OFFICIAL REPORT

OF THE DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OF THE

DOMINION OF CANADA

FIRST SESSION—THIRTEENTH PARLIAMENT

8-9 GEORGE V, 1918

IN TWO VOLUMES

Volume I: Pages 1-1192 Volume II: Pages 1193-2560

VOLUME CXXXII

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE EIGHTEENTH DAY OF MARCH TO THE TWENTY-FOURTH DAY OF MAY, 1918, INCLUSIVE.

OTTAWA
J. DE LABROQUERIE TACHÉ, PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY
1918

A—1

MEMBERS OF THE GOVERNMENT

OF THE

RIGHT HONOURABLE SIR ROBERT LAIRD BORDEN

P.C., G.C.M.G., K.C., LL.D.

AT THE OPENING OF THE

FIRST SESSION OF THE THIRTEENTH PARLIAMENT

1918

THE CABINET

First Minister, Secretary of State for External Affairs	Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Laird Borden, P.C., G.C.M.G., K.C., LL.D.
*Minister of Trade and Commerce	Rt. Hon. Sir George Eulas Foster, P.C., K.C.M.G., B.A., D.C.L.
Minister without Portfolio	Hon. Francis Cochrane.
Minister of Finance	Hon. Sir William Thomas White, K.C.M.G., B.A.
Minister of Justice	Hon. Charles Joseph Doherty, D.C.L., LL.D.
Minister of Labour	Hon. Thomas Wilson Crothers, K.C., B.A.
Minister of Railways and Canals	Hon. John Dowsley Reid, M.D.
Minister of Overseas Military Forces from Canada in the United Kingdom	Hon. Sir Albert Edward Kemp, K.C.M.G.
Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment	Hon. Sir James Alexander Lougheed, K.C.M.G. K.C.
Secretary of State and Minister of Mines	Hon. Martin Burrell.
Postmaster General	Hon. Pierre Edouard Blondin.
Minister of the Interior and Superintendent General of Indian Affairs	Hon. Arthur Meighen, K.C., B.A.
Minister of Marine and Fisheries and Minister of the Naval Service	Hon. Charles Colquhoun Ballantyne.
Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue	Hon. Arthur Lewis Sifton.
Minister of Immigration and Colonization	Hon. James Alexander Calder.
President of the Privy Council	Hon. Newton Wesley Rowell, K.C.
Minister of Militia and Defense	Major-General Hon. Sydney Chilton Mewburn, K.C.
Minister of Agriculture	Hon. Thomas Alexander Crerar.
Minister of Public Works	Hon. Frank Broadstreet Carvell, K.C.
Minister without Portfolio (Acting Minister of Finance)	Hon. Alexander Kenneth Maclean, K.C.
Minister without Portfolio	Hon. Gideon Decker Robertson.
Solicitor General	Hon. Hugh Guthrie, K.C.
Parliamentary Secretary of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment	F. B. McCurdy, Esq.
Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs	Lt.-Col. Hugh Clark.

*Created a G.C.M.G. 3rd June.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Speaker ..... Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes, B.A., LL.B.
Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees... George H. Boivin, B.A.

Clerk of the House..... W. B. Northrup, M.A., K.C.
Sergeant-at-Arms..... Major H. W. Bowie.

Editor of Debates..... Thomas P. Owens.
Associate Editor of Debates..... A. C. Campbell.

Official Reporters of Debates :—
English : George Simpson, Robert C. Dunbar, C. S. Blue, F. W. S. Galbraith, Earl C. Young, H. E. Oliver, W. H. Dickson.
French : J. O. Marceau, Marcel Gabard.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES :

Messieurs : Ballantyne, Burnham, Chabot, Devlin, Elkin, Foster (Sir George), Kay, Lemieux Marcil, Mowat, Munson, McKenzie, Nickle, Richardson.

Chairman : R. L. Richardson.

ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

First Session, Thirteenth Parliament.

1918

ALLAN, GEORGE WILLIAM—Winnipeg, S. Riding.
AMES, SIR HERBERT BROWN, Kt.—St. Antoine.
ANDERSON, ROBERT KING—Halton.
ANDREWS, GEORGE WILLIAM—Winnipeg Centre.
ARCHAMBAULT, JOSEPH—Chambly and Verchères.
ARGUE, IRA EUGENE—Swift Current.
ARMSTRONG, JOHN A. MACDONALD—York, N. Riding.
ARMSTRONG, JOSEPH EMMANUEL—Lambton, E. Riding.
ARTHURS, JAMES—Parry Sound.

BALDWIN, WILLIS KEITH—Stanstead
BALLANTYNE, HON. CHARLES COLQUHOUN—St. Lawrence-St. George.
BALL, ROBERT JAMES—Grey, S.E. Riding.
BÉLAND, Hon. HENRI SÉVÉRIN—Beauce.
BEST, JOHN—Dufferin.
BLAIR, WILLIAM JOHN—Battle River.
BLAKE, MATTHEW ROBERT—Winnipeg, N. Riding.
BOIVIN, GEORGE HENRY—Shefford.
BOLTON, FERRIS—Lisgar.
BONNELL, SAUL—Kootenay, E. Riding.
BORDEN, RIGHT HON. SIR ROBERT LAIRD, G.C.M.G.—King's, N.S.
BOURASSA, JOSEPH BOUTIN—Lévis.
BOWMAN, JAMES—Huron, N. Riding.
BOYCE, GEORGE—Carleton.
BOYER, GUSTAVE—Vaudreuil-Soulanges.
BOYS, WILLIAM ALVES—Simcoe, S. Riding.
BRIEN, JOHN WESLEY—Essex, S. Riding.
BRISTOL, EDMUND—Toronto Centre.
BROUILLARD, JOSEPH OVIDE—Drummond & Arthabaska.
BUCHANAN, WILLIAM ASHBURY—Lethbridge.
BUREAU, JACQUES—Three Rivers and St. Maurice.
BURNHAM, JOHN HAMPDEN—Peterborough, W. Riding.
BURRELL, HON. MARTIN—Yale.
BUTTS, ROBERT H—Cape Breton South and Richmond.

CAHILL, FRANK S—Pontiac.
CALDER, HON. JAMES ALEXANDER—Moosejaw.
CAMPBELL, J. A—Nelson.
CANNON, LUCIEN—Dorchester.
CARDIN, PIERRE JOSEPH ARTHUR—Richelieu.
CARVELL, HON. FRANK BROADSTREET—Victoria and Carleton.
CASGRAIN, PIERRE FRANÇOIS—Charlevoix-Montmorency.
CASSELMAN, ORREN D.—Dundas.
CHABOT, JOHN LEO—Ottawa.
CHAPLIN, JAMES DEW—Lincoln,
CHARLTON, WILLIAM ANDREW—Norfolk.
CHARTERS, SAMUEL—Peel.
CHISHOLM, ALEXANDER W.—Inverness.
CLARK, HUGH—Bruce, N. Riding.
CLARK, MICHAEL—Red Deer.
CLARKE, WILLIAM A.—Wellington, N. Riding.
CLEMENTS, HERBERT SYLVESTER—Comox-Alberni.
COCHRANE, HON. FRANCIS—Timiskaming.
COCKSHUTT, WILLIAM FOSTER—Brantford.
COOPER, RICHARD CLIVE—Vancouver, S. Riding.
COPP, ARTHUR BLISS—Westmorland.
COWAN, WALTER DAVY—Regina.
CRERAR, HON. THOMAS ALEXANDER—Marquette.
CRONYN, HUME—London.
CROTHERS, HON. THOMAS WILSON—Elgin, W. Riding.
CROWE, SANFORD JOHNSTON—Burrard.
CRUISE, ROBERT—Dauphin.
CURRIE, JOHN ALLISTER—Simcoe, N. Riding.

d'ANJOU, JOSEPH EMILE STANISLAS EMMANUEL—Rimouski.
DAVIDSON, AVARD LONGLEY—Digby and Annapolis.
DAVIS, FRED LANGDON—Neepawa.
DÉCHÊNE, AIMÉ MIVILLE—Montmagny.
DELISLE, MICHEL SIMÉON—Portneuf.
DEMERS, MARIE JOSEPH—St. Johns and Iberville.
DENIS, JEAN J.—Joliette.
DESAULNIERS, ARTHUR L.—Champlain.
DESLAURIERS, HERMAS—St. Mary.

DEVLIN, EMMANUEL B.—Wright.
DOHERTY, HON. CHARLES JOSEPH—St. Anne.
DOUGLAS, JAMES MCCRIE—Strathcona.
DOUGLAS, JOHN C.—Cape Breton South and Richmond.
DUFF, WILLIAM—Lunenburg.
DUTREMBLAY, PAMPHILE RÉAL—Laurier-Outremont.

EDWARDS, JOHN WESLEY—Frontenac.
ELKIN, STANLEY EDWARD—St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert.
ETHIER, JOSEPH ARTHUR CALIXTE—Laval-Two Mountains.
EULER, WILLIAM D.—Waterloo, N. Riding.

FAFARD, J. FERDAND—L'Islet.
FIELDING, HON. WILLIAM STEVENS—Shelburne and Queen's.
FINLEY, ARTHUR ERNEST—Souris.
FONTAINE, JOSEPH ELOI—Hull.
FORTIER, HYACINTHE ADÉLARD—Labelle.
FOSTER, RIGHT HON. SIR GEORGE EULAS, K.C.M.G.—Toronto, N. Riding.
FOSTER, THOMAS—York, E. Riding,
FOURNIER, C. A.—Bellechasse.
FRASER, EVAN E.—Welland.
FRIPP, ALFRED ERNEST—Ottawa.
FULTON, FREDERICK JOHN—Cariboo.

GAUTHIER, LOUIS JOSEPH, St. Hyacinthe-Rouville.
GAUVREAU, CHARLES ARTHUR—Témiscouata.
GERVAIS, THÉODORE—Berthier.
GLADU, JOSEPH ERNEST OSCAR—Yamaska.
GLASS, SAMUEL FRANCIS—Middlesex, E. Riding.
GREEN, ROBERT FRANCIS—Kootenay, W. Riding.
GRIESBACH, WILLIAM ANTROBUS—Edmonton, W. Riding.
GUTHRIE, HON. HUGH—Wellington, S. Riding.

HALLIDAY, HOWARD H.—Bow River.
*HANNA, A. E.—Lanark.
HAROLD, JOHN—Brant.
HARRISON, CHARLES ROBERT—Nipissing.
HARTT, THOMAS A.—Charlotte.
HAY, THOMAS—Selkirk.
HENDERS, RICHARD COE—Macdonald.
HEPBURN, WILLIAM BERNARD RICKART—Prince Edward.
HOCKEN, HORATIO CLARENCE—Toronto, W. Riding.
HUGHES, HON. SIR SAM, K.C.B.—Victoria.
HUNT, AYLMER BYRON—Compton.

JACOBS, SAMUEL WILLIAM—George Etienne Cartier.
JOHNSTON, J. FRED—Last Mountain.

KAY, WILLIAM FREDERICK—Missisquoi.
KEEFER, FRANCIS HENRY—Port Arthur and Kenora.
KEMP, HON. SIR EDWARD, K.C.M.G.—Toronto East.
KENNEDY, WILLIAM COSTELLO—Essex, N. Riding.
KNOX, ANDREW—Prince Albert.

LAFORTUNE, DAVID ARTHUR—Jacques Cartier.
LALOR, FRANCIS RAMSAY—Haldimand.
LANCTÔT, ROCH—Laprairie and Napierville.
LANG, NORMAN—Humboldt.
LAPOINTE, ERNEST—Kamouraska.
LAPOINTE, LOUIS AUDET—St. James.
LAURIER, RT. HON. SIR WILFRID, G.C.M.G.—Quebec E. Riding.
LAVIGUEUR, HENRI E.—Quebec County.
LEDUC, J. ALFRED—Westmount-St. Henry.
LEGER, AUGUSTE THÉOPHILE—Kent, N.B.
LEMIEUX, HON. RODOLPHE—Maisonneuve, Gaspé.
LESAGE, JOSEPH EDMOND—Hochelaga.
LOGGIE, WILLIAM STEWART—Northumberland, N.B.
LONG, CHARLES EDWIN—North Battleford.

MACKIE, HENRY ARTHUR—Edmonton, E. Riding.
MACKIE, HERBERT J.—Renfrew, N. Riding.
MACLEAN, HON. A. K.—Halifax.
MACLEAN, WILLIAM FINDLAY—York, S. Riding.
MACNUTT, THOMAS—Saltcoats.
MCCOIG, ARCHIBALD BLAKE—Kent, Ont.
MCCREA, FRANCIS N.—Sherbrooke.
MCCURDY, FLEMING BLANCHARD—Colchester.
MCGIBBON, PETER—Muskoka.
MCGIBBON, PETER ROBT.—Argenteuil.
MCGREGOR, ALEXANDER—Pictou.
MCINTOSH, JOHN CHARLES—Nanaimo.
MCISAAC, JAMES—Kings, P.E.I.
MCKENZIE, DANIEL D.—Cape Breton North and Victoria.
MCLEAN, HUGH HAVELOCK—Royal.
MCLEOD, HARRY FULTON—York-Sunbury.
†MCMARTIN, JOHN—Glengarry and Stormont.
MCMASTER, ANDREW ROSS—Brome.
MCQUARRIE, WILLIAM GARLAND—New Westminster.
MCHARG, JOHN A.—Maple Creek.
MANION, ROBERT JAMES—Fort William and Rainy River.
MARCIL, HON. CHARLES—Bonaventure.
MARCILE, JOSEPH EDMOND—Bagot.
MARSHALL, DAVID—Elgin, E. Riding.
MARTIN, PETER FRANCIS—Halifax.
MAYRAND, HORMISDAS—Maskinongé.
MEIGHEN, HON, ARTHUR—Portage la Prairie.
MERNER JONATHAN JOSEPH—Huron, S. Riding.
MEWBURN, HON. SYDNEY CHILTON—Hamilton, E. Riding.
MICHAUD, PIUS—Restigouche and Madawaska.
MIDDLEBRO, WILLIAM SORA—Grey, N. Riding.
MOLLOY, JOHN PATRICK—Provencher.
MORPHY, H. B.—Perth, N. Riding.
MOWAT, HERBERT MACDONALD—Parkdale.
MUNSON, CHARLES ARTHUR—Northumberland, Ont.,
MURPHY, HON. CHARLES—Russell.
MYERS, EDWARD THOMAS WORDON—Kindersley.

NESBITT, EDWARD WALTER—Oxford, N. Riding.
NICHOLSON, DONALD—Queens, P.E.I.
NICHOLSON, GEORGE BRECKEN—Algoma, E. Riding.
NICKLE, WILLIAM FOLGER—Kingston.

PACAUD, LUCIEN TURCOTTE—Megantic.
PAPINEAU, LOUIS JOSEPH—Beauharnois.
PARDEE, FREDERICK FORSYTH—Lambton, W. Riding.
PARENT, GEORGE—Quebec, W. Riding.

* Deceased, 27th February; succeeded by Mr. John A. Stewart. † Deceased, 12th April

PAUL, WILLIAM JAMES—Lennox and Addington.
PECK, CYRUS WESLEY—Skeena.
PEDLOW, ISAAC ELLIS—Renfrew, S. Riding.
PELLETIER, FRANCOIS-JEAN—Matane.
PORTER, EDWARD GUSS—Hastings, W. Riding.
POWER, CHARLES GAVAN—Quebec, S. Riding.
PREVOST, JULES EDOUARD—Terrebonne.
PROULX, EDMOND—Prescott.

READ, JOSEPH—Prince, P.E.I.
REDMAN, DANIEL LEE—Calgary, E. Riding.
REID, HON. JOHN DOWSLEY—Grenville.
REID, JOHN FLAWS—Mackenzie.
RHODES, HON. EDGAR N.—Cumberland.
RICHARDSON, ROBERT LORNE—Springfield.
ROBB, JAMES ALEXANDER—Chateauguay and Huntingdon.
ROSS, DUNCAN CAMPBELL—Middlesex, W. Riding.
ROWELL HON. NEWTON WESLEY—Durham.
SAVARD, EDMOND—Chicoutimi-Saguenay.
SCOTT, FRANK STEWART—Waterloo, S. Riding.
SÉGUIN, PAUL ARTHUR—L'Assomption-Montcalm.
SEXSMITH, JOHN ALBERT—Peterborough, E. Riding.
*SHARPE, SAMUEL SIMPSON—Ontario, N. Riding.
SHAW, HUGH MURRAY—Macleod.
SHEARD, CHARLES—Toronto, S. Riding.
SIFTON, HON. ARTHUR LEWIS—Medicine Hat.
SIMPSON, THOMAS EDWARD—Algoma, W. Riding.
SINCLAIR, JOHN H.—Antigonish and Guysborough.
SINCLAIR, JOHN EWEN—Queen's, P.E.I.
SMITH, WILLIAM—Ontario, S. Riding.
SPINNEY, EDGAR KEITH—Yarmouth and Clare.
STACEY, FRANK BAINARD—Westminster District.
STEELE, MICHAEL—Perth, S. Riding.
STEVENS, HENRY HERBERT—Vancouver Centre.
STEWART, JOHN A.—Lanark.
STEWART, THOMAS JOSEPH—Hamilton W. Riding.
SUTHERLAND, DONALD—Oxford, S. Riding.

THOMPSON, ALFRED—Yukon.
THOMPSON, RICHARD FREDERICK—Weyburn.
THOMPSON, THOMAS HENRY—Hastings, E. Riding.
THOMSON, LEVI—Qu'Appelle.
TOBIN, EDMUND WILLIAM—Richmond and Wolfe.
TOLMIE, SIMON FRASER—Victoria City.
TRAHAN, ARTHUR—Nicolet.
TREMAIN, HADLEY BROWN—Hants.
TRUAX, REUBEN E.—Bruce, S. Riding.
TUDHOPE, JAMES BROCKETT—Simcoe, E. Riding.
TURGEON, ONÉSIPHORE—Gloucester.
TURRIFF, JOHN GILLANDERS—Assiniboia.
TWEEDIE, THOMAS MITCHELL MARCH—Calgary, W. Riding.

VERVILLE, ALPHONSE—St. Denis.
VIEN, THOMAS—Lotbinière.

WALLACE, THOMAS GEORGE—York, W. Riding.
WHIDDEN, HOWARD PRIMROSE—Brandon.
WHITE, WILLIAM HENRY—Victoria, Alta.
WHITE, HON. SIR THOMAS, K.C.M.G.—Leeds.
WIGMORE, RUPERT WILSON—St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert.
WILSON, GORDON CROOKS—Wentworth.
WILSON, JAMES ROBERT—Saskatoon.
WRIGHT, H. O.—Battleford.

* Deceased 25th May.

ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

Constituencies of the House of Commons

First Session, Thirteenth Parliaament..

1918

ALGOMA, EAST—George Brecken Nicholson.
ALGOMA, WEST—Thomas Edward Simpson.
ANTIGONISH AND GUYSBOROUGH—John H. Sinclair.
ARGENTEUIL—P. Robert McGibbon.
ASSINIBOIA—John Gillanders Turriff.

BAGOT—Joseph Edmond Marcile.
BATTLEFORD—Henry Oswald Wright.
BATTLE RIVER—William John Blair.
BEAUCE—Hon. Henri Sévérin Béland.
BEAUHARNOIS—Louis Joseph Papineau.
BELLECHASSE—C. A. Fournier.
BERTHIER—Theodore Gervais.
BONAVENTURE—Hon. Charles Marcil.
BOW RIVER—Howard Haden Halladay.
BRANDON—Howard Primrose Whidden.
BRANT—John Harold.
BRANTFORD—William Foster Cockshutt.
BROME—Andrew Ross McMaster.
BRUCE, N. RIDING—Hugh Clark.
BRUCE, S. RIDING—Reuben E. Truax.
BURRARD—Sanford Johnston Crowe.

CALGARY, EAST—Daniel Lee Redman.
CALGARY, WEST—Thomas Mitchell March Tweedie.
CAPE BRETON NORTH AND VICTORIA—Daniel D. McKenzie.
CAPE BRETON SOUTH AND RICHMOND—John C. Douglas, Robert H. Butts.
CARIBOO—Frederick John Fulton.
CARLETON—George Boyce.
CHAMBLY AND VERCHÈRES—Joseph Archambault.
CHAMPLAIN—Arthur L. Desaulniers.
CHARLEVOIX-MONTMORENCY—Pierre Francois Casgrain.
CHARLOTTE—Thomas A. Hartt.
CHATEAUGUAY-HUNTINGDON—James Alexander Robb.
CHICOUTIMI-SAGUENAY—Edmond Savard.
COLCHESTER—Fleming Blanchard McCurdy.
COMOX-ALBERNI—Herbert Sylvester Clements.
COMPTON—Aylmer Byron Hunt.
CUMBERLAND—Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes.

DAUPHIN—Robert Cruise.
DIGBY AND ANNAPOLIS—Avard Longley Davidson.
DORCHESTER—Lucien Cannon.
DRUMMOND AND ARTHABASKA—Joseph Ovide Brouillard.
DUFFERIN—John Best.
DUNDAS—Orren D. Casselman.
DURHAM—Hon. Newton Wesley Rowell.

EDMONTON, EAST—Henry Arthur Mackie.
EDMONTON, WEST—William Antrobus Griesback.
ELGIN, E. RIDING—David Marshall.
ELGIN, W. RIDING—Hon. Thomas Wilson Crothers.
ESSEX, N. RIDING—William Costello Kennedy.
ESSEX, S. RIDING—John Wesley Brien.

FORT WILLIAM AND RAINY RIVER—Robert James Manion.
FRONTENAC—John Wesley Edwards.

GASPÉ—Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux.
GEORGE ETIENNE CARTIER—Samuel William Jacobs.
GLENGARRY AND STORMONT—*John McMartin.
GLOUCESTER—Onésiphore Turgeon.
GRENVILLE—Hon. John Dowsley Reid.
GREY, N. RIDING—William Sora Middlebro.
GREY, SOUTHEAST RIDING—Robert James Ball.

HALDIMAND—Francis Ramsay Lalor.
HALIFAX — { Hon. A. K. Maclean. / Peter Francis Martin.
HALTON—Robert King Anderson.
HAMILTON EAST—Hon. Sydney Chilton Mewburn.
HAMILTON WEST—Thomas Joseph Stewart.
HANTS—Hadley Brown Tremain.
HASTINGS, E. RIDING—Thomas Henry Thompson.
HASTINGS, W. RIDING—Edward Guss Porter.
HOCHELAGA—Joseph Edmond Lesage.
HULL—John Eloi Fontaine.
HUMBOLDT—Norman Lang.
HURON, N. RIDING—James Bowman.
HURON, S. RIDING—Jonathan Joseph Merner.

INVERNESS—Alexander W. Chisholm.

*Deceased 12th April.

JACQUES CARTIER—David Arthur Lafortune.
JOLIETTE—Jean J. Denis.

KAMOURASKA—Ernest Lapointe.
KENT, N.B.—Auguste T. Leger.
KENT, ONT.—Archibald Blake McCoig.
KINDERSLEY—Edward Thomas Wordon Myers.
KINGS, N.S.—Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Laird Borden, G.C.M.G.
KINGS, P.E.I.—James McIsaac.
KINGSTON—William Folger Nickle.
KOOTENAY, E. RIDING—Saul Bonnell.
KOOTENAY, W. RIDING—Robert Francis Green.

LABELLE—Hyacinthe Adelard Fortier.
LAMBTON, E. RIDING—Joseph Emmanuel Armstrong.
LAMBTON, W. RIDING—Frederick Forsyth Pardee.
LANARK—*A. E. Hanna. / John A. Stewart.
LAPRAIRIE AND NAPIERVILLE—Roch Lanctôt.
L'ASSOMPTION-MONTCALM—Paul Arthur Seguin.
LAST MOUNTAIN—John Frederick Johnston.
LAURIER-OUTREMONT—Pamphile Real DuTremblay.
LAVAL-TWO MOUNTAINS—Joseph Arthur Calixte Ethier.
LEEDS—Hon. Sir Thomas White, K.C.M.G.
LENNOX AND ADDINGTON—William James Paul.
LETHBRIDGE—William Asbury Buchanan.
LÉVIS—Joseph Boutin Bourassa.
LINCOLN—James Dew Chaplin.
LISGAR—Fertis Bolton.
L'ISLET—J. Fernand Fafard.
LONDON—Hume Cronyn.
LOTBINIÈRE—Thomas Vien.
LUNENBURG—William Duff.

MACDONALD—Richard Coe Henders.
MACKENZIE—John Flaws Reid.
MACLEOD—Hugh Murray Shaw.
MAISONNEUVE—Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux.
MAPLE CREEK—John Archibald Maharg.
MARQUETTE—Hon. Thomas Alexander Crerar.
MASKINONGÉ—Hormisdas Mayrand.
MATANE—Francois Jean Pelletier.
MEDICINE HAT—Hon. Arthur Lewis Sifton.
MEGANTIC—Lucien Turcotte Pacaud.
MIDDLESEX, E. RIDING—Samuel Francis Glass.
MIDDLESEX, W. RIDING—Duncan Campbell Ross.
MISSISQUOI—William Frederic Kay.
MONTMAGNY—Aimé Miville Dechene.
MOOSEJAW—Hon. James Alexander Calder.
MUSKOKA—Peter McGibbon.

NANAIMO—John Charles McIntosh.
NEEPAWA—Fred Langdon Davis.
NELSON—J. A. Campbell.
NEW WESTMINSTER—William Garland McQuarrie.
NICOLET—Arthur Trahan.
NIPISSING—Charles Robert Harrison.
NORFOLK—William Andrew Charlton.
NORTH BATTLEFORD—Charles Edwin Long.
NORTHUMBERLAND, N.B.—William S. Loggie.
NORTHUMBERLAND, ONT.—Charles Arthur Munson.
ONTARIO, N. RIDING—†Samuel Simpson Sharpe.
ONTARIO, S. RIDING—William Smith.
OTTAWA—Alfred Ernest Fripp. / John Leo Chabot.
OXFORD, N. RIDING—Edward Walter Nesbitt.
OXFORD, S. RIDING—Donald Sutherland.

PARKDALE—Herbert Macdonald Mowat.
PARRY SOUND—James Arthurs.
PEEL—Samuel Charters.
PERTH, N. RIDING—Hugh Boulton Morphy.
PERTH, S. RIDING—Michael Steele.
PETERBOROUGH, E. RIDING—John Albert Sexsmith.
PETERBOROUGH, W. RIDING—John Hampden Burnham.
PICTOU—Alexander McGregor.
PONTIAC—Frank S. Cahill.
PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE—Hon. Arthur Meighen.
PORT ARTHUR AND KENORA—Francis Henry Keefer.
PORTNEUF—Michel Siméon Delisle.
PRESCOTT—Edmond Proulx.
PRINCE ALBERT—Andrew Knox.
PRINCE EDWARD—William Bernard Rickart Hepburn.
PRINCE, P.E.I.—Joseph Read.
PROVENCHER—John Patrick Molloy.

QU'APPELLE—Levi Thomson.
QUEBEC COUNTY—Henry E. Lavigueur,
QUEBEC EAST—Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, G.C.M.G.
QUEBEC SOUTH—Charles Gavan Power.
QUEBEC WEST—George Parent.
QUEENS, P.E.I.—Donald Nicholson. / John Ewen Sinclair.

RED DEER—Michael Clark.
REGINA—Walter Davy Cowan.
RENFREW, N. RIDING—Herbert John Mackie.
RENFREW, S. RIDING—Isaac Ellis Pedlow.
RESTIGOUCHE AND MADAWASKA—Pius Michaud.
RICHELIEU—Pierre Joseph Arthur Cardin.
RICHMOND AND WOLFE, Q.—Edmund William Tobin.
RIMOUSKI—Joseph Emile Stanislas Emmanuel d'Anjou.
ROYAL—Hugh Havelock McLean.
RUSSELL—Hon. Charles Murphy.

ST. ANN—Hon. Charles Joseph Doherty.
ST. ANTOINE—Sir Herbert Brown Ames, Kt.
ST. DENIS—Alphonse Verville.
ST. HYACINTHE-ROUVILLE—Louis Joseph Gauthier.
ST. JAMES—Louis Audet Lapointe.
ST. JOHN CITY AND COUNTIES OF ST. JOHN AND ALBERT—Stanley Edward Elkin, Rupert Wilson Wigmore.
ST. JOHN AND IBERVILLE—Marie Joseph Demers.
ST. LAWRENCE AND ST. GEORGE—Hon. Charles Colquhoun Ballantyne.
ST. MARY—Hermas Deslauriers.
SALTCOATS—Thomas MacNutt.
SASKATOON—James Robert Wilson.
SELKIRK—Thomas Hay.
SHEFFORD—George Henry Boivin.

*Deceased 27th February, succeeded by Mr. Stewart. †Deceased 25th May.

SHELBURNE AND QUEENS—Hon. William Stevens Fielding.
SHERBROOKE—Francis N. McCrea.
SIMCOE, E. RIDING—James Brockett Tudhope.
SIMCOE, N. RIDING—John Allister Currie
SIMCOE, S. RIDING—William Alves Boys.
SKEENA—Cyrus Wesley Peck.
SOURIS—Albert Ernest Finley.
SPRINGFIELD—Robert Lorne Richardson.
STANSTEAD—Willis Keith Baldwin.
STRATHCONA—James McCrie Douglas.
SWIFT CURRENT—Ira Eugene Argue.

TEMISCOUATA—Charles Arthur Gauvreau.
TERREBONNE—Jules-Edouard Prevost.
THREE RIVERS AND ST. MAURICE—Jacques Bureau.
TIMISKAMING—Hon. Francis Cochrane.
TORONTO CENTRE—Edmund Bristol.
TORONTO EAST—Hon. Sir Edward Kemp, K.C.M.G.
TORONTO NORTH—Right Hon. Sir George Eulas Foster, K.C.M.G.
TORONTO SOUTH—Charles Sheard.
TORONTO WEST—Horatio Clarence Hocken.

VANCOUVER CENTRE—Henry Herbert Stevens.
VANCOUVER SOUTH—Richard Clive Cooper.
VAUDREUIL-SOULANGES—Gustave Boyer.
VICTORIA, ALTA.—William Henry White.
VICTORIA, ONT.—Hon. Sir Sam Hughes, K.C.B.
VICTORIA AND CARLETON, N.B—Hon. Frank Broadstreet Carvell.
VICTORIA, CITY (B.C.)—Simon Fraser Tolmie.

WATERLOO, N. RIDING—William D. Euler.
WATERLOO, S. RIDING—Frank Stewart Scott.
WELLAND—Evan E. Fraser.
WELLINGTON, N. RIDING—William Aurelius Clarke.
WELLINGTON, S. RIDING—Hon. Hugh Guthrie.
WENTWORTH—Gordon Crooks Wilson.
WESTMINSTER DISTRICT—Frank B. Stacey.
WESTMORLAND—Arthur Bliss Copp.
WESTMOUNT-ST. HENRY—Joseph Alfred Leduc.
WEYBURN—Richard Frederick Thompson.
WINNIPEG CENTRE—George William Andrews.
WINNIPEG NORTH—Matthew Robert Blake.
WINNIPEG SOUTH—George William Allan.
WRIGHT—Emmanuel B. Devlin.

YALE—Hon. Martin Burrell.
YAMASKA—Joseph Ernest Oscar Gladu.
YARMOUTH AND CLARE—Edgar Keith Spinney.
YORK, E. RIDING—Thomas Foster.
YORK N. RIDING—John Alexander Macdonald Armstrong.
YORK, S. RIDING—William Findlay Maclean.
YORK, W. RIDING—Thomas George Wallace.
YORK-SUNBURY—Harry Fulton McLeod.
YUKON—Alfred Thompson.

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Monday, March 18, 1918.

MEMBERS SWORN IN.

To-day being the first day of the meeting of the first session of the Thirteenth Parliament for the despatch of business, William Barton Northrup, Esq., M.A., K.C., Clerk of the House of Commons, Francis H. Gisborne, Esq., I.S.O., K.C., Parliamentary Counsel, Arthur Beauchesne, Esq., B.A., K.C., Clerk Assistant of the House of Commons, Commissioners appointed by Dedimus Potestatem for administering the Oath to members of the House of Commons, all attending according to their duty, James G. Foley, Esq., Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, delivered to the said William Barton Northrup a roll containing a list of the names of such members as had been returned to serve in this Parliament.

The aforesaid commissioners did administer the oath to the members who were present, which being done, and the members having subscribed to the roll containing the oath, they repaired to their seats. The Clerk of the House said: I have the honour to communicate the following letter which I have received from His Excellency the Governor General:

Ottawa, 14th. March, 1918.

Sir:—I have the honour to inform you that the Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to open the Session of the Dominion Parliament, on Monday the 18th day of March at 11 o'clock.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
H. B. HENDERSON, Lieut.-Col.
Governor General's Secretary.

The Clerk of the House of Commons,
Ottawa.

A message was delivered by Colonel Ernest J. Chambers, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, who was received at the door of the Commons Chamber by Louis Charles Panet, Esq., Acting Serjeant-at-Arms:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

His Honour, the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the House went up to the Senate, when the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that His Excellency the Governor General does not see fit to declare the cause of his summoning the present parliament of Canada until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law; but, to-day, at the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon, His Excellency will declare the causes of calling this parliament.

And the House being returned.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

HON. EDGAR N. RHODES, ELECTED SPEAKER.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Northrup, we have just been reminded that it is the first duty of a newly assembled House of Commons to elect a Speaker. The presidency of this House is a position of great honour and dignity, and the proper fulfilment of its duties demands the highest qualities of intellect and temperament. It is necessary that the Speaker should preside with dignity, with fairness and with courtesy. Moreover, he must be perfectly impartial, and more than reasonably patient. The gentleman whom I am about to propose is still a young man, although he has had a long experience in public life. More than that, he has already fulfilled the duties of Speaker of the House of Commons; and I do not think it is too much to say that in the discharge of those duties he has brought to bear qualities of intellect and temperament which eminently fit him for the position, and which render him conspicuous among those who, during the past, have occupied that very important office. It is therefore, with great pleasure that I move, seconded by Mr. Carvell:

REVISED EDITION

That the hon. Edgar N. Rhodes, Member for the electoral district of Cumberland, take the Chair of this House as Speaker.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Northrup, we meet under conditions of some peculiar novelty. We do not meet under the rules of the House because those rules say that this House shall meet at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. We do not meet under the proclamation of His Excellency the Governor-General, because the Governor-General, while fixing the date of the meeting of Parliament, did not fix the hour. Of course, Parliament, though elected by the people, has to be called by the Governor-General. It is within His Excellency's privilege to summon it at any time and for any time he pleases, and to fix the hour also. It has pleased him to call Parliament for the 18th March, but he has not fixed the hour. He might have said that we should meet at 11 o'clock of the morning or at the same hour in the evening, and we would have to obey his command. I think, therefore, that under such circumstances the House is irregularly called. But on this side of the Chamber we do not want for that reason to raise any objection; all we are anxious to do is to expedite business as far as we can. I merely say, as a word of friendly criticism to my Rt. Hon. friend on the other side of the House, that it would have been more regular if when summoning Parliament, the hour had been stated.

