SHIRLEY ROSS

A Story of Woman's Faithfulness.

"Yes—my heart—such a weary pain, Lucie! Nay, do not look so troubled, dear; it will be better soon. It is not much; but! have always been a coward at bearing pain."

Her head fell back wearily upon the cushions and she closed her eyes, laying her hands in Lucie's as she knelt beside her, while Miss Grey, looking at the wan death-like face framed in falling hair, thought that any more grief must kill her. And yet how could they spare her this grief, which might, which would, Lucie feared, come within the hour? They had been careful to lei none of the rumors which had been rife in the little town reach her; even Ludy Eastwell had been carefully kept away—for it was she who, in her violent hysterical passion of grief, had cried out that the dead man had been myrdered, and that Guy Stuarthad murdered him and there were hundreds who shared her belief; and, little as Lucie Grey knew of Shirley's story, she felt instinctively that such a report would be to her more bitter than death itself. She remembered the look which had come into Shirley's eyes when he had joined them so unexpectedly among the rocks; she remembered how the lovely face had brightened and flushed and lost all its weariness; and, as she thought of Guy's grave noble face, she felt that the accusation was as false as it was monstrous.

of Guy's grave noble tace, she lens that the accusation was as false as it was monstrous.

And yet the proofs were dreadfully against him. They had set out together on the morning of Sir Hugh's last day on earth, and beside the body had been found, stained and discolored with blood, the silver-headed bamboo came, the wespon which it was quite evident had given the blow on the head which had been the limmediate cause of death. True the face had lost all its semblance of humanity when the body was found, but the huge boulder of rook under which it had been partly concealed hiad evidently tilted over and fallen upon it, crushing the handsome face which had looked back so smilingly at Shirley a few short hours before, while, as if to let justice have every chance in its favor, the back of the head remained untouched, although the fair hair was matted and stained with blood. What a terrible end to the brilliant career!

"What are you thinking of, Lucie?" asked Shirley, lifting the heavy lids languidly. "How sorrowful you look, dear! I zeem to bring sorrow and pain to all who love me."

Grey said, in her soft sincere voice; and the faintest little wraith of a smile flitted over the white lips.

"Thank you, dear. Oh, Lucie, what should I have done without you? Even Ruby could not have been a truer friend than you. Dear Ruby, she must not know," she added earnestly. "All her happiness at the birth of her little daughter would be destroyed. Lucie, how slowly the time goes! I wonder why they are so long?"

She moved restlessly on the cushions and with a weary impatient gesture pushed back her hair from her forehead.

"Poor darling, it is wearisome for you lying there!" Lucie said, putting her cool hand upon the throbbing temples.

"What makes them so long, Lucie?"
The sweet eyes, so sad and pleading, made Lucie's lip quiver; she felt sure that it was doubt as to the verdict they should return which had detained the jury.

"I cannot say, dear," she whispered tremulously; and there was a long silence. "Lucie, how weary you must be, and hew selfish I am!" said Shirley then.

"Ring for some tea, dear; you have been here so many hours."

Lucie rang, not for the tea only, but for a chance of speaking to some one who could tell her something of what was going on in storm let up a little she permitted Dock to throw his arms around her.

BLIEZARD III.

For three weeks Barbarity did not see Dock. But one afternoon he came around, and after kissing the back of her wrist, as was his courtly habit, he took a seat in a nestling fashion on the door mat.

The kiss burned into Barbarity's conscience so deeply that she dismissed Dock, ran up to her room, and drowned her remorse by standing before her mirror, where she proceeded to address a few uncomplimentary remarks to the image therein. She grew so cold with horror that she froze the fire in the grate.

Dock, the living, and val., the dead, were now pronounced rivals for Barbarity's affections. It worried Dock a great deal, but Val. pursued the even tenor of his way and didn't seem to mind it at all. Dock finally retreated to New York. There he received a letter from Barbarity, bidding him farewell forever. He accordingly lighted four gas-burners in his room, took a Turkish bath and went to a comic opera.

Open the piano and begin to play, whether you have any skill or not. In fact, the less you know about playing the longer you should keep it up.

Handle all the ornaments and brio-a brac in the room. You might whittle the furniture a little to ascertain whether it be solid mahogany or a base imitation.

Pull out your watch every few minutes during conversation to see what time it is. If you find the room too warm open the windows. This gives the caller the appearance of feeling perfectly at home.

If you find the lady of the house about to go out, begin some long story. It will make her so happy to wait while you tell it. If you are a new comer, call on the neighbors at once and get acquainted. Don't wait to put carpets down or stoves up, but call.

Don't discuss weighty subjects when you make a call. Something light—the tariff or the weight of a ton of coal would be best.

After you have started to go, sit down again as often as yeu think of something more to say.

A family was nearly poisoned in Edinburgh by some sausages. A portion of the sausages was put before a cat that had been allowed no food for several days. The animal resolutely refused to eat it. There was no trace of poison known to chemists in the meat, but the analyst discerned certain poisonous organisms, which are learnedly termed ptomaines.

