 of this year. Accordingly, I did what is often done around here and went to such well known documents as Moody's Industrials, the Directory of Directors, the Financial Post Survey of Industrials, Who's Who in America, and Moody's Public Utilities.

I went to these documents for the purpose of trying to find out just who were the individuals who were tied in to this company. As the member for Churchill stated, the company which is sponsoring Hydrocarbons Pipeline Limited is Canadian Hydrocarbons Limited. I found in one of the documents to which I have referred a list of the directors of Canadian Hydrocarbons Limited. It is true that four or five of them are residents of Canada, but at least two of them are residents of the United States. One of them is Mr. J. R. Dempsey, of Libertyville, Illinois. I have not as yet run down his pedigree. Another is Mr. C. S. Strike, who lives at West Hartford, Connecticut. I find that this Mr. C. S. Strike is also president of F. H. McGraw and Company of Hartford, as well as being president or chairman of the board of a number of other companies. F. H. McGraw and Company is associated with the Power Corporation of Canada in ownership of the F. H. McGraw Company of Canada. The president of the Power Corporation of Canada is Mr. P. A. Thomson, a member of Nesbitt, Thomson and Company of Winnipeg, which is now known as N. T. Investments Limited. That firm, N. T. Investments Limited, I understand, holds something of the order of 70,000 shares in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited.

I find also, Mr. Chairman, that the same Power Corporation of Canada has a substantial interest in the Anglo-Canadian Oil Company, which also has an interest in Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited. I find also that the chairman and treasurer of Anglo-Canadian is Mr. H. R. Milner, who is also on the board of directors of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited.

It so happens that I have on my desk quite a number of sheets of paper, and I have one of these interesting charts showing all of the involvements of these people. I do not intend to go into the full details, but I think I have given enough to indicate that there seems to be building up once again in this whole pipe-line business—both gas and oil—another of those interlocking directorates where a few people get a stranglehold on something that is pretty important to the people of Canada as a whole.

The other day the Minister of Agriculture expressed some misplaced anxiety lest we in this party were not still concerned about the 50 big shots of whom we used to speak some years ago. We are afraid, Mr. Chairman, that in this field some super big shots are being built up by these various companies that parliament is incorporating, through these charters that are being granted. I suspect the day will come when we shall find that parliament has facilitated by a number of these simple little bills the building up of an octopus in the oil and gas and fuel and power industry in this country. We feel that this house does not know enough about all this business to be called upon to deal with bills of this kind.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5—Pipe lines legislation to apply.

Mr. Harkness: On this clause I am interested in finding out whether this proposed pipe line will be a common carrier or not. I am not a member of the committee; I was not in on the committee sessions, but I understand from those who were there that this question did not come up. This clause reads:

> The company shall have all the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by, and be subject to all the limitations, liabilities and provisions of the Pipe Lines Act, and any other general legislation relating to pipe lines enacted by parliament with respect to the transportation of crude oil and other liquid and gaseous hydrocarbons.

I think section 38 of the Pipe Lines Act provides that the board of transport commissioners may declare any oil or gas pipe line as a common carrier. I presume that would be done on the initiative either of some person interested or of the government. As far as oil pipe lines for which charters have been granted so far are concerned, I think it is provided, not in the act itself but by the government indicating to the board of transport commissioners that they should declare that the pipe line should be a common carrier. I should like to know what the situation will be in connection with this particular pipe line.

Mr. Weaver: With regard to the question which the hon. member for Calgary North has just asked, this company would be subject to the provisions of the Pipe Lines Act, and this pipe line would be in the same position as other pipe lines which have been approved here. I am sure, from the discussions I have had with the sponsors, that within the limits for which it is designed they will be only too happy that this should be considered a common carrier.

It should be remembered that this pipe line will carry only that narrow range of products between what is ordinarily considered as petroleum and natural gas on the petroleum scale. Roughly, that would include naphtha, propane and butane, and it would include also refined gasoline. It will be realized that these products could not be carried in a petroleum gas line or a natural gas line.

This pipe line is to be from six to eight inches in size and the quantity of these particular products would not be as great as petroleum and natural gas. It will require a good deal of gasoline to be transported to make this a paying proposition and enable it to operate in this important field which is so beneficial to the whole gas and oil industry.

Mr. Harkness: I accept what the hon. member for Churchill has said, that this pipe line will require some gasoline to be carried through it in addition to butane and propane. It is suggested that that will have to be done in order to make it a profitable operation. However, I do not think that that answers my question as to whether it is going to be a common carrier.

If it is not to be a common carrier it would place the company operating this pipe line and the gas and other companies with which it happens to be associated in a very preferred position as compared with other companies producing propane or butane. It might mean that those other companies could sell their propane and butane only to the operators of this pipe line or to the oil companies associated with the pipe line. That is the point I wanted to get clear and I should like to have the sponsor answer that question.

Mr. Weaver: At this moment I cannot speak definitely. If the hon. member desires a definite answer perhaps the committee could rise and report progress and I would be glad to get definite information in the meantime. There is no doubt in my own mind on that point.

Mr. Harkness: I would appreciate it very much if that action could be taken because I think this is an important point which should be cleared up before the charter is finally granted.

Clause stands.

Clauses 6 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day?

Progress reported.

MONA MARGARET MCCASTLIN ADAMS

Mr. H. P. Cavers (for Mr. Henderson) moved the second reading of Bill No. 161, for the relief of Mona Margaret McCastlin Adams.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that this case originates in Hull, just across the river. Some critical remarks have been made with regard to the evidence given by certain investigators in other cases and I should like to pay a tribute to the investigators who appeared before the Senate committee in connection with this particular case. One investigator was asked the following question and gave the following answer:

> Q. Would you describe to the members of the committee the condition of the house—what you saw at that time?
> A. It was a very small dirty shack, wooden shack, with only one room, square shack, no separate rooms, just one main room, and it was simply a house of poverty, a shack you might find some old hermit living in—filthy and poor, no furnishings at all; an old stove, and decrepit old bed, and an old couch behind a curtain, and the couch was filled up with junk and all sorts of articles.

A little later on he was asked about his investigations and he replied as follows:

> At the beginning I asked this young girl her age and she said, "I think I am near 18," and I said, "Aren't you closer to 16?" and she said, "Yes, maybe, but I do not know my age, and nobody knows my age," and then I asked her if she was living there—if Mr. Bill Adams was keeping her there against her will, and I explained very carefully what I meant by that. I said, "Does he make you live here or would you rather live some place else?" and she seemed like a very bright child and told me she was living there because she wanted to and, furthermore, because she had no other place to live, and I asked her where her mother was, and she said, "I have no mother, I have an adopted mother."

I think we all feel that it is a tragedy when a 14-year old girl is forced by economic circumstances to live in an environment like that. I am sure that the honourable senators who reviewed the case were deeply moved by the evidence, but it is obvious that the parliament of Canada cannot do anything about the housing conditions or social problems which are presented by this particular case. I am not opposing the passing of this particular bill, but I submit it is a reflection upon this country when almost within sight of the parliament buildings there should exist conditions such as those described in the evidence in this particular bill. We have no authority to do anything about the girl, who apparently is a bright girl and is about 16 years of age.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Mr. Speaker: Can all the other divorce bills be taken in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Cavers) for the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Hunter) moves, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Weir), that these divorce bills Nos. 162 to 164 inclusive and 169 to 188 inclusive be read the second time. Is it agreed?

Mr. Regier: I thought that we were referring only to Nos. 162 to 164. I did wish to say something on order No. 10 and order No. 28.

Mr. Speaker: Would it be agreeable to pass the others with the exclusion of those two?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill No. 162, for the relief of Regis Edouard Gosselin.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 163, for the relief of William Boychuck.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 164, for the relief of Edna Betty Berendt Payment.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 169, for the relief of Leona Jennie Impey Mella.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 171, for the relief of Florence Mintz Etinson.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 172, for the relief of Jeanne Yvonne Gaouyat Leroy.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 173, for the relief of Adrienne Rozenbaum Melzak.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 174, for the relief of Joan Louise Squires Connolly.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 175, for the relief of Carol May Burch Squires.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 176, for the relief of Irene Raab Agoston.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 177, for the relief of Joan Marshall Bougie.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 178, for the relief of Heather Thornton Williamson.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 179, for the relief of Helen Louise Hancox Fray.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 180, for the relief of John Wallace Herbert.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 181, for the relief of Angeline Sperdakos Trakas.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 182, for the relief of Sheelagh Duffin Bennett.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 183, for the relief of Ruth Alister Creighton Jones.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 185, for the relief of Joan Etta Young Campbell.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 187, for the relief of Luvina Mallet Lambert.—Mr. Henderson.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to bill No. 170 and later to Bill No. 188, order No. 10 and order No. 28.

JOSEPH ELIE FELIX LEDUC

Mr. H. P. Cavers (for Mr. Henderson) moved the second reading of Bill No. 170, for the relief of Joseph Elie Felix Leduc.

Mr. Regier: I shall not delay the house any more than a minute.

Mr. Fleming: I rise on a point of order. How does it happen that this bill, which is a substantial way down on the order paper, is now being called ahead of Bills 166 and 168, which are No. 7 and No. 8 respectively on the list of private bills?

Mr. Speaker: It has often been our practice to take divorce cases in this way. I do not suppose that the debate with respect to those two would be long, and we can revert to No. 7 and No. 8 and perhaps reach more quickly the other private bills, No. 29 and No. 30 on the order paper, which perhaps could not be reached today; and the same applies with respect to Nos. 31 and 32. Perhaps the objection at the moment is taken a little late, because, when I asked if it was the pleasure of the house to take all the divorce bills in one motion, it was agreed to. I presume that in his scroll the Clerk has already gone ahead and inscribed our agreement to that effect. Does the hon. member still insist on his point?

Mr. Fleming: I do not know whether we have an assurance that the discussion will be brief on these two divorce bills. The hon. member nods, and so I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In this case I believe that I should place on record the fact that the respondent had notified the chief clerk of committees that she intended to contest the case. However, when the case was heard, there was read out by the chief clerk of committees to the committee a letter stating as follows:

> These presents are to state that I have interviewed my client, the respondent, once more, in connection with this case and that after due deliberation, she has decided not to contest these proceedings.
> I beg to remain,
> Yours very truly,
> M. Gaboury.

The writer of the letter, I take it, is the legal adviser for the respondent. The reason I should like to put this on the record is that I know it is very difficult for a respondent, if a woman, to have her side of the story heard. Here is a lady who had given notice of her intention to contest the case and, for reasons that we do not know, she has changed her mind. I mention this at this time because, when we meet this case again in committee, I think our committee should look into the reasons why this lady has changed her mind, whether it was economic necessity or whether it was another case of undue pressure being exerted upon her by the petitioner in order to avoid having her put forth her defence.

Another reason why I raise the point is that, upon reading the case, I find that the husband claims that he came home from work one day and not only had his wife left the home but his four almost grown up members of the family had left with her. He was at a loss to imagine why his wife, two children who are working, and two who are still in school, should all have left the home and left him at the same time. I know that our committee of this house is going to give this case the same further attention.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

SIGNATURE LOAN AND FINANCE COMPANY

Mr. Speaker: May I revert to No. 7 on the order paper? We shall take up No. 28 after we have disposed of No. 7 and No. 8.

[Mr. Speaker.]

In the absence of the sponsor, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Richardson), this bill will be allowed to stand.

CANADIAN COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton) moved the second reading of Bill No. 168, to incorporate the Canadian Council of Churches.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fleming: This bill provides for the incorporation of the Canadian Council of Churches. The Canadian Council of Churches has been in existence since 1944 as an unincorporated body. The composition of the Canadian Council of Churches is clearly set forth in the explanatory notes to the bill.

The religious bodies and other organizations named in the preamble have for 11 years been supporting, as members thereof, an unincorporated association known as the Canadian Council of Churches. In recent years the Greek Orthodox archdiocese of North and South America and the Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Church of North America have become affiliated members of the organization and, in addition, the United Lutheran Church in America is in friendly association therewith. The churches that are members of the council are set forth in the preamble:

> The Anglican Church of Canada, The Baptist Federation of Canada, The Churches of Christ (Disciples), The Evangelical United Brethern Church, The Presbyterian Church in Canada, The United Church of Canada, The Reformed Episcopal Church, The Salvation Army, The Society of Friends, The National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations of Canada, The Young Women's Christian Association of Canada, and The Student Christian Movement of Canada.

The objects of the incorporation are clearly set forth in the bill. The bill has been passed by the Senate and, if given second reading now, will go to the committee for further study.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

LOIS MARGARET CLOUSTON WILLAR

Mr. H. P. Cavers (for Mr. Henderson) moved the second reading of Bill No. 188, for the relief of Lois Margaret Clouston Willar.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I shall be equally brief on this case. However, I do feel that the attention of the house should be called to the fact that here is a case where the dissolution of the marriage is recommended and neither the petitioner nor the respondent has appeared. The only evidence whatsoever that is presented is the evidence of a witness, a garage mechanic aged 33. There is no substantiating witness. I am very pleased to notice that in the other place we have a most aggressive member in the person of Senator Hodges from British Columbia. On page 16 of the evidence in the case she has this to say:

> Personally I do not think any of that testimony contributes anything to the evidence we are looking for.

I should like to ask the house this question. What state of affairs are we coming to in the passage of these divorce cases? Have we now arrived at the stage where anyone in Canada wishing a divorce merely has to send a penny postcard to the parliament of Canada and say: "I hereby send notice that from this day forward I wish to be regarded as being divorced, and I wish to claim my rights as a citizen." I think it is going much too far when neither the petitioner nor the respondent has to appear and only one witness, a 33 year old person, who may or may not be the most reliable man on earth, is able to be responsible for the dissolution of a marriage. I wish to register my strong objection.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

WESTERN GOSPEL MISSION

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher) moved the second reading of Bill No. 190, to incorporate the Western Gospel Mission.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Jutras: Mr. Speaker, this organization is made up of representatives of a number of affiliated churches. They support clergy who conduct religious services in areas where no church exists or where the churches there do not cover the area adequately. When the local congregation has been fully established, that is, after they have repaid their financial obligation to the organization, the organization withdraws, leaving the new congregation to determine its own affairs and other affiliation, if any.

As you can see from the bill, Mr. Speaker, the head office of the organization is in Steinbach, Manitoba, which is one of the most progressive towns in my province. These people are well known throughout Canada for their love of peace and order. They hold very strong religious convictions and support their churches generously. This incorporation is primarily for administrative purposes with respect to the temporal affairs of the organization.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West) moved the second reading of Bill No. 191, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company and certain wholly owned subsidiaries.

Mr. Knowles: This bill does not seem to be on our files.

Mr. Green: This bill has not yet been distributed. At least, I do not have a copy and none of my colleagues has.

Mr. Knowles: Neither have we.

Mr. Green: Therefore we are not prepared to go on with the debate today.

Mr. Speaker: Shall it stand?

Mr. McIlraith: I know nothing about the distribution of the copies of the bill, but in view of the point that has been raised I suppose there is nothing to do but to let the bill stand.

Mr. Speaker: Stands.

QUEBEC NORTH SHORE AND LABRADOR RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 148, respecting Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company—Mr. Brisson—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, is the mover here to answer any questions?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Coldwell: Then I think we should rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. There seem to be a lot of the movers away this afternoon on bills we were prepared to go ahead with.

Mr. Boisvert: I think the hon. member for Saguenay has good reason to be absent from the house today.

Progress reported.

HYDROCARBONS PIPELINE LIMITED

The house in committee on Bill No. 151, to incorporate Hydrocarbons Pipeline Limited—Mr. Weaver—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 5—Pipe lines legislation to apply.

The Chairman: When the house resolved itself into committee of the whole earlier this day it was unanimously agreed that the committee should let clause 5 stand and that it should meet again this day on the bill.

Mr. Weaver: Mr. Chairman, a short while ago when we were dealing with this bill the hon. member for Calgary North asked a question with respect to the company being a common carrier. In asking the question he stated that he had gone over the evidence and had seen no reference to the matter. Not having a copy of the evidence handy, I asked that the clause be allowed to stand for the time being. I now have a copy of the evidence in my hand. At page 41 the hon. member for New Westminster questioned Mr. Deacon about this very matter, and I find there the following:

Q. How many individual distributing firms are in competition in each of the provinces?

This is just to give the background.

A. There is a tremendous number, but there are probably only three or four substantial ones. However, there is a great number of independent ones, and our fear about the industry in the past has been that because of the great number of independents there were no standards of safety, no standards of service provided, and that the public did not have confidence in this form of fuel. What we want to do is to create a uniform operation across the provinces that people will feel is a substantial one and can look upon it for their supplies. You may have noticed last fall when a shortage of propane existed in western Canada, that in Alberta there were two companies which still had supplies, and ours was one of them.

Q. Is it your intention to bring these other companies in, or permit them to become shareholders within your firm?

A. Anybody can buy stock in our company.

Q. I realize that. You can do that through a brokerage firm of course; but is it your intention to take in some of these companies which have quite an investment? If you start to come in with a guaranteed supply, they will automatically find that it assists their business and that it will provide investors?

A. We have been supplying them in Alberta when they ran out of supplies. They could come to us and take our supplies, and we helped them so that they could fill their orders.

Q. You will still let them keep their charters?

A. Naturally.

Q. Or become your distributors, in other words?

A. They will be able to buy from the general pipe line at the same price as we could, as a common carrier, make the product available to anyone.

Q. That is my point. It is a common carrier and they can become companies if they so desire for the distribution of that product in any municipal district if they have a charter?

A. Yes.

I think that should cover the point the hon. member raised about the pipe line being a common carrier. I was sure in my own mind that was so but I wished to check on it.

Mr. Harkness: From what the sponsor of the bill has said, I take it that the company is prepared to apply to the board of transport commissioners to have this pipe line, if and when built, declared to be a common carrier. As to the answer given us to the effect that it is a common carrier, perhaps I should point out at this stage that such is not the case until either the company itself, the government or some other interested party has applied to the board of transport commissioners and they have declared this pipe line to be a common carrier. In other words, the position with regard to pipe lines being common carriers is not what I had personally understood it to be. I understood that it was laid down in the act of incorporation that they were to be a common carrier or that the matter was covered under the general pipe lines bill whereby they would automatically become a common carrier. On looking up the law on the matter I find that apparently they do not become a common carrier unless this application is made to the board of transport commissioners. From what the sponsor has said I would take it that the company had either already done that or were prepared to do it when the charter was granted so that it would be ensured that this pipe line would be a common carrier. Is that correct?

Mr. Weaver: Mr. Chairman, if it will meet with the wishes of the hon. member, I can say that the company will be prepared to apply to the board of transport commissioners to have it declared to be a common carrier.

Mr. Harkness: Thank you.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Clause agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ECONOMIC REHABILITATION

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT WHEN PRINCIPAL INDUSTRIES CLOSE

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of providing for the economic rehabilitation of people living in communities and areas in Canada where extreme hardships are resulting from the closing down of the principal industries, such rehabilitation to be achieved through direct government assistance for the establishment of additional or alternative industries in the areas concerned or, if such measures do not fully meet the problem in a given community, to assist people in the area concerned to resettle in other communities where alternative employment can be provided.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first time that a resolution of this kind has appeared on the order paper. It is rather broad and all-inclusive. I might say that it presupposes that the government take a square look at that subject matter in all areas in Canada where industry is developed on wasting resources which can be built up to a certain peak but which later recede, thus leaving great communities as ghost towns. It is a timely subject, in my opinion, because the Gordon commission is now making an economic survey of Canada and no doubt will be studying this subject and making recommendations on it.

This resolution covers many sections of Canada and there is a principle involved. For example, with regard to gold mines in northern Ontario, companies will be formed and they develop communities. The investor who puts a certain amount of money into the exploitation of a natural resource like gold, coal, nickel or any other mineral in the ground, over a period of years can get his money back and maybe a great deal more by way of profit. When the resource runs out, we find ourselves in the position of having built towns like Kirkland Lake in Ontario or Glace Bay in Nova Scotia with a population of 28,000 or 30,000. Examples can be given from British Columbia right down to Cape Breton island. The greatest investment in the community is made by the people themselves, the 28,000 or 30,000 of population who have assembled in that area, based on the particular resource. People build homes and put a lifetime of savings into them. Churches and schools are built, railroads are developed and there is a huge investment there on the part of the Canadian people themselves. The investor, who may live in another part of the country or in another part of the world can perhaps make himself a million dollars out of that resource; he can take that money, go down to the Bahamas and live there for the rest of his natural life where he is not even obliged to pay taxes.

Mr. Coldwell: Income tax.

Mr. Gillis: Yes, income tax. But the people are left there with their investment on their hands. It is not a liquid investment. In a community like that real estate is valueless once the community peters out. That is the kind of thing this resolution is aimed at this afternoon. It is moved merely to provoke discussion and to cause the members of the house to think about the problem, more particularly the members of the cabinet. Its purpose is also, of course, to get something in the press to awaken our people to the necessity of action by government with respect to this particular problem. It is not one that develops over night. I know we have gone through this experience and have been going through it in Nova Scotia in the mining community for the past 25 years. It has been a severe problem. Many communities have gone out of existence, with the people's investment lying there valueless.

I listened here a couple of weeks ago to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mrs. Shipley) and on a television program I saw her doing an excellent job on this very subject. I thought, "That is another part of the country that is far removed from the part in which I live but this lady, a member of the government party, on that television program is saying exactly the things that I would say if I were there in her place". I merely mention that matter to indicate the fact that this is not a parochial matter as far as a discussion in his house is concerned. I am more particularly interested in my own end of the country. That is natural. In this house we have members from every section of Canada. If during the course of this discussion they can call to mind circumstances similar to those that I am going to describe in my own province, I hope each and every one of them will get to his feet and make a contribution to this debate. I think it is a subject at which we must take a square look. I think we must avoid repeating the mistakes of the past in allowing communities to fall into decay, with the consequent waste of millions and millions of dollars of investment and hard work on the part of Canadian citizens.

Of course, I might stand up and make a speech. Everybody would listen and after I was finished the only reaction would be that it was a good speech or a bad speech; it was a provocative speech or it was not. I do not believe any speech is worth while unless it is provocative. If the only reaction to what a speech contains is that it was good or bad, the speaker wasted his time and the time of the house. I am not, therefore, going to make a speech. Being a member of this group and tagged with wanting the government to do everything, I am going to call a few impartial witnesses to support the idea that the government should take a square look at this question of rehabilitating communities that are based on resources that are wasting resources, where huge investments are made and then the resources allowed to peter out.

During the last 25 years in my own part of the country I have seen many mining communities fall by the wayside. Nothing was done to compensate the people who lived in those areas. Many of these people had to sacrifice their properties, which represented a lifetime of saving and leave for other parts of the country or go to the United States. I think it is time we stopped that kind of thing.

I often think when we are talking about increasing our contribution to the Colombo plan and making more funds available for technical assistance in other parts of the world—I am in favour of that—that it is difficult to sell that idea to a person living in a town like Kirkland Lake or Glace Bay where you have 800 or 900 miners suddenly uprooted. There is no fund to do anything for them except the little that has been done by the Department of Labour in retraining them for other occupations.

It is rather difficult to go back to these people, whose unemployment insurance benefits are running out, and tell them that what a wonderful thing it is for us to increase our contributions to the Colombo plan. The reaction you get from a person under those circumstances is, "Why don't you get a Colombo plan in Canada for us? We would appreciate some technical assistance in the establishment of subsidiary industries. We have the resources and there are markets available if you want to tap them." Some financial assistance would be very welcome in such a community as I am describing.

I am suggesting that this government should implement the white paper tabled in this house in 1945. In tabling the paper the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) stated, and the statement was contained in the body of the document, that it is the policy of this government in the development of the resources of this country that where risk capital cannot be found to develop the resources or where private industry falls down the government will immediately step in with a public investment program for the development of such resources. Now, that is a good policy. We were all for it and we are still for it. It is still the policy of the government because they have never rescinded it, although they have never implemented it to the extent we would have liked to see them implement it.

I am thinking now particularly of the coal industry of Nova Scotia. As I have said a good many times in this house, it is facing a very uncertain future. We hear people advocating this natural gas pipe line from Alberta to Quebec. Our stand is that it should be a public carrier and it should be controlled by the government. If this line is built to Quebec city, it is going to pose a problem for the maritime provinces. It is going to knock the props from under one of the main industries supporting the economy of Nova Scotia. We are sure, of course, that if the government is going to subsidize a pipe line with the taxpayers' money and that pipe line is going to eliminate coal that has already been subsidized by the government in that market, then a body of men as intelligent as the government will have a plan or program to take up the slack in an industry they are helping to subsidize out of the picture. I am reasonably sure they will do that.

I should like to call a very good friend of mine as a witness on this subject of the fear of the future for the coal industry. I call Mr. Lionel Forsyth, president of Dominion Steel and Coal Company, an organization that operates coal mines in Nova Scotia as well as many other things. According to a press dispatch, Mr. Forsyth had this to say to the Gordon commission on the economic problems of Canada:

> Fears that the St. Lawrence seaway may bring new hardships to maritime industries were expressed to the Gordon royal commission Friday as it wound up its Halifax sittings.
> Lionel A. Forsyth, president of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, said completion of the seaway will likely result in cheaper importation of American coal and perhaps attract foreign steel. These transportation problems were described during the three-day commission hearings as the biggest deterrents to new industry in the maritimes. Mr. Forsyth said he was "firmly convinced" that with the high cost of transportation no manufacturer would come to the maritimes to produce a finished product.
> He said, however, that pessimism should not be associated with Dosco's Sydney steel plant,—

Now, I believe he is quite clear and precise. You cannot expect risk capital to go into the maritimes because of the long haul back to main markets and high transportation costs. It is not a question of power. Many people have been playing up to the question of power, but we have power in Nova Scotia. The problem in that province has always been markets, not only for coal but for any other commodity. As Mr. Forsyth has rightly said, there is the threat that within the foreseeable future natural gas will, to a large extent, wipe out the basic industry of my province. Then, with the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway there will be a cheap water route into Quebec which is our main market for practically everything we produce in the maritimes, including our coal. These threats are very apparent to any businessman who may have capital to invest and will keep him from going into an area where the future is so uncertain.

Now, I want to call another witness, a very good friend of mine, Mr. Harold Gordon, general manager of the coal industry in Nova Scotia. He has another angle. He makes this statement to the Gordon commission:

> "If you burn gasoline you don't help the Nova Scotia coal industry."
> That's the report of Dosco coal chief H. C. M. Gordon.
> Mr. Gordon says increased use of gasoline—and provincial government records show it is on the march—has an important bearing on the fuel situation in the maritimes and Quebec, where most of Dosco coal is marketed.

His complaint is that in the province of Nova Scotia there are huge shipments of crude oil from Venezuela. According to his statement that oil is coming in. He said this oil was offered in Nova Scotia for 6 cents a gallon and that coal could not meet this kind of competition unless the federal government imposed an import tax on residue oil. Mr. Gordon said that residue oil from Venezuela was sold in New England for $1.85 a barrel, and that $1.65 of this was cost of transportation. Well, that crude oil that is refined in Dartmouth comes in duty free. It is distress oil from countries that pay very low wages.

The president of the Dosco organization and the chief of the coal industry both make it very clear that the cost of transportation to markets is the main disability of the maritime provinces. It is the responsibility of the federal government to bring some kind of organization into being—and I hope it will come out of the Gordon commission—that will try to alleviate the problem in the best way they know how.

The next point is the matter of cheap crude oil from Venezuela that is dumped into this country duty-free. The federal government and the provincial government—because I think it comes more properly in the field of the provincial government—should get together and come to some kind of an arrangement under which that oil at least will be compelled to meet the competition of other fuels in this country. I think that is a reasonable proposition.

Mr. Nickle: May I ask the hon. member a question? In connection with Venezuela the hon. member mentioned that the transportation costs of crude oil were $1.65 a barrel and the oil was worth only 20 cents in Venezuela?

Mr. Gillis: I said that was the statement of Mr. Harold Gordon, the general manager of Dominion Steel and Coal. I quoted him. I am not prepared to argue—

Mr. Nickle: I think the figures might be reversed in so far as wellhead prices and transportation costs are concerned.

Mr. Gillis: I hope Mr. Gordon will read Hansard and give us the answer. I am not prepared to vouch for the validity of the statement. But knowing Mr. Gordon as I do, I can say he is a pretty careful Scotsman and he does not make very many statements that he can be caught off base on.

Mr. Weir: Does he speak Gaelic?

Mr. Gillis: I happened to pick up another very good witness, namely, the last issue of The Ensign, the issue for March. They took the presentations of the four maritime provinces to the Gordon commission and summarized them; they shortened them up considerably. I am not going to read them. The Nova Scotia picture shows that in wages, in production and in everything relating to the development of Canada, Nova Scotia as a province is away below the average of the rest of Canada, with the exception of the other maritime provinces. I am going to put this bit on the record. The summary states:

> The biggest single problem in the province is what will happen to the coal industry, accounting for 77 per cent of the $68 million mining economy. And the biggest single obstacle to industrial development is the high cost of transportation.
> The market for Nova Scotia coal has drastically declined with the dieselization of the transport systems, the inroads of oil and natural gas in the fuel market.
> Hopes for the coal industry are pinned on the possibility that future energy requirements in central Canada will outstrip the growth of hydro power development; and on research now being carried on at McGill university on the possibility of a coal-fired gas turbine locomotive.

These people, who are impartial witnesses, have shown clearly that the argument that has been used in the past that power in Nova Scotia particularly has been the deterrent to the development of subsidiary industry is not true. In my opinion it never was true. It is transportation, the long haul back to markets and the impossibility of competing in the central markets with anything that might be manufactured or fabricated in that part of the country. When the Gordon commission reports to the government I hope it will have something very definite to say. You know, Mr. Speaker, over the years we have had so many commissions. In spite of all the recommendations that were made, in that part of the country things have continued to decline and to deteriorate. Nothing very much was done with the recommendations. As I have said before, the Rowell-Sirois commission, in its analysis of this country, did one of the best jobs that could be done. Their recommendations were very clear with respect to taxation agreements, re-allocation and redistribution of wealth, the development of the country and a more balanced economy. They did an excellent job. I hope the Gordon commission will do just as good a job; but I hope that when the government makes its economy plans for the future it will remember that there are four provinces east of the province of Quebec.

It pains me to sit in a committee, and particularly when the natural gas pipe line from Alberta is under discussion. At that time I asked whether any surveys were made east of Quebec city to determine what the effect may be on the economy of the provinces east of Quebec, or whether some benefits might be derived from carrying the line further on into New Brunswick and down through Nova Scotia. They said that no surveys had been made; they did not know anything about it, and no representation was made to them for a survey. That is true of all of those national projects that are undertaken. They start in British Columbia and they get down as far as Montreal, and that is the end of them. The rest of that part of the world seems to be completely out of the picture.

What I am suggesting on a national scale, Mr. Speaker, has already been attempted or been done by the province of Alberta on a provincial scale. When the mining industry in Alberta went down, when there were at least two towns whose citizens were completely unemployed, when there was nothing for them to do, the government set up a committee. They made an appropriation of money; they set up a fund for the purpose of moving those people into areas where there was employment. They closed out two towns. I have a clipping which gives a summary of the committee's report. I do not want to read it. I am just summarizing it as I read it. They successfully moved the total population of those two fairly large towns and found employment for them elsewhere. But the bad feature of that move was that men who had invested in homes, in church property and had built the communities up had to pull out and leave the property standing there. As I said before, a lifetime of investment was lost.

I believe that what the federal government should do is to set up a public investment fund which could be used to implement the terms of the white paper of 1945.

If arising out of the Gordon commission report we find that the piping of natural gas into the province of Quebec is going to kill the mining industry of Nova Scotia, then I believe it will be the responsibility of the federal government, along with the provincial government, to take a look at the areas affected and determine whether it is possible to have risk capital go into those areas and replace that industry with an industry based on the resources of the areas themselves. There are plenty of resources in Nova Scotia. There would be no trouble to set up a good cement industry in that province, and it is badly needed. It would not take very much money out of the public treasury to establish there an industry that would be self-liquidating. All the ingredients necessary for a cement industry are to be found right now in that province. No one has ever come down there with the necessary capital to develop that industry for the simple reason that Canada Cement is a monopoly. Every time there is a building boom, particularly such as we had after the war, we find cement being bootlegged from the United States at a cost of $1.25 per bag more than Canadian cement would cost if it could be got.

If the federal and provincial governments had a public investment fund these resources about which I am talking could be developed. There are plenty of resources in the maritime provinces and there should be no difficulty in obtaining markets for the materials that are available for production. If these things cannot be developed publicly or privately, then the next step will be to do what the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) is doing, train the people who are young enough in new skills or move them to some other part of the country where employment is available. That is the next step.

If we can bring in people from Europe and provide jobs for them, I submit the first responsibility of the government should be to see that people who should be working are working before someone else is brought in. I am not objecting to immigration because I do not think we will ever use the resources of this country until we have many more people. We have our two national railway systems and our air lines; we have developed our transportation sufficiently to take care of 50 or 60 million people; but our first responsibility should be to see that our own people are taken care of.

Only two years ago many men left Canada to go to New Zealand because there was no place else in Canada where they could get work. The national employment service put out attractive circulars stating that jobs were available in New Zealand, with homes and everything provided. Of course they have a coalition government in that country today which is trying to hang on to the mechanics of free enterprise. When these men got to New Zealand they found that the contract was not being fulfilled by a long shot. They are stuck there now and they are talking about suing the people who brought them in on the charge that they were brought in under false pretences. This is something I intend to discuss with the Minister of Labour and perhaps the minister of immigration when their estimates are before us. Those men were virile enough to be ready to leave this part of the world and travel to New Zealand in order to find work when employment should have been available in their own country.

I think the answer to a problem such as this is simple: set up a public investment fund. Personnel is available in every department of government who could deal with this problem from the economic, social and business standpoints. The machinery is there to be used for that purpose. You always know that a problem is going to develop five or six years ahead and the machinery could be developed to deal with the problem before people are thrown out on the streets and chaos exists. The purpose of my resolution is to remind the government that this is not a developing problem, as indicated by that white paper. We have the machinery to deal with any industry which may be depending on wasting resources, such as gold mining, coal mining, metal mining and so on. We find ghost towns all over Canada, mining communities which were once prosperous. There has been lost investment and disillusionment on the part of people who have put their lifetime savings into these communities.

This would not mean any change in the mechanics of our society; it merely means the carrying out of government policy. As far as the members of this group are concerned, we are prepared to assist in that. Many people think that the C.C.F. want to take over every farm and little store, but the C.C.F. program and policy ever since I have been in it is to support private industry when it can do the job in the interests of the community. That is the way it should be done. But anything that dominates the life of the community in the way that our natural resources do should be handled in a way that would give the community a say in the management. We believe in co-operative development. We do not want to take over everything. That is the point I want to make. If private industry will do the job in the interests of the community, that is the way it should be done. But they are not doing the job in the maritimes. Considering the resources we have from coast to coast, the maritime provinces stand as an example of the failure to develop our resources on a national scale on the basis of service to our people and providing a balanced economy and equality across Canada.

If this resolution does nothing else but provoke discussion, I think it will have been worth while. I trust that hon. members from other parts of Canada who have some knowledge of this subject will say a few words. We talk about British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Quebec and Ontario, but what the people residing in those provinces fail to remember is that while they still have frontiers to push back, while they still have hinterlands, while they still have new wealth to develop, the maritime provinces are fenced around by oceans. We have no hinterland, we have no frontiers to push back, we have to make the best use that we can of the resources that we have in that restricted area.

I trust that when hon. members from Ontario, Quebec, Alberta and British Columbia are speaking on this resolution they will remember that we live in a restricted area far from the main markets and our problem is mainly a transportation problem. I hope that they will be considerate and generous in their discussion of the resolution.

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I realize that after the broad picture my hon. friend has painted this afternoon the activities for which the Minister of Labour is responsible do not fill the needs that the hon. member has indicated exist. However, I do want to say something on this resolution. I am always interested in what the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) says, because he says it so forcefully.

The hon. member has always shown a keen interest in this matter in a general way, and in his conversations with me as minister. I appreciate the way in which he has brought this resolution before the house. He has stated that he has done this to provoke discussion of what is now a serious problem, but which was in the not so distant past a more serious problem. Of course, in the future it may be as serious as it was two years ago.

The hon. member has said that today there are across Canada a great many of what might be classified as depressed areas or depressed industries. I cannot agree with him entirely there. I think I would have agreed with him one and a half years ago that there were a few places that could be put in that category. However, we shall not argue about that for the moment.

I think his resolution divides itself into three parts. The first part is as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of providing for the economic rehabilitation of people living in communities and areas in Canada where extreme hardships are resulting from the closing down of the principal industries,

I am going to call that the first part, which is the foundation upon which he has made his remarks. In regard to the closing down of the principal industries, he has not put in his resolution, although he mentioned it in his speech, the great importance of co-operation among the municipality, the province and the federal government. In matters coming within the scope of this resolution, we always have to realize that that co-operation must be forthcoming at all times. I know my hon. friend sometimes takes as his motto direct federal action. He has mentioned it on a number of occasions, and it has been very clear that he would like the federal government to take quite direct action in this field. As a matter of fact, that is about the only serious objection I take to his whole resolution and to his remarks. But there are the responsibilities of the province, of the municipality and of the industries that benefit from the building up of that activity in the community, which he explained so well in the early part of his remarks. There is also, of course, the responsibility on the part of the unions and the working people. We have been concerned there.

The second part of his resolution is as follows:

—such rehabilitation to be achieved through direct government assistance—

I presume he means federal government assistance.

—for the establishment of additional or alternative industries in the areas concerned—

I will admit at once that this is almost completely outside the scope of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Gillis: I did say "the federal government in co-operation with the provinces."

Mr. Gregg: I agree with that. In his remarks the hon. member made reference to that, but I am referring now to the setting up of alternative industries by the federal government. He did say in his speech, "in co-operation with the provinces and others." I also noted, in that part of his speech where he was referring to an investment fund, and he suggested a public investment fund for that purpose, he was looking squarely across the chamber at the Minister of Finance. I presume that if the Minister of Trade and Commerce had been in his seat he would have also looked in that direction.

Mr. Gillis: That is right.

Mr. Gregg: However, I think, on behalf of everyone, one must bear in mind that in the free peacetime economies, or fairly peaceful economies, such as we find ourselves in at the present time, at least devoid of controls or compulsion, my hon. friend from Cape Breton South will agree it is not quite as easy as it might appear to be. I think he will agree that the federal government cannot say to industries, "You will go to Glace Bay," or "You will go to Fredericton," or "You will go to Edson, Alberta, and set up an industry there." He did not suggest that in his speech. He did suggest public ownership sponsored by a combination of federal and provincial funds by way of public investment.

However, with regard to that second part of his resolution, there are a few indirect, if not direct, things that the federal government is doing in his own countryside of Cape Breton. For instance, my colleague, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, in co-operation with the province, is carrying out a very intensive search for base metals on Cape Breton Island. I also point out that the Minister of Public Works, in co-operation with the province of Nova Scotia, has built a causeway which I am sure will mean for the tourist industry of Cape Breton Island a great deal in the years to come, including the oncoming tourist season. Perhaps the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration would not agree with this as a motive for confederation of Newfoundland with Canada, but nevertheless the fact of that confederation is making it possible for more employment in Cape Breton, and particularly in Sydney, than they would ever have had if confederation had not been carried into effect.

I turn now to the third part, which is the one that affects me most directly. His resolution states:

—if such measures do not fully meet the problem in a given community, to assist people in the area concerned to resettle in other communities where alternative employment can be provided.

For the purposes of my discussion, if my hon. friend will permit me, I should like to insert the words "therein or", so that it would read:

—to resettle therein or in other communities where alternative employment can be provided.

We have had some experience with that latter part of the hon. member's resolution. I am not attempting to say it has been a vast experience. I would rather say it has been to some extent experimental because a great need existed in several areas of Canada during the past few years, and we have tried to see how far the co-operation amongst the two agencies for which I am responsible, namely, the unemployment insurance commission and the Department of Labour, which has vocational training, and the province and the municipality, could work.

I am going to take first what my hon. friend referred to in his opening remarks as ghost towns. My department has taken action in three ways, and in all of them it has been co-operative. One has been when an industry closes up in an isolated community and there is nothing else at all, in other words, when the community becomes a ghost town. We had two or three examples of that in the province of Alberta. The hon. member for Cape Breton South referred to them in his address. I should like to refer to them also because, while I shall admit that the lead in the rehabilitation of people and the movement of people was elsewhere, nevertheless I should like to put on the record that both in vocational training and in the national employment service the federal department co-operated very fully as well.

In Alberta in 1934 authority was provided, through action of the legislature, for the expenditure of an amount not to exceed a total of $100,000 for any purpose whatsoever to assist in the rehabilitation of coal miners who had become unemployed in areas designated by the lieutenant governor in council. A miners' rehabilitation committee was set up and it was decided by that committee that all the people would have to be moved out. The committee made arrangements for a complete on-the-spot investigation of the situation and it found that in all there were over 800 workers, most of them heads of families, who were affected. It was decided that placements would be made under the rehabilitation program with the co-operation of the national employment service, and that is where our federal activities in that field came into the picture. It was decided that the possibilities of retraining under Canadian vocational training and apprenticeship legislation should be investigated and that travel warrants chargeable to the provincial appropriation should be issued, where necessary, to transport workers and their families to areas where other work could be provided.

I will agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South that that set-up, in a time of very great need for the communities concerned, worked very well indeed. Through the efforts of the joint committee, the unemployment service and others a very high percentage of the coal miners who were unemployed in those towns were relocated in other mining areas where they could be employed or were placed in other suitable forms of employment or were given training for other activities. There were some remaining problems, particularly amongst the older workers, and that will always arise in any such attempt to move people or to retrain them for other activities. It is found very difficult to move and place people in the age category from 45 up. However, by and large the effort was successful and the satisfactory result obtained in Alberta is, I think, a very good example of what can be done by close co-operation. It was an ad hoc effort and required a special act of the provincial legislature to put it into effect.

I turn now from the question of moving a whole community from one area to another to the question of another type of community, one with increasing opportunities for work in the same general area, a community where an industry closes down for good but where in the general area other things are coming into operation. That of course, is what the hon. member who sponsored the resolution hoped might be done either by chance or by government intervention wherever people are thrown out of work.

I am going to take an example of this category in my own province of New Brunswick. In the town of Marysville there had been a large cotton mill there for 80 years, and two years ago last February it closed down for good. At the time of closing about 400 persons were employed in the mill. There had been more than that but that was the approximate number at the time of closing. It was a great tragedy for the town of Marysville which depended almost entirely upon the cotton mill. There were some people who were retired and some who lived in Marysville but worked in the city of Fredericton. Nevertheless the closing of the mill meant that the situation was going to be very difficult for those who had worked there and for the town itself.

The two ministers of labour, the minister of labour for the province and the federal Minister of Labour, met, discussed the matter and agreed to co-operate to the fullest extent. That co-operation was carried out and under the vocational training agreement with the province of New Brunswick a committee was set up. That committee interviewed 250 persons and recommended 118 out of that number for training in 17 different occupations. While that was taking place the national employment office in Fredericton was carrying on a special drive for the placement of those who did not want or did not need to take training. Included in the latter were some who had worked in the offices, some who had worked in the factory itself, some who had worked on maintenance, some who had semi-skills, and it was reasonably easy to find placement for them, although I will admit that the problem arose at a time when employment there was not nearly as buoyant as it is in central New Brunswick or in Canada as a whole at the present time.

I should like to acknowledge the way in which a good many other employers took a keen interest in those who were unemployed in the town of Marysville and found work for them. I should like to mention those who were given special training. Temporary training facilities were established by the provincial government with the assistance of the federal government for the purpose of assisting those who wished to take training. Training was carried out in carpentry, electricity, plumbing, automobile mechanics, commercial work, hairdressing, barbering, practical nursing, metal work, meat cutting, welding, dry cleaning and radio servicing.

The training was carried on by the province with the federal government assisting in the cost on an equal basis, and it was a very successful experiment. The last report indicated that over 95 per cent of those who received training were employed in the field for which they were trained.

With due respect to the remarks of my hon. friend, I will admit at once that it would not have been possible to find employment for these people in the work for which they were trained and in the way that it was possible to do it if it had not been for the fact that an increasing number of openings came about through the establishment of Camp Gagetown in the south and the commencement of work on the Beechwood project up the Saint John river. This was a case of attempting to overcome a very difficult situation in an area in which, speaking generally, job opportunities were on the increase.

I am going to go back to the great province of Nova Scotia which I visited over the last week end and where I found 15 feet of snow banked in some places. We will take a community where industry is at a low ebb, not completely out of operation but in such a state that the immediate community cannot absorb those who are becoming unemployed without some special action. In other words, I refer to a community where employment is not on the way up but rather is stationary or slightly on the way down. I am going to take the town of Westville, Nova Scotia, because the experiment there took place about the same time as those to which I have referred.

I refer now to the closing of the Drummond mine in 1954. There again was a closing in the midst of an industrial area in which there were few opportunities for further employment at the time. A good many workers in that mine were thrown out of employment. Classes were established by the provincial government of Nova Scotia, in co-operation with the federal government, to train unemployed miners in four trades. They were welding, plastering, barbering and auto body repair. There at Westville 71 persons were enrolled in the first six months' course and all of them have been employed in the fields in which they were trained.

The reason for that was that the number, as is indicated, was not large, but they were trained in activities, for which those who arranged it were quite sure they would be able to find openings. Two of the classes have been continued at Westville. Special classes for unemployed more recently have been established in Sydney, North Sydney and Glace Bay in sheet metal working, diesel engineering and auto body repairing. My friend the hon. member for Cape Breton South can tell us about that matter more clearly than I; but that training has been going on for a short time and I believe that within the very small limits in which it is operating, it is having useful results.

Mr. Gillis: It is doing a very good job.

Mr. Gregg: So much for training or experimenting in the task of training unemployed workers for work within their immediate vicinity. But in his resolution my hon. friend has these words "to resettle in other communities where alternative employment can be provided". I am sure that, from the introductory remarks in the moving of the resolution, we all gathered that this kind of activity was not one about which the hon. member for Cape Breton South was very enthusiastic. I can agree with him in that regard. I do not approach with any enthusiasm the necessity of uprooting established families in one part of Canada and moving them to another part of Canada, particularly families that have been in a given community for a good many years.

Within our country I think we must always have young workers who are free of responsibility, energetic and willing to engage in adventure and go off and work in those things that are happening on the frontiers of Canada. If we do not have them or if we do not have people coming in who are prepared to do that, those activities will not be successfully carried forward. But in the kind of communities I have mentioned, in Westville, Marysville, Glace Bay, Sydney or Sydney Mines, it is not at all a cheerful prospect to move families out unless it is absolutely essential.

We have, however, in this field felt that it was justified in some instances. For this fiscal year 1955-56, which has been a fairly busy year for everybody, we have assisted in the movement of 253 unemployed workers. They have all been from Nova Scotia during this fiscal year. The movement was carried out under the plan of our national employment service. Of those 253, 213 were former coal miners, 174 going to the province of Quebec and 39 to the province of Ontario. Some 34 of the others were placed in jobs as labourers at Camp Gagetown while the remaining 6 included 4 diesel mechanics, 1 recreational manager and 1 physical instructor, all of whom were transferred to jobs which were known to exist in Quebec and Ontario.

The Department of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission are continuing to work closely with the provincial department and others concerned in this matter, and studies are also being made of the local areas that fall or might fall within one or other of the three categories of communities I have mentioned. Fortunately as far as we can see ahead in this year of 1956, I do not think there will be the necessity for the assisted movement of many unemployed persons from the maritime provinces to the other parts of Canada.

Many things related to this resolution have been touched upon in the debate in this house since January 10 last. I hope this resolution itself will receive discussion, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Cape Breton South when he introduced it. Even though the work going on under the sponsorship of the Minister of Labour does not in any sense carry out that great picture that he presented a little while ago, nevertheless it is something—even if it is only a thumb in the hole of the dike—to keep the hole from becoming too great. When the discussion is completed I would hope that the hon. member for Cape Breton South might feel that his purpose has been accomplished and be disposed to let the resolution be withdrawn.

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for just a few minutes on this resolution. It is so nearly similar to a resolution which was discussed in this house two weeks ago that I fear one could find himself repeating many of the things which were said at that time if he did not watch himself carefully.

The hon. member who introduced the resolution spoke about ghost towns, or the possibility of ghost towns, in his own province and in other parts of Canada. I am happy to say that in New Brunswick we have no ghost towns. Mining, of course, is something in connection with which I suppose you can expect ghost towns. One of the finest examples in Canada is that of Dawson city up in the Yukon, which I believe at one time had a population of 15,000 to 25,000 but which now has a population of 200 or 300 owing to the fact that the industry upon which it was built has petered out.

I believe there are also ghost towns in northern Ontario. But we do not need to worry so much about cities like Dawson city up in the north. That is a thing of the past. As far as ghost towns in Ontario are concerned, as the minister mentioned a moment ago, the fact that we pay to move people from the maritime provinces to Ontario to get work would indicate that there must be plenty of work in the province of Ontario for the people who would come from mining or other areas. I do not think it is as much a problem there as it is in the maritime provinces.

The solutions suggested in the hon. member's resolution I would say are merely of a temporary nature. The motion suggests the movement of men from one province to another, and recommends the giving of instruction to those people who have lost their employment so they can take other employment. In my opinion this is only a palliative, and so far as we are concerned in the maritime provinces we hope there will be some more permanent solution of our problem than is suggested in the resolution, though I am very much in favour of the suggestions as temporary measures.

The minister has spoken about the town of Marysville in New Brunswick. We all remember the great problem these people had a few years ago when they lost their industry which, as he said, had been there for 80 years. Many people were thrown out of employment. The minister gave the history of the situation, but I just want to say that we cannot help but feel great admiration for the people of that town who rehabilitated themselves more by their own efforts than by the efforts of the province or the dominion.

There was another town in New Brunswick that, in a way, suffered as much as Marysville, and that was Milltown. I have mentioned this before, but the employees of the factory in Milltown would not accept defeat. When the head of the textile industry in Canada said they would have to close their mill the workers said no, it would not be closed. They said they would put up the money themselves to carry on, with assistance from the town. I think everyone is very happy to know that today this factory is carrying on much as it did before, and the people have almost completely rehabilitated themselves. I mention these two instances to show how much can be done by the determination of people when they wish to overcome their difficulties.

My main argument today, Mr. Speaker, would be the same as it was two weeks ago when another resolution concerning decentralization of industry was before us. I say these temporary measures are not enough. Something of a more permanent nature is needed. The maritime provinces are losing their people and losing their industries. This is the result of policies not of this government particularly but of governments since the days of confederation. It is the result of our rail rates and defence production, as I mentioned here the other day. If carefully reviewed, and I think they will be carefully reviewed when the Gordon report is studied, these are things that will be of help and I do not believe the situation the hon. member mentioned today will again arise in any section of this country.

He spoke about the coal industry in Nova Scotia. I know very little about that. I know that industry has received about $10 million to $12 million a year in subventions. The coal industry in New Brunswick does not ship much coal outside of the province, and received only some $11,000 or $12,000. There is no comparison, of course but our coal industry has been getting along fairly well in the last few years as a result of the use of coal in the production of electric power. Then, too, the pulp mills in New Brunswick have been using coal from our coal fields. I understand that Gagetown camp, as a result of the efforts of many of us including the minister and myself, is going to use coal from Minto for heating.

The chief industries, of course, in our province have been the primary industries. If we want a balanced economy we have to establish more secondary industries, more manufacturing industries. If the maritime provinces and other parts of Canada, which may be more or less depressed, had a balanced economy they would be all right. I feel that is more a problem for this federal government than it is for the provincial governments. They should see to it that there is a balanced economy in all parts of Canada. If that were done we would not have resolutions such as this coming before the house.

As I have mentioned before, there was a time when the southern states of the United States were a depressed area. They produced their cotton and shipped it to other parts of the country as well as to other countries. They were just pickers of cotton and did all the manual work. Some years ago the Tennessee valley authority was established and power was given to the southern states. Industries were established, and today you have a balanced economy in that part of the country. You do not hear of the depressed conditions there as you did some years ago. From about 1926 to 1939 industries in the New England states failed in great numbers. About 40 per cent of their factories closed and 25 per cent of their workers were unemployed. Efforts were made by the federal government, by the states and by the municipalities to improve that situation, and today conditions have entirely changed.

There are many ways we might suggest for solving this problem. As I said a minute ago, when this Gordon report is brought before the house and the people of Canada have a thorough understanding of it, there will have to be very careful consideration given to it. We want a united country. I was reading the article to which the hon. member for Cape Breton South referred in The Ensign. It mentions that the maritime provinces are looking 25 years into the future and points out how these provinces have been neglected over the years. There is the suggestion that there is no excuse for it, and that it is a matter for study by governments and people in the country.

I do not think there is anything more I wish to say this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. If I did I would be simply repeating what I said two or three weeks ago. I am in favour of the suggestions in this resolution, but I cannot help pointing out again that they are of a temporary nature and should not have to be made at all. I mean there should be some permanent policy in this country that would do away with the need for palliatives of this kind. We should have a balanced economy from one end of Canada to the other which would give to the maritime provinces and other depressed areas of this country the same opportunities for their young people and for their old people that exist in the central provinces.

Mr. F. T. Fairey (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a good deal of attention to the mover of this resolution, the hon. member for Cape Breton South, who stated his problem with his usual conviction and clarity and one would wish one could emulate him. As I said, he stated his problem, and his speech had the added virtue of suggesting remedies. Of course he speaks from experience in a part of the country, his own constituency, which over many years has suffered dislocations and distress through the decline of the coal industry.

Of course this problem of ghost towns, or the shift of emphasis in manufacturing, is not a new one. We experience it all over Canada. In fact we have had it all over the world since the days of the industrial revolution. One can recall in the early days areas of the old land that were devoted entirely to one particular industry where new inventions, the advance of science, and the change in methods deprived large numbers of workers of their employment, although in the long run those inventions and advances created other jobs, perhaps more jobs, but certainly not the same kind of jobs. These changes did result in a greater mobility of the labour force.

In my own province where most of our industry until quite recently was in what might be called extraction industries, and in all places where we deal with wasting assets, the movement of population is inevitable. In my own province where lumbering is one of the chief industries, as the trees are cut the workers must move forward. In the mining industry we have also suffered from the depletion of resources and the resultant evident ghost-town situations. Throughout British Columbia in the mining industry there are at least half a dozen small towns that those of us who come from that province still remember. They simply do not exist today, either because the mines were worked out or because production costs did not warrant the continuance of work in that area.

It seems to me that the solutions that have been suggested by the hon. member for Cape Breton South have some merit. He speaks of direct government assistance for the establishment of additional or alternative industries. The question is, how can government influence the establishment of new industries in such areas? It seems to me that is a matter for local and private interests. I recall a town in British Columbia, the town of Nanaimo, which 20 years ago was a mining town. It was common to see miners walking around that town with pit lamps on. Now the mines are closed. I do not know whether there are any mines at all that operate in that area at the present time. Nevertheless it is one of the fastest growing towns in British Columbia because of the establishment of distributive industries or occupations, and because of the nearby establishment of new industries connected with lumbering. Nanaimo today is a distributing centre and not a mining town. Unfortunately there are others which suffered the fate of their industries closing down which have not been able to recover to the same degree.

Who is going to establish those secondary industries? Industries are usually established close to the necessary raw materials, and where there is a sufficient working force. It was my intention this afternoon to speak more of the provision of an adequate working force, properly trained, than to deal with the economic factor which is the establishment of the industry itself. That phase of my proposed talk has been so adequately covered by the Minister of Labour that I am afraid I shall have to repeat some of it.

It was my privilege at one time to be in charge of one of the projects he mentioned, namely the training program under the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act. I note with pleasure that the estimates which have been tabled show that $417,000 is provided for this particular branch of training, the training of unemployed workers. Perhaps that is not an adequate sum, but I do notice that it is an increase over last year, when the sum allocated was $360,000. I did note, too, that not nearly all the amount appropriated had been spent, and that may be due to the general prosperity of the country.

In dealing with a particular area such as the one described by the hon. member who is responsible for this resolution, I think one must say that it is a mistake nowadays to train persons, or to have persons devote themselves to, a particular trade or occupation. The tendency in training now is away from specialization as mechanics in a particular field to training in an area of occupation, so that one is not condemned, I was going to say, or circumscribed by the necessity of working in the particular occupation for which he was trained. His skills are such as to enable him to transfer his talents to an allied industry where, because of his general training, he can find employment, activity and satisfaction in some occupation which is allied to the one in which he formerly showed interest.

I mean by that, it is not necessary nowadays in industry to have a vast number of skilled artisans to the same extent that was necessary before the machine age, or before the machine age was as highly developed as it is now. Machinists in some degree, of course, are necessary, highly skilled machinists. The house may recall that on another occasion I emphasized the importance of providing this country with a large number of properly skilled tradesmen who would be in a supervisory field; but the great bulk of our trained workers now are trained in a wide variety of skills.

The main job is servicing and operation of machines. The mechanics who build and set up the machines are not required in the numbers they used to be. Therefore training should be on a broader base, so that a person who trains as a machinist could easily transfer into the automobile field or the diesel engine field or any field where similar skills are required. I think the tendency in technical schools and other institutions in this country is in that direction.

I think one of the remedies for the ills which have been described here is to train more people more widely than they have been in the past so their skills can be used and they themselves will not be compelled to work in other than the places where they were born and brought up. I agree with the minister when he says that in a country such as Canada we need people who have energy and the spirit of adventure and are willing to move. This is still a country of frontiers. It is a young country crying for development, and it requires the type of person who is willing to move from place to place where his skills and knowledge are required and can be put to use.

I know this is pretty small comfort for people in the older parts of Canada who have occupied themselves for many years in industries such as coal mining. They have made investments in their homes, in their schools and churches and there is a natural reluctance to move. But if they have been working in an industry which is dying or which is dead, then they should be ready to move. That is all there is to it. It seems to me ridiculous to try to persuade people to live in a place where there is no work. Therefore the remedy, as I suggest, is a greatly expanded training program, perhaps for the younger people, so that when employment ceases in a dominant industry they will be prepared to move to where jobs do exist.

There are two remedies. One is the establishment of secondary or other industries if conditions permit, and the other is an expanded training program together with a proper survey of the situation so we do not embark upon a training program for jobs which do not exist. I know that the Department of Labour does make these surveys and does know where there are jobs waiting for skilled workers. I do think that as part of the program to train people and move them as individuals, something further might be done to help them and their families locate where employment is possible.

I was a little surprised to hear the hon. member for Cape Breton South say that the problem in his own constituency or province was one of transportation and lack of markets. It seems to me that if it were possible to establish secondary industries manufacturing a variety of articles in that province, the fact that they would be close to the Atlantic seaboard should be to their advantage. I am a little at a loss to understand how the products of such industries would have any difficulty in reaching suitable markets. If they would have difficulty in that regard I wonder what we have in British Columbia, which is nearly an additional three thousand miles away from the European markets.

I do not think I have very much more to say. This is a distressing problem. I think the thing to do is to establish an expanded training program for the younger people. I have had experience with older people who were in the early fifties trying to get them to move from their homes, but they resisted. Many people in the late forties or early fifties have the idea that they are not suitable material for training, but that is not so. However, it is most difficult to persuade them that they are.

I commend the hon. member for bringing this resolution before the house at this time. He said he did so simply to provoke discussion and concentrate the attention of hon. members of the house on a problem which cries for solution.

I notice that there are two parts to the resolution and I note also that the hon. member has been wise enough to suggest solutions to the problem which he enunciated. One was direct government assistance for the establishment of additional alternative industries in the areas concerned. I suggest that would be something beyond the responsibility of the federal government except in so far as it could and should undertake to make surveys of the possibility of establishing such industries in these areas. They should give wide publicity to this in order to acquaint those who are engaged in similar activities in other parts of the country with the advantages of locating in one of these distressed areas. Certainly anything they could do in that regard, particularly in concert with the municipal and provincial authorities, would be a step in the right direction.

The second remedy the hon. member proposed was assistance to people living in these areas to resettle in other communities where alternative employment could be provided. If he means that the government should undertake the wholesale removal of complete communities I think he would run into great difficulty for the reason I have stated, that is the reluctance of people to leave the communities to which they are attached. However, I agree wholeheartedly with him if he means that by training and other inducements the younger people should be shown that it is to their advantage to move to where better employment is obtainable.

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South said when he moved the resolution, it is all-embracing, taking in a wide field which I think probably encompasses municipal, provincial and federal governments. He has said that he has moved this resolution for the purpose of creating discussion, and in that way it is all to the good. While I might not be in entire agreement with some of the matters to which he referred, substantially I support the resolution and the viewpoint which he advanced.

I participated in a debate a few days ago on the decentralization of industry which I think to a large extent focused attention on the same problem dealt with by this resolution. This afternoon I intend to speak briefly, primarily because of my feeling for a fellow member from Nova Scotia but also because the problems he raises are those which are of particular importance to the maritime provinces of Canada.

As the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Fairey) said a few moments ago, and as the Minister of Labour said, there are three facets to this proposition which the hon. member for Cape Breton South has suggested. In so far as moving people from their homes is concerned, no one minimizes the difficulties in such a proposal. After all, I suppose there are as many people settled on poor farms, who have had to vacate those farms because the soil was poor, as have settled in industrial communities. That is essentially, perhaps, a municipal problem. I know that in my own province there are thousands of homes which have been established and which, owing to the force of circumstances, have had to be vacated. That is, of course, in agricultural areas.

The hon. member mentions specifically the problem in his own home town of Glace Bay. I realize there is a problem there, but the problem of timing is also important. I can remember when I was in the legislature, more years ago than I should like to recall, that I was chairman of a committee having to do with private bills. The town of Glace Bay used to send down borrowing bills which came before that committee in the legislature, and the committee could not pass the bills because at that time the securities or bonds of the town of Glace Bay were supposedly so risky that the legislature would not authorize the borrowing program unless some other guarantees could be obtained.

Later on, owing to efforts by this parliament and by the Conservative government at Ottawa, that is the Bennett government, a system of subsidies was introduced. As a result the situation changed for the better, and Glace Bay became a thriving and prosperous community again. Today there are differences inherent in the coal mining industry there. There is a problem of timing. In the case of some industries it should be easy to say, "that is an extractive industry, and it is through; something must be done about the community." Usually that can be recognized some considerable time in advance, however. People who own their homes there probably have made arrangements so they are not too terribly prejudiced by that occurrence. Nevertheless, there is a problem in that connection.

I suggested by inference, with reference to the town of Glace Bay, that there could be government assistance for the coal industry, not perhaps the direct establishment of industry, though that is one phase of it, but assistance to the industry itself which will, as it did in the case of Glace Bay and the coal mining industry generally of Cape Breton, reestablish that industry for a period of 20 or 25 years.

A few moments ago the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., said he could not understand the hon. member for Cape Breton South when he said that transportation was a problem affecting us in Nova Scotia. He thought that if we were able to manufacture goods in Nova Scotia we would be able to overcome the transportation problem because, after all, we were on the Atlantic seaboard and therefore had an export position. I quite agree with the latter deduction. I have said—and in that perhaps I think there is no difference between the hon. member for Cape Breton South and myself—that we should be able to capitalize on that export position. Transportation, in so far as water export is concerned, is to our advantage. But what we do require are facilities such as I might mention in a moment, with which to deal with that matter. When the hon. member for Cape Breton South was referring to transportation problems, I am sure he was thinking of transportation to the Canadian market.

Mr. Gillis: I might inform the hon. member, if he will excuse me interrupting, that I quoted the Nova Scotia government's presentation to the Gordon economic commission.

Mr. Nowlan: As I say, what I am sure the hon. member had in mind was the transportation problem to the Canadian market; and that is a real problem. The hon. member for Cape Breton South referred to other provinces and said he wanted them to remember that they had frontiers which could be rolled back, whereas we had none. That is perfectly true. But there is another thing that should be remembered. I think it is recognized, but I wish to emphasize it in view of what the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., said a moment ago.

When the maritimes entered confederation this transportation problem was envisaged. The government of the day appreciated it, and we were told there would be a solution to that problem by the construction of a railway from the maritimes to central Canada which would give us access to those markets. The Intercolonial Railway was built for that purpose, and we were told we would be able to move our goods over that railway and into the Canadian market and so be in a competitive position with industries in other parts of Canada. That pledge has not been kept.

Another point that must be borne in mind is that the Intercolonial Railway was built over a twisting, tortuous route along the coast of New Brunswick and the bay of Chaleur and into the province of Quebec, in order to protect the provinces of Ontario and Quebec from possible attacks by a foreign power. We were to have this railroad established over this long route, so that troops, presumably British troops, could be brought to Halifax and forwarded to Ontario and Quebec along that long route. That was the D.E.W. line of those days.

Today we in the maritimes are paying the price for that, because those pledges have been forgotten; they have been overlooked. We are benefited by the Maritime Freight Rates Act, which means at best only a discount of 20 per cent. We are paying virtually the same freight rates on that long, tortuous railway as any other shipper in the country. That is one approach that can be made toward the solution of this problem in the maritime provinces.

The Minister of Labour says it is very difficult to establish industries directly. I realize that is true, but I think this government could do much more toward that end than has been done. In the matter of rail transportation there is a direct contribution that can be made and must be made.

Again, referring to the water transport position which the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) raised, that can be overcome only if we are provided with adequate shipping so we can take advantage of the export position. I mentioned that the other afternoon in discussing the estimates of the Department of Transport. I am not going to develop it further here, but I hope to do so at a later date. However, when we have a situation such as exists in the maritimes at the present time, when we are not able to ship our products—the ones we do have—out of the province by water because, for instance, we have not refrigerated space for shipping apples, then there is some contribution that can be and should be made toward that end. It is the responsibility of the government to do so, because you cannot expect private enterprise to initiate shipping lines. They might perhaps be able to do so later on, but not at the moment.

Again, the hon. member for Cape Breton South was speaking concerning the situation confronting the coal industry. Today I received a letter from a friend of mine in the Truro yards, and he tells me that in those yards on last Friday were 500 cars of coal, steel and lumber tied up because there are no locomotives to move them. We must praise our friends from the west, who make such a case for wheat, because he says that all the cars he sees going by are carrying wheat. You might expect the coal industry to be maintained, particularly at this time when there are blizzards occurring in the maritimes and there is a demand for coal, but how can it be maintained when these cars are allowed to remain in the yard? That is one part of this question.

I want to subscribe entirely to what the hon. member for Royal said. No matter how important they are, the steps suggested here are virtually palliatives when the ultimate, over-all question is considered of developing an economy which goes from the east coast to the west coast. That is what we require, and that is certainly what I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton South, as well as every other maritime member, wants for the maritimes. It can be done, but you must have an over-all approach to these problems, and something in that connection can be done.

Again referring to the coal industry, I have perhaps more faith in that industry than the hon. member for Cape Breton South because of the fact that the dominion coal board says that over the period of the next five to ten years there will be an increasing demand for coal again as costs of other fuels continue to mount and reach the level at which coal will become an economic fuel throughout the country. But certainly that does not minimize the problem which he suggested to the government, and I am not criticizing it for this at the moment, not only because of any pipe line which may be constructed but because of the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway which will virtually eliminate the market for maritime coal in the St. Lawrence river area.

There again, Mr. Speaker, transportation may solve that problem to a certain extent because last year, as we know, Nova Scotia was able to ship coal to Great Britain, to ship coal to Newcastle. That old cliche of carrying coals to Newcastle, the impossibility of impossibilities, became a reality last year, and to some extent it materialized because of the government providing a subvention for the movement of that coal. I am not so sure but that in the future there may be more and more coal moved to that market as Great Britain becomes more and more dependent upon imported fuels. There again the government can make a contribution toward that end by making it a permanent policy, not one from day to day and one shipment to another, with respect to whether the subvention will be paid now and not paid next month. That is a contribution which can be made.

Then there is the matter of the turbo engine. The hon. member for Cape Breton South referred to dieselization. I certainly feel that something more should be done about the development of the turbo engine using coal than has been done heretofore.

The hon. member also referred to the competition of residual oil with coal. That is a possibility, possibly a probability, but the maritimes are trying to help themselves in that regard.

I referred the other day and I do so again to the Nova Scotia Light and Power Company. If any company in the world should burn residual oil in their furnaces in the development of electricity, it is the Nova Scotia Light and Power Company Limited, whose plants are located on one side of Halifax harbour, and directly opposite on the other side of the harbour are the vast tanks and refining plants of the Imperial Oil Company where the residual oil of which he speaks is brought in from Venezuela. But the Nova Scotia Light and Power Company is not burning residual oil. It is burning Nova Scotia oil in its furnaces and proposes to continue to do so. It is thereby making a contribution of its own toward the stability of that industry and the economy of Canada generally.

Without taking further time in the discussion at this point, Mr. Speaker, I do want to emphasize again that there are contributions which a government can make. Regardless of moving people from one locality to another, forgetting for the moment the establishment of specific industries in any one place, if we decide on an over-all program for the development of this country as a whole, then in matters of transportation and other things a real contribution can be made. A study of resolutions such as that which has been moved by the hon. member for Cape Breton South this afternoon will, I trust, focus more attention on the problem and suggest approaches which this or any other government can make toward a solution.

Mr. F. A. Enfield (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I inject myself into the debate this afternoon at the risk of becoming known as the central Ontario expert on the maritimes. Of course the resolution as it is worded does not necessarily encompass strictly a discussion of the maritime area, although it is understandable that the particular interest of the hon. member for Cape Breton South in introducing it would be centred on what seems to me to be the perennial problems of that part of the country. I want to compliment the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I think he is one who has spent his life as a champion of the needy, the under dog, and he certainly does give effective expression to the needs and wants of the maritime region in general and his own riding in particular.

When I compliment him, I do not, of course, want him to feel that I agree entirely with everything he has put forward for our consideration. He said he hoped the resolution would be thought-provoking, and certainly it is obvious that it has been just that. I think it is out of discussions carried on in a relaxed atmosphere such as this that we may often find very comprehensive and concrete proposals emerge. Let us hope that is the case here.

The resolution suggests that the government should give consideration to providing economic rehabilitation in areas where extreme hardships result from the closing down of the principal industries. Two methods of rehabilitation are suggested, I presume in order of preference. They are first, through direct government assistance and, second, through methods of assisting the movement of the people concerned.

It is rather awkward in these matters to get down to cases so far as direct government assistance is concerned, and so far the debate has been noticeably void of very many effective suggestions, shall I say, as to what direct government assistance might be provided. It is also obvious that the latter part of the resolution regarding assistance to people to move from one community to another is at best something placed there as a sort of distasteful alternative to anything else that might be done, as something that we do not want to be put in the position of having to carry out.

It seems to me that the problem is not so much one of looking after communities where a particular industry has failed, resulting in the people of the community being left without any employment, but rather is a general problem of the diversification of industry in Canada. Obviously a company town depending on one industry is in a very poor position if anything happens to that industry through labour difficulties, a depression, recession or anything else that may occur. It is the question of having a sufficiently broad diversification of industry in any locality, not merely in the maritimes, to provide a cushion so that when difficulty occurs there is something there to take up the slack.

This has been a problem in Canada since confederation. It was noticeable in the last depression of the 1930's when we were—and we still are to some extent—a country engaged mainly in the extractive industries or industries involving the development of our natural resources where the bulk of the product is exported. Obviously when trouble does arise in the world—and we saw world deflation in 1930—the effects on such an economy are felt immediately in a country where you are depending almost entirely on exports to the rest of the world.

The diversification required was not present in the thirties, and of course since that time we have made great progress in the development of our secondary industries. I think that is the whole key to the solution of this particular problem, both in the maritimes and in other parts of the country. How best can you develop secondary industry and, of course, how best can you continue the development of your resource industries?

I want to examine for a moment some of the factors that make for the location or the establishment of industry in a particular locality. I want to do this and endeavour to outline what I might call the natural forces that go to make for that location of industry, and then endeavour to see what you can do to tinker—"tinker" is not a very good word—rather to influence the natural forces, and then to look at some of the things that this government actually has done in this field. I thought this might be a logical and reasonable approach to the problem of the diversification of industry.

The natural factors and forces that go to make for the establishment of industry have been mentioned many times in this debate and I will not labour the point. Obviously transportation is one of the keys. Transportation is perhaps one of the most important single factors in our geographically widespread country. Transportation has had a terrific impact, of course, upon the maritimes. The maritimes at confederation and after it were thriving. They were not obliged to compete in the first instance with steam transportation of any kind, whether it be by rail or by ship. Then we saw the development of the railways, cheaper transportation through that means and through the steamship; the maritimes not able to ship their goods and manufactures as cheaply to central Canada where the dense market was building up and, on the other hand, central Canada able to ship its products to the maritimes through the cheaper transportation and cheaper costs arising from its greater ability to mass-produce goods.

Situated as they are geographically the maritime provinces—and I am excluding Newfoundland—certainly got the short end of the stick so far as the development of transportation is concerned. I know there is great concern over our latest transportation advance in the St. Lawrence seaway. We hope the impact on the economy of the seaway and the power project that goes along with it will be such that it will produce sufficient extra or increased business to outweigh any bad effects it may possibly have on the maritime economy.

Of the other factors I would put next in importance sources of energy. By that I mean hydroelectric, coal, oil, gas and now atomic energy. Of course we have a hydroelectric economy, and certainly some parts of the country are greatly endowed with cheap sources of hydroelectric power. Taken with the transportation factor, the two forces are almost impossible to overcome in so far as competition from other parts of the country is concerned.

Another factor is labour. In my opinion labour will go eventually where the jobs are. But, of course, when locating every manufacturer wants to see a reservoir of labour in order to be able to produce his goods. It seems to me that the maritimes particularly provide a good source of labour.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Thank you.

Mr. Enfield: One hon. member says "thank you". I made that point because I had been impressed by the willingness to work of the maritime members whom I have had the good fortune to meet in the house.

The fourth point, of course, is the availability of raw materials. Again that is really part and parcel of the transportation problem. We have seen how we have been able to build up a heavy steel industry on the great lakes not only in Canada but in places like Cleveland, where cheap transportation by ship through the great lakes system has allowed free movement of coal and iron ore, thus putting the industries concerned in a highly competitive position.

Last but not least is the availability of a market. If you can show a manufacturer where he can sell his goods at a profit, you can almost certainly promote something. You can almost certainly sell him on the idea of locating if you can show him that he can produce a particular object, whether it is a can opener or an automobile; and if you can show him where he can take that object and sell it on a competitive basis, of course he is ready to go in. In my opinion it is the availability of a large market close at hand that is the big factor.

Of course that is the one factor with regard to which the maritimes have a particularly difficult row to hoe, closed off as they are from the natural market on the Atlantic seaboard of the New England states; completely surrounded, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South has said, by the sea, and a long distance from the central Ontario market where transportation problems have worked to the maritime's disadvantage. There you have an isolation from any market.

The example of the recent development of a homely foodstuff like fish sticks outlines that point particularly well. This food commodity which was produced and found to be extremely attractive to the large urban areas, was immediately cut off from shipment to the United States by import tariffs on the part of that country. Hence the only market left—and it was an uncertain one—was that in Montreal, central Ontario and the western regions of Canada.

To my mind those are the five main factors in the location of industry; transportation, energy resources, labour, raw materials and markets. Those are things you must examine if you are going to try to produce a climate in which the development of secondary industry will take place.

What are the most important of the above factors? The balance changes, of course. In the extractive industries I think close proximity to the market is not a main factor. Let us take the example of aluminum. The aluminum producing plant is taken to the source of supply of the hydroelectric power necessary to produce the aluminum. In aluminum we are really exporting huge quantities of hydroelectric power because that, of course, is the main ingredient in aluminum. All the ore that is used in the manufacture of aluminum is imported. On the other hand, exports of aluminum go everywhere. It is not merely a question of close proximity to the market. It is a question of the availability of huge quantities of energy resources in the form of hydroelectric power, and that is that.

In pulp and paper we have the same thing. You also need a source of hydroelectric power in addition, of course, to the spruce forests or what have you necessary to produce your pulp. We have had troubles, however, with the company town problem or the ghost town problem, as it has been termed, in these extractive industries. In northern Ontario there are two towns, namely Kapuskasing and Espanola, which are good examples of how this problem can work. I want to read a short extract from a book called "Introduction to Political Economy" by Professor V. W. Bladen of the University of Toronto. He outlines briefly the two contrasting pictures of Kapuskasing and Espanola. I quote from Mr. Bladen's book as follows:

> The pulp and paper plant must be located near the source of wood, and, therefore, generally far from the centres of population. To provide the necessary labour supply it is necessary to provide a town for the workers to live in. Spruce Falls Power and Paper Company, for instance, is located at Kapuskasing in the midst of 5,000 miles of spruce forest.

I should interject here that this was written in 1941 and the figures must be related to that time. However, the example still holds.

Mr. Gillis: It is still good.

Mr. Enfield: It is still good.

> In the first great war a prison camp was located here because it was so far from anywhere that prisoners had little chance of escape. At this inaccessible point the company needed a labour force of about 1,000 men. They therefore built an entire town of 35 blocks, with 2 community centres, 3 churches, public and high schools, and 325 company houses. There are in addition many privately owned houses. Its population in 1940 was 3,500. The company's investment in the town is nearly $5 million. The town is organized as a municipality. This is the company town at its best—

Now, leaving that for a minute I may say that Kapuskasing is lucky. The company has continued to flourish and it is still a flourishing community. But look at the vulnerability of the people in Kapuskasing, dependent entirely on one company for their livelihood.

I am now quoting Professor Bladen again:

> The story of Espanola is less happy. In 1928 it was a flourishing community of nearly 4,000. There was no municipal organization, the town being governed autocratically by the Spanish River Pulp and Paper Company. The company had built the town, provided the water and electricity, laid sewers, built streets and sidewalks. It established and maintained good schools; and even built the churches. The workers' houses were leased for $17.50-$22.50 per month. They were comfortable, well-built houses with all conveniences including a furnace. Water and electricity were free, and there were no taxes since the company ran the town. The stores, the bank, the skating rink, theatre, community hall, the hotel and boarding houses were all owned by the company and either operated or leased by it . . . In 1930 the mill was closed and has never operated since.

I think, interjecting again, that since this was written Espanola has again come to life with the resuscitation of the company.

> Some of the skilled workers were moved to other Abitibi mills; others left in search of employment. In 1940 there were 1,200 left, of whom 1,000 were on relief. The company continued to maintain the water supply and the electricity supply, and kept the school open. Espanola gives a lesson in the danger of a town depending on one mill.

That, I think, illustrates the danger and the problem, very graphically, of the two towns. There has been an interesting development in Espanola since that time. In about 1948 the town was operated by a company called the K.V.P. fine paper company, and a local group of citizens brought action against the company to prevent pollution of the waterway. The case went through the normal trial court, the supreme court of Ontario; from there to the Ontario court of appeal and to the Supreme Court of Canada. Finally it went to the privy council, and the privy council held that the local residents who complained about pollution were correct in their claim, and upheld an injunction to prevent the company from further pollution of the waterway.

I suppose this background of strife that the town of Espanola had left a mark on the populace and on the Ontario government, because immediately after the privy council decision was passed the company marched down to Queen's Park and a private bill was put through the legislature allowing the company to continue in operation despite the pollution. It shows the problem involved there and the fear of what would happen to that town if the company were forced to cease operations as a result of that series of events.

So much for the extractive industries, and how the problem occurs in that area of our economy. What about the secondary industries? Here the factor is markets. I quite agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South when he took pains to point out, not once but two or three times, that it is a question of markets and transportation costs that governs the establishment of secondary industries. He referred to that when he was discussing the coal industry in his particular part of the country, and when he made his suggestion that a capital risk fund or public investment fund, as he called it, that would stimulate activity be set up. I do not know whether or not I agree with that, but I should like to deal with it in a moment. I think if you can find markets, particularly in the maritimes, the labour and power will be found. I think transportation costs will be paid. It is a question of finding a place to send your goods where they can be sold at a profit.

Look at our situation in and around metropolitan Toronto. I realize we are most fortunate indeed in that area. We have virtually a golden horseshoe, you might say, extending from Oshawa around the end of the lake and as far as the city of Niagara Falls, covering Toronto, Burlington, Oakville, Hamilton, St. Catharines, Welland, Thorold and Niagara Falls itself. There is certainly no lack of markets. We have a tremendous local market in that area. I believe the automotive industry sells about one-third of all the cars produced in Canada in that area. We are fortunate in having the Niagara power system, and we will be within reach of the power being developed on the St. Lawrence. We have cheap transportation by way of the great lakes. We have some of the largest industrial cities in the United States surrounding the lakes which are easily reached.

In York-Scarborough alone we have two large plants, Frigidaire and John Inglis, catering to a purely domestic market in that area. Then there are the motor companies such as Volkswagen, Rootes, Ford Motor Company at Oakville, General Motors at Oshawa and Studebaker at Hamilton, all dealing with local domestic markets. Many of these are what are known as secondary manufacturing industries. In Scarborough we have the Canada Foils Company and Acme steel plant, both supplying the local market. Then there is the S.K.F. roller bearing plant. Recently we made one of the largest deals, as they are called in Scarborough, for a new industry when the Minneapolis-Honeywell people purchased a site at a cost of $250,000. It shows you what happens where you have all these factors of market and transportation in your favour.

But even in areas such as these you have the problem of the company town which is the subject matter of this resolution. In the local strike of General Motors Corporation employees there were many towns which were affected, but none were affected so much as the city of St. Catharines. There the McKinnon industry closed down during the strike, and it meant a difference of $1 million a month in wages to that city. Again, St. Catharines, while having some diversification of industry, is dependent on this one branch of the General Motors industry, and the loss of $1 million a month in wages had quite an impact on that town for the four or five months during which the strike continued. Therefore the problem is not confined to one particular part of the economy; it can occur even in a part where normally conditions are very good indeed.

We have General Motors plants in York-Scarborough. As I mentioned, the Frigidaire plant is there, but we have so much diversification, so many industries, that a cushion is provided and the effects of the strike were not felt nearly to the extent that they were in some other cities I have mentioned, such as St. Catharines and, of course, London, Ontario, and Windsor.

To my mind that outlines what you might call the natural forces that go to make up the diversification of industry and hence prevent this problem we are discussing; but what can you do? What is the role of government in this situation? Are we just simply to take plants and dismantle them and say, "Well, we are going to move them to some other part of the country and set up industries en bloc, wholesale"? That kind of approach is completely impractical. On the other hand, it is just as bad to sit back and take no action whatsoever, to take a passive action and say, "Well, the natural forces that go to encourage industry will in the long run look after the situation".

What, then, can government do? We have had two or three suggestions here this afternoon. The one that has a great deal of merit in it, of course, is the retraining program that was dealt with at length by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. and the Minister of Labour. We had a suggestion by the hon. member for Cape Breton South that a public investment fund be set up. This does not appeal to me, because I cannot see putting any money into an area to set up an uneconomic crown corporation with all the ills, problems and strife that accompany such a development. I think we would have to come in and take a little more indirect action before the point can be reached where your public investment fund would work properly.

The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings suggested that we should develop an over-all Canadian economy. I agree, but what bothers me about such statements is that they are so general in their concept that no hint is given as to how it can be done. That is what we are talking about. We are endeavouring to discover methods how an over-all Canadian economy could be developed, and we need concrete proposals if we are to accomplish anything.

I would set out a 4-point program that we could study, and this is in conclusion. My first point is taxation policies. Taxation policies have a terrific impact on the development of industry. They have the greatest impact of any governmental activity. Take the corporation tax, at something like 47 per cent. Obviously, as the corporation tax is changed corporations will or will not expand or contract, as the case may be. We can provide special tax concessions, and we have done so in gold mine depreciation write-offs, in the oil industry, for example, and in freight rates. We do have some freight rate subventions in the maritimes. Perhaps that needs overhauling. Perhaps we need to take a good look at it. Taxation along that line would be a very good thing to follow up.

We have our dominion-provincial tax agreements, which endeavour as far as our fiscal policy is concerned to spread our income more evenly across the whole country so that areas such as the maritimes do get a more equitable share of the tax revenue of the federal government. This surely must be of considerable help to the maritime areas.

I have not time to canvass taxation policies thoroughly, but I do think that a great deal of thought should be given to the impact that changes in taxes and new concepts of taxes can have on the development of industry.

My second point is industrial research. We have research going on in atomic energy. Think what a difference it will make to the maritime power resources when atomic energy is available at a cost that can compete with the cheapest form of energy existing at the present time. Why, it would mean a great deal to the base metal mines in New Brunswick, for example, if atomic energy were available at the present time in New Brunswick. Of course research along those lines must continue, and it must be emphasized a great deal more.

I was pleased to see the Atlantic provinces economic council set up, which is a form of research of the best kind, because it takes a positive approach to the problems of the maritimes. It is endeavouring to encourage private industry to come in; it is trying to make the best of the resources they have in the maritimes and in the other Atlantic province of Newfoundland. The council is seeking to revive agriculture, to survey power resources, to make the most of what is there and to encourage a bigger and better tourist trade. These are all positive approaches that governmental bodies can make.

My third point is that there must be a positive effort by the local and provincial governments to promote industry. You can sell industry. The town of Renfrew, which was dependent on textile mills, was in bad shape; yet through some very aggressive and imaginative action by the local council, and I must say the province, they were able to establish an electronics industry which recently opened its doors in Renfrew and is going to employ more people than were previously employed by the textile industries there.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South mentioned cement. They have all the ingredients for making cement in the maritimes; they have all the ingredients for manufacturing bricks and other building materials. They will have a cheap seaway to central Ontario, to the area that is crying for building materials of this kind.

My fourth point is information service, the handling of inquiries from foreign countries. How do we handle these? Where do we steer them? Do we encourage inquiries about the areas that most need the industry? Included under this heading are our technological services and information that mapping survey work provides, and of course information provided by our national research council, which should be emphasized more. It should be pointed out to business that this information is available.

I have had time to scratch only the surface of this problem. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal to be done under these four heads to alleviate the particular problem with which the resolution deals.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I had not planned on speaking but the hon. member for Cape Breton South made such a good argument this afternoon that I whispered to him I would like to say a few words in support of his resolution.

There was another factor that has resulted in my taking part in this debate. Over the week end I received the commercial letter of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. They have devoted most of this issue to the Atlantic provinces economic council, and it is a most interesting study. One portion of the current statistics will give the Minister of Finance a good deal of satisfaction tomorrow evening because it points up the very buoyant economy we have. I am sure the minister is pleased to be able to report that our gross national product is up 10 per cent compared with the year before, and if we take the last quarter of 1955 there is an increase of 13·5 per cent in the gross national product compared with the corresponding period a year ago.

On this chart 36 items are set out covering such things as industrial production, electric power, railway freight and retail sales. There has been a marked increase in 31 of the 36 items, and only five items show a decrease. One item which shows a decrease is unemployment, about which I am sure we are all very happy. The figures given are for November, 1955, as compared with November, 1954. As would be expected, there is a slump in farm products, but I do not intend to deal with that at any great length tonight. The largest increase, of course, is noted opposite the investors' price index, which shows an increase of 23 per cent.

There is an interesting paragraph in this monthly letter which discusses the problems of the maritimes which have been brought to the attention of parliament by my colleague the hon. member for Cape Breton South, and other maritime members:

> It is no secret that the maritime provinces have long been regarded as the Cinderella of confederation—a Cinderella, moreover, to whom no glass slipper has yet brought emancipation from its disabilities, and to whom the unkind stepsisters, in the form of geographic insularity from the largest domestic market, high transportation costs, and a present, but not necessarily irremedial, lack of certain natural resources—

It directs attention to several of the royal commissions which have been established, such as the Duncan commission and the Rowell-Sirois commission, and refers in part to their findings. Later on its says:

> In almost every facet of economic life the Atlantic region falls below the Canadian average, and in some respects the gap is widening. A few data will illustrate the relative decline in the rate of growth of the maritime economy during the post-war period.
> In 1946, the Atlantic provinces (including Newfoundland) accounted for 12·2 per cent of the total population; in 1955, 11·3 per cent. Between 1946-55, the Canadian population had increased 27 per cent, the Atlantic provinces 14 per cent.

This paragraph is especially significant:

> Expressed as a percentage of average per capita personal income in Canada, Prince Edward Island had only 54·2 per cent in 1954, a decline from 60·3 per cent in 1946; Nova Scotia 76·7 per cent, a decline from 84·5 per cent; and New Brunswick 66·5 per cent, a decline from 72·4 per cent. Not only was income well below the general level, therefore, but the unfavourable discrepancy had increased.

And later:

> One of the basic policies of the central government following confederation was the development of industry under a protective tariff. Coincident with the growth of protectionist policies in this country was a similar development in the United States. As a result, both the export and import trade of the maritimes were adversely affected. Exports to central Canada, on the one hand, were held to a minimum by the high rail transportation costs, while those to the near-by New England market were similarly excluded by tariffs. At the same time, the Canadian tariffs operated to force imports from upper Canada and exclude the lower-priced consumer and capital goods from the United States.

Anyone who is interested in this important national matter would be well repaid to read this enclosure in the last commercial letter. It mentions some of the proposals advanced by the hon. member for York-Scarborough just before the supper adjournment. I think it should be said that if this sector of the economy is handicapped as seriously as it is, it is impossible for the people in that area to pull themselves up very far by their own bootstraps, and it becomes the responsibility of the parliament of Canada to face up to some of these problems which have been presented to us by the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

While waiting for my turn to speak I sent to the library for the briefs which had been presented to the Rowell-Sirois commission. One volume was sent to me in error, but it happens to contain the submission of the Charlottetown board of trade. This brief mentions that at the time of confederation Prince Edward Island was a very flourishing portion of Canada, but since that time its actual population and relative population have gone down. I was rather surprised to find a board of trade paying so much attention to the problems of the farmers in that area, but after a little reflection I realized how closely the whole economy of Prince Edward Island is tied up to the position of the farmer. This brief goes on to state:

> A concrete example of these difficulties is to be seen in the present potato situation. The Toronto market is offering approximately $0.85 for a 90 lb. bag of potatoes (1½ bushels), but the cost of landing them at that market is $0.42, giving a net return to the Prince Edward Island shipper of only about $0.25 a bushel. The return to the farmer is even less, due to handling costs.

This was back in 1940, but I imagine that when the hon. member for Queens speaks he will be able to show that there has not been a very great variation in these prices. The brief continues:

Because of the heavy fixed charges, small decreases in price in the consuming centres are greatly magnified in terms of the return to the farmer. For example, when Toronto pays $0.85 for a 90 lb. bag of potatoes, the Prince Edward Island farmer gets $0.22 per bushel. When the Toronto price drops 10 per cent, however, the full amount of the decrease falls on the Prince Edward Island farmer who then gets but $0.17½ per bushel, which represents a decrease of 20·45 per cent.

They recognize that the tariff is a factor that weighs very heavily on them. They thought that on balance the tariff had been a good thing for Canada as a whole, but they did not lose the opportunity to stress its impact on Prince Edward Island. The volume which I had in mind contains a table which indicates that as a result of the tariff the people of Prince Edward Island have benefited to the extent of $5.32 per person per year, as compared with a disadvantage of $23.20 which they have had to pay as the result of higher prices, giving a net loss per capita of $17.88.

Next to the four western provinces the people in Prince Edward Island have substantially higher prices because of tariffs. Whereas Prince Edward Island has a net per capita loss of $17.88, Nova Scotia has $12.28; New Brunswick, $11.66; Ontario and Quebec, of course, benefit; Manitoba has a net loss of $13.25; Saskatchewan, $28.16; Alberta, $26.95; British Columbia, $22.33. So I think the problems that confront the people in this important area of Canada are naturally of concern to the rest of us in Canada.

I have been reading with a good deal of interest the white paper that the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, then minister of reconstruction, placed before parliament in April, 1945. We were then nearing the end of the war, and the government went to a good deal of trouble to set out the fact that it was going to be government policy to have a very high level of employment. These are the words used:

In setting as its aim a high and stable level of employment and income, the government is not selecting a lower target than "full employment". Rather, the government is mindful that employment and incomes will be subject to fluctuations in the sphere of international trade, which cannot be wholly and instantaneously offset, and that seasonal fluctuations, resulting from climate and buying habits, are not to be overcome without much patient and resourceful work.

Then there is an interesting section on the placement and training of workers. The Minister of Labour in his address this afternoon gave us quite an interesting account of the attention that his department has been giving to the placement and training of workers. The summary in the white paper states:

The government has stated unequivocally its adoption of a high and stable level of employment and income, and thereby higher standards of living, as a major aim of government policy.

I have a great deal of sympathy with the hon. member for Cape Breton South as he brings this problem to parliament. The construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and the building of a gas pipe line will likely affect his area. Probably the reason I sympathize with him so much is that he describes a situation that is very similar to the situation in which my people find themselves in connection with the production of food, in a country where it seems that the requirements of the people in the maritimes and in the prairie regions do not receive sufficient consideration.

I think the present government demonstrated during the war that it was possible to balance our consumption with very high levels of production. I think it can be established now that it is in the national interest that the same policy should be continued. If there is not to be a market for coal in eastern Canada, people whose livelihood has been tied up with coal should receive consideration.

Those of us who have listened to the hon. member for Cape Breton South ever since he came to parliament in 1940 will agree that no one receives a more courteous hearing than he does. His colleagues from Cape Breton, who both have the advantage of a college education, I think, will also admit that while they were working on their books at college, the hon. member for Cape Breton South was getting a very valuable education at the business end of a shovel, shovelling coal. I think we are all interested, that he is the first coal miner who has come to parliament and that he has placed before us the problems that confront the people who have spent their lives in performing a desirable task in connection with the mining and marketing of coal. However, no one can prevent the introduction of oil and gas when those are available. When the construction of a pipe line is going to change the economy of a very large section of the country, those whose livelihood has been tied up with a coal economy should be given assistance, either in connection with the establishment of industries there or otherwise.

There is a good deal to the point made by the hon. member for York-Scarborough that there is a limit beyond which we cannot go in establishing industries that are uneconomic, but since we are spending upwards of $2,000 million a year on defence on the assumption that there might be war, I think we are making a great mistake in crowding so many people into areas like Toronto and Montreal and around the golden horseshoe, as the hon. member for York-Scarborough described it. When scientists tell us that one hydrogen bomb in the area of Windsor, given a favourable wind, might destroy all life as far as Oshawa, we probably should review our policy and decide whether we want to have large areas in Canada that will be uninhabited and bring people to central Canada where we are concentrating so many of our industries. I have no doubt that many of the people who have gone to the prairies to produce grain for a hungry world are quite prepared to come back to Ontario and Quebec if that is the wish of the government, but that is going to create very real problems in housing, educational services and other services in central Canada.

I do not think it is desirable to have in the two central provinces of this country 70 or 80 per cent of the people of Canada. So I suggest that the proposal made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South should receive the sympathetic consideration of this government, that we should take some long range views of the problems he has presented, and that we should set up a public investment fund to see to what extent we can go in establishing industries in that area. If we are not prepared to give some encouragement to the establishment of industries in that area, then we should come out frankly and say it is the intention of this government to have the people move to the districts surrounding the golden horseshoe, which was described so well by the hon. member for York-Scarborough just before the supper recess.

Mr. G. T. Purdy (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I should like my first words this evening to be words of commendation to the hon. member for Cape Breton South on his introduction of this resolution. He said in opening that he intended that his remarks on this resolution should be provocative, and we realize that he has brought about a considerable discussion this afternoon and this evening, we will agree with this. I am very glad that it has been possible to bring to the attention of this house the situation with respect to the maritime provinces and I might say, with the addition of Newfoundland, all the Atlantic provinces.

Having referred to the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton South, to which I shall probably return a little later, I should like now to thank the hon. member for York-Scarborough for the many kind words he said with respect to the maritime provinces. I would have been more pleased, however, had he told us that in that over-developed area of his there were a few industries that he could spare and that he would try to have located in the maritimes. I hope he will take that under advisement.

It is not often that I agree with the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. This afternoon, however, I did agree with him when he put before us the problem presented by the failure to fulfil the promises made at the time of confederation with respect to the Intercolonial Railway, which would have permitted us to market our goods in the central provinces. I would have thought, however, that in fairness the hon. member would have gone a little further and explained to the house just what, in addition to the lack of transportation facilities which we were promised, started the maritimes on the down grade. I would have thought he would have explained to the house that it was the fiscal policies of the party he still supports which started us on the down grade.

I would have thought he would have gone on a little further in dealing with history and referred to 1911. At that time, before our industry in the maritime provinces had gone down too far, we had a chance to rehabilitate our industry by again starting trade north and south in the same way that we were trading at the time of confederation. But no, the hon. member never mentioned that. He never mentioned the great cry, "No truck or trade with the Yankees", or what happened to the wonderful reciprocity treaty proposed at that time which we have never been able to have fully implemented since.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say that even during this session of the house we have again heard, in connection with certain legislation before us, rumblings of that old cry, "No truck or trade with the Yankees". Surely the once great Conservative party must realize that the day of narrow-mindedness of that sort has gone, and that they will never get to power in Canada on such a cry.

I read the resolution of the hon. member for Cape Breton South and, coming from Nova Scotia as I do, I realize there are many places there where the full and all-out application of such a program would be of immense benefit. I also realize that under present legislation respecting employment services, as outlined by the Minister of Labour this afternoon, much has been done to alleviate the problem presented by the hon. member.

However, when I read the resolution I first had to ask myself, is it feasible; is it workable? The hon. member gave the answer at the outset of his remarks, when he stated that he had been branded as a socialist and that his party believed in combining socialism and private enterprise. But after having studied the resolution, having given it all the consideration I can, I say to the hon. member that I am positive that if his resolution were implemented in full we would have not only a socialist government but a dictatorship.

I am not so sure that the hon. member does not associate socialism and dictatorship because you cannot say to me, sir, that you can pick up a family holus-bolus from where their roots are and move them around like pawns on a chess board, as would be the case if the resolution were put into effect 100 per cent. Perhaps I would not have spoken this evening if I had not chanced to pick up this morning's Gazette and noticed an article there headed, "U. S. Company Closes Plant in Ontario". The article goes on to say that because of a strike in the plant the manager has announced that the plant will be closed and will not again open to carry on manufacturing activities in Ontario.

I thought for a moment of what would be the situation in a few towns in my own constituency where there is only one industry if such a thing should happen. It would be a catastrophe, just as the hon. member has visualized in presenting his resolution. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the members of the house, that irrespective of all the good thinking of the majority of workers in small plants, what would these workers think if they knew there was legislation under which, if the plant should be closed, a kindly government would pick them up, move them holus-bolus and settle them in some other town in a far better environment?

In other words, if the resolution were put into effect 100 per cent you would merely be encouraging the closing down of plants in order that a percentage of the workers could get a more favourable environment in which to live. Frankly, I think that might work in one way to the benefit of Nova Scotia, because I cannot think of any better environment than that of Nova Scotia as a place for the people of Canada to work and live. However, that is my thinking.

Then I gave a few minutes thought to how such a scheme would operate. The hon. member mentioned that a public investment fund of some sort should be set up, but you know funds do not grow on trees. You have to find the money to put in those funds. He did not tell us where we were going to find the money. I thought we could work it out by undertaking some sort of scheme such as the unemployment insurance plan involving both employer and employees. I wondered how favourably employers and employees would regard such a scheme. It would seem to me that such a scheme, if set up, would merely hasten the day when many industries getting along on a marginal basis at the present time would be forced to close and throw their employees on the resources of this fund.

I also suggest that if we had full implementation of what is proposed in the resolution staring us in the face there would be a lack of incentive on the part of people to put their shoulders to the wheel and try to make an industry pay. In a good many of our industries there has to be full co-operation between labour and management. I am not saying anything against labouring people, because I have every respect for them; but there would be a small segment of labour which would say, "Why should we exert ourselves to try to make this industry a success? If we do not make it a success we have a kindly government which will come along, pay us relief while we are out of work and then move us some place else where we can go to work." As I say, I have come to the conclusion that such a plan would not work except under a dictatorship.

Mr. Gillis: You have very little faith in human nature.

Mr. Purdy: You would do away with the rugged individualists. I know that the hon. member for Cape Breton South comes from a great race of rugged individualists, but you would do away with the type of people who have helped to make Canada and Nova Scotia what they are. At the present time the free world is fighting a cold war with those behind the iron curtain. If we took that attitude and said to labour and management that we were going to tax them and put them out of business in order to build up an organization such as I visualize, it would be a great step toward losing the cold war because we have to have initiative, the strong individualist and the work of every Canadian and other person outside the iron curtain to withstand the attacks that are being made on us today.

I know the hon. member for Cape Breton South has vivid recollections of the many once prosperous mining towns in Cape Breton which are now ghost towns. But I suggest that the history of the world shows that a large percentage of our mines are expendable, as are similar industries. When our people went into those communities they knew what they were going up against.

Following the hon. member's argument a little further, I am suggesting that if the government were to take the responsibility of looking after all these problems which arise, then the government would be obliged to take the responsibility for saying whether new industries could start or new mines could open. There would have to be an over-all power that would say, "No, you cannot start a mine there or you cannot start that industry there because it is going to peter out in such and such a number of years and you are going to be a problem to our fund and our fund is not going to be able to carry it". I say that you cannot have the one thing without the other. I am suggesting that such interference by government with industry would mean the downfall of this country.

As I mentioned before, the hon. member for Cape Breton South has had a great deal of experience. The records show that the hon. member was born in Londonderry, Colchester county, which is part of my constituency, and more commonly known as Acadia Mines. I do not know at what age he left that area. If he had chosen to remain there I suppose he would probably have been the hon. member for Colchester-Hants today. Nevertheless he was born in a great part of our province, called after Londonderry, Ireland. It is a little late for St. Patrick's day, but the tradition is still there. I suppose he recalls, as I do, that at the turn of the century Londonderry or Acadia Mines was a thriving community with a population of something like 2,500. At night the sky would be red with the reflection from the blast furnaces. All in all there was a tremendous amount of activity around that settlement at the base of the Westchester mountains.

Today it is not a ghost town. However, it would have been a ghost town if the hon. member had had his say at that time and the people had been moved out holus-bolus when industry closed up shortly after the first world war. Today we have not a community of 2,500 but we have one of about 500. It is true that not many new houses are being built. There are a number of old houses falling down, and more being destroyed by fire and time. Nevertheless in that little community we have a great community spirit. There are good schools. The people have a fair number of automobiles, radios and television sets. They have a great community spirit. They have one of the best baseball teams in Nova Scotia. But if my hon. friend had had his way these people would have been moved out holus-bolus when that industry went down and what is now Londonderry would have been again just a wilderness.

There is one other thing, Mr. Speaker, that I would say and it is this. While many of the mechanics and artisans from that plant which closed were scattered to various parts of Canada, they took with them the skills learned there and they made a great contribution to Canada, as I know my hon. friend did with respect to Cape Breton when he left Colchester county in order to go to there.

There is another thing I should like to say. I do not think that Londonderry is done. I believe time will show that in regard to the mines. They were not really mines; they were merely very rich pockets of ore which were possibly worked out. There is plenty of ore in those hills. I believe that the knowledge that was gained by the people who worked in those diggings, which was passed on to their sons and which is retained in that community by the people not being evacuated, as has been suggested, is going to bring to the fore the possibilities which are there. I believe that once again the smoke will belch from a great industry in what is now that quiet little village.

Of course I could go on to mention several other places in my constituency where similar circumstances exist. I could mention the village of Kempt Town. There is a coal mine there; and with all respect to the Cape Breton people and those of Pictou county and Cumberland county, may I say that the Kempt Town seams are the one spot in Nova Scotia where we really have what is practically anthracite coal. Unfortunately the seams are thin. The mine was closed, and it is closed today. Nevertheless there is a great deal of information possessed by the people whom my hon. friend would have moved to Ontario under his scheme. As I say, there is a great deal of information still held by the residents of that community. As a result of this information which is passed on from father to son, I believe that in time, that mine will again be opened and that we shall have mined in Nova Scotia a type of coal which is comparable to Pennsylvania coal.

What I have been saying, Mr. Speaker, has perhaps not too much to do with the whole problem. There is one point on which I should like to correct the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. This afternoon he stated that the Nova Scotia Light and Power Company used coal entirely in firing their boilers for the production of electricity. Unfortunately I am afraid that is not the fact. I visited one of their plants when they broke in a new unit last fall. There were two immense furnaces side by side. I was told that one was fired by coal and one was fired by oil. As I recall it—I may be wrong in this—the information I obtained was that the cost was approximately equal.

I expressed the idea then, and I do it again now, that if that was the case, why would it not have been better to have used coal entirely? On the other hand, as was brought out this afternoon, we have a great refining plant across the harbour, and if they could not get use for part of their fuel oil I presume they would have to cut down the refining operations. It is therefore sort of a toss-up between the two.

I have rambled on at some length—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Purdy: I agree that it has been at some length, but I have heard the hon. gentleman talk longer and say less than I have said. As I say, I believe that the best way to meet this problem—and it is a problem—is to follow out the program laid down by the Minister of Labour. I agree with him 100 per cent when he says that in those places where there is depression owing to the closing down of industry, they will do everything they can to put the people through vocational training and train them for other positions. But I do not think you can take people holus-bolus from their heart-roots and from the graves of their ancestors and move them from one place to another in a democracy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the maritime provinces I am one of those who believe that although we have had some rather difficult times, we are doing something. There is the fighting will to win in that part of the country, and I think we will win through. I was going on to say that I believe the problem is being reasonably well handled at the present time. I would not want to be branded as one who would even suggest we refused to help communities which are absolutely down and out, and where the people have done their very best. I would certainly support any legislation introducing any scheme that would aid such a community. However, if it were of general application I do not think it would work out. I take the same attitude toward these communities as I would to an individual who came to me for help. If I were sure he had tried hard and could not make a success, I would give him some help. I would certainly support the government if they took the same stand. I am of the opinion, however, that we cannot, as a nation, legislate ourselves into prosperity. I am afraid this program would be leading up to that.

In so far as most communities are concerned, I think the solution of these problems will be brought about by a continuation of the type of government we have had in this country since 1935. You will recall that figures show that our gross national product was $4 billion in 1931 and today it is $26,600,000,000. This, of course, is the result of Liberal policies.

In support of my statement concerning the solution of these problems, which will recur at a few points in the future, I should like to quote one paragraph from the submission of the Canadian Manufacturers Association to the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. It is under the heading of "Population and Employment". Under the subheading "Population" it has this to say:

> In its vision of a greater Canada, the association has examined the studies of a number of recognized Canadian authorities as to what the population and gross national product of Canada will probably be in 1980. Obviously, any prediction is subject to a rather wide margin of error, based as it is on certain assumptions such as no major war occurring in the next 25 years, birth rates continuing at, or close to, present levels, low death rates as now, substantial immigration, and continuing technological improvement. Our considered estimate, taking the foreign factors into account, is that the population will be from 26 million to 28 million in 1980 and the gross national product will be from $68 billion to $72 billion (at present prices). As regards the gross national product especially, this estimate is likely on the conservative side.
> On the basis of past experience the Canadian labour force in 1980 might be from 9 to 10 million. The association believes firmly that the most important single task of the people and government of Canada is to make as adequate provision as possible for the economic and steady employment of this labour force.
> It has been noted that the percentage of the labour force employed in the primary industries is decreasing whereas the percentage employed in manufacturing is increasing. This trend will continue. It is the manufacturing industry that must provide a great deal of the employment for an increased population.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say this. I noted in one of our newspapers the other day that the wife of an ambassador who had been assigned to Ottawa had this to say: In her experience the women of the world were very much alike. They wanted to look after their families and their homes. Now, I would say that I believe the interests of the men lie along the same lines. They want to look after their families and their homes, and they are willing to work to do that. If we all get behind the problem in Canada and in Nova Scotia and apply ourselves, I do not think there will be any necessity for the program requested in the hon. member's resolution.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): It may seem presumptuous on my part to enter the debate when there are so many members here from the maritime provinces who are ready and willing to rise and express their feelings concerning their own area. However, I believe it is fitting that some speaker from the west should participate, and some speaker from the Social Credit group of which I have the honour of being a member.

I would say in a general way that I cannot see how we could possibly improve conditions in the maritimes if we continue to follow the same general policy which has caused so serious a deterioration in the maritimes ever since they entered confederation in 1867. The number of commissions that have been set up to examine into the situation in the maritimes is very considerable. We have had the Jones commission, the White commission, the Duncan commission and several others. Every one of those commissions has found a most undesirable state of affairs existing in the maritimes. Every one of them has found that condition exists because of certain other conditions which ought not to be there. But somehow or other nothing has ever been done about the situation.

I feel that it is idle to hope to have a sound and prosperous Canada unless we have a great and prosperous maritime section. I am convinced that something more has to be done than has been done in the past. I do not propose to go into this matter to any great extent tonight, but I may say I have been arrested by certain things which have come into my hands within the last few days. I have before me the statement of the city of Halifax to the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, dated October, 1955. At the same time I have in my hands a copy of the statement by the government of Nova Scotia to the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations dated February, 1938. I have in my hands also the letter of transmittal by the Halifax city solicitor, Mr. C. P. Bethune, Q.C., dated October 18, 1955.

In these three documents one can find some most impressive reading. May I quote three or four statements from Mr. Bethune's letter. On page 2 I find this paragraph:

> In the alternative, the only way in which such fair contribution by the government towards the cost of municipal services can be reduced is by the promotion of private business enterprises in this city which will contribute to the city's costs.

The government to which he is referring there is the dominion government.

> In this, we believe, the government should assume some responsibility.

The next paragraph is most striking.

> So far as Halifax is concerned, it is submitted that the city's natural endowment calls for the development of trade through the port. This will necessitate the provision of greater pier and storage facilities, such as those proposed as far back as 1913, when plans were made by the federal government to develop the port on both sides of the harbour by the construction of the sea wall and piers. Certain land was then earmarked for improvement but unfortunately the plans were not proceeded with.

The question that every member of this house ought to ask himself, Mr. Speaker, is, why were the 1913 plans not proceeded with, and why have they not been proceeded with up to the present time? That seems to be the difficulty in respect of all the maritime provinces. There seem to be a great many promises and commitments on the part of the federal government, either explicit or implicit, but never anything done. It reminds me of the story of a certain British leader who was said to be always on horseback but never going forward. In my judgment it is high time we began to go forward.

Let us follow through in respect of this dock at Halifax, and the plans for making this port a good port. Anyone would say that the very first thing that could be done and should be done by the dominion government is to build that dock and make the port of Halifax so that it will take care of the needs of all commerce today. I do not suppose that even such an apologist as the hon. member who just took his seat, who seemed to spend all his time trying to make it appear that Nova Scotia was in fact doing all right, that they did not have anything to worry about, really believes that. I suggest that he ought to be ready to explain why that port has not been made as it ought to be, and he should be here on his feet demanding that that port should be made as it ought to be. Yet he comes up here and apologizes for what is going on down there.

Let us just consider another statement or two from this same letter:

> Much of the land so earmarked has now gone to other uses, and unless immediate attention is given to the matter, all that remains will be otherwise occupied, and the costs of acquiring the same for port development will be prohibitive.

That will mean that the port of Halifax, in all probability, will never be made the port it ought to be as the eastern seaboard port of Canada; yet nothing is being done, and the hon. member for Colchester-Hants rises in his place here and apologizes for what is going on.

Let me read another paragraph:

> Another essential is the improvement of transportation facilities serving the port, both highway and railway, in order that this Canadian port may be able to meet the competition of foreign Atlantic ports.

Surely the federal government can take care of these highway needs. Let no one rise in his place here and pretend that it cannot be done. But why is it not done? The writer of the letter mentions both highways and railways. Surely we can build highways suitable for the servicing of a Halifax that will be the finest port on the whole Atlantic seaboard. If the government can build the St. Lawrence seaway, do not let anyone tell me that it cannot build the port of Halifax if it chooses to do so.

Let me read a little more:

> Physical facilities, however, are not, in themselves, enough, though they will be of value in developing port trade. The value of such non-physical facilities was recognized by governments, prior to 1935-1936, by the granting of special tariff concessions to those who imported goods through Canadian ports.

Note these words with particular care:

> This tariff preference resulted in retaining for those ports more than 90 per cent of Canada's overseas import trade. It was destroyed by a trade treaty—

By whom? Not the Conservative party, but the Liberal party. Notice what it goes on to say:

> This tariff preference resulted in retaining for those ports more than 90 per cent of Canada's overseas import trade. It was destroyed by a trade treaty with the United States in 1936, which treaty had the effect of opening the ports of that country to Canadian business. As a result there was a heavy diversion of traffic from Canadian ports.

No Liberal can escape the blame which is attached to the present administration in Canada for that trade treaty, or for permitting that trade treaty to stand. In a general way one would say that any government of Canada which would sign a treaty which would do that kind of thing to the city of Halifax was utterly unfit to govern the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: Oh, I do not think there is any doubt about it. After all the promises that were made to the maritime provinces before confederation and since confederation, to have a thing like that done constitutes worse than an abject betrayal, and there can be no other way of putting it.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): Halifax is the only prosperous place down there.

Mr. Blackmore: You had better tell that to Halifax.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): If you would sit down I would tell you the truth about Halifax.

Mr. Blackmore: If one cannot rely on the solicitor for the city of Halifax in preference to the hon. member for Westmorland with respect to this situation it would be a most amazing thing. Let us go on. The hon. member for Westmorland will have time to rise in his place and talk, so let him please let me say what I have to say. I do not care whether he does or not; I am going to say it.

Now I go on to the bottom of page 3, and I quote these words:

> Therefore, it is submitted some adjustment should be made in the tariff system, or some other measures should be taken to ensure that the protected industries, if they are to enjoy that protection, should channel the shipments of their goods over Canadian railways and highways and through Canadian ports.

I left off certain words about Canadian industry which would have connected up with the part I quoted, but the general idea is that protected Canadian industries in our central provinces were beginning to ship their goods down to United States ports to the neglect of the Nova Scotia port of Halifax. He points out the fact that those industries could at least take the trouble to channel their trade to the port of Halifax if they want to be anything like square.

Mr. Nicholson: He will agree with that.

Mr. Blackmore: You would think so. One of the reasons the maritimes have never got anywhere, let me submit, is that they have sent to parliament members not to fight for them, as the member for Cape Breton South has done, but to rise in their places and excuse the neglect which those provinces have suffered down there for these many years. They rise in their places as proponents against their provinces and not for them.

Mr. Murphy (Westmorland): I would not say that.

Mr. Blackmore: Well, it is time you did, because you stand condemned. A lot has been said about the amount of time that has been spent on the wheat question. Do you think that if we had Liberals and Conservatives sitting where the C.C.F. and the Social Credit groups are sitting you would have had the case for the prairie grain growers put in the way in which it has been put in the last few years? The only thing that caused the Liberals to talk in favour of wheat farmers was the fact that they were being put to shame by the work being done by these two independent parties. That is all right; just do not make smart retorts to explain the situation. You just cannot explain these things. Why in the world the electors down in those maritime areas do not become awakened to this thing I cannot understand.

Mr. Knowles: They will be.

Mr. Blackmore: It is just about time they began to realize they have been standing in their own light for years and years by sending up men here to parliament who were committed to support the government instead of the maritime provinces.

Economic Rehabilitation

Let me go on with a quotation from the submission of the city of Halifax to the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects in October, 1955. I read from page 27, division 9, on the port of Halifax, which indicates that Mr. Bethune was quite in line with the people who prepared the submission. I quote:

> References to port facilities in this memorandum include berthing facilities, sheds, both transit and storage, railway facilities, loading operations, manpower, and all matters relating to the efficient operation of a modern port.

In this he mentions berthing facilities, sheds, loading operations and manpower, and railway facilities. Apparently there is a deficiency in Halifax in reference to every one of those essential items. To tell me that the federal government cannot take care of these matters is simply to make the person who tells that ridiculous. They go on to say:

> Many millions of dollars have been expended by the government of Canada, both through national harbours board and departments of the government, to improve the port facilities at the inland ports of Montreal and Quebec. No criticism of this is offered by the city of Halifax, even though the ports are useful for only seven months of the year because of ice conditions in the St. Lawrence river. It is, however, submitted that sufficient expenditures should also be made at the port of Halifax to provide adequate facilities even if this port has in the past been considered a "winter port" and used as a substitute for the above mentioned inland ports during the season of the year in which these ports are unavailable.

Anyone with any kind of tendency to reason will say, "Why when Halifax is an all-year port, are there not sufficient port facilities in that city when we spend vast sums of money on port facilities in Montreal and Quebec which are usable only seven months in the year?" You would think that anyone with any sense of reality at all would see the absurdity of that sort of arrangement.

I do not feel that I should spend very much more time on this particular matter, and I do not propose to do so.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blackmore: Someone apparently wants me to stop talking. This is another man from the maritimes who was sent up here to look after the interests of the people of the maritime provinces, and he is trying to shut up a person who is trying to help them.

The question has been raised as to what can be done about the whole situation. I say that there is only one way in which you can put the maritimes on a going concern basis, and that is to introduce economic conditions under which they will be able to carry on prosperously.

When the house was dealing with another resolution about two weeks ago I said that what any area must have is control of its credit. Conditions must be such that the people within the area are able to borrow money when they want money, and get it at reasonable interest rates. I referred to the treasury branch system which was set up in Alberta by Social Credit, as a result of which the people were able to borrow money at 3 per cent less, and under far more lenient conditions than they could borrow from the banks. I said at that time that this provision was the first step in the rehabilitation of Alberta.

I submit that until you have a measure similar to that in the maritime provinces you will have no chance of prosperity. Yet, as I pointed out two weeks ago, credit facilities in the maritime provinces are controlled by banks whose headquarters are in Montreal and Toronto and whose managers are not in the least concerned directly in the welfare of the maritime provinces, except in so far as it might possibly help the industries of Ontario and Quebec.

So the very first thing we will have to do is make arrangements whereby the people of the maritime provinces will be able to borrow money with which to produce any kind of thing that needs to be produced; pigs, chickens, cattle, sheep, anything they want to produce. Let them be able to borrow money at low rates of interest so they can produce; then that money will go out into circulation and thus enable them to sell their goods.

I spoke to the hon. member for Cape Breton South just before I began speaking, and by the way I was not prepared to speak on this subject because I did not expect it would come up. I asked the hon. member how much it cost for money in the maritime provinces, and he told me about 5½ per cent. I would say that 5½ per cent is 2 per cent too much. There is no conceivable reason in these modern times why anybody who wants to produce goods should have to pay 5½ per cent interest to get money, especially in the maritime provinces where there are such a small number of markets, where conditions are so depressed, where there is so little over-all purchasing power. I asked the hon. member if it cost the merchant or the manufacturer the same rate, and he said it did.

You can see how the cost of production is increased in the maritime provinces by the interest rate on the money they borrow. I asked the hon. member if it was easy to borrow money, and he indicated it was just as easy to borrow money down in the maritimes as it was in Alberta before we brought in the treasury branches. At that time the banker in Alberta sat behind his desk and ruled like a king dealing with poor subjects or slaves, when a person came in to borrow money. But he changed his ways very rapidly after the treasury branches came in. I think if we had treasury branches in the maritime provinces the banker down there would become a little bit more sociable too.

That is the answer; money must be available to everybody who is at all creditworthy to enable him to produce goods. He must be able to borrow it at reasonable rates, which I maintain should never be more than 3½ per cent.

I asked the hon. member for Cape Breton South some other things. I am relying upon him to a considerable extent because he is the one man from the maritimes who ever talks for the maritimes. If the maritimes want people to talk more on their behalf they should send up men like this man, who is not bound hand and foot to a party machine, who is able to get up and speak for his country instead of for his party.

I asked the hon. member how much the maritime people were buying from the central provinces, and he told me that Mr. Waldo Walsh, deputy minister of agriculture for Nova Scotia, had said that they buy $100 million worth of goods a year from the central provinces. What are the central provinces buying in return? How in the world, using just plain common sense, do you think the maritime provinces can be successful and prosperous when they are buying $100 million worth of goods from the two central provinces and are able to sell back only a very trifling amount of goods in return?

If the maritime provinces are going to have any chance in the world they ought to have their own markets available to their own production. It is just as simple as A, B, C. If they cannot sell $100 million worth of goods to the two central provinces to pay for the $100 million worth of goods they buy from the two central provinces, something will have to be done to keep goods from the two central provinces from going down into the maritime provinces and monopolizing the market.

Someone will say, "How could you do that in a free country?" Apparently we can do pretty nearly anything when the four western provinces or the four maritime provinces are not concerned. Pretty nearly everything can be done for Ontario and Quebec, but apparently very little for either of these other two groups. If we make up our minds to do this thing, we can do it. Is there any reason at all why we should not have a sort of gentleman's agreement or arrangement under which the producers in the two central provinces would agree that they would not sell goods in the maritime provinces beyond a certain point unless the maritime provinces so requested?

That would enable the maritime producers to keep the maritime markets to themselves. You would very soon find that they were prosperous. Otherwise just continuing the conditions they are now operating under, with the financial circumstances prevailing and the trade circumstances prevailing as at present, they will continue to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the next thousand years.

If we want to do anything that is worth thinking about we must take care of these two matters. Do not tell me that the Liberal government cannot do it, not for a minute. These are two things that may be done. I could go on and say a great deal more, but I fancy that is enough for one time. I say the time has come to begin to do something. We have dawdled and callously ignored the rightful demands and requests of the maritime provinces quite long enough.

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, this is the third debate that has occurred in this house this session that has brought forward the broad problem of economic development. In each of these debates there was a high degree of participation by members of all parties representative of the Atlantic provinces, and it was my belief that these members had approached the problem of economic development for that area with moderation and insight, and in a manner that would appeal to the house and to public opinion as a whole. I believe the participation in the debate today illustrates quite clearly that the representatives of the Atlantic provinces from all political parties are not derelict in their duty in presenting to this house the peculiar problems of that region of Canada.

Just three weeks ago I had the privilege of attending a seminar in Boston on the subject of economic development as applied to the province of Nova Scotia. I wanted to connect the remarks I intended to make on that occasion on economic development in Nova Scotia with the current thinking in so far as international economic development in general was concerned, and for that reason I went into some of the studies the United Nations conducted on general economic development throughout the world, a subject that is of interest and concern to everybody.

There were two main elements in the discussion of economic development in so far as it applied to what are known as the underdeveloped countries. The first element of development was the provision of technical services or technical information, not only in the form of guidance but also in the form of technicians of all kinds. The second element in the international economic development was the lack of capital in the countries concerned, arising from the low incomes and inability to save and consequently to accumulate moneys as capital to invest.

When we attempt to apply this approach to the economic development of Nova Scotia, or the Atlantic provinces in general, we find that these prevailing concepts are just not applicable at all. First of all, in so far as technical personnel is concerned, the Atlantic provinces likely have the highest concentration of institutions of learning of any part of Canada. It is true that many of the graduates of these institutions move to other parts of Canada, but it is still true that of the maritime universities for which I have data, approximately 40 per cent of the graduates have remained to pursue their occupations in the Atlantic provinces. The result is an abundance of highly trained and highly literate people to participate in the development of our part of the country.

The second problem that concerned the people interested in international economic development was the low rate of savings occasioned by low incomes. I must confess that my investigations show that Nova Scotia, for example, has one of the highest rates of savings of Canada, and I was told by one of the experts from the Arthur D. Little Company in Boston, which is currently studying the economy of Nova Scotia, that the rate of saving in Nova Scotia was higher than in certain developing parts of the United States.

We have the technical personnel and we have the savings, but we have not produced economic opportunities of sufficient appeal to bring these two decisive elements together for the development of the Atlantic provinces of Canada. I mention these two considerations because, in talking about regional economic development, we do not really get much assistance from the thinking that is going on in the United Nations and other world organizations.

Of course our attention is brought to bear upon economic development in the Atlantic provinces not because the Atlantic provinces are not developed nor because the Atlantic provinces are remaining stagnant. These provinces are moving ahead in certain areas, and moving ahead very constructively. The problem that agitates the minds of residents of those provinces is that our rate of growth is slower than the rate of growth for the rest of Canada. That is the cause of great concern. If we take such important economic indices as income per capita, or income per member of the labour force; if we take per capita investment or average weekly wages or average weekly earnings, we find that in each of these categories the Atlantic provinces are lower than the average for Canada as a whole.

The disparity in economic development causes international tensions; for the same reason disparities in economic development in the country are bound to breed domestic disagreements of various kinds. That is why this problem—though certainly I do not intend to bring forward tonight concrete recommendations for its solution—is a subject very worthy of debate, and that is why it requires the attention of this house.

We know that part of the reason for our slower rate of economic development is the location of the Atlantic provinces, meaning distances in the geographical sense and accompanying transportation costs. We also realize that the trade policies necessary for the development of the nation—and this has been highly documented—have adversely affected the economic development of the extremities. The national policy of 1878, designed to create a new national market for the inland industries of central Canada, completely changed the orbit of commerce and trade in which the maritime provinces lived and the conditions existent at that time have never been completely restored.

We know, too, that the national effort involved in two wars served to accentuate the economic concentration in the central regions of Canada. We know also that the branch banking system in its very organization has served better the credit requirements of the central regions of the country.

The purpose of mentioning these influences is simply to indicate that the development of Canada as a whole has not been left entirely to the natural operations of economic laws but has been affected, and affected decisively, in certain areas of development through either explicit or implicit government direction and policy. It is for that reason that I feel we are really following a great historical tradition in this house when we talk about policies that may serve to build up areas of Canada which up to the present have not participated in our prosperity in the manner that we all desire.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South has mentioned the threats that are occurring in the coal industry. The past year has been a good year in that industry, but the long-run picture is uncertain and it may be that such activities as the dieselization of the Canadian National Railways, the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway and the projected pipe line may have a harmful effect on the coal industry of the province of Nova Scotia. If such a harmful effect occurs, then it means a very serious blow to the economy of the areas which the representative for Cape Breton South and myself have the honour to represent in the house. These and other areas throughout the province of Nova Scotia will be affected.

The federal government has an interest in the coal industry and in its rehabilitation because we have made very generous provision through legislation in this house for the assistance of the coal industry. The annual subsidy payments, the coal mining assistance act and certain important research are representative of the interest the federal government has taken in the maintenance of this industry which is so vital to the economy of Nova Scotia. For that reason it should be a concern of the House of Commons to assist, through discussion and helpful suggestions, in the provision of alternative industries in the event that further declines occur in the industry.

A similar situation was brought about by the construction of the strait of Canso causeway. The unemployment problem has been handled very successfully by the Canadian National Railways and by the temporary construction activity in this area. There is insecurity and uncertainty among the community leaders, however, because of the decline in real estate values, and because of fear of the future as it will affect these communities.

I think it is clear that in all the cases I have mentioned things are occurring in the economy that are helping the people as a whole. We are hopeful that all these projects will be thoroughly beneficial to all the people of Canada, but we are also hopeful that no part of Canada will be expected to bear too great a sacrifice in the development that is so beneficial to all.

I think this debate has brought out some very important things for the province of Nova Scotia. I was glad that both the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings mentioned that the resources of Nova Scotia are limited. In comparison with other provinces of Canada we have modest economic resources. We are a mature economy, and in the future our development must depend upon a greater and more intensive utilization of mineral wealth, forest wealth, fisheries and the tourist industry.

In each of these categories there is a great deal that government can do, both federal and provincial, through acceleration of mineral exploration and through the provision of services like the forest inventory, in which this government participated and which is now opening up one of the most promising areas of development in Nova Scotia, namely the possibility of paper mills in the strait of Canso area and elsewhere. It is through acceleration, with present government services directed with greater intensity to what might be called special areas, that much can be done.

Several of those who have participated in the debate have mentioned the difficulties of establishing secondary industries in the maritime provinces. The hon. member for York-Scarborough, and the hon. member for St. John's East in a previous debate, outlined very valid economic forces that serve to select areas for the development of industry. There is one type of industry that is supply-directed. It locates near valuable raw materials. There is another type of industry that is market-directed, which locates near the greatest concentration of people. Neither type of industry is well suited to the Atlantic provinces because of the economic factors that have already been brought out. But there is a final type of industry that the economist calls a footloose industry, which is well suited to location in this part of Canada. Footloose industries are those industries about which there is considerable indifference as to location. They do not go to the market. They do not go near the source of supply. Characteristic of these industries are the textile industry, the refining of crude oils and other industries of this type.

Here, the people who participated in the seminar at Boston were quick to point out, lay the greatest possibility for the development of secondary industries in the province of Nova Scotia. The development of this type of secondary industry combined with the proper, intelligent utilization of the modest resources we possess should, I think, allow the citizens of Nova Scotia and the other provinces to live the satisfactory life that has been characteristic of our part of Canada.

We are conscious of many non-economic qualities of life in the Atlantic provinces. We, Mr. Speaker, were the seat of responsible government. The island of Cape Breton was the seat of industrial trade unionism in Canada. These are among the types of development that do not occur or are not mentioned in a debate on economic development. I believe that the development of the resources we have, combined with wise selection of secondary industries and intelligent co-operation and the will to survive, is part of the formula for success.

We want easy access to the Atlantic provinces and easy egress from the Atlantic provinces. We want economic opportunities for a growing number of people, but we do not want to keep people in the Atlantic provinces if they thereby depress incomes and standards when migration would suit them and suit the areas best.

For some of the reasons I have mentioned I think the resolution put forward is extremely interesting, and I think it will be useful in forming public opinion on a very important issue of special interest to the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of various hon. members who have taken part in the debate, but more particularly to those of the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond and the hon. member for Mackenzie. In a very clear way the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond gave us an economist's analysis of the situation in the maritimes.

I might say here that I am grateful to the hon. member for Mackenzie for some of the things he put on record which have to do with my own province and even with my own riding. It is not entirely accidental that he saw fit to do this because after all he is, I believe, a fourth generation islander, or a four times removed islander. His ancestors came from my riding, and he himself is now a resident of Saskatchewan. He is perhaps an example of the very thing we are talking about. His ancestors found it economically necessary to move from the maritimes to what was then Upper Canada. Then at a later stage people from the older parts of Canada were persuaded, chiefly for economic reasons, to migrate to western Canada where opportunities were said to be greater.

Continuously, at least since confederation, there has been an economic pressure which has forced the people of the maritimes to emigrate and seek their livelihood elsewhere. At the moment I might say that great numbers of maritimers helped to develop the newer parts of Canada, especially the four western provinces. As a matter of fact I think the migration is almost entirely one way. At the moment I can think of only one case of someone migrating from the prairies to Prince Edward Island. That particular case was my wife. She assures me that her considerations were other than economic ones when she took that course.

I think the hon. member for Cape Breton South should be congratulated on bringing this topic before the house for discussion. I feel that he had in mind this chronic state of depression, in varying degree, which has existed in the maritime provinces for many years. We find always that most of our young people are forced to migrate. The unemployment figures for the maritime provinces are in reality greater than one would suspect, because they show only those people who are unemployed and who have not yet emigrated. The result is that when a disproportionate number of our young people move elsewhere or join the services, the mean age of the average maritimer becomes greater than that of people in the other provinces of Canada.

This and many other facets of this problem tend to create a condition in which commerce and development stagnate. Small industries are continually dying off. They are being bought up by larger competitors from some other parts of the country and, after a few years, are closed down because it is not felt that they are economic.

Last year I sought from the dominion bureau of statistics figures with regard to the number of industries in the maritimes which over the years have been forced to close because they were unable to compete with their larger counterparts in central Canada. I was told that the dominion bureau of statistics kept no record of this sort of thing, and that figures along that line were not available from them. If they were available, I think they would give some very enlightening information.

There are, of course, several ways of looking at this problem. The economists may look at it purely from the cold economic point of view and say that if an industry is not profitable, if it is not self-sustaining, it should not exist. They do not concern themselves with the humanitarian and other problems which may develop as the result of such a failure to carry on. There is perhaps a philosophical point of view which considers the humanitarian problems, the social effects that economic depression may have on an area. But there again that thinking may be circumscribed so that the whole picture is not seen. There is also a military viewpoint. From the military viewpoint it can be argued soundly that if our industry is to survive indefinitely in this atomic age, it should be dispersed, that it should not be allowed to congregate in a few large areas where it presents attractive targets for atom bombs. But, Mr. Speaker, I think it behooves us to take a wider view. The political view should be one which embraces all of these factors.

I think it is nonsense to say that central Canada goes along and prospers because it is economically sound and can stand on its own feet, and that its prosperity is not caused by any artificial stimulants which may have been given it. Nothing could be further from the facts. If the tariff protection which exists in this country for Canadian industry were to be totally removed, I am quite sure that many of our industries in central Canada would melt away in a short time. If some of the uneconomic or temporarily uneconomic great projects which were brought forward by governments in this country through the years had not ben carried out, I am convinced that great areas of this country would not have been developed. An example of such a project, of course, is the building of the first transcontinental railway. More up to date examples are the St. Lawrence seaway and the gas pipe line that is under discussion. Many of these things are not strictly economically sound.

As I said, we should also consider the view that the philosopher would take. After all, we must attach some importance to the social effects that economic depression has created in certain parts of our country. How can we be proud to be Canadians if we know that in certain areas of this country there are people who are in dire financial straits through no fault of their own? We should recognize also that there is definitely a military problem involved here. We should look rather carefully at the possibility of stemming this trend toward having our key industries concentrated in a small area. We should make sure that encouragement is given to developing a dispersed industry in all parts of the country. Such an industry would help to revive the small towns in many areas, and would be a stimulus to agriculture, transportation, service industries and all business firms in those areas.

The government has a responsibility here that it cannot avoid. The government should give serious consideration to this resolution. I particularly approve of the last part of it, which says:

> —such rehabilitation to be achieved through direct government assistance for the establishment of additional or alternative industries in the areas concerned—

There is one reservation, however, in that I should like to be able to put my own interpretation on what direct government assistance means. The resolution goes on to suggest that if that fails, means should be found for transplanting the people concerned to some other part of the country. I think that is a course which should be followed only as a last resort, but it would be unavoidable in some cases such as mining towns which were built on resources that had been exhausted.

There are many ways in which the government could take action to improve the situation in some of these depressed areas. There are tariff adjustments which might be made which would benefit them. There are freight subventions which might be considered. There is defence expenditure and government buying generally. It might be said that these suggestions are not practical, that they are suggestions that are not really feasible. It might be well for us to look briefly at what our neighbour to the south is doing in this connection.

In the United States it is recognized that governments now do a great deal of the business of the country directly. Defence production and other government purchasing is really big business. In the United States they see to it that some effort is made to even out the effect of government buying. They have a system which gives to areas where there is considerable unemployment a preference in government purchases. They have a differential advantage of 6 per cent on government contracts for the supply of material, and a differential of 12 per cent where their competitors are foreign firms. This is a principle which might very well be considered for Canada. It has the advantage of tending to disperse vital industries across the country so they are not so vulnerable from a military point of view.

There are many other ways in which the United States government tries to relieve this problem. For instance, I have with me a publication of the United States department of commerce which has the title, "What will New Industry Mean to my Town?" In this publication they study the effect of the establishment of new industries in two small towns in two entirely different parts of the United States. They point out that such developments increase employment, stimulate business and have many other beneficial effects. They also point out that this creates certain problems for the small towns concerned, and that the effects of the creation of new businesses in small communities are not all on one side of the ledger.

Then, too, the United States government is very careful to try to assure that small businesses get their share of government contracts. There is a publication here from the small business administration of the United States government entitled, "U.S. Government Purchasing Directory". In it they point out that in various ways they encourage small businesses to tender for the supplying of materials to the defence department and other departments. In the foreword to this publication I find the following statement:

> One of the major responsibilities of the small business administration is to carry out the policy of congress, as stated in the small business act of 1953, as amended, that small business concerns should receive "a fair proportion of the total purchases and contracts for supplies and services for the government".

This is a concrete illustration that our neighbour to the south finds it not only possible but advantageous to try to encourage small businesses in the extremities of the country to get their fair share of government contracts, and in that way share equitably in whatever prosperity their country may enjoy.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to take up any more time of the house, except to say that in principle I heartily support the resolution before us.

Mrs. Ann Shipley (Timiskaming): First, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Cape Breton South for his kind words about me and his concern for my people and others in like circumstances. I have been listening to this debate all afternoon, and I kept reading the resolution over and over again. It appeared as though the interpretation put upon the resolution by some of the speakers was that it concerned the maritimes alone. Well, the mover of the resolution did not speak in that vein, nor do I think the wording of the resolution would lead one to believe that is so. It is a general resolution stating that:

> —the government should give consideration to the advisability of providing for the economic rehabilitation of people living in communities and areas in Canada where extreme hardships are resulting from the closing down of the principle industries—

In no way, Mr. Speaker, do I want to belittle any claim the maritimes feel they have on the nation. They have my keen sympathy. But on the other hand I object now, as I have objected in the past, to members of the opposition giving the impression to the people of Canada that anything that besets them becomes the responsibility of the federal government. I come from a mining area in the northern part of Ontario. We have faced almost ghost towns, but fortunately by our own grit and initiative, with no help from anyone, we have been able to pull through. It was luck, chiefly, if I must be honest.

But here we are a part of this great province of Ontario. The municipalities located near the mining industries are set up under the jurisdiction of the laws of the province of Ontario. The loans that are made by the municipality itself are controlled by the Ontario municipal board. The extent to which that municipality develops is controlled entirely by the provincial government. In the course of time almost any mine will peter out, and the mover of this resolution specifically referred to wasting resources. Am I to believe from this resolution that the moment the assets of a mine become exhausted the responsibility for the people of that community, in a wealthy province like Ontario, should immediately become the responsibility of the federal government? I would say no.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. Gillis: No; I made that quite clear.

Mrs. Shipley: I am sorry; I missed that point.

Mr. Gillis: It is a joint responsibility.

Mrs. Shipley: The hon. member is the only one who did, then. Here is the whole situation as I see it. If any province has a claim on the national responsibility, and if a situation has been created for the benefit of the nation, then I say that province, or a particular section of that province, has a claim on the national income and on national support. Otherwise, if the province is financially able, it should look after that situation, and it cannot come too soon to suit me.

I am grateful to the hon. member for Cape Breton South for bringing this resolution to the house. Plans should be made now, not only in my own province but in many provinces throughout Canada. It will happen rather suddenly so far as the rest of the people are concerned. Those of us who live in those areas can see it coming. There are millions of dollars worth of assets there. At a time when housing, schools, churches and public buildings are in short supply in Canada, it is inconceivable to me that the life savings of thousands of people should be left behind. In our particular case we are almost in the heart of Canada. When the mines are exhausted where I live, surely we are not going to let these places become ghost towns. I say we will not, but I say we should start now.

If there are places in Canada where there is a national responsibility, so far as we are concerned it is in the gold mining areas. That is being taken care of by the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. But that is where the responsibility of this government lies, because the restrictive measures in so far as the sale and use of gold are concerned are a national responsibility, and they should take care of it, as they do, for which we are very grateful. But if there are any other areas of national responsibility I hope when the provinces concerned ask for help, this government will take the matter under advisement and make plans now. I am not referring to the over-all problem; I am referring to the instances that were cited by the hon. member who introduced the resolution and that were described in the resolution.