Having said this much, not by way of offensive criticism but merely to emphasize the desirability of at all times following the law, I now come to the motion which has just been moved by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. The motion is that the member for Cumberland be elected Speaker of this House. I may frankly say at once that I would rather see the member for Cumberland in the Chair than on the floor of this Chamber. On the floor, from past experience, he was not above party spirit. I do not blame him too much for that, although I think some of the views he held were blameable. As to his action in the Chair in the past, however, I have nothing but what is complimentary to say of his administration and his conduct. Mr. Rhodes occupied the Chair of this House last session, and previous to that discharged the duties of Deputy Speaker. Both as Deputy Speaker and as Speaker of this House he certainly was entitled to the encomium which has just been passed upon him by the Prime Minister. For he performed his duties with impartiality, which is the first qualification for the Speakership of this House, with dignity, and with full knowledge of Parliamentary law. Having given that evidence of his fitness for the office, it is with great pleasure that we on this side of the House agree to the motion.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Just one word in reply to what the right hon. leader of the Opposition has said. I am confident, speaking from recollection, that the Order in Council which provided for the issuance of the Proclamation summoning Parliament did name 11 o'clock of the forenoon, but I am not at all sure about the Proclamation itself. If the latter did not name the hour, according to my recollection it departed from the terms of the Order in Council, and the omission was unfortunate.

The Clerk: It has been moved by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister that the Hon. Edgar Rhodes take the Chair of this House as Speaker.

There being no other nomination I declare the Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes, member for the electoral district of Cumberland, duly elected to the Chair as Speaker of this House.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes was conducted from his seat in the House to the Speaker's Chair by Sir Robert Borden and Hon. F. B. Carvell.

Mr. SPEAKER-ELECT said: I beg to tender to this House my sincere and hearty thanks for the high honour it has conferred upon me by again electing me as its Speaker. It shall be my pleasure, as well as my duty, to endeavour to deserve that high honour by dealing with all questions which come before me in my official character with firmness and with impartiality. I am fully sensible of my unfitness for the position, but I rely confidently upon the co-operation of honourable members on both sides of this House to assist me in maintaining and in preserving our rights and privileges, and in preserving the freedom and dignity of debate according to ancient usage.

CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

APPOINTMENT OF WILLIAM BARTON NORTHRUP, M.A., K.C., ANNOUNCED.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that William Barton Northrup, Esquire, M.A., K.C., has been appointed Clerk of the House in the place of Thomas Barnard Flint, Esquire, M.A., LL.B., D.C.L., retired.

APPOINTMENT OF SERJEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that Major Henry William Bowie has been appointed Serjeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons in place of Colonel Henry R. Smith, C.M.G., I.S.O., A.D.C., deceased.

I have also the honour to inform the House that, pending the return of the Serjeant-at-Arms from overseas, I have appointed Louis Charles Panet, Esquire, as Acting Assistant Serjeant-at-Arms.

THE LATE DR. A. E. HANNA.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. Speaker, before the session is suspended I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that although this Parliament has been so newly elected, one of the members who should have taken his place among us has already passed away, even before he could formally be returned to the House and before he had the opportunity of taking his seat. I refer to Dr. A. E. Hanna, who sat in this House as member for South Lanark for some four or five years. He had not a long parliamentary career, and his voice was not heard very often within the walls of Parliament, but all those of us who were associated with him in the last Parliament can bear witness to his strong devotion to duty, his intelligent grasp of public questions, and his desire to fulfil worthily the responsibilities resting upon him as a member of this House. I am confident that all of us will join in extending to his family our very deep sympathy in the bereavement and loss which they have sustained.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker, the unfortunate event to which my right hon. friend has alluded may be accepted as an indication of the uncertainty of life. Dr. Hanna passed away just as he had been elected member of this House, and we are reminded of the famous Bristol election, where the opponent of Edmund Burke died during the election. Dr. Hanna has certainly left among us an appreciation of him as an honourable citizen. He was a useful member and one who was entitled to the respect of everybody. I am sure that the House will join heartily in extending its condolence to his family.

Mr. SPEAKER: I declare this sitting suspended until three o'clock this afternoon.

The House resumed at Three o'clock, Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes, Speaker, in the Chair.

A message was delivered by Colonel Ernest J. Chambers, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:—

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the Chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

Then the Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes, Speaker-elect, said:

May it please your Excellency,

The House of Commons have elected me as their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me. If in the performance of those duties, I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am.

The Hon. the Speaker of the Senate addressing the Hon. the Speaker of the Commons, then said:

Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by His Excellency the Governor General to assure you that your words and actions will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

Then His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to open Parliament by a Speech from the Throne.

And the House being returned to the Commons Chamber:

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to report that the House having attended on His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, I informed His Excellency that the choice of Speaker had fallen on me, and in your names, and on your behalf, I made the usual claim for your privileges, which His Excellency was pleased to confirm to you.

OATHS OF OFFICE.

Bill No. 1, representing the Administration of Oaths of Office.—Sir Robert Borden.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Joint report of the Librarians of Parliament.—Mr. Speaker.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will give me the names of members on that side of the House for a special committee to select, under Rule 10, the committees of the House, I will make the motion in that regard to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Certainly.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that, when the House did attend His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate Chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of Parliament. To prevent mistakes I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate,

Gentlemen of the House of Commons.

You have been summoned to the first session of a new Parliament in the midst of a world-wide struggle which vitally concerns the liberties, the institutions, and the destiny of our country, and of the whole world. Thus the responsibilities and duties imposed upon you are even graver and more far reaching than in the ordinary course of public affairs. Bearing with you a new mandate from the people, and animated by the unfaltering spirit which has inspired them during the long and anxious years of effort and sacrifice, I am confident that you will bring to the discharge of your public duties an unflinching resolve to sustain the high cause in which our country has already borne so splendid a part.

After nearly four years of war the issue still remains undecided. The effort which yet lies before us demands our sternest resolve, but we shall not shrink from it if our hearts are as firm and our courage as undaunted as those of our countrymen who hold our battle line beyond the seas. The Canadian Expeditionary Force still sustains its unbroken record of distinguished achievement to which it has notably contributed since the close of the last session.

Notwithstanding a greater delay than was anticipated in the operation of the Military Service Act, the necessary reinforcements to keep our forces at full strength have been provided and this purpose will be maintained in the future.

In order to extend the principle of the present Civil Service Act to the Outside Service, and thus to provide that all appointments to the Public Service shall be made upon the sole standard of merit, further enabling legislation will be necessary. In the meantime, the principle thus adopted has been carried into effect, as far as possible, by an Order in Council which will be placed before you.

My advisers are impressed with the necessity of a strong and progressive policy of immigration and colonization, accompanied by suitable provisions to induce settlement upon the land, to encourage increased agricultural production and to aid in the development of agricultural resources. In pursuance of this purpose, the Ministry of Immigration and Colonization has been established by Order in Council, and necessary legislation to confirm this action will be laid before you.

In connection with the demobilization of our Forces, my advisers recognize the urgent necessity of provision for the care and vocational training of returned soldiers. Organized effort to provide such training, to assist them in obtaining employment and to aid in establishing them in the activities of civil life is not only important but essential.

A department of the Government for this purpose has been constituted and has been invested with necessary powers and duties. Legislation to confirm this action will be submitted to you.

Measures which have been taken by Order in Council to prevent excessive profits in certain industries, to stimulate and increase the production of food and to encourage and develop the shipbuilding industry will be communicated to you, and any relevant legislation which may be found necessary will be submitted to you.

A Bill for extending the franchise to women, with suitable provisions respecting naturalization, will be submitted and commended to your consideration.

Your attention will also be invited to a Bill to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to railways, a Bill relating to Daylight Saving; Bills relating to taxation of war profits and of incomes, and other measures.

In order to insure the fullest co-operation with the Government of the United States and to assist in securing the most effective utilization of the resources of both countries for war purposes, a Canadian War Mission has been established at Washington, and a War Trade Board has been constituted at Ottawa.

In view of the need for conserving to the fullest extent all national resources during the war and in furtherance of provincial enactments, action has been taken under the War Measures Act, 1914, to prohibit the importation and manufacture of intoxicating beverages and to forbid the transportation thereof into any community where their sale is contrary to law.

My advisers having reached the conclusion that a complete registration of the manhood and womanhood of Canada above the age of sixteen years is not only important but essential under present conditions, the necessary authority has been provided under the War Measures Act, 1914.

The Orders in Council embodying the foregoing provisions will be laid before you.

The appalling disaster at Halifax resulting in the loss of many hundred lives, and the destruction of a considerable portion of the city, and of the adjacent town of Dartmouth, has evoked universal sympathy for those who have suffered. My advisers will submit to you proposals for relieving the distress and loss thus occasioned.

Notwithstanding the critical and trying conditions through which the country has passed during the last three years, the commercial, industrial and financial stability of Canada has been well maintained. The volume of foreign trade greatly exceeds that attained during any corresponding period in previous years and the favourable balance of trade has also vastly increased.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The accounts for the last and the estimates for the next fiscal year will be submitted to you without delay and you will be asked to make the necessary financial provision for the effective conduct of the war.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate,

Gentlemen of the House of Commons.

Notwithstanding disappointments in the Eastern theatre of war, there is no reason to doubt the ultimate triumph of our cause. The effort of the nations included within the British Commonwealth is still unabated and will so continue to the end. Equally earnest and resolute is the spirit of all the allied nations and especially of the great neighbouring and kindred Commonwealth, whose enormous power and vast resources are now beginning to make themselves felt in the determination of the issue.

I commend your deliberations to the Divine guidance in the confident expectation that they will be worthy of the supreme purpose to which our national endeavour is dedicated.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): I beg to move that the speech of His Excellency the Governor General to both Houses of Parliament be taken into consideration to-day. I would suggest to my right hon. friend that it would probably suit the convenience of hon. members if the mover and seconder were to proceed with their addresses to-day, at the conclusion of which it might be more convenient to adjourn the debate, to be proceeded with to-morrow. As the speech of His Excellency has only just been delivered, I would not desire to go on with the debate to-day unless my hon. friends on both sides of the House prefer that course. For my part, I think it would be better to adjourn the debate until to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, it was ordered that the Order for the consideration of the motion for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his speech at the opening of the session have precedence over all other business except introduction of Bills, until disposed of.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH.

ADDRESS IN REPLY.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the speech of His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

Mr. HERBERT M. MOWAT (Parkdale) rose to move that an address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, offering the humble thanks of this House to His Excellency for the gracious speech which he has been pleased to make to both Houses of Parliament. He said:

Mr. Speaker, any speech by His Excellency the Duke of Devonshire, even though he may have had the assistance of others in its details, must now have a personal character because of the regard in which he is held in ever-increasing measure in the hearts of Canadians. He has now been with us nearly two years, and his public utterances, and patronage of that which is good, as well as his domestic example and devotion to duty, are such as commend themselves to all. For many years there have been Cavendishes who have been eminent public servants, and our Governor General maintains the family tradition.

I would like to pause here for a moment to extend—at any rate on behalf of the new members of the House—felicitations upon your re-election as Chief Commoner, and to say that we concur in the true and proper things which were said of you by the right honourable leaders this morning.

This first session of the thirteenth Parliament of Canada is held under unusual circumstances; circumstances agreeable in that a new and fresh mandate of the people has been given which clears many difficulties in war-time government, and not so agreeable in that in the obtaining of the judgment of the people some political adherences have suffered a severance for the time, owing to divergence of opinion as to the sternness of the demands of war. Strong men have strong opinions, and cross currents of political thought arose which made excisions in party alignments. The last Government and the present Government said that a case had arisen to compel young men to serve as soldiers. Their opponents said, "No. You go too fast. You break traditions. We are voluntaries. You will do better by making another appeal for service first. We want a vote on the specific question. We have principles which are immutable in time of peace and must not be forsaken in time of war. One of these principles is our dislike of compulsion." There were some who presented pleas on perhaps a lower plain and which were less attractive. They said: "We have done enough. No one had the right to offer 500,000 men. The war is three thousand miles away. Let our American neighbours do it now." These arguments, on the other hand, were resisted as being inadequate. "We entered the war," said the other party, "for the sake of liberty and civilization which are in peril, as well as because we were of the British Empire. Volunteering has ceased. Honour requires us to support the men who have gone out for us and whose ranks have sadly diminished." War changes minds and relieves from adherence to principles held in time of peace and of philosophic reasoning. War is ruthless. We must hurry or we shall be too late. Besides, there are the dead of all the provinces.

We are the dead."

"Take up our quarrel with the foe;
To you with failing hands we throw
The torch. Be yours to hold it high;
If ye break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep tho' poppies grow
In Flanders fields."

With contrary thoughts such as these, tenaciously held and raging, it was inevitable that the banks of the party streams should break, and that new streams of like thought and impulse should meet and mingle and unite. The strongest and deepest united stream as the result of the general election proved to be that called Union Government, which is now to be given a fair trial. But, thank God, there are signs that no factious efforts are to be made to keep alive the disputes which separated us in the contest. As the turmoil subsides and the accusations cease and the charges of desertion grow less robust, we can unite at least for war purposes in this hour of our greatest national danger. We have a common love for a common country. We may see its beauties and its possibilities from different viewpoints, but all will be resolved not to let any domestic brawling militate against our dignity, and our right eventually to take a proud position in the world. It may be that we are not old enough or not yet national enough to have the devotion to country of some other peoples. Recently a soldier of France about to die on the field wrote some lines in the last hour of his expiring life, which were found:

France my country I love you.
I have given my life for you.
Would that I could kiss away the blood from your wound.
I love you France,
Take me forever to your bosom.

It is scarcely likely that a Canadian would show such intensity of feeling, but in a less fervent way we are all of the mind to do for our country in one way or other all we can each in his own time to make her honest and righteous and strong.

Maybe the House will bear with me if I relate an instance of the dissolution of party lines in the case of the constituency of Parkdale which sent me here. This riding is probably the most populous in the Dominion, and, judging from past contests, the dominant party had absolutely no cause for anxiety as to the result. But in view of the importance of the main principle at stake in the election, they spontaneously decided to make their candidate me, known always to have been a political opponent, because they believed in the sincerity of my support of the idea of Union. Chivalry and self-denial could go no further than this, and it is in recognition of these qualities, no doubt, that their member was asked to occupy this post of honour of addressing the House at this moment.

The Speech naturally alludes to measures calculated to improve the capacity of the country to prosecute the Great War. Under this head comes the obtaining of reinforcements under the Military Service Act, 1917. We will, no doubt, soon receive detailed information as to what extent the measures now in force have so far produced the men. It has been rumoured that the opposition of certain classes of employers and producers before the tribunals, and severe medical fitness tests, have cut down the selection below what was expected. If that is so, I am sure there will be no shrinking in this House from extending the call or speeding it up after all combing efforts have been taken. Yet young men and unmarried are the ideal class because of their physical fitness and greater freedom from domestic responsibilities.

The proposed legislation to endorse the new department for the care of returned disabled men and their training for vocations is of great interest and will, no doubt, be willingly passed. We must be patient with the men and persist in kind treatment of them.

The announcement of regulations for the registration of the man and woman power of the Dominion was received with marked approval by those who know, or who think they know, the vast importance of this delayed measure. It is gratifying to learn also that the superintendence and carrying out of the measure has been largely undertaken by the representatives of the Labour interests. The attempted registration of every grown person, male and female, if loyally agreed to and efficiently carried out, will solve or lessen many difficulties; those of the recruiter, the food controller, the fuel controller and those of manufacturers and munition makers. There has been guess-work and rule-of-thumb when efforts to correlate work and production so as to prevent overlapping and waste, have been undertaken. It is no disgrace for the rich and powerful to be under obligation to show papers on demand proving position, status and nationality any more than it is for the humble and lowly. The day of the slacker and no-account man and drone should be numbered if the work is well carried out. In addition to those advantages, it will add to the sense of citizenship of both men and women when it is made clear that all are looked to, and all are expected, to fill a place in the struggle, instead of being treated in the loose and haphazard ways of backward countries. We do not wish to be too much governed, but too little government may bring on national decrepitude.

Turning to measures not essentially war measures, a good legislative bill of fare is furnished, including the improvement of the Outside Civil Service and the systematic encouragement of immigration. As regards immigration, the country will be quite prepared for discrimination in favour of our present gallant European allies as against those who we are not confident will coincide with us and make citizens of like ideas with our own. If legislation is needed to strengthen Orders in Council for preventing excess profits in certain industries, and to encourage the production of foods and the building of ships, such legislation will, no doubt, be readily granted.

4 p.m.

No one knows the exact features which the future has in store for our country. If difficulties in trade and tariffs, or race sentiment, or finance, arise, we are prepared to meet them courageously when they do come, and will not worry about them too soon. Our foreign trade has increased; the balance continues to be in our favour. We can be content largely to consume and to use our own products and manufactures. We will not lose sight of the importance of being frugal. We have confidence in the spirit and resourcefulness and capacity of our men serving in the field and in the air, and we are resolved that war-weariness shall not overtake or unnerve us. In this spirit and with these advantages, we look forward joyously to the great future which we hope, which we know, will be ours.

Mr. JOHN LEO CHABOT (Ottawa) (translation): Mr. Speaker, the conciseness and spartan simplicity that characterize the speech from the Throne might well convey both precept and example to those desirous of discussing the momentous problems of the present day. It is, therefore, my intention to avail myself of such discreet and appropriate counsel in seconding my Honourable colleague, the member for Parkdale, Toronto, (M. Mowat) who has moved the address in reply to the speech delivered before both houses by His Excellency the Governor General on the occasion of the opening of the first session of this Thirteenth Parliament.

The speech which you have just heard is an honour both to him who delivered it with so much eloquence and to those who applauded his moving and illuminous language. I find it, therefore, a delightful duty to congratulate the Honourable member for Parkdale on his happy inspiration.

Before entering upon the few brief remarks which I intend to make, I wish to pay a tribute of remembrance, a tribute of regret, to the memory of Dr. Hanna, swept away, in such premature fashion, from the solid friendship of all those who enjoyed the privilege of knowing him and of appreciating his sterling quality. May the expression of our sincere sympathy reach out to those whom this loss has affected in the most intimate fibres of their being.

If, on the other hand, I turn my gaze toward the very first ranks of the Loyal Opposition, I am chagrined to find there still a seat which is painfully vacant. I am speaking of the absence of my excellent friend and colleague the Honorable member for Beauce (Mr. Béland), brutally torn from all the objects of his affection and all the promises of happiness by an enemy who rejoices in torturing heroes. As a French-Canadian, I am proud of such a prisoner, of such a martyr in the great cause, of a compatriot who is the pride of my race and the eternal shame of his tormentors. I wish to express my most ardent desire that the captive will obtain his freedom.

In another sphere of sorrow, I wish to offer a few words of comfort to the thousands of families thrown into mourning and reduced to the hard existence of deepest misery by the terrible disaster of Halifax. Let us hope that, thanks to the united efforts of kindness and courage, this unhappy city will be resurrected from its seeming death.

Having given thought to those events which the painful vicissitudes of life and the unforeseen blows of destiny have visited upon us, let us consider what is happening today. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, allow me to assure you of my great pleasure at seeing you continue to preside over the deliberations of this House. As in the past, your eminent qualities, as gentleman and jurist, will make you one of the champions of parliamentary dignity and impartiality. May you long be spared for the exercise of these functions so manifestly useful.

We have just heard, Mr. Speaker, in the speech pronounced by His Excellency, a clear and succinct statement of the policy which the Government intends to follow. From the tenor of the document, it is easy to grasp the great thought which dominates all the others: that of an unflinching resolve in the prosecution of the struggle against the common enemy. That is the supreme consideration of the present Government. All other cares—no matter how important they may appear—fall below it. And, in the course of this speech, the Union Government, under the respected leadership of the Right Honourable Sir Robert L. Borden, reminds each and every one of us that the freedom, the institutions and future of our country must be safeguarded. This is why we are asked through the voice of His Excellency, to remain steadfast in our resolve to win. On behalf of our agonizing country, those who are weighed down with the precious burden of her destiny beseech us to hold fast until the day of ultimate triumph and to consecrate ourselves to a cause which has already brought to Canada untold sacrifices and a resplendent harvest of glory.

Moreover, the main lines of appropriate legislation which conforms to our present aims have been submitted to the consideration of those whom the people have chosen as their representatives. Let us cast a rapid glance at a few aspects of this world conflict, and then briefly review the various measures set forth in the speech which we are discussing.

May I first be permitted, however, Mr. Speaker, before touching on what pertains to Canada's effort, to thank the hon Prime Minister for the signal honour he has done the city of Ottawa in choosing the representative of this electoral college to second the motion of the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. But, great as that honour may be, I do not hesitate to affirm that those who made it possible had acquired a certain right to it.

Nigh onto four years ago, the British Empire—having exhausted all the resources of diplomatic conciliation—cast into the fray, where nations were already at each other's throats, a sword which from that instant has never been sheathed. In vain the formidable Albion had striven to spare the world this most bloody holocaust of history. Germany, a nation of prey, had torn to pieces all her treaties, had betrayed her given word. The invasion of Belgium was to point out to England her noble line of conduct. Then came the message from the Canadian Government, sent to the British authorities in the first days of August, 1914. The hon. Prime Minister imparted the hope that these international misunderstandings would be solved without bloodshed. On the other hand, the Mother Country was assured of our most loyal assistance, in every shape and form, should war break out. The Empire was threatened; the greatest of Dominions declared herself ready, irrespective of political ties, to accept the most bitter sacrifices in the task of upholding the integrity and the honour of the British flag. What followed has shown that the promises made, in the first days of war, by certain elements, have been implemented by the Canadian people. And it is in my twofold capacity as a British subject and as a descendant of one of the pioneer races of the Canadian nation, that I wish to dwell a few moments upon this drama, so terrible and withal so glorious.

Is it necessary for me to recall to those who hear me the justice of the cause which our people are defending with their blood? Our case in this regard has been unassailably established. This cause for which you have seen your brothers, your friends, and those still nearer and dearer, leave our shores, this cause, I say, is just not only with regard to Great Britain and her colonies, but it is the very Cause itself of Light against Darkness. A victorious Germany would mean that everything which humanity holds sacred would be ground down into the dust. It would be the apotheosis of might against right, of error against truth. All the efforts of mankind, since the dawn of time, towards better things, would go for naught. But reassure yourselves; so much blood has not been shed in vain. So many tears, such universal mourning, will never end in a mere shadow of victory. England, France, the United States—that great republic, our neighbour, who has now entered the fray side by side with us, and whose soldiers are today almost our brothers—Belgium, Italy and the allied countries, will take good care that peace will mean the shattering of Prussia. And it is to render the annihilation of autocracy more decisive that, from the very inception of the war, and since, England and her sister nations have had but one single voice to loudly proclaim that we must either be the victors or wear the chains of slavery.

This solidarity betwixt England and Canada has been proven, and continues to be so every day, if we but stop to consider the effort put forth by our country. hWat need is there of insisting on the part played by the Canadians during more than forty months of war? We should have to retell the thousands of heroic feats performed by officers and by the humble rank and rifle alike. We should have to parade before your gaze the magnificent spectacle of an epopee hitherto unheard of.

What could I say, here, worthy of you, soldiers of Canada, who were at Ypres, at Festubert, at Givenchy, at St. Julien, at Courcelette, at Vimy, at Passchendaele and a hundred other spots? You have shown to the world without distinction of race or creed, what valour, courage and heroism can do. Your achievements are inscribed on the most glorious pages of the history of all time, and your sacrifices will never be forgotten. Let those who come back from this awful fray be welcomed as the saviours of tottering civilization. As to those who have fallen, let us salute them, as so many martyrs who did not hesitate to defend their country and to die for her.

But, as you know, if the readiness of Canada to hurry to the aid of the Empire in danger has compelled the admiration of Europe; if the valour of our legions has been for all of us a constant source of most legitimate pride, our national spirit has manifested itself in other ways. With most admirable unity, our population has given itself to war-work, and those whom the great voice of the people have placed in control of the Ship of State have striven to promulgate laws which will promote and guide within the bounds of safety the economic and commercial development of the country.

We have, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the noble initiative of the Canadian people in forming committees to care for the families of our soldiers. That is the origin of the Patriotic Fund, to which so many millions has been subscribed to help those who are suffering through the war. And then, who has not admired the sublime mission of the Red Cross in alleviating the bitterness of unspeakable pain. These are but a few isolated examples of the devotedness of all, and they give scant justice to the extent of what has been accomplished. We should have to cite long rows of figures, if we wished to enter into the details of other works of the kind performed by other associations and patriotic leagues. The Daughters of the Empire, the Comité de Secours National of France, the Belgian Relief Commission, the Women's Club, with their numerous branches and chapters, are all enrolled in this huge army of benefactors.

Let us bow as well to the abnegation of all those valiant women who on the fields of carnage or at their own hearth, have given the most noble examples of strength of soul and who have never weakened. Were I permitted to mention names and to recite to you the roll of honour of the miracles of kindness, I should be compelled to read a list which is seemingly without end. But the praises of the present day, no matter how sincere, are merely fast-withering blooms beside the crowns with which posterity will adorn the brow of all these men and women who have given themselves to these works of kindness and mercy.

Let us remember, also, the astounding rapidity with which our war loans were subscribed. More than ten times the amounts required were garnered within a few days. The Governments themselves, provincial legislatures as well as Federal authorities, gave freely to maintain all these laudable enterprises and to feed the hungry mouths of Europe. What can we add to this enumeration except to record that so many wonderful efforts crowned with success were gloriously completed by the sending over-seas of those valorous contingents, the choicest of troops, who are still fighting against the hordes of Attila. After the offering of gold and of energy, we have seen the offering of blood. This blood of our bravest will wash away hate and rancour; this blood will cement the two great nationalities destined to live in common in this Canadian land of our forefathers; this blood will be the seed of " sound ideas and noble actions." There you have what we wished to say of all this warwork. Even in the brief synopsis which I have just given, each of you can see that the Canadian nation has risen to the test of the tragic circumstances which have encompassed her.

As regards the economic, industrial and financial well-being of Canada, I do not feel called upon to treat of it after the categorical affirmations in this regard that we have had in the speech from the Throne. I intend, however, to congratulate the Government upon the wisdom of their decision in the matter of Civil Service reform, whereby all appointments to the Outside Service are to be made on the basis of the merit system. If there be in this House a member who has more cause than the one now speaking to appreciate the wisdom of such a law, let him take the floor. To the member for Ottawa, the end of patronage dickerings is like the calm after the storm.

As regards the problems of the post-bellum period, and with respect to demobilization, we must hope that the far-seeing legislation which the Government has in view will receive the support of all those who have at heart the proper care of our intrepid soldiers and the assistance due them in the matter of re-education, in refitting them to earn a livelihood and in other things.

As to the Bill which aims to give to our Canadian women the right to vote, I hold that a more just measure could not be brought to the attention of this House. Without wishing to pose as a champion of the feminist movement, I shall not hesitate to say that these women who are carrying on the work of the country, that these women who are—very often—more devoted than we are ourselves to the great interests of our homeland, deserve respect for the intelligence of their endeavour and a reward for the magnanimity of their sacrifice.

A few words more, Mr. Speaker, and I have done. My last words will be an appeal for the union of all minds and all hearts; a call for the unity of will and energy so that Canada may accomplish to the very end the heroic task which she has taken upon herself. Thanks to his unwavering devotion to the public welfare a man who sits in this House has made it possible to confer upon the country the inestimable boon of union. But this spirit of union must penetrate to every quarter, and it must be founded on generosity and on patriotism. Majorities must be magnanimous enough not to judge too hastily, or perhaps with some bitterness, minorities who have equally at heart the greater welfare of the nation but whom various causes appear to incline towards other methods of action.

After all, why is it that in the face of the enemy, whose prying eyes are forever upon us, should we cast about for causes of dissension? Why, for instance, try to measure or weigh, so to speak, the quantities of such and such blood that has been shed, in comparison to the rivers of such and such other blood that have flowed. Why raise the cry: here less French-Canadian blood was spilt, and there more Anglo-Saxon blood, or Scotch, or Irish? Why take the futile care to indite long pages of statistics proving that such and such a province has to its credit more blood or more sacrifices than such and such another? One thousand times No! This is not the time for such figuring. Glory to those—be they where they may—who have done more! They constitute a noble example for those ethnic groups whom certain conditions, peculiar to their temperament or to their social function,—or perhaps whom pernicious influences—have rendered less sprightly to answer the first blasts of the bugle. Let us call a halt today to these matters of the census: posterity will see to them. Rather let us remember that those who have died have mingled their blood—their Canadian blood—on the soil of France or of Belgium, and that this heroic soil has drained it without distinction.

Let us mass ourselves in serried ranks behind these heroes, our models, and tomorrow our eye will behold the blessed dawn of victory.

Mr. Chabot continuing in English:

Before resuming my seat, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words in English in deference to my English-speaking constituents in Ottawa. In the first place I desire to express my feeling of sincere gratitude to the right hon. leader of the Government for the honour he has conferred upon me and the constituency which I represent in this House, in asking me to second the address of thanks to His Excellency the Governor General for the gracious speech which he has been pleased to make to both houses of Parliament, so eloquently proposed by the hon. member from Parkdale (Mr. Mowat).

I appreciate the distinction all the more because of the fact that this is the first session of the Thirteenth Parliament, called at a time when the political situation in this country has undergone a marked and decided change; when our fair Canada is confronting the most momentous issue, and passing through the most critical period in her national history; at a time when some of the most able men on both sides of politics—men who have fought one another politically, through the press, and even in Parliament, in answer to the call of duty have sunk their deep-rooted political feelings and convictions, prepared to combine their very best efforts and put forth their strongest endeavours, with a view of carrying on legislation and following out a policy intended to prosecute the war more vigorously and more effectively; and at the moment when Unionism and what it stands for are paramount in the eyes, and are strongly entrenched in the hearts of a large portion of the Canadian people.

Since the beginning of this terrible world's war, our Canadian soldiers on the battlefields of France and Flanders have by their valour and their courage, and particularly by their resourcefulness, covered themselves with glory, and have been a source of pride to their country. They have proven themselves to be as good soldiers as the very best, and have struck terror into the hearts of the enemy, who, I am told, would just as soon meet the devil, as face the Canadians on the field of battle.

Four hundred thousand men from Canad have gone overseas since this war began. There have been close on to 100,000 casualties since the Canadians have begun to fight at the front, and 30,000 Canadian boys in the strength of their manhood, the very flower of our country, lie buried in so many graves in France and Flanders; graves haloed by their death and glorified by their sufferings. We deeply grieve their loss, but our sorrow is lightened by the knowledge that they fell on the field of honour, fighting for the sacred cause of democracy and freedom. We reverently honour their memory.

The women of this country, since the outbreak of hostilities, have displayed such admirable patriotism, energy and unselfishness in the fields of philanthrophy and patriotic work, and in the various spheres of activity formerly occupied by men; on the land, in the factories, in the hospitals, and on the very field of battle, that their invaluable and patriotic endeavours have enlisted the admiration and won the approval of the people of Canada and of the Empire; and, besides, have earned the undying gratitude of thousands of sick and wounded soldiers.

The Canadian surgeons and physicians at the front, and in the hospitals, have done themselves proud in the eyes of the whole world because of their devotion to duty, their spirit of self-sacrifice and all round good work. They have performed their manifold duties and arduous labours in a manner which has called forth the approbation of the British and Allies alike.

Canada has made many sacrifices since this war has begun. The people of this country have endeavoured to honourably discharge their duty for the cause of humanity and civilization, and we must be prepared to go on to the last gun, to the last man, to the last dollar, until militarism and autocracy have been crushed, and this terrific conflict brought to a successful and glorious termination. Let us, the representatives of the Canadian people in this House, consider it our sacred duty under the circumstances, to do all in our power to keep faith with our boys at the front, to labour for the maintenance of a united Canada in order to win the war and to save our beloved country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker, as was intimated a few moments ago by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden)—and in this I think he was perfectly correct—it would suit the convenience of both sides of the House if this debate were not prolonged this day. Therefore, I shall not at this moment offer to the House the observations which seem to be called for from His Majesty's loyal Opposition by the speech of His Excellency. But I think I should not wait until to-morrow, that I should not wait a single moment longer, before I tender to both my hon. friend from Parkdale (Mr. Mowat) and my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Chabot) the congratulations of both sides of the House upon the admirable addresses with which they have favoured us. I commend especially the spirit of harmony and union between all the elements in this country which was particularly noticeable in the speech of my hon. friend from Parkdale and also in the observations of my hon. friend from Ottawa. In what these two hon. gentlemen have said there is a great deal with which I can altogether agree and there is very little to which I must take exception. But, unfortunately, there are some things to which I shall have to take exception, and it would suit my own pleasure and convenience better if I deferred until to-morrow the observations which I shall have to offer in criticism of their observations. I therefore now beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION.

The right hon. Sir Robert Borden (Prime Minister) presented a message from His Excellency the Governor General approving minute of Council appointing:

The Hon. Martin Burrell, Secretary of State; the Hon. John Dowsley Reid, Minister of Railways and Canals; the Hon. Arthur L. Sifton, Minister of Customs, and the Hon. James A. Calder, Minister of Immigration and Colonization, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as Commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of the Eleventh Chapter of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, intituled: "An Act respecting the House of Commons."

SUMMONING OF PARLIAMENT.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: With the consent of the House, I should like to mention to my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), with respect to the matter to which he called attention this morning, that my recollection was right as to the terms of the Order in Council which was passed and approved for the purpose of summoning Parliament. It reads in this way:

The Committee of the Privy Council on the recommendation of the Right Hon. Sir Robert Laird Borden, Prime Minister, advises that a proclamation be issued summoning the Parliament of Canada to meet on Monday the 18th day of March at 11 a. m. at the City of Ottawa for the despatch of business.

Through some inadvertence on the part of the officer who prepared the proclamation the hour seems to have been omitted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There was no reference to it in the proclamation but there have been so many Orders in Council that I am not surprised at the omission.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL LAID ON THE TABLE.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I shall proceed, notwithstanding the reluctance of my right hon. friend to have these thrust upon him, to lay several of them upon the table of the House. I beg to lay on the table of the House, by command of His Excellency the Governor General, the Defence of Canada Order, 1917, and certain Orders in Council in amendment thereof. I also desire to lay upon the table an Order in Council respecting freight rates and special taxation in respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway; an Order in Council with regard to the importation, manufacture and transportation of intoxicating liquors; an Order in Council respecting the Department of Immigration and Colonization, and the Department of External Affairs; Orders in Council respecting the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and the Military Hospitals Commission; an Order in Council respecting the War Purchasing Commission; two Orders in Council respecting the Canadian War Mission, Washington; Orders in Council respecting the disaster at Halifax, establishing the Halifax Relief Commission and making certain recommendations with regard to relief; Orders in Council with respect to the War Committee of the Cabinet, and the Reconstruction and Development Committee of the Cabinet; Orders in Council respecting the Civil Service Act, conferring certain powers upon the Civil Service Commission; an Order in Council respecting the Canada Registration Board; Orders in Council, passed under the Military Service Act, embodying regulations made thereunder; an Order in Council respecting applications to dismiss on the ground of offensive partisanship.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That is all.

[Sir Robert Borden.]

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I notice there is no Order in Council to dispense with Parliament.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If my right hon. friend deems such a measure to be advisable we shall be glad to take the suggestion into consideration.

Hon. N. W. ROWELL: I lay upon the table copy of an Order in Council creating the office of Director of Public Information.

Hon. J. A. CALDER: I produce copy of the minutes of a conference held between the Dominion and Provincial Governments on February 15 and 16 last.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR: I submit copy of Orders in Council and Regulations with respect to the Food Controller and the control of food supplies.

On the motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House adjourned at 4.37 p.m.

Tuesday, March 19, 1918.

The House met at Three o'clock.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL LAID ON THE TABLE.

Hon. C. C. BALLANTYNE: I produce copies of certain Orders in Council pertaining to the Naval Service of Canada; also copies of the Annual Report of the Naval Service in English and French; also the English edition of the Annual Report of the Fisheries Branch.

