The snow wiper afternoon was far spent, but the snow had ceased to fall, and was melting upon the ground. In the sky, the twilight was darkening over the hills, as he drew rein at Golden Willows.

They told him at the gate that Judge Camden was alive, but going fast, although the physician was doing all he could for him. No one knew, as yet, the cause of his strange seizure.

Mrs. Shirley was in the sick-room when the message came to her that Cecil Grant was waiting to see her for a moment, on very important business.

The invalid, whose severe cramps had been subdued, lay still and death-like on the bed, but he caught the words, and made a gesture to Mrs. Shirley.

"Tell Cecil Grant to come up here," he said, weakly.

Startled, but not daring to disobey, she went down to Cecil, who hurriedly imparted his bad news.

"Doctor Perry has already told us, and I am very sorry for Amber, but I cannot leave Judge Camden," she replied.

"Is he very ill, then?" asked Cecil, and she answered:

"We fear that he will die. I will tell you a terrible secret, known only to the doctor and myself. Judge Camden is suffering from arsenical poisoning. He drank half a glass of wine given him by Amber, and was soon seized with cramps, and rang his bell. I answered it, and finding him suffering so much with his stomach, administered a mustard emetic, then sent for the doctor. When he came he suspected arsenic from the symptoms, and found in the half-glass of wine that remained a quantity of the terrible drug. We cannot imagine how it happened. Amber must have made a terrible mistake. Fortunately, the judge did not get the full dose, or he would be dead ere now. Doctor Perry declares that the mustard emetic saved him, but he is very weak, and may die of exhaustion. In fact, he believes himself dying, and has asked to have you sent up to him—I suppose to ask your forgiveness for all his enmity toward you."

Cecil could not refuse the plea of a dying man. He followed Mrs. Shirley to the judge's room.

The weak eyes rested, with a grateful look, on Cecil, and the old man said, feebly:

"Doctor Perry, you may leave us alone for a few minutes, please."

The physician retired, thinking that the young lawyer had been summoned to draw up the judge's will, and Mrs. Shirley and Cecil stood waiting by the bedside.

"I sent Amber to bring you here, Mr. Grant," quavered the old man's feeble voice. "I suppose she told all about Violet, and the mission I wanted you to undertake?"

"You surprise me, Judge Camden. I have received no message from you on the subject."

"Then Amber played me false, the deceitful girl; and perhaps she made me mistake when she put the poison in my glass and urged me to drink it. And—I am dying. I fear, and have little strength to tell you what is in my mind. But listen! I repent of all my wickedness to you. Can you forgive me?"

"Freely, sir," and Cecil pressed the cold, damp hand kindly.

"I thank you," breathed the judge, in deep emotion, and added: "I have great news for you. Violet ran away from her husband within an hour after she married him, and has been missing ever since. I have sought her everywhere, but in vain, and I believe that you may be more successful in the quest. Will you find her for me?"

"Surely, sir, that should be her husband's duty," Cecil answered, with irrepressible bitterness.

"But did I not tell you? No, I was forgetting. Harold Castello is dead. Besides, Violet hated him, and was cruelly tricked into marrying him, with her whole heart. Ah, Cecil Grant, you have been cruelly wronged by the plot Amber helped me to carry out against you; but all will come right now, if you only find Violet, whose fate is wrapped in impenetrable mystery. Alas! I fear she has committed suicide!"

What a flood of joy rolled over Cecil's heart at the judge's words! Violet was true! Violet had loved him always! She had been cruelly tricked into marrying Harold Castello, and had fled from him in horror and disgust. And now her wicked husband was dead! Oh! what news for a despairing lover, whose heart had been almost broken by the news of his adored one's falsity!

He thought with a shudder, of how Amber had deceived him, and how nearly she had come to being his wife—and eternal barrier between him and his heart's darling! It dawned on him that retribution overtook her in the very moment of approaching victory.

"Yes, I will find Violet for you!" he exclaimed, eagerly, his face glowing with joy.

"She is not dead," he added, thrusting his hand into his breast, and bringing out the letter he had at that moment remembered.

"It is Violet's handwriting!" almost shrieked Mrs. Shirley, and he answered:

"Amber took it from the post office this morning, and I found it in her jacket when she was carried, unconscious, in the Melrose carriage. I have not read it yet, but I will do so now, and we will soon know where to find our sweet Violet!"

His happy eyes ran eagerly over the closely written paper, and very soon their hearts were gladdened by the news that Violet was with friends, no farther away than Washington. Cecil declared he would go on the first train and bring her home to Golden Willows.

CHAPTER XLIX.

Sweet Violet was very nervous and restless during the twenty-four hours that ensued upon mailing of her letter to Cecil.