Of course there are certain federal government agencies that can be utilized should such a situation occur, such as those described by the Minister of Labour this afternoon, but those are available to all places to take care of similar problems.

This afternoon the hon. member for Royal said, "Well, in Ontario there were lots of places where people who are out of employment by reason of the exhaustion of mines could find employment", or something to that effect. These were not the exact words. Well, my goodness, I wish he had lived in a mining community where, when he went there, there was nothing but mud for streets and huts to live in, and worked hard for years and years to build up a community of which he was proud, in which he had invested every cent he owned and had built up something worth while. To suggest that men can find employment elsewhere in Ontario is, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, very shortsighted, and it is perhaps a heartless way to look at the matter. I am sure the hon. member himself has not been faced with that problem, and he did not give the matter enough thought or he would not have made what to me is such a heartless statement.

There are others who say well, when these people go into mining communities and invest their money in homes, and they pay six times as much as is normal to put sewers and water through the rocks, they know that the mining community is expendable, and why do they spend their money? Well, there again it is a thoughtless and narrow-minded person who would make such a statement; but I have heard it, Mr. Speaker. If those people would stop and think for a moment they would know that those lumbering camps, the mining communities and so on, have opened up Canada. Those are the people to whom Canada owes a tremendous debt. They would not say well, we knew it was expendable.

In many instances it has been our whole life. Our children were born there. They have grown to manhood there; they have been educated there and it is their home. Surely with the tremendous wealth in my own province something can be done to induce industry to establish itself there. It would take very little. We are not so out of the way, but there are so many different situations. In some provinces and in some parts of the same province the situation is very different. The provincial government should begin to analyse each situation and arrive at a solution to take care of each particular situation.

There is just one particular point I should like to make in my closing remarks, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act which has helped many communities in northern Ontario, northern Quebec and other parts of Canada. I am sorry my colleague the hon. member for Villeneuve has not had the opportunity to speak on this subject. There is one community in his riding, Villeneuve, that would have had to close down three or four years ago but for the assistance of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. What has happened? They have found copper within 12 miles of the area where the gold mine was exhausted, and that splendid community will be available for that purpose. That is just luck, and we all cannot be that lucky.

Therefore I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the discussions that have taken place today will be heard by the provincial governments concerned, and that they will take action for those of us who need action from that particular source.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: I was asked on Friday to indicate when the budget debate would be resumed. It has been agreed that we shall do that on Friday next.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

RADAR LINES—COSTS

Question No. 183—Mr. Pearkes:

What amounts have been paid to date as Canada's share in the construction, equipping and maintenance, including pay and allowances, for military and civilian personnel of: (a) "Pinetree" line; (b) mid-Canada line; (c) D.E.W. line?

Answer by: Mr. Campney:

(a) $175,067,690.

(b) $26,673,816.

(c) In the provision of the northern early warning systems, the United States undertook responsibility for constructing and equipping the D.E.W. line, and Canada, the mid-Canada line. Canada, therefore, has made no payments as a direct share of the cost of constructing and equipping the D.E.W. line. Canadian government departments, in particular the departments of national defence, defence production, transport, and northern affairs and national resources, have used their facilities to assist in the construction of the D.E.W. line, and, wherever possible, the United States government has used Canadian contractors, materials and labour.

EX-REGULAR ARMY PERSONNEL IN RESERVES

Question No. 267—Mr. Pearkes:

1. How many ex-members of the Canadian regular army have enrolled into the Canadian regular army reserve?
2. How many of these reservists attended training last year with the regular army?

Answer by: Mr. Campney:

1. 215.
2. 110.

CIVIL SERVICE COMPETITION NO. 56-M573

Question No. 269—Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace):

1. How many classes are to be taught by the instructor in bookkeeping advertised for under civil service competition No. 56-M573?
2. What will be the average number of students per class?

Answer by: Mr. Campney:

1. There will be a total of 16 courses per year, 12 of trade group 3 and 4 of trade group 4, with 50 periods of instruction in each course.
2. 15.

COLONEL WOOD ROWE PURCELL

Question No. 270—Mr. Castleden:

1. Has Colonel Wood Rowe Purcell been placed in command of Canadian army's warfare and Arctic branch at defence headquarters?
2. If so, how many Canadian troops will be placed under his command?
3. Is he being attached to Canadian national defence for pay, allowances and expenses?

Answer by: Mr. Campney:

1. Colonel William Wood Rowe Purcell is a United States exchange officer on duty at national defence headquarters. He is presently serving as the senior staff officer in the air, Arctic and mobile striking force section of the directorate of military training.
2. None.
3. No.

SURPLUS BUILDINGS, BARRACK GREEN, SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Question No. 285—Mr. Bell:

1. What buildings, by numbers, have been declared surplus by the Department of National Defence in the Barrack Green, Saint John, New Brunswick?
2. What, if any, are to remain?

Answer by: Mr. Campney:

1. 5, 6, 14, 15, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 42, 44, 50 and 51.

2. (a) 17 and 38 will shortly be declared surplus; (b) 16, 21, 25, 33A, 45, 46, 49 and F4 will be temporarily retained; (c) 33, 34, 36, 37 and F1 will be permanently retained.

PATENTS INQUIRY

Question No. 289—Mr. Knowles:

1. Is the commission inquiring into patents, copyrights, and related subjects, authorized to make recommendations revising the manner in which registered patent attorneys and agents may practise before the patent office as firms of patent attorneys or agents?
2. When is it expected that the report of the said commission will be made?

Answer by: Mr. Pinard:

1. It is considered that the terms of reference of the royal commission on patents, copyrights, trade marks and industrial designs include a study of the manner in which patent attorneys and agents practise before the patent office, and in fact certain public evidence has already been given in this connection.

2. At the end of 1956 or early in 1957.

COST OF LIVING STATISTICS

Question No. 291—Mr. Knowles:

1. What was the cost of living index or the total consumer price index (whichever can be given in constant or comparable figures) for each of the following years: 1926, 1927, 1930, 1933, 1936, 1939, 1942, 1943, 1947, 1949, 1950, 1952, 1954, 1955?
2. What is the comparable figure at the present time?

1 and 2.

	Consumer Price Index (1949=100)
1926	75·9
1927	74·6
1930	75·3
1939	63·2
1942	72·9
1943	74·2
1947	84·8
1949	100·0
1950	102·9
1952	116·5
1954	116·2
February 1956	116·4

GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCTION STATISTICS

Question No. 292—Mr. Knowles:

1. What was Canada's gross national production in each of the following years: 1926, 1927, 1930, 1933, 1936, 1939, 1942, 1943, 1947, 1949, 1950, 1952, 1954, 1955?

2. What is the anticipated gross national production for 1956?

Answer by: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

1.

	Gross National Product (millions of dollars)
1942	10,539
1943	11,183
1947	13,768
1949	16,462
1950	18,203
1952	23,255
1954	24,148

2. No forecast for 1956 available at present.

Questions

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT AIRCRAFT CF-EYX

Question No. 301—Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace):

1. What were the names of the passengers on the flight of Department of Transport aircraft CF-EYX between Montreal-Ottawa and Ottawa-Toronto, on November 26, 1954?

2. What was the purpose of their trip?

Answer by: Mr. Marler:

1. (a) Montreal-Ottawa: A. de Niverville, director of air services, Department of Transport, Ottawa; S. S. Foley, district controller air services, Department of Transport, Toronto; D. A. McIntyre, district superintendent airways, Department of Transport, Toronto; D. W. Saunders, district superintendent air regulations, Department of Transport, Toronto; W. McDowell, district radio engineer, Department of Transport, Toronto; D. Bell, district aircraft inspector, Department of Transport, Toronto; R. W. Bradley, district airway engineer, Department of Transport, Toronto; R. E. Harris, senior area traffic controller, Department of Transport, Toronto; S. Haskins, meteorological services, Department of Transport, Toronto; H. White, airways serviceman, Department of Transport, Toronto; (b) Ottawa-Toronto: As above with exception of the director of air services.

2. (a) To return to their headquarters the district officials listed, who had been in Montreal attending meetings on matters relating to traffic control and airport construction; (b) the director of air services was in Montreal en route from overseas. The flight to Toronto was therefore made via Ottawa where the director deplaned and the aircraft proceeded to its home base at Malton.

Tuesday, March 20, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFERENCE OF CERTAIN PETITIONS TO COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston) moved:

That the petitions for private bills of the Maritime Stock Breeders' Association, Trans-Prairie Pipelines of Canada, Ltd., Esther Pheobe Brunger Abels, Rosa-Anna Rose Crombie, Adam Forbes, Martha Hope MacDougall Fortier, Geraldine Isabella Johnson Mole, Hugh Oliver Semper and Phyllis Elizabeth Jardine Williams, together with the clerk of petitions' reports thereon of March 15 and 19, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders for such recommendations as may be deemed advisable.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MANNING AND OPERATION OF EARLY WARNING LINES

Mr. P. T. Hellyer (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence): In accordance with the practice of informing the house about current developments in continental air defence, I should like to make a statement on the manning and operation of the early warning lines in the Canada-United States air defence system.

In consultation with the United States government it has now been agreed that the distant early warning line should be manned and operated for the next three years by a civilian contractor, to be selected by the United States government. The Canadian government has reserved the right to undertake any part or all of the manning and operation of the Canadian section of this line after the expiration of the three-year period.

A United States-Canadian military group will be located at each main station in the D.E.W. line and will have control of the purely military functions of the line.

With reference to the mid-Canada line, investigations are now being made by the Canadian government to see whether it is practicable to have the technical maintenance and manning of this line also undertaken by a civilian contractor.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Will these contractors be Canadian contractors or United States contractors?

Mr. Hellyer: I am not sure, but I presume it would possibly be a United States contractor. In any event, if the United States government have the selection of the contractor that would be something they would have to decide.

Mr. Green: Has the Canadian government no voice whatever in the selection of these contractors?

Mr. Hellyer: In this particular case the statement covers the matter. The United States government has the responsibility for the selection of the contractor.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question which is supplementary to those asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green). Are there any other agreements of the same nature as the one dealing with the distant early warning line, allowing United States contractors appointed by the United States government to take over? I should like to ask this question also. Are those contractors and their employees subject to Canadian statutes and laws or is there some agreement with regard to the legal standing of those people?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The question of the hon. member is so all-embracing that in order to be perfectly sure of the accuracy of every part of the answer I might give, I prefer to take it as notice.

Mr. Coldwell: All right.

Mr. Green: Would the Prime Minister consider tabling the agreement or agreements?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): We will consider the hon. member's suggestion that the agreements be tabled. We shall have to consider it in the light of the security arrangements that exist between ourselves and the United States in connection with these early warning lines.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, supplementary to the question asked by the member for Rosetown-Biggar. When he gives his reply, will the Prime Minister indicate what arrangements in respect to unemployment insurance coverage will be in effect with respect to the employees to whom the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar referred?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I will take note of the hon. gentleman's desire to have that information.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO CANADA'S POSITION ON ANGLO-FRENCH DISARMAMENT PROPOSAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister inform the house what stand Canada is taking on the Anglo-French disarmament proposal reported from London in today's press?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of this question. The discussions of the United Nations disarmament subcommittee, of which Canada is a member together with France, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet union, were resumed yesterday in London. As the house knows, the subcommittee meets in private in accordance with the recommendation of the United Nations general assembly. In view of this, I do not feel that it would be appropriate for me to comment on these highly important and delicate negotiations at this very early stage in the negotiations.

I can say that western delegations have given earnest consideration to the various aspects of this problem during preliminary discussions which took place during last week, and that there seemed to be substantial agreement on the measures which should be taken as a first step in a disarmament program. I do not think it would be appropriate for me to add to this for the time being.

Together with the other western members, Canada will do its utmost to widen the area of agreement which may already exist between the east and the west on this vital issue in order to bring about some measure, at least, of effective disarmament which would contribute to diminishing international tension and by the same token facilitate the settlement of other outstanding issues. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I think I should add that a disarmament scheme on paper which did not include effective methods of control and supervision would not, I think, contribute to these desirable ends.

During the last twelve months a number of significant and constructive proposals have been made in this field, and the subcommittee will now be offered the challenging task of finding whether it will be possible to develop proposals which will be generally acceptable. The Canadian delegation at the London meeting will do its best as a member of the subcommittee to help bring about such agreement.

POWER

REPORTED CONFERENCE ON DEVELOPMENT OF COLUMBIA RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Vancouver papers reaching here over the week end report Premier Bennett as stating that the minister is to confer with him shortly about the development of the Columbia river. Is this so, and could the minister give the house a statement? Incidentally, it would be helpful if he could state whether the dominion is prepared to negotiate on the basis of a joint investment program.

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. When Premier Bennett was in Ottawa on Friday, March 9, I had a conversation with him. Among other things, water problems of common concern were mentioned. We agreed that it would be a good thing to sit down together and discuss such problems. Premier Bennett then invited me to visit him in Victoria. I told him it was possible that I would have to go to the Pacific coast later this spring and that I might visit him then with some of my advisers. I may add that the question of the joint development of hydro power on the Columbia river as such, which has been raised by the hon. member, was not mentioned.

Mr. Green: Is the government prepared to negotiate on the basis of a joint investment program?

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to add at this time.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

ONTARIO—SUPPLEMENTAL ALLOWANCE TO THOSE IN NEED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and it is this. Does the federal government pay any portion of the new Ontario $20 old age supplemental allowance to those in need? If so, how much?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that this is the kind of question that you think proper on the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has the right to insist that this question be placed on the order paper. He does not have to look at me. All he has to do is say, "I wish this question to be placed on the order paper". That is all he needs to do.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows the full details of the supplemental allowance to which he directs my attention have not been made public, but I understand it is restricted to a limited number of persons. The federal government pays all of the $40 a month to those 70 and over. I think my hon. friend is aware that we pay half of the old age assistance program to the province of Ontario as well as to all other provinces.

Mr. Lennard: Up to $40 a month.

Mr. Martin: In other words, well over 90 per cent of the old age assistance and old age security in Canada is paid by the taxpayers through the federal government.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the minister went all around the mulberry bush, but he never answered my question.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if he could just say yes or no to the question I asked?

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend repeat his question?

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): The question is, does the federal government pay any portion of the new Ontario old age supplementary allowance of $20 for those in need?

Mr. Martin: If my hon. friend is seeking to have me say something against a provincial government, he is mistaken. I believe the way to proceed in these matters is by co-operation with all provincial governments.

Mr. Fulton: Yes or no?

Mr. Martin: The fact is that this particular supplementary is paid entirely by the province of Ontario, but it is much less than supplementary payments made by three other provinces.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REPORTED ADOPTION OF CANADIAN PLAN BY HOLLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare? Has his attention been called to newspaper reports that Holland has copied Canada's universal old age pension plan, except that the pension is paid at age 65?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I thank the hon. member for this tribute to the ingenuity of the government of Canada.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister take note of the fact that under the plan referred to payments to everyone begin at age 65, and will Canada do the same?

Mr. Coldwell: Exercise your ingenuity again.

Mr. Knowles: Yes or no?

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE TO CHILDREN OF IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration arising out of his announcement offering to pay to the children of immigrants up to 16 years of age the equivalent of $5 per month. My question is this. Does the minister regard that offer as a substitute for the regular payment of family allowances?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this allowance is to help immigrants get established in Canada. It is not regarded as a substitute for anything.

HIGHWAYS

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN BUILDING TRAFFIC TUNNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the Minister of Finance a question of which I have given him notice, unless it should be directed more properly to another department. Has the federal government been asked for financial assistance in building a traffic tunnel from the city of Toronto to Toronto island? If so, has any decision been made, and what is the decision?

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Public Works): This question was handed to me a few minutes ago by the Minister of Finance, and I have made inquiries in our department. I am told that no official representation has been made to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Michener: May I ask a supplementary question? Can the parliamentary assistant advise whether a similar request has been made of any department?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Is not that the type of question, Mr. Speaker, that should go on the order paper so that inquiries in all departments could be made for the purpose of giving an answer?

Mr. Michener: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have it on the order paper. It is just a matter of getting information.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

AMENDMENTS TO REORGANIZE CAPITAL STRUCTURE, INCREASE AMOUNT OF LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for the second reading of Bill No. 84, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): I intend to take just a very few minutes to speak on this bill. I think the farm loan board could more popularly be called dominion farm loans limited, because it is so difficult to get a loan on some of these farms. In my part of the country we have a lot of young farmers who would stay on the farm if they could get started, but they find it very difficult to get a loan, especially from the dominion government, to enable them to start.

I am going to have something to say about the percentage rate that is being charged but that is not the hold-up. It is the fact that these people just cannot get a loan because the restrictions are too great, and there is not enough flexibility on the part of those administering the loans. I do not know why this should be so. At 5 per cent the rate is too high. There is no reason why these loans should not be made by the dominion government just as cheaply as the junior farm loan board of Ontario makes them. That farm loan board is doing much more business in my part of the country than the dominion loan board.

A few years ago this board was practically dormant; it was not doing any business, and I do not know the reason for that. For several years very little business was done. Apparently they were sitting back trying to make collections on the loans they had made years ago. Now we are in the position in some places where the average age of farmers is 60 and over. Why is that? It is simply because boys are not able to get loans to start farming. Unless you have in excess of at least $10,000 you can hardly get started on a farm.

Up to the present time, at any rate, the government has not suffered any losses on loans because the values of farm properties have been increasing every year for the last 15 years, so much so that they are double what they were 10 or 15 years ago. Therefore the government has not been losing any money on loans made on these farms.

The bill calls for a 65 per cent limit on the loan. It should be raised to 75 per cent. That would not be too high, because a farmer would not get any more than 50 per cent of it anyway. There is no reason why the amount should not be raised in some instances, at any rate. The requirement of gilt-edge security on every loan that is proposed or asked for is holding back the young farmers of this country. They are not able to get the money they want.

Why is the dominion government not able to lower the interest rate on these loans? Some will say it is owing to the fact that they are small loans and they cost too much to make. If the Ontario farm loan board can lend money at 4 per cent there is no reason why the dominion board could not lend it at the same interest rate. That rate is high enough when you consider the remuneration farmers get for their efforts. I would suggest that the interest rate be lowered to 4 per cent and that the percentage be raised to 75 per cent of the value. That would give many of these boys a chance to spread themselves and operate their farms more efficiently.

I do not intend to say very much more, but I hope some consideration will be given to some of the proposals I have made.

Mr. H. A. Hosking (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for just a moment or two on this bill. I would like to commend the government for making larger amounts of money available to farmers, and at an interest rate which they will consider to be fair. Most of us know that in the last three years the farming industry in Canada has been the hardest hit of any of our industries. It is right and proper that we should do some things to help the farmers in the province of Ontario; therefore I commend the minister for presenting this bill.

But, specifically, I would like to make another point with regard to servicing the farmers through the farm loan board. Located as it is in the centre of Toronto the office is in an extremely difficult place to find and like most places in Toronto it is practically inaccessible. I would say that is a kindly criticism of the city of Toronto, which has grown much too large to house a farm loan office. This office should be moved to a location where farmers could find it without the difficulties they experience in the city of Toronto.

Having passed that comment about the office, and having brought to the attention of the minister the fact that going to Toronto is an extremely difficult operation for a farmer, I would like to make a recommendation. Before doing so I might point out it is particularly difficult for the type of farmers who require loans to go to Toronto. They are not as familiar with the large cities as are some of the farmers who do not require loans. Looking for the office is a difficult and unpleasant task for them.

I should like to recommend that the city of Guelph is a more central location. It is the centre of gravity of the area requiring farm loans having as it does the agricultural background of a city which contains the largest agricultural college in the British Empire and the famous Ontario veterinary college. Guelph would be the proper place in which to locate an office to give service to those farmers who would benefit by these increases made by this new farm loan act which is before us.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that if we are to have every hon. member in this house suggest that an office of the farm loan board should be established in his constituency, perhaps I myself might join in the concert and ask that there be one established in my own constituency. There is no limit to that. There is certainly nothing wrong with asking that an agency be placed in one's own constituency, but I do not think the proper time to do so is when we are discussing the second reading of this bill.

Mr. Hosking: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall now close my remarks by thanking the minister for making more money available in loans in view of the fact that the cost of buying farms has increased. I should like to express my appreciation for his having made this money available to the farmers.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is an act to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act, and has to do with the extension of credit to agriculture. I might say that the whole problem of adequate credit to farming in Canada is extremely complex, and is one which I think deserves the attention of all hon. members of this house. Agriculture is a basic industry in Canada and as such I think it demands the attention of all hon. members.

I believe the government has come to realize, in respect to the method of financing this type of credit, that the procedure has been very clumsy in the past. The amendments proposed will make some changes in that respect. However, I want to deal more particularly with the terms of the loans which are made to farmers.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that in Saskatchewan this matter has been given a great deal of attention. I suggest that the commission which has been set up to investigate the picture of agriculture in Saskatchewan has done a remarkably good job in setting out the problems which face agriculture in respect to credit, and also the other problems related to the rural life of that province. I do feel that there may be differences of opinion, and the need of credit for agriculture in various provinces may differ. Essentially, however, the needs are the same.

Agriculture as a vocation is a very precarious one, where the producer not only has to face the vagaries of weather conditions but also has to face the fact that his return, in other words the market price for his commodity, varies considerably from time to time, I believe that is one reason why lending on farms in Saskatchewan through the banks came to a stop, because of the experiences of the banks and mortgage companies in the 1930's. But today I believe there is a great need for adequate lending facilities to the farmer.

I think it is essential that we understand exactly what we are trying to do when formulating policies of credit for agriculture. It is important to understand whether we want to advance the idea of corporate farms, or whether we believe that the family farm is the kind of institution we should have in Canada and relate our credit policies to the promotion of the best interests of the family farm. I was very interested in this matter, and I think the different methods we have of providing credit for agriculture in Canada are not satisfactory. First, they are varied in such a way that the farmer does not know exactly how to obtain that credit. In some cases the loans are overlapping, and we find a great deal of misunderstanding in respect to what a farmer may get in the way of credit.

The bill proposes to increase the percentage of the assessed value of land on which a farmer may get a loan from 60 to 65 per cent. I agree with the previous speaker that even though this is an advance over the previous figure, it still is not satisfactory, because the officials of the board in assessing the farms are very conservative in their appraisals, and consequently 65 per cent does not represent an adequate assessment for the provision of loans. I suggest that we should perhaps change this to bring it more into line with what is being done in the United States.

I took the opportunity of inquiring about the methods adopted in the United States with respect to credit to agriculture. I find that in the United States they have a very great number of different methods of giving assistance to farmers by way of different types of loans and different types of credit. Whilst I do not entirely agree with everything they have done, I think they have a measure of credit to the farmer greatly in excess of what we have in Canada. In the first instance, under the farmers' home administration, the provision is for 90 per cent of the assessed value of the land. That is very important, because today it is recognized that agriculture is becoming more highly mechanized.

As I stated earlier, the royal commission studying agriculture in the province of Saskatchewan has indicated that there is a direct relationship between the capitalization of each farm and the net income. As an example, it is indicated that a farm in which there is a total investment of $17,000 realized twice the net income of one in which the total investment was $10,600. Then it goes on to say in the report:

It is pointed out that when the point of capitalization is reached where the farm becomes efficient, then of course that increases the income to that farm unit. I might say, in respect to the amount of the loan on any one farm, it is being increased under the bill from $10,000 to $15,000. I think this is a move in the right direction, but I wish to point out that it has been found in investigations made by the royal commission in Saskatchewan that the average farm there requires something more than $17,000, and it is pointed out by authorities that the family farm, to be adequately capitalized and properly mechanized, would perhaps require closer to $25,000 or $30,000. I think this bill, making provision for a maximum loan of $15,000, is totally inadequate to meet farming conditions, particularly in my province of Saskatchewan, and I believe the same conditions would pertain in other parts of the dominion of Canada.

As I said at the beginning, it is very difficult to assess just what type of credit we need for agriculture. If it is to be successful in giving security to the family farm and making sure that the family farm has an adequate income comparable with other vocations, it will be essential, first, that we have agricultural policies to guarantee the income of that farm. I am acquainted with the experiences of the farmers in Saskatchewan who have suffered tragedy because of the vagaries of the system by which the prices for what they produce go up and down. A farmer might have an economic unit that is mechanized, highly specialized and productive, but when prices go down of course that investment brings in a very small return to the farmer; he will find himself mortgaged and with a load of debt and interest that he cannot carry. So I think we have to take a second hard look at the methods of providing credit for agriculture.

I believe that the 5 per cent interest provided in this case is far too high. Instead, the government should set up some type of farm administration for the provision of credit to agriculture, and it should be set up on a revolving fund basis, with the lowest rate possible being charged to borrowers under the scheme. I believe such a plan should be carried out with an interest rate of 2 or 3 per cent, very little more than the government would need to pay in order to get the money from the Bank of Canada.

If this were done, and we had proper supervision of these loans to the farmers, in the same way as is done under the farmers' home administration act in the United States, so the farmer would get adequate technical advice in respect to the methods of farming, construction and planning of farm buildings and all the associated experience and technical advice that could be given to him through that type of administration, then we could build up in Canada what might be called a morale amongst our farmers and we would show a high regard for the moral obligations involved in providing such a type of credit to the farmers.

I have had some experience with credit unions, and I know that under their plans there is a moral obligation to those taking out loans. The loss on loans provided under the credit union plan is very small. I am quite sure if it were known in the community, that a farmer was getting a loan under the type of plan I am suggesting, namely a low interest rate loan which would be properly supervised through advice to that farmer, then I am sure there would be a moral obligation and there would be very little risk involved.

I believe such a plan would provide a healthy atmosphere for agriculture. The farmer today is facing tremendous difficulties so far as the prices he receives for his commodities are concerned. As everyone knows, the farmer from coast to coast is caught in a price squeeze. The situation may vary from province to province; nevertheless it is probably similar in every province. The fruit grower, the vegetable grower, the market gardiner, almost every producer today is working in a very competitive field, not competitive as between different producers but competitive in the respect that the farmer must minimize his costs in order to stay in business.

I do not think there is another vocational group in Canada who display the co-operative spirit that prevails in agriculture. I know that on occasion almost every farmer of my acquaintance lends expensive machinery to his neighbours. This takes place on almost every farm in the province of Saskatchewan, and I presume the situation is similar in every other province. Therefore while there is not competition between farmer and farmer, there is the competitive aspect to which I have referred, as a result of which the farmer must be highly specialized and competitive from the point of view of trying to keep down his costs.

Here we have a proposal to make it possible for the farmer to borrow money from the Canadian farm loan board at 5 per cent interest, and if there is any default the farmer then has to pay 5½ per cent interest. I think Canada is far behind other countries which have undertaken to try to adequately finance farmers in need of specialized credit. While the loans under this legislation are intended to provide long-term credit, I do not think they meet the situation adequately. A maximum period of 25 years is provided, but under the home administration act of the United States loans are made for 40 years and, as I said before, the initial interest rate is 3½ per cent.

In addition, there are other types of loans available in the United States by which the living standards of rural people are raised. I should like to mention the administration of the rural electrification branch of the United States department of agriculture. This is a most amazing type of credit that is provided to farmers in the United States. The scheme has been in operation since 1935, and I think we in Canada should have taken an earlier look at exactly what they are doing in that great country to the south of us. I am sure the people of the United States would be the first to recognize that they have not found all the answers, and that even yet they have not all the credit facilities necessary for a healthy agriculture. Yet they have gone much further than we have.

I have here a statement on the rural electrification administration in the United States, in which it is pointed out that since 1935 loans have amounted to $3,106,085,511 and borrowers have used the loan fund to extend electric service to nearly 4,200,000 rural consumers and have built 1,350,000 miles of line.

Here is a program which provides credit to people living in the rural parts of the United States, and of course it raises the standard of living of those people. I do not think any comparable type of credit is given to agriculture in Canada. I know that under provincial legislation in the province of Saskatchewan a large grid system is being built throughout the province, and the electrification of farm homes is being accelerated. We have there a subsidization program to the farmers which provides around 50 per cent of the cost of installation, but the farmer still has to dig up $400 or $500 in order to complete installation on his farm.

I believe the federal government has been remiss in not accepting its responsibility, taking a look at the picture and providing credit for some of the needs of our rural people. When the bill goes to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization I hope a study will be made of ways and means of providing more adequate credit for agriculture. One important phase of such a credit proposal has to do with the young people who really do not have the credit standing to be able to obtain a loan. They are the people who are hardest hit under the suggested program of the Canadian farm loan board. It is not so bad for an established farmer, who perhaps can get credit either through his bank or by making application for a loan under this legislation, but I am more particularly interested in the young farmer who is trying to set up his farm and needs credit in order to make it highly efficient.

We find that land values are high, and that a capital outlay of $15,000 or $20,000 is required. Such an amount of money is not available to the average young person. Therefore I suggest that the government should give consideration to making it possible for young people to get larger loans. I also suggest that loans should be available under this legislation to the small farmer whose operation is perhaps uneconomic because of the size of his farm, and who wants to get a loan to buy additional land. As the legislation now stands, I believe there is a requirement that there must be buildings on the land before a loan can be given. I think there should be some easing of the qualifications required of a borrower in order that he may get a loan from the Canadian farm loan board.

This legislation has been in operation for some 20 years or more, and when one realizes that something less than $100 million has been borrowed one can readily see that the legislation has not played its full part in providing the type of credit needed for agriculture. I realize that the bill is going to the standing committee, and I am sure the members of the committee will try to do the necessary research. Perhaps they will call certain people to find out what has been done in the United States and what is being done in Australia, where I understand a large revolving fund has been set up from which money is lent at 2 per cent interest in order to provide the necessary credit for rural people so they can improve their living standards and become highly efficient.

I am suggesting that certain changes are needed in our legislation. The present high cost of production and the general inflationary condition across the country warrant some changes in it, and I hope that when the bill comes back to the house the committee will have seen fit to amend it along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. J. M. Forgie (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I do not presume to speak for the rest of Canada but I can speak about the county of Renfrew, which lies along the right bank of the Ottawa river about 100 miles from here. I have discussed the question of the farm loan board with many of the farmers there, and they are well pleased with the amendments that have been brought forward at this time.

As far as farming is concerned, the main industries are dairy farming and stock raising. Together with lumbering they are outstanding industries in my section of the country.

As far as my farmers are concerned, the amount of the loan is eminently satisfactory. I have been associated with this Canadian Farm Loan Act since 1929. I left my position only when I was honoured by being elected to this House of Commons in 1953. I can say without fear of contradiction that never in my experience has a loan of $15,000 been asked for in Renfrew county. The average loan amongst my farmers has run between $3,000 and $4,500. Hence when this amount is raised to $15,000, the appraisal is raised to 65 per cent, and the chattel mortgage and the second mortgage are removed from the provisions of this act, I think I can confidently say that this act, in the opinion of my farmers, is satisfactory.

The removal of the second mortgage and the chattel mortgage provides a cushion between the first mortgage of the Canadian farm loan board and some calamity that may happen to a farmer after he has taken out the first mortgage. It frees his cattle, all his stock and all his equipment, so that if he arrives in a position where he needs further loans, he has ample security with which to obtain them. I therefore do not agree with my friend the hon. member for Moose Mountain when he says that the conditions that prevail in western Canada prevail throughout Canada as a whole. I prefer to speak about sections of the country that I know something about rather than to deal in generalities.

As far as western Canada is concerned with respect to these loans, I have a little bit of experience in that connection, because I happen to have been a land owner for some considerable time in Saskatchewan. As I look at the annual report of the Canadian farm loan board I find that in Saskatchewan the outstanding loans amount to approximately $10,247,917.17. That is not very much money on the security of the farms of Saskatchewan. A more interesting document is the one that I received on February 7, 1956, from the Monetary Times, to which I wrote asking if they could give me the situation in the western provinces in connection with mortgage loans on farm lands in those three provinces from 1937 up to the present time. Mr. Speaker, if I may I should like to incorporate this letter in Hansard, because I think it reveals some significant figures and indicates possibly that sometimes a little bit of politics creeps into some of the remarks that are made in this chamber.

Mr. Speaker: A letter cannot be placed on the record unless it is read. Does the hon. gentleman intend to read it?

Mr. Forgie: I should like to have the opportunity of reading it and placing it on the record.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite sure that whatever is contained in that letter is quite relevant to the principle of this bill?

Mr. Forgie: Very definitely. I want to establish the fact that loans in Saskatchewan or in those western provinces are not as urgently sought as has been indicated by many hon. members who have already spoken. I should like to say that the total loans in the three provinces made by the Canadian insurance companies operating in Canada, the United States insurance companies operating in Canada, the British insurance companies operating in Canada, the trust companies and the mortgage loan companies in 1937 amounted to $182,286,000, of which $107 million was loaned in the province of Saskatchewan. In 1954 that $182 million of loans had been reduced to $20,240,000 and the loans in the province of Saskatchewan had been reduced from $107 million to $6,500,000.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a wonderful investment to own the equity security of a corporation that could reduce its senior indebtedness from $182 million to $20 million in that space of time. I should just like to mention this in passing—

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that in my humble view this moment is not the time to examine the position in the various provinces as to the amount of loans that have been requested or obtained by them in the past. We are dealing with a bill to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act. It has to do with further credit being granted under the act. As long as we remain within that environment, we are all right. But if we go outside of it, we are contravening the rules.

Mr. Forgie: My object in bringing this material forward was to prove that there is not the demand for loans that is suggested, and that the farmers in those provinces apparently are in a strong enough financial position that they do not require loans. That is one reason.

An hon. Member: Let the farmers speak for themselves.

Mr. Speaker: Notwithstanding the worthy objective of the hon. gentleman, I do not think he should be allowed to make that point on this measure.

Mr. Forgie: Mr. Speaker, I do not claim that the provisions of this act, including the amendments, have reached a stage of perfection. I think that the inspection department of the Canadian farm loan board could be stepped up. It takes too long to inspect a property. Certainly speaking for my section of the country, I can say that it takes too long to obtain a report as to the security offered by the farmer. I would therefore suggest that the inspection squad be increased or that possibly the field men under the Veterans' Land Act might lend some assistance. The field men who are operating under the Veterans' Land Act are extremely efficient.

I also think the form of application should be simplified. I believe the application form is too cumbersome. I would therefore suggest that attention and study be given to that matter with a view to seeing if the application form could not be simplified. In my experience the farmers find it most difficult to make that form out. I think the terms of payment are satisfactory. If the farmer wishes to pay his loan within 24 months from the time he has taken it out, he must of course pay a bonus as well as the principal and interest up to date. But if after the expiration of the two years he desires to pay off his loan, he can then do so without notice and without any bonus.

I think the advertising under this Canadian Farm Loan Act is being done in the proper place, namely through the farm journals. I cannot see any advantage in spending a great deal of money on having advertisements placed in the local papers throughout the country.

Since I understand this bill is going before the standing committee on agriculture and colonization in the very near future, I shall defer any further remarks I desire to make on this matter.

Mr. G. W. Montgomery (Victoria-Carleton): I shall only take a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. I have been interested in the remarks made on this bill by various hon. members. I understand it will be referred to the banking and commerce committee, but I believe we should make any suggestions we have at this time so they may be considered by that committee.

First I should like to say that I believe these amendments are improvements in the act, so far as they go. However, I feel that, speaking for my own section of the province and as a result of my own experience, the increase in lending value from 60 to 65 per cent is hardly enough. I think that farmer's land is usually valued quite low. I know the manager of the board in my own province and I think he is very conservative, though he tries to be as generous as the regulations will permit. On the other hand, like a banker he is going to take no chances of showing any losses to his head office. On several occasions the local valuator or assessing officer, whichever you wish to call him, has been inclined to follow municipal assessments. In my particular area the assessments run very close to 50 or 60 per cent of the valuation.

Recent reports show that there is not too much advantage taken of this act. The reason is that farmers find the value placed on their farms does not bear any relation to the selling value. I feel that the manager of the board in my province is doing the right thing under the provisions of the act, but I do feel you should give him more latitude. I feel that an increase of 5 per cent, from 60 to 65 per cent, in the lending value is not enough.

I agree with the hon. member who suggested it should be raised to 75 per cent. I do not think you will find, under management such as we have had in my province, that you will have any losses if you permit the manager to make loans on a valuation of 75 per cent. I know that some applications have been turned down, and rightly so, but I do feel some consideration should be given to the family farm unit, as one hon. member put it. I think it is important to help a young man get started in order to keep him on that family farm. I should like the committee to take into consideration increasing the lending value from 60 to 75 per cent.

I feel that it was a good thing to cut out the second mortgage. So far as the interest rate is concerned, it does seem high. Again, I believe this committee will look into that and if there is any justification, if the handling and administrative costs call for a rate of 5 per cent, I know that my people would not have any serious objection. What they really need is a place to go and get money when they need it. Today, with so many people investing in bonds and stocks which are so much easier for older people to handle and which give a secure return on a certain date, people are getting away from lending on mortgages. In my part of the province at least a farmer cannot go out as he used to do and borrow from his neighbour or some retired man who had a few thousand dollars. He has to depend on this loan board.

There is another unfortunate circumstance about which I do not think we can do very much. Many of our farmers will apply for this loan in the fall of the year, and of course you cannot have an inspection while the snow is on the ground. I do not suppose this difficulty can be overcome, but it means the farmer cannot get any money until spring. Often he has to dispose of assets at sacrifice prices in order to carry on until spring when he can have the place inspected and get a loan.

It looks as though this problem is difficult to overcome. However, in my particular area I think the inspector is generally quite familiar with most of the farms in the territory. I know that in several cases, if he were permitted, he could make just about as good a report on that place during the winter with the snow on the ground as he could when the snow has gone. I am asking, however, that the committee look into this matter. One thing I do feel like pressing for in behalf of my people is that the provisions of the act do not give sufficient latitude to the local manager in making loans. They hold him down to a valuation which is equivalent to a small part of the actual selling price of the place.

Mr. C. E. Bennett (Grey North): I just want to comment very briefly on this bill. The Canadian Farm Loan Act has not been used to any appreciable extent in my district, but I think it will become increasingly important in the next two or three years because the sources of first mortgage money on farms have been drying up. About five or six years ago we could get first mortgage money on farms from loan companies and individuals. These people are now finding more attractive investments, and I suppose that results partly from the fact the farmer's real income is down. I believe, therefore, the Canadian Farm Loan Act will be used to a greater extent in Ontario in the next few years.

I was glad to see that the percentage ratio of the lending value has been increased to 65 per cent. All in all this act has been administered effectively and well. If I were to offer any critical comment on the administration of the act, I would say that the appraisers have been rather conservative in making their appraisals. I hope that under the new amendments the appraisers will take the full market value of the farm and then apply the 65 per cent.

If I were to say anything else that could be construed as critical, I would say I do think it takes a long time to process the applications under this act. I know there are reasons for these delays. Sometimes it is the lawyers searching the titles; sometimes it is the appraiser being slow getting on the scene; sometimes it is the applicant himself. I wish though that the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance would discuss the matter with the chairman of the Canadian farm loan board to see whether these loans can be speeded up. The fact is that one can get a loan much quicker through a trust company or an insurance company than under the Canadian Farm Loan Board Act.

Like previous speakers, I am glad that chattel mortgages and second mortgages are being eliminated. I do not believe they served any useful purpose. From the federal point of view I think all of us want to help the farmer, particularly the farmer whose real income is down. Sometimes from that federal point of view we are limited in the way in which we can help the farmer. The Canadian Farm Loan Board Act and legislation such as the Farm Improvement Loans Act constitute a way in which we can offer real help to the farmer, and therefore I welcome the amendments to this act. I welcome the fact that the legislation is being widened and liberalized and I say to the parliamentary assistant, I hope this act will be interpreted and administered in a generous and liberal way.

Mr. Charles Yuill (Jasper-Edson): I think we in this group are very much in favour of this bill. However, there are aspects of it which do not appeal to me as the bill in general does. I refer, of course, to section 6. The proposed amendment provides that loans may be made up to 65 per cent of the value of the land, with a maximum loan of $15,000. I come from a part of Alberta where the assessment on the land is at a very low level. It is a new area. The assessed value is perhaps equal to only about 30 per cent of the true sale value of that same property today. The result is, it makes it very difficult for worthy farmers to participate in these loans.

Mr. Benidickson: I think my hon. friend is under a misapprehension. The board sends out an appraiser to establish its own appraisement. The assessment of the property does not govern.

Mr. Yuill: I am sorry to contradict the parliamentary assistant. What I say is so. They use the municipal assessed value as the yardstick of values. I know that has applied to several loans I tried to have established.

I believe this will work very well in areas where the assessment is perhaps at its normal level. I do not think it will work any hardship there, because they will get a closer relationship to its true value than they get under conditions which exist in my particular area. Consideration could be given to the idea of having those loans geared to the true value. I do not mean the inflated sales value but the real sales value of the property. This would be much fairer in the administration of this legislation.

Another thing seems to be uppermost in the minds of the members of the administration who are responsible for appraising these loans. It seems obvious to me that they have the feeling that if you owe $100 in arrears of taxes it is a greater sin than if you owe $100 in some other legitimate debt. I have found that they frown on anyone who happens to be in arrears of taxes. Arrears of taxes should be given every consideration in their true perspective, but they should not be the reason a loan is denied. Emphasis should not be placed on this particular phase of the current debt.

In the main this is a wonderful thing. It is certainly going to be a boon to the farmers in my constituency. The availability of more money, with some of the other restrictions taken off, is certainly a step in the right direction. In all sincerity I would ask those in charge of the administration to take a little more realistic and kindly look at the financial ability of those people who merit a loan in the first place. I do not think it is fair to say that when a property is assessed at 30 per cent of its sale value and a credit of only 65 per cent is given, a very realistic view of the matter is being taken. I would urge that special consideration be given to granting 65 per cent of the sale value rather than the estimated assessed value in areas where the assessment is away down, and perhaps below cost.

Mr. H. P. Mang (Qu'Appelle): I should like to express my pleasure to the government for introducing Bill No. 84, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act. It is the third bill brought in this session of particular interest to agriculture. Bill No. 82 and Bill No. 83 have already received royal assent, and this legislation now before the house will, I hope, be speedily passed so that it may become operative at the earliest possible moment.

The proposed amendments are important because they should give the act a wider application and, therefore, make it more useful. As has already been emphasized by previous speakers, the need for long-term credit facilities is becoming increasingly more necessary. This is so for various reasons. First is the fact that farm mechanization has brought about a higher level of capital requirements for efficient operation of the farm unit.

To illustrate, it is only as recently as 30 years ago, back in 1925, that the power on Saskatchewan farms was supplied practically entirely by horses. Only one in every 45 farms was powered by the tractor. When horses were used the natural increase supplied adequate power to operate a farm, with little cash outlay. The grain and hay used by the horses supplied the fuel requirements necessary to till the soil and to take off the crop. While it is true that this part of the farm operation had a cash value, nevertheless it did not require a cash outlay immediately. The actual power was produced on the farm itself without the cash outlay.

Today there are no horses, and tractor power requires a fuel which necessitates an outlay of dollars. In other words the cash requirements of the farmer are intensified. That is one reason inability to market a crop immediately after harvest causes a cash shortage. This matter has been discussed at length in the house very recently, and there is no advantage in labouring the point any further.

The requirement for a heavy immediate cash outlay in the operation of a farm is such that the need for flexible long-term credit machinery is imperative. In years gone by a larger proportion of the cash return from crops could be applied to the financing and repayment of any mortgage indebtedness. Today, due in great part to mechanization, the greater part of a year's production must go into current operating expenses.

In a production area such as the western plains the crop fluctuations are sometimes fantastic. The fluctuation in Saskatchewan has been from a low level of 2·7 bushels per acre in 1937 to a high level of 26·5 bushels per acre in 1952. Taking the year 1954 as compared with 1955, the 1955 crop was practically twice the yield of 1954. It is this instability of production with the accompanying instability of cash returns, together with the rapid trend toward intensified mechanization, which emphasizes the merit of amending the Canadian farm loan legislation. More than ever this medium must provide long-term credit at the present time.

The second necessity for widening the application of the act stems from the problem confronting the young man who wants to go into farming and build a home of his own. In the vast majority of cases the parents have been operating the farm for the past 40 years or so. Most of the equity of the farm, if not all of it, is tied up in land and machinery. The son or sons who wish to take over have not the funds to buy out the parents, so of necessity there must continue a joint operation.

What the young man of today wants is to obtain enough cash so the parents can retire to the nearby village or town. In most cases he has already invested his lifetime of work in that farm. Where the working together of the son and the parents on the same farm is possible it is a highly satisfactory arrangement and provides for a happy continuity of the farm operation, but in many cases this is neither a practical nor a happy arrangement. The parents wish to remain independent of the young farmer and his wife, and the young farmer wants to build a home for himself and his wife and wants to live independently. This act, with the present proposed amendments, if applied in the proper spirit can do much to build morale and preserve the independence of spirit and contentment of both the parents and the young farmer who carries on.

The third angle I wish to stress is of a more local nature, yet has a fairly wide application in Saskatchewan and in Manitoba as well, I believe, due to circumstances which have arisen during the last four years of heavy rainfall. Some areas of the province of Saskatchewan have been particularly hard hit by flooding. The flooding of farm lands is a serious matter in the eastern part of my own constituency as well. Individual farms have been flooded for two, three or four years in succession, and there are prospects of another flood this year. Not only has it been impossible to seed these individual farm units, but in these areas pasture lands have been rendered useless. In these areas cattle as well as grain are part of the farm production. Hay lands have been flooded and cattle holdings have had to be reduced.

For farmers in such a position it is an individual tragedy and a financial disaster which wrecks the hopes and aspirations of a lifetime. Taxes, living costs and general expenses are rapidly putting some people in a hopeless financial position and sentencing them to a hopeless and unhappy future. The tragedy of this situation is that a neighbour, whose land is of such elevation that it is not flooded, is reaping a harvest and raising stock. This destroys the morale of his less fortunate neighbour.

I have had personal experience with the situation I am describing, because on my own farm last year 25 per cent of my cultivated acreage did not see an implement. My immediate neighbours got a crop and I got the water which ran off their land. Over half the rural municipalities in my area have many individuals in this condition. In some cases besides losing their hay land the farmers have seeded less than 10 per cent of their cultivated acreage for the past several years, and the prospect for this year is not too good.

The Canadian Farm Loan Act properly applied, with the present amendments, is the medium through which people in this position can be helped to survive and be rehabilitated. Indeed it is their only hope. Our Canadian farm economy on the prairies must have policies based on a long-term view because of the factors of instability due to weather and price. This act at the present time is the only act which provides machinery to assist in this stabilization for the farmer afflicted with flooding. The farmers in the position I have just dealt with cannot be rehabilitated under any other measure, either provincial or federal.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre pointed out the other day that the provincial laws in Saskatchewan have been so designed as to preclude the free extending of credit by mortgage companies or private individuals. Indeed, the purchase of land today is practically on a cash basis. P.F.R.A., a federal agency, is not designed to meet the situation, nor is P.F.A.A. in its present form.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Mang: Just a minute. You have talked quite a bit today. The amended Canadian Farm Loan Act is the only agency capable of filling the present need. However much I welcome the present amendments I cannot refrain, however, from making a few comments which in my view could make the act more useful and effective.

Had I the drafting of the amendments at my command, I would have raised the figure to 75 per cent of the appraised value instead of 65 per cent. Also I would have included specific provisions for flexibility of repayment, offering, for example, a discount for prepayment of yearly instalments during good years. This act, like every other enactment, meets its final test in its application. My experience with the operations of the act has proven to me that its application requires closer personal attention.

Hon. members from Saskatchewan will recall that year after year we have seen news items in the Saskatchewan press to the effect that the board in Saskatchewan has not lost one dollar on its operations. I have had considerable experience with the board, and I am not surprised at this record. While the board has been fair in relation to the mortgage basis of its operations, anyone who has attempted to obtain or has been successful in obtaining a loan knows it is quite unlikely that the board will lose money.

My own view is that the Canadian farm loan board should administer the act, as it is being amended by the present bill, in the same spirit, for example, as the Veterans' Land Act. That would personalize the application of the act, and I believe that is what is needed. There need be no fear of unbusinesslike loans or severe losses. Under the Veterans' Land Act personal visits are made by the field staff, not solely for the purpose of collecting money but to assist the young farmer by way of advice and suggestions. The supervision is of a personal nature, and contacts are maintained throughout the period of the operation under that law. If the farm loan staff were increased with good public relations personnel, who could also be the appraisers, if you will, a great service could be rendered to both the borrower and the lender under this act with its new amendments.

I shall be watching the operations of the board under the new amendments very closely. I am confident that it will play a great and important part in the realistic farm program of the government, which has done so much throughout the years to stabilize agriculture, particularly during the last two decades. I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for keeping so close to my notes; this is the first time that I have adhered so closely to my text.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I rise on a point of privilege. The hon. member stated that the province of Saskatchewan has legislation prohibiting the making of loans on farms. That is incorrect. He may be confused. Rather we have the farm security act, which provides security to the farm owner of a quarter section—

Mr. Mang: Just to keep the record straight, of which I am very fond, I wish to say that I did not say "prohibited".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The point of order raised by the hon. member for Moose Mountain was not a true question of order or privilege, in my opinion. On the other hand, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle had taken his seat and is not allowed to speak again.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I had a few words to say on this question during the resolution stage, but I do not apologize for rising again to re-emphasize one or two points I mentioned then, because this legislation is of considerable importance to a number of my farmer constituents.

I must say in the first instance that we welcome the legislation. Throughout the years the act has been of great advantage to many Canadian farmers, and this bill is some improvement. But I wish to re-emphasize three or four criticisms of the amendment itself and suggestions to the administration.

Again I say I cannot understand, after the experience with agricultural credit in the older countries and in view of the soundness of loaning money at 3 per cent, why our farmers are required to pay the present rate of interest. If there is any group of people in Canada who should receive money at something approaching cost, it is our farmers. I hope that when this bill goes before the committee the members of that committee will pay some attention to representations made in the house in connection with that matter.

Mr. Benidickson: It costs the government more than 3 per cent to borrow.

Mr. Herridge: I question that. I think this money could be provided at 3 per cent, particularly if we use the machinery we have in the Bank of Canada. I notice there is an increase in the percentage of loan that can be given on the appraised value of the property. That is an improvement. I think the amount could have been raised as high as 80 per cent, according to the representations of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Another point that is of interest to the federation is its recommendation for regional advisory committees. I am very much taken with that, because it is a practice that has been established in Great Britain, not only in connection with the advancing of credit but even in the operation of farms, marketing and a good number of other things connected with farming in general. I think it is very necessary, because there is a tendency for the board not to be in close contact with the farmers concerned and the particular areas concerned.

I agree with what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said with respect to the administration of the Veterans' Land Act. I find there is a considerable difference in the personal touch as between officials of the Canadian farm loan board and officials of the Veterans' Land Act administration who pay periodic visits to a farmer after the veteran has been settled and has received his loan. Under the present circumstances, because of the lack of knowledge of the local land and circumstances, and sometimes complete lack of knowledge of the capacity of the farmer who is seeking to borrow the money, there are frequently unnecessary rejections of applications for loans.

I wish to illustrate that in two ways. Since the last war a man in my constituency of Kootenay West asked for a loan from the Canadian farm loan board. He was an experienced man who had been operating a farm some 25 or 35 miles south of that point. In this case I understand the application was rejected because they had no confidence in the capacity of the land to produce. It was rejected because they had not sufficient knowledge of the land and the local circumstances. That man managed to get along without a loan. Today he has a very successful operation and a large herd of beef cattle, and I think the farm would be worth in the neighbourhood of $35,000 or $40,000. That man has accomplished that since going on to that land in the last 11 years.

Then I have personal knowledge of loans being rejected because the board's officials did not have sufficient knowledge of the capacity of the farmer applying for the loan. In one particular instance there was a well known rancher in my district who was formerly an officer in the Indian army. When you spoke to him you would not be impressed with his knowledge of agricultural affairs but, as a matter of fact, he was known by his neighbours to be a very shrewd and capable man who soon picked up the art of farming. Anyway, he applied for a loan and was rejected; and it was purely on that account. I can understand that being done without the knowledge of the man himself. I remember one occasion when he first started farming. He purchased 200 day-old chicks and got sitting hens to mother them. After about two weeks half of them had died. He sent for the poultry commissioner for the district, and I can remember the poultry commissioner discussing them with him. He asked, "Did you do this?" "Yes". He asked, "Did you do that?" "Yes". He asked, "What are you feeding them?" The man replied, "You silly ass; doesn't the mother feed them?" Because of that man's attitude and his lack of knowledge, his loan was rejected.

I can remember quite well another gentleman causing my wife considerable concern by arriving at our home when I was away and wanting my wife to attend to a certain matter. My wife suggested he tell her all about it. He said, "I try to be a gentleman, and I don't want to discuss a barnyard scandal with a lady". Anyway, he finally did. He asked my wife to go and gather up one of our white barn roosters because it was an abominably licentious fellow. Anyway, I mention this because I know one or two cases like that where keen, capable-minded persons were turned down because the officials made a shallow assessment of the man's ability.

If there had been a regional advisory committee that would not have happened in either case. A regional advisory committee selected from the local farmers' institutes, the locals of the B. C. federation of agriculture or from the locals of the British Columbia fruit growers' association would have known the circumstances concerning the land, and would have known the capacity of the individuals concerned. I think that is an excellent recommendation on the part of the federation of agriculture.

I also think something more should be done to promote a better knowledge of the act among the farming population generally, and to increase the business done. Instead of the officials making, as they do in British Columbia, a hurried trip into the interior to visit a farmer who has made an application, stopping at a hotel overnight and returning to New Westminster the next day, I suggest that they would be well advised to take the opportunity whenever possible to address meetings of farmers' institutes, locals of the B. C. federation of agriculture, even locals of women's institutes. Women are interested in these questions, and we have quite a number of women who are successful as poultry farmers. Incidentally, when applications for loans are made I think there should be no distinction as between men and women. By following such a course the officials would acquire a knowledge of local conditions, they would get in touch with the farmers themselves, and they would get a much better knowledge of the land and circumstances generally.

Finally, I suggest again that there should be a decentralization of the administration. In a province as large as British Columbia, a growing province where we want agriculture to expand to meet the growing needs of industry, it is not good enough merely to have an office in New Westminster. As I said before, in my opinion there should be at least one official permanently stationed in the southern interior and one in central British Columbia, in addition to the present office in New Westminster.

That is all I am going to say at this time. When the members of the committee are discussing and studying the bill I hope they will pay some attention to the various suggestions that have been made by members on both sides of the house who speak with some knowledge of the needs of their constituents, the requirements of the farmers and the deficiencies in the act at the present time.

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief. It is the consensus of opinion of the farmers in my area that there exists an unnecessary lack of co-operation on the part of the farm loan board, and while we welcome the many improvements we find them insufficient. The delays are unnecessarily long in the processing of loan applications. The impression is given our farmers that unwarranted excuses are made to delay the inspection of applications. For this reason there is little need to wonder why so much bitterness sometimes crops up toward the farm loan board in my area. Instead of showing a spirit of helpfulness and co-operation with our farmers, some officials of the board are permitted to give the impression that every obstacle must be put in the way of our farmers when applying for a loan.

In my area there is some evidence of discrimination by farm loan board officials against our French-speaking farmers. French-speaking personnel should be employed and made available, and the farmers of my area should be in a position to deal with the board in their own language. This is a right which is being denied many farmers in my area. I have in my riding thousands of families who speak no English, and they insist on their right to deal with government agencies in their own language.

Interest rates are unnecessarily high. The same observation applies here that applies to interest rates in the case of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Over the years very few of our farmers in northern New Brunswick have been able to have their applications for loans from the farm loan board approved. As a result of all these factors I have mentioned, our farmers have thrown up their hands and do not go near the farm loan board because they all feel it is useless to do so. Therefore I suggest that the procedure and the machinery for the processing of loans should be made more simple, and that facilities should be provided so that our French-speaking farmers can deal with the farm loan board in their own language.

The farm loan board should change their attitude of making loans hard to get, and adopt an attitude of co-operation and helpfulness toward our farmers. The restrictions should also be altered so as to make loans available to young farmers starting out. Loans should also be made available for operating costs over lean periods to help, for instance, our potato farmers who happen to be in their third year of very great hardship. The farm loan board in my area has a history of half service and lip service. It has never been an effective help to our farmers, and it has always been a case of too little and too late. A complete over-all shake-up is, in our opinion, long overdue in the farm loan board, as in so many other government agencies.

A whole new system of assessing the worth of properties should be adopted. As the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton and some members on the other side of the house have mentioned, our assessing for farm loan board purposes is often based on municipal assessments, which in my area run to about 50 per cent of the true value of the property. This means that in the long run the loans when finally approved, if ever, come to about 25 per cent of the value of the property. We also feel that the service could be improved by having a farm loan board office in northern New Brunswick.

Mr. Irvin Studer (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, a subject of this kind is of interest not only to farmers but also to all of the people of Canada. Because there are a great number of farmers and a great amount of money is involved, to the extent of nearly a billion dollars, no subject is of more vital and fundamental interest. The amendment of the legislation affecting the Canadian farm loan board is, in my opinion, one more instance of the government's advanced legislation on behalf of the farmers. It is the result of many years of experience, not only federal government experience but provincial government as well, because hon. members will recall that back in 1917 the province of Saskatchewan instituted a Saskatchewan provincial farm loan board. That board only operated until 1923.

Having profited from that experience, having determined what that board did not accomplish and determined to compensate for the lack of accomplishment and to profit from the experience gained thereby, the federal government introduced legislation in 1927 to set up the Canadian farm loan board. I think we should dwell for a moment on what was the cause of the inefficiency, if we can call it that, of former farm loan boards.

I have here the report of the royal commission on agriculture and rural life in the province of Saskatchewan, which deals with the reasons why the Saskatchewan farm loan board of former years was not as effective as it might have been. I mention this because there is a demand among members that the interest rate should be reduced. We are all agreed that we want the lowest rate of interest possible, but not so low that it will defeat the purpose of the loan. The conclusion of the Saskatchewan royal commission on agriculture and rural life, as found on page 13 of their report, is as follows:

> The Saskatchewan farm loan board was a useful but ineffective attempt to provide long-term credit to farmers on a provincial basis. Reasons for the failure of the board include: inefficient administration, interest rates too low to meet the costs of administration and of borrowing, difficult economic conditions of the 1930's and inability to spread loans over a larger risk area.

As a result of the experience of those years and with the discontinuance of the Saskatchewan farm loan board—the demise of it, it could be called—the federal government appointed individuals to gather the experience of all countries in the world with regard to farm loans. As a result of that experience, including the experience of the United States as well as that of every other country, the present Canadian farm loan board was originated and brought into existence in 1927 and became operative in 1929. Up to the present time it has lent nearly $1 billion. Hence this government, as the result of the wisdom of former people, has inaugurated a system under which it has assisted and extended credit to a great number of farmers and at the present time is extending those credits and those benefits to a larger number of farmers.

There have been some reasons mentioned as to why it is becoming more and more necessary to have government loans to farmers. There are several reasons. One among them is that private lenders are not lending the same moneys that were formerly lent, particularly in western Canada. I have before me here a brief submitted by Sol. Sinclair who is professor of agricultural economics at the University of Manitoba, who is a master of science and a doctor of philosophy. I think he was appointed by the Manitoba federation of agriculture and co-operation. The brief is entitled "Government action for long term credit for farmers in western Canada". This is a recent brief, being dated January 19, 1955. He gives instances of the situation in regard to private centralized lenders that were formerly and are still in operation in western Canada particularly, but to a much lesser extent than formerly. He says that the decline in loaning set in mostly from 1947. He mentions that the decline has been continuous, and is especially marked for Saskatchewan. Then he says:

> For example, in 1947, holdings—

That is private lenders' holdings in the province of Saskatchewan.

> —in that province were $30,185,000.

That was in 1947.

> In 1953, they had declined to $8,125,000.

Or in other words their lendings declined.

> In Alberta and Manitoba, the decline, while evident, was not as drastic. For example, the 1947 holdings of these companies in Manitoba amounted to $7,297,000 and in 1953, they were $5,362,000.

That indicates what the private, centralized lenders think of the situation throughout that particular area. But here is a conclusion at which this professor arrives. At the end of that particular column he mentions the reason for the decline. He says:

> This is due to the restrictive legislation relative to farm mortgages and their collection that exists in these two latter provinces.

The reference is to Saskatchewan and Alberta. That is not my opinion. It is the opinion of a professor of economics. If that is the situation, then we should do something throughout these provinces to remove those detrimental effects upon the lending that could be in evidence were that restrictive legislation not in existence.

In Saskatchewan we have some acts on the statute books. I do not wish to prolong this debate, but we wonder why the legislation is not used. Here we have the farm loan enabling act, which is chapter 209 of the revised statutes of Saskatchewan, 1953. It reads as follows:

> An act to facilitate the operation in Saskatchewan of the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

This is what it does:

> This act allows the provincial treasurer to subscribe to the capital stock of the Canadian farm loan board, sets up the provincial farm loan board to make loans directly to farmers or to co-operative and colonization societies and, in general, implements and supplements the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

I wish someone would outline to me what benefit this act has been to the farmers of Saskatchewan, if it has been operative.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Studer: The fact is that it has not been operative. If there is any government in Canada that should have the interests of the farmer at heart, it should be the Saskatchewan government. They are empowered under this permissive legislation to enable the farmers to take advantage of what the federal government is endeavouring to supply, and they in turn guarantee in effect what the provincial government may put into operation in Saskatchewan, learning from the experience of the past, learning from their own omissions, and thereby providing intermediate credit to the farmers of Saskatchewan, young and old, as the case may be.

One of the greatest reasons I think for the non-granting of loans in my part of Saskatchewan, which is the southwest area, is the fact that the land is poor in many instances. Over a period of years the land has not enjoyed the yield or the natural blessings that ordinary or normal land, we might call it, throughout the country has enjoyed. As a result of that fact, all lending institutions may be more hesitant in lending there than they would otherwise be. It is not a case of the farmer not being worthy. It is a case of the non-yield of the land over a period of years.

My understanding is that wherever land has come under the benefit of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, the crop failure act, for a period of 10 to 12 years successively, that is land on which anyone might be hesitant to lend money. After all, the only way in which the land can repay the loan is through its yield, or in other words through its productiveness. I believe that more than the ability of the farmer, the land or the economic unit is the fundamental basis on which the money is lent. If we could devise an institution that will lend money to everyone, regardless of that situation, I think all of us would be happy. Unfortunately that has not been in evidence. If the province would just fulfil some of its obligations, perhaps they would be willing to take care of this marginal situation whereby the people of Saskatchewan would be primarily interested, and it would not affect all of the people all across Canada.

As was mentioned by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle the young farmer now is obliged to pay cash or close to cash. That seems to be the demand. In former years it was possible to sell land under almost any long term of repayment, but in recent years or during the past 10 years that situation seems to have disappeared, and people wishing to sell their land demand that more of a cash payment be made, if not an entire cash payment, for various reasons, some of which may be the same as those indicated here in this brief to the Manitoba federation of agriculture by the professor of economics of the University of Manitoba.

I wish to extend the benefits, as does this government, to everyone who can in the least manner qualify. I think we must recognize the humanitarian sentiments of those people who live close to the soil, those people who wish to produce the necessities of life for the great number of people that are now in existence and will be in existence. They have humanitarian motives in endeavouring to provide the food for the masses. I do not think that our government institutions will be any less humanitarian in giving them proper consideration in connection with their right to a loan. I appreciate the efforts of all governments, provincial and federal, that may assist the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Hayden Stanton (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the farmers of Canada appreciate the fact that the farm loan act is being amended, through Bill No. 84, so it will more fully meet the needs of the farmers. But I feel that the farm loan act should be geared to meet more adequately the needs of the borrower, and should be administered with a more sympathetic understanding in the same way the Veterans' Land Act is administered. At the present time farmers of Canada are seriously in need of farm loans in order that the small size family farm may be restored to the position it rightly occupies within our agricultural economy. I believe that is why the small size family farm is fast disappearing. The young man cannot borrow an adequate amount of money to enable him to purchase the farm and continue his farming activities.

This may be attributed to three reasons. I can well remember that in most localities one was able to borrow money on farms. At the present time the lenders of money are looking for more attractive investments. The second reason is that elderly people who used to lend money are placing their money in stocks and government bonds. A few years ago an aged farmer could sell his farm and take the mortgage on that farm. Today it is impossible for him to do that because he would have to have a good sized farm in order to realize sufficient cash to purchase a residence in a town or village. It is necessary for him to receive almost the total amount of the purchase price of the farm in order that he may obtain a home for the remainder of his days.

I believe the size of the loans should be increased from $15,000 to $20,000. As we know, today farms throughout this country are on a much larger scale than they were. It is necessary, therefore, to have a larger down payment in order to purchase that larger farm. I find that the grievance throughout eastern Ontario, and I believe it is general throughout Canada, is that there is too wide a differential between the amount of loan that can be obtained through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and the amount that can be obtained through the farm loan board. I should like to give an illustration of that. A farmer may have three sons, two of whom may be working in industry for three or four years. The other boy is at home on the farm. The two who have been working in industry perhaps have saved $1,000 or $1,500. One of these boys is content to continue working in the town, but he wishes to build himself a home. He is able to do that through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and he can acquire a $10,000 home with a down payment of $1,000. The other boy may cherish the idea of going back on the farm. What does he find? In order to purchase a farm valued at $10,000 it is necessary for him to acquire enough money to equip that farm with machinery and cattle and still have $3,500 for a down payment.

This hardly seems fair. I hope when this bill goes to the committee for further consideration, the maximum amount of the loan will be raised to at least 75 per cent of the appraised value of the farm. When we speak about appraised value, it should be noted that appraisers are very careful and set a very moderate valuation. Generally speaking, the appraised value of the farm is somewhere near the assessed value, and that is nowhere near the actual sale value. I say that the 65 per cent of the appraised value mentioned in this bill means actually only 40 per cent or 50 per cent of the sale value. When this bill goes to the committee I hope it will be amended so it will meet the needs of the young men who are contemplating buying farms in the next few years. I was rather amused to hear the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Bennett) make the statement today that the farmers of Canada were in need of help through farm loans, and that their income is not as good as it has been in the past few years. He is the first member on the government side of the house whom I have heard admit that. With those few rambling remarks, Mr. Speaker, I may say I hope the bill will get further consideration when it goes to the committee and is brought back to the house for third reading.

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): I am very glad to have the opportunity of rising to support, in part at least, the proposed amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act. The part, of course, with which I am in agreement is the same as that with which other members have agreed, the part dealing with second mortgages. I feel it is a good thing that section of the act has been deleted. It has been a stumbling block on a good many occasions. As everyone knows, a chattel mortgage ties up the borrower's power to make further borrowings and for that reason has restricted the operations of farmers who have used both sections of the act.

In so far as the part dealing with the maximum amount of loan is concerned, I feel that will not materially add to the usefulness of the act. I feel it is important the government has seen fit to bring these amendments before the house and thus have what has turned out to be a very useful discussion on this particular piece of legislation. This indicates to me the government's awareness that the Canadian Farm Loan Act has not lived up to the hopes the government had for it. I think the figures placed on Hansard this afternoon seem to bear out that belief. When we realize that after 26 years of operation the farm loan board has loaned something less than $100 million to Canadian farmers, I think that points to the fact that in many ways the act proves to be inadequate. However, I think it is important to realize that these amendments prove quite conclusively the government has failed to understand exactly what the problem is. We have seen the maximum amount raised on a former occasion, and apparently that was not the answer; otherwise what is being proposed today would in all probability not be considered as a major part of this amendment. We must go a lot farther in considering what is necessary in this country in so far as agriculture is concerned when we talk about farm credit. I do not propose to speak for the eastern farmer but I do feel that in western Canada we have a problem which must be solved if we are to do something for Canadian agriculture.

I know we have been criticized in this house for talking about the surplus of wheat, for growing too much wheat, and so on. All of us from western Canada realize it is going to be pretty difficult to carry on in the west and grow the tremendous amounts of wheat we are growing and expect to get away with it. We have to make a completely new assessment of the whole western picture in so far as agriculture is concerned. I believe one of the ways in which that can be done is to bring about some kind of a comprehensive policy with regard to farm credit. We have to assess the situation in respect of a pattern of land tenure in western Canada. We have to make up our minds on the pattern of land tenure we are prepared to assist by way of a government loan. In this connection, there are two schools of thought.

The report made by the royal commission in Saskatchewan has been quoted quite widely in this debate, and I imagine it will be referred to again before the debate is ended. They are sure that this question of credit is a very important one; in fact, one of the greatest problems with which the farmers of western Canada are confronted. As I say, there are two schools of thought on what pattern of land tenure is best, not only for the farmer in western Canada but for Canadian agriculture in general. One school of thought thinks that we should have a large corporation farm which makes for efficient operation. The other school contends that we should support the family type of farm. I am convinced we should not argue in favour of the family farm on the basis of efficiency because I believe there is something else to be considered. In so far as agriculture is concerned, we should consider the family farm as a sound social structure. Therefore, the outcome of all of these investigations, the considered opinion of the people who have carried out this rather exhaustive royal commission investigation, has been to suggest that the family farm is a thing we should try to develop. I believe that any important source of credit that is to be made available to farmers should be based on the assumption that it is going to further the interests of and support the family farm type of land tenure.

At the present time banks and mortgage companies are not an important source of farm credit. While I suppose they have been considered an important source of farm credit in the past, yet I doubt whether they have operated in the interests of agriculture. Because of this, during the last 20 years, and more recently since the war, farmers have tried to devise some method of credit that would augment the types that are available at the present time. When I say that, I mean they have developed the co-operative use of machinery; they have experimented in some parts with co-operative farms; they have set up credit unions, and they have carried on with renting farms. In this modern day and age of mechanized farming none of these seems to be good enough. Therefore, we are up against the proposition that we must develop in this country some sort of credit that is going to be adequate to do the job that is necessary.

There are three categories of farmers who are in dire need of credit. First of all, there is the farmer who is operating what is commonly referred to as an uneconomic unit. He must expand if he is to stay in business. The result is, his financial position is such that it is very difficult for him to borrow money to get enough land to add to his own to make up an economic unit. Because of the fact the farm loan board is rather a cumbersome way of borrowing money there are a great many delays in getting the deal put through. The farmer who has already become well established and has rather large holdings is, by and large, the man who grabs up or buys up those extra parcels of land in every community, which should be available to the man who is trying to operate an uneconomic unit.

Then, we have the next category, the farmer and his son in partnership. As was pointed out this afternoon, I believe by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Mang), in many instances all of the equity that the farmer who is getting on in years has is tied up in the farm and under the terms of this act the son is unable to apply for a loan, and the father is in no position to move off the farm without a very substantial payment to get out of the equity enough money for him to live on for his remaining days.

Then, we have the younger farmer who is just starting up farming. Possibly he is in the most difficult position of all, because it is not too good to start up and be undercapitalized. That is exactly what happens when we have the type of legislation we are dealing with today. Not enough money is forthcoming. I would like to suggest that possibly the Canadian federation of agriculture have come forward with a rather good suggestion when they say that on loans up to $8,000 or $10,000, eighty per cent of the maximum should be forthcoming in those cases, to give the young farmer considerably more money than is called for under this legislation. Therefore, in the west we have the tendency for fewer farmers to get in possession of more and more land, and it has a rather disastrous effect on the whole Canadian economy. The farmers who are dispossessed move into the cities and add to what is already a very serious problem. By and large most of them are unskilled in the different crafts and so they are forced to take whatever labour they can find to do, and add to, as I have said, the already very serious problem with which we are confronted in this country.

I should like to take the province of Saskatchewan as an example and put on the record just what is taking place in connection with the pattern of land tenure in that province. What I am about to put on record was brought out by the royal commission. In every 10-year period 25 per cent of the farmers retire. The commission found out that by and large farmers stay on the land for a period of 40 years. Because they did that we have a 2½ per cent turnover each year, since there are 110,000 farms in the province. Each year there are 4,000 boys in that province who reach the age of 20 years. Because there is a 25 per cent turnover we have 2,500 farms available each year and 4,000 young men competing for them. This presents a serious problem because the majority of that land is being bought up by men who already have large holdings and are well established and they are developing these holdings into large corporate farms which certainly will be to the detriment of Canadian agriculture in general.

I would hardly make the statement that was made by the hon. member on my left concerning land assessment but I will go so far as to say that it is arrived at in a rather arbitrary manner and I do not think that method is too good.

I believe the act should call for 75 per cent of the maximum of $15,000 being made available. As I mentioned in the first instance, I am glad the second mortgage feature has been removed. I think that is all to the good. I also believe that the repayment should be based on the productivity of the piece of land on which the money has been loaned. In this respect I think the V.L.A. has gone a long way. I would like to see the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Canadian Farm Loan Act and some of the clauses in the Veterans' Land Act incorporated in one comprehensive credit bill. I think that would eliminate a lot of duplication both in office work and on the part of the field staff.

I would also suggest that much more could be done to safeguard the repayment of loans. I mentioned a moment ago that the credit unions have become an important source of farm credit. It will be argued by some people that the envious record established by the credit unions in Canada so far as repayment of loans is concerned is because the borrower's honesty and integrity is taken into account when loans are made. I know that this is true but nevertheless anyone who has had anything to do with credit unions knows that when loans are made those who make the loan are greatly concerned about the interests of the borrower. I think this policy could be carried out in any comprehensive government credit source for farmers in much the same way.

I think there is no question about it that the people who go out and appraise the land do an excellent job. I have known some of these men personally and as a matter of fact I have gone along with them. They do a good job in assessing the value of the land's productivity. I believe the personnel who are involved in this work should follow it up after the loan is made. I think these men should assist the farmers in seeing that they carry out good agricultural practices and should help them in order to see that their loans will be repaid.

When the bill goes before the select committee I hope some consideration will be given to many of the suggestions which have been made by hon. members during the course of the debate this afternoon. With those few words I conclude, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to take a few minutes to say a few words concerning this act. Any criticism that has been mentioned regarding the act this afternoon has, in the main, been levelled against delays and I am in sympathy with that criticism. One of the reasons for the delay is, I think, because of some of the regulations regarding inspection. I would hope that we could liberalize the terms and regulations to a degree in order that the applications for loans might be processed more rapidly.

Another criticism which I noted in some of the speeches that have been made refers to what I might call the human errors that are made by the appraisers. I am sure that in the main these men are doing the best they can in appraising properties, and again I would hope that they could liberalize their appraisals of the properties.

I heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) and by the hon. member who has just taken his seat to the effect that the inspectors should give technical information to farmers to whom loans have been made. I am sure that I would not want our inspectors to go about giving that type of information to the farmers because we have experimental farms, both provincial and federal, which can give excellent advice. These farms employ specialists in soils and farming practices. If an experimental farm is not close to the area where a loan is being made I would suggest that the agricultural representatives can and do assist farmers in problems of this nature. Because of the proximity of the agricultural representatives I feel that they can do an excellent job in advising the farmers in whatever locality they might be living.

One other suggestion was made this afternoon by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cardiff). He suggested that this act should be termed dominion farm loans limited. He then went on to suggest that the young farmers in Ontario in particular were not getting loans as they should. If any criticism at all should be levelled at government it should be levelled at the junior farmers loan board in Ontario because they can grant loans up to a certain sum to farmers under 35 years of age. I cannot see why any criticism should be levelled at the federal department here in relation to inefficiency or concerning the fact that junior farmers in Ontario have difficulty in obtaining loans. The junior farmers loan board in Ontario makes loans at 1 per cent less than this act calls for.

The other question I heard mentioned here this afternoon was raised by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stanton), who said that the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Bennett) was the only hon. member on the opposite side of the house who said there was some lack of purchasing power in the hands of the farmers and that farmers needed assistance. I would suggest that the hon. member for Leeds could not have been in the house on March 13 when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) spoke. The minister said, as recorded at page 2091 of Hansard:

> I have already said in answer to that question that I thought the farmer did require more than he is getting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it being five o'clock the house must move to the consideration of private and public bills. In view of the nature of the interruption and the fact that I understand by consent we will have the budget speech this evening, perhaps I could suggest to the hon. member that he move the adjournment of this debate.

Mr. Huffman: I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Huffman the debate was adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS

PERSONAL FINANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. J. E. Lefrançois (Laurier) moved the second reading of Bill No. 160, respecting the Personal Finance Company of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Lefrançois: Mr. Speaker, the bill is relatively simple, as it involves two matters relating to the company: first, the change of its name, and second, an increase in its capital stock.

With respect to the change of name I may say that this company is in effect a wholly-owned subsidiary of Beneficial Finance Company, a company carrying on an extensive business in the small loan field in the United States. Personal Finance Company of Canada when incorporated in 1933 was incorporated as the Discount and Loan Corporation. In 1944 it changed its name to Personal Finance Company of Canada, and now it is considered desirable that the name of the Canadian company be made similar to that of the United States company. Consequently it is proposed that the name should be "Beneficial Finance Company of Canada". The Beneficial company has had and used that name since 1914, and so far as we are able to discover, it is not similar to the name of any other company carrying on business in Canada.

As to the proposed change of capital stock, the presently authorized capital of the company is $1 million, all of which is issued and outstanding. At the time this company was incorporated, most companies of this type obtained authorized capital of $1 million. Now, on account of the amount of business carried on by the company, it is felt that its capital stock, to be consistent, should be increased to $10 million.

As at December 31, 1955, the company had in Canada 171 offices, and had outstanding in loans of $500 or less $18,317,989.27, and $41,934,604.27 in other business. In addition to the outstanding capital stock of $1 million, there was earned surplus of $5,368,571.66, and paid in surplus of $9,350,000.

In the light of these figures, it would seem that there could be no valid objection to the authorized capital being increased as set out in the bill from $1 million to $10 million.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): This bill, as I understand it, goes to the banking and commerce committee, and therefore little needs to be said about it at this time. Indeed, I do not know that we would be called upon to say anything about it if it were not that at the present time we are in rather an unusual situation vis-a-vis the United States in respect to the incorporation of companies. We have been reading, to our great surprise, that in several states of the union legislation has been pending to prohibit the entry of a certain Canadian company into the state by reason of the fact that not 51 per cent of its stock was owned in the state. I am glad to be advised today that in at least one of those cases, namely Maryland, the governor has vetoed the bill, and I presume that that ends it as far as that state is concerned. Nevertheless, the situation has arisen and it has raised a good deal of concern in people's minds.

Referring more particularly to this small loans business, it is a fact that one or two large companies almost entirely dominate the field. When we hear of the increase from $1 million to $10 million we realize that the operations of this company are of very large bulk. When we come to the banking and commerce committee, I think it will be relevant to consider these questions.

I wish to say quite frankly that we have reason to be entirely in approval with one aspect of the record of this company, namely, that it has come for incorporation here to the dominion parliament and has not come around by any side door. It is not merely incorporated under the Companies Act in one of the provinces, as it might have been, so I am informed. It has not come here merely for licensing, but has come here for its incorporation. Therefore we have the chance, particularly in the banking and commerce committee, to consider the whole situation.

The right to incorporate is fairly clear. The right to increase the capital is, I presume, clear. Certain questions arise and should be carefully considered as to just what are the implications of the increase in capital. In one way, of course, it is all to the good. From another point of view, it is the effect of the larger capital in proportion to the amount of earnings that is in the mind of the incorporators, and there is nothing improper in that. If they feel they wish their earnings to be measured against a capital, not of $1 million but of $10 million, which I understand is the new figure, there is nothing improper in that. I am merely pointing out that we have this situation that has arisen. It has arisen, of course, largely because of the fact, which we have noticed in Canada with some concern, that there is a very large increase of United States controlled companies.

It is interesting, in this connection, to refer to the speech made only yesterday by the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway—I think it was at the Canadian Club at Montreal —in which he had one or two interesting things to say. He speaks about Canada's political independence being, of course, a matter that is without question, one that was decided long ago. But he says that there still will be a battle to maintain economic independence. When we consider, as we must consider, the tremendous deficit that we have on our trading account with the United States at the present time, when we consider the very large amount that that means, and that we must receive in some way other than by the shipment of goods, either by borrowing or otherwise, it raises the whole question of United States influence and domination in our country. I hope that the meeting of the banking and commerce committee will be a natural place to discuss this matter, particularly by reason of the legislation still pending in four states of the United States.

Before I take my seat, I should add that I am informed that this is a company of high standing, that its directors are people of high standing and that the officials believe there is no reason whatever in the ordinary routine of matters why the request of the company for the change of name, which I understand is just to conform with the name of the parent company, and for the increase of capital, should not be granted.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): As I have just come from a committee and I find that loans are being discussed in the house, it has occurred to me what interest we seem to be taking in the matters of loans and lending institutions during this session of parliament. If one looks at the order paper one finds evidence of that. The government has on the order paper Bill No. 51 which deals with this matter and has as its purpose the reducing of the interest rate on some loans. I say "some" advisedly because some loans are not affected. I take it we can assume that this legislation will pass because the bill has already received second reading in the house.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knight: I refer to Bill No. 51, Mr. Speaker. Bill No. 51 has been approved on second reading by the house. It is a restricting bill, a bill restricting the amount of interest which may be charged by such institutions as the Personal Finance Company. Then we had a private member's bill, Bill No. 3, introduced by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). Then we have Bill No. 160, and there is another such bill on the order paper, Bill No. 166. Altogether we have a lot of bills connected with the lending of money.

I referred to the government legislation, Bill No. 51, which restricts the amount of interest and has already been approved on second reading. It purports to reduce the amount of interest which these companies can legally charge, but I have noticed that for the type of loan most frequently indulged in by these people who borrow from these companies the interest rate is unchanged. I refer to small loans of $300 or less.

In the case of the $500 loan there is a slight reduction, but let me point out that the reduction is very slight. Whereas the legal rate has been 24 per cent per annum or less, as a result of the reduction by statute the rate on a $500 loan will amount to something less than 22 per cent per annum. That is the rate these companies will be allowed to charge for such a loan. I am still of the opinion that the rate of interest is much too high. The record of these companies has been one of very little loss and I doubt very much whether people who borrow $500 temporarily should have to pay as high an interest rate as almost 22 per cent. If my memory serves me right, we were informed in the debate on Bill No. 51 that 72 per cent of small loans made are in these two particular categories, so that actually 72 per cent of loans are scarcely affected in the matter of an interest reduction by Bill No. 51.

I may have given the impression already, and if I have it is the correct one, that I am not particularly fond of the machinations or methods of conducting business followed by these small loan companies. I was going to say that I have seen too much distress caused by their operations and I think I will stick to the word "caused". Of course, these people are in trouble even before they go to these companies but I think they are in worse trouble after they have finished with them. In other words, only people who are driven by dire poverty, misery or want or who have got themselves into some type of financial trouble patronize these companies. I do not think anybody has ever been very successful in ridding himself of debt by borrowing money, certainly not by following this particular method which usually covers the simple matter of the transfer of one's debts from one place to another place with a greatly increased interest charge.

That brings me to the question of advertising, and I would suggest that the new name this company has chosen is not unconnected with the matter of advertising. The name proposed is "Beneficial". I can see that name blazing in bright lights down Sparks street, on Second avenue in Saskatoon or on some avenue somewhere else. This business of borrowing money is spreading almost like a pestilence and it is a queer comment on our much vaunted prosperity. I made it my business to look in the telephone directory and I found there that in the cities of Ottawa and Hull Personal Finance Company has eight offices open to do business, six in Ottawa and two in Hull. By a strange coincidence Household Finance has exactly the same number, six in Ottawa and two in Hull.

I was talking about the change of name to "Beneficial". Quite frankly, I do not consider that this or any other small loan company is beneficial. It is not even beneficient and it certainly is not benevolent. I mentioned advertising, and actually it was the advertising of these companies which interested me in their operation. It is very noticeable in any advertising you pick up that these companies do not state the amount of interest charged per annum for the use of the money. In fact, I have never seen any advertising in which they have stated the amount of interest. I want to emphasize the words "per annum". Oh no, they do not do that but they advertise that if you will just come along and have a nice little confidential talk with them they will lend you $1,200, let us say, and at the end of the first month you will repay $111, at the end of the second month $111 and so on.

When you come to look the thing over you discover that when you have paid back the amount of the capital you have also paid $132 for the use of $1,200 for one year. Sir, the point I want to make is this. I know there is the old principle of caveat emptor, let the buyer beware, but I think we also have some responsibility to see that people who are in pinched circumstances and have to borrow money are afforded some protection. I suggest that the type of people who make these $300 loans and in the circumstances under which they borrow the money are not people who are very capable of picking up such advertising and figuring out the rate of interest they are going to have to pay for that type of loan.

I have talked to sheriffs, I have talked to people who have seen the misery and poverty, who have seen the predicaments into which these people get themselves. The average person who borrows money looks at the $132 and says: "Well, it is costing me $132 for the use of that $1,200, is it not?" Oh yes, but you know the catch in that. On the basis of $11 per month it would appear as if that might be the percentage per annum. To some people it looks like 11 per cent. Some people are not too smart about percentages, and of course they wake up afterwards to the fact that they have been paying not 11 per cent but double that rate. After all, if they repay $100 at the end of the first month and $100 at the end of the second month you can easily figure out how much money they have in the tenth and eleventh months that belongs to the company. Actually they only have the use of $1,200 for one month.

Is there anyone who can deny that statement? What are they paying this $11 for in the ninth, tenth and eleventh months? If you figure it out the rate of interest is a little more than double the amount that it appears to be upon the face of the advertisement. If I had had my way, if I had had anything to do with the bringing in of the government bill No. 51, I would have made a recommendation with regard to these institutions.

Every institution that goes out to advertise that it is in the money lending business should by statute be obliged to declare upon such advertising—not what they are going to pay back at the end of the month; not these rosy things that you see in neon lights down on the main streets in these cities—the amount of interest payable per annum in plain English and arithmetic. Then people would know what were the rates of interest that they were assuming. But that is the one thing they do not mention. They do not mention anything about rate of interest. They just say, "Come along with your financing troubles to us. We will not ask any questions. We will just give you a certain amount of money and you pay it back so much per annum". I think that is my case for advertising. This advertising is continually deceptive. I have examined a good deal of it.

Another thing is this. There has been a debate in the other place on this particular matter. We are told that most of this capital which is invested in these small companies is foreign capital. One of the gentlemen in the other place said that he was shocked to learn that 83 per cent of the small loans field in Canada is owned and controlled by two foreign corporations. I do not know what the two corporations were; he did not say. He naturally asks, as would I, what is wrong with our Canadian financial institutions if they cannot make some proper provision for people who need money on a short-term basis. These foreign companies are United States companies, I presume, although the senator did not say so; he said they were foreign companies. I do not know, of course, where they get the capital upon which they operate. I do not know, for example, whether they come to Canada, set up their pawn shop or their lending company or whatever it is, borrow Canadian money from our Canadian institutions and then go out and farm it out to those unfortunate people who must have it. I presume the profits of the corporation, if indeed it is United States controlled, will be sent off to the company's country of origin. As I say, I do not know about that matter, but it would be interesting if somebody—the sponsor or someone else—would tell us just what the situation is with regard to it.

As I say, we have come to the change of the name. After all, one might say, "What's in a name?" It intrigues me to notice that the company has already changed its name a time or two. In the bill it is stated that the original name was the Discount and Loan Corporation of Canada and then later it was Personal Finance Company of Canada. I suggest that when one changes his name, he usually has a reason for doing so. I could not hear the sponsor of the bill very well but I think he said that the reason for the change of name is the fact that the original or parent company in the United States had the name "Beneficial" and they wanted to bring the subsidiary into line. I can understand that desire. But I also see some useful purpose in that particular name from the point of view of advertising. As I say, I know nothing against this particular institution. I have nothing whatever against it or any other institution. However, I think that it is a rather unfortunate business that so many people are finding themselves in the position where they are obliged to patronize these particular companies. As I say, I was first of all interested in their operations by this advertising which I think is strictly deceitful and which I think should be governed by statute.

I think that is all I care to say on the matter. I noticed that my friend the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) protested the other day that perhaps we should be a little bit careful in our criticism of these countries, that perhaps we might drive that capital out of the country or that we might stop this flow coming in here so that this money would not be available for the small type of thing. At the risk of being accused of trying to control other peoples' business, may I say this. I think we have some responsibility in sometimes protecting people from themselves. I do not think it is a good element in our social and economic life. As I say, I have not yet noticed anybody being very successful in his ability to borrow himself out of debt.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word on this bill because I take much the same view as does my friend the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) in relation to these loan companies generally. I was here when the small loans bill was before the house some years ago and when we reduced the interest rate from 2½ per cent per month, I think it was, to 2 per cent per month. But that rate of interest is too high. However, that is not the question before the house just now. The question before the house is a bill which proposes to increase the capitalization of this company from $1 million to $10 million and to change the name.

Like my friend the hon. member for Saskatoon, I object to the use of a name which is as deceptive as is the name which this company seeks the right to use. I do not want to be unkind to these companies but if I were suggesting a name for any of these small loans companies charging an interest rate of 2 per cent per month or more for the higher amount loans they sometimes make, I think I would call them predatory loan companies, for such indeed they are. I think it is about time that we passed—as I hope we are going to do—legislation that will exercise some control over this usurious business, for that is what it is.

I notice that Mr. K. R. MacGregor, our superintendent of insurance, in his report on small loans companies and money lenders for the year ended December 31, 1954, has this to say:

In my report last year, I referred to the greatly increased interest being manifested in the small loans business in Canada by established lenders outside Canada, more particularly by those with head offices in the U.S.A. Several of these lenders entered the field during 1954 through provincially-incorporated subsidiary companies and the same trend has continued up to the date of this report.

This report was made on November 1, 1955. Then he goes on to say this:

Another noteworthy trend recently has been the relatively greater expansion of business in the unregulated field of loans made in amounts over $500—

Those are the loans that do not come under the legislation now in effect.

—(herein referred to as "large loans") than in the regulated field of loans of $500 or less (herein referred to as "small loans"). The outstanding balances of small loans at the end of 1954 showed an increase of 15 per cent over the balances at the end of 1952 but the corresponding increase in the outstanding balances of large loans made by licensed lenders during this two-year period was 76 per cent.

Expenses are relatively lighter for larger loans, thus justifying a decreasing rate as the size of the loan increases, yet the present general practice of licensed lenders is to charge the same rate (usually 2 per cent per month, or the equivalent) for large loans as for small loans.

As he says, the expenses of making these larger loans is very much less than the expense of making the small loan, but since they are unregulated they continue to charge at least 2 per cent.

Definite information is not available for unlicensed lenders since they are not required to file annual statements under the act but some of them are reported to be charging more than 2 per cent per month for large loans. The practice of charging 2 per cent per month, or more, for large loans, along with the trend toward expansion of this field, suggests the desirability of considering an extension of the scope of the Small Loans Act so as to apply to loans up to $1,000 or even $1,500 and of reconsidering the maximum permissible charges for all loans.

I believe that is the purpose of Bill No. 51 which was introduced by the government at this session. We are told that 83 per cent of the capital of these companies, at least the ones to which we are referring, is United States capital. This Personal Finance Company is a typical example and I believe is one of the two large companies to which my hon. friend in the other place referred in his talk the other day, the other being the Household Finance Company.

Let us take a look at who the directors of this company are. There is the Beneficial Loan Corporation of Wilmington, Delaware, holding 9,825 shares and the amounts subscribed being $982,500. The amount paid in cash was $982,500. This represents the bulk of the capital of this company. The other directors have merely what is a qualifying capital investment. Of course, they are mainly Canadian. They are the front for this foreign small loans company. They are, L. A. Forsyth, Montreal, Quebec; 25 shares; amount $2,500, paid up; O. W. Caspersen, Andover, New Jersey, 25 shares; $2,500, paid up; W. P. Creagh, Montreal, Quebec, 25 shares; $2,500, paid up; C. S. Richardson, Montreal, Quebec, 25 shares; $2,500, paid up; C. H. Watts, Fort Lauderdale, Florida, 25 shares; $2,500, paid up; C. M. Benadom, Toronto, Ontario, 25 shares; $2,500, paid up; D. K. MacTavish, of this city, 25 shares; $2,500, paid up.

Now, those are the directors and the total amount of paid up capital, with the qualifying amount of the directors, amounts to $1 million. Of this amount $982,500 was paid up by the Beneficial Loan Corporation of Wilmington, Delaware, and $5,000 more paid by two gentlemen in the United States. There is the situation. They come along and say to us that our business is so profitable, our business is so large, that we need another $9 million of capital. Where are they going to get it? Is the Beneficial loan company of Wilmington, Delaware going to put up the additional $9 million? If that additional $9 million is put up, where are they going to get the funds to lend to the Canadian people? I think it is generally known that whatever the capital of these companies may be, and wherever they get it, like this one mainly in the United States, they borrow from the banks of Canada quite large sums of money in order to lend to the Canadian people.

I compliment the Bank of Commerce for going into this business, though it is limited by our bank acts as to the amount of interest that it can charge. Some other banks are doing the same thing. I think we should facilitate our banking institutions going into this business. I think the best form of lending in the country is the credit unions who are charging substantially 1 per cent per month. Of course, the participants in the credit union participate in any profit that may be made. These loan companies advertise, as the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) says, with bright neon lights. Read their tempting advertisements in the newspapers every day. As was remarked in the other place, they are spending millions of dollars in various types of advertising across this country. It is a profitable business being undertaken by foreign usurers coming into this country, borrowing money from our banks and lending it to our Canadian people at high rates of interest. They are draining off the profits into another country. As I have just indicated in this house by reading the directorate of this company, a paltry amount of capital was subscribed by these Canadian fronts of this Wilmington, Delaware company.

I think, Mr. Speaker, we should refuse to consider this proposition. We should refuse to consider changing this name which will tend to deceive our Canadian people into believing this is something beneficial, something in their interest. We should refuse to waste our time discussing it. I am going to move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue):

That the word, "now" be left out and the words "this day six months hence" be added at the end of the question.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I rise to add my voice to those who are opposing this measure. I agree with those who say there is no advantage, indeed there is a great deal of disadvantage to Canadians, that may be derived from the change in name. The second provision of this bill for the increase of capital stock is wholly unnecessary. I feel it is probably placed in the bill because the company is becoming embarrassed by the very huge profits it shows in its balance sheets from year to year, and relating those profits to the very limited capital now set forth. This would tend to further mislead the public if they wish to relate the profits of the company to the authorized capital for which they are asking a tenfold increase.

This bill, as has already been listed, shows that it has been considered by members of the other place and by the banking and commerce committee of the other place. When I saw that this bill was to be considered by the House of Commons I looked up Hansard of the other place to go over the debate that took place there to see what I could learn about this company and about the proposed bill. I found what seemed to me something rather amazing. There was in fact no debate at all. The bill passed first, second and third readings without any debate having taken place. I hasten to say that the bill was considered by the banking and commerce committees of the other place and I do not believe that the hon. gentlemen would go through the bill in a hasty manner. But no minutes were kept by the banking and commerce committee of the other place; no evidence was taken and therefore I was unable to learn anything from a verbatim report of their deliberations as to what they were able to ascertain about this company when the bill was considered.

I do not think that any advantage at all will be derived by the Canadian people from the passage of this bill. As I have been able to study the field, I do not think any advantage will accrue to prospective borrowers or to Canadian citizens generally by any further increase in the number of small loans companies, or in the number of money lenders.

The superintendent of insurance has already made the statement publicly that he was rather concerned about the number of new companies that were going into this field and the expansion of some of the existing companies. It seems to me that since all of these companies follow the practice of charging the maximum interest rate allowed by law, the smaller companies in this field are apt to show a relatively small profit, and in their early years of operations may in fact show an operating loss, and this will be used as an excuse or reason to maintain interest rates at the current very high rate that is now legal. If we leave the field to those that are now in it—and they are making very large profits—they could in fact afford to take a very large reduction in the amount of interest that they may charge their customers. I do not think the ordinary concept of competition applies in this instance, or in the extension of this field to other small loans companies.

As has already been pointed out, this is not a case of Canadians going into this field with Canadian capital. This is not even a case of United States citizens coming into Canada to perform a service with United States capital. The United States citizens and United States corporations who come into this country and develop our natural resources are providing jobs. They are adding to the real wealth production of the country no matter what we may think of their being here as compared with Canadians entering the field. But when the United States citizens come into Canada with very little in the way of United States capital and go to Canadian banks and borrow Canadian money and relend it to Canadians they are in fact, in my opinion, serving no useful purpose whatever. The amount of profit they make is a net loss to our nation, and I can see no reason why they should be encouraged by this type of bill to add to their business, or by other bills to set up new companies.

Of course, they want to change their names. They want to make it appear to the public that they are doing something that is really beneficial to the borrower. They like to appear as though they are giving him a handout, as though they are doing him a huge favour. I suggest that one of the reasons why these companies like to have an attractive name, an appealing name, a misleading name, is the fact that Canadians generally, at least partly because of the debate in this house and public discussion on this question, are becoming aware of the huge rates that are being charged by those companies, and this is an attempt, by this devious method, to make their business appear more attractive to prospective borrowers. They want to make it appear more respectable. I do not know why we should let them have such a name as "Beneficial" and use it in their advertising, as I say, in a misleading way.

In case hon. members may think I am talking of something about which I know little or nothing, I happen to have in my hand some of the literature that is being used by this company. The first piece of literature I have is a card about the size of a small blotter. It does not say what it is advertising. There is no company attached to it, but I am told on what I consider to be very reliable authority that this is one of the pieces of literature used by the Personal loans company. Here is the heading:

You are my pal!

That is the first thing. They want to get people in to ask for a loan and they say to a prospective customer:

You are my pal!

Well, of course, the prospective customer would be a real pal of the loan company if he came in and obtained more money and paid a very high interest rate. They might better have said, if you take a loan we will place you in the category of others that we consider to be suckers who come and ask for a loan. They go on and say this, after having said "You are my pal!":

That's what your friend, who needs extra cash, will say to you after he has come to us on your recommendation. You and he can depend on our treating him as a real friend, too.

A real friend at 2 per cent a month. I continue:

No obligation to you—but a real service to him. We like to say "yes" to anyone you recommend.

They like to say yes if they can fleece him for 2 per cent a month, but they will say no in a very certain manner if they think there is any risk in fact in making the loan.

Then, the second piece of literature I have —and there is no doubt about it; this in fact is something used by the Personal Finance Company because they have their name attached to it. They give the address of one of their offices in the city of Ottawa. This company must be making some profit. As a matter of fact, I can quote figures to show that it is making a very handsome profit. The report on small loans companies and money lenders for the year ended December 31, 1954, shows that on a total income earned on small loans of $3,769,000 this company made a gross profit of $923,000, or a gross profit of some 25½ per cent on the income earned. They are making a lot of money, and it is no wonder that in this metropolitan area of Ottawa and Hull they have no fewer than eight offices, six in Ottawa and two in Hull.

This piece of literature has this on the cover:

Take this good friend on vacation with you.

Then they say that they are going to have a cash credit account, and they go on to say this:

Take your Beneficial credit card on vacation and be sure you won't run short of cash!

Nobody goes on vacation expecting to run short of cash.

They tell you very confidentially:

Every year, however, thousands do run short due to an emergency like a car breakdown or some unforseen expense.

When you carry your credit card, these money emergencies needn't bother you. Because no matter where you are, if there is a Beneficial loan system office near, you can get the cash to tide you over.

It's a wonderful feeling to know for sure that the nearest Beneficial loan system office will be a friend in need. And thousands who never expected to use their credit card on vacation were mighty glad they had the foresight to take it along.

Here is more of the high pressure salesmanship:

Here's How Your Credit Card Works!

1. Your cash-credit card identifies you at over 800 affiliated offices of the Beneficial loan system . . . coast to coast in Canada and the United States.

2. Your cash-credit card means that you will never be a stranger in a strange town . . . the local manager will offer you service just as if you were one of his own customers.

3. Your cash-credit card can be used at home . . . or away from home. Should you want extra cash, present your card to the manager of any office displaying the Beneficial loan system symbol.

4. Your cash-credit card is free . . . you pay nothing for it. You pay only for the loan you take and the length of time you use the money.

I suggest this is another example of this kind of misleading advertising. The third card I have is somewhat similar but it has this to say:

We welcome this opportunity to serve.

This also refers to vacations and it suggests that you should get a credit card and then you can fly on credit.

For extra fast service fill in below and hand to cashier—or phone in for 1-visit service.

This is really prompt service; a phone call, one-visit service. It invites you to fly on credit. And all this can be done at 2 per cent per month. As the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) said, that is the thing they forget. I would suggest, as he has, that it should be a part of the law of this country that when a company such as this puts out advertising such as this they should be required to state that this credit policy will cost the applicant 2 per cent per month, the appropriate rate of approximately 24 per cent per annum. The card has some other things to say:

> Beneficial Finance System's cash-credit card—a valuable extra . . . at no extra cost!
> This exclusive card identifies you immediately at the more than 960 affiliated Beneficial Finance System offices in Canada, United States and Hawaii. With it, you may get extra cash in a hurry—either at home or away. You get this valuable card only at Beneficial Finance System offices.

I should like hon. members to listen carefully to this sentence as I read it again:

> This exclusive card identifies you immediately at the more than 960 affiliated Beneficial Finance System offices in Canada, United States and Hawaii.

In other words, this company which is asking parliament at this time for a change in its name from the Personal Finance Company of Canada to the Beneficial Finance system is in fact already using the latter name despite the fact that it has not had the approval of parliament. I can remember many instances of hon. members of the government announcing government policy outside of the house and saying that the government intended to put particular proposals before parliament, but before those proposals were placed before parliament the facts of those proposals had become the law of the country. Many of us have said it was an affront to parliament that the government by statement should in fact inaugurate a change in the law. But here is an affront to parliament by a private company. This company has the effrontery to come to parliament now and ask to have its name changed when in fact the company has already been using the new name in the normal course of its business.

I wonder if one of the reasons the company felt it could use this kind of advertising and could use this name in its Canadian literature is because D. K. MacTavish is a member of the board of directors of the company and appeared as the legal counsel for the company in proposing this bill when it was first brought to the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: Who is he?

Mr. Argue: Someone says "Who is he?" I have here a statement made by Harvey Hickey in the Globe and Mail of March 2 in which he refers to Duncan K. MacTavish as an Ottawa lawyer and president of the national Liberal federation.

The fact that this company has used the new name in its advertising without the approval of parliament for the official change should be sufficient reason for us to seriously consider the bill which is now before the house. We have already had this subject referred to the banking and commerce committee by way of Bill No. 51. I expect and I hope that the whole subject of small loans companies will be thoroughly studied by hon. members of parliament who serve on the banking and commerce committee. After we have had a thorough study of this entire field we would be in a much better position to judge whether or not a bill like this should in fact be passed by this house. If we say that we approve of this change at this time I wonder if we are not tying our own hands as far as the committee is concerned. We should have the opportunity to permit the banking and commerce committee to study this whole question thoroughly. By so doing we would be able to judge in a much more intelligent manner whether or not it is advisable in fact for this bill to be passed. Without having had the opportunity to learn the facts of the case from witnesses I certainly intend to vote for the six months hoist and later to vote against second reading of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, may I move the adjournment of the debate?

On motion of Mr. Argue the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved:

> That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on the first day of spring one cannot help feeling buoyant and optimistic, and I think that what I have to say tonight will bear out that we have had a buoyant and optimistic year.

The world economic situation has during the past year shown nothing but solid progress in almost every civilized country. While the increase in economic activity has been most apparent in North America, substantial increases have also occurred in the United Kingdom, continental Europe and other parts of the world, and the flow of world trade has been very considerably enlarged. For many countries, this improvement came on top of an impressive growth of economic activity in previous years.

Continued rapid expansion in both investment and consumption expenditures has brought on a renewal of inflationary pressures in many countries; but it is highly encouraging that the general tendency has been to counter these pressures by fundamental monetary and fiscal policies which, in our judgment, go to the root of the trouble, rather than by a relapse into physical restrictions and controls.

As for our own economy, hon. members will recall that the situation at the time of the last budget was somewhat clouded. It was clear that we were beginning to recover from the recession of 1954, but the rate of recovery was still uncertain. To me it seemed that the prospects for economic expansion were reasonably good, and I based my revenue forecasts on the expectation that there would be an improvement of at least 5 per cent in production, and that the gross national product would reach an annual rate of about $26 billion by the end of the year. There were many who felt that such a view was altogether too sanguine. As a matter of fact, at a later time during the year, someone wrote that he could only conclude that some of the optimism of the Minister of Trade and Commerce had rubbed off on the new Minister of Finance. I would like to say that I would be happy if other qualities of the Minister of Trade and Commerce were also to rub off on me.

Mr. Fleming: Be careful.

Mr. Harris: In the event, the Canadian economy advanced rapidly and continuously throughout 1955 and total production for the year as a whole was about $26½ billion. This was some 10 per cent greater than 1954 and nearly 9 per cent higher than the level of 1953. Since the average cost of living remained fairly stable, there was a significant increase in the wealth and welfare of most Canadians. More people were at work than ever before, unemployment was greatly reduced, wages and incomes were higher and the consumption of goods increased substantially. By virtually every standard, 1955 was a year of exceptional economic advance.

Nevertheless, some sectors of industry and agriculture have not fully shared in this rate of progress. For example, wheat farmers had a much better than average crop, but during the first part of the crop year were unable to deliver as much as all of us would like to have seen. However, this has changed materially since the session began, and sales have greatly improved.

Geography and climate impose upon us a substantial amount of winter unemployment but conditions are distinctly better this year than they were last winter. Part of this improvement is due to the response of industry and commerce to the program of promoting more winter employment initiated by my colleague the Minister of Labour.

However, admitting some unevenness in the rate of expansion, it is clear that Canada as a whole enjoyed an extraordinarily active and encouraging year in 1955 and that the momentum of expansion is still carrying us forward.

Perhaps I may be permitted to emphasize certain features of this expansion. The progress we have made over the last year or more can be related to at least three important factors: a high level of exports, a large program of capital investment, including residential housing, and a continuing increase in consumer expenditures. These were the things that caused production, employment and incomes to grow so rapidly. But behind all these things lay something less tangible, but fundamentally important and essential,—the confidence of Canadians in the economic future of our country.

The particular forces which encourage economic expansion are so inter-related that it is difficult to single out the one which was of most importance in 1955. However, I think that I would put the renewed growth of exports first on my list.

Canada's ability to produce and export is a measure of the enterprise of those Canadian individuals and companies—and of non-residents too—who have explored and developed our natural resources, or planned these new or enlarged mills, factories and mines, and of the workers and technical staffs who build or operate them.

On the demand side, the briskness of the United States economy in 1955 was the biggest single factor in the expansion of our exports. Our exports to the United States increased by $250 million out of a total increase in exports of about $400 million. However, the increase in our exports to our other traditional markets overseas in 1955 was also impressive. There was a 20 per cent increase in our sales to the commonwealth, and exports to western Europe increased 11 per cent.

With a very large program of capital investment taking place in Canada, and with consumption expenditures running at higher levels, imports also rose sharply in 1955. But it should be noted that fully two-thirds of our increased imports are accounted for by increased raw materials, machinery and equipment for Canadian factories and industries. Over $400 million of the $600 million increase in imports consisted of such items as industrial machinery and equipment, primary iron and steel, aircraft and automobile parts, farm machinery, crude petroleum and rubber, raw cotton and raw wool. Our heavy expansion of capital investment, part of which was made possible by foreign investment, not only made necessary these large imports of capital goods and raw materials, but also created many thousands of new jobs all over the country in secondary trade and industries which benefited from all this increased purchasing power.

The result of a greater increase in imports was a deficit on commodity trade of $185 million. This was mainly responsible for the increase in the total current-account deficit, which amounted to $665 million last year. The net inflow of long-term capital into Canada was less in 1955 than in 1954, the net inflow of short-term capital was greater, and there was no marked change in Canada's official reserves of gold and dollars. The value of the United States dollar in Canada rose from approximately 96⅝ cents Canadian at the end of 1954 to approximately 99⅞ cents Canadian at the end of 1955.

Changes in the relative levels of interest rates in Canada and the United States made the United States market less attractive for the issue of new Canadian securities than was the case in earlier years. This factor also stimulated a greater volume of repurchase by Canadians of Canadian securities held abroad.

The second dynamic element in the economy last year was the sharp growth in the amount of new capital expenditure. Here, too, the optimistic expectations of the early part of last year were more than confirmed by events. New capital expenditure rose by over 11 per cent to a total exceeding $6 billion and absorbed 23 per cent of our total national output.

Investment in housing comprised one-quarter of all new investment. Parliament has attached a great deal of importance to the encouragement of residential construction and home ownership. The housing legislation of 1954 made provision for further government encouragement and assistance by measures that are familiar to all of us. The success which attended these efforts has been most encouraging. In the last ten years almost a million new homes have been built and our cities and towns are being visibly transformed by the growth of new suburbs. 1955 was the first full year of participation by the chartered banks in the financing of insured residential mortgages and their entry into this field has considerably broadened the market for new home financing. 127,000 new dwelling units were completed during the year, an increase of 25 per cent over the previous year.

Another important stimulus to the expansion of the economy in 1955 was, of course, the increase in consumer expenditures on goods and services. This was particularly striking in the case of durable goods. Total sales of consumer goods and services increased by nearly 7 per cent or almost twice the increase of the previous year. Allowing for the growth of population, this means that the consumption of the average individual showed a 4 per cent increase, the largest annual increase since the war. A significant portion of this increase was the result of a wider use of instalment credit, but the principal explanation is the growth of employment and the increases in wages and salaries.

A year ago I referred to the part played by federal welfare and income maintenance policies in the stabilization of economic activity. During 1954 when business and employment in many sectors were failing to rise, or even declining, such measures as unemployment insurance, family allowances and the like automatically served to maintain incomes and employment. I have heard it said that the tax reductions of my last budget helped as well.

During 1954 the policy of the Bank of Canada was directed towards easy monetary conditions and the positive encouragement of enterprise so far as the availability of credit was concerned, and this policy was still in force at the beginning of 1955. As the slack in the economy was taken up, monetary policy shifted to one of neutrality and then to one of restraint. With the rapid growth of production in almost every direction, the possibility of shortages of such items as steel, cement, building materials, and of certain kinds of labour began to appear, and in these circumstances the Bank of Canada's operations were directed increasingly towards moderating the rate of expansion in the use of credit.

Looking now to the year ahead I feel that the evidence points to a continuation of the progress that the economy enjoyed in 1955. Both in the United States and overseas, the economic situation remains favourable so that we can anticipate a further growth in exports. Within Canada itself there are many other indications that 1956 should be a year of further expansion. The present investment intentions of industry, business and governments are much higher than they were last year, according to the survey tabled by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) recently.

We cannot expect, however, to see a physical rate of growth this year equal to that of 1955 when we had a certain amount of slack to begin with so I think that for purposes of revenue forecasting I should not count on an increase in the total national product of more than 5 per cent over last year, this being about the average annual rate of increase in recent years. Assuming stable prices, average crops and no untoward events, this would give a gross national product of close to $28 billion.

The blessings of an economy operating at a high level are pleasant indeed to a minister of finance but they bring with them new responsibilities for all of us. The objective should be to maintain a steady growth in economic activity without the process of expansion giving rise to inflation and instability. Consequently, in times like the present when private expenditures are expected to rise still further, the federal government itself has a special responsibility to see that its fiscal policies continue to be directed towards economic stability. The use of the flexible instruments of monetary policy is also being directed towards this objective. But careful judgment and wise spending policies are not solely matters of concern to public authorities. They are the normal responsibility of each one of us, regardless of his role in the economy.

I turn now to report on the government's accounts for the fiscal year which will be closing a few days hence. At this time I can indicate only approximate figures because it will be several months before our books of account can be finally closed and audited.

Hon. members will recall that a year ago I budgeted revenues this year at $4,202 million, expenditures at $4,362 million, and consequently a deficit of $160 million. The result I am glad to say has been considerably better. In fact, our revenues will be about $4,385 million, or 4 per cent greater than forecast, our expenditures $4,437 million, or 2 per cent above forecast, and our deficit will be $52 million, or only about one-third of my earlier expectations.

The increase in revenues is a reflection of a rate of recovery and expansion somewhat greater than I had felt justified in assuming a year ago. Of the increase in expenditures over forecast, which amounted to $75 million, $20 million represents the wheat storage costs absorbed this year in accordance with legislation passed a few weeks ago; $5 million is on account of the support of agricultural prices and $15 million represents higher charges for interest on the public debt.

In addition to our outlays for government services which are included in the budgetary accounts, we have as usual made loans and advances and disbursed large sums for a variety of other essential purposes. During the fiscal year these outlays, all of which of course have been authorized by parliament, will amount to $285 million. To meet them we will have substantial sums available from non-budgetary sources, details of which are given in the white paper.

Although the budgetary deficit is $52 million, our cash balances at the year end will be about $295 million higher than a year ago. This is the result of receipts of $385 million from annuity, insurance and pension accounts, the repayment of loans and investments and other non-budgetary sources plus an increase of $245 million in our debt outstanding in the hands of the public, less the $285 million paid out for loans, advances and other non-budgetary purposes.

Our public debt operations during 1955-56 have included the redemption or refinancing of a large volume of matured or called bond issues. A notable feature of the year's operations has been the net increase of about $710 million in the amount of treasury bills outstanding reflecting the government's desire to meet the growing market demand for short-term securities. Net sales of Canada savings bonds series 10 are estimated at $645 million. In addition to the refunding or conversion of treasury bills, new securities were issued amounting to $3,230 million and old securities were redeemed or acquired for our sinking fund or securities investment accounts in the amount of $2,985 million. As a result, our unmatured debt held outside these government accounts was increased during the year by $245 million.

Interest rates rose sharply during the year at home and abroad, particularly on short-term securities. The average rate of interest on the government's unmatured debt will be about 2·86 per cent at the year end compared with 2·74 per cent at the beginning of the year.

I should like at this point to report briefly on the operations of the old age security fund during the fiscal year now ending. As hon. members know, pensions of $40 a month are paid from the fund, the revenues of which are derived from a 2 per cent tax on sales, a 2 per cent tax on corporation profits and a 2 per cent tax on personal incomes (with a maximum individual payment of $60). Pension payments from the fund during the year are about $366 million, revenues about $316 million and the deficit for the year of about $50 million has been financed by a temporary loan from the Minister of Finance. Following the practice introduced last year I propose to ask parliament in the June supplementary estimates for authority to charge the past year's deficit to 1956-57 expenditures.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

The subject of federal-provincial relations has taken up a good deal of our time during the past twelve months. There have been four meetings of premiers, as well as other conferences of ministers. Last April we met to agree on an agenda and to conduct a general consideration as to those questions which seemed to be most urgent. In June we laid the ground work for a federal contribution to provincial costs of providing unemployment assistance not covered by unemployment insurance and other federal policies. In October we discussed the whole field of federal-provincial fiscal relations. In January we examined the question of health insurance.

It was also in January that the Prime Minister communicated to the provincial governments definite proposals respecting federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, and these were the subject of the last meeting of premiers eleven days ago. In commenting upon our federal-provincial fiscal proposals this evening, I do not need to go into detail, because parliament has been kept fully informed. In broad outline we have proposed:

First, that the federal government make unconditional equalization payments to provincial governments to bring their yield of certain standard tax rates applied to personal incomes, corporation incomes and successions, on a per capita basis up to the average per capita yield in the two provinces with the highest per capita yields.

Second, that whenever necessary the federal government makes unconditional stabilization payments to provincial governments to bring their available revenue in these tax fields up to a specified guaranteed minimum.

Third, that the federal government offer five-year tax rental agreements to the provincial governments, the annual payment being the estimated yield of the standard rate in that province.

Fourth, in provinces and fields where no tax rental agreement has been made, the federal rate of tax applicable in that province and field be reduced by the standard rate, leaving that provincial government free to impose whatever rate it deems appropriate.

Fifth, where a provincial government prefers to impose its own tax, the federal government at the request of the provincial government would be prepared to enter into a tax collection agreement under certain conditions on a fee basis, provided the provincial basis and rate of tax did not differ from the standard rate.

[Mr. Harris.]

Our first suggestions made in October would have provided an increase in provincial revenues from these sources in 1957-58 of about $65 million, or 12 per cent over the estimated payments that would be payable in 1957-58 were the present agreements renewed without change. In successive negotiations we have improved our proposals in several ways, including increasing the standard rate on corporation incomes from 8½ percentage points to 9 percentage points; putting all calculations on a current year basis instead of a preceding year basis; and offering to withdraw from the insurance premium tax field in favour of the provincial governments. We have also improved considerably our first suggestions respecting the guaranteed minimum to the provincial treasuries.

The sum total of these improvements in our offer has been to enlarge the increase in provincial revenues available from these sources from the $65 million of last October to $109 million in February.

I should explain that all the figures I am using relating to 1957-58 are not forecasts but calculations based on an assumption that total revenues from these three tax fields will increase by 5 per cent per annum over the 1955 figures.

On this assumption our proposals would make available to the provincial governments in 1957-58 revenues of $640 million. In the same year the present tax rental agreements if renewed without change would provide $531 million. Having regard to our national responsibilities and commitments we cannot see how we can go further. Under all the circumstances we believe our offer is eminently fair and that it is reasonable and realistic in the light of federal and provincial responsibilities.

As a result of further consideration since March 9, we are, however, prepared to make an improvement in the stabilization feature of the proposals. Our offer hitherto has been that the revenue available to a provincial government under these arrangements will be not less than the highest of, (a) the dollar amount received or available in the final year of the present agreements, or (b) the per capita rate paid or available in that year, or (c) 90 per cent of the average of the two preceding years under the new arrangements. We are now prepared to give the further guarantee that the amount available will be not less than the amount that would have been available if the present tax rental formula had been continued throughout the next five years, nor will it be less than 95 per cent of the average of the two preceding years under the new arrangements. Every province is therefore guaranteed that under the new arrangements it can never get less than it would have received had the present agreements been renewed without change, and that above this floor it will have access to the revenues from the insurance premium tax.

Since both the federal government and the provincial governments must have time to make decisions and to set up any consequential administrative machinery, we propose to introduce legislation later in this session to prescribe the nature of and to provide authority for unconditional equalization payments and unconditional stabilization payments to provincial governments, and to authorize the government to enter into tax rental agreements or tax collection agreements.

The Prime Minister has written to the premiers on these matters, and the letters will be tabled tomorrow.

Before I turn to the question of how we should raise our essential revenues in the coming year, there are two other matters in the field of finance to which I should like to make reference.

First, a few words about credit unions and co-operative savings and lending societies. These have been growing very rapidly in numbers, membership and resources during the past fifteen years. In 1940 there were over 1,000 societies with assets of $25 million. The most recent figures available indicate that there are now more than 4,000 societies with over 1,600,000 members and close to $600 million of assets. Members' savings and deposits in these credit unions exceed $500 million and loans to members $350 million. Clearly the credit union or co-operative savings society is filling a most useful and rapidly expanding role in our financial system. We are getting a number of requests to treat credit unions, for a variety of purposes, as if they were banks, and particularly to allow them to participate in various kinds of government guaranteed loans.

May I make it clear that the federal government has no intention or desire to intervene in the general field of co-operative credit societies, but we are prepared to sit down with interested groups to discuss under what circumstances and conditions we could properly extend to them privileges and opportunities which are not now open to them. I hope to arrange such discussions shortly, and I should add, Mr. Speaker, we have already had some informal discussions on the subject.

May I repeat that it is not our desire to extend our supervision in this field unless, and only to the extent that credit unions may desire to participate in these government activities.

The second matter is our regulations affecting trade in gold.

Late in 1931, when the United Kingdom and Canada went off the gold standard, the export of gold was made subject to a system of licensing administered by the Minister of Finance. At the same time arrangements were made with Canadian gold producers whereby all newly mined Canadian gold was turned over to the royal Canadian mint, and the mint became in effect the agent of the gold mines.

In 1946 and 1947, the international monetary fund, of which we are an active member, became increasingly concerned with the serious extent to which gold throughout the world was being diverted into private speculative holdings. In March 1948, in line with the international monetary fund's policy, which we fully supported, of discouraging hoarding, the government gave notice that gold imported into Canada after that date would not be granted an export licence.

In 1951 the fund decided that it was impracticable to expect uniformity in the measures taken by its members in respect of their control over gold transactions, and as world-wide monetary conditions improved our regulations have been liberalized from time to time. For example, in 1951 we allowed Canadian gold producers, under certain conditions, to sell gold in the world markets. In 1953 we liberalized the conditions under which we would release gold for industrial uses, and last May we undertook to grant export licences for gold imported into, or purchased in, Canada for safekeeping for account of foreign central banks and official international financial institutions.

We now propose to remove all remaining restrictions in this field. Effective tomorrow, both residents and non-residents of Canada will be free to buy gold for export or for safekeeping, and the regulations under the Gold Export Act requiring an export licence have been suspended. Mines agreeing to forgo aid under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act will be able to sell their gold wherever they desire subject merely to reporting their production and sales to the Department of Finance.

TAX POLICY

I come now to the question of an appropriate tax policy for the coming year. Last year I said that with our proposed level of taxes and a gross national product of $26 billion we could expect revenues to flow in at the rate of about $4,350 million. In the event our gross national product went a bit over $26 billion, and our revenues were $4,385 million,—which is quite a close fit to my forecast.

I said earlier I am now assuming a gross national product of about $28 billion for 1956, and on that basis I would expect our present tax structure to produce revenues of $4,775 million. This is a very large increase for a single year. The explanation lies largely in the way in which our corporation income tax returns flow in. Under the Income Tax Act corporations must pay their tax in monthly instalments, but their first nine instalments may be based either on their estimate of their current rate of profits or on their last year's actual taxable income. We know that profits in 1955 were considerably higher than in 1954, but our tax receipts are almost exactly the same. During the coming months our inflow of corporation income tax receipts will be abnormally high as corporations catch up on their 1955 tax liability and at the same time are paying currently on a much higher base.

If I may have unanimous consent I shall place in Hansard at this point a table showing the details which go to make up the $4,775 million of revenue which we would expect to receive in the coming year if tax rates remained unchanged.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harris: The table is as follows:

Revenues before tax changes
(in millions of dollars)

	Preliminary 1955-56	Forecasts 1956-57
Personal Income Taxes	$1,180	$1,265
Corporation Income Tax	1,035	1,315
Non-resident tax	67	70
Succession Duties	75	65
Customs Duties	475	485
Excise Duties	245	258
Sales Tax	640	675
Other Excise Taxes	260	265
Other Taxes	16	17
Total Tax Revenue	3,993	4,415
Non-tax Revenue	392	360
Total Revenue	$4,385	$4,775

I should like to say again that this forecast of $4,775 million, which is an increase of $390 million over the year just closing, includes a large element of non-recurring increased revenue in the corporation tax field.

While I expect this large increase in revenue, we also have to face very considerable increases in expenditure. The main estimates tabled in January show an increase in expenditure of $54 million. As I explained at that time, this does not include the 1955-56 deficit in the old age security fund which we will in due course be asking parliament to charge off against next year's expenditure. This will amount to about $50 million (a reduction from the $63 million a year ago). There will be additional obligations under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and also under our agreements with the provincial governments respecting unemployment assistance. We must expect some further expenditures in connection with agricultural price supports, and we shall have to find some further funds for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I have previously informed the house that some increases in salaries and rates of pay in the public service are about due. I cannot yet say what this will cost, but when I point out that each one per cent increase across the board in civil salaries and wages would add about $9 million to our expenditures next year, (including the required matching lump sum payment into the superannuation account), the house will realize that this may be a very considerable sum.

All in all, and after making due allowance both for further supplementaries and lapsings, I cannot promise expenditures of less than $4,650 million in the coming year.

Before proceeding, I should like to put this figure in context. The house will be aware that the gross national product in current dollars has been increasing on the average over the past few years at a rate of just over 5 per cent per year. Many of the increases in the expenditures of the government flow from these rates of growth. This is most apparent in some of the heaviest items of expenditure in the statutory category, but it also has a bearing on the scale of service required and other costs that must be met. In many fields the services provided by the federal government have to expand along with the increase in population and national production. I need only mention such things as the provision of inspection services of all kinds, customs administration, trade promotion, surveys, research and the provision of transportation facilities, for example. If these services do not keep in step with public need the expansion of the economy will itself be hampered. Also the government cannot escape the increases in costs resulting from the rise in salaries and wages which has taken place in the private sectors of the economy.

Against this background, the increase of just over $200 million in anticipated expenditures in 1956-57 over the previous year is at a rate somewhat lower than that of the average rate of growth of the G.N.P. in recent years. The greater part of the increase in anticipated expenditures pertains to statutory items, such as the servicing of the public debt, subsidies and special compensation to provinces, family allowances, and other welfare payments.

On the basis of the figures I have been using, what might be called the controllable expenditures show an increase of a little over 3 per cent, which is considerably less than the rates of growth in the economy generally that I mentioned a moment ago. This result can be achieved only through the continued exercise of effective control, economy and efficiency in the operations of the government. Despite the small size of the projected increase, a number of new programs have been accommodated. These include larger outlays for the Colombo plan, and for United Nations technical assistance and relief programs to the extent of $9 million, provision for the new five-year census amounting to nearly $4 million and increases of smaller amounts for the atomic energy program and for trade promotion.

The program of public works and other capital items for the coming year has been held down to immediate essentials. The main estimates which have been tabled indicate that the appropriations proposed to cover expenditures on public works and other capital items are down by nearly $10 million from the previous year. The increased amounts required by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and for the trans-Canada highway are more than offset by other reductions. In proposing small expenditures for capital purposes, the government is seeking to reduce the strain on the economy resulting from the very large increase in capital expenditures which private industry is planning to make during 1956.

As I have projected revenues at $4,775 million and expenditures of $4,650 million, we would have a surplus of $125 million under our present tax structure.

This sum of $125 million is about 2½ per cent of our revenues or our expenditures; it represents, therefore, not much more than a prudent reserve against unforeseen circumstances that may arise in the course of the year. Moreover, we had a deficit of $152 million last year and a further deficit of $52 million this year. But of course, an accumulation of debt of over $200 million in two years, having regard to our record in the past 10 years, is in itself no cause for concern. But clearly it is only sound and responsible finance to run a modest surplus in times as good as these we are now in.

TAX CHANGES

Although for reasons just stated it is not possible for me to recommend to parliament any reduction in the general level of income tax this year there will be some changes in certain provisions in the Income Tax Act. Of these amendments some will be mainly technical in their nature while others will contain substance of interest, but on balance there will be no appreciable effect on total revenues.

There will be some changes in the tax treatment of proceeds from plans under which employers share their profits with employees. In future under deferred profit-sharing plans, gains and losses resulting from investment portfolio transactions will be excluded in calculating the taxable portion. The dividend element in the income allocated to a member will be recognized for tax credit purposes. Also, there will be postponement of tax liability for the first three years on amounts allocated to a member of a plan if the unconditional right to receive such amounts has not been assured to the member within this period. With these changes our tax provisions for profit-sharing plans will be established on a pretty satisfactory basis.

Over the past year my colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) and I have given considerable thought to the general requirements to which pension plans must conform in order to establish the right of tax deductibility for contributions. We have concluded that it is desirable to revise the blue book which contains the general instructions regarding pension plans. In particular we have examined with some care the provisions relating to limits on the discretion of the trustees in investing funds placed under their administration and we have studied the urgent representations made to us for the removal of some of these restrictions. Our decision is that we should remove the percentage limitations relating to equity investments so that trustees will be able to govern their own investment policies in the light of the particular pension requirements of the plans under their administration.

Members of the professions and others who have been affected by a recent Exchequer Court decision which ruled out a deduction for convention expenses will doubtless be interested in learning that the act will be amended to allow for 1955 and onward the deduction of expenses for two conventions annually in Canada.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Home Oil case has created a situation which calls for some amending legislation. In brief the court decided that under the Income Tax Act and regulations thereunder as they were in 1949 and 1950 an oil producer was entitled to have the so-called depletion allowance calculated on an individual well basis rather than on the basis covering total operations. This decision has affected the basis in law for the policy which has been followed for the oil industry during the course of its development.

In 1951 the regulations which had been in force during the years covered by the Home Oil appeal were amended by the governor in council with a view to establishing greater legal certainty for the basis on which taxpayers in the industry were being, and had in the past been assessed. The reasons for judgment given by the court in the Home Oil case have created some uncertainty as to whether the present law and regulations as amended in 1951 are in sufficiently clear terms to support assessments made since 1951. It is proposed, therefore, to amend the law and regulations now to ensure that the intent of the 1951 amendment shall govern for the intervening period and for the future. This amendment will not deprive any taxpayer of his rights under the Supreme Court decision for the years prior to 1951.

In recent months there have been frequent references to foreign ownership and control of Canadian companies. It has been suggested that a certain feature of our tax law may be discouraging the foreign owner from allowing Canadian participation in his enterprise. Under our law the standard rate of tax payable by non-residents on dividends from Canada is 15 per cent. However, the tax is only 5 per cent on a foreign corporation if it owns all the shares which, under all circumstances, have full voting rights. It might be noted in passing that the tax position of the foreign company is not adversely affected by issuing for public participation in Canada other kinds of shares in the Canadian company.

This general provision in our tax law to which I have just referred has in many cases been modified by tax treaties with various countries in recent years. For example, in our treaties with Sweden, Ireland and Denmark a company may secure the preferred rate of 5 per cent on dividends if it has more than 50 per cent ownership of the Canadian company. Negotiations for tax conventions are currently active in South America, Australia, Holland and Germany.

By amendment to our treaty with the United States six years ago the percentage ownership required for the 5 per cent rate was reduced from 100 per cent to 95 per cent. For some time we have had this item on our agenda for discussion with the United States administration, and toward the end of last year the question of a further reciprocal lowering of the percentage ownership requirement was proposed. I have reason to hope that this proposal will be acceptable to the United States and that an amendment to our tax convention will in due course be effected.

Other changes in the Income Tax Act which are contemplated will be explained upon introduction of the amending bill.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

The resolutions which I am placing before the house tonight contain, as usual, some tariff changes. These are rather fewer than in recent years. One of the reasons is that tariff negotiations are in progress in Geneva under the general agreements on tariffs and trade, the results of which will be announced when they are complete.

Many of the tariff changes I am announcing tonight are matters of form, to facilitate administration, rather than substance. In a certain number of cases, however, the rates of duty are being altered. While all these individual changes are in a downward direction, the total effect on the revenue will not be significant.

Only one change is of sufficient general interest to warrant mention at this time. This relates to parts for agricultural machinery and equipment. Government policy has, of course, been that the parts, like the machinery and equipment itself, should enter Canada duty-free. However, certain judicial decisions by the tariff board, relating to the wording of particular tariff items, have resulted in important changes in tariff classification practices, and the scope of duty-free entry has been substantially narrowed. This undesirable result has been brought to my attention by many interested persons and organizations. The action taken tonight is intended fully to restore duty-free entry in this important field.

As I explained in my last budget, it is my intention to keep our tariff abreast of technical and industrial changes and, for this purpose, to refer tariff items or groups of tariff items to the tariff board from time to time. Since my last budget I have made three references and have received one report.

The board's report on potatoes reached the government in November; last month its contents were studied and discussed at a joint meeting between our officials, representatives of the growers, and representatives of various provincial departments of agriculture. I hope to be able to make a statement to the house on this subject fairly soon.

The next reference to the tariff board was primary iron and steel and the board is now well into its investigations. These will be followed by investigations into the closely related area of pipes and tubes of iron and steel. The reference on chemicals will be going forward soon.

I have two or three new tariff board references in mind for the coming year. One covers zinc and manufactures of zinc; another covers fire brick. Then if the board's program allowed, I would also think of referring to it a group of tariff items relating to the manufacture and assembly of radio and television sets.

It is clear that the tariff board will continue to bear a heavy burden. This point has been brought to my attention both by the chairman of the board itself and also by others concerned with the board's work. Accordingly it is our intention to enlarge the membership of the board from three to five; later in this session I shall introduce a bill for this purpose.

SALES AND EXCISE TAXES

I now turn from tariffs to sales and excise taxes.

For reasons already stated I am unable to propose any reduction in the general rate of sales tax, or in the standard level of 10 per cent for the special excise taxes.

A year ago I told the house of our intention to appoint a committee to study various aspects of the Excise Tax Act. This has been done and I am tabling at this time a copy of the committee's report. I should like to take this opportunity of thanking the committee publicly for the high quality of their work in this specialized field. It is a tribute to the business community of this country that objective and painstaking studies can be obtained so willingly from those who would otherwise be so busy with their own affairs. I think the country owes them a debt of gratitude for their willingness to take on these arduous duties in the public interest.

The committee's report is being given careful study by the departments concerned. I am unable to say at the moment how far the recommendations made by the committee will find a place in this year's amending act. Some of the recommendations involve some rather fundamental changes in the structure of the law. These we shall have to consider carefully. I think the most I can say at this time is that we are adopting some of the committee's recommendations for greater simplicity and certainty through making certain additions to the exemption list. These, along with some other additions, will be found in the resolution which I shall be tabling at the conclusion of this statement. The most important additional exemptions arise out of a broadening of the definitions of building materials and of production goods. It is estimated that the total reduction in taxes through these additions to the exemption schedule will amount to about $12 million in the forthcoming fiscal year. As usual it will be provided that the above commodity tax changes will be effective from midnight tonight. In accordance with standard practice my colleague the Minister of National Revenue has asked me to give notice that no claims for refunds arising out of tax reductions in respect of goods on which tax has been paid will be entertained.

Mr. Speaker, as usual, but with the utmost sincerity, may I express my appreciation to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) and his staff for collecting such a tremendous sum of money.

For several years past the publishers of Canadian magazines have made representations to the government regarding the increasing inroads of magazines from abroad both into their circulation in Canada and also into their sales of advertising. We have been able to help them to a small extent by some redistribution of routine government advertising. Nevertheless, their relative position has declined. A number of Canadian magazines have been abandoned and others have had to reduce the number of issues per year. Magazines from abroad have meanwhile extended their activities to such an extent that the long run continuation of Canadian magazines appears to be in jeopardy. Already, something like four-fifths of the magazines read in Canada are not Canadian, and the proportion has been creeping ominously upward.

Competition from abroad takes two forms. First, we have what may be described as normal imports; scores of magazines normally on sale in London, Paris, New York or elsewhere, are brought in and sold in Canada. Second, in a few cases, the publisher of a magazine abroad has arranged to put on sale in Canada an edition of his magazine that is quite similar to the magazine he sells in his home market but not identical with it. This special edition will usually differ from the home edition both because it prints a few pages of reading material about Canada and also because it sells some pages, often a great many pages, to Canadian advertisers.

We have been considering this problem for some time, and we have decided that, in this field, very exceptional measures can be justified—measures that certainly could not be justified in connection with any ordinary line of business or commerce. The publication and circulation of magazines by Canadians, for Canadians, telling about Canadians and what they are doing and what they have to sell, seems to us a basic and essential thread in the fabric of our national life. And I am talking now, not merely of the magazines that deal to a greater or lesser extent with broad political and economic affairs, but also about the magazines that circulate among housewives and businessmen and members of trade associations.

I wonder whether we could contemplate a time when we would not have a Canadian magazine, when there would not be an opportunity for persons with the talent and with the time to sit down and contribute an article of a critical nature on government or scientific matters or on some other topic, or if we could contemplate a time when our children could not read a magazine in which there would be Canadian stories based on Canadian history or Canadian fiction. I doubt very much, sir, if we could look to an occasion like that.

The government would be very reluctant, however, to interfere with the normal and traditional imports of ordinary magazines into our country but the special editions constitute a very special problem. They are relatively new arrivals on the scene. Each is essentially a by-product of some magazine published abroad and, being a by-product, its costs of production are well below the costs of a comparable purely Canadian magazine. It uses its advantage not only to enlarge its circulation but also, and far more serious to Canadian publishers, to sell its advertising services, thus diverting revenues from Canadian publishing houses. In recent years this diversion has become very substantial.

Accordingly, we have decided to put a special excise tax on these special editions. It will be at the rate of 20 per cent and will be levied on all revenues they receive from advertising. It will not come into effect until January 1, 1957 so that those concerned may have time to adapt their affairs to it. The tax will apply to all special editions, whether printed in Canada or abroad, in English or in French.

CONCLUSION

This concludes my review of our proposed tax changes, and I can now summarize my budgetary position. The total reductions in taxes I am recommending to the house amount to $12 million, and my expected revenues for the coming year will be $4,763 million, and my prospective surplus $113 million. I should again remind the house that in figures of these magnitudes there will always be some uncertainty in estimation, and that a variation of as little as one per cent in our estimates in either direction is a matter of close to $50 million.

I should like now to say a further word about federal-provincial relations.

I have seen it suggested that we have been seeking political rather than economic solutions in this field.

If by political solutions is meant taking account of national interests greater than mere dollars and cents, I believe that the objective historical verdict on the past year will be that we have in our frequent federal-provincial meetings given first place to the highest political considerations: the unity and welfare of the whole Canadian people.

At these meetings we have laid the foundation for a working arrangement with the provinces for assistance to the unemployed who cannot qualify for unemployment insurance under existing federal law; we have laid the foundation for a joint federal-provincial plan for hospital care whenever a majority of the provincial governments representing a majority of our people signify their agreement.

We have proposed a new—and for the provinces a more advantageous—tax-sharing plan to replace the tax rental agreements which expire early in 1957.

This is a record of achievement in this field which will be unmatched for some time.

Since I became Minister of Finance in July, 1954, fiscal relations with the provinces have been receiving the continuous attention of my department and of the government.

It appeared to me that, with the tax rental agreements running out soon, a very careful review of what had been accomplished by that system was in order.

Hon. members will recall that there were three main purposes given for the tax rental agreements—and I am referring here only to the post-war agreements.

These purposes were:

(a) To eliminate duplication and inefficiency in taxation as much as possible;

(b) To place the provincial governments in a more stable financial position, having in mind the necessity for providing a certain minimum standard of provincial services;

(c) To give the federal government in co-operation with the provinces sufficient control over the fiscal policies of Canada to permit the effective combating of economic difficulties.

The house, of course, knows that when I entered the Department of Finance I had no experience in these particular matters except as a supporter of this party and this government.

In considering our fiscal relations with the provinces, we have had the advantage of the unequalled experience and knowledge of the Prime Minister, who has lived with these problems since some eighteen years ago he became counsel to the Rowell-Sirois commission.

We have also had the advice and careful consideration of the Minister of Justice, who in 1937, as provincial treasurer of Manitoba took the initiative which was the real beginning of all the activities which have resulted in our present federal-provincial fiscal proposals.

It appeared to all of us that the objective of the tax rental agreements with respect to provincial revenues was much the most important.

Today it is inconceivable to think of going back to the pre-war situation where the provinces with smaller tax potentials had to fend for themselves.

If all the provinces are to carry out their constitutional responsibilities, there has to be some system of tax sharing, of equalization, which will make it possible for them to provide provincial services.

The other objective: to eliminate duplication and inefficiency in taxation is also a valid objective. The British North America Act gives parliament no power to limit the exercise of the rights of the provincial legislatures to tax their peoples for provincial purposes. What we can do is to shape our policies so as to remove the need for duplication as much as possible.