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I submit copies of Orders in Council establishing the office of Fuel Controller and regulations made in connection therewith; also, similar Orders in Council with reference to the establishment of an Editorial Board; also copies of Orders in Council establishing the War Trade Board.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved, seconded by Sir George Foster:

That a Special Committee be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed lists of Members to compose the Select Standing Committees of this House under Rule 10; said Committee to be composed of Sir Robert Borden, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Messrs. Reid, Grenville, Carvell, Robb and McCoig, and that that portion of Rule 10 limiting the number of members of the said committee be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH.

ADDRESS IN REPLY.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the speech of His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker, the speech which was placed in the mouth of His Excellency the Governor General by his advisers is one of unusual length. It deals with many subjects old and new, chiefly old. With both we are already familiar, and if some are new to the House they are not new to the public; they have been discussed again and again, and upon them the public is now awaiting the decision of the Government. Therefore we may well pass these subjects over awaiting the opportunity when the Government will place them before the House in concrete form for adjudication.

In the address to which we listened yesterday there is no mention of a subject which does not require any legislation and in which the public is much interested—that is to say, that since Parliament prorogued in the month of September last there has been quite a change in the Government. If you will permit me, I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to my expression. I did not say "change of Government," I said "change in the Government." My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Mowat) yesterday, in referring casually to this in his speech, made a distinction between the old and the new Government. There is no new Government; we have the same Government that has existed for the last six years—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: And so long as there is no change in the Premiership it is a continuation of the same administration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There is the same control, the same principles and the same everything in connection therewith. I emphasize that there is the same control and the same principles. There is a change, I must admit, in the complexion of the Government, and if I may say so it is not only a change but an improvement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: As we look at the Government from this side of the House we cannot fail to notice that it is characterized by a healthier complexion than it wore last session. There is not about it the same pallor that existed then. Although not a follower of the Government, I am glad to say that the present Administration displays a rosy red colour which is at all events pleasing to the eye. Last summer the friends of the Government were much concerned as to its condition. Many of them, perhaps I should say all of them, believed that unless there was a copious draft of rich red blood injected into its system, things might go hard with them. This condition necessitated a surgical operation. Such operations have been very much resorted to of late, especially since the war began. Many have been the instances where healthy, strong men came forward and presented their bare arms to the surgeon in order to have a vein opened in the last desperate attempt to save a moribund life.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The records do not always show that the operation was successful. Indeed it so happens that in many instances the patient was so far gone that he could not be saved except by the sacrifice of another's blood, and sometimes the sacrifice was fatal even to the saviour who offered his blood for transfusion.

Let me say at once that to these Liberal members who joined the Administration, I do not wish such a fate. With most of them it was my privilege for many years to be closely associated in intimate friendship. I know them too well not to realize that in what they did they were guided by wholly conscientious motives. Indeed we have the declaration of some of them that it was a sacrifice; indeed there is the written statement of others that they for a long time hesitated and resisted all advances. Conscience is the supreme arbiter, and into the sanctity of conscience I will not enter. I respect the convictions of everybody, even of those with whom for the time being I may differ; but I may be pardoned if I say that so far as I am concerned I never could appreciate those many subtle disquisitions made in the effort to convince us that war necessitates and creates new standards of duty. There is no such thing as new standards of duty in war. Duty is only the concrete expression of eternal truth which never can vary; which remain the same in war as in peace. But war undoubtedly intensifies all duties and lifts them up to an altitude which of course is unknown in peace times.

As I look at the history of this war it seems to me that nothing has occurred to show that the principles of the British system of constitutional Government should be discarded in war time, and put in cold storage, to be taken back after the restoration of peace. None of the many attempts which have been made in England to join discordant elements under the name of Union on the ground that the winning of the war would thus be facilitated, have succeeded in creating a Government which could do better or more than its predecessor. If the principles of the British system of Government are sound and efficient in peace, they are equally sound and efficient in war. If there is a feature of the British system of Government which makes for superiority, it is that the system is not complete unless there is in the face of the Government a strongly organized Opposition—an Opposition organized not for the purpose, as is too often supposed, of always opposing, but to supervise, to criticise, to support, as the public welfare may require criticism or support. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and the universal testimony of history is that unless there is eternal vigilance on the part of a strong and resolute Opposition, encroachments upon freedom and abuses in office will creep in, just as surely and just as certainly as weeds and tares will invade and choke the crops of the husbandman if he is not constantly on the watch. Nay, more; I think I can invoke also the testimony of the history of British institutions to show that if at any time there is on the part of some section of the Opposition a relaxation in vigilance, weeds and tares at once appear in luxurious growth. Already we have evidence of this, and the evidence is that today this Parliament of Canada meets in violation of what is left of the electoral law of Canada.

Sir, last session those who sat in the House were divided on the question of conscription. There were members of the Liberal party who favoured conscription; others opposed it. Upon this point I as the recognized leader of the Opposition, did not interfere with the conscience of any man. Strong reasons were brought forward in support of each view, but there was no divergence of opinion on this side with regard to the outrageous measure; known as the War-time Elections Act, or, to call it by its popular name—or unpopular name, rather—the Franchise Act. Among members of the Opposition there was no divergence of opinion; they were unanimously opposed to it. Every feature of that law was an outrage, an odious violation of the very foundation of our system of democratic government. The creating of a special electorate in view of an impending election; the granting of the franchise to some and the withholding of it from others; the opening wide of the door to fraud which enabled the Government or its officers to ostracize some classes of His Majesty's subjects and to include others whom they did not dare ignore —all these were features of the Act which could not be accepted by any man who desired to uphold the principles of Liberalism. The measure was accepted by Liberal members who entered the Government under the argument of war necessity. Nothing, Sir, is more certain than that one illegality will lead to another; that, as a logical consequence, wrong will be followed by wrong. I repeat that this Parliament is assembled in direct violation of what is left of the electoral law after the passing of the War-time Elections Act.

Last year we passed legislation to take the votes of the soldiers who were in the trenches. We had a civilian vote as well as a military vote to record. So far as the civilian vote was concerned, there was not much alteration in the Act. The only alteration of which I was aware was that section 211, which prescribed the duties of the returning officer under the old Act, was somewhat interfered with. I need not refer hon. gentlemen to the fact that under our system all elections are carried out under the writ of the King, which is issued to officers specially selected in every riding to take the vote of the people and to report it to an officer known as the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Section 211 provides that after the votes have been counted the returning officer will transmit to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery his return that the candidate having the largest number of votes has been duly elected. It is the duty, therefore, of the returning officer to count the votes and then to make his return that the man having the majority of votes is the elected representative. That portion of the Act was amended to this extent: The return to be made is not a direct return; a certificate is to be issued by the special returning officer to an officer known as the general returning officer, stating the number of votes received on each side. The Act which was passed last session for the taking of the soldiers' vote provided that the vote should be taken in a certain manner—I need not direct attention to the method at the present time—and, the special officers appointed to count them were required to report their proceedings to the Secretary of the High Commissioner's office in London and to the Commissaire Général in France, who were required to send at once a telegraphic report to the general returning officer, and to forward the poll books and all records connected with the taking of the vote. Two duties, therefore, were imposed upon the Commissaire in France and the Secretary of the High Commissioner's office in London: to send a communication by telegraph to the general returning officer, and to forward at the same time the poll books and the records.

The duties of the general returning officer in this connection are defined in section 14 of the War-Time Elections Act:

> Upon receipt of my telegram from the Secretary of the High Commisioner's Office, or the Commissaire Général du Canada in France stating the number of votes given for the several candidates in any electoral district, the General Returning Officer shall cause the information therein contained to be made available to any person applying therefor.

That is all the effect which is given to this communication by telegraph. The information may be given to any person who asks for it. It has no more effect than that. It is not official. It is simply to satisfy the curiosity of anybody who may inquire.

Then when he has received the poll books and records and all the documents relating to the counting of the votes taken in Europe these are his duties.

> Upon receipt from the Secretary of the High Commissioner's Office the Commissaire Général du Canada in France and the special Returning Officers in Canada of the statements referred to in Section 12 subsection four of this part.

That is to say, the poll books and other records.

> The General Returning Officer shall add the number of votes given for or applicable to the respective candidates in each electoral district, as disclosed by such statements, to the votes given for the candidates as shown by the certificate of the Returning Officer made pursuant to section 13 of this Part, and shall openly proclaim and shall return pursuant to the provisions of section 211 of Part III, as being duly elected a member or members to represent such electoral district

That is what completes the report upon the King's writ. The General Returning Officer was bound to count the votes in public, and to make his report accordingly, and then the election was complete. Have these formalities been complied with by the General Returning Officer? They have not been complied with, and the reason why they have not been complied with is simply this—and my assertion cannot be successfully controverted—that at this moment the General Returning Officer has not received from Europe the records of the votes given by the soldiers in Europe. I will come presently to the reason why these formalities have not been complied with. But I may be told before I go further: This is a simple formality; it does not matter much whether the candidates for membership in this House are reported upon by telegraphic communication or whether they are solemnly reported upon when the records are received; the certification is simply a formality. If it is simply a formality, why do we have it in the Statute? Personally, I am not very particular as to non-compliance with the strict letter of the law when such non-compliance does not defeat the purpose of the men who are responsible for the law; but it is a good principle of law, common sense, fairness, that no man shall be permitted to disregard the law in order to shield or to conceal or to get rid of his own laches. This, however, is exactly what has been done to-day by the Government. Why is it that there are laches on the part of the Government? If the writs had been issued immediately after dissolution, the records would have been received before now; but Parliament prorogued on the 20th of September last and Parliament was not dissolved and the writs of election were not issued until the first days of November. Some five weeks passed before the writs were issued and before the people were summoned to the election. Why was not Parliament immediately dissolved? Could any reason of public welfare be invoked? Could any reason be given for it? I speak with knowledge, and no one will contradict me—the reason why Parliament was not dissolved immediately after prorogation was because the Government were not ready and they had not time to organize the working of the War-time Elections Act. On account of the Government having waited until the month of November to issue the writs, to-day, the 19th of March, the records of the voting that took place in Europe have not been received. How is it, then, that we have in the Votes and Proceedings a list of the members elected? If we have this list of members elected, it is not in accordance with the law. How then is it we have it? How is it that the returning officer, Mr. O'Connor, has published such a list as we have before us to-day? I do not know much of Mr. O'Connor; I have had little to do with him; but I believe, so far as I have seen anything of him, that he is an able, fair and high-minded servant of the public. I do not believe that he would be capable of doing anything wrong in making a report of this kind. Yet he has made such a report as this, and what is the result? Since yesterday batches of Orders in Council have been brought down. I do not know how many there are of them, but I think upon investigation one will find that some seven pages of Orders in Council have been brought down. To-day some more have been brought down by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) and by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne); but I do not know whether there was an Order in Council brought down, although I am told that last Friday or thereabouts an Order in Council was passed giving authority to the returning officer to disregard the letter of the law, and, simply upon receipt of telegraphic communication, to make a report as to the voting in Europe. If I am wrong in this, I can be corrected; but I believe the statement is true that such an Order in Council has been passed. What was the authority of the Government for passing such an Order in Council? Was it to be found within the four corners of the electoral law passed last session? No. I am at a loss to know upon what authority the Government took it upon themselves to pass such an Order in Council unless it be that once more they have resorted to the War Measures Act passed in 1914. The War Measures Act has already covered a multitude of sins, but there is a limit to the War Measures Act. Shall we be told seriously that it is in the power of the Governor in Council to pass an order to override the positive letter of a statute passed only last session? If it be so, it is only a further proof of what I said a moment ago, namely, that we sit here to-day by direct violation of the law of the land. But I may be told that the majority which sits behind the Government is so strong, notwithstanding all the actions of the Government, that the people have ratified everything—that is, the people of all the provinces, with the single exception of Quebec. The argument would be admitted if the appeal which was made to the electorate had been made to the solid electorate of the land under the statutory law of the country. If the appeal had been so made, the Government would have had behind them the public opinion of the country; but the appeal was not made to the solid electorate of the country; it was made to a special electorate specially manufactured for the purpose.

And under such circumstances it is idle to tell me that the same respect must attach to the verdict of the people as otherwise would have been accorded to it. And, Sir, if the appeal was not made to the general electorate of the country, there were reasons for it, reasons which were stated on the floor of the House last session by men who are now on the Treasury benches and by men who are not far from the Treasury benches, and those reasons tell the story why this special electorate was manufactured.

The question before the House last year was conscription. We heard it said on the floor of this House that conscription could not be submitted to the people by means of a referendum. Why? Because if the policy of conscription were submitted to the people by means of a referendum it would be rejected. You have heard that, Mr. Speaker, and the old members of this House remember it very well. The statement was made in so many words that members would not vote in this House for a referendum because the referendum would be defeated by the people. But, Sir, if a referendum was to be voted down by the people, the same policy might also be voted down in a general election. This thing has happened elsewhere. In Australia, the Government was supported at the general election although in favour of a policy of conscription, which policy had been voted down in a referendum. In this country, the Government would not submit to the possibility of being defeated on such a question. Hence, ways and means had to be found in order to make sure, and amply sure, that the Government would be supported and the policy enforced, no matter what the majority might think of the policy of conscription. Again, I say, that under those circumstances there cannot be the same respect for the Act as there otherwise would have been. The Act was conceived in iniquity and was carried out in worse iniquity still. I say it, and I say it soberly in the presence of the new members of the House and of the old, that the Act by which the elections were carried was such that there was no fair play for the Opposition. With partisan enumerators, partisan returning officers, and partisan deputy returning officers, the true electorate of the country was diminished almost to the vanishing point.

Lest some may think I am too strong in my contention that there was no fair play for the Opposition, let me give a few instances to the House. There is a constituency called Edmonton West, which was represented in the last Parliament by as brave a man as ever stood on the floor of this House, a man of intense courage and of absolutely independent mind, who would not bow the knee to anybody or vary his opinions for any man living. I say there was nothing short of a conspiracy to defeat Mr. Oliver. Am I too strong in that statement? This is what took place in the constituency of West Edmonton: In no less than seven polls there were not enough ballots for the electors who came to register their votes. If that had taken place in only one poll, I would not have very much to say, but when it is a fact that the same thing occurred at seven different polls, I say that it was a conspiracy. In three of these polls the electors were so insistent on their right to have their votes recorded that ballots were substituted. At the fourth poll also, eighty-two ballots were substituted, but the returning officer refused to count them at any of the polls. Was that all? No, there is something more. In three sub-divisions the polls which the returning officer had proclaimed would be opened, were never opened at all on election day, and men who had travelled hundreds of miles and more to the poll found it locked on their arrival, and they were unable to record their votes. Is not that something to confirm the words I used a moment ago, that there was no fair play for the Opposition?

But there is something more. In the riding of Bow River the returning officer issued over his signature the following notice to the deputy returning officer:

> By order from the General Returning Officer I am to advise you that naturalization can only be proved by production of naturalization certificates in the manner before advised, and that neither oath of person affected, nor presence of his name or any voters' list will be proof of his right or his naturalization for purposes of section sixty-two or otherwise.
>
> Arthur G. Bond,
>
> Returning Officer for Bow River Electoral District.

That is the statement made by the returning officer of Bow River, who shields himself behind the General Returning Officer, Mr. O'Connor. I believe, for my part, that Mr. O'Connor never gave such an order, but we shall know by-and-by. But whether the authority, so called, was, from headquarters at Ottawa or from the returning officer himself, the fact remains that no naturalized British subject whose name was already on the list would be admitted to vote unless he had his naturalization certificate in his pocket. Could anything be more arbitrary or more tyrannical even in Germany itself or in Russia? A man who has been living the life of a peaceful citizen, who has been acknowledged and recognized by his neighbours as a British subject, and whose name is on the voters' list—this man has to bring his naturalization certificate in his pocket before he can be permitted to vote. I am sure that such a thing shocks the sense of justice and fair play of every man in this House. I am told, Sir, that in the constituency of Bow River, Belgians who had come from heroic Belgium, Frenchmen who had come from glorious France, and Americans who had come from the land of freedom, and who had all been naturalized, were not allowed to vote because they had not their naturalization certificates in their pockets. I am told more, and I believe it is true, that the same principle, the same doctrine, the same order, was followed in constituencies other than those of the four provinces west of Lake Superior. That is the situation.

Here are two constituencies in which the most sacred laws of British freedom were violated. I will be told perhaps: "But what of the soldier's vote? Was it not overwhelmingly on the side of the Government?" I admit it was, but what of it? I will not be prepared to-day to give all the evidence which I shall have to submit, but I can call attention to some facts. The Minister of Militia, in the early part of November, addressed a meeting in the Russell Theatre, Ottawa, which it was my pleasure to attend, in connection with the Victory Loan, and he made the statement that the number of enlisted soldiers at that time was 35,000. It turned out that the number of soldiers who voted in Canada was not 35,000, but 54,200. In less than one month, or thereabouts, the number of enlisted soldiers in Canada had increased from 35,000 to 54,000 odd. We have no explanation of this fact yet, and we might ask, whence came these additional 20,000 soldiers who voted on the 17th December? They could not have been conscripted under the Act. The Act had just been put in force, and nobody had been conscripted at that time. Was the explanation that they had enlisted voluntarily? We had been told by the Prime Minister again and again that voluntary enlistment had completely broken down in Canada. Or was the explanation that a certain number of men were put in khaki, not to win the war, but to win the election? Here is a fact which has not yet been explained, but which will require some explanation. It seems to me it will be exceedingly difficult to explain how it is possible that the number of soldiers should have increased in less than one month from 35,000 to 54,000. Now, what of the soldiers in Europe. I will refer to these soldiers in Europe, dealing with what has come to our notice in the press. I have in my hand a picture which was published in all the ministerial papers in the month of December, 1917. It is a photograph of a polling booth for soldiers in London. The copy which I have was taken from the Toronto Star of the 19th December, and under this cartoon I find the following:

> The picture shows Canadians at a London polling station on December 2nd, and is from the first pictures to reach Toronto since the voting began on December 1st.

There is the recording officer. There is the voting soldier. There are the clerks; there are soldiers coming also to offer their votes, and on the wall is this placard "A vote against the Government is a vote for the Hun."

We have seen that in Canada, Sir but not in the polls. We have seen it placarded in the streets of the city of Ottawa, that a vote against the Government is a vote for the Hun. We have seen more in the city of Ottawa. We have seen the statement made that a vote for Union is a vote for Christ. If the law can be thus openly, and even boastfully, violated in the polls in England, then we can have an idea of the opportunity which was left to the soldier to cast his vote untrammelled. In the face of all these circumstances, is it not evident to all classes of the community, to all impartial men—whether they are on the side of the Government or on the side of the Opposition, or whether they form part of that larger body, which associates with no party, and which is, perhaps, in the last resort, the grandeur of the nation—that the verdict recorded on the 17th December for the Government is not a victory for democracy, but rather that it is a blow to the very foundation of the system of free institutions under which we live. If democracy is to produce all that we hope and expect for it and from it, it must be apparent to everybody, it must be in the breast of every man that every consultation with the people ought to be carried out in such an open manner that every man must be satisfied that the vote recorded is an expression of the majority of the people. Not, Sir, that the majority of the people is always right. Majorities are wrong sometimes, and so are minorities. But, after all, under our constitutional system, whether we sit on one side of the House or on the other, what we want is that the Government of the country should be carried on by representatives of the majority of the people, according to the opinion of the people as it exists in this country.

Here are some of my friends on the side of the minority. It matters not whether we are on the right side or on the left side of your chair, Sir, what we want is that the voice of the people should be heard, and, even though we are in a minority, at all events that the people should rule. But, Sir, in regard to the verdict which was recorded on the 17th December, and which I see represented before me to-day, however respectable the representation may be, no amount of sophistry, no loud clanking of sonorous numbers can give it the character of certainty and respectability, which ought to be the concomitant and the result of right done. It is the misfortune of the Government and the misfortune of the country, but it is still more the misfortune of the Government that, by their own conduct, they have failed to obtain moral support with their majority; they have failed to win an honest victory, and failed to obtain that support which is the one support a government should have, if the battle had been fought by fair and honest methods.

As to the members on this side of the House, we Liberals sitting here—what is left of us after these vicious practices—what is to be our attitude? Sir, so far as I am concerned, and so far as my friends about me are concerned, the answer is easy. Liberals, democrats, law-abiding citizens, we went into this fight. Liberals, democrats and law-abiding citizens we come back from the fight. We come back depleted in number. In number we are not as strong as we were, but we are stronger before the people, because we fought an honest fight according to our own views.

What shall be our attitude? Sir, I have only this to say, that the laches of the Government will in no way affect our conception of the duty which we owe to our country. We have our views upon the questions which are now before the Canadian people. We stood behind the Government in all of their war measures except one, and we will carry on the same policy; we will be behind them in all their war measures, with the same reservation.

Sir, when the policy of conscription was introduced last session, it seemed to me that, if the object of the Government was really to assist in winning the war, they were singularly blind as to the condition of the country whose affairs it was their duty to administer. We divided, as I have said, upon this question. I challenge no man's conscience; I respect everybody's views upon this question. But now, Sir, that the fight has been fought, now that the smoke of battle has cleared away, now that the Government are in the saddle —no matter by what methods—in the face of what has taken place, in the face of what is taking place every day, I ask the Government if they will not question their own methods, and if they still believe that the policy that was adopted by them is the surest way of helping to win the war. I think the views of the Government changed on that question when they passed in December last an Order in Council to which it is now the duty to call the attention of the House. On the third of December last the following Order in Council was passed:

His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Laird Borden, the Prime Minister, and under and in virtue of the provisions of The Military Service Act, is pleased to order and it is hereby ordered that in any case where a person engaged in agriculture has applied for exemption and such exemption has been refused—

Mark those words "and such exemption has been refused"

—the Minister of Militia and Defence, if he is of the opinion that the services of such person are essential for promoting agricultural production may, by order under his hand, discharge such person from military service.

In the Act passed last session it was provided that conscription was to be universal, that the Government should not interfere, that judges should be appointed for the purpose of determining who, and who alone, should be exempted. Yet here is an Order in Council, whereby a minister of the Crown is empowered to discharge any farmer or any one engaged in agriculture if, in the minister's opinion, it is believed that his services would be better upon the farm than in the ranks. Well, Sir, if such be the case, why was this Order made, I want to know? Why was it made during the election?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Why was it made during the election? It was because there were so many complaints coming from all parts of the country that if the Act was to be applied it would disorganize the country for agricultural production, and this demand was so insistent that this order was passed, an order which the Government have no power to pass.

4 p.m.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Where, in the Military Service Act, is power given to the Government to exempt anybody? Judges can grant exemptions; but I am not aware that, under the Act, there is any member of the Government authorized to take such liberties with the enactments of Parliament. In this connection, a very important correspondence has taken place (which I hold in my hands), giving the opinion of the law experts of the Government upon their own action. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister received in last month the following letter:

Uxbridge, Ont., Feb. 18, 1918.

The Honourable Sir Robert Borden,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,

On the 28th of November last, while delivering your speech to a full house at Uxbridge, you said that if any farmer's sons that always worked on the farm and always intended to do so, if they thought that they did not receive justice at the appeal courts, if they wrote to you, you would give them their exemption.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: (Reading):

Now I feel that I have not received justice at these appeal tribunals, and I am appealing to you for justice. I am sending you a copy of my appeal. I have always worked on the farm since childhood and always intend to. Thirty-eight of my nearest neighbors signed a petition stating that I would be of more service to my country in working my farm and producing food.

This letter was evidently passed on by the Prime Minister to the Department of Justice, and the following is the answer which my correspondent received from that department:

Military Service Branch.
Royal Bank Building,
Ottawa, March 1st, 1918.

Dear Sir,

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 18th addressed to the Honourable Sir Robert Borden.

In reply I have to inform you that no minister of the Crown has the power to interfere in any way with the working of an Act passed by parliament. All matters of exemption must be left to the sole discretion of the local tribunals and appeal courts,——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: (Reading):

—established under the Act for this purpose.

Should your son already have received an order to report for duty with a Depot Battalion, he may through his Commanding Officer make application to have his case submitted to the Leave of Absence Board for consideration.

Yours truly,

Sgd. Deputy Minister of Justice.

Sir, this is a very significant commentary upon the legislation which was passed last session. I leave it to the comments of the Government and their followers. I do not want to make the matter worse than it is; but in the face of all this I ask if the Government and their followers are satisfied that in introducing that legislation they chose the best means of helping to win the war?

We are now, Sir, in the fourth year of the war. The military situation is serious, more serious, perhaps, than at any time since the early days of September, 1914, when the cable every day brought us news that the German armies were advancing towards Paris and had almost reached the gates of that city. Luckily, we were all relieved when a few days afterwards the news came that the German advance had been stopped and their armies thrown back from the gates of Paris, from the river Marne to the river Aisne. Four years have elapsed since then. No great advances have been made either way. The Germans have not made any headway towards Paris, and the Allied armies have in no sense made a great advance towards the Rhine, and it would be a bold man who would say that the campaign of 1918 will result in an advance towards the Rhine such as we contemplated in 1915, in 1916 and again in 1917.

What is not beyond doubt, what is only too certain, is that day in and day out it is becoming more evident that the food problem may become perhaps the most important factor in the final decision towards victory. Upon this I offer no comment; the Government know the situation better than we do. I ask them for no more information than they can give us; I do not know what their attitude will be upon this question.

But, Sir, I have only to repeat once more that we, on this side of the House, stand exactly as we have at all times stood since the war began by this declaration: It is our fervent and solemn conviction that the issue which is now trembling in the balance of destiny is that of Freedom and Liberty itself. It is a sad thing that upon such an issue as this, when we are battling for the sacred cause of Liberty and Freedom, that I should have to arraign the Government for having itself sapped the foundations of the free institutions under which we live, a deed which has already produced its evil effects. Men there are to-day who declare by voice and pen that all the militant powers are governed by the same selfish spirit. Against such an unfounded assertion I protest with all the force at my command and with all the energy I can put into my words. To say that there is no difference between the belligerent—to put Germany on the same plane as France, as the United States, as Belgium and as England, is simply to flout history. The rulers of Germany have shown that they will respect no law, neither of God, nor of nations, nor of men.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Germany has shown she holds the view that there is one law for herself and another for the nations against whom she is warring, and she is seeking to realize her schemes of aggrandisement and ambition regardless of the consequences to others. Sir, if there is one reason more than another which makes me proud of the cause for which we are fighting, it is that in this contest the best nations of the earth—Great Britain, France, Belgium and the United States, are united in the cause of battling to the end for Freedom. Unfortunately the people of Germany do not seem to be yet sufficiently advanced in the doctrine of self-government, or in the principles of freedom, to assert the sovereign right of the people to check their rulers where those rulers go wrong. On the other hand the Allied Nations are all united in proclaiming their devotion to the cause of freedom; and if any government among them should depart from that ideal, an ideal that still lives in the minds, in the hearts, and in the souls of the people, sooner or later when the greater danger which overshadows us has been conquered and overcome, the recusants will be called to severe account. But our first duty is to overcome the greater danger which threatens, and to that imperative duty we on this side of the House will give, with all our might, whatever it may be, and with our whole heart, we shall give it our undivided support.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join in the appreciation which has been expressed by my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) of the speeches delivered by the mover and seconder of the address. The mover (Mr. Mowat) bears a distinguished name. Before his entrance into this House he had taken no inconsiderable part in public affairs, and his speech yesterday was delivered with earnestness and was characterized by qualities which I am sure will give him a high place in the deliberations of the House. The seconder of the address has been in Parliament for many years. His devotion to public affairs, his intelligent grasp of all public questions, more than that his courage, are well known to all those who have been associated with him in the past. He happily sustained the excellent record which he has borne among us at all times since he first entered the House.

Now I come to some observations of my right hon. friend. With the exception of the latter part of his speech, his remarks were of an exceedingly critical nature. I cannot say that all his observations were characterized by a keen sense of logic, because he contended in the first place that this is precisely the same Government as in the past, while at the same time he stated there was a marked improvement in its personnel. I cannot quite reconcile these two ideas, and the right hon. gentleman would find it hard to explain how the Government shows that marked improvement in personnel if it is precisely the same Administration as in the past. The right hon. gentleman found a good deal of fault with the Government which preceded the present one, and if one may judge from his observations to-day he is likely to be as intensely critical of the Government which was formed on 12th October last. I quite agree with him that there is a political colour of a pronounced red type, if you like, in some of the gentlemen who are members of the Government. That was precisely the intention when this Administration was formed. We desired to form, and we did form, a Government based upon equal representation of both the great political parties of this country. Practically that has been accomplished, and insofar as it has not been carried out to the letter it will be fulfilled to the letter at the earliest opportunity. I agree with my right hon. friend that the gentlemen who were formerly associated with him on the other side of the House were inspired by a keen and unfaltering sense of duty when they agreed to join this Government. That has been publicly emphasized by me on several occasions. In that observation of my right hon. friend, all sides in this House will heartily concur. The present Government was formed for the purpose of giving a just representation to all those elements of the population who are animated by a sincere desire to throw the full efforts of Canada into this war. It was formed, further, with the idea of giving a just representation to the great industry of agriculture and to the labour organizations of the country. That purpose, I think, has been immeasurably well carried out; and with all respect to hon. gentlemen opposite, I venture to believe that the great Liberal party of Canada is well represented on the Treasury benches of Canada to-day.

My right hon. friend denounced what he was pleased to consider a violation of the electoral laws of Canada, when he alluded to the Order in Council passed on the 12th of March last, under which a preliminary return of the members of this House has been made. I was under the impression that this Order had been laid upon the Table yesterday, but I find that such is not the case. In order that there may be no doubt as to its purport, I shall read the Order in Council as it was passed, after which I shall make a few observations with regard to it.

At the Government House at Ottawa.

Tuesday the 12th day of March, 1918.

Present:

His Excellency

The Governor General in Council.

Whereas owing to conditions arising out of the war there has been unforeseen and unavoidable delay in the receipt by the General Returning Officer of the official statements required by Subsections 4 and 9 of Section 12 of the Military Voters Act, 1917, to be recorded, signed and sent by registered post to the General Returning Officer, and it is by reason of such delay impossible that the proclaiming and return of the members of the House of Commons, as contemplated by Section 14 of the said Act can be made before 18th March, 1918, for which date Parliament is summoned to meet for the despatch of business;

And whereas confusion and great inconvenience in connection with the business of the session, and especially with regard to war measures, will ensue if the assembling of Parliament be postponed until after the fiscal year which will expire with the present month, and it is therefore deemed expedient to authorize the proclamation and return of the members in anticipation of the said official statements upon the telegraphic information received of the facts which the official statements contain:

Therefore His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice and under the powers conferred by the War Measures Act, 1914, and by Section 19 of the Military Voters Act, is pleased to sanction and doth hereby sanction the following provisions:—

1. Upon receipt of information by telegraph from the Secretary of the High Commissioner's Office, or the Commissaire Général du Canada in France, of the contents of the official statements mentioned in Subsections 4 and 9 of Section 12 of the Military Voters' Act 1917, the General Returning Officer shall add the number of votes given for or applicable to the respective candidates in each electoral district, as disclosed by the information so communicated by telegraph, to the votes given for the candidates as shown by the certificate of the returning officer made pursuant to Section 13 of Part IV. of the Dominion Elections Act, and shall openly proclaim and shall return pursuant to the provisions of Section 211 of Part III. as being duly elected a member or members to represent such electoral district in the Commons of Canada, the candidate or candidates found to have the greatest number of votes, and shall, if requested to do so, give to each such candidate a certificate stating the fact of his election; and until superseded in the manner hereinafter provided the proclamations, returns and certificates so made or issued by the General Returning Officer shall have the same force and effect, to all intents and purposes as if made upon the said official statements pursuant to Section 14 of the Military Voters' Act, 1917.

2. The General Returning Officer shall, nevertheless, upon receipt of the said official statements through the post make his proclamations and returns and issue his certificates as required by Section 14 of the Military Voters' Act, 1917, and the latter proclamations, returns and certificates so made or issued upon receipt of the statements themselves shall supersede the proclamations, returns and certificates made or issued upon telegraphic information as hereinbefore authorized, and shall thenceforth be and be deemed to be the effective proclamations, returns and certificates.

What was the situation that confronted us? We had summoned Parliament for the eighteenth day of March, the latest date on which we could do so if we are to make necessary provision for the ensuing fiscal year; necessary provision for the pay and maintenance of those men who are fighting our battles overseas and of the troops we are assembling in Canada and have assembled in Great Britain for supplying necessary reinforcements. Upon the high seas there is a submarine menace. We found that, even in the ordinary course, the statements which had been prepared by the Commissaire Général in Paris and by the Secretary of the High Commissioner's office in London could not reach us at this date. They might not reach us until the middle of April or the first of May; the ship in which they were coming over might be sunk. Well, what were we to do? My right hon. friend himself has called attention to the fact that there is a provision in the Military Voters' Act for the sending of telegraphic information. It is perfectly true that the Act itself did not provide that the return could be made on that information. We decided to take cognizance by telegram of the statements which had already been signed by the Commissaire Général in Paris and by the Secretary of the High Commissioner's office in London, and upon those statements so signed and communicated to the General Returning Officer by telegraph we provided not for a final return, but for a preliminary return, in order that the representatives of the people of Canada might meet here in Parliament in time to provide for the next fiscal year. But we declared further that as soon as those statements so signed by the two officers mentioned shall reach the General Returning Officer, he shall make another return, which will supersede the preliminary return to which I have referred. That simple and justifiable method of summoning Parliament is characterized by my right hon. friend as an outrage. I say to him, in reply, that if by not taking this step we had neglected to make provision for the men who are fighting our battles overseas that would have been an outrage not only upon them, but upon the people of Canada and upon this Parliament. My right hon. friend was rather free with his use of the word "outrage." He found an outrage in the War-time Elections Act of last session.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That Act was debated last session and passed by the late Parliament. I do not know whether he regards it as an outrage—apparently he does—that we gave to the female relatives of the gallant men who are holding our battle line the right to vote at the last election. According to my right hon. friend's statement, it was an outrage—he nods his acquiescence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Oh, no.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: He does not?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The outrage was in giving the franchise to some and taking it away from others.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: We did not take it from any of the women of Canada; on the contrary, we gave it to many thousands of them. Moreover, we shall proceed at this session to give the franchise to all the women of Canada.

Mr. BUREAU: The election is over now.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The election is over, and perhaps if we had given all women the right to vote, my hon. friend would not be here.

Mr. BUREAU: The women prevented the opposition of the friends of my right hon. friend.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My right hon. friend, I believe, is distressed by other features of that enactment—more concerned by them than he ever was by any desire that the men overseas should vote. But I do not intend to enter into any discussion of what took place at the last session; we shall have enough to occupy ourselves with at the present session. So, let that past attend to itself. Let us go ahead and do our duty in this Parliament as it lies before us.