She had poured out to her lost lover all the story of Amber's treachery, and prayed him to forgive her for the sorrow she had unwittingly brought on his devoted heart, in that she was an equal sufferer with himself in the agony of sorrow and separation.

She thought of him constantly now, wondering how he would receive her letter, if he would write to her, if he would come to her—above all, if he would see any way to free her from the detested fetters in which Harold Castello had bound her life.

"She felt a little guilty, too, in having written to Cecil against the wishes of her friends, and determined at last to confess the truth to Lena.

On the evening when the tragic events were happening at her old home, Violet sat with Lena in the pretty little parlor of the Lavarre home. It was still early, not yet nine o'clock, but the widow, pleading a headache, had retired to her room, and the two girls were quite alone.

Lena was sitting near a table, crocheting a white wool shawl, and Violet, in an easy-chair, amused herself with the antics of a little Maltese kitten in her lap; but the glim of the gas light on her lovely face showed the smile on her lips belied by the haunting sadness of her great blue eyes.

She said, presently, with a long, quivering sigh:

"Dear Lena, you must not scold me very much when I tell you the truth. I have been very naughty, and disregarded your good advice. I have written to Cecil!"

Lena's work dropped nervously from her hands, but ere she could speak, Violet, continued, tearfully:

"You cannot blame me, Lena, if you know how wildly I love my precious Cecil, and how hard it is to know that he believed me fickle and false, while all the time I adored him. I have written and told him of all the treachery that drove me into that hated marriage, and somehow my heart feels lighter, for surely Cecil will know of some way to free me from the power of that wicked man. To-morrow, I shall expect to get a letter from my darling, and I know I shall not sleep an hour to-night, thinking about it!"

"Oh, my poor Violet!" began Lena, but she was interrupted by a sudden rat-tat upon the door knocker.

Visitors at that hour were so unusual that both girls uttered a startled cry.

"Oh!"

And the blue and brown eyes looked into each other in dismay.

"If it should be—Harold Castello!" cried Lena.

"If it should be—Cecil!" breathed Violet, rapaciously and moved toward the door.

But Lena motioned her back, saying, fearfully:

"Let me go; for what if your enemies have traced you here?"

She left the room, and went out into the hall to open the front door, while Violet listened eagerly, at the parlor door, which was a little ajar.

She heard Lena open the door; she heard the murmur of a man's voice—the voice that could almost have called her back from death itself!

She pushed wide the door, and called out in a voice that thrilled with joy, and love, and longing:

"Cecil! Darling Cecil!"

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Lena Lavarre, for the intruder brushed wildly past her, and rushed into the parlor, where Violet, his love Violet, was waiting.

"My angel!" he cried, and caught her to his heart, kissing her cheeks, and raining kisses on her beautiful, happy, upturned face.

In the bliss of that fond meeting, the reunited lovers quite forgot the barrier between their hearts. Violet was transported with joy and gratitude that he had come so soon in answer to her piteous appeal, and, nestling in the haven of his dear arms, she held up her red lips for his kisses like sweet flowers thirsting for rain.

Lena Lavarre stood in the doorway, gazing with wet eyes, at the lovers locked in each other's arms, while her warm heart ached with pain, as she thought how cruelly they had been sundered, and how brief must be the bliss of this meeting when both presently awoke to the realization of the awful barrier between them and happiness.

She did not wonder at Violet's devotion when she saw the princely beauty of her tall, dark, stately lover, noble Cecil Grant. She remembered how madly she had loved once, when she believed the man she worshipped was noble and true.

She almost felt it wrong to be a witness of this touching scene of reunited love, and was softly closing the door to go away, when Violet caught the sound, and turned her head.

"Lena," she called, quickly. "Dear Lena, do not leave us!"

Blushing deeply, she withdrew herself from Cecil's arms, faltering miserably:

"Alas! I have no right to your love now, Cecil; but—but—I was so glad to hear your voice again, so thrilled by the sight of your face, that I forgot—everything!"

What a happy, reassuring laugh came from Cecil's lips as he cried:

"Come back to my heart, my own true love, for there is no barrier between us now. Harold Castello is dead!"

They heard a low, wild cry as Lena Lavarre quickly closed the door and darted away, but they did not know whether it was of joy or sorrow, they were so absorbed in each other.

Cecil threw himself upon a sofa, and, with his arms around Violet, told her briefly all that had happened. There was no time to dwell on it at length, for he had promised that he would take her home that night, to Judge Camden's dying bed, if she would go.

When Violet heard of his sickness, and his bitter repentance, all her resentment melted away in a rush of tears. All his cruelty was forgotten, his kindness and love alone remembered.

"I will go back to him at once!" she exclaimed, and hurried up stairs to seek Lena and tell her all.

She found the poor girl weeping hysterically by her mother's bedside, and told them everything as quickly as she could, ending by begging Lena to go with her to Golden Willows.