Seedless Raisins Seedless Raisins.

The seedless raisin is produced by simply arresting one of the processes of nature. When the grape is about one-half ripe the end of the vine is bent down and buried in the ground, This prevents the formation of seed and the full development of truit, but it ripens all the same, and has delicious flavor.

Navigability of Hudson's Straits.

A Winnipeg despatch says: The following extract from the private report to the Government by Captain Martham, who accompanied the expedition sent to Hudson's Bay to inquire into the navigability of the straits, was received here to-day from Ottawa: "There is certainly navigation every year for at least five months. Very often the straits are likely to be navigable the entire twelve months, and the ice is not heavy, being of the honeycombed character, which can be easily resisted by steamers built for navigating these waters." The report indicates that the testimony of the men who were placed as stations along the shore is quite worthless, as they never could tell from their position how the water was flowing in the open channel. In fact they could not see. Navigability of Hudson's Straits.

FIFTY-TWO DAYS WITHOUT FOOD

A Woman Refuses to Eat, but is Strong Enough to Work.

A Lancaster, Pa., despatch says: Mrs. Weidler, the fasting woman, has reached the fifty-second day of her fast. Some of the local physicians think some one has samggled food to her, but her door has been barred, the transom nailed up and the only window is barred and three stories above the ground. The only keys to her room are in the keeping of Dr. Sipening, shie resident physician, and Mrs. Eaby, the ward tender, who is an experienced and reputable woman.

Mrs. Weidler entered the institution just one year ago to-day, being sent there because she was starving herself at home. For a time after she entered the longitial she would eat if she thought no one observed her. Finally she would not even down in order to feed her. This process was stopped fifty-two days ago, and in all that time Mrs. Weidler has had no nourishment but water, drinking from half a pint to a pint daily. She was strong enough yesterday afternoon to scrub the floor of her room and set things to rights.

Supplied With a Rabhit's Nerve.

A London cable says: The British Medical Journal contains a full and scientific account of a remarkable operation recently performed by Dr. Gersung, of Vienna, being the transplantation of a nerve from a rabbit to a man. The patient is Prof. Von Fleischl, a distinguished physiologist of the University of Vienna. Bixteen years ago he was poisoned by a cut during a poetmertem. His thumb had to be amputated, a disease of the nerve intervened, and after some years the whole system of nerves of the thumb and two first fingers were affected and became very painful. Gersung's operation consisted in taking as long a piece as possible of sciatic nerve from a rabbit, which was still palpitating, and inserting it in the place of six centimeters of the diseased median nerve cut from Fleischl's hand. For a few hours there was great pain. This then entirely subsided and healing began. Two months have now elapsed and the pain has not yet returned. The success is believed to be permanent.

The Missiasippi in a Rage.

A St. Louis despatch says: The Mississippi River has been above the danger line for four days at Davenport, Iowa, and is steadily rising. Several manufacturing establishments have been compelled to close and many families living in the lower part of the city are moving as rapidly as possible. At Galena, Illinois, boats are now seen in all of the business portion of the city. On the east side of Main street the water in many places is nearly up to the first floor. At Dubuque the river is within six inches of the high water mark. The damage already done is heavy. A majority of the manufacturing establishments have been obliged to shut down and many men are idle. At Keokuk, Iowa, the river has risen to such a depth over the track of the Keokuk & Northwestern Road as to compel the abandonment of train service between there and Quincy. Alexandria, five miles below Keokuk, is in danger of being submerged.

How to Make and Treat Judges.

How to Make and Treat Judges.
A great deal of cant was talked in the House of Commons, as it always is on such occasions, about the importance of respecting the "independence" and the "impartiality" of judges. One would suppose, to hear some people talk, that appointment to a judgeship were a kind of sacrament of baptism, which gave a man a new heart and freed him from the ordinary was the suppose. new heart and freed him from the ordinary passions and weaknessee of humanity. In fact, of course, it does nothing of the kind, and judges as such are men of like infirmities with the rest of us. The true way, therefore, to preserve the character of the judicial bench, is, first, to only appoint men of known impartiality; and, secondly, to criticise them freely when they go wrong. And the people who really lower the reputation of justice are the Ministers who support unjust judges and appoint to the bench notorious firebrands like Mr. Justice Holmes and partisan pamphleteers like Judge Webb.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Biggest Geyser at Work.

The Excelsior Geyser in the Yellowstone Park is in operation. This geyser is in the great middle geyser basin, close to Fire Hole River. It is in the form of an immense pit 320 feet in length and 200 feet wide, and the aperture through which it discharges its volume of water is nearly 200 feet in diameter. Its general appearance is that of a huge boiling spring, and for many years its true character was not suspected. Its first eruption occurred in 1880, when it revealed itself as a stupendous geyser. The power of its eruptions was almost incredible, sending an immense column of water to heights of 100 to 300 feet, and hurling with it rocks and boulders of from 1 to 100 pounds in weight. Its present eruption is said to be a repetition of that of 1880. It is throwing its volumes of water 300 feet into the air, and Fire Hole River is reported to have risen two feet from its rushing floods. This is now conceded to be the most powerful geyser in existence. The Biggest Geyser at Work.

