Carlton County Election.

As we predicted last week, Mr. Appleby, the candidate of the Local Government, has been returned by acclamation, Mr. G. W. White failing to face defeat.

In referring to the series of uninterrupted victories to the credit of the government since Hon. Mr. Tweedie became premier, we omitted those in the vacancies immediately following Hon. Mr. Emmerson's retirement. In all, there have now been eight government candidates elected as supporters of the Tweedie government—a fact that abundantly demonstrates the people's confidence in it.

Our Proposed Water System.

A correspondent who has followed the progress, or rather, the delays that have taken place in connection with Chatham's proposed water and sewerage system writes approvingly of the ADVANCE's views of the subject, and says they are exactly those which are advanced in the theory of the Bacon Air Lift Company when making their examination here at the request of the former Mayor, Mr. Winslow. He says that the representative of that company went thoroughly over Mr. Coffin's report and the company gave it as their opinion that they considered it absurd to expend the amount of money called for in that report to obtain a supply of surface water which might, or might not, be sufficient to meet the town's requirements, and, evidently, Mr. Coffin had himself felt that there was some doubt as to the amount of water to be obtained, or he would not have suggested that the surface supply could be augmented by artesian wells.

The proposition of the Bacon Air Lift Company, which covered the expenditure of about one quarter the amount of money estimated by Mr. Coffin, gave not merely that company's opinion, but also a positive assurance that a supply of good artesian water could be obtained; and further than this, a guarantee to furnish the amount of water, or the town was to be under no expense for the trial to be made.

Now if, instead of doing nothing, the Mayor and Town Council had had the Bacon Air Lift Company make its experiment, they would, no doubt, have been much further ahead than they now are. If the company had been unsuccessful it would have cost the town nothing, and the practicability or impracticability of obtaining an artesian supply would have been demonstrated. We are informed that ex-Mayor Winslow, at the time mentioned, wrote to quite a number of parties for whom the Bacon Company had put in plans, he himself selecting the names from a list submitted, and in every case the replies were satisfactory.

We do not know what the attitude of citizens generally is in this matter, but it ought to go without saying that if as good and reliable a supply of water as that proposed by Mr. Coffin can be obtained at a much lower cost, the least expensive system ought to be introduced—especially when the party proposing the latter asks nothing in case of failure, while the proposer of the high priced system takes no risk whatever.

No one will blame Mr. Coffin for inducing the town to enter upon any undertaking, however unnecessarily expensive it may be. It is his business to do that kind of thing. The more expensive the works, the greater the commission of the engineer in charge, and if those who have to find the money are satisfied, who is to complain? Men more experienced than our mayor and aldermen in dealing with such matters, might think it prudent, when so much money is involved, to ascertain whether quite as good a system and service as that proposed might not be obtained for less money. If they were a private undertaking no company or individual would place its interests biliously in the hands of any one man, however eminent he might be in his profession. If they did it would not be reasonable to expect either the most economical or efficient results for the money to be expended.

Whipped and Wailing.

The Pall Mall Gazette Magazine publishes an interview with Paul Kruger, ex-president of the Transvaal, of which the following is a part:—

"Will no one arbitrate? Will no one give us a chance of defending ourselves? We may have done wrong, but we have our faults and our weakness. We declare war, but our hands were forced, and we can prove it. Get some one to judge between England and ourselves. We are a little flock, but we have made great mistakes."

When asked why he came to Europe, he said to the interviewer:—

"I could not do so without my commandos, as Mr. Snyman, I am too old, but I may be of some use here."

He said:—

"I am sorry for her, but I have a deep sorrow for her, but I have more for my country. My wife has her children. Six are still with her. Two of my sons have died on the battlefield. Two were captured. I believe two more are dead also, as I have not heard from them for two months, and I know they are in the thick of the fight."

"They were one and a grandson I have the feeling that I will not see him again. He has not been heard of for six months, but she has six children with her and she is not to be pitied."

If the old president had anything to say about his arbitrating force of about two or less a year ago, before he issued his insolent order to the British to practically get out of South Africa, he might have said he was the ruler of a large part of that country. He had, however, made simple preparations for the war which he so easily entered upon with the declaration that he was going to "set his humanity" and having failed in his purpose, his whinings over the results of his folly are only calculated to inspire contempt for his character.

Parliament Opened.

The Local Legislature of Nova Scotia opened last Thursday. For the first time in the history of the Province, the guard of honor consisted entirely of Canadians.