And we are doing that just as effectively with our new proposals as with the tax rental agreements.

As for the third objective, it is still desirable; though we can hope it will not be necessary for a long time to combat grave economic dislocations.

But, under our constitution we cannot control the fiscal policies of the provinces; all we can do is to make co-operation as easy and natural as possible, and our new policies, just because they do not require hard and fast agreements, will, I believe, make co-operation easier.

The situation as we saw it some months ago was this. One provincial government had steadfastly refused to make a tax rental agreement; the government of another province had entered into an agreement which the premier of that province called a stop-gap and a second best; and the representatives of another province were reported to be quite unhappy about being bound by a tax rental agreement.

Our task was to find a substitute for a system which was not acceptable to the government of a province containing almost one-third of our people, and which had won only the reluctant acquiescence of the governments of two other provinces containing more than one-half the rest of the people of Canada.

The tax rental system—good as it was—and it was a great advance over the pre-war fiscal chaos—had to be improved if at all possible.

There has hardly been a week in the past twenty months that we have not given consideration to alternative plans.

The new proposals were evolved gradually and the original suggestions have been greatly modified and refined to remove objections and difficulties.

This new tax sharing plan is a reaffirmation of our belief that the government of the nation has a duty to provide some means of sharing tax returns with those provinces which cannot, without extraordinary measures, find the funds to provide a Canadian standard of public services; it recognizes that double taxation can be costly and inefficient; and it is a reaffirmation of our belief that the federal system has virtues which, if maintained, will benefit us all.

I am confident that every Canadian today believes we should all assist the provinces to provide a reasonable Canadian level of public services in all parts of Canada; nationhood would be meaningless if it were not so.

I am also confident that our tax-sharing plan is not open to serious constitutional or practical objections; though, of course, I do not suggest that it is perfect or will receive universal approval.

But may I make it quite clear that not one provincial premier is on record as saying that this new tax-sharing plan is not as good as the present tax rental agreements; and I am prepared to go further and say that almost all of them have stated that the principle of the new plan is better than the present system.

As the house will understand, these matters have taken a great deal of time in the past eighteen months—not only our time, but the time of the provincial governments as well.

In all our conferences there has been complete frankness and a full measure of goodwill.

This, I attribute to the good sense of everyone present and to the fact that, while every one represented those for whom he spoke vigorously and firmly, all who sat at the table unhesitatingly conceded the fair-mindedness, the integrity and the sympathetic approach to the problems of the chairman of the conferences: the Prime Minister.

And I believe that what we have achieved will be a lasting tribute to his patience and his wisdom.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide, among other things:

1. That the sales tax on the following goods be repealed:

(a) boxes for farm wagons, and articles and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof;

(b) poisons used in agriculture or horticulture;

(c) vermiculite;

(d) material for use exclusively in the production of vaccine for prevention of poliomyelitis;

(e) certain building materials which are in addition to those already exempted, viz.:— additives for concrete; ceiling and acoustical material for buildings; hard surface composition yardage flooring for permanent bonding to floors; material for waterproofing and moisture proofing buildings; additional structural steel for buildings; soil pipe for buildings; tar and asphalt for roofing; skylights; ventilators and louvers, not motor operated;

(f) certain machinery and apparatus for manufacturing or producing goods which are in addition to that already exempted, viz:— structures which are adjuncts to or provide access to the machinery and apparatus for manufacturing or producing goods; repair and maintenance equipment used by manufacturers or producers for servicing their machinery and apparatus for manufacturing or producing goods; safety devices and equipment for the prevention of accidents in the manufacturing or production of goods; systems installed by manufacturers or producers for exhausting dust and noxious fumes from their manufacturing operations; equipment used to carry refuse or waste from production machinery; equipment for hospitals and first aid stations in manufacturing establishments;

(g) identification tags or labels for designating the grades or quality of meat, poultry, fish, eggs, fruit and vegetables, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof;

(h) goods enumerated in Customs Tariff items 409t, 409u and 409v, and articles and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof;

(i) antiques, as enumerated in Customs Tariff item 693 (ii) and (iii);

(j) national manufacturing, industrial or mercantile trade directories but excluding statistical, financial or biographical surveys, reports, year books or directories, and transportation, telephone, municipal or street directories, guides or rate books.

2. That the excise tax on the following goods be repealed:

(a) antiques, as enumerated in Customs Tariff item 693;

(b) settlers' effects.

3. (a) That the exemption from excise tax on the goods enumerated in sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) of item 12 of Schedule I be repealed when the sale price is one dollar or less;

(b) That the exemption from excise tax on the goods enumerated in sub-paragraph (c) of item 12 of Schedule I be repealed when the sale price is fifty cents or less.

4. (a) That there be imposed, levied and collected in respect of each copy of a special edition of a non-Canadian periodical issued to the public in Canada a tax of twenty per cent of the value of the advertising material contained therein;

(b) That for the purposes of sub-paragraph (a) a "special edition of a non-Canadian periodical" means a periodical printed in or outside Canada for publication in Canada

(i) containing editorial material at least twenty-five per cent of which is the same or substantially the same as editorial material contained in a non-Canadian periodical, whether in the same or in some other language, and

(ii) containing any advertising material that is not contained in such non-Canadian periodical;

(c) That any enactment founded upon this paragraph shall come into force on the first day of January, nineteen hundred and fifty-seven.

5. That any enactment founded upon paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this resolution be deemed to have come into force on the twenty-first day of March, nineteen hundred and fifty-six.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I don't think "there ain't going to be no election this year".

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Greenwood is happy.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, I am always interested in the applause which follows the delivery of this speech but I am always surprised too. This year I am more surprised than ever. Of course, if those sitting opposite were government contractors I could quite imagine that the expenditure of $5 billion would be very agreeable to them, but why they are applauding so vigorously the expenditure of $5 billion, because there is certainly nothing else to applaud, I hardly know.

The minister to me is an interesting study and I want to reflect on him for a minute or two. When I say "reflect" I do not mean in any unpleasant sense of the word. I want to think aloud about him for a minute or two. I remember that a year ago last November the minister, in speaking in Montreal at the tax conference, used words which interested me a good deal. He was quite new then and he teased us along that night. I was not quite sure what he meant but he did say that he felt a certain awe of the fiscal instrument that he found in his hand which could compel Canadians to pay nearly $5 billion. The amount he mentioned then was $4,800 million.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know how much awe the minister felt then but if he felt it he has certainly come a long, long way. We remember that last autumn we had legislation by letter—not by radio, as we had years before, but by letter. I felt that the minister was coming along when he did that, and tonight he takes it in his stride. Nothing seems to bother him. He seems to accept this authority that he has without question. He reminds me of the costermonger in the great general strike in England years ago. Vehicles had to move along the street with cards of permission. A costermonger was seen walking along with a barrow and as he got closer people could see a little card on the barrow which said this: "By kind permission of me own bloody self."

I feel that the minister is very much in that mood now, that we have just got to take what he does because, of course, with these serried ranks we must take what he does and be as well content with it as we can. The minister has been presented to us in various guises and I should like to ask which of them is correct and what he has done to live up to them. In the first place, the minister has been presented as a kind of prophet breathing fire and vengeance against all evil doers, all people who do not toe the straight and narrow line. Second, and this is really very amusing considering that, after all, he is only a lawyer, he has been presented to us as the barefoot boy from Markdale who is going to reintroduce austerity, thrift, saving and all the homely virtues which I suppose they once practised in Markdale. I do not know whether or not they do now. Third, we all remember the cartoon of a year ago in which he was represented as Hercules striking off the heads of the hydra, striking off the heads of the spenders. The head of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) rolled, I remember. Why he should be picked out I do not know, but I can see his head. It was off.

When the minister came in last year without all the economies which had been foretold the excuse was that he really had not had a chance. Just wait until next year and then you will see what he will do. You will see how he will swing about then. Well, this is next year, Mr. Speaker, this is next year, and as far as I can make out none of the promises has been carried out. We are spending more than ever. The spenders have got hold of him. Last year we were told that he was good at subtraction and division but this year he is only good at addition and multiplication. He has a surplus of $125 million, yes, but it could have been $250 million if he had only taken $125 million more from us. It is all in his own hands and the boys will vote for it.

Of course, none knows better than he how many people like spending. That is one of the things, no doubt, that faces a minister of finance. It is one of the reasons the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has such a vogue because he, I suppose, has been the instrument of more spending than anyone else. Over the last 15 years, at any rate, he has spent by the billions, and people say: "Good old C.D."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: You have finally seen the light.

Mr. Macdonnell: I imagine there are even Conservatives who say "Good old C.D." if they happen to be in the contracting business. And now what about this budget?

An hon. Member: What budget?

Mr. Macdonnell: I was going to ask when is a budget not a budget, but at any rate we will come to that. I doubt if the minister's biographer will refer to it very fully. I venture that prediction. I have also predicted that there will be no election because, of course, if you are going to have an election money has got to be spent. Where would the Minister of National Health and Welfare be in an election if there were no promises to make? We all remember Harry Hopkins, F.D.R.'s associate, and his motto, "Spend and spend, vote and vote, elect and elect." The minister shakes his head. That is the sense of it, at any rate.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare knows all about this. He says in effect: What are taxpayers for except to provide money to persuade them to vote for you? After all, does anybody know the fertilizing power of the spending of money in elections better than the Minister of National Health and Welfare? As I say, he gets the people's money and then persuades them to vote for him. I suppose the minister feels in his heart of hearts that he will never be defeated as long as the money holds out.

We must not ignore the budget although we could easily do so. It has got to be mentioned, but in fact there could hardly have been a budget which could have so little impact on the public consciousness. The gold industry will receive it with satisfaction. It will be interesting to those engaged in the industry and it will be interesting to see just what impact it has on general business, on exchange and such.

There being nothing to discuss in the budget, I propose to spend a few minutes discussing certain matters of government policy. I have asked myself very earnestly again and again what government policy is and I always come back to the same answer which does not seem to me to be any answer. I think government policy is the great United States boom. I think the government have sat back and have been content to be wafted along. They have hardly had a thought of their own. They have hardly had initiative of any kind, but the boom has carried them along. Delightful! George does all the work.

It would not be fair to say they have entirely ignored the matter of thinking about our problems but they have found a wonderful solution. They have handed it all over to the Gordon commission and they do not have to think at all. What is that line from Gilbert and Sullivan: "I always voted at my party's call and never thought of thinking for myself at all." I think you have it here. The boom comes along and carries them in its beneficent arms on the crest and then, so far as thinking is concerned, they have handed the matter over to the Gordon commission. Some day I think the Gordon commission will come in with some ideas and then no doubt the government will take notice of that fact and they may begin to think again. Who knows?

In the meantime I should like to ask about some of the things they might have been doing. There are people in this country to whom it is not of much interest to know that the estimated gross national product is $28 billion. You cannot eat the gross national product and you cannot wear it. There are many people who not only are not interested in it but who are not coming off very well. There are many sore spots in the country, and I think it would be reasonable to ask just what the government is doing about that matter. One of them was discussed in this house last night in an extremely interesting way, namely the dispersal of industry or rather of one particular aspect of the dispersal, namely in the maritime provinces. The discussion was extremely interesting. Views were expressed quite freely. When the cat is away the mice will play. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) was not in his seat and we had some extremely interesting views expressed from the other side of the house. I was delighted to hear what hon. members on the other side of the house had to say because it is exactly the kind of thing we on this side of the house have been saying for years, with nobody to give us a sympathetic ear. But last night the situation was quite different. I should like to read something that was said by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen). It struck me as being sane and as absolutely contrary to what has been the attitude of the government in this matter for years. As reported at page 2288 of Hansard, he said:

> . . . I feel we are really following a great historical tradition in this house when we talk about policies that may serve to build up areas of Canada which up to the present have not participated in our prosperity in the manner that we all desire.

How true that is! We can all accept that statement in theory. It is well put. Yet what has been done about it? I have never believed that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is so influential, was very enthusiastic about it. I have here a quotation which is attributed to the minister. I am sure that it is believed and I know it is quoted in the maritime provinces. He has never denied it and I hope he will not deny it now because it represents what I have always felt about the minister's attitude. I have always felt that he was very cold, not interested and that is what this quotation shows: "Maritime rights? What are they? I have never heard. Birth and death and a free ride on the I.C.R." That does not seem to me to go very far to deal with the problem.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My hon. friend will never find anywhere that remark attributed to me. I know to whom it was attributed but certainly it was not attributed to me.

Mr. Macdonnell: I am always sorry to differ from the minister, as he knows. But he is quite wrong in saying that the remark was not attributed to him, because it was.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Then bring on your quotation.

Mr. Macdonnell: I was very careful on that point. I said that I had been informed and by a most reliable authority that this quotation had been used and that it was believed in the maritime provinces. I will say this. If I myself were to describe what I believe is the minister's attitude towards the maritimes, I doubt if I could do it any better.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, just so that we shall get the matter straight, I may tell my hon. friend that remark was made by the Hon. Charles Dunning and he regretted it for the rest of his life.

Mr. Macdonnell: I have great respect for Hon. Charles Dunning. It may be that he used words which the hon. gentleman may also have seen fit to use. The hon. gentleman is extremely forgetful. We know that. In any event, I will to this extent adopt them and say that I have always felt that the hon. gentleman never took the matter seriously. For example, I never felt that he could agree with the quotation that I read from the speech of the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond where he said:

> . . . I feel we are really following a great historical tradition in this house when we talk about policies that may serve . . .

And so on. That is what I myself feel. I feel that through no fault of their own the maritimes have not had a chance. Do we believe that the people in the maritimes are not as good as the rest of us? What is the story? We know that wherever they go, whether it be in Canada, the United States or further afield, they become leaders. They succeed far beyond the average. The reason that the maritimes have lagged behind is that they were disappointed in the expectations held out to them and that they did not, as far as I can see, get a fair deal as confederation worked out. Furthermore, as was stated by the same member in this house last night, I feel that much can be done. I shall not take the time in which to deal with that matter now. I have another chance at this subject.

I now want to say a word about unemployment. We talked a great deal about unemployment last year. We all agreed that it was extremely bad. It is only because it was extremely bad last year that we do not think it is bad this year. There are hundreds of thousands of our fellow citizens who are unemployed. To them a g.n.p. of $28 billion does not mean much. It does not give them much comfort when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg), in answer to a question asked by my friend the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough), pointing out to him the extent of unemployment, says this. This is a quotation from his answer:

> I hope and believe we are learning many things which will be useful to us in the future.

That is not going to comfort the unemployed greatly. They cannot cash in on that statement. That is what I complain about. I believe that, from every sign right across the board, the government has been so dazzled, delighted and almost mesmerised by these great figures on which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) gambled successfully a year ago that they have felt, "Well, boys, everything is fine; we don't need to do anything".

In the United States they have not behaved in that way. They have a boom in the United States. Things are going strong. But they do not use that fact as an excuse for sitting back and doing nothing for those who are not getting along well. They have vigorous organizations to deal with small business, to deal with the soft spots. As far as I can see, here we have nothing except the efforts of the Industrial Development Bank.

I want to say a word just in passing about the textile industry and its troubles, about the potato industry and its troubles, and about the rubber shoe industry suffering from the cheap labour in Hong Kong. I also want to say a word about another point which they make in the United States. The government there states—and I think correctly—that it is trying to "get out of the way", as Churchill said, and to let private enterprise deal with as many things as possible. The government is trying to get out of as many things as possible. Is that true here? As a matter of fact exactly the opposite is true here in certain cases. Here we actually keep private enterprise out. I am referring particularly to the T.C.A. I should like to quote briefly from the Winnipeg Free Press which the other day criticized the speech which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler) so nobly made in defence of his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commer who controls the T.C.A. The editor refers to the argument made by the Minister of Transport, which he does not think was very good, and he says this argument for tightly restricting licences is valid only so long as the traffic is light in reference to the initial investment by one operator. He goes on and speaks very strongly against monopoly. I do not know whether the minister, when he was in business, was so successful that he had practically a monopoly, but whatever the reason is we all know that the minister has one curious side to him. Though he believes in private enterprise in theory, when it comes to practice he does not seem to be very keen about it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Except in pipe lines.

Mr. Macdonnell: Well, that is a matter we will come to later.

Mr. Fulton: That is a mongrel sort of private enterprise.

Mr. Macdonnell: We know the minister says there are many debates he does not like. We know he did not like the debate last summer and I presume he does not like the debate on the pipe line. Indeed, it has even been rumoured now that closure might be applied. I am not suggesting the minister is responsible, but that is a pleasant suggestion at the beginning of the debate. What I wanted to say was this. We have heard of the United States government's attempt to help people in private enterprise. Here we have this monopoly which is being maintained in spite of everything. I am glad to see there is a great deal of editorial comment against it. I hope it will not last long.

I want to say a word about the balance of trade and the balance of payments. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) told the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) the other day when he pointed out the tremendous unfavourable surplus with the United States and asked what was being done about it, that we were not doing anything. I believe that is taking it far too lightly. A competent journalist in the present Financial Post deals with the question and has some very serious things to say. He points out there may be several serious consequences flowing from it, one of them obviously being the possibility of a much greater depreciation in our dollar. It has gone down several cents, but as long as it still remains at par we do not worry. This writer points out that the "inflow" of capital in the last year was not sufficient to take care of the excess of our imports. We are living on our fat. We remember 1947 when, of course, conditions were different because then we had our dollar pegged at an entirely arbitrary and unreal rate. We did have legislation then, as we remember, of a restrictive nature.

Now, I want to come to an old friend we always have, the question of expenditure. The minister, as I say, has been taken over by the spenders. I want to refer to one aspect of the activities of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). It is delightful to know that the minister thinks of every one of us from the cradle to the grave and tries to help us on our way. I discovered to my great interest that he not only thinks of us ordinary people, but he thinks of the ministers too. I believe you will agree with me when I read one or two of the publications he has got out. There is a child training series, and one of these is, "Baby Talk, and what can be Done About it". I think when we recall the interest of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) in the affairs of babies and his discriminating knowledge of them, we will feel that this "Baby talk and what can be done about it" is perhaps especially prescribed for him. He will be grateful to the minister. There is another one called "Temper, How Can I Control my Child's Outbursts?" There are members of the cabinet who might perhaps be interested in that too.

Now, coming to a more serious item of expenditure, I read with some interest that the defence expenditures, which last year had been $1,775 million, were to be exactly the same. I thought to myself, that is an extraordinary coincidence. Then, I thought again and I said it is not a coincidence at all; it simply means that is not a real estimate, that is just a figure thrown in. I feel that if one reflects about it, really that is one of the greatest, what shall I say, slights ever put upon this house. It means that we have had no estimate made. This does not go merely for the defence department, but it goes for the finance department. What right has the finance department to send an item of that kind which is no item at all, $1,775 million? We have had a slogan which has been passed around this house a good deal to the effect, what's a million? We will have to alter it now and say, what's $50 million or what's $100 million, when we deal with these fabulous figures.

One can only imagine the defence department saying, oh well, do not worry; pass it on to parliament and they will never notice. I am going to abandon the ordinary word arrogant for this, Mr. Speaker, and use a less dignified word. I think it is almost impudent when you have an item of that kind being produced and sent to this house on a serious item. After all, the finance department knows the situation. They know that senior retired military officers are questioning whether tens of millions of dollars are being spent unnecessarily because of a desire to keep up with the Joneses. They know that senior military officers have suggested that if we would build by licence from types developed in the United States, we might save tens of millions of dollars. This is a matter which has to be more closely scrutinized. I point out at the same time that the defence department has not been allowed to go to the estimates committee, notwithstanding the efforts of the leader of this party for years to try to get to the bottom of the facts. So far as the government can see to it, we are going to be frustrated again.

I want to say just a word about dominion-provincial relations. The minister talked about it so long tonight that I knew he was uneasy in his mind. "Qui s'excuse s'accuse." I hope if I am wrong the Prime Minister will correct me, but I think it means he who excuses himself really accuses himself. I am going to say only a word about dominion-provincial relations. They have been bandied about for 10 years. Do not let us believe a final solution has been found. This is a step in the right direction but do not let us believe it is more than that. As a matter of fact, the reason it cannot be more than that is because it is only a palliative and because the whole principle of this approach is unsound. What the federal government is doing is trying to satisfy the immediate budget needs of the various provinces, when what they should be doing is trying to enable the citizens of the various provinces to be in a position where by their own production they would be able to be on a level with the other provinces. Now, that is the task.

Mr. Pickersgill: Go and say that in Newfoundland.

Mr. Macdonnell: That is the task in Newfoundland and everywhere else. I was glad to hear the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) use words which I submit indicated that last evening. He knows that. I come back to it again. Why should people who are among the best of our whole population be left in a position where they appear—it is only appearance—not to be able to pull their weight, and where some people presume to regard them almost as if they were second class citizens.

What is the use of giving a man who cannot pay his way just a gift and leaving it at that? What he needs is to be put in a position where he can earn his own way. I state deliberately that I find no serious attempt to do that when we consider the billions and billions that have been spent. It may be said that in wartime you could not do it. But in those last years for anyone to tell me that there was not a great deal that could have been done to help the eastern provinces, as far as I am concerned, that argument will not work. I just do not believe it, and I say again that I have seen no sign of any earnest continuing endeavour. Commissions are piled on commissions, yes; here a little and there a little, bits and pieces but no real comprehensive continuing concerted, sincere attempt to get to the bottom of this problem.

May I say just a word about immigration? We have a feeble, uncertain, indecisive, wishy-washy policy, and it is bringing in its results. In 1954 we received 154,000 immigrants, and in 1955, 109,000. I do not think it is adequate to say that conditions in Europe have changed. I believe you will find a very different situation in Australia. But, of course, though the number of immigrants comes down we must not expect the expenses to come down in the same way. Actually, in 1955 the expense per immigrant to the department was $87 as against $33 in 1951.

Mr. Fulton: A measure of the minister's achievement.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, I have gone on longer than I intended and longer than you approve and I shall end my remarks by saying that I am able to find no policy except the policy of being carried along by this roaring boom in the United States. I say that the spenders are in the saddle and the government is taking it easy. In the meantime, people from the United States are coming in and acquiring more and more of our Canadian companies, partly owing to the great deficit that we incur when we buy hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of goods for which we have to pay by getting money from the United States, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce says his department is doing nothing about it.

This is an alarming situation. A nation is not so very different from an individual. If an individual goes on spending more than he is making year after year he knows what happens to him, and in the long run, perhaps not too long run, that will happen to us. And so, Mr. Speaker, I say that in spite of all the sunshine which the minister gave us in the budget which he read, the fact is that the government is not dealing with the problems that face it, and that if they rely on booms that are to go on forever—well, it has never been a safe reliance in the past.

I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Macdonnell the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we will take supplementary estimates and interim supply.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I move that the house do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 9.47 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—PAROLE

Question No. 33—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How many adult offenders in Canada have been placed on parole in each province for each of the years 1950 to 1955?
2. What has been the rate of recidivism among these parolees for each of the years 1950-55?
3. How many parole officers have been employed in each province for each of the years 1950-55?

Answer by: Mr. Garson:

1 and 2. Tickets of leave granted, showing province of destination on release, number of recidivists, rates of recidivism, showing different types, 1950-1955 inclusive.

Note:

(a) Revocation refers to a person who violated the conditions of his ticket of leave and was returned to prison to serve the remanent of his sentence.

(b) Forfeiture refers to a person who, while on ticket of leave was convicted of an indictable offence and was returned to prison to serve the remanent of his original sentence, in addition to the new sentence imposed for the new offence.

(c) Subsequent sentence to provincial institution refers to a person who successfully completed his ticket of leave, but was later convicted of a new offence and sentenced to a provincial institution.

(d) Subsequent sentence to penitentiary refers to a person who successfully completed his ticket of leave, but was later convicted of a new offence and sentenced to a penitentiary.

3. The remission service maintains two regional offices, one in Montreal and one in Vancouver. These offices have been in operation since 1949. There are two field representatives in the Montreal office and one in the Vancouver office. In November 1954 another field representative was appointed, who is stationed in Ottawa.

Only part of the time of the field representatives is given to direct supervision of persons on ticket of leave. Direct supervision is usually given by staff members of (a) prisoners' after-care agencies across Canada, (b) provincial probation services in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Ontario and Nova Scotia, and (c) the provincial parole service of Ontario. In the year 1949 supervision by a member of a social agency or a government service was provided in only 152 cases. In the year 1955 this type of supervision was arranged in 865 cases.

HOGS MARKETED AND CONSUMED, ALBERTA

Question No. 171—Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose):

1. How many hogs were marketed in the province of Alberta, in the years 1954 and 1955?
2. How many hogs were consumed in the province of Alberta, in the years 1954 and 1955?

Answer by: Mr. Gardiner:

1. No statistics available for slaughterings on farms and small establishments which do not come under inspection by the Department of Agriculture. The record of slaughterings in approved and inspected establishments of hogs originating in Alberta, together with exports, are as follows:

	1954	1955
In Alberta	1,062,551	1,239,532
In other provinces	399,219	446,355
Exported from Canada	14,479	5,306

2. The total per capita consumption of pork for Canada in 1954 is calculated by the dominion bureau of statistics at 53·7 pounds. Based on this figure the consumption of hogs in Alberta for 1954 would be approximately 350,000 hogs. Estimated consumption for 1955 has not yet been calculated.

AIR CONDITIONED GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

Question No. 197—Mr. Fraser (Peterborough):

1. Are any buildings or offices owned or used by the government of Canada air conditioned?
2. If so, where are they located?
3. By what department or agency are they occupied?

Answer by: Mr. Winters:

1. Yes.

2 and 3. The records of the department indicate that the following buildings under the administration of this department which are air conditioned in whole or in part, except by means of window cooling units, are listed by location and occupancy:

Type of Air Conditioning	Location	Name or Address of Building	Occupied by
Air-conditioned throughout—Government-owned	Hull, Quebec	Printing bureau	Department of Public Printing and Stationery
	Windsor, Ontario	Sandwich-Windsor-Amherstburg—Railway building	Income tax
	Hamilton, Ontario	Old public building, King and John streets	Post Office Department
	Ottawa, Ontario	Supreme court	Department of Justice

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, BANFF, ALTA.

Question No. 246—Mr. Nickle:

1. Were tenders invited by the dominion government for construction of a section of trans-Canada highway from mile 21 to mile 31 west of Banff in the province of Alberta?
2. If so, who were the persons who tendered and what was the price named in each tender?
3. To whom was the contract awarded?
4. Was it awarded to the lowest bidder, and if not, what were the considerations that influenced the government in its decision?

1. Yes.

2. J. A. Moulson Construction Ltd., $1,335,463.50; Square M Construction Limited and Coleman Collieries Limited, $2,184,207.50; Poole Engineering Company Limited, $2,206,948.50; Mannix Limited, $2,248,635.25; New West Construction Company Limited, $2,274,590.00; Standard Gravel and Surfacing of Canada, Limited, $2,298,460.00; W. CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PASSENGER TRAFFIC AND REVENUE

Question No. 251—Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace):

For only those tickets which cover travel over at least some portion of the main transcontinental system of the Canadian National Railways, and for each of the three months May, June and July, 1955, what percentage change was recorded over the same months in the preceding year (a) in passengers; (b) in passenger revenue?

Answer by: Mr. Marler:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

(a) May, 1955, ·02 per cent increase; June, 1955, 34 per cent increase; July, 1955, 10·5 per cent increase.

(b) May, 1955, no change; June, 1955, 24 per cent increase; July, 1955, 12·80 per cent increase.

APPLICATIONS, CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT—EDMONTON

Question No. 297—Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose):

1. How many applications for loans under the Canadian Farm Loan Act were received by the Edmonton branch of this service for the year ending December 31, 1955?
2. How many of these applications were granted?
3. How many were refused?
4. How many are still under review?

Answer by: Mr. Harris:

The Canadian farm loan board advises as follows:

1. 497.
2. 338.
3. 93.
4. 66.

P.F.A.A.—AWARDS GRANTED

Question No. 313—Mr. Pommer:

1. What is the total amount of awards granted under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act for 1955 crop year to March 1, 1956?
2. What is the total number of awards for the same period by provinces?

Answer by: Mr. Gardiner:

1.

Province	No. of awards	Amount
Manitoba	8,725	$1,318,687.50
Saskatchewan	4,437	758,465.75
Alberta	5,738	905,734.25

RURAL MAIL CONTRACTS—TEMISCOUATA COUNTY

Question No. 315—Mr. Balcer:

For what period of time were the following rural mail contracts signed and what is the annual amount involved in each case: (a) Mr. Joseph Belanger (No. 2), St. Louis du Ha! Ha!, county of Temiscouata; (b) Mr. Rosario Belanger (No. 1), also of St. Louis du Ha! Ha!, county of Temiscouata?

Answer by: Mr. Lapointe:

(a) Contract authorized 17th February 1956, 4 years—$1560.

(b) Contract authorized 17th February 1956, 4 years—$1560.

POST OFFICE PERSONNEL—ANNUAL LEAVE

Question No. 322—Mr. Knowles:

1. With respect to postal employees, what is the basis for determining priority as to annual leave?
2. Is the basis for determining such priority the same throughout the postal service?
3. Does service for purposes of annual leave date from an employee's temporary appointment or permanent appointment?
4. Is the answer to this question the same for all branches of the postal service, and in all parts of the country?
5. Have there been any requests that the basis of annual leave be reconsidered? If so, is such reconsideration being given thereto?

Answer by: Mr. Lapointe:

1. Seniority.
2. No.
3. (a) Headquarters staff—Seniority determined by date of assignment to the unit according to class or grade. (b) Operating service—Seniority determined by both; depending upon the class of employee.
4. Yes.
5. Yes. Federated association of letter carriers requested change as it applies to supervisory letter carriers. Change will take effect on 1st April, 1956.

FOREWORD

The purpose of these Papers is twofold:

1. to present a general economic review of 1955, bringing together in one place and in convenient form some of the more comprehensive indicators of economic conditions prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Bank of Canada and other Government Agencies, together with brief comments;

2. to present a preliminary review of the Government accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1956.

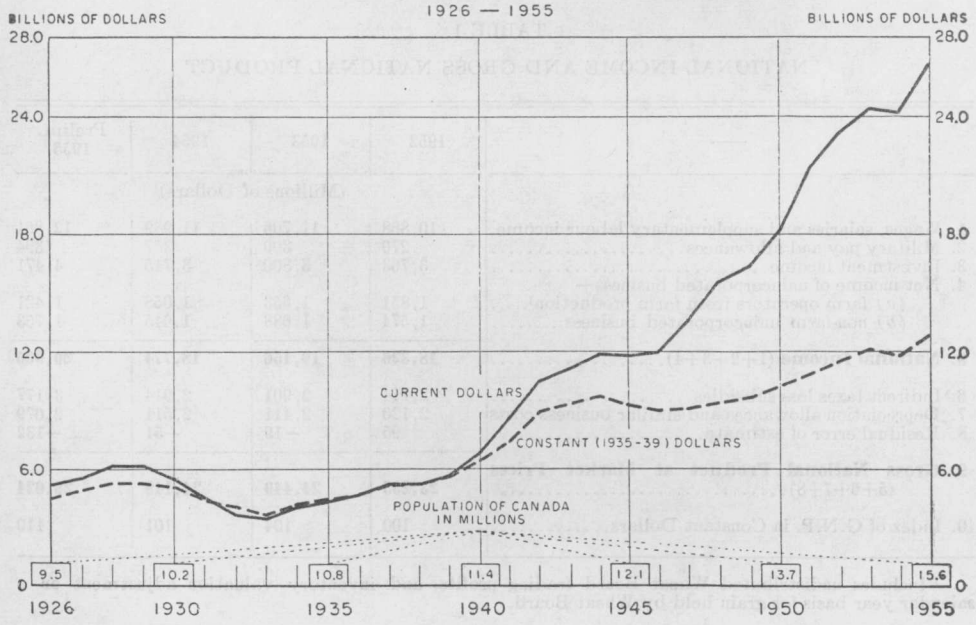
The tables in this Budget Paper are based upon estimates provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Bank of Canada and other Government Agencies. Some of the figures appear for the first time; others have been published elsewhere. All 1955 estimates are preliminary and subject to revision.



THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

National Income and Product

In 1955 there was a sharp economic recovery which regained the ground lost in 1954 and carried production and incomes to new peaks. The major factors in the recovery appear to have been the large increases in investment and in exports, the availability of credit and the resurgence of confidence engendered in part by the evidence of prosperous conditions abroad. Consequently, the slack which existed at the beginning of the year was rapidly reduced as the year progressed, and by the third quarter had virtually disappeared. Thus, the seasonally adjusted estimates of quarterly gross national product excluding agriculture indicate a rise of 2 per cent for the first quarter, 5 per cent for the second quarter, 3 per cent for the third quarter, and 1 per cent for the fourth quarter. For the year 1955 as a whole, gross national product is estimated at $26·6 billion, a very large increase of 10 per cent over the reduced ouput of 1954 and 9 per cent above 1953. The year-to-year increase in population was 2½ per cent and there was a like increase in the civilian labour force. However, after the first quarter of the year employment rose more rapidly than the labour force and there was a progressive reduction in unemployment which continued until the seasonal increase late in the year.

Since prices were on the average little higher than in 1954, most of the increase in the dollar value of gross national product represented a gain in real output. The volume of production increased by about 9 per cent of which the gain in agricultural production accounted for about one-sixth. The largest part of this increase in agricultural production was because of the change from a very poor western grain crop in 1954 to a considerably better than average crop in 1955. The volume of non-agricultural output rose by somewhat more than 7 per cent. The largest increases were in the goods-producing industries.

GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE
IN CURRENT AND CONSTANT 1935-39 DOLLARS

Mining output rose by about 16 per cent and output of the construction industry rose by 12 per cent reflecting the large increase in home building and in non-residential construction. Manufacturing output as a whole increased by 7 per cent. Industries such as textiles and electrical apparatus which had experienced some difficulties in 1954 showed greater strength in 1955. For the services group the gain in output was somewhat less than for the whole non-agricultural sector but the output of services had expanded in 1954 when the goods-producing industries showed some reduction in output.

The improvement in economic activity in 1955 was reflected in the earnings of Canadians. Wages and salaries increased by 7 per cent. The major factor in the increase was the substantial rise in employment but there was also some increase in rates of pay and in the average number of hours worked per week. The rise in total labour income has continued without interruption throughout the post-war period including the year 1954 when national income declined.

In 1955 investment income increased by $756 million or by about one-fifth, and reached a total of $4,471 million. Although larger interest payments and rental income contributed to the increase, the principal factor was the expansion in corporate profits. Corporate profits are particularly sensitive to economic conditions. In 1950 and 1951 under conditions of active demand and with prices and production increasing substantially, corporate profits rose rapidly. In each of the three succeeding years despite large additions to plant and equipment, corporate profits declined as costs of production increased and as competition, particularly from imports, became more severe. With conditions of strong demand prevailing in 1955, with production consequently at or near capacity and with a further substantial increase in the country's stock of plant and equipment, corporate income recovered rapidly and reached a level estimated at $3 billion, 24 per cent above 1954 and 7 per cent above the previous high in 1951.

Net farm income rose by over one-third from the previous year's low level of $1,058 million, and reached a total of $1,421 million in 1955. The partial recovery of 1955 resulted from increases in production which were sufficiently large to more than offset some further decline in agricultural prices. Most of the increase was because of a better than average western grain crop compared to the very poor harvest of 1954. It is estimated that this factor alone accounted for an increase of some $300 million. Despite the recovery, however, net farm income was 14 per cent below the level of 1953. In this same two-year period, the agricultural labour force declined by 4 per cent. Whereas net farm income rose by $363 million in 1955, farm cash income fell by $55 million. The principal reason for this is found in the movement of inventories. Accrued net farm income is based on the value of annual production at current market prices, whereas farm cash income only takes into account final sales and excludes that part of production which is added to inventories. Thus in 1955, largely due to the increased grain crop, part of output was added to inventories and was not reflected in farm cash income.

Net income of non-farm unincorporated business increased by 7 per cent in 1955 compared to a decline of 3 per cent in the preceding year. There was a recovery in retail trade from the decline in the previous year. However, by far the greatest part of the increase in income in 1955 occurred in construction.

National Expenditure

The buoyancy of demand at home reinforced by the recovery in the United States and the continued strength of overseas markets, affected most sectors of the Canadian economy during 1955. Although shortages were not common and an overall balance between supply and demand was achieved at a high level of economic activity, some strain on the supply of certain commodities such as steel, non-ferrous metals and building materials became apparent in the course of the year. Prices of these commodities rose, particularly in the latter half of the year and together with the higher level of wages resulted in cost increases. This affected prices throughout the investment field; but despite these cost increases competition was sufficiently effective to bring about lower prices at other points, notably in consumer durable goods. Final sales increased at a rapid rate and this had a dampening effect on the growth of business inventories. Although there was some increase in business inventories during 1955, it was in part a reaction from the decline during the short recession of 1954. Business inventories as a proportion of sales remained below the level of 1953.

Expenditures by consumers on goods and services represent the largest single claim on production. In 1955, consumer expenditures rose by more than 6 per cent compared with an increase of 4 per cent in the previous year. The rise in consumption during 1954 took place in the face of declining economic activity and indicated a considerable degree of strength in consumer outlays closely related to the growth in labour income. In 1955, consumption rose somewhat less rapidly than gross national expenditure as a whole but at a rate more consistent with the underlying longer-term growth factors. The experience of the last two years serves to emphasize the stable pattern and the sustained stimulus to production which has characterized the rising trend in consumer expenditure throughout the post-war years.

The increase of $1,035 million in consumer expenditure in 1955 accounted for 42 per cent of the total expansion in gross national expenditure. On a seasonally adjusted basis, consumption rose throughout the year. After a relatively slow start in the first quarter, consumer outlays increased rapidly during the spring and summer months and continued to expand at a lesser though substantial rate in the fall. The fourth quarter increase was relatively small. With consumer prices practically stable there was a comparable increase in the volume of consumption. Per capita real consumption was 4 per cent above 1954, one of the largest increases of the post-war period.

Government expenditures on goods and services, which had remained stable in 1954 because increases in non-defence expenditure were offset by declines in outlays for defence, increased by about 6 per cent in 1955 and reached a total of $4,614 million. About two-thirds of this increase was accounted for by increased expenditures of provincial and municipal governments. Federal government defence expenditure, which had declined by $180 million in 1954, rose by $33 million or 2 per cent but remained about 8 per cent below the peak reached in 1953. With an increase in non-defence expenditures of $52 million, total federal expenditure on goods and services reached a level of $2,498 million, 3 to 4 per cent above 1954.

Investment expenditures, which had declined by 4 per cent in 1954 and contributed to the weakness of that year, played a dynamic role in the economy in 1955 and were a major factor in the recovery. Gross domestic investment exclusive of inventory change rose by 13 per cent or $602 million in 1955 and accounted for 24 per cent of the increase in gross national expenditure. Slightly more than one-half of the total increase in 1955 was accounted for by the striking increase in residential construction; 138,000 housing units were started and the value of construction rose 27 per cent above the previous year. This increase followed a growth of 10 per cent in 1954, a year when other investment declined, and a 35 per cent increase in 1953. Since 1952, investment in housing has almost doubled and has risen from 18 per cent to 28 per cent of total capital investment. As in 1954, residential construction was stimulated by fairly easy financing under the National Housing Act, which provides as well for the insurance of loans on residential real estate, and by the availability of credit. It was supported as well by the substantial growth in population and incomes. Non-residential construction, which had declined by 3 per cent in the previous year, rose by $116 million in 1955, and reached a level 4 per cent above the previous peak in 1953. Investment outlays for new machinery and equipment, which had declined by 11 per cent in 1954, recovered substantially and rose by $176 million or almost 10 per cent in 1955.

Inventories of farm grain and livestock and grain in commercial channels increased by $193 million in 1955 compared to the decline of $160 million in 1954. Most of this variation between the two years was because of wheat. A very poor western crop in 1954 led to the running down of inventories while the very good crop of 1955 resulted in a substantial build-up. The value of business inventories increased by $257 million in contrast to the previous year when there had been a decline of $120 million. However, little more than half of this net change of $377 million between the two years represents increased investment in 1955 since price changes were almost as important as volume changes. In volume terms business inventories increased by somewhat less than 2 per cent in 1955 compared with the decline of about 1 per cent in 1954.

Notwithstanding the great increase in domestic demand during the post-war period, the level of exports remains a strategic factor in Canadian economic prosperity. Exports exerted a great stimulus on the economy in 1955, rising by $560 million or 11 per cent to a level 2 per cent above the previous peak in 1952. Imports rose even more sharply and the trade deficit for 1955 was therefore greater than in the previous year.

Personal Income and its Disposition

Personal income differs from national income in a number of ways although the components of these two totals are for the most part similar or identical. While national income is the total of the annual earnings of Canadian residents from the production of goods and services, personal income is the sum of the current receipts of income regardless of whether these receipts are earnings from production. For example, personal income includes only that part of corporation profits which is actually received by Canadian persons as dividends. On the other hand, transfer payments such as family allowances, old age pensions, veterans' benefits and charitable contributions of corporations, are part of personal income although they are not payments for services and, therefore, do not form part of national income.

In 1954 the modest rise in salaries and wages, in certain elements of investment income, and in transfer payments was offset by the large decline in farm income; and for the first time in the post-war period there was no gain in total personal income. In 1955, however, improved business conditions brought about a large increase in labour income and there was at the same time a substantial recovery in net farm income because of a better western grain crop. These were the major factors in the increase of $1,593 million or 9 per cent in total personal income. Labour income, which is by far the largest element in personal income, rose by $872 million or 7 per cent, and accounted for 55 per cent of the total increase. About 20 per cent of the increase in total personal income accrued to farmers while the other major components, income from unincorporated business and from investment and transfer payments, together contributed 25 per cent to the expansion in personal incomes. A little more than one-quarter of the $111 million increase in transfer payments was due to payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. As in previous years, social security benefits such as old age pensions and family allowances, rose during the year. These increases were partly offset, however, by a decline in unemployment insurance benefits as the labour market improved.

Despite substantially higher personal incomes, personal direct taxes increased by only 4 per cent for the year. Personal income tax collections remained practically unchanged, largely because reductions effective July 1, 1955 in the federal tax rates tended to offset the effect of increases in total taxable income. The yield from succession duties and other miscellaneous taxes for all three levels of government combined rose by $49 million during 1955. Since the growth in personal incomes was not offset to any substantial extent by an increase in personal direct taxes, Canadians had considerably more money available for spending and saving.

Personal disposable income, or personal income after deduction of direct taxes, rose by $1,538 million or 9 per cent in 1955. There was a large increase in personal saving from current income but this was for the most part because of the change in saving in the form of farm inventories which was largely involuntary. In 1954, farm inventories declined by $145 million while there was an increase of $213 million in 1955. Exclusive of the change in farm inventories, personal saving from current income rose by only $145 million to $1,261 million in 1955. There was, therefore, practically no change in personal saving exclusive of farm inventories between 1954 and 1955 when calculated as a proportion of disposable income. In 1955, personal saving exclusive of farm inventories constituted 6·9 per cent of disposable income compared with 6·7 per cent for the year 1954.

Percentagewise the largest increase in consumer spending was in expenditures on durable goods which rose by 11 per cent in 1955 compared with a decline of 6 per cent in 1954. Since there was a noticeable decline in the prices of certain durable goods during 1955, the volume increase was larger and is estimated at 17 per cent. There was a striking increase in purchases of passenger cars as well as substantial increases in expenditures on home appliances and furniture. Outlays on non-durable goods expanded more slowly and rose by 6 per cent in 1955 compared with an increase of 5 per cent in the previous year. On the average, prices of non-durable goods did not change appreciably although there was a very slight downward movement for the year. Higher outlays on food and beverages accounted for about one-half of the overall increase in expenditures on non-durable goods.

On a seasonally adjusted basis, the rise in purchases of consumer goods was particularly sharp in the second quarter of 1955. In terms of value, the increase over the first quarter was 5 per cent for non-durable goods and 12 per cent for durable goods. During the third quarter of 1955, further gains were made but the rate of increase was more moderate. In the fourth quarter, spending on durable goods actually declined although it remained 4 per cent above the second quarter of 1955, and 20 per cent above the fourth quarter of 1954. Outlays on non-durable goods continued to rise moderately in the fourth quarter and were 6 per cent above the comparable period in the previous year. Spending on consumer services expanded steadily throughout the year but the largest increase occurred in the fourth quarter. Expenditures on shelter, education and transportation accounted for some of the major increases. For the year as a whole, consumer spending on services rose by 6 per cent, of which more than one-third was due to higher prices.

Source and Disposition of Saving

Saving is the source from which investment expenditure is financed. In addition to personal saving, which is discussed in the preceding section, there is business saving and government saving.

In 1955, total saving increased by $1,188 million or 30 per cent. This is in contrast to 1954 when saving declined by about one-fifth. All three major sectors, business, persons and government, contributed to the increase in saving.

Government saving is represented by the surplus of revenues over expenditures for all three levels of government combined. In the calendar year 1955, revenues as shown for National Accounts purposes exceeded expenditures both current and capital by $269 million. This compares with a surplus of $18 million in 1954, the smallest surplus of any post-war year. The increase in government saving between 1954 and 1955 as shown in Table 5 has no fiscal significance and was produced in the federal accounts by the adjustment of corporate tax revenue to an accrual basis. Excluding the effect of this adjustment, government saving was actually negative in 1955, the small surplus of provincial and municipal governments combined being slightly more than offset by a modest deficit in the federal accounts.

Business saving is composed of two principal items, depreciation allowances and undistributed profits. Both of these items increased in 1955 but at a considerably different rate. With the continued growth of physical assets, depreciation allowances increased in 1955 by $168 million or 7 per cent. Undistributed profits are affected by the change in total profits, by the amount paid in direct taxes, and by amounts paid out as dividends. Corporation profits are estimated to have risen by $580 million in 1955. Although there was an increase in tax liabilities of $196 million and an increase in dividends paid out of $88 million, there was also a very sharp rise in undistributed profits, amounting to $296 million. This rise in undistributed profits contributed about three-fifths of the total increase of $515 million or 17 per cent in business saving. Business saving is much the largest element in total saving and constituted 69 per cent of total saving in 1955 compared with 77 per cent in 1954.

It is estimated that Canada's total payments abroad on current account exceeded total receipts by $651 million in 1955 and the increase of like amount in net foreign liabilities was considerably greater than in 1954. The deficit on current account in 1955 was financed, as in previous years, by capital inflows from abroad and there was no significant change in Canada's reserve of foreign exchange. Although the amount of capital from abroad was considerably larger in 1955 than in 1954, it was only moderately more important in the nation's financing because of the higher level of domestic investment in 1955. Direct investment continued to be the largest single source of funds from abroad and Canadian borrowing abroad was much smaller than in previous years. These transactions are treated more fully in the section on the Balance of International Payments.

Investment and Capital Expenditure

Table 8 gives the industrial distribution of business capital expenditures and brings them together with public capital outlays included in government expenditures on goods and services in Table 2. At the same time a reconciliation is provided between gross domestic investment in housing, plant and equipment as it appears in Table 2 and total capital outlays shown in Table 8.

The total of public and private capital expenditures is estimated to have increased by $610 million or 11 per cent in 1955. This is considerably in excess of the 6 per cent increase forecast at the beginning of the year on the basis of business intentions and illustrates the rapid recovery in capital outlays during 1955. Total capital outlays for 1955, including both government and business, reached a new high of $6,230 million, or about 7 per cent above the previous peak in 1953.

Almost all major industrial groups spent more money for capital purposes in 1955. The goods-producing industries increased their expenditures by 12 per cent. More than one-half of this expansion occurred in manufacturing with investment up by $117 million or 14 per cent. The greater part of this new investment was concentrated in the export industries. More moderate increases occurred in the construction industry and in primary industries other than forestry, where capital outlays rose by over one-third.

The major increases during 1955 in investment in manufacturing were concentrated in raw material processing and in the chemical industry. Thus, expenditure on plant and equipment for making paper products rose by $50 million or 58 per cent to a total of $138 million. This was the largest amount invested in manufacturing in 1955 and was followed by petroleum and coal products with total capital outlays of $108 million. Investment rose by $30 million in the non-ferrous metal group, and $21 million in the chemical industry, each being an increase of more than 50 per cent. Apart from these few key industries which determined the upward movement of manufacturing investment as a whole, the remaining industries followed a mixed pattern of moderate increases and decreases.

New investment in public utilities declined during 1955 by $83 million or 7 per cent to a total of $1,041 million. Most of this decline was due to the reduction of $77 million in capital outlays for steam railways and telegraphs. Decreases also occurred in expenditures on municipal water works and central electric stations. At the same time, large-scale projects scheduled in gas distribution and work associated with the St. Lawrence Seaway remained still in their initial stages so that the impact was relatively minor as far as investment in 1955 is concerned. There was a further extension of telephone facilities and a sizeable expansion in outlays by motor carriers.

The increase in urbanization and a steadily improving standard of living during the post-war period resulted in a marked growth of investment in the trade, finance and commercial services group. This expansion provided an important offset to declines in expenditures by defence-supported industries in the years following the Korean war. Capital outlays in the trade, finance and commercial services sector grew by almost 70 per cent between 1952 and 1954. In 1955 this upward trend was arrested although outlays continued at the relatively high level of $578 million. Within this total, a decline in expenditures by the trade and finance group was almost balanced by an increase in outlays for commercial enterprises.

Associated with the growth in population, the need for additional facilities continued in the institutional field during 1955. Out of a total increase of $71 million in investment by institutions, about one-half was accounted for by the building of new schools. Hospitals absorbed $25 million more than in 1954, raising capital expenditures of these institutions by 21 per cent to a total of $147 million. Governments increased their capital outlays by $106 million or 14 per cent.

Revenue and Expenditure of All Governments

In Table 9 "Government Transactions Related to the National Accounts" an attempt is made to bring together in one statement and under uniform headings, the activities of all governments in Canada on a calendar year basis.

The table is designed to include only those transactions which have relevance for the National Accounts, and consequently the surpluses or deficits shown here differ from those shown in the various public accounts. It has been necessary to adjust the governments' accounting statements of fiscal year revenue and expenditure to exclude certain transactions such as those relating to reserves, write-offs, amortization, and other similar items, as well as the purchase and sale of existing capital assets; and to include the transactions of extra-budgetary funds such as unemployment insurance, old age security, workmen's compensation and government pension funds. In addition, corporate taxes have been adjusted to an accrual basis in the federal accounts. Total expenditure includes both current and capital expenditure but government loans and investments and debt retirement are excluded. Municipalities are for the most part on a calendar year basis but the provincial and federal fiscal year figures are adjusted to the calendar year basis. Some of the more substantial adjustments to the federal accounts are shown in the reconciliation statement appended to Table 9.

The surplus or deficit as calculated for national accounts purposes is affected by the adjustment of federal revenue to place corporation taxes on an accrual basis. In 1954 the adjustment was of moderate size and increased revenue by $43 million. In 1955 the adjustment was very large and increased revenue by $291 million. Excluding the effect of this adjustment, which has no relevance from a fiscal standpoint, the revenues and expenditures for all levels of government combined were approximately in balance in both years, and the overall fiscal effect of government operations was approximately neutral.

Income and expenditure of provincial and municipal governments both increased by about 9 per cent, and the modest surplus of $23 million in 1954 was virtually unchanged in 1955. In the federal accounts, excluding adjustment for the accrual of corporation taxes mentioned above, receipts and expenditures both increased by about 3 per cent and expenditures exceeded receipts by $48 million in the calendar year 1954 and $46 million in the calendar year 1955.

The economic effects of fiscal operations are not solely determined by revenues and expenditures. The expansionary or restrictive effects of governmental operations depend also on changes in loans, advances and investments. In this sphere the overall effect of federal government operations was mildly restraining.

Expenditure on goods and services by all levels of government combined increased in 1955 by 6 per cent and reached a total of $4,614 million. As indicate in the section on gross national expenditure, federal defence expenditures increased by about 2 per cent from the reduced level of 1954 and non-defence outlays rose by 8 per cent. Defence expenditures have remained relatively stable since the great expansion of $643 million in calendar year 1952 and federal non-defence outlays on goods and services have risen only moderately. Since gross national expenditure has increased by 14 per cent in the same period, the federal government's share in the overall use of goods and services has declined from about 11 per cent in 1952 to about 9 per cent in 1955.

Provincial and municipal expenditure on goods and services rose by 9 per cent or $168 million and this increase was about twice as great as the increase in expenditure on goods and services by the federal government. Most of the increase is attributable to higher wages and salaries and the expansion in outlays on capital facilities.

Transfer payments rose by $95 million or 4 per cent in 1955 compared with an increase of $189 million in 1954 when payments under unemployment insurance rose rapidly. A large element in the $51 million increase in federal government transfers in calendar year 1955 was the increase of $31 million in the payment of claims under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act as a result of the poor western grain crop of 1954. Only slightly smaller was the increase in federal transfer payments which resulted from the growth in the numbers receiving old age pensions and family allowances. Some offset to these increases was provided by the decline of $12 million in unemployment insurance benefits as the labour market improved. Transfer payments of provincial and municipal governments increased by $44 million mainly because of larger grants to private non-commercial institutions.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON GOODS AND SERVICES

Of the $609 million increase in revenues shown in Table 9, $248 million is due to an increase in the adjustment of federal corporation tax receipts to an accrual basis and can be excluded from consideration. While corporate incomes rose sharply in 1955, this was not reflected in increased federal government receipts since most corporations were paying throughout 1955 on the basis of 1954 incomes. In fact, federal government receipts from this source were somewhat lower in 1955 than in 1954 because of the 2 per cent reduction in the rate of corporation tax announced in the budget speech of April 5, 1955. Direct personal taxes were $55 million higher. Revenue from the federal personal income tax remained practically constant, although there was a substantial rise in personal incomes. The stability in yield was to a large extent due to tax reductions, which went into effect on July 1, 1955. The greater part of the increase in personal direct tax revenue was the result of a rise in provincial collections from succession duties. There was also an increase in yield from the Quebec income tax which for the first time operated for a full calendar year.

In absolute terms, the largest increase in revenues came from indirect taxes which rose by $253 million or 8 per cent. Slightly more than one-half of this increase was in federal tax receipts. Receipts from customs duties rose by $65 million or 17 per cent for the calendar year 1955 reflecting the sharp increase in imports of dutiable goods such as automobile parts and capital investment goods. The yield from the federal sales and excise taxes rose by $54 million or 5 per cent in the calendar year 1955 despite the lower excise tax on automobiles and the repeal of the excise tax on tires and tubes, and this reflects the growth in consumer spending. There were also higher receipts from excise duties. Provincial revenues from indirect taxes rose by 13 per cent. There were increases in receipts from the gasoline tax of $26 million and from the retail sales tax of $19 million. Receipts from natural resources were also substantially higher. In the municipal sphere, revenues from the real property tax rose by $29 million.

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

The most striking feature of Canada's international transactions in 1955 was a remarkable increase in merchandise trade in response to the prosperous economic conditions which prevailed at home and abroad. Exports increased by 10 per cent over 1954 with the result that their value in 1955 was only $4 million below the peak level of 1952. The increase in total value between 1954 and 1955 resulted from the combination of a 2 per cent rise in export prices and an 8 per cent increase in volume. Imports showed a gain of 15 per cent when compared with 1954 and were some 7 per cent above 1953 when the value of imports reached their previous record. Since import prices remained about the same as in 1954, the increase in 1955 was almost wholly the result of volume increases. While the terms of trade, or the ratio of export prices to import prices, moved slightly in Canada's favour, the much larger increase in the volume of imports resulted in a deficit of $185 million on commodity trade in 1955 compared with a surplus of $13 million in 1954. This deficit on commodity trade was the largest factor in the $234 million increase in the total current account deficit which rose from $431 million in 1954 to $665 million in 1955.

The total value of merchandise exports increased from $3,929 million in 1954 to $4,335 million in 1955, up $406 million. The increase was mainly concentrated in exports of base metals, forest products, and iron and its products. Of special significance was a $60 million increase in the export of iron ore and a $30 million increase in the export of crude petroleum. These gains are a reflection of increased productive capacity in Canada as well as buoyant markets for these products in the United States and overseas countries. The only notable decline occurred in the export of grains, particularly wheat.

Merchandise imports amounted to $4,520 million in 1955 compared with $3,916 million in 1954, an increase of $604 million. This spectacular rise in imports was in response to the sharp upward swing in business activity in Canada during 1955 with a high level of consumer spending and capital investment. The increase in imports was widespread throughout the various categories.

The largest single increase occurred in the import of automobile parts as a result of the large output of automobiles in Canada during 1955. Other sizeable increases occurred in textiles, steel products and machinery.

The customary deficit on non-merchandise account showed a slight widening from $444 million in 1954 to an estimated $480 million in 1955, an increase of $36 million. The deficit, that is the excess of payments over receipts, on the travel and the interest and dividends accounts widened, while there was a slightly lower deficit on freight and shipping account. Total non-merchandise receipts rose from $1,296 million in 1954 to $1,447 million in 1955, an increase of $151 million. Payments rose by $187 million to $1,927 million compared with $1,740 million in 1954.

A notable feature of Canadian trade in 1955 was the marked increase in exports to the United Kingdom, other Commonwealth countries and to the countries of continental western Europe. While over half of the increase in the value of exports resulted from greater sales to the United States, this represented a gain of about 10 per cent over 1954. On the other hand, exports to the United Kingdom and to other Commonwealth countries increased by nearly 20 per cent while those to western Europe showed a rise of 11 per cent. The increase in sales to overseas markets is the result of two factors. A rising level of production in overseas countries in general has created a strong demand for Canadian products. In addition, the improvement in the economic and financial position of these countries which has taken place in recent years has permitted an extensive relaxation of restrictions against dollar imports. In contrast to exports, more than three-quarters of the increase in imports came from the United States. The remainder of the increase was largely drawn from western Europe, Latin America and Japan. Imports from the United Kingdom and other Commonwealth countries showed only a moderate increase. As a consequence of these developments and taking into account non-merchandise transactions, Canada incurred a larger deficit with the United States, a larger surplus with the United Kingdom and other Commonwealth countries, and a deficit with the rest of the world.

The net inflow of capital into Canada in 1955 was considerably larger than in 1954. There were, moreover, large changes in the movements of some components of the capital account between the two years. Direct investment remained at a relatively high level though it was somewhat smaller than in 1954. Net transactions in Canadian securities resulted in 1955 in a small outflow of capital from Canada, the first time this has occurred since 1949. This followed from a combination of net disinvestment in outstanding Canadian securities, a much smaller volume of new security issues abroad and large repatriations through redemptions. These movements were a response to the narrowing of the differential between interest rates in the United States and Canada which occurred prior to mid-summer 1955. This made it less attractive to borrow in the United States market. It also encouraged United States investors to liquidate their holdings of outstanding Canadian securities. The decline in portfolio investment was offset by a substantial inflow of "other" capital, mostly of a short-term nature. Official reserves of gold and United States dollars, expressed in U.S. funds, were reduced by $42 million to $1,900 million at December 31, 1955, compared with $1,942 million at December 31, 1953.

During 1955 the exchange rate differential between the Canadian and United States dollar narrowed considerably. At December 31, 1954, the United States dollar was $.96 19/32 in terms of the Canadian dollar, and at December 31, 1955, the exchange rate was $.99 29/32. In October of 1955, the Canadian dollar was quoted at par with the United States dollar for the first time since March, 1952, and from mid-November until early December the Canadian dollar was at times at a slight discount. Subsequently the Canadian dollar has remained stable at a premium of less than 1/4 of a cent.

EMPLOYMENT AND EARNINGS

The increase in production during 1955 led to a substantial improvement in employment. In 1954, the average number of persons employed declined by 52,000. In 1955, during each month except January, employment was higher than in 1954. Beginning in May, 1955, the level of employment was also higher each month when compared to the corresponding period in 1953 and the average number of persons employed for the year 1955 as a whole rose by 82,000 above the average for 1953. From the seasonal low in the beginning of 1955 to the peak in employment in the late summer, employment rose by 13 per cent and there were 642,000 more persons at work. This compares with an increase of 416,000 persons with jobs, or a gain of 8 per cent in employment during the same period in 1953. The drop in employment from the summer peak to December was, of course, less severe in 1955 compared to 1953 since the recession began to make itself felt towards the end of that year.

THE LABOUR FORCE

The increase in employment in 1955 took place in non-agricultural occupations. Agricultural employment actually declined and this marks the return to the trend of recent years when, except for 1954, there has been a shift from rural to urban occupations. Thus, while total employment rose on the average by 2½ per cent in 1955, the increase in non-agricultural employment was more pronounced with the number of employed persons up by about 4½ per cent. The seasonally adjusted index of non-agricultural employment indicates that the number of persons with jobs reached a peak in September 1955 at a level about 5 per cent above January. For the remainder of the year, only minor changes occurred, and in overall terms stability prevailed. All major industrial groups showed gains in employment during 1955. In durable goods manufacturing, employment, on a seasonally adjusted basis, increased steadily during the year in contrast to the decline throughout 1954. In non-durable goods production, employment had remained fairly stable during 1954 and this continued during the first few months of 1955. In the second half of 1955, however, employment rose considerably.

The increase in employment in 1955 was accompanied by an almost equal growth in the labour force and consequently unemployment was largely unchanged when comparing the annual average for 1954 and 1955. The average number of persons without jobs and seeking work in 1955 was 230,000; this compares with 232,000 unemployed persons in the preceding year. However, a comparison of annual averages obscures the improvement which occurred in the course of 1955. Beginning in May, 1955, unemployment was lower each month than during the corresponding period in the preceding year. This improvement became more pronounced as the year went on and in December, 1955, the number of persons without jobs and seeking work was 48,000 below the level of the same month in 1954.

[1] Average of the quarterly labour force surveys in 1952 and of the monthly surveys in 1953, 1954 and 1955.

The number of persons without jobs and seeking work averaged 4.1 per cent of the labour force in 1955 compared with 4.3 per cent in 1954. The highest unemployment was reached in March, 1955, when there were 401,000 persons without jobs and seeking work or 80,000 more than the number for the same month in 1954. The point of lowest unemployment was reached in August, 1955, with 131,000 jobless persons looking for work. In 1954, unemployment was lowest in September when 168,000 persons were looking for work. In other words a comparison of the seasonal low for unemployment in the two years indicates that in 1955 there were 37,000 fewer persons looking for work than in the previous year. In January, 1956, the number of persons without jobs and seeking work was 286,000 or 77,000 below the level of the comparable month in 1955.

The rise in employment in 1955 was reflected in labour income. The greater number of employed persons worked on the average more hours per week and received more pay during 1955. For example, in manufacturing, average hours worked per week increased by 1 per cent and average hourly earnings rose by almost 3 per cent over the 1954 level. For the economy as a whole, a combination of these factors brought about an increase in labour income of $872 million in 1955. The average annual earnings per paid worker rose from $3,057 in 1954 to $3,136 in 1955, an increase of 2½ per cent. Most of this increase represents a gain in real income, for prices, as indicated by the consumer price index, showed no significant change.

Labour income rose steadily throughout 1955. The seasonally adjusted figures indicate that following a moderate rise in the first quarter, the growth in labour income was most pronounced in the second quarter. For the remainder of the year further substantial increases took place but in each succeeding quarter the expansion continued at a reduced pace.

All major industrial groups in 1955 paid out more in wages and salaries than in the preceding year. The largest increase took place in construction and amounted to 14 per cent. This was followed by finance and other services with a wage and salary bill up by 10 per cent. The increases in all other groups were less than for labour income as a whole. In manufacturing, labour income rose by about 6 per cent; a similar increase in income accrued to persons employed in the utilities, transportation, storage and trade. A more moderate expansion in labour compensation occurred in the primary industries with the total 3 per cent above 1954.

The civilian labour force, which includes both the employed and the unemployed, averaged 5,558,000 for 1955 and accounted for about 53 per cent of the (non-institutional) civilian population over 14 years of age. A similar relationship prevailed in 1954. The agricultural labour force declined by 55,000 persons to 824,000 in 1955.

MONETARY AND CREDIT DEVELOPMENTS

During 1955 there was a marked expansion of bank loans and money supply as the demand for credit grew with the recovery of business activity. The very rapid expansion in the demand for credit and in bank lending brought increasing tightness to the money market as the year progressed and resulted in an upward movement in interest rates in contrast to the downward movement which had continued since the last quarter of 1953.

At the beginning of 1955 the demand for business loans was relatively slow, and the banks continued to purchase substantial quantities of government securities as they had done in 1954. Although the expansion in bank holdings of government securities had slowed down noticeably by the end of the first quarter, the chartered banks were able to add moderately to their holdings in the second quarter, despite the fact that bank loans were also increasing. Although the chartered banks were in a position to add to their holdings of government securities and later to expand bank loans as well, these changes were accompanied by a noticeable decline in the reserve ratio of chartered banks from about 8·9 per cent at the beginning of the year to 8·3 per cent by June. Shortly after the middle of the year, the banks ceased to be net buyers of government securities and from the latter part of August to the end of the year were substantial sellers. Thus one effect of the expansion of bank credit during the year was to reduce reserve ratios and as the year progressed the expansion rested increasingly on the conversion of the chartered banks' liquid assets and bonds to cash. From the end of July until the end of December, chartered bank holdings of government securities fell by $639 million.

In the early weeks of the year the chartered banks were buying substantial quantities of government securities and interest rates declined. However, short-term rates turned up in mid-February. Yields on middle and long-term government securities reached their low points before the end of the first quarter and the general decline of interest rates was terminated. Interest rates rose throughout the remainder of the year except for the last two or three weeks of December when there was a slight decline. The rise in interest rates was particularly marked in the latter part of the year when the banks were selling government securities on a large scale to finance loan expansion.

The bank rate was lowered from 2 per cent to 1½ per cent on February 1st to bring it more in line with the short-term market rate. This was in keeping with the adoption of a more flexible bank rate policy which could be effective through the newly developed short-term money market. As bank credit continued to expand rapidly in the third quarter, interest rates rose further and the bank rate was raised on August 5th from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 per cent. It became increasingly evident that the rate of loan expansion might outrun the growth in productive capacity and the objective of monetary policy was one of offering increasing resistance. The bank rate was subsequently raised from 2 to $2\frac{1}{4}$ per cent on October 12th, and from $2\frac{1}{4}$ to $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent on November 18th. With the rapid and continued expansion of bank loans the chartered banks were pressed for cash in the third and fourth quarters and sold substantial amounts of government securities. Because of these developments, recourse to the Bank of Canada, by the chartered banks and the dealers in the short-term money market, was quite frequent in the third and fourth quarters.

In the early part of the year, the yields on Canadian Government long-term bonds were falling relative to rates in the United States. The United States market was, therefore, less attractive to Canadian borrowers, and Canadian Government securities were less attractive to American investors. After mid-year, the spread between interest rates in Canada and the United States again widened and towards the end of the year Canadian borrowers were again resorting to the New York market in larger volume.

For the year as a whole, the increase in bank loans amounted to $794 million or 19 per cent, and in absolute terms was the largest on record. In addition to the increase in bank loans, there was a marked expansion in lending on insured mortgages on residential real estate and in bank holdings of provincial, municipal and corporate securities.

It is estimated that consumer credit outstanding rose by about $350 million in 1955 compared with an increase of $114 million in 1954 and $326 million in 1953. A considerable part of the increase in bank lending was associated with this increase in consumer credit. For example, loans to instalment finance companies rose by $116 million or 64 per cent, and personal loans other than those fully secured by marketable bonds and stocks increased by $113 million or 32 per cent. Loans to merchandisers were $73 million or 13 per cent higher than in 1954. The high level of construction activity brought with it a large increase of $91 million or 49 per cent in loans to contractors.

The public's holdings of currency, bank deposits and Government of Canada securities increased in 1955 by $1,115 million. The total increase is accounted for by chartered bank activity since the Federal Government had a moderate excess of receipts over outlays which amounted to $112 million—the increase in debt outstanding being more than offset by increases in government cash balances and in bonds held in government accounts. This excess of receipts over outlays takes into account both budgetary and extra-budgetary activities, changes in government loans and advances, and the operation of government accounts such as the Unemployment Insurance Fund. In 1954 the government excess of outlays over receipts amounted to $227 million and accounted for almost all of the $232 million expansion in the public's holdings of currency, bank deposits and Government of Canada securities.

In 1954 substantial amounts of the public's holdings of government bonds were converted to cash. In 1955 there was an increase of $370 million in the public's holdings of government securities but this increase was confined for the most part to Canada Savings Bonds which are non-market issues. There was some liquidation of market securities in the first half of the year but this was a little more than offset by buying in the last few months. It will be noted that the amount of Government of Canada securities held by the general public at the end of 1955 was about the same as the amount held at the end of 1952, with the increase of $1·2 billion in holdings of Canada Savings Bonds being offset by a decline of about the same amount in holdings of market securities.

An important new working arrangement in the operations of the banking system was introduced in the latter part of 1955 when the Bank of Canada suggested that the chartered banks adopt a standard practice regarding the maintenance of a minimum ratio of liquid assets (cash, day-to-day loans and treasury bills) to deposits. The chartered banks agreed to work to achieve by May 31st, 1956, a minimum liquid asset ratio of 15 per cent which they will endeavour to maintain on a daily average basis from June on. With the adoption of this convention it is expected that the lending policies of banks, interest rates and securities markets generally will respond more quickly and smoothly to measures of monetary restraint when these are required in the future.

PRICE TRENDS

Although there was no discernible trend in the consumer price index during 1955, the general index of wholesale prices showed a definite upward movement, rising from 215.7 in January to 221.4 in December. The increase in wholesale prices amounted to just over 2 per cent in 1955 in contrast to a decline of somewhat the same magnitude in 1954. In addition, this apparently moderate upward trend concealed very large increases in some of the components. On the other hand, the consumer price index exhibited comparative stability and was 116.9 in December of 1955 compared with 116.6 a year earlier.

Starting in January at 116.4, the consumer price index reached a low of 115.9 in June, and in the last three months of the year remained unchanged at 116.9. Thus, the increase over 1954 as well as variations from the average were no more than one-half per cent. While there were no marked movements in the components, there appeared to be a tendency for costs of shelter and some other services to rise slowly. The largest increase occurred in the shelter index which was some 2 per cent higher in 1955 than in 1954.

The United States consumer price index experienced somewhat the same degree of stability as the Canadian index. In contrast to the Canadian index, however, that of the United States averaged a little less for 1955 than for 1954. Nevertheless, the trend in the United States over the year paralleled the Canadian pattern and the total index was slightly higher in December than in January. The index of food prices in the United States showed a small decline in 1955, whereas there was no significant movement in Canadian food prices.

The Canadian index of wholesale prices moved slowly but steadily upward throughout 1955. This upward movement was a reversal of the downward trend which had continued from the post-Korean peak in 1951 to late 1954. With the important exception of a further decline of 5 per cent in the price of farm products over the year, most other wholesale prices followed the upward movement of the general index. The index of industrial materials showed an increase of 8 per cent during 1955 while building materials rose between 3 and 4 per cent. The greatest increase occurred in non-ferrous metals which advanced almost 18 per cent over the year. Other significant increases took place in the prices of wood and iron products which showed a rise of 5 and 7 per cent, respectively.

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS

1. INTRODUCTION

The figures which are presented in this Part for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956 are preliminary and subject to revision. The Government's fiscal year ends on March 31 and after that date the books must remain open for several weeks to record various adjusting entries and to take into account all payments up to and including April 30 made on account of expenditures originating in and properly chargeable to the fiscal year 1955-56. Final results for each year's operations are not available before some time in August. The figures used in this White Paper are based on ten months actual and two months estimated. The final figures when they become available next August may vary to some extent from those given in the following pages.

2. HIGHLIGHTS OF GOVERNMENTAL FINANCIAL OPERATIONS DURING 1955-56

Budgetary transactions

Budgetary revenues of the government for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956 are now estimated at $4,385 million. This is $183 million or about 4 per cent more than last year's budget forecast of $4,202 million and approximately $262 million more than the total collected in 1954-55.

Budgetary expenditures are estimated at $4,437 million. This is $75 million or 2 per cent more than the budget forecast and about $162 million more than the total spent in 1954-55.

On the basis of these figures the indicated deficit for the fiscal year is about $52 million compared with a budget forecast of a deficit of $160 million and a deficit of $152 million for 1954-55.

On the revenue side of the government's budgetary operations the most noteworthy feature has been the buoyancy of the revenues reflecting the general level of activity and production which has been considerably above that which was the basis for the budgetary forecast of $4,202 million last April. Collections from all sources except personal income tax are higher than those of the previous year and when the books for the year are closed it is expected that all categories of revenue except corporation income tax will have equalled or exceeded the budget forecast.

On the expenditure side the most significant feature has been the continued importance of defence in the government's expenditure programme. Defence expenditures are expected to amount to $1,760 million in 1955-56, an increase of $72 million or 4 per cent over the preceding year representing 40 per cent of the government's total budgetary outlay. In 1954-55 defence expenditures amounted to $1,688 million and constituted 40 per cent of the total.

Non-budgetary transactions

Although the budgetary deficit is $52 million the cash balances at the year end will be about $297 million greater than a year ago. This is the result of receipts of $385 million from annuity, insurance and pension accounts and other non-budgetary sources plus an increase of $247 million in the outstanding debt less $283 million paid out in loans, advances, investments and other non-budgetary disbursements.

The following table summarizes the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions for the fiscal year 1955-56 and indicates how they affect the Government's debt and cash position. For purposes of comparison the corresponding figures for 1954-55 are also shown. An explanation of these transactions in greater detail is given in the section on "The Cash Position".

Old age security fund

Pension payments from the old age security fund are estimated at $366 million in 1955-56 and tax receipts credited to the fund at $316 million resulting in a deficit of $50 million for the year covered by a temporary loan by the Minister of Finance to the fund. During 1954-55 pension payments amounted to $353 million and tax receipts credited to the fund to $290 million, resulting in an excess of pension payments over tax receipts of $63 million. Under the authority of a vote of parliament, $63 million representing the deficit of the fund sustained during 1954-55 was charged as a budgetary expenditure in 1955-56. The 1955-56 deficit of $50 million is carried in the accounts as a temporary loan to the fund.

The Budget—Appendix

Debt transactions

During 1955-56 it is estimated that the government will have issued securities amounting to $3,229 million (excluding treasury bills issued to refund maturing bills) and redeemed maturing issues to a total of $2,331 million, resulting in an increase of $898 million in unmatured debt. However, as other liabilities are expected to increase by $205 million the government's gross public debt will have increased by $1,103 million to $19,055 million at March 31, 1956. During the same period the net assets are expected to increase by $1,052 million to $7,740 million. As a result the government's net debt is expected to be $11,315 million at March 31, 1956, the increase of $52 million being equivalent to the budgetary deficit for the fiscal year.

Cash position

Cash balances on deposit to the credit of the Receiver General are expected to increase by $297 million during the fiscal year reflecting the increase of $247 million in unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public (after taking into account sinking fund purchases and transactions in the securities investment account) and the net amount of $50 million available from budgetary and non-budgetary transactions ($102 million available from non-budgetary transactions offset by the amount of $52 million required to cover the estimated budgetary deficit for the fiscal year).

3. BUDGETARY ACCOUNTS

Total revenues, estimated at $4,385 million for 1955-56, are $262 million more than the total for the previous fiscal year. Total expenditures are estimated at $4,437 million, an increase of $162 million over 1954-55. The deficit for the fiscal year is estimated at $52 million or $100 million less than the deficit of $152 million for the year ended March 31, 1955.

A summarized statement of the estimated revenues and expenditures and deficit for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956, with the actual figures for the fiscal years ended March 31, 1949 to 1955, inclusive, is given in the following table.

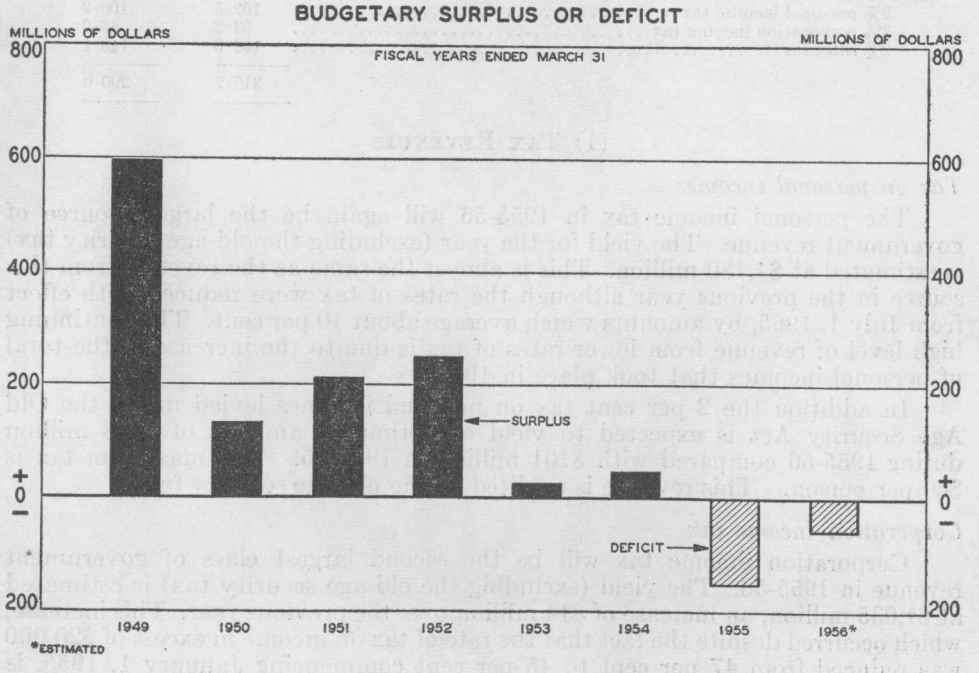
A. REVENUES



Budgetary revenues are expected to amount to $4,385 million in the fiscal year 1955-56. This is $262 million, or 6 per cent, higher than in the previous year. It is estimated that of the total revenues for the year, $3,993 million, or 91 per cent, will have been derived from taxes and $392 million, or 9 per cent, from non-tax revenues.

A statement of estimated revenues for 1955-56 classified by major categories, and the corresponding figures for the actual receipts in 1954-55 is given in Table III.

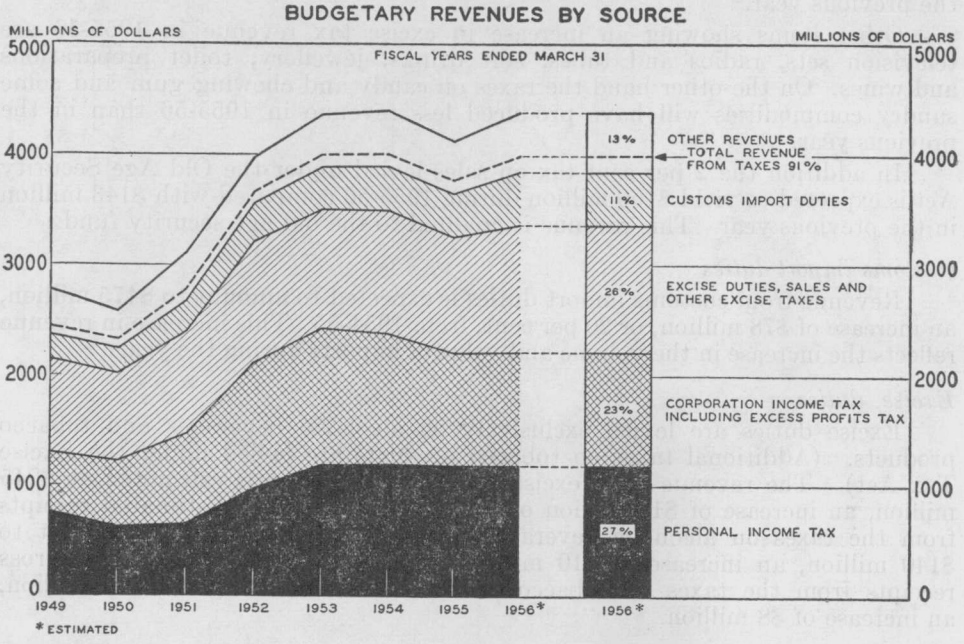
(1) TAX REVENUES

Tax on personal incomes



The personal income tax in 1955-56 will again be the largest source of government revenue. The yield for the year (excluding the old age security tax) is estimated at $1,180 million. This is almost the same as the revenue from this source in the previous year although the rates of tax were reduced with effect from July 1, 1955, by amounts which average about 10 per cent. The continuing high level of revenue from lower rates of tax is due to the increase in the total of personal incomes that took place in 1955.

In addition the 2 per cent tax on personal incomes levied under the Old Age Security Act is expected to yield an estimated amount of $103 million during 1955-56 compared with $101 million in 1954-55. The maximum tax is $60 per person. This revenue is credited to the old age security fund

Corporation income tax will be the second largest class of government revenue in 1955-56. The yield (excluding the old age security tax) is estimated at $1,035 million, an increase of $14 million over the previous year. This increase, which occurred despite the fact that the rate of tax on income in excess of $20,000 was reduced from 47 per cent to 45 per cent commencing January 1, 1955, is due to the increase in corporation profits in 1955.

In addition the 2 per cent tax levied on income of corporations under the Old Age Security Act is expected to yield $53 million during 1955-56 compared with $46 million collected from this source in 1954-55. These collections are credited to the old age security fund.

Taxes on interest, dividends, rents and royalties going abroad

Revenue under this heading is derived from taxes withheld on payments of interest, dividends, rents, royalties, etc. made to non-residents. The estimated total of $67 million in 1955-56 is $6 million greater than that in the previous year reflecting increased dividend payments from higher corporate profits and larger investment in 1955.

Excise taxes

Included under this heading are the revenues from the general sales tax and the special excise taxes levied on a wide range of manufactured products. Total net collections for the year are estimated at $900 million, an increase of $76 million, or 9 per cent, over 1954-55.

It is estimated that the sales tax, which from the standpoint of revenue is the most important tax levied under the Excise Tax Act, will have yielded a net revenue of $640 million in the year (excluding the 2 per cent old age security sales tax). This is $68 million, or 12 per cent, more than the amount of $572 million received from this source in 1954-55. Since there has been no substantial change in the general price level during the year this increase in revenue is due to increased production and imports of taxable goods during the year.

Excise taxes other than the general sales tax will yield approximately $260 million, or $8 million more than in 1954-55. This increase occurs despite the fact that with effect from April 6, 1955, the tax on passenger automobiles was reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent and the tax on tires and tubes for automotive vehicles was repealed.

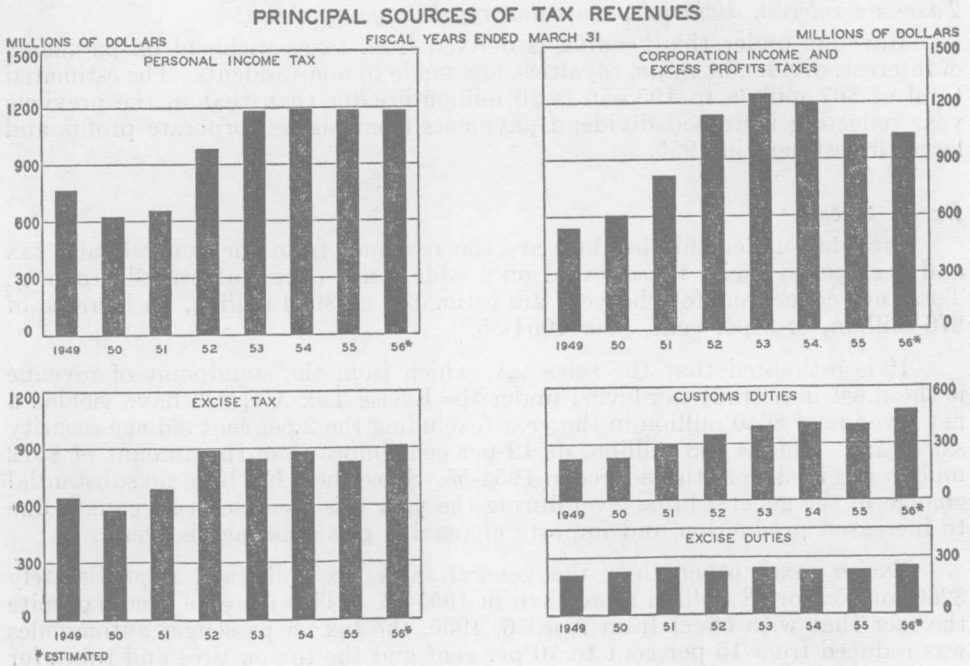
Because of the very high level of passenger automobile sales in 1955-56 the revenue from the excise tax on this item will exceed that of the previous year by approximately $8 million despite the fact that the rate of tax is lower by one-third. This continuing high level of revenue from the tax on automobiles plus an increase of $8 million in the revenue from the taxes on tobacco products largely accounts for the revenue from excise taxes in 1955-56 exceeding that of the previous year.

Other items showing an increase in excise tax revenue in 1955-56 are television sets, radios and tubes, soft drinks, jewellery, toilet preparations and wines. On the other hand the taxes on candy and chewing gum and some sundry commodities will have produced less revenue in 1955-56 than in the previous year.

In addition the 2 per cent tax on sales levied under the Old Age Security Act is expected to yield $160 million during 1955-56 compared with $143 million in the previous year. This revenue is credited to the old age security fund.



Customs import duties

Revenue from customs import duties is expected to amount to $475 million, an increase of $78 million, or 20 per cent, from 1954-55. This increase in revenue reflects the increase in the volume and value of imports during the year.

Excise duties

Excise duties are levied exclusively on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products. (Additional taxes on tobacco products are levied under the Excise Tax Act). The revenue from excise duties for the year is estimated at $245 million, an increase of $18 million over the previous year. Estimated receipts from the taxes on alcoholic beverages, before deducting refunds, amount to $140 million, an increase of $10 million from the previous year. The gross receipts from the taxes on tobacco products are estimated at $109 million, an increase of $8 million.

PRINCIPAL SOURCES OF TAX REVENUES

Succession duties

Revenue from succession duties is estimated at $75 million in 1955-56 an increase of $30 million, or 67 per cent over the previous year. Two-thirds of the increase came from payments in respect of one unusually large estate.

Other taxes

The principal source of revenue under this heading is the tax on the premium income of insurance companies which will produce approximately $15 million in 1955-56 compared with $14 million in the previous year. Small amounts of revenue are also received from special taxes on the export of electrical energy from Canada and the tax on the export of furs from the Northwest Territories.

(2) Non-Tax Revenues

Non-tax revenues for 1955-56 are estimated at $392 million, an increase of $42 million over the total of $350 million for the previous fiscal year. It is to be noted that the classification "special receipts and credits" has been eliminated and items which in previous years were shown under this heading have been reclassified and appear under the appropriate heading in the non-tax revenue category. The following table presents a comparative summary of non-tax revenues for the current and the previous year.

Post Office

Gross post office receipts for 1955-56 are estimated at $157 million. After making authorized disbursements from revenue of $20 million for salaries and rent allowances at semi-staff and revenue offices, commissions at sub-offices, transit charges on Canadian mail forwarded through or delivered in foreign countries, etc., net post office receipts credited to budgetary revenues are estimated at $137 million. Gross receipts for 1955-56 are expected to exceed those of the previous year by $6 million. As estimated payments from revenue are the same as the payments in 1954-55, the net increase in post office receipts credited to budgetary revenues is $6 million.

As costs of operating the Post Office during 1955-56 (excluding the $20 million charged to revenue) are expected to total $127 million, net revenue will exceed net costs by $10 million. However, in making this comparison it is to be noted that the total shown for post office revenue does not reflect any payment for the franking privilege covering parliamentary and departmental mail or for certain miscellaneous services provided for other government departments and agencies, nor does the total shown for operating expenses reflect any charges for premises occupied by the Post Office Department or for certain accounting and miscellaneous services provided by other departments.

Return on investments

Return on investments is expected to yield $147 million, an increase of $13 million over the total of $134 million received in the previous year.

Payments from Crown corporations are estimated at $83 million. This is $5 million more than the total received during the previous year and is due mainly to increases of $8 million in receipts from the Canadian National Railways, $2 million from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and $2 million from Polymer Corporation Limited offset in part by decreases of $3 million in profits received from the Bank of Canada and $4 million in the surplus earnings of Canadian Arsenals Limited. The increase of $8 million in the amount expected to be received from the Canadian National Railways reflects a dividend of $11 million paid on the 4 per cent preferred stock of the company held by the government offset in part by a decrease of $3 million in interest on loans.

Receipts from other loans and investments are estimated at $64 million an increase of $8 million over the previous year due mainly to increases of $5 million in the earnings of the securities investment account and $4 million on sinking funds and other investments held for the retirement of unmatured debt.

A comparative summary of the estimated receipts for 1955-56 and the amounts received in the previous year is given in the following table.

Premium, discount and exchange

Premium, discount and exchange transactions in the current fiscal year are expected to result in a net credit of $2 million to revenues compared with a net charge of $4 million to expenditures in the previous fiscal year.

Bullion and coinage

Revenue under this heading arises out of the operations of the Royal Canadian Mint and includes assaying, refining and handling charges and the net gain on coinage and refining operations. The estimated amount credited to bullion and coinage revenue for 1955-56 is $3 million, an increase of $1 million over the previous year.

Privileges, licences and permits

It is estimated that revenues of $16 million will be received during the fiscal year on account of privileges, licences and permits compared with $14 million received during 1954-55. Approximately $7 million of this total is collected by the Department of Transport, mainly on account of aircraft landing fees, rentals of hangar accommodation, office, shop and garage space and living quarters and land and water power rentals.

Proceeds from sales

An amount of $22 million is expected to be received during the current fiscal year as proceeds from sales, a decrease of $9 million from the total received in 1954-55. This amount includes $7 million from Crown Assets Disposal Corporation representing amounts realized from the disposal of surplus Crown assets (after deducting certain agency fees and transfers), $6 million under agreements of sale, and $5 million from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation representing the proceeds from the sale of wartime housing properties, including depreciation provisions set aside by the Corporation in previous years on properties that have now been sold.

Services and service fees

It is estimated that $17 million will have been received during the fiscal year for services and service fees by the various departments of the government, a decrease of $1 million from the previous year. Approximately 75 per cent of these fees are collected by three departments—$6 million by Department of Trade and Commerce mainly for services for the inspection, weighing, storage and elevation of grain and for electricity, gas and weights and measures inspection service; $5 million by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police mainly for police services to provinces and municipalities; and $3 million by the Department of Transport chiefly for wharfage and other canal and marine service fees, steamship inspection service, air-ground radio service at airports, and government telegraph and telephone service.

Refunds of previous years' expenditure

Revenues in this category consist of amounts received during the current fiscal year representing refunds of expenditures in previous years. The estimated amount of $45 million received during 1955-56 compares with a total of $14 million received during the previous year. The increase of $31 million is due almost entirely to a repayment of $30 million received from the Government of the United States of advances by Canada on contracts for the supply of aircraft, engines and equipment. The arrangement is that when Canada places contracts with the Government of the United States, payments of the estimated costs are made to the United States treasury. If these estimated costs are revised or if there are reductions in the contracts the Government of the United States makes refunds of the overpayments.

Miscellaneous

Miscellaneous revenue is expected to amount to $3 million for the year 1955-56 compared with $5 million in the previous fiscal year. The decrease is due mainly to the fact that there is no comparable amount in the current year to the $1 million, representing abnormal royalties and licence fees due to war production disallowed to owners and licensers of patents, which was transferred from a suspense account to revenue in the previous year.

(3) Comparison of Actual Revenue with Budget Forecast

Total budgetary revenues for 1955-56, excluding revenues from the old age security taxes, as now estimated are expected to be $183 million, or about 4 per cent more than the forecast made in the budget speech of April 5, 1955. It is expected that when the books for the year are closed revenue from all sources except the tax on corporation profits and miscellaneous taxes will have exceeded expectations. This excess of revenues over the amounts forecast reflects the fact that the general level of economic activity and production throughout the year has been considerably above the level which formed the basis for the budget forecast.

The following table shows the extent to which actual revenues for 1955-56, as now estimated, differ from the budget forecast.

TABLE VI

Comparison of Budget Forecast with Actual Revenues for Fiscal Year Ended March 31, 1956

(In millions of dollars)

Source of Revenues	Budget Forecast of Revenues	Actual Revenues (Estimated)	Increase or Decrease(−) compared with Budget Forecast
Personal income tax	1,150·0	1,180·0	30·0
Non-resident income taxes	65·0	67·0	2·0
Corporation income tax	1,057·0	1,035·0	−22·0

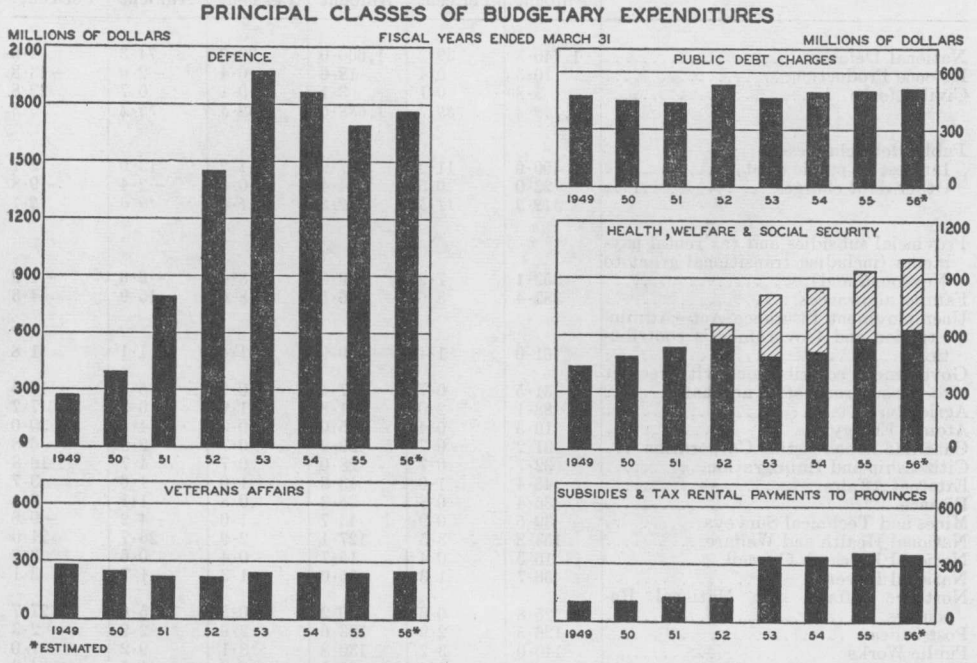
Customs import duties	410·0	475·0	65·0
Excise duties	238·0	245·0	7·0
Sales tax (net)	599·0	640·0	41·0
Other excise taxes	231·0	260·0	29·0
Miscellaneous taxes	17·0	16·0	−1·0
Total tax revenues	3,812·0	3,993·0	181·0
Non-tax revenues	390·0	392·4	2·4
Total budgetary revenues	4,202·0	4,385·4	183·4

The estimated revenue from the personal income tax is $30 million, or 3 per cent, above the budget forecast. This is because the total of personal incomes for the year reached a level above what was anticipated a year ago.



The revenue from corporation income tax as now estimated is $22 million less than forecast despite the fact that corporate profits in 1955 exceeded expectations. This contradictory result is due to the fact that corporations are entitled under the Income Tax Act to base their monthly tax remittances for the first nine months of a payment period upon either their actual profits in the preceding year or the estimated profits of the current year and the option had a somewhat greater effect than anticipated.

The extent to which the estimated revenue from customs import duties has exceeded expectations is a reflection of the upsurge in imports which accompanied the rapid rise in production and economic activity.

The estimated revenue from both sales and other excise taxes is well ahead of expectations as the level of consumption rose to new highs. The extent to which new car sales has exceeded expectations is one of the main reasons why revenue from other excise taxes passed the budget forecast.

B. EXPENDITURES

Budgetary expenditures for 1955-56 are estimated at $4,437 million, an increase of $162 million over the 1954-55 total of $4,275 million.

Note: The lightly shaded area in the chart for Health, Welfare and Social Security represents pension payments out of the old age security fund.

A comparative summary of estimated expenditures by departments and principal purposes for the fiscal year 1955-56 and actual expenditures for the preceding year is given in the following table:

Defence expenditures

Defence expenditures consisting of expenditures of the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production and outlay for the civil defence programme are again the largest category of government expenditure. The total of $1,760 million for the fiscal year is approximately 40 per cent of the aggregate budgetary expenditures of the government. This is an increase of $72 million or 4 per cent over the 1954-55 total of $1,688 million when defence expenditures were 40 per cent of aggregate budgetary expenditures.

Expenditures of the Department of National Defence are estimated at $1,740 million and those of the Department of Defence Production at $16 million, while outlays in connection with the civil defence programme are expected to total $4 million. In 1954-55 expenditures were $1,666 million, $19 million and $3 million respectively.

A comparative summary of defence expenditures for 1955-56 and 1954-55 is shown in the following table:

Estimated expenditures for army, naval and air services amount in the aggregate to $1,439 million, $140 million more than the total for 1954-55. Outlay for army services is $35 million more than in the previous year, that for naval services $64 million more and that for air services $41 million more. Expenditures for defence research and development are expected to amount to $66 million an increase of $16 million over the 1954-55 programme.

Estimated expenditures of $175 million under the mutual aid programme and contributions to the military costs of NATO are $85 million less than the total of $260 million in the previous fiscal year. Under the provisions of section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, defence equipment and supplies may be transferred from Canadian stocks to other parties to the North Atlantic Treaty. The estimated replacement value of such equipment and supplies acquired by the Canadian services prior to March 31, 1950 and transferred to NATO countries is charged to this appropriation and credited to a special national defence equipment account. These credits may be used subsequently to purchase equipment or supplies for the army, naval or air services of the Canadian forces. In accordance with Vote 236 of Appropriation Act, No. 5, 1955, the estimated replacement value of equipment and supplies, acquired by the Canadian forces since March 31, 1950 and transferred as mutual aid, is credited to the appropriate service allotment instead of being credited to the special defence equipment account and may be expended during the fiscal year for purposes of the Canadian forces.

The estimated expenditures of $175 million for 1955-56 include $54 million for transfer of equipment and supplies acquired prior to March 31, 1950, which is credited to the special national defence equipment account, and $109 million in outlays for costs incurred in acquiring and supplying military equipment for and in the training in Canada of aircrews from countries which are parties to the North Atlantic Treaty. The contribution of $12 million on account of Canada's share of the NATO military budgets and infrastructure costs which is also included in this total is unchanged from the total of the corresponding outlay in 1954-55. The percentage share of these costs borne by each nation is established in the North Atlantic Council and is subject to ratification by the respective member governments.

The government's contribution to the permanent services pension account during 1955-56 of an amount equal to $1\frac{2}{3}$ times the contributions by permanent services personnel is estimated to be $40 million consisting of $36 million relating to current contributions and $4 million to contributions for arrears. This is $3 million more than the 1954-55 contribution of $37 million of which $34 million related to current contributions and $3 million to contributions for arrears.

The estimated expenditures of $16 million for 1955-56 for the Department of Defence Production reflect a reduction of $3 million in the programme under which capital assistance is given to private contractors, Crown plants operated on a management fee basis, and Crown corporations undertaking contracts essential to the defence programme. For 1955-56 this capital assistance is estimated at $7 million compared with $10 million in 1954-55.

Civil defence expenditures, estimated at $4 million, reflect an increase of $1 million over the 1954-55 expenditures.

In addition to these budgetary expenditures for defence, there are certain other cash outlays which must be considered in assessing the full effect of the defence programme on the economy of Canada.

The Department of Defence Production makes cash disbursements for the procurement of materials for use in the manufacture of defence equipment, which are not recorded as budgetary expenditures. For purposes of accounting and control, these amounts are charged to the defence production revolving fund and are treated as assets on the books of the government until they are billed to the Department of National Defence or sold to defence contractors for use in the manufacture of defence equipment. It is estimated that as a result of the transactions during 1955-56 the fund will be reduced by $3 million leaving an estimated balance in the account of $70 million at March 31, 1956.

The national defence equipment account, to which is credited the estimated replacement values of equipment and supplies acquired by the Department of National Defence prior to March 31, 1950 and subsequently transferred to NATO countries, and to which is charged the cost of replacement equipment, also involves cash outlays which are not reflected as budgetary expenditures. Transfers to the account during the fiscal year are estimated at $54 million while disbursements are expected to total $49 million. The balance available at March 31, 1956 for disbursement in subsequent years is estimated at $279 million compared with $274 million at March 31, 1955.

Under section 11 of the National Defence Act there is provision for the sale of materiel, not immediately required for the use of the Canadian defence forces or the Defence Research Board, to such countries and upon such terms as the Governor in Council may determine. The proceeds of such sales are credited to a special account to be used for the procurement of materiel. Credits to the account during 1955-56 are estimated at $5 million and disbursements are expected to amount to $3 million.

The following table summarizes the cash disbursements for defence for the past two fiscal years.

Public debt charges

Public debt charges in 1955-56 are estimated at $513 million or 11 per cent of the aggregate budgetary expenditures, compared with a total of $502 million or 12 per cent in 1954-55. They are again the second largest item of budgetary expenditure.

Interest on public debt is estimated at $491 million or $13 million more than the total expenditure of $478 million in 1954-55. Interest on unmatured debt is expected to amount to $410 million compared with $406 million in 1954-55; the increase is attributable in part to interest accrued on Canada savings bonds series 10 which was issued in November 1955, and in part tc an increase in the amount of treasury bills outstanding and to higher rates of interest. Interest on annuity, insurance and pension accounts is estimated at $77 million. The increase of $8 million over the total of $69 million in 1954-55 is due to increases of $3 million in respect of the superannuation account, $2 million in respect of the permanent services pension account and $3 million on government annuities account.

Other public debt charges, which include the cost of issuing new loans, the annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions, fees for the services of fiscal agents and registrars, commission for the payment of coupon and fully registered interest, and other costs of servicing public debt are estimated at $22 million for 1955-56 compared with the 1954-55 total of $24 million. The decrease of $2 million is attributable mainly to a decrease in the annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions.

The table which follows gives a comparative summary of public debt charges for 1955-56 and the previous year:

TABLE X

(In millions of dollars)

Interest and Other Public Debt Charges	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1956 (Estimated)	1955
Interest on public debt—

Servicing of public debt	0·6	0·8	−0·2
Cost of issuing new loans	1·2	1·2	.....
Total public debt charges	512·9	502·3	10·6

When considering the magnitude of these public debt charges and the burden they place upon the public treasury, it must be borne in mind that a substantial portion of the debt is attributable to, or is invested in, productive or earning assets. Therefore, in calculating the net burden of the government's annual interest charges, the income derived from loans, investments and other productive assets must be taken into account. For 1955-56 this income is estimated at $147 million as shown in Table V. This sum deducted from the gross total of $491 million for interest shown in the preceding table leaves a net amount of $344 million, the same as for the previous year.

Subsidies and tax rental payments to provinces

Payments to the provinces during 1955-56 for statutory subsidies, rentals under the tax rental agreements, the transitional grant to Newfoundland and the transfer of a portion of income tax receipts from certain public utility companies are estimated at $352 million compared with $359 million in 1954-55.

A comparative summary of the payments for the two years is given in the following table:

TABLE XI

(In millions of dollars)

Transfer of certain public utility tax receipts—
Sec. 6, c. 49, Statutes of 1952	8·9	7·3	1·6
	352·1	359·0	−6·9

Payments under the tax rental agreements in 1955-56 are $8 million less than in the previous year reflecting a decrease in gross national product per capita in 1954.

Statutory subsidies at $20 million in 1955-56 are unchanged from the previous year.

The amount of public utility tax receipts transferred to the provinces in 1955-56 is expected to be $2 million more than in the previous year. Section 6 of the Tax Rental Agreements Act, 1952 authorizes the payment to the provinces, whether participating in the agreements or not, of a portion of the income tax collected from corporations whose main business is the distribution to, or the generation for distribution to, the public of electrical energy, gas or steam.

A summary of estimated payments, by provinces, during 1955-56 is given in the following table:

Family allowances

Family allowances are payable in respect of all children under sixteen resident in Canada, with minor exceptions such as in the case of children of immigrants who must reside in Canada a year before an allowance is payable. The monthly allowance is $5 if the child is under 6 years; $6 in the age group 6 to 9; $7 in the age group 10 to 12; and $8 in the age group 13 to 15.

Payments for family allowances are estimated at $382 million for 1955-56 representing 8½ per cent of total expenditures for the fiscal year. The increase of $16 million over the corresponding 1954-55 outlay reflects the increase in the number of children in the eligible age groups.

The following table presents a comparative summary of payments by provinces:

Unemployment Insurance Act administration and government's contribution

Expenditures in 1955-56 relating to the Unemployment Insurance Act (excluding the government's payment as an employer) are estimated at $61 million compared with $60 million spent in 1954-55.

Unemployment insurance benefit payments are not charged directly to budgetary expenditures but are paid from the unemployment insurance fund. This fund is financed by contributions from employees and employers, by interest earned on investments, and by the government's contribution of an amount equal to one-fifth of combined employer-employee contributions.

The government's contribution to the fund for 1955-56 is estimated at $34 million and administration costs are expected to total $27 million; the corresponding figures for 1954-55 were $32 million and $28 million.

Government contribution with respect to superannuation account

The Government's contribution to the superannuation account is an amount equal to the estimated payments by individuals in the previous fiscal year for both current and prior service, and transfers from the retirement fund. For 1955-56 the contribution will be $31 million compared with $37 million in 1954-55.

Provision for reserve for losses on realization of assets

No charge to expenditures for an addition to the general reserve for losses on the realization of assets has been included in the Government's accounts for 1955-56. The balance of the reserve which was $496 million at March 31, 1955 remains unchanged.

Agriculture

Expenditures of the Department of Agriculture are estimated at $88 million for 1955-56 compared with $82 million spent in 1954-55.

The net increase of $6 million is due chiefly to the deficit of $8 million in the prairie farm emergency fund (for which there was no corresponding charge in 1954-55) and to increases of $3 million in the operating losses of the agricultural prices support board, $1 million in the costs of experimental farm services and

$1 million in payment of premiums on hog carcasses, offset by decreases of $3 million in freight assistance on western feed grains and $2 million in outlay for marketing services.

The estimated expenditure of $8 million to cover the deficit in the prairie farm emergency fund is the first charged to budgetary expenditures for this purpose since the fiscal year 1950-51 when $4 million was required. The decrease in expenditures for marketing services is due mainly to a reduction in the payments under the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, c. 5, R.S. 1952, the purpose of which is to assist and encourage the co-operative marketing of agricultural products by primary producers.

A comparative summary of estimated expenditures for 1955-56 and actual expenditures for 1954-55 is presented in the following table:

Atomic energy

Expenditures of the Atomic Energy Control Board and payments to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited are estimated at $20 million for 1955-56 compared with $15 million in 1954-55, an increase of $5 million.

Administration expenses of the Atomic Energy Control Board and grants for research and investigations with respect to atomic energy are estimated at $0·3 million, the same as the 1954-55 expenditure.

Payments to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, for its research programme, are estimated at $19 million compared with $15 million in 1954-55. Of the total $11 million is for current operations and maintenance and $8 million for the construction and acquisition of buildings, land, works and equipment.

In addition advances to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to be covered by obligations or shares of the company are estimated at $12 million, of which $2 million is for working capital and $10 million for the construction or acquisition of buildings and equipment at Chalk River and Deep River and for the commercial products division at Ottawa. This brings the total of loans to the company to $44 million.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Payments by the Government of Canada to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are estimated at $31 million for 1955-56 compared with $29 million in 1954-55. Payments to the corporation of an amount equivalent to the collections of the 15 per cent special tax imposed on radio and television sets and tubes are expected to amount to $23 million in 1955-56 compared with $21 million in 1954-55. For the current year it is estimated that $18 million is in respect of television and $5 million in respect of radio. In 1954-55 payments were $17 million for television and $4 million for radio.

A comparative summary of the estimated payments for 1955-56 and actual payments for 1954-55 is shown in the following table.

TABLE XV

Payments to the corporation of amounts equal to tax collected under the Excise Tax Act in respect of radio and television sets and tubes	23·0	20·8	2·2
	31·2	29·2	2·0

In addition to these expenditures, loans of $9 million will have been made in 1955-56 to cover the cost of television installations and to support the development of the service. This will bring the total loans to the corporation to $28 million at March 31, 1956. Interest at various rates is being paid semi-annually and is included in non-tax revenues under "Return on investments".

Citizenship and Immigration

Expenditures of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration are estimated at $33 million for 1955-56 compared with $28 million in 1954-55. The increase of $5 million is due mainly to an increase in the expenditures of the Indian Affairs branch of the department reflecting for the most part increased outlay for education.

The following table presents a comparative summary of estimated expenditures for 1955-56 with actual expenditures for 1954-55.

External Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of External Affairs are estimated at $45 million, an increase of $2 million over the 1954-55 expenditures. This increase is mainly attributable to the costs of representation abroad which includes construction, acquisition or improvement of buildings, works and land. Assistance to other countries is slightly less than the expenditure for 1954-55 although the grant to the Colombo Plan fund has been increased from $25 million for 1954-55 to $26 million for 1955-56.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for the current and previous fiscal years.

Finance

The major items of expenditure for the Department of Finance have been dealt with in previous paragraphs under the headings "Public debt charges", "Subsidies and tax rental payments to provinces" and "Government contribution with respect to the superannuation account".

Other expenditures of the department are estimated at $36 million for 1955-56, an increase of $1 million over the expenditures for 1954-55. An increase of $4 million in grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property is offset by the decrease of $4 million on account of premium, discount and exchange transactions which are expected to result in a net revenue item of $2 million.

The following table shows a comparative summary of expenditures for 1955-56 and 1954-55.

Mines and Technical Surveys

Expenditures of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys are estimated at $40 million for 1955-56, a decrease of $4 million from the expenditures of $44 million in 1954-55. Decreases of $5 million in emergency gold mining assistance payments and $1 million in expenses in connection with the movement of coal under the Dominion Coal Board are partially offset by an increase of $1 million in the costs of surveys and mapping services.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for 1955-56 and 1954-55.

National Health and Welfare

Family allowance payments, estimated at $382 million for 1955-56 constitute the main item of expenditure for the Department of National Health and Welfare and have been dealt with under a separate heading in preceding paragraphs. Civil defence expenditures, estimated at $4 million, are dealt with under the heading "Defence expenditures".

Other expenditures of the department in 1955-56 are estimated at $154 million, an increase of $27 million compared with expenditures of $127 million in 1954-55. The following table presents a comparative summary of these expenditures for 1955-56 and 1954-55:

TABLE XX

In Vote 689 of Appropriation Act No. 5, 1955, Parliament granted authority to charge the 1954-55 deficit of $63 million in the old age security fund to budgetary expenditures in 1955-56. Under the same authority, the 1953-54 deficit in the fund amounting to $46 million was charged to budgetary expenditures in 1954-55.

Expenditures for Indians and Eskimos health services are estimated at $16 million for 1955-56 compared with $15 million for 1954-55. Expenditures for other health services are expected to be $7 million in 1955-56 compared with $6 million in 1954-55.

General health grants to the provinces for assistance in hospital construction, general health services and the control of diseases are estimated at $34 million for 1955-56 compared with expenditures of $32 million in 1954-55.

Under the Old Age Assistance Act, the federal government reimburses the provinces by paying 50 per cent of the lesser of $40 monthly or the amount of assistance given by the provinces in the form of monthly pensions to eligible persons in need who are in the age group 65 to 69. (Under the Old Age Security Act, all persons 70 years and over who satisfy the residence requirements of the Act may receive a pension of $40 per month from the federal government out of the old age security fund). Similarly, the federal government reimburses the provinces under the Blind Persons Act for allowances to blind persons in need over the age of 21 by paying 75 per cent of the total payments, and under the Disabled Persons Act by paying 50 per cent of not more than $40 per month for allowances to disabled persons in need over the age of 18 years. The estimated increase of $5 million in payments under the Disabled Persons Act is due mainly to the fact that in 1954-55 the expenditure did not represent a full year's payments as the Act was not effective until January 1, 1955. The following table presents an estimated distribution of these payments by provinces for 1955-56.

National Research Council

Expenditures of the National Research Council are estimated at $16 million for 1955-56, slightly higher than the expenditures for 1954-55. Salaries and other expenses amounting to $14 million and the costs of construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment totalling $2 million are approximately the same as the corresponding outlay in 1954-55.

National Revenue

Expenditures for the Department of National Revenue are estimated at $57 million for 1955-56 compared with $55 million in 1954-55. The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for the two years.

Northern Affairs and National Resources

Expenditures of the Department of Northern Affairs in 1955-56 are estimated at $26 million, compared with expenditures of $20 million in 1954-55, an increase of $6 million.

Of this increase, $2 million is attributable to expenditures by the national parks branch for construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment and $3 million is due to an increase in expenditures for the northern administration and lands branch of which approximately $2 million is for the construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and new equipment, and $1 million for operation and maintenance.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for 1955-56 and 1954-55:

Post Office

Gross expenditures of the Post Office Department for 1955-56 are estimated at $147 million, an increase of $3 million over the 1954-55 expenditures of $144 million.

Remuneration of postmasters and staffs at revenue and semi-staff offices, commissions at sub-offices and certain other authorized disbursements are paid from revenue. These payments, included in the total of $147 million, are estimated at $20 million for 1955-56, unchanged from the previous year.

Disbursements charged to budgetary expenditures are estimated at $127 million, an increase of $3 million over expenditures in 1954-55.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for 1955-56 and 1954-55:

Public Works

Expenditures of the Department of Public Works for 1955-56 are estimated at $140 million compared with expenditures of $131 million for 1954-55. This increase of $9 million is attributable mainly to increases of $4 million in the expenditures of the building construction branch and $3 million in administration and general expenses.

The following table presents a comparative summary of estimated expenditures for 1955-56 and expenditures for 1954-55.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Expenditures for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are estimated at $37 million for 1955-56, an increase of $2 million over the total spent in 1954-55. These amounts represent gross expenditures; payments received from the provinces and municipalities for police services estimated at $5 million are credited to revenue.

The following table presents a comparative summary of estimated expenditures for 1955-56 and actual expenditures for the previous year.

Trade and Commerce

Expenditures for the Department of Trade and Commerce are estimated at $37 million for 1955-56 compared with $17 million for 1954-55. The increase of $20 million is almost entirely accounted for by an estimated expenditure of $19 million for assistance in respect of grain storage costs.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for 1955-56 and 1954-55.

Expenditures of the Department of Transport in 1955-56 are estimated at $136 million, a decrease of $23 million from the expenditures of $159 million in 1954-55.

Estimated expenditures for air services at $58 million are $14 million higher than expenditures in the previous year. Of this increase the civil aviation division is responsible for $10 million, of which $9 million is attributable to construction or acquisition of buildings, works, lands and new equipment including construction work on municipal airports.

Estimated expenditures for marine services at $21 million are the same as the previous year.

Railway and steamship services expenditures are estimated at $21 million for 1955-56 compared with expenditures of $30 million for 1954-55. Decreases of $6 million in expenditures on account of the Strait of Canso causeway and $4 million in outlay for the construction and acquisition of auto ferries are partially offset by an increase of $1 million in payments under the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Expenditures for the Board of Transport Commissioners are estimated at $13 million; the increase of approximately $2 million over the previous year's outlay is due mainly to an increase in the government contribution to the railway grade crossing fund.

Payments to cover the net operating deficits of certain Crown corporations are estimated at $8 million for 1955-56, compared with expenditures of $37 million in 1954-55. The decrease is due to Canadian National Railways operations which in the calendar year 1955 resulted in a surplus of $11 million compared with a deficit of $29 million in 1954. Consequently there is no charge in the government's accounts for 1955-56 comparable to that in the 1954-55 accounts to cover the Railway's 1954 deficit.

Veterans Affairs

Expenditures for the Department of Veterans Affairs are estimated at $249 million in 1955-56 compared with expenditures of $240 million in 1954-55. The estimated net increase of $9 million is due mainly to increases of $11 million in war veterans allowances and other benefits and $2 million in pensions for disability or death, offset in part by a decrease of $2 million in war service gratuities and re-establishment credits.

Expenditures relating to the administration of the Soldier Settlement and Veterans Land Acts are expected to amount to $5 million while the provision for the reserve for conditional benefits under the Veterans Land Act is estimated at $9 million. These conditional benefits are made to veterans who enter into agreements with the director for purchases of land and chattels provided they fulfil the terms of the agreements for ten years. The estimated amount charged to expenditures under this heading covers one-tenth of the conditional benefits included in sales to veterans.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for 1955-56 and 1954-55.

Liabilities

The gross liabilities of the government as at March 31, 1956, are estimated at $19,055 million, an increase of $1,103 million over the total of $17,952 million at the close of the previous year.

Unmatured debt outstanding, including bonds and treasury bills, is estimated at $15,394 million at March 31, 1956, or approximately 81 per cent of all liabilities. Of the total outstanding unmatured debt, $15,042 million, or 98 per cent, is payable in Canada and $352 million, or 2 per cent in foreign currencies—$300 million in United States dollars and $52 million in pounds sterling. A complete statement in tabular form of the government's unmatured debt as at March 31, 1956, with details of interest rates, dates of maturity, annual interest charges and amounts of principal outstanding for each loan, is presented at the end of this Part.

The government's liability as at March 31, 1956 in respect of annuity, insurance and pension accounts is estimated at $2,185 million. Current and demand liabilities, including outstanding cheques, accounts payable (consisting of cheques to be issued in April, 1956 in payment of accounts relating to the fiscal year 1955-56) and notes and other obligations payable on demand, are expected to total $929 million.

The other liability items are: deposit and trust accounts (consisting of moneys deposited with or held by the Receiver General for various purposes), $157 million; undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts (consisting of undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts for which moneys have been appropriated by Parliament and from which disbursements may be made for authorized purposes in periods subsequent to that in which the appropriation was made), $340 million; suspense accounts (consisting of balances where some uncertainty as to disposition exists and balances whose ultimate accounting treatment is known but which are held until certain conditions are fulfilled), $38 million; and province debt accounts (representing settlements arising out of agreements at the time of Confederation), $12 million.

Assets

Offsetting the liabilities, and to some extent explaining their existence—as a large part of the total debt has been incurred on account of them—are the government's assets. For the most part these consist of assets which yield interest, profits or dividends, liquid assets such as cash and departmental working funds together with certain prepaid expenses and suspense accounts.

The total assets at March 31, 1956, are estimated at $8,236 million, an increase of $1,052 million from the total at March 31, 1955. The asset categories are: current assets (including cash, departmental working capital advances and working funds and securities held in the securities investment account), $1,539 million; advances to the exchange fund account to finance the purchase of gold and foreign exchange, $1,955 million; sinking fund and other investments held for the retirement of unmatured debt, $216 million; loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations, $2,008 million; loans to national governments, $1,550 million other loans and investments (consisting of Canada's subscription to the capital of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, advances to international organizations, loans to provinces and municipalities, veterans and miscellaneous loans and balances receivable), $641 million; province debt accounts, $2 million; deferred charges (consisting of loan flotation costs in the process of being amortized), $56 million; the unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the superannuation account, $189 million; suspense accounts, $1 million; capital assets (assets of the government such as land, buildings, works and equipment, etc., which are charged to budgetary expenditures at the time of acquisition or construction, are shown on the statement of assets and liabilities at a nominal value of $1); and inactive loans and investments (including loans and advances which are not currently revenue-producing or realizable), $80 million.

A reserve of $496 million for losses on realization of assets is shown on the statement of assets and liabilities as a deduction from the total assets, bringing the net assets total to $7,740 million.

A. Changes in Principal Liability Classifications During 1955-56

The gross liabilities of the government are expected to show an increase of $1,103 million over the total at the close of 1954-55. Increases of $898 million in unmatured debt, $3 million in deposit and trust accounts, $208 million in annuity, insurance and pension accounts, $8 million in undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts and $3 million in suspense accounts are only partially offset by a decrease of $15 million in current and demand liabilities.

Current and demand liabilities

It is estimated that current and demand liabilities will have decreased by $15 million during the fiscal year. Decreases of $25 million in matured debt outstanding, $5 million in outstanding treasury cheques and $1 million in non-interest bearing notes payable to the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development are partially offset by increases of $10 million in interest accrued, $2 million in accounts payable, $2 million in interest due and outstanding and $1 million in post office account. The estimated changes in the various accounts are shown in the following table:

TABLE XXXII

Current and Demand Liabilities	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1956 (Estimated)	1955
Outstanding Treasury cheques	260·9	265·6	−4·7

Post Office (net liability for money orders, etc.)	22·9	22·4	0·5
Other current liabilities	1·4	1·4
	928·7	944·0	−15·3

Deposit and trust accounts

Deposit and trust accounts are expected to increase by $3 million during the year. The major changes in this category are increases of $7 million in the Korean operations pool, $3 million in contractors securities cash deposits and $2 million in Indian trust funds and decreases of $5 million in the prairie farm emergency fund, $1 million in the post office savings bank and $2 million in contractors holdbacks. The balance of $5 million in the prairie farm emergency fund at March 31, 1955, together with $4 million collected during the year as levies and $8 million charged to expenditure was used to finance award payments of $17 million.

Annuity, insurance and pension accounts

It is estimated that the annuity, insurance and pension accounts will have increased by $208 million during the fiscal year. The changes in the various accounts for the fiscal year are shown in the following table:

TABLE XXXIII

Annuity, Insurance and Pension Accounts	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1956 (Estimated)	1955
Unemployment insurance fund	865·5	852·7	12·8
Less: Investment in bonds and accrued interest	852·5	839·3	13·2
	13·0	13·4	—0·4

Superannuation account	804·8	733·6	71·2
Permanent services pension account	343·0	277·6	65·4
Other	92·2	88·3	3·9
	2,185·0	1,977·4	207·6

The unemployment insurance fund is expected to increase by $13 million during the fiscal year bringing the balance at March 31, 1956 to $866 million. Of this amount it is estimated that $853 million will be invested in bonds and accrued interest and $13 million will be held by the Receiver General in the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The increase of $13 million in the fund represents the amount by which contributions by employers, employees and the government, income from investments and other miscellaneous revenue credited to the fund exceed benefit payments totalling $213 million during 1955-56.

The increase of $71 million in the superannuation account is attributable mainly to the government's contribution of $31 million equal to the estimated current and prior service payments of individuals in 1954-55 and $31 million interest credited to the account. The remainder of the increase is due to the excess of employees' current and prior service contributions over benefit payments.

The government annuities account is expected to show an increase of $67 million, reflecting the amount by which premium receipts, interest credited to the account by the government and the amount required to maintain the reserve exceed payments to annuitants and beneficiaries.

It is expected that the permanent services pension account will show an increase of $65 million, reflecting the government's contribution of $40 million which is made at the rate of one and two-thirds times the current contributions and contributions for arrears, interest on the account which is estimated at $12 million and contributions by permanent services personnel for current service and arrears less payments from the account.

Other annuity, insurance and pension accounts will show an increase of $4 million for the fiscal year.

Old age security fund

Under the Old Age Security Act pensions of $40 per month are paid from the old age security fund to all eligible persons seventy years of age and over without a means test. Payments from the fund during the fiscal year are estimated at $366 million while credits to the fund from the proceeds of the 2 per cent tax on personal incomes (maximum tax $60), the 2 per cent tax on corporation profits and the 2 per cent sales tax are expected to total $316 million. Temporary loans amounting to $50 million will be required to cover the deficit resulting from these transactions during 1955-56. Under the authority of Vote 689 of Appropriation Act, No. 5, 1955 the 1954-55 deficit of $63 million was charged to expenditure in 1955-56.

The following table shows the transactions in the old age security fund for the last two years:

Undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts

This category is set up to record the undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts for which moneys have been appropriated by parliament and from which disbursements may be made for authorized purposes in periods subsequent to that in which the appropriation was made. It is estimated that there will be a net increase of $8 million during the year in these accounts, due chiefly to increases of $5 million in the national defence equipment account and $5 million in the railway grade crossing fund and a decrease of $3 million in the national capital fund.

The railway grade crossing fund is expected to show an increase of approximately $5 million for the year, representing the amount credited to this account and charged to expenditure less disbursements from the account.

The transactions in the national defence equipment account reflect an increase in the undisbursed balance in the account which was established under section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, and continued by subsequent votes of parliament for the same purpose. Under the terms of the Act, the value of defence materials and supplies acquired prior to March 31, 1950, and transferred to members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization may be credited to the account and these credits may be used in subsequent years to purchase equipment or supplies for the naval, army or air services of the Canadian forces. Disbursements from the account during the fiscal year are estimated at $49 million and credits for equipment transferred at $54 million.

Suspense accounts

Suspense accounts are expected to show a net increase of $3 million. The major changes in the accounts of this category are increases of $4 million in balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets and $2 million in the replacement of materiel account and decreases of $1 million in military relief and currency credits and $1 million in emergency gold mining assistance holdbacks.

The replacement of materiel account established by section 11 of the National Defence Act is credited with amounts realized from the sale of materiel that has not been declared surplus to requirements but has been authorized by the Governor in Council to be sold to other countries. The account is debited with disbursements representing amounts paid for the procurement of replacement materiel. It is estimated that during 1955-56 credits to the account will exceed disbursements by $2 million.

The increase in balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets reflects certain new agreements of sale, including $2 million with Canadian Pratt and Whitney Aircraft Limited and $2 million with English Electric Company Limited.

Unmatured debt

The outstanding unmatured debt at the close of 1955-56 is estimated at $15,394 million. An increase of $946 million reflected in debt payable in Canada will be only partly offset by a decrease of $48 million in debt payable in New York, leaving a net increase for the year in unmatured debt of $898 million.

B. Changes in the Principal Asset Classifications during 1955-56

It is estimated that assets will have increased by $1,052 million during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956. Increases of $973 million in current assets, $214 million in loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations, $25 million in sinking funds and $10 million in other loans and investments are offset in part by decreases of $71 million in loans to national governments, $25 million in advances to the exchange fund account, $12 million in deferred charges and $63 million in suspense accounts. No change is expected in the reserve for losses on the realization of assets which stood at $496 million at March 31, 1955.

Current Assets

The changes during the fiscal year in the various accounts in this category are shown in the following table:

TABLE XXXVI

(In millions of dollars)

Current Assets	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1956 (Estimated)	1955
Cash in current and special deposits (including blocked currency of $0·4 million at March 31, 1956 and $1·2 million at March 31, 1955)	528·1	231·1	297·0
Cash in hands of collectors and in transit	124·3	126·2	−1·9
Departmental working capital advances and revolving funds—
Agricultural prices support account	36·0	31·6	4·4
Defence production revolving fund	70·0	72·8	−2·8
Temporary loan to old age security fund	50·4	.....	50·4

Other	20·7	19·7	1·0
Other current assets—
Securities investment account	671·6	45·6	626·0
Moneys received after March 31 but applicable to the current year	18·4	17·1	1·3
	1,538·8	565·6	973·2

The estimated increase of $973 million in current assets is due to increases of $626 million in the securities investment account (which records the government's temporary holdings of its own securities including those held for the government employees purchase plan), $297 million in cash in current and special deposits and $51 million in departmental working capital advances and revolving funds.

Of the net increase of $51 million in departmental working capital advances and revolving funds, $50 million is due to temporary loans during 1955-56 to the old age security fund and $4 million to a net increase in the agricultural prices support account offset by decreases of $3 million in the defence production revolving fund and $2 million in miscellaneous imprest and advance accounts.

The amount of $50 million advanced as a temporary loan to the old age security fund is the amount by which pension payments during 1955-56 exceeded tax receipts credited to the fund. The deficit in the fund for 1954-55 was carried in suspense accounts at March 31, 1955 as parliament by Vote 689 of Appropriation Act No. 5, 1955, had authorized the deficit resulting from 1954-55 transactions to be charged to budgetary expenditures in 1955-56.

The estimated increase of $4 million in the agricultural prices support account reflects an increase in inventory holdings during the year estimated at $10 million and a reduction of $6 million in respect of the loss on 1955-56 operations included in the year's expenditures.

The decrease of $3 million in the defence production revolving fund reflects the amount by which credits to the account from the sale of essential materials and defence supplies exceed the cost of acquiring, storing, maintaining and transporting such materials.

Miscellaneous departmental imprest and advance accounts record accountable advances to departments held on deposit in various banks in the name of the department concerned, certain travelling and imprest advances to public officers and advance payments to contractors. During the fiscal year these advances are carried as charges to the relevant appropriations; if they are not repaid or accounted for at the year-end, they are cleared from the appropriation and debited to this account and at the beginning of the new fiscal year are cleared from the account and charged to the appropriation concerned until such time as an accounting is made.

Advances to the exchange fund account

Advances to the exchange fund are estimated at $40 million and repayments at $65 million, resulting in a net repayment of $25 million during the fiscal year.

Sinking fund and other investments held for retirement of unmatured debt

It is expected that there will be an increase of $25 million in this account during the fiscal year 1955-56, due mainly to an increase in the holdings of bonds of various Government of Canada issues payable in United States dollars.

Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations

It is estimated that loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations will increase by $214 million during the year. The most important changes are net increases of $178 million in loans and advances to the Canadian National Railways, $20 million in advances to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, $12 million in advances to Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited and $9 million in loans to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and a net decrease of $9 million in loans to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The changes in this category are shown in the following table:

	2,007·9	1,793·5	214·4

Advances to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited are estimated at $12 million for the fiscal year, resulting in an increase of $12 million and bringing advances to $44 million at March 31, 1956. The advances are to be covered by obligations or shares of the company in the same amount. Of the total for the year $2 million is for working capital and $10 million for the construction or acquisition of buildings and equipment at Chalk River and Deep River and for the commercial products division at Ottawa.

Loans amounting to $9 million are expected to be made during the year to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to cover the capital costs of television installations and to support the development of the service. The total loans to the Corporation outstanding at March 31, 1956 are expected to amount to $28 million.

It is estimated that in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956, the Government will have made net advances to the Canadian National Railway Company of $157 million for capital purposes and retirement of funded debt in the hands of the public.

In addition, to assist the Company to finance additional expenditures, the Government will have purchased an estimated amount of $21 million of the 4 per cent preferred stock of the Canadian National Railway Company. This stock is issued under the authority of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, 1952 in an amount equal to three per cent of the gross revenues of the Company.

Loans to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation during the fiscal year are expected to amount to $4 million, of which $3 million is for federal-provincial housing projects and $1 million for house construction. Repayments are estimated at $13 million, of which $9 million is in respect to direct loans by the corporation and joint loans with lending institutions, $3 million on account of advances for house construction and $1 million in respect of loans for federal-provincial projects. The net decrease for the fiscal year in loans to the corporation is thus $9 million.

The net increase in advances to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority during the year is estimated at $20 million, bringing total loans at the close of the fiscal year to $21 million.

Other increases in loans and advances to Crown corporations include $5 million to the Canadian Farm Loan Board and $4 million to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation. It is also expected that there will be a decrease of $4 million in loans and advances to the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

Loans to national governments

It is estimated that loans to national governments will total $1,550 million at the end of the fiscal year, a decrease of $71 million from the total at the close of the previous year. The estimated changes in these loans are shown in the following table:

During the year the Government of the United Kingdom will have reduced the balance of the $700 million interest free loan granted under the provisions of the War Appropriation (United Kingdom Financing) Act, 1942 by $30 million as arranged under the terms of an agreement entered into on August 13, 1953, between the Governments of the United Kingdom and Canada. The balance outstanding at March 31, 1956 is estimated at $83 million. Under the terms of the agreement the loan is to continue to be free of interest until December 1958.

The Government of the United Kingdom has repaid $15 million on account of the $1,185 million loan made under the $1,250 million credit authorized by the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, reducing the unpaid balance to $1,112 million at the close of the fiscal year.

Repayments of advances under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act to certain foreign countries to assist them in purchasing goods and services in Canada are estimated at $22 million for the year, as shown in the preceding table. The payment on the loan to Norway, due on June 30, 1955, was received in September 1954, which accounts for no decrease being shown on this loan for the current year. There has been no payment received during the year on account of the $49 million loan to China which now is included in "inactive loans and investments".

Other loans and investments

Other loans and investments are estimated to increase by $10 million during the year. The balances of the main accounts in this category together with the changes during the year are shown in the following table:

The increase of $6 million during the year in Canada's subscription to the capital of the International Monetary Fund is due to the adjustment of the government's Canadian dollar equity in the fund.

Loans to provincial governments are expected to be reduced by the amount of $4 million reflecting repayments by the governments concerned.

Advances under the Soldier Settlement and Veterans Land Acts are expected to increase by $7 million during the year. However, as approximately $7 million will have been added to the reserve for conditional benefits under the Veterans Land Act, there is no net change.

Miscellaneous loans and investments are expected to increase by $8 million during the year due mainly to increases of $4 million in balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets, $1 million in the acquisition of land to control properties in the vicinity of main terminal airports and $3 million in other accounts.

Deferred charges

Unamortized loan flotation costs are expected to decrease by $12 million during the year to $56 million at March 31, 1956. Payments of $8 million for commissions and discounts on new loans are more than offset by the annual amortization charges of $20 million applicable to 1955-56 included in the year's expenditures.

Unamortized portion of actuarial deficiency in the superannuation account

No change is expected during the fiscal year in the unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the superannuation account, the balance at March 31, 1956 remaining at $189 million.

Suspense accounts

The decrease of $63 million in this category is in respect of the 1954-55 deficit in the old age security fund which was included as a charge in budgetary expenditures for 1955-56 under the authority of Vote 689 of Appropriation Act No. 5, 1955. The temporary loan to cover the 1955-56 deficit, estimated at $50 million, is shown under current assets.

Capital assets

This asset category records on the government's statement of assets and liabilities, at a nominal value of $1, the capital assets that are charged to net debt at the time of acquisition or construction.

Inactive loans and advances

This category records those loans and advances which are not currently revenue-producing or realizable. The balance at March 31, 1956 is estimated at $80 million and includes the loan of $49 million to China under the Export Credits Insurance Act, and loans of $24 million to Roumania and $7 million to Greece, made in 1919-20 and 1920-21.

Reserve for losses on realization of assets

There is no change in the reserve for losses on realization of assets during the year, the balance at March 31, 1956 being $496 million, unchanged from the end of the previous year.

C. Increase in Net Debt

The estimated deficit for the fiscal year of $52 million will result in a corresponding increase in the net debt of Canada from $11,263 million at March 31, 1955 to $11,315 million at March 31, 1956.

5. THE CASH POSITION

Although most of the government's financial transactions are reflected in the budgetary accounts it is to be noted that the government also receives and disburses substantial amounts of cash that are not recorded as budgetary revenues and expenditures. These other receipts and disbursements relate to transactions which result in increases or decreases in the government's assets and liabilities and they do not therefore appear in what might be called the government's income account for the fiscal year nor do they enter into the calculation of the annual budgetary surplus or deficit.

As previously indicated it is expected that when the books for the year are closed the budgetary transactions for 1955-56 will have resulted in a deficit of $52 million. However, during the same period it is estimated that unmatured debt in the hands of the public (that is the outstanding unmatured debt less the government's holdings of that debt in the securities investment and sinking fund accounts) will have increased by $247 million while cash balances will have risen by $297 million. It is apparent that in considering the full scope of the government's financial operations and in measuring their effect on the government's cash position and their impact upon the economy, non-budgetary as well as budgetary transactions must be taken into account.

On the assets side the non-budgetary transactions consist, for the most part, of loans and advances to, and repayments by, Crown corporations and other government agencies and funds (including the old age security fund), national, provincial and municipal governments, international organizations, veterans and other borrowers.

On the liabilities side the non-budgetary transactions relate mainly to receipts and payments in connection with the many deposit and trust, and annuity, insurance and pension funds held or administered by the government.

The following statement summarizes these non-budgetary transactions for 1955-56 and indicates how they, together with the budgetary transactions, affect the government's unmatured debt and cash position. For purposes of comparison the corresponding figures for 1954-55 are also shown:

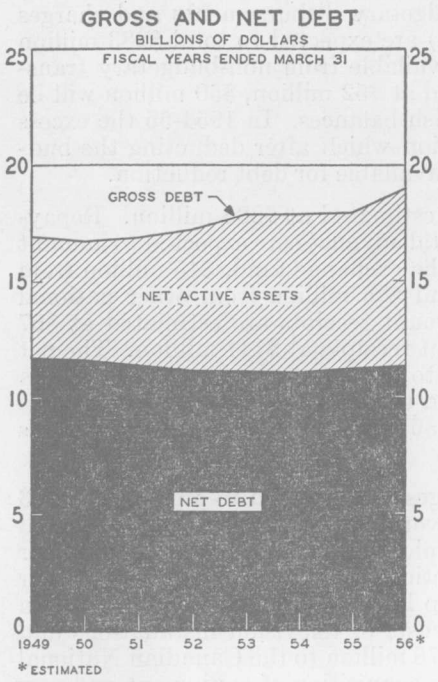
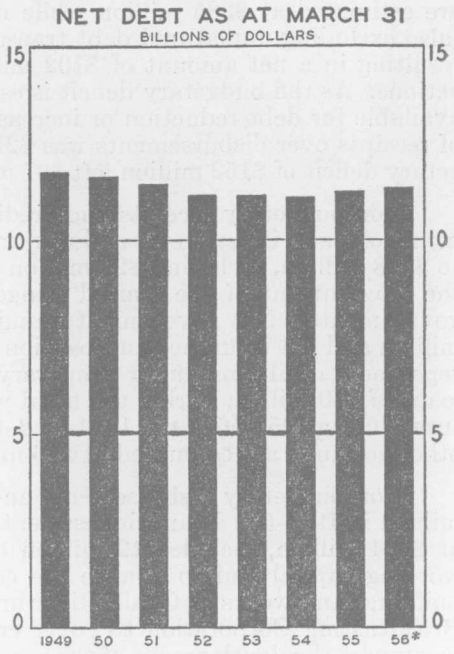
Non-budgetary receipts and credits (excluding unmatured debt transactions) are estimated at $385 million while non-budgetary disbursements and charges (also excluding unmatured debt transactions) are expected to total $283 million resulting in a net amount of $102 million available from non-budgetary transactions. As the budgetary deficit is estimated at $52 million, $50 million will be available for debt reduction or increase in cash balances. In 1954-55 the excess of receipts over disbursements was $219 million which after deducting the budgetary deficit of $152 million left $67 million available for debt reduction.

Non-budgetary receipts and credits are estimated at $385 million. Repayments of loans, investments and working capital advances are expected to amount to $118 million, including $25 million from the exchange fund, $45 million from the Government of the United Kingdom and $26 million from other national governments. Net government annuity account receipts are estimated at $67 million and net insurance and pension account receipts at $141 million. The net repayment of $13 million in temporary loans to the old age security fund reflects loans of $50 million during the fiscal year and the charge to budgetary expenditures during 1955-56 of the 1954-55 deficit of $63 million. Net receipts in various other accounts are estimated at $46 million.