Cuba's Two Meals a Day.

Only two meals a day are served in Cuban hotels. They live much as people do in some parts of France and Switzerland. You take an orange or two with a cup of coffee and a roll in the early morning; a liberal breakfast, in courses, is served at 11 o'clock and a ceremonious dinner at 4 or 5 in the afternoon. This mode of living is admirably suited to the climate, and you fall in with the custom and like it at once. The breakfast opens with small olives and fresh radishes served in the same dish; the next course is fish, then eggs, meat, etc. You are not asked what you prefer, but each course is set before you and you partake of it or not. Instead of beginning with fruit, the Cuban breakfast ends with it—pineapples cut from the stalks the same morning, bananas freshly picked, sapodillas, a faint and rather over-sweet morsel, with oranges ad libitum. In Florida, and in many other parts of the country, the orange is cut in halves and its juice and pulp are passed to the mouth with a teaspoon. In Havana the orange is served whole on the table, peeled down to the juicy "meat of the fruit," and you present the golden ball to your lips on the prongs of a fork. At any and every American hotel the moment you sit down the question is almost fung at you, "Tea or offee?" Cubans better understand what is healthful. They follow nature's plan and take their meals more as the lower animals do. Cubans do not fill up their stomachs with fluids during meals. After breakfast is over then coffee or tea is served—coffee in French style, at least one half the cup being filled with milk. A Convicts' Eden.

A Convicts' Eden.

A paper was read by the Rev. T. S. Lea, at the Geographical Society last night on the Island of Fernando do Noronha. This island is the Brazilian convict settlement, and is about two hundred and ninety miles nertheast of Pernambuco. Mr. Lea was one of a party of three, and was engaged in collecting specimens for the British museum. Three-quarters of the insects taken were new to science; of plants there were 290 species, of which about thirty were peculiar to the island. Crabs of great alacrity ran about on the rocks and leaped from one stone to another, while crayfish and cuttle-fish abounded. Fish of the most gorgeous colors—gold, green, violet and scarlet—abounded. There were no fresh-water fish. About fourteen hundred convicts were on the island, and besides them 160 soldiers and 400 women and children. The convicts met with were neither degraded nor ruffianly, and discipline was maintained without difficulty.—London Star.

A Remarkable Memorial. A Remarkable Memorial.

One of the most interesting memorials of the Queen's Jabilee is the plantation of an entire mountain in North Wales with forest trees, so arranged that the words "Jubilee, 1887," appear distinctly amidst the surrounding trees, through the bulk of the plantation being of a different foliage. The mountain thus adorned is Moel Rhiwen, in the parish of Llianddeiniolen, on the estate of Mr. Assheton Smith. The word "Jubilee" if planted on the northwest side of the mountain in letters seah measuring 200 yards by 25 feet wide. Plants of the Austrian pine form the body of the letters, which are shaded on the intervening spaces are covered with's a mixture of Sottch fir, pines, oak, birch, sycamore and spruce fir. The first tree of the letter "J" was planted last fall at a Jubilee celebration, and the work was completed last week. Nearly 200 men of the district have found constant employment, and they have planted about 530,000 trees. Till the plantation is in full leaf the letters will be coareely traceable, but each year they will become more distinct, and a generation hence the mountain will be one of the sights of Wales, as the word "Jubilee" will then be seen a distance of many miles.

Whenever, says the writer, the Englishman has nothing better to do he is occupied in agitating in favor of the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. He occasionally has a little war in South Africa, in Egypt or in Afghanistan, but he always comes back to his Bill. It is the massion of his life to marry his deceased wife's sister. Now, seeing how strong and general his passion is in England, why doesn't the Englishman marry his wife's sister to begin with? It is surely absurd of him to go on marrying the wrong woman, and then to wait for death and the law to right him.

Seventy Years of Married Life. Seventy Years of Married Life.

The patriarch of Simpson county has gone to join his fathers. Capt. John T. Hendricks, who had lived in Kentücky since 1803, and who with his wife celebrated lately the seventieth anniversary of their marriage, was buried last week. The hope was recently expressed in this column that this worthy old couple would celebrate that rare anniversary, a diamond wedding; but it was not to be, and it is hardly probable that two people remain in the State of Kantucky whose marrial career extends over the time allotted by the Paslmist to man's whole existence. —Lowivelle Courter Journal.

Although the season is backward, and most merchants are grumbling about dull business, we have no cause to complain, Why? Simply because our customers understand that our word is as good as our bond, and that when we say "All wool" it is positively and absolutely all wool. Our Spring stock is the most complete in town. We have everything that is new and nobby. An inspection of our stock is solicited, feeling positive that you will not have to go elsewhere, and if you want to save 25 per cent come to