The first session of the Tenth Parliament of the Province of Quebec opened on Monday 17th. Owing to the indisposition of Lieutenant-Governor Joly, Mr. Napoleon Casault acted in his stead and read the speech from the throne.

The first parliament of the reign of King Edward VII, was opened last Thursday by the King in person. His Majesty was accompanied by Queen Alexandra, the Duke of York and Cornwall, the Duke of Connaught, and many other members of the Royal Family.

The King and Queen arrived at Westminster at 107. The arrival of their Majesties was greeted with a uproar of cheers, the ringing of church bells and the firing of a royal salute in St. James' Park.

The arrival of the members of the House and Lords, the King took the oath and then read his speech. The same address stood while the speech was read. The King did not wear the crown.

In his speech the King said, amongst other things:—"I address you for the first time at a moment of national sorrow, while the whole country is mourning the irreparable loss which we so recently sustained and which has fallen with such peculiar severity upon my mother, during her long and glorious reign, has set an example before the world of what a monarch should be. It is my earnest desire to walk in her footsteps."

"I said this public and private grief it is satisfactory to me to be able to assure you that relations with the other powers continue friendly. The war in South Africa is not yet entirely terminated, but the capitals of the enemy and his principal lines of communication are in my possession, and measures have been taken which will, I trust, enable my troops to deal effectively with the forces by which they are still opposed."

"I greatly regret the loss of life and expenditure of treasure due to the fruitless guerrilla war maintained by Boer partisans in the former territories of the two Republics."

His Majesty announced that the Duke of Cornwall and York will visit Australia and the Dominion of Canada.

London, Feb. 19.—The first division in the first Parliament of King Edward VII which took place yesterday resulted in cutting down 45 the government's normal majority of 130. The interest caused by this unexpected event was heightened by Mr. Weston Spring-Creech's first speech at Westminster and by Mr. Chamberlain's heated defence of his own policy. The extraordinary slowness of the majority of modern times was the result of Lord Chamberlain's refusal to answer questions relating to the government's foreign policy without previous notice from the questioners. Mr. John Dillon, of the opportunity and in spite of an usually large attendance, almost won a victory.

Col. Treacy's Friends.—New York "Music Trades" of the 9th instant contains two references to Col. Daniel F. Treacy, formerly of Chatham, which cannot be too widely known to his many friends here. One is headed:—

"Together for 28 years. How John Davenport and Daniel F. Treacy celebrated an anniversary" and reads as follows:—"Daniel F. Treacy was at the piano table in the Union Square Cafe on Wednesday of this week, eating his lunch with the rest of us."

"An 'I' said he, as he waved his hand to someone at the door. 'That's John.' In walked his partner, John Davenport, and sat by his side.

"Do you know, John," said Treacy, "that we have been together for twenty-eight years and that Feb. 5 is the anniversary of the day when we came together?"

"That's so," said John Davenport; "and we never had any differences, Dan."

"Not a bit of it!" replied John, gallantly. "We've always pulled together."

"I did not say all that to hear those grey-headed men talk his way."

"Well, boys," said I, "we won't break the rule of not drinking anything at lunch, but we will celebrate the occasion with a cigar."

"In my long acquaintance with business men, I have known nothing more conducive to trouble in life and corporations than this very thing."

"I just think a mistake. One man makes the goods, another sells them."

"The man who makes the goods sees only the constant daily drag of supervising the work of the employees, of keeping up to date, of watching and renewing the machinery of the factory material, of the thousand and one details and care of a manufacturing business. He rarely comes in contact with the customers of the house, and knows the value of their money only by their complaints. He seldom goes on the road. He is apt to think he is all there to the business."

"This is the second notice in connection with Col. Treacy in the same paper:—Mr. Daniel F. Treacy has just received a piece of red pasteboard, which he values more than if it were a gold medal or the Victoria Cross. It is a card of honorary membership in the International Iron Moulders' Union which was unanimously voted to him at the last convention on the ground that for over thirty years he had never any trouble with his men."

"Not that," said the Colonel, "there have been 'discussions' between us, but these were really amicable."

"Of course a good deal depends upon what your idea of 'trouble' is."

However, Mr. Treacy is right in regarding that card as a distinction far greater than any badge that might have been given him by the King or Emperor."

To feel that the good that you wear, the good dinner you eat, the comfortable home you have, have not been won by exploiting the labor of your fellow men who hunger and were ill clad, is a satisfaction not to be measured in words."