Non-budgetary disbursements and charges are expected to amount to $283 million in 1955-56. Loans, investments and working capital advances, estimated at $254 million, include $12 million to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for working capital and to finance the construction of the new reactor and other buildings and works at Chalk River and Deep River, $9 million to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to cover capital costs of television installations and to support the development of the service, $178 million to the Canadian National Railways for additions and betterments, the acquisition of equipment and new rolling stock, additional working capital and the redemption of maturing Canadian National Railways bond issues, $20 million for loans to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority for construction purposes, $7 million for loans to veterans and $28 million for other loans, investments and working capital advances. Other non-budgetary disbursements are expected to total $30 million.



In summary, unmatured debt in the hands of the public after taking into account transactions in the securities investment account and sinking fund is expected to increase by $247 million and this amount with the $50 million available from budgetary and non-budgetary transactions will increase cash balances on deposit with banks by an estimated $297 million.

6. THE PUBLIC DEBT

Gross and net debt

It is estimated that the unmatured debt of Canada will increase by $898 million and other liabilities by $205 million during the fiscal year. Consequently it is expected that the gross public debt of Canada will increase by $1,103 million from $17,952 million at March 31, 1955 to an estimated total of $19,055 million at March 31, 1956. As the government's assets as shown on the statement of assets and liabilities are expected to increase by $1,052 million during the same period, the net debt is expected to increase by $52 million.

The following table shows the relationship between the gross public debt, the unmatured debt and the net debt at the end of each fiscal year, March 31, 1949 to 1956 inclusive, the 1956 amounts being estimated.

Unmatured debt

It is estimated that the unmatured debt of Canada will total $15,394 million at March 31, 1956, an increase of $898 million over March 31, 1955. However, it is to be noted that during the same period the holdings of securities in the sinking fund and the securities investment accounts are expected to increase by $651 million, resulting in an increase of $247 million in the unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public. Of the increase of $651 million, $445 million represents the repurchase of treasury notes originally purchased and held by the Bank of Canada.

Summary of security issues and redemptions during the fiscal year

It is estimated that during the fiscal year 1955-56 the government will have issued securities payable in Canadian dollars in the principal amount of $3,229 million (excluding the refunding of treasury bills which mature periodically) and redeemed maturing issues in the amount of $2,331 million, $48 million of which was payable in United States dollars and the balance in Canadian dollars.

The financing of redemptions was effected as follows:

By proceeds of new issues:
Canada savings bonds, series 10 (net)	644·1
Two year ten month loan	100·0
Increase in treasury bills	710·0
		1,454·1
By refunding or conversion into new issues		1,775·0
		3,229·1

As a result of these transactions the net increase in unmatured debt is estimated at $898 million.

The amount of treasury bills outstanding at the end of the fiscal year is estimated at $1,600 million or $710 million more than at March 31, 1955. Of this amount $1,340 million is in three month bills and $260 million in nine month bills. The increase of $710 million reflects the government's desire to meet a growing demand for short-term securities.

Details of redemptions and new issues of securities during the fiscal year are set out in the following tables:

Interest rates

Interest rates rose sharply during the year, particularly on short-term securities. The average interest rate on the government's outstanding unmatured debt at March 31, 1956 is estimated at 2·86 per cent compared with 2·74 per cent at the end of the previous fiscal year and 2·60 per cent at March 31, 1951.

There has also been a rise in treasury bill yields during 1955-56. The yield on the issue of three month bills sold on March 9, 1956 was 2·60 per cent compared with 1·13 per cent for the last issue sold in 1954-55.

The following table shows the high and low yields together with the yield on the last issue for the fiscal years 1946-47 to 1955-56 inclusive on three month and nine month bills.

Indirect debt or contingent liabilities

In addition to the direct debt set out in the statement of assets and liabilities the Government has assumed certain indirect or contingent obligations. These consist of securities of the Canadian National Railways, guaranteed as to principal and interest, or as to interest only, and a number of miscellaneous guarantees, the chief of which are the guarantee of insured loans made by chartered banks and other approved lending institutions under the National Housing Act, 1954, deposits maintained by the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada, bank advances to the Canadian Wheat Board, advances under the Export Credits Insurance Act and bank loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

There is a large increase during the year in the government's liability under its guarantee of insured loans under the National Housing Act, 1954. This liability is estimated at $529 million at December 31, 1955 compared with about $121·6 million at December 31, 1954 and $185·8 million at March 31, 1955.

The following tables give details of the bonds and debenture stocks guaranteed by the Government, and also indicate the nature and approximate extent of the government's other guarantees and contingent liabilities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 21, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

CRIMINAL LAW—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West) presented the first report of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on capital and corporal punishment and lotteries, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve) presented the first report of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the federal district commission, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS—TABLING OF LETTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two copies in French and in English of a letter addressed on March 19, 1956, by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) to the premiers of all the provinces with regard to fiscal matters. Hon. members will probably wish to have these letters printed as an appendix to Hansard, as was done with the previous correspondence on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to agree to this suggestion of having these documents printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(For text of letters see appendix, page 2484.)

STARRED QUESTIONS

CEREBRAL PALSY RESEARCH ASSISTANCE

Question No. 25—Mr. Follwell:

Is any research on cerebral palsy being assisted under the health grants program?

Mr. Robertson: Yes; assistance is being given under the national health program to studies being carried on in Winnipeg on the causes of cerebral palsy and its relationship to premature birth. Special attention is being given to a study of the effect of jaundice on the brain of newborn infants. The information obtained as a result of this research is expected to be extremely useful to doctors in their efforts to develop ways of preventing this serious affliction. In Ontario, other studies are being assisted under the health grants program on the relationship of heredity to cerebral palsy and on the assessment and evaluation of methods of treatment.

LOGGERS SENT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 39—Mr. Barnett:

1. Has the government received a request this year for assistance in a special arrangement to send loggers to British Columbia? If so, from whom was this request received?
2. Have objections to such a proposal been made to the government? If so, by whom?
3. What action, if any, has the government taken on this request?

Mr. Gregg:

1. No; but in January, 1956, the national employment service cleared to the Atlantic region an order for 100 chokermen for British Columbia in accordance with normal clearance order practice. This order originated in Vancouver.

2. No record of any such objections.

3. Answered by Nos. 1 and 2.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

FUR PELT IMPORTS, 1955

Question No. 276—Mr. Lennard:

1. How many fur pelts were imported into Canada from January 1, to December 31, 1955?
2. How many of each variety and from what countries were they imported?

TRADE WITH COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

Question No. 303—Mr. Holowach:

1. What was the total value of exports and imports between Canada and any of the following countries: U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia, Hungary, communist China and Taiwan, for the calendar years 1954, 1955?
2. What were the principal items of (a) exports; (b) imports?
3. Were any of these acquired on a credit basis?
4. If so, what are the outstanding amounts owing Canada to this date?
5. How many pounds of aluminum, lead, copper, nickel, have been sent to these countries, during each of the above years?

FEDERAL PRINTING CONTRACTS, N.B.

Question No. 308—Mr. Murphy (Westmorland):

1. How many companies or persons in New Brunswick were awarded contracts or worked on any other basis for the federal government, with respect to printing, in the fiscal years ending March 31, 1953, 1954 and 1955?
2. What are the names and head offices of the companies or persons and what were the amounts of such contracts or work?

FEDERAL SCHOLARSHIPS TO FOREIGN STUDENTS

Question No. 338—Mr. Tustin:

1. Does any department, agency or crown company of the federal government give scholarships to foreign students?
2. If so, what are the details?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CAUGHNAWAGA INDIAN RESERVE—EXPROPRIATION OF LAND

Motion No. 31—Mr. Castleden:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, maps, agreements, proposals and other documents exchanged between the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, to date, relative to the expropriation of land from the Caughnawaga Indian reserve.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would ask that this motion be transferred to notices of motions.

Mr. Speaker: It shall be transferred accordingly.

CAUGHNAWAGA INDIAN RESERVE

Motion No. 32—Mr. Castleden:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, maps, agreements, proposals and other documents exchanged between the band council or members of the Indian band of Caughnawaga reserve and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, since April 1, 1955, to date.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would make the same request in respect to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: This motion shall be transferred accordingly.

Mr. Castleden: May I object to the motion made by the minister?

Mr. Speaker: The minister is not making a motion. He is simply taking advantage of the provisions of standing order No. 47 which says:

All such notices when called shall be forthwith disposed of; but if on any such motion a debate be desired, it will be transferred by the Clerk to the order of "notices of motions".

Any hon. member of this house may ask that a notice of motion of this kind be so transferred.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; does not someone have to express a desire for a debate? No one has expressed any such desire.

[Mr. Holowach.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I express that desire, sir, in both cases.

Mr. Fulton: Surely it is up to the member who moves the motion to indicate that he desires a debate. Surely the government cannot defeat a desire for papers by the subterfuge of having it transferred to an order for debate which will never be reached.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members find, perhaps, that this procedure is unusual because it has been customary for us to accommodate ourselves and to allow the minister to explain his reasons for opposing the motion. Hon. members will have to bear with me if they insist that I give a ruling. I am sorry; it will not be a periodical lecture but it will be a very unscheduled lecture. However, I am prepared to deal with the point right now.

I have to refer hon. members to the time when standing order 47 was adopted in the session of 1909-10. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in moving the new amendment which is the standing order as it now reads, had this to say to hon. members who complained that it should not be up to the government to decide if a debate be desired and a motion be transferred. Sir Wilfrid Laurier agreed to that suggestion and amended it so it would not read, "If on such motion the government would desire a debate", but would read, "If on such motion a debate is desired". Later some hon. members contended that notices of motion may never be reached. In reply Sir Wilfrid Laurier at that time said this was possible, but it will take that chance. With those comments the new rule 47 as we have it today was adopted.

Now, there have been notices of motion that have been placed on the order paper with no asterisk. It is unusual, but it has happened. I can refer hon. members to one that was placed on the order paper under notices of motion and fully debated, in volume II, April 11, 1921, and the debate appears on pages 1846 to 1851 inclusive. What they attempted to do when they debated the adoption of the standing order was to make a difference as between opposed and unopposed motions. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that there are many notices of motion that go through every day unopposed, so let us make those non-debatable. Later, when he was in the opposition a member moved a motion which was opposed by a minister. I refer hon. members to volume I, 1915, March 3, page 611, where it says that a notice of motion for the production of papers being called, moved by Mr. Ross, the Hon. J. D. Reid, minister of customs, said that it had not been the custom of the department to bring down papers of this kind. They are always treated as confidential. And he proceeded to give the reason why the motion should not be acceded to. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

> If there is objection to the motion it should be transferred to notices of motions for discussion when it comes up again.

Advantage of this provision has been taken in 1922, April 19, Debates, volume I, when Mr. Martell, the hon. member for Hants, asked Mr. Speaker:

> Mr. Speaker, I asked that this notice of motion for the production of papers be transferred to the debatable motions, and I understood that an order of the house was issued accordingly. I should like that to be done if possible.
> Mr. Speaker: The motion will be transferred accordingly.

Then again, in 1926—hon. members may look at the Journals for Monday, March 15, at page 138—Mr. Stevens took objection to that practice and the Speaker made a ruling which was appealed. It was sustained by the house, and on that very day 10 notices of motions for production of papers were thus transferred to notices of motions at the request of Mr. Boivin and others. I would like to point out to hon. members that in 1926, although the rule had been in effect since 1909, and taken advantage of on certain occasions, Mr. Meighen himself was very much surprised, and he had this to say in asking himself that the motion be transferred. I quote his words at page 1561 of Hansard of March 15, 1926, volume II:

> Mr. Speaker, I know of no rule whereby a motion can pass subject to a qualification. Now that we have this new rule that anybody can transfer debatable questions, I think it would be much better to have this motion so transferred.

Later on, in 1938, at the request of the Right Hon. Mr. Howe, a motion moved by Mr. Stevens was transferred, and the text of this motion appears on pages 442 and 443 of the Journals of June 13, 1938. There again, the ruling was appealed and it was sustained by the house.

Perhaps I could refer the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has made some remarks in this connection, to an intervention that he made when a point of order was raised in 1948, (see Debates, volume II, March 10, 1948, page 2073) in which he himself said:

> My point of order is that when the Prime Minister goes beyond stating that he is opposed to the passing of the motion, is he not debating it from his side of the question?

Now, it is precisely this point that standing order 47—it used to be 51—intends to meet in the last part. If the minister would like to take advantage of what has been our custom with respect to opposed motions, he could simply stand up and say: "The government cannot accept this motion", and proceed to give briefly the reason; but if it is not his intention to do only that, it is his right to take advantage of the standing order as it reads, and which, as hon. members well realize, I cannot change, and I cannot go against the exact wording of the standing order. It is just as clear as this:

> All such notices when called shall be forthwith disposed of; but if on any such motion a debate be desired, it will be transferred by the Clerk to the order of "notices of motions".

I have no alternative; if any member asks that a motion of this kind with an asterisk be transferred to notices of motions, according to this context, as long as it remains unchanged, I cannot do anything else but stand up and say: "It shall be transferred accordingly", and the Clerk will do whatever is necessary.

Mr. Knowles: May I say a word or two? First of all, I wonder whether the material that you have at hand includes any instances of this being done since 1938? Your Honour quoted a number of instances. I notice you are now shaking your head in the negative. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, if we are confronted with something today that has not happened in the House of Commons for 18 years, it is a matter of considerable significance.

I do not have before me the material you were reading from 1909. I was not very old at that time myself. As I recall it, however, there was some discussion then as to whether this was a device to enable the government to avoid voting on a motion or whether its purpose was to avoid debate if a private member sought to have debate on the question.

All told, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the matter might be given further study. I think there is something to the point that was suggested by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), that under Your Honour's interpretation of standing order 47 all a cabinet minister has to do is to stand up and say he desires debate when apparently all he wants is to say no. Why should not that end be accomplished simply by having a vote, by obeying the first part of the standing order and deciding the question forthwith?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of what was just said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He expressed some doubt as to the accuracy of my claim that I wanted this subject to be debated. I am not opposing these motions; I do want them to be debated.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, what the minister has said lends force to the point I was about to make. You have referred us, sir, in the course of your references, to a number of statements made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and others at the time in 1909 when I gather the rule was changed. I submit to you with the greatest respect that it is a well understood principle that the meaning of a statute or a rule of order has to be taken exclusively from the language of the rule itself and not from what was said about it at the time it was passed. That is a principle of law which I do not think requires any elaboration. Regardless of what Sir Wilfrid Laurier or anyone else may have said—prominent as he and the others were—as to why it was desirable to have this rule, what they said on that score is not a matter to be considered when we are interpreting the words of the rule itself.

I suggest to you, sir, that this rule as it appears has to be interpreted in the light of its workability and what appears from the words itself it is intended to accomplish, and the relative words are:

> All such notices when called shall be forthwith disposed of; but if on any such motion a debate be desired, it will be transferred by the Clerk to the order of "notices of motions".

Now, sir, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has just stood up and told us he does genuinely desire debate. I suggest to you that if we accept the minister's words, and if that be the case, then this rule should only be applied under one circumstance and that is that the minister will have the leader of the house say he will now undertake to arrange for debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: I say that because the transfer of the motion to notices of motions is to be made only if debate be desired and that rule becomes intelligible only if the house is to interpret it as sensible people: that is to say, we are going to transfer it under circumstances that make debate possible because we really desire debate. In other words, it becomes obvious from considering the words of the rule that it was not intended and should not be interpreted now as being intended to provide the government a device for avoiding both a decision on the motion and a debate on the general question, and if the interpretation which Your Honour is suggesting be given to this rule it becomes a rule which accomplishes both those purposes and most certainly it will not be transferred because debate is desired but simply because debate is not desired and the government wants to avoid assuming its responsibility—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fulton: Oh yes, it wants to avoid its responsibility of passing the motion. Under those circumstances the rule becomes absurd. I suggest to you that the House of Commons would not adopt a rule which in itself was absurd.

I submit that it is quite clear that if a minister stands up and says, "I do not wish at the moment to oppose this motion but I wish to have it transferred under certain circumstances where debate will be possible," then the rule would be applied and the motion might be transferred. The rule provides two alternatives. One is that the government can oppose the motion by a minister simply stating, "We do not accept the motion." The other alternative is to transfer it if debate be desired. I suggest that that alternative is open only if it can be transferred and will be transferred under circumstances where debate is possible. A logical interpretation of the rule does not permit the government to avoid all its responsibility and avoid debate at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: Of course the hon. member will realize that it is not up to me to provide opportunities for debate. He has agreed that standing order 47 does two things: it provides for motions to be opposed without debate; we are dealing with a motion which is called upon to be debated. If there is any desire for debate there is nothing in the standing order that authorizes me to provide for debate. That may be requested through the usual channels.

Mr. Fulton: Would you permit—

Mr. Speaker: We are discussing a point of order now; we should not be taking up time for a discussion as to whether time will be provided for debating a certain matter. I submit that I am bound by the wording of standing order 47 as it now reads. I realize that it presents certain difficulties, but I pointed out to the hon. member that even back in 1909 when they adopted it a member pointed out that a motion for the production of papers without asking for debate might be transferred and never reached and Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that it would have to take that chance. See Debates, volume V, April 29, 1909-10, columns 8370 and 8371. The standing order was agreed to at that time under those circumstances. It has not been taken advantage of very often, but when it has—

Mr. Fulton: May I suggest—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fulton: May I suggest that Your Honour does have a responsibility of deciding whether or not debate is desired.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fulton: I have stood up and moved a motion and have stated a certain purpose in that motion. Your Honour has stated that the motion would not achieve or would not be designed to achieve the purpose which I stated I had in mind, but if Your Honour feels that way then Your Honour rules my motion out of order.

Mr. Speaker: What is the purpose of the hon. member's argument? The hon. member says he has moved a motion and that I contend that his motion is not moved with the design he has in mind. Am I understanding correctly the purport of his remarks?

Mr. Fulton: I am referring to the responsibility on Your Honour to assess the propriety of any motion which is brought before the house. I am not criticizing Your Honour for any application of a rule or a hypothetical rule. As far as I am concerned I am just engaging in a general discussion of your responsibility with respect to the propriety of statements made in connection with rules of order. I submit with deference, but I do so with absolute confidence, that Your Honour when applying this rule must make a decision as to whether or not debate is in fact desired because it seems to me that our whole proceeding would be rendered an absolute folly if an hon. member could stand up or a minister could stand up and say with all outward solemnity, "I desire debate and therefore wish to have this motion transferred", under circumstances where he knows and you know that debate will not be possible. I therefore submit that it is your responsibility in applying this rule, where you have two alternatives before you, to decide whether a minister making a statement is making it under circumstances where his purpose can be accomplished or is making it under circumstances where it will only have the effect of defeating the whole thing and making our rules quite senseless. I submit, sir, that you can never condone the application of a rule in a sense which would defeat the purpose of the house itself.

Mr. Knowles: May I add a supplementary point because I think it is a consideration that did not obtain in 1909. At that time when a notice of motion for production of papers was transferred to notices of motions at least notices of motions stayed on the order paper throughout the balance of the session, and at least there was some possibility of private members' days continuing for an uncertain length of time.

But we have changed the rules since then. We have prescribed that there will be only six private members' Mondays. This coming Monday is the sixth and last of those Mondays. In addition, Mr. Speaker, by virtue of standing order 15 (4) we now provide as follows:

> Notwithstanding the listing of "notices of motions" as an item of daily business in section (3) of this order, such notices shall not be printed on the order paper after the fifth sitting day following the expiry of Monday as a private members' day.

That means that if the request of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is granted my hon. friend's notice of motion for the production of papers will be transferred to notices of motion, will stay there for five more sitting days after next Monday and will then disappear from the order paper along with all the rest of the notices of motions.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that that change in the picture does call for further consideration on your part. I think Your Honour will appreciate the fact that the request made by the minister at this point takes the house by surprise. Your Honour admits that this has not happened for 18 years. If the result is the course of action that Your Honour suggests then the action of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, which has come without any warning and out of the blue, will mean that, as a result of the changed practice of the house, never again will we have a vote on a motion for the production of papers.

Any time the government wants to agree to such a motion it will agree but any time the government does not want to agree there can be no possibility of a vote because the government will say it wishes the motion transferred. The motion will be transferred as suggested and five sitting days after private members' Mondays are over the motion will disappear from the order paper.

I also ask you this question. What will happen two or three weeks from now if a private member's notice of motion for the production of papers is objectionable to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and he requests that it be transferred to notices of motion? At that time there will be no notices of motion. I have just read you standing order 15 (4), and there will be no notices of motion. So where is it transferred to? It is transferred to the wastepaper basket.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that Your Honour has to consider what is fair in all of this. Your Honour has to consider what has happened when one rule has been changed and another has not. True, standing order 47 reads the same as it did in 1909 but in the meantime there have been other changes, including the change with respect to private members' days, including the change with respect to what happens to notices of motions after private members' days have expired. I think that the very least Your Honour might do is defer consideration of this matter until all of us have had a chance to give more thought to it.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Kamloops should reflect a little further as to what they have just been saying. They are now contending that because there is something in a standing order, which should be amended by the house, the responsibility should be placed on me of correcting a situation which is not mine to correct. I had the honour to sit with the hon. members on a committee on procedure and we went into this book from cover to cover. Because we did not find what now may be considered by many hon. members, and possibly by myself, as a loophole, something which should be corrected, do hon. members contend that by virtue of my responsibilities I must, by a ruling, change four lines of a standing order?

The hon. member for Kamloops has said: "It is your responsibility to examine the propriety of a motion." He was referring to standing order 50, and that is true, but I am not analysing the propriety of the motion. I think the motion moved by the hon. member for Yorkton is quite in order. I am not called upon to make any decision with respect to the propriety of the motion.

But hon. members will have to agree with me that standing order 47, while certainly consideration might be given to a change in it, is absolutely clear to anyone in the way it now reads. It contains these words:

> All such notices when called shall be forthwith disposed of; but if on any such motion a debate be desired, it will be transferred by the Clerk to the order of "notices of motions".

Hon. members have said that the last instance I can find is in 1938, 18 years ago, but prior to 1938 I would point out that it was 12 years before, in 1926, that a similar incident occurred, and the same request was made ten times on the same day by a minister. His words are to be found at page 1557 of Hansard of March 15, 1926, and are as follows:

> I ask that this motion and, in order to save Your Honour reading them, several of the other motions that I will indicate, be transferred.

Then he proceeded to enumerate Nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, 18, 22 and 23. He was asked to make the request when each one of the motions was called and he did so. My ruling comes after that of Mr. Speaker Lemieux in 1926 and that of Mr. Speaker Casgrain in 1938. I want hon. members to consider this point. From the strictly procedural point of view I contend quite sincerely and honestly that my position is unchallengeable. From the practical point of view I suggest that it is up to hon. members to correct the situation and not me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, you mentioned a moment ago that in your position as Speaker you could not change the meaning of the rules. As a matter of fact, are you not in the position of a judge—

Mr. Harris: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —upholding the rights of parliament under your control?

Mr. Speaker: So far as the arguments that are now being made are concerned. I know that the hon. member is very sincere, but when hon. members find themselves in a situation where their own standing order is binding them, and perhaps in their view paralysing them, they wish, for various reasons, to put the responsibility on the Speaker of making a ruling which will help them to get around the rule. I cannot do that. I try as much as possible to avoid these things. Some of my rulings may be unpopular at times but I sincerely try to make them based on authorities, on my predecessors' rulings, and I have quoted enough of them. Perhaps hon. members might consider the Speakers' rulings to which I have referred them and if there is a further occasion when a similar request is made perhaps they might enlarge on their views at that time. I have listened today to the views of several hon. members. What do we do now with the rule which has always been observed, or is supposed to be observed, that rulings of the Speaker are not debatable? When am I going to draw the line? Are we going to spend the rest of the afternoon in listening to discussion of this matter?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The point has been carefully studied. I looked at it last year. Last year I tried to explain this very point that I am explaining today, much to the surprise of many hon. members. Today I was called upon to make a ruling and I made it. I might say that if some hon. members complain that my statements are too long, they may have a responsibility for that situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me to conclude what I was about to say, I should like to do so. A moment ago you mentioned that you would be placed in a position where—to use words that interpret the movement of your hands which indicated that this was your meaning—you would be asked to endeavour to evade the rules as they are. There has been a change n the rules and the application of them to which reference has been made. If the rule s that a minister may do that which is being attempted in this case, then you, Mr. Speaker, as the custodian of free speech in parliament—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not the minister. It is any hon. member. For instance, if the hon. member puts a notice of motion on the order paper and he places an asterisk before it indicating that he does not want any debate, the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) who sits next to the hon. member may stand up and make the same request as did the minister today, and I say it must be transferred accordingly. Why put in my mouth words that I have not uttered? I said, "any member". I will agree with the hon. member that a ruling was made to the effect that a minister was entitled to do that and it appeared in Mr. Lemieux's ruling in 1926 that no other member was allowed to do so. But I disagree with that ruling. I say that if a notice of motion for the production of papers is moved, and if it is the intention not to have a debate on it because the member placed an asterisk before it, then if any other member of this house—no matter where he sits, or whether he be a cabinet minister or not—asks that the motion be transferred I say that, according to the clear wording of this rule 47, I have no alternative but to say that the motion be transferred accordingly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that does not intimidate me.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. gentleman wish to appeal my ruling?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wish to discuss with the house and with yourself—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to appeal my ruling? That is his right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, absolutely. Otherwise parliament is stultified.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether or not the remarks that were just made were captured by Hansard as I heard them. I want to tell the hon. gentleman right now that I am not going to depend on my hearing on this occasion. I will wait until tomorrow to look at Hansard. But if the remark is as I think I heard it, I may tell him that he might consider having to withdraw it.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: As I say, I am not sure. The hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has appealed the ruling I have just made based on the wording of standing order No. 47. Those who are in favour of sustaining the Speaker's ruling will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is on an appeal from the Speaker's ruling. Mr. Castleden had moved a motion for the production of papers, which is No. 32 on the order paper. Mr. Pickersgill asked that the motion be transferred to notices of motion, and I ruled that the motion should be transferred accordingly. A point of order was raised and I based my ruling on standing order 47, the latter part of which reads:

"All such notices when called shall be forthwith disposed of; but if on any such motion a debate be desired, it will be transferred by the Clerk to the order of notices of motions."

I ruled that any member of the house may avail himself of the provisions of this standing order to ask that a motion be transferred from notices of motions for the production of papers to notices of motion. From this ruling, Mr. Diefenbaker has appealed.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

NEW ROSS, N.S.—POST OFFICE

Motion No. 39—Mr. Nowlan:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other communications exchanged between the Postmaster General or any official of the Post Office Department, and any other person or persons, during the year 1955, concerning the post office at New Ross, in the county of Lunenburg, province of Nova Scotia, and the appointment of postmaster thereat.

BANFF NATIONAL PARK—GONDOLA CHAIR LIFT

Motion No. 41—Mr. Johnston (Bow River):

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged, during the past two years, between the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and Banff parks superintendent and/or other citizens, relating to the erection of gondola chair lift to the summit of Sulphur mountain in the Banff national park.

Mr. Lesage: The motion reads in part as follows:

For a copy of all correspondence . . . exchanged, during the past two years, between the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and Banff parks superintendent . . .

I submit, sir, that these exchanges are privileged. I could not agree to this part of the motion. I have no objection to the remainder.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that some of the correspondence which is exchanged between the park superintendent and the department is not departmental correspondence in the sense that you have the department here.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, since in the circumstances I wish to debate the motion, I ask that it be transferred to notices of motions.

Mr. Speaker: It is transferred accordingly.

Mr. Fleming: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I make a submission to you with respect to the decision that I understood you just announced at the request of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources? Assuming that the ruling you made on the last motion before the house is correct—and I cannot reopen or discuss it—I do submit to you that if any request is to be made within the terms of the standing order on which you relied for your ruling, it must be made at the outset and immediately, and not after the minister has made a different type of claim to take advantage of the position he is taking that the papers should not be produced. My submission to you is that if the minister rises and claims privilege and says the papers should not be produced he has no right then afterwards to say: "Well, I am going to ask that this be debated." Under these circumstances, my respectful submission to you, sir, is that that type of claim must be made by the objecting minister immediately and before he launches on any other statement or takes any other position on a motion for production of papers.

Mr. Lesage: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—I will take only one minute—I objected to part of the motion as being a request for privileged documents. The hon. member for Bow River then rose in his place and started to debate the question. This question is not debatable. In order to provide him with an opportunity to debate it, since he wants to debate it, I expressed my wish to debate it. That is the reason I asked that the motion be transferred to notices of motion.

Mr. Speaker: As a matter of fact this is precisely the reason why the last part is in standing order 47. If we were to carry the provisions of standing order 47 to their strict interpretation, the minister should not be allowed to give reasons why he opposes the motion. This is the point which was raised precisely by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when one day Mr. King explained why he was opposed to a motion. He had obtained a written opinion from the then clerk of the house, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said (see Debates, volume II, March 10, 1948, page 2073) something to this effect: If it is not debatable when it is placed with an asterisk on the order paper, should the Prime Minister be allowed to elaborate on his reasons why he is opposed to the motion? To quote his words, he said:

> On a similar motion a moment ago Your Honour ruled that it was not debatable. Would that not also cover remarks made by the Prime Minister?

The hon. member said that himself in 1948.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Let us not have another long discussion.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, you have read twice from words which I used in 1948. Your Honour has not read the rest of it. It does not at any point quote me as asking that the notice of motion for production of papers be transferred to notices of motion. The only point I was making was that if a private member is not allowed to debate one of these motions, the Prime Minister should not be allowed to debate it either. That is the whole point in what I said in 1948. I do not think Your Honour should try to put me on the other side of the issue that is now before us.

Mr. Speaker: I must say to the hon. member immediately that he was never of the opinion that the motion should be transferred, and he never said that; but he did in fact indicate what is in my view the reason why it has been put in this standing order that a notice of motion which is to be debated goes to the notices of motion. It is to provide an opportunity to the minister to further explain his reason why he is opposed, and, in fairness, to give the hon. member the chance of rebuttal as to why in his view the motion should go unopposed.

Mr. Knowles: May I continue for just a moment? Your Honour has referred to the strict interpretation of the standing order. The strict interpretation that I was trying to obtain in 1948 was that if debate was not allowed to one side it should not be allowed to the other.

With regard to the latter part of standing order 47, may I invite Your Honour's consideration of citation 6 in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition?

Mr. Speaker: I know that one by heart.

Mr. Knowles: You and I know it by heart, but there are other members of the house who may not. It reads:

> In the interpretation of the rules or standing orders the house is generally guided, not so much by the literal construction of the orders themselves as by the consideration of what has been the practice of the house with respect to them.

I submit that the practice of this house for as long as both you and I have been here, indeed for 18 years, should be considered in making decisions with respect to matters of this kind.

Mr. Speaker: May I submit to the hon. member, and to all hon. members, that the practice of the house is not changed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: No; it has been customary for the house, on a motion which is not debatable, to allow a minister summarily to give his reason why he is opposed. It has been customary—

Mr. Lennard: He did that today.

Mr. Speaker: That practice is not changed. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources did precisely that today. I did not object. Nobody objected.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) probably wanted to give some reason why he disagreed with the minister and the motion was being debated. The minister said that if debate is desired he would ask to have the motion transferred to notices of motion. What I want to tell hon. members is that what is happening in this case is not that we are changing our practice under standing order 47. What has happened today is that two ministers have taken advantage of the provision which is in standing order 47 and which has not been taken advantage of very often in this house but when it is taken advantage of—with the rule book in my hands, what can I do?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Drew: I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Lennard: Oh, gosh, there he goes again.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if at this time I could make a suggestion which would be agreeable to both the hon. member for Bow River and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Fleming: Are you discussing a point of order?

Mr. Harris: I am speaking to a point of order. As I understand it, on this particular motion for papers I am sure neither hon. gentleman actually wanted to take the house's time on this point to explain why or why not the statement made by the minister was correct with respect to certain correspondence. If they would just let this motion stand and perhaps exchange their own views they might be able to agree that certain communications are in fact privileged and therefore that would not be a part of the motion when it came before the house. Under those circumstances we could then avoid the question of whether or not this particular motion would be debatable and no doubt my hon. friend in the end would receive all the papers he desires to have if the motion could be adopted in that manner.

Mr. Lennard: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, this now is a matter before the house—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would allow the hon. member for Bow River, who is the mover of this motion, to say whether or not he agrees with the suggestion.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the suggestion made by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, of course I do agree; it was my first suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: The motion will stand.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, will Your Honour declare whether a motion that has been called can be withdrawn without the consent of the house?

Mr. Harris: It is not being withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: It is not being withdrawn; it is merely being allowed to stand.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: That was the suggestion made by the Minister of Finance and that is the suggestion to which the hon. member for Bow River has agreed. It is easy to clarify the situation.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, were not the former motions requested to stand as well? I understand that my hon. friend, the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), did ask that the two motions be allowed to stand and that that privilege was not granted.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar that I understood the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did suggest that the motions be allowed to stand in order for me, I take it, to give some further consideration to my judgment. It is not up to me to suggest that a motion be allowed to stand. If someone on the government side had suggested it, it would have been a different proposition.

Mr. Knowles: Is that the difference, Mr. Speaker, whether the request comes from this side or the government side?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I am quite serious; I made the request in the other case, but Your Honour went ahead and ruled. In this instance the request is being made and Your Honour is granting it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows as well as anyone else that I do not move any motion in the house. When a motion is moved it is frequently asked that it be allowed to stand and I will let a motion stand on my own responsibility only when the mover is not here and nobody has been authorized to move the motion in his absence.

I do think that subject to general approval it has been customary for Speakers to do that. But when a motion is moved and I propose it from the chair it is not up to me to ask that it be allowed to stand. I did not accede to the request of the hon. member to consider further the remarks I had to make because I felt that I was just as prepared to deal with the point now as I would be tomorrow. If I had wanted to accede to his request I could not have said "This motion will stand". Even if I were to ask that, the house could say no. Motions do not stand at my request; the hon. member knows that.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, there is no agreement that this motion stand. The motion has been called and the minister rose to say that these documents were privileged. Obviously the purpose of stating that was that he felt this motion should not be dealt with.

Mr. Harris: In part.

Mr. Fleming: He did not say, "in part".

Mr. Harris: Yes, he did.

Mr. Drew: Then when the hon. member indicated his desire to proceed the minister said he wanted this debated. That is making a farce of these rules.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I will not be accused of making a farce of the rules without rising in my seat to state the facts as they are. I objected to a part of the motion. The hon. member for Bow River stood up in his seat and started to debate the point I had raised.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): No, I did not.

Mr. Lesage: I got up and said that if the hon. member for Bow River wanted to debate the point I would make the motion for transfer.

Mr. Fleming: That was an afterthought.

Mr. Speaker: We have had some business announced for today. I do not think the house would want to take any more time in dealing with these technical points on procedure. May I suggest that the following course be followed: The minister on his own responsibility felt that he could not accede to a part of the motion of the hon. member. The hon. member who has moved the motion is in this position. If he wants to have his motion remain as it is, it is evident that it will be opposed. If he wants to agree to have it amended, unanimous consent must be given. If unanimous consent is not given the question will then have to be put because the motion is proposed from the chair.

Coming to the point raised by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming)—

Mr. Fleming: On which I would like to say another word, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will not feel required to say anything more because I am inclined to agree with him to a certain extent. I want to look at the point further. I am inclined to agree that when the minister rose he could have asked that the motion be transferred if he wanted a debate right there and then, but having taken the other course, which was the course provided in the first part of standing order 47, that he opposed the motion and therefore it should be disposed of forthwith, I do not think he can come back later and say that he wants to have a debate. I think he should have made up his mind right at the beginning. There is something in what the hon. member for Eglinton has pointed out to me which is striking. It strikes me as perhaps being the correct interpretation. I think the hon. gentleman has a good point there. What I suggest is that the minister either withdraw his request to have the motion transferred or, if he does not, I will tell him immediately that I will have to rule against him on that score.

Mr. Lesage: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that it was agreed the motion would stand.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Lesage: I opposed the motion in part.

Mr. Speaker: We have to give a certain amount of protection to the hon. member for Bow River. Knowing that his motion is opposed in part, is the hon. member prepared to have his own motion as a whole opposed, or does he wish to have his motion amended?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I will be satisfied to abide by the regulation dealing with communications, telegrams, etc., to be produced so long as they are not confidential because I am quite sure that if I had asked for it the other way I would not get anything.

Mr. Speaker: In other words, the motion is carried subject to the reservation indicated by the minister.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, the motion moved by the hon. member for Bow River is in the possession of the house and as such I submit it cannot be withdrawn or amended except with the consent of the house. That consent has not been given. Personally I have deep objection to the giving of consent, for this reason. If we do it it would mean that motions moved by different hon. members for the same purpose, namely to get information, would be given different treatment. I do not think that that is something to which this house should consent. It may be that ministers are changing their minds because they see the error of their ways, and I hope so, but I do not think it is proper for this house—

Mr. Speaker: On the point raised by the hon. member for Kamloops, the motion is in the possession of the house and cannot be amended unless by unanimous consent. I should like to point out to him that it has been our practice—this is an unwritten rule perhaps—and I would refer him to the citation read by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a moment ago.

Mr. Fulton: I would refer Your Honour back to it in your turn.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry but my knowledge of English is not so refined that I can grasp all the flavour of the hon. gentleman's remarks. Citation 6 is to the effect that rules should not be interpreted literally. There is a distinction between a standing order which is clear and something about which the Speaker may be called upon to give an interpretation. At this moment we are dealing with general principles regarding motions. The motion before the house is in the possession of the house and I understand that the mover is ready to agree to its passing with the amendment suggested by the minister. It has been customary for the house to give its consent to that sort of proposal. If the hon. member objects, and I take it that he does, all I can do is put the motion.

Those who are in favour of this motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members. I beg your pardon, there were only two members who rose. Now I see five; call in the members.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: I said, call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Johnston, Bow River) which was negatived on the following division:

KENT COUNTY—HUNTING AND FISHING

Motion No. 47—Mr. Murphy (Lambton West):

For a copy of all agreements and leases, from 1947 to date, between any department of the federal government and all lessees of Indian lands or other lands and waters in the county of Kent, particularly concerning fishing and hunting privileges and rights, and for a map or maps showing such leased areas.

He said: Mr. Speaker, with regard to this particular motion may I say that I have discussed the contents with the minister and I am asking that it be dropped in order that it may be reworded.

An hon. Member: We cannot hear a word.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the motion be dropped?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Do some hon. members say no? May I point out to hon. members that this question has not been proposed from the chair yet. It is not in the possession of the house. If the hon. gentleman wishes to have his motion amended before it is proposed from the chair, it is his right to go to see the clerk of notices and orders and amend it. I do not think he was obliged to bring the request to the house. The motion is dropped.

GRAIN

REPORTED CONSTRUCTION OF GRAIN ELEVATORS AT THREE RIVERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. I. Rochefort (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport. Could he tell the house whether he is acquainted with an agreement between the national harbours board and the Three Rivers Grain and Elevator Company concerning the construction of silos and of grain elevators at the Three Rivers harbour at a cost of about two million dollars, such costs to be spread over two years?

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Champlain for having given me notice of his question. I congratulate him on the interest he takes in the Three Rivers harbour.

The national harbours board informs me that the Three Rivers Grain and Elevator Company which owns and operates a grain elevator on land leased to it by the board has made known its intention, some time ago, of enlarging its premises so as to increase its capacity by approximately two million bushels, as well as to construct other facilities. The company has rented the land required for this project the plans for which are subject to the board's approval. Since this is a private undertaking, I feel that any statement regarding the estimated cost of the project should be made by the company itself.

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to put to the Minister of Transport. What is the contribution of the Department of Transport or the national harbours board to this undertaking?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): I think that if the hon. member had listened carefully to the answer I have just given to the hon. member for Champlain, he would have found the answer to his question.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER EXTENSION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance tell the house when the gold mining communities may expect to learn the government's views about the further extension of emergency gold mining assistance?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): My understanding is that the present gold mining subsidy does not run out until the end of this current year. Government policy will be made known in due course.

Mr. Michener: Would the minister say that "in due course" meant within the period of this session?

Mr. Harris: I do surprising things occasionally, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX ACT

INQUIRY AS TO RESOLUTION PRECEDING AMENDMENT FORECAST IN BUDGET SPEECH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Where is the resolution respecting the bill to amend the Income Tax Act forecast in the minister's speech last night?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is not completed yet but it will be distributed very shortly.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question? When that resolution is distributed, will it indicate whether convention expense deductibility will extend to delegates attending trade union conventions?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that we wait until the resolution is distributed in order to find out what is in it.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the budget resolutions are usually tabled on the night the minister makes his budget speech. The income tax resolution was not tabled last night. His speech refers to it. I think we are entitled to know what is involved in this proposal.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. gentleman contend that we ought to spend time now, when in reply to his question the minister has said that the resolution will be distributed shortly, in order to have him tell us what is in it? I do not think that is the purpose of question time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MANNING AND OPERATION OF EARLY WARNING LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence in connection with the last paragraph of the statement he made yesterday and the first answer he gave to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green)? Does the presumption that he made that the United States contractor would undertake the manning and operating of the D.E.W. line apply as well to the mid-Canada line? In reading the two together, it would seem that his answer was that the United States contractor would operate and man both of those lines.

Mr. P. T. Hellyer (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to leave that implication.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Defence Production happens to be handling the negotiations for the operating of the mid-Canada line. I may say that it will certainly be operated under a contract with a Canadian contractor and manned by Canadians.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the Prime Minister whether he is ready to answer the questions I asked yesterday on the manning of the distant early warning lines.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. It will take some days to look at several things that might be considered as similar though not at all of the same importance in the general picture.

Mr. Pearkes: Might I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question? In looking over those regulations would he give consideration to the possibility of the application of the Visiting Forces Act to those personnel of the United States contractor?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I will take note of the hon. gentleman's question and see whether it can be fitted into the information I will be obtaining in order to answer the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with the matters already dealt with. Can he say whether or not there is full protection for Canada's sovereignty in the erection and the manning of the D.E.W. line? Second, can he say whether the action of the Governor General in flying over that area and dropping his standard is a reassertion of Canada's sovereignty and is designed as such?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I do not think any reassertion of Canada's sovereignty was required, but I think it is a demonstration to the whole world of the fact that that is territory within Canadian sovereignty. In all these negotiations we have been very careful to consider what the repercussions might be about the extent of Canadian sovereignty and the necessities of the real situation, to have an effective joint operation conducted for the benefit of both Canada and the United States.

TRADE

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister say what progress is being made in the current negotiations for a new international wheat agreement and whether, from the reports he receives, he is hopeful one may be signed?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I can give no progress report. The negotiations are proceeding in camera and all I can say is that they are still in progress.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Harris moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $528,819,279.84 being one-sixth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and in addition thereto, a sum not exceeding $479,979.00, being one-sixth of the total of the amounts of items 197, 199, 202, 203, and a sum not exceeding $714,781.42, being one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of items 15, 425, 426, of the said estimates be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957.

Mr. Macdonnell: Does the minister give the usual undertaking in this case?

Mr. Harris: Yes, I give the usual undertaking that the passing of this motion will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize or discuss any item in the estimates which will come up for consideration from time to time during the balance of the session, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

Mr. Harris moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957, the following sums be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, namely:

1. The sum of $528,819,279.84, being one-sixth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957; and
2. The sum of $479,979.00, being one-sixth of the total of the amounts of items 197, 199, 202, 203 of the said estimates;
3. The sum of $714,781.42, being one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of items 15, 425, 426 of the said estimates; as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Harris thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 206, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1957.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): When shall this bill be read a second time; now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Harris moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On schedule A.

Mr. Knowles: In connection with schedule A, I should like an explanation of the wording. Can the minister explain the phrase, "including share of the former printing of parliament"? It appears twice in schedule A, once in item 199 and once in item 202.

Mr. Harris: I must be frank and say I cannot explain it, unless it is that we have accounts outstanding at the moment that have been held over. I must say that the explanation for this wording was not drawn to my attention.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the minister will get an explanation for some future occasion.

Schedule A agreed to.

Schedule B agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): When shall this bill be read a third time; now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Harris moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Health of animals—

538. To provide for payment of compensation to owners of animals affected with diseases coming under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, which have died or have been slaughtered in circumstances not covered by the above act and regulations made thereunder, and to provide for payments to owners for loss of cattle during treatments for immunization against hemorrhagic septicaemia, and sheep and goats that reacted to tuberculin tests, all as detailed in the estimates, $2,304.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): This is an item dealing with the health of animals, and I wondered whether the Minister of Agriculture would take the opportunity to inform the house about the serious outbreak of scrapies, a disease in connection with sheep, in Alberta. I understand that there has been quite an outbreak and, as a result of the fact that some of these sheep have been shipped to certain fairs in other provinces, there is likelihood of a further outbreak. I think the minister should give assurance to the house that steps have been taken by the health of animals branch for the careful supervision of this disease so that it will not break out in other flocks in other provinces.

Since press reports indicate that considerable compensation is to be paid in respect of one particular farmer, I should like the minister to give some information to the committee to show what has been done in that respect. If he can indicate the amount of compensation paid per animal, and what the total amount is likely to be, I might have something further to say.

Mr. Harris: Just before the Minister of Agriculture makes his statement, may I point out that there is nothing in this item relating to the outbreak of scrapie. This amount is for the payment of animals slaughtered. It is a small amount of money having to do with certain animals that died under circumstances as set out in the resolution, and is merely to bring up to date the amount which was voted last year. Normally on this occasion one does not debate something of the future. It is a principle which has been adopted by parliament that this particular vote should be paid to various persons concerned.

If my hon. friend goes along with me I am sure he would prefer to debate the other point on the normal agricultural items at another time.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, there is a certain urgency to the information. There have been many press reports on the matter, and it would be beneficial to hon. members if the minister would see fit to give this information at this time. I realize that this item has to do with another branch of the Department of Agriculture. In view of the public interest in the matter, it would be well if the minister would give us some information.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Chairman, the matter on which the hon. member has based his question is not covered by these estimates at all. There is no item here covering those particular sheep.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I realize that.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not know that this is the time to discuss it, in any case. There is certainly no further information that can be given other than that which has already been given to the house. The matter is being discussed with the breeder in Alberta who is affected, and a decision has not yet been reached.

Mr. Quelch: Can the minister define the basis upon which compensation is paid, first of all for commercial stock and, second, for purebred stock, not necessarily in regard to scrapie but any disease?

Mr. Gardiner: The general position, of course, is that there are certain payments made on different kinds of livestock based upon whether they are grades or whether they are purebreds. Of course, this particular herd of sheep were all purebreds and of the highest quality of purebreds. The matter is under negotiation between officials of the department and the breeder concerned. There is no definite basis upon which it can be dealt with, because there would not be sufficient paid if you were to just put it at so much per head in accordance with the other regulations.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister this question. Under what section of the act or under what item of the estimates will compensation be paid for this particular flock of sheep? As the minister said, this is an extremely well known and very valuable flock. I have seen them at the Calgary exhibition on numerous occasions. There is a very considerable amount of interest in the province of Alberta, and I should think in other parts of Canada, particularly amongst sheep breeders, as to what the compensation is going to be in this case, and the provision for payment. I had thought probably the provision for payment would have been made in these supplementary estimates, and that was the question I had in mind to ask from the start. I had intended to ask how this was going to be provided for, since I noticed it was not here.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, it will be provided for out of the estimates. I do not think it is possible to make the payment before this financial year ends. It will have to be provided for in votes for the next financial year, not for this one. These are further supplementary estimates for this financial year. It will be in the June supplementaries. That is where it will come in.

Mr. Harkness: The point is this. These sheep have been killed in the year we are now discussing. They have been done away with in this year; therefore I would have thought provision would have been made for them in this year. I would hope there would not be any difficulty in providing for the compensation next year, because the sheep have been killed this year.

Mr. Gardiner: Payment is not made this year, and the settlement is not yet made. I do not think it will be completed before the end of March. For that reason it will not be paid this year. The money will have to be voted in the supplementaries next year.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Can the minister indicate whether this disease is infectious or contagious? According to press reports, sheep from this particular flock have been shipped to various places, and there is some indication that it is an infectious disease and not purely hereditary. Can the minister indicate what his department has done with respect to confining the disease to this particular flock?

Mr. Gardiner: All the sheep that have been sold by Mr. Rock over the months there was any suspicion of any disease in the flock at all have been checked right down to the people who bought them. The flocks have been checked, and there is no indication that any disease has been carried anywhere except into the flock where it was found down in the state of Massachusetts, near Boston; somewhere around there. They were the first sheep that showed suspicion of the disease. It was checked back to Mr. Rock's herd. All other sheep that have been sold in the meantime have been checked right through. The disease is largely carried through the breeding. It is not carried so much in any other way.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Can the minister give an assurance that no sheep from this particular flock have been shown at any fairs subsequent to the determination that there was scrapie in the flock?

Mr. Gardiner: Well, I can give the assurance because they were all killed and buried, just as were the animals that had foot-and-mouth disease. The animals have been slaughtered, so there is no possibility of any further movement. To go back to the beginning—the sheep that had scrapie apparently were imported from Britain, and since the time these sheep were imported into the flock every animal that has gone out of the flock to anywhere has been checked right through to the flock where it went, and no sign of any scrapie has been found in those flocks. Therefore, so far as one can say, while I cannot give any assurance that none of it will break out anywhere, I can give assurance that the United States inspectors and our own are in touch with every flock to see that if it does break out the flock is immediately destroyed.

The Deputy Chairman: Before this discussion goes any further perhaps I should point out to the committee that what we are dealing with today are the supplementary estimates for the year which ends 10 days from today. I do not think I would be carrying out my duty if I were to let the discussion carry on in this way. The purpose of these supplementary estimates is to decide whether the commitments of some of the departments shall be taken care of now. I can assure hon. members—and I think they will agree with me—that the widest form of discussion can take place at the time the main estimates are under discussion.

I would point out to hon. members that we have before us a few isolated items for some of the departments; and though I have no desire to stop hon. members from bringing to the attention of the minister some things which hon. members consider to be vital and emergent—perhaps it was my mistake—yet I think we should restrict our questions to the items that are actually before the committee at the present time, and why the money is needed or why it is not. Because we happen to have an item dealing with sums payable to certain farmers in Ontario and Quebec, I think is hardly an excuse to enter into a discussion as to what we are going to do about paying compensation to some similar group of farmers in Alberta and Saskatchewan in the next fiscal year. With those thoughts in mind I hope the committee will co-operate.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I would like to co-operate with you, of course. I believe this item has to deal with the immunization of sheep and goats and of course—

Mr. Harris: No, no. It has to do with the payment of losses for particular animals, not for the animals my hon. friend was talking about at all.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I quite agree they are not the particular sheep I am discussing; nevertheless it should be understood by the committee that the general policy of the health of animals branch toward immunization and the policy of the government with respect to the health of animals throughout the country would of course have an effect in any part of the dominion.

We have had the experience of the foot-and-mouth disease. In some way or other it was brought into this country and we suffered severe losses, particularly in western Canada. The minister has told us that apparently this disease was brought in by a flock of sheep which came from outside the country; namely, I think, from Great Britain.

I was wondering what policy is followed in respect of these animals coming to Canada. Apparently they have come from outside the country. They got into this important pure-bred flock, and for a number of years these sheep were shown at various fairs throughout the country. It has meant that we have had to take out of the treasury certain amounts of money for compensation. According to the press I understand that it will amount to over $100,000.

Mr. Harris: $2,000.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the hon. member is really putting himself out of order, because the amount it is going to cost is $2,304, and that is the amount we are discussing today. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, before that item is passed I should like to ask a question. Some of the cost regarding scrapie was no doubt incurred last year. Since scrapie appeared in a flock of sheep in the United States, no doubt many inspections have been made by the department.

Mr. Gardiner: That could be discussed on my general estimates, which will be up in a few days.

Mr. Quelch: This is a question I would like to have answered, because I have received many inquiries about it. There is a great deal of concern about this matter. Sheep from this flock have been shipped all over the dominion, and carloads have been shipped down to the United States. From the information given in the press I gather that this disease is mainly transferred through breeding. The stock that has been shipped has all been breeding stock. You could not have a better way of spreading the disease than has been provided by the process of shipping this breeding stock across the country.

We are also informed it may take two years before the disease develops. Every individual who has obtained stock from this flock may find that scrapie will break out in his flock at any time within the next two years. Breeders are very much concerned about this. We are glad to have the assurance of the minister that every breeder who has obtained stock from this farm will be kept in close touch with the department and that his flock will be inspected, I presume from time to time, to insure that scrapie does not break out.

I understand that you can have this disease in your flock but you might not recognize it until it is in the advanced stage, when the sheep start to become paralysed or fall off in condition and begin scraping themselves against posts. I suppose that is why it is called scrapie. Could we have the minister's assurance that this is being checked?

Mr. Gardiner: I have already given you my assurance.

Mr. Bryce: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a number of questions to the minister. On page 10 there is an item of $173 to Canada Packers Limited, Toronto, Ontario. Does that cover sheep which had been transported across the country, or was it something that developed in the yards? I should like to have the details of this item.

Mr. Harris: The bill I have before me does not have a page 10 but I will take my hon. friend's word for it.

Mr. Bryce: I am referring to page 10 of the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Harris: The item for Canada Packers?

Mr. Bryce: Yes.

Mr. Harris: One animal at $173.

Mr. Bryce: It was not a sheep or a hog. It was a cattle beast?

Mr. Harris: Yes, it was a cattle beast.

Mr. Bryce: How come they get compensation for that?

Mr. Harris: Sometimes they are slaughtered just after having been tested in the normal way. For some reason or other the tests may not have detected the disease, but on the animal being slaughtered we make a point of paying compensation if, on inspection, there is T.B.

Mr. Argue: The heading in the details shows that part of the payment is for animals slaughtered in circumstances not covered by the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. I understood the minister to say that the test is made on the carcass, and if the animal is shown to have the disease payment is then made. Apparently it is for diseases other than those found in animals slaughtered under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. I wonder if the compensation in this item is for one disease in the main, and if so, what the disease happens to be?

Mr. Harris: There are actually four different classes. There is the animal that was slaughtered at the abattoir and was found contaminated. There are those which react to the test but died before they could be slaughtered in the abattoir. In theory under the regulations they do not get paid, but we pay them in any event. There are a number of animals. I think it was a total of something like 18 or 19, coming to a figure of $1,509, the largest single item being $199 and then a number of other items totalling nine in number and coming to a figure of $795. Just to read one explanation, it says, "Slaughtered for beef and carcass condemned for tuberculosis." Another one I see says, "Steer died while under observation". It is that type of thing.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Could the minister tell the committee if any of these animals came from T.B. restricted areas?

Mr. Harris: No. There is no note here to indicate that, but as I have all the names and addresses I could have it checked and let the hon. member know.

Item agreed to.

Terminable services—

540. Freight assistance on western feed grains—further amount required, $500,000.

Mr. Brooks: I should like to ask one question regarding this item. I assume this is for freight assistance on western grain going to the eastern provinces?

Mr. Harris: That is right.

Mr. Brooks: Could the minister tell us just how much is assigned to each area?

Mr. Harris: There is no particular area, Mr. Chairman. As everyone knows, we subsidize feed grain coming from the west to Ontario and down to the Atlantic provinces. This is merely an amount to make up the vote of last year, which was $15,500,000. We found that we ran out of money because a little more grain came down than was expected, and this is the further amount required. Some goes to other provinces, but it is not a case of allocating it. It is a case of paying the bills as they come in upon receipt of the shipments.

Mr. Brooks: How do the quantities and the payments compare with the previous year?

Mr. Harris: It is heavier this year both from the point of view of the amount of money being paid and the amount of grain coming down. I think you will find there was not much of a grain crop in the east last year, generally speaking. It was all right, but it was not as heavy as the year before. That accounts for the miscalculation, although there has been a heavy movement to all provinces.

Mr. Michener: Has the minister the number of bushels that were moved? It would be interesting to know just how many bushels have been moved through the assistance of this subsidy, which will now amount to $16 million.

Mr. Harris: I just have the monthly amounts which run from April and May, 1·8 million; June, 1·4 million; July, 900,000; then they run 1·3, 1·5, 1·7, 1·4. There will be a heavier run in February and March.

Mr. Michener: Is the subsidy paid on the basis of so much a bushel?

Mr. Harris: So much per ton and on various bases for Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes.

Mr. Michener: Depending on the length of haul.

Mr. Argue: We in this group are certainly prepared to support this item, under which the government pays a subsidy on the shipment of western feed grains to feeders in other provinces. We regret that the rate of payment was reduced last year and we recall that at that time the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and other farm organizations protested very strongly at the reduction which was then made effective.

There is always an argument as to who is the main beneficiary from this type of subsidy, but I think it is generally agreed that the feeders of western grains would suffer considerably if the subsidy were removed. Certainly as long as it is maintained it does assist in providing a market for western feed grains. I imagine that the subsidy does in fact benefit both the producer of feed grains and the feeders who obtain the grains with a subsidy on the freight.

As I said, we were sorry last year when the government decided to reduce the rate. I imagine it is because of that reduction in the rate that the item in the estimates was reduced from $17 million the year before to $15·5 million. If my information is correct, and I think it is, we voted a year ago a further supplementary of $2 million to the $17 million, bringing the total up to $19 million. The further supplementary item which we are being asked to vote at this time is for $500,000.

In other words, in addition to the reduction which took place in the supplementary estimates from $17 million to $15·5 million, a decrease of $1·5 million, there has been a further decrease from the supplementary item a year ago of from $2 million to $500,000. I may be wrong, but it appears to me that there will be a reduction in the amount paid under this subsidy, not only of $1·5 million in the main estimates but of a further $1·5 million in the supplementary estimates, or a total reduction of $3 million.

I should like an explanation of this further reduction in the supplementary item as compared with a year ago. I ask this question. Has there been a further reduction in the rate of subsidy on the shipment of feed grain?

Mr. Harris: No, there has been no reduction since the announcement was made a year ago February. That announcement was made at a time which would give my hon. friend an opportunity to debate the new rate. I have a distinct recollection that he did so. I can only add that the principle on which we are paying is precisely the principle on which the main item was carried last spring.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister give the main reason for the reduction in this supplementary item? Has there been a reduction in the amount of grain being moved, particularly in view of the statement that there had been a crop failure in many parts of eastern Canada?

Mr. Harris: Of course this is the kind of question my hon. friend would like me to answer just in the form in which we have to answer it. He knows perfectly well that the reason for the reduction in the amount of the subsidy is the reduction in the rate. As I said before, there was a greater demand for feed grains in eastern Canada. There has been a reduction in the vote of $3 million for the twelve-month period. That is the actual reduction, as the hon. member has said, and it stems from the fact that the rate of the subsidy was in fact reduced by the government last year.

Mr. Argue: If the reduction in the item was from $17 million to $15·5 million because of the reduced rate the government is paying, and then if following that there was a large increase in the volume of grain moved, what would be the explanation for the larger proportionate reduction in the supplementary item?

Mr. Harris: The answer is that we are paying all claims that are made; that is, we are not refusing any that are justified by the act. The hon. member for St. Paul's asked what quantities had been moved. We will be glad to provide that information during the debate on the agricultural items, but in the meantime we have merely estimated that we need $500,000 to cover the period up to two or three days from now.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Is this subsidy paid on grain moved from the prairies to British Columbia?

Mr. Harris: Yes, on movements east and west.

Mr. Brooks: I just want to say that we appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia, who says they are pleased to approve of this reduction in the subsidy on rates to other parts of Canada.

Mr. Argue: Not the reduction.

Mr. Brooks: The reduction in the subsidy on the freight rates.

Mr. Argue: We are for it. I wish the government had not reduced it.

Mr. Brooks: In order to keep the record straight I want to say that we who come from other parts of Canada were ready to approve the $35 million which was paid to western farmers for the storage of grain and so on.

Mr. Bryson: I would certainly have no objection to an increase in this item. I should like to see more grain shipped from western Canada to eastern feeders, but I do not think they are getting the type of grain they should get. I have wondered if it would not be possible for western producers to ship grain to eastern feeders. We know that theoretically this can be done, but actually the obstacles in the way are almost insurmountable. I think it would be advantageous to both the producer and the feeder if more western grain could be shipped direct from the producer to the feeder in eastern Canada without all the red tape which now makes it almost impossible for such a transaction to take place.

I am wondering if serious consideration could not be given to ironing out some of the difficulties which now exist, in order that western feed grains could be shipped direct to feeders in eastern Canada. I am sure they would benefit, and so would the producers. Would the minister care to make any comment at this time?

Mr. Harris: This has been a recurring problem for a number of years, and a great deal of consideration has been given to it by government departments and I think by every recognized farm organization. The hon. member himself admits that there are difficulties involved which so far have not been overcome, but that is not to say they might not be overcome some time. I think we all agree, at least those of us who live in the east do, that this is a most useful method of transporting grain to the east for feeding purposes. If there is any way we can improve the arrangement, of course we ought to do it. He knows as well as I do that there are those who do not think that direct shipment will be beneficial. It is a matter of judgment, and it is very difficult to say which is right or wrong. But under the present arrangements I think we provide most of the requirements of the east and, after all, perhaps that is the real purpose of the subsidy and also, of course, to dispose of excess stocks in the west. I assure him that the problem will continue to receive our consideration.

Mr. McBain: Is the subsidy paid on feed screenings as well?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. McBain: I suggest that a subsidy should not be paid to bring screenings from western Canada. The subsidy should be increased on better quality grain in order to bring more of that type of grain to eastern Ontario farmers.

Mr. Harris: I quite appreciate that, but it is paid on all grades of feed, and if my hon. friend does not want to buy screenings of course he does not have to.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): It was not my intention to speak on the item. I thought the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort had put the case very clearly. But I want to assure the house that to my knowledge I have never heard of anyone being against the shipment of feed to eastern Canada. As the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort points out, it is very beneficial to the western producer and to the feeder in eastern Canada. I have had many people in Ontario who are feeders come to me and say that often the type of feed they get is of very poor quality. If we had some method whereby the eastern feeder could get good quality feed from western Canada, I am sure the movement of feed grain from there would certainly increase. Then we could have a proper type of agreement between the western producer and the eastern feeder whereby we would have carload shipments in bulk so the eastern feeder would be assured of a better quality of feed.

At the present time the eastern feeder is complaining simply because on many occasions he has to buy inferior feed at very high prices. Certainly that is not conducive to the welfare of the western grain producer. Where the discrepancy comes in I do not know. I know that we grow a lot of fine feed, barley and oats, in western Canada. But many complaints come to us through members of parliament who are interested in this subject, indicating that the eastern feeder often gets very poor quality feed.

I support the suggestion of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort that the government should give serious consideration to trying to bring about bulk shipment from the producer in the west directly to the feeder in eastern Canada.

Mr. Bryson: I do not want to labour the matter at all, but I should like to ask a question for clarification. Is it a fact that if a feeder in eastern Canada applies to me as a producer I can ship him a carload of barley through the wheat board, provided I can supply that carload of barley and be within the limits of my quota? Is that substantially correct?

Mr. Gardiner: The wheat board has very definite regulations in addition to the legislation. The legislation sets out what it can do and what it is not able to do, and then there are regulations based on the legislation. The main difficulty in connection with shipment is the fact that the grain is pooled in the west and there has to be a price received for the grain that goes into the pool, which amount is afterwards divided among the farmers in the west. Therefore the wheat board takes the position that the grain first must be delivered to the elevator in order that the individual may get his advance payment from the elevator for his wheat or whatever it may be.

Then the grain has to be purchased at this end in a similar way. There is some difficulty in keeping track of a farmer's carload of grain, if he attempts to ship a carload of grain from the west to a farmer in the east, and giving the farmer in the east the same grain. But there is no difficulty in getting him another carload of grain out of the elevator, and when he takes it out he has to pay the price at which that grain is selling on that day. At the one end the farmer gets an advance payment and at the other end the farmer pays the price of the grain on that day. There is accounting involved all the way in between so that when you are making interim payments and final payments everyone gets what they are entitled to receive. For these reasons the wheat board has to be very careful just what does happen in between, and that makes it a little difficult.

Mr. Bryson: I can certainly appreciate the inconvenience that would be caused and the trouble the wheat board would be put to. However, there are specific regulations in connection with the shipment of seed grain from a grower to an individual or a plant. I wonder whether those same rules could not apply or similar machinery could not be set up in connection with feed grain.

Mr. Harris: I will give consideration to that.

541. To provide for quality premiums on high grade hog carcasses and administration costs—further amount required, $290,000.

Mr. Harkness: I presume the increase of $290,000 is due to the fact that there was a considerable underestimate made last year as to the number of A and B-1 hog carcasses which would be eligible for this premium. Can the minister tell us how many of the hogs covered by this item were grade A and how many were B-1? Can he also tell us whether the increase in the number of A and B-1 carcasses was due to an increase in the percentage of carcasses grading sufficiently high to receive the premium, or whether it was merely due to a general increase in the number of carcasses and not an increase in the percentage of the better carcasses?

Mr. Harris: I cannot answer the latter part of the question; but as to the former, hog marketings for the calendar year 1955 were 16½ per cent greater than in 1954, and there seems to be a similar increase continuing through 1956. That is why we are asking for an additional sum of money.

Mr. Harkness: Does the minister know how many are A and how many are B-1?

Mr. Harris: No.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Would the minister consider paying a higher premium for grade A hogs? We in the west have found lately that there is a tendency for our farmers to put lower grade hogs on the market. That is particularly noticeable as a result of the Toronto fair last year. I wonder whether any thought has been given to increasing the premium paid on grade A hogs.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. Harris: The hon. member will appreciate the fact that this is a matter of principle and policy which I think could be dealt with at length and with much greater satisfaction to my hon. friend on the main agricultural estimates for the coming year.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): I just wanted to bring it to the minister's attention.

Item agreed to.

Special—

542. Estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural prices support account to cover the net operating loss of the agricultural prices support board during the fiscal year 1955-56, including authority to credit to the account the net revenue received into the agricultural products board account from the sale of New Zealand meat received in exchange for beef shipped to the United Kingdom, $5,757,483.

Mr. Argue: Could we have an explanation of what this item is mainly for?

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Chairman. There are several items making up the total involved. They are as follows: 1953, butter, $1,001; 1954, butter, $5,317,596; 1954, shell eggs, $428,453; 1955, shell eggs, $45,427; 1952, canned pork, $4,747; 1955, potatoes, $1,000. There is a slight credit for apples and beef of about $40,000 to come off the total, leaving in the result the amount of the vote.

Mr. Argue: Was not the loss of $5,317,596 on 1954 butter in fact the whole loss paid out on 1954 butter? If my memory serves me correctly, the item in the estimates covering this matter was just a nominal item.

Mr. Harris: I think that is so.

Mr. Argue: I should like to make one observation. Some time ago the Minister of Agriculture put statistics on the record as to the production of butter in this country.

He showed that over as much as 20 years there has been little variation in the annual production of butter in the country, and that while some people may say the floor price on butter is leading to increased production, the statistics show that there is little in that statement.

I think it is true that members of all parties in the house support the government's floor price on butter. But time and time again you read in daily newspapers reports and editorials which suggest that the country is losing a huge sum of money on the floor price that is being paid for butter, and that by some means the producer is getting a huge hand-out while the consumer is being rooked.

I want to point out that butter production in 1954 was some 334 million pounds, which was worth approximately $200 million. In stabilizing the $200 million payment to the cream shippers and butter producers, and also to play an important part in the stabilization of the whole dairy industry and therefore to a substantial extent the stabilization of the whole agricultural industry, we were able to accomplish a great deal by the payment of what in my opinion is a nominal sum of $5,317,000 when related to the accomplishments of this program.

I do not think it would be in the interests of either the producer or the consumer that this policy be changed in the direction of reducing the floor. While on many occasions in the past I have quarrelled—and will no doubt continue to quarrel—with various aspects of the government's agricultural policy, I want to go on record as saying that in many respects the government's policy in relation to butter is a good one, and one the government might establish in other fields of agriculture.

Mr. Bryson: Would the minister repeat the figure in connection with pork products?

Mr. Harris: It was $4,747. It is carryover of accounts that have been long outstanding and that were finally settled.

Mr. Trainor: May I ask the minister what proportion of this item for butter is represented by the loss on the sale of butter to iron curtain countries?

Mr. Harris: I am afraid I have not that information available at the moment. I will be glad to provide it for my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian affairs branch—

Welfare of Indians—

544. Operation and maintenance—further amount required, $250,000.

Mr. Harkness: On looking at page 11 I note that this vote is for materials and supplies in the amount of an extra quarter of a million dollars. Can the minister give us some breakdown as to that item? I would be particularly interested to know whether this involves a considerable increase in what one might call relief payments, the issuance of rations and things of that sort, or whether it is mostly for materials of some other sort, whether construction materials or otherwise.

Mr. Harris: This item was largely for relief, as my hon. friend believes. Particularly in northern British Columbia and the prairie provinces the winter was not so good for the employment of Indians, the result being that we provided additional food, clothing and fuel and, for those who were physically handicapped, certain indigent payments as well. That is the reason for the increase.

Mr. Harkness: I am glad this money was supplied to those Indians, but I think the situation points up the fact that the government should be doing a great deal more to ensure that these people do not get into this position so they must be given relief in the form of rations and so on every year. Much better provision should be made for them so they can make a living for themselves on the reserves through their tribal activities, or by means of other employment. I know this is not the minister's department, so I shall leave the matter there and go into it further on the general estimates.

Mr. Harris: Thank you.

Mr. Leboe: I have been told that Indians of a different faith in other than a residential school are not supported by the grant. Suppose a Protestant school is operating and that a child who is of the Catholic faith wants to go there? I understand that no grant would be paid to that child of the other faith. Is that right?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, up until about 2½ years ago I had those details in my mind, but I do not carry them in my mind now. However, I would doubt very much that any child would not be properly cared for.

Mr. Leboe: Will the minister get the information for me?

Mr. Harris: I will.

Mr. Van Horne: Just about a week and a half ago a few members of the Micmac tribe from the Restigouche reserve, which is in Bonaventure county, were up here to Ottawa and saw several of the members from my province as well as members from various parts of Canada who were interested in Indian affairs. The gist of their complaint is that the Indian agents seem to take the attitude that they should force these people off the reserves to fend for themselves and make a living as best they can away from the reserves where they are no longer the responsibility of the government.

What happened was that several members of the Micmac tribe on the Restigouche reserve were forced to leave the country and go down to Texas or Florida and spend some months there during the winter. They took their families with them. Those children did not go to school. The Indians could not find a living down there. The Indian affairs department in the United States refused to help them because they were wards of the Canadian government. So then they limped home or made their way back to their reserves, and started the trek all over again one or two years later.

The complaint seems to be that the government has not taken a realistic enough approach to the conditions under which the Indians are obliged to live. It was mentioned, of course, that they had to get along on less than $30 a month when they were out of work. In my area, as you all know, there are about 6,000 people on unemployment insurance and another 4,000 who should be on unemployment insurance but who are not qualified. Then you have all these Indians who are placed in an almost impossible position in regard to obtaining work. There is no question about it that serious hardship exists on the Indian reserves in Restigouche and Madawaska counties and in the county of Bonaventure. I would certainly ask that something be done immediately in order to try to help these people out a little bit more realistically.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister in a position to say whether this item covers the novel departure in policy on the part of the Indian affairs department, whereby Indians are to be given training in identifying minerals and encouraged to engage in the search for metals? Personally I have been critical on many occasions with regard to the administration of the Indian affairs department. I feel that in too great a measure there is bureaucratic control which in too many cases denies justice and right to the Indian population resident on the reserves. At the same time I commend the government for the inauguration of this novel program to increase Indian opportunities and make it possible for the Indian to earn his way.

I do not know who was responsible for the development of the plan, but certainly it is going to encourage Indians to act on their own initiative after having received the training which they are to receive in the identification of some 50 different varieties of rock in which may be expected to reside the minerals that are identified to those who take the classes. It is a step in the right direction, and one that has infinite possibilities for exploration in the northern parts of Canada. It has in it the beginning of a system of education which will enable Indians to make their way to a greater degree than ever before.

I should like the minister to give the house and the country some idea of the inauguration of this plan. Certainly it is the first time in my experience with that department that there has been commenced a system which, now that it has been adopted, seems to be the most obvious scheme to encourage the Indians in self-assistance that has ever been advanced.

Mr. Harris: Before the hon. member came in, Mr. Chairman, I had explained that this item did not cover that at all. This item is altogether for relief, so that actually what he has mentioned does not come within it. At the same time, I should tell my hon. friend that my successor in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration is making a number of changes, particularly in the field the hon. member has mentioned, and I am sure he is going to discuss them on the main estimates whenever they are reached during the session.

Mr. Van Horne: Can the minister inform me what part of this amount would be allocated to the Restigouche reserve in New Brunswick?

Mr. Harris: No, this is a general vote to make up the balance required in addition to the main estimates. I will draw my colleague's attention to the hon. member's request, and he will receive full information about that particular reserve.

Mr. Campbell: Has the minister any information, or has the government come to any decision about prohibiting the importation of peyote buttons. There have been religious organizations formed in my part of the country within the last year or two, and during what you might call religious celebrations these organizations have been importing from Mexico and the southern states what they call peyote buttons, that is a part of the cactus plant. While it is not classified as a narcotic, it has somewhat the same effect. These people all get around in a big circle, chew these buttons for a while and then become sick. After they become sick they are supposed to vomit up their sins. The next procedure is that they again chew these buttons but the reaction is different the second time. They go into a deep sleep which I am told lasts for 20 to 24 hours, and in that sleep they have beautiful dreams.

Is the government considering doing anything to prevent the importation of these buttons into Canada, because they are a form of narcotic and they are demoralizing to anyone who uses them.

Mr. Harris: I am not familiar with the problem, sir, but I will make inquiries.

Mr. Bryson: I presume this item is strictly a relief measure. I have had a great many letters from people reporting to me about three reservations in particular where the Indians are suffering real distress. I was wondering how the money is administered.

Who informs the department? Is it through the Indian agents? I wonder if we could have put on Hansard some time a table showing the Indian reservations or agencies to which money has been allocated under this vote?

Mr. Harris: Yes. I would tell my hon. friend that I do recall having put a similar statement on the record, I think in the year 1952, and he can compare it with the one he will get in a few days.

Mr. Castleden: This is an item for about a quarter of a million dollars, and apparently is to be spent on relief for Indians who find themselves in difficulties. As we all know, Canada suffered a very severe winter this year and the Indians on a good many reservations, as the minister knows, have a great deal of difficulty in making a living. In many cases the reservations are on barren land and the opportunity of obtaining work in that particular area is not very great. In the province from which I come the Indians have been able to supplement their allowance by an increased catch of fur. The conservation program has contributed to this increase. But there are parts of northern Ontario and northern Manitoba, I believe, where special assistance should be given.

I was wondering whether the minister has any information as to the reservations in northern Ontario which need help. I know there was one not very far north of the city of Ottawa, near Maniwaki, where conditions were reported to be very severe. A few years ago the Indian affairs committee had some reports of serious suffering as a result of malnutrition because reservations were in an uneconomic position. I suggest to the minister that where Indians are in the position that they cannot make a living out of the resources on a particular reservation, it would be much better for the Indians and for the people of Canada to move those people to land upon which it was easier for them to make a living.

I was wondering if the minister had any information as to the particular reserves where this extra amount is required. I notice the estimates for this year concerning the welfare of Indians show an amount of $2,638,000, and the amount for 1955-56 was $2,665,000. Is the minister in a position to give us any figures or any details on the particular reservations where extra assistance is required in the way of relief?

Mr. Harris: When the item was called, Mr. Chairman, I explained that the estimate made last year was adequate except for the fact that there were severe winter conditions in British Columbia and the northern prairies, and that it was because of the extra amounts paid in those areas we are now asking for this vote. I am not in a position to say what particular reservations ran short of money or required more relief, but it was in those general areas that we found we did not have enough money and we are now providing it.

Mr. Bryce: Could we have just what has been paid out?

Mr. Harris: Yes, I will get that.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): From what the minister said I would judge that none of this money is going into reservations in Ontario?

Mr. Harris: No. The point is that there is a big vote of some million and a half dollars for relief and that goes to the Indians wherever it may be required, but because there was an extra demand we did not expect in the western part of Canada, we ran short of money.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to tell the minister that I have a couple of reservations in my riding. I believe it would be wise, in order to help the Indians on those reservations, if the department were to put a tractor on these lands so the Indians would be able to have their fields plowed, harrowed and seeded. There are no horses now, so the Indians have to take jobs in Peterborough, which is some miles away, in order to make a living, and then get back to the reservation at night.

Mr. Harris: I will give consideration to that.

Mr. Bryce: I asked the minister whether he would be able to get information as to what was spent in Manitoba.

Mr. Harris: Right.

Mr. Bryce: They are awfully hard up there.

Mr. Harris: I will get it.

Item agreed to.

Indian affairs branch—
Education—

545. Administration, operation and maintenance—further amount required, $854,000.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, this and the following item are both for educational purposes for the Indians. It makes quite a considerable increase, over $1 million, particularly as related to the total in last year's estimates. Therefore it would appear that either there was a very serious error made in making up the main estimates last year, or there has been a change in policy. I notice particularly that there is an increase of $140,000 for tuition and maintenance of Indian children in non-Indian and joint schools. I would take it from this that there has been a very considerable increase in the attendance of children at these non-Indian and joint schools.

I am very glad to see that. Perhaps nothing will do more to break down the barrier between the Indians and the rest of the population than to have the Indian children attending the same schools as the neighbouring white children. But in addition to that I see that under residential schools there are per capita grants of $668,000. As I said, it would seem either that a serious error was made in estimating last year, or there has been a change in policy. Can the minister give us any information in regard to these particular items?

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member has correctly interpreted the facts on the first item he mentioned, namely that there has been an increase in the number of Indian children attending non-Indian schools. I think we all are, as he is, very happy that that is so.

With respect to the residential school item, this amount arises because of a group of claims which were made under these items which came in, as a matter of fact, in March of the previous fiscal year but were not actually paid within the fiscal year 1954-55 and are now being paid because they have been audited and approved in the meantime. It does not mean a change in policy, nor does it mean a particularly substantial change in the numbers attending residential schools.

Mr. Harkness: On that very point, I presume what it does mean is that the religious institutions running the residential schools have been out this $668,000 for a year or more owing to this mix-up that occurred. Is that so?

Mr. Harris: Not entirely. There was an underestimation, but the amount they have been out for the 12 months has been a very large part of the $668,000.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask the minister what is the increase provided in this $140,000 for Indians going to non-Indian and joint schools? How many more children are going than were estimated the year before would be going?

Mr. Harris: I have not the details, but I will get them.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to know that there is an additional vote here for the administration, operation and maintenance of the schools on the reserves. I do not intend to make any extended remarks at this time, but I am going to say to this government that any policy designed to increase the educational facilities for Indians throughout the reserves in Canada so they will have a higher education and be able to fit into various forms of employment will be all to the good. Unless we do have an over-all policy under which these people may leave the reserves and be integrated into the economy of this country, we shall be heading into serious trouble.

On my own little reserve at White Bear we have about 600 Indians. The children are sent to Brandon; the girls take home economics and other types of education, and then come back on the reserves. The young men take courses in agriculture and come back and conform to the reserve type of living. If the situation existing on this reserve is typical of the reserves throughout Canada, then this government is going to have to take a very serious look at the whole Indian population of Canada and do something to bring about equity and fairness for these people, rather than merely provide a vote for welfare which is on the basis of a relief program. We have to look at this thing so these people will have a fair chance as citizens of Canada.

No more disgraceful situation exists in Canada, in my opinion, than the treatment accorded to the Indian population of this country. In my section, as I say, we have almost 600 Indians. Some of the young men are educated; some of them have the ability to go out and earn their own living. The situation is growing increasingly worse. They are getting into trouble with the law and with the white population there. They see other classes of citizens with a higher standard of living; they see young white people driving cars, and they are relegated to an impoverished type of living. I for one want to say in the most emphatic way that it is a disgraceful situation. When the main estimates come down I hope that we shall see that the government is taking a step forward in providing something better for this class of Canadian citizen.

Mr. Castleden: Will the minister permit me to revert to item 544, for a moment, which has to do with relief? It was drawn to my attention recently by one of the Indian leaders in Saskatchewan by the name of John Tootoosis that a lady by the name of Mrs. Katherine Thompson, of Assiniboine reserve No. 76, of Sintaluta, Saskatchewan, a widow with three children, had to enter a sanatorium on account of a tuberculosis infection. After some cure was thought to have been accomplished she went out to work to maintain her children, but the housing conditions were bad and she recently had to go back into the sanatorium. Her plea is that something be done to provide some form of housing and food for her children while she is away and when she comes back, so that there will not be a relapse. I believe it is a case of direct relief which I think should be drawn to the attention of the government. I wonder whether the minister would do that?

Mr. Harris: I will, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Regier: I notice in the details of this supplementary grant provision for textbooks and school supplies to the amount of $24,000. The original grant was $65,000. I think the minister will agree that $24,000 in comparison with an original estimate of $65,000 is rather a large supplementary grant. Has there been a change in policy? Are textbooks now being offered to Indians free of charge that originally were not offered, or was it only a case of very bad guesswork on the part of some official?

Mr. Harris: No, I think it is a case of providing more text books rather than a guess.

Mr. Bryson: In connection with the educational system now carried on, does the federal government have a separate arrangement with each of the provinces, or is there a general policy regarding Indian children going to schools being supported within the boundaries of provinces? Are separate arrangements made, or is there an over-all policy?

Mr. Harris: With respect to what schools?

Mr. Bryson: Provincial schools.

Mr. Harris: If I understand my hon. friend correctly, the arrangements which are made for the admission of Indians to non-Indian schools are made directly with the school section involved, but of course with the consent and knowledge of the provincial department.

Mr. Brooks: I notice that most of the schools are lower grade schools.

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. Brooks: If an Indian child wishes to take higher education in a high school or an advanced school, is provision made for him to go to such a school?

Mr. Harris: Yes; my recollection is that we have some form of assistance even up to and including university.

Mr. Castleden: I notice that the largest part of this item is an increased per capita grant to residential schools. Could the minister inform us whether that is an increase in the per capita grant and if that is why the increase is required, or if it is because there has been an increase in the school population?

Mr. Harris: I believe I explained that to the hon. member for Calgary North. This is to catch up on payments we agreed to make to residential schools but which were not made at the end of the last fiscal year simply because the accounts came in during March of that year and therefore they were settled this year. It does not represent an increase in numbers or a change in policy. It means we have had some large claims come in at the same time.

Mr. Castleden: What was the cause of the claim? Did you not have sufficient money to pay the per capita grants?

Mr. Harris: No. A further study was made of the residential school costs. This is an adjustment, having in mind the cost of education in the various schools.

Mr. Castleden: What is the per capita cost per day or per term?

Mr. Harris: It varies from school to school. I would have to get the details for my hon. friend.

Mr. McIvor: I want to say a word in favour of two schools about which I know something. I visited Maniwaki for ten years. I found the school there was manned by a young man and his wife from Fort William, which meant that the school was well manned by first-class teachers. We have two schools at Fort William, at Chippewa or Squaw Bay, one for beginners and one for more advanced pupils. These teachers were qualified to occupy positions in the public school system before they went there. They were highly competent.

Mr. Castleden: Is that a residential school or is it a day school?

Mr. McIvor: They are both residential schools.

Mr. Brooks: I wonder if later on, perhaps when the main estimates are taken up, the minister could tell us the number of Indian children who are attending high school and the number who are attending university. Perhaps he could also tell us how they are being integrated into the life of the country. We heard this afternoon that they come to these schools and get no advantage. It would be interesting to know what advantages are given to them.

Mr. Harris: Yes. The annual report of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, Indian branch, sets out in detail the number of Indian children attending all grades of school from primary kindergarten to university. I am sure that in addition the minister responsible will speak of the problem my hon. friend has mentioned, in view of the other remarks.

Mr. Regier: After listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Fort William I cannot remain silent. I must inform the minister that there is something very much wrong with our system of Indian education in Canada. You can go to all the major urban centres of Canada and find that the Indian is finding a problem in acclimatizing himself to our present-day social life and economic life. I think the statement made by the hon. member for Fort William should not be taken by the minister as a general expression of satisfaction with the work our Indian schools are doing.

I can agree that they are manned by able teachers. However, at a very early date the department should attempt to find out for itself why, in spite of the efforts made by religious organizations, the Indian affairs branch of the department and the provincial departments of education, we are faced with this serious social and economic problem. It is a problem which is particularly noticeable in Vancouver by anyone who deals with the general public in that city. I feel that our method of educating the Indian population leaves much to be desired.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I believe I made a mistake. I was asked if the schools I referred to were residential schools. The teachers are residential but the schools are run like ordinary public schools and they are first class, no matter what anyone else says.

Item agreed to.

Indian affairs branch—

546. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $162,000.

Mr. Dinsdale: We are all interested, Mr. Chairman, in the emphasis on the education of our Indian population. I understand it is part of the program of attempting to integrate our Canadian Indian population into the general population.

One or two comments have been made on the general educational system. Under this item I notice that the emphasis seems to be on the construction of residential schools rather than day schools. The figure for day schools is $33,000 and the figure for residential schools is $162,000. In going back to the main estimates I notice there is a figure of something like $2 million which has been earmarked for the construction of residential schools. My understanding is that the new emphasis in the education of our Indian population is on the construction of day schools on the reserves, rather than on taking the children away from the reserves to attend residential schools. The former policy will have the effect of transforming the general life on the reserve in preparation for the emancipation of the Indian from the reserve.

Could the minister indicate whether there is a large school construction program still going on in the field of residential schools?

Mr. Harris: The figures for the last fiscal year are roughly $2 million for day schools and $1,900,000 for residential schools. It is an accident that the balance should be one way one year and another way another year. The whole emphasis since the end of the war has been on the construction of day schools, and that emphasis has not been displaced by anything that has occurred during the past year. In the particular item we are discussing, of course, it happens that certain residential schools got along further with their work and we required more money to pay our bills; but as I pointed out at the beginning of the discussion, this is merely to pay money on schools which were already approved by parliament when the estimates were passed last year.

I do not intend to discourage my hon. friend, but if he wants to debate the principle of the construction of day schools as opposed to the construction of residential schools, I am sure he could do it to his satisfaction and the satisfaction of the public more effectively when he has the responsible minister here to answer. These sums are just clean-up items for buildings that have gone along closer to construction, and for which we need extra money to pay the bills.

Mr. Castleden: Do these relate to any particular schools?

Mr. Harris: I can give you the names of three or four where the construction work was completed ahead of time and for which extra money is needed.

Mr. Castleden: It is not a case of altering the contracts?

Mr. Harris: No.

Mr. Castleden: I suppose we could obtain copies of the contracts or agreements by asking for a notice of motion for the production of papers?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

An hon. Member: Careful.

Mr. Knowles: "Them days is gone forever."

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Chairman, in an area where a great many Indians are living but where there is no reserve, and where the Indians attend schools operated by the provincial department of education, is there a sharing of costs by this department?

Mr. Harris: Perhaps I misunderstood my hon. friend earlier. That is a matter which I think my hon. friend should address to the minister in charge on the main estimates.

Item agreed to.

National Gallery of Canada—

547. Administration, operation and maintenance, including industrial design division—further amount required, $29,600.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I have a question I should like to direct to the minister. Was any commission paid on the transaction involving the purchase of paintings from His Highness the Prince of Liechtenstein? The minister nods assent; I presume it was 5 per cent?

Mr. Harris: No, it is not 5 per cent. It is 5 per cent on the first $400,000; 4 per cent on the next $200,000; 3 per cent on the next $200,000 and 2 per cent on the balance. It totals $35,000.

Mr. Nesbitt: I can understand why a commission would be paid to a broker on the first deal, as it might be a question of getting the parties together. As I recall, the first purchase of pictures amounted to about $500,000, but this second purchase amounted to over $885,000. It seems strange to me that it would be necessary to go through a broker on the second occasion and pay a substantial brokerage fee of $35,000.

I recall asking this question a year or so ago, and I believe the minister in question said it was the custom of the trade to act through a broker. It seems strange to me that this is necessary on the second transaction. Relations had been established and the first deal transacted. More than that, as I have heard from many sides, we have a most capable president of the national gallery in the person of Mr. Jarvis. Surely he would be capable of judging the value of these pictures, and possibly making a trip to see the Prince of Liechtenstein. It seems to me that this amount of commission is rather unnecessary.

There may be an explanation, but it seems to me that this is an inordinate amount. I understand the commission in this case is $35,000 and last time the commission was $25,000, which makes a total of $60,000. A return was made to the hon. member for Prince Albert which indicated that the amount spent in the last ten years by the national gallery on Canadian paintings was about $88,000. In other words the total of these commissions was close to the amount spent on Canadian paintings during the last ten years. In that same period of ten years approximately $2,335,000 was spent in European paintings. I would be interested in knowing not only the amount that was spent but the number of European paintings that were purchased during this period, as well as the number of Canadian paintings purchased.

It seems to me that possibly the policy of the gallery might be changed. European galleries like the Louvre or the Tate gallery were able to buy paintings by Rembrandt, Rubens and so on at relatively low prices. It was like buying penny stocks, because during the years their values appreciated. What the Canadian national gallery is attempting to do at the present time could be compared with buying stocks at peak prices. With the restrictions that exist on the export of art objects from Europe it is almost impossible for the national gallery of Canada to hope to acquire collections equal to those of European galleries.

I think this policy might be looked into, and perhaps the gallery could buy greater numbers of Canadian, Mexican, American and British paintings at relatively low prices. I am sure Mr. Jarvis could give advice on these purchases. The works of many modern artists are going to be valuable in the future, and the national gallery should be getting together a collection, not just for the present but for a hundred years or more in the future. I submit they should adopt a policy of buying paintings by good Canadian, United States, British, Mexican and European artists of the modern school. These pictures would appreciate in value in the future, and we would thus have a fine collection. At the present time we cannot hope to have a large collection of paintings by the great masters of the past.

It seems to me that there is little value in trying to ape the great European galleries. The four pictures in question being purchased at this time consist of a famous painting by Rubens, one by Martini who was I believe an early Italian painter, and two by an eighteenth century French painter named Chardin. I should like to find out exactly what amount was paid for each of these pictures, and also if the national gallery is going to pursue this policy of acquiring expensive works by old masters. It seems to me that if that is to be done they might stress quality a little more than quantity. I am not suggesting that works by Martini and Chardin are not valuable, but they are relatively unknown artists as compared with men like Rembrandt, Leonardo da Vinci, Rubens and so on.

The hon. member for St. Paul's tells me that the Prince of Liechtenstein has a painting in his collection by Leonardo da Vinci which is presently for sale. I understand the price is rather high, being somewhat over $1 million, but there are no paintings by this artist in North America. If the government is going to pursue this policy of acquiring expensive works by old masters it might be a good idea if they purchased fewer of the works by less well known painters and bought one or two really good ones. They should have considered purchasing this particular painting by da Vinci.

I repeat that commissions such as this to some broker are excessive. I am quite sure these paintings could be purchased in another way. There should be a complete revision of this policy of purchasing a smattering of old works instead of good modern paintings which no doubt would have a considerable value in the future. If we are going to buy expensive works by old masters let us buy some really good ones, rather than those by artists who are not so well known.

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): I should like to say something on this item, but I do not want to hold up the committee. If the minister can say on behalf of his colleague that we will have an opportunity to discuss item No. 548 when we come to the main estimates I would be ready to expedite the proceedings of the house, but I do want to say something on this particular item.

Progress reported.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We will continue with this business tomorrow.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

ATOMIC REACTOR—INDIA

Question No. 250—Mr. Thatcher:

1. Has Canada given, or is she planning to give an atomic reactor to India?
2. If so, (a) what is the purpose of the gift; (b) what is the total cost involved; (c) did India make any request for such a gift?

Answer by: Mr. Pearson:

1. Yes. Canada is providing an NRX experimental and research atomic reactor to India under the Colombo plan. This proposal was announced in an exchange of messages between Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Nehru last year and it is expected that an announcement will be made shortly about the signature of an intergovernmental agreement which will set out the details of this project. Preliminary construction work at the site has already begun and officials from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited are in close consultation with the Indian department of atomic energy.

2. (a) The NRX reactor which has served Canada so well in its research program for the peaceful uses of atomic energy will form part of a new atomic research centre which India is creating near Bombay. In addition to the Indian scientists who will use the facilities of the reactor the Indian government has agreed that subject to their approval the reactor will also be available for use by foreign scientists including those from other Colombo plan countries in the area.

(b) The estimated total cost of this project is roughly $14 million. In accordance with normal Colombo plan practices, Canada will finance the external costs of the reactor, estimated at $7·5 million. The balance, which are local costs, will be met by the Indian government. It is possible that counterpart funds arising out of earlier Canadian grants to India may be used by the Indians to cover part of the local costs. While India will provide most of the labour, the equipment will be manufactured in Canada and installed under the supervision of Canadian engineers and scientists. Canada has also agreed that this reactor will be financed over the next two or three years by special Colombo plan funds which will be supplementary to India's regular annual allocations; part of the increase in the Colombo plan contribution which parliament will be asked to approve for 1956-57 will be used for this purpose.

(c) The Canadian government was aware of India's desire to improve and increase the facilities which it had at its disposal for research in the peaceful uses of atomic energy. We knew in fact that India was making inquiries to several sources with a view to obtaining a research reactor. As a result of the close contacts which have been established between Canadian and Indian scientists it was realized that an NRX type reactor would make an extremely valuable contribution to India's research program as well as to scientists in the whole Colombo plan area.

T.B. MORTALITY STATISTICS

Question No. 298—Mr. Hardie:

What has been the reduction in the last 10 years in the number of deaths from tuberculosis in Canada: (a) among the Indian and Eskimo population; (b) among the white population?

Answer by: Mr. Martin:

The death rate from tuberculosis per 100,000 of the population of Canada has dropped during the past 10 years from 46·0 to 10·3 in 1954—1955 statistics are not yet available—or approximately 80 per cent.

(a) Among the Indian population the rate has dropped 90 per cent from 565·7 deaths per population to 60·2.

Among the Eskimo population of the Yukon and Northwest Territories the rate has dropped 56 per cent from 568·4 deaths per 100,000 population to 252·5.

(b) Among the white population the rate has dropped 75 per cent from 40·7 deaths per 100,000 population to 9·8.

BUTTER IMPORTS

Question No. 304—Mr. Holowach:

1. Has Canada imported any butter from New Zealand or elsewhere since January, 1954?
2. If so, how many pounds of butter were imported into Canada?
3. Who were the importing companies and at what price was the commodity purchased?

Answer by: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

1. Yes.

2. Imports of butter by countries, calendar years 1954 and 1955:

	Calendar year 1954		Calendar year 1955
Country	Lb.	Value	Lb.	Value
United Kingdom	2,749	$1,100	4,999	$2,079
United States ..	83	53	6,572	4,015
Totals	2,832	$1,153	11,571	$6,094

3. Section 15 of the Statistics Act precludes the disclosure of information relating to private business.

Questions

DORCHESTER PENITENTIARY, N.B.—EMPLOYEES

Question No. 307—Mr. Murphy (Westmorland):

1. How many employees are there at the present time at the Dorchester penitentiary in New Brunswick?
2. How many new employees were taken on in each of the years 1952 to 1955, inclusive?

Answer by: Mr. Garson:

1. At February 29, 1956—200.
2. Fiscal year 1952-53, 10; Fiscal year 1953-54, 18; Fiscal year 1954-55, 16; Fiscal year 1955-56, 30. (To February 29, 1956).

C.N.R. CONSTRUCTION, ATLANTIC DIVISION

Question No. 309—Mr. Murphy (Westmorland):

1. How many contractors carried out maintenance of way or the building or the rebuilding of roadbeds or right of way and associated work for the Canadian National Railways in the Atlantic division, during the year 1955?
2. How many men were employed by the contractors to do this work?
3. How many Canadian National Railways employees were employed in the Atlantic division doing similar work during 1955?

Answer by: Mr. Marler:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. One.
2. The average number of men employed by the contractor from July to December was 437.
3. The average number of men employed by the Canadian National Railways was as follows: April to July 1955, 1,315 regular, 557 extra; July to December 1955, 1,315 regular, 722 extra.

C.N.R. RAILWAY CAR PURCHASES

Question No. 310—Mr. Argue:

What are the numbers, types and prices of railway cars, if any, purchased by Canadian National Railways during (a) 1950; (b) 1951; (c) 1952; (d) 1953, from (i) Canadian Car and Foundry; (ii) National Steel Car Company?

Answer by: Mr. Marler:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

(a) (i) Canadian Car and Foundry Company, Ltd.—490 50-ton flat cars; 5 135-ton depressed centre flat cars; 20 sleeping cars; 25 first class coaches; 3 baggage cars (Nfld.).

(ii) National Steel Car Corporation, Ltd.—50 baggage cars; 100 70-ton longitudinal hopper cars.

NATIONAL GALLERY—PURCHASE OF LIECHTENSTEIN PAINTINGS

Question No. 332—Mr. Murphy (Lambton West):

1. When the paintings of the Prince of Liechtenstein were obtained for the national art gallery, were they obtained directly from the Prince of Liechtenstein or were they obtained through some agent, broker or dealer?
2. What was the amount paid for the picture?
3. Did the federal government pay a commission for their purchase? If so, how much?
4. If the pictures were obtained through a dealer, agent or broker, or anyone other than the Prince of Liechtenstein, who was that dealer, agent or broker?

He said: I wonder if I might take advantage of this opportunity to change a word in the second part of question No. 332. I should like to change the word "the" before "picture". It should be "each" picture. I ask that that correction be made so there will be no misunderstanding.

Mr. Speaker: Do I take it that this is considered by the hon. member as being a clerical error?

Mr. Murphy (Lambton West): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The correction will be made accordingly.

ASSISTANCE FUND EXPENDITURES

Question No. 262—Mr. Brooks:

1. How much money has been spent under assistance fund (W.V.A.) in each of the provinces up to January 1, 1956?
2. What amount is still remaining in the fund?

Questions

He said: With reference to question No. 262 standing in my name, I should like to ask that the second part be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

APPENDIX

LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Similar letters sent to the premiers of all the provinces. The letter to the premier of Quebec was in the French language.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER CANADA

Ottawa, March 19, 1956.

The Honourable Leslie M. Frost,
Premier of Ontario,
Toronto, Ontario.

My dear Premier:

Since our meeting on March 9, my colleagues and I have given further consideration to the principal points raised there. A further review of our prospective budgetary position during the period contemplated has confirmed our view that substantially larger payments to the provincial governments, or greater tax abatements in those provinces where the provincial governments prefer to levy their own taxes in the three fields under discussion would likely require the federal government to find additional revenues from other sources in order to make such payments and still maintain a sound federal budget. Federal taxation is already at a high level and we do not believe that the interest of this country would be best served by further increase of federal taxes for provincial puposes.

Several premiers have referred to the possible inadequacy of our proposed stabilization payments. It was suggested that the "floor" should be, not 90 per cent, but 100 per cent of the average of the two preceding years. There was also some criticism that under certain circumstances the new formula might yield lower revenues than the existing pattern of rental agreements upon which our proposals are designed to be an improvement.

We attach considerable importance to the stabilization feature of these proposals and consider they will be of great value should our present prosperity falter in any significant measure.

On further consideration, therefore, we are prepared to meet these provincial suggestions on this feature to a substantial extent. We do not think it would be wise or proper to give a guarantee of 100 per cent, because there is inevitably some fluctuation from year to year in corporation profits taxes and succession duties. We are prepared, however, to amend our proposal respecting stabilization payments by substituting "95 per cent" for "90 per cent" in numbered paragraph 2 (b) of my letter of January 6. We are also prepared to add as a new subparagraph (c) immediately after 2 (b) "the tax rental that would have been paid or available to the provincial government in that year had the tax rental system of 1952-57 been continued without change". This last provision will make abundantly clear that no province can under any circumstances suffer financially by the change from the present to the new system.

In the course of his statement relating to possible tax collection agreements, the Minister of Finance said that the fee we had in mind was 2 per cent. This was an approximate figure based upon the ratio of the expenses of the income tax division of the Department of National Revenue to the total revenue collected by that division, adjusted for such items of cost as office accommodation, etc., which are borne elsewhere in our accounts, and with a further allowance to cover the costs of altering our administrative processes as the result of the requirements of collection agreements. It is, of course, recognized that it costs less per $100 of revenue to collect corporate income tax than personal income tax, and accordingly the appropriate charge might well vary in the different tax fields.

If your government is interested in a collection agreement, our technical officials will be glad to confer with yours to ascertain as accurately as possible what those costs would be. As I said at our meeting, we have no intention of making a profit out of collection agreements, but we would expect to recover the additional costs to the federal treasury which they involve.

We are preparing now legislation to place before parliament, which would authorize us to implement the proposals which this government has made and which have been amended in various respects following consultation with the provincial governments. We believe that under such legislation it will be possible for us to introduce a new organization of federal-provincial fiscal relations which will retain many of the best features of the tax rental system developed in the past, while providing a new flexibility in provincial finance appropriate to the nature of the period to which we all look forward.

Reference will be made to these matters by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech on Tuesday evening, and I propose to table a copy of this letter on Wednesday.

Yours sincerely,
LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFERENCE OF CERTAIN PETITIONS TO COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston) moved:

That the petitions for private bills of Canadian Pacific Railway Company and of Richard Gerald MacIsaac and others for an act to incorporate the Albion Insurance Company, together with the clerk of petitions' reports thereon of March 20 and 21, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders for such recommendations as may be deemed advisable.

Motion agreed to.

BUTTER

CONTINUATION OF FLOOR PRICE OF 58 CENTS TO APRIL 30, 1958

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in view of the discussions which have taken place and the fact that many hon. members will be going home to their constituencies shortly, I thought I should give them a favourable message to take along with them. We have decided to continue the 58-cent floor price for butter on the same basis as throughout the present year until the 30th day of April, 1958.

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): May I ask the minister whether he has given any further consideration to discontinuing the subsidy to hospitals and other institutions as he mentioned earlier in the session?

Mr. Gardiner: The question, Mr. Speaker, is as to whether any further consideration has been given to whether or not we would continue to supply butter to institutions at lower prices. We are still continuing to do so and no final decision has been made with regard to what will be done in the future.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

INQUIRY AS TO DESIGN OF PROPOSED CENTENNIAL STAMP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the British Columbia centennial committee suggested any design for the proposed stamp to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the founding of British Columbia? If not, would the minister welcome the same?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): In answer to my hon. friend's question I would say we have had considerable correspondence with the British Columbia centennial celebration committee and it is hoped that the committee will provide the department with some material which could be used as a basis for a commemorative stamp.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIA—REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF AIRFIELDS ON ICE FLOES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Are any Russian airfields established on ice floes and presently in Canadian Arctic waters, known as severnyi-polyus No. 6 and severnyi-polyus No. 4?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I shall have to take my hon. friend's question as notice and look into the matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO BASIS OF PROPOSED SALARY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister inform the house whether the proposed civil service salary increases will be on a percentage basis or will they be on a basis fairer to those in the lower and middle salary brackets?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I think the announcement, when it is made, will indicate the basis on which it is made.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

D.E.W. LINE—OPPORTUNITY FOR CANADIAN CONTRACTORS TO TENDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production? Were any Canadian contractors given an opportunity to provide personnel to man and operate this D.E.W. line located in Canada?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): Canadian contractors were invited to tender and at least two Canadian contractors did tender. Unfortunately their tenders were out of line with the tender that was finally accepted. I may say our Department of Defence Production has been in constant touch with the United States department of defence, and with the successful contractor. We have reason to believe that at least 80 per cent of the personnel employed on the section of the D.E.W. line within Canada will be of Canadian citizenship, and we also have every reason to believe a fair number of Eskimos and Indians resident in the area will be employed on the line. I think that when the situation can be put before the house in some detail, hon. members will not be disappointed at the extent of Canadian participation in the plans for operation of the D.E.W. line.

Mr. Drew: Does the minister suggest that Indians and Eskimos are going to take part in the manning and operation of the D.E.W. line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes. There is certain work in connection with the manning which they are capable of performing, and I understand that a study of the situation has indicated there will be opportunities for employment for Indians and Eskimos to a limited extent.

Mr. Hees: Could the minister advise the names of the unsuccessful Canadian contractors?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It has never been the custom to mention the names of unsuccessful contractors. The successful contractor was the Federal Electric Company of the United States.

TRADE

BACON—SUGGESTED ATTEMPT TO NEGOTIATE CONTRACT WITH UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I am sorry I have not given him notice. Is the minister's department attempting to negotiate a bacon contract with the government of the United Kingdom?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

B—National Gallery of Canada—

548. Payment to the national gallery purchase account for the purpose of acquiring works of art in conformity with section 8 of the National Gallery Act—further amount required, $885,000.

The Chairman: Shall this resolution carry?

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, further to some remarks I made on this item yesterday regarding the purchase of these paintings from the Prince of Liechtenstein, there are one or two further questions I should like to place before the minister, and I hope to get some answers. This is a very extensive item indeed for the purchase of paintings. We have heard that in the past deception has been going on in the purchase of paintings. For instance, it is a well known story that the late lamented Hermann Goering was properly swindled in the purchase of paintings once by a very great expert reproducer of old masters. I am not suggesting that the paintings of the Prince of Liechtenstein are in that class, but I would like to know how many experts, if any, examined this collection to make sure that they are what they are supposed to be. That is something that is well worth looking into. Did Mr. Jarvis, the director of the national gallery, see these pictures, or did the agent of the broker through whom they were bought examine them? Just who did examine these pictures? That is information the committee is entitled to. In addition to that, would the minister give us the name of the firm of brokers through whom those pictures were purchased?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, the brokers were Agnew and Sons Limited, London, England.

As to the former question, my recollection is that the prince's collection of paintings is probably as well authenticated as almost any, in that there have been records of the paintings published over several hundred years, and that in questioning the background there is less chance of that occurring under these circumstances than would be if there were no record kept for some considerable time.

As to the number of experts who examined these paintings, I must say that I have not the information; but I do know that long before the current series of purchases began three or four years ago, the prince's collection had been examined not only by experts on behalf of the national gallery but by the director of the national gallery himself on more than one occasion and at a time when probably it was not in their minds that we would be purchasing some of the paintings. However, on the main estimates I think the minister will give my hon. friend full details as to the steps taken to ensure that there is no mistake made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to follow up that question. Is it the purpose of the trustees of the national gallery to endeavour to the utmost to encourage the development and expansion of Canadian art? I ask this question because when I look at the expenditures that have been made since 1945 it is apparent that for every $22 spent on pictures painted elsewhere than in Canada, $1 is spent on Canadian paintings. I feel that a larger percentage of the expenditures should be directed to the encouragement of Canadian art. Canadian artists have a very difficult time to make their way. While they are impelled by their art, none the less they have to make a livelihood. When they have paintings that are worthy of the national gallery as being representative of Canada, indeed representative of Canadian nationalism, I feel that more encouragement should be given to them than has been given heretofore. If we are to build here in Ottawa a great national shrine, one that will memorialize our achievements, I feel that to a greater extent than ever before there must be as a target on the part of those charged with transforming Ottawa into the city beautiful, the national capital, a greater emphasis on things Canadian.

We have many French Canadian artists whose work is directed to the perpetuation of the life of the areas occupied in the main by those of French origin.

We have an important artist who comes from the province of Saskatchewan whose name is Henderson, a man who was laughed at when he first started to paint the barrenness of Saskatchewan. That was the view of those with a classically artistic turn of mind. He was able to perpetuate in art something of the spirit of Saskatchewan which to those who live in other provinces is difficult to discern on a visit there. He caught this spirit very imaginatively. It is the same with artists in other parts of this country. Another example is Miss Emily Carr whose art made her famous in her lifetime. I believe her work will live as representative of the generation in which she participated in the artistic life of this country.

With all due regard to the benefits that flow from viewing art for art's sake and pictures that are painted outside of our country, I feel that first and foremost the national gallery in the capital city should be one to encourage, develop and expand Canadian art.

Mr. Thatcher: I must say that I cannot get too enthusiastic about this expenditure, despite the fact that I may be accused of lacking culture. Nevertheless when I look at the sum of $885,000 for four paintings I begin to wonder if the government is bringing Liechtenstein into the Colombo plan, or if we are extending them lend-lease or something of that nature. In the original estimates the government proposed to spend $130,000 for acquiring art works this year. Parliament passed the policy on the basis of such a figure, and it seems rather strange to me that the government now comes and asks, in addition, seven times as much as the original sum.

The national gallery has a new director. I understand that Mr. Jarvis is an extremely capable man. Sometimes he likes to make speeches. Down in Montreal a few weeks ago he was apparently rather disdainful about hardware merchants and others who take it upon themselves to criticize expenditures for art. There may be some justification for his disdain and certainly he is entitled to his opinion. But I would remind Mr. Jarvis that it is the people of the constituency I represent and others, who have to pay the bills for these paintings. Indeed it is these people who pay his salary. I therefore think we are perfectly entitled to be critical at times of his spending.

What does the expenditure of $885,000 mean in terms of farming? I would point out that it represents about 650,000 bushels of wheat, the total output of approximately 125 prairie farmers for a year. It represents about 6,000 steers, I suppose—grain-fed ones at that. I think this sum is a lot of money and I wonder if it is wisely spent.

I have been told that we have literally thousands of paintings at the gallery today which are not on display. Some are stored in the basement and some are stored in other warehouses. I do not know whether or not this is correct, but if it is, I feel we should take some action to put on display the paintings which are presently in storage, before we expend such huge sums in purchasing additional works.

I should like to ask the minister what is being done to get these art treasures out to other parts of the country, so people other than those living in Ottawa can see them. I know there are some tours, but I do not remember an exhibition being held in my constituency. If we are going to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on new paintings

I think the government should give consideration to arranging more extensive tours in all provinces, where many more people can see them.

Perhaps this particular expenditure is not going to be repeated, but if it is, I think the estimates for the national gallery should be referred either to one of the standing committees or to a select committee to be appointed. I do not like to see money being spent in such quantities without some kind of supervision. I hope the minister will give the matter consideration.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I must protest against this hill-billy approach to this particular question. I know that when it is in one item it sounds like a great deal of money, but we must remember that many organizations and many hon. members of this house have urged the government to build up a national gallery and national library in order to develop a cultural centre in Ottawa. I for one cannot see how anyone could reasonably protest at an investment of about six cents per capita in order to obtain a choice collection of world-known paintings.

Mr. Bryce: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise at this time to speak for the C.C.F., I am speaking for the people whom I represent in Selkirk. I think it is a shame that we should vote $885,000 for pictures. I have nothing against the finer arts but I had to work too hard when I was young to be able to participate in or enjoy them. I do not wish by any means to deprive other people of that pleasure, but in a booming economy such as we have here in 1956 we should be able to do something for poor people who have neither feed nor seed in the north of Selkirk constituency. I drew the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that this government had collected $300,000 from the people under the P.F.A.A. and they have not received any benefits in return.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bryce: Just let me go on for a couple of minutes and I will sit down. I want to go on and tell you what I have to say. I think it is a disgrace for the parliament of Canada to do that sort of thing today and now we are being asked to vote $885,000 for the finer arts when people are going hungry, when they have not the necessities of life. They do not know what to do and neither this government nor the provincial government will do a darn thing about it.

I appeal to the Prime Minister because he is the only man who smiles when I ask him. Mr. Prime Minister, please do something for these people because they are in terrible straits today.

[Mr. Thatcher.]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, yesterday I raised objection with respect to the payment of commissions which I felt were unnecessarily excessive. If this whole transaction was necessary, and I have grave doubts, it could have been carried on by the director of the national gallery. Accordingly I move:

That item 548 be reduced by $35,000.

This is the amount of the commission.

Mr. Quelch: I should like to ask the minister if any of this money is being spent to buy so-called abstract paintings. I attended an exhibition last year of what were called abstract paintings and I think they could have better been called a chamber of horrors. If we are spending money on such grotesque things as that, I think we might as well say—

Mr. Pearson: They did not paint them in those days.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I remember that this item came before the estimates committee, that is, if I am correct in assuming that this item has nothing to do with the purchase of the Liechtenstein collection. Am I correct in that? Am I correct in assuming that this particular item of $885,000, or some of it at least, is in connection with the Liechtenstein collection?

Mr. Harris: No, these are paintings the purchase of which has been initiated recently. I do not think they would have come before your committee last session.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): At that time, when this matter came before the estimates committee, there was an attempt by some of the committee members to get some idea of the individual cost of the pictures. I do not think it was anybody's fault particularly that they could not get a very clear picture of it. The curator of the national gallery was not very well acquainted with the actual financial transactions, and as a consequence most of the members of the committee were, I think, left in doubt, as I was, as to the exact cost of that particular collection.

At that time I raised a question—not necessarily an objection but a question—as to the wisdom of devoting such large sums of money to the purchase of pictures from one particular school of painting of a very much earlier period. Whilst I recognize the necessity, if our gallery is really to assume the proportions of a representative art gallery, of having representatives of various schools of painting, I still thought that the fundamental purpose of our national gallery should be to establish, first of all, the world's outstanding collection of at least North American, if not of Canadian, paintings, and that we should be careful not to expend all our funds on the collection of paintings that would constitute a selection very similar to those to be found in the other parts of the world.

I may say that when I raised that point in the estimates committee the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration listened to me with considerable sympathy, because, as he explained, I was speaking just the way his wife did almost every day on the matter. I think that we should perhaps question these purchases on some such basis as that. I agree, of course, that we have engaged art experts to make these purchases for us but, on the other hand, I think we should bear in mind the general social purpose of a national gallery, and I think that part of that social purpose is to put on display the various periods and developments of our own native painting, even though it might include some of the deplored abstract paintings that my hon. friend from Acadia mentioned just now. Whilst I also have great difficulty in comprehending abstract paintings when I see them, I am forced to the conclusion that there must be people of more discriminating taste than I who do find some satisfaction in them. I should think the gallery is not going to be complete in these days unless it does in its collection embody certain of these types of paintings.

I hope the minister, or possibly the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration when he comes with his main estimates, will be able to give us a more detailed account of the type of expenditure for which this money is being appropriated. Perhaps the Minister of Finance should tell us now, though, whether there is a certain level at which the national gallery seeks to leave funds at hand for the trustees to expend as they see fit. From the statements made last year, I rather gather there is some such item, but this appropriation this year seems to alter the picture in that regard.

Mr. Ellis: In connection with the commission paid on these paintings, I think the minister pointed out that it was five per cent on the first $400,000 and I believe it was four per cent on the balance. While not being familiar with the procedure in the buying of paintings, in a general sense it seems to me that the government and the national gallery, in making from time to time substantial purchases of paintings, could use some method whereby the taxpayers of Canada could be spared the inordinate amount of expense involved in commissions. If you are going to pay 5 per cent on the first $400,000, or the amount of $20,000, it seems to me that there are officials of the national gallery who should be able to negotiate purchases on behalf of the government at a great saving to the taxpayers.

There is one other matter with which I should like to deal. I should like the minister to inform the house just what percentage of paintings now owned by the national gallery are not on public view because of the lack of space and lack of facilities for showing them. It seems to me that I have heard many estimates of the numbers of paintings which are now stored away and which are inaccessible simply owing to the lack of sufficient space. If we are to be called upon to approve expenditures for the national gallery it seems to me that the government should be taking serious steps to make sure that when paintings are purchased, including all those which have been purchased in the past, they are made available at all times to the general public. There is not much point in having paintings if they are to be stored away down in the basement or in some place where they are not available to the citizens.

Then there is this other point which I think was raised by another hon. member. I think greater use should be made of the paintings in various parts of the country. While something has been done in this direction, I think perhaps more exhibitions in the principal centres throughout Canada would enable all Canada to get better value out of the money which we are appropriating at the present time.

Mr. Holowach: This item is for additional funds which are needed to finance the department because of acquiring further works of art. I am not objecting to the amount because if all of the facts were known I think the present government seems to be giving less recognition to the fine arts than is any other country in the world, including small countries. However, I am concerned about the veil of secrecy which seems to prevail in the matter of the purchase of these fine works of art. These paintings are being acquired by public funds for public enjoyment. I should like to know just what steps are being taken to protect the public, what process is being used in discovering the merits of certain valuations, and just what manner of protection is given to the public against fraudulent valuations. I do not think we have had enough information on that matter.

In the public accounts of Canada at page CC-24 the credit balance of the national gallery purchase account as of March 31, 1955 is in the amount of $425. That represents a decrease of $109,738.96 from the balance of $110,163.96 as of March 31, 1954. How many pieces of art were acquired during that time? I think the minister mentioned that a commission was paid. I should just like to know why a direct approach was not made in the matter of these purchases. Had the government taken that direct approach I think there would have been a considerable saving.

Mr. Castleden: I am one of those who believe that our Canadian economy can afford a good living to the Canadian people and also supply us with some of the fine arts for the work of a good national gallery. I think it is a valuable asset to Canada. Apparently, from what has been said here, in some places we are not getting either. I think parliament should be concerned with what is to be obtained for that $885,000 or practically $1 million. I was reading over the committee report on the estimates last year. At that time when there was discussion about what the purchases would be, the item before the committee was for only some $130,000. On reading over the report it seemed to me that there were times when the committee was not given a satisfactory explanation as to the pictures which were being bought, the amounts which were being paid for them, the commissions that were being paid and the persons involved. I understand from the minister, however, that this $885,000 is for new purchases, or more recent purchases than the ones referred to in the estimates last year. If that is the case, I do not think parliament should pass these supplementary estimates until we have a statement in detail from the minister as to what these paintings are, how many paintings or pictures there are, who is receiving the commission for them and exactly what the item covers. In the estimates, as I see them here, there is certainly not sufficient explanation to cover that item. I should like to have a statement from the minister in that regard.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I have been waiting to do that, of course, until all the other speeches were made. If there are any more, I shall have to wait further.

Mr. Trainor: I must confess that I know little about the procedure that is used in acquiring old masters. However, I should like to ask the minister just what the company or firm which got this $35,000 did to earn it? It is a considerable sum of money. One would wish to know just what services were given in return for this amount of money.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, in the art world I understand that there are agents comparable —if I may use such a mundane comparison —to real estate agents. But in this particular case it goes much further than that. Thomas Agnew and Sons Limited are an old and respected agency in London for the handling of paintings and art treasures. Their reputation is such that, when they sell a picture, it is something that they have handled it and certified it from the standpoint of authenticity. In addition to that, it is the practice in the trade to pay a commission to the agent of the vendor. I would rather hope that the hon. member for Oxford would withdraw his amendment for that reason. This matter could have been gone into in some detail during last year's session when this department was before the estimates committee. I do not know whether or not it was gone into. But on every occasion when we have purchased paintings from this collection we have paid the commission. That is traditional and customary. With that, however, we get the advantage I have mentioned, namely that this firm with its reputation at stake is involved in the transaction to the point where they would not, in all probability, seek to sell to the national gallery of Canada something that might be questionable in the future.

The commissions are, I admit, negotiable in the sense that you do negotiate the commission but there is a range within which the settlements are made. The figures I have given you are not out of place for a $850,000 sale. For that reason we are obliged to pay it. If the amendment is carried, aside from whatever result it might have here, you destroy the sale, of course, because it is part of the transaction that we have agreed to go through with.

Mr. Trainor: Am I correct in understanding the minister to say that this service that is supplied by the broker carries with it a guarantee that in the event of a picture turning out to be not authentic, the government might expect to be indemnified against loss?

Mr. Harris: No. I did not mean to go that far and I carefully avoided doing so. I did not mean to misrepresent the matter at all. We do not get a written guarantee. On the other hand, this firm is one of the most reputable in the art world in London, England; and when you deal with them, you get something by way of assurance that they would not under any circumstances handle a picture about which there was any doubt in their minds.

Mr. Nesbitt: Can the minister say whether the Prince of Liechtenstein paid any commission for selling these pictures?

Mr. Harris: That I do not know. I doubt it, but I do not know. I think this is the commission in the trade.

Mr. Ellis: Is the minister suggesting that no sales are made in the art world except through this middle man, the commission agent?

Mr. Harris: No, what I am saying is that the director of the art gallery can, of course, make purchases of art where he will. He may be able to buy from certain living painters without paying a commission, but in any substantial collection of recognized masterpieces, old masters, he will have to pay a commission to an agent.

Mr. Small: Is there any breakdown of the classes of pictures which have been purchased by the art gallery showing how many are old masters, how many are moderns and how many are of the abstract school?

Mr. Harris: I can answer that along with the questions that have been asked previously. At frequent intervals the national gallery publishes a current catalogue not only of purchases but of paintings and other kinds of art that have been lent to them for showing. There is a complete catalogue of the holdings of the gallery in the possession of the gallery but it is such a lengthy document I do not believe hon. members would want to have it printed at public expense. On the other hand, as I have said, there is a complete catalogue but we have not got room, as has been suggested here, to hang all these paintings at one time. However, that is not the purpose of a gallery. The purpose of a gallery is to provide showings from time to time of various kinds of art and various periods of art.

I can assure the hon. member for Acadia that there is no chamber of horrors. At least, I will put it this way, they are rather ancient compared with those about which he was thinking. There is one by Rubens, "The Entombment of Christ"; there is one by Simone Martini, called St. Catherine; there are two by Simeon Chardin, "The Governess" and "Returning from the Market". The first one is alleged to have been painted in 1615; the second was in 1320 and the last two were sometime in the eighteenth century. These are recognized works of art of some substance in the art world as well as in the financial world and they are being added to the collection in accordance with a policy which I think was begun four years ago when it became known that some of these paintings would be available.

I point out to hon. members that practically all the old masters are either in private hands or galleries in the United States or in Europe. You cannot buy them from national galleries. You can only buy this type of painting from a private owner and there are very few private owners left. The Prince's collection is by long odds the largest single collection of this kind of art which is available for purchase and that is why the national gallery is taking the opportunity to buy these paintings. Perhaps this will be the only opportunity. I admit there is a question of Canadian art entering into this. Hon. members will recall that for the three or four years after the end of the war we were voting $100,000 a year for the purchase of art. I think it was then raised to $130,000 and that is the level at which it has continued. But you simply could not buy anything of this standard with money of that kind. It is for that reason these are extraordinary arrangements arrived at from time to time and brought forward as supplementaries, just at the time when the negotiations have been completed.

The hon. member for Prince Albert quite properly stressed the part that the national gallery would play in sustaining Canadian art, in the sense not only of purchasing some of it from time to time but putting it on exhibition. But you must remember that we do that. Quite a considerable sum of money has been expended on Canadian art, but Canadian art does not cost $885,000 for four pictures. It may be worth that some day and I sincerely hope it will. But one should not compare the amount of money spent. One should remember that these are almost priceless assets to the national gallery and naturally you are going to pay a good deal to get them.

On the other hand, I fully subscribe to the theory that at all times the director and board of trustees ought to be conscious of their responsibility to Canadian artists and to the Canadian public, in seeing that those paintings which have merit are given attention and shown at the proper time. My hon. friend asked how many paintings we had in the cellar and not on public view. I must say I could not tell him but I will see if I can get it. I would point out that even if we had larger quarters the purpose of a gallery is not to have everything on exhibition at the one time.

Mr. Ellis: In the one place.

Mr. Harris: In the one place. On that point, there is a regular rotation of exhibitions in Canada. If the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre feels that the citizens of Moose Jaw could provide certain fireproof arrangements and certain costs in connection with a travelling show, I am sure it would be arranged. Normally, these showings are made at the request of local galleries or art centres in Winnipeg, Regina and other places of that kind. But I am satisfied the board of trustees would be glad to fall in with any suggestion.

I just add this warning; there is a fairly high standard of fireproof building that is required or else these paintings will not be sent on tour.

Now, if I have forgotten any particular question asked, I am sorry but I shall be glad to answer. I do ask the hon. member for Oxford if he will reconsider his amendment in the light of what I have said. This is part of the transaction. While he may not agree with our having purchased this group of paintings from the Prince that we should go on and pay the commission, the fact of the matter is we will not be able to get the paintings unless we do. The director of the gallery, who is experienced in these matters and knows the customs of the trade throughout the world, says that this percentage of commission is not unreasonable; that it is about the average that is paid under these circumstances. I think that yesterday my hon. friend said that, while he had no way of knowing the real value of these paintings,—none of us have—he suggested we might consider one particular painting that is in the possession of the Prince, along with any other purchase we might make. I might say to him that the particular painting he mentioned was, in fact, considered along with the other paintings. It was decided to buy these four on the assumption that we were getting not only full value but a more representative group of paintings than if we concentrated a million dollars in the one particular painting he had in mind.

Mr. Nesbitt: In view of what the minister says, I am curious about one thing. The minister has just said that unless this amendment made to reduce this item by $35,000 is withdrawn, the whole deal will fall through. Just a few minutes ago I asked the minister if the Prince of Liechtenstein had paid a commission to this agent to sell the pictures. As I understand the transaction, the Canadian government has employed this firm of brokers, Messrs. Agnew, I believe, to carry on this deal for the Canadian government with the Prince of Liechtenstein. Now, it may be some unusual custom in the trade with which I am not familiar and I will be grateful if the minister will explain what it is, but I take it that the Agnew people are acting on behalf of the Canadian government in buying these pictures from the Prince of Liechtenstein. What I am getting at is this. If these pictures had been placed in the hands of Agnew and Company by the Prince of Liechtenstein for sale and they had the exclusive agency for selling them, I can understand the minister's argument; but since it is the reverse procedure I do not understand why the deal would necessarily fall through if the government merely discontinued the services of Agnew and Company. Apparently, the Prince of Liechtenstein did not place the pictures in the hands of Agnew and Company to be sold; rather, the government has employed the brokers to purchase the pictures from the Prince of Liechtenstein. Is that correct?

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the opposition on this amendment. It is the first time in a long period that the opposition has asked to reduce government spending. I should like to see a whole lot more spent on art, because there is so much to pull us down and so little to lift us up. If anybody wants to see beautiful pictures all he has to do is to go to the fourth floor on the Senate side. There he will see many beautiful pictures. The cheapest picture is valued at $50,000 by Senator Paterson. I congratulated the opposition on this amendment because it is the first time in a long time that I have heard them wanting to reduce government spending. I do not think it is wise.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): That is not so.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member has a short memory.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I understand the hon. member for Oxford is concerned with the principle of the matter, not that he would be unwilling to save $35,000 for the taxpayers of Canada, as I would be. I take it it is the principle involved that is bothering him a little bit; that is, whether or not Agnew and Company in London are the agents for the prince and, if so, did they receive a commission, or should we pay one to them? In the art world there is a certain faith and trust built up by people who deal in pictures. Agnew and Company have that respect not only with the vendor but with the purchaser. If the Prince of Liechtenstein says, as I take it he has said in the past, that these people will be relied on by him to negotiate arrangements with Canada for the purchase of these paintings, and, if we must go through them for that purpose as we have had to do over the last four or five years, and as the trade requires the payment to the agent in these circumstances, we have agreed to make payment. I suggest to him—

Mr. Fleming: Subject to the approval of parliament, surely?

Mr. Harris: Quite so. That is taken for granted so much on this side that it is not necessary to be said.

Mr. Fleming: The trouble is you take too much for granted.

Mr. Harris: If my hon. friend wishes to pursue the more minute details of the transaction with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on his estimates I am sure he will have the opportunity. Perhaps it would take a certain amount of time to do it; nevertheless we are not doing anything unusual here at all in any sense of the word.

Mr. Thatcher: Is this the final purchase from this particular collection, or is it the intention of the gallery to acquire more of those paintings later on? Will the minister say whether he does not think it might be wise for the government to state what its policy on spending is for each year?

Mr. Harris: I am sure the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will deal with that on his main estimates. I want my hon. friend to understand what I have said. The information which came to us some four years ago was that this collection was available for purchase. That was the information on which we learned for the first time that one of the few remaining collections in private hands that could be acquired by the gallery was being made available. Under these circumstances it would be a matter of consideration as to how many of these paintings could be acquired or should be acquired by the gallery. My recollection is that this is the third purchase in the four years. No other commitments have been made. We are not obliged to buy anything else. If my hon. friend inquires of the minister he will give him a statement on the policy as to whether or not he would continue negotiations in the coming year. I do not really know myself.

Mr. Castleden: I asked a question as to how many pictures were involved in this amount of $885,000.

Mr. Harris: Four.

Mr. Castleden: Four pictures involving $885,000?

Mr. Harris: Right.

Mr. Knowles: Whatever happens to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Oxford, I hope the government will review its policy with respect to these commission payments, at least in so far as any future purchases are concerned. Frankly, I do not want to go any farther in commenting on that because I would prefer that any words of mine might be by way of support of the national gallery in its efforts to establish a collection worthy of this country. I want also to support the view expressed by my colleague, the hon. member for Selkirk, that there are some other needs of the people of this country that should be met. I do not feel that expenditure on art needs to interfere with the meeting of these other needs; but the fact that this item passes should not be taken to mean that the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister can slough off the appeal that was made here today by the hon. member for Selkirk.

While I am on my feet I should like to say just a word about this question of abstract paintings. I confess that, like my friend, the hon. member for Acadia, and my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo, I find it difficult to understand these abstract works of art. At the same time I do not think that the only words spoken in the parliament of Canada today on this question should be words that might be interpreted as discouraging to modern Canadian artists. After all, I believe there are in the files of the director of the national art gallery letters written a number of years ago condemning the work of the group of seven. In their day their work was looked upon as hideous and monstrous; whereas today all of us value the Canadian landscape paintings of the group of seven very highly. It may be that our children and our grandchildren will understand the abstract painting that is being done today, and may even come to value it very highly. It seems to me that whether we can understand it or not we should try to do so, and we should not discourage modern Canadian artists who are experimenting in all the different fields of painting. As a matter of fact, they may be reflecting the times through which we are passing in a way that will be understood in the years that lie ahead. Some works of the past were once thought of as a bit horrible; let us hope we in our day can add to our heritage.

The other word I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, is this. I want to support what others have said about the desirability of the collections of the national gallery being taken on tour throughout Canada. I recognize the point made by the Minister of Finance and I have heard the director of the national gallery make it as well, that the value of the gallery's paintings is such that they cannot be set up in any tent anywhere in Canada. Proper fireproof buildings with other protection have to be made available. That is one of the reasons I hope the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance will soon get together on the establishment of the Canada Council. I believe that the establishment of such a council would give encouragement to the arts throughout Canada and speed the day when it will be possible to take various collections from the national gallery on tour.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, in view of what the minister has said I might be prepared to withdraw my motion, in view of the fact that I intend to pursue the matter much further when the estimates of the department come up. There is one thing I would like to know, possibly as a result of my making this motion. There has been considerable discussion of the matter in the house. I would like to ask the minister this question—I believe I asked it yesterday. I am given to understand that the director of the national gallery, Mr. Alan Jarvis, is most highly qualified. I received that information from those who are in a position to know. Why cannot arrangements be made to have Mr. Jarvis himself go out and try to make those transactions with the Prince of Liechtenstein and other such persons?

Mr. Harris: I will have that examined, of course, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I have just one question.

The Deputy Chairman: Just before the hon. member for Peterborough proceeds, I do not want to put words in the mouth of the hon. member for Oxford, but I do not understand whether or not the hon. member has asked leave to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I will be prepared to withdraw the amendment in view of the fact that I intend to pursue this matter further on the main estimates.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Withdrawn.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask one question. The minister mentioned that, if the amendment were put forward and carried, the deal would be off. Is it not true that Canada has already contracted for these pictures?

Mr. Harris: Well, Mr. Chairman, that is my point. We have agreed to buy at this price. If parliament refuses us the authority to do so I presume we would have to negotiate a new transaction and then ask for authority later. I was not suggesting this by way of threat at all and I hope hon. members will not take it that way.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): The pictures are already bought?

Mr. Harris: They are bought by agreement and will be coming to this country next month but they will not come if this item is not passed.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Leboe: At the risk of being laughed at, I want to ask the minister if it is possible that the national art gallery could receive paintings as a gift with the artist's card attached to the painting advertising his position. In this way we could perhaps get away from the expenditure of large amounts of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Harris: The national gallery does, of course accept donations along this line but they do avoid advertising, as my hon. friend, I think, would understand they should.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I have just one comment to offer. It is not of a technical nature at all because I am not qualified to comment in a technical way as far as art is concerned. It seems to me that the old masters have acquired their value for two reasons and the value is made up of two factors: First, the true worth of the painting from an artistic point of view and, second, the value which is acquired merely because the article is extremely scarce. That is a factor of the value which is acquired by many rare objects such as old coins and old stamps and many things which have no artistic value at all. Their cost increases merely because they are in short supply or because there is only one example in existence. It would seem to me that we should not tend towards the idea that our national gallery is an agency for acquiring exclusively articles which are extremely rare. For my part I would be perfectly satisfied to have a picture by some artist of perhaps the same era or school who was much more productive in his time, and more examples of whose work exist, if the quality of the work is somewhat of the same order of that of a less productive contemporary of his although the painting itself may be less valuable from the monetary point of view. I think the artistic point of view should be the main factor considered in purchasing paintings.

Mr. Small: Mr. Chairman, in asking for a breakdown a moment ago, it was for the purpose of enabling hon. members to decide for themselves exactly what they were purchasing. The minister gave us that information. What I was trying to get at at the time was what would be the proportion that might be made up of abstract paintings.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, the group of seven at the turn of the century were trying to develop in this country a style of painting that would depict the ruggedness of Canada and they developed it to an extent of which we are all proud. I do not know what artists are trying to depict in abstract painting. Perhaps it is nightmares in colour or colour frustration, or perhaps you could call it artistic garbage. When the amendment was made to reduce the amount of the commission I was wholly in support of it because while we may have to pay a certain amount of money for artistic garbage I would strongly object to paying commission to secure it. I feel this way because I think you can get a load of that type of garbage any time you want it by going to a place where they are studying art and asking for it. They would give it to you, on your undertaking to take it away with you. I repeat that I would object to paying a commission on what is artistic garbage and colour riot gone rampant.

Mr. Holowach: I am certain that the department is exercising good judgment in the matter of selecting abstract paintings for the national gallery but I was just wondering if the minister would amplify his explanation as to why a direct approach was not made in the matter of purchasing paintings from the Prince of Liechtenstein. I would also like to ask what protection is being given to the public against fraudulent valuations of these paintings. I think there should be a panel of experts set up to advise in such matters because while the field of art is a noble one we know that unfortunately there are pretty smooth operators and "pitch" men operating in this field. I should like to know what protection is being given to the public.

Mr. Harris: I can only repeat my former explanation that the situation described by the hon. member is one reason why we retain a responsible agent, or do business through a responsible agent, one whose reputation in the art world is such that most people will feel they are not having anything of doubtful origin foisted upon them. In addition to that, the director of the national gallery, of course, has friends and acquaintances in the art world. I am quite satisfied that he will receive advice from the curators of other galleries as well as from other dealers. In fact, I am convinced that he would feel that would be a part of his responsibility to us. In addition to that, the board of trustees, while laymen, are nevertheless chosen because, as far as Canada is concerned, they have more than an average amount of experience and knowledge in this field. While I do not suggest their knowledge is equal to that of the director, it is a matter that can be used to weigh in the balance of good judgment.

I should add, in addition to that, that to my knowledge more than one of these directors had seen this collection before we purchased any of the paintings some three, four or five years ago. I can assure you that the director is quite knowledgeable in these matters and is conscious of his responsibility to parliament in asking parliament to vote this sum of money.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would answer a question on this point. I noticed that he used the word "retain" in relation to the agent, and then he changed it. Was that a slip of the tongue or does the department pay him a retainer?

Mr. Harris: No. I changed the word deliberately because I should not have used the word "retain".

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Payments to municipalities—

554. Grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property—to provide for payments to municipalities in accordance with the Municipal Grants Act, and the rural municipal grants regulations established by order in council of January 11, 1956, P.C. 1956-38, and to provide for payments to municipalities under order in council of October 6, 1954, P.C. 1954-1497, in respect of the cost of medical and hospital services and supplies furnished to federal employees and other persons specified therein—further amount required, including authority, notwithstanding section 7 of chapter 49 of the statutes of 1955 (an act to amend the Municipal Grants Act), for payment of grants under section 5 of the Municipal Grants Act to the municipalities of Midland and Welland, in the province of Ontario, and Ste. Foy, in the province of Quebec, $530,500.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct the minister's attention to some anomalies and unfairness in the administration under the Municipal Grants Act. I understand that representatives of various urban bodies in Canada, including the city of Toronto, my own city of Prince Albert and various others, recently communicated with either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance requesting a conference in order to place before the government the unfairness of the operation of the act.

Certainly as it now stands many cities and towns with government buildings, institutions, crown companies and the like, are receiving benefits from the municipalities in which they are located. It is far beyond anything in the nature of the contribution which they make to the taxation levies of the cities, towns or municipalities in which those public institutions are located.

When the Municipal Grants Act was passed in 1941, 4 per cent was the percentage which the total amount of government institutions and buildings assessment bore to the total assessment. That was the base upon which taxation was levied. As I remember, later on that was changed to 2 per cent which removed in part some of the injustice suffered by municipalities through not being able to impose ordinary taxation on federal institutions. I realize the benefits that come and flow from having these public institutions located in a city, town or municipality in one's constituency, but it seems unfair that an extra load of taxation must be levied against the citizens of that municipality in order to meet the needs of supplying municipal conveniences and the like to those institutions.

With the government in business today to the extent that it is, there can be no possible reason why public corporations or public bodies should be subject to any less taxation than should any other institution which is subject to taxation within the municipality. I would ask the minister what consideration is being given to the changing of this act in order to meet the justifiable requests of municipalities across this country.

Each level of government today requires a field of taxation and the municipalities are placed in the position where they have these public institutions and yet are not able to impose that taxation which would be fair and reasonable in connection with the rate of taxation which is applicable to other institutions and public bodies within the municipality. There was a request, and it was a reasonable request, made to the government that it receive a delegation representing the municipalities of Canada in order that this whole question might be discussed and a new base arrived at. Why was that request refused or ignored?

Mr. Harris: I do not know that it was. If my hon. friend is asking for information, no such request has been refused. A request came from the city of Toronto while I was in Paris and the Prime Minister pointed out in his answer that I was in Paris and not available, and that with the Christmas season and the opening of parliament coming along it would be doubtful if a delegation could be received up until that time.

On the day before parliament met I met the mayor and members of the board of control of Toronto in Toronto and discussed this very matter with them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not the information that I got from the association of municipalities.

Mr. Harris: That may be, but I can assure my hon. friend that that is exactly what happened.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister is referring to a meeting with representatives of Toronto, but there was a request from the representatives of municipalities in all parts of the country.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Harris: The cabinet met with representatives of the mayors and reeves somewhere about the middle of February or the first week in February.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have not my information before me at the moment, but the last complaint I received about the government not giving consideration to this was, I believe, around February 28.