My right hon. friend ventures to say to me that partisan returning officers and enumerators were appointed. I have been in this House for nearly twenty-two years, I have passed through six general elections, and I never passed through an election the methods of which were not discussed and criticised, at the first session of the following Parliament, by the party which lost. But I have never heard any hon. gentleman go so far as my right hon. friend has gone to-day. I want to tell him that I issued a statement, which was circulated through the press of Canada near and far, asking that the returning officers should select enumerators of both political parties, and that equal representation should be given to all interests in the country; in that selection, and in the selection of returning officers themselves, I endeavoured so far as I was able, to have that principle carried out. That is the first time such a course was ever pursued in Canada. The leader of the Opposition would never have dreamed of doing it. Men within the sound of my voice have come to me more than once and complained that by reason of the appointment of returning officers and enumerators opposed to the Government they had lost hundreds of votes and their election to this House had been endangered. I venture to say that since the history of this Confederation there never was an election in Canada conducted more fairly and decently than the recent one.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Possibly the subject which excites the mirth of my hon. friends is the denial of free speech in some parts of the country. My right hon. friend has referred to a supposed conspiracy to defeat Mr. Oliver. By whom does he allege that that conspiracy was made or carried on? He has said either too little or too much. If he has any charge to bring against the Government, or against any member of the Government, or against any official of the Government, let him go further and make his charge and we shall have it investigated. That is the way to deal with such matters, if my right hon. friend has anything to complain of. He regards the defeat of Mr. Oliver as due to a conspiracy, because in three polling divisions, I think, out of about 150, some alleged irregularities may have taken place. I have just been informed that ballots enough for all the voters upon the list were placed at the polls to which my right hon. friend has alluded, and that those who came and demanded ballots were, in many instances at least, persons who were not upon the list. I knew nothing of this matter and heard nothing about it until my right hon. friend alluded to it. As I have said, if my right hon. friend wants any investigation into the matter, the courts are open to him, or the procedure of this House is open to him.

My right hon. friend sees fit to suggest that there has been some plot or conspiracy in connection with the voting of soldiers in Canada, and he even insinuates—and I hope he will permit me to say that I think the insinuation was unworthy of him—that men were put in khaki in order that elections might be won. As I understand the matter, the statement of the Minister of Militia and Defence to which my right hon. friend alluded, did not include the men in hospitals, the returned soldiers, the soldiers home on leave; it included only those who had been raised and recruited in Canada in order that they might proceed overseas, and therefore the supposed anomaly to which my right hon. friend alluded might easily have been cleared up if he had seen fit to make a little further inquiry.

I do not know as to the cries which he says were used in some parts of the country. There may have been cries here and there that were unworthy. There was no such cry put forward on behalf of the Government, so far as I know, either here or overseas. I do not think my right hon. friend will find it in his heart to say that the overseas men voted in favour of the Government and against him by reason of any compulsion or pressure put upon them. They are men who would keenly resent any attempt to place compulsion upon them. I believe that they voted against my right hon. friend because they attributed to him some such spirit as that which I found running through his speech, a spirit which attaches more importance to the result of elections to this House than to the actual task of winning the war. Our men at the front are in deadly earnest in that task, and I believe they voted as they did because they realized that in the Government they had an Administration which was disposed and determined to support them by every means within its power. In that estimate of the intention and attitude of the Government they will find they were not mistaken.

My right hon. friend was good enough to tell us that although there is a very considerable majority supporting the Administration in this House, the Government has not the moral support of the country. I do not know by what warrant my hon. friend undertakes to speak for the country in that regard. With all deference and respect to him, I venture to say that there never has been any Government of this Dominion since 1867 which has had the moral force of the country more strongly behind it than the Administration which is in office to-day.

My right hon. friend alluded to an Order in Council of the 3rd of December last by which the Minister of Militia was authorised to discharge persons notwithstanding that their exemption might have been refused by the tribunals. I am rather of the opinion that the Minister of Militia and Defence, as head of the military forces of this country, has that right without any Order in Council; but the Order in Council which was passed on that occasion was precisely in line with the principle enunciated when the Military Service Bill was introduced into this House last session. We endeavoured to safeguard the Administration of that Bill in every way. We endeavoured to safeguard it by making provision for a great number of tribunals throughout the country, by the provision of appeal tribunals, by the provision of a Central Appeal Judge. Perhaps we provided too many tribunals. The Act may require amendment. Perhaps it would have been better to create a simpler procedure. But we were breaking new ground, and we desired that every community in this country might realise that its rights would be adequately protected. The hundreds of tribunals, scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific, were composed of men upon whom new duties had been imposed and their decisions were not consistent; they varied. I am not saying that by way of criticism. Nothing else could have been expected. The Minister of Militia and Defence, under the Order in Council in question, had a certain right to discharge men if he came to the conclusion that their service was of more value to the people of this country in the occupation of agriculture than in bearing arms at the front. As a matter of fact, he has not discharged any men at all, but he has given to some men leave of absence for a certain period in order that their work in the industry of agriculture may be carried on to the great good of this country. That is the whole story from first to last, and I am perfectly content to leave our action to the judgment of the fair minded majority of this House.

I do not propose to deal further with the issues of the recent election, but it might be worth while for me, before speaking of the programme of the Government as outlined in the Speech of His Excellency the Governor General, to inform the House of what has been accomplished by this Government during its period of office. It was formed on the 12th day of October last, and if one eliminates the period during which its members were engaged in the election contest, it will be seen that there has been a period of something less than four months for actual work of administration. I submit to the House that the record which this Union Government has made during that time is one that can be presented to this House and to the country with some confidence. A great many of these matters to which I am about to allude have already been made public, but I hope the House will bear with me if I make a short resumé in order that we may realize all that has been done during the brief period since we assumed office.

In the first place, we have formed two committees of the Cabinet. One of those committees is presided over by my hon. friend the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell), who is vice-chairman; I am nominally chairman, but the labours have very largely devolved upon him, and I do believe the country owes him a debt of gratitude for the enormous amount of work which he has accomplished in so short a time, and for his services to the public in many matters to which I am about to refer. The War Committee of the Cabinet was established for the purpose of co-ordinating the efforts of the several departments of the Government in the prosecution of the war. It was desired by means of that machinery to ensure the maximum of effort with a minimum of expenditure, and generally to throw the full power of Canada into the war. The Order in Council creating the committee has been laid on the table of the House, and hon. gentlemen can see in detail what were proposed as its duties.

Another committee was formed called the Committee on Reconstruction and Development, of which my hon. friend, Hon. A. K. Maclean, is vice-chairman. He has devoted much attention and study to the duties thus entrusted to him. That Committee was established for the purpose of making recommendations respecting transportation, methods of raising revenue, encouragement of thrift, conditions of labour, the service of womanhood both during and after the war, and other cognate matters.

Now as to what we have actually done since these committees have been formed. One of our first acts was the creation of a Department of Immigration and Colonization, over which Mr. Calder presides. Up to the present, there has not been opportunity for any great work of organization or development in that Department Nevertheless, the minister has surveyed the general aspects of the problem, and more than that, has discussed them pretty thoroughly with the provincial governments. He is assured of the co-operation of every provincial government of Canada in his work, and it is hoped, and indeed expected, that at a later date, further conferences will be held at which plans will be more fully matured and discussed.

There was cast upon us immediately the administration of the Military Service Act. We all realize that in certain communities in this country there was a very strong public opinion against the principle which was embodied in that Act, and the numerous appeals which were provided for made its operation more difficult than was anticipated when it was passed. Very elaborate regulations have been prepared by the Military Service Council from time to time, and have been approved. These will be discussed, it may be, in due course, but in the meantime it is enough for me to say that since the Act was proclaimed, about the 13th October last, we have enlisted in Canada 36,342 men, and 26,839 have been sent overseas during that time. Of 36,342 men so enlisted, 28,396 were enrolled directly under the Military Service Act, and 7,946 have been obtained through the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission in the United States. I should further add that of the 28,396 men so enrolled, 3,895 have been apprehended for failing to report.

I feel it my duty to add that our forces in France are maintained to-day at full strength. The Canadian Expeditionary Force in France was never at greater strength than to-day, and more than that, it was never more determined or more confident.

The Minister of Overseas Service has given attention to the return of men to Canada who are not fit for active service, and a recent cable from him informs me that he expects to return to Canada within the next few months from 20,000 to 25,000 men. He gives me further particulars in a letter, dated the 24th day of February last, and received only a few days ago, in which he discusses the subject. He says:

> As I cabled you a few days ago, in view of the labour situation in Canada, and in the interests of economy, I have insisted upon as many as can be spared and who are in low categories, being returned. I have had an Officer, Col. J. A. Gunn, D.S.O., who has special qualifications, appointed, under the Adjutant-General, to go through the forces for the purpose of combing out such men.
>
> There is always room for a very large number of men who are in categories B2 and B3, and who are not fit for the trenches, to be used in connection with work in hospitals, road-making, and in a hundred and one other ways, and whose services are necessary. At the same time I think it justifiable that not too many of these men should be retained over here, not only for the reasons I have named but in order that there will be fewer to transport when the war ends.

We have taken up the question of the registration of the manhood and womanhood of Canada. This has been the subject of more than one conference with labour organizations. A Registration Board has been established under the chairmanship of Senator Robertson; it is proceeding actively with its work, and we hope for good results in the not distant future. The services which this board will perform will be useful for a great many purposes. It will be useful in the co-ordination and maintenance of essential industries. It will be useful for the purpose of giving us a fuller enumeration than has hitherto been available of those persons throughout Canada who are subject to call under the Military Service Act.

The increased production of food is a vital question, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) has worked at that problem with the greatest possible industry and with very great ability. He has taken up the subject with the provincial governments and has secured thorough co-operation on their part. I could not do better than give to the House the substance of a memorandum which I asked from him to-day. The memorandum contains the following information:

> At the conference of the provincial premiers on the 15th and 16th of February last, a plan was submitted and generally approved by them, respecting greater production of cereals and meats in Canada.

Later the Food Board, which is composed of Mr. H. B. Thomson, Hon. C. A. Dunning, and Mr. J. D. McGregor, and which is supervising the work of greater production in Canada had a conference with representatives of the Provincial Departments of Agriculture of Eastern Canada. After discussion it was concluded that the most effective method of attaining the end desired would be secured through having the work in each province carried on and supervised by the Provincial Department of Agriculture, since this would provide the most effective means of adapting methods to the particular needs of the individual provinces. The Canada Food Board through general newspaper publicity, poster advertising in a limited way, and in bulletins and publications sent out in connection with food conservation, is attracting attention to the need of greater production throughout the Dominion. With the approval of Council, cash assistance has been promised to the various provinces as follows: Ontario $60,000, Quebec $60,000, Nova Scotia $30,000, New Brunswick $25,000, Prince Edward Island $5,000, British Columbia $15,000, Manitoba $25,000, Saskatchewan $35,000, and Alberta $25,000.

This money is to be expended, in a general way, in accordance with the memorandum submitted and agreed to by the Premiers. I shall read that memorandum in a moment.

The services of Dr. J. W. Robertson were secured to represent the Food Board in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Dr. Robertson has been in consultation with the Provincial Departments of Agriculture in these provinces as to the most effective methods of attaining the ends desired.

The Hon. Chas. Dunning personally took charge of the work in the Western provinces. While the Minister of Agriculture has not had an opportunity to consult with either of these gentlemen since their meeting with the Provincial authorities, from the information available their work may be summarized as follows: Ontario aims to secure organization down to county and municipal committees, particularly to assist in labour supply and distribution, and to bring home directly to the individual farmer the need of the greatest possible effort.

Quebec aims to secure similar organization and produce enough wheat to feed herself, and to greatly increase meat animals.

Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have the same objective; also in each of these provinces to produce enough coarse grains to meet their own requirements for animal feed. The Minister has no definite report from Dr. Robertson as to what extent organization is being proceeded with.

WESTERN CANADA.

Alberta is divided into sixteen districts, each district under the supervision of a greater production agent, and these again centrally supervised. Steps are being taken—

1. To insure supplies of seed.
2. To find out help that is necessary.
3. To secure tenants for unoccupied land.
4. To arrange definitely with farmers for the breaking of new areas of their holdings for 1919 crop.

A Provincial Labour Bureau has been established and generally, work is being assisted by public meetings.

[Sir Robert Borden.]

Saskatchewan.—Over two hundred meetings arranged throughout the province. Many of them have already been held. Steps taken to secure all available labour from towns and cities that might be of use on the farms and distribute it through a Provincial Labour Bureau.

Manitoba.—Practically the same.

British Columbia.—No reports received as yet, except in a general way that every one is alive to the need and putting forth as great an effort as possible.

GENERAL.

The Dominion has further assisted by the purchase of a thousand Ford tractors, which will be distributed in the next two months; by securing seed supplies and distributing them to the provinces; by taking the necessary steps to ensure a supply of garden and root seeds, and by making the necessary arrangements with the United States authorities for the securing of the supplies of corn suitable for seed.

Reports to hand indicate that the acreage in Western Canada this season will be the largest ever planted, and plans are being considered and worked out now with a view to having as much new land as possible broken up during the present year for crop in 1919. In a general way, the aim is to concentrate on cereals and meats.

LABOUR.

The movement for the enlistment of 25,000 boys throughout Canada under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. and Soldiers of the Soil is now definitely under way. This includes boys from the age of 15 to 19. Methods to secure, by voluntary enlistment, men from towns and cities for work on farms will be worked out.

Now the memorandum which was presented to and approved by the provincial governments, to which I alluded a moment ago, reads:

The Provincial Government in each province to constitute itself a War Committee for production, to work in co-operation with the Canada Food Board.

Aims.

1.—a. To plant this Spring every acre possible of wheat, oats, barley and rye.

b. To bring into cultivation every acre possible of new land for crop in 1919.

c. To increase cattle, hogs and sheep to the greatest possible extent.

2.—a. To secure cultivation of gardens and vacant lots in towns and cities with a view to raising the maximum amount of vegetables.

This should be accomplished through the municipal or existing organizations in such manner as will ensure proper supervision.

b. By encouraging every householder in small towns and villages to secure and raise one pig through the season, with a view to utilizing all garbage for food.

Methods.

1. Provincial Governments to see that the proper quantity of seed is available and distributed in their Provinces.

2. Provincial Governments to undertake the work of ascertaining the form of assistance which may be required by their farmers in order to secure the breaking, in 1918, of a definite increased acreage of new land more than would normally be broken for crop next year.

3. Assistance of Provincial Departments of Agriculture in taking orders for tractors and forwarding same to the Canada Food Board, Ottawa.

a. Assistance of the Provinces, through their Educational Departments in making teen age boys available by providing that such boys shall not lose their educational standing through absence from school for the purpose of working on farms.

b. Co-operation by Provincial Governments in securing the teen age boys as recruits for the Soldiers of the Soil, by means of lectures in every Public and High School to show the boys the necessity of getting out on the farms and helping the labour situation.

c. By voluntary enrollment in all cities, towns and villages of persons able to work on the land.

4.—Arouse the people to the need, by way of public addresses, and organization, through municipal machinery, with a view to having committees working in every municipality and township.

a. By frank statements from time to time of the seriousness of the situation, giving definite facts in respect thereto.

b. By a series of addresses in each Province from the Premier, members of the Provincial Governments, and other prominent citizens.

c. By requesting the clergymen of every church in Canada to preach two sermons in March on this question, urging increased food production to save people who may otherwise starve.

d. By enlisting the assistance of all newspapers to keep this need continously before the public.

e. The Canada Food Board to continue to supply reading matter to newspapers, to circularize boards of trade, societies of all kinds, women's associations, and other organized bodies.

I am confident that the thanks and congratulations of the House and the country will be extended to the Minister of Agriculture for the good work which he has carried on, and which has resulted in the organization thus described.

In connection with this, I should inform the House that the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs has also taken into account the very urgent need for increased food production during the present year and has taken effective action.

Under an Order in Council passed on the 16th day of February the minister recommended as follows:

That Mr. W. M. Graham, Inspector of Indian Agencies, South Saskatchewan Inspectorate, be appointed a Commissioner for the Department of Indian Affairs, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, with the following duties and powers—

To make proper arrangements with the Indians for the leasing of reserve lands, which may be needed for grazing, for cultivation or for other purposes, and for the compensation to be paid therefor;

To formulate a policy for each reserve.

To issue directions and instructions to all inspectors, agents and employees in furtherance of that policy.

To make purchases and engage or dismiss any extra or temporary employees and market the yield of grain and live-stock, and in effect to have the sole management of this work subject to the approval of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs to whom he shall report fully at close and regular intervals.

The minister further recommends that the said Commissioner be authorized also to make recommendations to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, looking to the greater efficiency of such of the Indian service in the said provinces as is not related to the said special work.

The minister believes that in this way it will be possible to bring larger areas under cultivation and produce grain and meat supplies of great value.

The minister recommends further that, pursuant to the provisions of the War Measures' Act, 1914, and of all other authority in that behalf, the sum of $300,000 be advanced from the War Appropriation to the Department of Indian Affairs for the purchase of agricultural machinery and implements, seed and live-stock, fence wire and other supplies and for rentals, salaries, and expenses necessary for the undertaking, the said amount to be refunded to the War Appropriation from revenues arising from sales as they accrue; all expenditure and revenue to be treated in the usual way and all accounts to be audited by the Department of Indian Affairs and by the Auditor General.

Under this Order in Council active steps have been taken. The memorandum submitted by the department is as follows:

The Department of Indian Affairs and Commisioner W. M. Graham have undertaken vigorously the work outlined by the attached Order in Council. Mr. Graham has already visited the chief reserves in Alberta and Saskatchewan and has interviewed agents and inspectors, has taken the necessary preliminary action to obtain surrenders from the Indians and has had authority to inform them that land may be taken without surrender under the War Measures Act for temporary use. We have insured that every acre ready for cropping will be seeded this spring; tractors and ploughs have been purchased to break land for next year's seeding.

The department has received many applications direct and through Commissioner Graham for the lease of grazing lands, and these are being promptly dealt with, and much of the rich natural grazing on Indian reserves will be utilized by settlers and ranchers.

Mr. Graham has already purchased 150 two-year old steers and 120 sows and distributed them on Indian reserves.

Like measures are being taken throughout Ontario, and it is hoped that the purpose of the Order in Council will be met:

1. The Indians will have under crop every available acre, and will increase their breaking.

2. By the use of tractors a large acreage will be made available for next year's crop.

3. The natural advantages for grazing throughout the Territories will be made available to ranchers and settlers who have cattle to feed.

I dwell upon this work with some particularity, because I cannot emphasize too strongly the absolute, urgent, vital necessity of increased production of food in Canada during this year and next year. I absolutely agree with what my right hon. friend said a moment ago, that the issue of this war may depend upon food production in the United States and in Canada, and I hope that every member of this Parliament, everyone within sound of my voice, will lend his aid and his influence to this all-important movement in order that the purposes of the Allied nations may thereby be assisted, and, I hope, rendered triumphant.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Further, with regard to food conservation, Mr. Hanna, about the time that he resigned his duties as Food Controller, made a very elaborate report of his work up to that time. I shall not pause to dwell upon it; it will be laid upon the table of the House in the near future. Mr. Hanna brought to a very difficult task, indeed, an unusual energy and great ability. I am confident that hon. members, when they read his report, will have, perhaps, a greater appreciation of the work performed during his tenure of that office.

5 p.m.

Now, I come next to the question of shipbuilding, and for this reason, that, although we may raise troops, and although we may provide food, nevertheless the troops cannot be transported overseas to perform their service, and the food cannot be made available for Great Britain and the Allied nations unless there are means of transportation across the Atlantic. Before alluding to what the present Government has done in its shipbuilding policy, the House will be interested to know what has been accomplished by the British Government through the Imperial Munitions Board, and what work is now being carried on. The Imperial Munitions Board have undertaken to construct—and I believe all these ships are now under construction—43 steel ships of a tonnage of 211,300 dead weight, and 46 wooden ships of a tonnage of 128,800 dead weight. The cost of the steel ships is $40,000,000; the cost of the wooden ships is $24,500,000, or $64,500,000 altogether. The total number of ships is 89, and the total tonnage is 340,100. The first vessel, a wooden vessel, will be launched in the month of May and will be put immediately into commission.

I have asked the Minister of the Naval Service to give me a memorandum of what has been done in carrying out the policy upon which the present Administration embarked last autumn. An appropriation of $25,000,000 has been authorized, so far as Council was able to authorize it, for the present year, and the memorandum which I shall take the liberty of reading to the House is as follows:

Referring to the recently announced policy of ship construction undertaken on behalf of the Government by this Department, the intention is to confine at present the awarding of contracts for the construction of steel ships to yards already established and actually engaged in constructing steel ships. The yards equipped and at present engaged in constructing steel ships are as follows:—

Canadian Vickers Limited, Montreal, Que.

Davie Shipbuilding Company, Quebec.

Kingston Shipbuilding Company, Kingston, Ont.

Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, Collingwood, Ont.

Polson Iron Works, Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Dominion Shipbuilding Company, Toronto, Ont.

Midland Shipbuilding Company, Midland, Ont.

Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company, Port Arthur, Ont.

British American Shipbuilding Company, Welland, Ont.

Canadian Allis-Chalmers Company, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Wallace Shipyards, Limited, Vancouver, B. C.

J. Coughlan and Son, Vancouver, B. C.

The estimated combined capacity of these several yards is approximately 250,000 tons per year. All of these yards with the exception of the Kingston Shipbuilding Company are at the present time fully occupied in constructing ships for the Imperial Munitions Board or for the Government. As the ships under contract for the Imperial Munitions Board are completed and the building berths become vacant, they are to be immediately occuppied by the Government.

When the Government launched its programme of shipbuilding, two berths only at the yards throughout Canada, were vacant, one of these was at the yard of Canadian Vickers, Limited, Montreal and one at the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company's yard.

A contract has been placed with Canadian Vickers, Limited for the construction of a steel vessel of 4,300 tons deadweight capacity, the keel of which has already been laid and considerable construction work begun as well.

A contract has already been concluded with the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company's yard for a ship of 3,750 tons deadweight capacity, the materials for which are in the course of delivery. Both of these vessels will be in commission before the close of navigation next fall.

The next building berth to become vacant will be in May next at Canadian Vickers, Limited. On this berth it is proposed to lay down a ship of 8,100 tons deadweight capacity, which vessel will also be completed and in commission before the end of the year.

Two berths will become vacant at the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company's yard at a later date in May. These berths will be at once occupied with ships of 3,000 tons deadweight capacity each, for which the material is now under order. While the builders hold out hope that these vessels may be ready before the close of navigation, it is not expected that they will be in commission before the opening of navigation, 1919.

The Wallace Shipyards, Limited, Vancouver, will also have a berth vacant in May. A contract has already been concluded with this Company for laying down a ship of 4,300 tons deadweight capacity. The material for this ship has been ordered and the Company undertake to prosecute the work vigorously and complete the vessel ready for commission before the end of the year.

The British American Shipbuilding Company of Welland, Ont., expect to have berths becoming vacant as follows: one in June, one in August, one in October and one in December. It is proposed to occupy these berths as they become vacant with the construction of ships of 3,000 tons deadweight capacity for which delivery is promised on the opening of navigation, 1919.

The Midland Shipbuilding Company of Midland, Ont., will have two berths vacant in November next. These will be occupied with the construction of two ships of 3,000 tons dead weight capacity each, for which delivery is promised early in the summer of 1919.

The Polson Iron Works, Limited, Toronto, represent that they will have four berths vacant in October next. It is proposed to occupy these with the construction of four steamers of 3,000 tons deadweight capacity each. Delivery of these ships is promised for the summer of 1919.

Canadian Allis-Chalmers, operating at Bridgeburg, Ontario, will have berths becoming vacant as follows: one in June, two in September and one in November. It is expected to place contracts with this company as the berths become vacant for steamers of 3,000 tons deadweight capacity each. Delivery of the first of these is expected before the close of navigation this year and of the balance during the summer of 1919.

The Davie Shipbuilding Company, Quebec, will have two berths available in August and two additional before the close of navigation. It is proposed to place contracts for these berths for ships of 5,100 tons deadweight capacity. Delivery of the first of these ships is expected in August, 1919, and the others before the close of navigation, 1919.

The Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company, Port Arthur, Ontario, will have two berths becoming vacant in July and two before the close of navigation. It is proposed to occupy these berths with ships of 3,000 tons deadweight capacity. Delivery of all of these vessels is expected on the opening of navigation, 1919.

Messrs. J. Coughlan & Son, Vancouver, B.C., are fully occupied in the construction of ships for the Imperial Munitions Board and are not likely to have any vacant berths during the present year. They expect, however, to have some berths become vacant early next year. As berths become vacant, it is proposed to occupy them in the construction of ships of 8,100 tons deadweight capacity.

On this programme of ship construction, the Marine Department is looking forward to have four steamers of the combined tonnage of 23,500 tons in commission before the end of the present year; and, while it is somewhat difficult so far in advance to accurately estimate the work that may be accomplished during the year 1919, it is fully expected that an additional 50 ships with an aggregate tonnage of 235,000 tons will be in commission.

The Government programme of construction contemplates the construction of three types of vessels. One type will comprise vessels of 3,000 tons deadweight capacity. Another type 5,100 tons and another type ranging from 8,000 to 10,000 tons. The general features of these various types will be based on the latest types of standard cargo vessels adapted for bulk or general cargo with loading and discharging facilities in accordance with the best practice. The vessels will be designed to Lloyds highest class, the British Board of Trade and Canadian steamboat inspection requirements and will have a sea speed of 11 knots.

All arrangements have been concluded with the United States authorities for purchasing in that country all the steel plates, the boiler plates and sections required for carrying out the Government programme up to June, 1919. This steel has been purchased at the price fixed by the United States Government for the steel requirements of the United States Shipping Board. These prices are substantially lower than the prices Canadian shipbuilders have been obliged to pay from time to time during the past twelve months and represents a very large saving in the construction price of ships.

The purchase of this material in the United States was made necessary by reason of the fact that plates and shapes required for the construction of ships are not at the present time manufactured in Canada. The manufacture of all materials required for the construction of ships, more particularly plates and shapes is, however, under consideration by the Government and it is hoped that the materials for this purpose eventually will be manufactured in Canada.

I should like to express here this Government's appreciation of the assistance which was thus rendered by the Government of the United States in enabling 80,000 tons of steel to be purchased at the same price as that which is paid by the United States Shipping Board. Otherwise there would have been a greatly increased cost to this country.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I presume all the money required for our own shipbuilding will come through the ordinary channel, but may I ask, who furnishes the money for the Munitions Board? I understand it is guaranteed or paid by the Canadian Government on the security of Great Britain, but who controls it?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The British Government are paying for the ships; and they control their construction.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Yes, I know that.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The contracts have been placed by the Imperial Munitions Board and the British Government will make the payment. Provision for the money in the meantime will have to be made, as best it may, by efforts very largely on this side of the Atlantic.

Sir SAM HUGHES: By Canada?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: By Canada, with possibly some assistance through the credits obtained in the United States.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Has Canada any control over the Munitions Board with respect to the money advanced by Canada?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: No. We do not undertake to control that in any way, if I understand my hon. friend correctly. When a request comes from the British Government, we assist in providing advances of money for this and other purposes. We have done so in the past to the utmost of our ability and we shall continue to do it. I may say that the demands upon us in connection with payment for food, munitions and other war necessaries will be very heavy this year.

The Government also took up the question of prohibiting the importation, manufacture and transportation of intoxicating liquors. There is prohibition of the sale in every province of Canada except the province of Quebec, and prohibition will go into force in that province on the 1st of May, 1919. By an Order in Council which was passed on the 2nd of November last, the Governor in Council forbade use in the distillation of potable liquors of grain or any substance that could be used for food. On the 27th of November last an Order in Council was passed restricting the quantity of malt that can be used for brewing. By an Order in Council passed on the 23rd of December, and by amending Orders in Council, the importation of liquors was forbidden unless purchased before the 24th of December, and shipped on or before the 31st of January last. By an Order in Council approved on the 11th of March the manufacture of intoxicating liquors was prohibited in every province in Canada after the 1st of April, except in those provinces where the sale is still permitted and to the extent to which it is permitted; but the manufacture of intoxicating liquors containing more than 2½ per cent alcohol is absolutely prohibited after the 31st of December, 1918. The same Order in Council forbids the transportation of intoxicating liquor into any area where the sale thereof is contrary to law. The use for sacramental, medicinal, manufacturing and commercial purposes is excepted, and appropriate provisions are made for the appointment of licensees from whom liquor for these purposes can be obtained.

I next come to Orders in Council and regulations restricting excessive profits in several industries. A great many hearings were given to the representatives of one of the industries. Very difficult questions arose. The restrictions which have been imposed are pretty severe. So far as the packing houses are concerned, all profit above 11 per cent is taken by the State, and the remaining profit is still subject to taxation under the Business Profits Act. Therefore the highest profit which any packing house in Canada can retain under these regulations is 10 per cent upon the actual capital. Doubtless, these regulations will be the subject of further explanation and discussion before the session is over.

Civil Service reform was taken up immediately after the formation of the Government, and the Civil Service Commission was requested to report the necessary measures for extending the Civil Service Acts to the Outside Service. I returned to Ottawa on the 10th of January, and I ascertained that a great many difficulties had been encountered in proceeding by Order in Council. The Civil Service Act of 1908 provides that the Governor in Council may, by Order in Council published in the Canada Gazette, bring the whole or any part of the Outside Service under the provisions of the law governing the Inside Service. I discussed that provision with the Civil Service Commission, and after very careful consideration they came to the conclusion that it would be absolutely impracticable to proceed in that way. It must be remembered that there are many thousands of employees in the Outside Service. I have a memorandum from the Civil Service Commission under my hand, and if time permitted I would read it to the House. As an illustration of the considerations which it puts forward, I may observe this: The Inside Service is constituted in three divisions—and the salaries are fixed in each division. The duties assigned to each division are also defined. But if you go to the Outside Service you find there is no such classification. For instance, as pointed out in this memorandum, the present scale of salaries for collectors of customs runs from $300 to $4,500, and for deputy collectors of Inland Revenue from $400 to $1,700. There is no salary in the Inside Service as low as $300 or $400, nor as high as $4,500, and though some officers in the Inside Service receive as much, it has in each such case been specially voted by Parliament. An important part of the remuneration of railway mail clerks is mileage, but there is no provision in the Inside Service scale for any such remuneration. The duties of members of the Outside Service are exceedingly varied. They range from services performed by labouring men to duties of the highest responsibility and importance. It became absolutely certain therefore, upon a consideration of the whole matter, that it could not be adequately or finally dealt with by Order in Council. Therefore the Governor in Council passed an order making provision as a matter of policy, pending the enactment of the necessary legislation. This Order, passed on the 13th of February last, provides that in future no appointments shall be made to the Outside Service except upon the recommendation and with the approval of the Civil Service Commission. There has been some criticism as to the delay in passing that Order in Council. I can only say that the duties which have been imposed upon this Government have occupied all our waking hours, and those waking hours have been pretty long. For myself, I returned to Ottawa on the 10th of January, and that Order in Council was passed on the 13th of February. We did not succeed in passing the Order in Council with regard to packing houses until the 9th of March, although we gave it all our time and energy, and we did not succeed in passing the final Order with regard to prohibition until the 11th of March. So I think that any criticism based on the suggestion that there has been undue delay is one to which no great weight should be attached.

The question of the demobilization of our troops has also been taken up and attentively considered both here and overseas. That subject will be discussed at the proper time. Perhaps hon. gentlemen do not realize that it will take from a year to eighteen months to bring our troops back from overseas—three hundred thousand men or thereabouts—at the conclusion of the war. Very serious questions will be involved in the considerations which have to be taken into account. We shall give them the best attention that is possible.

A more exact demarcation between military and civilian control in respect of the troops who have already returned and in respect of those who will come back in the future, has been effected. This has been accomplished by an Order in Council which has been placed upon the table of the House. The principle therein embodied is that the Department of Militia and Defence shall retain control of the men until they are discharged from military service, and after they are discharged from military service they shall be taken in hand, so far as they may require care and assistance, by the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, a new department which has been created for that purpose. The Military Hospitals Commission is in future to be called the Invalided Soldiers' Commission. So far as the care of men in hospitals is concerned, the work formerly undertaken by the Military Hospitals Commission has been curtailed, because the Department of Militia and Defence takes absolute and full control of men in hospitals until the time of their discharge. After they are discharged they come under the attention of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment and of the Invalided Soldiers' Commission. That commission now has greatly extended powers and duties, because its responsibilities will in the future extend not only to men in hospitals, but to all men who return to Canada from overseas after having seen service at the front. Perhaps the scope of the Military Hospitals Commission has not been fully understood and appreciated in all parts of the country. The work which they have undertaken is of great magnitude; in many respects they have given a lead to other nations. I may point out that they have established an artificial limb factory at which already 1,051 cases have been considered; a school for massage, a school for instructors in remedial gymnastics, and various courses in re-education. They have established on a commercial basis industries such as a planing mill, a furniture factory, machine shops, motor mechanics and farm tractor operation, a woollen mill, a power station. They give commercial instruction, instruction in dairying and in truck and glass gardening. Hon. gentlemen will realize, therefore, that their work has been very extensive and productive of great good. It will have still greater scope for usefulness in the future.

Now I come to the Canadian War Mission which was established at Washington a month or two ago. Mr. Lloyd Harris, who was a member of this House from 1908 to 1911, is the chairman of that commission, which was established in view of the importance of co-operation between the two countries and of utilizing and conserving for a common purpose the resources of Canada and the United States. The gentlemen whom Mr. Harris has associated with him in the work of that mission are men of wide experience and valuable business training, and I can assure the House that the mission has already amply demonstrated its usefulness.

For a similar purpose we have established at Ottawa a War Trade Board, which corresponds in its functions very largely with the War Trade Board which has been established in the United States. It is under the chairmanship of Sir George Foster and Mr. F. P. Jones is vice-chairman. It is to see that materials are not wasted in non-essential industries and to make recommendations with regard to the regulation of imports or exports. It is to see, in co-operation with the War Trade Board of the United States that the resources of the two countries which should be used for essential war purposes shall be so used and not devoted to less important purposes. It has other important powers and duties which are set forth in the Order in Council. The gentlemen who compose it are men of great ability and experience; they are devoting their full time and energy without remuneration to the work, and I am confident that they will render excellent service to the country.

In addition, we have given our attention to abolishing patronage absolutely in respect of all purchases. Hon. gentlemen who were members of this House in the last Parliament will recollect that in the spring of 1915 the War Purchasing Commission was established for the purpose of controlling the purchase of all articles required by the Government for the purposes of war. It has done good work and given excellent service; the gentlemen who compose it have given their services freely and voluntarily as a patriotic duty. We have passed an Order in Council that not only war purchases but purchases of all articles, commodities or materials required by the Government shall be made through the War Purchasing Commission and by tender and contract.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Who are the members of the commission?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Hon. H. Laporte, of Montreal, chairman; Mr. Gault, of Winnipeg, and Mr. Gundy, of Toronto. On the retirement of Sir Edward Kemp from the board when he went overseas, Mr. Laporte was appointed chairman, and Mr. Gundy became the third member of the board.

We have had under our consideration necessary relief in connection with the appalling disaster at Halifax. I shall speak more fully as to this at a later date. A commission was appointed of three very capable men, Mr. T. S. Rogers, Judge Wallace and Mr. Fowke, who are devoting their whole time to the work. Recently they made a report, which has been laid on the table of the House, and later in the session, the Government will have certain proposals to present with respect to relief. The principle which has been adopted is to make restitution to small householders whose claims are not more than $5,000, and in respect of claims above $5,000 to proceed upon the principle of just and reasonable relief, not upon the principle of restitution.

The Minister of Railways and Canals has had under very serious consideration the provision of rolling stock and equipment for railways. We are confronted with the immediate acquisition of some ten thousand miles of railway, which will bring the total state railway mileage of this country up to about fifteen thousand. It is useless for us to have that railway unless it is properly equipped. The great crops that we hope for during the present year and next year, which are so essential for war purposes, must be transported—and, more than that, expeditiously. Full details of what we propose will be given at a later date.

I should also mention that the Soldier Settlement Board has been established under the Act passed last session. The Minister of the Interior is devoting a large part of his time to the administration of the Act. The members of the board are, I believe, presently proceeding to the western provinces in order that they may have under their immediate supervision the arrangements by which soldiers can be placed on the land during the present year.