The employee who has not merely the respect but the good-will of his employers is one of the real prizes of the earth. He is a beacon light on the road of progress to higher and better things. He makes us feel that "the world do move," and in the right direction all the time."

DIED.—At Chatham, Feb. 19th, after a lingering illness, Wm. J. Morris, aged 72 years. Leaves a widow, Mrs. J. B. Morris, and a daughter, Mrs. J. B. Morris, Chatham, N. B. Feb. 20th, 1901. Foresty.—The second annual meeting of the Canadian Forestry Association will be held at Ottawa on the 7th of March next. A very interesting programme has been arranged for this conference. The chief feature of the evening meeting will be a lecture by Dr. A. Schuch, principal of the school of forestry at Baltimore, on "Governmental and Private Forestry," which will be illustrated by accompanying views. The following papers have already been promised.

"Forest Ecology," James Fletcher, LL. D., south side of Water Street, nearly opposite to the post office and occupy the two lower floors of the west half, all of the upper floor, the extension to the south and the separate warehouse in the rear, besides ample yard and a long covered stall for customers' horses. There is a driveway for teams from Water Street and another from Duke Street.

The Water Street store front is of plate glass with ample arrangements for window displays. The store doors are recessed and open into the main store, which is 41 feet deep and 21 feet wide. This has a polished birch floor and steel ceiling, with heavy curtains and shelving on both sides, two long counters and a cash cage at the south end. All is harmoniously colored and very tasteful in every way.

The warehouse, which is separated from the main building, is 36x20 feet—having two floors, equal to 40x72 feet of space. The second floor of the main building is of the same area as the ground floor and the third is the full size of the main building, 30x48.

The cellar is one of the best in the town and contains bins for coal storing, it contains the large furnace which heats the whole building. The stock kept in the establishment is a large and first-class one. The main store contains dress and other dry goods, gentlemen's furnishings, boots and hats and caps. Shoulder Pains. A shoulder pain is a very distressing ailment, and one that is often overlooked. It is caused by a strain of the muscles of the shoulder, and is often the result of a fall or a sudden movement. It is characterized by a sharp, stabbing pain, which is often accompanied by swelling and redness of the joint.

Col. Treacy's Friends.—New York "Music Trades" of the 9th instant contains two references to Col. Daniel F. Treacy, formerly of Chatham, which cannot be too widely known to his many friends here. One is headed:—

"Together for 28 years. How John Davenport and Daniel F. Treacy celebrated an anniversary" and reads as follows:—"Daniel F. Treacy was at the piano table in the Union Square Cafe on Wednesday of this week, eating his lunch with the rest of us."

"An 'I' said he, as he waved his hand to someone at the door. 'That's John.' In walked his partner, John Davenport, and sat by his side.

"Do you know, John," said Treacy, "that we have been together for twenty-eight years and that Feb. 5 is the anniversary of the day when we came together?"

"That's so," said John Davenport; "and we never had any differences, Dan."

"Not a bit of it!" replied John, gallantly. "We've always pulled together."

"I did not say all that to hear those grey-headed men talk his way."

"Well, boys," said I, "we won't break the rule of not drinking anything at lunch, but we will celebrate the occasion with a cigar."

"In my long acquaintance with business men, I have known nothing more conducive to trouble in life and corporations than this very thing."

"I just think a mistake. One man makes the goods, another sells them."

"The man who makes the goods sees only the constant daily drag of supervising the work of the employees, of keeping up to date, of watching and renewing the machinery of the factory material, of the thousand and one details and care of a manufacturing business. He rarely comes in contact with the customers of the house, and knows the value of their money only by their complaints. He seldom goes on the road. He is apt to think he is all there to the business."

"This is the second notice in connection with Col. Treacy in the same paper:—Mr. Daniel F. Treacy has just received a piece of red pasteboard, which he values more than if it were a gold medal or the Victoria Cross. It is a card of honorary membership in the International Iron Moulders' Union which was unanimously voted to him at the last convention on the ground that for over thirty years he had never any trouble with his men."

"Not that," said the Colonel, "there have been 'discussions' between us, but these were really amicable."

"Of course a good deal depends upon what your idea of 'trouble' is."

However, Mr. Treacy is right in regarding that card as a distinction far greater than any badge that might have been given him by the King or Emperor."

The employee who has not merely the respect but the good-will of his employers is one of the real prizes of the earth. He is a beacon light on the road of progress to higher and better things. He makes us feel that "the world do move," and in the right direction all the time."