Mr. Harris: We do not need to waste any time on this. We met a large delegation in room 497 headed by Mr. Stewart, the president of the association of reeves and mayors, who is now the mayor of Charlottetown.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The last word I got was around the last week of February complaining that there had been no meeting. The minister has said that he met with representatives of Toronto in Toronto after his return from Paris, and subsequently with other representatives in Ottawa. I should like to ask what decision the government has arrived at in connection with ameliorating legislation to relieve the municipalities from their present unjust responsibilities of adding to the taxation of people living within the municipalities in order to meet the need of supplying conveniences to the federal authority?

Mr. Harris: The answer is of course obvious, that we have not concluded our consideration of the request. When we do we will make an announcement as to the decision we reach.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the minister give any indication to the representatives he met that any amelioration was anticipated by legislation at the present session?

Mr. Harris: No. In the case of the city of Toronto I did ask them to communicate with the Department of Finance, which they have since done—they had not up to that time—for the purpose of coming to an understanding, if that were possible, about the assessments on the various properties in Toronto. That is as far as I went with them, and that has been done since. So far as the association is concerned, the promise was made at the end of the meeting with them that every one of the many things they had brought to our notice would receive careful consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it the present plan of the government to deal with each of the municipalities on an individual basis in order to arrive at what would be regarded as an equitable assessment within the municipality, or is there going to be a general rule to apply across Canada?

Mr. Harris: My hon. friend does not understand what I meant about the city of Toronto. When we make a grant under the Municipal Grants Act we do so if the assessment on federal property is above a certain percentage of the total. In order to decide whether a grant is in order there must be an agreed figure as to both the general assessment and the assessment on federal buildings. That is what has been going on with respect to the properties in Toronto. If the time comes when there is no limitation, that is if the federal government should agree to pay on its properties, and not just on the excess over a certain percentage, I am quite satisfied that the federal government would have to continue its present practice of arriving at agreements with the municipalities as to assessment on its properties. My hon. friend asks if we will be dealing with each municipality, and to that extent we would.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I might just follow that one bit further. What was the suggestion by the representatives of the municipalities as a whole as to changes in or amendments to the Municipal Grants Act in order to meet their needs and remove the injustices claimed by them?

Mr. Harris: Their representation was that we should eliminate the present restrictions where we pay only on the excess over 2 per cent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In other words, they asked that federal institutions be placed on the same level of taxation as everyone else within the municipalities without restriction?

Mr. Harris: That is not quite so, because only two provincial governments pay the full amount of taxation on their properties. While I do not want to interject this as an argument, to that extent my hon. friend would not be correct.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say whether the representatives of the two provinces in question—and he might name them—were willing to accept a different basis of assessment from those from the other eight, or why he injected the reference to two provinces?

Mr. Harris: I injected it merely to correct the question my hon. friend asked, because I could not answer it with a yes or no. As I said before, only the two provinces are to pay taxes on the basis of full assessment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Which are those two?

Mr. Harris: Ontario and Saskatchewan, I am told. If the other provinces do not pay on full assessment and if the federal government ultimately does, it would still not be correct at that time to say that all these people wanted was that the federal government should pay as everyone else does, because it would not be true in the other eight provinces if they did not change their present practices.

Mr. Jones: Could the minister inform the house how many municipalities now qualify for the grant?

Mr. Harris: Something over 100.

Mr. Jones: What percentage of the whole would that be? Ten per cent of all the municipalities in Canada?

Mr. Harris: I do not think my hon. friend wants that information. What he wants to know is the percentage of municipalities in which we have property on which we do not pay.

Mr. Jones: Yes.

Mr. Harris: I shall get that for you.

Mr. Starr: Under the Municipal Grants Act, there is a good deal of unfairness in the making of grants in lieu of taxes. Many municipalities are in the position where they just come under the wire of the 2 per cent of 75 per cent of the assessment and, therefore, they do not qualify for the federal grant in lieu of taxes on federal property and crown property located within their borders. In most cases these properties are in very expensive or highly assessed areas in the municipality. If some other type of business was instituted in that particular piece of property, the municipality would derive from that property a fairly substantial sum in tax money.

We all know that the municipalities are hard pressed in the field of education and in the services they must render to the municipal taxpayers. I feel that this restriction in the Municipal Grants Act is most unjust to the municipalities at the present time. I hope that the government will see its way clear to consider removing this basis of grants in lieu of taxes, so that each and every municipality which necessarily must have these funds at the present time has the opportunity of participating in the grants under this act in lieu of the taxes on the properties within their borders.

Special—

555. To provide for the expenses of a committee to review and advise upon certain technical questions relating to the administration of the sales and excise taxes, $20,000.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask a question on that item, Mr. Chairman? First, what are the total expenses of the Carter committee and, second, is it intended to have copies of their report printed? The minister tabled the report in his budget address on Tuesday evening. I ask if copies are going to be made available to members of the house so that they may more intelligently discuss the matter in the course of the budget resolutions.

Mr. Harris: We had not come to any decision about that, but I shall look into it. This vote covers all the other costs. There will not be a further vote. This figure is an estimate of the total cost. It will not exceed $20,000.

Mr. Fleming: Is this the first one?

Mr. Harris: This is the first vote, yes.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to ask a question about this item. It states:

. . . a committee to review and advise upon certain technical questions . . .

Under the Excise Tax Act there is a tax on cartage charges. Supposing a firm manufactures a certain article which costs $100, and if it receives a rush order for a number of them and delivers them, they charge the firm to which they deliver, say, $2 for each delivery. There is sales tax on that delivery, the $100 cost plus the $2 delivery charge. However, if the firm that purchases the same goods pays the delivery charges, there is no tax. It works a hardship on the manufacturing firm, because in many cases of rush orders they have to use their own trucks to get them out, and they have to pay the $2 on them. I wonder if the minister has had cases like that brought to his attention and if he would take them into consideration and see whether something could be done to get away from that, because it has worked hardship. I have one firm especially in mind, which caters to the tourist trade. It had to pay substantial sums to the excise office this year.

Mr. Harris: It was just this very point, among others, that caused us to appoint this committee. It has made what I think is a very thorough study of the subject; so much so that, as hon. members remember, I was not prepared to make any recommendations, or very many, based on it, because we want more time to study it. This kind of complaint has been received, and we shall look into it.

Item agreed to.

556. To provide for the expenses of the royal commission on television and radio broadcasting, including the payment, notwithstanding the Civil Service Act, of honoraria or allowances as may be authorized by the treasury board to officers, clerks or employees permanently employed in the civil service for services rendered by them to the commission, $34,000.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, this is an item of $34,000 to provide for the expenses of the royal commission on television and radio broadcasting. This is the royal commission the appointment of which was announced in December and whose sittings are to commence on April 30 next. The announcement that the government intended to appoint the royal commission—

Mr. McCann: May I correct the hon. gentleman? The board of inquiry has been sitting and has been studying briefs, but the sittings that will be open to the public commence at the time he mentioned.

Mr. Fleming: I am referring to the public hearings. The royal commission has had certain private meetings as is known and they have invited the submission of briefs. They have announced publicly that they are going to commence their sittings on the 30th of April. It was on July 26 last that the government made the announcement of its intention to set up a royal commission, and in making that announcement the Minister of National Revenue said, as recorded on page 6875 of Hansard:

I am prepared to announce, on behalf of the government, that there will be either a commission or a board of inquiry set up some time within the near future to study the whole situation.

The "whole situation" embraces a great many problems that have been raised and were keenly debated last session in regard to radio and television policy in Canada. I do not think it can be said, when the government waited from July until December even to announce the setting up of the royal commission, that it moved very quickly. Nor can it be suggested that the royal commission has moved very quickly in commencing its public hearings only on the 30th of April.

The matters that have been referred to the royal commission are matters of high—indeed, I should say sweeping—importance in this field, and my personal regret is that the commission was not set up at a much earlier date than it was and that it has not found it possible to launch its hearings at a sufficiently early date to hold out some hope that its report might be available soon. Especially do I express that regret in view of one of the uses that the government has made in this house of the appointment of this royal commission. As hon. members will recall, on March 14 the government gave the appointment of the royal commission as a reason why it would not agree to the establishment this year of a committee of this house to review any aspect of policy or administration on the part of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I have some observations to make in regard to this matter and also several associated problems. So far as the attitude of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation toward the royal commission is concerned, it seems to me that the corporation ought to avoid saying or doing anything that is going to inject it into the realm of high policy in this regard. It seems to me that the proper view that the corporation should take of its responsibilities in this matter is that it should not be an advocate of any course of policy but should be merely the public servant which will carry out the policy that is decided upon. When it makes its submission to the royal commission I think it should be prepared—as I am sure it will be—to give to the royal commission all the information it requires and seeks. But I urge that it is not the function of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to be the advocate of any particular line of policy, having regard to the fact that it is a body responsible to parliament.

I raise this question specifically because it has come to my attention that the chairman of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, in the course of an interview on the radio network, expressed some views that it seems to me could be interpreted—I do not say it was done deliberately for that purpose—in some quarters as calling upon organizations to rush forward and to make representations to the royal commission against any change in the present method of dealing with the licensing of broadcasting or television stations in Canada. I am the more concerned when I find that the text of the remarks made by Mr. Dunton in the course of the radio interview was published at the expense of the corporation—which means at the public expense—in the C.B.C. Times of March 11-17. This is the concluding paragraph. The question is this:

> . . . what about the matter of licences and regulations?

This question was put by Mr. Willis the interviewer. Mr. Dunton replied:

> On this point there certainly have been quite a lot of differences of opinion. First of all I would like to point out that the C.B.C. doesn't set down its own responsibilities and powers, nor does it set the scale and shape of the development of broadcasting in Canada. These are all set by the Canadian people through their parliament. It is not for us to say what law should be or try to plead that it should be one way or the other, especially when a royal commission has just been set up to study the whole matter of broadcasting in Canada.

Here let me interject this remark. That last statement of Mr. Dunton seems to me to be a perfectly correct statement of the position that the corporation ought to take in relation to matters of policy and the royal commission. But Mr. Dunton went on to add this:

> I would like to say this, though. The over-all broadcasting system that has grown up to serve Canada represents close and complex association of public and private enterprise, of commercial and public resources. Something is obviously needed to co-ordinate such a system under the difficult conditions set by the nature of Canada and under the various pulls and pressures coming from our great neighbouring country to the south. Where that responsibility for co-ordination should lie is for others to say. Indeed it is for the public and parliament to say if they do want the continuation of one over-all integrated system, or to split it into two or more different disintegrated systems, or to drop out one of the elements entirely and change the whole form of broadcasting in Canada. I think it would be too bad if, without people wanting it or realizing what was happening, the kind of integration we have was lost unconsciously through some change in the form of authority and responsibility, or if such a change led to duplication and confusion.

I think it would have been much more correct had Mr. Dunton paused where I paused this afternoon to offer my interjection. It is not the function of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, in a matter of this kind, where a royal commission has been appointed by the government with the full approval of parliament, to inquire into such questions as Mr. Dunton is there referring to. I do not think Mr. Dunton should undertake to be making statements with regard to that matter.

I mention the use that the government has made in one particular, at any rate, of the fact that this royal commission is sitting. It used that fact as the excuse or pretext for denying the house the opportunity of considering this question, as has been the practice in times past, by a select committee of the house. As several other features of administration on the part of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation have been the subject of questions and, to a lesser extent, of answers, in the house at this session, I feel called upon to say a word about the responsibility of this house in relation to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The corporation has traditionally taken the position that it is responsible to parliament. Parliament is called upon to vote money. At almost every session we are called upon to vote money. We were warned by the Minister of Finance on Tuesday evening in his budget speech, that we shall be called upon to vote moneys for the support of the corporation. Parliament votes these moneys on the recommendation of the government. Indeed it has no right, no authority or power to vote moneys for the support of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation without a recommendation by the governor in council. Under this system the government takes the responsibility of recommending and proposing to the house that sums be voted for the support of the corporation and its programs. The house therefore, it seems to me, has the right and duty to consider everything that has a bearing on the administration of the corporation, including the use of public funds for programs.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. May I make this observation at the present point? We are dealing with item 556 of the supplementary estimates which provides for certain expenses of the royal commission on television and radio broadcasting. At the commencement of his remarks on this item the hon. member said that he had, as I recall his words, certain observations to make with regard to this matter and several associated matters. He has now been dealing for some minutes with a subject which he himself described as the relationship of parliament to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I feel that, in the words of the hon. member himself, his observations at this time are not relevant to the item under consideration. Of course in committee of the whole we are bound by the strict relevancy rule.

Mr. Fleming: With respect, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I think you are overlooking the terms of reference of the royal commission under the order in council that set it up. Anything that appears in the terms of reference is, in my submission, open to proper discussion in this house in relation to the proposal of the government that $34,000 be set aside in the estimates for the expenses of the royal commission. Let me read to you the various subjects that are included in the terms of reference of the royal commission:

(a) the policies to be followed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in its television broadcasting activities and the relation of such policies to the finances of the corporation;

(b) the measures necessary to provide an adequate proportion of Canadian programs for both public and private television broadcasting;

(c) the financial requirements of the corporation for television broadcasting and the relation of these to the extent, nature, standards and distribution of programs;

(d) the financial requirements of the corporation for sound broadcasting in the light of the development of television and the growth of population in new areas of Canada;

(e) the manner in which the finances for the television and sound broadcasting operations of the corporation should be provided and managed;

(f) the licensing and control of private television and sound broadcasting stations in the public interest; and

(g) such other related matters as the commissioners consider should be included in reporting properly upon those specified.

I am not going beyond any of these matters in what I have to say today, but in my respectful submission anything that has a bearing upon these terms of reference to the royal commission is a proper matter to be discussed today when the house is being asked to vote money for the purpose of this royal commission.

Mr. Harris: I appreciate that my friend would no doubt want to make remarks on all these points, but may I point out there is an item in the main estimates for this coming year covering a substantially larger part of the cost of this commission and it would be, I think, more to his satisfaction if he discussed these points on that item in the estimates for the coming year rather than on this which is, after all, just money we are asking parliament to vote for the cost up to date of this commission, and not for the purpose of discussing all the principles involved either in the order in council or the work of the commission. I am sure my hon. friend would want a more extended discussion on this point, not only by himself but by others in the house, which he could have on that item and which I doubt if there is time to have if we are to pass these supplementaries by tonight as I hope they will be.

Mr. Fleming: I hope I am always co-operative in a situation of this kind. I was not proposing to make extended remarks.

Mr. Harris: But others may follow your example.

Mr. Fleming: I am not overlooking that, but this arises from some remarks that have been made in recent days by some members in the house, notably the Prime Minister on March 14, when he introduced a note about censorship. I think this is the time for me to make these remarks and deal with this subject, because I feel that in putting that kind of interpretation upon questions that are being asked by members of the house about C.B.C. affairs, the Prime Minister drew a red herring across this matter. In my view, he failed to have due regard for the responsibility that parliament bears in this matter in relation to the voting of public money for Canadian Broadcasting Corporation purposes.

Now, I do not propose to be long, Mr. Chairman. The matter that gave rise to the question was a program—I am not going to refer to it at length—in which there was shown on television a film of the marriage of a T.V. performer and director. I asked certain questions as to this matter because it seemed to me that this is the place where questions of that kind should be asked.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member for Eglinton seriously contend that remarks with regard to a particular radio program are in order under this item of the supplementary estimates? If he does so, I must say that I disagree with him most heartily.

Mr. Fleming: What we are dealing with now is not a matter of the T.V. program in question; it is a statement by the Prime Minister in relation to the raising of such questions in the house. It is a very much broader question than the basis on which you have put it. I was not going to say anything about a program, except to ask—

Mr. Knowles: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, does not the type of question the hon. member is asking now relate to the administration of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, rather than to the functions of the Fowler commission?

The Chairman: I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has expressed in other terms what I was trying to express possibly in less apt terms. But I feel quite sure that the hon. member for Eglinton is not adhering to our rather general ideas of relevancy in trying to pursue a discussion such as he has undertaken.

Mr. Fleming: Let me, for the purpose of your ruling, make it quite clear to you what I am proposing to say, and then you can make your ruling accordingly.

The Chairman: I am not making any ruling. I have suggested, in as kindly terms as possible, to the hon. member for Eglinton that certain remarks he has already made, in my opinion, do not bear direct relevancy to this item. I am asking him to discuss the item which, after all, is an item in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Fleming: What I wish to say is, in my submission, directly relevant to a request by the government to vote money for the purpose of meeting expenses of a royal commission which is directed by order in council to report upon and make recommendations as to the policies to be followed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in its television broadcasting activities, and to relate such policies to the finances of the corporation. In my submission, what I wish to say is directly relevant to that issue.

Mr. Harris: No, the issue is much narrower than my hon. friend seems to think it is. The issue is, shall we vote this money to have a royal commission to do these things? What I think my hon. friend is going to say is something he has already criticized the chairman of the C.B.C. for saying in another place. He is going, I think, to try to say what the commission might do. Now, that is not the issue. The issue is, do we appoint one, and do we vote their money? The principle of having a commission he can debate, as I have suggested, at some length on the main estimates, but at this point what he thinks the duties of the commission might be, even in a direct way, by criticizing the present policies of the C.B.C., as I take it he intends to do, seems to be so far off the item—

Mr. Fleming: I may not have made myself very plain to the minister. Policy in regard to the various fields that lie now within the responsibility of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has been referred to a royal commission for review. In the very wide reference, I say commendably wide reference, to that royal commission are questions as to policy. There are questions as to the form of licence and control of private television and sound broadcasting stations; indeed, to many other matters to which my remarks are directly related. Now, if we are being asked to vote money for the purpose of having an inquiry made by a royal commission into these matters of policy, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, quite relevant and proper that one should deal with the necessity of review of some of these matters by a royal commission, so long as the matters on which I ask the house to believe that inquiry on my part is directed fall within the scope of the reference to the royal commission.

Mr. Harris: On that, Mr. Chairman, may I point out that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is completely right. If the hon. member for Eglinton is free to debate these things we could have a general debate on the C.B.C. on every form of its policy, such as you will have on the main estimates when they come before the house. In other words, on this vote, which is a strictly confined one, we may have a debate which will be repeated a second time on the main estimates, because if my hon. friend intends to use the order in council as authority for what he is going to say now it is so comprehensive he can say anything about the C.B.C. and so can every member of the committee.

Mr. Fleming: The fact that there is an opportunity later for discussion on the general estimates has no bearing on the question of whether remarks made today are in order.

Mr. Harris: No, I am not suggesting that. I am just suggesting we should not have two debates.

Mr. Fleming: The fact is that we have a matter that has freshly arisen and if the matter is of high importance, as in my humble view it is, I think this is the place and this is the time to clear up what I consider to be a very great misapprehension on the part of the Prime Minister as to the function of parliament in relation to the voting of public funds for the support of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its work.

Mr. Harris: May I say just one thing? There has been no complete agreement but it is my understanding that we were to complete these estimates tonight in order that the budget debate may continue tomorrow, and that we were to have a private members' day on Monday and the budget debate on Tuesday and Wednesday. If these estimates are not passed by tonight they cannot have royal assent by the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. Knowles: Louder.

Mr. Harris: If we do not pass these estimates tonight and report them I do not anticipate another opportunity, though we would have to make it, and I know it would upset a good many of the plans. If my hon. friend could make a speech without exciting others to make similar speeches, I think I would risk it, but I doubt it very much on this particular point.

Mr. Knowles: Similar, or dissimilar speeches?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I think I would have been through with my remarks by now if I had not been stopped in the first place.

Mr. Weir: Not a chance.

Mr. Harris: We will give you 10 minutes.

Mr. McCann: Do not forget you were the one who pressed for the inquiry in the radio committee last year.

Mr. Fleming: Yes, and I still do, and I will give the government my reasons now, if they are prepared to listen to them, as to why you ought to set up the royal commission.

Mr. McCann: We accepted the reasons.

Mr. Fleming: But not soon enough; you did not act on them soon enough. The Prime Minister dragged into the discussion the expression "censorship" as applied to questions that were asked in this house.

The Chairman: Order. May I make it quite clear that remarks with regard to these questions concern the proceedings in the House of Commons, and I feel on entirely sound ground when I say that is not relevant to the appointment of this royal commission. I do ask for the co-operation of the hon. member.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, to make it quite clear, this is my speech. That is the line I seek to follow. If you are going to rule that matters that in my submission are relevant to the subjects that have been referred to the royal commission cannot be discussed here now, then I am precluded from proceeding because my remarks today were directed—and let me make it quite clear—to things that have been said in the house in recent days. That is the subject of my intended remarks today. If the ruling of the Chair is going to be that those matters cannot be discussed, even though they relate so directly to matters that lie clearly within the scope of the reference to the royal commission, then in effect I am precluded from proceeding. With that explanation, Mr. Chairman, I think I had better await your decision because I wish to make it quite clear that the remarks I intended to make were prepared as an examination of the conceptions that lie behind some of the statements and remarks of the government, particularly of the Prime Minister, in recent days when questions pertaining to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation were raised in the house.

Now, that is what I propose to follow, Mr. Chairman, unless I am precluded by your ruling. Perhaps I had better ask you.

The Chairman: I ruled that the remarks which the hon. member for Eglinton had made prior to my rising previously were not relevant to this discussion. Now, I cannot be asked to assess in advance the relevancy or irrelevancy of any remarks which the hon. member proposes to make. That is entirely beyond my functions.

Mr. Fleming: Then, Mr. Chairman, I shall just have to proceed and you will have to make your ruling accordingly. Your ruling will be respected, of course. On March 14, when asked a question about the government view in regard to—

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): My personal view.

Mr. Fleming: All right, the Prime Minister's view, without designating the difference between his view as an individual and his view as the head of the government. When the Prime Minister was asked a question about the use of time on a program and about the expenditure of public money for the purpose of having a marriage of two persons shown, the Prime Minister—

The Chairman: Order; may I make it quite clear that I rule without hesitation that this part of the hon. member's remarks is entirely out of order on this item.

Mr. Fleming: Then I will try this next tack. The Prime Minister brought in the word

"censorship" which I think was a gross irrelevancy in dealing with this question. When asked about it in the house—

The Chairman: Order. I also rule that these remarks are entirely without relevancy on this item, and I must ask the hon. member to refrain from further irrelevancy.

Mr. Fleming: If you are going to rule out references to this subject that I have just now mentioned, then I am precluded from proceeding. I say this in conclusion. More will be heard of this subject. The need of a careful review of policies by the royal commission, within the terms of the scope of reference to it under the order in council, is greater today than it was before. We have, as related to the matter of policy in regard to the licensing of television stations in Canada, increasing reason for a review of that subject by the royal commission. It is an urgent matter, and a serious view of the urgency of the matter is being taken in many parts of the country today.

The Manitoba legislature has recently expressed itself on the subject. Recently, a resolution was passed in the legislature of Manitoba to the following effect. I am here dealing, Mr. Chairman, with this policy of local monopoly in television which the government has consistently followed and has imposed on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Goode: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I say with all respect that I have agreed with some of the views of the hon. member for Eglinton in other places; but he is taking me entirely unprepared in this matter. He is not speaking to the rules, and I am not prepared to discuss this matter except within the rules. I think he should wait until the appropriate time.

Mr. Fleming: Sir, the resolution reads as follows. I remind you that this was passed by the legislative assembly of the province of Manitoba.

The Chairman: Order. Of course, it gives me no pleasure to be rising continually, but I feel sure that the hon. member for Eglinton must realize my feelings in respect to this particular item by reason of the fact that I have been obliged to rise so often. Now, I may be entirely wrong, but it seems to me that on a resolution of this kind we are considering one point and one point only, namely the advisability or the inadvisability of paying $34,000 to provide for the expenses of a certain royal commission. Surely, we can confine our remarks to this question. Surely, there is sufficient scope in this question to allow the hon. member to make a speech. I am afraid I cannot allow him, on this very confined item in the supplementary estimates, to open up the whole subject of radio and television broadcasting in Canada.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I am simply giving some recent reasons for supporting the appropriation of money for the purposes of the royal commission, and underlining the importance of the reference to that commission and the urgency of its proceeding with its work and making its report to the house.

The resolution of the legislature of Manitoba, to which I was making reference, was passed in that legislature on March 6 by a vote of 47 to 5. The resolution reads as follows:

> Whereas Manitoba citizens have a wide choice of radio stations, and whereas there has been a demand—

The Chairman: Order. Have I not sufficiently indicated to the hon. member that I really cannot see the relevancy of this type of discussion? For a few minutes, the hon. member was kind enough to co-operate with me and address his remarks directly to the question of the royal commission. May I express the hope that he will continue in the vein which I feel is relevant to this resolution.

Mr. Fleming: Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot go on discussing your ruling. I am seeking to give you some very good reasons—

Mr. Harris: You have done very well.

Mr. Fleming:—why this royal commission should be encouraged in its work, why money should be placed at its disposal for the purpose of carrying out that inquiry, why that inquiry ought to be complete and comprehensive, and why, in the light of recent events, the inquiry becomes more urgent and why the need for a comprehensive report is now greater than ever before.

One of the matters referred to the royal commission is the present policy in regard to licensing for television purposes. That is an outworn policy of monopoly, a policy which badly needs to be recast and reviewed. If I were given the opportunity today I could cite many reasons why that policy needs to be changed and reversed. There are many people in this country who are becoming more vocal on the subject and who dislike very much the idea of monopoly in reference to so important a form of communication.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, that the view has not been taken on this item, where we are asked to vote money for the purpose of conducting such an inquiry, that matters which are included within the scope of the inquiry, clearly within the terms of the order in council, should also be discussed in this house at this time, particularly in the light of what I consider to be misleading remarks made by the Prime Minister in recent days.

Mr. Knowles: I do not intend, Mr. Chairman, to argue with the hon. member for Eglinton with respect to the statements he made when you ruled that he was out of order. I would be out of order, too, if I did so. However, there was an earlier part of his speech when I believe he was in order, and it is with regard to something he said at that time that I should like to make a brief comment.

If I understood the hon. member for Eglinton correctly, he took exception to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, through its chairman, Mr. Dunton, making certain representations to the Fowler commission.

Mr. Fleming: Policy.

Mr. McCann: He has not made them yet.

Mr. Fleming: Public statements.

Mr. McCann: This was an interview.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Eglinton objects to the chairman of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation making public statements of policy.

Mr. McCann: He is doing it himself.

Mr. Knowles: Which, as the minister says, the hon. member for Eglinton is doing himself.

Mr. Fleming: I am not the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I happen to be a member of parliament.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend may not be the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation but he does a fair amount of broadcasting.

Mr. Fleming: It is an agency responsible to parliament.

Mr. Knowles: That is exactly the point I rise to make. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is an agency responsible to parliament. It is parliament's instrument in the broadcasting field; and far from it being suggested that that corporation should not make suggestions to the Fowler commission, I believe the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has a duty to make recommendations and to appear before the Fowler commission, just as I believe it is the right and the duty of the Canadian Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters to make its representations.

Mr. McCann: Surely.

Mr. Knowles: I did not hear any complaint from the hon. member for Eglinton today over statements of policy being made by private radio and television stations. I do not complain, either; they should appear.

[Mr. Fleming.]

But it seems to me that if we are going to have an objective survey of this matter by the commission that has been appointed by the government, and for which we are now voting money, that commission should hear all views on the question; and since the chosen instrument of parliament in this field is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation I hope the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will appear and make the best possible case it can before that commission.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the hon. member has completely misapprehended what I said. Of course the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will appear before that commission; of course it will be called upon to submit briefs. What I said was that the corporation within its proper role should not appear in the role of advocate, and that is the position which it seems to me Mr. Dunton was coming very close to taking in questions of policy. The corporation is an agency created by parliament for a particular purpose, and if it is to carry out such policies as parliament lays down it is not the function of the corporation or its principal officers, its extremely competent officers, to take the role of advocate in regard to matters of policy.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he contend that the Canadian association of radio and television broadcasters, which is concerned and involved in this subject, should be denied the right to appear before the Fowler commission?

Mr. Fleming: This is a free country. Any person in Canada can make his submissions on a question of policy; but when you come to a parliamentary agency, an agency created by parliament to carry out such policies as parliament decides, I say again that it is not the function of that parliamentary agency to take sides in regard to policy and to be an advocate.

Mr. McCann: I just want to say a word or two, Mr. Chairman, and I shall be very brief. I think the remarks of the hon. member for Eglinton come with very bad taste at this particular time.

Mr. Knowles: That is a good choice of words.

Mr. McCann: The hon. member has quoted from the C.B.C. Times, the issue of March 11 to 17, and in the Times, with regard to C.B.C. policy, it says:

About C.B.C. Policy—
The chairman of the C.B.C. board of governors, Davidson Dunton, interviewed by J. Frank Willis—as broadcast on C.B.C. trans-Canada.

That was an interview which was given as a broadcast, by a gentleman who was not connected in any way with the board of inquiry. It may well be that the board of inquiry will never see that, but the board does read the remarks in Hansard of the hon. gentleman who was attempting to use this forum to put before the board of inquiry his opinions and those of his party rather than going before the board of inquiry to do so.

Mr. Fleming: What the minister is doing, of course, is violating the rules by ascribing motives. When I speak in the house I speak for the hearing of the house and of those who wish to concern themselves with what goes on in the house. The minister is violating the rules of the house in saying that I am speaking here today for the purpose of having my remarks influence the minds of the members of the royal commission. The minister's remarks do not have the slightest foundation in fact. They are fiction, and I wish them to be withdrawn.

Mr. McCann: All I ask the hon. gentleman is whether or not he will appear before the board of inquiry himself and make the same remarks he has been making here. I can say for the information of the house that the C.B.C. board of governors have their brief prepared after many weeks of study, and at the first opportunity, as soon as public meetings are held, they intend to present it to the board of inquiry.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCann: I might say that I think we have satisfied the hon. member for Eglinton, if he can ever be satisfied, by paying attention to the pressure and criticisms he put forward concerning the suggestion that was made in the Massey report that these matters should be brought before a board of inquiry at the end of three years. We have lived up to the letter of the recommendation in that respect; and while some time did elapse between the end of the session and the appointment of the board, it is not the easiest thing in the world to get public men to take on these special inquiries and obligations.

I can say that it was with some difficulty that we did get the type of people we thought would be satisfactory to the Canadian people to make the inquiry which they have undertaken. There is an outstanding gentleman in business life, one in banking life and another who has held prominent public office. Their staff has been set up, preliminary work is being done, briefs are coming in from all over the country which are being read and studied, and the public inquiry will start at the end of next month. The hon. gentleman or anyone else will have an opportunity of going before this board and making either complaints or suggestions.

I have no doubt in my mind that this was well thought out, that on this particular appropriation there would be an opportunity to present to the Canadian people and to the board of inquiry just the very thing you condemned the chairman of the board of governors, Mr. Dunton, for doing, not at a public inquiry but during a radio broadcast.

Mr. Fleming: Is this not interesting? This is just a sample of the sort of thing I proposed to discuss this afternoon and was prevented from doing. The minister has chosen to equate the position of the chairman of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the highly respected Mr. Dunton, with the position of a member of parliament discharging his responsibilities in the House of Commons in relation to the voting of public money.

Mr. McCann: I have not the slightest objection at the right time to my hon. friend criticizing the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for weeks on end, if he can find words enough—and he has a pretty good vocabulary—but he will have the opportunity of doing that when the estimates of that board come up. It is true that we have denied his request for a public inquiry like the radio committee that we have had in other years, but I suggest that it would be in bad taste for the government to consent to setting up a radio committee this year when the board of inquiry is undertaking the particular large assignment that they have.

Mr. Fleming: In the meantime the government does everything to preclude proper discussion in the house. Talk about censorship; it is the government that is seeking to impose censorship, both on the house and on the corporation, as on the Ferns and Ostry book program.

Mr. McCann: At this time I have no more to say.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister if he has seen the brief prepared by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for submission to the royal commission?

Mr. McCann: The answer is positively and emphatically no.

Mr. Fleming: Is the minister in a position to make any comment on the position I sought to take earlier in regard to what I conceive to be the proper role of the corporation, that it should not be appearing as an advocate? I am sure that it will be helpful in most particulars to the royal commission, but we are dealing now with the question of whether it is within the proper function of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, whether it is a proper expenditure of moneys made available by parliament, to be appearing in the role of advocate in regard to questions of policy as applied to the basis of licensing for television or radio purposes.

Mr. McCann: May I ask my hon. friend if he has seen the brief?

Mr. Fleming: What brief?

Mr. McCann: The brief which the C.B.C. intends to present?

Mr. Fleming: No.

Mr. McCann: Then how can my hon. friend figure that they are going to appear in the role of advocate?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: The loud laughter over there speaks vacant minds. I did not say that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was going to appear in the role of advocate. What I did point out to the minister a few moments ago, as he would have known if he had been following what I was saying, was that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has no right to appear in the role of advocate in that regard. I pointed out what I considered to be a trespass on proper functions by the chairman of the corporation in expressing those views which I quoted from his script on that trans-Canada network broadcast. The matter was not left there; the corporation went on to use funds voted to it by parliament to have his remarks printed and distributed widely through the C.B.C. Times.

Mr. McCann: In an attempt to keep the public informed.

Mr. Fleming: The public informed, yes. It is all right to keep the public—

The Deputy Chairman: If the hon. member for Eglinton will bear with me for a moment, in view of the last remark of the minister I would submit to the hon. member for Eglinton and to the committee of supply that the question before this committee at the moment is whether we shall vote $34,000 for the expenses of the royal commission. Perhaps by our answer to that we decide whether or not there shall be a royal commission on radio and television.

I suggest to hon. members of the committee that we have that question to decide. We have not to decide at the moment matters which will come before that royal commission, neither have we to decide under this special item whether or not the president or other officers of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation have been guilty of actions in their official capacities which they should not have committed. I think such criticism is perfectly in place in this parliament, but I do not think it is in place on this particular item, which boils down to whether or not we are going to set up a royal commission on broadcasting.

I do not think that any of us occupying the chair would wish to make it impossible for hon. members to criticize the actions of any official of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, but I am afraid I cannot see where that criticism is in order on a special item to set up a royal commission and which does not deal with salaries or expenses of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as such. This item deals with the setting up of a royal commission which will deal not only with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation but with all aspects of broadcasting.

Mr. Fleming: Without reviewing the matter that involved some discussion earlier of questions of procedure, I submit that appropriations for the expenses of this royal commission cannot be considered adequately apart from the reference to it under the terms of the order in council passed last December, and which were made a matter of record earlier. The remarks that have been made were related to the specific subjects that have been referred to the royal commission under the terms of that order in council. However, I do not propose to prolong the matter.

The minister has failed to grasp the point I have been trying to make in regard to the proper function and role of the corporation. No one is going to question the right of the corporation to make submissions or to give information within its experience to the royal commission. I am quite sure that the royal commission will require that if they are going to proceed effectively with their work. I am sure it is to be encouraged.

What I am dealing with is advocacy in relation to policy. Policy is for parliament. This royal commission has been asked to make recommendations on policy. The point I have tried to make clear today, and which did not register with the minister or with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, was that in relation to policy it is not the function of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to be an advocate.

Mr. McCann: Certainly you will agree that in order to get the background they will have to be consulted.

Mr. Fleming: For factual information, yes. That is a different matter from being an advocate. It will be remembered that some years ago the then chairman of the wartime prices and trade board went on the air in a series of speeches and made an extensive review of some things which brought him to a declaration in regard to policy. There was strong criticism in this house of that official of a government board undertaking to make declarations and statements in regard to government policy. That is the function of the government which is responsible to parliament. It is not the function of the head of any board, whether it be a board set up under a department and responsible to the minister of the department or a board directly responsible to parliament, to go out and declare policy. Nor is it his function to go out and advocate policy, or in this case to advocate any particular form or method of licensing in reference to radio and television.

I hope I have made that point clear. I do so with the utmost good will to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and to its officials. No one in this house has given more steady recognition of the value of those officials and of their competence to do the tasks that are assigned to them than I have. It becomes the duty of members of this house—and I would hope the duty of all members of this house—where any official of any such board goes beyond the proper function of that board, to rise in the house at the earliest opportunity and express their views. That is what parliament is for, as I understand it; and if we do less than that we are failing in our duty and in our responsibility; for here, apart from other questions, we are dealing with the use made of the public's money.

Mr. Knowles: I have just a very few more words to say. I think I have made our position clear. The hon. member for Eglinton is perfectly right when he says that policy in these matters is decided by the government. He is also right when he says that the Fowler commission will be expected in its report to recommend policies. Whether or not those policies will be carried out will be up to the government.

But I ask the hon. member for Eglinton to consider the position he is suggesting. He says he is quite willing that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation appear before the Fowler commission, along with all the other bodies and individuals that may appear. So far as the rest of the bodies that appear are concerned, they can state facts, they can give information and they can be advocates, but he suggests that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which is the instrument of this parliament, should refrain from any advocacy.

Mr. Fleming: In relation to policy.

Mr. Knowles: All right, in relation to policy. The hon. member is free to go back over my statement and amend it so the word "advocacy" would be changed to "advocacy of policy". But he wants to tie the hands of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which is parliament's instrument, in a way in which he would not tie the hands of the Canadian Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters.

There is one other question I should like to ask the minister. Can he say whether this commission of inquiry will ascertain from the C.B.C. where it got the photograph of the hon. member for Eglinton that it sometimes flashes on the television screen when he is referred to in the news? Was it chosen with good taste?

Mr. McCann: I doubt the propriety or the good taste, and I shall recommend to them—

The Deputy Chairman: I have to point out to the committee that the only place where the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might properly ask that question would be before the royal commission, certainly not under this item.

Mr. Fleming: Seeing that my name has been raised, I wish to say that I have never yet seen my picture on television.

Mr. McCann: You probably would not know yourself.

Mr. Knowles: What a shock the hon. member will get when he sees it.

Mr. Fleming: I have been told by a number of friends who have seen it that they did not think it was a very good picture.

An hon. Member: They should get a new one.

Mr. Fleming: That might be a very good idea, and perhaps my hon. friend might be good enough to pass that on to the corporation.

Mr. Weir: They should pass the hat.

Mr. Fleming: Of course the photographer had to work within the limits of his material, I have to recognize that.

May I ask the Minister of Finance a question? The item refers to:

> . . . honoraria or allowances as may be authorized by the treasury board to officers, clerks or employees permanently employed in the civil service for services rendered by them to the commission.

Is it intended that honoraria or allowances —I am not talking of travelling expenses, but honoraria or allowances for services rendered—be paid in addition to civil service salary, or is this simply to recompense individuals who are loaned to the royal commission and therefore are on leave of absence without pay from the civil service?

Mr. Harris: The intention is to pay, for those members of the civil service who are on loan, terminable allowances because of the extra work in which they will be involved during the pressure of the work of the commission.

Mr. Fleming: This is for overtime work?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. Fleming: Is there any rule followed in these matters?

Mr. Harris: It often happens in committees and commissions of inquiry, that they require the assistance of civil servants, and treasury board has a standard practice of granting additional allowances, though it is related in some manner to their normal salaries. I could not give the formula, but there is a standard practice.

557. To authorize the expenditure for international relief purposes, or other relief purposes authorized by the governor in council, of the unexpended portion of the grant made by the government of Canada to the Canadian national European flood relief fund by vote 572 of the Appropriation Act No. 2, 1953, $1.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister explain this item? I am not asking for a lecture on the purpose of a $1 item. We know what that involves. But I should like to know whether this has any relation to the suffering in Europe resulting from this winter's storms?

Mr. Harris: This is a legalistic item arising out of the fact that of the million dollar vote which parliament passed in favour of the Canadian Red Cross three years ago, I believe, in connection with relief in the United Kingdom, Holland and Denmark for flood victims, about half was spent. About half a million dollars is outstanding to the Canadian Red Cross at the moment. The question arises as to whether the money was in fact returnable to the consolidated revenue fund, since it had not been used for that particular purpose at that time. The reason for this vote, then, is to ensure in the hands of the Canadian Red Cross that amount of $506,000, so they may use it for other European relief purposes similar, or somewhat similar, to the original purpose of the vote.

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister know whether it is the intention to make use of any of it at the present time?

Mr. Harris: No, I do not. There has been a good deal of thought given over the past six or eight months as to whether this should be the way to deal with it. I am not sure of the actual plans of the Red Cross but I am quite sure it will continue to expend the money for the type of relief for which the original sum was voted.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask whether the government has considered giving the Red Cross any additional money because of the needs at the present time?

Mr. Harris: No, we have not at the moment.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Field services—

558. To provide for the destruction of harbour and gray seals—further amount required, $3,000.

Mr. Brooks: I just want to ask the minister a question regarding this item. I assume this is for the protection of the salmon fisheries?

Mr. Harris: That is correct.

Mr. Brooks: There has been considerable complaint that the provision made for protecting the fisheries against the gray seals has been rather ineffective in the Atlantic region. To indicate the great loss that has been caused in the Atlantic salmon fisheries, I would cite the following figures. In 1954 there was produced 1,100,000 pounds; in 1955 this was reduced to 474,000 pounds. In Newfoundland and Labrador in 1954 it was 2,400,000 pounds; in 1955 it was 1,600,000 pounds. The people in the Atlantic provinces are becoming very much concerned with reference to their salmon fisheries, and it seems to me that this amount—I believe $35,000 was voted last year—is very small for this particular purpose.

It is also stated in some pamphlets I have received that each of these seals destroys something like 15,000 pounds of salmon in Northumberland straits and around the coast of New Brunswick. It is also stated, I think, that the method used to destroy the seals is not effective, and that the boats do not get near where the seals are and are not destroying them at the rate at which they should be destroyed.

I would suggest that this amount should be increased for this purpose. I realize that it cannot be increased in these supplementary estimates, but I thought this might be an appropriate time to bring up the matter, with the hope that there would be some increase in the amount of money that is used for destroying those seals, which are one of the chief reasons the Atlantic salmon fisheries are being depleted at the present time.

The minister has not answered my question. I wanted to know whether this money was being used in the Atlantic provinces principally for the destruction of seals, or where it was being used.

Mr. Harris: I must apologize to my hon. friend. This is used both in the Atlantic and Pacific areas. During the current year the $35,000 has run to an almost even $17,000 in the Atlantic-Newfoundland area and $18,000 in the Pacific area. The $3,000 is going to be spent in about the same proportions. As to increasing the vote, of course the bounty is paid on the number of seals that are killed at $10 an adult and $5 a pup. Presumably if more seals were killed we would pay a larger bounty and would vote a larger sum.

Mr. Brooks: Is the money used entirely for bounty, or is it used also for destroying the seals?

Mr. Harris: No. It is a bounty paid to those who kill the seals.

Item agreed to.

560. Amount required to recoup the fisheries prices support account to cover a payment that was made to the government of Newfoundland in the present fiscal year with respect to the 1953 production of salted codfish, $646,984.

Mr. Barnett: I have one or two questions I should like to ask the minister on this item. I notice that it is to cover a payment with respect to the 1953 production of salted codfish. We are now almost at the end of the estimates for the fiscal year 1955-56. Because of the sequence under which this payment is made, it is a little bit difficult to keep abreast of the operations of the fisheries prices support board in this connection. I wonder whether the minister has any information which he could give the house at this time as to how many pounds of codfish are covered by this payment, what the average price per pound under it would be, and how much the payment of this sum would increase the average price per pound received by the fishermen in the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Harris: This is an additional payment through the fisheries support board of 1 cent per pound for codfish. The reason it is only coming before us at this late date is that the government did not decide until some time in March of 1954 to make this additional payment on the 1953 catch. After the decision was made, however, it appeared that the government of Newfoundland chose to make a payment of $1.50 a quintal, which was slightly more than the amount of our vote, and it was agreed among the fishing trade and the two governments concerned that we should make our payment to the government of Newfoundland, since they had made a larger payment. The delay has been in accounting as between the two governments. That accounting is now completed, and we are now prepared to pay it.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

561. Departmental administration—further amount required, $16,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister explain what are the extra items that make up this amount?

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The principal item is an amount of $14,000 paid to Mr. Rivard who was counsel some years ago in connection with a government matter. His account was not submitted until the end of last year, and it has just been taxed at $10,000. The balance of the payment is for reporters' fees in connection with the corps of commissionaires and $2,000 for additional expenses for office stationery, supplies and equipment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Even for a philanthropic profession like the legal profession, Mr. Chairman, it is somewhat unusual to delay for a long time the rendering of a bill. Who is this gentleman who failed for so long to render so large a bill? Would the minister say who this gentleman is?

Mr. Harris: I said that it was Mr. Rivard.

Item agreed to.

LEGISLATION

House of Commons—

562. General administration—estimates of the Clerk—further amount required, $65,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: For what is the further amount required? I cannot get the details from an examination of page 14. It seems to me to be a large amount.

Mr. Harris: The increase is due to the fact that in making up the estimates a year ago last December, I tried to get them down to the very minimum. At that time we did not perhaps take into full account the possibility that parliament might run until almost the end of July. There were additional costs for that period of time both for the maintenance of the House of Commons and for printing as well. That is the reason for the further amount required.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say what it costs to publish the debates? What is the total cost? This is an extra amount of $65,000. What is the total amount?

Mr. Harris: The main vote was $1,369,000.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

Surveys and mapping branch—

Canadian hydrographic service—

563. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $850,000.

Mr. Barnett: From the statement in the details I gather that this item of $850,000 represents the amount required to provide a new boat for the Canadian hydrographic service. I wonder whether the minister can give us some details as to just what this vessel is and where it will be put into service. Will he also state whether there is any special reason that the amount for construction of this new vessel is being brought in as a special item under the supplementary estimates rather than in the main estimates of the department?

Mr. Harris: The amount in the main estimates was $1,643,000. This is merely the further sum required by reason of the advance of the construction. They are advance payments to the contractor from time to time. He is making good progress, and therefore we require the money to pay to him. The hydrographic vessel is designed for charting northern waters and will be used in the Arctic and throughout the northeast.

Mr. Barnett: In other words, this does not represent a new vessel that has been under construction.

Item agreed to.

General—

564. Payments to the Royal Canadian Air Force and commercial companies for air photography, and to provide for expenses of the interdepartmental committee on air surveys, including purchases of equipment—further amount required, $550,000.

Mr. MacLean: Will the minister give a more detailed explanation of this item?

Mr. Harris: As the hon. member knows, we have a system of acquiring aerial photography for the purpose of the public service. Commercial companies take aerial photographs and they are submitted to a committee of certain departments. If they are found suitable for public use, we purchase them. The result is that in this year more acceptable photographs have been submitted and we have decided to purchase them. This money will be used for that purpose.

Mr. Dinsdale: I recall that last year there was a similar supplementary appropriation of some $1 million. At that time the minister explained that the reason for the supplementary expenditure was that the work was considerably in advance of that which had been contemplated. I presume that is partly the explanation again this year. While I am on my feet I should like to ask the minister whether he could indicate how much of this expenditure went to the air force and how much went to the private firms concerned. Then as a further question I should like to know whether any of this money is used to assist the provinces in aerial photographic surveys.

Mr. Harris: The whole purchase is from commercial companies. I do not think any of it goes to assist provincial governments in this field.

Item agreed to.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

566. To provide for the dismantling, conversion and installation of existing equipment, acquisition of new equipment, removal expenses and other costs related to the transfer of the national film board to new building—further amount required, $67,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take just a moment to call to the attention of the government a suggestion that was made recently in the Saskatchewan legislature by Hon. C. C. Williams. The suggestion was that we are in a complicated situation in Canada because of the large number of boards of film censors that we have, and it might be a good idea to try to reduce the number. Mr. Williams' suggestion was that there might be two such boards, one in eastern Canada and one in western Canada, so there might be more co-ordination and cohesion in this work.

I recognize right away, before someone from the government side starts to tell me, that this is not something that can be done by direction, from the federal government. It is something that would have to come about by way of co-operation among the provinces concerned. But it does seem to me that the national film board, which is in this field, might take a lead in furthering Mr. William's suggestion. That is all I wish to do at this time, Mr. Chairman, just to draw to the attention of the government and of the national film board this matter, in the hope that they will give consideration to it.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

569. Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—further amounts required—Prince Edward Island, $275,000.

Mr. MacLean: I should like a word of explanation as to why these supplementaries were necessary, and this applies to all three items. Is the explanation that the construction in these places has gone forward more rapidly than expected, or is it that the cost is proving higher than was expected?

Mr. Harris: In each case it is the former; the work has gone forward much more rapidly than we thought it would when we first made the estimate.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

580. Payment to the St. Lawrence seaway authority of an amount equal to the net proceeds realized from the sale of property under the administration or control of the authority and paid into the consolidated revenue fund during the current fiscal year, $80,000.

Mr. Nesbitt: In connection with this matter, I presume that when lands that were acquired by the seaway authority are sold the money goes back to the receiver general. Can the minister give us any information as to what lands these were that were sold, and does it include lands only or other property as well?

Mr. Harris: This is real property. Might I add something more. The purpose of this vote is, as my hon. friend has seen, to deal with a situation that arises because we had not covered it in the original St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act. These lands, having been made available for disposal, went to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, which only has authority to pay the proceeds of any sale into the consolidated revenue fund, and it was not the intention to do that here. It was the intention rather that this money should be part of the St. Lawrence seaway authority fund, so this is a vote to put it back there. In order to overcome this situation in the future an amendment is going to be made to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act to provide that they may dispose of their own assets and keep the proceeds for their capital account.

Mr. Nesbitt: I thank the minister very much for his excellent explanation of the matter. Could the minister tell us where these lands were? Were they in the vicinity of Montreal or were they lands in the vicinity of Iroquois or Cornwall?

Mr. Harris: These were near Montreal.

583. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, including authority to charge to vote 499 of the Appropriation Act No. 5, 1955 (as supplemented), the cost of lands purchased, by means of loans provided for the acquisition of land required to control properties in the vicinity of main terminal airports in order to prevent the erection of hazards to flying and for future development of those airports, that are not held for resale, $4,000,000.

Mr. Dinsdale: This amount is of some considerable proportions, $4 million. I notice that according to the main estimates we are budgeting this year for a decrease in this item. What is the cause of this supplementary increase of $4 million? Can the minister indicate how much of this is going toward the construction of runways, as contrasted with the construction of buildings and so forth?

Mr. Harris: This is not a construction item, Mr. Chairman, nor is it even a purchase item. This is a bookkeeping item designed to charge to current account $4 million which is presently carried in loans and investments. When we purchased the land originally it was on the assumption that the land might, at some time, be disposed of, but it has now been decided not to dispose of this land but to hold it in perpetuity. It is, therefore, charged against our current outgoing rather than as an advance.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Loans, investments and advances—

586. To provide for an advance to the cash reserve fund of the administrative budget of the intergovernmental committee for European migration in an amount of $85,100 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of March, 1956, which is, $84,990.

Mr. Nesbitt: I was wondering if the minister could give us a brief explanation with regard to item 586?

Mr. Harris: The various governments that comprise the intergovernmental committee for migration have to make a contribution towards the working funds of that committee. This is a vote for that purpose. It is in the nature of an advance in the sense that if we were ever to withdraw from the committee there would be a refund coming.

Item agreed to.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Loans, investments and advances—

587. To provide that during the current and subsequent fiscal years the expenditures made by the national film board and shown in the national film board operating account referred to in section 18 of the national film act may, notwithstanding subsection (4) of that section, exceed the receipts shown in the account by not more than $900,000 or such lesser amount as may be fixed by the treasury board, $1.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I am always suspicious of these $1 items because they might mean a million dollars or $10 million. Will the minister say what this is for?

Mr. Harris: Yes. This is for the purpose of increasing the operating—I will call it revolving—fund, although it is not quite that, of the national film board. When set up under the act it was limited to $700,000, but under the Financial Administration Act there is authority to increase the revolving fund and it is proposed to increase that to $900,000, as the amount of money that can go into this fund to be used by the film board for its normal operations.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): According to this item they cannot go any higher than $900,000?

Mr. Harris: That is right.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): What were the receipts they had last year in this revolving fund?

Mr. Harris: I am sorry, I cannot give that. I assume it was probably over $700,000 and that is why they feel inclined to have the ceiling raised. I have not that information, but I will see that it is given to my hon. friend.

Mr. Knowles: I take it, Mr. Chairman, from what the minister says that this $1 item is in lieu of an amendment to the act?

Mr. Harris: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: As the minister knows, some of us do not object to that as a temporary measure, but as I read the first few words of this item it strikes me that it is making a permanent change. It says:

To provide that during the current and subsequent fiscal year—

In other words is this not a case of the minister finding an easier way to amend the act than is usually followed?

Mr. Harris: I know the house would appreciate anything the minister might do to ease legislation through the house. The fact is the situation is just as described. We are in fact, as appears by the wording of the item, amending the act. This has been done on previous occasions, and I am quite prepared to defend the increase in the same manner as I would have to defend an amendment to the act.

Mr. Knowles: Where does the Financial Administration Act come into the picture? I do not see it mentioned in this item.

Mr. Harris: If my hon. friend will look at section 58 of the act, there is a reference to the procedure that is being adopted here.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Loans, investments and advances—

Air services—

589. To provide for the acquisition of land required to control properties in the vicinity of main terminal airports in order to prevent the erection of hazards to flying and for future developments of those airports—further amount required, $3,700,000.

Mr. Dinsdale: Can the minister tell us what is the difference between item 583 and item 589? This amount is to provide for the acquisition of land to control property in the vicinity of main terminal airports, and so forth. It seems to cover much the same purpose as item 583, and both are substantial amounts.

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The difference is that the latter item is for the current purchase of land, as my hon. friend thought the former was. The former is a bookkeeping entry to take care of those that have been dealt with in past years, and which were shown as loans and investments.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Harris moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1956, the sum of $26,213,628 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Harris thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 207, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1956.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall this bill be read the second time now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Harris moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall this bill be read the third time now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Harris moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

AMENDMENTS TO REORGANIZE CAPITAL STRUCTURE, INCREASE AMOUNT OF LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for the second reading of Bill No. 84, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

Mr. G. S. White (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who adjourned the debate does not seem to be here; I do not know whether he is going on or not. I shall be only a moment. There are a few things I should like to suggest to the parliamentary assistant in connection with this bill. The parliamentary assistant, being a member of the legal profession, will understand and appreciate that some of the complaints I offer probably can be rectified.

The first one I should like to suggest to him is that in the whole matter of obtaining a loan under this legislation there is too much red tape from the day you start to the day you finish. The parliamentary assistant is no doubt familiar with the application form, which should certainly take the prize for being the most complicated and complete form that anybody has ever been asked to fill out. I would suggest to him that something be done to simplify the application form.

Other hon. members have mentioned that there should be more offices in eastern Ontario. I think the parliamentary assistant will agree that there have been fairly few applications under this legislation. One of the reasons for that, apart from the red tape, is that the office is situated in Toronto.

I should like to impress upon the parliamentary assistant the fact that in the matter of the evaluation, not too much attention should be paid to the municipal assessments. It is quite true that in the last two or three years there have been reassessments in many counties, but he knows, and as all other members of the legal profession know, the assessment of property in many instances has little relation to the real value of the property.

Mr. Benidickson: The appraiser is not supposed to note municipal assessments.

Mr. White (Hastings-Frontenac): I quite appreciate that, Mr. Speaker; nevertheless you will find your evaluator or appraiser does pay considerable attention to the assessed value of the property. I would suggest to the parliamentary assistant that the evaluator or appraiser pay a great deal more attention to the individual himself who is making the application, to his background, to his character, and to what he has been able to do in farming in the past.

I do not want to repeat all the other suggestions that have been made to the parliamentary assistant except one, and that is that the percentage of the loan could and should be increased to 75 per cent. He is quite aware of the amounts that are lent under the Veterans' Land Act, under the Central Mortgage and Housing Act, and also under the act administered by the province of Ontario.

If the parliamentary assistant would do something to see that the red tape in the application form is eliminated, that evaluations are speeded up, and that something is done about the members of his own profession who handle these loans, it would be a great help. I know the blame is generally placed on the lawyer, which not always is the case. I have found that in many cases before the loan is completed the applicant is very much annoyed, and in many instances wishes that he had never bothered to make the application in the first place.

As far as the rate of interest is concerned, I would suggest to the parliamentary assistant that surely this government could well follow the example of Ontario and make money available at 4 per cent.

Mr. A. M. Campbell (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion I would like to make a few comments. The bill proposes to make some changes which I hope will be beneficial to the farmers. I hope they will be able to get loans put through with a little less red tape. I believe some of the methods used by the department should be changed. For instance, I know of a case where a farmer made an application for a loan and this is the reply he received from the Canadian farm loan board:

> Your preliminary application for a loan from this board has been carefully reviewed.
> As the amount you require on the security offered is very much in excess of what the board may be able to lend, it appears that we are unable to be of assistance to you at this time.

I consider that an extremely abrupt refusal. I think the board should have some method worked out under which they could have said that in this case the greatest amount of money that could be loaned was such and such. This method would give the farmer an idea of how much he could borrow, and he could then make another application.

My request at this time is that some of the red tape be done away with, and that some of the methods currently used in turning down an application for a loan without giving the applicant any indication of what he could borrow should be changed. I think such a policy as is presently in operation is not in the best interests of either the farmers themselves or of the operation of the act.

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): Mr. Speaker, before the bill goes to the committee I would like to address a few words in respect to some of the amendments which have been introduced.

I wonder what the purpose of the farm loan bill is at the present time. Is it to give agriculture some sort of an impetus, or is it to say that the government has done something for the farmers, or is it merely to waste our time in this house through introducing this measure? The reason I suggest that is because the amendments which have been offered are extremely insignificant, and the increases are of no consequence.

In leaving the interest rate at 5 per cent we have an indication that the government is not able to handle money as efficiently as other institutions in this country. I wonder if the parliamentary assistant or the minister could tell us the spread in the cost of the money they are lending to the farmer. By that I mean the difference in the cost of the money to the board and the cost to the farmer. What is the percentage difference in the actual cost, and what is the cost of the administration of these loans?

Mr. Benidickson: The board's administration cost is 1·39 per cent.

Mr. Pallett: In other words you are paying 3·1 per cent for the money?

Mr. Benidickson: Administration costs are 1·39 per cent.

Mr. Pallett: The question I asked concerns the rate you are paying for the money you are lending at 5 per cent. I am leaving that question in order that an answer may be given at some future date.

Another point I would like to mention is that you have here an arbitrary valuation for the farm loan. I know that in the amendment to the Industrial Development Bank Act there is no arbitrary figure for valuation as there is for farm loans. Is this a form of discrimination between industry and agriculture? Are we going to encourage young people in this country to go on farms and develop that industry by not leaving some flexibility in the assessing of one farm against another, or are they to be treated exactly the same? You have a discriminatory clause in the Industrial Development Bank Act. I suggest there is a different approach here. Shall we give industry as much as they want within certain limits, as far as valuation is concerned, but not as to the percentage of the loan, whereas if a farmer wants a loan he is to be bound by the hard and fast limits of the valuation?

Other hon. members have already suggested that another comparison may be drawn by reference to the limits of the National Housing Act. There is a much higher lending value under that act, and again we have a discriminatory factor. Agriculture is in a position today which does not compare favourably with other industries in the country. The government comes forward with an amendment to an act that could assist the farmer, yet the government is not brave enough, shall I say, to make the amendment something with teeth in it.

If we are going to keep our young people on the farm, Mr. Speaker, we will have to give them some encouragement. Apart from the other problems which face these young people there is a problem which is particularly peculiar to agriculture. I am referring to the necessity of refinancing every 20 years. Statistics now show, and have shown for some time, that the average farm in this country is refinanced every 20 years. That is not the case in industry or in any other type of business. If we are going to keep young people on the farm, and if we are going to preserve the industry which has been of such benefit to this country, we have a responsibility to approach it on that basis.

I close my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the lending possibilities under this act are too restrictive, and that in comparing it with the National Housing Act and the Industrial Development Bank Act there appears to be considerable discrimination against the farmer in the government's approach to the handling of money.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I remind hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will conclude the debate.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I must say that I am astonished that the hon. member for Peel would recommend that we increase the rates to farmers. I take it that that was the purpose of his comparison.

Mr. Pallett: No, Mr. Speaker. If the minister reads my remarks he will realize that there was no suggestion that the rate be increased. I suggested that the amount of the loan be increased.

Mr. Harris: May I point out to the hon. member that the rates charged to farmers under this act are less than those charged under the Industrial Development Bank Act, yet he was making an unfavourable comparison as between these two acts.

With respect to the other questions which have been raised in the course of debate, most of them were the sort of questions we anticipated when we decided to send this bill to the banking and commerce committee. While I do not propose to suggest that the questions should not have been put to the house, I do suggest that they be remembered by the hon. members who should put them forward in the banking and commerce committee, for which answers will be prepared after second reading.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

AMENDMENTS TO ENLARGE CLASSES OF LOANS, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 165, to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter was adequately dealt with at the resolution stage, and as it is going to the banking and commerce committee I shall not have more than a word or two to say at this time. I am particularly glad that this bill is going to that committee, because I think there are certain things which need to be explored a bit and upon which we should be enlightened.

I was very surprised to find, as a kind of offshoot of the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines proposal, that the well known Mr. Murchison explained that he had asked the industrial development bank to commit itself for $70 million in securities. I do not suppose he found his way in there entirely on his own, and I confess I was surprised that that had even been contemplated. I shall be interested to learn more about it.

Furthermore, I think it is important for us to explore in greater detail the relationship between the chartered banks and the industrial development bank. The theory is that the industrial development bank steps in only where the other banks have stepped out. I think we might well have further information as to just exactly what is meant by other banks stepping out, whether perhaps they do it under suggestion. At any rate I do not propose to take up any more time because these matters can be discussed better in the committee.

Mr. Ambrose Holowach (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, this bill to extend the lending field of the government's industrial development bank is to be sent to the committee on banking and commerce for further examination. Therefore I shall make my remarks with as much brevity as possible, in the hope that when the bill reaches the committee stage some of my principal observations will be gone into thoroughly along with other critical remarks made by previous speakers, and thus help to eliminate some of the unfavourable aspects of the lending policy of the industrial development bank.

I was pleased to see the general view held by those who spoke during the resolution stage of this legislation, when they emphasized the initial purpose of the bank, namely to facilitate and make more easily available loans for the little enterpriser. I am in full agreement with that, because it seems to me that it is the little enterpriser in our country who needs help at the present time. The big fellows seem to be doing all right. I am thinking of the financial dilemma faced by many businessmen in this country when they make application to the chartered banks, the insurance companies or other commercial agencies for long-term loans at reasonable rates. In most cases they are discouraged and are unable to obtain loans.

The result is that many of our small businesses in this country are unable to expand, are unable to acquire necessary premises, are unable to replace obsolete machinery with new equipment and generally to streamline their activities in order to meet competition from the big corporations. Such expansion is necessary for the little Canadian businessman if he is to survive. The only way he can survive is to match competition by the giant corporations.

Since the opening of parliament on January 10 a variety of subjects have been discussed and just about every segment of our community has been involved. A few minutes ago hon. members quite properly indicated the difficulties of the farmer and urged policies that would alleviate some of his troubles. On previous occasions hon. members have referred to the difficulties which face labour as a consequence of being unemployed. A few days ago the house was in debate on a resolution with respect to inducing heavy industry to locate in depressed areas of our country. However, very little reference has been made to the man who constitutes the majority of the commercial units in our country, the small independent Canadian businessman, in connection with the loaning facilities of the industrial development bank. I think it is proper for us to focus attention upon that little businessman, because he certainly is deserving of attention at this time.

It seems to me that there are two obstacles which face the small Canadian businessman. The first is the taxation policy of this country, which places an extremely heavy burden on him, which strikes at him much harder than it strikes at the large corporations which have access to long-term loans at reasonable rates of interest or which can float stock issues to finance their needs.

Another obstacle is the fact that the little businessman is unable to float long-term loans at reasonable interest rates in order to finance his expansion and at the same time sustain himself when credit and instalment buying are the fashion as they are at this time. I have discussed this problem with many of the small businessmen in my community, and I have found that while they have been able to perfect their skills, while they have been able to invite new business, while they have been able to establish themselves in the community and provide necessary services, invariably they have had difficulty in obtaining sufficient money to bring about the expansion needed to meet new business. As I indicated before, the large corporations are able to do this.

Under present circumstances, in the case of the little businessman one of three things is bound to happen to him. He becomes discouraged and goes out of business, he becomes stagnant, or he loses his independence. By losing his independence I mean that he succumbs to the various inducements held out to him by the giant corporations, and eventually a merger results. I do not think that that is a healthy thing because if we eliminate the little Canadian businessman from our midst we eliminate the most important factor which provides the competitive atmosphere required in our economic life.

Naturally the proper step would be to bring about a certain amount of tax exemption. The Minister of Finance knows very well that the little Canadian businessman is taxed twice, first as a corporate body and then in the form of personal income tax. I submit that the main policy of the industrial development bank should be to indicate that it has a little more confidence in our small businessmen and their enterprises. As I say, if we eliminate the small businessman from our midst there will be in the future serious implications, both in the social and economic sense.

As I understand it, one change to be made is to increase the amount available for loans of over $200,000 from $50 million to $75 million. We must realize that the influx of United States capital during the last ten years has been very heavy, the yearly average being close to $400 million. Therefore it is quite obvious that we should give preference and some sort of inducement to Canadians to invest in Canada.

In addition we should recall that during the post-war years over $4,000 million has been provided to help economies outside of Canada. No one is criticizing the wisdom of our having done that; we did it voluntarily and I think part of that program has been most successful, but it is strange that our government should be so inept in giving this treatment to our own small Canadian businessman.

I am not interested in the applicant who is thinking in terms of a loan of over $200,000, but I am very concerned that priority should be given to the little Canadian businessman who requires a much more modest accommodation, not to get rich in a hurry but to sustain himself in our economic life.

We should consider the trend that is taking place today, and there is statistical evidence to prove that this is a fact. Big business is becoming bigger while the little merchant, the little retailer, the wholesaler, the little processor, is becoming smaller all the time. If that trend continues then I submit that in the next 25 years the little Canadian businessman might well be completely eliminated from our midst. As I stressed before, if we allow that to happen there will be serious implications involved as far as our social and economic structures are concerned. I once again urge that in the matter of lending policy the industrial development bank give high priority to the little Canadian businessman.

There is one more point I wish to emphasize, and that is the need of setting up more offices across Canada in connection with the activities of the industrial development bank, not only in those areas which are developed or undergoing development but particularly in those areas which are underdeveloped. I certainly would like to see also some representation in the province of Alberta.

In concluding, let me say that I think we should do everything we possibly can to induce Canadians to invest in Canada, and a good start would be for the industrial development bank to give incentive to the little Canadian businessman to invest in his own enterprise and in his own country. If we think this matter through carefully I am sure we shall realize that we cannot sustain a healthy prosperity unless we look after him.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): I should like to emphasize again one of the points I raised at an earlier stage on this measure. Now that I have seen the bill I realize that what I had hoped might be done is apparently not going to be done. I note that the measure we have before us proposes to widen the areas in which the industrial development bank may make loans. I presume that means that the government considers that those particular fields are fields in which we require an expanded investment, and it wishes to make that investment more readily available to those wishing to enter those fields.

I am going to suggest that it is not sufficient merely to widen the scope of the bank in this way if we are not at the same time going to widen its capacity to enter that field. I believe that the industrial development bank offers us an opportunity to undertake something that we are going to have to do sooner or later in this country, and that is to direct as well as we can the flow of investment into those areas which in the consideration of this parliament are the areas in which the Canadian economy requires development.

I imagine that a great many hon. members listened yesterday, as I did, to Mr. James Duncan, the president of Massey Harris, speaking to a meeting in Ottawa on his recent experiences in the Soviet union. Like me, they must have been impressed with Mr. Duncan's report of the vigour with which the Russian regime and the Russian people were pursuing a policy of carefully considered economic development. They were, according to Mr. Duncan, directing their efforts to development in those fields in which the Russian regime considered the Russian economy required development.

They, of course, are doing it there with a particularly ruthless hand and without any regard whatever for the individual comforts or desires of the Russian people, at least, not further than they require to attend to those desires and wishes. But it is becoming increasingly evident that it is this carefully designed and carefully controlled flow of investment in the Soviet union that has created the menace, economically, which now confronts the western world.

If we are going to meet that menace, if we are going to be able to compete in the world for the survival of our political and social ideas, then we are going to have to meet them in the economic field. I suggest that the industrial development bank, an instrument that has already been developed in this country, could have its scope very much widened and could accomplish that end. At the present time, of course, it is severely limited by the fact that its total assets for lending do not exceed $100 million; $25 million in capital and the power to issue debentures for an additional $75 million. A $100 million investment is not a very large item in the sort of economy that was described to us the other night by the Minister of Finance.

I should hope that the government would see fit, if not this session then in the next session, to consider seriously making the industrial development bank a deliberate instrument for the direction of investment in the Canadian economy. I noticed, for instance, in the papers the Minister of Finance tabled before his budget speech, the figures were given for the increased disbursements in the different sectors of our economy. He reported that the corporation investment income in Canada had increased last year to, I believe, some $756 million.

One of the complaints that have been made both in this house and outside this house by people who should know—people such as Mr. Coyne, the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. James Muir, the president of the Royal Bank of Canada and many other leading industrialists and financiers in Canada—has been that the Canadian investor by and large is not particularly interested in moving into the more venturesome fields of investment and that he has, on the other hand, tended to invest in safe, fixed-yield investments rather than take the risks in developmental types of investment, with the consequence that we have had the vast inflow of foreign capital into those fields of investment.

Whilst we may take the position that investment of this sort from any source does have the effect of developing our Canadian economy, we should bear in mind that it has the effect of removing completely from the control of the Canadian parliament the fields in which our economy is going to expand. I would suggest that, since the Canadian investor appears to be a rather cautious soul, we might meet his cautious desires for safe investment by providing the opportunity in the form of very little expanded debenture issues of the bank of industrial development, which would then be available for investment in the areas of our economy that are now virtually a foreign preserve.

Before this measure goes through the house I hope there will be an opportunity for the government to reconsider the rather restricted increase in the powers of the bank proposed in this measure, and to take some steps toward making it an instrument of investment direction in our economy.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I received the following communication:

Ottawa, March 22, 1956.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 22nd March, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Secretary to the Governor General (Administrative).

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

AMENDMENTS TO ENLARGE CLASSES OF LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for the second reading of Bill No. 165, to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act.

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few remarks to make on second reading of the bill to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act. The first is that I am pleased to see that the amending bill indicates that the scope of operations of the bank is to be enlarged. I would suggest for the minister's consideration that the scope be enlarged a little bit further. Industrial development in Canada is going into fields which are not yet covered in the Industrial Development Bank Act and which may well need certain large-scale assistance.

In my own county of Peel we are much concerned with the specialized types of agriculture. I suggest that the development of agriculture in that county, in certain types of crops such as fruit, vegetables and indoor crops, is actually approaching the development stage of a small industry. Even individual farms must be capitalized on a large scale. The machinery required for their operation is extensive. They cannot be dealt with properly under the farm loan acts, on the capitalization set out in those acts. They are progressing from the stage of family farms to that of more commercial enterprises.

Two sessions ago, Mr. Speaker, in the debate that took place with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann), I recall that he said that in some provinces of Canada farming was a way of life but in Ontario it was an industry. Referring to those words of his, I would suggest that we who are giving second reading to the bill amending the Industrial Development Bank Act recognize that progress and enlarge the scope of this act to include agriculture. I would suggest that we recognize the much larger capitalization required today by young people to get into agriculture, and at the same time recognize the fact that agriculture is becoming more scientific and in many ways more nearly based on the industrial approach.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I note with interest and without further comment that in the act which is before us there is no specific provision concerning the amount of interest that may be charged. I suppose that each individual loan is negotiated on its own basis. If there is good security the bank might possibly advance loans at a low interest rate, whereas if the loan is not so well secured the interest rate might be higher.

One feature of the operation of the industrial development bank that I am pleased to note is shown on the annual report to the Minister of Finance for 1955 at page 11. There we find that the revenue for the year ended September 30, 1955, is up over that of the year previous by $98,684, and that the bank has managed to decrease its operating expenses by $10,212. In those figures I suggest there is a good lesson for government. They show that this bank, operating on a business basis, can show a profit, can increase revenues and decrease expenses. Here is an example that might perhaps be followed by all branches of government, through adopting the system followed by the bank by means of which they have managed to decrease expenses in this year of expanding government expenses.

One other suggestion that I desire to make for the consideration of the minister and the house is that in industrial expansion there is a problem that was faced a few years ago in connection with housing expansion. In order to find accommodation, industry must resort to new sources of capital. People who could not afford to build their own homes were allowed to rent apartments. Those apartments were financed under the National Housing Act. I suggest that the same situation faces many small industries today. They have not the equity capital with which to furnish their machinery, keep available the necessary working capital and at the same time purchase a new factory. Today in Canada there is a shortage of money for people who would be prepared to invest some equity in a factory and make it available to an operating business of some sort on a rental basis.

To you, Mr. Speaker, and to this house I suggest that steps might be taken under this act whereby people who are prepared to build factories to enlarge the industrial capacity of this country, and to rent those factories to industries, might be able to borrow money under provisions similar to those at present provided for housing under the National Housing Act.

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak for only a few minutes in connection with second reading of this bill, because I feel that at the resolution stage I expressed my views on as wide a basis as possible. There are, however, a couple of observations that I should like to make and I shall avoid, if at all possible, repeating what I said on the previous occasion.

I believe there are a few matters which might be considered by the committee upon reference of this bill to them. One of the things that it seems to me will be required for the effective broadening of the scope of the work of this institution is the opening of additional offices of the bank in more centres in Canada. We referred to that matter previously. Apparently there are only four regional offices. If we are going to make this type of money available to smaller business institutions, we must get down to their level. I would hope that the committee might give serious consideration to a recommendation of that kind when it is considering this bill.

The second thing I want to mention is this. The additional funds that are being made available, it appears, are to be limited to those institutions which require loans of $200,000 or more. An institution of that type can ordinarily go into the bond market, through the usual financial institutions, and obtain the kind of money it needs. I would think that what the country needs is an expansion of funds for those institutions which require help between the help that can be given to them by ordinary banking methods and the help they can obtain in the bond market. I would suggest that more consideration might be given to this phase of the bank's activities.

I note with satisfaction one particular point, and that is that officers of the bank may be delegated considerably more power than they have had in the past. I understand that the supervisor for the whole of the Ontario area has discretionary power up to $5,000, but otherwise all applications made to him must be referred to the head office of the bank in Montreal. If we are going to have this type of business get down to the level I have spoken about, then obviously we shall have to have greater responsibility and greater authority placed in the hands of the people who actually deal with the applicants.

At this stage, too, before we embark on this type of endeavour on a grand scale, it might be wise if the committee to which this measure is to be referred called in representatives of the chartered banks to see if, in fact, those institutions might not be interested in expanding their activities in this field. You will recall that at one stage those institutions were not interested in loans under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. However, when the necessary legislation was enacted by this house they lost little time in getting into the field in a big way. Although there may have been some reluctance at one time about being involved in this field, it seems to me that before it is expanded on too large a scale we ought to hear evidence as to whether those institutions might see their way clear to provide funds on this type of security.

If that should not be the case, sir, then I say there is going to be a great deal more money required by this industrial development bank if it is going to perform its proper function. I was very interested to hear the president of Canadian National Railways say that the $500 million program of that company spread over the last four years and the year to come has been financed entirely through Canadian bond houses. It is an indication that there are people in this country who are prepared to invest in Canadian industry, that the money is here, and what is needed is the proper incentive to get it into the hands of the people who need it.

If it is the intention to spread the influence of this institution, then I would strongly suggest that some type of public offering of the securities which this bank will require to market to get the necessary money should be floated on the open market in Canada. We should not confine our efforts to loans or advances from the Bank of Canada. If we do this we will be seeing that industry in Canada is financed by money from this country. If there is anything we need to have proof of today, it is the fact that we and our financial institutions have faith in the future of industry here.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR NEW THREE-YEAR POOL, MAXIMUM GUARANTEE OF LOANS, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act by providing for a new three-year pool commencing April 1, 1956, and ending March 31, 1959; to provide further that the maximum amount of bank loans made in the new period and guaranteed under the act shall be three hundred million dollars.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Charlton: Is the minister going to make any statement at all?

Mr. Harris: I could make a brief statement, though nearly the whole purpose of the bill is outlined in the resolution. I could add two things. I should, perhaps, emphasize that as the resolution indicates the present authority of the Farm Improvement Loans Act expires in a few days, and the purpose of this bill is to renew it for a further period of three years. In addition to that, it is proposed to increase the amount of the permissible loan from $4,000 to $5,000. It is also intended to provide for an amendment which will take care of certain legal doubts which apparently have arisen as to whether or not the banks can give what is known as a guaranteed loan under the act in connection with certain assets which in certain provinces are the subject of statutory provision that those particular assets may not be charged. The increase in the amount of the revolving fund comes about as a result of the expected increase in the use of the act, and the increased amount of the individual loan.

Mr. Charlton: Will the minister indicate also whether it is his intention to send this measure to a committee?

Mr. Harris: Yes, I should have added that this will also be sent to a committee after second reading.

Mr. Argue: We are pleased, Mr. Chairman, to support this resolution providing for the extension of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. We believe this is an excellent example of the type of system that should be used and could be used to provide loans to needy borrowers, good farmers, at a reasonable rate of interest. The act has now been in operation since 1945, and up to the end of 1954 loans had been made totalling more than $513 million. The government provides a guarantee of 10 per cent of the aggregate loans granted by the banks; therefore the total amount guaranteed in this period amounted to over $50 million. In spite of the very large guarantee, and in spite of the very large sums of money lent under this act, the losses in that period amounted to less than $150,000. The government's experience in this field, therefore, has been excellent. Within this period the government suffered a loss of only one three hundred and fiftieth of the guarantee involved.

I believe the government should consider adopting this type of practice in connection with other legislation. Here is a method the government uses in co-operation with the banks, and with a guarantee of only 10 per cent it has facilitated the making of many loans. I suggest that the experience of the government with respect to this act to date has been very happy. I am pleased that once again when this act is being extended the amount of the guarantee of a loan to an individual applicant is once again increased.

[Mr. Harris.]

The last time the act was before parliament the amount was increased from $3,000 to $4,000. This time it is being increased from $4,000 to $5,000. I think the government might have increased that amount even further.

There has been a tremendous increase in the cost of the things farmers buy for which they obtain money under this act. The item that farmers have to purchase most frequently is farm machinery. As hon. members know, there have been tremendous increases in the prices of farm machinery. Knowing the amount of farm machinery, to say nothing of other improvements, that may be needed on a modern farm, I think the government might have allowed the ceiling for which a guarantee would be applicable to be considerably above the suggested $5,000 figure. I think it is generally agreed that an efficient farm today needs machinery to the value of about $20,000. I would suggest that as far as the ceiling on the individual loan is concerned, the guarantee might well have been doubled and applied to a maximum of $8,000.

There is one further suggestion I should like to make to the minister. I know he has already given some consideration to this matter. I hope he will call in the credit unions at an early date, and that the role they may be able to play under an act such as this will be actively considered. I hope the government will give favourable consideration, as I am sure it will, to co-operating with the credit unions in this field in so far as the credit unions themselves may request and within the terms of the legislation itself.

As has been pointed out in the past, the number of credit unions has increased very rapidly. Some 1,600,000 Canadians are members of credit unions. We believe that credit unions, and the whole idea of credit unions, should be encouraged by the government. What has actually happened in practice in credit unions in the making of farm improvement loans has very frequently been this. A farmer has gone to a bank and applied for a loan under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and for one reason or another the bank has turned him down. The farmer, following the rejection by the bank manager, has gone to a credit union, made an application for a loan, and very frequently has received a loan from the credit union for the same purpose. The records of the credit unions in regard to loans for farm machinery and farm improvements will show that their losses have been very small, in spite of the fact that the loans the credit unions have made in general have been loans that would entail a greater risk than similar loans made by the banks.

I am hopeful that before the end of this session the government, by new legislation or by regulation, may extend this act to credit unions so the full 10 per cent guarantee may be given to credit unions and that farmers generally will be able to take greater advantage of this method of obtaining loans at a reasonable rate, namely 5 per cent.

I want to point out again that this is a method by which borrowers can obtain loans at a reasonable rate of interest, and I hope the government will expand this type of legislation so that the very high rates of interest now charged by some other lending institutions in this country may be reduced from the very high rate of over 24 per cent to as little as possible, with the ultimate objective of getting the rate down to the same level provided for in this type of legislation.

Mr. Smith (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Chairman, we in this group are prepared to support this resolution preceding a bill to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act. We are satisfied to reserve any comments we may have until the bill is introduced in the house. I would like to compliment the Minister of Finance on giving us the information at the outset that the bill will be referred to a committee for study at a later date.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Harris thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 208, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time; next sitting of the house?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, on that point, since there seems to be general approbation of what we are doing, I wonder whether we can have second reading now. Immediately after Easter the committee will be seized of the bill, and hon. members will in the meantime have the bill to study. Unless someone feels there should be further debate I can really see no particular reason why the bill could not have second reading now and go to the committee, although it would not be discussed until immediately after Easter.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, we have not seen the bill yet. I do not know whether or not this is just the proper procedure. We are perfectly willing to put it through if the minister will assure us that it is going to committee.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, my point is this. It is obvious that the first two weeks after Easter, will be taken up with the budget debate and other incidental matters. If this bill is passed now I assure my hon. friend that except for one item I mentioned, the resolution covers practically everything that is in the bill. I do not think the hon. member will be taken by surprise at all. We can have some useful discussion in the committee at that time. If, on the other hand, we do not give second reading to the bill tonight I am satisfied that it will not reach second reading, unless by agreement at some time, until at least some time in the third week after we come back.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall this bill be read the second time now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Harris moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the bill be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce?

Mr. Argue: Might I make a suggestion to the minister? Does he not think that it would be more appropriate for a bill of this kind to be referred to the agriculture committee of this house where we do have the experts, I suggest, as far as farm loans are concerned?

Mr. Harris: Well, I certainly have no objection, sir. It has always been standard practice for bills of the Minister of Finance to go to the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Knowles: It might be a good experience for the Minister of Finance to appear before the committee on agriculture.

Mr. Harris: Since hon. members have been kind to me tonight, we shall change that to agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Harris moves, seconded by Mr. Prudham, that this bill be referred to the standing committee on agriculture.

Motion agreed to.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR HIGHER CONTRIBUTION TO COSTS OF HIGHWAY

Hon. W. E. Harris (for the Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act to provide that the Minister of Finance may pay a higher contribution for a portion of the highway in a province not exceeding ten per centum thereof; to extend contributions to costs incurred up to December 31, 1960 and to terminate all contributions on May 31, 1961; and to provide further that the aggregate of all expenditures under the act may be increased to a maximum of two hundred and fifty million dollars.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Hodgson: Would the parliamentary assistant make a statement?

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, the Trans-Canada Highway Act, which became law on December 10, 1949, was enacted to encourage and assist in the construction of a continuous high standard highway following the shortest practical east-west route across Canada. The act provides that the federal government may make contributions to a provincial government of 50 per cent of the construction costs of the highway over a period of seven years, and the agreements under the act provide further that the federal government may pay in respect of highway previously constructed along the route of the trans-Canada highway between April 1, 1928 and December 10, 1949. The estimated cost of completing the highway was $300 million in 1949, and the amount voted by parliament as the federal government share was $150 million.

The total length of the highway along the designated route in all ten provinces is approximately 5,000 miles. Quebec has not signed an agreement under the statute and has not participated. The mileage in the nine participating provinces, including Banff and Yoho national parks, is 4,580 miles.

For distances totalling approximately 2,850 miles there is a paved highway, although to date the equivalent of only 1,600 miles have been constructed to the approved standard. Thus there remain approximately 1,545 miles of highway unpaved, and there are 185 miles on which there is no highway of any kind.

It is therefore now apparent that the terms of the present agreements, which provide for the completion of the project by December 9, 1956, cannot be met. There have been various reasons for delays, including weather, the necessity of diverting materials and effort into the defence build-up at the time of the Korean war, difficult terrain and others. In the over-all, however, progress has been disappointingly slow.

The purpose of this amendment is to seek authority to introduce a bill to extend the period of construction, to provide additional funds, and to alter the formula so as to enable the federal government to provide greater financial assistance in constructing select sections with a view to closing at the earliest possible date those gaps in which no highway exists at all at the present time, or in which there is a road of inferior standard which needs to be rebuilt.

In no province does the gap or the combined lengths of gaps where there is no highway of any kind exceed 10 per cent of the total mileage in that province. The resolution therefore indicates that the bill will seek authority for the Minister of Finance to pay a higher contribution for a portion of the highway in a province not exceeding 10 per cent of the mileage. The federal government contribution for these gaps will be increased from 50 per cent to 90 per cent of the cost of construction.

The resolution also refers to the extended period for which contributions may be made. The present terminating date, as I have indicated, is December 9, 1956. The bill will seek authority to extend the period for construction to December 31, 1960, and a further five months to wind up the accounting. The termination date for all contributions therefore will be set as May 31, 1961.

The last financial provision which is set forth in the resolution has to do with the total amount of money authorized by parliament for federal contributions. As I have already indicated and as the committee is aware, the limitation in the present statute is $150 million. Authority will be sought in the bill to increase this amount to a maximum of $250 million.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, this legislation comes forward at a very timely moment in our nation's development, because the first act which became effective on December 10, 1949, will have lived its life on December 10, 1956, I suppose. We now have a new bill offering the provinces an additional expenditure of $100 million toward the completion of the road.

The first sum of $150 million which was the dominion government's share was too small in the first place, and this measure which is before us I suggest is too little and too late, because the cost of construction has increased a great deal in the last six years. The amount of traffic travelling on our roads has also increased, and the life of the roads is shortened. The sum of $150 million was spent on the construction of roads with a 22-foot top. Anyone who knows anything about building roads is aware that a 22-foot top is not adequate under present day circumstances.

Mr. Bourget: It is 24 feet maximum.

Mr. Hodgson: I think it is a minimum of 22 feet. A lot of the construction has been with a 22-foot top. Anyone would know that kind of top will wear out in less than ten years. I can show you roads built with a top of 22 feet which were constructed approximately 10 years ago but which are worn out now.

The trans-Canada highway is a national highway. We as members of parliament like to brag about it as such as, I am sure, do hon. members of the government. But is it a national highway in fact? I have my doubts about this, because up until now the provinces have been paying 50 per cent of the total cost. The government now has come through with this bill extending the time limit for another five years and increasing the sum of money from $150 million to $250 million. The government has included a proviso that it will pay 90 per cent of the 10 per cent remaining gap. That is something new. I repeat, the federal government will pay 90 per cent of the 10 per cent gap.

Mr. Bourget: I am sorry, but I think the hon. member misunderstands. The federal government proposes to pay not 10 per cent of the gap but it proposes to pay 90 per cent of 10 per cent of the total length of the mileage in any province.

Mr. Hodgson: Are you sure it is not 90 per cent of the gap in each province?

Mr. Bourget: Yes, it may be the gap, but it is 90 per cent of 10 per cent of the total mileage in any province.

Mr. Hodgson: For the gaps that are left, I suppose. This little book says it is 10 per cent of the distances that are left in each of the provinces. Therefore the government is going to pay 90 per cent of the 10 per cent gaps that are left. I suggest that this government should pay 90 per cent of the cost of the construction of the whole road. As I understand it the dominion government has not the machinery or the ways and means for the building of roads and therefore they place the responsibility upon the provinces. But this is a national road and it should be built, not 10 per cent of the gap but all the gap, by this federal government at least to the extent of 90 per cent.

Then there is the matter of maintenance. It is estimated that this road will be completed in 1961, but I have my doubts. Some of these gaps are to be found in the most rugged country, and much of the trans-Canada highway is going to be worn out before it is completed, especially the 22-foot portions. This road should be built to a minimum width of 30 feet, and where the traffic is heavy it should be at least a four-lane highway.

You are asking the provinces to pay 50 per cent, and they also receive 50 per cent on the old highways that are used or included in the national highway. It must be remembered that this is practically the only road in Canada to which the dominion government contributes one iota. Last year a total of $600 million was spent on highways in Canada, $426 million of which was spent by the provinces, $110 million by the municipalities and a measly $27 million by the federal government. About $17 million of that was in connection with the trans-Canada highway, with the balance presumably being spent on roads in national parks.

Highway traffic is increasing at a terrific rate, the number of cars having almost doubled in the last six years, as well as the number of trucks. The provinces are faced with a problem in keeping up their highway systems, especially if the present traffic trend should continue. The province of Ontario is hemmed in almost like a horseshoe by the United States, and it must have good roads. Good roads are necessary for defence purposes. In case of emergency the people of the cities of Ontario are not going to go east and west; they are not going to go south to the United States. Most of them are going to go north. It is fortunate that we have a great tourist development in Haliburton and Victoria which could take care of many people in case of an emergency. But there must be roads, there must be ways and means of getting them there.

We must have good commercial and tourist roads running north and south, not only in Ontario but in many other provinces. The provinces are hard pressed to find money with which to build these north and south roads. It is more important today to have north and south roads than it is to have east and west roads, because such roads are necessary for commercial and tourist purposes as well as for national and civil defence. There must be good roads to places like Sarnia, Detroit, Windsor, London, the Niagara district, Hamilton, Toronto, and do not forget Port Hope where our great uranium centre is located. Then there are the cities and towns and bridges along the St. Lawrence. The same applies to Quebec, and that is probably one reason Quebec did not come into this national highway scheme.

However, this is like a man who is hungry; half a loaf is better than no bread at all. I do not think the dominion government has an excuse in the world for not paying 90 per cent both of the cost of construction and the cost of maintenance. They will have to start maintaining some of it long before the last of the road is built. This government retains about 78 cents of every tax dollar collected in Canada, including the provinces and municipalities, and they pay back a much smaller percentage than that. I understand that last year they took $302 million out of the tourist industry, and for the first seven months of the last fiscal year they collected $116 million in excise and sales taxes from the motor industry. During that same period they spent less than $16 million on this road. They have taken the lion's share, they have grabbed off the taxes, they are grabbing off every bit of revenue that comes in.

Someone has said that there is a large stretch of highway in Ontario to be finished. Let us not forget that Ontario pays about 47 per cent of all the revenue collected by the dominion government, besides paying its share of the cost of building this road and everything else. I am not going to move an amendment to the resolution because I do not think it would do any good, but I submit that this government should get together with the provinces and decide on a design for this road which would apply to the whole highway. This should not be left to the provinces, and then have the onus placed on them because they have not done it this way or that way. Something should be organized so that a better road may be built than has been built in the past, much of it in the form of a four-lane highway.

I will support the resolution because, as I said before, half a loaf is better than none. However, I think the parliamentary assistant had better take this back to his minister, to the department and the government and let them understand that they are not paying within 40 per cent of their share of the cost of this road. They are paying too little too late.

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Chairman, back in 1949 when the government introduced a resolution designed to assist the provinces financially in the construction of Canada's first national highway, I am sure those who voted for the legislation and Canadians generally felt that at long last the federal government had accepted its responsibility for the construction of an integrated system of highways in this country, and had acknowledged that it was absolutely necessary that the government take this step. I am sure Canadians thought that the commencement of the trans-Canada highway was the first step toward the realization of a system of integrated highways across this country.

Seven years have passed since the introduction of that legislation, legislation which Canadians thought would usher in a new era in motor transportation in this country. As has been mentioned already by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Public Works, the progress made to date has been most disappointing. The figures we have before us in the last report point out the truth of the parliamentary assistant's statement. Of a total mileage of some 4,591 miles, only 1,964 miles are presently paved, 4,269 miles being passable. That is not very encouraging after the seven years this work has been under way.

Apparently something went wrong. Evidently the minister thought things were not going as well as he hoped, because on November 14 last he called a conference at which representatives of all the provinces participating in the trans-Canada highway were present and at which the question was gone into most thoroughly. The result of that conference, as we know, was the proposal that is before us this evening in the form of the amendment that we are now asked to ratify.

The original proposal, that is a fifty-fifty sharing of costs between the federal government and the provincial governments, plus the new proposal that is before the house this evening, points up very clearly that the government so far is not prepared to accept its responsibility for this undertaking which, in so far as the provinces are concerned, places them in an almost untenable position.

I think it should be apparent to everyone, including the government, that after all is said and done highways are only a part—possibly the most important part—of an overall system of communication in this country. It is difficult to understand why, in spite of the fact that highways are only a part of such a system, they have been completely ignored while the government has been prepared to accept its responsibility in connection with every other phase of an integrated communication system.

Of course I have in mind the Canadian Pacific Railway, which without federal aid would never have been built. I do not think anybody would dispute that fact. As a matter of fact, I doubt that the Canadian Pacific Railway would be able to operate today were it not for the very substantial amount of the taxpayers' money that this government is prepared to give that company in the form of subsidies in order to bolster its revenues and enable it to carry on. Then, of course, we have the Canadian National Railway, which is the total responsibility of this government, as it should be if it is going to be a national road. The Canadian National Railway has assets and is capitalized, if my figures are correct, to the amount of over $2\frac{1}{2}$ billion. Trans-Canada Air Lines is another part of that communication system which is so important to the welfare of the Canadian people. While radio and television are somewhat removed from the field of transportation, nevertheless they are very definitely communications that are part and parcel of the whole system. Again these are operated by the federal government. The federal government accepts the responsibility in large measure for the success of that organization.

Then we come to the St. Lawrence seaway, again in the transportation field and again with the federal government accepting its responsibility toward the construction and maintenance of that great waterway. Only quite recently we were asked as taxpayers of Canada to contribute again very substantially to another phase of Canada's communication and transport system, namely the building of the northern Ontario section of the trans-Canada pipe line. Some $130 million of the taxpayers' money will be used if that line is completed.

I am not critical of many of these items I consider necessities in our communication and transportation system. I believe the government is to be commended on the stand it has taken and the responsibility it has accepted to see that this system has been successful. But it is fantastic, in the light of the responsibility the government has been prepared to accept in these other fields, that it has divorced itself completely from the idea that highways and roads are the joint responsibility of the provinces and the federal government and as such must be relieved of any cost-sharing or any responsibility such as we see across the border to the south.

As one Canadian organization pointed out not long ago, in a nation that has risen to the position of the fourth trading nation in the world and that is recognized as one of the most progressive and most advanced nations in the world, it is almost impossible for its citizens to drive from one coast to the other. That is not a very nice picture. As the hon. member who just took his seat pointed out, the need for roads is growing every day. The number of motor vehicles, both cars and trucks, is growing by leaps and bounds. As a matter of fact, a publication issued by the Canadian automobile chamber of commerce has some very significant and interesting figures, showing what has taken place in the last three or four years in so far as the increase in motor vehicle sales in this country are concerned. For instance, in 1954 sales of cars and trucks in Canada were valued at in the neighbourhood of $1 billion, whereas in 1946 the sales of cars and trucks in this country amounted to $193,329,000. That will give you some indication of the strain that is being placed on the highways and roads of this country. The number of motor vehicles has doubled in Canada in the past two or three years, and it was estimated that by the end of 1955 there would be four million motor vehicles on the roads.

That, of course, points up the need for more roads and for better roads. Subsequently, with this increase in traffic, the existing highways in this country are rapidly deteriorating, at a faster rate than the provinces, whose responsibility it is now to maintain them, are able to do the job that is necessary.

I think we should argue that it is the federal government's responsibility to build highways in this country, because the federal government gets very large revenues from the sale of motor vehicles. It not only receives excise and sales taxes from the sale of vehicles in this country, but it receives taxes on tires and tubes, and excise taxes on foreign cars and other vehicles coming into this country.

I should like to quote these figures because I think they are very significant when we are talking about federal responsibility. In the last four years the total sales tax and the total excise tax collected by the federal government on automobiles and trucks in Canada amounted to over $611 million. The excise tax on tires and tubes, according to a return tabled in the house only three or four days ago, indicates that the government collected in taxes something in the neighbourhood of $11 million. Again, the customs duty on foreign cars coming into Canada and sold in Canada has amounted annually for a good number of years to something in the neighbourhood of $8 million.

When we add up all these figures, just for the last four years, we find that the revenue from these three sources alone amounts to something in excess of $700 million. So we feel that, taking these figures into consideration, there is a good argument that the government is shirking its responsibility in not going forward with a bold and imaginative program to build a comprehensive network of highways across Canada.

I know it could be argued that the provinces get a large revenue from motor licences and from many other sources that have to do with transportation. That is true. But I should like to point out that the provinces of Canada, in 1955, for roads and highways budgeted an amount of something like $600 million. The total amount spent by the federal government for the construction of roads and highways was something in the neighbourhood of $27 million.

I think what I have said sums up briefly a few of the reasons why we believe the federal government must accept, in greater measure than anything we have seen heretofore, its responsibility in connection with a highway program. After all, the magnitude of the job which the provinces are obliged to do to maintain the farm-to-market roads as well as the highways places them, as I said a moment ago, in an impossible position, and one which they are not going to be able to maintain in the future unless some assistance is forthcoming from the federal government.

What has happened to account for the fact that the present trans-Canada highway program has not become the success that it was hoped it would be by those who introduced it? There are several reasons. First and possibly most important is the fact that the 50-50 sharing of costs between the federal government and the provincial governments was not by any stretch of the imagination a realistic division of costs. It did not take into consideration the purchase of land for the right of way, nor did it take into consideration the substantial costs involved in moving telephone poles and many of the other obstacles the government found in many cases when they laid out the right of way. When you take into consideration the extra costs, instead of there being a 50-50 sharing of cost we find it is more in the neighbourhood of 40-60, with the provinces being responsible for the 60 per cent rather than the 40 per cent.

Another regressive feature was that the provinces were responsible for any cloverleafs that had to be built, and any overpasses that were necessary on the route. These two features are items of great expenditure. In so far as the provinces going ahead at a faster rate than they did is concerned, possibly one of the restraining factors was the fact I mentioned a moment ago, namely that they are responsible for their roads within their own boundaries. Everyone knows it is absolutely necessary that the provinces maintain and build to the best of their ability the roads which the people within the boundaries of each province necessarily are obliged to use for their day to day living. Increased construction costs have also added to the burden. Hence a combination of a great many factors has been the cause which appears to have retarded the construction of the trans-Canada highway.

As I pointed out, the amendment with which we are dealing this evening is not going to help this situation materially, because the 90 per cent the federal government is prepared to pay on 10 per cent of the total mileage within each province in effect amounts to only 4 per cent or 5 per cent of the total cost of the trans-Canada highway. When we take the new proposal and add it to the original proposal of the 50-50 break in cost sharing, and when we take into consideration the fact that the provinces are responsibile for the things I mentioned a moment ago, we find that the breakdown in reality is still only 50-50 in so far as sharing of costs is concerned, and that is not enough.

The hon. member who just took his seat said this new proposal will end, in so far as the latest statement we have is concerned, in 1961 and he doubted whether the road would be completed by that date. I also doubt very much whether it will be completed then. I think we must remember that the job which must be done in British Columbia, for instance—the fabulous and fantastic job that the provincial government of British Columbia is facing today—makes it appear extremely unlikely that they will have their portion of the highway completed by 1961. Of course we also know that the terms of the proposal are that the money will be forthcoming, under the new terms, provided that each province allocates each year as much money as the average they have allocated in the last two years in connection with the ordinary construction of the road.

While I am not going to deal with the situation as we find it in the United States in so far as cost sharing is concerned between the federal government and the state governments, it is interesting to note that the federal government of the United States assists in the building and maintenance of all the roads in that country. Last year it budgeted for something in the neighbourhood of $700 million to help build and maintain a comprehensive road grid in that country. Hence we are somewhat disappointed that the new proposal that has been made is not going far enough.

We would suggest that an announcement should be made now as to what are plans of the federal government for when the trans-Canada highway is completed in the provinces. For instance, what is going to happen or what is the program going to be in the province of Manitoba, or the province of Ontario or the province of Saskatchewan when they complete their section of the highway while other provinces still have not completed their sections? We think some statement should be made now as to what the policy and program is to be in that regard.

While I am not prepared to argue highway construction in connection with civil defence, I think we must recognize the fact that we in this country are spending large sums of money on civil defence. We all know, of course, that highways and roads are one of the most important factors in connection with civil defence. Is the government going to assist the provinces to expand their highway systems on completion of their sections of the trans-Canada highway? I think that is one of the questions which must be answered soon by this government. We believe that a more realistic proposal than the one suggested in the amendment with which we are dealing here this evening would be one under which the federal government would assume 75 per cent of the total cost of the trans-Canada highway. That should include the cost of the right of way and the other costs in connection with the right of way such as the overpasses and the cloverleafs that are necessary on such a highway. The government should now make known its intention if it intends to provide an overall highway program in co-operation with the provinces, and that proposal should not be delayed. Canadians should know now whether or not the government is prepared to go forward with this integrated system of highways which we all expected would result from the legislation passed in this house in 1949.

Mr. Pearkes: I should like to make a few brief remarks regarding this resolution, Mr. Chairman. I think it is appropriate that I should do so, as I come from a province which has exceptional difficulties in so far as the construction of main and arterial roads is concerned, and a province which historically has seen the development of settlements in that province based upon roads which have been constructed by senior governments. From the very earliest days of the history of the province of British Columbia, roads constructed by the military during the days of the gold rush into the Cariboo have been examples of what could be done by senior governments in the way of helping to develop and colonize a province.

It was due to the fact that a road had been constructed by the royal engineers at the time of the Cariboo gold rush that miners, after they had reached their destination and explored their claims, found that they could settle not only on the mainland but also on Vancouver island. It is very largely due to that initial effort in federal road construction that the development of British Columbia proceeded.

We have peculiar problems so far as British Columbia is concerned, because we are shut off from the rest of Canada by great mountain ranges which have only a limited number of passes, and it is because of that fact that one road leading from the prairies and eastern Canada is inadequate. One east-west road is not sufficient because of the terrain and the fact that the various mountain ranges limit north-south communication. It is, therefore, of importance that there should be at least three main roads leading from eastern Canada into British Columbia.

Now, of course, we welcome the fact that some assistance is being given to the provincial government in the matter of road development. I do feel, like the previous speakers, that the assistance is rather meagre and it is coming rather late. I realize the great difficulties in the construction of the road. I believe that in British Columbia the trans-Canada highway is costing somewhere in the neighbourhood of $200,000 per mile, which of course is a very large sum of money. It is beyond the powers of even a province as prosperous as British Columbia to develop more than one road.

I refer also to the need for more than one road in relation to defence. We have to have the opportunity of moving, if necessary, by road not only in a direct line east and west, but also to the northeast into that great country north of Edmonton. All these roads have to be developed. One point which causes me some concern regarding the construction of the trans-Canada highway along its present route is the strength of the bridges on that route. The weight of military transport vehicles as well as that of civilian vehicles is increasing all the time. One hears of immense vehicles which have to be moved for military requirements that only the very strongest bridges could support. I feel that the type of bridge now being constructed, as I have seen them along the trans-Canada highway, would not carry the heaviest military vehicles. There is no other way to move these vehicles in many parts of our province except by road. I would therefore call that point to the attention of the parliamentary assistant.

One other point I should like to make concerns the ribbon development which is taking place on the outskirts of so many cities. I know that on the new portion of the trans-Canada highway out of Victoria there are innumerable auto courts, all kinds of stores and small buildings being constructed. If we are going to have that sort of ribbon development we will defeat one of the main objects of the trans-Canada highway as well as add to the risk of the loss of life on the highway, where school children and others will run across. I would hope it might be possible, in view of the money which is being spent by the federal government, for the federal government to reach some agreement with the provinces, and possibly with the municipalities as well, to prevent this very serious handicap which is now arising, namely the ribbon development on the outskirts of cities along the new portions of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort, Mr. Chairman, has presented this party's general position with regard to this resolution. He dealt with some of the criticisms of the resolution and made some suggestions. I support his remarks and the position he has taken. In order to save the time of the house I am not going to repeat them, but I do want to deal with the situation of the trans-Canada highway as it affects the residents of the southern interior of British Columbia.

In British Columbia we are anxious, as the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich said, that there should be three highways across the province, but in the meantime we are particularly concerned about getting our first trans-Canada section completed. Everyone knows that in British Columbia we are faced with unusual physical difficulties, first with regard to selecting the right route and second with respect to the cost of construction. I wish to deal with a particular aspect of this question because it is of extreme importance and concern to the residents of southeastern British Columbia. I have been asked by a number of organizations in that area to put forward their views at the first opportunity.

The problem that is of particular concern is the route that will be finally chosen between Revelstoke and Mount Eisenhower. We are also concerned because a great part of that route will no doubt be included in this 10 per cent of abnormal costs. To date there have been three possible routes suggested between those two points. The first is the Big Bend highway, which has been in operation as a dirt road since 1941, if I remember correctly. Now there is to be a reconsideration of that route, owing to the proposals for the building of the Mica creek and other dams on the Columbia. The other route that has been under consideration is the Rogers pass route paralleling the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Revelstoke and Golden.

The third route that has received some consideration and a great deal of publicity and support in the interior of British Columbia is known as the Jumbo pass route, going from approximately Windermere in the upper Columbia valley across the divide of the Selkirks and the Purcells, which are a spur of the Selkirks, to the southern end of Howser lake and north along Trout lake and upper Arrow lake and then into Revelstoke. This route was surveyed at one time by engineers of the Canadian Pacific Railway when they were considering the main line of that railway, and it was given up because of the desire of the company and of the government of the day, I understand, to choose the present route through the Kicking Horse pass. However, we have engineers in our district who are well acquainted with the area.

Mr. Bourget: We do not make the choice of the route; the choice of the route is left to the provinces.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am coming to that point, and I am going to read some correspondence. We are unable to say who is going to make the choice, because I think the federal government has a finger in the pie at this stage of the investigation, and possibly the Canadian Pacific Railway. On account of the public interest in this question and the knowledge of the long-time engineers in the district, Mr. Boyd Affleck, a highly qualified engineer, and incidentally a very prominent supporter of the party to my left—he is a gentleman who is a strong opponent of the Kaiser dam—made an examination of the route from Howser lake to the Windermere area. As a result of that examination the provincial government undertook a reconnaissance survey a year or two ago between those two points. Since that time the associated boards of trade of British Columbia, together with other organizations and farmers' organizations, have been urging the provincial government to undertake a thorough survey of the route before any final decision is made with respect to the section of the trans-Canada highway that would connect Revelstoke with Mount Eisenhower on the trans-Canada. So far they have met with very little success.

I raised the question in the house a few times, and the minister has always indicated that the choice of the route comes within the jurisdiction of the provincial government. All the federal government requires is that it be the shortest practicable route. Our organizations are very concerned about it, because we feel we have the time to thoroughly investigate all routes, that when you come to make a decision which will involve the expenditure of between $30 million and $50 million, when that decision will affect British Columbia seriously and all persons who use the route in years to come, every possible route shall be thoroughly investigated.

Now, to come back to the point the parliamentary assistant raised, I want to read two or three letters of recent date. The first was addressed by Mr. W. J. D. Walker, for the Kaslo board of trade, to Hon. Robert Winters,

Minister of Public Works, Ottawa, dated February 20, 1956. This is what he had to say:

Dear Sir: re: Trans-Canada Highway

We notice that you have been quoted in the Revelstoke Review of February 2 as saying, "The Rogers pass is the answer and I have said so".

I read the same report. I continue with the letter:

This relates to the final choice of routes for the trans-Canada highway where it crosses the Selkirk range in British Columbia.

We do not have an additional copy of the above newspaper but we enclose a copy of the article in which you are quoted for your information.

You will note that they quote from an editorial in the Calgary Albertan which in turn quotes the Financial Times of Montreal which quotes your statement as above.

We would be glad if you would look into this and advise us if the statement attributed to you is correct or otherwise, and when and where it was made. It can happen that items taken from the context of a speech or article can be misconstrued. We have no wish at this time to be critical of the statement, or certainly not until we have first referred the matter direct to you.

As you are possibly aware we are a member of the associated boards of trade and chambers of commerce of southeastern British Columbia and as such are vitally interested in the ultimate and inevitable growth of the Kootenays. Through that body we, and all other member boards, have for several years now been advocating the thorough investigation of the Jumbo pass route as a possible alternative for the trans-Canada crossing of the Selkirks. Last fall the associated boards presented a brief to the British Columbia provincial cabinet demanding a survey of that route so that a full and proper comparison can be made of all alternative routes. When the taxpayers' dollar is to be spent to the tune of from $25 to $50 millions for such a project we feel that such a demand is fully justified, and we feel sure that when you consider it you will agree.

We would appreciate your early reply.

Yours truly,
W. J. D. Walker,
for Jumbo pass committee.

To that letter the minister replied on February 27, as follows:

Dear Mr. Walker: re: Trans-Canada Highway

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 20, on the above mentioned subject.

The situation is that under the terms of the agreement, the provincial governments determine the route of the trans-Canada highway, subject to our approval. In 1949, the governments of British Columbia and Alberta jointly decided that the route would go through Calgary to Banff, then by way of Kicking Horse pass to Revelstoke, and thence to Vancouver and Victoria by way of Nanaimo.

That route was accepted, and a considerable amount of work has been done on it. It involves, as you know, the Big Bend route between Golden and Revelstoke. The highway distance involved is some 190 miles, whereas the airline distance between Golden and Revelstoke is of the order of 90 miles.

It seemed to me from the start that it would be justifiable to spend some effort in trying to find a suitable pass between Golden and Revelstoke as an alternative to the Big Bend route. The Rogers pass seems to provide such an alternative.

The situation, therefore, is not that an entirely new route is being sought in British Columbia, but simply that an effort is being made to have the highway conform to the definition laid down in the agreement that it should constitute the shortest practical east-west highway along the designated route, which, as I have told you, was specified by the provincial governments in 1949 and agreed to by the federal government.

Yours very truly,
Robert Winters.

It is a very odd thing, Mr. Chairman, from our point of view, that the minister says the provincial government has the final say. I want to tell him that every engineer of the federal department of works is preaching the Rogers pass route, and every Canadian Pacific official in the area has also been preaching the Rogers pass route, which will, of course, parallel the Canadian Pacific tracks between Revelstoke and Golden.

Before concluding, I just wish to read the reply to the minister's letter, dated March 10, 1956:

The Hon. Robert Winters,
Minister of Public Works,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:

Re: Trans-Canada Highway

We acknowledge with thanks your letter of February 27th in reply to ours of February 20th.

From reading your letter our impression is that you favour use of the Rogers pass as an alternative to the present Big Bend route. However, you do not give any specific answer to our question concerning your statement that was quoted by the Financial Times of Montreal which was in turn quoted by the Calgary and Revelstoke papers and of which we furnished copies.

Also you made no mention of your reaction to the possible use of the Jumbo pass as another alternative route for the trans-Canada highway.

In the fourth paragraph of your letter you mention that you felt it justifiable to spend some effort in trying to find a suitable alternative route to the Big Bend. As a result of that the Rogers pass was surveyed in 1955 and you now have complete technical data on two routes. It has been our firm contention all along that the third possible route, the Jumbo pass, should receive the same treatment the other two routes already have, namely a full survey so that proper comparisons can be made and to ensure that the final decision is a wise one.

When the route is chosen and constructed that will be a very final step, it will be too late then to rectify mistakes. As taxpayers it is our most emphatic opinion that when up to 50 million is to be spent for such a project all possible steps must be taken to see that it is spent wisely and for the benefit of the greatest number. Any other course would constitute a dire neglect of the duty of the government to the taxpayer.

You already have considerable data on the Jumbo pass submitted by the associated boards of trade of southeastern British Columbia and by certain member boards, and we will not elaborate further on it at this time other than to enclose a comparison chart of the three routes prepared by the Windermere district board of trade.

We respectfully suggest that it would be your duty as the federal minister most concerned with this project to see that this matter is closely looked into and very carefully considered.

We shall await your reply with interest.

Yours very truly,
W. J. D. Walker,
for Jumbo pass committee of the Kaslo board of trade.

This matter, Mr. Chairman, is of serious concern to the people of southeastern British Columbia. There is an unusual unanimous opinion that before any final decision is made the government of British Columbia and the federal government should undertake a thorough investigation of the Jumbo pass route.

I am not speaking tonight for one party or for one section. What I am saying tonight, Mr. Chairman, has the support of the residents of the southeastern portion of British Columbia, the various interested organizations and the great majority of hon. members of all political parties in that area. I think it is a fair request. They are not suggesting that this is the best route but the exploratory survey, the reconnaissance survey and the general knowledge of the topography possessed by qualified engineers, indicates it is a route that should be most carefully investigated before a final decision is made. That is all the people of southeastern British Columbia are asking.

I do urge that the parliamentary assistant and the minister give our representations very favourable consideration and do what we think is only prudent, wise and necessary; that is, undertake a thorough survey of the Jumbo pass route before a final decision is made as to the route of this section of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I certainly am not going to take very much of the committee's time tonight, but I would like to make a few remarks concerning this resolution.

In the first place, as has already been pointed out, there are some portions of the highway on which the route has not yet been decided. As far as I am concerned I would prefer to leave that decision to the engineers. I understand that both federal and provincial men are now working together in the investigation of the best possible route. I will certainly feel satisfied that with the provincial and federal governments working together they will come up with the best possible route for the trans-Canada highway.

I am not considering for a moment that the trans-Canada highway is the answer to our problem. I think, of course, that we should have a trans-Canada highway system; however, that is not within the scope of the resolution.

I believe that British Columbia is going to spend $80 million this year in its highway program. A great deal of that money is going into the construction of east-west highways. We realize, of course, as has already been pointed out, that much money needs to be spent in British Columbia, particularly in those difficult sections of the country where we have to pass through the mountains and where a great deal of rock work is involved. I believe these things will be worked out in due course.

I still feel, and I think justifiably, that while the department is moving in the right direction in contributing 90 per cent of 10 per cent of the highway, its contribution remains inadequate. I believe we should have a trans-Canada highway financed by the federal government.

There is one other point which concerns me, and that is the co-operation between the Department of Public Works and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources as it has to do with the parks. I think we should now be budgeting for moneys to bring the park roads up to trans-Canada standards, not only those roads which pass through Banff and Yoho and the parks which trans-Canada will pass through but also in other parks such as Jasper. I think it is essential that there be co-operation between the two departments in having a through road for trucking and the free-wheeling of motor vehicles through these parks.

I cannot understand why trucks should be denied the right to travel on the roads in national parks through the mountains of British Columbia. They should not be told, "Trucks cannot go through here; this is only a tourist attraction". The passes through the mountains are in the vicinity of parks, particularly in the cases of Banff and Jasper. We must therefore have some co-operation and co-ordination between the departments in order to ensure that when trans-Canada is built and the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia have fulfilled their obligation, we are not going to have a bottleneck in the parks.

According to the report which I have in my hand dated March 31, 1955, it is evident that at the present time we are behind schedule in the building of the trans-Canada highway through the parks. I would urge that the government acquaint itself with the situation, knowing full well that once the green light is given to the government of British Columbia in respect of building their share of the highway, much pressure will be brought to bear to get it finished. We would not like to see a situation where the Alberta and British Columbia sections were finished and we had a bottleneck for which the parks administration were responsible.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, in connection with this discussion of the resolution which stands in the name of the Minister of Public Works to provide for an increased federal contribution to the cost of construction of the trans-Canada highway, I think there are a number of things that have to be said. The first of these is a somewhat critical comment to the effect that there is no field in the general realm of national development in connection with which this government deserves more criticism than in the field of trans-Canada highway policy. The federal contribution is so insignificant as to amount to practically nothing. The lack of a trans-Canada highway is one of the most serious deficiencies in any program of national development, particularly in any program for the co-ordination of movement between provinces.

It is interesting to recall that the question of contributions by the dominion government to the cost of highways generally in Canada was first mooted in this house as long ago as 1912 under the government of Sir Robert Borden, when it was proposed that the dominion government should make contributions to the provinces on a per capita basis toward the cost of road construction. That bill passed the House of Commons but was defeated in the Senate. You will recall that in 1911 there had been a change of government after a long period under the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The political complexion of the house changed but the political complexion of the Senate remained as it had been since 1896, and the other chamber saw fit to defeat the bill introduced by the government and passed by the house.

The government introduced the same bill in 1913 to provide for federal contributions to the cost of highway construction in the provinces, but that bill suffered exactly the same fate. It passed the House of Commons but was defeated in the Senate. Of course the outbreak of the first world war in 1914 shelved proposals of that nature. The record is that the first proposal for federal government contributions to the cost of highway construction was brought in by the government of Sir Robert Borden and put through the House of Commons.

It is significant to recall that since 1913 the Liberal government, of which the present government is a descendant, has been in power for 28 years, with a Conservative government for only five years, regrettably of course. Out of that we would take the period of the war. Taking into account or not including the period of the war and the immediate first post-war years, we find that since 1921 this government or its predecessors, those who follow the policies of the party of which hon. members opposite forming the government are members, have been in power for 28 of those years and we have not yet got a trans-Canada highway.

It is late enough for this government or any government to be bringing in this half-way measure which is preceded by the resolution now before the house, which reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act . . .

Expedient? It has been a necessity for many years, but the government is just getting around to introducing a half-hearted measure designed to make it possible to complete the trans-Canada highway. They still do not contemplate it being completed until 1961, because in the resolution it is stated that the cut-off date will be May 31, 1961. They still are not prepared to take all the measures necessary to ensure that the trans-Canada highway will be completed by 1961 because there is a term of the proposed legislation which does not appear on the face of the resolution. The resolution provides:

> . . . that the Minister of Finance may pay a higher contribution for a portion of the highway in a province not exceeding 10 per centum thereof . . .

We know as a matter of fact that the bill to be based on the resolution will provide that the federal government may pay up to 90 per cent of the actual cost of construction in a province, but not for more than 10 per cent of the length of the highway in that province. So this government is not yet ready in this year 1956 to accept its responsibility of ensuring that there shall be an adequate system of coast to coast communication in Canada. It is still a pass the buck measure. Having grabbed all the tax resources, having grabbed the financial buck, they pass the political buck back to the provinces.

That is the attitude of this government, and that has been its attitude throughout toward this vital question of the responsibility for ensuring a coast to coast highway system in Canada. The program of this government falls short of what is necessary, and it is interesting to compare the situation in Canada with that in the United States where they have had a federal highway system and a federal highway program in being for some 50 years. That federal highway system and federal highway program have resulted in the development and construction, if my information is correct—this subject was sprung on us without notice, and it has not been possible to gather together all the information one might have available in his files—of at least ten main east and west roads and some 30 or 40 main north and south roads, a total of some 40 federal highways in the United States of America.

We in Canada have not yet one trans-Canada highway, not one. This measure will not provide adequately for the completion of that one trans-Canada road by 1961. The inadequacy of the proposal of the dominion government to pay up to 90 per cent of the cost of a maximum of 10 per cent of the length of one highway in any province can readily be understood when you look at the situation in the province of British Columbia.

I believe that in Canada there are two provinces which face the maximum of difficulty and cost in connection with road construction, these being Ontario and British Columbia. British Columbia is faced with the highest per-mile cost of road construction of any province in Canada. Taking the east and west roads, there are four major mountain ranges to cross. Starting on the east are the Rocky mountains with peaks up to 12,000 feet. Then there is the Selkirk range with peaks up to 10,000 to 11,000 feet. Then comes the interior plateau, on which my own constituency is situated, made up of rough terrain, broken rocky hills with some level valleys but still offering a difficult problem in road construction. Then comes the Cascades range with peaks up to 8,000 to 9,000 feet and then the coast range which comes within a few miles of the narrow coastal belt along the Pacific coast. So there are those four major mountain ranges to cross.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act for the relief of George Francis Alfred Yull.

An act for the relief of Joyce Ethel Jaques Horgan.

An act for the relief of Jean Thomson Duquette.

Trans-Canada Highway Act

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR HIGHER CONTRIBUTION TO COSTS OF HIGHWAY

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Winters—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act to provide that the Minister of Finance may pay a higher contribution for a portion of the highway in a province not exceeding ten per centum thereof; to extend contributions to costs incurred up to December 31, 1960 and to terminate all contributions on May 31, 1961; and to provide further that the aggregate of all expenditures under the act may be increased to a maximum of two hundred and fifty million dollars.

The Deputy Chairman: As it is past ten o'clock, shall I report progress and ask leave to sit again?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

It being nine minutes past ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

DISABLED PERSONS ACT, MANITOBA

Question No. 161—Mr. Bryce:

1. How many persons in Manitoba have applied for assistance under the Disabled Persons Act, 1954, up to 31 January, 1956?
2. How many persons have been granted a full pension?
3. How many persons have been granted a partial pension?
4. How many persons have been refused a pension?

Answer by: Mr. Martin:

1. 2,462.
2. 652.
3. 70.
4. 1,484.

Of the applications received up to January 31, 1956, there were 256 classified as "pending" on this date.

The following table shows the case load of disability allowance recipients in each province as of January 31, expressed as a percentage of the provincial population:

IMMIGRATION—EAST INDIAN APPLICATIONS

Question No. 265—Mr. Pearkes:

1. How many applications for permanent entry to Canada have been received from citizens of India, Pakistan and Ceylon during the years 1954, 1955 and to date in 1956, under the following quota allocations from each country: (a) spouses of legal residents; (b) single children under the age of 21 of Canadian citizens; (c) fiancées of Canadian citizens; (d) parents, single brothers or sisters of Canadian citizens; (e) persons for economic or cultural reasons; (f) other classifications?
2. How many of the applications in each of these groups have been granted?
3. How many were refused for no other reason than that the quota had been completed?
4. How many East Indians are presently in Canada as temporary visitors?

Answer by: Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Statistics are not available in the breakdown requested.

2.

	1954	1955	1956 (to March 15)
(a) India	12	8	8
Pakistan	Nil	1	Nil
Ceylon	Nil	Nil	Nil
(b) India*	Not under quota	Not under quota	Not under quota
Pakistan	"	"	"
Ceylon	"	"	"

Pakistan	98	39	1
Ceylon	27	50	43

* Single children under the age of 21 of Canadian citizens are not subject to quota restrictions. Statistics are not available as to number of children admitted under this category.

 While the annual quota for citizens of India is 150, there were 33 additional quota numbers allotted in 1954 and 71 in 1955, to utilize unused quota numbers allotted in preceding years.

3. Statistics are not available.

4. Statistics are not available.

Questions

HANDICRAFT CONCESSIONS, NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 320—Mr. Bell:

1. How are the concessions that include the sale of handicrafts and souvenirs administered in the national parks of Canada?
2. What are the dates, terms, names of contractees and length of said concessions, in Fundy national park, New Brunswick?
3. What efforts are made to encourage the sale of local enterprise in said concessions?

Answer by: Mr. Lesage:

1. Concessionaires who hold a lease or licence of occupation on public lands that have been made available for business purposes may obtain a licence to sell handicrafts and souvenirs under authority of the national parks business regulations.

2. There is only one lease or licence on public land in Fundy park in connection with which a business licence for the sale of handicrafts and souvenirs has been taken out. This was a lease issued to Oliver William Robert Smith and Marie Annie Helen Smith for lot 3, block 1, Fundy park townsite, for a term of 42 years from October 1, 1954, to September 30, 1996, at an annual rental of $20 with provision for review of rental at ten-year intervals. The business licence to cover the sale of handicrafts and souvenirs is issued annually at a fee of $15.

3. The choice of articles to be sold is considered to be the concern of the person operating the business. It is left entirely to the discretion of the concessionaire, provided that the terms of the business licence are observed.

FISHING SURVEY, KITIMAT

Question No. 339—Mr. Hodgson:

1. Has the Department of Fisheries made any survey of the Aluminum Company of Canada at Kitimat to determine any damage that might be done to the fishing industry by the operation of that development?
2. If so, to what extent?
3. Will the waste from the plant or town contaminate or pollute the waters to affect the fishing industry?

Answer by: Mr. Sinclair:

1. Yes.

2. Before the project was commenced engineers and biologists of the Department of Fisheries and of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission spent almost two years assessing possible damage to fisheries from the whole project which involved the Kitimat plant and in designing remedial measures. As construction proceeded, each step was checked including the water supply to the town, sewage and other discharge.

3. Officials of the department are of opinion that the waste discharge will not affect fishing. This is being closely watched.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 23, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Fourth and fifth reports of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Henderson.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INDIANS AND ESKIMOS—CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT ON D.E.W. LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister tell the house whether or not he has investigated the conditions under which Indians and Eskimos will be working on the distant early warning line? Can he say whether or not the rates of pay they will receive will be comparable to rates paid other workers doing comparable work?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take notice of the question in its detail but I can assure the hon. member that in connection with the employment of workers on the D.E.W. line, the Department of Labour and the national employment service work in close co-operation with the other departments concerned. However, I shall bring down an answer in detail to the question.

Mrs. Fairclough: Perhaps the minister would permit a supplementary question. While he is investigating this condition, would he also get information with regard to unemployment insurance coverage for these workers?

Mr. Gregg: I will do that, Mr. Speaker.

THE VICTORIA CROSS

PROPOSED TRIP OF CANADIAN HOLDERS AND RELATIVES TO CENTENNIAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. James (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the minister in a position to give the house a progress report on the proposed trip of the Canadian Victoria Cross holders and their relatives to the Victoria Cross centennial to be held in the United Kingdom this year?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to date 36 Canadian holders of the Victoria Cross out of a total of 38 have signified their intention of attending the celebration this year. The department has not heard from the other two veterans. In addition, there are four British Victoria Cross holders who also signified their intention of making the trip. To date, 32 relatives of Victoria Cross holders and also 17 next of kin in connection with posthumous awards and 10 in connection with deceased awards have also notified the department they intend to make the trip. This, therefore, makes a total of 99 persons. Approximately one-half of the above noted persons will be travelling by air and the others by sea.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE TO STUDY RULES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if, in view of what might be described as some spirited discussion in the house of late on the matter of rulings, the government would consider setting up a committee on rules with a view to giving study to some of the problems that have arisen in recent days?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a similar question was asked a few days ago. I do not think it is necessary at this time to set up a committee to give further consideration to the rules that were adopted after very lengthy discussions last year.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REPORTED REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF JOINT LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister received a request from the minister of public welfare in the province of Ontario for a reconsideration of some of the legislation administered jointly by this government and the provincial governments in the social welfare field? Will consideration be given to this request?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did see the story in the morning paper, and I must say that I was a little surprised at what the minister is reported to have said. I would want to make sure that he really in fact said what he is reported to have said.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

ONTARIO—SUPPLEMENTAL ALLOWANCE TO THOSE IN NEED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a correction in a reply which I gave on Tuesday of this week to a question put to me by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser). The question was about the latest supplemental allowance recently announced by the government of Ontario.

I stated in error that this allowance is provided wholly by the provincial authority. My hon. friend will remember he asked me that question and I said it was provided wholly by the province. In fact, I find now that the allowance is provided in the initial instance by the municipal authority which determines the amount to be paid, and the province reimburses such payments to the extent of 60 per cent up to a maximum of $20 in any one case. This means that the municipality bears the remaining 40 per cent.

I might add that there are 21,790 old age assistance cases in the province of Ontario, 7,464 disability allowance cases, and 1,723 blindness allowance cases. Not all of these cases, however, receive the supplemental allowance. The latest information is that the number receiving the supplemental allowance totals approximately 2,000 in the entire province, with about 1,200 of these being centred in Toronto.

I said the other day that 90 per cent of the cost of the assistance given to the aged of our country was borne by the taxpayers of Canada through recommendations made by this parliament. Obviously, I was in error; the amount is a much higher percentage.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, there was something else the minister did not say when he mentioned there were three other provinces that paid more than Ontario. He did not say that those were not Liberal provinces.

[Mr. Knowles.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

D.E.W. LINE—REPORTED COMPLAINTS OF WHITEHORSE BOARD OF TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government received representations from a special committee of the Whitehorse board of trade complaining of a disregard of Canadian sovereignty, of Canadian law and also of Canadian contractors in the construction of the D.E.W. line and, if so, what action is the government going to take to investigate these complaints?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if there have been complaints they have not yet come to my attention. I will make inquiries and give an answer after I have secured the information.

MANNING AND OPERATION OF EARLY WARNING LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister in a position as yet to answer the questions that were asked on Tuesday last by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and myself in respect to working conditions and unemployment insurance coverage on the D.E.W. line?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I have not yet all the information gathered together. I inquired about it this morning and it is progressing. I hope to have it at an early date.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CROWSNEST PASS-PINCHER CREEK—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has an application been received from the Canadian Pacific Railway seeking authority to construct a 22-mile branch railway line to link its Crowsnest pass line with the Pincher Creek gas field where large volumes of sulphur and liquid by-products of gas are expected to be made available for shipment by rail to various markets in Canada and elsewhere?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think that question should obviously have been addressed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler), but he tells me that the answer is no.

ATOMIC ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO INVITATION TO HYDROGEN BOMB TESTS IN PACIFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. I wonder if the minister is in a position to answer my question of March 13 as to whether the Canadian government has been invited by Washington to send observers to the forthcoming United States hydrogen bomb tests in the Pacific and, if not, has the Canadian government considered making such a request?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not yet in a position to give an answer to the question. I have just returned to the house after a few days absence and shall be glad to look into the matter and deal with it shortly.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CERTAIN JUDICIAL DECISIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister be prepared to table the judicial decisions of the tariff board relating to parts for agricultural machinery to which he referred on Tuesday night.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I do not think that is necessary, Mr. Speaker. I shall be glad to provide a copy of the judgments for my hon. friend.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 20, consideration of the motion of Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we have now had some days in which the public has been able to take stock of the budget presented by the Minister of Finance on Tuesday night and it seems to me there has been a singular unanimity with regard to it. The unanimity was perhaps best expressed by a sports broadcaster, I believe, who said on the air last evening that in the budget the score was 0-0. I hope, Mr. Speaker, it will be realized that this fact makes my task difficult. It is difficult to make a dent in a rubber ball and it is difficult to make bricks without straw; but I must simply do my best.

It is, of course, obvious to everyone, and indeed I am not sure it has not already been said, that this is not a budget at all but a prologue to a budget. This is merely holding the line. Of course next year we will hear the story. We are all familiar with the saying of the great French king who said, "L'État, c'est moi." However, I doubt if he ever carried it quite so far as this government carries it. It seems to me that what is happening now makes it clear that in the minds of the government they believe that their remaining in office is a matter of supreme importance, not only to themselves but apparently somehow or other they have made themselves believe that it is important to Canada as well. I do not know how they do that.

In effect what they do is to come to the taxpayers and say, "We are in a very comfortable position, thank you; we have $26 billion gross national product and that leaves us in a good position because it means that taxes have rolled in abundantly, beyond what we could have asked or thought; so we are able to tell you the taxpayers, that there is no need to increase your taxes; however, on the other hand you realize that to lower your taxes now would be quite childish foolishness; what is the use of our lowering them now, the time to lower them is next year."

Admittedly the minister cannot say that and I have to say it for him. There are a lot of people saying it for him and I would like to associate myself with them. He is in a difficult position. I suppose if he had had his own way he would not have made a speech at all, he would have just made a little announcement as to one or two changes. However, you cannot do that very well. After all, the minister has to have his flower in his buttonhole, he has to make an entry into the house, he has to be received, he has to be photographed; that is all part of the performance, that is all part of public relations and nobody should complain.

What did we have? We had some amiable generalities about the economic position. I think the minister was a little cramped by the fact that the Gordon commission has been asked to become the brains of the government and therefore he had to be a little cautious about what he said. Then we had an apologia for the arrangement with the provinces, but I am not going to go into that. I am only going to quote the homely words of the premier of Ontario which seemed to me to be an apt commentary on all the philosophical hair-splitting that we had from the minister the other day. I liked what the premier of Ontario said, that the government had just rolled over in bed and given us what we were entitled to. That seemed to me to put it most tellingly. Perhaps if the minister had thought of those words he would have used them himself.

I just want to make one other comment on dominion-provincial relations. It is of course quite clear that we are still in the realm of doles, that we have not yet grappled with the problem which is not to make grants to the provinces but to set up the provinces on their own feet and give them a chance to be self-sustaining. I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) shakes his head.

Mr. Harris: I was just hoping my hon. friend would go on and explain how that could be done.

Mr. Macdonnell: I shall have a word or two to say about that. It could only be done if there were an entirely new approach to the whole thing. I agree that there has to be something done that has never been attempted in the philosophy of this government, particularly vis-à-vis the maritimes. I agree with the minister on that, and I shall say more later. I shall say no more about dominion-provincial relations. I just repeat that unfortunately we are left in the position where we can conclude that the government had concentrated on their own affairs and not on those of the community, particularly those elements in the community which, as I shall point out, are in distress.

I should think that private members on the government side, who came down here, I am sure, with the idea that they were serving the public, must be taken aback by that. On the other hand, of course, they no doubt are getting the one-party mind. They are reminded they have been here 20 years. It is wonderful how often we have to go back to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but then he says so many interesting things. It is rumoured that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has told them that if they are good boys there is no reason why they should not be down here for 50 years.

We must be fair. We must admit that the government has not always been as inefficient as it has been in the last couple of months. We have to admit that they do show a certain efficiency in approaching the election issue. So the people of Canada must wait, and then a new light will appear, probably from the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and they will be offered new inducements paid for with their own money.

Mr. Martin: You seem to be worried about the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Macdonnell: I have known the Minister of National Health and Welfare a long time and I have watched with great interest his progress in different ways, and I am sure he will not mind my commenting on it. These electoral inducements are interesting, and I hope both the electors and the press will pay great attention to them. We discovered a year ago, what perhaps we were in danger of forgetting, how powerful the press can be. And I hope they will show themselves powerful again.

As I listened to the minister and his explanation of the income for this year and next year, I was reminded of a remark that I think his predecessor made once, to the effect that government receipts and disbursements were flexible things and that it mattered a good deal whether a payment or a disbursement was made just before or after the end of the fiscal year. I wondered whether perhaps the minister had that in mind and whether in his innocent way, because after all he is innocent, he might have done something in the way of accelerating or delaying payments. I wonder if the minister thought of that. I wonder if perhaps he made this empty budget still a little more empty in order that there might be a larger and more fertilizing flood to be let loose next year.

Mr. Harris: Perish the thought.

Mr. Macdonnell: At any rate this is an empty budget. Somebody has called it a Mother Hubbard budget, and certainly I think the cupboard is bare enough as far as the taxpayers are concerned this year. But that is because the government must have glittering prizes next year. Health is often mentioned as the ace of trumps for next summer. But there are reassuring signs of criticism in the press, signs that these slick tactics are not wholly approved.

I think I would have taken all of this more or less in good part, and I would not have felt indignant about it, as I do feel, if in fact throughout Canada we had no elements among the taxpayers who were suffering, but I believe we have and I believe there has been a notable failure on the part of this government to attempt to deal with what I would call the soft spots.

Although they have a roaring boom in the United States they are trying to deal with the soft spots, but I want to put a word in here as earnestly as I can for the hundreds of thousands in Canada who are not getting a fair share. There is not a word of cheer for them in the budget, not even a recognition of their problem. They are the forgotten men and women. What about the unemployed? What about the maritimes? What about the textile workers? What about the rapid buying up of Canadian companies which is causing serious alarm in many circles? These problems are not dealt with. They are not even recognized. Why the neglect? Well, it might be answered that the Gordon commission is going to settle everything, but after all, all that the Gordon commission can do is make a report. In all likelihood, what it will do is to touch off more political discussion, and to say that those who need adjustments are going to wait for months and months while that is done is to talk political nonsense.

No doubt the report of the commission will be made before the election. No doubt it will be regarded as another trump card, but that is not to say that the things which should be done are going to be done in a hurry. At the present time the commission is head over heels in work. It has received, of course, scores and scores of briefs and it is now employing probably scores of economists who are working for it and producing further material.

The budget was not an interesting budget but there were one or two interesting things in it. I want to mention one in particular. One thing I liked very much was that the minister went out of his way to make flattering remarks about certain of his colleagues and really tried to create the impression that the cabinet is now a band of brothers. One does not know whether that is true. Rumours do get about, but at any rate I should like to draw attention to the fact that the minister rather went out his way, I thought, to refer to some of his fellow members of the cabinet. I did not know whether he was preaching for a call. I did observe that those who were referred to were, if I may venture to say so, not very likely contestants at the next party convention. At any rate, I do not want to impute any motives to the minister and I will simply read the references and let them speak for themselves.

The first one was with regard to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). As I said a few minutes ago, how we do come back to the Minister of Trade and Commerce! I hope he does not mind.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am neutral in this debate. Why pick on me?

Mr. Macdonnell: I know the minister does not approve of many debates and maybe he does not approve of this one, but I know he will forgive me for any references I may make to him. It is only because one meets him going and coming and one gets very familiar with him. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris), in referring to his own optimistic predictions of a year ago, said, as found at page 2325 of Hansard of March 20:

> As a matter of fact, at a later time during the year, someone wrote that he could only conclude that some of the optimism of the Minister of Trade and Commerce had rubbed off on the new Minister of Finance. I would like to say that I would be happy if other qualities of the Minister of Trade and Commerce were also to rub off on me.

Mr. Knowles: Which ones?

Mr. Macdonnell: This is a pleasant compliment but it also imposes a heavy responsibility on the minister if he is going to become a model to all the younger men in the cabinet. Of course it made me think, what would the cabinet be like if it were full of C. D. Howes? That is a very interesting question to me. I remember somebody saying years ago, would it not be a wonderful thing if you could have the 265 ablest men in Canada all elected to the House of Commons. Some other man, shrewder and wiser, said that it would make government absolutely impossible because each one would want to be the leader. As I say, what kind of a cabinet it would be I do not pretend to guess. I would be inclined to say, what price democracy if you had a cabinet full of masterful people like the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), but that is as it may be.

Now then, next we have a reference to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann). The Minister of Finance says, "May I express my appreciation to the Minister of National Revenue and his staff for collecting such a tremendous sum of money." The minister does, indeed, collect a tremendous sum of money, but of course he does this as the agent of the Minister of Finance. I repeat what I said the other evening that the minister who 18 months ago expressed awe at the power he had has quickly got used to it. It gets them all, this spending habit.

Now, the Minister of Finance went on to speak about the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson). We were told the Prime Minister has lived with the problems of dominion-provincial relations for some 18 years, ever since he became counsel for the Rowell-Sirois commission. I have no doubt the Prime Minister was a very able counsel to the Rowell-Sirois commission, but I am quite confident that the Prime Minister had many other things on his mind, if not then certainly since that time. It seems to me a rather pleasant exaggeration to say that he has lived with these problems, because after all he was at one time minister of justice and at another time secretary of state for external affairs. Then, we have the reference to the Minister of Justice. As to that, I would say that since he left Manitoba I think we have come to regard him as one of the great centralizers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be forgiven, but this handing out of bouquets turns my mind back two or three years ago to a very interesting incident in this house when, for some reason that I have never found quite clear to my mind, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) launched out in praise of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and himself. He enunciated a theory which may be interesting even now, because after all the reference to the Prime Minister made then may still be very much in point. I think if we look back to what has happened during this session we may hope very much that it is in point. The Minister of Agriculture said this as far back as 1951, as reported at page 2046 of Hansard for April 16, 1951:

> As long as the three of us—

That is the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister.