Negotiations have been entered into with the United States in regard to certain matters of difference respecting the fisheries. It is too late for me to speak of this as I intended to do. The Order in Council embodying the results have been placed on the table of the House. I believe that the results are in the interests of both countries, especially as they assist in the production of a greater quantity of food than would otherwise be possible.

With respect to fuel control, we have had very important and difficult questions to deal with, and we found it necessary in this country to place ourselves upon an equality of inconvenience with the United States of America in respect to certain restrictions. I do not think the Canadian people complained of that. As a matter of fact, they would have no reasons to complain of it. In so far as the provision of fuel is concerned, the United States Government treated Canada precisely in the same way as it treated all the States of the Union, and we should have the most grateful appreciation of the attitude of the United States in that regard. So when, in the judgment of the Government of the United States, it became necessary to impose certain restrictions in that country, we could do no less than impose corresponding restrictions here. We have done that; and subsequently we have had conferences with the provincial governments with regard to the intensely vital question of fuel supply for the present year. The House may anticipate that at no distant date new regulations of a very comprehensive character will be placed before it by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

There has also been effected with the United States a Military Service Convention, the text of which will be laid on the Table of the House as soon as it is ratified. The services of Mr. Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice, and of Col. MacInnes of the Department of Militia and Defence were requested by the Government and these gentlemen proceeded to Washington. There had been a great deal of delay previously in reaching a conclusion, but after a visit of a week or ten days they were able to arrive at an understanding which, I think, is in the interest of both countries, and which the governments of both countries regard as fair and reasonable.

In addition to all that I have mentioned, we have had a great many conferences first and last, during the past three or four months. We have had two formal conferences with the Labour organizations and a great many informal conferences. We have had the conference, to which I have alluded, with the provincial governments. There has been a conference with the Women's organizations. We have had conferences with the returned soldiers' organizations. At every one of these conferences interesting and important questions were taken up and, on the whole, I believe that satisfactory results were reached.

Mr. BUREAU: It has been stated that there has been an agreement between the United States Government and the Canadian Government in regard to enrolment for military service. Very often Americans who are working on this side of the line ask whether under this agreement they can enlist with the Canadian forces or whether they must go to the United States in order to enlist. Can the Prime Minister answer that question before the text of the convention is laid on the Table?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think my hon. friend will find there are satisfactory dispositions with regard to that in the convention. Without having the actual text of the convention before me, I should not care to give a definite answer to my hon. friend, but I shall be glad to see that a copy of the convention is sent to him personally as he is interested in the subject.

I have imposed myself to some extent upon the patience of the House in giving these details as to what our work has been during a period of somewhat less than four months. It seems to me important that the House and the country should know as precisely as possible what has been done. I have only enumerated these matters; I have not elaborated them at all. Fuller and more detailed information will be given later in the session. This is intended only as a brief resumé, but I think it will convince hon. gentlemen and the people of the country as well that during their period of office the Government has not been idle. And I have not by any means spoken of every problem that has engaged the attention of the Government during that time. There has been the question of railway rates and railway taxation. There is the question of railway nationalization. There are many other questions.

With respect to the financial and commercial stability of the country, the House may be interested to know that the importations for eleven months ending 28th February amounted to $875,266,149; that the exports during the same period were $1,482,450,816; that the total foreign trade of the country during those eleven months was therefore $2,357,716,965, and that there was a favourable trade balance of $607,184,667. The exportation of our foods this year will depend upon the crops. I have spoken of the difficulty connected with the provision of finance, and hon. gentlemen will realize that in a moment. Suppose, as seems likely, that we shall have this year an exportation to Great Britain of $800,000,000 in excess of our importations from that country. Provision must be made for payment. Those supplies are vitally necessary for the use of Great Britain and the Allied nations.

Mr. MURPHY: That would be an excess?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes. That is supposed to be a reasonable estimate, although it is only an estimate, as my hon. friend will understand. It is based upon the experience of the past two years. It is equally important to our people that provision should be made to pay for their productions. I hope hon. gentlemen will realize that the financial problems thus presented for the consideration of the Government are of no mean order.

I have already alluded to the fact that the Government proposes to introduce a Bill at the present session for the purpose of extending the franchise to women. A notice of that Bill is already on the Order Paper, and we intend to proceed with it as soon as possible.

With respect to our part in this war, I again repeat that the Canadian Force in the battle line to-day is numerically as strong as ever it has been. The military authorities inform me that I ought not to disclose even to this House the actual number of men who are to-day fighting in the Canadian ranks. We have not only the fighting unit at the front which, since the close of the last session, has notably distinguished itself at Passchendaele, where it accomplished precisely what it undertook, and where, in the face of enormous difficulties which required the most thorough preparation and organization to overcome them, it exhibited the greatest resourcefulness and heroism—we have not only that fighting unit at the front which has brought honour and renown to this country from first to last; but we have other almost equally important corps, the railway construction corps, the forestry corps, and the men in the flying service. We have paid a great price for what has been accomplished, and it is with a very sorrowful pride, I confess, that one can reflect upon what the Canadians have achieved in this war and upon the price which they have paid. The casualties are as followws:

Killed	25,744
Died of wounds	8,612
Died of disease	1,901
Total	36,257
Wounded	105,250
Prisoners of war	2,757
Presumed dead	3,845
Missing	937
Total casualties	149,046

Sir SAM HUGHES: If that statement goes out without giving the number of returned men people will get the idea that we have lost that number, whereas a great many of these men have returned to duty, I believe.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My hon. friend is quite right. A great many of those who were wounded have returned to the front. I was not speaking in the sense, which, as he fears, might be attributed to the figures, but I was giving an enumeration of the total number of wounded, and I am grateful to my hon. friend for his suggestion.

I have spoken of the force at the front as being numerically not less strong than ever it was before. I know that it is quite as efficient, as determined and as confident as ever it was, and that is saying a good deal. The temporary breakdown in the eastern theatre of war has not discouraged our men one whit. We had great expectations as to what might have been accomplished in the eastern theatre during the past year. Those expectations have been disappointed, but, on the other hand, we have had thrown into the scale the enormous power and resources and the wonderful spirit and invincible determination of the United States of America, our nearest neighbour and Ally. That, I am confident, will much more than compensate. Besides that, let no one absolutely despair of what Russia may do in the future.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: One might liken Russia to a giant, manacled for a long time, whose manacles have been suddenly stricken off; he has not yet gained control of his limbs, and endeavours to struggle to his feet. He bruises himself, and, perhaps, overturns those who would like to help him, but eventually he does gain his feet. I am confident that Russia will eventually gain her feet and again take her part as a great nation in the affairs of the world. Let us remember that these people have been denied liberty for centuries, and so they may be pardoned for not knowing, in the first instance, what they should do with their new found freedom. During the past three or four years I have met on various occasions a very intelligent young man from Russia. He came before he knew how to speak English to the United States of America, where he is now employed. I have talked to him of Russia from time to time. He is, perhaps, from thirty to thirty-five years of age. He told me that his father and mother were serfs in their youth, that his father had had his clothing stripped from his back, and the knout applied until the blood ran, for some trivial offence. There was no remedy or redress in the law for that man because he was a serf, and in very truth a slave. When new-found liberty comes to such a people, can you be surprised if for the moment they do not know what to do with it? I venture to believe and earnestly to hope that Russia will find herself in the early future, and will never become permanently subject to the economic or other domination of Germany or of the Central Powers.

Now I have nearly done, and I must apologize to hon. gentlemen for trespassing so long on their patience. Our own course in this war is entirely clear. Germany's war aims have been absolutely unmasked, since the successes which have come to her in the Eastern theatre of war. When war was first declared, we heard her ruthless statement as to why she had undertaken it. It was openly confessed that it was a war of aggression, that it was undertaken as a national and profitable business enterprise, and that Germany would achieve her ends. Later on, the tune was somewhat changed, but in these later days the old tone of domination has been resumed, and we know that Germany does indeed seek to dominate the world. We are far removed from the theatre of war, and perhaps we do not quite adequately realize what the issue of this war means to us. I said to some gentlemen who came to speak to me a few days ago about some fiscal question, "Production of food in Canada is more vital to you than any other matter that is of concern to you at the present time. Upon the production of food in this country may depend the issue of this war, and upon the issue of this war depends the question whether you shall not come under such an economic domination as would render your industries of little value to you, if not absolutely valueless and worthless." Perhaps we in Canada, far removed as we are from the scene of active operations, do not quite comprehend at all times how closely the issue of this war does concern us. Notwithstanding any disappointments that have met us in the Eastern theatre, I am as profoundly convinced as ever that the Allied cause must triumph, for in it is involved the future of the whole world, the future of civilization, of liberty and democracy. There is much talk of peace in these days.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Too much.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: But I should consider all our sacrifice in vain if we did not achieve such a peace as would assure the world against intolerable and ruthless aggression in the future. May I not quote once more the well-known words of the great American, President Lincoln. "We accepted this war for an object, a worthy object, and the war will end when that object is attained. Under God, I hope it never will end until that time." That I believe to be the feeling of the people of Canada from Atlantic to Pacific.

So in the face of disappointments, however severe, let there be no faint hearts among us. Among our men at the front there is absolutely no doubt as to the issue. Among them one encounters a spirit of determination and confidence which may well serve as an example to us. Like them, let us look ahead and not behind us. Let us confront the issue with steady resolve. Let us undertake our duty and carry on our work in the same spirit and with the same unselfish devotion as our heroic countrymen who hold Canada's battle-line beyond the Atlantic.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the last Parliament it was my privilege to congratulate you, Sir, when you were first chosen to fill the position of Speaker of this House. To-night it is again my privilege to offer you my felicitations on having been selected for a second time to preside over the deliberations of this assembly, and in doing so I feel that I may avail myself of the opportunity to say that you can at all times count upon the hearty co-operation of my fellow-members on both sides of this House to assist you in the discharge of the important duties attaching to you high office.

By way of expediting the business of the House, and in order to facilitate the work of the Government in pressing forward Canada's part in the war, I have a suggestion to make, which, if adopted, will, I am convinced, attain both those ends. My suggestion is that the hour for the meeting of Parliament should be changed, and that, instead of assembling at three o'clock in the afternoon, this House should meet at one o'clock, and sit continuously until six o'clock, or later, if necessary, and that night sessions should become the exception rather than the rule.

I have given this suggestion a good deal of thought, and I have discussed it with others who have had fairly extended experience in the work of Parliament. Their belief coincides with my own, that if the suggested change were made the members of Parliament would bring to the consideration of public business a capacity, both mental and physical, for sustained work that, under our present procedure, grows increasingly less as the session advances and night sittings multiply. The public business itself would be more expeditiously and more satisfactorily disposed of, the members of the Government would have more time to devote to the work of their respective departments, and those who, either in an official capacity, or as members of the press gallery, are obliged to report the daily proceedings of Parliament and of its committees, would be afforded seasonable hours in which to perform their work.

Such a change as the one I have suggested would correspond, in a general way, with the rule that prevails in the United States Congress. If it were adopted, the mornings from 9.30 to 12 o'clock could, when necessary, be devoted to the meetings of committees, and the members of the House, when not so engaged, would have ample time to attend to their correspondence and to perform other duties. In any event, their evenings, as a rule, would be free, and that would give them opportunity to dispose of any arrears of work. The proposed change would practically do away with night sittings, and would in the long run provide Parliament with more working hours, by reason of the increased length of the afternoon sittings, than does the present system. Speaking solely for myself, I make the suggestion now, so that, if there is an earnest desire to expedite public business this session, the necessary change can be made, and Parliament, like any other business institution, will transact its business within what are generally recognized as business hours. There is no question in my mind but that the long and unnecessary night sessions do not conduce either to proper consideration of public business or to economy in public expenditure.

At the opening of the first session of a new Parliament it is to be expected that frequent echoes would be heard of the election from which that Parliament has but recently emerged. Even in war time that is bound to be the case. Thus far in this debate we have heard several echoes of the late general election, but it is significant that, neither in the speech from the Throne nor in the speeches from the Government side of the House, has there been any echo heard of the race and religious issues that were deliberately raised by certain members of this Government and by their supporters, on the platform, in the pulpit, and in the press, for the express purpose of setting race against race and creed against creed, in order that, in the resulting turmoil and fratricidal strife, they might snatch a lease of power, and so gratify ambitions that set a higher value on attaining public office, no matter how secured, than upon the promotion of national unity in the face of a foe whom these same gentlemen pretend we are fighting in order to assert the rights of small nationalities and to enforce the principle of national self-determination. These omissions, Sir, it shall be my endeavour to supply before I resume my seat.

Last year during the debate on conscription I appealed to the right hon. gentleman who was then, as he is now, the leader of the Government, not to proceed upon the line he then purposed following, but to adopt some one of the alternative proposals that emanated from this side of the House, in order to keep Canada united both at home and abroad. The appeal that I made was unheeded. Similar appeals from other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House met with a like reception, and while time has already vindicated those who made the appeals to which I refer, time has not, and time will not for many a day to come, eradicate the evil results of the late election. Canadian Prussianism, as practised throughout the campaign, has done quite as much harm to our national life as German Prussianism could do, if it were set up in our midst and imposed upon our people by force of arms.

For, Mr. Speaker, mark what has happened and what is in store for us. The seeds of distrust and hatred were sown wide and deep; the crop will not be of this year's harvesting nor of next; nor, in my belief, will it be gathered within the present generation; for, Sir, I venture to say that long after all those who engaged in sowing these seeds shall have passed away the fruits of their evil labours will continue to spring up to the confusion, embroilment, and division of Canadians who will have to deal with the survivors and the descendants of the three millions of people who either were disfranchised or whose religion was attacked and insulted for the miserable purpose of gaining a victory at the polls.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Now, Sir, so that there may be no doubt as to my position, let me say at once that I have no quarrel with those who in the late election supported the Government in the honest belief that conscription was the only way to secure reinforcements for the troops at the front; in the honest belief that conscription would be promptly, uniformly, and honestly enforced if the Government were returned to power, and that 100,000 men to relieve the men in the trenches would be sent to the front as soon as the Government was installed in office. To induce such beliefs the most lavish promises were made on behalf of the Unionist candidates, and as I have said, with those who believed in such promises and who supported the Government on account of them, I have no quarrel. But the number of such persons is very small when compared with the total number who supported the Government for other and very different reasons.

Now, let me mention in general terms what those other reasons were. Briefly they were that Union Government would isolate Quebec and prevent the French and the Catholics from ruling Ontario and the rest of Canada; that the Pope and the Catholics generally were not in favour of the Allies in the present war; and, finally, that the issue was one between Protestantism and Catholicism, and that all who did not support the Government, as representing Protestantism, were slackers, traitors, and pro-Germans.

The campaign leading up to the open attack on Quebec and the French, as well as upon the Pope and the Catholics, with all of whom Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal party were constantly bracketed, was widespread, thoroughly organized and lavishly financed. Within the compass of a speech, it is not possible to deal with all the ramifications of the conspiracy, and I must therefore confine myself to a few only of its many outcroppings.

Those who were members of the last Parliament know to what an extent the ranks of the Liberal party were honeycombed by race and religious appeals and I need not dwell on that aspect of the conspiracy against the Liberal party and its leader. While that conspiracy was in progress within this House, there appeared in the Parliamentary press gallery a new correspondent, evidently a stranger. In reply to inquiries I was informed that the stranger was the representative of the Christian Science Monitor of Boston. Upon expressing surprise that a religious paper like the Christian Science Monitor would go to the trouble and expense of sending a representative to Ottawa to report parliamentary proceedings I was further informed that the intention was to launch an anti-Catholic campaign that would fit in with the Government's preparation for the approaching general election. Of the correctness of that statement, proof was soon furnished by the appearance in the Christian Science Monitor of anti-Catholic, anti-French, and anti-Laurier articles, which later were reproduced by the Ottawa Citizen, the Toronto dailies, and other newspapers that were all smitten about the same time with a severe attack of a disease which, for lack of a generic term, and with apologies to medical nomenclature, I may describe as "Papalphobia." Following this outbreak, certain gentlemen closely identified with the Christian Science Monitor visited Ottawa and after a council of war with their Ottawa friends, were introduced, I am informed, to the right hon. the Prime Minister. What took place at that interview is immaterial, but what followed the interview is of very decided public importance. Early in October, 1917, a written memorandum issued from the office of the Prime Minister to the other members of the Cabinet, urging them to subscribe for the Christian Science Monitor for their respective departments. The reason given for exercising this particular kind of war economy——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: —was that "the Christian Science Monitor frequently has very useful and interesting articles respecting Canadian affairs," and that it was "being subscribed for in the Privy Council office." The only articles on Canada that the Monitor was publishing at the time were anti-Catholic tirades, and these the Prime Minister, in the words of his office memorandum, found "very useful and interesting." There is, therefore, no room for doubt as to where the Prime Minister stood in the matter.

Now, Sir, I have heard of people being bribed with their own money but this is the first and only time I have heard of people furnishing money to finance attacks upon themselves, as the Catholics of Canada undoubtedly did when the Prime Minister had the Christian Science Monitor placed on the subscription list of the several departments to be paid for out of public funds—funds contributed by Catholics equally with members of all other denominations.

But it must not for a moment be thought that the Christian Science Monitor enjoyed any monopoly in its chosen field. Quite the contrary. The English press of Canada, with a few honourable exceptions, joined in the hue and cry, and the Pope, Quebec, the Catholics and Laurier were the texts of their daily assaults. Nor was the campaign confined to the Tory press; it extended also to their Unionist confrères. The Toronto Globe was as mendacious as the Toronto Mail and Empire. The Toronto Star was quite as shameless as the Toronto News. And while the madness was at its height I am told that casual visitors to the Globe office, who were regarded as receptive to the new propaganda, were taken into the business manager's room, and there with doors closed and a nervous watch on the windows, and in bated breath, Mr. J. F. Mackay would expatiate on the machinations of the Pope and the necessity of defeating them by defeating Laurier If the visitor did not appear to be sufficiently impressed, he was passed on to Mr. J. E. Atkinson of the Star, who would then exercise his slimy arts to complete what the less adroit Mr. Mackay had begun. And so the game was played throughout the land.

All this, Sir, was bad enough, but the turning of the churches into political cockpits was the crowning infamy of the whole campaign. Their pulpits were thrown open to laymen as well to clergymen; and in some cases were occupied by individuals more competent to expound the doctrines of the Sodomites than to preach the gospel of the Prince of Peace. And why was all this done? Merely to arouse the rest of the country against Quebec and the Catholics for the sake of winning the election. Mr. Speaker, was there ever such a defilement of the House of God in any other land under the sun? I know of none, and for the sake of Christianity itself I hope there has been none.

Lest the women voters were not as highly inflamed as their male relatives, special appeals to their fears and passions and prejudices were made on the eve of the election. Perhaps the most inflammatory of these appeals, as it certainly was the most grotesquely false, was published by the Canadian Home Journal in its December issue. After moralizing on the tragic importance of the issue to be decided on December 17, it proceeded thus:

> Germany's reptile diplomacy uses many agencies in many lands, and the most important agency that it is to-day using on Canadian soil is the Roman Catholic Church.

No proof of this outrageous statement is offered, or attempted to be offered, but it is followed by these equally brilliant gems:

> Lamentable as the fact is it is nevertheless a fact to be faced. As a consequence we find Roman Catholic Churches in Canada head centres of activity to place in power those whose policies aim at the withdrawal of Canada from the war, the desertion of our soldiers at the front and the betrayal of Great Britain.

And listen to this Mr. Speaker:

> By what promises and devices the Kaiser's Government has secured the support of the Roman Catholic Church is not wholly clear.

Not then and not now.

> He has promised to restore the Temporal home of the Pope in Europe and if victorious to extend his influence to South America.

> It is altogether probable that he has promised his aid in extending the powers the Church now enjoys in the province of Quebec to all Canada.
>
> The women of Canada are religious by nature. They are the backbone of our Churches. Let them remember what is at stake.
>
> Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his candidates exalt the traitor and contemn the soldier. It is for the womenfolk of the soldier to give them their answer at the polls.
>
> Canada is menaced by open foes in Europe and insidious foes at home. To vote for Union Government is the woman's paramount duty,—the duty of the hour.

Mr. Speaker, could anything be more dastardly or criminal than the article from which I have just quoted?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MURPHY: And yet the writer of that article not only goes unpunished but I have no doubt he enjoys many a chuckle over his contribution to the devil's brew with which the Union Governmen filled, and maddened and misled a too-credulous public.

So that no doubt may remain in the mind of any honest man or woman as to the issue upon which the Union Government sought and obtained office, let me quote from a full front page article which appeared in the Orange Sentinel of December 20th, 1917, under the caption, "Sound the Loud Timbrel":

> A crushing defeat for the Roman Catholic Hierarchy of Quebec and their allies in the other provinces is the result of the polling on Monday.
>
> The whole election campaign was fought upon the lines of the programme of the Orange Association. For the first time in the life of the dominion a union Protestantism followed the lead of the Orangemen of Canada to a magnificent victory over reactionary forces whose triumph would have disgraced the country. The great Order which the Sentinel represents has reason for gratification in having at last won that recognition from the Loyalists of the country which it has long deserved.

There you have a declaration after the event written by a gentleman who was endorsed by the Prime Minister as his candidate in West Toronto, and who now represents that constituency in this House. The Prime Minister has not in any way challenged or repudiated that declaration. As he endorsed the candidature of the man who wrote it, he will be held to have endorsed the declaration as well, and the public will judge him accordingly.

In view of the facts that I have presented, what becomes of the hollow pretense that the Government's election appeal was solely for the purpose of obtaining re-inforcements for the boys at the front, and to maintain Canada's part in the war? The article in the Orange Sentinel, with the Prime Minister's endorsement, supplies the answer to that question.

I have illustrated the attitude of the Unionist party towards the Catholics of Canada for daring to oppose them. Let me now show you that a Catholic who supported them met with no better or different treatment. Reading again from the article in the Orange Sentinel of December 20th, 1917. I quote the following:

> It is unfortunate that throughout the English-speaking province, the one element which stood solidly behind the Laurier party is composed of men who belong to the Roman Catholic Church. That was the backbone of the Laurier organization in Ontario. Apart from Bishop Fallon none of the higher Clergy of this province gave any indication of friendship for the Unionist Government.
>
> There is every reason to believe, however, that his motive in supporting Union Government was largely a desire to punish those who have pursued him for twenty-five years.
>
> Therefore his action cannot be taken as an indication of the sentiment either of his brother Bishops or of the faithful among their flock.

It would be a thousand pities, Mr. Speaker, to spoil by any superfluous comment such warm-hearted appreciation by a leader of Unionism of the help proffered by His Lordship of London to the Unionist party. I will therefore merely repeat my previous observation that the article was written by the Prime Minister's personally endorsed candidate, and the Prime Minister's approving silence for three months shows that he also endorses the article itself.

As it is my desire to place on record for the information not only of Canadians of to-day, but of Canadians of the future as well, all the data requisite for an understanding of the Union Government and the character of its election campaign, I realize that my task would be only half done, so far as Ontario was concerned, if I did not give the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Rowell) full credit for his share in the attacks made on the leader of the Liberal party and on the Catholics of this country. To fully appreciate that hon. gentleman's contribution it will be necessary to go back a few years to get the proper setting for a correct view of his more recent performances.

Let me premise, Sir, by saying that there was a time when, through lack of information, I regarded the hon. member for Durham as an unselfish servant of the public. To-day, in the light of information supplied from a hundred sources, I desire to make reparation to those whom I laboured to convert to my mistaken opinion by exposing, as briefly as possible, the facts relating to the hon. gentleman's public career as I now know them. Desiring at the same time to be fair to the hon. gentleman, I propose to take as the standard of judgment that ought to be applied in his case a standard that has been supplied by himself. Let me explain where that standard is to be found.

Speaking at North Bay on the 6th December last, the hon. gentleman arraigned the leader of the Liberal party and the people of Quebec for their alleged attitude towards the war, and for the moment I do not intend to make any further use of his speech than to cite the basis on which he laid his charge. I will return to the speech later on. The basis of his charge on the occasion to which I refer was the lack of sacrifice on the part of the people of Quebec. A man who will make such a charge as that should stand on very firm ground with regard to his own record in the matter of sacrifice, and if he does not so stand then it were better for him to have remained silent. Now let us see what the hon. gentleman's record is with regard to sacrifice.

Briefly stated, Sir, it is this: that while he preaches the gospel of sacrifice for others, he has consistently garnered and pocketed the fruits of selfishness for himself. As you are doubtless aware, Sir, the cult of commercialized Christianity, in Ontario at least, has been placed on the basis of an exact science. The three great exponents of that cult are John Wesley Allison, Joseph Wesley Flavelle and Newton Wesley Rowell. Ego is their god, autos their creed and moi-même their practice. In point of fact, Sir, they are the three great Canadian Sinn Feiners. In our political annals an infamous immortality was conferred on John Wesley Allison by my friend the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Carvell) in connection with fuses and shells. A like service was performed for Joseph Wesley Flavelle by Food Commissioner O'Connor and Mr. George W. Kyte, late member for Richmond, N.S., in connection with bacon and eggs. And, Sir, it is my purpose to convince you and the country that Newton Wesley Rowell is well worthy of the place the public has assigned him as the third member of that delectable trinity.

Not to go further back than the days of the Ross Government in Ontario, it may be recalled that the hon. gentleman was very active in his support of that administration, but his support entailed no sacrifice; quite the reverse. Through it he managed to secure an appointment as solicitor for the Government at the time that the loan of $2,000,000 was made to the re-organized industries that Mr. F. H. Clergue had established at Sault Ste. Marie; and by reason of representing the Government he secured another solicitorship with one of the companies concerned in the reorganization, and he held the two positions at the same time. When obliged to give up one of these positions, he was replaced by his partner, Mr. Thomas Gibson. My information is that as the result of his supporting the Ontario Government of the day and of his securing the positions mentioned, the hon. member for Durham increased his savings by an amount in excess of $100,000 within a period of four or five years. But the exact date is immaterial; so also is the length of time during which it was accumulated. The material thing is that it cannot be pretended that the hon. gentleman's active support of the Ross Government entailed any sacrifice on his part.

Now, Sir, what happened when the hon. gentleman entered the provincial field of politics? With his usual presence of mind he arranged with his friends to form a committee for the purpose of raising a fund to guarantee him against any loss while engaged in his work as provincial leader. Mr. A. E. Ames, of Toronto, was chairman of the committee, and in addition to Sir Joseph Flavelle, the contributors included several other Toronto gentlemen. The fund itself was called the "Secretarial Fund" and I am informed that it varied in amount from $9,000 to $11,000 a year. Again, the exact amount raised in any one year is immaterial; the point it establishes is that as provincial leader the hon. member for Durham was protected against any sacrifice whilst he retained that position. In other words, the hon. gentleman had placed his political services on precisely the same basis as that on which Sir Joseph Flavelle while Chairman of the Imperial Munitions Board, sold bacon for the soldiers to the British Government, namely, that the bacon would be supplied only after he had secured an undertaking to indemnify his company against all loss. Truly, Sir, it is perfectly wonderful how commercialized Chistianity sharpens a man's sense of business.

A little over a year ago the hon. member for Durham and his press agent paid a visit to the battlefront. The trip was well advertised, as my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Sifton) will recall. The member for Durham got many cable mentions out of it, but did he pay the expenses of the trip? Not he. The expenses were paid by the hon. gentleman's Toronto friends, who contributed, I am told, a sum in the neighbourhood of $3,750 for the purpose. Once again there was no sacrifice on the part of the hon. member for Durham.

Without multiplying illustrations, it may be said that the contributions of Sir Joseph Flavelle and others to the hon. gentleman's several funds were made for the purpose of advertising, financing and placing the hon. gentleman on the political market in precisely the same way as Sir Joseph Flavelle advertises, finances and places his bacon and eggs on the commercial market. There was no sacrifice of any kind involved; it was simply a matter of business—of cool, calculating business, at that. Therefore I submit that it scarcely lies in the mouth of the member for Durham to attack the people of a whole province for their lack, or alleged lack, of sacrifice.

Let me now return to the hon. gentleman's speech at North Bay on the 6th of December last. In part, that speech was a suppression of the truth; in part, it was a statement of shabby falsehoods; in its entirety it was precisely the kind of speech the hon. member for Durham would make on an occasion when he was true to himself. For instance, the hon. gentleman pretended that he had been faithful as a follower of Sir Wilfrid Laurier until the Liberal leader declined to support conscription. Nothing could be further from the truth. The hon. gentleman engaged for several years in a conspiracy to supplant Sir Wilfrid Laurier as leader of the Liberal party. In this conspiracy he was aided by Mr. J. F. Mackay of the Toronto Globe, Mr. J. E. Atkinson of the Toronto Star, Mr. W. E. Rundle of the National Trust Company, Mr. J. H. Gundy, of Wood and Gundy, brokers, Colonel F. H. Deacon, of F. H. Deacon and Co., brokers, Mr. G. Frank Beer, and others, whose names it is not at the moment necesary to mention, but which I have in my possession.

The procedure was something like this: the provincial Liberal party was to exist only in name, while the active body would be a Rowell party, financed from the "Secretarial Fund" and having its organizers and field workers with their press agency and such social and moral reform agencies as might be gathered in through the activities of those who were working in co-operation with the member for Durham to oust Sir Wilfrid Laurier from the leadership of the Liberal party.

Then, there were lunches and dinners at Toronto, to which decent Liberals were sometimes invited, and at which the plot would be more or less openly referred to in proportion as it was deemed safe by the plotters to show their hostility to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Following one of these Imperial gatherings a demand was made that Sir Wilfrid Laurier be asked to name Mr. Rowell as his successor in the leadership of the Liberal party, but the gentlemen who were thus approached laughed the silly proposal to scorn. At another stage of the conspiracy, it was planned to bring about a change in the directorship of the Toronto Globe, so as to hurry on the replacing of Sir Wilfrid by Mr. Rowell at Ottawa and the installation of Mr. Atkinson as Mr. Rowell's successor at Toronto. But that too miscarried, and for several days afterwards the telephone line leading from Mr. Mackay's office to Mr. Atkinson's office sagged heavy with moist regrets. But when conscription appeared on the scene and Union Government loomed up—ah, there was the chance so long denied. And, having failed to dislodge Sir Wilfrid, the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Rowell) and his entourage of pork packers, trust magnates, brokers and disappointed journalists transferred their attentions to Sir Robert Borden and Union Government, both of whom they are following closely and unselfishly as numerous appointments to influential commissions, fat advertising contracts and handsome brokerage on Victory war loans all amply demonstrate.

In view of these doings, Sir, you are not surprised that I should stamp as false and hypocritical the pretense of the hon. gentleman at North Bay that he had been a follower of Sir Wilfred Laurier until conscription became an issue. The very reverse was the fact, and the proofs were known to hundreds of people throughout the Dominion.

Another characteristic distortion of the truth on the part of the hon. gentleman was his statement at North Bay regarding the alliance between the Nationalists and the Conservatives in 1911. Here are his exact words as reported in the Toronto Globe of December 7, 1917:

> As Liberals we have claimed that the surrender in the year 1911, of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec to the Nationalist-clerical influence was a grave national blunder, from which we have suffered through the whole period of the war.

You will observe, Sir, that the hon. gentleman would have his audience and the public believe that the alliance with the Nationalists was made only by the Quebec wing of the Conservative party. The hon. gentleman, when he made that speech, was speaking in the district of Nipissing, and how his audience must have smiled as they listened to him and recalled the reception extended by his cabinet colleague, Hon. Frank Cochrane, by Senator Gordon and other Ontario conservatives, to Mr. Henri Bourassa, the Nationalist leader, when that gentleman, on Mr. Cochrane's invitation, went to Nipissing to assist the Conservatives in 1911, and when, to use Senator Gordon's own words, they "presented him with the keys of Northern Ontario."

But this Ontario-Conservative alliance with the Nationalists was not the only embarrassing thing that the hon. gentleman's statement was intended to conceal. It was primarily intended to conceal the fact that Sir Robert Borden, the gentleman, whom the hon. member for Durham now acknowledges as his leader, was in active personal alliance with the Nationalists in 1911. The hon. gentleman must know, if he knows anything about our recent political history, that in the campaign of 1911, his present leader went to the province of Quebec and in the counties of Shefford and Missisquoi appealed for support for candidates who were pledged to the Nationalist programme, a surrender, according to the hon. gentleman "from which we have suffered through the whole period of the war." Why then is he not honest, and why does he not place responsibility upon his present leader and not upon the Conservative party of Quebec? The reason is quite obvious; to be honest and place responsibility where it belongs would mean the destruction of the reasons the hon. gentleman has given for entering the Union Government, and that it goes without saying, he cannot afford to do. He, however, is on record at another time and place in such condemnation of his present leader and some of his Union Cabinet associates with reference to this very Nationalist alliance that I propose to place that record on Hansard.

Upon reference to the published proceedings of the annual meeting of the Ontario Reform Association held at Toronto on November 24, 1916, I find that the hon. member for Durham was present and that he spoke at that meeting. My information also is that he revised, if he did not actually draft, a resolution condemnatory of the alliance of his present leader with the Nationalists, and that resolution was unanimously adopted in these terms:

> Whereas, the Conservative party under Sir Robert Borden deliberately allied itself with the Nationalist party in Quebec under Henri Bourassa upon their avowed policy of non-participation in the wars of the Empire to endeavour to procure the defeat of the Liberal administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and

Whereas, following the success of this unholy alliance Sir Robert Borden publicly recognized and included in his Cabinet men selected by Henri Bourassa, Armand Lavergne, and their associates, and,

Whereas, this alliance helps to explain the weak and vacillating policy of the Government in connection with the war, and

Whereas, Sir Robert Borden still retains in his Cabinet two intense Nationalists, Blondin, the most rabid of them all, and Patenaude, a former Nationalist organizer,

Be it therefore resolved, that we, the Liberals of Ontario, in our annual meeting assembled, desire most emphatically to condemn the continuance in this trying time of war, of this unholy Conservative-Nationalist alliance, as unfair to Canada and inimical to the best interests of the Empire.

Thus spoke the hon. member for Durham in November, 1916. Less than a year later he had become a follower of the Sir Robert Borden whom he had so vehemently condemned, and a Cabinet colleague of the Mr. Blondin whom he had so roundly denounced. And following all this he had the impudent hardihood to pretend in his North Bay speech that it was only the Conservatives of Quebec who were in alliance with the Nationalists. That statement, viewed in the light of the facts which preceded it, furnishes another illuminating example of the hon. gentleman's standard of political morality.

Having gone into the realm of fiction for his facts, it is not surprising that in the further course of his North Bay speech, the hon. member for Durham made some extraordinary statements about patronage. In effect, the hon. gentleman said that patronage had been abolished, and just about the time that he made that statement he had sent as his agent to the city of London, Col. F. H. Deacon, who, as the representative of the minister, offered to a prominent Liberal of that city, as a bribe to induce him to desert the Liberal candidate, the chairmanship of the War Purchasing Commission, formerly held by Sir Edward Kemp. In view of the urgency of the matter Col. Deacon reported the result of his interview at London by telegraph to the minister. That telegram was written by Deacon in the presence of three leading citizens of London, and I am informed that telegram is still preserved. Deacon's offer was rejected, but Deacon's agency was established by written proof furnished by Deacon himself.

The mention of the mere outlines of this one transaction discloses the peculiar view the hon. member for Durham entertains of patronage. But, brief as has been the hon. gentleman's career in Dominion politics, this incident does not by any means stand alone. Hard on its heels, the hon. member for Durham deputed Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey of Toronto to interview sundry Liberals and ascertain if they thought the public would stand the appointment of one of the members of the present Government to a place on the Ontario Supreme Court bench. Possibly the hon. gentleman may not regard that as an exercise of patronage. If he does not, then he will certainly not regard the sending of Mr. J. F. Mackay to eastern Ontario to urge Liberal candidates to desert their leader by pointing out the advantages by which their treachery would be rewarded, as an exercise of patronage.