She hardly dared to hope that Lena would consent, but after a moment of saying, frankly, that she wished to hear from the judge's own lips the story of Harold Castello's death, for she hoped that he had repented of all his wickedness, and made his peace with Heaven.

It was strange that she should be anxious on the subject, but perhaps her wronged and outraged heart still held some lingering tenderness for the villain who had made shipwreck of her beautiful youth, for it is hard for a woman to unlearn the lesson of loving, and, knowing him dead, she hoped he would not be punished beyond the grave for his sin.

But Mrs. Lavarre, who could remember nothing but the murder of her good old husband, and the betrayal of her innocent daughter, rejoiced in the knowledge that Harold Castello had passed to his dread account with offended Heaven.

"Ah, how strange is life!" cried poor Lena. "Do you remember, mother and Violet, how I told you about seeing Jacques Brown in a funeral procession on its way to the cemetery? How strange that my own heart did not tell me that Harold Castello lay in that coffin under the nodding hearse plumes, on his way to the grave! Yet, so it was, and he is swept from the earth, never more to bring sorrow to a woman's heart!"

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., DEC. 2, 1898.

The Agriculturists' Mass Meeting.

Despite the almost unpassable condition of the roads throughout the county the Agricultural meeting in Temperance Hall on Friday afternoon was a large and extremely representative one.

J. W. Bigelow presided and read letters from Premier Murray, Attorney General Langley and Superintendent McKay expressing their regrets for inability to attend.

The chairman then called upon Prof. Sears to give an address on "The true mission of an Agricultural School." In beginning the professor said that he could see no reason why the farmer should not be educated in his profession as most other business men were; the true mission of an agricultural school is to educate the farmer, to make a good citizen of him and to train his head and his hands.

Mr. John Donaldson, who led in the discussion which followed, spoke of the benefits of an Agricultural School in helping the farmer by giving him a trained mind and at the same time eliciting much information useful to him by means of experiments and scientific investigation.

Principal Oakes spoke of the change in the system of farming brought about by the increased use of machinery upon the farm, and advocated a course in manual training to adapt the farmer to these conditions and to enable him upon his otherwise idle days to act as his own mechanic and draftsman.

Inspector Bowen presented a paper upon the subject "What the Public Schools can do to further promote the interests of Agriculture and Horticulture." He advocated that the different parts of the common school curriculum should be emphasized according to the needs of the different localities in which the school is situated.

Mr. Ralph Eaton only spoke briefly, intimating his intention to reserve time for the more important discussion at the close. Dr. D. F. Higgins thought that the common school teacher ought not to be expected to teach farming as a profession, but that they might awaken the children's interest in agriculture and show them that it was a profession worthy of their talents.

"The classification of the province into fruit districts" was the subject of a paper read by Dr. H. Chapman. Viewed from the standpoint of their advancement in fruit growing the counties of the province might be divided into three classes, Kings being in the first and Colchester in the third group. Fruit growing was the chief industry of western Nova Scotia. While the Horticultural school has been a success the Agricultural College at Truro has not been.

Mr. J. Rufus Starr followed, giving an account of fruit growing in eastern Nova Scotia which he showed was very backward. This backwardness, he claimed, was not so much due to natural conditions of soil and climate as to lack of knowledge on the part of the growers.

A paper on "One Phase of Agricultural Education" was read by Mr. W. C. Archibald. Mr. Archibald made a strong plea for agricultural training. In the neighboring republic for every million inhabitants there is established a college for agriculture and mechanical arts with an experimental station of several hundred acres. The result has been that a much larger percentage of farmers' sons who seek a liberal education return to the farm for a life work.

The Maritime Provinces have now nearly a million people. We should have a college where any person can find instruction in any study beginning with agriculture as the chief cornerstone. There are two conditions in the farmer's life which should cease: (1) his unequal condition in the social scale; (2) his unequal profit from the business. Agricultural training would tend to remove these conditions. The farm requires an

To the Editor of the Acadian.

DEAR SIR,—Having been on several occasions that the room in which I keep a billiard table is "another gambling saloon" or worse, I wish to deny most emphatically, over my own signature, that this is in any sense the case.

Mr. P. Jones suggested that the meeting take a practical turn, and to this end proposed the following resolution: Whereas, Although the school of agriculture at Truro has now been established 13 years, it has, in the universal opinion, failed in the object for which it was founded, namely, to encourage agricultural education, and is of but little benefit as a part of our system of public instruction; and

Whereas, the school of horticulture at Wolfville, is also being carried on at a great disadvantage;

Therefore, Resolved, that it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting that the two schools should be amalgamated, and that the joint institution in conjunction with a model farm, should be located in this section of the province, where agriculture and horticulture could be taught and practical scientific farming carried on under the most favorable circumstances and with the best prospects of success.