> —remain where we are I think it will be fairly generally agreed across the country that we have an exceedingly good government.

Now, I envy the minister for being able to say that. I wish I were able to feel as pleased with myself as that. At any rate, there it is and it speaks for itself.

Then, he goes on to make what to many of us may seem an even more interesting comment. He said, "One of the reasons why we are satisfied to be where we are is because we both know we can afford to make statements, knowing that we might be incorrect, because we have a leader who does not make many mistakes." I was very interested in that because it seemed to indicate a situation where it did not matter very much what the other members of the cabinet did so long as there was a Prime Minister there who did not make many mistakes. This seemed to me to be a kind of blessed irresponsibility which I think is very comforting to the other members of the cabinet.

I come now to speak about some of the forgotten men and women. I wish to say a word about unemployment. Everyone will remember, I think it is less than two years ago, September, 1954, in fact, when the Prime Minister launched out and made a statement which sounded like a kind of clarion call. He said, "We have a country where there should be work for everybody and if we are not smart enough to organize the economy of the nation to provide work for everybody we are incompetent—"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonnell: He goes on to say, "I cannot give details but I am convinced that if my colleagues and I cannot organize economic controls in such a way that there will not be any long periods of loss of work for those who want to work, then throw us out and put in our place people who can do better." That was the Prime Minister's statement. As I say, it was a kind of clarion call but the voice of the trumpet was not so clear when the Prime Minister got back to the House of Commons. In January, he was not quite taking the same line. In January, 1955, he said this, and this seems to me like rather the feeble voice of the flute as compared with the trumpet. "There is some unemployment in Canada. There has been some unemployment in Canada every year. That situation has eased as the season advanced and there is reason to expect that it will do so again." Now, that seems to me a very disappointing outcome.

I shall quote a few figures to show what the situation is this year. It is bad enough, but not as bad as a year ago. The figures this year are, however, in all conscience, bad enough. In February, 1956, unplaced applicants were 515,000, almost 100,000 less than 1955 but 113,000 more than in 1953. Those without jobs and seeking work numbered 308,000, almost 70,000 less than a year ago but approximately the same as 1954. No one could be happy with those figures, but what is being done about it? Here are the words of the Minister of Labour: "I hope and believe we are learning many things which will be useful to us in the future."

It is interesting to note that in the United States they do not act in this negative manner. They really try to do something. They have soft spots there. They use various means to deal with chronic unemployment. Incidentally, they have been trying to help small businesses, too, which has an impact on unemployment. They have an organization that does that which has made 1,645 loans in the last period with an expenditure of $83 million. Now, that is the attitude which they have and so far as we are concerned it seems to me we must call the government back to duty. We must remind them that these are fellow citizens who are entitled to be considered, and that it does not help them very much to be told that we expect this year a G.N.P. of $28 billion. They are not interested in billions, millions, thousands or even hundreds. What they are interested in is being able to earn their day to day living as self-respecting men and women.

I wish now to say a word about the maritimes and I wish to stress that as strongly as I can. I feel very deeply about it. Here again we need an entirely new approach. It is not surprising that people from the maritimes say that when they come up to a meeting in central Canada they feel like poor relations. They feel they are not wanted. One of them said he felt almost as though he got a slap in the face. Here again, so far as I can see, there is no intention of grappling with the problem seriously. All that is being done is that the maritimes are being given a subsidy to put them off, to keep them quiet. This has been the case, notwithstanding the years of huge expenditures. If ever there was a time when industries could have been set up in the maritimes it was within the last few years. What we want is a new look, not palliatives and not one commission after another, each doing a little tinkering and recommending concessions in railway rates or other concessions. We want a new approach.

After all, confederation was a great act of faith and imagination but it did not, in itself, assure an adequate and effective economic background for the federal system. It was clear from the outset that the maritimes were taking far more risk than the rest of us. They were jeopardizing their north and south trade to a far greater extent than the rest of Canada was. Happily, in the early years, there was prosperity, which helped confederation on its way. Britain was booming; the United States was undergoing great railway expansion and there was for a few years satisfactory prosperity. The people of the maritimes look back on that now as a kind of golden age that they can hardly remember, and especially when times are prosperous in central Canada and the rest of Canada. They feel, and let no one be surprised, that they have not had a fair deal.

I have known this, of course, but it has been rubbed into me; it has been impressed on me far more than ever before by things which have been used in this House of Commons recently. The member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) said a thing a few weeks ago which startled me. He said, as reported at page 378 of Hansard:

> For more than 80 years confederation has hung like a killing blight over the economy of the maritimes.

A killing blight, Mr. Speaker.

Now, he might soften that remark a little; he might lessen the 80 years a little because the first few years were prosperous, but when a serious man who has served his country both in peace and war can use language of that kind, then I say it is time for the rest of us to have a new look.

I shall now give a few figures as to the economic position, but before I do that I want to remind the house that not so long ago, I think it was the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) who said that men had gone from the maritimes to New Zealand looking for work. That is a thing which every hon. member should regard as a personal responsibility of his own to prevent.

Let me give a few figures as to the economic comparison. In the three maritime provinces in 1946 the income per member of the labour force was $307, or 15 per cent below the national average. By 1949 the difference was $573, or 23·1 per cent. By 1953, it was $770, or 22·7 per cent. If we took this percentage at so much per head the disparity would be greater than that.

Let me give one or two figures as at the present moment. If we take unplaced applicants as the percentage of labour supply in February, 1956, we find that the percentage for the whole of Canada is 11·7. For the three maritime provinces it is 17·5 per cent, and for the four Atlantic provinces it is 19 per cent. The figure for persons without jobs and seeking work as a percentage of labour supply for the whole of Canada is 7 per cent; for the three maritime provinces it is 11·1 per cent; and for the four Atlantic provinces it is 10·8 per cent. These are figures, Mr. Speaker, which should strike every one of us and which should be intolerable for us to hear. We should never rest until we have remedied the condition.

There was an excellent debate in this house the other night, and I should like to paraphrase one or two of the things that were said because, happily, during the debate views were expressed on all sides of the house. Maritime members on all sides of the house stood up and expressed themselves. The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) had something like this to say. He said that he believed we were really following a great historical tradition when we talk about policies which may serve to build up areas of Canada which up to the present time have not participated in our prosperity in the manner that we all desire. Later on, the hon. member said—and I commend this especially to members of the government:

> It is through acceleration, with present government services directed with greater intensity to what might be called special areas that much can be done.

How true that is, and how absent we find any suggestion of intensity. That is what we need. As I say, we need a new look.

I am happy to say that the premier of Ontario has expressed himself in no uncertain way in this matter. It is a question for this house, and I hope the debate will continue as a top priority problem, and that hon. members on all sides will express themselves. That will be the only way to cure the lethargy, to inspire the indifference, and to show the government the way to action.

The minister asks me for a way to do it. I have no detailed plan of how to do it but what I am saying is this. The first prerequisite as to how to do it is to believe it is necessary that it should be done, and I am quite satisfied there is no such belief in the government at the present time.

Now, let me give a word from Mr. Frost. I am quoting from the Globe and Mail of March 10, and this is a Canadian Press report:

> Mr. Frost was particularly concerned about the future of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

I was glad to read that. I am afraid that sometimes in Ontario we do not appear as interested as we should be; therefore, I was glad to read this from Mr. Frost. I continue:

> For these two provinces Mr. Frost had earlier urged an annual federal subsidy of $10 million each.
> This amount, really very little by comparison with what the federal government takes out of the provinces, spells the difference between prosperity and depression for these maritime provinces.
> It will not be too long before the federal government regrets the action it took today.

Added to this comment is a further one from Premier Frost which represents an overall expression of the premier's position with regard to the federal government's proposal:

> They were wrong in 1945; they were wrong in 1952, and they are wrong today.

Not only the premier of Ontario, but another provincial premier has expressed his alarm at the way the shoulder of the federal government is turned to the maritime provinces. There was a Canadian Press dispatch of March 13, but I have not it here. It was a statement by the premier of Saskatchewan also agreeing that the maritimes should be more fairly dealt with.

In his report to congress of last November the president, among other things, said that much had been done to improve and stimulate the United States economy. He referred to the curtailing of government activities that could be handled as well or better by private enterprise. He is following the advice that Churchill gave not so long ago in telling the governto "get out of the way". In that connection, I want to say a word about Trans-Canada Air Lines. I want to do this because it is clear that there is a widespread feeling across Canada, as shown by the press, that this monopoly should come to an end. It really has become a case of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) v. Canada. I wish to put in several quotes from the press across the country. We have heard a great deal from our government about preserving private enterprise and competition, but let us look at their actions. Here is what the Winnipeg Free Press has to say:

> It is high time that the government's policy on transcontinental air service was changed so that Canadians from coast to coast may enjoy the benefits which would accrue from T.C.A. having a little competition.

Arthur Blakely, writing in the Montreal Gazette, said:

> It is quite clear that trade minister C. D. Howe who maintains a fatherly interest in all crown corporations will fight tooth and nail for the preservation of the monopoly. He would, if that were possible, be even less enthusiastic about any proposal to sell T.C.A. on the open market for a price however reasonable.
> Not all of Mr. Howe's cabinet colleagues, it is reported, are as disturbed at the thought of breaking the monopoly. But unless parliament forces a showdown no such development is likely to take place while he remains in the cabinet.

A similar view is expressed by the Vancouver Province:

> In theory it is that all transcontinental flying shall be reserved for Trans-Canada Air Lines but in practice it is that T.C.A.'s monopoly shall cover all east-west flying whether it is a through transcontinental run or not.
> As we have argued before in these columns the theoretical policy may be defensible but the practice is not.
> Its result was to prevent Canadian Pacific Airlines from supplying a freight service which T.C.A. did not then offer. Its result now is to deprive a number of cities of a low-cost short haul passenger service which T.C.A. does not now offer.
>
> In theory the policy is protective, in practice it is restrictive.

And, finally, a quotation from the Ottawa Citizen:

> There was good reason for the T.C.A. monopoly when it was granted 18 years ago . . .
> But in the intervening years T.C.A. has grown and prospered to the point where it is now scarcely able to handle the demand. Air traffic will most certainly continue to increase in the years to come and in the citizens' view it is time another carrier helped with the load.

It is interesting to note that the Minister of Finance was quoted the other day as saying in Brantford that "in a free enterprise economy it is not the function of the government to interfere actively with the natural direction of economic development."

I wish to say a word about commonwealth trade. On various occasions this party has tried to bring this to the attention of the house. We have made motions which have always been turned down. We have tried our best to keep this before the government but without much success. One would think that now, with the hundreds of millions of deficit, with the $840 million deficit on current account which we had with the United States last year, the desire to explore every avenue of trade would be strong in the government; and yet, in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) on this point, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to our amazement, said that the Department of Trade and Commerce was doing nothing about it. Can anyone tell why? We certainly need external markets. Is there some fatal lethargy?

Mr. Harris: I do not think that is quite fair. The question did not ask what we were doing about trade but what we were doing about the adverse trade balance with the United States.

Mr. Macdonnell: I will accept the minister's correction, but what we are talking about is certainly concerned with trade and I want to be fair. Is it because we do not want to play ball with the other members of the commonwealth? Surely they could do more business with us and surely it should be explored in every possible way. There has never been a satisfactory answer. We are just left to suppose that everything that can be done is being done by an all-wise government, but it is not as simple as that.

Not long ago we moved a resolution to the effect that this house is of the opinion that the government should consider the advisability of inviting the nations of the commonwealth to a conference to be held in the immediate future for the purpose of working out arrangements to preserve and enlarge those traditional markets on which jobs and opportunities for Canadians very largely depend. In that connection I would like to quote from that well-known authority, Dr. W. A. Mackintosh of Queen's University, who, when writing of the United States performance under GATT in the Foreign Affairs Quarterly of last October, said:

> There are signs that we are entering a period when other countries may press American representatives to produce evidence that the United States is able to make a dependable agreement. To say this is not to discount the ingenious and sincere efforts which have been made by President Eisenhower to further the aim of larger and more competitive trade in the western world. But Congress rules. In future, however, if agreements are to be subject to the heavy discount of escape clauses and modifying legislation a much greater consideration may be required.

Dr. Mackintosh also points out that the most moderate restriction of trade in the United States, having regard to the enormous size of their business, may be of decisive importance in Canada in respect of Canadian exports. When he said that, he was speaking of cereals; but it applies right across the board as well. We know perfectly well that the United States has not fully grown up in respect of its economic responsibility, at any rate not in tariff matters. We know they will put up tariffs as soon as anyone at home is being hit. I remind you of what I said a moment ago concerning Dr. Mackintosh's query about a "dependable agreement." We also have to remind ourselves that, the United States not being under a responsible form of government, their executive cannot deal firmly and decisively and cannot make agreements which they are perfectly sure of being able to carry through.

There is another problem I wish to raise and that is a problem which is coming more and more to our minds particularly by reason of recent United States legislation. I refer to the invasion of United States shareholders. Indeed, there is now a new phrase, "Dollar colonialism", which has crept into the language. We welcome United States capital to Canada, of course, but it must be brought here on some fair basis. Recent events have caused great heart searching. United States investment in Canadian companies has grown very rapidly. It is pointed up by recent action in five of the states where they have sought to exclude a Canadian company, although happily in one state the governor has vetoed it.

This matter has been of serious concern to the business world in Canada and we get no lead from the government. What it really means is that Canadian investors are being frozen out in respect of United States companies. One-third of the investment in Canadian manufacturing is in companies controlled outside of Canada, United States companies. Some of them are wholly owned, there are subsidiaries in many cases, and the Canadian investor has no chance to invest. The number of companies controlled has grown from 1,985 at the end of the war to 3,235 in 1953. And do not let us imagine that these are small companies. Most of them are large and some of them are huge. A good many of our commodities are now controlled by the United States. A partial list includes iron ore, nickel, aluminum, oil, copper and asbestos, all of which are under effective United States control.

Is there any disadvantage to this? Yes, there is a very great disadvantage and it grows and grows and can become very acute if anything less than a roaring boom is occurring in the United States, because, as I said, they take immediate steps to protect their own people if there is any trouble at home. A witness appearing before the royal commission on patents said:

> Canadian Industries Limited was not permitted by its U.S. and U.K. parents to export from Canada. Similarly Canadian radio manufactures, titanium processors, optical goods manufacturers, and many, many others, have been compelled in this way to refrain from assisting in the development of Canadian export trade.

That could be expanded, but I shall not take up more time of the house in doing that. Why have we heard nothing of this? Why is it not stressed? Of course the Americans are within their rights in coming in and buying, but they are sensible people and there is no reason why that situation cannot be discussed with them. We could argue for good customer relations. After all, if Canadian purchasers came to know the situation they could easily lay off buying from these companies; nor is there any reason why there should not be fair regulation. Dr. Mackintosh, speaking of this, says:

> Recently there have been some murmurs of complaint that certain areas of Canadian industry and finance are powerfully affected by United States subsidiaries in which there is no Canadian share in management . . . and no full reporting on the results of the Canadian sector of the enterprise.

Now I come to our old friend, the question of extravagance and waste. I remember several years ago, when our budget was about $2,400 million, the then Minister of Finance said to us that we could not expect to have the budget reduced as long as we wanted to have the services we were then getting. That was certainly a conservative statement. We must remember that was before the days of huge defence expenditures. Of course today we are having services we never dreamed of before. The Department of National Health and Welfare notably will not forget anything, because a vote is a vote. Incidentally, the independent health organizations, I think, find it hard, or believe it is hard, to get assistance from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). He prefers to dole out the money himself and I suppose his argument would be, "Well, they are not looking for votes and I am, therefore it is so much better to have this go out with he slogan: This comes to you from the Minister of National Health and Welfare."

As I said the other evening, we have a pamphlet on baby talk and there is also one on jealousy. Then I am interested in noting that the minister is interested in the stage because there is a pamphlet, issued in connection with the stage, which so far as I can make out is produced by his department. Then when we come to the Department of Fisheries we find that they issue a pamphlet on "ways to cook fish." Then there is one with the mysterious title "Oceans of Goodness". At any rate "oceans" fits in with the Department of Fisheries and I suppose it is all right.

But the Canadian taxpayer pays for all this. We can see that the Minister of Finance has given up. I said the other evening, and I shall not repeat, that he came to us recommended as a great, strong, rugged, unyielding, tough and unpleasant fellow who was going to crack down on all departments. But that has not happened and it will not happen. There is only one way that there will ever be any economy and that is for the minister to make up his mind as to how much a department should have and then tell them that that is all they are going to get and let them spend it as they see fit. I believe he would then see amazing instances of economy. As it is, the minister is beaten before he begins. Members of the department come all keyed up ready to prove that they need what they want to get. I suggest again to the minister that the present system is futile, that he could work miracles if he said to the department, "There is your allotment, if you want some special project you can make any economies yourself and get it." I believe that that could be done.

Of course the suspicion enters my mind that our ministers of finance themselves are not really crusaders for economy. I have never been able to believe that. After all, the expenditure of money makes them popular with a good many people, and large expenditures of billions help to increase the gross national product and help to create for the moment a buoyant situation. They help to add to the minister's taxes, and there you are. The merry-go-round goes on and on; some people think it can go on forever, but I am not one of those. I again put it to the minister with the greatest confidence that the only solution which will bring about economy is the one I have suggested.

I should like to give special mention again to the Department of National Defence with one or two words as to details. It cost $1,400,000 to wash the dirty linen of the Department of National Defence. The navy and air force come a little cheaper than the army, but I suppose that is because one of them lives in the air and the other lives on the water. I am interested in the telephone bill of $911,000 and would be interested in knowing in how many of those cases a letter with airmail and special delivery stamps would not have done just as well. Long distance telephoning is so easy: you just reach for the telephone and you do not have to pay for it yourself. I enjoy doing it, and I think everyone in this house does also. But somehow or other I am sure that this figure could be reduced a lot.

Telephones, telegrams and other communications cost $6,248,000, although much of that is taken up in the form of leased lines for the air force. These fellows must be very loquacious when they spend over $900,000 on long distance telephone calls.

Another thing I want to stress is this amazing figure of $1,775 million, which is the same as for last year. When I first read that, I could not believe my eyes. Next I thought it must be a misprint. Then I thought that there must be some easy explanation that had not occurred to me. I went around looking for it, but I have decided that there is no such easy explanation. I have decided that what this really means is that there was no estimating in any real sense at all. No one out of a lunatic asylum could believe that, if all the various items were considered separately and added up, they would by some magic produce exactly the same figure as a year ago. I do not think that anyone will argue that.

It seems to me that that is a piece of extraordinary effrontery—I can only call it that—on the part of the department. It means that they were not taking us seriously. But worse than that, what about the Department of Finance? I think it is a worse offence on the part of the Department of Finance than on the part of the Department of National Defence. In effect, what is being said is this: "Do not bother about the House of Commons, this will do for them; they are only the elected members, do not bother about them as they do not matter".

That is the way it seems to me. I wish to remind the house that in spite of all we could do the defence estimates are not going to the estimates committee. I can only hope that when these come before the committee of the whole house in the ordinary way it will not be in the last days of the session but at a time that will permit us to go into these items with some care and get to the bottom of them.

There is one other thing I want to say about the Department of National Defence. It has the most extraordinary faculty of increasing its staff, which increased from 45,718 in 1954 to 53,909 in 1955. That seems to me almost incredible and the only way I can explain it is by reference to the theory which was put forward in the London Economist last autumn with regard to the growth of civil service staff. This is called "Parkinson's Law". Several people have seen it, but I think it is worth putting on the record in part. It begins by saying:

> It is a commonplace observation that work expands so as to fill the time available for its completion. Thus, an elderly lady of leisure can spend the entire day in writing and dipatching a postcard to her niece at Bognor Regis. An hour will be spent in finding the postcard, another in hunting for spectacles, half an hour in a search for the address, an hour and a quarter in composition, and twenty minutes in deciding whether or not to take an umbrella when going to the pillar-box in the next street. The total effort which would occupy a busy man for three minutes all told may in this fashion leave another person prostrate after a day of doubt, anxiety and toil.
> Granted that work (and especially paper work) is thus elastic in its demands on time, it is manifest that there need be little or no relationship between the work to be done and the size of the staff to which it may be assigned. . . . Politicians and taxpayers have assumed (with occasional phases of doubt) that a rising total in the number of civil servants must reflect a growing volume of work to be done. Cynics, in questioning this belief, have imagined that the multiplication of officials must have left some of them idle or all of them able to work for shorter hours. But this is a matter in which faith and doubt seem equally misplaced.

Then we have an illustration of a case in which one official decides he needs an assistant, but he says he must not have just one assistant because that would mean that that man would argue with him. Therefore he would have to have two assistants, and it finally works out to the point where he needs seven officials. The Economist continues:

> Seven officials are now doing what one did before. . . . For these seven make so much work for each other that all are fully occupied and A is actually working harder than ever. An incoming document may well come before each of them in turn. Official E decides that it falls within the province of F, who places a draft reply before C, who amends it drastically before consulting D, who asks G to deal with it . . .

I shall say no more about that, but I come back with confidence to my suggestion that this matter should be dealt with in one way, and one only—by allocating amounts.

I wish to speak only for a moment about trade and the balance of payments. After all, nations, like individuals, cannot live indefinitely beyond their means. The enormous deficit of last year has been much in the public mind but, as I have said, the responsible minister took it very lightly. But we cannot repay trade deficits with optimism alone. I was rather disturbed the other day that the Minister of Finance was apparently making light of our dependence on the United States. This was when he spoke in Port Credit. He went as far as to suggest that we might be able to avoid the effects of a United States depression if one comes. He said:

> The time may be coming when we won't suffer the same as they do south of the border.

In his budget speech the minister said he hoped to be inoculated with the optimism of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Indeed, he must have had a double portion. We shall, of course, proceed towards self-sufficiency but, at the present time, living next to the United States colossus has inevitably a profound effect, which we should not minimize.

Now I should like to say a word about the Department of Finance itself and its administration and policy during the past year. At the time of the last budget, they told us that all was well with the economy, though they hoped it would be much better. Notwithstanding this assurance, they acted in defiance of their own declared opinion that all was well, first of all, by budgeting for a deficit and by decreasing taxes, thus increasing purchasing power and also by lowering the Bank of Canada rate. This was, of course, in order to make credit easier with the idea of speeding up the economy, but it was done at a time when central banks throughout the world were either raising their rates or standing pat. Moreover, the reduced rate of 1½ per cent was the lowest charged at the time by any central bank. Mr. Muir of the Royal Bank, commenting on it, said:

> This was an indication of an easy money policy that went far beyond the modest direct effect of a low bank rate.

It soon became clear that a boom was in the making, and indeed by the late spring the momentum had greatly increased. Nevertheless it was not until August that the department met itself galloping back and increased the Bank of Canada rate in August, in September and again in November. Further, there were established new and more far-reaching regulations with regard to reserves. So there you are.

I shall content myself by just adding a few words from a comment by Mr. Muir of the Royal Bank. Here are his words:

> I shall now consider a few of the most important problems confronting us in 1956. The first of these is obviously the new inflationary pressure built up during 1955. A review of that year such as I have given, should teach us that stability like freedom exacts its price in eternal vigilance. We must note too that there may be some difference of opinion, not only on the timing and magnitude of anti-inflationary policies, but also on the seriousness of the threat presented by the present boom. I believe that there are definite danger signs, not so much in prices as in the frantic pace of consumer buying, business expansion and the general tightness of markets in both commodities and labour.

As I said when I began, it is hard to make a dint in a rubber ball. It is hard to find things to say. Yet, if the fact that the budget was so empty and so regardless of the interests of so many people in Canada serves to create the feeling in other people that it has created in me, a feeling of something approaching indignation, that when we think we are sitting so pretty we can ignore the welfare of our fellow citizens—if it creates that feeling—then it may eventually have been worth while.

This government is not primarily concerned about the welfare of the unemployed, about the welfare of the maritimes. They are primarily concerned with so arranging matters that they can win the next election. That is the plain, inescapable truth. Let the unemployed get on as best they can; let the people in the maritimes go on for decades more with insuperable handicaps; let the farmers in the west survey sadly their piles of unsold wheat. But let us get ready for the next election.

I fear I have not been as forceful as I would have liked in speaking for the hundreds of thousands of our fellow citizens who have been and continue to be, in so far as this government is concerned, forgotten men and women. I only wish that I could din my words into the ears of every serious, every generous, every responsible citizen of this country and that I might have the gift to persuade them that it is their duty to rise up and demand action.

Further, just as Abraham Lincoln said that a state could not exist half slave and half free, I would like to stress the fact that a state cannot prosper when an important section of its citizens, men and women of character and capacity, are left with inferior opportunities, with a sense of injustice and frustration. If any word of mine today has the slightest influence in bringing this state of affairs to an end, I shall be happy indeed.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming):

> That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "this house regrets that the budget is empty, negative and partisan; that the government shows no concern over either the serious problems of distressed groups and areas or the growing economic domination of Canada by United States interests; and that these and its other failures demonstrate the government's irresponsibility and unfitness to hold office".

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to agree with what the hon. member who has just taken his seat said the other evening about the budget having all the earmarks of a standpat budget marking time until we approach the election of 1957. I imagine that when the next budget is brought down about a year from now it will be a very attractive document. The minister will make a very interesting speech full of promises to the Canadian people and then, since Easter will come about April 21, the house will probably be dissolved and about the middle of June, say the 17th of June, we shall find ourselves having a general election and a new House of Commons elected. I have no objection to that, of course.

Mr. Stick: Are you telling us when the election is going to be?

Mr. Coldwell: No.

Mr. Stick: I was wondering what side you were on.

Mr. Coldwell: I am doing what is my right in a free democracy. I am expressing my own opinion, and in spite of the hon. gentleman's objection to it—

Mr. Stick: I am not objecting. I am only asking a question.

Mr. Coldwell: I am going to express my opinions regardless of the hon. gentlemen who, as the Ottawa Citizen remarked last evening, may belong to the Liberal party but are not liberals. I want to say to the minister that I noticed a very marked difference between the budget this year and the budget last year. Last year the minister reduced certain taxes, particularly the income tax. This year there have only been a few reductions in excise and sales taxes. May I say immediately that, although they only amount to some $12 million, I think all of us welcome them because they effect certain adjustments and so on. I think that relief was needed with regard to the excise and sales taxes so as to bring them into line with what I believe is the policy of the government with regard to equipment for farms and other industries like agriculture.

I also noted that at last something which I have considered to be rather incongruous is going to be removed. I refer to the sales tax on antiques. The government is getting a bit antique itself and perhaps that is the reason that after 20 years the tax on antiques coming into this country is to be removed. As a matter of fact, I think one can commend the government for that.

With respect to the fact that there is no reduction in income tax this year, may I say that I do not know that even the reductions in income tax made last year affected materially an overwhelming part of our population. After all, a very large percentage of the population pay no income tax. They are not affected by any reduction. For the people in the lower brackets we found that the reduction last year, in the case of a married man with two or three children, for example, amounted to a little more than a few cents a week for such a man in what might be called the fairly low-middle bracket. Of course the people in the higher brackets received very substantial reductions.

I want to say to the minister that when next year comes and he has this surplus of $113 million, and if his outline of his expectations for the economy during the present year is borne out by the facts, I rather suspect that he will have far more than $113 million to play with provided he does not bring down what I hope he will bring down, namely, an estimate for a national health plan. I would rather see any surplus that is going to accrue during the current year used in bringing down a comprehensive national health plan, far more comprehensive than the minister has outlined to the committee, because I believe that would be the most beneficial thing that could be done by the government of Canada at this time.

Not only do I believe it is the most beneficial thing that can be done for the people generally but it also will be most beneficial for our old age pensioners. I should like to see them get an increase in their pensions. I hope that sooner or later the government will come around to giving them an increase, but I do not know of anything that would be more beneficial to them than a national health plan.

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) is not in his seat but I should like to say to him that I think the introduction of such a measure will facilitate immigration into this country, particularly from northwestern Europe. When I was in Britain a year and a half ago I found there was a very general understanding that Canada had no national health plan. When I was there letters were appearing in some of the British papers from immigrants who had come to Canada pointing out that they had done pretty well for the first two or three years, but then a serious illness had attacked one of the family and the medical and hospitalization expenses had not only wiped out all they had been able to save but had put them into debt.

When one considers that in most overseas countries from which we like to get as much immigration into Canada as we can they have quite comprehensive plans, then I say to the government, and particularly to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, that Canada needs such a plan to attract immigrants. I believe that we want immigrants because our country is one that still has wide open spaces with plenty of opportunities for immigrants, far more so than when I came here just over 46 years ago. The future is very bright for those who come here, but today all the progressive countries have social security plans that are quite comprehensive. People who think of coming to this country look for social security measures of the kind they would be giving up in leaving home.

May I say one other thing to the minister in this connection. I should like to see the countries of the commonwealth at least try to arrange their social security plans so that people moving from one commonwealth country to another would not lose any benefits. I am thinking particularly, of course, of the old age pensioners. Incidentally, today our old age pensions are on a contribution basis as old age pensions are in the United Kingdom. Our old age pensioners have made a special contribution of 2 per cent through the sales tax and consequently they have paid a premium. They should be entitled to their old age pension no matter where they may be, no matter whether a pensioner moves to Great Britain perhaps to stay with a younger sister after spending 30 or 40 years in Canada.

I have in mind at the moment a lady some 76 years old who is going to Britain to visit a younger sister. She must be back within three months. Yet I know perfectly well she could be cared for better over there provided she could get the old age pension in the same way that old age pensions are paid by some countries regardless of residence. So then I hope if the minister has a substantial surplus next year, that surplus will be used not to reduce corporation taxes, not even to reduce income taxes, but rather to bring our social security system up to the level it should be in order to give our people the kind of security they need and make the country more attractive to the kind of immigrants we want to get.

Then, too, I want to say to the minister that whether we have a surplus or not I would hope that we might use more of our revenue for the projects of the United Nations and our own Colombo plan, to assist in raising the standards of living across the world. On two occasions during the past week I have heard two competent observers who have been in the Soviet union. I heard Mr. Norman Smith on Tuesday evening, and he illustrated his lecture with pictures he had taken, mainly in Moscow. On Wednesday, of course, I listened to Mr. James Duncan of the Massey-Harris-Ferguson company. While listening to both of these addresses I realized what the challenge is that we are facing anew in the world today. Here we face a powerfully organized country. It is true it is dominated by a very small group of men and does not have the democratic procedures that we have. They are improving their output of material things every year and are now offering to assist the more underprivileged peoples of the world. These people who do not understand what democracy means will, I think, be influenced by those who can assist them most rapidly in emerging from their underprivileged position. I think we have to do a lot more than we have been doing in support of the United Nations technical aid and the Colombo plan. As I suggested to the minister of external affairs the other day, we should give our support to the special United Nations fund for economic development which is known as SUNFED.

May I also add that another thing that impressed me in connection with these two lectures was the tremendous urge and the tremendous planning of educational activities in the Soviet Union. In spite of the dictatorship, its cruelty and all the rest of it—which I hope has now passed but I am not yet convinced of that—the extent to which the old Russian culture has been encouraged and brought up to date has been impressive. I was not here yesterday when there was some discussion about pictures for the national gallery. I want to tell the minister that so far as I am concerned I believe we are not doing enough in the way of encouraging culture in this country. I think when we acquire good art and have a proper national gallery in which to put that art, we are doing something of inestimable value for the future of our country. I am not going to enter into a debate as to whether or not commissions should be paid for buying those pictures, but I am very happy indeed to know the national gallery is acquiring some first class pictures, because to say that man does not live by bread alone is as true today as it was when it was said long years ago.

This brings me to the proposal in the budget to place a 20 per cent excise tax on certain magazines that are published in the United States, or elsewhere, I presume, and are brought into this country in which advertising is invited from Canadian advertisers. I am in complete sympathy with the object of that particular tax, but I am very doubtful as to its efficacy. I doubt very much that the 20 per cent excise tax will do anything substantial towards discontinuing the publication of those magazines in this country. What I think may happen is that the advertising rates may be increased by 20 per cent. If the circulation of Time and Reader's Digest is sufficiently attractive to the advertisers, we shall not achieve the objective the minister has in mind. I want to assure him, however, that I am in complete sympathy with the objective of the proposal.

I think a more positive approach would be to set up the Canada Council to carry out some of the recommendations that are found in the Massey report. I am not narrowing that down to magazines, literature and so on, but I am thinking of the need for expansion in the field of education and for the building up of our educational facilities. I was impressed the other evening when I heard of the great university in Moscow, the thousands of students that are there and the numbers of highly qualified engineers and technical men that are being turned out, and I realized that our own universities have had to cut down on the number of students that they can accommodate. They have had to raise certain standards in order to keep students out. Now, those standards are not always the standards that are desirable. The fact that a student is proficient in one field on an examination paper and is not as proficient in another field may limit that student's right to enter a university. I know, both from my experience as a teacher and my experience as a student in the old days—I am not going to make any confessions—that there were one or two subjects I not only found very difficult but only as the result of considerable cramming did I manage to get the 52 per cent or 53 per cent that was required to put me through. Yet I am quite sure that in other fields I was fairly proficient. So, I think we have to pay much more attention to the recommendations in the Massey report. I believe the minister will have to provide from time to time, not only grants in aid to our universities but grants for the provision of scholarships for young Canadians who have the ability and the desire to go on with education.

Again may I point out that it is the boast in Britain today that no child with ability need be denied a university education if that child and the parents of that child desire the education. Through systems of bursaries, scholarships and nominations, today every child in the United Kingdom can attain a higher education. We have not reached that stage in Canada. I think probably the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) was right the other evening when he said we could look into our defence expenditures a little more closely. I would not like to rise in this house and move a motion to reduce defence expenditures under this budget by $200 million or $300 million. Yet in my own mind I am convinced that if this department were gone into very carefully, $200 million, $300 million, $400 million or even $500 million might be saved. Of course, you might have to spend it in certain other defence projects under circumstances that might arise. I do not know, but I am quite sure that there are unnecessary expenditures and extravagances that could be dealt with.

I listened to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) this morning when he talked about the encouragement of private enterprise. Well, I think there are some fields in which private enterprise can serve the nation. But when I hear criticisms, following a plea for private enterprise, of the manner in which, for example, the United States corporations and investors are entering the Canadian economy, I sometimes wonder what those who criticize the lack of encouragement of private enterprise have in mind, because if we are to have complete private enterprise, let us have it. If we have complete private enterprise, then there should be no let or hindrance of any person or any corporation coming into our economy and making out of it the best that he or it can possibly get out of it. I cannot go along with the idea that if we get rid of some of our enterprises that because of their very nature have to be public enterprise we would be performing any service to this country.

I noted the reference to the Trans-Canada Air Lines, a very efficient airway system, and I also saw—I have not got it with me; if I had known it was coming up this morning I might have had it—the figures that have been published regarding air traffic. The number of passengers carried between great cities like Chicago and New York and in our own country, although very much less impressive, if divided between two transcontinental air lines, would mean that neither of them could pay expenses. Therefore, we have to be careful when we talk of encouraging private enterprise to define what that encouragement should be, and how it should be undertaken.

As far as we are concerned, we criticize the alienation of our resources to foreign corporations because we believe that we should be planning the development of those resources ourselves. If we have to, why are all these things not public enterprises? I voted for a resolution introduced by the official opposition a short time ago. In the resolution the official opposition urged that the federal authority and the provinces should co-operate in the development of our resources. How? Well, as far as we are concerned we think that should be undertaken very largely by public enterprise because private enterprise has failed to do the job.

Those are some of the things that struck me. I say to the minister, I noted that he admitted in his speech that some sectors of industry and agriculture have not fully shared in the rate of progress which he outlined in his speech. He said there was some unevenness in the rate of expansion; and, of course, this implies that the condition of agriculture has been improving. As a matter of fact there was some improvement in agricultural returns in 1955 over 1954, but nothing commensurate with the need of agriculture. Agriculture has been steadily losing ground over the last number of years. For example, last year corporation profits climbed by almost 30 per cent in the first three quarters—I have not the figure for the fourth quarter—as compared with the same period in 1954; but net farm income fell in the same period from $2,155 million in 1951 to $1,126 million in 1954, a decline of 47·8 per cent. But, as I said a moment ago, there was some improvement last year. However, 10 per cent or so increase in improvement last year will not compensate for the nearly 48 per cent decline in the period which I mentioned a moment ago.

Then, of course, we are all happy that we have not unemployment to the extent this year that we had a year ago, but there is still a considerable amount of unemployment, or at least there are large numbers of people who are seeking jobs. The last figure which I have seen indicates that there were 515,000 unplaced applicants. I will say immediately that they are not all unemployed, but they are unplaced applicants for jobs as at February 16 of this year. It is true that that is a better figure than the figure of a year ago, which I think was in the neighbourhood of 600,000; but it still indicates a very serious condition in the field of employment. It does not matter whether he is one in 100,000 men, 400,000 men or 500,000, it does not matter how many there are, the person who is unemployed suffers whether he is accompanied by a very large number or a very few people. Anyone who has had the experience of standing in a relief line, asking for a meal ticket and then going away and getting a meal on a meal ticket will know what it does to one. I did that once, not because I was unemployed but because I wanted to see what the treatment was, and I found it very much to my consternation. Fortunately, since those days—I refer to 1921—we have introduced unemployment insurance and we have other means to assist the unemployed; but still there are those who suffer in the manner in which they suffered in 1921, a smaller number perhaps, but yet nonetheless the suffering is there.

I cannot deal with all the matters that I had in mind when I was thinking of what I would say in connection with this debate. But I do want to say to the minister that he still has in his budget and in his methods of collection of taxes tremendous loopholes which should be plugged. In the legislation there are loopholes under which rich and powerful corporations in many fields, and well-to-do individuals in those fields, can in various ways evade what I think is their fair share of the burden of financing the public business of this country. We believe that ability to pay is of course fundamental and upon which we should base all our taxation. I think there is no fairer method of taxation than income tax, and it has the other saving grace that the person who pays the income tax knows that he is paying and contributing to the country. I am going to give the example that I have given before, and nothing that the minister or his predecessor has said has changed my opinion that it is wrong. At the present time a man can receive some $14,000 in a given year from dividends and so on and pay no income tax. A man with $3,000, if he has no children, will pay $150 income tax. The man with $14,000, similarly married with no children, if his income is derived, as I said, from dividends from a Canadian mining, oil or gas company, pays only his old age security tax of $60 and nothing more.

I would like to put on the record the method by which I worked that out in order that the minister and others in the house can see how it is arrived at and if they wish to try to explain it or criticize it they may do so. I took an actual amount because it comes out evenly. I used the case of a man with an income of $14,542 derived as I have just indicated. If we deduct tax exemptions of $2,000 for the taxpayer and his wife, that gives us a total deduction of $2,000. I then deducted 20 per cent depletion allowance, which is $2,908 and leaves a taxable income of $9,634. The old age security tax is, of course, $60. Income tax other than old age security tax is $1,957. The tax on investment income, which is 4 per cent on $9,237, gives $369. Tax payable before tax credit, that is apart from old age security tax, is $2,326. The taxpayer gets a tax credit of 20 per cent of $11,634, or $2,327. In other words, not only does he pay no tax but he has one dollar left over to come and go on. Of course, I took into account 20 per cent on income from dividends after depletion allowances are deducted.

I think that system should be changed. I think it is an injustice. It means there is a tax exemption of almost $14,000 for one couple and an exemption of only $2,000 for another. When a person who derives his income from dividends begins to pay income tax at all over and above the $14,000 he begins at a rate of 9·6 per cent instead of 15 per cent as in the case of the man who works for his money and who makes only $3,000. That is not fair and of course it has a fantastic result.

I could go on and deal at further length with this question but there is one other matter with which I want to deal and that is the depletion allowance itself. I have only a few minutes in which to deal with this subject. Depletion allowances have become extremely important in our structure. Depletion allowances eliminate from corporation taxes 33⅓ per cent of profits in the case of oil and gas companies, companies operating base and precious metal mines and industrial mineral mines. Coal mine owners have a depletion allowance of ten cents per ton. In the case of oil and gas and mining companies this means that up to one-third of the public's share in our natural resources, and I regard them as such, is given back as a massive subsidy to those who are exploiting those resources.

I am not the only person criticizing the depletion allowances. We have another example in Professor F. E. La Brie, who, in his book "Introduction to Income Tax Law—Canada", published last year, wrote:

> A deduction for depletion that is not limited to capital cost not only permits taxpayers to recoup capital expenditure tax-free but permits them to realize tax-free capital gain through an income-earning process of exploitation.
> "A" spends $100,000 in discovering an oil well. The potential yield of the oil well is $3 million. "A" through a depletion allowance of 33⅓ per cent, may take $1 million worth of oil from the well tax-free. Does this not permit him a tax-free capital gain of $900,000?

I think it does. I think the answer is in the affirmative in the example which Professor La Brie gives. These depletion allowances are altogether out of line today and we should plug the hole and institute a capital gains tax in order that the country may receive something from these great inflated values which are often created.

I wish to cite another recent example before I conclude. On March 17 I read about Algoma Steel Corporation whose profits, according to the latest consolidated statement, were $10,400,000 in 1955 compared with $4,500,000 last year. The thing I particularly noticed was that stock exchange quotations on Algoma have climbed from $49 a share in January, 1954, to $121 as at March 15 of this year. What of the man who bought a thousand shares of Algoma something over two years ago? He makes an income of over $70,000, or a capital gain if you like, just for sitting and watching the ticker-tape in a broker's office, and yet this is tax-free and can be used as income.

I could give another and more striking example but I do not have time to do so today. I imagine it is deals of this description, however, which account for many of the new cars we see in such large quantities. I cannot understand how people with incomes ranging from $6,000 to $8,000 a year can buy new cars each year. We speak of inflation. One of the ways by which we could stop this tremendous demand would be to put on a capital gains tax. The minister may say that it is difficult to do and I agree that this is so. It is difficult to know what capital gains should be taxed but I think that difficulty can be overcome. I believe that the people who are making large incomes by manipulation and speculation on the stock market should be called upon to pay part of their gains to the government and the people of Canada whose resources are the basis of exploitation and speculation.

I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis):

> That the amendment be amended by inserting therein immediately after the words "United States interests" the following words:
> "that it has failed to reduce the burden of sales and income taxes on those in the lower income groups, while continuing to favour privileged interests and those with unearned incomes by maintaining the 20 per cent dividend tax credit and by refusing to impose a tax on capital gains."

The amendment as amended would then read:

> This house regrets that the budget is empty, negative and partisan; that the government shows no concern over either the serious problems of distressed groups and areas or the growing economic domination of Canada by United States interests; that it has failed to reduce the burden of sales and income taxes on those in the lower income groups, while continuing to favour privileged interests and those with unearned incomes by maintaining the 20 per cent dividend tax credit and by refusing to impose a tax on capital gains; and that these and its other failures demonstrated the government's irresponsibility and unfitness to hold office.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, because of the unfortunate absence of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) and because of the fact that the Social Credit group in this house have conferred upon me the responsibility and privilege of being the chairman of the banking and commerce committee representing the Social Credit group, it becomes my duty to speak in relation to the budget speech which the Minister of Finance delivered in this house on the evening of March 20.

Before proceeding may I ask the Minister of Finance whether or not he believes that in Canada what is physically possible ought to be financially possible. I do not expect the minister to answer that, but I suggest that during the remarks which I shall make, he keep his mind concentrated on that question and on the marvellous physical capacities of Canada.

Mr. Harris: If my hon. friend wants an answer, I have a firm belief that the Canadian people and the Canadian parliament are competent to do a great many things. I would not want to say that within the realm of human activity nothing is impossible.

Mr. Blackmore: I am glad the minister made that reply. He was straightforward and honest just as he is in everything else. I must say that he has committed himself to a considerable proposition. It is well that he said that, before I go forward now with what I have to say. I should like to quote from page 771 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the House of Commons banking and commerce committee for 1939. Mr. Jaques asked Mr. Towers, then president of the Bank of Canada, this question and received this answer:

Q. Would you admit that anything physically possible and desirable can be made financially possible?

A. Certainly.

No qualification to the answer at all. Under those circumstances I have the idea that we are justified in being a bit exacting in respect of the minister with regard to this budget speech. I have noticed that many newspaper reports throughout Canada have expressed disappointment relative to the budget, and some of them have expressed rather strong disapproval.

The minister is an honourable, conscientious and able man and he has to assist him in his department a staff of what should be highly trained and honourable, conscientious and able men. People in this house and in Canada generally are warranted in assuming that the minister and his department have produced what they conscientiously believe to be the best budget which could be produced for the year 1956 considering the many and varied circumstances confronting Canada.

If there are in the present budget unjustifiable deficiencies, as many people including Social Crediters think there are, then it is well that we ask ourselves who is to blame for those deficiencies. I have not seen one newspaper in Canada asking that question, not one. That is a remarkable thing. Is the minister to blame? Are his departmental advisers to blame? Or is the orthodox financial system to blame, the financial system under which the minister operates, the financial system under whose tenets the minister and the department and the government have been under the necessity of managing, or have thought they were?

What are some of the basic deficiencies in this budget? To help ourselves to more satisfactorily judge, may we ask ourselves, and try to arrive at the answers to, certain fundamental questions. They are simple, almost childishly easy to answer. First, what is a financial system? Second, what are the functions which a financial system should perform? What have we in Canada the right to expect the Department of Finance under the minister's direction to do for Canada? Third, what is an economic system? Fourth, what are the functions that an economic system should perform?

May we answer those questions. Answering question No. 1, it might be said with a considerable degree of accuracy that the financial system of a community is the system by means of which that community provides money for the use of the community as a whole and as individuals. Answering question No. 2, it might be said that the functions of a community's financial system are three, namely, first, to defray the expenses of carrying on the work of governing the community; second, to render available to would-be producers the loans they need with which to produce adequate goods and services for the community; and third, to render available to the members of the community—I imagine a number will object to this one although it is unanswerable and inevitable—the money necessary to enable them to consume what they need, or their full equitable share of, the community's production. This is the point which Social Crediters particularly stress.

Expressing the answer in another way, we might with accuracy say that the function of a community's financial system is to make financially possible for the community and its members what is physically possible and desirable in the community, having regard to the community's resources, material and human.

Answering question No. 3, it might be said that a community's economic system is the system by means of which the community, either as a whole or as individuals, produces or produce goods and services and delivers or deliver and distributes or distribute those goods and services, either for consumption within the community or for exchange or trade with other communities for goods and services for consumption in the community. I think there will be hardly any argument regarding the answers I have given thus far.

Answering question No. 4, it might be said that the basic and essential functions of an economic system are to produce and to deliver goods and services, as required, when required and where required; and that the two incidental functions performed in the process of production are, first, to distribute among the consumers more or less the purchasing power with which those consumers may buy and consume a portion of the products of the community and, second, to provide employment and jobs to members of the community from which they get purchasing power with which to obtain and consume a portion of the products of the community.

Many people go astray in their thinking in respect of these last two points which I have made. There are a good many people who think that unless business, unless the factories, unless the mercantile institutions, unless firms and other productive enterprises can hire all the people in the community, then those enterprises are failing in their functions. This is a serious fallacy.

Many people, and I fear most of my Liberal and Conservative friends are included, believe that as an industry such as a coal mine or a textile mill produces coal or textiles, it puts into the hands of the people enough money with which to buy that coal or those textiles. This is a complete and utter fallacy which leads the country far astray in its effort to think its way through the difficult economic situations that prevail and confront us.

Now I go on to another matter which indicates how responsible the minister before us is. The finance department controls the financial system and the economic system. The finance department in the government of a community is the department that directly controls and manages the financial system of the community and that at the same time indirectly controls and manages the community's economic system, since in our time, sustained production of goods is impossible without money, or at least credit, which is another form of money. Before long we will have the minister carrying plenty of responsibility. The community's minister of finance is therefore, in effect, likewise the community's economic minister, so that we are justified in saying the Minister of Finance is the minister of finance and economics.

The Minister of Finance, in his twofold capacity as Canada's minister of finance and economics, is responsible to this house and to the Canadian nation to see that, first, money is provided for defraying the expenses of governing Canada, as I said before; second, money is made available to Canadian producers and would-be producers adequately to enable them to produce whatever kinds and quantities of goods are necessary to provide all Canadians with abundant living, in so far as Canadian resources, material and human, permit.

I think everyone in this house and in the country agrees that the resources of this country are such, and that the industrial equipment of this country is such, and that the transportation facilities and communication facilities of this country are such, and the human beings in this country are such, that there is no excuse whatsoever for this country producing anything short of abundant living for every person in Canada. If it is failing to do that, whose responsibility is it? It must be the Minister of Finance's responsibility, for he is the minister of the financial system and the economic system, as I pointed out.

Now we have a basis on which we can begin to criticize scientifically and intelligently the budget that has been placed before us. Criticisms of the budget commonly heard are so vague and rambling and piecemeal that it makes a person almost weary to think that that is the best people know what to say about a budget.

I have said it is the minister's business to make money available for two purposes: first of all, to run the country and, second, to provide money for producers so that they can get the money. The third responsibility is to provide money or make it available to all Canadians adequately to enable them to buy and consume the desirable goods which Canadians produce. If this is not so, then it makes no difference how much milk, cream, butter, cheese, fruit and other products the people of Canada produce, it will be impossible for the people of Canada to buy and consume them. Consequently, it is conceivable that people can be going in great misery in the presence of the most astounding abundance throughout the land. Here I believe is where the Social Crediters and other members of the house part company. If any member can find a flaw in that reasoning let him get up when the opportunity comes and point out the flaw and establish his case. I defy him to do it.

All of this means that in effect the Minister of Finance is responsible for seeing that money is made available for providing markets for Canadian producers. Generally the common talk about markets is so vague, inconsistent and unreasonable that we get nowhere. Few people seem to realize that in a country like this we can produce our own markets within our own country for all the goods our people are able to use. The person whose responsibility it is to produce those markets is the Minister of Finance. Has he done it? We can see now where we are approaching real deficiencies in the budget.

A fourth responsibility of the minister is to make money available, by reason of the foregoing, so that whatever is physically possible is financially possible, having regard to Canadian resources, material and human, as I have indicated by the passage I read not long ago from Mr. Graham Towers. When

Mr. Graham Towers was before the banking and commerce committee in 1939, he was honest and frank, he certainly knew his business, but he got so cagey after a few years that he did not dare to commit himself on anything. But you may be sure that what Graham Towers told us in those early days was fact, for when he took over he was qualified for his job.

I now turn to the budget speech, having referred to these standards by which to judge the budget speech. The budget speech is, or ought to be, in effect the minister's annual report in respect of the discharge of his responsibilities in relation to the functions of his department, both as Minister of Finance and as minister of economics, that is, as minister of production of goods and as minister of markets for goods.

Let us examine the budget speech, the report of the minister's performance. Has the minister performed these functions as Canadians have a full right to expect those functions to be performed? Before I say anything more, I suggest we give that matter a few moment's thought. Looking at the budget from this point of view, what are some of the deficiencies quickly discoverable? Let us review the minister's full responsibilities as to providing money, and see whether or not he has adequately discharged all those during the year 1955-56 and is prepared to discharge them in 1956-57.

Having regard to Canada's resources, has the minister been able to discharge his number one responsibility, namely, to provide the money to defray the expenses that ought to be incurred in carrying on the work of governing Canada? I believe that I cannot be successfully challenged when I say that except perhaps in the case of the Department of National Revenue alone, there is not one single department in the present government that has anything like the amount of money it needs and could spend without causing inflation, if only the minister could get the money. Now, he knows how true that all is.

Let us concentrate on the question of getting the money and leave aside all the foolish talk we often hear in the newspapers and elsewhere. He knows very well that there is not a department in the government that has not asked for much more money than he was able to give, and he knows they could use it.

Take, for example, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Think what the minister, energetic, able and idealistic and ambitious, could do in respect of our parks alone, if he just had the money. Think what a wonderland this country would be as an attraction to tourists, and how rapidly we would begin to do away with our adverse trade balance with the United States. But the minister is hampered and cramped in every direction because he just has not the money. That indicates that the Minister of Finance has fallen down with respect to that department.

An hon. Member: Tell him how to get it.

Mr. Blackmore: I will come to that in due time. All things in season. Take the Department of National Defence. Nothing need be said in regard to money required for that department. The Minister of National Defence could probably use four times the amount of money he has at his disposal in respect of the Department of National Defence, and he has had to be limited by the Minister of Finance because the latter has said, "I cannot get the money." He has not told him whether or not the goods and the resources and the people of Canada can build the kind of organization that the Minister of National Defence wants. He just said, "I cannot get the money." Why could he not get the money? If what is physically possible can be made financially possible, then unquestionably the minister stands condemned for deficiency in performance with respect to the administration of the Department of National Defence.

Take health and welfare. Think what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) would do if he had plenty of money in respect of civil defence, which we all know we need, old age pensions, health insurance and all that sort of thing. You can just imagine what a happy land he would soon make this country if he only just had the money. He has all the human and material resources available. There is all the material in Canada necessary to build every hospital he wants. There are all the people necessary to train nurses and doctors and give every kind of service which is necessary in our hospitals. All the goods and services and the capacity to produce such are here to produce the perfect set-up for national health.

Mr. Campbell: We would not be very happy very long if we did what you suggest.

Mr. Ellis: Everybody is out of step but our John.

Mr. Blackmore: The fact is you never give us a constructive idea and yet you are always interfering with somebody else who is trying to help. Let us go forward. Let us go on with the next one. Will the hon. member who just interrupted me say that we have not got the natural resources and the ability to produce the goods and services necessary to make a perfect health set-up?

Mr. Campbell: I will say this. If you spent all the money you are talking about now the country would be broke.

Mr. Blackmore: That is an indication that the hon. member is blind in both eyes intellectually. He has not even begun to learn. He does not accept what Graham Towers said, that what is physically possible can be made financially possible. I suggest that the hon. member think that over for the next three or four days. Just think it over. Does he believe Graham Towers knew what he was talking about?

Mr. Ellis: Is he a Social Crediter?

Mr. Blackmore: The point is that at that time Graham Towers was the president of the Bank of Canada, was in a position to speak with authority on the matter, and that is what he said. Let the hon. member explain that away and not get up and make a fool of himself by talking about things he does not know anything about.

Mr. Carrick: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Blackmore: Take transport—

Mr. Carrick: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Blackmore: Let me finish my speech and then ask your questions. I shall be glad to answer them all. Otherwise we just cannot go ahead in a straightforward manner. I have already put questions to the hon. member and other hon. members. If he can answer them let him take the floor when I am finished. Take transport. Think of all the harbours, all the railroads and all that sort of thing the minister could build if he only had the money. Have we the goods with which to do that? Have we the means of fabricating the steel? Have we the means of supplying all the various kinds of things necessary to produce a perfect transportation system? Certainly we have. In Canada there is no lack of resources and no lack of physical capacity to build a transport system second to none in the world. What is the handicap? We have not got the money. We do not know how to get it. Obviously that runs completely contrary to Graham Towers' statement.

Take trade and commerce. We are worrying at the present time about a gas pipe line from Alberta to Ontario and Quebec to provide the great industrial areas of Canada with a safe fuel which they could use in time of need. Everybody recognizes that we ought to be able to build it and yet we have been worrying for about five years about financing the pipe line. We have not got it done yet and we will talk for weeks and weeks about it. Why? Because we have not got the physical capacity in Canada to build the pipe line? No. Because we have not got the money.

Mr. Ellis: We are relying on free enterprise to do it. That is why.

Mr. Blackmore: We are relying on people who do not have any more intelligence than my hon. friend, people like him who do not know any more than he knows. If we had a man like Graham Towers managing affairs we would find the money because he said what is physically possible can be made financially possible. Now, let us go forward.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Ilsley said that too.

Mr. Blackmore: Take finance, the minister's own department. We are in the midst of very serious differences with the provinces. We call them together in conference time and again and all we do is argue and haggle with them about whether or not they will assume certain responsibilities which we would like them to assume. We act just as though it was not true at all that what is physically possible can be made financially possible. The provinces possess vast resources and have the people to process those resources into goods and services. The minister can very well do with a good many hundreds of millions of dollars to take care of the needs of the provinces and take the worries off his mind. It is not because we have not got plenty of goods and services. It is not because we have not got plenty of resources. It is because we have not got the financial intelligence to do what Graham Towers said could be done, and that is all.

In the light of what I have said, this budget stands condemned as utterly inadequate in this country at the present time.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: If the hon. member will ask me questions when I am finished I will answer them just as long as he will give me the time.

Mr. Wylie: He will forget them in the meantime.

Mr. Blackmore: If he forgets them they are not worth keeping in mind. Having regard to what is physically possible and desirable in Canada, has the minister been able to discharge his responsibility to provide the money to those who would produce? In order to answer the question, all we need to do is to look at the farmers in the three prairie provinces. Most of them have not the slightest idea where they are going to get the money to produce next year's crop. The minister does not know. I would not say that he does not care because he is too honourable a man not to care, but he does not know and cannot do anything about it. We have in the prairies tremendous wealth in goods, both actual and potential.

Take the Canadian oil companies. When Hon. N. E. Tanner set out to get the oil resources of Alberta developed he came down to eastern Canada. He went everywhere to see if he could find the risk capital to develop those oil resources but not a dollar could he get. He went over to Britain and tried every way to get the capital to develop that oil industry but not a bit could he get. When he came to eastern Canada did we lack the resources with which to develop that oil industry? Not at all. We had all the resources necessary. Why were we not able to make it financially possible to drill the wells and thus keep out the tremendous amount of United States capital which is now threatening to take control of the nation and is causing anxiety to every member of the house? Evidently the finance department of those days fell down in respect of being able to finance this development.

What about the gas wells? The same is true. You cannot even get risk capital to finance the gas pipe line to bring gas from Alberta to eastern Canada after private investors from the United States have come here and produced the gas. Is it because we ourselves have not the physical means to build the pipe line? Not at all. It is because we have not the financial intelligence.

Take the production of steel from our iron ore deposits. The other day a member of the Conservative party was wise in warning us against the fact that United States money was being spent in the development of great iron ore deposits in eastern Canada and railroads to those deposits. He was worried because United States capital was taking care of that. No wonder he was worried. So am I, but where can we get the money to finance such a development?

An hon. Member: Print it.

Mr. Blackmore: Do we lack the physical means, do we lack the resources, do we lack the ability to develop that iron deposit, bring out the iron and process it? Not at all. We just lack the financial intelligence to make what is physically possible financially possible. There is no other answer.

Take such a thing as the dock services at Halifax to which I referred the other day. I mentioned the fact that Halifax had been promised a dock back in 1913 and is still waiting for it, while at the same time it is falling farther and farther behind in the competition to provide service for the great ocean going ships because it does not have the facilities to compete. The minister has not shown up very brightly with respect to finding money to finance production.

Let us look at responsibility No. 3, to supply money to consumers to enable them to buy; in other words, provide markets in Canada for all the goods and services which the Canadian people can use.

Now, let us look at a few very concrete facts that every hon. member in this house will recognize. Is there any province in Canada in which they cannot produce—everyone coming from a province will know about his own province—enough wheat for the needs of its own people? I doubt it. Is there any province that cannot produce enough oats, enough barley, enough rye, enough flax, to satisfy the needs of its own people? I think every province is able to do that. Then, why does it not do it? Why cannot its people have all they want of these things? Something is wrong with the financial system. The physical capacity is there.

Now, turning to corn there are some provinces that cannot produce corn. However, there is sufficient capacity in other provinces like Ontario that can produce corn to give the people all the corn they need.

Is there any province that cannot produce all the honey it needs? I doubt it. Is there any province that cannot produce sugar? Probably there are some that are not able to produce sugar, but others like my province of Alberta can produce all the sugar Canadians can use two and a half times over, so there is not lack of the production of sugar and honey.

Is there any province in Canada that cannot produce all the dairy products that are needed such as milk, cream, butter and cheese? Is there any province that cannot produce all the beef and pork for its own needs? Is there any province that cannot produce enough potatoes, beets, parsnips, cauliflower, cabbage, onions, for its own needs? If every one of the provinces in Canada produced sufficient of these things so the people could get all they needed and all the people could buy them they would be pretty well off. You would not have the terrible suffering that is now being endured by the old age pensioners and so many of the others. It is not that the provinces cannot produce these things, but somehow or other they cannot finance the consumption. The dominion government cannot do that either—the poor people!—because they lack the financial ability to do what Graham Towers in his wisdom said could be done back in 1939.

An hon. Member: Why did he not do it?

Mr. Blackmore: I suppose government policy interfered. He indicated as a result of some questions asked at that time that government policy interfered. In other words, he meant that the Liberal party stood in his way and would not let him do it. Is there any province that cannot produce peaches, apricots, pears, cherries, grapes, apples, strawberries, raspberries, blueberries, gooseberries, rhubarb? There may be some that will not be able to produce some of these things like peaches, but certain provinces can produce all of these that the whole of the Canadian people could possibly use. People do not get them. In most cases the provinces do not produce these because they cannot sell them. What an unfair, what a fantastic situation that is. Evidently the minister has failed dismally in financing consumption in Canada, that is, in finding markets for the goods which people in every province in Canada can produce in sufficient quantities to make all people well off. In other words, these things can be produced in sufficient quantities to enable the people to enjoy an abundant life.

I shall deal now with the fourth of his responsibilities, finding the money which is necessary to make financially possible what is physically possible. In that respect today the Department of Finance of the Dominion of Canada has been a most dismal failure. It stands condemned. Now, it is high time something was done about reform. I am going to say the minister has done his best. I do not think any finance minister in charge of the affairs of Canada since I have been here did not do his best, but he was hemmed in, trammelled and hamstrung by the financial system under which he was trying to work.

Mr. Ellis: The free enterprise system.

Mr. Blackmore: Nothing of the sort. The best each of these ministers has been able to do down through the years was not good enough, and it is not good enough now. The question is being asked, what should be done? I do not hesitate a minute to suggest to the minister that he adopt Social Credit.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: Now, those people who have no way in the world of answering the question as to why we cannot finance these things are the people who condemn Social Credit because they do not know what it is. I maintain that Social Credit will solve the problems.

Mr. Ellis: You support the free enterprise system?

Mr. Hansell: Oh, shut up.

Mr. Blackmore: Anyone who thinks he can successfully answer me, just take his opportunity and get on the floor and try his skill, especially in committee so I can get back at him. The whole thing is that there is a whole new system of financing the country which hon. members just will not even consider. If we were getting along successfully in respect of financing every department, they could be excused. But when it is recognized everywhere that the financial system we know is a dismal failure, then surely you would think every hon. member in this house and every person in this country would be humble enough and responsible enough to try to find out the facts about Social Credit before brushing it off with some silly remark about funny money.

May I give some statements which I am sure hon. members would like to have, as well as the people out in the country. I am sure I will not be able to give all I wish to give. These are statements coming from Major C. H. Douglas who is the originator of the Douglas system of social credit.

Mr. Byrne: Where is he?

Mr. Blackmore: He is dead now, but this was a long time ago. He left living records, and I am going to give you a few of his statements. Major C. H. Douglas, as recorded at page 97 of "The Douglas System of Social Credit", evidence taken by the agricultural committee of the Alberta legislature, session 1934, said:

> Social Credit from the technical point of view is simply the power to monetize real wealth.

It means the power to create money to represent the physical realities which obtain in the state. That is all, and that is simple enough. Now, there are some more interesting comments on page 98 of this same document. He says—

Mr. Byrne: A plus B over C.

Mr. Blackmore: That is just foolishness. The hon. member should listen to what I am going to give. The trouble is that members like the hon. member for Kootenay East have just learned two or three little superficialities and have never tried to learn the real facts concerning Social Credit. Now, I am going to give him the real facts. Now, listen—

Mr. Byrne: I apologize.

Mr. Blackmore: That is good; that is a credit to the hon. member if he will just keep on in that vein.

On page 98 Major Douglas had this to say in reply to questions. He was thoroughly questioned and went into all the details which were necessary to explain his whole system. It looks as though I have not the time to give you the things I wanted to give. I was going to give some other quotations, Mr. Speaker, but I find I have not the time so I would much rather quit than leave the whole situation at sea.

I have quotations which would back up these general statements. The Social Credit financial technique consists of, first, the creation of debt-free money to represent the financial realities of the country, the goods and services. Bearing in mind that money is only a ticket to goods, wherever goods are, money can be, just as where street car seats are, street car tickets can be and where theatre seats are, theatre tickets can be. Bear in mind that money is only a ticket to goods. It is a man-made mechanism and any amount can be created at the will of man according to the goods and services, being sure that the goods are there.

The second principle is that if money is created it shall be used in bringing prices down. In other words, money is first of all used to bring about a compensation discount. If, for example, a pair of shoes were offered for sale at $10 and there were enough goods and services in the country to justify creating enough money, then the government could offer to give a 10 per cent disount on those shoes, enabling the man who buys the shoes to buy them at $9 instead of $10.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: Now, just get this, you poor weakling.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blackmore: All right. The man will get the goods for $9, but the merchant who gave the $1 discount would submit his bill to the bank and the banker would replace that $1 to him; that is, he would compensate him for the discount given. Everybody can see that if that principle were applied all across the country the prices of goods would come down and not go up. In other words, the very opposite of inflation would result.

Mr. Dupuis: Would you cut wages?

Mr. Blackmore: No, we would not cut wages. The important thing, though, is that the hon. member just did not get what I said. If a pair of shoes were offered at $10 and there were enough goods and services in the country to permit the government to create enough money to offer a 10 per cent discount, an individual would get the shoes for $9. The merchant would take the bill of the man to whom he sold the shoes for $9 to the bank and the banker would give him $1 to make up for the $1 that he lost. In other words, the banker would give him compensation for the discount the merchant had given and then the banker would submit his records to the office which had to do with creating the money and be reimbursed himself. So that altogether there would be a compensated discount.

Now, this kind of thing occurred during the war. It will be remembered that we had a discount on milk so that the producer could get 13 cents a quart for his milk and the ordinary citizen paid 9 cents a quart. That was done by a Liberal government. If that was done by a Liberal government in those days using orthodox debt money, then I ask you why we cannot do it now using debt-free government-created money? If the government did that in accordance with the goods and services available, and if it were done all across the board, it would result in just the very opposite of inflation. That is the important thing to keep in mind.

The next important thing is that in addition to—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I shall have to discontinue my remarks. I am very glad to do so.

(Translation):

Mr. J. I. Rochefort (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, last year after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) had ended his budget speech, a whole series of opposition speakers, particularly Progressive Conservative members, rose to express their concern and complaints about increasing unemployment in this country. While expressing these fears the members of the opposition indicated that unrest was on the way. Deep in their hearts, though, they were happy over this state of affairs since they believed that some political advantage could be reaped from it.

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) admitted that with five and a half million workers in this country, there could very well be some falling off in employment. He added, however, that this was only temporary and, along with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) went on to state that there would be an improvement in the economy and in the labour situation. Everything came out as had been predicted by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Prosperity in this country in 1955 to 1956 was all but unexampled in the post war period. But it will be nothing compared to the prosperity we will enjoy in 1956. In fact Canadian industry throughout this country will have a greatly increased payroll to distribute amongst our working people. Workers' wages will go up because this boom will especially benefit the workers.

The Liberal party has but one concern, that of fattening this pay envelope year after year, and it is happy about it. Besides, the government should have no greater concern than this desire for greater prosperity in Canada, for well it knows that the workers are the ones who benefit most from it. This prosperity, which is a government responsibility, is far more important than the lowering of taxes even though, of course, everybody, myself included, would like them to be lower. In 1956, an amount of 12 to 13 billion dollars will be paid in salaries to the people of Canada. It should not be overlooked also that the Liberal party, which enacted social legislation for the people of this country, does not hesitate to expand this field of social legislation, family allowances, pensions, insurance of all kinds and so on. We are probably the most advanced people in the world, considering the ratio of population, in this field of social legislation. This year again, further benefits have been offered.

We want to go even further by offering you health insurance which will be particularly beneficial to the poor people of our country. Henceforth, through that legislation, the poor will be able to receive the same treatment as the rich as far as health services are concerned.

I also know that the Liberal party will not refuse to take any steps to improve the Family Allowances Act as soon as the situation permits. May I offer a suggestion to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin)? Why does not the government of our country, so largely represented by the Liberal party and headed by a leader who worked so hard to bring about that family allowance legislation, consider as soon as possible the payment of those allowances until eighteen years of age instead of sixteen, and increase that allowance to $10 per month during that period, in order to enable more of our young men and women to study an additional two years? We would thus implement one of the recommendations of the Massey commission, suggesting that our youth should keep attending school as long as possible. It is the Liberal party and the Liberal party only which enacted that social legislation for the benefit of the Canadian people and, let us not forget it, the Liberal party is the only one in a position to improve our existing social legislation and bring new measures into force.

However how can we meet the expenses resulting from that legislation? By means of taxes? Can we hope to see taxes removed and yet continue to receive more and more? It would be foolish to think so! Personally, I would like to see my income tax decrease, but I also want to see the small wage earner get a larger share of that revenue. In that connection we must congratulate the government because by levying taxes on people with large incomes, on corporations that make huge profits on manufacturing operations, it can raise the necessary revenue by means of taxes and distribute that money to the less privileged groups of our population. The Liberal party is the party of the people. Let the government continue to promote prosperity, to maintain employment, to find outlets for our agricultural and our manufactured products—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Rochefort: It will then have achieved a tremendous task for the benefit of the city workers and of the farm population of this country.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is reading his speech, is he not?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: It does seem that what is being claimed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is perfectly true. The hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Rochefort) should consider that, as much as possible, speeches must not be read. I take this opportunity to appeal not only to the hon. member who has the floor at the present time but to all those who might follow him.

Mr. Rochefort: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the Liberal party, aware of the first duty of a government, is doing a wonderful job in carrying out its duty in the social legislation field. Make no mistake about it, this government would be quite happy to lower taxes. The Liberal party will lower them as soon as it finds it humanly possible to do so. Defense production expenditures are tremendous. They have to be kept at this level, and I suggest that the world situation makes it now more imperative than ever.

However, I believe that civil defence leaves something to be desired in this country. If by misfortune our cities were subjected to a surprise attack, what means of defence would be available at the present time? And the people responsible for the delay are the municipal authorities who reject the co-operation offered them by Ottawa. Nevertheless they bear a very heavy responsibility towards the people they represent and they ought to show a greater understanding.

As far as federal-provincial relations are concerned, especially the tax rental agreements, every day we are surprised to find members of the Conservative opposition, particularly those from Quebec, who would like to see the central government revenues placed in the hands of the provinces. What would their attitude be if they were in office? But it is something they will never experience. Would they be ready to take a part of the revenue which a government needs so badly to govern the country, and channel it to the provinces? Is theirs a federal or a provincial mandate? It is enough to make us wonder if they are conscious of their responsibility or whether they are not rather talking just for election purposes. In this field, tax agreements are a necessity to prevent double taxation. Those who in the past rejected those agreements now look upon government proposals with envy and desire because the proposals have become so attractive. Personally, I believe the government cannot go beyond its present offers if it is to meet its obligations adequately and creditably.

Mr. Speaker, after those few remarks about the budget speech delivered by the hon. Minister of Finance, I wish to add a few words on the situation in my riding. The paper industry, with which my area is favoured, keeps paying its workers the highest wages in this country and I am happy to see that paper companies are willing to grant a further wage boost.

Bush workers who make up a large proportion of the people of my constituency, earn $15, $20 and even $30 per day, particularly those who use power tools. They now earn in a day what they used to earn in a month at the time when the Conservative party was in power.

Industries of my constituency are working at full speed. At Cap-de-la-Madeleine, the aluminum factory will have its employment capacity more than doubled as a result of large plant additions. Let us not believe however that everything is perfect in our country. I ask the government to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act as far as farmers employed away from home and forest workers are concerned. Those two groups should be placed on an equal footing with city workers, and seasonal regulations should be abandoned. The farmer who works away from home does so because he has to. He pays unemployment insurance contributions like other people but, when the time comes to draw benefits, he is subjected to special regulations which disqualify him for a certain period, if not indefinitely. Off-seasons are established for him, which complicates the situation and discourages him. Let the act be the same for those groups of workers as for city workers.

However, I must tell the house that the electors of Champlain county earned $35 million in wages in 1955, yet they paid only $2,500,000 in income taxes, that is one-seventeenth of what they earned.

When a government spends for social legislation over a billion dollars, more than 20 per cent of its budget, do you think it can easily eliminate or lower taxes? The government contributes to pensions for people of 70, and for those of 65, to pensions for the blind and the disabled, and contributes to the construction of hospitals. As recently as yesterday, the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) announced that a grant of $1,400,000 had been made by the federal government to Notre-Dame hospital in Montreal. Let us not forget its contributions toward the cost of laboratories, operating rooms, research centres, the construction of technical schools, arts and trade schools, bursaries for our young people, statutory grants and, finally, grants to provinces as a result of fiscal agreements.

Is there a single community in this country which does not receive help from one department or another?

Who would not be anxious to congratulate the right hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) about the good news which he gave yesterday to the house and to the farm population of this country to the effect that the support price for butter will be maintained for a period of two years with a maximum of 58 cents a pound. The few million dollars spent by the federal government in connection with this support legislation will help provide additional millions to the Canadian farm population. This legislation will dispel their worries since the agricultural class has been the only one to be faced with financial difficulties in 1955.

I could extend the list of benefits obtained by the western farmer from the Department of Agriculture: subsidies, storage payments, bank loans guaranteed by the federal government, grain transportation, and so on and so forth.

And what about the Department of Defence Production which, to provide security for this country, awards contracts resulting in the sale of millions of dollars of construction material and in millions of dollars in salaries for the workers of this country?

How could the federal government reduce taxes at this time? I do not think it is possible. What is most important at this time is to maintain prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, when the estimates are under consideration, I will have an opportunity to make known what the Liberal party has done for my riding. Great projects are under way for the year 1956 and I shall mention them in due time.

For the time being, I wish to thank the government and particularly to congratulate the right hon. Prime Minister and the members of his cabinet for their wisdom and the success they have achieved in the administration of this country. Let us wish that, for a long time to come, the Canadian people will have outstanding Canadians such as these continue to foster the development and prosperity of Canada for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Robert Perron (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, on looking over some pictures printed in Wednesday's morning papers and taken when the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) entered the house on Tuesday night, we see him shaping an "O" with his right thumb and forefinger. Yet, in spite of this nought, the minister's happy countenance and his broad smile did not lead us to expect such utter void in the budget. It was indeed a nought for Canadian taxpayers.

Since then, that is for the past two days, a unanimous opinion has been formed. Everybody agrees that the budget speech contained nothing new, nor useful for this country, nor any hope of any kind for the taxpayer. The press, whatever its political hue, seems to say, that, throughout the history of Canadian budgets, this year's budget is the emptiest.

When commenting on the budget, Mr. Speaker, the representatives of various manufacturers' and labour organizations, economists and those speaking in the name of provincial and municipal government, all begin their remarks with the same phrases which, on the whole, are similar to the comments which have appeared in the papers for the past two days: "It is unfortunate"; "It is inconceivable"; "It is economically unsound"; "It is unfair", etc.

Never has there been such unanimity and, though we were led to expect as much for the last month, I think we may say that, generally speaking, the budget has been a disappointment to everybody.

The total tax reduction for this year amounts to $12 million, or 1/400 of the budget, or to put it in simpler terms, 75 cents a head; but, there again, the taxpayer will not benefit from these reductions, because they are, as the hon. minister said, of a rather particular and technical nature.

The reduction of $12 million in taxes is widely offset, of course, by an addition of $390 million to the revenues of the coming year. The table put on Hansard, page 2330, by the hon. Minister of Finance last Tuesday shows that revenues for 1955-56 amounted to $4,385 million and that the estimates for 1956-57 are $4,775 million, or a difference of $390 million.

All sources of revenue mentioned in the table show increases except the item for succession duties, which shows a decrease of $10 million.

As far as personal income tax is concerned, we see that in 1955-56 an amount of $1,180 million was collected and that $1,265 million will be collected next year.

Corporation income tax shows a much larger increase; in 1955-56 $1,035 million was collected from corporations while $1,315 million will be collected next year. The same thing is true concerning custom duties, excise duties, sales and other taxes, the taxation rate remaining the same.

Mr. Speaker, taking into account the increase in population, I believe that one can say without fear of error that the taxpayer will pay more during the next fiscal year than he paid last year. Fortunately he still has one hope, namely the next budget speech, because it is possible that there will be a general election next year.

Mr. Speaker, taxes are too heavy. Everybody says so and the honourable Minister of Finance admitted it himself recently.

This is particularly true with regard to low income groups and heads of families for whom the basic exemption still remains too low. An exemption of $1,000 for single people, of $2,000 for a married man and of $150 per child is far from adequate. This sounds more like ancient history than like modern history, especially if we take into consideration the steady increase in the cost of living on the one hand and present day living standards on the other.

Nobody can prove to me that the government's distinguished economists could not have economized one or two per cent in certain departments, so as to lighten the load of those who are in no position to pay income tax. I suppose that this too has been put off till next year. However, I do hope it will be one of the first things that the government will improve when it brings down next year's budget.

Mr. Speaker, there is one point which the minister has stressed: that of federal-provincial relations. From the point of view of the general economy of this country, I feel that that is the most important matter of all since it involves the very principles of the constitution. Having explained that, after protracted negotiations and bargaining, the federal government had at length increased its offer to the provinces to $109 million in February, when the last conference was held, from $65 million in October, the minister expressed his satisfaction. This increase of $109 million is calculated on the basis of estimated payments which would have been made in 1957-1958 under the present agreements, had these remained unchanged.

These new proposals are embodied in rather complicated formulas, upon which the minister did not enlarge at any length. These formulas are given at page 2328 of Hansard and I will not repeat them here. However, I wish to point out that the federal government is satisfied since the minister says so at page 2316 of Hansard:

> Under all the circumstances we believe our offer is eminently fair and it is reasonable and realistic in the light of federal and provincial responsibilities.

However, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the provinces are not dancing to the same tune; in fact, I believe that their reaction is directly the opposite. As far as I know, no provincial premier has been able, upon leaving Ottawa in February, to tell the same thing as the Minister of Finance, that is:

> Under all the circumstances we believe our offer is eminently fair and it is reasonable and realistic in the light of federal and provincial responsibilities.

I do not think that any provincial premier made a statement along the same lines. The statements issued since that time are unequivocal particularly the one made recently by the premier of Ontario (Mr. Frost), the day following the budget speech. "Ontario, he said, did not get a single cent out of the new proposals. We complain, but Ottawa is playing deaf. We want to assume our responsibility, we ask for nothing new that does not belong to us. As I say, Ontario is only seeking to get a reasonable share of the tax fields granted our province by the constitution." Since that conference was held, I believe that each of the premiers of the provinces of Canada has made a similar statement.

Mr. Speaker, the new proposals offer no solution at all in the matter of tax centralization, and as Canada keeps growing this is bearing more and more heavily on the provinces.

The development of our country imposes on provincial governments very heavy responsibilities which they have to meet under the constitution.

I would even say that the development of this country burdens the provinces with additional expenses while the benefits of our present fiscal system accrue to the federal government, since the amount of the budget is geared to the amount of the national income.

Mr. Speaker, sections 92 and 93 of the constitution, which it is well to recall from time to time, list the powers held exclusively by the provinces and the fields which are the responsibility of provincial legislatures. The ones concerning us as regards expenses are listed in paragraphs 6, 7 and 8. Paragraph 6 includes:

> The establishment, maintenance, and management of public and reformatory prisons in and for the province;
> 7. The establishment, maintenance, and management of hospitals, asylums, charities, and eleemosynary institutions in and for the province, other than marine hospitals;
> 8. Municipal institutions in the province;

And the tenth paragraph includes:

> Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes.

Then there is mention of public works within the limits of a province, highway construction in general, in short, all public works.

Section 93 gives provinces exclusive powers in the matter of education. Each province passes its own legislation concerning education. Add to that social legislation within the jurisdiction of the provinces. There we have an idea of the heavy obligations carried by provincial legislatures.

It is undeniable, Mr. Speaker, that the development of this country involves financial burdens for the provinces. Who will deny the urgent and heavy needs of education at all levels: universities, high schools, technical schools, primary schools, in all provinces? According to experts and to ministers responsible for education in all provinces, these burdens will increase further in the future and will become greater according to needs.

Provinces have the duty and the responsibility of providing for universities, technical schools, school boards and secondary schools. An examination of the financial statement of those institutions shows that their needs are urgent.

The same thing applies to municipal corporations. Most of those corporations, not to say all of them, are badly in need of health and social welfare services.

They must provide waterworks, sewers, sidewalks, streets, establish fire-fighting services and so forth. All those works are urgently needed as a result of the rapid development of cities and towns. The state of imbalance of municipal budgets shows that corporations are absolutely unable to cope even with essential works.

The same situation prevails in the provincial field of highways, public health, school legislation and public works. Each of the Canadian provinces cannot cope with essential needs because legislatures do not have sufficient revenues and they would not be able to do more as a result of the new offers now made by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian constitution gave the provinces the power to legislate in the field of direct taxation in order that they may have sufficient revenues to fulfil their obligations. Paragraph 2, section 92 of the British North America Act states that in each province the legislature has the exclusive right of legislating in matters of direct taxation within the limits of the province in order to raise the necessary revenue for provincial purposes. That section, Mr. Speaker, still appears in our constitution.

In 1942, in order to meet the needs of national defence, the federal government laid its hands on the provincial taxation powers but only after having undertaken to return such rights to the provinces at the end of the war. Eleven years later, after many conferences and bargaining sessions, the provinces have managed to recover a small part of what is rightfully theirs.

With the money obtained from provincial sources of revenue, the federal government has handed back a few millions in the overbearing manner of a millionaire throwing a few crumbs. This fiscal centralization allows the government to accumulate sums of five billions of dollars a year, an invitation to waste and extravagance as has been shown by the Currie investigation and the more recent evidence of retired officers. This happens when all other levels of government, provincial, municipal or educational, can barely get by and have not enough revenue to meet their needs.

There is enough taxation money in Canada to meet all needs. The taxpayer is bled to the limit on account of that centralization. It is a problem of distribution resulting from the fact that neither the spirit nor the letter of the Canadian constitution has been respected.

The budget brings no remedy. Inevitably this will lead, one day or another, to disastrous consequences for the federal system on which Canadian politics is based.

Mr. Lesage: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Perron) allow me a question?

Mr. Perron: Certainly.

Mr. Lesage: Is the hon. member for Dorchester opposed to the very principle of the formula which is the basis of the recent proposals made by the federal government to the provinces? I am asking him if he objects to the principle itself of the formula; I am not talking about amounts.

Mr. Perron: I am not too keenly interested in formulas. What I would like, is to see direct taxation rights given back to the provinces. That is what I said in my speech; let us give the direct taxation field back to the provincial governments to satisfy provincial needs, as has been provided by the constitution.

Mr. Lesage: Then, the hon. member does not object to the formula?

Mr. Perron: I do not object to that special formula; what I am opposed to is the limitation of amounts.

Mr. Lesage: You are opposed to the limitation of amounts, but not to the principle; is that right?

Mr. Perron: Of course, if a citizen from one province or another were to be permitted to deduct the direct taxes collected by that province, I would not object to it.

(Text):

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative amendment to this motion, I think, puts its finger on one of the oddities of this budget which has been presented and of the address given to us by the Minister of Finance. It was an address and a budget presentation singularly devoid of information. In fact, I begin to wonder whether in future we may expect to have budget speeches as empty of content as the speeches from more august sources to which we have become accustomed, speeches that conceal more than they reveal.

However, the Minister of Finance did give us more information in another place, in the papers he tabled a day or two before the presentation of the budget. In those papers one can glean one piece of information that gives one some idea of just what is taking place in the Canadian economy at this time, the economy the minister referred to as so buoyant and optimistic.

I am always interested in the people behind the statistics. Sometimes we tend to lump human beings into columns of figures and call them so many of this and so many of that. I like to find out what is going on with the people themselves when we look behind the figures. On page 11 of the papers tabled by the Minister of Finance I find this:

> In 1955 . . . improved business conditions brought about a large increase in labour income and there was at the same time a substantial recovery in net farm income because of a better western grain crop. These were the major factors in the increase of $1,593 million or 9 per cent in total personal income. Labour income, which is by far the largest element in personal income, rose by $872 million or 7 per cent, and accounted for 55 per cent of the total increase.

When we read that, we feel that the ordinary Canadian citizen is probably doing fairly well with the buoyant economy which the minister boasts is actually here. But then when we turn back in the same document to page 6, we find some other information that reveals that there were other people in our economy who were doing very much better than those categorized as labour or farm. We find on page 6 the following:

> In 1955 investment income increased by $756 million or by about one-fifth, and reached a total of $4,471 million.

There is rather a striking contrast between the increase of 7 per cent that was added to labour income and the increase of 20 per cent that was added to investment income. It is particularly striking in view of the fact that it does not actually reveal the whole of the tribute levied on the economy of Canada by those who own the means of wealth production, because I discovered this. Not only was there an additional $756 million distributed by way of dividends, rent and other forms of investment income, but I also find that there was a tremendous amount of money left in undistributed profits to Canadian corporations, amounting as a matter of fact to almost a billion dollars, $913 million which, in addition to the dividends distributed, amounting to some $727 million, makes a grand total of $1,640 million that went to the owners of corporation shares in Canada.

That does not tell the whole of the story, because the Minister of Finance tells us on page 14 of his white paper of certain other emoluments accruing to business, and he points out that business saving is composed of two principal items, depreciation allowances and undistributed profits. I have already pointed out that in 1955 undistributed profits amounted to $913 million, and I also find that there was some $206 million in depreciation allowances.

It is true enough that part of depreciation allowances can, I suppose, correctly be classified as depreciation costs. They do actually go to replace worn-out capital goods. But the very fact that the minister describes depreciation allowances and lumps them with undistributed profits as part of savings indicates what, of course, most of us have always known, that a very considerable part of what we know as depreciation allowances are in actual fact hidden and undisclosed profits.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is something a little odd about an economy which distributes its wealth in the way in which we do in Canada. I consulted the taxation statistics published in 1955 and based on the figures for 1953, and I found that those who are classified as being in receipt of investment income constitute only 5·75 per cent of the total of our taxpayers. When we take into account the fact that the taxpayers of Canada only constitute a proportion of the adult population, then we can see what a very small proportion of our population is receiving this enormous sum of money each year which accrues in the form of dividends, undistributed profits and depreciation allowances. They are only 5·75 of the total of income taxpayers, and they number some 62,320 people which, if one consults the census figures and the dominion bureau of statistics figures, one will find amounts to about 1 per cent of the heads of Canadian families. One per cent of the heads of Canadian families were in receipt of nearly $2,000 million in 1955.

Let us compare that with those who are receiving labour income, which was classified by the minister as the largest item of personal income. According to the taxation statistics, employees constitute 73·14 per cent of the total of income taxpayers. We have to remember that there are a great many people who not only are not in the 5·75 per cent of taxpayers who draw investment income but are not in the 73·14 per cent of taxpayers who constitute the labour force employees of the country. There are a great many employees in the country who do not reach that category at all, which makes the proportion of those who are in receipt of investment income even more strikingly small.

Just what have we been doing with regard to this distribution of wealth in Canada? There are some very interesting figures to be gleaned from dominion bureau of statistics publications. I find, for instance, that it is estimated that in 1955 the amount of corporation taxes accruing to the treasury was some 17 per cent more than it had been in the previous year, 1954. I find also that the increase in corporation profits in that same year was 24 per cent. Most striking of all, Mr. Speaker, I find that the increase in profits after taxation was no less than 30 per cent.

When we are faced with this situation it is extremely difficult to understand the government's determined maintenance of the scandalous tax exemption accorded to investment income in this country. I know that the traditional and classical explanation of it is that we require to encourage savings in order to promote investment and thereby develop our economy. But I suggest to you, sir, that when the corporations of this country put aside $913 million in the form of undistributed profits and when in addition, due to the generosity of the government, they are also able to tuck away another $206 million in depreciation allowances, we do not need to worry very much about making sure that the people who are drawing investment money are going to have some savings in order to reinvest them.

I suggest that the situation we have to face is this. While there are 62,000 odd in receipt of investment income, among those 62,000 there will be many thousands whose personal share will be extremely small, a matter of $100 or $200 a year, if that much, and they are all lumped in with the 62,000. I suggest, sir, that if we could only find out just how much each one of the 62,000 was getting we would be able to narrow this down to a minute group of our population in control of this vast sum of savings that accumulate from the processes of industry.

Not only that, sir, but we have had plain evidence for some time past, and it has been stressed again and again in the house this session and mentioned outside the house, that the investment policy of those who now control the pools of wealth in this country is highly unsatisfactory both to financial and to political leaders. I suggest, sir, that we might do well to consider placing more in the hands of the ordinary Canadian citizen rather than continuing to place it in the hands of those people who are apparently reluctant to use the privileged position we have given them for any consistent policy of development in this country, with the consequence that we hear on all sides, we heard it again today, cries of distress because of the influx of United States capital taking over the riskier and more adventurous types of development in Canada.

I suggest to you, sir, that not only is there something very unhealthy in giving special privileges to this already extremely privileged group, but there is something very dangerous about it too. While it is true that the increase in investment income did not quite reach the increase in wage and salary income, it came very close to it, and while it did not quite reach it, nevertheless the increase in wages and salaries does indicate a very serious situation in our economy when compared with the increase in investment income and the increase in undistributed corporate profits.

I do not think we need be surprised that this is the case. We have had evidence that there is something quite unhealthy in our economy. This session we have had some more strong evidence of it, because I cannot consider any society healthy in which there is a profitable field for loan companies to lend at 24 per cent to enable people to pay their bills. There is something radically unsound in our methods of wealth distribution in this country. In fact I believe, Mr. Speaker, we could perhaps draw an analogy from the natural world. We all know that when the prospective victim shows signs of sickness and failing, the vultures appear. The vultures are appearing in great numbers on our economic horizon to take advantage of the straits in which a vast number of Canadian people find themselves, due in no small measure to the taxation policies of this government, taxation policies which are flagrantly designed to favour those who are already privileged at the expense of those who are reduced to borrowing from these vulture small loans companies.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this is our situation at the present time, and no one can deny it is—certainly there would be no field of operation for these small companies if the ordinary Canadian citizen were getting a larger share of this increase in wealth production—then the situation tomorrow may be very much worse. It may very well be that the already inequitable and extremely dangerous economic division of wealth in Canada will be still further distorted by developments that are now taking place in industry. The other day I was interested to note that one of the contributions of the Department of National Health and Welfare to the health and welfare of the Canadian people was the installation of automatic machinery for calculating and making out cheques. It is a very efficient piece of machinery. It now requires only 286 man or woman hours in place of the 15,000 man or woman hours that were required by previous procedures in making out these cheques. I am not for one moment complaining of the department installing this modern equipment, but I do suggest we should be asking ourselves, what is to become of the people who are displaced? We should be asking ourselves whether the Department of National Health and Welfare is solving its problem by, shall we say, eliminating the necessity for family allowance cheques in the near future by eliminating the possibility of Canadian couples raising families.

This is one of the things that is going to increase this disparity, because the installation of equipment of this type in ordinary business enterprises is undertaken for one purpose only, and that is to cut down on the total disbursements in wages and salaries. There is no other purpose for it. The efficient and competent business manager is, of course, by the very nature of his position, bound to be looking around for means to reduce his payroll. He would not hold his job very long if he were not doing that. Ominously enough, today there is apearing on the scene an array of innumerable types of equipment which will enable the economical, the up and coming business manager, to reduce the total volume of wage disbursements. Then we may find the Minister of Finance introducing a budget and presenting us with a white paper that will no longer be able to say that the increase in labour income accounted for 55 per cent of the total increase in personal income. As a matter of fact I thought that was a scandalous enough admission to make when we consider that the employed class in Canada is by far the largest section of our community. Approximately 4 million people are engaged in working for wages and salaries, yet their increase in personal income only amounted to 55 per cent of the total increase in personal income in this country.

Those are some of the problems that are presented to us, and some future minister of finance is going to have to face them. I believe, sir, even our present minister may be going to face some more difficulties in the future, and I wonder if he perhaps has some uneasy inkling of it. I was very interested in finding that Canada's Minister of Finance, in introducing his budget, made no reference either oblique or direct by one single word to one item of budgetary expense in this country, an expense that constitutes, or did until recently, almost half our total government spending. I looked in vain through the minister's speech for any reference to the $1,775 million we are proceeding to spend on defence again this year. I was interested, in looking at the estimates, to find that exactly the same figure is put down this year as was put down last year. Hitherto there have been some variations of a few hundred million, but now this figure of $1,775 million is put down in the estimates. I wonder, sir, if defence spending has become a sort of sacred cow at that particular figure, because of course there is nothing so easily defensible as defence expenditures and nothing so dangerous to criticize. But I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that even our present government in Canada has realized that we are moving into some sort of new era in the world, and that possibly the courses we have followed will be proven to be ineffective in protecting us from the sort of dangers our form of society presents.

The other day I was interested in reading an article by a distinguished British journalist. He pointed out that Great Britain, of course, is now facing the fact that it is not possible for her to develop effective defences. Her only hope is to develop a real and effective disarmament program in the world. I suspect that our Minister of Finance plunked down this nice round sum of $1,775 million for defence because that is the handy thing to do. I suspect he is well aware that in all probability before the next 12 months are out Dr. Solandt or some eminent person will put another banana peel underneath the defence program of Canada and reveal again to the astonished population that all these incredible quantities of money and labour that we have been dedicating to defence are, in fact, money and effort down the drain. The government will have to face the problem of either embarking on a larger, more expensive program of military defence, one which I think is beyond the capacities of a country of our size, or will have to abandon much of the present spending.

Now, of course, that cannot be done without some economic repercussions, and it would not do to have economic repercussions in 1956. But, Mr. Speaker, on the other hand, if in 1957 it were possible to make a good slash in the defence budget, and a corresponding election-pleasing tax reduction, then by the time the government was back again and the inevitable results of severely curtailing our defence expenditure became evident they would be safely back in office again to struggle with it for the next four years.

I remember once suggesting to the minister's predecessor that I thought before the year was out he would reduce defence expenditures by at least $200 million, but the hon. gentleman of course pooh-poohed the idea as ridiculous, as giving way in the face of the enemy. Curiously enough, by the time that year had elapsed we did find that defence expenditures had been reduced by some $175 million. I shall not be surprised—in fact. I shall be surprised, Mr. Speaker—if next year the Minister of Finance does not place in the estimates a much more realistic and much more believable figure than $1,775 million, a repeat of last year and this year. I suspect we shall find a very large reduction, and we shall be told then, of course, that there has been a tremendous change in the international climate; we shall be told that the cold war is warming up.

Mr. Argue: In case there might be a change in the climate at home.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Now, I do not object to that, Mr. Speaker, and I fully realize the difficulties of the minister's office; but I would suggest this to him. It would have been a little more convincing if, instead of having again just obviously taking the second sheet from last year's estimates to put in this year's estimates he had, for instance, put down a figure of $1,773,000,253.49, or something like that. We then might have believed that some real, serious thought had been given to our defence budget. I myself find it very difficult to believe in the reality of this very apt figure when I see it appearing again and again, and apparently assuming a fixed place in our budgetary estimates.

I am prepared to agree that perhaps it is necessary, not merely from the defence point of view but from the point of view of defending the country and defending our economy from a serious reverse, because I always remember, Mr. Speaker, the word of warning that was given to the banking and commerce committee by the deputy minister of finance a couple of years ago. He warned us then that any severe cuts in defence spending would be bound to have very serious repercussions on the Canadian economy.

I will conclude with this, Mr. Speaker. Sooner or later these cuts will have to be made, because not for very much longer are we going to be able to justify these expenditures to the Canadian people. After all, they also read, just as members of parliament do. They read the things that Dr. Solandt tells us, which increasingly makes one wonder just what is happening up on the D.E.W. line, whether there is any purpose in going on with it. The Canadian people are reading these things and before very long they are going to ask for something more than the statement that it is going to cost $1,775 million to defend us from the Russians. They are going to want to know, for instance, whether there is any reasonable expectation that this expenditure can protect us from the Russians, and whether there is any reasonable case to be made out for it.

I submit, sir, that the case is becoming shakier and shakier. Then this government will have to face a very difficult situation. They will have to face the curtailment of expenditures that have been a major factor in our economy in the post-war period.

I only hope, sir, that the Minister of Finance has some more detailed plans for dealing with that situation than by continuing to give tax exemption credits to dividends and by continuing to permit the piling up of profits to an extent that is unequalled in our history. I hope the minister is going to take some very definite and serious steps to redistribute income in Canada, not merely from the point of view of equity and justice but from the point of view of economic survival, because I suggest to you, sir, that the present income division and the present shaky foundation of our economic prosperity, based on this magic figure of $1,775 million, is far too dangerous for us to continue indefinitely.

Mr. Raymond Bruneau (Glengarry-Prescott): Mr. Speaker, the budget now under study and the tax policy proposed for the next fiscal year reflect, I am sure, a tendency toward a healthy economy and financial security for our country at large. With a gross national product yielding about $28 billion in 1956 and a tax structure which will bring in revenue of about $4,775 million and possible expenditures of about $4,650 million, we shall have a surplus of about $125 million. One will then readily understand that in these exacting times, with commitments under the NATO scheme and the Colombo plan, with our national defence preparedness and our schemes of social security, one would be justified in summing up the criticism regarding the present fiscal policy with the Shakespearean expression, "Much ado about nothing".

The economic stability toward which all government policies are directed can be considered, I think, as the cornerstone of our national life. The budget before the house leaves us with no doubt as to the good effects of the policies applied in every field by a wise government, and the people of Canada are also entitled to a share of commendation for these achievements.

As the Minister of Finance very justly pointed out in his budget speech, "Careful judgment and wise spending policies are not solely a matter of concern to public authorities. Those are responsibilities of each one of us, regardless of his role in the economy". As a rule we can say that the people of Canada are co-operating fully with those they have selected to conduct the affairs of the country. Among other things, I noticed in the speech of the Minister of Finance the interest of the government in the credit unions and co-operatives, saving and lending societies. Important unions and co-operatives and companies of that kind are operating in my constituency, and I know what they mean to the average farmer as well as to the average citizen. I firmly believe that the intention of the government is to help these organizations to acquire an even more stable financial basis, and they have taken an important step in that direction. The extension to them of privileges and opportunities which were not open to them until now will surely greatly benefit the population at large.

Before speaking on other points arising from the budget speech and from the general financial position of the country, may I note with pleasure the hint given by the Minister of Finance as to the possible salary increases of the federal civil servants. If these increases are granted they will represent large sums of money, and together with other large additional expenses the government will have to face during the next fiscal year I think they will represent a considerable accomplishment in realizing the prospective surplus of $113 million especially if we consider that there will be a $12 million decrease in sales taxes assessed at the manufacturers' level, and also considering the fact that the provinces will receive much higher revenues guaranteed under the federal tax sharing offer.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to touch upon a few subjects which are of particular interest to my constituents. I would feel guilty and my constituents would be justified in blaming me if I did not mention the interest we all have in the ways and means of assuring peace in the world. We are among those who believe that our country has really been working toward peace through the actions of this government. Canada has been and will continue to be one of the main supporters of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. We believe the reason for the government's policy is that Canada cannot live as a contented nation if the peace of another important part of the world is in jeopardy from the forces that seek to bring about the destruction of civilization. In NATO we find the basic ideas of "Liberté, égalité, fraternité" as they were laid down nearly 175 years ago, but there is something more. There is the survival of democratic ideals as they exist now, no matter how different from the original version they may be. Canada has taken a definite stand to defend these principles and what has been acquired through them. We feel that NATO is the body that can do so.

The Minister of Finance has emphasized these basic concepts in his budget speech by asking parliament to appropriate important credits for Canada's participation in NATO and for the implementation of a strong national defence program. We must first secure peace for the people of the world and for ourselves as Canadians.

The reasons for which peace must be secured are obvious. There is scarcely any need to explain why Canadians want peace, aside from the fact that they are human beings. Canada knew prosperity in time of war; it remains that our well-being depends mainly on a sound normal economy. Moreover, peace cannot be preserved solely by force of arms. Canada has devoted much effort in helping the underdeveloped countries by participating in the Colombo plan. Many of my constituents have suggested that the government should allocate an extra amount of $9 million toward that end.

I would like to thank and congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs for having asked the house to vote an additional $8 million for the Colombo plan. Perhaps you would allow me, sir, to congratulate the various women's groups of Glengarry-Prescott for bringing to my attention resolutions to that effect.

Now, what about our economy? To obtain as high a degree of prosperity as possible, the government during recent years has adopted a series of measures aimed at achieving a fairer distribution of wealth amongst the various classes of our society and bringing a higher degree of well-being and security to all. In the economic field particularly measures have been implemented to increase production and dispose of our products on the markets of the world, as well as on our own markets.

Unfortunately there are still many sectors of our economy where there is over production, where the producers have to struggle hard in order to make a living and keep their industries alive. This government is fully aware of that fact and has proved it by asking this house to vote guarantees for bank loans to producers secured by their grain, in order to provide an immediate source of funds where they may be needed, and also by authorizing the treasury to bear the cost from August 1, 1955, of storage and interest charges on wheat held by the wheat board over and above its normal carryover levels.

I for one approved with pleasure such measures, but as the representative of a very important dairy producing area of eastern Canada, I feel that the dairy industry should also receive help and protection by means of subsidies proportionate to the money spent to help the western grain farmers. It is not a case of saying, "They received an apple; we also want one." There is a real need for such help among the dairy producers.

Incidentally, on that matter may I draw to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture correspondence received from various agricultural organizations in my riding requesting that the present 58 cent floor price on butter be maintained. This is one of the measures for which the government is to be commended, and I wish at this time to thank the Minister of Agriculture for maintaining this policy in force.

I wish now to speak about the cattle breeders of eastern Canada. I need not emphasize here the difficulties met by these groups in finding markets for their production at reasonable prices and in meeting the competition from western Canadian producers as well as that from other countries. Like the wheat growers, the cattle breeders constitute an important part of the Canadian economy, and as such their industry should be kept healthy in the interests of the entire Canadian economy. For that matter I might mention that the hog producers of this part of the province are now operating at a not too encouraging profit.

In the agricultural field I am glad to note that the government has asked parliament to increase the amount of loans which may be made by the Canadian farm loan board, and that it is seeking to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

I have here, sir, a brief which was sent to me by the secretary of the Glengarry federation of agriculture, submitted by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in which it is stated that it is their hope that the government will encourage and assist financially the development of programs to regularly provide milk to children in primary and secondary schools. The brief also points out that it seems hardly reasonable that on one hand Canada should support all sections of the milk industry through its butter support program, and at the same time have in effect a special nominal rate of duty on imports of skim milk powder and cheese from what is perhaps the lowest cost producing area in the world, namely New Zealand. In order to permit Canadian producers to fully develop their home market the federation recommended that the special tariff agreement with Australia and New Zealand be revised to raise the present duty on cheese to an effective level, and to bring the duties on skim milk from those countries to 3½ cents per pound. Further, until such time as these duties are imposed, arrangements should be made to use the Export and Import Permits Act to control imports of cheddar cheese and skim milk powder.

The brief asked that the federal butter aid program for institutions be further explored and continued, and that a plan be established for distributing dairy products such as milk and butter to certain categories of needy people by the use of coupons which could only be used for the purchase of those commodities; and that adequate protection be provided against cheap imported edible oils and against products from which edible oils can be obtained.

This brings me to the industrial problems our country is now facing. First may I say that the government was never so well advised as when it asked for an extension to the scope of the industrial development bank.

(Translation):

As our good friend, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Laflamme) has so rightly mentioned, when seconding the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the government, in widening the field of activity of the industrial development bank will certainly promote the development of lesser industries. I entirely agree with him when he stresses that increased government assistance to lesser industries would be of very great help in solving the problems of unemployment and housing. But I shall go further than that.

(Text):

The growth of small industries is necessary to the survival of older urban districts like the one I represent in this house, but in addition I firmly believe that the decentralization of industry is necessary if we are to solve the acute problems of unemployment and housing and secure stability for the Canadian economy. For instance, we all know that in eastern Canada the bulk of industry is centralized in the main cities, leaving dozens of other areas with a second-class economy and a rather lean population. Because of this situation I contend that a large proportion of the population of Canada situated in villages, towns and small cities is not getting a just share of the high standard of living which this country is now experiencing. In those villages, towns and small cities the income is generally lower and the incidence of unemployment is higher than anywhere else. In some cases these unemployed people probably find temporary or sporadic work in the large centres; but speaking as a human being, who would want to leave his own town and his family in order to go away and live sometimes under deplorable conditions in a strange city? In any event the housing situation that exists in many industrial areas is enough to keep anyone away unless forced by starvation to make such a move.

It is all very well to attempt to encourage home improvement by increasing the amount of the loans available for this purpose, and to encourage the redevelopment of older sections of large cities, but the fact remains that many cities and urban areas are overcrowded and the general feeling is that no solution will be found for these problems until other areas and cities are thought of in considering the decentralization of industry.

For instance, in my own constituency of Glengarry-Prescott there are scores of communities possessing facilities for the establishment of new industries or the re-establishment of previously existing industries. Geographically speaking, we are located exactly halfway between Montreal and Ottawa. The lines of the two great Canadian railways cross the constituency, which is quite active economically. I submit that this would be an ideal spot for the establishment of new industry or the relocating of industries already established. We have unemployed people who would benefit from these new industries, and we also have the space available for the building of homes. The moving of industry to Glengarry-Prescott would certainly help our people, and it would also serve to assist the heavy industrial zones by freeing housing units and preventing newcomers worsening the housing situation in those cities and their suburban areas.

While I am speaking for my own constituency, I know there are dozens of other constituencies which could also offer good industrial facilities and which would like to have a fairer share of Canada's prosperity. I believe it is high time that industry should break the economic barrier of large cities where factories are clustered together, and migrate to the smaller places available in our spacious country.

However, this does not mean that the people do not appreciate the latest amendments to the housing act enacted by the government, which will permit them to borrow larger amounts for the making of payments on new homes. Every day more and more people are taking advantage of the provisions of the housing act, but it is our contention that the decentralization of industry would do much to alleviate this problem of home construction which Canada is now facing in the large as well as in the small communities.

Moreover, is it not recognized that the decentralization of industry is an important asset to national security? According to studies in business policy as published by the national industrial conference board, many United States enterprises have followed this line. This publication quotes an executive of a big company as follows:

> National security considerations have entered into our selection of new plant sites to a certain extent. Given the choice between two otherwise equal locations, we have chosen sites not too close to large centres of population or other possible targets.

The same publication states:

> During world war II a decided shift in the sizes of towns chosen for increased industrial activity became evident. Almost half the factories of the large multi-plant companies co-operating in a conference board survey made in 1948 were situated, prior to 1940, in cities of more than 100,000 population. Only one-fifth are in towns of less than 10,000 and less than one-third were located in medium-size cities of 10,000 to 100,000 persons.
> During the eight years 1940 through 1947, however, a radical change in the pattern set in. Small and medium-size towns became much more popular throughout the nation, to the detriment of the large urban centres, according to co-operating companies. As a result, by the end of 1947, large, medium-size and small communities each had accounted for an almost equal share of the reported wartime expansions involving construction and purchase of new plants.

Along with this may I point out that decentralization would also be to the advantage of the companies themselves. Finally, on the matter of national security as well as economic stability I should like to quote a representative of a big textile manufacturer, who says:

> Decentralization spreads the risk of conflagration and catastrophe. Because we produce a national brand line, continuity of service is paramount in our company.

For the above mentioned reasons I should like to direct the attention of the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to this problem, and make a suggestion to the government. My suggestion is that the government consider immediately the possibility of working out a master plan for the decentralization of industry. The problem is most urgent and wide-ranging. I would suggest the appointment during this session of a committee, independent of the commission on economic prospects, to investigate and study the situation and report to the government.

Among my reasons for speaking of a decentralized industry was the general welfare of the people. From that same motive I would like to point out the importance of establishing as soon as possible a health insurance scheme from coast to coast, in co-operation with the provincial governments. I know I do not have to convince the members of this house that such a plan is essential if we are to live up to the expectancies of our social standards. I wanted to stress our hope that enough provinces will concur to implement the scheme put forward by the federal government so it can benefit as early as possible those who cannot afford the inevitable luxury of illness on an average salary.

I am happy to state here that I was informed that 8,000 acres of peat bog land near Alfred, 40 miles east of Ottawa, are being reclaimed for a multi-million dollar development to supply eastern Ontario and United States markets with prepackaged and frozen produce. The development is expected to employ between 600 and 800 people, most of them on a year-round basis, and a good many more at the height of seasonal production. Trenching crews have been working this winter setting up drainage routes. Fourteen miles have been completed.

For the past 10 or 15 years the Alfred bog has been looked upon as useless, but now developments in horticulture have made its development look more feasible. There has been a peat development, but the market for the peat is small. There was a small experimental development in market produce at the Caledonia Springs end of the bog, but a peat fire ended this. Large amounts of capital on which there can be no return for three or four years are going into the development.

Before closing I would like to say a few words on a subject which I have always had at heart, that of the possible creation of a national department of youth. Nearly every session since I have been elected to this house I have advocated such a move by the government. I now feel it is more urgent than ever. Canada now has passed the crossroads of its destiny, but we must see to it that tomorrow will not force us to turn back. No matter how sound and healthy our policy is today, we are bound to a collapse if the young men and women of today are not adequately prepared to take over from our present leaders and tackle the problems that lie ahead of us. I am thinking, for instance, of extending to as many as possible a fair opportunity to go ahead in life. Without interfering with the provincial rights in education, through appropriate arrangements between governments a system of scholarships could be established on a national basis to help those who have talent but no money to take their full share of duties and advantages in Canadian life.

In this connection may I point out that the national federation of Canadian university students, which represents over 50,000 students at more than 20 Canadian universities, has been and still is conducting a campaign in that direction in order to help deserving university students. The students are seeking the payment of bursaries and scholarships in the form of 2,500 annual awards, each tenable for four years. Fully under way, such a program is estimated to cost approximately $5,500,000. The federation feels such an objective is broad enough to assist "valuable good students as well as the merely brilliant, but not so broad as to be revolutionary". Personally I think $5,500,000 is not an exaggerated sum to be devoted to the preparation of our leaders of tomorrow. Other countries are devoting much more money than that to the same purpose; and some of them, we must agree, do not have the same need for it as we have, being older and bigger countries than Canada.

This is only one point. As you know, there are many others that can be integrated in a homogeneous program to be administered by a new department of youth. Such a department, I understand, cannot be created from thin air, and would require a certain shifting in the present governmental departments and services. A thorough study should be given to the matter by government experts in cooperation with lay organizations specializing in the problems of youth, in order to define exactly which part of the administration should be entrusted to the new minister of youth. In order to prevent too great a disturbance in the present administrative services, I would suggest that to start with the new department could be entrusted to a minister already appointed. The hon. Secretary of State, for instance, would be a logical choice.

The government realizes fully, I know, the utmost importance of bringing our youth to the level of the heavy responsibilities they are to face in the future, and I am sure they will neglect nothing to reach that goal. The good administration of a country undoubtedly is to be found in healthy internal and external policies in the economic and diplomatic fields, but this cannot attain long-range success without adequate protection and development of the fundamental human values that are to be found in the younger generations.

Peace at any cost to preserve mankind and our Canadian way of life; a sound policy to spur our growing economy and secure a still happier life for our people, and the preparation for the future by adequate help to our youth—these are a few of the general ideas that in my estimation should be considered as paramount at the present time, and I hope the suggestions I have respectfully submitted to the government will be of some use.

While a budget may not always be to the liking of the cross-section of the people of Canada represented here in this House of Commons, one must not forget that a stable economy is sometimes achieved at the price of cuts, trimmings and sacrifices. If one will glance at Hansard of less than half a century ago, the budget tabled in this very house had to do with expenditures of about $6 million, covering but a few federal departments and an administration that presented but very few intricate problems.

Today—and I am sure, sir, all the members in this house, including those of the various opposition parties, will agree the social and economic life of the country is very closely interwoven with the pattern of federal government, and my colleagues here will vouch to that by the innumerable problems brought to their attention in their relations with their constituents. While we would like to see more measures implemented and more schemes enacted, I believe the people we represent in this house will forgo some improvement for the time being in order to assure security and a more stable economy.

Mr. Carl O. Nickle (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I intend to discuss today just one item among the proposals made by the Minister of Finance in his budget address. It is an item, however, of rather far reaching implications in what was an otherwise not too noteworthy speech on government policy.

I refer to the minister's proposal to impose a special 20 per cent excise tax on all revenues from advertising received by Canadian editions of foreign-owned publications. These include the Canadian edition of Time magazine, Reader's Digest, and several trade and women's shopping magazines. This proposal is, in my opinion, a proposal for an iniquitous and dishonest tax, discriminatory in its application and wrong and dangerous in principle.

I hold no brief for the American-owned publications affected. Of some I am a regular reader. Others I seldom if ever see. By the same token I am a regular purchaser and reader of a number of Canadian periodicals for whose particular benefit this proposed tax on certain of their competitors has been concocted. Some of them, like Maclean's, Saturday Night and New Liberty, occupy a notable place in the Canadian publication world, and are a part of Canadiana I would like to see continue; but not at the expense of imposing a tax on their competitors as unfair and unsound as that contemplated. Later in my remarks I will suggest some constructive alternatives to this tax proposal.

It is perhaps especially appropriate that I speak my mind on this issue, for in addition to being a Canadian with a strong desire to see our country grow soundly and well, I am also a publisher and editor of certain Canadian-owned trade journals each of which competes, and reasonably successfully too, against both Canadian and foreign publications, with many of these competitors enjoying greater advantages by way of financial strength, advertising revenues, circulation and printing facilities than do the publications in which I have a personal interest.

If the principles involved in the proposed excise tax were to be generally accepted by Canada, by their application to more than just the Canadian editions of certain United States-owned journals, there would be a sharp reduction in the advantages now enjoyed by competitors of the publications in which I have an interest, and thus potentially there would be financial gain and lessened competition for my publications.

Mr. Harris: I am not suggesting that.

Mr. Nickle: I would prefer to meet competition by continuing to try to persuade readers and advertisers of the merits of the publications themselves, rather than have my competitors handicapped by unfair restrictions imposed on them by government. The government's sole justification for its proposed tax is that this extraordinary step is necessary in order that Canadian magazines may successfully compete with Canadian editions of foreign-owned magazines. Actually it cannot be logically assumed that financial success and thus the continuance of Canadian magazines would automatically result by imposing a special and heavy tax burden on the competing United States-owned Canadian editions.

Some of these so-called "maple leaf" editions that would be hit by the 20 per cent tax levy might decide to call it quits, in which case scores of thousands of Canadians who now buy these magazines because of the added Canadian material content as well as the basic United States material would be the losers, and also the Canadian tax collector would be the loser. But it does not necessarily follow that the partial vacuum in places to spend advertising budgets would or could be filled by the Canadian magazines who have demanded this legislation. Advertisers put their money into media where they believe the best results can be obtained. They have a wide choice between Canadian and United States periodicals, newspapers, radio, television, direct mail, signboards and so on.

On the other hand, perhaps the publishers of some of these "maple leaf" editions might incorporate all or a large part of the proposed excise tax in their advertising rates, and thus force each Canadian advertiser to make his own decision. He would have to decide whether to carry on in the same publications by increasing his advertising budget or by cutting down his expenditures in other media; or, in the reverse, by cutting out his advertisements in "maple leaf" editions and using his budget in other media. It is quite possible that Canadian magazines might lose advertising and thus worsen their revenue position if advertisers stick by higher cost "maple leaf" edition space.

On the other hand, there is no assurance whatsoever that a cut-back in "maple leaf" advertising would go to Canadian magazines rather than into newspaper, radio, television or other advertising media. Each medium has to sell its own case to advertisers on its own merits, and there is certainly no assurance that those who seek this restrictive excise tax can garner for themselves extra advertising revenue from its application to a limited few of their competitors.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): If the hon. member can conveniently do so I think he should continue his remarks, as there is a time limit on this debate.

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Speaker, a third possibility if this excise tax is applied would be incorporation into reader costs, that is into the single copy sale price or subscription rates, of the tax or a large part of the tax. Under these circumstances scores of thousands of Canadians would be asked to pay the price of giving certain Canadian publishers the protection they want, or else readers could give up buying "maple leaf" editions for which they have developed a taste. Whatever decision readers may make would not guarantee even a single copy increase in the circulation of the Canadian magazines which seek this tax on their competitors.

The announced purpose of the special tax is to help keep purely Canadian magazines in business by imposing a special burden on certain of their relatively successful competitors, the Canadian editions of United States magazines. I submit there is no assurance that the tax can or will achieve its stated objective, nor has the Minister of Finance submitted any evidence that the publications for which he seeks help actually need it.

Are Maclean's, Saturday Night, New Liberty and other Canadian magazines making money or losing money? Have they done and are they now doing a good enough job in setting up their product in a format and with material sufficiently appealing to Canadian readers? Are they doing a good enough job in selling the merits of their publications to Canadian advertisers? If they are falling down on their job, there is even less excuse for imposing a discriminatory tax upon certain of their competitors.

If the proposed tax fails to give these Canadian magazines the kind of profits they would like to enjoy, then what would they seek next by way of cutting down competition for the advertisers' dollar? Well, Canadian daily newspapers, weekly newspapers, such weekly supplements as Weekend Magazine and the Star Weekly, Canadian radio and television stations, have sold advertisers on the merits of using their facilities. If Canadian editions of United States magazines are beaten down to size by the imposition of an excise tax on their advertizing revenue, why not push for the imposition of a similar kind of levy on one or more of the Canadian magazines' other competitors right within Canada? Or maybe we can dream up some kind of legislation to force Canadian advertisers to allocate their advertising budgets among specific media on a basis which will guarantee that Canadian magazines will get a big enough share.

Principal targets of the current special tax are the publishers of the Canadian edition of Time magazine and the publishers of the English and French language editions of Reader's Digest. Both of these are Canadian corporations, although owned by United States parent companies. Both have headquarters in Quebec province. Both pay full Canadian corporate income taxes on 100 per cent of their profits from circulation and advertising in Canada, together with Quebec local taxes. Their liability to tax collectors in Canada is exactly the same as that of the Canadian-owned publications.

Reader's Digest prints its two Canadian monthly editions in Montreal, providing a very sizeable addition to the earnings of its Canadian printer and his employees. Time prints its Canadian edition in Chicago, apparently because no Canadian printing company is at present in a position to meet the tight and fast Time schedule essential to a weekly news magazine.

These, then, are the principal targets of today. They are both United States-owned Canadian corporations which share the fruits of their successful enterprise with Canadian tax collectors on exactly the same basis as any other purely Canadian corporation. In addition, when and if they have dividends to pay to their United States parent, they leave an additional withholding tax levy with the dominion tax collector. Well over half their profits thus already wind up in the hands of government in Canada.

Now, in response to demands from Canadian magazines, the government would impose a stiff 20 per cent tax levy on their gross advertising revenue on top of levies already imposed, thus jeopardizing their successful continuance in Canada and perhaps even driving them out of Canada. Drive them out of Canada and they would presumably reach north to Canadian readers with regular American editions, on the same basis as the mass of United States publications which are not affected by the proposed excise tax. They would cease to be important contributors to Canadian tax collectors.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order, it being five o'clock, Mr. Nickle moves—

Mr. Harris: Before you put the motion, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I am quite interested in what my hon. friend is saying. I do not know how much longer he intends to continue, but if it is not very much longer I wonder if he might be allowed to complete his remarks so that they would all be on the record in one place.

Mr. Nickle: It would take about 10 minutes, sir, if I had permission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nickle: Mr. Speaker, with the excuse of trying to maintain profits for Canadian magazines, the government proposes a special tax of an entirely new kind on a limited few of the competitors for advertising revenue. This tax is discriminatory because it applies to just a few, not to all. It is a special kind of tax because it marks the first attempt to levy an excise tax on gross revenue from advertising. It is a dangerous tax because it could open the door to discriminatory levies upon other members of the publishing or other industries where competition is intense. It is dangerous also because the precedent established might well lead to the view that special federal taxes on advertising in all its forms is a legitimate source of revenue. It is dishonest because it provides no assurance that its purported objective can be achieved.

The proposal appears to accept the principle that the larger, more successful of competitors should be penalized by special taxes to prevent them becoming too successful against smaller, higher cost and perhaps less efficient companies in the same field. It is a principle that I find little to my liking if we are to have a free competitive society.

Recently Hamilton, Ontario, became a one-newspaper city when one daily newspaper folded up because it could not compete in circulation and advertising revenue with the Hamilton Spectator. If the principle in the new excise tax be right, would it not have been fair to impose a special tax upon the Hamilton Spectator to help its competitor? Might it also then be right to impose a special tax on advertising revenue on the more successful newspapers in our own Canadian cities, where smaller competitors have rough going? Going further, we might tack on a special levy on the advertising budget of the more successful merchants in order to raise their costs in relation to their smaller competitors. We could, perhaps, have a lot of fun helping to create more chaos in Canada.

In my own field, as a publisher of trade journals in western Canada, we might then give serious consideration to trying to guarantee continuance of this small, healthy prairie province industry by levying a special tax on advertising revenue on the eastern Canadian publishers of somewhat greater financial strength, who compete with us with the aid of lower unit costs and bigger facilities. This Mr. Speaker, would be a levy against at least one of the Canadian publishers who want a special tax put upon certain of their United States competitors.

I do not seriously propose that last suggestion, of course. If I could not successfully compete by fair means, I would sooner go out of business than resort to demands that my competitors have their wings clipped by extraordinary taxes. However, my business like thousands of others in Canada is managing to successfully compete with larger and more powerful ones. I earnestly urge the Minister of Finance to scrap this discriminatory special tax, and advise the Canadian magazine publishers who sought it to find better and fairer means to compete with the "maple leaf" editions.

As the minister pointed out in his budget speech, it is important to Canada that Canadian publications, by Canadians, for Canadians, telling about Canadians, continue to thrive. Like him, sir, I would not happily contemplate a time when we would not have a Canadian magazine; when there would not be an opportunity for persons with the talent and the time to write and contribute articles on government, scientific matters or some other subjects. Like him, sir, I would not happily contemplate a time when our children could not read a magazine in which there would be Canadian stories based on Canadian history, or Canadian fiction. Certainly we all want purely Canadian magazines to continue playing a part in our Canadian culture. I believe they can, and without discriminatory taxes upon their competitors. I would earnestly suggest to the publishers of our Canadian magazines that they get out and do a better job of determining what Canadians find appealing in the periodicals they buy. They should revamp, where it seems necessary, the format, art work and editorial content to attract more Canadian readers. They should get out and sell Canadianism to Canadians through more Canadian content in their magazines. If they sell Canadianism effectively, they will sell more magazines.

As to advertising revenue, the flow to Canadian publishers will grow as they sell the merits of their publications to readers. It can also, I am confident, be considerably expanded by a more intense job of selling advertising on the merits of building stronger, better, bigger all-Canadian magazines, and the competitive merits of ads in such publications as compared to all the other media available. If Canadian publishers cannot effectively sell the merits of their periodicals to Canadians readers and advertisers, then they do not deserve permanent existence.

It seems to me there is one way at least in which co-operation between Canadian government and publishers could now help build a sounder national magazine industry and encourage the development of more Canadian creative writing talent. What I have in mind might be called a Canadian creative writing fund, to which government and publishers would contribute each year an equal amount, perhaps $50,000 to $100,000 each. This joint government-industry fund would, under a board of qualified editors and authorities on Canadiana, disburse annual grants in monthly contests for fact and fiction articles, short stories and short novels, Canadian in theme and written by Canadians. I would envisage monthly awards for first, second and third best in each category of writing, being at least comparable to the fees now paid authors by the leading Canadian magazines. Such awards would be treated as payment for the title to the winning articles and stories. The Canadian creative writing fund award winning stories could then be allocated on an equitable basis to Canadian magazines, on the basis of their contribution to the fund, and each story would then become the property of and be published by that magazine.

This proposed measure of government subsidy in a joint effort with Canadian publishers to encourage Canadian writing talent would, I believe, be money well spent in the national interest. It would create a pool of Canadian stories and articles to supplement the editorial material acquired in the normal way by Canadian magazines and could, I believe, contribute substantially to awakening broader interest among the Canadian public and Canadian advertisers in supporting Canadian magazines featuring Canadian material designed for Canadian tastes.

In conclusion, and to get back to the special tax proposed in the budget, may I remind the government of the rightful indignation felt by Canadians a short time ago when the legislature of the state of Maryland passed a measure discriminating specifically against a Canadian company desiring to build a plant and compete with United States firms in that area. Like most Canadians, the United States state department found the discrimination distasteful and unwise, as did the governor of Maryland. This week the governor of Maryland vetoed the bill. I suggest that this government's proposed discriminatory excise tax on Canadian editions of United States magazines will rouse as much rightful indignation in the United States as the Maryland bill did here in Canada. Let us therefore take a leaf from the Maryland governor's book and kill an unfair measure before it ever becomes law in Canada.

On motion of Mr. Ellis the debate was adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): It being past five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

SIGNATURE LOAN AND FINANCE COMPANY

Mr. Claude Richardson (St. Lawrence-St. George) moved the second reading of Bill No. 166, to incorporate Signature Loan and Finance Company.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, the other day the leader of this group, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, referred to a report of Mr. MacGregor, the head of the department of insurance, dealing with the increased interest shown by United States loan companies in the very lucrative Canadian field. He pointed out at that time that there had been increasing United States interest in this field through the provincially incorporated subsidiary companies of United States loan concerns. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter which deserves the very close attention of hon. members.

There have been a number of other events during the past year which have tended to point out the importance of a very close appraisal of Canada's economic position, particularly with respect to the growing United States control of Canadian business. Issues are before this house at the present time. There is the question of the gas pipe line. There are other instances which ought to be a clear warning to all Canadians that we owe it to ourselves to give the closest attention to any proposal which might, even in the slightest degree, increase the extent of outside control over Canadian business.

The people of the United States are much more concerned about protecting their own interests than we Canadians are in protecting our interests. We in this country have no watchdog such as the federal power commission to protect the consumers of natural gas in this country. In a previous debate an hon. member spoke of a recent event in the state of Maryland where, failing some regulatory body to protect a particular industry in that state, the state legislature had taken action to prevent a Canadian company from engaging in normal business there. In these circumstances I think we cannot allow a bill of this kind to go through this house without giving it our most careful consideration.

As the result of past indecision and lack of concern on the part of this government we have now arrived at the stage where some 83 per cent of the loan business of this country is controlled by two large United States corporations. These two large United States loan companies made profits last year of some $4,800,000. This is money, savings you might call it, which has been drained off to the United States, savings which might under normal circumstances have been available for investment in this country. Indeed, we have had ample indication in recent times of an apparent shortage of investment capital in this country.

These two large companies, having made just under $5 million of Canadian money out of Canadian citizens who had the misfortune to have to go to them and pay the exorbitant interest rates charged, have contributed what to the economy of this country? Have they assisted in the development of our natural resources? The answer is obviously no. Have they in any way contributed to the building up of the industrial capacity of this country? The answer again is no.

Mr. Trainor: How do you know?

Mr. Ellis: What have these companies done? They have come into this country; they have borrowed Canadian money from Canadian banks at lower rates of interest; they have lent this Canadian money to Canadian citizens at exorbitant rates of interest, and as a result of that operation they made profits last year of just under $5 million.

This company may argue that it is performing some service to the people of this country. Certainly it cannot argue that it is contributing to the economic well-being of Canada by preying on misfortune. They are not performing a service in any way. The loans they make are not contributing to the building up of Canada's industrial capacity. The argument is sometimes raised—it was raised in connection with another bill asking for a change in the name of a company—that they are performing some sort of service to the man on the street. Well, in previous debates we have had the question of the profits of small loans companies discussed. It appears quite obvious that these companies are not in business out of a desire to help the people of Canada.

The small loans field is extremely lucrative. Mark this. Statements were made on previous occasions when private bills were brought in by the hon. member for Assiniboia, that if you go too far and reduce the interest rate too much you are going to drive these people out of business. Well, what is the situation? When the government at long last took some steps toward scaling down the burden on prospective borrowers, this company became anxious to get into the field, which certainly proves that at the present time the field is lucrative enough to attract outside firms to enter it.

In a previous debate some reference was made to the nature of the advertising carried on by those firms. I believe the hon. member for Assiniboia read into the record a number of advertisements. Of course, the most memorable was the one entitled, "You are my pal". The two companies I have referred to control 83 per cent of the small loans field in Canada, and they spent over $1 million on just that type of advertising. Hon. members will agree it is regrettable that any Canadian has to borrow money from a loan company, and that it is a matter of great misfortune. But when a firm, in order to make profits, will go out into the field and do whatever it can to sell the idea of going into debt, that makes the situation well nigh intolerable.

The position in which we find ourselves at the moment is simply this. No one can argue that there are not enough loan companies in the field in Canada today. No one can argue that this field is controlled by Canadian companies. It is not simply a question of having another firm coming in to do business. It is simply a question of adding to the heavy preponderance of this business which is being conducted by firms with headquarters outside of this country.

Of course when they come before parliament seeking incorporation they have very able and very influential people acting on their behalf. I have noted the names mentioned in this bill. One name which is mentioned is that of Duncan Kenneth MacTavish, the president of the national Liberal federation.

Mr. Argue: "Two-per-cent" MacTavish.

Mr. Ellis: I can readily understand the advantage in having this type of man serving as a front, but I would ask hon. members to remember that the firm which is asking for incorporation at this time is a United States concern. Firms which are controlled outside this country already have a stranglehold on this particular field. I think the sponsor of this bill ought to be in a position to tell hon. members of this house why it should be necessary to pass this bill at this time. Is he going to argue that we have to have this small loans company and that Canadians are not now in a position to go into the market and obtain loans? Is this company offering advantages to Canadians which they do not presently enjoy?

Mr. Richardson: May I ask the hon. member a question? If the hon. member who is now speaking wants me to state the reasons I will be glad to do so, but if he proposes to put words into my mouth, then I decline.

Mr. Ellis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I had expected that when the matter was brought before the house the sponsor would have made a statement. I was rather disappointed that the hon. member did not make a statement at the outset, and I think it is not too late to make a statement now. I suggest that after I resume my seat the hon. member might make his point. I was not attempting to put words into the hon. member's mouth. I was merely suggesting that when he makes his statement he should explain to us the necessity to pass this bill at the present time.

I can see no particular reason why this company should be incorporated at this time. I do not think the incorporation of this company is going to help any group of Canadians. I realize, of course, that it will help the directors and shareholders of the company; there is no question about that. There is not a company in this field that is not making plenty of money. I fully realize that this company is not coming into Canada and seeking incorporation if it does not expect to make money, and that is the sum total of it.

I suggest there is a more important principle than the mere passage of this bill. I suggest that at this time we should review our whole attitude toward this problem, which has been brought to the fore during this session to a greater degree perhaps than in previous sessions. Canadian industry today is becoming increasingly dominated by outside capital.

I suggest that my hon. friends on the other side of the house should read a speech made in the other place by a former member of this house, who had some extremely caustic remarks to make concerning this particular bill when it was before the other place. The situation was put quite clearly at that time by the hon. gentleman. He made reference to a statement by Dr. G. Edward Hall, president of the University of Western Ontario, on October 17 last, which appears at page 255 of the Senate Hansard of Tuesday, March 6, 1956. Dr. Hall said:

> One so-called Canadian company sold, in one year, more than $210 million worth of goods to the Canadian public. Over 99 per cent of the stock of that company is owned by the parent company in the United States. The profits from this fairly substantial operation are simply lumped in with the profits of the total sales of the parent company. And Canadians, in order to participate in this company, are forced to purchase stock of the parent company in which they may have no specific interest. Another large and respected subsidiary operating in Canada for many years and completely owned and controlled by the parent U.S. company does not even release Canadian sale figures.

I commend this address to all hon. members of this house. Dr. Hall made this further comment:

> Two-thirds of all motor vehicles sold to Canadians last year were produced by companies operating in Canada without Canadian stock. The profits, again, are lumped in with the profits of their giant U.S. parent companies. The dividends paid by the parent company do not reflect Canadian sales nor the position of that company in the Canadian economy.

In summing up later on, Dr. Hall said:

> Canada produces 90 per cent of the world's supply of a certain mineral, yet where is the effective head office of that industry's largest company, whose mines are manned by Canadians, whose furnaces are operated by Canadians, and whose profits are made in Canada? Not in Canada, but in one of the cities of the United States. And the Canadian stockholders are paid, not in Canadian dollars, but in U.S. funds!

I maintain that insistence upon the fact that we Canadians should pay attention to this tendency is not expressed exclusively in this particular quarter of the house. I suggest that the former hon. member of this house to whom I referred a moment ago has made what is perhaps one of the best speeches that has been made on the subject, in which he pointed out the danger inherent in this practice. I hope that his colleagues in this house will read his speech and take it to heart. I also quoted from Dr. Hall's remarks. One could go on and quote a great many eminent Canadians who have brought to the attention of the public precisely the same problem.

I suggest that we should give extremely serious consideration to this tendency at this time. If we do not, what is going to happen? It is only a matter of time until not merely 85 per cent but 95 or 100 per cent of the small loans field will be controlled by outside companies. In other forms of economic development in this country we are going to have increasing United States control. The time is coming when the entire economy of Canada will be controlled by the United States, and we will become simply an economic vassal of that country.

This is a problem which has to be met on a wide front, and I have mentioned merely one aspect of the problem. I do suggest, however, that we have here a specific instance in which we can do something to register our concern and our protest against this alarming tendency. For this reason I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough):

That the word "now" be left out and the words "this day six months hence" be added at the end of the question.

Mr. Knight: Is my hon. friend on the government side going to speak?

Mr. Claude Richardson (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, the bill which is presently before the house is relatively uncomplicated. May I say to the house before proceeding any further that if the hon. member who just spoke felt that I did not wish to stand up and explain the bill, he was wrong. The Speaker quite properly caught his eye before he caught mine. Because the hon. member has been in this house for a somewhat longer time than I have, I was prepared to yield to the normal demands of common courtesy.

As to the general argument which the hon. member has made about non-Canadian capital, I submit that there is a place where that might well be discussed. As a member of this house I would be prepared to discuss it at that time, but I suggest with all respect that that is not the point to be raised in respect to this particular bill.

May I say just a word or two in explanation of this bill. Hon. members of this house know full well that in the modern economy of Canada, business may be carried on by a sole proprietorship, by a partnership or, as is the case in a great many instances, by a corporation. Second, most of us here know full well that the great majority of federal corporations are incorporated under the Companies Act, a statute of this parliament, and we know also that certain types of business such as insurance, railway and loan companies must obtain special charters from this parliament, the latter under the Small Loans Act of 1939.

Most hon. members know that the Small Loans Act has been on the statute books of this country since 1939. We know also that there is before us Bill No. 51 to be considered at this session, under which the rates and certain clauses of that act will be up for review. Part II of that act invites any group of people of competence, of character and of experience to present a petition and application to this house for incorporation as a small loans company. I submit that such a group has a right to be heard by this house.

The form of the bill is very simple, and is prescribed by part II of the Small Loans Act, 1939. Under that act a great many clauses of the Loan Companies Act are made applicable to the Small Loans Act. The majority of the directors of any such company must be Canadian citizens and residents. The overriding Loan Companies Act states that the administration of all these companies, including small loan companies, must be only by the board of directors, the majority of whom, as I have said, must be Canadian citizens and residents.

The bill provides for the incorporation of this company with head office in Ottawa. The company is to have a relatively modest capital in this field of $500,000, which may be increased to $1,000,000. There are to be five directors, the majority of whom will be Canadian citizens and residents. Reference was recently made in this house to the name of a small loan company. In the event that hon. members are anxious to know why this particular company has chosen this particular name, may I say that the sponsor of the bill is the Merchants' Acceptance Corporation, which has carried on business in the New England states since 1909. My understanding is that the sponsors of the bill would have preferred to use the name of the parent company, but the report of the superintendent of insurance states that there is already a company in Canada which uses the word "Merchants". Therefore the sponsors of this bill had to consider some other name and they chose a name which I submit is quite proper, Signature Loan and Finance Company.

This indicates that the person, unfortunately if you will, who needs to borrow $100, $150, $200 or $300, can go to this company for such loan on the basis of his personal character and financial integrity as represented by his signature, and as in the case of all of us that would be his warrant for such a loan. That is the explanation of this bill. As I said, the sponsoring company has carried on business since 1909, mainly in the New England states, and if it is incorporated it proposes to carry on business in Canada principally in eastern Canada.

I said I was not going to be drawn into the general discussion to which the hon. member who spoke last referred. Let me remind all hon. members that while the superintendent of insurance made reference to the growing interest of non-Canadians and Canadians in this field, there are only four small loan companies in Canada under federal supervision. If the hon. member is sincere, as I expect he is, and if he would prefer that 83 per cent of the small loans business in Canada be not controlled by two of those four companies, I submit that here is an opportunity for another relatively small group to come into Canada. If they feel they can do business here, let them have that opportunity.

I speak only as a member of parliament who is sponsoring this bill on behalf of some of my friends. This is not by any manner or means a Liberal measure, a Conservative measure, a Social Credit measure or a C.C.F. measure. Having been asked by people whom I regard as competent and intelligent to stand up in parliament and sponsor a bill which is being presented because the Small Loans Act of 1939 invites people to come here and carry on business under our Canadian economy, I make this explanation. People in all parts of the world are being urged to enter our favourable economic climate, and it is no wonder that they want to come to Canada. They feel that they want to do business here.

As we know, the undertaker will come for all of us, but I am not for punishing undertakers. There are certain people in Canada who feel they must go to a small loan company for certain reasons, and I submit with great respect that this bill warrants second reading and consideration by the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with the greatest interest to my hon. friend, as well as to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, for whom I have great respect. While the latter hon. member was speaking I was struck by the thought that perhaps he was protesting rather much in connection with one or two points he made. In the first place, I do not think anyone has asserted that this particular group of people have not a perfectly legal right to come to this house to seek incorporation which under the terms of the act is a perfectly legitimate thing to do. The only point I raise is whether or not this House of Commons should grant such incorporation at the present time.

I have just discovered that my hon. friend is the sponsor of this particular bill. I must admit that is my own fault, because I could have seen it if I had looked at the order paper. The hon. member said, forsooth, that he did not rise because the hon. member for Regina City had some sort of seniority or priority due to the fact that he had come to this house before my hon. friend on the Liberal side.

I do not think that argument is particularly well taken. Surely if there is in this house one thing that is accepted, it is that the sponsor of a bill is expected to make some explanation to the house as to the contents or purposes of the bill which he is for the moment sponsoring.

