Now it had so happened that on that very Sunday night, for it was near midnight, I, John Watson, had been returning home from my brother's, in Duustable. I had left my hired team at the stable, and on my way to my boarding house I passed the store of Mr. Butterworth. In the back yard of the store was a horse fountain, and being thirsty I stepped around that way to get a glraught of water. As I stooped to driak at the spout of the fountain I saw a gleam of light through a crevice in the shutters of one of the store windows. At the same time, there seems to be evidence, of a negative kind at least, that the wig had not been in use at the time of Julius Cæsar, when baldwess, if it was not a reproach, was yet a vulgar theme for satire. The Roman wig; however, so far as we can make out, seems to have been a very different production from anything of the same kind used in modern times. It was what we should call a cap, or close bonnet, rather than a wig, being made of the skin of some small animal, to which the false hair (crines suppositi) was in some manner made to adhere. The wig for the male head appears to have been the last of the inventions used by the masters of the world to supply their personal defects. One of the members in the House last hight spoke of the sittings costing from ighteen hundred to two thousand do lars'a day. They cost something more as at present conducted. They sacrifice the respect which the country should feel towards its Legislature. The loss of time by means of long speeches, rambling declamations, personal squab-bles and abuse, is lamentable. It is still more lamentable to find gentlemen descending to the employment of what is not debating but mere clap trap. One member-old enough to know better and who would use very different language out of the House-ridicules nother member's "Dundreary whisk ers," and is called by implication a clown by a third. Accusations against character, veracity, honesty, are flung about with a recklessness that not even the latitude of parliamentary discussion can excuse. And in this way day after day is passed. We wonder how many of the gentlemen who resort to these stale and unprofitable devices think that they are transacting the public, business. We should like to know how far they would carry their parliamentary manners into private life. They ought to remember that Parliament is not a debating society, and even if it were, the rules of decent debating societies should be observed; and further, that every hour that is devoted to any talk but proper and business talk, is wasting the public money.—Express.

Fillow's Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites. As all life endowed bodies, whether they be Beasts, Birds, Reptiles, Insects, or even Zoophites, and subjects of the Vegetable Kingdom, are governed by vital force, which binds all the springs of existence, and as nothing can save them from destruction when this principle leaves them, the discovery of means whereby vitality may be sustained in the living body is indeed a leave to the world.

Modern Chemistry has ventilated the question and discovered the ingredients constituting the brain, muscles and nervee, and finds that by introducing these ingredients in proper proportions the brain and nervous system are strengthened.

This, then, is substantially the basis on which Fellows' Hypophosphites is built, its direct action is upon the blood, the brain and nervous system, and the muscles. Strengthening the Nerves, it causes the rapid distribution of vitalized blood in the Muscular Organs of the Body.