He wished to deal with some of the objections that had been raised against the removal of the school. It was argued that the county of Colchester had a fertile soil, and he was prepared to admit this fact, but only certain products could be grown in Colchester. Fruit had been grown with great care at the experimental farm for the late provincial exhibition, but it was scarcely equal to our second class products. If the same care had been expended in this county the result would have been equal to the best hidden fruit and worthy of the protection which it received.

Mr. B. H. Dodge, M. P. P., being present was called upon by the chairman for a few remarks. He took exception to the remarks of Principal Oakes, holding that a farmer to be a success should be a farmer also and not attempt to invade the field of the mechanic. He also stated that the farmers of the county should stand together in demanding a change in the location of the Agricultural School.

An interesting and enthusiastic discussion on the subject of the proposed amalgamation was taken part in by Dr. Patterson, Messrs Shaw, Waters, Long, T. H. Parker, Clark, Dr. Higgins and Dr. Keirstead.

On division the resolution carried unanimously, and one of the most interesting and successful farmers meetings ever held in the county was brought to a close.

Editorial Notes.

We understand it is the intention to hold agricultural meetings, similar to that held in Wolfville on Friday afternoon last, in different parts of the county during the next few weeks. This is right. Such meetings are bound to produce a helpful effect on this leading industry.

The announcement of the Clerk of the School Board concerning the Compulsory Attendance Act, which appears in another column, is commended to the attention of all parents and guardians of children in town. We understand it is the intention to strictly enforce the law. There are a number of children in Wolfville, who are not receiving the benefits they should from our public school.

Contributions to this department will be gladly received.

Miss Alice Burgess is spending a few weeks at her home at Sheffield's Mills.

Rev. D. O. Parker left on Thursday morning for Berwick, where he starts on Saturday for Boston to spend the winter.

Mr. A. L. Davison, who is taking a course at the Dalhousie Law School, Halifax, spent Thanksgiving at his home and remained until Tuesday afternoon.

Dr. G. E. DeWitt returned recently from a trip to Newfoundland. He was much pleased with what he saw of the resources of the "Ancient Colony." An interesting account of his trip will appear in the ACADIAN next week.

Rev. H. S. Davison, who during last summer had charge of the Presbyterian congregations of Bridgetown, Middleton and Melvern Square, recently resigned. Bridgetown has been created an independent congregation, and Mr. Davison has been unanimously called there. The induction service takes place on Tuesday of next week.

One of the sufferers by last Sunday's storm was the schooner Free Trade, from Boston for Wolfville with general cargo. She went ashore during the storm and sustained considerable damage. A number of Wolfville merchants had goods aboard.

The residence of Mr and Mrs C. R. Dickie, at Canning, was the scene of a brilliant festivity on Tuesday evening. A large number of guests from different parts of Cornwallis, had assembled for the purpose of celebrating the fifteenth anniversary of Mr and Mrs Dickie's marriage.

Two young men named Keady and another named Jessup were arrested last week at Gasperau, charged with robbing clothes-lines at that place. They were examined and committed to jail at Kentville to await trial. We understand they were tried before Judge Chipman on Tuesday, under the Speedy Trials Act.

All accounts due J. W. Caldwell must be settled before the end of this year.

The Acadia-Dalhousie football match has been declared off by the latter team. The reason given is that the team has already undergone such a physical strain in the league games, that they are unable to play again this season. The Acadia boys are justly indignant as they claim they have agreed to postpone the game until after the league games to oblige Dalhousie, under the promise that the game would then be played.

The Maritime College Y. M. C. A. was in session at Fredericton, with the University of New Brunswick, last week. The first meeting was held on the evening of Thanksgiving day and the farewell meeting took place on Sunday evening. In spite of the bad weather the meetings were well attended and most interesting. Acadia was represented by thirteen delegates representing the different classes. Mr. Ira Hardy was elected president and Mr. L. S. Poole, secretary. Next year the convention meets at Mt. Allison.

Acetylene Gas or Pure Day-light!

Is what the Savoy Guay Gas Generator Makes.

This is the coming light for Hotels, Churches, School Houses, Stores, etc. Knocks out Electricity, Coal Gas, Oil, etc.; for it's light is simply daylight. All shades of color are distinguished by it, and here is the "rub," it only costs 1c per hour for 25 candle power light. All we ask is to come and see it in J. T. Pulsifer's Boot and Shoe Store, F. A. Coffin, Stationery, Fancy Goods, etc., and in E. F. Sweet's Hall and my own Machine Shop, and we know your decision before you tell it. Drop a card any night you decide to come and I will be on hand to explain matters which I have not the space for here. We challenge competition with any known Light or Generator.