There is another point I should like to raise. It has been suggested again by my hon. friend that somehow or other that this was a partisan bill and that the opposition which we in this particular C.C.F. group were making to it was inspired by partisanship of some sort because Mr. MacTavish happens to be one of those who are seeking incorporation. I can assure you that we have no such thoughts whatever. I could, of course, express my opinions about a man of Mr. MacTavish's stature and standing in this country taking part in what I might call this rather shabby sort of "small potato" company business, but that is not for me to say. However, I can assure my hon. friend in complete sincerity that there is nothing partisan about the opposition I am putting up to this sort of thing.

So far I have not said anything about this bill. I am just coming to it. My interest was attracted to these businesses by one thing only, and that is the deceptive method of their advertising. I have always been greatly opposed to deceptive advertising. Some of my colleagues who have been in this house as long as I have know—and I think my hon. friend from Kamloops would give me credit for this—that I advocated first in this house the idea of preventing the use on bacon of deceptive wrappers with red stripes which made the bacon appear to be all lean when it was half fat. We had some success with that. I have always been interested in this from the point of view of the public. Unfortunately it is the people who are less protected educationally, shall we say, through a lack of knowledge of public affairs, who become the victims of this particular type of company.

Again today I would like to say a word about advertising. Sir, you would be greatly surprised to learn that a great deal of the advertising of these people in the local offices in Ottawa has suddenly disappeared. I would not like to say it was something like the government files that we cannot get at, but you cannot get at them today for some reason. A few days ago you could send your stenographer or a House of Commons messenger to the companies and they were delighted to send you literature. They sent some of this advertising to my partner, the hon. member for Assiniboia. However, when we requested another office to send some today they said, "Well, there is no literature available at the moment." However, I happen to have some advertising with which I was provided, I think, some months ago. I happened to find it among some old papers. I think even this bears out my assertion that the advertising is misleading.

I suggest that the particular type of advertising, with the picture of a little child at the foot of the Christmas tree and mother and father going off to Florida on money they get at 24 per cent per annum from these loan companies, is not too dangerous. Surely nobody in this world would be so simple or so naive as to believe that what this particular type of advertising conveys is anything like the truth. But there is a danger in the other type of advertising, and that is why this was first brought up in the house.

As a matter of fact I can tell the house in confidence that one of the first bills I proposed to place on the order paper of this house, a bill about which I consulted my hon. friends in the caucus, would have the effect of compelling any small loans company, or any outfit that insisted upon advertising its willingness to lend money, include in its advertising the amount of interest per annum or the cost per annum on a percentage basis. If that amount were clearly stated in the advertising, I do not think so many people would fall into the trap set for them by the small loans companies of this sort.

They do not know that. The people that are getting these small loans do not realize what they are up against until they are firmly inside the trap and are seeking a way to get out. Through the urgency of the need for the money, the poverty, the misery and the fear of losing one's job, a man will pay 100 per cent if necessary, under certain conditions, and the people who give them these accommodations are well aware of that fact.

It has always been my plea that this advertising is deceptive, the advertising in which the rate of interest per annum is not stated. You are not told that, but you are told what you have to pay back each month. The average person—and I say this with some knowledge—who has come to me with his troubles did not realize what that rate of interest was when he borrowed that money. It is worded in such a way that it looks like 8 per cent or 11 per cent as the case may be; but the catch is, of course, that the borrower does not have the full use of the money, as advertised, for the complete 12 months. He has the full use of it only for one month, and the amount he has the use of steadily decreases as the months go on, while the monthly payment of interest is the same.

That is my plea. I think it is a good one. I think what these people say is deceptive. The particular pamphlet I have—as I say I do not know whether or not it is obtainable today—is one that reached my desk some time ago but came to my attention today. It commences by saying:

[Mr. Knight.]

Reputable lenders—

I presume these people are reputable; some of their competitors are not.

—have hundreds of unsolicited testimonials that tell the real story of the value of the lender to his community. Sometimes the stories are poignant . . .

"Poignant" is a good word. Not only are they poignant but they are tragic, some of the stories I have heard. I had a sheriff come to see me about the state into which these small people get who use these small loans. He sits down with them and tries to arrange a payment per month which seems to be reasonable, by which they can finally meet their obligations. I notice that this one piece of advertising attacks the credit unions. Any man who attacks credit unions, so far as I am concerned, has a battle on his hands, because I am a believer in the functions of the credit union. Anyone who lives in a province where the credit union and co-operative is used to the extent it is used in my province must agree it is a thing that is beneficial to the body politic. They attack the credit union because the credit union, they say, does not pay cash back into the treasury in the form of taxes, and it can only serve the people in the group.

However, it is easy to get into a credit union. All you have to do is borrow some money and you are in. In some of the co-operatives you only have to make a purchase and you are in. So, after all, I do not think their argument is valid. They do not point out that the credit union is a method of borrowing money at cost, in other words that when you go into a credit union, if you pay as high as 1 per cent per month, the profits made by the organization are not shipped out of the country to some corporation in the United States or some other country but are divided among the actual people who borrowed the money. By that method the interest rate they pay is reduced. To me that sounds logical and sensible.

As I have said, this kind of advertising is deceitful, although it is perhaps less deceitful than some of the things I have seen. I notice on the outside this pamphlet has the words, "From an All-Canadian Viewpoint." I expect these people are getting rather touchy about the talk that 83 per cent, or whatever it is, of the small loans field in Canada is controlled by two foreign corporations. I suppose this is that great old free enterprise and competition working about which we hear so much. So they are protesting just like my hon. friend over there has protested.

It seems to me they do perhaps protest too much. They do not state where the money comes from. They do not state, like my hon. friend, who the directors are; but this is the picture, according to them, from an all-Canadian viewpoint. That makes us feel a lot better. They have an interesting explanation here of the rates they charge. Here is what they have to say and I want the house to notice this because, after all, my text in the beginning was deceitful advertising, advertising which misrepresents the facts. You know, if these people would come clean and state their case honestly and decently they would be out of business.

Mr. Carrick: May I raise a point of order?

Mr. Knight: No, you cannot.

Mr. Carrick: I am rising on a point of order. We have listened to the hon. member talking to us for about ten minutes about advertising. Obviously it cannot be advertising put out by this company, because this company has not been incorporated.

Mr. Knight: Is that a point of order?

Mr. Carrick: I am raising a question of relevancy. The hon. member has been telling us about advertising for about ten minutes. It is obvious he cannot be speaking about advertising done by this company, because this company has not been incorporated.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Carrick: I am speaking to a point of order. It is on the question of relevancy.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member for Saskatoon is speaking to the general principles underlying the operations of these loan companies and I think his remarks, though perhaps wide, are relevant to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your decision, than which you could have made no other. I had some occasion in committee the other day to rebuke my hon. friend. When I began talking about box cars and asked the president of Canadian National Railways a question—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knight: —My friend reminded me that I was being political.

Mr. Carrick: The hon. member made a very unjust remark. He indicated that I was not a regular attender in the house. I did not challenge him, but my hon. friend knows that is not right, and it was not a statement he should have made at that time.

Mr. Knight: Sir, I quite realize I am now about to do something that is completely out of order. I apologize totally and completely to my hon. friend for the remark which he taunted me into making in the railway committee the other day. Let me get back in order, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking on the principle of this bill, the principle of all these bills and on the principle of deceitful advertising in connection with all these companies. I do not expect that this company will be very different from the others. I am just going to quote one line here from this publication by this company, perhaps more innocent than the others. Listen to this:

The charge presently stipulated—

This may be semantics but I think I know my English.

—by our federal laws is 2 per cent per month on the outstanding balance of a loan to $500.

If my understanding of the word "stipulate" is correct, the statement is false. Then they proceed to say that their interest rate is not 24 per cent per annum, as some maintain. Oh, no; they would not charge so much interest. They say there are charges for expenses and service and profit charges. I am not interested to the extent of 5 cents in what they call them. I am interested in what these poor unfortunate people have to pay for the small accommodation they get from sources of this kind. Then they give us here what they call a "pie-chart". The only similarity I can see to a pie is that it is round and flat. Some pie! Some crust! They say this chart is an explanation of the fact that they really do not make any profits at all. Oh, no! They take the years 1950 to 1954, and they assert that their profit has been one-fortieth part of 1 per cent. I do not think even these supposedly kindly people would stay in business very long at that rate of profit.

I remember the time when the assertion was made that certain packing companies were making too great profits. The companies advertised all over Canada that on the handling of one pound of meat they only made just so much, a very little profit. Why, they do not have a single prune here in this pie. In this round pie there is only a tiny, infinitesimal little part for their profit. Do you know how they figure it out? That is the portion they get out of the money they lend. I suggest we are not interested in what they get out of the money they lend. We are interested in the net income the corporation makes on the capital invested. That is one thing about which this document, deceitful or otherwise, and you can judge for yourself, says nothing.

I shall merely conclude these few remarks because I see, Mr. Speaker, that it is six o'clock, by simply saying it still is my hope that some day the situation will be such that if these people, whoever they are, honest, dishonest, deceitful or honourable, want to advertise the lending of money as a business, they will have to state clearly in their advertisements, so that he who runs may read, what the amount of interest will be in per cent per annum, and the interesting and emphatic words are the last two, the percentage charge per annum.

On motion of Mr. Regier the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

SURTAX ON RENTAL INCOME

Question No. 242—Mr. Pallett:

1. Is rental income subject to a 4 per cent surtax under the Income Tax Act?
2. Have the employees of the Department of National Revenue been instructed to collect a 4 per cent surtax on rental income received by beneficiaries through an estate?

Answer by: Mr. McCann:

1. No.

2. Yes; employees of the Department of National Revenue are instructed to assess 4 per cent surtax on all income received by beneficiaries from estates.

VETERANS LAND ACT—ARREARS

Question No. 263—Mr. Brooks:

1. How many veterans, in each province, holding land under the Veterans Land Act are in arrears of $200 or more on payments to the board?
2. What percentage would this be of the total?

Answer by: Mr. Lapointe:

1 and 2.	1.	2. per cent
British Columbia	3	·04
(a) Alberta	421	6·80
Saskatchewan	699	9·69
(b) Manitoba	394	7·70
Ontario	32	·17
Quebec	-	-
(c) New Brunswick	61	2·56
Nova Scotia	24	1·03
Prince Edward Island	23	2·43
Newfoundland	-	-
Total	1,657	3·02

(a) Includes Peace river block of British Columbia.
(b) Includes northwestern Ontario.
(c) Includes Magdalen islands, Quebec.

Note: These figures may be misleading as to the complete situation. Where payment is on an annual basis, the number of accounts in arrears continually decreases during the collection year which commences each November 1. At the end of the collection year on October 31, 1955, less than 1 per cent of all accounts were in arrears of $200 or more.

Questions

DEFENCE PRODUCTION, SMALL INDUSTRIES—NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 286—Mr. Balcom:

What industries have been organized and are operating in Nova Scotia since 1951, through the assistance of the small industries division of defence production?

Answer by: Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

The small industries division of the Department of Defence Production was created in 1951 to ensure that all segments of Canadian industry, particularly small industry, were given an opportunity to participate in the defence production program. Its chief function was that of a service division, to assist and advise those firms seeking either direct contracts from the Department of Defence Production or subcontracts from the department's prime contractors. In order to accomplish this, the small industries division until 1953 maintained representatives at various locations across Canada, including a representative in the maritime provinces who assisted a number of Nova Scotia contractors in the manner above outlined.

INCOME TAX RETURNS AND REFUNDS

Question No. 293—Mr. Knowles:

1. For each of the last five taxation years for which the statistics are available, how many persons from whom income tax was deducted at the source did not file an annual income tax return?
2. By years, how many of such persons were found, or believed, to have a refund coming to them?
3. To what extent were such refunds made?
4. How much money, covering the last five years indicated above, received by the government as indicated above but belonging to individuals is still in the possession of the government?
5. What steps is the government taking to get such money back to the persons to whom it belongs?

Answer by: Mr. McCann:

1. No information available.
2. No information available.
3. Refunds were made only to persons who filed income tax returns to substantiate that they were properly entitled to a refund.
4. No information available.
5. The prompt issuance of refunds to all persons from whom overpayments of tax have been collected is a constant objective of the taxation division. This objective is one of the aims of an extensive annual publicity campaign employing newspaper, radio, T.V., newsreel and street car advertising. Persons entitled to refunds are advised frequently by such means to make application for their refund and to provide the department with the information necessary to enable a refund to be issued.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 26, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE FROM BARTIBOG, NEW BRUNSWICK, TO NEWCASTLE

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the house that the management of the Canadian National Railways have received from Heath Steele Mines Limited, a subsidiary of American Metal Company, a request for the construction of a branch line from Bartibog, New Brunswick, to the company's mine located some 30 miles northwest of Newcastle. Bartibog is on the main line of the Canadian National between Newcastle and Bathurst. The proposed branch line would be approximately 22 miles in length.

The management have made an appraisal of the economics of the proposed branch line and have concluded that it can be operated on a profitable basis. Accordingly, the management have asked the government to seek legislative authority for the construction of the line. It is the intention of the government at the first convenient opportunity to recommend the necessary legislation to parliament.

EXPROPRIATION OF INDIAN LANDS, OKANAGAN VALLEY

Motion No. 48—Mr. Jones:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda and other documents, exchanged between the federal government and provincial government of British Columbia, or any officials or agents thereof, and the Indian bands in the Okanagan valley, relating to the expropriation of land about 1920 for the construction of the main irrigation canal conveying water from Okanagan lake to Oliver and Osoyoos, British Columbia.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatever to producing any part of the correspondence with the government of British Columbia that may still exist. This seems to be a matter mainly of ancient history. I believe there are some current negotiations going on, and I would hope the hon. gentleman would not expect me to produce correspondence about current negotiations until they are completed.

In so far as correspondence with the Indians, the Indian bands and the band councils is concerned, I have always felt the superintendent general of Indian affairs acted as trustee for the Indians in these matters and this correspondence should never be produced unless the Indians themselves wanted to have it produced. I am sure the hon. member will agree with me.

Mr. Speaker: Motion agreed to, subject to the remarks made by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

VANCOUVER-JOYCE SUB-POST OFFICE—CHANGE OF LOCATION

Motion No. 49—Mr. Knowles (for Mr. MacInnis):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other communications, from August 1, 1955 to February 24, 1956, between any person in the post office department and any person or persons in Vancouver, British Columbia, relative to the change of location of the sub-post office Vancouver-Joyce (No. 9795), and the change of postmaster at the said sub-post office.

Mr. Lapointe: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would allow this motion to stand until a later sitting?

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

LAMBTON AND KENT COUNTIES—FISHING AND HUNTING ON INDIAN LANDS

Motion No. 50—Mr. Murphy (Lambton West):

For a copy of all agreements and leases, from 1947 to date, between any department of the federal government and all lessees of Indian lands and waters in the Walpole island and Mitchell bay area, counties of Lambton and Kent respectively, concerning fishing and hunting privileges and rights.

Mr. Speaker: Motion agreed to.

LAWYERS' FEES

Motion No. 52—Mr. Nicholson:

For a return showing the names of lawyers engaged by government departments and the amounts paid them by way of salary and expenses during the fiscal years 1953-54, and 1954-55.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as we do not retain outside lawyers on a salary basis, may I suggest that the word "salary" in the third line of this notice be deleted and the words "legal fees" be substituted therefor.

Mr. Speaker: Motion as amended agreed to.

INDIAN RESERVES, SASK.—WELFARE PAYMENTS

Motion No. 53—Mr. Bryson:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, and other correspondence, since April 1, 1955, exchanged between the band councils, or agency superintendents on Saskatchewan Indian reserves, and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration regarding welfare payments.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. member would consider the possibility of withdrawing this motion. It calls for correspondence with Indian bands and band councils, and I do feel, as I said a moment ago in relation to the other motion, that the superintendent general of Indian affairs is a trustee and that the correspondence with bands and councils should not be producible in this house unless the band or band councils want it produced.

I would be very glad to give the hon. gentleman any information that he would like to have on the subject that has to do with the spending of public funds but I think the motion in its form is objectionable.

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Speaker, I based my question on the fact that the Minister of Finance had suggested that in his opinion this information would be readily available; however, on the explanation of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration I would suggest that it be stood for today.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

NATIONAL DEFENCE STATIONS—SURVEYS

Motion No. 54—Mr. Knowles:

For a copy of any surveys received by the Minister of National Defence, or by any departmental official on his behalf, from the superintendents of national defence stations at Stevenson field, Winnipeg; Claresholm, Alberta; and Renous, New Brunswick, with reference to rates of pay and working conditions of prevailing rates employees on these stations, dated at any time since January 1, 1955.

Mr. Campney: Mr. Speaker, this motion asks for reports received with respect to rates of pay and working conditions in respect of three defence installations. With regard to Stevenson field, Winnipeg, and Claresholm, Alberta, no such surveys have been received. So far as the third station, namely Renous, New Brunswick, is concerned, I would refer the hon. member to the motion he made on March 5 and the explanation given at that time by the Minister of Labour as recorded at pages 1787 and 1788 of Hansard. Since it was agreed to drop the motion on that occasion in view of the explanation given by the Minister of Labour, and for the added reason that in any case the report is privileged, I would ask the hon. member to drop his motion.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if I could ask the minister a question. Is there not a difference between the previous motion and this one in that the previous motion dealt with surveys made by the Department of Labour whereas this deals with surveys made by the superintendents on the stations?

Mr. Campney: I am informed that all our surveys with respect to wages and working conditions are made for us by the Department of Labour and sent forward to us. I am informed that we do not make these surveys ourselves.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member agree to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Knowles: Under the circumstances I guess I have no alternative.

Mr. Speaker: Motion withdrawn.

BRIDGES

NEW WESTMINSTER—REPORTED NEED TO REPLACE QUEENSBOROUGH BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, notice of which I sent him earlier this day. In view of the urgent necessity of calling tenders immediately to replace the Queensborough bridge, is the minister in a position to indicate whether the department approves the plans which have been submitted by the city of New Westminster for replacing the present bridge with a new one?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act it is the prerogative of the governor in council to approve such plans. The Navigable Waters Protection Act requires also that an advertisement must be inserted in the Canada Gazette and two local papers and remain there for one month to permit appeals to be made. Until such time as we have evidence that the terms of the statute have been complied with we will not be in position to recommend to the governor in council.

INCOME TAX

CAMPOBELLO ISLAND—REFERENCE TO METHODS OF COLLECTING INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister investigated the reports as to the methods used by the R.C.M.P. and other government officials in obtaining income tax information from the fishermen of Campobello island, New Brunswick, and, if so, with what result?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): I wish to thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of his question. In reply I may say that officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were assigned to assist officers of the Department of National Revenue in the carrying out of the search at Campobello island as provided by section 126 (3) of the Income Tax Act. The authorization to enter and search was issued by the deputy minister of national revenue, taxation, on February 14, 1956, with the approval of Hon. Mr. Justice Charles A. Cameron of the Exchequer Court of Canada, given on February 10, 1956.

INQUIRY AS TO EXEMPTION FOR MEDICAL EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister give the house any further details with respect to press reports that his department is still considering the matter of medical expenses in relation to income tax even though he did not have occasion to mention this matter in his budget speech?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): No, I have nothing to add to what I said in the budget speech.

Mr. Knowles: But you said nothing in that speech.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPRODUCTION OF HER MAJESTY'S PICTURE ON PAPER CURRENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, may I direct two questions to the Minister of Finance, notice of which I have not given him. First, will the minister tell the house the name of the artist who drew the picture of Her Majesty's head as it appears on current Bank of Canada $1, $2, $5 and $10 bills? Second, will the minister give the house the names of the officials who employed that artist?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will of course provide the information requested. However, I might say that the work of the artist or whoever might have been responsible for what I think my hon. friend has in mind is being corrected.

POSTAL SERVICE

EXTENSION OF TORONTO POSTAL DISTRICT TO INCLUDE METROPOLITAN AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. A. Enfield (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to address a question to the Postmaster General. Can the minister say if there is any possibility at all of the Toronto postal area being extended to take in all of metropolitan Toronto and, if so, will this mean that the whole of the metropolitan Toronto area will have the advantage of local delivery rates?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this matter was reviewed carefully a short time ago by the department and it has been decided, in order to eliminate existing difficulties, to extend the Toronto postal area to include the present Toronto metropolitan area as it is legally constituted. This would bring about the result about which my hon. friend inquires with regard to local rates.

ATOMIC ENERGY

STATEMENT ON INVITATION TO HYDROGEN BOMB TESTS IN PACIFIC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, may I refer to two questions asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) on March 13, as reported on page 2071 of Hansard, and referred to again last Friday. The questions were as follows:

> Has the Canadian government been invited by Washington to send observers to the forthcoming United States hydrogen bomb tests in the Pacific?
> If not, has the Canadian government considered making such a request?

In reply to both questions may I say that I am advised that up to the present no invitation has been received by the government nor is one being sought.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS FOR NEW INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister report on the progress or otherwise of current negotiations for a new international wheat agreement, and can he inform the house whether the present agreement as it stands is likely to be extended for one more year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I regret that I am not able to answer either question. Negotiations are still continuing in camera. I believe that we can expect a conclusion within the next few days, but I have no idea what conclusion will be reached.

Private Bills

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FACILITIES TO MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue? I did not send him notice, and perhaps he will prefer to take this as notice. Does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation intend to extend its television facilities to the province of Manitoba in the near future and, if so, at what points?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the hon. gentleman's question as notice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO HON. MEMBER FOR VANCOUVER EAST ON HIS RETURN FOLLOWING ILLNESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): I rise on a question of privilege. I would like to welcome back the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). He has been through deep waters, and he comes back to the house better fitted to serve. We welcome him back.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that the hon. member has a very keen eye. I had not seen the hon. member in his seat. But I am sure we all agree with him that we are very pleased to see the hon. member for Vancouver East back, and we do welcome him to the house.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: It is suggested to me that there are several bills that are to be dealt with in the committee of the whole. Would hon. members agree to having all these bills sent to the committee in one motion, or do they prefer to have them taken one by one?

Mr. Argue: Take them one by one, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that I do leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on Bill No. 168?

Mr. Knowles: I do not think there is any question but that it is in order to have one motion covering all these bills. My colleague is interested in a later one.

Mr. Speaker: The house may accommodate itself. I understood that the hon. member for Assiniboia wanted them taken one by one. If that is not so, all the bills from order No. 1 to order No. 26 inclusive are to go to the committee of the whole. Is the motion agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 168, to incorporate the Canadian Council of Churches.—Mr. Fleming.

Bill No. 190, to incorporate the Western Gospel Mission.—Mr. Jutras.

The Deputy Chairman: There are a certain number of divorce bills before the committee. Is it agreed that they shall be considered as one?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I should like Bills Nos. 158 and 188 dealt with separately.

LORINC ORVOS NAGY

The house in committee on Bill No. 158, for the relief of Lorinc Orvos Nagy—Mr. Henderson—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the committee which dealt with this bill and I believe that special consideration should be given to this particular bill which involves a petition for divorce by Mr. Nagy. In view of the representations made by some of us in the committee and in view of the evidence presented before the committee of the other place, I believe there is good reason for a close examination of the evidence dealing with this divorce bill.

The petitioner works as a pipefitter and the respondent is a dishwasher. I presume she is a rather poor person, particularly so after she left the home. In the past certain investigators have come before us and given evidence in divorce cases. One of the investigators in this case had been in the employ of Harry Maxim, and in the past some of the evidence given by Mr. Maxim and his employees before the committee has proved to be very doubtful indeed.

There is also doubt with respect to the establishment of adultery in this case, and I think it behooves us as members of the house to pay particular attention to the proceedings in this case. The respondent is of Hungarian descent and speaks little or no English. Apparently she was not given an interpreter before the Senate committee and much of the evidence is very confusing, if not entirely unintelligible. I think that is an additional reason why members of the committee and of the house have a real point of argument in urging that a better method be provided to deal with divorce cases. This case lends weight to the argument that it is not appropriate for a committee of the house or even of the other place to deal with such an important matter as breaking up homes and to pass laws which have the effect of bringing about the separation of men and women.

I want to deal particularly with the evidence in this case but before I go into that may I say that there seems to be doubt as to the jurisdictional powers of the committee of this house and the committee of the other place. On page 14 of the evidence taken in the other place I find that the chairman of the committee, Senator Ross, is asking certain questions and he has this to say:

> I probably went too far. If the petitioner has been guilty of misconduct, it is a discretionary matter for us to refuse the divorce. Perhaps I went too far in my statement. You may go ahead.

Here is one instance where the chairman of the committee of the other place indicates that it is a discretionary matter whether or not the divorce will be granted if it is proved that the petitioner has been guilty of misconduct. I am particularly interested in this case because after reading the evidence carefully I am convinced that if there is any establishment at all on circumstantial evidence, then I would say there has been established the likelihood that adultery was committed on the part of the petitioner. Then too there is the fact that according to the authority of the other place there is some talk that they may also refuse to admit divorce on the ground of cruelty. In this case I might say that cruelty has been established. I understand that the respondent has not entered application for a rehearing of the case but it is important that she put in an appearance and contested the case. The facts of the matter are these.

First there is established the fact that the petitioner granted a mortgage to the respondent of $7,000 and agreed to pay a monthly allowance of $100. Here again I think there is the element of collusion between the parties that could be expected. It does not seem reasonable to me that the husband would give a mortgage of $7,000 and agree to pay $100 a month to his wife if she was to remain in the home. But that is the argument put up by the counsel for the petitioner. Then it is established that this payment was made for a period of some 10 months. That is agreed by counsel also. In the evidence it is indicated that the parties were quarreling and could not get along. It seems to me that the evidence points to the fact that the months of fighting which took place prior to her leaving home was, of course, the reason for her leaving home. It appears to me that the fact that he agreed to pay her $100 a month would indicate that he was paying in order that she would agree to leave the home and leave the child with the husband. When the petitioner was asked if he was aware of adultery having been committed, we find on page 10 of the evidence this question and answer:

> Q. You know nothing about the adultery? If she did commit adultery with another man?
> A. I don't know. I just heard.

Then another important thing is that when the respondent was asked whether or not she had committed adultery she categorically said she had not. Throughout the whole examination and cross-examination there is no place where the woman has admitted to committing adultery. Again, I should like to point out that it seems to me that in the other place, in order to establish adultery in some cases and to elicit information which would lead to that establishment, certain leading questions are asked. As an example, I would point out that at page 11 Senator Ross asked of the petitioner this question:

> Q. Have you forgiven her for the adultery at all?
> A. No. I sorry.
> Q. Did I understand you to say earlier that you are now living with your wife?
> A. No, she not living with me.

It seems that after a few minutes of cross-examination we have Senator Ross asking if he condones the adultery before it is established whatsoever in the evidence. I think it is indicative that here is a whole procedure which should properly be under court jurisdiction either by the exchequer court or some other court designated to take care of cases of this sort. When these witnesses and investigators come before us we have not the authority to swear them, and if there is any perjury we cannot charge them with perjury. These people, both witnesses and investigators, can come before us and give any kind of evidence in order to try to establish their case, but there is no legal responsibility upon them. We are, therefore, in a very difficult position in trying to determine whether or not we can accept the testimony and statements made.

Now, of course, in this case the husband admits that he beat his wife. She left the home, and I feel that he tried to get her to accept money to leave the home and leave the child with him. Then, finally, the husband got his lawyer to interview the investigators and they have tried to build up a charge of adultery against her. I am not too sure of the legal position of the parties after we have passed an act on the basis of adultery which will dissolve the marriage. I am not sure how this may affect the respondent and the husband in the future. It might prejudice the woman in respect to the child, and she indicates she would like to have the child.

I point out that the child, a girl of 14, was with the wife for some seven of the ten months during which the wife was absent from the home. The wife returned to the home and again the husband beat her and drove her from the home. I think the least we can say about the wife's conduct is that she has tried to some extent to resolve their difficulties and has indicated her desire to have the child. I feel that the evidence in this case is so conflicting that the least we could do would be to have a rehearing so that the committee might have the petitioner and the respondent, as well as all the witnesses, before it to determine whether or not the committee would believe their testimony.

At the moment I might say that I have gone through the evidence very carefully, as I believe the other members of this group have. When we were dealing with this particular bill in the committee we asked that it be reheard. I am today, Mr. Chairman, asking that this bill be held over and not passed at this time. As I said earlier, I believe the purpose of the payment was merely to enable the husband to get rid of his wife and have her leave the child with him. There is a great deal of conflicting evidence given by the two investigators. I do not want to deal with all of it, but there is one statement I should like to mention.

Here, Mr. Greenblatt is examining one of the investigators, who said:

> The room, I think, is about six by twelve and there is one bed, and a bureau and cot and a table in the room.

On the next page, under cross-examination by Mr. Gazdik, the defence counsel, the investigator said:

> Q. Well, you said there was a bed and a cot?
> A. No, a couch, which is not a cot.

Apparently, it is quite important in giving this evidence to establish what kind of room it was and what furniture was in the room in order to try to establish whether or not there has been misconduct. The witnesses seem to be confused in testifying before the committee.

I think, Mr. Chairman, this is one case in which we should at least have a rehearing so that the members of the committee could decide for themselves whether or not a divorce should be granted. I do not think we can take the responsibility for what has been done in the other place. I think the members of the other place are doing as good a job as they know how to do. They are in much the same position as we are in the committee of which I am a member. Their jurisdiction is relatively narrow. They can swear these witnesses but they cannot charge them with perjury. I believe they are limited to making the one decision as to whether or not a divorce should be granted. I feel, sir, that the time has come when these divorce cases should no longer be brought before this house. In this case I am certainly making the strongest protest I can. I think it has been established that the respondent has been cruelly treated and that the husband concocted the idea of getting rid of his wife by agreeing to pay her a certain amount of money if she left home. He then got an investigator, but even the investigator's testimony before the committee of the other place does not establish in fact, except by circumstantial evidence, that adultery had been committed. Later the respondent herself denied the adultery. Then, we have the committee of the other place passing this bill on the basis of circumstantial evidence. I feel that the circumstantial evidence in this case is not strong enough to warrant the passage of the bill.

I feel that the woman had to live somewhere. She probably had few friends. The mere fact she was living in another place, apart from her husband, and a place in which there was a man living does not, of itself, indicate misconduct. Then, the woman had to go into the tobacco fields after leaving home. She did wait for a while to get her daughter to come with her, and she had to wait until the husband gave her $100. All this indicates to me she was under coercion, and I think if we are going to continue to have a process under which these petitions can come before this parliament, then a proper procedure should be followed. The parties should have proper counsel and interpreters should be provided so the evidence given will be intelligible. If a rehearing of the case is necessary, money should be available so that the parties will get justice. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope the members of this committee will agree to allowing this measure to stand to enable the committee to have a rehearing of the whole case.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee wish me to put the yeas and nays?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Henderson: Before we discuss this further, I want to say that this is one of the cases that when it came before the committee in the other place they were fortunate enough to have counsel for the respondent to put the respondent's case before that committee and to properly handle the evidence. I might say further that the counsel was a very reputable counsel.

Mr. Nicholson: I wonder if the hon. member would speak a little louder? We cannot hear him down in this corner?

Mr. Henderson: With respect to the comments made about the investigator, I realize the hon. member who has just spoken certainly believes in the principles of British justice. Under this system a person is innocent until proven guilty. Nothing has been brought forward in this case to prove that the petitioner has not given truthful evidence.

The hon. member spoke about the variation which existed between the evidence given by the two investigators. It is frequently better to have evidence which does not stand too pat, when each witness gives his evidence and tells the story as he sees it, and thereby puts the true facts as he understands them. Nothing in the evidence suggests that these investigators did anything but the best job possible.

In this case the respondent was represented by counsel and that party could be presumed to have the proper legal advice to present the best evidence for her at the hearing. If they were not satisfied with the conduct of the hearing in the other place, counsel for the respondent could have so advised the clerk of the other place and they could have appealed it. Such was not the case. I cannot recall that any correspondence was produced or passed on to the chairman of the committee to the effect that the respondent in this case was not satisfied with the conduct of her defence. If she sincerely felt she would have a good defence I would think she would have pursued the matter further. She or her counsel could have appeared before the committee. Simply because there was some objection in another case we cannot say that it would appear there is an objection in this matter. No objection was made to the evidence given by the investigator and all the other facts were taken into consideration by the committee.

With respect to property rights I might say that the committee of the other place has no jurisdiction to deal with them. My hon. friend mentioned the sum of $7,000, which was by the way of a mortgage. At that time the petitioner was questioned by counsel for the respondent as recorded at page 14 of the proceedings:

> Q. When is before?
> A. In 1954, no, 1953, when we are fighting. We are fighting and I don't want to lose my daughter, my Esther. I don't want to lose her and she tell me if I offer her $7,000 she is not going to break the family life up.

There followed some discussion about making monthly payments of $100. As I recall the evidence, the wife left voluntarily after a payment or two had been made. As the result of her leaving, the petitioner a short time after brought his petition to the committee of the other place and so carried it through.

I simply wished to make these remarks and to recall what happened according to the evidence. I thought it important to point out the courses of action which were opened to the respondent, who was represented by counsel, which courses were not taken either by the respondent or by counsel acting on her behalf. The facts as proved in the case must speak for themselves. Those who pass these bills must take the responsibility for them.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is, shall clause 1 carry? Those in favour of clause 1 carrying will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Clause agreed to: Yeas, 46; nays, 27.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Deputy Chairman: Clause carried on division. Shall the preamble carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill be reported?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Bill reported.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to have the remainder of the divorce bills, excluding Bill No. 188, considered as one?

Motion agreed to.

LOIS MARGARET CLOUSTON WILLAR

The house in committee on Bill No. 188, for the relief of Lois Margaret Clouston Willar—Mr. Henderson—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, as I have indicated on second reading, this bill comes before us from the province of Newfoundland. I realize that is a long way from Ottawa; however, I have yet to hear it said that the degree of justice that is handed out to Canadian citizens is dependent upon their nearness to the capital city, Ottawa. I believe that the citizen living on a far-flung island in the Pacific, or in the Artic ocean or on the island of Newfoundland, is subject to equal treatment, provided he is living in Canadian territory, when he appears before this House of Commons.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

This case is rather unique. It has come before what some people like to think of as the highest court in the land. Neither the petitioner nor the respondent is asked to appear and I cannot undertake to support this procedure in any way, shape or form. At home when you are accused of violating a minor traffic offence such as over-parking, if there is a parking meter or a time limit on parking you may mail in your fine and by so doing you are pleading guilty. However, if the charge is a little more serious a different condition may exist. In my home city if you are accused of having gone through an intersection wrongly you cannot even be represented by counsel without making a personal appearance, and you must plead guilty or not guilty. If you plead or are found guilty you must pay the fine. For a mere matter of crossing an intersection wrongly you must appear in person, yet when we are considering legislation that will break up what should be one of the holiest and most sanctified things in human society this parliament is willing to stand idly by and let the thing slide through in a manner which is as slipshod as could be found in any court case that I have ever heard of, and yet we have the temerity to call this the highest court of the land.

Getting down to the details of this particular case, we have affidavits to show that the petitioner has complied with all the rules of the other place and that notice has been served on the respondent. I assume that there is an affidavit to the effect that she has received this notice. However, in Canadian life we often hear of people signing affidavits which set out something that is not the fact. If this is allowed to continue you or I may find ourselves being divorced by the parliament of Canada without our being aware of what is taking place. That is possible if this procedure is allowed to get firmly rooted. The other day while we were in committee we passed some 111 of these bills in a matter of 18 seconds and I can well imagine the name of one of us being on that list without our being aware that we were being divorced. Some hon. member who did not belong to the same political movement might be willing to sign an affidavit to the effect that he had personally served us with the necessary legal documents some months ago.

I submit that it is hardly good enough. In most cases we are not satisfied with having just one witness, as we feel there should be corroborating evidence by two, three or sometimes four witnesses who could swear as to the adultery or whatever incident the divorce was being based on. In this case we have one single individual, a garage mechanic who was in Newfoundland at the time. He appeared before the committee of the other place and testified that he had known the petitioner, having met him on a number of occasions. The petitioner was a salesman and this witness having heard that he was in town staying at one of the hotels decided to call on him around seven o'clock in the evening. He found that his friend was registered in a certain room, he went up to the room, opened the door and saw the man in bed with a woman. He immediately excused himself, went out and closed the door behind him. That is the only evidence on which this divorce is based and I do not think it is good enough.

In the committee it was said that we could not call in all these people, and the question was asked: Who is going to pay the expenses? Has this parliament reached such a low level that when a committee wants to hear witnesses we are to be floored by the question: Where is the money to come from? We have all kinds of money for other purposes, as this parliament votes some $5,000 million, but when a committee wants to hear witnesses it should have the right to hear, we are met with the question: Where is the money to come from? That argument was used in the committee stage and I believe it had some weight with members of the committee. After all, if we are not able to guarantee these people their expenses perhaps we ought not to call them here. I realize that calling people from Newfoundland would cost a considerable amount of money, but that money ought to be provided.

I submit that the evidence in this case is very slight. There is no corroboration whatsoever. The petitioner does not have any personal knowledge of the adultery. But this divorce is before parliament and we must take that for granted, but the fact is that I have seen enough affidavits which did not mean anything. I am unwilling to let this bill go by without making the most serious objection and I intend to call for the yeas and nays.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry? Those in favour of clause 1 carrying will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Clause agreed to: Yeas, 46; nays, 17.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the preamble carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Preamble agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Bill agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: There are a number of divorce and other bills to be read a third time. Shall I call the divorce bills together?

Mr. Knowles: Would you call Bills Nos. 158 and 188 separately?

LORINC ORVOS NAGY

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston) moved the third reading of Bill No. 158, for the relief of Lorinc Orvos Nagy.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that it would be unnecessary to make any remarks at this stage, but in view of the fact that there were only some 60 hon. members in the chamber when we were in committee I am sure that many hon. members would like to register their vote in connection with this particular bill. The hon. member for Moose Mountain has reviewed the case, I think, and so I do not plan on going over it in detail. I simply say that here is a petition which comes to us recommended by the other place, in which the petitioner appears to have been willing to give a mortgage of some $7,000, to be paid on an instalment basis at $100 a month commencing in about three months' time, on condition that his wife left the domicile. She appears to have left. Apparently, after having made ten payments, on advice of counsel, the petitioner found out that this was not necessary. As recorded on page 14 of the evidence, the counsel says:

And, he stopped making the payments in the first place according to my advice because the wife cannot be given anything in the form of a mortgage under the laws of Quebec.

But it seemed to be established that the husband was willing to pay $7,000 to get his wife out of sight so that another woman might take her place in the home. As recorded on page 11 of the evidence, the question was asked regarding this other woman who took over the wife's place:

Q. You refer to a housekeeper. Is it a male or female housekeeper?

A. Well, it is female housekeeper.

Q. You describe her as a housekeeper?

A. She work for me with money. I pay her $50 a month.

I should explain that these people are Hungarian. They are able to understand English, but they have some difficulty with the language, and this is how it appears in the evidence:

Q. Have you any receipts for that?

A. Me not need any receipt for that.

Q. Then you cannot prove or establish that you did pay any money at all?

A. Well, sure. Well, she was prove it. I not call anybody when I pay her.

Q. No. You had no witnesses and no evidence that you pay her?

A. I told the truth.

Further on, he was asked some questions about the living quarters. He said:

I have three rooms and a kitchen—or four rooms and kitchen.

After a little more thought he was sure there were four rooms and a kitchen. The owner of this domicile, who was apparently prepared to bear a mortgage for $7,000 to get rid of his wife, appears according to his evidence to sleep on a couch in the dining room through which his housekeeper must pass in going to the room where she sleeps and where he keeps his clothing. There is no doubt about the fact that he is living in these private quarters with someone who claims to be his housekeeper, although he has no evidence that he had paid an amount. Then counsel for the wife says:

I don't want to elaborate on this point but the fact remains there is a woman living in the same flat for some reason and I have no proof that the two have committed adultery . . .

Further on he says:

. . . that becomes very important because since the woman is in the place Mr. Nagy has not re-offered his wife to return to the place, and I have before that proof that an offer was made by Mr. Nagy for her to return and Mrs. Nagy wanted to return to the place, and still wants to return to the place—

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Then Senator Ross, chairman of the committee, said:

I do not think the inquiries you have been following are very material because the petitioner is not on trial here. The question is not whether or not he committed adultery. The question is whether or not the respondent committed adultery.

Later on the chairman, Senator Ross, said:

I probably went too far. If the petitioner has been guilty of misconduct, it is a discretionary matter for us to refuse the divorce.

Counsellor for the petitioner had previously said:

But you should have somebody to testify here. She is living with him just the same as the roomers are living in the house.

He was asked:

You have no evidence at all on that?

The lawyer said:

No. I have no evidence.

This woman has considered the costs involved in bringing witnesses to Ottawa to appear on her behalf. It would seem to me, since there is a 14 year old child who apparently prefers to be with the mother, and since the mother is anxious to make a go of it and is forced to wash dishes at something around $20 a week to support herself and the child, we have a responsibility to decide whether or not an injustice will be done to one or the other. I do not think there is much likelihood of the two parties being reconciled, but I think this parliament has a responsibility to do something on behalf of this 14 year old girl, who does deserve some consideration.

So I would like to appeal to my friends from Quebec who are familiar with this case. It is significant that a member of parliament from the area has not risen to put in a good word for the petitioner. I want to thank the members of the Progressive Conservative party who have reviewed the evidence and who feel that they cannot put their vote of approval on the granting of this particular divorce when the evidence is as it was set out in the document that has come to us from the other place. Therefore, I wish to have the bells rung so that all members will have a chance to decide whether or not this woman should be given the protection of this chamber.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): There are several comments I should like to make on this particular bill. In reading the evidence submitted to us from the committee of the other place, we are struck by the similarity between the various cases before the committee. This case is a little different in that there is perhaps no other instance where circumstantial evidence played such a great part.

As my colleagues have pointed out, there is no absolute proof of wrong-doing in this particular case. The petitioner is being granted a divorce purely on circumstantial evidence. The woman has attested to the case and has put forward her side of the story and has flatly denied any wrong-doing. Yet, on the basis of purely circumstantial evidence, the committee of the other place has seen fit to grant this divorce. It seems to me that a great deal of the argument, as revealed in the evidence, had to do with the question of the petitioner paying his wife $100 a month, and there were two points of view put forward. The counsel for the petitioner tried to make a case that the husband was paying the wife money to stay at home. Of course, the wife's counsel pointed out, quite rightly, that the money had been paid to the wife on the understanding that she leave the home. It seems to me it is rather unusual that the man in this case would agree to pay money under these circumstances. One will note in the evidence presented before the committee that the wife left the domicile on January 5, 1954. As recorded on page 16 of the evidence, Senator Barbour asked this question:

> Q. I would like to know how many monthly payments he made, how many months he paid this $100 after his wife left?
> A. Ten months.
> Q. After she left you?
> A. Yes. After she send me two months' notice, and, in March, 1954, I started to pay.

Here is pretty clear evidence of an understanding concerning the payment of money on condition that the wife left the home. In other words, once she had satisfied the husband that she had indeed left the domicile and had moved to Toronto he was prepared to pay the sum of $100 a month. It is evidence of this type which should cause members of the house to give very serious consideration to voting approval of this particular bill. I think my colleagues have brought out the point that when a petitioner comes before parliament for a divorce we should expect him to come with clean hands. I agree that, according to the rules governing the granting of divorces by parliament, that is not necessary. As a matter of fact, my understanding is that parliament can grant a divorce for any reason whatsoever. The matter is left purely to the discretion of the committee and, of course, eventually the members of parliament of both houses. While it may not be absolutely necessary as a matter of law for a petitioner to come before parliament with clean hands, I suggest that as a matter of practice we should require that in such cases.

Here is a case where a man is asking that the marriage be dissolved and the circumstances surrounding the whole case are such as to leave very serious doubts in our minds whether he deserves a divorce. Moreover, he admits having beaten his wife. When the question of the petitioner's conduct is brought up it is of course shied away from by suggesting that after all it is not the petitioner who is on trial, it is not his conduct that is under discussion but his wife's conduct.

My colleague, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson), brought out the very important point about the preference of the 14 year old girl. Here is a case where the sympathy of the child was with the mother, and I think that is something to which we should attach a great deal of weight. Therefore I am going to vote against the bill for the reasons advanced by my colleagues and particularly because I feel first of all that the petitioner has not come before parliament with clean hands and is not deserving of consideration by the members of this house. Second, I feel that the sympathy towards the mother evidenced by the 14 year old child must be given a great deal of weight. Third, I suggest that the whole circumstances surrounding this man's desire to get rid of his wife must be considered, particularly the fact that he went to the extent of entering into an agreement with her whereby if she left the home and moved away from Montreal he would pay her $100 a month. That does not seem to me to be a logical thing for a man to do who has been wronged in the manner in which he claims to have been wronged. Therefore I urge all members of the house to vote against this bill when the vote is taken.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one final objection at this stage. I realize this is the last opportunity I have to protect a 54 year old woman. I find it completely impossible to condemn a 54 year old woman to fend for herself for the rest of her days as best she can. As I indicated on second reading, I feel very strongly that the evidence is overwhelming that her husband agreed to pay her $100 a month if she would leave the home.

I welcome the fact that we have an aggressive new chairman of the miscellaneous private bills committee who is taking an active interest in these matters and participating in the debates. I think it will lead to greater efficiency and the methods followed will not be as slipshod as they may have been in other years. I should like to compliment him and express my high regard for the interest he has taken.

The point was raised that we have to let the bill go through because the respondent's lawyer apparently was satisfied. I have had many cases called to my attention where the respondent has not been made aware of her rights and does not know there is such a thing as the miscellaneous private bills committee of the house where her case can be reheard. Furthermore, as I stated in the other case, there is absolutely no arrangement with respect to the financial aspect of a rehearing before our committee.

The respondent's lawyer may have been satisfied but we are still not convinced that the respondent herself was satisfied. We are not convinced that she was even aware of what her rights are. The argument has been used in this case that we have no jurisdiction as to property rights. I agree that they fall within the authority of the provinces. However, I have yet to hear of the members of a jury or a judge rendering a verdict and condemning a person without considering the consequences of their verdict. I believe that as members of the House of Commons we must not only deal with each case on its merits but in rendering a decision we must be fully aware of what the consequences of such a decision are in all likelihood going to be.

We are going to ask this 54 year old woman to continue to live as best she can. While her health lasts I suppose she may be able to continue her job as a dishwasher at $21 a week but what is she to do if her health does not remain good or if she loses that position? I think we have to bear that in mind. Above all, I do not think we should at this time exonerate the husband of all responsibility. There have been many arguments put forward on the question of the $100 a month. According to the lawyer this woman left the home on January 5, 1954 and when the husband testified he said, as found on page 14 of the evidence: "In March I start to pay the $100."

She left on January 5 and I say there is a clear indication that the woman's side of the story should at least be given the benefit of the doubt, if not believed altogether. I am very happy to associate myself with those who are unwilling to use parliament for the purpose of throwing a 54 year old woman out on the streets of Montreal.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two. In my opinion, if the house sees fit to pass the bill at this time it will surely do so with more than a twinge of conscience. I agree with the members who have spoken on the bill. Here we have a case where it has not been established that adultery has been committed. On the other hand, it has been established that the petitioner has been guilty of very great cruelty to the wife and practically drove her from the home by reason of his attitude and conduct. Through the questioning of counsel for the respondent it has been established that there is certainly a great deal of circumstantial evidence proving misconduct on the part of the petitioner. I think that we who have gone into the merits or demerits of this case have indicated to the house that there is doubt as to the authenticity of the evidence given by the petitioner and the investigators. Along with the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) I feel that here is a case in which, if we pass this bill, it is going to leave a comparatively young woman, one 54 years of age, to fend for herself. She has already indicated that she has been obliged to work as a dishwasher and to work in the tobacco fields. It may well be that the sorrow and the grief she has had through having been forced by a cruel husband to leave her home will be increased by the fact that she may not get the custody of her child. I think it is significant that this woman, under the circumstances that I have indicated, has kept this young girl with her for seven months out of ten. That fact would indicate that to some degree at least she should be entitled to more of an act of justice, might I say, than it seems to me we shall be providing her with if we pass this bill at this time and do not make provision that she at least can come before our committee of this house so that we may understand more fully the facts of the case.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the third reading of this bill. Those who are in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those who are opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

LOIS MARGARET CLOUSTON WILLAR

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston) moved the third reading of Bill No. 188, for the relief of Lois Margaret Clouston Willar.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I notice a new principle is being established and I regret it very much. Until this year I believe these bills were considered on their merits, but I now see they are being looked upon as votes of confidence in the government. I regret that departure very much. Apparently, the Liberal party is now committed or during these past several votes has committed itself to the principle of agreeing to any and every divorce that may be put before the house for consideration. I notice that goes even far beyond what the hon. members of the other place are doing in that this year already they have refused a fair number of divorces. However, it seems to be taken for granted that once the sanction of the other place has been given, this place is not to have any more authority in connection with these matters.

The Liberal party has now adopted a new principle, a principle of insisting on using their steam-roller vote to see to it that every one of these divorces passes this House of Commons. Those who may have conscientious objections are kind enough to the Liberal party, but unkind enough to their own convictions, to refrain from voting. They stay behind the curtain. I feel these matters should be put on the record. In addition to the many cases we get from Quebec, this one, as I said before, is from Newfoundland. Another principle seems to be finding root and receiving the sanction of the Liberal party and that is, if you live in Quebec and you want a divorce you must appear and present your case. Not only must you appear, but you must have with you other witnesses, and if you put forward a good case it will receive consideration and likely approval in both houses.

However, if you live in Newfoundland you have a special privilege. You do not have to show up at all and neither does the respondent have to show up. You do not have to send other corroborating witnesses. You have to send only one witness, and in some cases I notice it does not even have to be a witness now living in Newfoundland. Someone can be found living in Ontario who, at one time or another, may have been in Newfoundland and seen a man or a lady smile at someone of the opposite sex. This apparently is good enough for the parliament of Canada.

The other day some of us in committee wanted to have this case heard in a proper manner. Even though some of us do not agree that we are a court we believe we should conduct this business as it ought to be conducted, and would be conducted in any properly constituted court. We asked that the case be heard. We did not even admit that it had been heard, since there was only one witness called. The question was fired back at us, who is going to pay? Whose responsibility is it? When a committee of this House of Commons incurs an expenditure it is up to us to pay if the people are unable to pay. Surely, money is not going to be the thing that decides what the decision of a committee of this house is going to be.

We have never yet accepted that theory. On one committee last year we brought all kinds of witnesses from the city of Vancouver. We brought the chief of police and the warden of a jail and several others to testify before the committee. When it comes to calling witnesses from Newfoundland the question of who is going to pay arises. Aside from the money question I also feel an important principle is involved here. If we are responsible members of this committee, or the highest court in the land if you call it that, we cannot afford to be accused of dissolving marriages without having at least one of the parties in the case appear before a committee of this house or the other place. I think that is another principle which is worthy of note. If this case and others like it are permitted to go through, my fellow citizens in British Columbia who are unsatisfied with local divorce laws should have the same right as loyal subjects of Her Majesty to petition this parliament if they are unsatisfied with conditions as they exist back home.

I would like to pose this question to the Liberal party: What will you do if you are swamped by 10,000 unsatisfied divorce applicants from one end of Canada to the other if neither party of any of the marriages has to appear? It is simply a matter of sending a penny postcard in order to apply for divorce.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say a few brief words. Since I came into this house I have never voted for a divorce bill but I have had sense enough not to decide how other people should vote and I have not presumed to tell them what their duty is. I am convinced that if we spent more time in attempting to remove the cause of divorce, which is cursed selfishness, we would be spending the taxpayers' money in a more constructive way.

I do not believe in divorce. That is my personal conviction because I do not want to be divorced from my better half. Should anyone try to cause trouble between my wife and me, he will get it in the neck as quickly as possible, by golly. The home is the bulwark of the nation and it is our duty to stand for the upbuilding of the home. If we do that we will cut divorce to pieces.

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to object to the adjective "smutty" in reference to legislation before this house, as used by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) in his speech.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, since a new principle has been brought to the attention of parliament for the first time this afternoon I think we should look carefully at what we are about to do. If it is possible for citizens of Newfoundland to secure divorces without the petitioner or the respondent appearing, there is no valid reason why citizens of the province of Quebec should not have the same privileges. It is obvious that the bill will result in a drastic increase in the number of divorces if we extend to the citizens of Quebec what we are apparently prepared to extend to the citizens of Newfoundland.

While apparently it is not a new practice, it is the first time it has been brought to my attention. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) has performed a valuable service in discovering this principle. I notice that Mr. Burke-Robertson, a barrister residing in Ottawa, who handled this case, said:

> I would like to ask leave to present the petitioner's case by affidavit. This is a Newfoundland case and it has been the practice on most of the other Newfoundland cases which I have had over the past few years to accept the petitioner's evidence by affidavit if the petitioner has no knowledge of the adultery which is alleged. In this case the petitioner can only prove the marriage and the domicile of the parties and is not able to give any evidence on the issue of adultery.

My attention has been drawn to the fact that another divorce was granted this year under similar circumstances wherein it was not necessary for the petitioner to put in an appearance. I think that is a new principle in dealing with justice where the welfare of men, women and children is involved. I certainly do not propose to give my consent to the granting of divorces on this sort of procedure.

Their Honours the senators were also a little uneasy. Senator Fergusson said:

> Mr. Chairman, don't you think we should discuss that point in the main committee before deciding. We are acting as a subcommittee and we usually discuss such a matter in the main committee before taking affidavit evidence of any kind.

The chairman said:

> Yes. We will adjourn for a few minutes in order to consult with the chairman.

Senator Roebuck, chairman of the main committee, joined the subcommittee and the barrister explained the procedure. Senator Roebuck added his comments.

I think that hon. members in this chamber should not remain silent; I think they should vote for or against a principle as far-reaching as the principle we are asked to establish in supporting the bill which is now before us. For my part, I would like to register my opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. W. J. Henderson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the question should be put until we realize the meaning of the new principle which has been mentioned by the hon. members who have spoken. They have mentioned the Liberals in this house voting solidly. I do not think a new principle is involved here because as I understand it we are always willing to assist those minorities which require assistance and privileges. Furthermore, since Canada stretches from one ocean to the other certain privileges should be granted to certain groups which would otherwise have a great deal of difficulty or would be deprived of the advantages other Canadian groups might have. If the people of Newfoundland by some chance happened to live in another province they could have divorces granted by supreme or county courts and the situation might be different. However, the people of Newfoundland, as Canadians, should have every privilege and opportunity in relation to the dissolution of marriage as other Canadians enjoy and this happens to be the procedure upon which their divorce rights are based.

Some question has been raised here about the procedure. If we examine the courts of Canada we realize that it is a pretty general principle. I think the courts of Canada are recognized the world over for their justice and integrity.

As a general principle, in some courts evidence can be presented by deposition which is not too much different from evidence in the form of an affidavit or a sworn statement. In divorce cases the petitioner can file certain affidavits with the Senate committee.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I forgot to inform the house that, since the hon. member is the mover, by speaking now he closes the debate. I would not like to see those hon. members who would like to speak deprived of their right to do so. This is the third reading of this bill. It just occurred to me that the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Henderson), being the mover of this bill, will close the debate if he speaks now. I should have inquired as to whether any other hon. member wished to speak. If any hon. member wishes to speak now I shall have to ask the hon. member for Kingston to resume his seat in order to provide other hon. members with an opportunity of speaking. If not, the hon. member will close the debate by speaking at this time.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, this particular petitioner filed an affidavit in support of his petition and which is part of the evidence. This evidence was never questioned. He was domiciled in the province of Newfoundland and was married to the respondent on such and such a date. To bring him the distance it would be necessary to bring him when there is no dispute or presumption of dispute would probably cause more difficulty. If the case had been opposed I presume a request would have been made to have brought persons before the committee to give evidence, but this petitioner could not add a great deal to what was given before.

I believe in this case evidence was given by a 35 year old garage mechanic, not by a professional investigator of the type some of our hon. friends are worried about.

It was said that to adopt this type of procedure might result in a divorce bill passing by which a respondent might be divorced and not know he had been involved in a petition for divorce. I do not think there is much possibility of that happening because in Canada officers of the court serve all these documents. I understand that in this case service was made by a court officer who filed with the clerk of petitions an affidavit of service properly sworn before a notary public or someone authorized to take such affidavits.

There was corroboration which was completely independent and no objection was raised. It seems to me that the evidence in this case should be considered as being sufficient. It has been said that the Liberal party has voted solidly on this, but I have not noticed that in the past except when the facts and principles involved required it.

In conclusion I might suggest that if any party wishes to vote solidly against the principle as set out, that it is necessary to bring people from Newfoundland, the petitioner or even both parties although sometimes the respondent never turns up, that would be voting to bar the people of Newfoundland from the rights and privileges which they now have.

Bill read the third time and passed.

LA PAIX GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean) moved the second reading of Bill No. 189, to incorporate La Paix General Insurance Company of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West) moved the second reading of Bill No. 191, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company and certain wholly owned subsidiaries.

Mr. Knowles: Is the sponsor going to make a statement in connection with this bill?

Mr. McIlraith: The purpose of the bill is to simplify the corporate organization of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The 13 railway companies named in clause 2 of the bill are wholly owned subsidiaries of and are operated under long-term lease by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Some of the leases are for 99-year terms and some for 999-year terms. Of the 13 companies, ten were incorporated by acts of this parliament, one by act of the Ontario legislature and two by acts of the British Columbia legislature.

By the bill, the railways and all their undertakings and assets are being vested in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is assuming the liabilities of these railway companies. Complementary legislation is being sought from the provincial legislatures in the provinces in which the railways are situated. Complementary legislation in Ontario and British Columbia is now being dealt with by those legislatures, and application will be made to the Quebec legislature when it reconvenes, which is usually in the latter part of the year.

The bill will not have any effect on the actual operation of the lines, and nothing affecting the operation itself is involved in this legislation but there is, of course, a change in the administration and accounting procedure consequent on the vesting of the assets in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Could I ask for confirmation from the sponsor that there is no complementary action in mind here which involves the closing of any lines or any of these subsidiary services?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might make a short speech that will consist of one or two questions. Then the hon. member for Ottawa West, when he closes the debate, can also answer the question that has been asked and any others that might follow.

I would be interested to know whether the change in the corporate structure contemplated by this bill will have any effect on the position of the workers employed by these various companies. Will it have any effect on the collective agreement that exists, although that collective agreement is being renegotiated at the present time, between the various railways and their employees? I would also like to know whether it will have any effect on any pension plans. Perhaps the hon. member could deal with those questions when he is permitted to close the debate.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to ask one question. When the bill is passed will it mean the elimination of the names of these other companies, or will the names remain as they are?

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I have one question to put to the sponsor of the bill. I am not sure that I caught correctly what he said with respect to the respective provincial governments being notified and asked to pass complementary legislation. I understood him to say that the legislatures involved were all sitting at the present time. I know that the legislature of the province of British Columbia is not sitting now. I am not sure that he mentioned that province, but would he please explain?

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have one question for the sponsor of the bill. He may have dealt with the matter, but if he did so I did not hear him. Will he state whether it is the intention to move that the bill be sent to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines or some other committee after second reading?

Mr. Speaker: Under our standing orders it has to go to the standing committee. We have no choice in the matter.

Mr. Jones: Can the sponsor give the present names of the subsidiaries in British Columbia that are involved?

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. McIlraith: —I shall try to answer the questions raised. As to the first question about closing a line, that matter is not affected in any way by the bill before the house. The closing of a railway line is something that, under existing legislation, has to be done by application to and with the approval of the board of transport commissioners for Canada. I understand that no such application is contemplated. As a matter of fact, some of the railway lines dealt with in the bill are very important railway lines in the existing C.P.R. system. The main line from Montreal to Toronto is made up in great part of one of these lines we are talking about today.

The next question had to do with the workers. I should like to have that question dealt with again in the committee, but I understand that the workers are all Canadian Pacific Railway workers. These railways are and have been operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and therefore the workers would not be affected in any way. I feel quite sure of that. That was my understanding of the matter, but I will raise it again with counsel for the railway company to see if any elaboration of my answer is required when the bill is considered in the committee.

The next question from the hon. member for Peterborough was as to the names of the companies?

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Will the names of the companies be changed to "Canadian Pacific Railway Company"? Will these companies all lose their identities?

Mr. McIlraith: These companies will disappear completely. They are dissolved by the bill before the house.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): They will all be C.P.R.?

Mr. McIlraith: They will be dissolved and the names will disappear.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): And all be Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. McIlraith: All will be Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I was asked as to the names of the companies in British Columbia. The two companies in British Columbia are the Columbia and Kootenay Railway and Navigation Company and the Vancouver and Lulu Island Railway Company.

There seemed to be some misunderstanding about complementary legislation. When I was discussing this matter some few days ago before the bill first appeared on the order paper, complementary legislation was before the British Columbia legislature which was at that time in session, and I assume it was passed. The complementary legislation would seek to do two things. In so far as it is required because of the legislative jurisdiction of that legislative body, it would seek to vest any assets in the C.P.R. exactly as is done here with respect to those assets over which this parliament has jurisdiction. In the case of the two companies incorporated by the British Columbia legislature it would also dissolve those companies, and similarly with the Ontario company. Does that answer all the questions that were asked? I think it does.

Mr. Knowles: I suppose I can take it for granted that what the hon. member said with regard to workers would apply to workers pension rights as well as to other matters affecting workers.

Mr. McIlraith: Pension rights would be a liability if it were one that was in existence, so I think the point is fully covered by the legislation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

MARY VALERIE DOROTHY JOHNSTON BROMWICH

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. 192 (letter S-6 of the Senate) intituled: "An act for the relief of Mary Valerie Dorothy Johnston Bromwich".—Mr. Henderson.

Mr. Speaker: There are several divorce bills coming up for second reading. Is it agreed that they all be taken in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 192, for the relief of Mary Valerie Dorothy Johnston Bromwich.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 193, for the relief of Dorothy Joanne Campbell Mockeridge.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 201, for the relief of Marie Dicerni Arcieri.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 202, for the relief of Laurence Turgeon, otherwise known as Laurent Turgeon.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 203, for the relief of Barbara Allen Deslauriers.—Mr. Henderson.

Bill No. 204, for the relief of Henri Xavier Eugene Bernard.—Mr. Henderson.

QUEBEC NORTH SHORE AND LABRADOR RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 148, respecting Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company—Mr. Brisson—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Extension of time for completion of line.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on clause 1 and on the amendment thereto moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. Perhaps it might refresh the memory of the members of the committee if I read the amendment. It is as follows:

That clause 1 be amended by deleting the word "ten" in line 9 of the bill and substituting the word "five" therefor.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Is the mover of the bill in the house to answer any questions, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Weir: Certainly he is.

Mr. Churchill: In the unavoidable absence of the mover—

Mr. Brisson: I am here.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, I should like to spend a few minutes on this legislation and the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. I think a great deal of weight was given in the committee that considered the bill to evidence which possibly indicated that there was very little difference in the situation with respect to the further development of this railway than was the case ten years ago, when the company first approached the house for a franchise covering a period of ten years for the development of the road. In subsequent speeches that have been made on the subject I believe one salient feature has been overlooked, namely that at the present time the applicant for this franchise has lost the pioneering spirit which motivated it in carrying out the program that has been carried out thus far.

When the company approached the house for permission previously it had been making surveys in the area around Schefferville and had come up with indications of some valuable iron ore properties. It was obvious at that time that if it were to be in a position to carry out development work, a railway was definitely necessary.

Now the situation is that the railway has what it wants. It has a railway to its door, to its own properties. As I have indicated previously, there is not the same incentive to this particular company to carry out the further development work which will be required in order to push the railway forward to Ungava bay.

I think also that it is an extremely naive view that has been held in some quarters that this of course is not an exclusive franchise, that it is only some enabling legislation, and that if this particular company does not go forward with its plans then of course there will be plenty of opportunity for other companies to come forward, make an application and have their application dealt with on its merits.

That sounds very nice, Mr. Chairman, but from the practical standpoint I do not think there is any doubt about it that what we are handing over here today is an exclusive right for an additional 10 years. I would say this. If someone else came along in the interval and suggested that they would like to move in here and start extending this particular line of railway, I believe they would be quickly told no, that there was a company which had opened up the original area here and that they still had several years to go before they could be put out of the market in this connection.

There is this matter of the removal of incentive as far as going forward is concerned. On the other hand, there is every indication that the area now holds the same promise to the north that was there in the original construction period of the rail line. I might refer to the examination of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra when he questioned the manager of the railway company. At page 20 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, we find the following:

By Mr. Green:

Q. When you showed the committee the small map you showed us a stretch of base metal territory running to Ungava bay and to the west of it a similar stretch of iron ore territory.—A. Yes, there is a possibility of finding enrichment in it. There has been a great deal of exploring done on the iron ore field apart from the low grade ore in the vicinity of Ungava bay.

Q. There are iron ore possibilities on the way north from Schefferville to Ungava bay?—A. I do not say somebody would not find an iron ore mine in between. The most central deposit of high grade ore which we have is about 50 miles northwest of Schefferville at a place called Eclipse.

The indication here is that somebody might find it, but there is not the same lure in front of this particular company to carry on this work. If the same pioneering spirit were developed by this company today, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there would be no question about its ability to carry forward the necessary surveys, get the work under way and do it long before the expiration of the 10-year period that has been provided for in the application. I say that the amendment which has been made limiting this period to 5 years appears to be reasonable.

I may have been a little surprised in committee to find that some members of the C.C.F. party thought the 10-year period was quite all right. However, when I looked back at Hansard of the session of 1947, volume III, page 2437, I found there an indication that all their members did not feel that way. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has redeemed himself here by carrying on the same argument that he used at that time. I should like to quote what he said back in 1947:

Nevertheless, as I was saying when the minister interrupted me, this bill not only gives the company control over bus lines, transportation and all the rest of it which is included in the bill—if it is a provincial matter it should not be in the bill—but it definitely delegates these rights to the company. The worst feature of it, as I see it, is that the company is not obligated to begin operation of the road for five years, which can serve the purpose of keeping someone out if they want to go in and develop that territory in that time. If at the end of ten years the job is not completed, then, under the bill, the government has the right to rescind it. So far as the development of the resources and the railway line in there are concerned, it is definitely gone, because the company can do what they like with it for the next ten years. They are not obliged to do anything about it. The bill precludes anyone else from going in there and developing the area.

Those conditions still exist, I submit, Mr. Chairman. I believe that if the applicant in this case wants to show good faith and wants to continue the same pioneering spirit which it used previously, it should not object in any way to the reduction of this period from 10 years to 5 years.

There is one other feature about this matter, and it has been discussed in this house previously. Here again the control of a vast amount of the natural resources of this country is being handed over to people outside of this country. Someone may say it has been handed over by another legislative authority, but by this legislation dealing with the franchise for a railway which will probably be the only major means of opening up this territory I say that in this case again, this House of Commons is going to ensure that the control of thousands and thousands of acres of the best ground in this country from the natural resources standpoint is going to be handed over to interests which are entirely outside this country. There is again the feature that we are not paying attention to the essential fact that if we are not careful we are not going to control within our own country all the wonderful assets which have been left here for us.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to say that I find myself in complete agreement with the opening remarks of the hon. member for York West wherein he stated something to the effect that there is little difference between the situation now and the situation 10 years ago in respect of this railway company; but probably my reasons for feeling that this is the case are somewhat different from his. I have been attempting to follow his remarks rather closely. I must say that I am rather clear in my mind as to what he is against in this connection, but I have little idea as to what he is for. I gather that for some reason or other he is opposed to this particular concern having a franchise to extend this railway, but he does not suggest what the alternative would be if this franchise is not granted.

I think my position today, Mr. Chairman, is the same as that which was taken by the hon. member for Cape Breton South 10 years ago, namely that this is the kind of development which should have been handled in a manner which would have kept its benefits in the hands of the people of Canada. I must say that I found it rather amusing, both in the house and during the committee hearings on this bill, to find the great Conservative party and its members raising all the fuss and furor that they have been raising about this particular bill at this particular time. There are occasions when they seem to pride themselves as being the great champions of what they like to call free enterprise. Yet in this case they seem to have some particular gripe against this particular firm. I must confess that I have not yet discovered the reason for it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York West indicated in the committee that he was in favour of private monopolies.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): He never said that.

Mr. Barnett: In my remarks in the committee I made it clear that if you were going to have a monopoly I would favour a public monopoly.

The Deputy Chairman: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member at this stage, but may I volunteer to him the information that the remarks he is now making are entirely in order on clause 1 and would be in order on clause 1 whether the amendment before us is carried or defeated. But I suggest to him that the line of thought he is pursuing, as to whether or not this particular company is to build the line, is not the question before the committee at the moment. The question before the committee at the moment is whether we shall continue the 10-year period or make it a 5-year period. Then we shall decide whether or not the clause shall be carried. I would ask hon. members at this stage to restrict their remarks to the subject matter of the amendment, because when the amendment has been disposed of the clause will be open for discussion.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. Although I understand you are ruling some of the remarks out of order, I think in connection with the remark made about my statement on monopolies I might be allowed to read from page 28 of the committee evidence the actual words used.

> If there is anything I don't like it is public monopolies. I like private monopolies little more—

Mr. Barnett: At the risk of incurring your displeasure, sir, I might remark that I thought I was giving a reasonable paraphrase of that particular statement. However, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I have not made my point in connection with the amendment as clear as I might have. The precise point of the remarks I was making was that I am quite frankly puzzled as to why this amendment is before us, in view of the ideas put forward by the hon. member and his colleagues.

The position I took on this question in the committee when we were discussing an identical amendment moved there, was that this amendment was tantamount to telling this firm that they must commence construction of this line immediately. However, there was no evidence in the committee that there was any immediate need for this particular railway line. There was no evidence that mining properties would be proved up and would require a railway line. There was no indication that there would be any other traffic except that originating from the mine to justify the construction of the railway beyond the point to which it has already been built. For that reason, I felt in the committee, and still feel, that regardless of whether this is going to be built by a private monopoly or a public monopoly—I agree with the hon. member for York West that in effect this is tantamount to an all-inclusive franchise so far as a railway in that area is concerned—the cost of this railway construction if it should prove to be an uneconomic venture is going to come back on the shoulders of the people of Canada. For that reason I indicated in the committee that I would have been much happier if the hon. member had proposed an amendment which would, in effect, have indicated to the company that they must commence construction within five years. I made it clear in the committee that I would have been prepared to support that kind of amendment.

Personally I cannot see that it is wise to compel this company, as this amendment in effect suggests, to commence immediately the construction of some hundreds of miles of railway line. Indeed, it has yet to be proven whether there is or ever will be any traffic for a railway to carry. However, the main question is whether or not this franchise should ever have been granted, or whether it is wise to extend a franchise for an indefinite period to large private monopolies. I think, Mr. Chairman, I have attempted to clarify my own position on this amendment. Perhaps I might not find it necessary to pursue the broader question when we come to consider clause 1, in view of the fact you believe I have covered a broad area in my discussion of the amendment itself.

Mr. Hahn: In introducing this amendment to the house, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has once again indicated a desire to rush into things for the sole purpose, in so far as the Conservative party is concerned, of hurrying up a program in order to bring these important matters to the attention of the public, indicating that they are a do-something party. I agree with the spirit of the amendment, the spirit being that there should be a railway extension into the northern part of Quebec and particularly from Knob Lake to Ungava bay. We cannot, however, go along with the suggestion that it must be built within a 5-year period.

I believe we have had sufficient evidence brought before the committee to indicate that it is quite impractical to expect this company to finish this job within a 5-year period. I do not see the justification for forcing the issue and having a railway line constructed over territory which will be non-productive. The line should not be built until such time as a request has been made by some responsible mining industry or some other responsible body and evidence is given to indicate that a rail line is necessary. As I understood the committee report, it was indicated that all that need be done was that certain representations be made to the railway company indicating that an extension of the line was desirable and necessary to get their products to market, and the line would be started.

Now, the fact that a rail line is necessary is certainly true but it is definitely not necessary to have that line constructed within a 5-year period, unless there is someone in that region who has a business enterprise, a mining industry, that would make it essential. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni because I felt that he approached the problem in an extremely realistic way, which is something I really appreciate about the hon. member. In relation to this question, as in several other cases, I think the hon. member revealed a reasonable approach. We must face reality. We have a great north land which needs to be opened up. But to bind to a five-year period a company which has proven it is doing a good job in this particular area, or to take away its franchise, would be the height of folly.

In so far as statements concerning monopoly are concerned, I think the hon. member for York West made himself quite clear when he indicated that he did not like a private monopoly any better than he liked a public monopoly.

Mr. Knowles: He said a little better.

Mr. Hahn: He did not say a little better; he said "little better", as I recall it, which to my mind means that he did not think there was much to choose between either of them. We have a board of transport commissioners for the protection of the public, which should regulate these things in respect to monopoly, either public or private. There is nothing defensible in either, I might add, if they are exploiting the public. However, Mr. Chairman, that is not the purpose of our present discussion.

Mr. Gillis: There are no public monopolies. There has never been any prosecution. There have been prosecutions on the other side.

An hon. Member: The government cannot prosecute itself.

Mr. Hahn: The hon. member for Cape Breton indicates that there are no public monopolies. I probably should not have called them by that name. I should have said there are government enterprises; but try to get into business, such as the T.C.A., and you will soon discover for certain whether or not there are public monopolies.

I think I have made myself quite clear concerning the stand I take. I do want to see the development of the north land of Quebec, as part of the north land of Canada, but I do not expect it to happen in the next five years.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Mr. Chairman, when this bill was discussed for the first time in this committee the other day, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra claimed that by granting the extension of 10 years asked for by the company, we would be placing a stranglehold on the district. This line of argument was to some extent taken up this afternoon by the hon. member for York West, when he contended that by this bill we were giving an exclusive franchise to the railway company for a further period of ten years.

I do not think it is necessary for me to repeat what has been said before in this connection both in this committee and in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines; that is to say, that by this bill we are only amending the incorporating act of this company by providing that it shall have a further ten years starting in May, 1957, in which to carry out the whole undertaking envisaged by its incorporation. If some hon. members still persist in contending that we are placing a stranglehold on this district, one has only to remind them that if a stranglehold was ever placed on this district, it was when the mineral rights were granted to the mining companies in that district by the Conservative government of the province of Quebec.

Speaking on this question of mineral rights, I wish to remind hon. members that the Quebec Iron Ore Company is not the only company holding mineral rights in the district proposed to be served by this extension. At this point I wish to quote from the report of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, when Mr. Durrell was asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra to answer some questions. Mr. Durrell had this to say, as reported at page 15 of the report:

> Between Leaf bay and the coastal area we have considerable holdings, and we are doing a lot of drilling; but we would hardly call it ore today. It would be if it were just outside Montreal; but we need large tonnage to justify an extension to the railway.

[Mr. Gillis.]

In reply to a further question asked by the hon. member, as to whether these were iron ore deposits, Mr. Durrell had this to say:

> No, base metal deposits, copper and nickel.

I asked a question, as reported at page 22 of the report:

> Mr. Durrell, have you been requested by any of the companies holding mining rights north of Schefferville for this extension?

In reply to my question Mr. Durrell answered:

> No sir. We have not.

My contention is that the company is right in coming before this parliament and asking not to be called upon to proceed with this extension until such time as the ore deposits in the district have been proven and can be exploited. Even if it were proven today that these ore bodies were ready for exploitation, my contention is that the five-year extension of time proposed by the amendment would not be sufficient. This was also borne out by the evidence placed before the committee. Mr. Durrell stated quite clearly that it would take at least two or three years to complete the survey and to prepare the necessary plans.

Mr. Durrell also stated that it had taken over four years to build the first part of the project from Seven Islands to Schefferville. He added that this part of the line was built by expediting the work, by using airlift to quite an extent and by spending about twice the amount of money that would have been required to build this line under ordinary circumstances without rushing the construction. He also added that the terrain in the district north of Schefferville to Ungava bay was worse, as far as railway construction is concerned, than the stretch between Seven Islands and Schefferville. Therefore it can be safely said that it will take more than four years. Mr. Durrell gave evidence before the committee that it would take some six years more for the completion of this line. If we say to this company that they can have only five years in which to carry out the project, we will not be giving them sufficient time to even make a start on the construction. It is quite clear that the minimum of time required to complete the survey, to prepare plans and specifications and to build the line would be of the order of eight or ten years.

The other day the point was made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South that this extension should have been undertaken by Canadian National Railways. I do not think it will be necessary to spend very much time to prove to the committee that this is not the type of project which should be undertaken by Canadian National Railways.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I interrupted another hon. member and asked him to remember that what we have before us is an amendment to reduce the period of the extension from ten to five years, and I do not think we should be discussing whether some other railway should be authorized to build this line.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Mr. Chairman, I accept your decision. I was just answering the point made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I should like now to deal with the other point which was brought up by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra when moving his amendment. The hon. member said that this company should not be allowed to undertake this project because it is being financed chiefly in the United States. In reply I would say that I do not see anything wrong with a company of this kind being financed outside of Canada. I should like to quote what Mr. Durrell had to say before the committee about the financing of the company. In reply to a question by the hon. member for Edmonton East Mr. Durrell said:

> Q. How do you intend to finance your line? Can you tell us?
> A. We financed this line ourselves. We did not go to anybody for assistance. Out of the $255 million we have spent for capital expenditure, we borrowed $145 million from insurance companies. I regret to say that Canadian insurance companies were offered the first "crack" at it but unfortunately we only had four who would participate. They felt that the development of the north country was not properly justified so the bulk of our money came from American insurance companies. Canadian companies were offered the first chance. That was a blow to me. I am a Canadian.

To a further question by myself Mr. Durrell added that out of the total of $145 million which the company needed to borrow in order to complete the first section of the line, roughly $2 million had been advanced by Canadian insurance companies. If companies of this type cannot find the necessary finances in Canada to develop particular sections of our country, are we going to postpone the exploitation of our natural resources?

I submit that the amendment should be opposed because it does not give sufficient time to the company to carry out survey and other preliminary works, to draw up the plans and to complete the construction. I would remind hon. members that we are not giving the company ten more years to make up its mind, and in this connection I should like to quote the latter part of clause 1, which reads:

> —and if within the said period the said line of railway is not completed and put in operation, the powers of construction conferred upon the company by the parliament of Canada shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the said line of railway as then remains uncompleted.

It is quite clear that we are not giving the company ten more years in which to make up its mind. It is being given ten more years in which to make the survey, build the line and put it into operation. If the company fails to do that within the period, it loses the powers conferred upon it by its charter. I submit that the ten years which will be given by the bill is not too long a time. It is barely time enough for the company to carry out the construction of this line, which I hope will soon be undertaken in order to develop this part of the province.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, following the last speaker may I say that this bill gives the company not ten years but eleven years, because the first ten years will not be up until more than a year from now. Not only does it give them another eleven years, it gives them control over a great land mass containing a tremendous mining potential and extending for 300 square miles in the northern part of that country. This company got a franchise in 1947 but they did not start to build the present line until 1949. They completed the line two and a half years ago to their own mine. The first section was built in a little over four years, and it is now proposed to complete the line to Ungava bay, an extension of about the same distance.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra will give this company an extension of six years, which is nearly twice as long as it will take them to build this railway if they want to go at it right away. The vice-president of the company stated before the committee that they could build the line in less than four years, and he said also that they could do the survey work in two years. Therefore an extension of five years will give them a total of six years in which to complete this line of railway.

I object to any ten-year period being granted because it will tie up a large area of the country and leave it under the control of large American interests. Nobody will have a chance to go in there, find a mine and build a railroad. If somebody else wanted to build another line they would have to come back here and we would have to change this whole set-up. I have no objection to Americans coming here and spending their money and developing any part of our country, but I have objection to tying up a large mining area to United States interests for that period of time. There are other people participating there at the present time, but what if those companies set about getting franchises for a period of another ten years?

I think the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, giving them another five years, which is really six years from the present time limit, is giving them plenty of time. No matter what interests they have, we should not have a great area of our country tied up to large United States interests. We may have groups in this country who wish to open mines and develop some of their country. Surely we are not going to tie this country up so that somebody who is not a Canadian can go in there and develop a mine and build a railway, or even build an extension of a railway.

Five years is long enough. The evidence has proved that that is sufficient time to build this railroad. It gives them two years to make a survey, and it takes four years to build it. The evidence given in the railways, canals and telegraphs committee was that that was plenty of time. They said they could do it in less time than that if they were to fly stuff in, which would make more expense. Nobody is asking them to do that, to make extra expense; but when they have given evidence that they can do the job in six years, and we offer that after giving them one period of ten years, I think we have gone far enough and been fair enough with this company. Far be it from me to suggest that we stop this company from bringing in money to develop this country, but this is tying it up for too long a period.

Mr. Small: The hon. member for Gaspe was working on the premise that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra was attempting to end all work, that he did not want to see the railway go further, and that by putting a limitation on the time he was trying to frustrate the work of the company in proceeding further. That was not the impression I got at that time. My impression was that he thought five years was sufficient, following next year, 1957, to prove they were really in earnest about extending this railway to Ungava. So far as the evidence went, all the figures they gave showed that they could do it in that time.

Be that as it may, he said that if the extension were given for an extra five years, it would be up to the company to show something for that five years and then come back to the house and ask for a further extension, proving good faith and that they had made sufficient progress during that five years to warrant giving them the balance of the ten years. So it was beyond the comprehension of some members of the committee why they should be given that full extension. The amendment was to give them a five-year extension, which really meant six years, so that if they came back after that time and showed that they had made sufficient progress on the work, then they would be given the balance.

What has the company been doing up to now? They have only started to make surveys and do the research work. As to progressing farther north, they have been standing still all that time. Now they advance the argument that they want another ten years. What have they done in that time? They have now built some 355 miles of railway. Surely the company has not been standing still all this time. They should have made sufficient plans and have made the necessary surveys so they could accomplish the best part of the work in the next four years.

Mr. Hosking: I wish to make a few remarks in case the wrong impression has been given regarding the building of this railway. I think it would be well for the house to consider for a few moments just why the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company built a railway in the first place. They built a railway in order to transport ore from Knob Lake to an ocean port. As the Conservative speakers have pointed out, it has taken nearly nine years to build this railway and get it into a position where they could ship ore.

Mr. Hodgson: It took them less than four years.

Mr. Hosking: It is about nine years now, and the railway has just come into operation and has not made any money as yet. Mr. Durrell told us in the committee that he hoped that, if the production this year was as they expected it to be, next year they would make a profit. These men collected $255 million to build a railway, and port, to open up an ore field. Therefore it was good, sound logic that they should build this line. There is no similar logic to justify them in proceeding further at this time.

They asked for an opportunity to build a railway through to Ungava bay in case ore should be found farther north and it would be advantageous to have a seaport on the northern coast of Canada. If they found these ore fields, then they would be prepared to build this line. We were told in the committee that exploration work was being done in that area, and that at the present time there was no ore field that made it logical for them to proceed. They have shown good faith. They discovered an ore field and they built a railway.

This motion of the Conservative party is one to curb free enterprise. All through the committee proceedings the Conservative members were saying that this should not be a free enterprise movement, that we must curb them, that the government must step in at the last minute and put curbs on it, after a group of men—four of this company's directors are Canadian and one American—had developed this section of the country for us. Let me say this. Of the $255 million that was raised to build this project, $143 million was raised in the United States. I should like to read Mr. Durrell's comment on how that money was spent. He said they had some difficulty at the start, and they had to buy cars from the United States. Then he went on to say this, as recorded on page 24 of the evidence:

> Since then we have been buying almost 100 per cent Canadian, and in the $255 million I do not think probably more than 5 per cent went out of the country.

It is all very well for the Conservatives to suggest that it is a bad thing to borrow money from the United States, but when these people themselves borrow and raise $255 million and all of it but 5 per cent is spent to give labour in this country of ours, I think it is a very good thing to go outside and borrow some money in order to give employment here. It is a sorry thing for this country when the great Conservative party takes an attitude adverse to such development—

Mr. Hodgson: Nobody said they did not want them to borrow.

Mr. Hosking: You accused them of being a United States company.

Mr. Hodgson: I did not.

Mr. Hosking: There is only one director from the United States in the whole company. I want to say this—and I would like anyone else who disagrees with me to comment on it—that if and when there is an ore body of commercial value, this company will build an extension, the same as they have built a railway from Seven Islands to Knob Lake. They will handle the new ore, and no government should give people who invest money the feeling that the minute they get into this position then someone would take it away from them. This should not be done.

Mr. Churchill: We are engaged now in a discussion of the first clause of this bill, which reads, in the first few lines of paragraph 1, as follows:

> Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway Company, hereinafter called "the company", may within a period of ten years from the 14th day of May, 1957, complete that portion of its line of railway authorized by chapter 80 of the statutes of 1947 which is not now completed . . .

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra is to the effect that the word "ten" be struck out and "five" substituted therefor. The purpose of the amendment is not to raise an obstruction to the building of a line of railway for opening up a section of the northern part of Canada where mineral development may be carried on. That is not the purpose of the amendment. It is not intended to be obstructionist, because we are just as interested as anyone else in the development of Canada's great north.

However, I think anyone looking at this matter very closely would see that to grant an extension for a period of ten years as requested by the company, when they still have one year to go on the old charter, would give them more than ample time for any purpose they might have in mind. A five-year extension would be more in line with the progress that is being made in Canada at the present time. It seems to me that in 1947, nine years ago, when the charter was granted, and a ten-year period was put in the legislation, the situation in the development of Canada's mineral wealth was very different from what it is today. In 1947 we were not aware that we were going to have the great development that has occurred since that time. In 1947 we were not aware that the resources of the North American continent were being depleted at the rate shown by the subsequent Paley report.

Consequently the whole picture of mineral development in the Canadian north land is materially different from what it was in 1947 when the ten-year charter was granted. This company was entering into unknown territory. It had to make extensive surveys and it was difficult to get started although, by reason of the airlift, the job of building the present railway was completed rather quickly. The airlift and the rapid construction of the railway coincided with the pressing demand for iron ore and were timed to coincide with the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway.

I think the ten-year period allowed in 1947 was reasonable under the circumstances prevailing at that time, and a five-year extension now would appear to be reasonable in view of the circumstances now prevailing. We are now in a sphere of development that is much more pronounced than it was ten years ago, and there is a much greater demand for our mineral wealth than ten years ago. Many more companies are interested in surveys and in searching for ore bodies. It seems to me that under these circumstances the company, if it is given a five-year extension of its present charter which in effect would give it six years to make up its mind, should have ample time for any extension of the railway line.

In reading some of the evidence given in the committee and subsequently quoted in the house I have noticed that when questions were asked of Mr. Durrell as to whether he felt justified in commencing construction of the extension at the present time he gave this answer, as quoted at page 2241 of Hansard of March 16:

> There is nothing at the moment to justify the construction of a railway. Surveys show areas which may be suitable for mining development, but so far, as I said, we know of nothing which would justify beginning construction.

Reading further along in the evidence I see that there does not appear to be any great haste to start work in the minds of the proponents of the scheme. Is that why a ten-year period is required? If the railway is so desirable it would appear to me that immediate action would be necessary, and that survey work would be under way at the present time. After all, these people have a base of operations now which they did not have ten years ago. They have a railway line running up from the coast. They have experienced people and the experience they gained in laying that railway line. I would think their surveying of the next strip would be more rapidly done and more easily accomplished than in the case of their initial venture at the time they decided a railway line should be built.

All things being considered, the proposed extension of five years would grant them ample time to reach a conclusion. It is a strange thing. I noticed that the hon. member for Gaspe drew our attention to the latter part of the clause, which is to the effect that if the company does not complete the said line of railway and put it into operation, its powers will cease and be null and void in respect of so much of the said line of railway as remains uncompleted at the end of the ten-year period.

On the face of it that appears to be a restriction on the railway, but when you look at it a second time it may be a disadvantage to Canada. They might construct two or three miles of railway, let it rest for ten years and then quit on the job. There is nothing that compels them to complete the entire length of the railway within the ten-year period. It is far better to have a five-year settlement of the whole issue.

If development in mineral production proceeds during the next five or six years at the same rate as it has during the last five years, surely the pressure for a railway extending along the route herein proposed will become great within the next year or two and the company might then very well proceed; but as matters appear at the moment the company is asking for an extension of its franchise for a ten-year period with great uncertainty whether anything is going to be done within that period.

I submit that within five years we might find it was urgent that something be done, might then be placed in the position that the company had not made the surveys, and delay would ensue. If it is as important as we are led to believe by those who have already spoken in favour of the measure, I fail to understand the statement of Mr. Durrell that "there is nothing at the moment to justify the construction of a railway." Why then attempt to gain control over this area without any decision that the extension of the railway is going to be proceeded with?

The hon. member who just preceded me—I refer to the hon. member for Wellington South—was suggesting that the Conservative party was opposed to the use of United States capital to develop the resources of this country. I think that is a wrong assumption or a wrong statement for anyone to make. We are not suggesting that foreign capital has not been useful in the past or that it will not be useful in the present and in the future. All we have suggested up to the moment is that full opportunity be given the Canadian people to exploit their own resources.

I was considering this question of delay brought forward in the evidence before the committee in the speeches of supporters of this bill, having regard to the fact that three years are required for survey and then another five years to build the railway. I think that is rather slow work under modern conditions.

Mr. Marler: Does the hon. gentleman know the country at all?

Mr. Churchill: I have not seen that exact piece of country, but it is part of the Canadian north land and I have seen a great deal of that. I presume it is rocky and extremely difficult country in which to build railways. It may have muskeg for all I know. I do not doubt for one minute that it is extraordinarily difficult to construct a railway in that country. But I have travelled over various parts of Canada in which railways have been constructed with great difficulty, and I am not altogether unaware of the terrain of the Canadian shield in various parts of Canada.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Does the hon. member know that on the construction of this line between Seven Islands and Schefferville worse difficulties were encountered than in the construction of the railways across the Rockies?

Mr. Churchill: Did they have to build those spiral tunnels to construct that portion?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): If you read the evidence given before the committee, you will learn what those difficulties were.

Mr. Churchill: I would think that spiral tunnels presented a greater obstacle than anything from Seven Islands up. I admit that it is not an easy task to build a railway in such territory, but modern methods of construction are much advanced over what they were many years ago, and modern methods of survey are perhaps much advanced over what they were years ago. We have air transport to assist in moving in materials and supplies, a procedure which would cut the time greatly.

When the C.P.R. was being built around the shore of lake Superior, supplies were ferried in by water and the time for construction of the railway was cut by five years by virtue of that fact. The line could have gone through less difficult country north of lake Superior, but it would not have been so easily accessible for the transportation of supplies.

Let us take for granted all these difficulties. Let us take it for granted that there may be difficulties in surveying and in building the railway line. It still does not follow that a full period of ten years is needed for that purpose. In any case, what is to prevent the company from coming back here and asking for another extension of time? If it shows that it has done the work, that the mineral bodies are there and that the development should proceed, there is nothing to prevent that company from coming back, receiving a fair hearing here and getting an extension such as it might require at that time.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): How can he expect this company to finance such a project under the circumstances he just mentioned?

Mr. Churchill: I think that would be possible, just as has been done with the line it has already built. It is starting with an assured line to an assured ore body at the present time. Now it wants to extend that line up further into country where it is hoped that there are equally valuable mineral deposits.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): It is only a hope.

Mr. Churchill: Until that hope is realized by exploration and so on, why the great haste to get an extension of ten years? Why not an extension of five years? If in that interval exploration indicates the existence of ore bodies of great extent and that a line can be built without too great difficulty; and further, if the company shows that a five-year period is not adequate for that purpose, something might be done. On the other hand, if a very important body of ore is discovered there and it is urgent to get it out quickly, why not use another airlift as was done in the first instance and as was indicated here? Mr. Durrell said that is what they had used on this first section and that it was expensive.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): It cost them double.

Mr. Churchill: It might well be expensive for the proposed extension that is now in their mind, but it does not preclude the possibility of using an airlift to accomplish that purpose. Within a few years it may well be that the development of air transportation will have proceeded to an extent where it may be cheaper to conduct an airlift than it was in the period of construction of the present railway line.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the reasons we are suggesting that our amendment should receive careful attention and should be carried. A five-year extension, under present circumstances and with present development in our north country, should be ample for a decision to be reached as to when the line should be built and how it should be constructed.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The committee was considering Bill No. 148, clause 1, and the amendment thereto. Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment? Those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: Those opposed to it will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment negatived.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Private Bills

PERSONAL FINANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lefrançois for the second reading of Bill No. 160, respecting Personal Finance Company of Canada, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): We in this group are completely opposed to the passage of this bill, Mr. Speaker. We think there is no need for the change in the name; in fact the suggested change of name from Personal Finance Company to Beneficial Finance Company is a change that would inevitably mislead potential borrowers and is something that this house should oppose and reject.

A number of hon. members have objected from time to time to the type of advertising that is used by these companies in an attempt to drum up business. References have been made to the type of advertising used by this particular company, and in this respect I think the company is a very bad offender, because in my opinion it has put out a number of very misleading pamphlets. A number of these have been referred to me. One is entitled, "You Are My Pal"; another one, "Take This Good Friend On Vacation With You". The third one is a card on credit for extra fast service. There are other instances of this type that one might mention. I had another advertisement referred to me as an example of misleading advertising, which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of Wednesday, March 21. I do not know if the company specified where the advertisement was to appear, but it was taken from the comic page. The advertisement is entitled, "The Happy Answer to Your Money Needs". It reads:

> Question: How can I pay up my bills and reduce my monthly payments at the same time?
> Happy Answer: Tell your money needs to Pacific Finance. The manager can give you good financial advice, can often reduce your monthly payments by as much as one-half—

Misleading, I would say at that point.

> —while paying off your bills, and can often give you extra cash besides.
> The happy answer, get $25 to $2,500, Pacific Finance Credit Limited.

Then there is a list of the offices the company has in this city. One should keep in mind—

Mr. Philpott: What has that to do with this company?

Mr. Argue: It is the same type of advertising. I am bringing this forward as an example of the type of advertising engaged in by these small loans companies which misleads the public. It is bad enough that this type of advertising is used, but it is allowed, we expect as an expense of the company in filing income tax returns. Not only do the borrowers have to pay large sums by way of interest because of this tremendous advertising campaign engaged in by the various companies, but because such large sums are allowed by the income tax people for advertising the general public obtains a smaller amount from these companies in the way of taxes. So, in fact, the public of Canada, by our income tax laws, are bonusing and paying half the cost of the advertising engaged in by these companies.

When we take part in the debates in this house, as we are doing now and as we did a year ago, some of us accuse these companies of misleading advertising. What did the companies do or what have they done? Niagara Finance, in answer to some of this criticism, has printed a book. Amongst other things the foreword says:

> On the other hand, our industry has been the target for unjustified criticism—

I suggest that is a definite reference to statements made by members of parliament last year.

> —by uninformed people—

Another slur.

> —who have never felt the need for, nor used, the service provided by companies such as ours. Let us therefore, together, try to form an honest appraisal of the function of this industry in our Canadian economy, its usefulness and its business problems.

After having said it wants to form an honest appraisal, it makes statement after statement that is misleading, ill-founded and in some cases completely false. I think a quick reference to some of the statements in this book can prove that very statement. Not only has the company sought by this means to criticize, I suggest, statements made by members of parliament, but it is using this means to make unfounded and unwarranted attacks on the credit unions of this country. It does so in the following terms. It says of credit unions:

> Such organizations are often formed in large plants, factories, or among social or community groups. They have the advantage of being run by the members, and their administration and other costs are therefore low.

Listen to this.

> They contribute virtually nothing to the public treasury. They have comparatively no taxes to pay . . .
> They can offer low rates of charge only because they are tax-free—

I suggest the statement made by this finance company that credit unions are tax-free is completely and wholly false. The laws of this country provide the same type of taxes, the same rates of tax, to all companies, be they credit unions or be they finance companies. If a finance company wants to take advantage of the laws of this country as they are applied to all companies, all they have to do is pay out some of their inflated profits to the borrowers on the basis of a patronage refund as is done by the credit unions, and they will have levied on them precisely the same rates of tax as are levied on the credit unions. The law is applied equally to all companies. The reason the credit unions, of course, in practice pay a lower rate is the fact they return by way of patronage dividends to shareholders and to borrowers a substantial part of the profits that are made.

Then a little bit further along they make this statement:

> The charge presently stipulated by our federal laws is 2 per cent per month on the outstanding balance of a loan to $500.

This statement is false because the federal law does not stipulate and does not set the interest rate at 2 per cent per month. It does not force these companies to charge 2 per cent per month, which is the direct inference from this statement. The law merely says the companies cannot charge more than 2 per cent. Then this pamphlet says:

> If you conclude that this is an interest charge of 24 per cent you are in good company, for thousands of people believe the same thing.

Then they try to prove that it is less than 24 per cent, but I make the statement that 2 per cent per month is not 24 per cent, it is over 26 per cent per year. The rate that is allowed these companies as the law exists today is the tremendous rate of over 26 per cent per year.

My great objection is that these companies can make this kind of advertising in answer to statements made in this house, and I suggest will claim the cost of such pamphlets as part of their deductions for income tax purposes. The company was not content with issuing this pamphlet, but gave wide distribution to a number of advertisements in the Financial Post. These advertisements are just as misleading as the pamphlets from which I have quoted. There are four in the series, and one says:

> It takes time for staff to fill out necessary forms, check credit, do the accounting, follow delinquent payments, discuss and sometimes rearrange loans. And time costs money. To cover these costs the mark-up really should be (but is not) as high as 27 per cent on the smaller loans, ranging down to 19 per cent on the larger amounts.

The statement they say is not correct is, in fact, quite correct, because the rate is over 26 per cent per year.

> The millions of Canadian dollars loaned to the tens of thousands of Canadians who enjoy our service is evidence, we think, that they, too, consider our charges fair and just.

In other words, if people are forced to go to these companies and pay this exorbitant rate of interest, then according to the company and the advertisement that is an indication that thousands of Canadians support their business and approve of the extremely high charge. I could go on to cite many other instances of this same type of misleading advertising and straight propaganda that the government allows as a deduction from income.

I think we should stop the passage of this bill. I think we should stop the passage of any further bills to encourage more finance companies to begin operating at this time. These people are engaged in what is in effect legalized robbery. They have become parasites in our communities. They are thriving on the low income earners, and are obtaining exorbitant profits. Until a thorough inquiry is made by this house and the banking and commerce committee, I suggest that if we are to do our duty we should ask the sponsor to stand this bill at least until the banking and commerce committee has had an opportunity to look into the field of small loans companies to see if in fact there is a good argument for the passage of this particular bill, which I suggest there is not.

The operation of the small loans companies is not affecting just the ordinary Canadian who might come to one's mind, but is affecting the personnel of our armed services, the army, navy and air force personnel. According to their own records, in many cases these people are getting into trouble with the small loans companies and are in fact paying these huge rates of interest, and are thus becoming a problem for the benevolent funds in the various services.

I have in my hand a statement put out by the army benevolent fund. This is in the form of a memorandum circulated among various servicemen concerning this problem. What does it say? It says:

> The extensive use of consumer credit and the mismanagement of family income are closely related. Accordingly, it is understandable that the financial welfare problems in Canada have increased proportionately with the increase of more than 100 per cent in personal loans, instalment contracts and other household borrowing in the past five years.

It then goes on to say that these people made a survey of the number of low income families who are in debt, and they report the following:

> Average debts of $850 per family.
> The amount being allocated from income for interest and service charges every month is between $10 and $16 (or 5 per cent to 8 per cent of the total pay).

According to this survey 5 to 8 per cent of the total pay of service personnel is being used for the payment of interest to small loans companies. The report goes on to say:

> This would seem to indicate the need for an educational program designed to assist the householder regarding the planned expenditure of family income and the proper use of credit.

Let us look at the position we are getting into. By way of estimates and legislation the government asks parliament to pass appropriations for the pay of our service personnel. After we have provided them with a certain level of income, this government proposes measures to set up small loans companies and to facilitate the small loans racket in order that loan sharks can get our service personnel in their clutches and force a great deal of embarrassment upon the service personnel themselves, upon their families and upon the army benevolent fund.

I suggest it is the duty of the government not only to make provision for the payment of our service personnel, but also by way of legislation to prevent these sharks from taking advantage of persons who have to borrow money.

The government pays our service personnel. The Liberal party comprises the government of this country. And then Duncan MacTavish, the president of the national Liberal federation, becomes a director of one or two small loans companies and he and his companies and the policies they are following are embarrassing our army personnel according to the survey and the statement of the benevolent fund.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: I can understand the jeers of the Liberal members. I can understand that the Liberal members are very uncomfortable. Nevertheless I am suggesting to them that it is a fact that the policy they have allowed, the policy that is being followed by the small loans companies, the largest of which has on its board of directors the president of the national Liberal federation, is embarrassing our service personnel. This policy is making it difficult for the army benevolent fund to function, to the point that the benevolent fund has had to start an educational program in order to protect the service personnel of the country from the loan sharks, whose practices are condoned by this government and the legislation for which is provided by this government.

I suggested that if hon. members of this house are to do their duty not only to the public generally but particularly to our service personnel, we should block the passage of this particular bill.

Mr. Donald D. Carrick (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the bill which is now before the house. When the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Lefrançois) introduced the bill it seemed relatively simple and clear. He explained that this is a bill to change the name of the Personal Finance Company of Canada to the Beneficial Finance Company of Canada.

The Personal Finance Company of Canada is a subsidiary of the Beneficial Finance Company of the United States. He explained that the Canadian company wished to change its name to Beneficial in order that it would have a name similar to its parent company. It is difficult to think of any more adequate reason that could be advanced for a company coming to this house and asking for a change of name.

In connection with the authorized capital of the company he explained that the company was incorporated in 1933 with an authorized capital of $1 million. That was 23 years ago. The company now comes to this house and asks to increase its authorized capital to $10 million. The authorized capital of $1 million is all issued and outstanding. The company has had $9,350,000 paid to it as paid-up surplus. It now asks to have the capital increased to $10 million. Does that not seem a reasonable request?

What has happened in this debate? Three hon. members of the C.C.F. party have opposed the bill. I tried to look at their reasons for doing so calmly and dispassionately, in an effort to ascertain exactly what was the real reason the C.C.F. members opposed this bill. I came to the conclusion that the real objection lies in the fact that they dislike the small loans business as it is carried on under the law of Canada today. This company happens to be a company engaged in the small loans business and that is the basis of their opposition to this bill.

I suggest to the hon. members that that is a completely invalid reason for opposing this legislation. If hon. members do not like the legislation dealing with small loans the proper place to attack that legislation is when Bill No. 51 is before this house. Bill No. 51 is designed to reduce the rate of interest which can be charged by small loans companies, and when that bill is before the house hon. members will have an opportunity to express their views on the small loans business. But I suggest that in their endeavour to attack the Personal Finance Company of Canada they are unfair and discriminatory. If they want to attack the small loans business, let them do it at another time and place but not on this bill.

Hon. members of the C.C.F. party have been critical of the advertising carried on by small loans companies. I suggest that there is a proper time and place to attack that advertising if hon. members do not like it, but when we are discussing this bill it is not the time and place. The hon. member for Assiniboia has referred tonight to some of the advertising used by some of those companies, but none of it was by Personal Finance Company.

Mr. Argue: Oh, yes; three out of the four documents I referred to were used by Personal Finance Company.

Mr. Carrick: I think the hon. member referred to Pacific Finance Corporation and Niagara Finance Corporation, but I did not hear him refer to—I withdraw that. Whatever the hon. member may have said about advertising, even that carried on by Personal Finance Company, this is not the time to deal with it. That advertising is done in accordance with the laws of Canada. There is nothing illegal about it. If the hon. member thinks the law ought to be changed, the proper time and place to do that is when Bill No. 51 is before this house.

If I may I should like to deal for a moment with the reasons why the hon. members are opposed to this bill and to the name "Beneficial" being granted to this company. I think it is nothing more or less than the belief of the hon. members that the business carried on by Personal Finance Company is not beneficial in any sense to its customers, and therefore they contend that the name would be misleading and should not be granted. May I say that whenever an incorporated company applies to this house for permission to change its name, the name is always cleared. In the case of this company the name had to be cleared with the superintendent of insurance, who is in charge of the administration of small loans companies. There is a well known procedure with the companies branch of the Department of the Secretary of State to clear names.

The general principle is that an applicant can have any name he desires, with certain exceptions, such as the use of the word "Royal" and certain others, and provided that the name is not used by any other company or so similar to the name of any other company as to be calculated to deceive. In this case the superintendent of insurance has said that he has no objection to the name "Beneficial" being granted to this company, and the companies branch of the Department of the Secretary of State has raised no objection to the name being granted. I put this question squarely to hon. members of this house. Is the choice of a name going to depend upon the likes, the dislikes or the whims of members of this house? If a person wants to know whether he can use a certain name must he first poll the members of parliament to see what are their likes or dislikes?

An hon. Member: What about the Queen Elizabeth hotel?

Mr. Carrick: I do not want to get drawn away from my argument, but let me say that the name "Queen Elizabeth" was chosen by the Canadian National Railways. I do not know what procedure they went through before they adopted that name, but that case is different from this. The type of case I am talking about is one where an application is made to this house for the incorporation of a company, or a change of name, and I suggest that the only basis upon which it can be determined what name is available to the company is the basis which has prevailed in the past, that is to clear with the Department of the Secretary of State and the superintendent of insurance. If there is no objection, then the name should be granted.

In the speech which he delivered a few days ago the hon. member for Assiniboia referred to some advertising put out by small loans companies which began with "You are my pal", and he said he had it on good authority that this was advertising of small loans companies, but whether inadvertently or intentionally I notice that he did not say specifically that this advertising was used by the Personal Finance Company of Canada.

If the hon. member had inquired from the sponsor of the bill he would have been notified that this was not one of those advertisements that had been used by Personal Finance Company. The hon. gentleman waves his hand in that incredulous fashion that he uses so often, but the hon. member is not the only one in this house who tells the truth. I suggest to hon. members that the sponsor of this bill has been so informed by Personal Finance Company of Canada, and I submit that their statement should be accepted. I suggest that it would have been only a courtesy if the hon. gentleman had asked the sponsor about this before he put the advertising before the house. He should have asked whether that was one of the advertisements used by this company.

The hon. gentleman also made a great deal of the credit card issued by Personal Finance Company of Canada. The hon. member read from that card and made reference to the use of the words "Beneficial loan system". The hon. member went on to say that this indicated that the Personal Finance Company of Canada had adopted the name "Beneficial" which was an affront to this house.

I should like to point out that the Beneficial Finance Company in the United States is the parent company of a number of subsidiaries in the United States, and also of Personal Finance Company of Canada. Was it not perfectly proper to use the word "system" in referring to a group of companies in the United States and a subsidiary company in Canada? I cannot comprehend how it would be an insult to this house to refer to what is a fact.

In addition, I am advised that this card was used long before there was any thought of making an application to this house for permission to change the name of the company to Beneficial Finance Company. The hon. member made considerable of the use of those words on the card, but I would like to point out that those words are in ordinary print. Then across the bottom of the card in large letters are the words "Personal Finance Company of Canada". No one could think that Personal Finance Company of Canada was using any other name but its own, and the hon. gentleman certainly stretched things a bit when he tried to convey to this house that this company had used the name "Beneficial" before the matter had been dealt with in this house.

May I just deal for a moment with the application to increase the capital of the company from $1 million to $10 million. I have already mentioned that the whole of the $1 million authorized capital has been issued and is outstanding. The company, in addition, has been using in Canada $9,350,000 of paid in surplus that was paid to them by the parent company in the United States.

For all practical purposes, that $9,350,000 is just as much capital as the $1 million. That is, the company has been using over $10 million of capital in the conduct of its business. The hon. member for Assiniboia professes a desire to see the real relationship between the earnings of the company and the capitalization of the company. The best way to grant his desire is to enable this company to increase its authorized capital to $10 million, so they can declare $9,350,000 of paid in surplus as a part of their capital. Then you will see that the capital used in this company is actually $10 million and not $1 million, and then you can balance up the earnings of the company against the $10 million capital used. I suggest that is the only way you can get a proper relationship.

Objection has been taken to increasing the capital on the grounds that Personal Finance Company in Canada is a wholly owned subsidiary of Beneficial Finance Company in the United States. What that means, as I understand it, is this. The hon. members object to a situation where a United States company has brought $10 million into Canada, borrows money from the bank to conduct its operations, and may pay out dividends to the United States corporation. If that is a valid objection for Personal Finance Company of Canada, it is a valid objection for every other business carried on in Canada in similar circumstances. If it is an invalid objection for every other company, it is also an invalid objection for Personal Finance Company of Canada.

Now let me turn for a moment and apply that principle to other businesses in Canada. Let us take the Aluminum Company of Canada. It is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Aluminum Company of the United States. The development at Shawinigan and the development at Kitimat have been carried on largely by the moneys brought into Canada from the parent corporation in the United States. In turn that money will be used in Canada, and if need be the dividends will be paid to the United States corporation. Is there anybody in this house who is going to suggest that what has happened is anything less than a boon to the Canadian economy?

Some of the members of the C.C.F. party shake their heads at this argument. With due respect, it seems to me a perfectly sound argument. If I might reiterate, they object to this bill because this company is controlled by a United States corporation and is going to use this money and is possibly going to pay dividends to the United States corporation. The Aluminum Company of Canada is in precisely the same position in so far as capital is concerned and in so far as dividends are being paid out to the United States corporation. There is not a scrap of difference.

Now let me take another case. Let us take the field of oil development in Alberta. We know that one of the companies that has been foremost in development in Alberta and Saskatchewan has been the Imperial Oil Company of Canada. It is said that it had spent between $20 million and $30 million in exploration before it found a producing field. The Imperial Oil Company is a subsidiary of Standard Oil of New Jersey in the United States. The direct investment of United States capital in Canada in non-metallic minerals in 1945 was $133 million. In 1954 it was $586 million. That money has come into Canada from parent companies in the United States.

I want to be honest with the house. I do not say that the whole of the $586 million has come in connection with oil. However, is there anybody in this house who will say that what has happened in Alberta and Saskatchewan has not been good for Canada? If what has been done in these other fields has been good for Canada, can it be bad for Canada when applied to the Personal Finance Company of Canada?

Mr. Argue: That is your gas pipe-line speech.

Mr. Carrick: My submission is that you cannot brush aside with laughter arguments that are sound. The hon. gentleman had an opportunity to make a speech himself. If hon. members opposite do not think the argument I am putting forward is perfectly sound, I am sure that hon. members on this side of the house will be glad to hear what they have to say.

May I just say in conclusion that this is an application by a private company for relief applicable to itself. We are not concerned at this time wih the merits or demerits of the small loans business. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has stated that there is a legitimate place for the small loans business in the Canadian economy. He praised the work done by the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the credit unions, but he said that the rate of interest being charged by the small loan companies is too high. It will all be considered when Bill No. 51 comes before the house. My respectful statement to the house is that this is not the time or place for us to embark on a discussion of the merits or demerits of the small loans business. I suggest, with great respect, that this bill is clear. The relief sought is reasonable, and this house should approve this bill.

Mr. O. L. Jones (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on this subject, but I did wish to support the hon. member for Assiniboia in his effort tonight. I agree with him 100 per cent, but what actually prompted me to rise now was the speech made by the previous speaker. I find, strangely enough, that he is the gentleman who found the crystal ball that the Minister of Trade and Commerce lost some time ago. Having found it, he has used it to try to give us why we, the C.C.F., take the stand we do. I challenge him to prove that he did not do it with a crystal ball, because he did not know what he was talking about.

He was talking of millions of capital and dividends and all that part of this bill and the history of the company. I am not dealing with that. That is a part that is up in the clouds, which he is interested in. I am interested in the other angle of these loan companies, where they operate most successfully; in the slums and the congested areas of our large towns, where they are just like hyenas living off the poverty of the people. That is their history, and always has been. Once these people get deep into the clutches of one of these companies through loans, the future of their families remains in the slums and they have no chance to get out. The small loans companies make sure of that, because that is where their dividends come from, and that is why they need extra capital, to swallow more dividends.

Anything that creates these dividends from the slums of Canada should be opposed in this house, whether it is this company or any other company. We are not attacking this company alone, but all these small loans companies. I am speaking of small loans in general. Before the first war I was in London, and for two or three years I volunteered my time at nights and during week ends to help in a mission in the slum area in London. One of the greatest tasks we had was trying to get the people of that area out of the clutches of loan sharks. They were not legalized; they were small operators and were charging thruppence, sixpence or a shilling per week interest. They were small operators, but the principle was the same. These people got in their clutches and had no chance of ever getting out. The slums of London remain to this day to a large extent because of the loan sharks who operate there.

I have never seen these small loans companies go into areas where there is plenty of work and conditions are prosperous, or into rural areas where the farmers always have something on which to get by. They just go into the areas where they can get the most victims, and the most victims are found in the slums and congested areas of our large towns. We have heard that the operations of these small loans companies even go away beyond those of Shylock. I often think Shylock was a gentleman compared with some of the modern loan sharks. He did have his pound of flesh, but they get a pound and a half every time. What we are dealing with tonight are legalized Shylocks. Before the evil I have experienced in London gets too deep a root in Canada I believe we should take steps to stop its growth, and I cannot think of a better time than when such a matter comes before the house.

I suggest that we should have a royal commission to investigate not only the operations of all these companies but also the need of the people who make such loans. If the need is there, and God knows it is because these companies would not prosper if it were not, the government should take steps to make loans available through the banks in the ordinary way at a low rate of interest. If necessary, the government should subsidize the banks in making such loans.

To have to pay 24 per cent plus the penalties that follow if the loan is not paid on time is not a fair proposition for the poor people of Canada. Give them a fair break so they can borrow money in the same way that merchants and other people who are fairly prosperous can go to the banks and borrow at a nominal cost. These people need it more than those who borrow at 4 or 5 per cent.

I mention this because all the evidence before the house is that these companies are growing in number, growing in strength, influence and power and growing financially. If we are going to allow this rot to get into our financial system we will have the condition that the people of Europe have tried to avoid for generations and still have with them. I suggest in all sincerity that we should be alarmed at the growth of these small loans companies and their immense profits. It indicates to me that something is rotten in our economy, and we as members will be remiss in our duties if we do not oppose the bill and all similar ones.

I am not against this particular company; I am opposed to the whole principle of small loans at 24 per cent. I think they are inhuman and unchristian. I sincerely hope the government will take steps to investigate this avenue of borrowing which is keeping people down in the lowest depths of slum life. It is something in which we should be interested, something we should fight, and this is the time to start fighting. To charge a rate of 24 per cent to a man who is in debt already and has a small salary and a large family is inhuman. We have done nothing about it, and if we pass this bill we are simply aiding and abetting those who prey on the poor people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. Just before I recognize the next hon. member, after listening to the last two speeches I think it is perhaps my duty to point out to the house that we are not debating Bill No. 51, I believe it is, which deals with the principle of small loans companies. I would ask hon. members not to extend this debate to the whole field of the duties and responsibilities of the government respecting small loans companies as such, but to remember that the bill we have before us deals with whether or not certain amendments shall be made to the incorporating act of one company.

I am not suggesting for a moment that any argument for or against the passage of the bill with its two proposed amendments is objectionable because I am willing to listen to such arguments, but a discussion of the abstract question of the duty and responsibility of the government with respect to controlling our dealings with small loans companies is another debate now going forward in the house, and I would ask the house to try to keep this debate in order.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words before the vote is taken. It probably will not be taken tonight, but I should like to have my words on the record before the vote is taken. We in this group are prepared to support the amendment, chiefly on two grounds. First of all, we do not think it either necessary or desirable that the name of this company should be changed from "Personal" to "Beneficial". The word "beneficial" is hardly the correct name to use for a company doing the type of business this company is doing. Surely no one will suggest for one minute that there can be anything beneficial in so far as the patron is concerned in having to pay 2 per cent a month for the money he borrows. It may be beneficial, of course, so far as the company itself is concerned, but so far as the person who borrows is concerned there is nothing beneficial in the transaction at all.

I do not think there is any doubt that one of the reasons the name is being changed is that the new name would be more attractive. I realize that the parent company may have the name "Beneficial", but just because the parent company has the name "Beneficial" is no reason why its offspring in this country should have to have the same name. We think it would be far better for them to continue to use the name under which they have been operating in the past.

As to the second point, that the capital should be increased from $1 million to $10 million, there again we are opposed for a number of reasons. In the first place, the intention must be for the company to expand its business. It will probably mean they will expand the number of branches throughout the country. There is one other large company, Household Finance, I believe, that has 160 branches altogether. No doubt this company will also increase the number of branches. Some members may argue that will be beneficial to the people because if you increase the number of offices it will increase competition, and if you increase competition the cost to the borrower will be reduced, but that is not the record.

Apparently the record is that where you increase competition in the course of carrying on a business of this kind and you go beyond a certain point, you actually increase the cost to the borrower. Some members will recall that was explained in the banking and commerce committee by the superintendent of insurance, Mr. MacGregor, in so far as insurance was concerned. He pointed out that when you increase competition beyond a certain point you increase greatly the cost of doing business because the advertising cost is increased. These companies are already doing a lot of advertising and the more companies you put into operation the greater the competition will become and the greater will be the amount of advertising those companies will have to do. That will increase costs; therefore from the point of view of borrowers there will be nothing beneficial to them if, as a result of steadily expanding competition, they have to pay more interest on their loans.

Mind you, even with the coming into force of the new small loans bill borrowers will be paying 2 per cent a month on the majority of loans, because the majority of such loans are under $300. The Household Finance Company points out that 68 per cent of all the loans they make are under $300, and the rate of interest will continue to be 2 per cent on all such loans. Of course, it is the people who borrow small amounts who are generally the ones who are so hard pressed.

I think we should keep in mind that the reason the small loans companies are doing such a tremendous business today, and I do not think anybody will dispute that, is partly —I was going to say largely but I will say partly—as the result of government policy. I believe this session will go down in history as the debtor and creditor session, because we are having more bills to lend money to people than we have ever had before. There have already been six bills introduced to increase loans to people in one form or another. Now we are having bills to increase the capital of small loans companies so they can make more loans.

Therefore I think we are certainly creating a record from the point of view of making it possible for people to go further and further into debt. It looks as though the only way this government can hope to bolster a high economy is to help people go steadily further and further into debt, even if the rate has to be 2 per cent a month.

Some people say that these people must be able to borrow money, and ask if we are going to deprive them of that right. I would say no. But I would suggest that the government has some responsibility in that regard. We have chartered banks in this country. We have 11 of them, with branches in every town. Here in Ottawa it is hard to find a street without running into two or three branches of chartered banks. Surely these banks could handle this business. The Canadian Bank of Commerce has already led the way in showing how it can be done. We amended the Bank Act, at the time of the last revision, in order to allow the chartered banks to take chattel mortgages. Therefore the chartered banks are now in a position in which they can very well make personal loans to the people and thereby relieve the small loans companies of a great deal of work.

I think it would be a good idea if we could cut down the amount of work or the amount of business the small loans companies do. In fact I think it would be a good thing if we could put them right out of business and let the people depend upon the chartered banks to do their lending. In order to help the people who are down and out, I think the government could very well bring in certain legislation along the lines, we will say, of the farm improvement loan plan under which they guarantee the banks against the losses. I think we need some kind of policy whereby loans can be guaranteed to small industrial workers so they can get money when they need it without having to pay the exorbitant rate of interest of 2 per cent per month.

For these two reasons, as I say, we intend to support the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to this motion, I should like to say this. There seems to have been a misunderstanding about this evening's proceedings. It may be and probably is to some extent my fault. At any rate, there was among the opposition an impression that, if certain arrangements were made, we might allow this bill as well as the following bills to stand in order that we might proceed with notices of motion. Under these circumstances, I think perhaps it would be desirable to do that owing, as I say, to a misunderstanding which I think is no one's fault. Occasionally these things occur. If my colleagues are interested in either this bill or the succeeding bills, I would ask them to fall in line with my suggestion that we adjourn both debates so we may proceed to notices of motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I would point out to the house that we are now on order No. 43. Orders No. 44 and No. 45 are private bills. Is it the unanimous desire of the house that we proceed to the consideration of notices of motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The hon. member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) moves the adjournment of this debate. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

On motion of Mr. Hamilton (York West) the debate was adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): By unanimous consent the house will proceed to the consideration of notices of motions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF COASTGUARD SERVICE ON GREAT LAKES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to provide for the establishment of a coastguard service on the great lakes of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to thank hon. members of this house for agreeing unanimously to the postponement of the other business before the house in order that this resolution may be proceeded with for the time there is left this evening.

In presenting this resolution, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer briefly to Hansard of Thursday, July 21, 1955, in which it is recorded that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler) and I had a little interchange in the house. As reported at page 6528 of Hansard I asked the Minister of Transport the following question:

Has the Department of Transport any plans at present under way for any form of coastguard service on the great lakes or anything resembling it?

The minister replied as follows:

I think I should say that the answer to that question is no. I have a memorandum on the subject which starts off by saying that the subject was reviewed a number of years ago. At that time I am told that the conclusion that was reached was that it would cost approximately $9 million at that time for the capital expenditures necessary to start a coastguard service and that thereafter the annual cost would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $3 million.

It is with those remarks that I should like to start off. I should like to point out to the minister that this need for a coastguard service on the great lakes has arisen largely since the end of world war II, and that any survey carried out prior to that time would have no application at the present time. Second, the amount of money that was suggested by the minister is, I feel, quite out of line. I believe the cost would be much less. Consequently the first remarks I should like to make are as follows.

I should like to deal first of all with the limitation of the scope of this resolution. In this regard I should say that the resolution contemplates coastguard service on only the lower lakes, namely lake Ontario, lake Erie, lake St. Clair and lake Huron. In addition to that, any such proposed service as that which I have in mind would be limited to the summer months, possibly from the middle of May until the end of September. The third limitation that I have in mind is this. The resolution does not contemplate one aspect of coastguard service, namely the law-enforcement provisions dealing with customs and excise. The resolution is primarily aimed at first of all, search and rescue activities on the great lakes; second, the prevention of accidents on the great lakes; and third, increased navigation aids.

First of all I think we should look at the present facilities available. First I shall deal with search and rescue. As the minister pointed out on a previous occasion as recorded in Hansard of Thursday, July 21, 1955, at page 6528, there are certain other branches of government dealing with coastguard service such as the Royal Canadian Air Force, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and so on. The Royal Canadian Air Force base at Trenton, Ontario, does carry out a search and rescue operation on the great lakes. The Ontario provincial police, under certain conditions, if requested by the municipalities, carry out certain limited beach patrols. The municipalities themselves have lifeguard service on beaches to prevent drowning accidents, or to try to do so, anyway. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police have five patrol boats on the great lakes, at Windsor, Sarnia, Toronto and Kingston. I believe they also have one at Sault Ste. Marie, but that is outside the scope that is contemplated in this resolution.

In addition, the United States coastguard will come in and assist if a request is made by the Canadian government. The Royal Canadian Navy have on the great lakes certain craft which assist in rescue work if necessary. There are also some fine volunteer services. For instance, I understand that under the auspices of the Port Credit yacht club last summer an organization called the lake Ontario search and rescue organization was set up which deals with the area, I believe, from Oshawa to the United States border. It is purely a volunteer service, but I understand it is intended to carry out the necessary service there.

Mr. Marler: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nesbitt: Yes.

Mr. Marler: Why does he say that Sault Ste. Marie is outside the scope of the resolution?

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister possibly was not in his seat when I commenced my remarks and said that I was limiting this resolution to the lower great lakes, namely lake Ontario, lake Huron, lake Erie and lake St. Clair.

As I have pointed out, there are these various services on the lakes at the present time. I understand that they are competent, and so far their activities have been very good. Co-operation by the United States coast guard has been good and has been a help on certain occasions. Then, Mr. Speaker, I suppose the obvious question arises, what is the criticism of these facilities if they are there? Why propose this motion?

Well, first of all, the main objection is that under present conditions on the lakes the present search and rescue facilities are absolutely inadequate. Second, the facilities there completely lack any co-ordination. In this respect I should like to refer to one or two newspaper clippings. I might say that co-ordination is very important in rescue work, particularly when a life is involved, such as a drowning accident or people being left out on the lake all night. The question of co-ordination and timing is an essential element, and that is what seems to be lacking. I refer to a clipping from the London Free Press, dated July 25, 1955, entitled, "Patrol Service Need Cited Following Search at 'Port' ". The editorial says:

> Garnet Speers, local marine man, stated there was much need for co-ordinated safety measures.

This appeared following an accident, and it continues:

> Mr. Speers stated this morning that successful lake searches depend on the prompt receipt of reports and as accurate as possible bearings taken from shore. "There is a lot of lake out there", he explained. Because of the lack of a Canadian coastguard service, the more experienced yachtsmen are alert to the need for fast patrol and search service.

Then I should like to refer very briefly to an editorial in a very large weekly, the Tillsonburg News, dated July 28, 1955. I believe the Tillsonburg News is one of the largest weeklies in the province of Ontario. It reads as follows:

> From the large number of small boat accidents on the great lakes and the number of lives lost, and in many cases the delay in organization of adequate search or rescue efforts, it would appear that the present government agencies are far from adequate in providing the necessary help, and that steps are necessary to provide a more closely knit and readily available service.
> With due regard for the effectiveness of the R.C.A.F. communication and rescue fleet at Trenton, which Mr. Marler pointed out had the responsibility of co-ordinating the search and rescue activities of not only government ships but also other ships on the great lakes, we suggest that it is not in much of a position to save a boatload of persons swamped off Port Burwell or in Long Point bay.

The third aspect of criticism of the present facilities is that municipalities and provincial authorities can extend their activity only so far into the water because of the international aspect of the great lakes.

The fourth criticism of the present facilities is that there is no co-ordinating service. There is no one to prevent small craft going out in bad weather, and there is no one to regulate the use of these craft. There are some young people who like to run up and down amongst the bathers in speed boats and engage in other smart-aleck activities. Then, too, the present services lack organization. I am thinking of an event that occurred near Sarnia, when some people were reported missing. After a day or so they were located quite safe in a harbour. I understand that the estimated cost of this particular rescue work, if it could be called such, was between $40,000 and $50,000. If there had been some form of co-ordinating coastguard service, these people would have been located a lot sooner. My contention is that there is an absolute necessity at the present time for an increased coastguard service on the great lakes which contemplates the things I pointed out at the beginning of my remarks.

I have here a great many newspaper clippings, but I do not intend to take up the time of the house by reading them. I believe all hon. members who live in southern Ontario are quite aware of the number of drowning and boating accidents that take place on the great lakes during the summertime. I do not think a day goes by when there is not an accident or a drowning, and often there are many in one day. However, I should like to read one or two clippings just to illustrate to hon. members from other parts of the country that this is not something I am pulling out of a hat, so to speak.

I refer to a clipping from the Sentinel-Review of Woodstock, Ontario, dated August 10, 1955. The heading is, "Undertow Draws Seven to Death", and that happened at Wasaga Beach. Then there is another clipping from the Sentinel-Review of Wednesday, September 21, and the heading is, "Three Oxford Centre Men Missing on Lake Erie Fishing Expedition". There is a heading in the Toronto Telegram of August 30, 1955, "Lashed By Storm Fourteen Hours, Two Anglers Saved On Lake". Then there is some editorial comment on this matter, and I refer to the Globe and Mail of Toronto, July 25, 1955. The heading of the editorial is, "Lake Coastguards Needed". This editorial comments on the many unseasoned operators of power boats. It says:

> Too many unseasoned operators of power boats do not know that hand-propelled and sailing craft have protective right of way which all powered boats must respect. And many owners of speed boats who do know the rules still make a sport of giving canoes, skiffs and small sailboats a mighty wash from their wakes.

The lower lakes, including Georgian bay, require patrols, partly to enforce the law, but also to engage in rescue work when accidents beset any water craft. Safety on our waterways is just as important as on our highways.

I could read many more newspaper clippings, but I believe many hon. members will recall the more shocking accidents. I think the summer before last there was an accident in lake Ontario off Oakville in which nine sea scouts were drowned. They went out in a boat, and there was no one to warn them that bad weather was likely to set in within a short time.

It is very difficult to get any figures, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the number of accidents and the number of drownings on the great lakes. I have made efforts to do this, but I have not been successful because apparently no record is kept. I repeat that all hon. members who live in the southern part of Ontario know quite well that all you have to do is pick up the newspaper any day during the summer months or early fall, and you will see the results of the lack of a coastguard service.

Now, why has this need arisen, as it has, largely since the end of world war II? I believe all hon. members know there has been a great increase in the population of southern Ontario, just as there has been an increase in the population in the other parts of the country. The second reason, and I think the main reason, is the great increase in real wages and the increase in leisure time. This increase in leisure time is not confined entirely to city people. Those people who live in rural areas, as a result of the increased use of farm machinery also have a little more time on their hands than they had 50 years ago. As a result, there has been a great increase in boats of all types on the great lakes.

Fortunately I have been able to obtain some figures to illustrate this. As hon. members may know, all motors of 10 horsepower and over have to be registered. There is no fee for this registration. Apparently it is merely a case of registering for record purposes. It is very difficult to draw too many conclusions from the figures, and I am giving them only to show the increase in the number of small boats in the southern part of Ontario.

In 1950 the number of 10 horsepower on our motors in Ontario was 21,220. Five years later, in 1955, the number was 54,145. In 1955 alone the number increased by 15,483. This does not include a great number of boats which are powered by motors of less than 10 horsepower. It does not include rowboats, or anything of that nature. The only thing these figures can show is the tremendous increase in boating activity on the lower great lakes.

I discussed the matter with a number of people who have boats at Long Point bay on lake Erie. Estimates have been made that there are well over 1,000 boats of more than 10 horsepower there alone, and the figure is nearer 1,500. There are a great many, of course, with motors under 10 horsepower. It is very difficult to locate where all the boats are. A 10 horsepower motor can be registered at any customs office, and you also find all sorts of inland places which technically have boats registered there. It is extremely difficult to know at what port and on what lakes they are used.

I think it is apparent, however, that there has been a vast increase in the number of small boats in use today. Not only that, but there has been an increase in activities on the lakes. We have many picnic groups from factories, service clubs and other organizations which go to the great lakes, rent or charter boats and go fishing. Often these boats are very old, and when the motors break down these parties are left out on the lakes. It happens time after time.

While the owners and operators of commercial launches and fishing boats are no doubt quite experienced people, the ordinary small boat owner is very inexperienced at navigation. They frequently go out on the lakes and a storm comes up. They get lost or swamped and they really do not know what to do. This is the cause of many accidents. In this regard I would point out that many small boat owners who wish to take their boats out from ports on lakes Erie and Huron find there is no place where they can get proper information regarding the impending weather. Believe me, this is extremely necessary on the lower great lakes, because the local weather picture can change in an hour or so; it can change just as quickly as that. I would also point out that there is no one at any of these ports or places where boats are located to prevent boats going out, or to regulate traffic.

At the present time there is a rescue service, as I pointed out at the beginning of my remarks. This is composed of a combination of the R.C.M.P., the R.C.A.F. and others; but it seems to me that the search and rescue service, as it is called, does only one thing. It searches for dead bodies after people have been drowned, and I think we require a much more useful service, Mr. Speaker.

I have a few suggestions to make concerning the type of coastguard service I hope the minister will consider. I might also point out that I do not think it will cost too much money because like other hon. members, and particularly the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) who is always talking about economy, I do not believe in wasting money or throwing it around where it is not necessary.

I am not suggesting that we have an elaborate coastguard service such as they have in the United States. I do not believe it is warranted under the circumstances, and I think it would be difficult to maintain. I agree with the minister in that respect.

The first thing I would like to suggest is how we might go about financing a service such as I envisage without having it cost too much money. All the boats with motors of 10 horsepower or more which operate on the great lakes at the present time are required to get a licence. It is a strange thing to observe that the owners can be fined $100 for not having a licence, but the licence does not actually cost anything. That seems rather peculiar to me. It is like something out of Alice in Wonderland.

I suggest that the people who have boats on the great lakes would not object to paying a small licence fee of $5 or $10, depending on the horsepower of the motor, if they were to have a coastguard service of some kind, a rescue service and navigation aids, and so on. I have spoken to many people who have boats, and all of them have said they would be delighted to pay a small fee if they could obtain some kind of service. This would not defray the entire cost of operating such a service, but it would go a long way toward defraying the cost of a coastguard service. It is only fair that the people who own boats should not bear the whole cost of a coastguard service, because many people who would benefit do not own boats but go to the lakes to fish, swim, or go on excursions on holidays or week ends, and the general public should pay something toward the cost.

The third suggestion I would make is that coastguard officers be placed at appropriate spots along the shores of lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron and St. Clair. As I pointed out this job would be seasonal, from the middle of May to end of September. These officers could be university students. This would provide helpful employment for students who are looking for summer work. Many university students have to take work at very small wages during the summer at summer hotels and elsewhere, and usually they must work indoors. This service would provide healthful outdoor work for university students and would fit right into their program from the point of view of time.

If appointed, these officers could perform the following duties. They could be provided with meteorological reports which they could post every day. They could give the necessary information regarding weather forecasts for the succeeding 12 or 24 hours. They could post these notices on piers and beaches and in places where there are boats. Storm warnings could be given by these officers in order to warn people not to go out on the water. They could use the black cones which are usually used along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

I would also suggest that the coastguard officers should be trained in life saving and artificial respiration. The new Swedish method developed by Colonel Nealson, a Swedish gentleman, which has recently come into vogue, could be taught to them. They should be provided with life-saving devices, oxygen, artificial respiration aids, and a first aid course.

They should have the power to prohibit boats going out if a storm is pending, and they should also be empowered to regulate traffic. The United States coastguard has this authority. If an officer is aware that a storm might blow up in an hour or so he could prohibit boats going out, and suitable penalties could be levied if his warning were disregarded. The officer could also control smart alecks in boats who try to swamp other boats just to give them a thrill. I am sure that any hon. member who has been on the lakes in the summertime has seen people doing this dangerous thing. The main work of these coastguard officers, if I might suggest a name for them, would be to co-ordinate rescue services and activities. The main trouble at the present time is that there is not sufficient co-ordination among the various forms of rescue work presently on the lakes.

I would like at this point to refer to some remarks made by the Minister of Transport. In reply to a question I asked on June 21, 1955, the minister said, as reported at page 6528 of Hansard, and I shall quote directly from Hansard:

> But how does the information get to the R.C.A.F. and under whose authority do they go to these cases?
> Mr. Marler: I think it is because somebody communicates with them in some way or other, by radio, by telephone, by telegram or something.

To my mind that is the greatest argument for having some co-ordinated service. If coastguard officers were located at appropriate places along the shore to do nothing else for a few months in the summer but be there and have it known to the local authorities that they were there, if they issued certain instructions as to whom to get in touch with they would be performing a valuable service. The time element is most important when people are upset in the water or lost out on the lake, and this business of calling the R.C.A.F. in Trenton the next day to go out and help find the bodies is not of much help to the relatives of those who have been drowned.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): The hon. member has mentioned that these students should be posted along the coast as a coastguard service during the summer months, but I should like to know his estimate of the number of officers that would be required to cover this stretch of coast.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have travelled along a considerable portion of the shores of the great lakes, but I am not familiar with every single mile. All the resolution asks the government to do is take into consideration the advisability of bringing down legislation. I am sure there are plenty of people in the Department of Transport who could take two or three days off and figure this out. I have not had the opportunity of travelling up and down and around the lakes.

The next thing I should like to deal with is the type of service that might be provided. If we are going to have coastguard officers along the coast to act as co-ordinators it might be advisable to have boats available to do rescue work if necessary. These officers would co-ordinate the work of the R.C.A.F., the R.C.M.P. and the provincial police, but I think where necessary—this decision would have to be made by the Department of Transport—there should be duty boats which could go out if necessary.

These duty boats could be located where there were the greatest concentrations of small craft during the summer. I am not suggesting for one minute that the department should buy a number of yachts or patrol boats, but I am suggesting that the department might hire boats to be used as duty boats in places such as Toronto, Oakville and Hamilton on lake Ontario, and Port Colborne, Port Dover, Port Stanley, Port Burwell on lake Erie, and so on.

It might be possible to hire fishing boats during the summer months when the catches are not so large. Many fishermen would be glad to have jobs operating duty boats. Fishing boats would be the best because their crews would be highly experienced, many of them are equipped with ship to shore radio, and are quite speedy. Then there are many persons owning large launches and I am sure these could be obtained on a contract basis to be operated as duty boats. It should not cost too much money.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

In certain congested areas such as the Toronto area and possibly the Long Point area it might be necessary to have a constant patrol during the summer months. Again this is something the department would have to decide. I merely throw it out as a suggestion that it might be advisable to cover the congested areas where people are running around upsetting small boats and that kind of thing.

There is another important thing to be considered. I think the department should lay down rules requiring all small boats to be equipped with flares or smoke bombs, and also with life jackets. It would be up to the local officers to see that these rules were enforced. In other words, no boat would be permitted to go out on the lakes without a certain number of life preservers and flares or smoke bombs. If they happened to get into trouble they could send up signals.

I would like to make my remarks a bit longer, but because of the shortness of time and because other hon. members would like to speak, I shall not elaborate further. Both the minister and his parliamentary assistant come from a province which is not associated in any way with the great lakes, and they may not have the same sympathy as those who come from southern Ontario and who are more immediately concerned with this matter. I feel that all hon. members, who come from southern Ontario, regardless of party, should support this resolution. I know perfectly well that it will not get to a vote tonight, but whether or not they support it in the house they should support it privately. It is merely a question of having the Department of Transport look into the advisability of bringing down legislation in this regard. This evening I have simply passed out a few suggestions as to what I consider would be necessary, and even these would probably require some modification.

Mr. F. G. Robertson (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, Northumberland county which I have the honour to represent lies on the north shore of lake Ontario and for that reason I have a particular interest in the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Oxford, which is as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to provide for the establishment of a coastguard service on the great lakes of Canada.

At first glance this appeared to me to be a worthy objective, but tonight when I heard the hon. member put his reservations on the record I realized that he had cut his own resolution to pieces and it had therefore lost much of its effectiveness. The hon. member's first reservation was that he would confine this to the lower great lakes and to the summer months. Then there is to be nothing in the way of law enforcement or customs collections. When I read this resolution on the order paper I thought the hon. member had in mind patterning the Canadian coastguard service on that of the United States.

We all know that the United States coastguard service has an enviable reputation and is noted for its efficiency and on many occasions for its heroism. We do not have a unified service in Canada, but the various agencies of government are organized to perform much the same duties as those performed by the United States coastguard. It is my submission that what is being done in Canada does not suffer from comparison with what is being done by the United States coastguard service.

The agencies of government which are concerned in Canada are mainly the Department of National Defence, the Department of Transport and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The hon. member has referred to the lack of co-ordination in the Canadian system, but I submit that there is considerable evidence of co-ordination in our system. I should like to refer to what the Royal Canadian Air Force is doing in this regard, and I quote from an air force release No. 8620 dealing with search and rescue in Canada, as follows:

> From British Columbia to Newfoundland, from the 49th parallel to Canada's Arctic archipelago, men and women of the R.C.A.F.'s search and rescue organization stand ready to answer the call of distress.