[Mr. Murphy.]

But, whatever his view may be of the authority that he deputed in the two latter cases, there can be no doubt about the exercise of patronage in the case of Mr. Robert A. Mulholland, who was bribed to make way for the hon. gentleman as a candidate in the county of Durham, by the promise of a seat in the Senate. That bribe has been paid within the last week by Mr. Mulholland's appointment to the Senate. Realizing that the appointment would shatter the last remaining pretense that patronage had been abolished, the Government adopted the unusual course of handing out an official statement of the reasons for Mr. Mulholland's appointment. The official reasons were an official lie, which stirred the honest indignation of The Toronto Telegram, and that paper, in its issue of March 14, thus deals with the incident:

Partyism a better Pay Boss than patriotism.

A patriot gives up the best years of his life to secure liberty for the world. A partisan gives up a parliamentary nomination in Durham county to secure a seat in the House of Commons for Hon. Wesley Rowell.

The patriot's reward is the probability of death or wounds and the certainty of sacrifice, all for $1.10 per day.

The partisan's reward is a seat in the Senate of Canada with a capitalized value of $50,000, and an earning power of $2,500 per annum.

In the same issue, The Toronto Telegram, after detailing the case of a Canadian Pacific Railway engineer who was earning a good salary, and who enlisted and went to the front, was wounded and had both his legs amputated, thus proceeds:

Brave names fill the muster roll of Canada's soldiers. The C.P.R. engine driver is not singled out as an unusual example of sacrifice. The maimed figure of that C.P.R. engine driver, with his ringing laughter, his bright smile and unconquered spirit, represents one form of patriotic service.

The candidate who removed his ambition from the path of Hon. Wesley Rowell's progress to an Ontario seat in Parliament represents another form of patriotic service, or patriotic endeavour, to quote the now immortal words of Sir Robert Borden.

The soldier who gives up both legs and an earning power of $200 or $250 per month for his country's sake will be requited with a pension of $600 or $700 per annum.

The candidate who gives up a parliamentary nomination for Hon. Wesley Rowell's sake is requited with a life interest in a seat in the Senate. That life interest has a capital value of $50,000. An official statement carries the authority of Sir Robert Borden into a declaration that a senatorship worth $2,500 per annum is the modest reward of Hon. R. A. Mulholland's patriotic endeavours.

If every Canadian who can equal or surpass Mr. Mulholland's creditable record of "patriotic endeavour" is to go to the Senate, the home of that august assembly will soon be overcrowded worse than a Toronto street car around 6 p.m. If a $50,000 senatorship illustrates Sir Robert Borden's idea of a scant reward for Hon. R. A. Mulholland's "patriotic endeavours," the "patriotic endeavours" of the C.P.R. engineer and hundreds and thousands of other Canadian soldiers is the marble of true and noble sacrifice. That marble is spoiled with the mud of Sir Robert Borden's words of excuse for the traffic in senatorships that is still being carried on at Ottawa.

As you will observe, Sir, the Toronto Telegram takes no stock in the Pharisaic pretense of the hon. member for Durham that patronage has been abolished. Neither do I; neither does any sane man who has any knowledge of the crimes for which patronage is responsible in connection with the office of the Director of Public Information; with the office of the Food Board, and its staff of nearly one hundred highly-paid employees; and with the office of the Central Appeal Judge, under the Military Service Act, and its staff of nearly seventy highly-paid employees. Later on, there will be occasion to ventilate these crimes, and I will not dwell on them now.

But reprehensible as were the statements with which I have already dealt in the hon. gentleman's North Bay speech, they were mild and inoffensive, indeed, when compared with his slanderous and unjustifiable attack on the members of the religious orders who came from France to Canada and who were here at the outbreak of the war. Let me devote a few minutes to an analysis of the statements made by him in that same speech in regard to these men. After he had denounced the attitude of the Quebec Nationalists towards the war, the hon. member for Durham said:

In this attitude they were undoubtedly encouraged and abetted by the members of the religious orders from France who found an asylum in Canada, and used that asylum to undermine Canada's strength in the struggle.

This atrocious statement was made without a syllable of truth to support it. When challenged for proof, the hon. gentleman, after the manner of the tribe of Ananias, remained silent. On December 15, 1917, The Catholic Record of London publicly challenged the hon. member for Durham to bring forward a shadow of proof for his assertion; the hon. gentleman did not respond. At a later date this challenge was repeated by The Catholic Register of Toronto; but again the hon. gentleman remained silent. The fact that his statement in its foulness and falsehood was adopted and repeated by Mr. Stewart Lyon, of The Toronto Globe, does not in any degree mitigate the offence of the hon. gentleman for having gratuitously slandered both the living and the dead. Neither the hon. member for Durham nor Mr. Lyon could produce any proof, because proof there was none.

Not satisfied with one slander, the hon. gentleman uttered another when he thus further referred to the French religious in Canada:

It is a misfortune that they did not follow the example of the priests of the Catholic church in France, who threw themselves into the struggle of their people to preserve their national existence.

In these words the hon. member for Durham pictured the French members of the religious orders as remaining in Canada and shirking their duty to France. That statement, Sir, is even more wickedly untrue than the former one. The facts were available to the hon. gentleman as they were to any other person who would seek them; but the facts would not suit the hon. gentleman's purpose, and so he coolly ignored them. Now it is my intention to give the facts to the House and to the country, so that the truth may be known about a body of men whose courage, devotion to duty and self-sacrifice in the present war stamp them as worthy to follow in the footsteps of that noble band of French missionaries who first made this land known to Europe and blazed the way for its colonization and development.

As a result of inquiries instituted both in Canada and overseas, I have been favoured with authentic statements giving in detail full particulars about the French religious orders who were wantonly slandered by the hon. member for Durham. It would unduly burden the record, and take up too much time if I were to place all the details on Hansard, and for these have been sent to me. But the records themselves I will preserve so that they may be available for future historical reference. It is to be kept in mind that the figures which I am about to submit relate only to French subjects who were members of religious orders in Canada. I will begin with the Franciscans. At the outbreak of war practically the entire body of French Franciscans left Canada and returned to France to do their duty. In the whole Dominion of Canada, I am informed, there now remain but six French Franciscan priests, and that these six are exempt from military service on the ground of age or physical unfitness. Those who returned to France were assigned to various war duties, and 32 of them went into the trenches. Of these three have been mentioned in the Orders of the Day, two have been decorated with the Military Medal, one has received the Cross of the Legion of Honour, one has been wounded and discharged, and one was killed on the field of battle, after he had been twice mentioned in the Orders of the Day, and had received the military medal.
9 p.m. reasons I shall summarize my information, and mention only a few names of the hundreds that

From "L'Institut des Frères de l'Instruction Chrétienne" twenty-five members returned to France and entered the French army. Of those, four have been decorated and mentioned in the Orders of the Day, four have been wounded, one was taken prisoner, one who was twice wounded, has been missing for three years, and is assumed to have died of his wounds; and two were killed on the field of battle.

In addition to the Canadian members of the Jesuit order who are chaplains in France, five French Jesuits went back from Canada to join the French army. Of these two were killed in action.

All the members of the Congregation of the Holy Cross who were French subjects answered the call to the colours. One was wounded twice, and returned again to the front. One has been reported "missing" for over a year, and is assumed to be dead or a prisoner, and three others are still fighting in the trenches.

The Fathers of the Congregation of the Holy Ghost sent three of their members to the French Army, and a fourth is on his way to France. One of those who returned to France was killed at the front, and another who is now seriously wounded has been decorated with the Military Cross, and was twice mentioned in the Orders of the Day.

The Trappists had only two French members of military age and both returned to France in 1914. One of them, Father Thomas, received two decorations, the Military Cross and the Military Medal, was twice mentioned in the Orders of the Day, and later, in rescuing a companion, suffered the loss of both eyes. To-day he is a teacher of the blind in France. The other Trappist who returned to his native country, was Father Hypolite, who is now fighting with seven of his brothers in the French army.

Of the 900 members of the Marist Order who have fought in the trenches, 14 French subjects went from Canada to France. Two of those were killed on the battlefield, six were wounded, one received the Military Medal, and all were mentioned in the Orders of the Day.

Les Peres de Montfort sent 15 of their French members back to France. Three of these brave men were stationed in the county which I have the honour to represent in Parliament. Of the 15 who returned to France, five won the Military Cross, five were mentioned in the Orders of the Day, one of them on three consecutive occasions; and one was killed on the field of battle.

From the Eudist Congregation, 17 of its members went back from Canada to France. Of these, three were wounded, two were mentioned in the Orders of the Day, two were decorated with the Military Cross, and four were honourably discharged from service.

The Brothers of St. Gabriel sent eight of their French members who were of military age, to serve in the French ranks. Four of them were wounded, four were decorated with the Military Medal, four were mentioned in the Orders of the Day, and one of them, Bro. Garrigues-Antonin, is the inventor of a wonderful field gun which has done great execution against the enemy.

The twelve French subjects who were members of the Sulpician Order went to France when war broke out, and immediately reported for duty. Seven went to France and later on served in the Lorraine, Verdun, Champagne and Saloniki campaigns. One of them was decorated with the Military Cross at Verdun.

With the Dominicans at Ste. Hyacinthe there were only two French members of military age when war was declared. These two went to France.

The Order of St. Sacrament sent to France the only one of its members who was not exempt on account of age or ill-health, and he is still serving as a chaplain at the front.

Four French members of the Order of the Holy Cross in Canada reported for duty at the beginning of the war, and one of them was wounded while fighting with the French army.

The Brothers of St. Vincent de Paul had only one French member eligible for military service. He joined the French army in 1914, and has been twice mentioned for bravery in the Orders of the Day.

The Missionaries of the Sacred Heart have been represented at the front by four French subjects who returned from Canada to serve in the trenches. One of them, Father Cadoux, was mentioned in the Orders of the Day for special bravery in rescuing the wounded under fire.

From the Capuchin Order, ten French subjects went back to France and joined the colours. Three of those men were killed on the battlefield, Father Albert, Father Edward and Father Justinian, all of whom at one time were stationed in Ottawa, and with two of whom I was well acquainted.

The Christian Brothers, at Montreal, are represented at the front by two of their French members, one of whom has been severely wounded.

From the Oblate Order in Canada, twenty-four French members returned to France, and they have served in the ranks with great distinction. One was killed on the battlefield, two died of wounds, four were decorated with the Military Cross, and several of the others were mentioned for bravery in the Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker, the figures which I have just placed before you constitute a part only of what stands to the credit of the French Religious who went back from Canada to France to help their Motherland in this war. But, Sir, I submit that these figures are more than sufficient to refute the baseless statements made by the hon. gentleman from Durham at North Bay.

If the hon. gentleman's statements were not made for a wicked and malicious purpose, then by every standard of public and private honour he is required to retract what he has said, to offer an apology to the living and to make reparation to the memory of the dead. Should he hesitate or decline to do this, then he will stand self-condemned before his fellowmen, stripped of the last vestige of any claim to public respect or public confidence.

You will recall, Sir, that earlier in my remarks I referred to the part the Christian Science Monitor had played in the Canadian campaign against the Pope and the Catholics. If you are a reader of the New York press, you will be familiar with another phase of the same campaign which was carried on in the neighbouring republic. Among other things, the Christian Science Monitor and its imitators in the United States, as well as in Canada, alleged that the Pope was responsible not only for the disaster that befel the Italian army, but also for the disruptive propaganda that brought that disaster about. This amazing fiction was repeated apparently in good faith by F. C. Walcott, Assistant Food Controller of the United States. When convinced of his error, Mr. Walcott had the manliness to sign and authorize the publication of the following retraction:

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION
WASHINGTON, D. C.

New York, January 29, 1918.

Dear Mr. Iselin:

I desire to confirm what I at once wrote to Monsignor Lavelle on the 18th instant, namely, that I much regret a statement I recently made in this city at a conference to consider Food Conservation. My statement attributed to the Pope a measure of responsibility for the Italian disaster and for the disruptive propaganda which had brought it about. I repeated thoughtlessly and without previous reflection a rumor I had heard which I had not verified and which I am now convinced and believe was untrue. I have since read the categorical denial of Cardinal Gasparri, the Pope's Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the denial of Cardinal Bourne in London, and I have also read the statement recently made by Signor Orlando, the Prime Minister of Italy, in the Italian Chamber of Deputies, as follows:

"I deplore the accusations of a general character made by the Hon. Signor Pirolini against high ecclesiastical personages—accusations that tend to hurt the supreme spiritual authority—against priests and against the Catholic party. Such accusations are unjust and offensive, because as the public are aware, the Italian clergy, both high and low, have given noble and beautiful proofs of Italian sentiments, and the great mass of the Catholics have known how to reconcile the dictates of faith with their duties towards their country."

I therefore feel that it is my duty to retract the statement I made in regard to the Pope, which I do without reserve, and I would like to correct the unfortunate and erroneous impression my remarks tended to create.

You may give this letter such publicity as your committee deems advisable to counteract the effect of my statement and its repetition by those who heard my remarks.

May I take this opportunity to express the appreciation of my colleagues and myself of the uniform and effective co-operation which the National Food Administration has received from our Catholic fellow-citizens and the Catholic clergy?

I am
Very sincerely yours,

F. C. WALCOTT.

ADRIAN ISELIN, ESQ.
Chairman Catholic Laymen's Committee,
36 Wall Street, New York.

And, Mr. Speaker, if I have any further suggestion to make to the hon. member for Durham it is that he should now be man enough to follow Mr. Walcott's example.

Before dismissing this part of my subject let me pay a tribute to a class of citizens whom we of the minority are anxious should not be confounded with those who have been false to the Liberal party and the Liberal leader. By contrast with these promoters of sectarian bigotry and national hate, there stand out in noble relief the Protestant Liberals who withstood the gales of passion and prejudice, who turned a deaf ear to the taunts of friends, to the sneers of neighbours, to the insults of opponents, and amid it all remained true to their political principles and their party leader.

These are the men, who within my lifetime, have been unshaken and unchanged, while there raged about them the storms of a dual language agitation, of a Jesuits Estates Act agitation, of an Equal Rights agitation, of a Ne Temere decree agitation, and, most recently, of an anti-French and anti-Catholic agitation. They are not only the pride of the minorities whose rights they have steadfastly espoused and defended, but they are the truest exemplars of Canadian citizenship and the only hope of the future —if hope there can be in the future of a country so race and creed-cursed as Canada is. If I have fault to find with others, I have only praise, and admiration and affection for them, and I deem this the time and the place to make such a declaration in their regard.

Now, Sir, let me turn to another subject. While the War-times Election Act was under discussion in this House last session, many predictions were made as to the irregularities and the crimes that would be sure to attend its operation. No matter how extravagant the prophecies may have seemed at the time, they fell far short of describing what actually took place in the election itself. With the exception of certain constituencies in the province of Quebec, there was no riding in Canada in which a contest took place that did not supply proof to justify all that was said about the War-times Elections Act by its critics in this House. In point of fact, irregularities and crimes were committed which it was impossible to forecast, and the record of these will in due time be presented to Parliament. Meanwhile, let me cite the views expressed by Premier Martin of Saskatchewan, prior to the date of the election, with regard to this notorious piece of war-time legislation. In a statement published on December 8th, 1917, Premier Martin expressed himself as follows:

> In regard to the War Times Election Act, I have already expressed my opinion with respect to the disfranchisement of certain classes of our people. I regard this feature of the act as un-British and un-democratic, calculated to create distrust and suspicion and to delay the Canadianizing of many of these people for a generation.
>
> Moreover, apart from the disfranchisement provisions of the election act, machinery is created which is in the hands of unscrupulous men and may be used in such a way as to win any constituency. This portion of the act renders possible the disfranchisement of any citizen living in western Canada. The Union Government should see to it that the election machinery provided is fairly used, they should see that every person entitled to vote is given an opportunity so to do. If they do not act honestly and fairly in the administration of their election machinery, my confidence in them will be shaken. They should also repeal the act at the first session of Parliament after the election.

As the greatest care was taken to exclude that part of Premier Martin's manifesto from the Government-controlled press in eastern Ontario, I will ask the privilege, Sir, of reading that last sentence again, in case my friends from the Prairie Provinces may not have heard me when I read it first

> They should also repeal the Act at the first Session of Parliament after the election.

While the views thus stated by Premier Martin were primarily intended for the benefit of his western friends, they attracted general attention on account of the fact that Mr. Martin had for several years been an honoured member of this House, and that many of his Liberal associates, particularly those who were intimate with him in this Chamber, regard him as a man destined to play a larger part in the affairs of the Dominion. That Premier Martin's fears as to the way the election machinery would be operated were well-founded will require only a few examples to prove. Let me take the first of these from a newspaper supporting the Government. The Evening Telegram of Toronto, in its issue of Monday, December 17th, 1917, thus referred to the way in which the Act had been applied in Toronto:

> Toronto's loyalty to the cause of Union Government was traded on by ward politicians. Patriots had temporarily overlooked the blunders or crimes perpetrated in the non-enrollment of so many disfranchised women. Laurier would have been aided by the public mention of these crimes.

Mr. Speaker, that sentence is so delicious, as exemplifying the peculiar type of mentality that exists only in Toronto, that I will read it again:

> Laurier would have been aided by the public mention of these crimes.

The article proceeds:

> Laurier cannot now be aided by the fullest proclamation of the truth that the whole system of preparing a war-time voters' list in Toronto worked out as a disgrace to Union Government. The Union Government abolished patronage. That same Government was represented in Toronto by a small, incompetent organization. That organization left the Trail of the Serpent of Patronage over every move in the miserable game of playing with the manufacture of a war-time voters' list.

The appointment of the returning officers was Patronage.

The appointment of the enumerators was Patronage.

Toronto is disgraced by the Tragedy of the War-Time Voters' List. The joint authors of that Tragedy are the red-tape officials in Ottawa and the Patronage peddlers who pose as Conservative leaders in Toronto.

The language of the Toronto Telegram that the whole system of preparing the War-time Voters' List worked out as a disgrace to the Union Government exactly fits the case in scores of other constituencies as well, and yet this afternoon the Right Hon. The Prime Minister in his speech said that "there never was an election in Canada conducted more decently and fairly."

Now let us turn to the West and see what happened there. The most illuminating exposure of election misdeeds that has come under my notice was that contained in the speech delivered by the Hon. A. G. MacKay, of Edmonton, who spoke in that city in January last. That speech was published in full in the Edmonton Weekly Topics of January 11th, 1918, and it should be read by every person who is under obligation to familiarize himself with the possibilities of election crookedness under the War-time Election Act. It was followed by an article in the Edmonton Bulletin summarizing many of the details given by Mr. MacKay, and it will afford an idea of what went on generally among the election officials if I read a few paragraphs at the beginning of that summary, which were as follows:

The result of the polling in the electoral district of West Edmonton gives a substantial majority to the Hon. Frank Oliver as far as the home vote is concerned. This majority is entirely remarkable in view of the evident determination to disfranchise as many of the electors as would be necessary to win the election for the Government candidate. If he did not win it is only because the election officials fell down on their job. They could just as well have put enough on or left enough off to do the trick. Their only failure was they did not think they needed as many as they did. There are various ways of disfranchisement. One is by statute direct. That was done. Another is by empowering the enumerator to enfranchise and disfranchise. That was done. Still another is to so place the polls that they are out of reach of the voters. That was done. Still another is not to provide enough ballots at polls known to be favourable to the opposition. That was done. To deal only with the two last mentioned cases:

Grouard Poll No. 210.

There were 183 votes polled at Grouard poll No. 210, 153 for Oliver, 28 for Griesbach, 2 ballots were spoiled. The polling division extended for ten townships from south to north, and eight from east to west, that is, it was sixty miles by fifty, not including a vast northern and largely uninhabited area. The settlements within the area mentioned had been given seven polls at the provincial election last spring, and four in the elections of 1911. There were some 400 names on the voters' list. Whitefish Lake settlement, fifty miles by trail from Grouard, had been given a poll in the provincial elections, but no poll was given it in the recent election. Two voters traveled from Whitefish lake to Grouard and arrived in time to poll their votes, but five others who were on the way did not arrive until after the close of the poll owing to the day being very cold and stormy and the travel being consequently slow. The whole settlement, comprising about fifty voters, excepting the two mentioned, was effectually disfranchised by the refusal of a poll. From Indiana siding on the Dunvegan railway, where a number of fishermen were at work, the distance to the Grouard poll was over twenty miles.

The conditions at McLennan were almost exactly duplicated at Grouard. First, the people were disfranchised by the refusal of polls, and in case that would not be sufficient they were not given enough ballots. Only 150 ballots had been supplied at Grouard, although there were upwards of 400 names on the lists. The 150 ballots were exhausted about 2.30 p.m. After some delay the deputy returning officer permitted the use of substitute ballots by duly qualified voters. Thirty-three such ballots were used before the poll closed, and were counted by the deputy returning officer.

It may be mentioned that the Grouard settlement sent a very large proportion of men to the war.

Fahler Settlement, Polls 208 and 226.

The Fahler case has been stated in full already, but a resumé may be given. Fahler settlement occupies the greater part of the townships 77 and 78, ranges 21 and 22, west of the fifth meridian. Upwards of 400 homesteads are taken and a large proportion of the settlers are in occupation. The Dunvegan railway traverses the settlement from east to west. There were five polls in the settlement in the provincial election of last spring. No poll was given in the settlement at the recent election. The part of the settlement in range 21 was included in McLennan poll distant from six to eighteen miles. Range 22 was included in the Smoky River poll, distant twelve to thirty miles. An old trail through the woods had to be reopened to allow the voters to reach the poll at the Smoky. There was no population at the Smoky except two men at the railway pump house. A party of thirty-one voters of Falher left home on Saturday, cut their way through the woods, reached the poll at noon on Monday, and voted. Twelve others who left on Sunday failed to reach the poll on Monday. All these voters had to camp outside for four nights in bitterly cold weather.

And in the face of that the Prime Minister this afternoon said: "Never was there an election in Canada conducted more decently and fairly." The article proceeds:

The vote was 31 Oliver, 5 Griesbach. The Griesbach voters were the railway pump men and the officers of the poll. The Falher settlers tried to secure railway accommodation but were refused it.

The settlers in range 21 started for McLennan on Sunday morning and most of them arrived on Sunday night. There were only 100 ballot papers in the box. When these were all used, substitute ballots to the number of 81 were issued by the deputy returning officer. These were used by duly qualified voters in the regular way, but on the authority of what he gave as a wire from the returning officer the deputy refused to count these ballots, and they have not been counted, although they are in the box. The 100 regular ballots were counted, 94 Oliver, 4 Griesbach, 2 spoiled. After all the hardships they had endured nearly as many voters were disfranchised by shortage of ballots at the McLennan poll as were allowed to vote.

Such are a few of the examples of what happened in Alberta. The happenings in Saskatchewan were evidently similar in character, as may be judged by a paragraph from the Regina Leader. The Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Hon. J. A. Calder) will be able to tell the House a little later in the debate whether the Regina Leader is able to speak for what happened in Saskatchewan. The article reads:

Now that the elections are over, and the results of the polling are fairly complete, one thing stands out with startling clearness, and that is, that not only was the War-Time Elections Act a huge mistake but it was absolutely unnecesary even as a political weapon.

Perhaps no one Province in Canada was harder hit by that un-British and utterly disgraceful piece of legislation than was the Province of Saskatchewan. Nothing in the past political history of this country so aroused and antagonized our people, British-born and foreign-born, Liberal and Conservative, Protestant and Roman Catholic, as that "scrap of paper" enactment. Feeling over the defeat of Reciprocity by the eastern Tories was as nothing compared to the feeling existing in this western country against the War-Time Elections Act.

And later in the same article the Regina Leader proceeds:

We repeat, the War-Time Elections Act was a mistake no matter from what standpoint it is viewed. It created hard feelings and division where there was no necessity of doing so and when no good object could be served thereby. It has given a serious, even dangerous, setback to the Canadianizing of our non-English-speaking citizens. It has shattered the confidence of these people in what was one of this country's greatest assets in securing immigration—belief in British justice and fair play and in the pledged word of all Governments under the British flag.

Now that the elections are over and Union Government sustained, one of its first acts should be to wipe this stain off our country's honour. The people of western Canada expect this; they have a right to demand it. They do demand it.

[Mr. Murphy.]

In view of the widespread condemnation of the War-time Elections Act and of the clear call for its repeal issued by Premier Martin and by other supporters of Union Government, I shall suspend further observations on the subject until the Government shall have declared what it intends to do in the matter.

Mr. Speaker, if I have devoted considerable time to a review of some of the men and the methods employed to bring about Union Government, it is not because I think they are the chief concern of the moment. They are not. The chief concern of the moment is that Union Government has been accomplished at the expense of the loss of the good-will and confidence of three millions of Canadians. Smarting under a sense of wrongs inflicted either through disfranchisement or through wanton attacks upon their religion, three millions of Canadians are to-day sullen and distrustful, and they are not to be reinstated in their former respect for constitutional Government by the huckstering that is going on in farm tractors, postmasterships, senatorships and customs collectorships. That sort of thing may be smart trading, designed to placate certain classes and individuals, but it is not constructive statesmanship such as Canada needs at the present moment.

While such is the need of the moment, the newspapers announce that the member for Durham (Mr. Rowell) and some other ministers are chafing to get away to a conference in London. Mr. Speaker, if these ministers are well advised they will pay attention to what needs very careful attention in Canada and they will let British statesmen look after Imperial affairs in London. It is idle to pretend that several Ministers have to run off to England to the neglect of pressing Canadian matters. The unity of this Dominion is of vastly more importance to us than the discussion as to where new boundary lines for some European country are to be laid down—a discussion at which Canadian ministers would, in any event, be mere onlookers. At present Canada is governed partly from London, but mostly from Washington. Only a few days ago we were called upon to acclaim the opening of a direct wire from Ottawa to Washington. Let none of my friends on the opposite side of the House grow nervous; for the sake of cabinet harmony I will not make any allusions to the no-truck-or-trade-with-the-Yankee-campaign of 1911. What I desire to point out is that the people of this country elect their parliamentary representatives on the understanding that they will be governed from Ottawa; that Canadian public business will be transacted by Canadians in Canada. Hence, the duty of ministers, particularly at this critical period, lies in Ottawa and not in London; and if there be any business in London that cannot be transacted by letter or cable surely the High Commissioner can attend to it.

Mr. Speaker, it was an appreciation of conditions as they exist to-day that led Premier Martin to declare in his manifesto that

> There is a situation developing in this country which, if continued, will disrupt Canada.

And it was his keen realization of the need of national unity that caused him to add this:

> While there are men in the Government who were parties to the measures and the conduct which have thrown Canada into disorder to-day, still I have sufficient confidence in my friends who have entered that Government to believe . . . that they will put forth every effort to see that Canada is properly governed during the period of the war.

Before the present session shall have advanced very far it will be demonstrated whether or not the friends in whom Premier Martin expressed confidence will justify that confidence. If they do so by repealing the War-Time Elections Act, for which Premier Martin has specifically asked, and by adopting policies designed to bring people together rather than to keep them apart, they will have done much to repair the injuries from which the country is now suffering, and the continuance of which is alike inimical to national progress and to the part we all desire that Canada should play in this war.

Not only to Premier Martin's friends in the cabinet, but to all the members of the Government, to all the members of Parliament—aye, to all the people of Canada—there may be offered at this moment as an inspiration to that form of public service which alone can unify the discordant elements in our population, the example of the venerable leader of the Opposition, who takes up his new burdens in the spirit that breathed through the words of Gladstone's last Midlothian address: "While Nature cries aloud for rest, I am buckling on the armour."

Motion of Mr. Herbert M. Mowat (Parkdale), for an address to His Excellency the Governor General, agreed to.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, the House adjourned at 9.52 p.m.

Wednesday, March 20, 1918.

The House met at Two o'clock.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH.

ADDRESS IN REPLY.

On motion of Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden (Prime Minister) it was ordered that the Address to His Excellency the Governor General, adopted by the House on the 19th instant, be engrossed and presented to His Excellency by such members of the House as are of the honourable the Privy Council.

REPORTS AND PAPERS.

Report of Women's War Conference.—Hon. Mr. Rowell.

Annual Report, Department of Marine and Fisheries for the fiscal year 1916-17.—Hon. Mr. Ballantyne.

Report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

Public Accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

Statement of Governor General's Warrants.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

Statement of unforeseen expenditure.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

Report of the Ottawa Improvement Commission for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

Report of the National Battlefields Commission for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

Statement of receipts and expenditures of the Royal Society of Canada for the year ended April 30, 1917.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

Statement showing distribution of $25,000,000 advanced by the Dominion Government to the Canadian Northern Railway and its constituent companies as provided for in chapter 24 of the Statutes of 1917.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

Statement of superannuation and retiring allowances in the Civil Service during the year ended December 31, 1917.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

Interim report of R. A. Pringle, K.C., commissioner to inquire into the manufacture, sale, price and supply of newsprint in Canada.—Hon. A. K. Maclean.

SUPPLY.

On motion of Hon. A. K. Maclean (Acting Minister of Finance) it was ordered that this House do on Friday next resolve itself into a committee to consider of the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

WAYS AND MEANS.

On motion of Hon. A. K. Maclean it was ordered that this House do on Friday next resolve itself into a committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising the Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

RE-ARRANGEMENTS AND TRANSFERS OF DUTIES IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 2, to authorize re-arrangments and transfers of duties in the Public Service.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Kindly explain.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: This Bill authorizes the Governor in Council to change any department or any branch of a department from the direction of one minister to the direction of another. It has become evident that some re-arrangement of certain departments is necessary. It is a short Bill; I will read it for the information of the House:

1.—(1) The Governor in Council shall have power,—

(a) to transfer any powers, duties or functions or the control or supervision of any part of the public service from one minister of the Crown to any other minister of the Crown, or from one department or portion of the public service to any other department or portion of the public service; or

(b) to amalgamate and combine any two or more departments under one minister of the Crown and under one Deputy Minister.

(2) All orders made by the Governor in Council under the provisions of this Act shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fifteen days after they are made if Parliament is then sitting, and if not, then within fifteen days from the commencement of the next ensuing session of Parliament.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, Bill No. 3, to confer the electoral franchise upon women, was introduced and read the first time.

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 4, to provide for the time in Canada being in advance of the solar mean time during the summer months.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is this the same Bill as last year?

[Mr. A. K. Maclean.]

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is similar to last year's Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE.

On the Order for Questions being called:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: At this stage may I ask the Government, by your leave Mr. Speaker, if it is expected that the Minister of Finance (Sir Thomas White) will be in his seat this session?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I will make an announcement with regard to that to-morrow.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by asterisks).

DUTIES ON FARM IMPLEMENTS.

*Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the Government received any petition praying for the removal of duties on farm implements?

2. What action, if any, does the Government intend to take with a view to meeting the demands of the western farmers on this question?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:

1. There have been communications on the subject alluded to.

2. Any necessary announcement will be made in due course.

LORD BEAVERBROOK.

Mr. DEVLIN:

1. Has the Government of Canada paid any money directly or indirectly to Lord Beaverbrook?

2. If so, how much, and for what purpose was the money paid?

3. What was the nature of the services rendered by Lord Beaverbrook to Canada?

4. What was the nature of the campaign of propaganda, if any, and the details of such campaign?

5. What were the concrete results?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:

1 and 2. Lord Beaverbrook's services to the Canadian Government as Canadian Record Officer and as Officer in Charge of the Canadian War Records Office have been given entirely without remuneration. The expenses of the Canadian War Records Office have been paid partly out of the war vote and partly out of the profits derived from the sale of the publications, photographs and moving picture films produced under the auspices of the office. The total grant for this purpose has been $25,000, of which only a portion has been expended.

3, 4 and 5. Lord Beaverbrook's first position was that of Canadian Record Officer. His duties were, by means of daily cables, to give to the public of Canada an account of the performances of the Canadian troops. In this capacity also he wrote 'Canada in Flanders.' He was appointed Canadian Record Officer in January, 1915.

In January, 1916, the Canadian War Records Office was founded and Lord Beaverbrook was placed in charge. One of his principal tasks in this capacity was to oversee the collection, filing, copying, collation and safe keeping of the enormous quantity of official records, maps, diaries, précis and private accounts relating to the operations and activities of the Canadian troops. These will form invaluable material for the historian, and it is recognized that in this respect Canada is probably now in a better position than any other part of the Empire as a result of the work of the Canadian War Records Office.

Among other duties of the Canadian War Records Office are the preparation of a weekly communique for the Canadian and British press describing the work of the Canadian corps; the publication of the Canadian Daily Record, a news bulletin containing information from Canada and circulated among the troops and at the training camps; the taking and publication and exhibition of photographs depicting the operations of the Canadian corps, and also the taking and producing of moving pictures for the same purpose. The Canadian War Records Office has also founded a periodical publication, The Canadian War Pictorial, in which are published photographs of various scenes taken by the official photographer. The office has also published 'Canada in Khaki,' a war book of a popular character, consisting of pictures, stories and poems dealing with the Canadian Army, and largely contributed to by officers and men at the front.

Within such lines have Lord Beaverbrook's duties been confined so far as his position under the Canadian Government is concerned. His task was to discover and make known primarily to the people of Canada, and incidentally to other people, the story of the doings of the Canadian soldiers. The means at his command included the press, the printed volume, photographs and moving pictures. These have all been used for the purpose indicated. It is in such a sense and in such a sense alone that the Canadian War Records Office has done propaganda work for the Canadian Government, and in this sense of course every belligerent Government engaged in this war has conducted active propaganda.

A report of the work of the Canadian War Records Office, dated the 11th January, 1917, was made by Lord Beaverbrook (then Sir Max Aitken) to the Prime Minister, and a copy was laid on the table of the House on the 31st January, 1917. (See Sessional Paper No. 61).

PENSION COMMISSIONERS FOR CANADA.

*MR. DEVLIN:

1. Who are the Pension Commissioners for Canada?
2. What are their salaries?
3. Do they, or any of them, draw a pension or pensions from the Government?
4. If so, who, and how much?
5. If any such Pension Commissioner is in receipt of a pension, or drew a pension, how long did he serve overseas?
6. What length of time did he serve in France?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:

1. Commander J. K. L. Ross, chairman; Colonel R. H. Labatt, member, and Major J. L. Todd, member.

2. $5,000 per annum.

3. Yes. One of them.

4. Colonel R. H. Labatt draws a full disability pension.

5 and 6. Colonel R. H. Labatt enlisted in August, 1914, and proceeded overseas with the First Contingent in September, 1914. During training in England he was operated on for duodenal ulcer in February, 1915. Upon recovery he proceeded to France to command the 4th Battalion on May 13, 1915. Owing to disease diagnosed by the R.A.M.C. at Osborne House as valvular disease of the heart, he was returned from France on June 15, 1915, and recommended for six months' rest and then for light duty. He returned to Canada about the end of July, 1915. Upon arrival in Canada he went upon the staff of the 2nd Military District to lecture and subsequently on the 1st of July, 1916, was put in command of Niagara Camp, which he relinquished upon taking over his duties as a member of the Board of Pension Commissioners on September 11, 1916. He was boarded for discharge and recommended to be sent to the hospital for three months, but was subsequently allowed to pass under his own control on the understanding that he was to lay up for three months, which he hopes on the return of the other Commissioners to be able to do.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS.

Mr. L. A. LAPOINTE:

1. When and upon whose recommendation was the office of Food Controller in Canada authorized and established?

2. To which Ministerial Department does the Food Controller report, and what member of the Cabinet, if any, is responsible for the administration of the office of Food Controller?

3. What has been the total amount incurred as salaries for Food Controller and his assistants and staff at Ottawa and throughout Canada from the establishment of the office up to and including end of February, 1918?

4. What has been the total expense of Food Controller's Office at Ottawa and throughout Canada, including rents, furnishing, equipment, heat, light, salaries, travelling expenses, stationery, printing, advertising, telegrams, telephones, postage, and all other expenses of Food Controller's Office at Ottawa and branch offices throughout Canada, since the establishment of the office, up to and including February, 1918?

5. What was the total cost of administration of Food Controller's Office at Ottawa and throughout Canada, including rents, furnishings, equipments, heat, light, salaries, travelling expenses, stationery, printing, advertising, telegrams, telephones, postage, etc., including all and every expense of Food Controller's Office at Ottawa and branch offices throughout Canada for each of following months, viz.: December, 1917, and February, 1918?

6. Are there any claims for salary or expenses from the Food Controller's Office outstanding or in dispute; if so, what is the amount involved?

7. How many employees are there on the Food Controller's staff at Ottawa and throughout Canada?

8. How many of the employees are returned soldiers who have been on Active Service since 1914?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

1. What was the rate of commission paid in connection with the Victory Loan?

2. How much was paid in such commission, and to whom?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. DEVLIN:

For a return showing the number of paymasters or others of the various regiments recruited since August, 1914, who are short in their funds, giving the names and addresses and amount of shortage of each one, showing the action the Government has taken in the matter.

Mr. DEVLIN:

For a return showing the names of the Staff of the Hospital Commission, the number of persons employed, their names, duties, salaries, former occupation and amounts paid to each for travelling expenses.

Mr. DEVLIN:

For a return showing the names of all persons employed in Ottawa in the Military Service Council, their salaries and former occupations.

[Sir Robert Borden.]

Mr. DEVLIN:

For a copy of the Order in Council recently passed making provisions for the staff, the number of persons to be employed and their salaries, in the Food Controller's Office. Also a list of the names of those at present employed, showing their respective salaries and duties, former occupations, where formerly employed and salary received in former occupation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

For a statement in detail showing the expenditure in connection with the National Service Board for salaries, newspaper advertisements, travelling expenses, and all other expenses, respectively.

MILITARY SERVICE.

TREATY BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND UNITED STATES.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

For a copy of any treaty between Great Britain and the United States, permitting the conscription of British subjects in the United States for military service and of American citizens residing in British Dominions.

He said: The subject which is involved in this motion is certainly one of very great importance. The matter was yesterday referred to casually in the observations of the Prime Minister, and in answer to a question of my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau), my right hon. friend did not seem to give precise information as to the nature of the convention which had been made between Great Britain and the United States; but I understand, at all events—and it has been so understood by the press—that a convention has been adopted by Great Britain and the United States permitting the Canadian authorities to recruit British subjects residing in the United States and permitting the American authorities also to recruit in Canada.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That is, their own subjects?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Of course, their own subjects. I look upon this convention as a step in advance of anything that we have known amongst civilized nations up to the present time. It is certainly a very great advance in our ideas, and I cannot but congratulate the Government upon the step they have taken in that matter. Great Britain and France to-day are as united as two nations in Europe can be or ever have been, but I am sure it would not be thought possible in Great Britain that a recruiting sergeant should go from London to Paris to recruit a British subject, or that a French officer should go from Paris to London to recruit a French subject.

I have seen by the papers—how correct is the report I do not know—that some arrangement has been made, but I have always doubted it. But if it is so, I rejoice all the more. That would, indeed, be a very wide departure from the policy upon which this Government came into office in 1911, when they would have "no truck or trade with the Yankees." I do not know that they are very enthusiastic even now about trucking or trading with the Yankees, but the force of circumstances is such that they have been compelled to have a great deal more truck and trade with the Yankees than we thought it possible this country ever would have under their administration. To-day, we go much further than trucking with the Yankees; we allow the Yankees to come into our own country and exercise what is practically the right of sovereignty in recruiting their own people, and the Yankees allow us the same privilege in their country. That is quite an advance in the policy of my right hon. friend, and I rejoice at it and congratulate him upon it. When the announcement was made, I could not but believe that this arrangement was one of the good effects of the entrance into the Cabinet of some Liberals, who had convinced their colleagues that they should give up their old opinions about "no truck or trade with the Yankees" and realize that the closer our relations with our neighbours to the south the better for the advancement of civilization at large. A great deal of the trouble in this world arises from distrust—distrust between nations, distrust between creeds, and distrust between races. Human nature, after all, is very much the same the world over, and I think all will agree that it would be better for the world in general, and for this country in particular, if this distrust could be allayed. So I said to myself: Well, it may be that I was in the wrong after all, and that my friends who went into the Cabinet were in the right, for it looks as if they were in process of making Liberals of their Conservative colleagues; and if that is really so, I do not know that I shall be very sorry for their entrance into the Cabinet. If they could bring their colleagues to sound Liberal doctrines I would forgive them a good deal.

But I was too previous in my congratulations. My joy was of short duration, because, if I am to believe a paper which is very close to the Government, it is precisely the reverse that is taking place; instead of Liberals converting the Tories to sound Liberal principles, the Liberals are going over to Toryism. Here is an item which appeared in The Toronto News of the 14th instant. I will not say that the Toronto News is an organ of the Government, but it is very close to the Government, and I think, as a rule, reflects the Government's opinion. It says:

> Western telegraph despatches represent Hon. Charles A. Dunning, Director of Food Production, as advocating the removal of all duties on agricultural implements. He is said to have advised the Alberta Legislature to ask the Union Government for this concession, and the Legislature adopted a resolution in accordance with the representation. If Mr. Dunning has made the statements attributed to him he has gone farther than he should have done. The Unionist government was formed on the absolute understanding agreed to by all the western ministers that the tariff should remain in abeyance until after the war.

Is it or is it not a fact, that when hon. gentlemen from the Western Provinces entered the Cabinet there was an absolute understanding by all the western ministers that the tariff should remain in abeyance until after the war? If that be so, I am surprised, because in another paper called the Farmers' Magazine, published in Toronto, I find an account of a conversation between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) and Mr. Dunning, the Director of Food Production, which goes to show that the Minister of Agriculture had advised Mr. Dunning to go and buy tractors across the line because the duty was going to be remitted. The article is entitled, "How Crerar got his Tractors—Henry Ford begins output of his 1,000 Tractor order for Canada April the first," and begins with Mr. Crerar saying:

> "Dunning, go to Detroit and get Henry Ford to sell us 1,000 tractors at a rock-bottom price to help our farmers to win out on this food production drive."

Mr. Dunning replies:

> "Yes, I know, Crerar, but how in the name of common sense can we do anything with this prohibitive duty on tractors? The farmers say it is too large an expense."

And my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture replies:

> "Easy! The Cabinet has consented to do the sensible thing and forego the duty for one year. Your course is clear sailing. Try it out at once. The farmers want all the machines they can get."

So here we have the statement of a paper close to the Government that there were to be no tariff changes at all during the war, and on the other hand, the statement from another paper that the Minister of Agriculture had told Mr. Dunning that there would be a change in the tariff so far as tractors are concerned. So the matter is in doubt, but at all events it is a fact that tractors up to a certain price have been put on the free list. But there is something more important than that. Was there such an agreement as is mentioned by the Toronto News which, after stating that there was this agreement to have no tariff changes during the war, says:

No room for doubt was left upon this issue.—

Mr. SPEAKER: I hope the right hon. gentleman will not proceed too far with his argument on the tariff unless he does it by way of analogy, because he is now quite far afield from the subject of his motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I will not go very far afield. I will just conclude this quotation and then I am done. I am asking for information on a subject connected with what I am reading; that is all. The Toronto News says:

No room for doubt was left upon this issue. Independent agricultural candidates in prairie constituencies signed an undertaking to this effect before they obtained the government endorsation.

Is it or is it not a fact, that some of my old friends whom I see on the other side of the House signed such an agreement as is mentioned here? Did they agree, before they got their endorsation, that there should be no tariff changes during the war? If so, Mr. Dunning ought to be advised, because he evidently wants to have not only tractors but all agricultural implements put on the free list. He wants to have cheap production; we all want that; and it will strike everybody that if we are to have cheaper production one of the best things we can do is to have cheaper implements. Now, Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think it was hardly worth while to interrupt my right hon. friend, because it was perfectly evident that in the course of his discussion of Motion No. 13 he had unfortunately picked up his notes on No. 16, and so he went on to discuss farm tractors on a motion concerning a military convention with the United States. His observations with regard to farm tractors do not seem to be very closely relevant to the question of the Military Convention, and I shall merely say a few words about the convention itself. My right hon. friend's time-worn joke about having "no trade or truck with the Yankees" has done service on a great many occasions. It must be tired by this time, and my right hon. friend might give it a rest for a while. As far as the military convention is concerned, it has been entered into, but I do not think it can be laid on the Table until it is ratified. It is very much along the line which is to be adopted in the convention between Great Britain and the United States, if I understand it aright. In fact, the convention between the United States and Canada was the first one agreed to, and it will probably form the basis of the conventions which will be entered into between the United States and Great Britain, and between the United States and other European nations. There is no objection to the motion, but I do not think the document can be brought down until it has been ratified.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: By the Senate?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes, and by the British Government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understand.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It will have to be ratified by both Governments.

Motion agreed to.

WAR MISSION AT WASHINGTON.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved:

For a copy of the Orders in Council creating the War Mission at Washington, appointments to the same, with instructions as to the extent of its powers and scope of its work.

He said: May I ask my right hon. friend if he can tell me from memory the names of the members of the war mission?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. Lloyd Harris, Mr. Ross McMaster, Mr. A. H. Scott, Montreal, and Mr. Frank Rolph, Toronto. Mr. Lloyd Harris is the Chairman, and the Orders in Council have already been brought down.

Motion agreed to.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR RETURN.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

For a copy of all Orders in Council creating the War Trade Board, appointments to the same, instructions, and reports from the Board to this date.

ADMISSION FREE OF DUTY OF FARM TRACTORS AND OTHER IMPLEMENTS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

For a copy of all Orders in Council, reports and correspondence with respect to the admission free of duty of farm tractors and other agricultural implements.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Perhaps my right hon. friend may wish to say something about the Military Convention on this motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am satisfied with what I have said.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERY TREATY.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

For a copy of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States concerning fisheries between Canada and the United States.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is impossible to bring down a copy of the treaty. It has not yet been made. Negotiations are still pending.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Dropped.

AMENDMENT OF PENITENTIARY ACT.

The Order of the day being called,

The Minister of Justice—In Committee of the Whole—The following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Penitentiary Act, Chapter 147 of the Revised Statutes, and to provide that the Governor in Council may appoint a Superintendent of Penitentiaries, who shall be an officer of the Department of Justice, and superintend the administration and business of the penitentiaries, and who shall be paid a salary of four thousand dollars per annum; and three Inspectors of Penitentiaries who shall be classified as officers of the Department of Justice, in subdivision B of the First Division of the Civil Service, and shall each receive a minimum salary of twenty-five hundred dollars per annum.

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY: I beg to be allowed to drop this notice, as an error has crept in it as it is drawn, and, subject to renewing it in the correct form, it will be dropped.

Motion dropped.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 5 to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill is to make a variety of amendments to the Dominion Lands Act. Some of the main amendments were before the House in a similar Bill which was introduced, but which did not secure the assent of Parliament, at the last session. When I make that statement I know that most of the hon. members present will understand the main purpose of the Bill. It provides facilities for pre-emption holders to obtain loans upon their pre-emptions prior to the issue of the patents. It provides in various ways for facilitating the working of the Act, but there is no clause in the Bill providing for anything in the way of a fundamental, important or radical change. But, by way of explanation, I think it well to refer to a matter of some importance particularly to hon. members representing western constituencies. Mainly with a view to meeting the evident requirements of the Soldiers' Settlement Board, in connection with soldiers' settlement, it has been decided to withdraw entirely the privilege of the pre-emption of purchased homesteads. The clause of the Act which provides for the purchase of pre-emption homesteads will cease to have effect from and after to-morrow. From that time the privilege of free homesteading, or the privilege of taking land, will be confined to the ordinary homesteading right. It might also be added that this right is being substantially curtailed as well by a provision for the exclusion from its exercise of very considerable areas of western land within proximity to railways. This is being done at the request of the Soldiers' Settlement Board and under the provisions of the Act of last session establishing that Board.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House adjourned at 2.55 p.m.

Thursday, March 21, 1918.

The House met at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READING.

Bill No. 6, respecting The Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company.—Mr. Stevens.

Bill No. 7, respecting The Canadian Indemnity Company.—Mr. Allen.

Bill No. 8, respecting The Cosmos Cotton Company.—Mr. Spinney.

Bill No. 9, respecting Fraser Lumber Company, Limited, and Fraser Companies, Limited.—Mr. Elkin.

Bill No. 10, to enable the Western Power Company of Canada, Limited, to own and operate the Railway of the Western Canada Power Company, Limited.—Mr. Stacey.

HON. SIR THOMAS WHITE.

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER AS TO HIS ABSENCE BECAUSE OF ILL-HEALTH.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN: In reply to the question addressed to me yesterday by the leader of the Opposition, it is my duty, but with great regret, to inform the House that the health of Sir Thomas White has been seriously impaired by the enormous responsibilities and the severe and unremitting labours which have been imposed upon him in the performance of his duties since the outbreak of war. No burdens of anything like the same magnitude have ever been imposed upon a Minister of Finance in Canada for a like period. Sir Thomas White's keen realization of duty impelled him to throw into the task his utmost strength and energy. His wide business experience and his great ability enabled him to render to Canada a service for which the whole country should be grateful. After my return to Ottawa about the middle of January I became convinced that he required immediate and prolonged rest, and I strongly urged him to put aside his work for such a period as would bring about a thorough restoration of his health. He finally agreed to do so; and upon consulting an eminent physician he was informed of the imperative necessity that he should desist from all active work for a period of six months at least. There is not the slightest doubt that Sir Thomas White would greatly desire to be relieved from his present responsibilities, but on the other hand he finds himself confronted with the duty of remaining at his post, if at all possible, until the conclusion of the war. His colleagues would gladly undertake to carry on the work of his department during the present session, in order that he may have the necessary rest; and the duties of Minister of Finance have been, during his absence, entrusted to the very capable hands of Mr. Maclean. I am not confident, however, that Sir Thomas White will find it consistent with his ideal of duty to remain absent during the session while still continuing as Minister of Finance. On the other hand, his colleagues naturally shrink from asking him to resume, at the risk of a permanent breakdown of his health, the crushing burdens which he has been sustaining during nearly four years of war. I am in correspondence with him and any further announcement will be delayed until after the Easter holidays.

ARGYLL HOUSE EMPLOYEES.
STATEMENT BY SIR ROBERT BORDEN.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The attention of Sir Edward Kemp, Minister of the Overseas Military Forces, has been directed to certain animadversions which, from time to time, have appeared in the press with regard to the officers and men who are employed at headquarters at Argyll House in London. Argyll House is the headquarters for some hundreds of thousands of men who are now engaged in France or in Great Britain in the military service of this Dominion. In a telegram received recently from Sir Edward Kemp he has asked me to make public the following statement, and I accordingly do so:

Of seventy-six officers and two hundred and nine other ranks employed at Argyll House fifty-five officers and one hundred and twenty-eight other ranks have seen service in the Field, the great majority of whom were evacuated owing to wounds. Sixty-four of the other ranks without overseas service are at present unfit for general service. On becoming fit they will immediately be replaced by returned casualties. May I direct attention to the fact that the officers in charge of this responsible work at Argyll House are men of high reputation. They are Canadian citizens whose names for the most part are household words in Canada. Generally they have abandoned occupations at great sacrifice to perform a service for their country. Heads of branches have seen service at the Front and they are continually pressing claims to be freed from onerous, difficult and exacting tasks with which they have to deal at headquarters in order that they may return to the Front.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I suggest that it would be advisable to have the names of those men?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I will get them.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I notice that the name "Argyll House" is employed. Does that include all the service in and around the headquarters in London?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I really do not know. I will ascertain?

Sir SAM HUGHES: I think it will be found that it does not.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, Bill No. 11, respecting the Department of Immigration and Colonization, was introduced and read the first time.

SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, Bill No 12, respecting the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment, was introduced and read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by asterisks).

LEAVE-OF-ABSENCE BOARD APPEALS.

Mr. GLASS:

1. Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the urgent need of more speedy action on the part of Leave-of-Absence Boards in disposing of appeals of men who have had farm experience, and whose services will be required immediately for spring work, on the farms and for seeding?

2. Has the Government taken into consideration the probable need of the appointment of additional Leave-of-Absence Boards with a view to the more expeditious disposal of appeals by men required for farm work?

General MEWBURN:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC INFORMATION FOR CANADA.

Mr. DEVLIN:

1. Is there a Director of Public Information for Canada?

2. If so, what is his name?

3. What salary is he paid?

4. What was his former occupation?

5. What Department of the Government has control of this office?

6. How many persons are employed in the office by the Director of Public Information?

7. What are the names of each?

8. What salary is each one receiving?

9. What was the former occupation of each and their respective salaries?

10. What is the nature of the work being done?

11. What is the estimated cost of maintaining the office per month?

Mr. ROWELL:

1. Yes.

2. M. E. Nichols.

3. $5,000 per year.

4. Newspaper editor.

5. President of the Privy Council.

6. Ten.

7, 8, and 9. Frank Yeigh, $300 per month, formerly lecturer and organizer $350 per month.

W. S. LeSueur, $150 per month, formerly advertising manager, $200 per month.

Miss B. A. Macleod, $75 per month, formerly stenographer Imperial Munitions Board, $80 per month.

Miss W. Wilson, $100 per month, formerly journalist $100 per month.

Miss M. Currie, $65 per month, formerly stenographer Federal Press, $65 per month.

Miss M. J. Roe, $60 per month, recommended by Civil Service Commission.

Miss R. G. MacLeod, $60 per month, formerly stenographer Militia Department, $56 per month.

Charles Brooks, $25 per month, office boy, $20 per month.

Captain William Wallace, M.C., and Lieut. I. D. Johnson are also employed in the office of the Director of Public Information as editors of the Canadian Daily Record, but they are paid by the Militia Department, receiving the pay of their respective ranks. Neither Captain Wallace nor Lieut. Johnson has yet been discharged from the C.E.F., in which they were serving.

10. The work carried on by the Director of Public Information is directed along the lines of giving the public the fullest possible information concerning the war and war problems, at home and abroad.

The Director of Public Information keeps in close touch with Government activities and with the work of the boards and commissions specially constituted to meet problems arising from the war. The facilities of his office are at the disposal of these various departments of government, boards, and commissions, to prepare, direct, or advise in publicity campaigns and are being utilized for that purpose.

The director will also keep in touch with the Department of Propaganda in Great Britain and with the Committee of Public Information in the United States, so as to provide the Canadian people with fuller information relating to the war and activities of the Allied Nations.

A special work undertaken by the Director of Public Information is the preparation of summaries of news and opinion of the British Empire and foreign countries, with special reference to problems arising from the war. This information will be presented in the form of a weekly review.

The Director of Public Information has also taken over the general supervision of the Canadian Daily Record, published for the use of the Canadian soldiers overseas.

Of the various activities of the Director of Public Information, particular mention may be made of the War Lecture Bureau organized early last December through which a large number of voluntary workers have been enlisted in the work of delivering patriotic speeches. The bureau is active in nearly every province in Canada and addresses have been delivered to approximately 400,000 people. It has co-operated in local campaigns for the Patriotic and Red Cross Funds and is being utilized in the campaigns for Farm Labour and Greater Production.

11. Approximately $4,000 per month, of which nearly one-half is expended on the Canadian Daily Record published for the Canadian soldiers overseas.

EXPORTATION OF NEWSPRINT AND MECHANICAL WOOD PULP.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1 Has an Order in Council been passed providing that newsprint paper and mechanical wood pulp are among the goods of which export is prohibited except under license issued by the Minister of Customs at the request of the War Trade Board?

2. If so, what is the object of said Order in Council?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: 1. Yes.

2. The object in passing the Order in Council was to assist in the control and supply of newsprint for domestic purposes.

IMPERIAL MUNITIONS BOARD.

*Mr. DEVLIN:

*1. During the months of October, November or December, 1917, did the staff of the Imperial Munitions Board do any work for the Government in connection with the copying of lists showing the names of soldiers' wives and soldiers' dependents?

2. If so, who paid the various members of the staff of the Imperial Munitions Board for doing this work?

3. For what purpose were these lists used?

4. Did any member of the staff of the Militia Department arrange to have the work done?

5. If so, what is his name?

6. On whose instructions were the lists copied?

General MEWBURN:

1. There is no record of any such work having been done for the Government.

2. and 3. Answered by No. 1.

4, 5 and 6. There is no record in the Militia Department of any such instructions, nor was there any payment made on account of such expenditure.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

For a copy of all Orders in Council appointing members of the National Service Board, and all reports made individually or collectively by the members of the Board.

QUESTION PASSED AS MOTION FOR RETURN.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT:

Who were the officers of the Engineer Training Depot stationed at the St. Johns, Quebec, barracks during the months of October and December, 1917? Who were the officers of the Engineers Training Depot stationed at St. Johns, Quebec, barracks on the 17th of December, 1917? Where did these officers enlist and where did these officers reside before their enlistment? Where were these officers residing at the time of their enlistment?

RURAL MAIL CARRIERS' CONTRACTS.

Mr. J. H. BURNHAM (W. Peterborough) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, Parliament should provide that the Postmaster General shall have power to revise rural mail carriers' contracts not yet fully executed in order that the service may not suffer from conditions bearing unfairly on the said carriers arising from sudden rise in prices due to unusual circumstances and unfairly affecting the rate of remuneration contracted for.

He said: My object in bringing this motion before the House is that mail carriers, after they have entered into certain obligations, sometimes find themselves, owing to circumstances over which they have no control and which they could not reasonably be expected to have taken into consideration, placed in such a position that they have a moral right to appeal for a revision of their contract, but the Postmaster General has no power to revise the contract in any way. When he is apprised of these unusual circumstances, he replies that he has no power to revise the contract, and the consequence is that there is no reconsideration. I, myself, know of cases where mail couriers are going behind daily, as a plain statement of their expenditures shows, and the result is that the country is really taking advantage of these men by holding them strictly to their contract. A great injustice is done these couriers solely because the Postmaster General has not the power that other ministers of the Crown have, under different circumstances, of revising a contract or improving its conditions. The Postmaster General simply has to shut out all consideration of the matter, and this works a very great hardship. The Government should not take undue advantage of any man, especially of men so necessary to the business of the country as mail couriers, and since the desire of the House can only be that all the people shall be treated fairly, I fancy the House, if it will but think of the matter for a moment, will be only too glad to empower the Postmaster General to revise these contracts so as to enable him to do justice in every case where a grievance is clearly shown.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Acting Postmaster General): The motion which the hon. gentleman makes looks to the creating of a power in the Postmaster General to "revise," by which I understand he intends to convey the idea of altering the conditions of the contracts that have been entered into for the carriage of rural mail. Those contracts were entered into after calling for tenders, and as a rule there was some competition and some difference of prices. It is not impossible—it is, in fact, highly probable—that there are cases (quite a few have been brought to the attention of the department where it is contended, and in many of them it may be true, that conditions have so changed by reason of circumstances quite unforeseen as to make the prices of the original tenders and the prices of the contracts made upon them inadequate. But it hardly seems to me that the proper remedy in those cases is to empower the Postmaster General to revise the contracts and enter into new contracts with the individuals at present holding them. It would seem to me that the proper method of dealing with these cases, if the conditions of the contracts to-day are, by reason of unforeseen circumstances, inequitable, would be to cancel the existing contracts and call for new tenders, which tenders would be made in view of and under the existing conditions of to-day. I may say that where it has been made clear to the department that there was serious loss resulting from entirely unforeseen circumstances, in not a few instances the contracts have been cancelled and new tenders called for, and I think I may say we are inclined to continue that policy. It does seem to me that it would be an unjustifiable procedure simply to modify the conditions of existing contracts in the direction of increasing the prices; that, in effect, would be making a new contract, and where there is a question of making a new contract the proper thing in the public interest, in order that the best price obtainable under existing conditions should be had, and the fairest course to those who may seek to do this work would appear to be to proceed as I have suggested. The department is quite prepared to aid in that way whenever a case is made showing that there is serious loss on the part of the contractor. In view of that declaration—and I think my hon. friend will recognize that this is the more equitable course both from the point of view of the public interest and the point of view of all those who may be in a position to carry out this work—I would suggest to the hon. member that, perhaps, he might feel justified in withdrawing his motion.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX: The rural mail delivery system is certainly a great boon, particularly to the farmers, and I am glad it has spread rapidly in the far West as well as in the eastern provinces. But, useful and progressive a system as it is, the danger lies in the fact that the expenditure may be increased unduly if some safeguards are not provided. I quite agree with what the Acting Postmaster General (Hon. C. J. Doherty) says. My own experience in the Post Office Department leads me to believe that when tenders are called quite a number will always be submitted. It is not within my recollection that the department on any occasion received no tenders when tenders were called for. I agree with the member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) that the high cost of living and the circumstances of the war have changed and modified considerably the old state of things. Still, it is to be remembered that in every contract with the Post Office Department there is a proviso that the Postmaster General may cancel the contract at any time for good cause; therefore, if a mail carrier find that he is aggrieved by conditions arising out of the high cost of living or that he does not receive enough for the performance of his duties, he can at any time state his case to the minister, who, if he is fair, will cancel the contract and call for new tenders. We have to check carefully the expenditure of every department, and we cannot provide too many safeguards in the operation of a system which entails such a large expenditure as does the rural mail delivery. Some years ago the Minister of Public Works could spend practically any amount of money without calling for tenders if the expenditure in question could be considered as unforeseen. The Government of the day put a check on that laxity, and now there is a provision that the department cannot spend a sum exceeding $5,000 without calling for tenders. That was a proper safeguard to take. With all due regard to the member for West Peterborough, I submit that the Postmaster General should guard against any laxity in the expenditure of money, even for such a worthy object as rural mail delivery. When tenders are called any man is free to send in a tender, and in justice to every one I think that the minister should not have the privilege of selecting, without regard to the amount of the tender, the person who should get the contract. The department is doing well in calling for tenders and accepting the lowest tender, as has been done in the past. I admit, with the hon. member for West Peterborough, that the delay in calling for tenders should be done away with. The Acting Postmaster General should, however, limit the zone of advertisements calling for tenders for mail services; it is nothing short of a scandal to see advertisements in papers published in Vancouver, Alberta, and Manitoba, in connection with mail contracts in Nova Scotia or the province of Quebec.

Mr. DOHERTY: May I ask when that began?

Mr. E. PROULX (Prescott): I support the resolution of the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham). When the rural mail delivery system was established a few years ago, there was a fixed price according to locality. In certain localities the prices were too low; the department would not exceed a maximum price of $30 a mile. Since the increase in the cost of living and in the cost of feed for horses and gasolene for motor vehicles, a large number of mail carriers have been carrying the mail at a loss, or at any rate, at a very small wage. As the member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) said, the system has been a great boon to the farmers, and that in itself is a reason why we should not expect the mail carriers to work at such low wages, or to carry out their contracts at a loss. The Government would be justified in granting an increase on a sliding scale until the contracts have expired, and without asking for renewals. The present contractors have done the work in the past at low prices and it would be unfair to them to throw the service open to competition before the expiration of the contracts. I would certainly support the Government should they give these carriers an increase to cover the remaining periods of their contracts.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac): For several years past I have brought this matter to the attention of the various gentlemen who have occupied the position of Postmaster General. Especially after the inauguration of parcel post delivery I interviewed the Postmaster General and pointed out to him how unfair the system was working in respect of those engaged in rural mail delivery. I commend the hon. member for Peterborough for bringing this matter to the attention of the acting Postmaster General and of the House. He should be congratulated because of the unanimity of view, so far as we can judge from those who have already spoken, and on the fact that those who have spoken have admitted that there is such a thing as the high cost of living for people who live in the country. One would judge from reading the press at times that what is called the high cost of living applies only to cities and towns and that in country districts it does not cost any more to live than it did in former days. This is a reason why the subject of the hon. gentleman's motion should be seriously considered by the Department. If we are to treat these servants of the public as others have been treated; if we are to treat these contractors for the carrying of mail in the country districts as other contractors have been treated, the Postmaster General should have power to revise the contracts. Contracts have been entered into in times past for one year for the supplying of various articles to departments of the Government. On the holders of the contracts representing to the Government that the articles they were supplying were costing more than the contractors were paid for them, the period of the contract has in some cases been cut down from one year to six months. I believe that contracts to supply goods have been made for a period of six months rather than for a period of one year as was formerly the case. Most if not all of our rural mail delivery contracts are for a period of four years, and hundreds of people throughout the country who in good faith entered into these contracts have been put to increased expenditure by reason of the inauguration of the parcel post system and their being obliged to provide an extra horse or a larger rig in order to convey the mail; and have also been deprived of the small revenue they formerly obtained by carrying these parcels now carried as mail. They have put up with it and hundreds of the men have been operating at a loss. But with that characteristic stick-to-itiveness of men who live in the country districts, they have stuck to their contracts notwithstanding the fact that they have lost money. Not so those who have had contracts and who live in cities and towns. When the pinch came they began to squeal and they came to Ottawa and squealed loudly enough to get their contracts changed and their remuneration increased. My hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux)—he represents two or three constituencies, but we will say Rouville—he was very fortunate in being elected to all of them—says that there is a saving clause in the contracts and that the Postmaster General has power to annul any contract by giving two or three month's notice. That is all right for the Government on the one side, but where does the other fellow get off? What chance has the fellow who has taken a contract? The hon. member for Rouville says: Let him take his plea to the acting-Postmaster General either by way of petition or through a delegation. He says that no doubt the acting-Postmaster General is a fair-minded man and that he will annul the contract and enter into a new one. That is not a fair way of looking at it. People in the country districts are entitled to every dollar of money that is being spent on rural mail delivery. Let me emphasize that fact, Mr. Speaker. There are thousands, and tens of thousands, of people living in the country districts who cannot importune the various Cabinet ministers for public works, harbour improvements, post offices and one thing and another. About the only thing the Government can do is to give an effective and efficient mail service.

I repeat what I have said on former occasions that this is not a question of whether there is a surplus or a deficit in the Post Office Department. If there is any department of the Government where there is a justification for having a deficit it is the Post Office Department because every cent of revenue comes out of the pockets of the people and it should go back to them in the form of an efficient service. The people of the country will find no fault with this or any other Government if there is a deficit in the Post Office Department so long as the Government gives the people in country districts an efficient and effective service. I hope this matter will not be simply passed over as something of little importance but that it will receive the attention that it merits. I hope that not only will rural mail carriers get more pay but that country postmasters and postmistresses will also be more fairly remunerated.

They are entitled to more pay than they get at the present time. The hon. member for Rouville says that the Government is safeguarded by competition, that if these routes are put up to tender there will always be lots of persons to tender for them. Of course, my hon. friend is speaking for that part of the country with which he is best acquainted—his own part of the country. That may be true in his part of the country but I want to assure him and you, Mr. Speaker, that while his statement may have applied, not only to his own part of the country but to the Dominion in general four or five years ago, it does not apply to-day to many parts of the province of Ontario as it did a few years ago. If, four or five years ago, rural mail routes were put up to tender, many people would have tendered for those routes. It is not the case to-day. Rural Ontario has been depleted and there are not enough men to attend to the wants of the country or to work on the farms. There are not many people in rural Ontario to-day vieing with each other to get mail contracts. They have other work to do. I merely ask that this resolution of the hon. member for Peterborough receive serious consideration and that action be taken with the view of doing justice to the rural mail carriers, because I maintain in all sincerity that they have not received just treatment in times past.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (Cape Breton North): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can add anything to what has been said by hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) but I wish to refer to what has been said, particularly by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), with respect to the necessity of giving due consideration to the questions involved in this resolution. It is quite true that it is a dangerous thing to interfere with or disturb contracts once they are entered into. It might well be urged that one who undertook a contract would not care to lessen his price if the prices of oats, carriages and other things went down instead of up. That argument could well be used and he would say: That is one of the fortunes of war; and if the prices had gone up I would have had to put up with it. But we have extraordinary conditions in Canada to-day. We have war conditions and we have a springing up in the prices of horses, the feed of horses, vehicles and all that is necessary to outfit mail carriers. Therefore, I submit here, Sir, that the ordinary rules of conduct in dealing with contracts ought to be departed from to some extent and that justice ought to be done to the people who are immediately concerned. The hon. the acting-Postmaster General (Mr. Doherty) says that he is willing to seriously consider the question of cancelling contracts. Well, the situation is very much like that of a man who is in a government or other office and who says: I took this position when there were only my wife and myself; we got $500 a year and we got along nicely on that. Now I have a family of ten or twelve, the prices of the necessities of life have gone up and what I used to get is not sufficient to keep body and soul together and to enable us to get along in the way in which we ought to. The minister would say: You can resign your office and go out; that is the only remedy I have to offer you. That is poor consolation to the man who has put his time and energy into the office with which he has been connected for a score of years and who is now not fit to do any other kind of work. It is poor consolation for the mail contractor, who has, perhaps, bought three or four horses for $1,000, who has bought a number of carriages and who has acquired the means of operating the mail route for four years or more, to be told: You can forfeit your four horses and your carriages and resign. If you have lost money that is your luck, but you can tender again, and that is the only remedy I have for you. That is, perhaps, safeguarding the public, but it is poor consolation for the man who has undertaken the contract and who has entered into obligations and involved others in obligations in order to see that he carries out his contract. I think, Sir, the people of Canada are quite willing that proper methods should be used by the Post Office Department to see that no man shall lose money by reason of the fact that prices have gone up to the extent they have, and that contracts were made at a time when these high prices did not exist. The people generally are unwilling that any one man or one class of men should suffer all the loss. Proper inquiry should be made into these things, and such advances made on the contracts during the period they have still to run as would enable the contractor to make a fair profit upon his investment. The hon. member for Frontenac has particularly pointed out the case of men carrying the parcel post. I know of scores of such cases in my part of the country where men who were doing the work with one horse conveniently and well have had to use two horses; instead of one man handling the mails, two men were required just at the same small price that was being paid when one man and one horse did the work. Though representations have not been coming in to the present acting minister so much as to the ministers who preceded him, there has been continuous knocking at the door of the Post Office Department for some fair consideration. I submit to the minister, who is an ex-judge and a lawyer, and therefore capable of judging this thing, that all contracts should be taken up in the light of present conditions compared with the conditions existing at the time the contract was made and the tenders called for. In thousands of cases, tenders were called for and contracts entered into when the parcel post was not in existence, and by reason of the parcel post a new duty and burden has been cast upon the contractor that was not in contemplation by either party at the time the contract was made. That certainly is a subject for consideration and for readjustment. It has been the law and the custom that if you add a few miles to the route of a mail carrier there is a readjustment and he gets a pro rata advance. If it is well known that for twenty years a certain quantity of mail was carried along a certain route by one horse, and if it turned out that, by a change in the law, articles not hitherto carried in the mail are added, by which the weight is raised from 100 pounds to 300 pounds, I submit that that is a tangible increase in the responsibility cast upon the mail carrier, and that the department should give cognizance to that and compensate the carrier accordingly. The resolution moved by the hon. member for Peterborough is a very timely one, and it is proper that this question should in the fullest and most open way be brought to the notice of the House. If the minister should come to the conclusion that the only thing he can do is to cancel the contracts and call for tenders, I submit to his consideration the question of men who have bought horses and carriages and what equipment was necessary for the carrying of the mail, and which they now have on their hands, and suggest that the taking over of this plant should receive his serious consideration.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Shelburne and Queens: Though this may seem to be only a minor matter, it is really a matter of the utmost importance throughout our country, and I am glad that the hon. member for Peterborough has drawn the attention of the House to it. I sympathize very heartily with the object he has in view, but my only difficulty is whether or not the remedy he is proposing is a safe one. It is a fact that this class of service is performed for the people of Canada generally at a very low rate. I do not know why it is that the fascination of a Government dollar is so strong, but the fact is there seems to be so much competition for it that in very many instances under the best conditions the man who gets the mail carrying contract loses money on it. I have known many men who in taking these contracts have ruined themselves because they made their tender too low. But I think the suggestion that the Postmaster General should have the power to revise these contracts in individual cases is a rather dangerous one. I am not surprised that the hon. Minister of Justice shrinks from it. If he has the duty of saying whether a certain contractor should receive an advance and another not, he will have a disagreeable duty, and I am sure that all the members of the House would be unwilling that any postmaster general should have such discretion as to make a distinction between a contractor whose price he would increase and one whose price he would not increase. It would be a very uncomfortable thing for the Postmaster General; it would be a very embarrassing situation indeed.