And again:

> The R.C.A.F. is charged with the co-ordination and supervision of all search and rescue activity in Canada, and with the provision of all primary search and rescue facilities. This includes responsibility for search and rescue operations involving aircraft in distress, marine distress cases on the east and west coasts of Canada and portions of the great lakes, and, as a secondary role, provision of aid in any necessary circumstances. . . .
> Control is carried out from six major co-ordination centres at Torbay, Newfoundland, Halifax, Trenton (Ont.), Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver. Aircraft earmarked for mercy flights or search operations are stationed at Torbay, Newfoundland; Greenwood, N.S.; Goose Bay, Labrador; Trenton; Winnipeg; Churchill, Man.; Edmonton; Whitehorse, Y.T., and Vancouver, and although planes at these points held for specific search and rescue work are allowed to carry out other duties, they are never allowed to undertake jobs which would prevent them from being instantly ready for their primary responsibility.
> The list of primary facilities of the air force for search and rescue work also includes helicopters, and a group of specially trained airmen who have been given an intensive course in para-rescue work near Jasper, Alberta.

Mr. Nesbitt: May I ask the hon. member a question? The hon. member is giving some excellent figures, and I am sure we are very glad to have them, but I do not see that they have any application to the great lakes.

Mr. Robertson: My hon. friend will probably agree that I am keeping more to the subject matter of this resolution than he did himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Robertson: I continue to quote, Mr. Speaker:

> Nerve centres of the work are the major rescue co-ordination centres, for from them are directed all operations by search and rescue. Ready for instant use are lists of all service facilities ready to be called upon, including navy carrier planes in addition to R.C.A.F. aircraft, bodies of men for search parties, and vessels, as well as outstanding civilian facilities, such as charter companies, tugboats and the like.

At Trenton, Ontario, which is very close to my own county of Northumberland, there is the No. 102 communications and rescue flight. This unit is responsible for the co-ordination of all search and rescue work on the great lakes and for moving not only government ships but privately owned ships in case of accidents. I know that the services of helicopters are being used more and more in the search and rescue work, and I believe that the Department of Transport has under consideration the further use of helicopters in this connection.

The Royal Canadian Navy is also playing an important part in search and rescue work. It has numerous escort and patrol ships which can perform the same type of service. The Department of Transport itself carries out very important functions, such as putting down aids to navigation, marking channels, carrying supplies, icebreaking, and also furnishing very valuable weather forecasts from seven departmental stations. These weather forecasts are given three or four times each day.

The R.C.M.P. also operates patrol boats on the great lakes. I know that on lake Ontario there are two patrol boats operating. The first of these is stationed at Kingston, the Cutknife II. In Toronto another patrol boat is also operating. These R.C.M.P. patrol boats perform a number of coastguard services such as assisting ships in distress, investigating drownings, patrolling the waters when regattas are being held, assisting other police forces, including the United States coastguard service, and performing a check of pleasure boats on behalf of the customs department. It is therefore evident that we have an effective service already in existence in this country.

The hon. member talked a great deal about providing some protection for small pleasure boats on the great lakes. He evidently has in mind a method of policing small boats operated by tourists in the many resorts on the great lakes, but I think he will agree that the number of resorts where there is a concentration of tourist boats is so large that the government could not hope to provide boats at each of these places. I think it is also obvious that if we had a coastguard service on the great lakes, it would only be by the merest chance that one of these boats would be in a position to render assistance in the case of sudden upset or other dangers in which owners of small pleasure craft might find themselves.

I do not believe that by the methods he has suggested we could deal effectively with the small boat problem, which is the most frequent source of marine accidents. The United States still has many such accidents, although it has a very efficient coastguard service. The hon. member presented no statistics to prove that we have more such accidents than the United States. I think this house should have such evidence before making any decision on this matter.

In my opinion we can better deal with this situation by the following methods. The first is the education of the small boat owners. We should teach them safety measures. I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to a publication produced by the Department of Transport entitled, "Safety Afloat for Owners of Small Boats". This is a very fine publication dealing with the prevention of accidents in the small boat field in this country. On the first page of this publication I find the following:

> The great majority of these accidents can be prevented.
> This booklet has been prepared with that purpose in mind, to help spread the information that can drastically cut the needless toll in property damage and human suffering, and make for safety afloat for yourself, your family and others.

As I go through this publication I find that there is information regarding life-saving equipment, methods of fire prevention, and also information as to the dangers of overloading these small craft. There is also a very interesting section dealing with the rules of the road, and this gives very important information as to what the owners of these boats should do and what they should not do. I believe if the owners of small boats in Canada would read and follow the advice given in this publication, a great many of these accidents could be avoided.

A second method would be the regulation of the small boat operators themselves, and we do this through a licensing system. I find that, by law, boats fitted temporarily or permanently with motors of 10 horsepower or more are required to be licensed. Such licenses are obtainable free of charge from all customs officers in Canada, and the R.C.M.P. enforces the small vessel licensing regulations. Through a system of licensing and inspection we are able to make sure that the boats themselves are in a good state of repair.

A third method, I think, to prevent the loss of life would be by seeking the co-operation of local organizations, who would play their part in seeing that proper safety precautions were taken. I think the various tourist associations and the yacht clubs at various points on the great lakes could make a splendid contribution in this regard.

I would also draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the work done by the committee set up by the government in 1949 under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Clyne, who at that time was chairman of the Canadian maritime commission. The committee was set up by the government to, first, review the existing arrangements for search and rescue work in Canada and, second, make recommendations for improved and more efficient service. The committee reported that while on occasion valuable assistance had been rendered by the United States coastguard service to Canadian ships in Canadian waters, there was no evidence that a large number of casualties in Canadian waters had been prevented by the United States coastguard. Further, it was pointed out that United States ships had been assisted on many occasions by our own Canadian ships.

The committee reported that valuable work had been carried out by the R.C.A.F. search and rescue co-ordinating centres, and praised the work of those centres in detail. The committee recommended that co-ordinating centres be kept informed of the position and movement of all ships, and should be informed of any casualties. It also recommended that we should take the necessary action to ensure safety of life and, if possible, the prevention of damage or loss of any ship and its cargo. There was no recommendation by the committee for the establishment of a coastguard.

The report on marine casualties in the period between April 1946, and 1949 found that in the great majority of these accidents satisfactory assistance had been rendered by government-owned ships, by subsidized companies and by privately-owned ships in the vicinity. In those cases where loss of life had occurred it appeared that the majority of such losses could hardly have been avoided no matter how elaborate a system of search and rescue might have been available on the great lakes at that time.

At the outset of his speech the hon. member for Oxford referred to the cost of such an operation. He quoted the words of the minister in the debate last session to the effect that the establishment of a proper coastguard system would cost some $9 million to $12 million, and the maintenance of such a system would cost $3 million per year. This is a large sum of money; and while the hon. member did say that we should confine our efforts to the great lakes I submit that if we are going to set up a proper coastguard system it should extend to all the great lakes and to both the east and west coasts.

While the spending of this amount of money might seem to be justified to some, nevertheless I can think of other dangerous situations in this country where people are regularly losing their lives. If we have any such amount of money to spend I believe we could very well spend it on increasing the railway grade crossing fund, and thus eliminate many of the very dangerous crossings in this country.

I suggest it is not practical to organize a coastguard system on a national basis as outlined by the hon. member for Oxford tonight. The administrative costs would be far too high and out of all proportion to the service obtained. I believe such a system could be organized on a local basis, and I think the responsibility for so organizing rests on the local people in each community. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge there has been no request from the commercial shipping interests that such a coastguard service should be established. I think that is very strong evidence that the need for such an organization has not been fully proven by the hon. member for Oxford.

I indicated at the beginning of my remarks that I come from a riding located on lake Ontario. I can honestly say that I have had no suggestions from individuals, organizations or public bodies that a need for a coastguard service exists at the present time. If the need is not apparent in the area in which I live I cannot believe that it is as great as outlined by the hon. member for Oxford in other areas on the great lakes.

There is also the fact that a very large percentage of these accidents take place on the smaller inland lakes of Ontario. Surely the hon. member would not suggest that the federal government should set up an organization on these inland lakes. Finally, I would say that the functions which would be carried out by such a coastguard organization are now carried out efficiently and satisfactorily, and that the expense of setting up such an organization as that envisaged by the hon. member for Oxford would not be warranted or justified at the present time.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in rising to join briefly in the discussion of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Oxford proposing the establishment of a coastguard service on the great lakes, I want to say at the outset that I find myself very much in sympathy with the objective he has in mind. Some hon. members may recall that during the debate on the speech from the throne earlier this session I had occasion to refer to this subject matter as it affects the coastal areas of British Columbia. My remarks were made on Friday, January 13, and can be found at page 108 of Hansard. Inasmuch as I used my 40 minutes on that occasion in discussing the subject, I do not intend to repeat now the arguments I used then.

In view of the fact that I come from a constituency in the coastal area of British Columbia I am sure the hon. member for Oxford will appreciate that my interest in this subject extends somewhat beyond the immediate scope of his resolution, and perhaps he may not be surprised if I propose before I take my seat that the resolution should be broadened somewhat. Of course I am not in a position to analyse in any detail the pros and cons of the discussion that took place between the hon. member for Oxford and the hon. member for Northumberland, but I must say that as I listened to the communique, shall I say, that the hon. member for Northumberland read—

Mr. Hosking: He did not read it.

Mr. Barnett: —I found that it had a very familiar ring.

Mr. Hosking: Look at his notes and you will see he did not read it.

Mr. Barnett: It was very close to some of the descriptions I have heard of the functioning of the search and rescue unit and its coordinated service as applied to the Pacific coast of British Columbia. If my own analysis and comparison of the effectiveness of what we have in British Columbia is paralleled by the situation on the great lakes, then I can say that I think the hon. member for Oxford has real grounds for bringing forward this resolution respecting the area which is his particular concern. While, as I stated when I spoke earlier, I recognize some of the value of the search and rescue set-up under the R.C.A.F., I also recognize there is a great deal to be desired before we can have what I consider to be a proper marine rescue service in this country.

I was interested to note the reference made by the hon. member for Northumberland to that publication of the Department of Transport entitled "Safety Afloat". Even assuming that the government is not convinced at once of the advisability of taking certain action, I think perhaps one of the immediate values of this discussion is that it may serve to draw to the attention of a larger number of Canadians the unnecessary hazards to which they subject themselves when they go afloat. I have looked over that particular publication and I must say that I agree with the hon. member for Northumberland about it. I can only wish that it were receiving much more widespread attention than it has hitherto received and that the government, apart from any other consideration, were taking greater pains to ensure that all of those who are concerned were aware of it and were aware of the dangers to which attention is drawn. I certainly agree that much can be accomplished in reducing the hazards of sailing, either on the great lakes or on the sea coasts, by the proper type of educational program in this connection.

I must say that I was pleased to note last autumn that some modest step is being taken to draw to the attention of people the dangers of travelling by boat and that, among other things, steps are being taken to bring up to date the enforcement of the safety regulations with regard to the larger boats which come under licence classifications.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, if this matter is going to receive from the government consideration along the lines I argued earlier this session and along the lines that were argued by the hon. member for Oxford, I feel that anything that is done should be on a national basis. I hardly think we can expect our federal government to take under consideration a plan which is not drawn up along those lines. I should therefore like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron):

That the resolution be amended by inserting therein immediately after the words "great lakes" the words "and coastal waters".

I feel that this amendment does not in any way detract from the argument which has been presented to the house by the hon. member for Oxford, and in which he outlined the needs of his particular area. However, I feel that it may serve to bring into focus this problem of improved marine rescue service as a national problem which affects the people on the great lakes, the people on the coast of British Columbia and undoubtedly the people on the coasts of the Atlantic provinces of Canada.

This is a matter on which I have been frank to say that some things have been done, but to my mind not enough has yet been done. While the vote that is brought down by the Minister of National Defence in this connection for the work done under the R.C.A.F. is all well and good, it still does not bring the problem of marine rescue down to the level of the waves. I feel that the hon. member for Oxford had a legitimate argument when he said it did not create the kind of closely co-ordinated service which the people generally were aware of, and of which they knew how to take immediate advantage under the emergency situations that from time to time arise as far as our sea coasts or our great inland water areas are concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): It has been moved by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron):

That the resolution be amended by inserting therein immediately after the words "great lakes" the words "and coastal waters".

It is my opinion that this amendment is definitely out of order without 48 hours' notice. The appropriate citation reads as follows:

315. A modification of a notice of motion standing upon the notice paper is permitted, if the amended notice does not exceed the scope of the original notice.

But—and the word "but" is mine—:

A new notice must be given in the Votes and Proceedings, under standing order 45 when a material change is to be made to a notice of motion before it is taken up by the house.

It is my opinion that this amendment extending a resolution which applies to certain inland waters in order to make it apply to the waters of both the Pacific ocean and the Atlantic ocean is of a nature which would require 48 hours' notice, and therefore is not in order, under standing order 41.

Mr. A. E. Robinson (Bruce): At this late hour, Mr. Speaker, I shall cut down my remarks considerably. In taking part in this debate on the resolution moved by the hon. member for Oxford I should like to say that I believe he deserves a great deal of credit for bringing this matter to the attention of the government. After the experience he had in the navy during the last war I am sure he is quite competent to advance, as he has done, a great number of reasons why this coastguard service is a worthy project.

I should like to say that I am interested in this matter because the district from which I come has approximately 300 miles of shoreline. That shoreline is all on blue water. It is extremely attractive to summer tourists. It is gradually being filled up with summer visitors from outside. As you know, many of these visitors have their yachts with them, as well as their power boats. Many of the people who live in Bruce have their boats. In addition we have great numbers of fishing vessels which are out a great part of the year. As well, a number of United States yachts come over to visit us. I am sure these summer visitors are all welcome, and I think they enjoy themselves.

I should like to say that there is a crying need for some kind of co-ordination that has been spoken about by the hon. member for Oxford. I should also like to say that the number of these boats on lake Huron and Georgian bay is increasing each year. As the deep waterway is opened up there will be a greater need for such a coastguard service.

I would make one suggestion, and it is this. If the government see fit to inaugurate something along the lines spoken of by the hon. member for Oxford, during the peak of the summer season when the schools are closed I should hope they might see fit to train some of our sea cadets on some of those boats they will be using. It would be good training for all those boys who have the navy in view for their future life.

I should like to say that the remarks made by the hon. member for Northumberland indicated a defeatist attitude. He did not review any of the arguments made by the hon. member for Oxford, and I am sure he had a great deal of help in preparing that speech which he read off. If the government sees fit in future to take advice from the hon. member for Oxford, I hope that we in Bruce county will get some of the service that is coming to us. We have paid a great deal for service in other parts of the country, and have received none.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS' PENSIONS

Question No. 188—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many retired civil servants, whose pensions are less than $60 a month, are in each of the following age brackets: (a) 65 years of age or under; (b) 66-70; (c) 71-75; (d) 76-80; (e) 81-85; (f) over 85 years of age?
2. How many widows of retired civil servants, whose pensions are less than $60 a month, are in each of the following age brackets: (a) 65 years of age or under; (b) 66-70; (c) 71-75; (d) 76-80; (e) 81-85; (f) over 85 years of age?
3. How many retired civil servants, whose pensions are $60 a month or more, are in each of the following age brackets: (a) 65 years of age or under; (b) 66-70; (c) 71-75; (d) 76-80; (e) 81-85; (f) over 85 years of age?
4. How many widows of retired civil servants, whose pensions are $60 a month or more, are in each of the following age brackets; (a) 65 years of age or under; (b) 66-70; (c) 71-75; (d) 76-80; (e) 81-85; (f) over 85 years of age?

Answer by: Mr. Harris:

1 to 4.

	Under $60	Over $60
Annuitants by age group
65 and under	1,000	2,284
66 to 70	1,161	3,585
71 to 75	813	2,518
76 to 80	446	1,143
81 to 85	233	371
Over 85	93	166
	3,746	10,067
Widows by age group
65 and under	2,441	786
66 to 70	824	310
71 to 75	762	229
76 to 80	545	159
81 to 85	313	85
Over 85	218	36
	5,103	1,605

APPLE STATISTICS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 217—Mr. Purdy:

1. Based on the yields of the last five years what is the estimated cost per bushel, including containers, of producing commercial apples in Nova Scotia and delivering same to warehouses?
2. What was the average return per bushel less federal government assistance, during the same period?
3. What was the average government assistance per bushel during this period?
4. What was the production each year of the five years under review?

Answer by: Mr. Gardiner:

1. No information available.

2. Total production 1950-54, 8,659,000 bushels; Total value of production 1950-54, $7,944,000; Less federal assistance, $902,000; Value less federal assistance, $7,042,000;

Average per bushel, 81 cents.

3. Total production 1950-54, 8,659,000 bushels; Total federal assistance 1950-54, $902,000.

Average per bushel, 10 cents.

4. Production:	(000 bus.)
1950	2,250
1951	1,539
1952	1,626
1953	1,087
1954	2,157

TRANSPORT DIRECTIVES—GOODS IN BULK SHIPMENTS

Question No. 331—Mr. Argue:

1. What minimum quotas or ratios were established by the transport controller by order or through agreement, since August 1, 1955, for the shipment of goods in bulk?
2. How many orders or directives were issued by the transport controller since August 1, 1955, in relation to the shipment of goods in bulk by water transport?

Answer by: Mr. Marler:

1. None.
2. None.

BANK LOANS ON FARM-STORED WHEAT

Question No. 335—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many loans have been made to western farmers, by provinces, since the system of guaranteeing bank loans on farm-stored wheat has been in effect?
2. What is the total amount loaned in each of the provinces to date?

Answer by: Mr. Harris:

1 and 2:

	Loans	Amount
British Columbia	29	$ 21,963.72
Alberta	2,203	1,767,157.56
Saskatchewan	6,609	5,216,452.93
Manitoba	451	317,839.11
Total	9,292	$7,323,413.32

As of January 31, 1956.

FEED GRAIN SHIPMENTS, QUEBEC—SUBSIDY PAYMENTS

Question No. 336—Mr. Boisvert:

What subsidy, during 1955, was paid to farmers of the province of Quebec, through implementation of the feed grain assistance grants?

Answer by: Mr. Gardiner:

Freight assistance was paid during the calendar year 1955 on shipments of western feed grain into Quebec in the amount of $7,405,908.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 27, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Second and third reports of sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government. —Mr. Cavers.

TRADE

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—REPORTED NECESSITY FOR CHANGE IN CANADA'S POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house if the dispatch from Geneva appearing in today's press is correct when it states that the renewal of the wheat agreement depends upon a change in the position Canada has taken?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I read the report in the Gazette. It is not accurate. The discussions on the wheat agreement are reaching their final stage. I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly of the final decision. Mr. Sharp, my deputy minister, arrived home this morning and I have discussed the situation with him. I do not know that I can say more than that no decision has been reached as yet by the assembly.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Well, Mr. Speaker, do I take it then that the report is incorrect that Canada is holding out for a ceiling of $2.05 per bushel?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The report is incorrect to that extent, and the report is incorrect in other directions as well. I cannot say more than that we hope to have a decision by the time the house reassembles after the Easter holidays.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INDIANS AND ESKIMOS—CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT ON D.E.W. LINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the question asked last Friday by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) with regard to the employment of Indians and Eskimos on the D.E.W. line.

The arrangements made between the government of Canada and the government of the United States provide that construction contractors will be required to give preference to Canadian labour and that the rates of pay and working conditions will be set, after consultation with the Canadian Department of Labour, in accordance with the Canadian Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. This applies to all Canadians employed including Indians and Eskimos.

Contractors are supplied by the Department of Labour with schedules establishing classifications of labour, hours of work and rates of pay for all Canadian workers employed.

Liaison between the Department of Labour and D.E.W. line contractors is maintained through a senior officer of my department at Ottawa, and all relations between the contractors and employees with respect to the observance of wage rates and hours of labour are under continual supervision by two northern service officers of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

These arrangements will also apply to the contract for the maintenance and operation of the D.E.W. line.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

D.E.W. LINE—APPLICATION OF ACT TO EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to unemployment insurance, I should like to answer the questions addressed to the Prime Minister by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar as to how unemployment insurance applies to D.E.W. line workers.

Both United States contractors and Canadian contractors engaged in the construction or maintenance of the D.E.W. line and similar projects must comply with the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act of Canada. Most of the employees who have been engaged on the construction are Canadians.

The Unemployment Insurance Act requires the contractors, whether American or Canadian, to insure their Canadian civilian employees unless they are excluded by some provision of the act such as the wage ceiling.

This excludes salaried employees earning in excess of $4,800 a year. However, persons paid by the hour, by the day or at piece rates are insurable regardless of the amount of earnings.

Most of the Canadian civilian employees engaged on these projects have been brought from populated areas and the regulations provide that such persons, if normally engaged in insurable employment, continue to be insured even when transferred to remote locations in northern Canada. However, persons locally employed, if the employment is north of the 55th parallel of latitude where there are only two or three isolated industrial pockets, and if they do not ordinarily work in insurable employment but depend for their livelihood on non-insurable occupations, such as hunting and fishing, are not insurable when employed on a temporary basis on construction projects of this nature. There is only employment for a very small number of such persons, and the great bulk of the Canadian employees are insured by their employers.

All workers are covered for workmen's compensation.

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISIONS FOR PERSONS DENIED BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I wonder if the minister would be able to bring down tomorrow, so we may have it before we rise for Easter, the answer to the question I asked him on February 15, as reported on page 1196 of Hansard, having to do with persons who were refused unemployment insurance benefits under section 45 (2) of the act but who may have had their benefits restored under the reinterpretation of section 119 (b) of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Gregg: I will look at the question and give my hon. friend a report on it tomorrow.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS MADE IN INCREASING QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister say what progress is being made in increasing the grain quotas in western Canada, and whether the 1 bushel quota may be increased before seeding commences?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement as of March 21. It shows 340 stations on a 4 bushel per specified acre quota; 570 stations on a 3 bushel per specified acre quota; 812 stations on a 2 bushel per specified acre quota; and 343 stations on a 1 bushel per specified acre quota. So far as grades will permit—and my hon. friend will realize that it is essential to get forward the grades that are required—the effort is always to raise the stations with the lowest quota.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether the minister could say whether the board has experienced any difficulty in obtaining box cars for its present commitments?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, so many people have been making statements on box cars that I hesitate to raise my voice, so I think I shall not answer.

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if there is any significance to the press report that special quotas will be given to farmers who are in the flooded areas, in order that they might get out some of their grain?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The situation is being watched carefully. Arrangements have been made so that, if there is evidence that flooding will take place, the grain will be moved out quickly.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN PROCEDURE TO AVOID CONTROVERSY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Pallett (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Are any steps being taken to change the procedure in awarding decorations so that similar controversies to that which has arisen around the recent award of the George medal will not recur?

Hon. Roch Pinard (Secretary of State): I do not think that any change as suggested by the hon. member would necessarily prevent controversy.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Friday, March 23, consideration of the motion of Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. Claude Ellis (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance on March 20 has received throughout the country the very cool reception which it deserves. It is generally accepted by the public that this is a stand-pat budget, with the obvious intention that next year tax concessions that should have been made this year will be advanced as bait before the next general election.

That such a vitally important matter as the budget of this country should depend in such large measure on the political whims of the Liberal party is a source of deep regret. I feel that this time next year, when the pre-election budget is brought down, the public of Canada will recognize the stratagem in deferring tax relief which we had every reason to expect should have been made this year. Then everything will be placed in its proper prospective.

I feel that there is a tendency on the part of the press and the general public to view the budget primarily in terms of adjustments made in the level of taxation. Important as that aspect may be, I think we have to recognize that the budget is the chief instrument of government policy in dealing with the pressing problems facing the country at the present time; and the worth of this budget will depend upon the ability of the government to come to grips with the problems presently facing the Canadian people.

I insist that the problems which faced parliament last year are still with us. To some extent these problems have been aggravated. One need only look at the very large segment of our population that is engaged in agriculture. We find from figures released by the dominion bureau of statistics that net farm income, which stood at $1,127 million in 1951, has declined precipitously each succeeding year and that in the last year for which full figures are available, net farm income in the prairie provinces had dropped to some $376 million. That is a decline of over 67 per cent. At the same time costs of production have increased nearly fourfold. Therefore one can readily evaluate the situation confronting agriculture in this country and can determine whether or not the government, through the budget, is alive to the situation and prepared to undertake measures to bring about a reversal of this dangerous trend.

Then, of course, we have the question of unemployment. I suppose the government feels that there no longer is a problem in Canada because there are only a little over half a million people looking for employment, whereas last year the figure went a little higher. Hon. members will recall that when we discussed the question of unemployment last year it appeared quite obvious that the government was willing to accept as natural a very large degree of unemployment. Economists tell us that in a free labour market there will be at any given time a small group of people who are changing jobs or who, at a given time, are looking for employment. But at no time should that number exceed 2 per cent or at the most 3 per cent of the labour force, and any time unemployment figures exceed that percentage we are faced not with frictional unemployment of a regional or seasonal nature but with general unemployment.

If the government feel they can take satisfaction from the fact that this year the number of jobless rose only to 515,000, then in my opinion they are indicating a most callous disregard for this major problem. I ask all members of the house to view the budget objectively and in conjunction with any other legislation proposed by the government this year, and ask themselves whether the government is doing anything toward the solution of these two basic problems, the question of declining farm income on the one hand and widespread unemployment on the other.

It is the custom of government apologists to rationalize unemployment by suggesting that because it is regional or seasonal there is nothing that can be done about it. I question the validity of that argument. In a country such as Canada we are naturally going to be faced with the problem of regional and seasonal unemployment, and that is all the more reason the government should be taking appropriate steps to meet the situation. When we find in many parts of Canada distressed areas because of the closing down of industry, then it is the responsibility of the government to do something through a public investment program to provide alternative employment. The government cannot argue that seasonal or regional unemployment is like the weather and nothing can be done about it. Indeed, the solution of frictional unemployment in this country is of major concern to all thinking people, and it ought to be part and parcel of an over-all government policy aimed at eliminating unemployment in this country.

I think Canadians generally accept the principle that there is no reason for unemployment in the country and that full employment should be made the conscious effort of government policy. Yet what is the situation? It is far removed from the years that immediately followed world war II, when the government had enough bold plans for providing full employment, and when they had this shelf of public works that was going to be brought into being immediately unemployment became of serious consequence. We find that was just so much window dressing, so much talk to be conveniently trotted out before a general election and immediately forgotten when the smoke of electoral battle cleared away.

We in the C.C.F. movement recognize the need for action in these fields. I want to suggest that, in looking at the budget objectively, we must consider it in relation to the economic difficulties facing the country at the present time. Then there is another aspect to which we must give careful consideration, and that is the question of our whole tax structure. It is not my intention to deal in any detail with this matter. Our leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, dealt very ably with this matter in his address a week ago. At that time he pointed out the most glaring inequities in our tax structure.

Specifically I believe some mention was made of dividend credits. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar pointed out in this house that so unfair and so iniquitous is our tax structure that a married man with no children and earning $3,000 a year is required to pay $150 in income tax, yet a man could be making $14,000 and pay only $60. He could be getting $14,000 in dividends and be required to pay only the social security portion of the income tax, namely $60. There is something wrong with a tax structure that permits those who derive their income from dividends on invested capital to get off virtually scot free while the man with a low income who earns his money is required to pay income tax. I think it is generally agreed that originally the income tax was intended as a device to tax the wealthy, but over the years there has been a tendency to reduce the level at which income tax is to be paid, so that today many families who actually are able to do no more than provide the necessities of life are required to pay income tax.

Another inequity of the tax structure had to do with depletion allowances. Here again there are tax concessions to those who could well afford to make a fair contribution to the public purse. Then of course there is the question of capital gains. Here is a field in which the reluctance or the refusal of this government to give some consideration to requiring Canadians who make money through capital gains to make their fair contribution to the tax coffers of this country indicates where the sympathies of this government lie. Certainly they are not with the low income group. They are very interested to go out of their way to extend tax concessions and to do everything within their power to assist those who are well able to look after themselves, while they consistently refuse to grant the type of tax relief which will benefit the small man in this country.

We in this group recognize that there is great need for an increase in the exemption levels which have existed over the years. We have insisted that there should be an increase of $1,000 in the income tax exemption levels for both single and married people. While we advocate that, we recognize that the only way you are going to bring about a measure of tax relief to a great percentage of the people of Canada is through a reduction in the sales and excise taxes. In spite of all the glowing talk of government apologists about the prosperous times in this country, let us not forget that there are many families throughout Canada that have never earned sufficient money to be required to pay any income tax at all. If you are to be fair, if you are to be just and give tax relief where it is needed the most, then you will have to do something about reducing the sales and excise taxes.

As far as capital gains are concerned, I was particularly interested last year in reading a little account in the U. S. News and World Report, indicating the part that capital gains play in the building up of great fortunes. They give a very good example. Executives of certain corporations there in April of 1951 had an option to buy 5,000 shares of stock at $99 a share. The option to purchase expired in five years if not exercised. In May of the same year the corporation split its stock two shares for one. Those directors could now buy 10,000 shares of stock at $49.50 a share. That was the price of the stock split. In January of 1953 the price went up to $67.38 per share. The directors took up the option to buy 10,000 shares at $49.50 a share. On a total price of $495,000 the paper profit realized in this instance was $178,800. In May of 1954 the stock went up to $129 a share and the corporation split the shares again two for one. The stock was now worth $64.50 a share and the 20,000 shares in existence had a total value of $1,290,000, and the profit was $795,000. Then in February, 1955, the market price of the stock was $132.50. The directors sold 20,000 shares at this price and received $2,650,000. This constituted a profit of $2,155,000. In the United States they have a capital gains tax of 25 per cent. Therefore the director paid his tax of $538,750 and ended up with a clear profit of $1,616,250.

The same pattern is true in this country. The only difference is that in this country there is no capital gains tax. In other words, they actually do better in these monopolies in Canada because of the absence of this very necessary form of taxation, yet the government will hold the line in tax concessions. There are no reductions in sales tax, but at the same time the government refuses to place a proper share of the burden on the backs of those who are well able to take that responsibility.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at this budget from the standpoint of the general tax structure. If we do that we will not be satisfied waiting for another year when the Minister of Finance will come out just before the next election and offer us a little bit of a tax concession. What we need is a revamping of our tax structure in order that those who are better able to bear the burden will be called upon to pay a proper share.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are one or two comments I should like to make about the unemployment situation. I referred briefly to the need for a public investment program, because if we are to rely upon private enterprise to do it we will wait a long time. I think the resolution now before the house having to do with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines is a specific instance where private capital refused to do the job and we were forced into the humiliating position of having to go outside this country for capital. The obvious answer in that instance would be public investment, a publicly-owned pipe line. There are many projects in this country which could be undertaken at the present time which would add to the productive capacity of Canada, which would add to our material wealth and which would build up the country. These could only be done through a proper program of public investment.

In my own province we have had frequent reference to the South Saskatchewan river dam. It has been made a political football by the Liberal party. They throw it out before elections time after time in an effort to win votes, and they have played both ends against the middle. A year ago they said the province of Saskatchewan was not prepared to pay enough, and I think last year the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) said he thought the province was paying too much.

Figures were produced last year as to the cost of this project. The Minister of Agriculture now suggests that these figures are too high. He has indicated that he knows people who will do the job for $83 million. I suggest that he should take the house into his confidence and let us know who these people are, because if the job could be done for that amount I see no reason why there could not be an immediate agreement to go ahead with this project at the present time.

I realize, of course, that various opinions have been expressed in the province of Saskatchewan by supporters of this government in Ottawa. The leader of the Liberal party in the province of Saskatchewan has been going about the province making speeches. It has been his practice to pass off the dam as being of no consequence while speaking in one area, and in the next place he suggests that he is all in favour of it. He made an extremely significant statement, however, when he said that "we will never get the dam until we kick this government out of here", meaning the provincial government. When I suggest that this measure has been used as a political football by the Liberal party I think there is ample evidence to back up my statement.

I believe there are many other fields in which the federal government ought to be taking action in order to develop this country. Many of the provinces would prefer to go ahead and develop their resources but they lack the fiscal power to do the job. There is no doubt that the people in the province of Saskatchewan find themselves in that position. We want to develop our resources, but the province does not have the fiscal power. We are not unique in this respect, because no province has the necessary financial power to do a large-scale job of public investment; consequently, as second best, it is necessary to rely on outside capital. The fault lies not with the provinces, whether it be the province of British Columbia or any other province in Canada. The responsibility lies squarely on the shoulders of the government in Ottawa.

There are one or two other matters I would like to raise at this time. I want to make reference now to a matter which has attracted my attention since coming into this house. The growth of the trade union movement in Canada has of course brought about a new concept in employer-employee relationships. The old concept of master and servant has been replaced by collective bargaining between management and labour. No longer is the employee in organized industry in constant fear of unfair treatment or unjust dismissal. As a member of his union working with his fellows in the union he is able to meet with management and evolve a satisfactory working agreement mutually acceptable to both sides governing such matters as wages, hours of work, holidays, seniority, grievance procedure and all the other matters that have vexed relationships between management and labour. As a result labour has become a partner in industry, in large measure, and is working more efficiently in the industrial field.

In spite of the fact that in the early days employers fought tooth and nail to halt the growth of the trade union movement, and despite the fact that some still resist it, many enlightened employers realize that unions are here to stay and collective bargaining procedures are always going to be with us. The unfortunate thing is that there are large groups of Canadian employees who are denied the rights of collective bargaining. I say they are rights because they are rights which are guaranteed by law in many instances. I believe union recognition has become more than just a sanction on the part of an employer who has to deal with the rights of the employees in his plant. Collective bargaining has been sanctioned by law in Canada.

Well, what about the civil servants? I take pride in the fact that the province of Saskatchewan is the only province in Canada which permits proper collective bargaining procedure for civil servants.

An hon. Member: Oh, you are crazy.

Mr. Ellis: I hear a dissenting voice on my left. I am going to deal with that by quoting from an organization which represents the civil service in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario. I also understand that the organization is reaching into other parts of Canada and will eventually represent all civil servants at the federal, provincial and municipal levels. The Canadian council of public employee associations held a meeting in Regina—

An hon. Member: Where is that?

Mr. Ellis: —about a year and a half ago. As I pointed out, this organization represents some 40,000 public servants, employees of provincial governments, including the provincial governments of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario. The council passed the following resolution:

> Whereas provincial public servants in all provinces of Canada, except Saskatchewan, have no negotiation, conciliation or arbitration rights in dealing with their employers, and
> Whereas, we believe this condition to be a negation of democratic principles and a denial of the right granted by law to other organized bodies of the working society,
> Therefore, be it resolved that this council go on record approving in principle of the belief that negotiation, conciliation and arbitration rights be granted by provincial governments to their employees.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I ask my hon. friend to repeat the name of the organization?

Mr. Ellis: It is the Canadian council of public employee associations. This resolution was passed on August 30, 1954.

I mentioned the fact that the provincial governments were mentioned in their resolution. This was because at that time only provincial representatives were in attendance, and they did not go beyond making recommendations to their own governments. However, the same principle is involved in relation to the federal government. There is no reason why federal civil servants should be denied collective bargaining rights.

In my own province we placed no obstacles in the way of collecting bargaining procedures, and we also were willing and anxious to treat our public servants in the province in the same way we expect any decent employer in the country to treat his employees.

Mr. Hahn: Then would you explain its application to the bus drivers in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Ellis: My hon. friend is asking a question which I think he might more properly elaborate into a speech a little later on. I suggest that when the province of British Columbia gets around to granting collective bargaining rights for provincial civil servants the hon. member will then have a reason for making an interjection of that kind. In the meantime I suggest that you put pressure on the Social Credit government in British Columbia to do the decent thing for their public servants by granting them collective bargaining rights.

We in this group are in the position of being able to come before this house and make our point quite clear, because we have done what we have preached in this house. We have granted to our public servants full collective bargaining rights. We suggest that what has been done in our province can be done in every other province in this country, and can be done here in Ottawa by the federal government. It ill behooves anyone from a province with an anti-labour government like the Social Credit government in British Columbia to make absurd interjections like that.

The only way we are going to bring about more co-operation with and a better spirit among our public servants is to grant them collective bargaining rights. I hear these frequent interjections, and I realize that I have touched on a sore spot as far as the Social Crediters are concerned. Of course their anti-labour policies are known from one end of this country to the other. They are trying to out-Tory the Tories in their anti-labour policy. This is self-evident and needs no elaboration by me at the present time.

I am suggesting that the government could avoid many of the difficulties which it now encounters when dealing with its public servants if it agreed with the employee organizations to sit around a table in a proper spirit of collective bargaining in an effort to arrive at a settlement and wage contract which would be mutually acceptable to both sides. We would then have something in the nature of proper employee-employer relationship in this country.

There is one reference I should like to make to the budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance, in connection with housing. The minister pointed out that in the last year there had been an increase in residential construction, and that perhaps for the first time we had reached the stage where home construction was keeping pace with or perhaps staying a little in advance of new family units in Canada.

The main problem in so far as housing in this country is concerned still remains unsolved. There are over half a million homes in this country which are certainly in need of replacement. Pardon me, I should not say replacement; according to the brief presented to the government by the Canadian Congress of Labour a year ago there were some half million dwellings needed to meet the backlog of housing requirements in Canada.

What steps have been taken by the government to meet this great backlog? We know that the population of Canada is growing, and that the new homes which the Minister of Finance talked about are needed to keep pace with that growing population. But we still face a tremendous backlog of housing need in Canada. Beyond the need for new residential construction is a great need for homes to replace older homes, many unfit for human habitation, and many in such a condition as to create a hazard, particularly with regard to fires. I think the government should take these factors into consideration.

There are almost 1,000,000 homes in Canada now overcrowded or in need of major repairs; there are some 900,000 homes with no inside running water, and almost 1,500,000 homes with no bath or shower facilities for exclusive family use. There are over 1,200,000 homes with no flush toilets; nearly 600,000 with no hot water supply; over 1,700,000 with no electric or gas stoves; 1,757,000 with no mechanical refrigeration, and over 1,700,000 without furnaces.

Think of what these needs mean in terms of jobs, when we have an unemployment situation in Canada. There is no lack of work to be done, in fact there is a vast amount of work to be done. Then we should think also in terms of the danger to human life that exists in many of these dwellings.

In recent months we have been shocked by the tragic fires which have occurred in the Ottawa district and throughout Canada. The death toll this year has been shocking. I think it was on March 16 that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar asked the Prime Minister whether he would not consider taking the initiative in doing something to bring an end to these tragic fires. As usual, the Prime Minister shrugged off the responsibility and said this was purely a matter for the provinces. I suggest that it is not a matter purely for the provinces. I speak only from my reading of press reports, from seeing pictures were published, but these indicate that many of these homes which were destroyed were substandard. The inquest reports and reports of inquiries that have been held almost invariably indicate that the dwellings were substandard. We are told that in many cases the walls were nothing more than pressed paper. Once a fire started there was little or no hope of the occupants escaping. Is it any wonder that we have had such an appalling loss of human life, particularly of children who have perished this winter in fires right here in the Ottawa area?

What is the answer? Apart from the precautions which an individual must take at all times, the answer seems to be to do something about the substandard housing that exists in this country. As long as people are required to live in houses that are mere shells with partitions made of pressed paper, we cannot expect to avoid tragic fires like these. If the federal government are anxious and willing to do something about this great problem they should start by doing something in the field of public housing over and above what is done under the National Housing Act.

As far as the National Housing Act is concerned, hon. members will recall that when the amended act was brought down in 1954 we of the C.C.F. group had certain criticisms to offer. We pointed out that the legislation would not assist the people of Canada who needed help, that is those in the very low income groups. We pointed out that the interest rate was excessive, particularly when the lending institutions, the banks, were having their loans guaranteed at the borrower's expense. There was a guarantee that there would be no loss to the banks.

Under those circumstances there seemed to be no fair relationship between the risk involved and the interest rate charged, as the banks were taking no risk whatsoever. There seemed to be no justification for the interest rate provided in the legislation. Since that time the government has seen fit to increase the interest rate still more.

We pointed out at the time that housing needs in Canada were such that the National Housing Act would be powerless to deal with the basic problem. What has happened since?

I have here a table based on Canadian housing statistics for the third quarter of 1955, published by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I should like to have unanimous consent to place this on Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. gentleman unanimous consent to place this table on the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ellis: The table is as follows:

GROSS FAMILY INCOME GROUPS AS A PERCENTAGE OF TOTAL BORROWERS UNDER THE NATIONAL HOUSING ACTS

Gross Family Income	1948	1949	1950	1951	1952	1953	1954	1955 1st and 2nd quarters
	%	%	%	%	%	%	%	%
Under $2,099	8·9	2·9	0·7	0·2	0·05	0·02	0·02	0·01
$2,100–$2,399	13·5	8·0	3·0	0·8	0·2	0·06	0·03	0·04
$2,400–$2,699	21·5	19·0	10·8	4·1	0·9	0·4	0·1	0·08
$2,700–$2,999	12·4	13·5	11·5	8·0	2·1	0·9	0·3	0·2
$3,000–$3,499	18·3	23·0	25·2	23·2	13·3	6·96	3·61	2·7
$3,500–$3,999	9·8	12·1	17·3	18·9	22·0	17·10	11·58	10·52
$4,000–$4,999	8·7	12·2	17·0	21·8	30·3	36·86	34·38	32·90
$5,000 and over	6·9	9·3	14·5	23·0	31·3	37·3	49·89	53·52

I would draw to hon. members' attention the fact that over the years there has been a marked increase in the use of N.H.A. loans by those in the higher income groups, and there has been a gradual tapering off of borrowers in the lower income groups, so that they are almost negligible. As a matter of fact, home-owner borrowers with gross family incomes below $3,500 comprised only 4·1 per cent of total borrowers under N.H.A. in 1954. By mid-1955 this percentage figure had dropped to 3 per cent. That bears out the points we made at that time, that the National Housing Act, however it may assist a small group in the country, has failed to meet the needs of people earning less than $3,500 a year. They are the people who are forced to live in these substandard homes of which I spoke a moment ago.

The government cannot feel that the National Housing Act is meeting the problem. What we need at the present time is a housing program that will be tailored to meet the needs of the people who need the housing most. We have a tragic situation where so many of our people unable to raise the money for the down payment are paying rents greatly in excess of what they would have to pay in payments on homes. I received a letter the other day from a constituent who informed me that if he could raise the down payment he would only have to make monthly payments of $72 on a house; but he could not raise the down payment. In the meantime he is paying over $100 in rent, and he cannot save any money as long as he must go on paying rent.

Something must be done by this government to provide for the housing needs of these low income groups. In many instances, of course, owing to the transitory nature of their employment, low rental housing would have to be provided for some people. In any event the time has come when the government should give serious consideration to revamping its housing program to provide for the needs of low income groups in this country.

I know my time is fleeting, Mr. Speaker, but before I sit down I want to make some reference to a very important matter. I am sure all hon. members were disappointed and shocked the other day at the news that another atomic test had been held within the Soviet union. I am sure thinking people throughout the world will deplore this madness in persisting in experimenting with these horrific weapons. Members of this group have drawn this matter to the attention of the house on former occasions, pointing out that the risks involved are not commensurate with any foreseeable advantages to be gained.

Surely we have gone far enough in this field. No one can say with absolute certainty the effects these experiments are going to have on the human race. Many scientists are very apprehensive about the genetic and other effects on human beings. There may be those who will disclaim any ill effects from these particular experiments, but I suggest, whether these experiments are conducted, as the most recent ones were, by the Soviet union, or by the United States or by Great Britain, this parliament ought to make its wishes known and make the strongest representations to the governments concerned, asking them on behalf of the Canadian people to cease forthwith any further tests of this type.

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would be very remiss indeed in my duty, coming from a border riding, if I did not say at the very outset a few words pertaining to the visit of our Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) with the President of the United States, Mr. Eisenhower. At Niagara Falls we pride ourselves on the rainbow which is visible at most times of the day and which is a connecting link, and indeed a symbol of friendship and peace, between two great countries and two great friends. Certainly the visit of our Prime Minister and his external affairs minister with the President of the United States is a symbolization of those characteristics that we in Canada wish to extend to the great United States; peace and friendship. I know we all wish the Prime Minister well in his visit.

Contrary to what was said by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, I want to compliment the government, and indeed the Minister of Labour, for doing their utmost to maintain full employment as far as possible. It is my firm belief that the people of Canada have the ability, the courage, the determination and the ambition to produce on their farms and in their factories, as far as possible, increased quantities of goods and services for ever-increasing numbers of people.

Many people have asked, and rightly so, what does it take to make a job? In the first place it takes a man or woman who cannot be employed unless people are willing to buy the thing he or she produces or unless people need his or her services. So jobs and manufacturing are the end result of a number of things. Before there can be a manufacturing job there must be an idea for a product that people want, and there must be people willing to risk their savings in furnishing capital to develop that idea. Then before there can be a job there must be customers. When a customer buys a product, the money he spends creates work; work for the people in the plants; work for those who supply raw materials; work for those who sell and service that product.

In the end it is the customer who makes the job. It is by careful estimates of the number of customers that management is able to plan that work and the number of jobs that will be created. To begin with, someone or some group of people must have sufficient confidence in the products, in the requirement for services of one form or another, and sufficient confidence in the people who are going to manufacture and market those products or who will be providing the various services, to risk their savings in financing the undertaking. Money must be provided for plants and machinery. This amounts to a considerable sum for every job. Everyone who has savings at work expects some return for their use. Therefore, in order that jobs may be created and may continue to exist, there must be a chance to make a reasonable profit.

So, to sum up, jobs are the end result of something; the result of a combination of capital, management and opportunity, with some catalyst thrown in to make them fuse and function. This fourth factor, however, can hardly be described in one word. Its foundation, of course, is confidence and belief in the future of enterprise that is established by sound national and economic policies.

Manufacturing as a whole provides over one and a half million jobs in Canada today. Of this total the automotive manufacturing concerns absorb a little over 350,000 men—in short, about one job in every 15 jobs in the country. This does not include, of course, garages, service stations or supplies such as steel mills, manufacturers of textiles, tires, etc. Last year in this debate I referred to the tax on automobiles, and I was in hopes that something would be done in this regard to make it easier and cheaper for the average man to buy his much needed motor car. I thought this would tend also to increase the business of the automobile manufacturers.

The outlook for the motor car business is excellent for many years to come because of the vast economic expansion we are undergoing, and the job of building cars and trucks will be a major industrial item in Canada for an indefinite period to come. Judging from the fact that this is a big business and that there are over 4,000 automobile dealers in Canada, over 14,000 independent garages and over 16,000 service stations throughout our great dominion, it is quite obvious that the sale and servicing of motor vehicles offers employment in a wide field of occupations.

I should like to say that there are countless opportunities not only in the automotive business but in industry as well for every man and woman in this country who wants to make a go of it. We as Canadians have the qualities that make for greatness. These qualities are obvious to anyone who has studied the characteristics of the people who go to make up this great nation. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that last year's records will show that when the tax on automobiles was reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent it resulted in increased business, increased sales and thereby an increase in tax revenue.

I am still of the opinion that this tax is not only a special tax but that it is unfair, unjust and economically unsound. I say that if this tax could be removed it would help materially to stimulate sales and would thereby certainly maintain more production and more employment. This is not a one-way street as far as this subject is concerned, and I do not think people should expect the government to go all the way. I think the average car buyer realizes, thinks and believes, and rightly so, that the automobile manufacturer must go part of the way. Therefore I believe that if the government and the automobile manufacturer would each go part of the way it would be a lot easier for the average man to own a motor car, and to buy it within the resources of his pocketbook.

I am anxious that the Minister of Finance give consideration to the paying of taxes on all federal buildings and land. The reduction from 4 per cent to 2 per cent passed at the last session was to broaden the scope of the grants so that a greater number of municipalities might qualify. I think the two main factors in the legislation are that the percentage factor was reduced from 4 per cent to 2 per cent, and the legislation did liberalize the formula to increase the payments by relating the grant to the ratio of federal property to taxable property only, instead of the ratio of federal property to taxable and federal property combined. This, of course, removes the 75 per cent factor, so that the combined effect would be to calculate the grants at the full real property tax rate.

I felt that this bill indicated that the government recognized the fact that municipalities were entitled to taxation revenue. If this is true, Mr. Speaker, I say why not full taxation? Why not go all the way? I cannot understand why special treatment should be given to crown agencies, and in saying that I include not only federal but provincial agencies as well, since all too frequently these agencies are engaged in activities that are definitely in competition with private agencies which, of course, must of necessity pay the full amount of taxation levied in the area in which they operate.

You cannot overlook the fact, Mr. Speaker, that federal and provincial properties are entitled to and receive exactly the same services as any other property but pay nothing toward their cost. Ninety-nine times out of 100 the federal or provincial building is situated on one of the choicest locations in the municipality and immediately it is taken out of taxation, thus reducing the potential revenue of the municipality. To supply the necessary services I have just mentioned the municipalities' prime source of revenue is the taxpayer, and certainly everyone must agree that the ratepayer can stand no further demands upon his finances.

The Municipal Grants Act amendment may sound very good in the press but I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that as far as the city of Niagara Falls and the township of Stanford are concerned, both of which I am extremely proud of and both of which are known the world over, it does not mean a thing. The federal assessment in the city of Niagara Falls, although a very sizeable sum, does not come within the required percentage to entitle that city to any grant. In Niagara Falls alone we have well over $700,000 of federal exempt assessment out of a total of some $16 million exempt assessment. I admit that of this total exemption the province has the lion's share, approximately $12,500,000, but as far as federal property is concerned nothing is received by way of federal aid.

May I crave the patience and indulgence of hon. members of the house, Mr. Speaker, to cite a case in point pertaining to the city of Niagara Falls. The loss to the city by receiving a grant from the Ontario hydro in lieu of taxes last year was almost $250,000. This was clearly shown by a study of the assessment roll. This loss has steadily increased during the last few years as the value of both hydro and other properties has increased with the grant at the same time remaining almost at a stationary level.

At the present time the city of Niagara Falls and the township of Stamford each receives the sum of $75,000 as a grant in lieu of taxes. This grant has been in vogue for many years and it does not seem fair, in view of the increase in property value and the fact that the value of our dollar has gone down, that we should have to suffer such a loss. In Niagara Falls and Stamford we simply have to face it. Through no fault of their own both these places are in a very poor position from the standpoint of assessment value. If I might mention it in passing, the Rainbow bridge only pays the sum of $12,000 per annum in lieu of taxation. This amount was based on the assessment away back in the early forties, and Niagara Falls is dropping thousands of dollars a year in that respect.

This does not seem fair to me when the Peace bridge, which occupies almost the same amount of land as the bridge at Niagara Falls, pays to the municipality of Fort Erie—and I am very happy that it does—the sum of $40,000 a year, which will be increased by an escalator clause to $60,000 a year in the year 1962. We have a case in point of the stores under the Rainbow bridge which are controlled by the department of highways of the province of Ontario. When the stores were erected the provincial government agreed to pay the city of Niagara Falls $8,000 a year in lieu of taxation. That has continued for some years, but the city was notified by the provincial minister concerned that at the end of 1955 this sum would cease to be paid.

In comparison with the sum of $75,000 a year paid to Niagara Falls and the township of Stamford, may I say that even in the year 1953 the Canadian Niagara Power Company paid in taxes to the township of Stamford over $288,000. This plant is only rated at 100,000 horsepower, compared with the terrific amount of horsepower developed by the hydro plants.

We in Niagara Falls are very happy to have these government employees. We have over 400 federal government employees and about 850 men and women working for the power commission. We are very proud of them. They are making exceptionally fine citizens and are heartily welcome in our city. But we definitely feel that from both the federal and provincial governments we should receive some compensation for the services we have to provide. I want to say here that the premier of Ontario is continually crying to high heaven for more aid from Ottawa. Everybody knows that the municipalities are the prime responsibility of the provincial government, and I submit to the premier of the province of Ontario that he should practice what he preaches and see to it that the municipalities receive the much-needed aid they so justly deserve.

I would not want to let this opportunity go by without at least saying a word about the civil servants I have in my riding. Probably no other member of the house has more immigration and customs officials in his riding. They are the first official greeters of visitors to this great Dominion of Canada and are doing a splendid job. They are ambassadors of friendship. I have had many tourists tell me when they come across one of the bridges that their first welcome to Canada was the one they appreciated most, and how complimentary and courteous these officers were at the various ports of entry.

I think we as members and supporters of this government can look with pride upon these officers. They are great ambassadors of friendship. I only hope that when the announcement is made pertaining to civil servants' pay, these men's services will be adequately recognized. I want to say to the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that they can be exceptionally proud of these officials.

The reaction of the Canadian people to the budget I think has been one of acceptance and, if I may use a slang expression, of "father knows best". There is a deep and abiding confidence in those charged with responsibility of office never heretofore exhibited. Some have called it a stand-pat budget. I should like to call it a "don't rock the boat" budget. There is much to stand pat about, Mr. Speaker, because employment was never higher, corporation profits were never higher, personal income was never higher and the outlook for the future was never better. Hence, Mr. Speaker, I say this. Why fiddle when Rome is not burning?

There are two great national undertakings in the wings but not yet fully on the scene. I refer to the national pipe line and health insurance. The first will make greater use of our natural resources by Canadians. The second will preserve, maintain and improve our human resources. Both undertakings are imaginative in scope, and the Canadian people can anticipate with confidence that they will benefit from both.

I think it is worthy of note that there has been no general outcry against the budget. This does not usually happen when there are no direct tax reductions. I believe it is well to read the signs. So great is the confidence of the people in this government and its monetary and fiscal policies that they are prepared to let the government deal with these matters in the way it thinks best. This deep and abiding faith has come from years of benefit derived from policies bold and courageous. Last year we budgeted for a deficit. It was unusual, yet it was accepted. This year we have budgeted for a surplus, and that is even more welcome.

I cannot help feeling, as I am quite confident the majority of the people of the dominion feel, that the economic policy of this government has been well tested and has not been found wanting. I quite well recall that in his speech last year, as recorded at page 2733 of Hansard of 1955, the Minister of Finance said this:

> I propose to recommend to the house a tax policy and a tax structure that would produce a balanced budget under conditions which represent a high level of output and employment.

This indeed was a very definite answer from the government to those critics who were predicting nothing more or less than blue ruin for our country. I feel that this government has offered the country a policy that not only acts as a safeguard but indeed is a splendid example to take us through the minor ups and downs of our economy. Many condemned the budget of last year. Some said that it did hardly anything. Some said that it did not do a thing. Some said that it did not go far enough. Some said it was too conscientious.

The budget last year was the same as that which was presented by the Minister of Finance a few nights ago, and was based on sound principles and sound business ethics. The budget of last year did everything that could be expected of it; and surely, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance was sticking to the same principles of budgeting which guided us so successfully through last year and which guided him so successfully through his difficulties of last year, we shall again obtain fine results from this budget.

There is no doubt in my mind that Canada has growing pains, and I hope these growing pains will increase. Certainly the people of this dominion, with their confidence in this government and in the Minister of Finance, realize that this is going to be one of the finest years in the history of Canada. I wonder if anyone else could have presented a different budget under these circumstances. We must realize that next year we face large expenditures not only because of the new federal-provincial tax plan but because of the prospect of the hospital insurance plan which I spoke about a few minutes ago. If I may use a vernacular expression, Mr. Speaker, I would say that when everything is going all right there is no use in upsetting the apple-cart.

It seems to me that at a time like this, when we are receiving bad news from various parts of the world, it was encouraging to me at least to hear the Minister of Finance predict a good year ahead of us. With employment and production at high and satisfactory rates, I think the minister rightly believes that the government, business and the people of Canada must combine in perfect harmony to ensure continued prosperity, and he expresses the hope to the people that we shall have a steady increase in business rather than an immediate upward thrust.

The imagination of the Canadian people brought this country to this wonderful full development we are enjoying, and there is no reason to believe that we cannot go ahead under these circumstances, when we have a government that offers these safeguards against any monopolistic or other practices that would prove harmful to our great dominion. We in Canada are talking today in terms of 15 million people. I think in the not too distant future we shall be talking in terms of at least 30 million people. What we need is greater faith, wider vision and indeed that thing called ambition to go ahead with the job and see to it that this country is fully developed. I think we should thank almighty God that we here in Canada have a marvellous country, a marvellous future and almost incredible potential wealth.

So I say to the Minister of Finance and to the government that our resources are sound. Those men who are elected to look after the finances and the economy of our government I know will be tested as statesmen and not found wanting. I know the many requests that are made to them and the many things they hear, but I know they will not adhere to any of these patent medicine ideas. I want to say to the minister—and I say this to the people as well—that as long as we have faith in ourselves, in our heritage and in our destiny, Canada will be one of the greatest countries in the world in the not too distant future.

If I might use the parlance of the baseball field I say to the Minister of Finance that just a few nights ago, in presenting his budget. he had three men on bases and although the ball did not go quite over the fence, it reached the top of the fence and bounced back into the playing field. However, the bases were cleared. I am sure that next year, when our great Minister of Finance brings down his budget, he will come up again with three men on the bases and the ball will go over the fence for a home run. I want to say to him and through him to the government on behalf of everyone in the riding that I have the honour to represent, that we are proud of you. Carry on, and we are behind you to a man.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, many members in this house last Tuesday evening wondered what the Minister of Finance was doing on that occasion. My friend the hon. member for Niagara Falls has now supplied the answer. The minister was apparently engaged in a baseball game, some kind of sport. He certainly was not engaged in the serious business of responsible budget-making.

"The budget is not merely dull; it is defeatist. It is not merely stand-pat; it is negative. It reads as if the minister and the Department of Finance have thrown in their hands and stopped trying. No line of policy is followed to its logical conclusion. There is nothing coherent and constructive. It is fair to say that the nearest the minister got to a policy was a sort of resigned nod to the spending departments of government to go ahead and spend".

Those are not my words. Those are words that ought to be quoted in this house. They come from the Winnipeg Free Press, and will supply an effective answer to the hon. member for Niagara Falls and others like-minded who undertake to tell this house that the Canadian people have accepted the budget, and that father knows best. That attitude, of course, is one that has become typical in this house of supporters of the government. "Father knows best". You see the category in which members taking that attitude put themselves. They are the children. Father knows best and these children, as they regard themselves, are simply to follow and toe the party line.

Well, sir, it is in no personal sense that I must say to the Minister of Finance, in referring to the budget effort on this occasion, that it was unquestionably the worst failure in Canadian history within living memory. In kitchen terms this budget is as dull as dishwater, and it fell as flat as a pancake. At the outset of the budget someone should have called from the chair or elsewhere "dispense". At the outset this speech could just as easily have been dispensed with. Indeed, sir, if this represents the government's idea of a budget it might just as well have been dispensed with entirely. It might have been better for the government simply to announce that it was not bringing down a budget this year.

What is its purpose? What is its pattern? What is the thought behind it? What are the governing considerations? Sir, these are so muddled as to be utterly incomprehensible.

Nevertheless, there was one thing the budget did contain. It ended up with praise of the Prime Minister. Well, one can see perhaps some purpose in that. It is about the only thing one can find in the budget that has purpose and pattern to it. One recalls the words of the poet:

—praise, that last infirmity of noble minds.

One of Lord Lyttleton's poems puts it this way, Mr. Speaker:

There is no weapon that slays
Its victim so surely, if well aimed, as praise.

What was the purpose of this praise? It may possibly have been to coax the Prime Minister down from the remote fence on which he has sat during this session, to try to stir up in him some interest in the affairs of parliament, an interest which he has not indicated in any shape or form throughout this session. What may have been the purpose may well be left to speculation. But the Prime Minister is still on the side lines. He still takes his remote, detached place, with little or no interest in the house.

Now, sir, if I refer to this document and its proposals as a budget, let me enter the reservation that I do so in name only. This is not a budget in the proper sense of the word, but I will call it a budget because that is the most convenient way of referring to it.

The first feature of this budget, sir, is that it proposes to exact an increased tax levy from the Canadian people. The tax imposition is by the government's proposals to be raised to an all-time record height, $4,763 million. This aspect of the budget has of course been covered up very subtly with a multitude of words; but it is a fact that the government proposes to take out of the pockets of the people $378 million more this coming year than it took out of those same pockets during the past year. It proposes to take something over $1 million a day out of the pockets of the Canadian people more than it took last year. That, sir, is a sum far exceeding the rate of increase in the population of this country. It means, sir, an increase of $23.62 per capita in the dominion tax levies.

The second question of interest that one can apply to this budget is, what bearing has it on inflation? The budget is extremely vague on this subject. I should be inclined to question whether this factor entered into the considerations of the government at all. The minister talks about the "renewal of inflationary pressures in many countries". He speaks of the operations of the Bank of Canada "directed increasingly toward moderating the rate of expansion in the use of credit", and then he allows himself, apparently, to relate this to some aspects of government responsibility; for the minister says at page 2327 of Hansard:

The federal government itself has a special responsibility to see that its fiscal policies continue to be directed towards economic stability. The use of the flexible instruments of monetary policy is also being directed towards this objective.

Well, sir, that was very little indeed to say in a budget speech by way of review of some facts and events that have occurred within the year. The fact is the Bank of Canada lowered the bank rate from 2 per cent to 1½ per cent on February 1. On August 5 it reversed the policy and raised the bank rate from 1½ per cent back to 2 per cent. On October 12 it raised it from 2 per cent to 2¼ per cent; and on November 18, from 2¼ per cent to 2¾ per cent. The policy has been confusing to say the least. If action of this kind was required, it was required before it was taken. The effects of this series of sudden increases in the bank rate have been disturbing to confidence. Every time the bank rate was raised it had the effect of subtracting millions of dollars from the value of bonds held by Canadians, including dominion government bonds.

We should like to know, and surely this house is entitled to know, what is the government's purpose in this matter? How serious is the view they take of the way inflationary forces are working? What is to be the scope of anti-inflationary policy? Give us something to judge their efforts by. Mr. James Muir, the president of the Royal Bank of Canada, in his annual speech said this on inflation, a few days ago:

> Experience shows that monetary policy is more effective against inflation than against deflation. But there are dangers. As I have already pointed out, the policy may go too far. It may also be unselective, curbing healthy as well as unhealthy or excessive bank credit.

What is the government's next step, sir? The government has not told us whether it regards inflation as serious or not. The minister has talked about the stability in the cost of living. That does not seem to suggest that the government thinks there is inflation; and yet we have a series of three increases in the bank discount rate. Well, if the government has any clear thinking on this matter, Mr. Speaker, we should have had some statement on it and some expression of objective.

While the minister was laying down that role with respect to what he calls the flexible instruments of monetary policy, he did not stop there; he went on to read this lecture to individual Canadians:

> But careful judgment and wise spending policies are not solely matters of concern to public authorities. They are the normal responsibility of each one of us, regardless of his role in the economy.

I do not quarrel with that as a statement, but I ask the government to apply its own medicine to itself. When it is busy prescribing for individual Canadians I say, "Physician, heal thyself". The greatest inflationary pressure that exists today is reckless government expenditure and extravagance. And, sir, if the government is going to preach the virtues of thrift and care to the individual Canadian, I say let it begin in its own house. While plucking the mote from the eye of the individual Canadian, I say to the government "first pluck the beam out of thine own eye". There is no more inflationary force in Canada today than the full weight of reckless government expenditure and extravagance.

The next matter to be mentioned, sir, is the income tax. It is true that the rate is unchanged. It should have been reduced. Of course, we are going to have to wait until election year for those increases in the exemptions which are long overdue. It is interesting to see that the C.C.F. in their amendment have sought to urge a reduction in the burden of income tax on the lower income groups. Well, in 1953, in the general election, the Progressive Conservative party advocated in the plainest terms an increase in the income tax exemptions to $1,500 for single persons and $3,000 for married persons. I sought to put the same view forward for the consideration of the Minister of Finance when I spoke in the house on January 24. It is most unfortunate that the C.C.F. in bringing an amendment of that kind, a commendable amendment to that extent, has linked it with a hairbrain proposal to place a tax on capital gains, a proposal which if it were to be put into effect would frighten off capital and do the Canadian economy untold harm.

Canada needs capital. We need capital created out of the savings of the people. That is one reason why the government ought to be making resolute efforts to reduce the burden of taxation on the Canadian people. What other source of Canadian capital is there? If the government is not going to permit the Canadian people to retain more of their earnings in the form of savings, and therefore of capital, then Canada will have to continue to look abroad for sources of needed capital.

I wish to refer to a statement made recently by Mr. Ashforth, president of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, at the annual meeting of that bank, when he said:

> Week after week one reads of foreign concerns purchasing Canadian firms or establishing new plants and factories in Canada. The same opportunities are available to Canadians. Why don't we grasp them?
> Lack of capital, or perhaps I should say savings, is one factor. In some cases, it reflects greater technical knowledge on the part of the foreign company. In others, it represents the establishment of a manufacturing plant in Canada by a company that is already selling its products in this country. But this is not the whole explanation. Evidence is accumulating that Canadians are not showing enough vision, enterprise and courage in relation to the opportunities open to them.
> Risk-taking is essential to a dynamic, expanding economy. In the mining field, Canadians have proven that they are prepared to take risks, and the rewards have been substantial. More of the same enterprise and courage is needed in other sections of the economy.

Let hon. members weigh well those words of Mr. Ashforth, that "lack of capital, or perhaps I should say savings, is one factor" accounting for the unfortunate and regrettable fact that Canadians are not taking advantage of the investment opportunities open to them in the development of Canada's resources.

I have some comments to make on the sales tax. This government proposes to continue the sales tax upon the necessities of life undiminished one whit. Why is it that this government insists upon placing this levy on the necessities of life of the Canadian people? There was a study made recently of the sales tax by the Canadian Tax Foundation. Some interesting facts have emerged from that and other studies. About 58 per cent of sales tax collections are from consumer goods. About 24 per cent are from industrial purchases. Based upon 1954 revenues within the consumer group the largest items subject to this tax were clothing and personal effects. They occupied 15 per cent of the total, or $110 million. We are speaking now of 15 per cent out of total sales tax collections in the neighbourhood of $650 million a year. The sum of $110 million or 15 per cent of the total represented levies upon clothing and personal effects. Another $76 million or 10 per cent of the total was levied upon purchases of household appliances, furniture and furnishings. How can any Minister of Finance justify impositions like these upon consumer necessities? So many of these articles to which I have referred come strictly within the category of necessities for the Canadian family. These impositions are to be continued by the will of this government. There will be no diminution this year. Every hon. member opposite in voting to support these budget proposals expresses his determination to continue these impositions undiminished upon the purchases of necessities by the Canadian people.

The second feature of the sales and excise taxes which is worthy of mention relates to a reduction that was made last year. The government last year actually reduced from 15 to 10 per cent the excise tax levied on automobiles. What was the result, sir? A reduction in revenue? On the contrary, there was an increase in revenue. The collections from the excise tax on automobiles actually exceeded those of the previous year by $8 million. I suggest that there is a lesson there to be learned by the Minister of Finance and by the government. A few more reductions in rate would not necessarily mean serious and crippling reductions in revenues. On the contrary they would assist the circulation of money and the expansion of business enterprise.

The third comment I wish to make concerning sales and excise tax relates to the report of the Carter committee. The minister made brief reference to this report in his budget speech a week ago tonight and paid very proper tribute to the worthy public service rendered by the members of this committee. The report itself came into the hands of hon. members only yesterday. That report has been in the hands of the minister and the government for weeks. Why was this important report virtually suppressed until now? I say it is typical of the attitude of the government. The minister had the report and the government had the report. It was obviously a report which required study. But in their view what does the House of Commons matter? Who are these troublesome people who call themselves members of parliament? Why should the government concern itself about such persons? Therefore they have kept the report virtually under lock and key and hon. members were not permitted until yesterday to receive copies of this report. I do not think that does justice either to the House of Commons or to the quality and importance of this report submitted to the government by public-spirited and competent men.

We have a new tax proposed in this budget, sir, a tax on advertising. Let it be understood by all that this is the government's proposal; it is not the proposal of any Canadian publisher. What is the fundamental and underlying purpose of this proposal? Like everything else in the budget it is anything but clear. It has been shrouded in fog just as the whole subject has been shrouded in secrecy until the minister made his announcement a week ago tonight, a secrecy which indeed invites the suspicion of hon. members.

Has the minister made clear the government's objectives in relation to this proposed tax? No, he has not. If the minister had come before the house and said something like this: "Concern has been expressed over the way in which the Canadian market has been deluged with a flood of American magazines and we are concerned that Canadians should be assured of Canadian magazine literature to read, so we are going to take effective steps across the board for this purpose," the situation might have been different. There would have been some rhyme and reason to that. That would have been an understandable objective.

But that is not what the government has done. Without any clear statement as to its purpose the government has chosen in this proposal to place a tax upon a particular type of magazine. It has not applied any form of restriction or imposed any burden upon the whole flood of United States magazines that enter the Canadian market and which are bought by interested Canadians in such large numbers. No, the government has chosen rather the discriminatory course of proposing a special tax upon a special group.

We do not like discriminatory taxes. There have been protests already from United States sources and there have been many Canadian protests. As was inevitable, there are some magazines which evidently were not within the thought of the minister when he proposed this tax and which are now pointing out that they are going to be affected by it. They are not among those which were referred to in the press or in the talk that went on around the corridors. Of such are magazines whose chief purpose is such as the dissemination of medical information, magazines edited by competent medical sources.

Mr. Harris: I have had no intimation or indication of a magazine that I had not thought of.

Mr. Fleming: Then the minister must have had more in his head than he chose to share with the house. He certainly kept it to himself. It may be that there is a great deal in the minister's mind on this subject. It might be well that he make public confession and share it with the house and country. Confession is good for the soul and it would be particularly good for the soul of my friend, the Minister of Finance, on this occasion.

If this tax is to be put into effect in the face of all the protests that have been made, I can tell the minister that there are going to be many applications for exemption from it because of its essentially discriminatory nature.

This is the first time that a tax has been applied on advertising and it is a dangerous innovation. This is not a tax for revenue; this is a tax for some other purpose. The purpose is apparently one which in the view of the government must be served by a discriminatory method. I suggest that the government withdraw this proposal. If they are concerned about the flooding of the Canadian market by periodicals from the United States they should find some other and more appropriate method of dealing with it, if such exists.

I was surprised that not one word fell from the lips of the minister on the subject of succession duties. In the throne speech we were told that we would be asked to revise the Dominion Succession Duty Act and one would have thought that the budget statement would have been the place where the minister would notify the house of the fundamental effect or purpose of the revision of the Dominion Succession Duty Act. No doubt we will have a measure before us some time which will strike out the word "Dominion" but continue the present succession duties in their full force.

There are some rather strange things in the budget papers. At page 2330 of Hansard the minister placed on the record a table indicating that succession duties in the year closing March 31 produced a revenue of $75 million, but he anticipated that in this coming year the revenue from this source would be only $65 million. Then if we turn to page 11 of the budget papers which are an appendix to the budget speech we will see a table made up on the calendar year basis, where succession duties for the year 1955 are shown to have produced in preliminary figures a revenue of $117 million. Then if we turn to page 2399, in the budget papers we find this brief statement:

> Revenue from succession duties is estimated at $75 million in 1955-56, an increase of $30 million, or 67 per cent over the previous year. Two-thirds of the increase came from payments in respect of one unusually large estate.

In my submission we cannot reconcile the figures that appear on page 11 of the budget papers with those appearing on page 44 of the budget papers and the table appearing on page 2330 of Hansard. The minister ought to be telling the house something about his plans with respect to succession duties. I hope he is not going to tell us that our hopes for some reduction in the succession duties or some increase in the exemptions of estates as distinguished from the present notch provision are to be disappointed.

I wish to say a word now on the subject of the treatment of the provinces. What do the provinces receive from this budget? The answer is that they receive nothing but a lecture and a harangue. There was a rather striking feature about the minister's remarks in this regard. He finished his whole budget speech and then, as will be seen at page 2334, there was suddenly a postscript added to the speech. That is indicated by the change in style. This postscript was just tacked on after the budget speech had been finished. It evidently was an afterthought. Perhaps it is the result of a troubled conscience on the part of the government. However, it was a very frail defence of the way in which the provinces have been pushed around by the federal government and their needs overlooked.

The federal proposals with respect to unemployment are still grossly inadequate and represent a denial by the government of its responsibility, a responsibility which it recognized in 1945. There is nothing suggested by way of assistance to the provinces to meet the staggering costs of education and other services.

There is no help here for the provinces in the development of their resources. There is nothing here that can claim to be on even distant speaking terms with adequacy in relation to measures that are needed to assist provinces like the maritime provinces. There is the province of New Brunswick which needs critically the development of secondary industry to sustain and expand its economy. It came forward with a most sensible and modest proposal, that in relation to the Beechwood hydro power project the federal government should add its guarantee to the provincial financing which was necessary. It did not ask the federal government to pay for it. It simply asked the addition of a federal guarantee. That was rejected, so we find the province of New Brunswick selling its 3½ per cent sinking fund debentures, not at par but at 95½ to yield 3·83 per cent, an additional burden to be borne by the people of New Brunswick because the federal government will not put a federal guarantee behind the provincial debentures necessary to carry out that project which would assist that province in the development of its resources.

There is nothing here by way of assistance to the provinces in the development of their resources; the budget leaves it to the provinces to do the best they can in the development of their natural resources. But, mark well, the moment those resources are developed, in will step the Minister of Finance with both hands held out to divert lush revenues from the provinces to the federal treasury, without a blush.

What is there for the municipalities in this budget? There is nothing. There is not even honourable mention for the municipalities. The minister just ignores the problems and the plight of the municipalities in this country. The minister, we were told by the Prime Minister not so long ago, was to meet the representatives of some of the municipalities, my own city of Toronto in particular, and of course everything was going to be all right when the minister met the municipalities, or that particular one. What happened? Silence descends upon the subject in the budget.

Not only that, but the federal tax gatherers are busy tightening the screws upon the municipalities, for the municipalities are taxpayers to the federal treasury. Yes, the sales tax is applied to municipal purchases. Here is the latest example, if you please: the Toronto board of education has received a demand from the Department of National Revenue for payment of sales taxes on matter that that board of education prints for its own use. The board is directed that it must pay a sales tax on purchases of printing material to the Department of National Revenue, a tax based upon the purchase price. There is another $10,000 levy upon that municipality alone.

This is the federal government's idea of meeting the plight of the municipalities in this country. Well, there is a day of reckoning coming. I spoke on January 24 and urged the minister, before the budget came down, to give consideration to this subject and to do something by way of paying, as the provincial governments are doing to an infinitely greater extent, certainly in this province, taxes to the municipalities upon federally owned property; but the minister still insists upon applying this formula of his—the two per cent—which does grave injustice to so many municipalities. The time has come for the federal government to get off the backs of the municipalities.

The budget ignores a number of problems. There still is no solution to the matter of the old age security fund. We were told several years ago that the government was going to bring down some permanent proposal to finance the annual deficit, but nothing is earmarked for that purpose, and there still is no proposal on it.

The minister had some proposals to make in regard to freeing gold from the restrictions that this government has applied, but we are left with an uneasy feeling, and there have been newspaper reports, undoubtedly based upon information, to the effect that this removal of the restrictions on the sale and export of gold or retention of gold in private hands is to be but the forerunner of the removal of cost aid. If this is the policy of the government, then it owes it to the mining areas to declare that policy and make it known soon, because, both if the government intends to continue it and if the government intends to remove it, those municipalities and those who are in the position of having to make plans for those mines ought to be acquainted with the fact well in advance. In this respect, I hope the house will have the opportunity of hearing in this debate from Liberal members representing mining constituencies in northern Ontario and Quebec.

I have inadequate time to deal with a subject of very great importance: our trade, particularly with the United States. The government boasts of the high imports this country is taking from the United States. The minister seemed to glory in that fact in his budget speech. Last year the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that a large volume of imports is a healthy sign, and this year he has told us that imports are an index of high prosperity. This cult of imports, of which the government is a devotee, has certainly been now carried to its climax. In 1955 imports into Canada have reached an all time peak of $4,712 million. Let us remember that in 1955 Canada showed a total surplus of imports over exports of $360 million. That is the third year in a row that we have imported more than we have exported. In our trade with the United States, last year we imported $840 million more from the United States than we sold to the United States. That was an increase of 40 per cent over our import surplus in commodity trade with the United States in 1954.

Seventy-three per cent of our imports continue to come from the United States, and just 11·6 per cent from the United Kingdom. Sixty per cent of our exports are going to the United States; only 18 per cent to the United Kingdom. Our imports from the United States last year were up 20 per cent over 1954. The British Prime Minister has been pleading for a transfer of eight per cent of Canadian purchases from other sources to the United Kingdom to balance their trade with us.

We know that in consequence of these results, which have the full approval of the government and are created largely by its own policies, a current account deficit of $665 million was incurred in 1955 as compared with a current account deficit of $431 million in 1954. This deficit was increasing by leaps and bounds in the last quarter of 1955.

These facts and the growing domination of the Canadian economy by United States interests, which were reflected in them, are matters that ought to be engaging the serious concern of all Canadians. I should have liked to enlarge on the subject of economic domination of Canada by United States interests and trade, but I fear I shall have to leave that for another occasion.

Let me say in conclusion that this budget has been properly described in the Conservative amendment as a partisan budget. We have a repetition of the cycle in budgeting. This is the political cycle. We must wait for the year of elections for needed reductions in taxation. Meanwhile the government's policy is to soak the people and ignore their problems. It is the same old mentality so clearly revealed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce: "If we wanted to get away with it, who would stop us?" This government wants to get away with the policy of "soak the people and ignore their problems." It is the build-up for next year, and one is left with a strong suspicion that there has been an unwarranted underestimate of revenue in this budget in the course of that build-up.

This is a cynical budget, and I say to you in my final words, sir, that this budget, with sickening features about it, as the Winnipeg Free Press has said, reveals the sickness and the infirmity and the decrepitude of this government. This government is suffering in expenditure from elephantiasis; where action is needed, it is suffering, and with it the Canadian people in consequence, from paralysis; to the voice of the Canadian people it is deaf; to its own responsibility to the Canadian people it is blind; and it suffers from a psychosis springing from its own delusions of grandeur, omniscience and infallibility.

Mr. Irvin Studer (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate your consideration in permitting us to be associated with other hon. members in this budget debate. The budget motion and the speech from the throne motion are two of the most important motions that any session of parliament considers. Around the activities involved in the budget and the speech from the throne all of the government revolves. The speech from the throne outlines the government's program and the budget advances its fulfilment. Of the two the budget is the more important because it includes provisions for taxation and the method of financing so that the policies that have been suggested by the government can be made effective. Without the budget the world of government would stop. The wheels would stop going around.

Included in the budget are the millions for health and social welfare all expended in this country, the millions for the dominion-provincial agreements, the millions for the necessary defence expenditures, the millions for national housing, the millions for veterans' benefits, the millions for farm loan operation, the guarantees on loans on wheat, floor prices on butter, hogs and eggs, Agricultural Prices Support Act expenditures, the payment of storage charges on grain, even the policing of the country, the operations of the experimental farms all contained in the budget. Because of the enormous expenditures contained therein and what is involved in the operations of government and the benefits to our people through the budget, I am sure that all parties in the House of Commons are going to support it.

If I were a member of one of the opposition parties I should not like to be in the position of having to go back home and say that I had voted against all these benefits for our people, that I had voted to defeat the government so that none of these benefits would be possible. I suggest to the leaders of the opposition parties that they give their members a free vote so that they will not be held responsible by their electors and will not be blamed for endeavouring to destroy a government that has raised the national income over and above all expectations of anyone in Canada or anywhere in the world and has contributed to the greatest extent in history to the well-being of all our people.

Mr. Fleming: Will the hon. member permit a question? Is there going to be a free vote on the government side?

Mr. Studer: In connection with the budget I would hesitate to suggest—

Mr. Fleming: I would think so.

Mr. Studer: —that you should not support it.

Mr. Fleming: Answer the question.

Mr. Studer: The government has a responsibility that the opposition does not have. The government has responsibilities that the opposition do not have. There is nothing to prevent the opposition from supporting the government—

Mr. Fleming: Except our conscience.

Mr. Studer: —and I would suggest that when you have that responsibility you will be in a position to answer that question. However, you will never have that responsibility. In connection with the budget we hear about inflation. I do not know of any inflation in evidence anywhere that would not be in evidence if the socialists or the Social Crediters were in power because those two particular groups are willing to spend wealth before it is produced. I do not know of any deflation that is in existence, and if the Progressive Conservative party were in power there would be no deflation because there would be no wealth to spend.

Here we have the Liberal party which is the "flationist" party of Canada. "Flationist" means that the Liberal party maintains the balance, the equilibrium between the two extremes which makes it possible to govern the economy of the country in the best interests of all of our people. Therefore we are proud to be the "flationist" party. The people of the country can rest assured that as long as there is that balance between extremes which the people of the country know from experience is guaranteed by the government's progressive policies for Canada we will support the government. The policies of the government have created unlimited wealth and that wealth has been utilized in the national interest. There has been economic advancement and that has been in evidence ever since we heard of a Liberal party in this country and will continue to be.

If I may digress for a minute, since the opening of the session we have heard a great deal in the House of Commons about who have been taking part in the debates on various proposals, and we on the Liberal side have been criticized for not taking part in debates on proposals advanced by the opposition parties who have no responsibility and will never have any because they will never have to introduce any of their proposals for which they will have to be responsible. We have been criticized because we have not taken part in various debates on propositions they have put forward for consideration in the house.

The reason I did not take part in the wheat loans debate was that I was waiting for the opposition to say something. They made 77 speeches and there was not a word in any of those speeches that I have not heard before and ever since I came to the house in 1949. They were all the same. They were no different from the speeches they made in 1951, 1952, 1953, 1954, and before that. Their speeches were all the same. I was hoping that possibly someone would say something that we could reply to, to which we had not already replied in years gone by.

We Liberals represent the people without continuous repetition and we obtain results. We Liberals do not speak often but when we do speak we convince the people. Why should we speak on opposition motions? Why should we speak on these members' motions? We did not invent them. We did not bring them, with their irresponsibility, before the House of Commons. We did not agree that those who did bring them before the house were representing the same line of thought out in the country that I, at least, represent or think I represent. We were elected to support the government, not to vote against it. The opposition were elected to oppose the government, but when they oppose beneficial motions brought before the house by the government they will have to answer to their people back home.

I was particularly interested in remarks of the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore). He made some reference to Liberals who represented people in western Canada and said they were not fulfilling their duty when they did not make speeches. Not one of my people back home has asked me to vote for a Social Credit motion, resolution or amendment, but my people have told me to be on my guard against certain proposals advanced for political reasons that would destroy the economy that has been built up in this country.

This may not sound just right, Mr. Speaker, but if there is any obection to it you will have to blame it on the fact that I spent a lot of my youth in Iowa pulling weeds out of the cornfields and perhaps that had an influence on me. In any event, back home on the farm there are three tools that we think are indispensable around the farm. One is a pair of pliers, another is a screwdriver and the third is a wrench. We save ourselves a great amount of trouble on the farm by carrying these three tools in our pockets, by tightening up screws if there are any screws loose, by tightening up wire if there are any haywire proposals or anything of that kind around the farm and also by tightening up any nuts that may be loose. My people told me to take these three tools with me to Ottawa because I might be confronted with the same thing down here in connection with some of the proposals that are advocated in the House of Commons.

We heard from the hon. member for Lethbridge in a speech the other day that what is financially impossible is physically impossible. That is what we heard from the hon. member for Lethbridge last week, that what is financially impossible is physically impossible. My people told me not to support that type of argument. They told me that I was elected to support the government, and I most certainly was not elected to support the Social Crediters who, the people back home tell me, are composed of a combination of Rosicrucians, Technocrats and Poujadists going throughout the country seeking the ruin of political souls. They told me not to support that group in our economy.

The people in Saskatchewan are asking me: How much is a weatherbeaten old socialist speech worth? The answer is that it is worth nothing. We have had the most humiliating experience in the House of Commons of having the socialists say to us, after having helped to bring about 77 speeches in the wheat loan debate: "Please, Liberals, make a speech. No one will believe what we are saying. We have no influence in the House of Commons. Will you Liberals please make a speech for us so that we can fulfil the promises we made back home when we told our people they should send us to the House of Commons if they wished to have benefits accrue to them."

So here we have them begging the Liberals to make a speech for them. They made 77 speeches in one debate, with what result? Nothing. The result was nothing. Zero, zero was the result of their 77 speeches. The Liberals, without having to make one speech in this House of Commons, made it possible to grant to the farmers $32 million on their wheat. The opposition have no influence and there are no results. No one believes them. Go back home and tell your people that you have absolutely no influence in this House of Commons. I think the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) in his constituency is in trouble or the farmers possibly are. But if I were the hon. member for Selkirk I would go back home to my people out in Selkirk and tell them that I have no influence in the House of Commons, that I have been making these speeches ever since I have been here, and please send somebody down that will have some influence. We have had good representation from Selkirk during previous sessions. Let them just go home and tell the people they were fooling them and to send people down here that will bring results for them such as we had between 1949 and 1953 when the farmers had the best conditions they ever had and when there were the smallest number of socialists here in this House of Commons. The proof that they have no influence, the proof that they are only speaking for 2½ per cent of the people is in the fact that they have told us a hundred times in this House of Commons that they were representing the farmers of western Canada in connection with those bank loans to farmers. Were they? We did not think so. We thought they were merely representing the socialists. We are more sure about it than we ever were because only last week in the Saskatchewan legislature there was before it a resolution which provided for cash advances on farm-stored grain to be made effective when the advisory committee of the wheat board recommends it. That was the amendment in the Saskatchewan legislature by the Liberals to the original motion of the government censuring the federal government on account of the bank loan bill. What happened on this amendment that it become effective when the advisory board recommends it?

Mr. Ellis: Read the resolution first.

Mr. Studer: The resolution reads as follows:

> That this assembly, recognizing that the federal government guaranteed bank loan scheme is inadequate to meet the serious financial crisis now confronting the western grain farmer and the entire prairie economy, deplores the failure of the federal government to provide a prepayment on the initial price of grain in the form of a cash advance on farm-stored grain.

And the amendment by the Liberals reads as follows:

> approves the policy of marketing grain through the Canadian wheat board goes on record as supporting cash advances on farm-stored grain, if and when this policy change is requested by the advisory committee of the wheat board.

That was the amendment. What happened? Every one of the socialist members in Saskatchewan—the socialist mice in Saskatchewan—voted against this recommendation that was to be accepted on behalf of the advisory committee representing all of the farmers of western Canada. The advisory committee consists of the following gentlemen: W. J. Parker, president of the Manitoba pool; J. H. Wesson, president of the Saskatchewan pool; Ben Plumer, president of the Alberta pool; J. E. Brownlee, president of the united grain growers; C. E. Hansen, president of the Saskatchewan farmers union and Roy Marler, president of the Alberta federation of agriculture. So the emphasis has been given to what the Liberals have held, namely that advances to farmers on approved farm-stored grain were not asked for by the farmers and those representing the farmers of western Canada. So that is why those people did not have any influence here in the House of Commons. Therefore I would suggest that they improve their technique, that they either send representatives here that the people of Canada can have confidence in or govern themselves accordingly and tell their people, as they should tell them: We Socialists have not been in a position to obtain any results for you so it is useless to send us back to parliament in Ottawa. They come down here, as we say in the west, just to shoot the breeze. They get elected by reading the Saskatchewan socialist Commonwealth but when they get in the House of Commons they begin to read the stock market page in the Financial Times. They are the biggest phonies—if you will excuse the expression, Mr. Speaker,—in all history. The farmers are going to remember that every socialist that has made a speech in this House of Commons has punished the farmers as a result of his being here.

My duty is to represent the non-socialist farmers of western Canada. A strange thing has happened in western Canada. I represent the non-socialist farmers. The strange thing that has happened is that all the socialist farmers are now rich farmers. They have accumulated all the land. There is not even any land left for the veterans who wish to establish themselves in Saskatchewan. Every socialist in Saskatchewan and every socialist in this house has bettered his position 100 per cent since he has been here and since this Liberal government has been in existence. There was a time out in Saskatchewan when you heard of the proletariat, the landless people. They were supposed to be the socialists. Now we hear of the bourgeoisie out in Saskatchewan and they are the socialists. Now we have the most buoyant economy in all history but agriculture is not enjoying the same standard of living.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Studer: On account of the socialist government in Saskatchewan taxing them. After all, it would not matter whether you gave them a billion dollars tomorrow morning in Saskatchewan, Mr. Speaker. There would just be a $1 billion increase in taxation the next day. That is the way it operates. You cannot control or operate a socialistic economy for the very reason that I mentioned at the beginning. They are always spending wealth before it is created. They have good policies for spending wealth but absolutely none to create it. If they have any, I wish they would outline them to us some day, if they have time. I wish they would tell us just what the socialist countries are doing in the world and have done since they have ever been heard of to create additional wealth or any type of wealth that would be of benefit to the people. All the socialists are interested in is destroying wealth. Anyone who has wealth is an enemy to a socialist. Their idea is to bring the wealthy man down to the level of the poor man so that the socialists can control and govern his economy. In no country in the world have the poor people ever been able to rise from that burden of carrying socialism on their backs. Here at least we in Canada have a buoyant economy. We can provide wealth for all the people and bring the poorer people up to a higher level. Under their system, you bring those on the higher levels down to the lower level and create no alternative thereto.

An hon. Member: Margarine instead of butter.

Mr. Studer: I appreciate the government assistance we have received of $32 million on account of excess wheat storage. But that amounts to only half a month's wages to the average farmer out in western Canada. So lest anyone think that is the solution to all of our problems, let me say this. Some of the troubles are local but some of them—and we hear this even from the mouths of the socialists—are ungovernable as far as Canada is concerned in the world upon which our economy depends. The most striking thing to all the people of the world is how far Canada has advanced in spite of the abnormal, overwhelming situation where we are dependent on other countries of the world for our very existence through our exports. No country in the world has made a greater contribution in producing things than have the people of Canada, including the farmers. The first thing we need is that the wheat move into the channels of trade. Nothing should be left undone anywhere by any department of government, the wheat board, the railways or individuals wherever they are connected with the determination of the movement of wheat. Nothing should be left undone to the end that some money will be in the hands of the farmers this coming spring by means of which they may finance their spring operations. Nothing should be left undone to see that the organizations allocate their grain orders to the various elevator companies in Saskatchewan on an equal basis as much as possible so that all can avail themselves of some of the financing, and so that it may be fairly done. Nothing should be left undone. While we are talking about box cars, let me say that some of the socialists try to make political capital out of something which may not be in existence six months from now.

We do not want to forget some of the big things regarding the future of farming in western Canada. I think one of the greatest is the international wheat agreement. I for one sincerely hope that the future will produce an international wheat agreement under which all the countries of the world, including the exporters and the importers, will agree to a price for that wheat that will make it possible for the people of western Canada, and the people of all of Canada, to produce that wheat in unlimited quantities without any shackles placed upon them through any limitations in regard to the establishment of parity prices, which immediately involve controls, not only of acreage but also of the number of farmers. Even some of the wise men of western Canada will agree with that.

Mr. Bobier, vice-president of the wheat pool, in speaking to the select committee of the Saskatchewan legislature a little more than a week ago said that the initial price on wheat of $1.40 at the lakehead works out to about 70 per cent to 75 per cent of parity. He went on to say that if 100 per cent of parity were established they would have to control production to prevent growers from going wild in production. Mr. Hannam, of the Canadian federation of agriculture, had something to say in regard to parity. We all want the equivalent of parity. If it is not called that, it should be. Who should pay the parity? Should it be the consumer, or should it be the people of Canada, including the farmers? After all, if you establish parity you have added not one thing to the national wealth. You merely distribute the wealth that there is in the country. Therefore, I say the international wheat agreement is the most important document that we can ever devise in the whole world. It convinces the consumer that the farmer should have a parity price, not paid for by himself in his own country but by the individual who consumes the wheat. We are striving for that to increase the national wealth of Canada. That is why it is so important. In my opinion, the important thing is to have the equivalent paid by the people who eat the product. That is what we wish to have in western Canada. We farmers pay a parity price for everything used in production. The consumers throughout the whole world should pay. Eighty per cent of our production goes to the whole world. That is so important. It is important that our representatives over in Europe should continue their negotiations for an international wheat agreement so that the farmers and all the people of Canada may be able to live as they should live and so they may have the equivalent of a parity price structure. If we get that, then we shall be able to continue to feed all the people of the world and we shall be able to continue the vocation that we have adopted as producers for the betterment of mankind.

Mr. Hannam, president of the Canadian federation of agriculture, said that if we adopted parity:

> We would lose our United States market for beef and pork.

Incidentally, if we adopted 75 per cent of parity we would find that the prices of all of our products are above that percentage with the exception of rye and beef. Immediately, all these prices would have to come down if we were to establish parity so that they would not be above the 75 per cent.

As Mr. Hannam mentions, it would be impossible to sell our commodities in the United States. He said:

> Unless we put on an embargo against United States beef and pork, they would swamp our market.

That, of course, is logical. That is why our hog prices were established at a floor of 23 cents. Mr. Hannam went on to say:

> We would compromise our whole case in the eyes of the world—because Canada has been a key supporter of freer trade.

Freer trade has been in existence in Canada because this government has reduced tariffs by nearly 40 per cent in the past decade, and it has continued doing so, and is again doing so in this budget.

Mr. Hannam went on to say:

> We could not avoid complete government control and regimentation of agriculture—even to production and acreage controls.

Some hon. members say that they do not believe him, but you cannot deny economics. Mr. Hannam went on to say:

> It would lead inevitably I believe, to more regimentation than our Canadian farmers would be willing to accept.

Everyone knows these things. He went on to point out some of the other pitfalls that we would fall into. Everyone knows these things except people who do not study economics. The people who are in that position just pick up discarded policies that have been thrown away throughout the world, policies that were never workable anyway, except through national support such as they have in the United States, which will eventually have to be discarded. There is no possibility of the Canadian people pulling themselves up by their bootstraps to make such a policy workable. That is why all the people of the world have to be convinced of the crying need of the farmers and that we must have a price to enable us to live, if you would care to call it that. They need such a method to make it workable and to make it possible to have a system that is not so complicated that it will defeat itself in the end. Therefore, the government is concentrating on the farmer's position.

One hears much about the national wealth and what we are to do about it. How are we to create a system that will see that all classes get their share of the national wealth? I do not know of anyone who does not think that he is getting less of the national wealth than he is entitled to. I do not know of any particular industry, occupation, or vocation that does not think along that line, human nature being what it is. Everyone thinks that the other person is better off than he is. One thing you can be sure of, and that is that the farmer is going to demand his fair share of the national wealth. Many things are needed in western Canada, but we have gone without them. I have been living on my farm for 40 years. This fall electricity came into my yard for the first time in those 40 years. The socialist government is advancing the policy established by the Liberal government many years ago in setting up a power corporation. We are responsible for putting that pole in my yard, but it cost me $580, and that is a lot of money in any man's country, especially when we are in the position that the socialists say we are in, in western Canada. The Liberals of Manitoba put in electricity for very much less and are charging half as much as we are charged in Saskatchewan for power, but perhaps that will be overcome in a year or so. Also, out in Saskatchewan no farmers are driving Cadillacs. There is not one in a thousand. There are only 12 modern homes in a thousand in southwestern Saskatchewan. Only one farmer in 10,000 in Saskatchewan takes a trip to Florida, and that was one who went because the doctor told him he had to go. Most of our troubles have been on account of crop failures, and there is no compensation anywhere for lack of crops. There is no one in the world who should have a higher share of the national wealth than the producer. We now have economic commissions all over the country. Every university has its professor of economics. I think we should have a minister of economics in our government. At the same time he could be an economy minister. I think it would be all to the good because you would have someone to co-ordinate matters of production, preservation and distribution, the economy of our country in the future. I think the most important minister in any government in any country would be a minister of economics.

Mr. Small: Better than the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Studer: I do not know where you would ever find a better man.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I hate to interrupt the hon. member, but it is after five o'clock. I do not think the hon. member means that he wishes to adjourn the debate.

The house will undertake consideration of private and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

PENSION FUND SOCIETY OF THE DOMINION BANK

Mr. John Hunter (Parkdale) moved the second reading of Bill No. 209, respecting the pension fund society of the Dominion Bank.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Will the hon. member explain the purpose of this bill?

Mr. Hunter: The sole and simple purpose of this bill is to change the name of the society from "The Pension Fund Society of the Dominion Bank" to "The Pension Fund Society of the Toronto-Dominion Bank". Although the explanatory notes explain the reason for this desired change of name, it may be useful to give some further information.

The Bank of Toronto and the Dominion Bank were amalgamated under the provisions of the Bank Act and became the Toronto-Dominion Bank, effective February 1, 1955. Both banks had pension funds, that of the Dominion Bank was administered through the pension fund society of the Dominion Bank, and that of the Bank of Toronto through trustees.

Following the bank amalgamation, it was naturally desirable to amalgamate the two pension funds and full authority for this action was contained in a schedule to the amalgamation agreement which, under the Bank Act, has the force of law. After full consideration, it was considered that the society was the more convenient vehicle for the amalgamated fund and all necessary steps have been completed to vest the fund of the former Bank of Toronto in the society.

New by-laws governing the amalgamated pension fund have been prepared and approved by the income tax authorities and are in operation as of November 1, 1955. These by-laws, in which the best features of the rules covering the two former pension funds have been incorporated, have been authorized by the board of directors of the Toronto-Dominion Bank. They were also approved and adopted at a special general meeting of the members of the amalgamated fund held at the head office of the bank on Friday, February 17, 1956.

The action of the society in applying for this bill to have its name changed to a name which is now more appropriate to the circumstances was approved at a meeting of the board of directors of the society held on January 25, 1956, and subsequently by a unanimous vote of the special general meeting of the members of the society held on February 17, 1956, referred to above.

This society was incorporated in 1887 by a special act of the parliament of Canada, being chapter 55 of the statutes of that year, and that statute received a minor amendment in 1899 by chapter 112 of the statutes of that year.

Notice of the intention of the society to make application to parliament as above has been advertised in four issues of the Canada Gazette commencing on the 7th day of January, 1956, and is being advertised once per week for four weeks in the Globe and Mail commencing on the 17th day of February, 1956. No indication of any objection on the part of any member of the society or any member of the public has come to the attention of the society or the bank.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

SIGNATURE LOAN AND FINANCE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Friday, March 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for the second reading of Bill No. 166, to incorporate the Signature Loan and Finance Company, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ellis.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in this bill we are asked to give approval to the formation of another finance company in Canada. I see no need for another finance company in Canada and therefore I am unwilling to lend my support to the passage of the bill.

We have just heard in another debate a windy harangue from the hon. member who represents the constituency of Maple Creek-Swift Current (Mr. Studer) and I notice that he has often complained in this house to the effect that in his opinion the only people in Canada who are worth while are those engaged in producing something useful. His claim, of course, is that socialists are not producers and therefore do not serve a useful purpose. I would like to see him take part in this debate and convince us that finance companies are producers or that they even serve a useful purpose in Canada.

Since the hon. member sits on the Liberal side of the house and waxes very enthusiastic on behalf of the Liberal cause, I take it that he is quite prepared to support the bill before us. I shall therefore be keenly interested in hearing him prove to us how this proposed Signature Loan and Finance Company is going to add one iota to the production of Canada and—

Mr. Studer: Mr. Speaker, I can answer that right now.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Argue: Close the barn door.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, I am inviting the hon. member to make his own speech. I can assure him that I will resume my seat in plenty of time in order to provide him with 40 minutes in which to prove to me how the formation of this company will add another bushel of wheat, another pound of pork or beef or whatever he wishes to see produced, to the economy of Canada. The hon. member complained that he had to spend about $500 and I am very glad that it was through the efforts of the C.C.F. that the electricity finally arrived at his farm.

Mr. Studer: It was $550.

Mr. Regier: He complained that he had to pay $500. I hope he did not have to go to a finance company to get that $500.

Mr. Studer: I certainly could not get it from the Saskatchewan government.

Mr. Regier: I suggest that he could have got it from the Saskatchewan government and repaid it over a number of years at an interest rate which I am given to understand is set at about 4 or 5 per cent—

Mr. Studer: That is not true.

Mr Regier: —and not 24 per cent.

Mr. Studer: That is not true.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, could I have a little order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I think I should point out to the house that it is legally impossible for two hon. members to have the floor at the same time.

Mr. Studer: Yes. Why doesn't he sit down?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, I do not like these finance companies to exist at all. They bleed the Canadian people with interest rates of 24 per cent. I was only pointing out to the house that under a socialist administration arrangements are such that when people must borrow money it can be borrowed and repaid over a reasonable period of years at interest rates of 4 or 5 per cent.

Mr. Studer: That is a naked lie.

Mr. Regier: That is the attitude we take towards the needs of the people. I am told that in Alberta the rate is 3½ per cent. I think the Saskatchewan government, not having the hundreds of millions of dollars in oil royalties of the Alberta government, on a relative scale has a more favourable rate than the government of Alberta which charges as high as 3½ per cent. With the several hundreds of millions of dollars they have they are not sure of what they should be doing.

An hon. Member: They are sure.

Mr. Regier: It has been suggested that we should allow this bill to go through because the people who make up this company should be given equal rights. When something is plaguing me I do not believe in granting equal rights and in welcoming other things of a similar nature to plague me. I do not think the Canadian people would like to see equal rights extended to parasites. We want to see them eliminated. We do not want to see all the people of Canada become victims of this type of racketeering.

I was extremely interested in reading the comments made the other day by the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Richardson), as found on page 2582 of Hansard. I have met him on only a few occasions and I think he is one of the most honourable members of this house. I notice that in his remarks he admits the possibility that the people who have to borrow money from finance companies are unfortunate and I would like to compliment him on that attitude. Since he is a member of the legal profession I assume that he is connected with finance companies only in the process of engaging in his occupation as a lawyer. I do not think of his own volition he would have a hand in these things in any way, shape or form. I gather that from his statement to the effect that he thinks the people who must use these companies are unfortunate. He did say, however, that the majority of the directors of any such companies must be Canadian citizens. He said:

> The overriding Loan Companies Act states that the administration of all these companies, including small loans companies, must be only by the board of directors, the majority of whom, as I have said, must be Canadian citizens and residents.

He again comes to the same subject when a little further on he says:

> There are to be five directors, the majority of whom will be Canadian citizens and residents.

That is made to sound as if we might after all be dealing with a Canadian firm. I was pleased to find in the same paragraph as the last quotation that the hon. member made a certain admission because I intended to ask him about it. He says:

> —may I say that the sponsor of the bill is the Merchants Acceptance Corporation, which has carried on business in the New England states since 1909.

In other words, the hon. member admits that the real owner of the company is this United States organization. I am glad he has supplied us with that information because one of the main issues I intended to raise was that we really do not know who is asking us to authorize the incorporation of this finance company. The hon. member goes on to say:

> This indicates that the person, unfortunately if you will, who needs to borrow $100, $150, $200 or $300, can go to this company for such loan on the basis of his personal character and financial integrity as represented by his signature, and as in the case of all of us that would be his warrant for such a loan. That is the explanation of this bill.

I think the hon. member meant to say that that was the explanation for the name that the company has selected. I have no reason to say that the hon. member did not know what he was talking about when he made that statement, but I venture to predict that the Signature Loan and Finance Company, if and when it operates in Canada, will operate much along the lines that other finance companies follow. I have yet to find a finance company in Canada which will lend money on a signature only. They take security in the form of a chattel mortgage or they have the unwritten power to garnishee your wages if you are a wage earner. In the case of a married man all companies insist that the wife as well sign the note. I do not know whether they register these chattel mortgages, but that is their concern. However, I do know that chattel mortgages are widely accepted. I doubt very much the statement that this company is intending to make loans on signatures only without any other security. The only organizations in Canada that I know of that do that are the credit unions and there are special reasons why they are able to make loans on the basis of signatures only. The hon. member goes on to say, and I quote from page 2583 of Hansard, as follows:

> This is not by any manner or means a Liberal measure, a Conservative measure, a Social Credit measure or a C.C.F. measure.

The hon. member is absolutely right when he says that this is not a C.C.F. measure because we intend to oppose this legislation to the best of our ability. I think the hon. member is a little over optimistic in saying that this is not a Liberal measure because when the votes are called I think I can safely predict that there will not be a Liberal member who will vote against this bill. After all, it might be slightly risky for a Liberal member to vote against this bill when it is realized that one of the provisional directors is no less than the president of the National Liberal Federation of Canada. I doubt very much whether any of them are going to have the temerity to so affront their national president.

There is another sentence I should like to consider for a moment, to be found in the same paragraph as the previous quotation. Apparently referring to the Small Loans Act, the hon. member had this to say:

> —the act of 1939 invites people to come here and—

I doubt the accuracy of that statement. I do not find any invitation in the Small Loans Act to anyone to come here to do business as a finance company. The Small Loans Act was enabling legislation, it was not an invitation. The existence of such legislation might seem like an invitation to the hungry wolves who would like to prey upon the difficult financial situations into which our citizens sometimes get themselves; but to respectable people, to those who are producers, to those who serve in our society I do not think the existence of the act would be considered an invitation or should be looked upon as an invitation. The concluding sentence in that paragraph reads:

> People in all parts of the world are being urged to enter our favourable economic climate, and it is no wonder that they want to come to Canada. They feel that they want to do business here.

This is one type of business that we in Canada can well do without. I do not think the Canadian people are inviting them. I can understand that they may want to do business here because they see the loopholes which the Liberal government has left to permit people being rooked with rates of interest of 24 per cent and more.

When I am asked to endorse the passage of a bill like this I like to look to see who is doing the asking. On looking at the bill I find the names of two citizens of the United States of America, Edward James MacDermott and Charles Thomas MacDermott, Jr., both of the city of Worcester in the state of Massachusetts. I know nothing about these and can only assume that they are the owners of Merchants Acceptance Corporation, to which I referred previously. The hon. member stated that the majority of the board of directors and the management must be Canadians who are resident in Canada, so I find three other names, Duncan Kenneth MacTavish, Ronald Charles Merriam and George Perley-Robertson. Naturally I wondered who those gentlemen might be. I have been unable to find anything about Ronald Charles Merriam and George Perley-Robertson, except that they are solicitors in the city of Ottawa.

On looking at the latest copy of the Canadian "Who's Who" I find that Duncan Kenneth MacTavish is a citizen of considerable note, and when he asks us for the right to pluck the Canadian people at interest rates of 24 per cent and more I think we should have a look at who he is and see whether he is worthy of the confidence of this house. Reading from page 673 of volume VI, 1952-54, I find that Duncan Kenneth MacTavish, O.B.E., Q.C., was born in Ottawa, Ontario, 56 years ago, the son of Judge Duncan Byron and Flora. He was educated at Queen's University and graduated from Osgoode Hall Law School and is a partner in the firm of Gowling, MacTavish, Osborne and Henderson. He is secretary and director of Pitney-Bowes Company of Canada Limited; vice-president and director of British American Bank Note Company Limited; director of R. L. Crain Limited; Holden Manufacturing Company Limited; Holt Renfrew and Company Limited; the Southam Company Limited.

I suppose we can expect the Ottawa Citizen, which is owned by the Southam Company, to come out with an editorial saying that parliament ought to pass this bill. He is a director of the Ottawa Valley Trust Company, Wallace Realty Company Limited, Imperial Realty Company Limited and Red Rock of Canada Limited, whatever that is. He is president and director of Ottawa Car and Aircraft Limited; he might have some defence contracts there. He is a director of the Personal Finance Company of Canada. I cannot for the life of me understand why he wants to organize an opposition to his own finance company, but he may be a patriotic citizen and think that a little competition for the Personal Finance Company would be a good thing.

He is on the board of directors of the Associated Screen News Limited. He is a member of the board of governors of Ashbury College and trustee of Queen's University. I suppose that university students would be good clients for this finance company. He is a member of the national capital planning commission. He has been elected president of the National Liberal Federation. I suppose that, if the company will make the fortunes that other finance companies have been making, the donation to the Liberal election fund will be a very handsome one.

He read law with Colonel A. T. Thompson and E. F. Burritt, Ottawa; he was called to the bar of Ontario in 1926 and the bar of British Columbia in 1950. He was made a K.C. in 1937. He is in an organization called Zeta Psi; I do not know what that is. He is a Liberal and he is a Presbyterian. I did not think that Presbyterians allowed any church members to be on the board of directors of a finance company. However, be that as it may, for his recreation he plays golf. He belongs to the Rideau Club, the Country Club and the Royal Ottawa Golf Club. He has a home—incidentally, I do not know when he has time to go home, but he has a home—at Thorold road, Rockcliffe, Ottawa. He has an office at 88 Metcalfe street, Ottawa.

After reading that amazing list, I just wondered what his occupation might be, and so I had to take the supplement. I am rather fussy about these people who receive the right to take out of the pockets of Canadian citizens these exorbitant rates of interest, and therefore I think I should pay some attention to who they are. I find in the directory which is a supplement to this "Who's Who" that among the many occupations he lists himself as being engaged in law. I do not know where this man is going to find time to administer another finance company. I am very suspicious that the two Americans named are the ones who are going to operate this finance company and that any Canadians who might be on the board will be on it only in a very nominal manner in order to comply with the provisions of the act, which says that, out of a board of five, at least three must be Canadian citizens and residents in Canada.

Unlike the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Studer), who says that the socialists exercise no influence in Canada, I feel that the socialists exercise a tremendous influence. A year ago this whole subject of these finance companies was first raised in this house by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). In the issue of Saturday Night for March 17, 1956, there is an article headed "Tightening Up on Small Loans" by Logan MacLean, which is very well written indeed. He makes the following statement in relation to my argument that not another finance company is needed:

> Licensed lenders at the end of 1954 had some $219 million of loans outstanding, including $88 million of less than $500.

We raised the issue last year, and we got such an excellent reception from one end of Canada to the other that this year the minister himself has seen fit to make some moves in the right direction. I am not permitted at this time to discuss Bill No. 51. However, when the hon. member says that we serve no useful purpose in our protestations, I want to say that in this instance, with this bill and other bills like it, I think we have served a very useful purpose. The article in Saturday Night shows that the interest rates on $1,200 for 12 months will have been reduced from $156 to $109.50, or a saving of approximately one-third. Taking the figures of the loans outstanding now, I think the C.C.F. is responsible for saving the people of Canada in interest alone, with even the limited measure of reform that we are getting this year, a sum in excess of $1 million each and every year henceforth.

An hon. Member: Don't let your imagination run wild.

Mr. Regier: Someone says not to let my imagination run wild. I might say that, if it were not for the C.C.F. members in this house, the imagination of the many sleeping members of the Liberal party would run very wild indeed.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Regier: I have said what I want to say, Mr. Speaker. I do feel that the hon. member who has volunteered to be the sponsor of this bill is personally in no way to blame. I feel very resentful that the president of the largest political movement in Canada should associate his name in any active role at all with finance companies, and particularly with the formation of additional leeches on the Canadian people. I want to register my opposition all the way along the line to the formation of another finance company.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, this is a motion for second reading of Bill H-5 from the other place, and I understand it is to be referred to the banking and commerce committee. The petitioners whose names are given in the bill, Edward James MacDermott and Charles Thomas MacDermott, Jr., both of the city of Worcester in the state of Massachusetts, Duncan Kenneth MacTavish, Ronald Charles Merriam and George Perley-Robertson, of Ottawa, and others, have brought forth a bill which, as has been explained by the sponsor, is in proper form. In supplicating parliament for incorporation by this method, they are not only following the approved method but are within their rights in every respect. The question is, then, how the matter should properly be dealt with in this house.

The merits of the case, as I see them, should be dealt with after the petitioners have had the opportunity of presenting those merits to the banking and commerce committee. If we were to attempt to prejudge the issue here on second reading and, as has been suggested, defeat what is brought forward in proper form and in accordance with proper rights, then we would in effect be making our decision before hearing the evidence, which I am sure no fair-minded member of the house would wish to do. It would be like what, I am told, has sometimes been done by an inexperienced magistrate. Coming to a conclusion after hearing a plaintiff and being advised that he could not render his judgment at that time, he heard the defendant and then decided the case in the opposite way. We will have an opportunity, to which I for one will look forward, of hearing these petitioners present their case. I look forward to it because I should like to know what the case is for further use of United States capital in the small loan business in Canada. That is an issue which might be debated but I submit it would probably be better debated after we have heard the purposes advanced by the petitioners. We could, I suppose, spend considerable time debating the whole question of small loans, interest rates and collateral issues that are before parliament in other ways, but that does not strike me as being a useful expenditure of our time at this stage. We could debate the narrower question of whether there are enough companies in the small loans field now, but I submit that would be better debated after we have heard the petitioners.

A bill of this kind is not a government measure but is brought forward in the ordinary course of the rights of a citizen to petition parliament for incorporation, and therefore it seems to me that the only proper course to follow is to let the bill go forward to the banking and commerce committee where we shall hear the petitioners. As I say, I look forward to hearing these particular petitioners because their names and places of residence arouse an interest which I am sure evokes a full inquiry as to the purposes and merits of the proposition which they will then ask parliament to accept.

[Mr. Michener.]

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to add my voice to those who have expressed their opposition to the incorporation of another small loans company. I think that in Canada we have had enough of the kind of treatment that forces poor people in unusual circumstances to go to these loan sharks incorporated under charters similar to the one proposed in this legislation which we are now discussing. The first and most lasting education I got in Sunday school comes from something that I recall most vividly, the picture of Jesus driving the moneychangers out of the temple. From biblical times right down to the present day methods have been followed throughout the centuries by which our common people, our little people, have been exploited by another class regardless of whether or not that class was a minority.

Under charters of this type individuals are given the right to prey upon people of this dominion when they are most in need of a better form of assistance. I want to join with others who supported the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) when he first brought before the house a year ago any active opposition to this type of company. Since that time there has been more recognition throughout Canada of the fact that many of our people with small incomes, people who are in the most straitened circumstances, have to go to companies with such charters as the one being sought at this time. While our group may be small, while our influence may not have spread sufficiently throughout Canada to bring about widespread opposition to this sort of thing, I am quite sure it has been effective in moulding public opinion with regard to the fact that a rate of interest of 24 per cent is much too high to charge people at any time but more particularly when they are in dire need. I support the hon. member for Assiniboia and other members of the house, not only of this party, who are prepared to get up and try to bring to the attention of the government that we need a different type of legislation in order to meet the requirement for loans of people who are in dire need.

Contrary to what the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Studer) said earlier this afternoon, in my opinion this party is having a tremendous influence on the thinking of people throughout Canada, and while we do not win every victory we are still prepared to get up and say what we think. I believe that in this instance we have something on which public opinion in Canada should be focused. I am not against any particular company. I am against the principle of anybody having to pay 24 per cent interest on any type of loan and more particularly when they are in dire circumstances.

By way of argument, I suppose, against the views put forward by the hon. member for Assiniboia and others in the house against the present practice, certain loan companies have undertaken to put up a defence. I have here a little pamphlet issued by the Niagara Finance Company Limited. It is very interesting from the point of view of what they have to say in support of their argument and the methods they follow in making loans to people. In the foreword to the little booklet they say:

Reputable lenders—

They take it upon themselves to say they are reputable. I suppose that is because they have a charter and therefore they feel they are reputable. I do not think that sort of statement would be swallowed by all of us. I do not want to attack them personally but I certainly attack them on the matter of principle. I do not think it is reputable for anybody to demand that poor people pay 24 per cent interest. The foreword has this to say:

Reputable lenders, such as Niagara Finance, have hundreds of unsolicited testimonials that tell the real story of the value of the lender to his community. Sometimes the stories are poignant, sometimes amusing, often they leave us with a real sense of satisfaction.

I suggest that the greatest satisfaction these companies get is from their interest charges. In my opinion the most significant testimonials will come from people who have bought on time, had to go to a loan company to get a short term loan and finally have lost their furniture, their home, their equity in whatever they may have bought. The foreword goes on to say:

On the other hand, our industry has been the target for unjustified criticism by uninformed people who have never felt the need for, nor used, the service provided by companies such as ours.

Again I want to say that I do not think the criticism against this type of lending, launched particularly by members of this group, is unjustified. I question too that the criticism is uninformed. I do not think you need to have been in the position of obtaining a loan from one of these companies in order to understand what the effects are in the case of many of the people who obtain these loans. It is just as silly as to say that you have to be a hen in order to know how to boil an egg. The pamphlet then proceeds to try to describe why people borrow, and I think this is significant. It has this to say:

Frequently, when families are faced with emergencies requiring ready money (illness, accidents, expensive repair bills for cars or homes, taxes, etc.), they find it necessary to reduce payments for such outstanding bills to smaller, more easily handled amounts.

I suggest it is a pretty facetious argument to suggest that if people take their bills, go to one of these loan companies and agree to pay 24 per cent, it will be any easier for them to repay what they owe and take care of their indebtedness. On the contrary, I suggest that such people are perhaps pledging their future to these companies and will be in direr straits than ever. The pamphlet goes on to say:

The unvarnished truth is that people want to keep their credit intact and pay promptly. If they do not pay promptly then there is a penalty exacted from them . . . worry! Doctors in candid moments say it's more harmful than tuberculosis, the common cold or any other infectious or contagious disease.

Again, what a silly argument to make! If there is any worry involved it arises when people find themselves in the position of having to go to one of these companies to obtain a loan as a result of which they know that when they get their pay cheque they are going to have to make a payment month by month on the loan and if they do not pay there will be a severe penalty. They know that they are faced with a situation where they are going to have to pay 24 per cent interest. So rather than being of any assistance to them, again if the doctors' statements are true that worry is one of the worst things facing people, these companies certainly add to that sort of condition.

Here is a very important matter. This company in particular goes out of its way to attack what, in their opinion, is one of the more important types of organization we have in this country, namely the credit union. Here they say:

Credit Unions . . . Such organizations are often formed in large plants, factories, or among social or community groups. They have the advantage of being run by the members, and their administration and other costs are therefore low. They contribute virtually nothing to the public treasury. They have comparatively no taxes to pay. They do not lend to the general public; they exist to serve their own membership. Be careful not to overlook the fact that operations of credit unions must be restricted to groups with close "community of interests". They can offer low rates of charge only because they are tax-free, can use voluntary staff and usually have rent-free or very low-rent accommodation.

Mr. Speaker, I have had some experience with credit unions because in the province of Saskatchewan we have perhaps more than there are in any other province in the Dominion of Canada. I think it would be interesting to the members of this house—

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am normally a patient man, as I think are most of the hon. members here. One does not mind remarks that are relevant to the issue. But when we are dealing with credit unions specifically, is that not getting a little bit far away from this bill that has been presented here?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the hon. member has a point of order. Here is a pamphlet put out by a company which is incorporated under a charter of the type which we are discussing. They made an attack on certain institutions in this country—

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Richardson) discusses the point of order further, may I suggest that the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) get a chance to explain.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we are here discussing whether or not it is advisable for this house to give the right of incorporation to another small loans company. I submit that the arguments pro or con, in favour of or against that argument, are relevant to this discussion. I am trying to place before the house a pamphlet put out by one of these companies as an argument that the existence of certain companies—

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order.

Mr. Speaker: This is precisely the point on which I want to listen to what the hon. member for Moose Mountain has to say. This is the second time that he has almost reached that point. I should like to hear him. I want the hon. member to continue from the point where he said that this is a pamphlet issued by one of these companies and in which some corporations are being criticized.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Just a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, I said that this document is put out by a small loans company. Of course I am against the incorporation of this company. I am submitting to the house what I think would be a better alternative to this type of financing. Rather than that this government or the members of this house should support the idea of the incorporation of another small loans company, I am putting before this house what I consider to be an alternative type of financing. This proposition that I am putting forward is attacked in this little pamphlet which I am discussing at the present time. First they say that this group contributes virtually nothing to the public treasury.

Mr. Richardson: May I now rise on a point of order?

[Mr. Richardson.]

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I should be interrupted.

Mr. Speaker: I want to hear what the hon. member has to say further to the point he raised a moment ago. After I have heard the explanation given by the hon. member for Moose Mountain, I shall be in a better position.

Mr. Richardson: I apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the members of the house for rising if I appear to be interrupting the hon. member for Moose Mountain. But I wanted to save him the embarrassment of making an inaccurate statement if the report of the superintendent of insurance is accurate and in which are given the names of the small loan companies as of December 31, 1954. That is the latest report.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I never made any such statement or any type of reference to that report.

Mr. Richardson: My point of order was that not once but twice and I think the third time I heard the hon. member say that Niagara Finance Company was a small loan company. Mr. Speaker, there are only four small loans companies as reported in the report of the superintendent of insurance; and in the booklet which I have here the name of the Niagara Finance Company does not appear.

Mr. Knowles: Is that a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Are we discussing the Niagara Finance Company?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Not at all. I take it that what we have before us now is a motion for the second reading of Bill No. 166 entitled "An act to incorporate Signature Loan and Finance Company". Perhaps the hon. member for Moose Mountain could devote his attention to the motion for second reading of this bill. There is an amendment which has to do with the six months' hoist. The intention of it is to kill the bill. It would seem to me that the hon. member should not discuss an alternative proposal—he aims at killing the bill by the amendment that is before the house—if his remarks are to be relevant.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I was not proposing that this chamber at the present time accept the alternative, but I think there is an alternative. I felt that within the scope of this discussion I might be able to indicate that I felt there is an alternative method of providing short-term loans to people by means of which they would not be required to pay this exorbitant rate of interest which is charged by the type of company which is asking for incorporation by parliament at this time.

In defence of the credit unions—if they should need any defence—I want to say that we have a community effort on their part, with no usury and no exorbitant interest rate.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that we have already had discussion on this type of loan legislation, during the course of which hon. members have put forward the benefits to be derived from credit unions. That discussion has taken place on a private bill moved by an hon. member of this house and also on a government bill. In that discussion latitude was given. Now that we are dealing with this private bill, it seems to me that we must direct our remarks to the principle of the bill.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think I have given the reason for my participation in this debate. It is certainly to register my complete opposition to the bill. I feel that what we are aiding and abetting here, if we allow the incorporation of this company, is just one more small loan company with the privilege of exploiting the hardship and the difficulties that the Canadian people suffer at this time. Rather than that this government or any member of this house should allow such a thing to take place, I think it is expedient that we give consideration to those methods which would give better standards of living to our people. Particularly at this time, when it seems that there is greater and greater need for credit in this country, I think some measure should be found as an alternative. Already this session there have been five bills dealing with increased lending facilities for many classes of the Canadian people. Small loans companies generally do not carry on very much business in my constituency except in one or two of the larger centres. However, I do feel that in protesting against this bill I am speaking for the large cosmopolitan areas where there are slums and where we find many people in the low income brackets are becoming victims of this vicious system. Therefore, I want to protest in the strongest way I can.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to take part in the debate on the amendment? He has spoken already. If he has spoken, he cannot speak now.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, a little earlier in the debate the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Michener) spoke of the reference of this measure to the banking and commerce committee and said on that occasion he was looking forward to seeing and meeting the sponsors of this bill, because, in his words, "their names excited interest". Well, Mr. Speaker, the only sort of interest their names would excite in me would be rather a macabre one.

Sir, perhaps I am old fashioned. I was reared in a different sort of world when we called things by their real names before we became so very delicate as we have become in recent years, so delicate, shall I say, as to call undertakers morticians, and so forth. In the world in which I was brought up money lenders were called money lenders. They were not glossed over as lending institutions, even approved lending institutions, or small loans companies. They were money lenders and no one even pretended that they were respectable members of society. They were considered by all respectable people as being a rather disreputable element in the community. I suggest to you, sir, that if we would continue that practice of calling things by their real names those people might not be deluded into supporting some of the measures that come before us.

I am interested, sir, in the light of the exuberance of the statements of the Minister of Finance that we are in a booming, bouncing economy, to notice the ability that this sort of people show in trying to get into the small loans business, because we had better not close our eyes, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that they are coming in for one purpose and one purpose only, and that is to fatten on misfortune. It is no good the sponsors of this bill pretending that these people are coming in to perform a public service. It is the same sort of service that hyenas and vultures perform; and if there were not in our community a growing number of people who find that their regular sources of income will not pay their regular living expenses, then those people would not be so anxious to get into the field. There would not be the competition to get licences and charters to do business among the unfortunate members of our society, because those people must all be classified as unfortunate. Some of them, of course, may be unfortunate merely in the fact that they are not bright enough to realize that those so euphemistically named organizations are nothing more or less than the old-fashioned money lenders, the sharks. It is unfortunate that they are so unintelligent that they do not realize that. The vast majority, however, are unfortunate in a plainer and more readily understood manner. They are unfortunate in that they do not get enough money to live on. And they are driven at some point or another by some misfortune, sickness in the family, or loss of a job for a short time, into the hands of those benevolent philanthropists who are there just waiting to lend a helping hand to their less fortunate citizens.

Now, you have suggested, sir, that it is not in order in the course of this debate on this amendment to give the bill a 6-months' hoist to suggest alternative measures of meeting this evident need in the population; therefore, I must refrain from pointing out, as some of my colleagues have done, that there are alternatives if we have to seek alternatives in this particular field. I would myself much rather see the government devoting itself to a more positive cure of this situation, a cure that would ensure that the incomes of the Canadian people were sufficient to meet their living expenses. There are, of course, a number of ways in which that could be done. One would be, perhaps, to curtail some of the incomes that are so cherished by the Minister of Finance and his colleagues and distribute the proceeds in the form of increased family allowances and increased old age pensions. But I do suggest, sir, that to attempt to cure an apparently chronic state of impecuniousness on the part of a vast number of our people by allowing old-fashioned money lenders, sharks, to get into the field with the blessing of this parliament and to fatten on that misfortune is a disastrous policy for this parliament to pursue. I would like to see this parliament very firmly put a stop to any more expansions in this disreputable business, and to take proper steps to eliminate the need of this by additions to the incomes of the ordinary citizens of Canada.

The other day the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Carrick), when speaking on this measure, drew the rather ludicrous analogy between such an organization as the Aluminum Company of Canada and this money lending organization which he was championing.

Mr. Carrick: May I interrupt the hon. member? I have never spoken on this measure.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): It was the other related measure. However, I think it is relevant to this type of suggestion. He suggested that the objections we have made to this bill to the effect that United States capital is coming to Canada to borrow Canadian funds to lend to Canadian citizens would be equally relevant to such an organization as the Aluminum Company of Canada, which, as he rightly says,—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I call it six o'clock.

On motion of Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo) the debate was adjourned.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo).]

Mr. Speaker: This house stands adjourned until 2.30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest we come back tonight, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; like many of us, I am anxious to get into the Easter recess. As it is six o'clock I do now leave the chair. I hope everyone will be here with me at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. Studer: Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock we were discussing a situation in regard to the economy in general and in regard to the farming population in particular. In the 13 minutes or so that are left to me I would like to offer a few more comments and to suggest again that in this economic world in which we live one of the most important folios of any government at this time would be to have a minister of economics. We are living in the age of automation wherein machinery is taking the place of the labour that was formerly involved in the production of goods and services. To have such a portfolio would be advisable and of advantage. I think he would be one of the busiest ministers in our government if a portfolio such as that were to be established.

What are the objectives of this government in regard to farming? Well, the objective is to learn from the experience and the policies of all countries and to determine what has been detrimental or objectionable to the farmers' interests. What this government is trying to do is to eliminate the objectionable features of all other policies in all countries and to utilize the beneficial features that have been incorporated in any existing policy and all the policies throughout the countries of the world which have been of advantage to the farmers.

This government proposes to use the floor price structure, the Agricultural Prices Support Act and subsidies where necessary, and whatever might be beneficial in the parity price structure. The government intends to utilize all these measures and incorporate them into one overwhelming policy, if I might call it that, which would be greatly beneficial to the farmers of this country. In doing so this government wishes to have the support of all opposition parties and all the people in Canada. Only a government such as this is capable of doing the job. This government has the interests of the farmers at heart and it has the support of all the people of Canada. Only such a government can formulate these policies and make them effective. There is no hope anywhere in a puppet or splinter government or a government that is local or operative in one province or which has only the support of people in various small sections of Canada. We have to have a government which has the support of people throughout Canada in order to make effective the beneficial measures which we hope to bring into effect. These would be of benefit not only to the farmers but to people of all occupations and classes in Canada.

We have had many speeches concerning duties and tariffs. The government is progressively reducing tariffs. It has removed them from machinery and repair parts in this budget; but we farmers will make a deal with this government and with the people of Canada. If they will remove the entire tariff structure which exists in Canada today, then we farmers will not ask for any consideration or subsidies or anything else from this government. We will be prepared to meet competition throughout the whole world. The farmers will be able to produce more in a free economy as opposed to a tariff economy. I think that would be accepted anywhere, Mr. Speaker. As the result of that we could go forward from here and formulate these policies if we have the support of the people.

In connection with a tariff economy I would suggest that the farmers themselves cannot win in a tariff battle because they are overwhelmed with regard to voting strength throughout the country. We do insist, however, that the rest of the people of Canada give consideration to the situation in which the farmers find themselves and eliminate any extra burdens which the farmers may carry through any policy that may be in evidence here in Canada. The problems of farmers never seem to end, but if they ever do end this government will be responsible for ending them. Here again I ask for the support of the Canadian people. All is not lost in Canada. We are more or less in a period of transition wherein we are moving from an agricultural economy to an industrial economy. Perhaps in the over-all picture as a result of increased industrial expansion and increased wealth the farmers can depend for their subsistence more on that type of economy than they could if we had a depressed economy. It is in the interest of the farmers and of all the people in Canada to have the entire economy come to the assistance of agriculture when that is necessary.

All is not lost in Saskatchewan, either, because industry is supposed to be coming into Saskatchewan; at least the premier of Saskatchewan is telling us about it every day. I think it should because I notice that even the licence plates for Saskatchewan automobiles are made in Manitoba. If industry is coming into Saskatchewan in the face of the Regina manifesto which reads, "We will not be content until the capitalists have been eradicated," and with that sword of Damocles—how do you pronounce that name, anyway?—hanging over their heads, then a situation must exist in Saskatchewan which is not in evidence anywhere else. If industry is coming into Saskatchewan under those conditions then there must be a conspiracy between that psuedo-socialist government of Saskatchewan and the capitalists to eradicate not the capitalists but the socialists in Saskatchewan. The socialist government has a secret alliance with the capitalists to eradicate the socialists in Saskatchewan and the purge is on. It began in Swift Current last fall at a nomination meeting in which the only real socialist in the government of Saskatchewan was purged. He did not receive the nomination in Swift Current last fall for the socialist government. My Tory friends are quite vocal here. I would like to suggest to them that they dissociate themselves from the socialists out in Saskatchewan. They have nothing in common. Their ideals are not only contrary but absolutely contradictory to the ideals of socialism.

There is a saying that politics makes strange bedfellows and there is nothing stranger than what is taking place out in Saskatchewan. The Conservatives have been in bed with the socialists so often that no one knows to whom the bed now belongs. I would suggest to those Tories that when they get into bed with them, as they do so often here in this house, they pull down the shades and pull the sheets over their heads so people cannot see who they are.

The Karl Marx juniors on the left side should get up and stipulate what is going on out in Saskatchewan and they should state whether or not they are socialists.

An hon. Member: Your time is up.

Mr. Studer: I have five more minutes. I would suggest that the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Johnson) make a socialist speech in the house and forget all about the secession talk out in Saskatchewan. Imagine the hon. member for Kindersley leading the secessionist revolutionaries here to Ottawa asking the government to set up a socialist monarchy out in Saskatchewan so that they can develop their own, and we will have to send all the box cars we are now using for grain out there with relief to keep them happy.

Let Karl Marx junior from Assiniboia get up and make a speech saying that he is in favour of socialism. Let the hon. member for Kindersley also make a speech regarding the abolition of the Senate. I think that would be a fine topic for the hon. member to discuss. And let Karl Marx junior from Assiniboia tell us about how he is in favour of socializing everything except the farms—because he owns a farm.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has not expired; he still has until 8.15 if he wishes to continue, but he should not refer to hon. members as "Karl Marx junior" from so and so, but as the hon. member for such and such constituency.

Mr. Studer: I would be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker, but I thought they would be proud of it. All we are interested in is hearing some real down-to-earth, honest-to-goodness socialist speeches in the House of Commons. No wonder the president of the socialists in Saskatchewan, who is a teacher of English socialism in the University of Saskatchewan, Carlyle King, was pleading with the socialists to please make a socialist speech so the people of this country will know what you are and whether you are socialists or merely capitalists in disguise. Hon. members to my left frequently ask the Liberals to make speeches. We are all looking forward with pleasure, as are all the people of Canada, to hearing these hon. members make socialist speeches so the people of Canada can determine what they are.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that this is a good budget. It ensures progress for Canada, in which we are all interested. It ensures benefits to all of the people. Nowhere in any country are there greater social services; nowhere in any country has a system been devised where we can produce to a greater extent. Nowhere in any country are there greater exporters. Nowhere in any country is there greater leadership. Where is there a greater country? Where is there a greater future? Which all adds up to this: There is no substitute for good government, there is no alternative for good government. This government has proved in the past, in the present and will in the future, that there is no end to good government.

[Mr. Studer.]

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, this afternoon the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Ellis) referred to the budget as a do-nothing budget and he said he was opposed to it, but it seems that about six o'clock his wife presented him with twin daughters and I think he should be congratulated.

Mr. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in all the accounts that have been written or spoken about the budget presented a week ago I cannot find where anybody, even friends of the government, has said that it is a good budget.

Mr. Studer: I said it was.

Mr. Starr: There were many things in it, but the most significant thing to me is that it has been accepted by everybody as being a formal government announcement that there will be no election this year. I think this is a feature which even the most ardent supporters of the government will deplore. The reason for the no-election assumption is obvious. For many years now we have had an election budget in every election year and it has been taken for granted that the long-term strategy of the government is to manipulate the taxes of Canadians to suit the purposes of the party in power. It does not matter how callous we may become to this sort of thing, it does not matter how it may be justified even in some minds as practical politics, I am sure that it does not increase anybody's respect for the government or the law of the land, and the budget is a part of that law.

If next year is to be an election year then I suppose we will have an election budget again. There is disheartening evidence in the figures placed before the house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) that there has been deliberately built up this year a surplus of revenue to provide funds for the political purposes of the party in power in the next election year. The Minister of Finance gave recognition to this surplus in his remarks to the house a week ago tonight. He excused it by pleading that it made sense in good times to budget for such a surplus. However, he made no reference to the fact that this excuse is completely opposed to the budget policies and pronouncements of recent good years.

Apart altogether from the callous acceptance of partisan demands as the basis for budget decisions by this government, there are other factors which tend to make this deliberate government practice entirely reprehensible to many Canadians. Some years ago this sort of thing might have been excused as good political sport, but times have changed. The money which the government is now jockeying around from election to election represents one-fifth more or less of the entire productivity of all the people of Canada. What the government does about this one-fifth of our money from year to year vitally affects the whole course of the economic development of this nation. Under the present government this tax grab, to use a common phrase, has been acknowledged as part of the relentless policy of centralized government control. Taxes which were once regarded only in the light of necessary government revenue are now openly manipulated at the will of the government to force the current doctrines of the ruling economic group in Ottawa upon the nation. This use of the taxing power, developed during war emergencies, may have had some temporary justification, but it seems to me that its extension into normal times has led inevitably into its extension into the realm of party politics. Surely this is going beyond the best judgment and the best conscience of what our people expect from their national government.

There are serious drawbacks to the general economy, and by that I mean the future of Canadian development, in this hard-fisted and hard-boiled approach to budget decisions. For one thing, the economic theories of the ruling group are not entirely consistent from year to year. The result is that the planning of businessmen become subject to annual guessing about which page of what theorist the Ottawa group happens to be studying.

For some time we have been told that this government believes in free trade with a capital F and a capital T. We have read some rather funny, but certainly very positive, statements by representatives of the government at meetings of GATT and in lectures to spokesmen for the textiles and other industries who have come to Ottawa suggesting that there are times and occasions when this belief in free trade at all costs might be modified when this or that Canadian industry finds itself in serious trouble.

We will all recall the insults which were thrown at the representatives of the textile and other industries who were told in no uncertain terms that they would not be asking for protection if their own industrial management was as efficient as the Ottawa theorists thought it should be. There were many Canadians who did not agree that this all-out free trade position made much sense in the light of the facts of international marketing, but most people I think gave the government a measure of credit for what appeared to be a sincere if misguided adherence to a rather odd economic theory.

The new budget removes even that belief in the sincerity of the government in this matter. It includes what I am told is the most complete reversal of form in the whole history of government dabbling in economic theories. I refer to the drastic measure of protection now offered to the magazine industry. Without going into the merits or demerits of the specific industry concerned, some generalities are obvious.

First, this is protection in the most drastic form. It is a tax designed to penalize the non-domestic sector of an industry in order to divert revenues to the domestic industry. I do not say that this is necessarily a bad principle, especially if it can be shown that a Canadian industry could not survive without this protection.

Second, the nature of the tax makes it a form of censorship. Its purpose is clearly to influence the type of publication which Canadians are to read. It is a clear-cut infringement of both free trade and a free press.

Third, it is the very worst sort of public relations that a young, expanding country can have. It labels Canadians in the eyes of our most important customers abroad as being small-minded parochial people who are afraid of the import of ideas, particularly American ideas. It makes a complete mockery of the huge expenditures by the government's tourist department who are trying to persuade Americans that they are welcome here in Canada.

I mention these aspects of this extraordinary tax, not to attack it as such but rather to point out the amazing about-face of the government on the whole question of protection. It has denied protection, in very high-sounding and self-righteous terms, to industries that needed protection far more than the thriving magazine industry. It may be of interest to note also, for example, that the current issue of the Financial Post, which carries an account of the budget, also carries an article headlined "Magazines Increase Ad. Sales". It states that Canadian magazines sold $17·4 million worth of advertising last year, which was an increase of more than $1·3 million over the previous year. That is an increase of 7·6 per cent in revenue.

In spite of this fact, the Minister of Finance had this to say about his amazing excursion into the field of protection:

> The long-run continuation of Canadian magazines appears to be jeopardy.

I cannot believe that the minister meant that seriously. The facts of the matter are that the long-run continuation of Canadian magazines is not in any jeopardy whatsoever. We have Canadian magazines that have achieved circulations and revenues in recent years that are far greater than ever before in the history of this industry. They have done so because they are good magazines, well edited, efficiently run and giving the Canadian people what they want to read.

The minister, in spite of the facts of the situation, says that what he calls very exceptional measures can be justified. How can these measures be justified? The facts are all to the contrary. Industries which have been steadily losing sales have been denied relief for years. Now, one which is increasing its revenues is given a degree of protection—a 20 per cent levy on revenues—which is unmatched for severity in the recent history of protective taxation.

I have no brief for or against Canadian magazines. I read and enjoy several of them, both in the general field and in special trade fields in which I am interested. They are doing a fine job. Two of them, Weekend Magazine of Montreal and the Star Weekly of Toronto, have in recent years developed national circulations of about a million each. No United States magazine has done so well comparatively in its own field in this period. This is not a depressed Canadian industry. On the contrary, it is a thriving, prosperous example of Canadian enterprise at its competitive best.