I would suggest for the consideration of the Postmaster General if the remedy which he himself has suggested is not to be deemed the best one, namely, that he consider the advisability of offering a general percentage of increase based upon the changed conditions. In that respect there would be, at all events, an appearance of equality, and the Postmaster General would be saved a great deal of trouble. The suggestion that the contracts be cancelled is perhaps for the moment the best thing that can be done, but if it is to be dealt with in the manner of a revision, I would suggest for his consideration whether it would not be better to offer a fixed percentage of increase, applying to contracts that have been taken within a given date, such percentage of increase to correspond in a measurable degree with the increased cost of material and supplies.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree that there are great objections to the course proposed that such matters should be left within the discretion of the Postmaster General, or within the discretion of the Government. I appreciate the suggestion which has been made by the hon. member for Shelburne and Queens (Mr. Fielding). At the same time the Government naturally must take into consideration the position in which it would be placed by even that suggestion, because probably it might be called upon not to stop there but to apply some percentage of increase to every contract that has been entered into by the Government. Perhaps, now that the discussion has taken place, the hon. member who made the motion will be content to withdraw it in order that the subject may be considered by the Government. The discussion could be renewed in some other way at a later date if thought desirable. I should like to add, of course, that all of us have the greatest possible sympathy with those who have undertaken these contracts at a cost which involves loss to them. None of us would desire that. But on the other hand there are considerations touching the public interest which, as hon. members on both sides would agree, the Government ought to take strictly into account before any definite action is embarked upon.

Mr. BURNHAM: In view of what the Prime Minister has promised, Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to withdraw my motion.

SEPARATION ALLOWANCES FOR SOLDIERS' DEPENDENTS.

Mr. J. H. BURNHAM (West Peterborough) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, it should not be necessary for soldiers' dependents to show total disability in order to obtain aid or other forms of support from the Separation Allowance Branch, but that such aid should be apportioned according to support possible.

He said: The point at issue is simply this: Where the dependent of a soldier applies for separation allowance, that dependent must show that this soldier was her sole means of support, or, if there is a male relative at home, such as a husband or brother, that he is totally incapacitated and absolutely unable to furnish any portion of the means of support of the person applying for the grant or allowance. If such person was only affected to the extent of 5 per cent, then the soldier would not be the only or sole means of support. The consequence is that the support is in many cases of such a meagre character that it is an imposition and unfairness to the soldier and his family, and not really intended—cannot be intended—by the people of this country or the members of this House as a justification for refusing some degree of assistance, if not the full measure of allowance. I will read you a certificate by Dr. Carmichael, of Peterborough, a very well-known physician, with reference to the case of Mrs. Hamlin. It illustrates the point we are discussing so extremely well that I may be pardoned for bringing it to the attention of the House:

In reference to the case of Mrs. Marilla Hamlin, 254 Munroe Ave., Peterborough, Ont., who is receiving Separation Allowance on account of her son, 204157 Pte. W. Hamlin, 3rd Division Ammunition Company, and is now cut off because her husband is not totally incapacitated, she has three sons at front, and three more children at home, not able to earn for themselves, going to school. She always depended on her sons to help keep home and children, as the father was not able to work steady It will take all he can earn to board and clothe himself, let alone keep his wife and family at home, and it will likely have them suffering before another winter is over when everything is going up in price. The husband has a chronic bronchitis, some might say T. B. from his appearance and cough if he gets any cold. And her three boys doing their bit for country she should not be in want or suffering when her boys, if home, would keep her comfortable.

Yours truly,

D. M. Carmichael, M.D.

Now it is to be presumed in some cases, at any rate, if not in this, that the sons have since become married, and that their mother and younger brothers and sisters at home have positively no means of support except a portion of the assigned pay. The dependents have no separation allowance, and they are naturally stranded and in great distress simply because the Disability Board of the Militia Department has no power to grant to them a portion of the separation allowance, but must grant all the separation allowance or none. That is to say if the person who was the means of support cannot be described as totally ineffective, the partial disability cannot be considered at all in giving these people the privilege of separation allowance. That is clearly a very serious matter. It is absolutely an evil, and it certainly has brought about, in many cases to my own knowledge, the greatest possible hardship. I do not think the Government itself will admit that there is any excuse whatever for such a state of affairs. It is doubtless a case which has been overlooked, and the sooner the injustice to these people is remedied, the better it will be not only for them but for ourselves.

Major-General MEWBURN: My hon. friend from Peterborough has raised a very large question that will require a great deal of careful and mature consideration. The separation allowance that is given to dependents of the soldiers enlisted in the Canadian Expeditionary Force is granted under clear and definite terms. It is given to the wives of officers, non-commissioned officers and men belonging to the Canadian Expeditionary Force, and some time ago was extended to widowed mothers whose sons were their sole and only support. Doubtless there are many cases of hardship existing throughout the country of mothers, and in many cases I might say, sisters who were not dependent on the men when they went to the front, but in regard to whom circumstances have since arisen which cause these unfortunate women to think they should receive the separation allowance to which they are not legally entitled under the provisions of the Act. If you open up and go into the question of apportioning the separation allowance according to the need or suffering of the particular individual, it means raising a problem requiring an enormous staff to deal with and throwing an immense additional responsibility on the department in the investigation of every similar case. The instance to which my hon. friend has referred no doubt has been met, or if not it should be met, by the magnificent efforts and work of the Canadian Patriotic Fund. The officers of that fund are working in the very closest co-operation with the Separation Allowance Branch, by whom all cases are investigated. Where no provision exists for the payment of separation allowance to the dependent of a soldier overseas, and when circumstances warrant, the Patriotic Fund intervenes and takes care of the needy and distressed. If it is the pleasure of the House that the Separation Allowance should be extended to such dependents, such action, as I have already said, will demand very careful and mature consideration. Not only will it necessitate an enormously increased staff but it will mean practically duplicating the work of the Patriotic Fund. The Disability Board investigates, checks, and reports on all these cases; and I think if my hon. friend will withdraw his motion until such time as it shall have received more careful consideration by the department and the Government, the need will be met much more quickly than by having a prolonged discussion in the House.

Mr. NICKLE: It does not seem to me that this matter can be set aside as easily, or that it is as simple as the minister thinks. Prior to the inauguration of the Military Service Act, when only those were bound to serve who were willing to do so, it was easy for the man who felt that it was incumbent upon him to maintain his parents to remain at home and look after the charge that he had so many years performed. The hon. member for Peterborough in proposing this Resolution did not perhaps go as fully into the facts as he might have done, and therefore it may not be amiss that I should take a minute or two in explaining the principles upon which the separation allowance was granted.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Hear, hear.

Mr. NICKLE: The separation allowance falls into two classes: It is the amount that is granted to those who are legally dependent upon the man; and it is also granted to those who, although not legally dependent have moral claim upon the man who has gone, or who is to go, to the front. In the case of the wife who is legally dependent upon the man no question arises as to her financial status or position in society. She may have an income of $20,000, or may be in receipt of only $5 a week, but separation allowance goes to her as a right. If a wife has a legal claim she gets, according to the rank of the man, such money as the Government has seen fit to apportion to the various ranks. For instance, the wife of a private gets $25 a month, whereas the colonel's wife draws $60 a month. That will give you some idea of the spread, or the scope, that exists between the private and the colonel.

Take, however, the case of a man who has gone or who has to go, who does not go voluntarily. He may have occupied a position in society from which he may have drawn a revenue of $1,000, $2,000 or $3,000 a year. Suddenly he is told that all this counts for nothing. He is told: Your service to the State is measured by your ability to be a soldier and the work to which you have hitherto given your attention must be laid aside, the income which has been adequate for the maintenance of your family must be foregone and you must go overseas. At once this situation confronts the dependent mother or sister. Five minutes before this man became a soldier he had an income of say $1,500 a year. Five minutes after he becomes a soldier, his income is $1.10 a day plus such an amount as the Patriotic Fund cares to give. The allowances from the Patriotic Fund are given on well-defined lines: The amount to be given is settled according to the number in the family. Therefore, the amount cannot be increased unless the Patriotic Fund regulations are varied. Three cases in my own riding have recently come to my attention. One was the case of a sister who, before her brother went overseas, had a reasonable living allowance of $1,200 to $1,500 a year. Suddenly she finds her income reduced to the income that a private's wife would have, with the exception that there is no separation allowance. In other words, her brother may make a grant to her of not exceeding $20 a month to maintain a home that has hitherto been kept in the style of about $1,000 a year. Another is the case of a man connected with a large educational institution who had two brothers. One went to the front and I think was killed. The second I think went voluntarily. The third is in this educational institution. He is an unmarried man earning only a small salary, and although the mother has made application for separation allowance, a ruling has been given that as the boy who has been taken, is not the sole support of the mother and as there might be a possibility if the man in the educational institution directed his energies along another line, he might earn more—he is going to the university and following his studies while at the same time he earns money as an instructor—no separation allowance can be made. The third case is that of a widow. One son is going—and this is the case of a man going voluntarily—as a surgeon, and he is earning a good income. The other brother, a young man, is only starting as a medical practitioner. He wrote me a short time ago he was not able to earn enough to support himself, much less to assist in the maintenance of his mother, and it has been ruled that, because the boy who remains at home may be of assistance to the mother, no separation allowance should be granted. As a representative of a constituency that has sent many men to the front, and that under the Military Service Act will send many more, I desire to advocate the rights as I see them of those who remain behind when the State demands the services of those on whom they have been dependent. I do not intend to branch out into a discussion in regard to the conscription of wealth, but when the State enlists the service of a man compulsorily it is the duty of the State to supplement, at least to the extent of the separation allowance, according to the rank the man holds, the income of those whose income has been depleted by the State saying to the man: "Your services are now required; no matter whether you wish it or not, you must go." I believe the general feeling throughout this country is that the dependents of those who have been, or are to be, conscripted are entitled to the most generous consideration of this House and of the country. This is not a question of an Act; it is a question of a regulation. It was a regulation passed by the Militia Department last year, and it established the principle that no separation allowance shall be granted when the boy taken is not the sole support. If I may read between the lines of the remarks made by the minister, I think he would be willing, if the consensus of opinion of this House was in that direction, that the regulation should have the careful consideration of his officers, and I trust his sympathetic consideration as well.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Has the minister taken into consideration, or does he understand the regulations in force in the United States in regard to the support given to the relatives of those who have gone to the front?

Major-General MEWBURN: In the United States the authorities go into the question of insuring the man.

Sir SAM HUGHES: And they also provide him with a revenue equal to what he had before going to the war.

Mr. T. M. TWEEDIE: This question of separation allowance is one in which every person is interested. I concur very heartily in the expression of opinion which has been given in regard to this particular class of cases which is the subject matter of the resolution before the House. I have always been of the opinion that the separation allowance has not been established on the basis of justice and equity. In the early days of the war we found that in Canada there enlisted a great many men who left large families behind them, and there also enlisted many men who left behind them no children at all. The result of the regulation in regard to separation allowance was that if a man went to the front and left behind him a wife with no children, that the wife received $20 a month—the amount has since been increased to $25—the same separation allowance as was received by the wife of a man who left behind him five or six children. I have known of cases where a man has left behind him nine or ten children, and where his wife has had to support that family on the same separation allowance as is given to a soldier's wife with no children at all. I trust before the close of this session of Parliament, some steps will be taken to readjust this matter; that we shall follow to a large extent the system in force in England, and that there will be a sufficient sum granted to the dependent wife and an additional allowance made for each child while the man is at the front. It is only reasonable to ask this of the House of Commons and of the country. It is only doing justice to those wives and children who have been left behind, because I cannot, by any process of reasoning, understand how a family of six can be supported on the same sum of money as a family of two, with only the wife at home.

The Minister of Militia and Defence raised some question in regard to the large amount of work involved if we undertook to adjust this fund so as to render assistance in cases where there was only partial disability. This does not necessarily involve any excess of work. The country in all these cases can afford to be generous, and when we find there is a family left behind and that there is perhaps an aged father, or an infirm brother, or an infirm sister, or an infirm child, the moment we find that physical disability, if it can be established to the satisfaction of the department that the man who enlisted, and through whom the support was claimed, had contributed an amount of at least $20 or $25 per month to the support of that family, then this country should give a corresponding amount to the support of the woman and children who are left at home. I trust that this matter will be taken up and thoroughly discussed, and that this House will see its way clear to readjust the system on which the separation allowance is paid so that there will be a scale graduating from the wife alone to the wife with five or six children.

Mr. BURNHAM: In deference to the request of the minister, I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

MONTREAL-GASPE STEAMER SERVICE.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other papers concerning the steamer service between Montreal, Quebec and the various harbours of Gaspé.

He said: I shall not delay the House at any length, but as this matter is of urgency I wish at once to direct the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to the serious situation which confronts the peninsula of Gaspé and the group of islands in the gulf of the St. Lawrence known as the Magdalen islands. The county of Gaspé is divided into two well-known parts—the mainland, on the Baie des Chaleurs, and the Magdalen islands, in the gulf of the St. Lawrence. Up till last fall the steamship service between the various harbours on the coast of Gaspé and the large centres of population such as Montreal and Quebec was performed by two steamers, the Lady of Gaspé and the Percesien. The Lady of Gaspé has been sold by her owners, at a very fair price I am told, and the Percesien, I am sorry to say, foundered in a storm not very long ago on her way to Liverpool. The large population along the coast of Gaspé, as well as the population of the Magdalen islands, depend for a livelihood chiefly on two industries, agriculture and fisheries. There are several harbours between Matane, which is the nearest railway centre, and Gaspé basin. The other section of the peninsula from Gaspé basin to Matapedia is connected with the Dominion by a railway system. I am speaking now chiefly of that section of the peninsula which is on the river St. Lawrence and also of the Magdalen islands. The people there have no communication except by steamer, and I am sorry to say that so far they have been unable to secure a steamer service for next summer. The disappearance of the steamer service between Quebec, Montreal, and the various harbours on the coast of Gaspé has created this situation; the fish, instead of being shipped inland to Quebec, Montreal, and the Canadian West, is now being gathered up by Americans. I have specific information on this subject, and hear on reliable authority that some Gloucester firms in the State of Maine have sent agents this winter to the coast of Gaspé to gather up the fish which could not be shipped last summer through lack of shipping facilities. So much for the mainland.

Motion agreed to.

PICTOU-MAGDALEN ISLANDS STEAMER SERVICE.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX moved:

For a copy of all telegrams, letters, petitions and all other correspondence and documents, concerning the service of the steamer Amelia between Pictou and Magdalen islands.

He said: This other motion deals with the steamer service between Magdalen islands and the mainland. The situation in that section of the country as regards shipping facilities is just about the same as it was some years ago when I was in the Government, representing the county of Gaspé. I then induced one of the large ship-builders of Nova Scotia to build a steamer adapted to the peculiar service between Pictou, Prince Edward Island and the Magdalen Islands. The Lady Sybil was built, but when war was declared she was sold by the owner to the Admiralty, at a very high figure, if I mistake not. The department then gave the contract to the Magdalen Islands Steamship Company which owned the steamer Amelia. I need not weary the House with the many complaints which have come to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and myself with regard to the very poor service given by the Amelia. I quite understand that it is very difficult under present circumstances to get ships, but it does seem to me that the people of the Magdalen islands, isolated as they are for several months of the year, should be given special attention. While I am on this subject, let me tender my hearty thanks to the new Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) for what he did last fall, when navigation was closed between the Magdalen islands and the mainland. The steamer Amelia, as I have said, was very inferior, was unable to carry the freight that offered and was unfit to carry passengers. I appealed to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to send the Government ice-breaker, the Stanley, to the Magdalen islands, and the hon. gentleman was kind enough to consent to send the Stanley, not only once but twice, much to the relief of the very thrifty population which has found its abode there. There are on these islands nearly six thousand people, earning their living chiefly by fishing, and also by agriculture. Perhaps I might give to the House an account which appeared in the Toronto Globe of February 6th of the arrival of the steamer Stanley, and the feeling of satisfaction the people of the Magdalen islands had on seeing her breaking her way through the ice and bringing them the necessaries of life for the winter season. The despatch reads:

Charlottetown, P.E.I., Feb. 6.—H. H. Acorn of Souris, agent there for the Magdalen Islands Steamship Company, has arrived here on return from the islands. He went down there in the Dominion Government steamer Stanley, sent by the Government with a cargo of foodstuffs from Pictou and Souris. She reached there on Saturday last, after battling two days and nights with solid, heavy field ice from one to three feet thick, for a distance of forty miles. The ice was encountered after leaving East Point, and extended in an unbroken field, without a lead or a crack as far as the eye could see. It was so heavy in places that the steamer could not go more than half her length without bucking, while twice she stuck so hard that the crew were obliged to use slice bars for more than an hour to release her, and on Friday afternoon she covered only six miles in three hours.

Fully five hundred people gathered at the breakwater at Amherst Island to greet the Stanley with rousing cheers and see for the first time an ice-breaker in action.

The cargo was discharged on Saturday night during a snowstorm, with the temperature eighteen below zero, and on Sunday morning the steamer sailed for North Sydney, arriving there Monday morning.

Kerosene and Gasoline Lacking.

Mr. Acorn reports that the islands are now well supplied with food and fuel, but there is a great shortage of kerosene oil. Many families are now without lights in their homes, except for cases of sickness, whilst none will be able to use more than one light during the winter.

There is practically no gasoline on the islands, and the fishermen will be greatly hampered in their spring work; in fact, no fishing can be attempted to any extent until a stock of gasoline arrives. There are now 100 drums of gasoline at Pictou and 64 at Souris awaiting shipment, but these could not be carried on the Stanley without spoiling the flour, meat, etc., which made up most of her cargo. The people are also in need of a large quantity of stock for repairing their boats and fishing gear. This stock is till held over at Souris.

The people are warm in their praise of the Marine Department and Captain Rowe in coming to their relief, and hope to secure the Stanley for a trip in early spring.

This morning I received the following message, which I believe was also sent to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

Amherst via Pictou, N. S., March 20th.

The County Council of the Magdalen islands authorizes me to transmit to you and to the Department Marine and Fisheries the following resolutions passed yesterday, and to humbly solicit that you use your utmost endeavours to have the enclosed request acted upon as soon as possible, viz., that the Council at its regular meeting assembled hereby expresses to the department its appreciations and thanks for the services rendered by the steamer Stanley during the month of January in bringing to these islands provisions and other goods which were absolutely necessary in order to enable the inhabitants of these islands to survive the severe winter without excessive hardships. That this Council humbly beg to draw the attention of the department to the following facts: the inhabitants of the islands are almost entirely dependent on the fishing industry for their livelihood. This industry is entirely dependent on gasoline and kerosene for motive power and the amount of fuel which had been purchased for early spring fishing was not brought by the Stanley, but remained in Pictou and Souris. Should this fuel not be on hand here before the opening of navigation for commercial vessels it would entail a loss of thousands of dollars to the fishermen of these islands as the early spring is the most productive fishing season. This loss would not only occasion a material loss at the time but also a loss of earning power which would certainly cause a famine during the coming winter. Therefore, that this Council humbly beg that the steamer Stanley be sent to these islands with gasoline, kerosene and other needed fishing supplies as early during the month of April as it will be possible for her to come here. May add that since above resolution is passed the public is informed that the Amelia has been sold and that no other steamer is offering for the Magdalen Islands service next season, which makes it even more urgent that the Stanley be sent as requested. Kindly keep us informed promptly as what steps are being taken.

A. J. PAINCHAUD,

Secretary Treasurer of the County Council Magdalen Islands.

This telegram, and the report which I have read from the Toronto Globe of 6th February, speak for themselves. I suggest that the Ministers of Trade and Commerce and Marine and Fisheries consider the situation which confronts the mainland on the northern coast of Gaspé and the Magdalen islands. In view of the high cost of bacon, pork and other kinds of meat, fish is becoming more and more valuable and is entering more largely into the diet of the consumers. Why should we let the Americans gather all the fish from the Magdalen islands and from the northern coast and thus prevent our own city people from getting it? As no steamers can be found—I quite understand the reasons why—I suggest that the two departments arrange that the steamer Princess, for instance, be made available for the people on the river St. Lawrence and that the steamer Stanley be put on the route between Magdalen islands, Prince Edward island and Pictou during next season. This request is a reasonable one, because the people of the Magdalen islands are absolutely isolated during several months of the year. I hope that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be as generous in this case as he was at the beginning of last winter, when he agreed to the request which I made on that occasion.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Mr. Speaker, three services under the Department of Trade and Commerce which have been for many years subsidized, are of nearly equal importance, and all very necessary. These three have, within my experience, received as large a share of attention and have been as troublesome and difficult as any three in the whole range of our local services. In order of importance, I think the Magdalen islands service comes first, because the Magdalen islands have no rail communication with the outside world. The next one, I would say; is the north shore. The north shore is sparsely inhabited, but the people of that district are our citizens, and by virtue of the very sparseness of habitation and the extent to which the population is scattered along the coast, have special claims for being looked after by the Dominion Government in the way of steamship communication. The other is the Gaspé shore, from Gaspé along the coast, about which my hon. friend has been speaking. That, however, has railway communication on two ends. At Gaspé there is rail connection with the Government railways; at Matane there is rail communication with the rest of Canada. The important stretch there which has no available service except by water is that portion of the coast between Gaspé and Matane. With reference to the Magdalen Islands service, my hon. friend sees as well as I do the extreme difficulty of getting any vessels at all, let alone thoroughly suitable vessels for that service. The same holds good with reference to the north shore, and the stretch of country between Gaspé and Matane, or the old service between Gaspé and the cities of Montreal and Quebec. The two vessels which last year carried on the Gaspé service have gone out of the service, and in spite of every effort put forth by the department to obtain one, no suitable vessel is in sight. It is possible that a vessel may be obtained; everything possible is being done to obtain one. What I do think should be provided for in some way is the stretch of the coast between Gaspé and Matane. That at least would be a relief, if it is impossible to get service on the old route between Gaspé and Quebec.

[Mr. Lemieux.]

With reference to the Magdalen Islands service, the only really useful vessel that has ever been on that service went away early in the war. I think it was: The only vessel which would be got last year for that service was the Amelia. The Amelia was a serviceable vessel, up to her powers and capabilities, but she did not suit the Magdalen Islands people. She was not the best vessel for that trade, but she was absolutely the only one which was available. She was put on and kept on, and performed that service as well as she possibly could, with a great deal of dissatisfaction, some of which was well founded and perhaps, as is usual, some of which, upon investigation, was found not to be so well founded.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Are these vessels fitted with cold storage?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: No. Then, in reference to the north shore service; that service has had a checkered career ever since I have known anything about it. Probably the best service we had was the year before last and part of last year when the Canada Steamship Company performed the service at a very largely increased subsidy. I think they performed the service to the satisfaction of the people along that coast. But the Canada Steamship Company has gone out of the service. They have no vessels which they can give us, and at the present time the department is making the best search it can in order to provide a vessel for the north shore service. That briefly describes the situation in reference to these three. My hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne) has kept well up to the traditions of his department. The Department of Trade and Commerce, which subsidized the summer service, always collaborated with the Department of Marine and Fisheries for two or three trips early in the autumn or winter and early in the spring when the ordinary subsidized vessel found it impossible, on account of ice and weather conditions, to make the trip. That is not a new thing. We have always collaborated, and I am quite sure that we will collaborate during the present year. Whether or not my hon. friend will take the Stanley and put her permanently on that service or whether the Princess can be spared from the service of the Deparment of Marine and Fisheries, suitable or unsuitable as she may be, I do not know. That is a matter that is being discussed by the two departments in order to reach a conclusion as to what can be done. But I cannot say anything more to my hon. friend than I have already said, that everything possible will be done to provide some sort of a service. With reference to the north shore service, the people will not be allowed to starve or to suffer for actual necessities. We will preserve them from that without any doubt, and if we can give them a reasonably good service for their products, as well as for necessities in the matter of living, we shall do it. The same applies to the Magdalen service and in a modified degree to the Gaspé service. We shall not even be kept from using the extraordinary powers which the Government has at this time if we can find suitable vessels to get possession of and with which to perform this service. If my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries can come forward with some of his vessels and help out now or in the early spring, and if his department collaborates with us along the north shore, it will lead to a happier result than would be achieved without that co-operation.

Mr. JOSEPH READ (Prince, P.E.I.): What does the Government intend to do with the Northumberland?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I cannot say that. That vessel does not belong to my department, nor, I think, does it belong to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I am not sure whether it belongs to the Government or not.

Mr. LEMIEUX: To the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. READ: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most important questions that can come before the Parliament of Canada. Of course everybody knows the great difficulty there is in securing tonnage but at the same time if we are going to increase food production it is essential that proper transportation facilities should be obtained. I asked the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) what they were going to do with the Northumberland. The Northumberland is a steamer that has been plying between Summerside and Point du Chene in connection with the Intercolonial railway service. That service, as my hon. friend knows, will probably be suspended this coming season because the new car ferry system has been inaugurated between Prince Edward Island and the mainland and the long deferred implementation of the promise of union between the province of Prince Edward Island and the Dominion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member inasmuch as he is making his first speech in the House, but I must direct his attention to the fact that the motion before the House is for papers in connection with the steamship service between Montreal, Quebec, and the various harbours of Gaspé.

Mr. BUREAU: I understood the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) to say that he was discussing both resolutions, No. 14 and No. 16, at the same time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The discussion could not properly include the terms of union between Prince Edward Island and the rest of the Dominion in any case.

Mr. READ: I have no intention of discussing the question of Confederation. I was simply leading up to the question of the transportation difficulties as between the port of Montreal and the Maritime Provinces, and I was going to point out to the minister that some boat probably could be secured that might be used between Montreal, the Magdalen islands and possibly the north shore. I simply wanted to know what was going to be done with the steamer Northumberland. And it occurred to me that if they were going to take her off the Prince Edward Island route between Charlottetown and Pictou, or Summerside and Point du Chene, she might be available.

Hon. C. C. BALLANTYNE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged, indeed, and I appreciate to the fullest extent the kind words of the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) with regard to the action of my department in sending the steamer Stanley to the Magdalen islands. I wish to assure my hon. friend that we were only doing our duty and nothing more. I am grateful to him for bringing so important a matter so promptly to my attention as he did at the time. I have not as yet received the telegram that my hon. friend read to the House a moment ago, but no doubt it is at my office. I cannot at the moment state whether or not it will be possible to send the Stanley to the Magdalen islands for another trip, but I wish to assure my hon. friend that I shall take the matter up the first thing tomorrow morning, and if it is at all possible to send the Stanley to the Magdalen islands again that will be done with the very greatest of pleasure.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Read]

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will be very glad to let my hon. friend know as early as possible to-morrow what I can do in that regard. My colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, has fully gone into the matter, that comes more under his department than mine, with regard to the other services.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I thank the hon. minister—

Mr. SPEAKER: I call to the attention of the House, that if the mover of the resolution exercises his right to close the debate, it will not be competent for any other hon. member to speak.

Mr. HENRY E. LAVIGUEUR (Quebec County): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, and also the Minister of Marine, state that everything would be done to provide for a freight steamer service for the south and north shores of the St. Lawrence. Some weeks ago resolutions were passed by the Quebec Board of Trade and the City Council of Quebec requesting the Government to provide for a service for the north shore and for Seven islands. It is of my personal knowledge that no service at all has been given on the north shore to Seven islands although there are large industries there which have had to close down, and some interested people from Seven islands are now on their way to Quebec to organize a delegation of the Quebec Board of Trade and City Council to wait upon the Government to ask if a reasonable service can be given. Thousands of pounds of fish which were all ready to ship to Montreal and Quebec last fall were left over as there was no transportation. I am pleased to know that the matter will have the serious consideration of the Government in order that these deserving people may have proper facilities to carry on their industry.

Motion agreed to.

CLAIM OF MRS. WINEAS ZWINGLE.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged between Mr. Henry Tucker, K.C., and the Right Hon. Sir Robert L. Borden, K.C.M.G., P.C., the Department of Militia, the officers of the Patriotic Fund, concerning the claim of Mrs. Wineas Zwingle.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see my hon. friend, the Minister of Militia and Defence (Major-General Mewburn) in his seat, because although the name of the Prime Minister is mentioned in the motion

I wish specially to appeal to the Minister of Militia and Defence. I do not intend to be critical as to the administration of the separation allowances, but I wish to get from my hon. friend some explanation which might serve not only in this but in similar cases. My object in bringing this matter before the House is because I believe the case has been exhausted through correspondence between the hard-headed Scotch Presbyterian lawyer who acted for this unfortunate woman and the various departments of the Government. It is at the request of Mr. Henry Tucker, K.C., of Montreal, a lawyer of very high standing at the Bar, that I bring this matter up. The name of the soldier whose wife, according to Mr. Tucker, has not been fairly treated by the Patriotic Fund is Wineas Zwingle. He joined, in the early stage of the war, the 150th Battalion, and he is on the firing line at the present time. He left behind him a wife and four children, but previous to leaving, according to my information, he made provision for his wife and family: the assigned pay $20, next, the separation allowance, $20, and $24 per month was allotted by the Patriotic Fund, making a total payment of $64 per month for the wife and four little children. This soldier also left his wife in possession of a small candy store in Montreal. During the month of February, 1917 the assigned pay of Zwingle and the separation allowance were sent, I do not know under what regulation, to the Patriotic Fund by the Department of Militia. The Minister of Militia stated a moment ago, that both the department and the Patriotic Fund were working in close co-operation. From March 1 to the middle of August, 1917, Mrs. Zwingle received $242.75, but from the latter month until December 8, 1917, she did not receive a red cent. Remember that this woman is absolutely penniless, with the exception of the candy store, and has dependent upon her four children, the eldest of whom is only 12 years old. In October, 1917, Mrs. Zwingle saw her lawyer, Mr. Tucker, K.C., and at that time, as alleged by Mr. Tucker, she was positively starving. He inquired from the Patriotic Fund, first why they cut the allowance from $24 to $10 per month, and second why the assigned pay and the separation allowance had been handed over to that organization for administration. The answer Mr. Tucker received from the Patriotic Fund, and I am simply quoting from the voluminous dossier which has been handed to me by that gentleman—was to the following effect: "This woman is keeping what is known in common parlance as a 'blind pig' and you had better see Recorder Semple of Montreal." Mr. Tucker, who is a very warm-hearted Scotchman, saw the woman was starving and freezing—and it is not necessary to remind any hon. gentleman of the severity of the weather during the winter which has just closed—and he went to interview Recorder Semple whose statements were most favourable to Mrs. Zwingle. The recorder said he had received the complaint referred to about Mrs. Zwingle, but had investigated it and found it to be baseless. Later on, acting on the advice of her lawyer and at the suggestion of the Patriotic Fund, Mrs. Zwingle sold her candy store for a certain sum. Remember, Mr. Speaker, I am not passing judgment on the Patriotic Fund organization. I am myself one of the incorporators of the fund, and one of its members, and I do not wish to pass judgment upon those who compose the organization. I know what devotion is being displayed, and what excellent work is being performed by the members of the Patriotic Fund all over the country; but sometimes, owing to misinformation or otherwise, persecution may result which is absolutely unwarranted. In November, 1917, according to Mr. Tucker, the Department of Militia and Defence having been stirred up by the many letters written by him, sent Mrs. Zwingle a blank declaration to fill in and swear to, which declaration had to be countersigned by some officer of the Patriotic Fund. The declaration was for the purpose of determining how Mrs. Zwingle received her separation allowance and assigned pay. For one reason or another the Patriotic Fund—and I repeat that I am not criticising the organization because I am not personally aware of these facts, I am merely repeating what I was told by a very reliable counsel—refused, or rather, one of its officers refused, to countersign the blank declaration, and hence Mrs. Zwingle was once more deprived of both her separation allowance and assigned pay. In November, 1917, Mr. Tucker again complained to the department and obtained an order that the checks be paid direct to Mrs. Zwingle, but in the meantime she had been absolutely starving and freezing. On the 12th December, 1917, relief came in the form of cheques for two months from the department at Ottawa. On the 24th December, 1917, there was made against this unfortunate woman, who was evidently born under an evil star, another very serious charge, which I need not repeat, but which, according to the documents I have before me, is absolutely unfounded. Following this, the Militia Department order that her cheques for the assigned pay and separation allowance be paid direct to her was cancelled, and it was determined once more that the payments should be made through the Patriotic Fund at Montreal. What I wish to represent to the Minister of Militia—and this unquestionably is the high court of the land where all grievances can be ventilated—is that Mrs. Zwingle's husband is at the front, and she complains that she has been ill-treated, persecuted and slandered.

She claims that her husband's assigned pay and her separation allowance are her absolute property, and that the department has no control over them. As regards the Patriotic Fund allowance, I quite agree that according to the Act passed in 1914, the Patriotic Fund has a discretion in the matter, although the discretion should be used wisely and fairly. But as regards the assigned pay and the separation allowance, I would like to have a statement from the Minister of Militia if the department can direct the payment to be made through the Patriotic Fund or through any other organization, or if she is not, as a matter of right, entitled to have those moneys paid to her direct. I have brought the matter before the House after a long correspondence exchanged between Mr. Tucker, K. C., the Patriotic Fund, the Department of Militia and Defence, and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. It is a grievance, made perhaps more serious by the fact that this woman states positively that she has been persecuted, that she has been slandered, even after the allegations made against her were declared to be without foundation. I hope my hon. friend will look into this matter in the department and see that Mrs. Zwingle receives her assigned pay and her separation allowance without any further delay.

Major-General MEWBURN: This matter has not come before me personally in the Separation Allowance Branch, and I have no desire to shield or to make excuses for any mistakes that may have occurred. Since I have had the honour of taking charge of the Department of Militia and Defence, the Separation Allowance Branch has caused us more trouble and anxiety than probably any other branch in the department. This branch deals with some 300,000 accounts, and mistakes have been made. Since I took charge of the department, I have endeavoured to re-organize that branch and have tried to get it down to a proper business basis. I think I can say I am succeeding in that. I may go further and say that it will still be some months before it is running smoothly.

I will investigate this particular case thoroughly and find out why this woman has been treated in the way my hon. friend states, which statement I have no doubt is correct. I cannot understand why the money was paid over to the Patriotic Fund. There have been cases where money has been paid over to the Patriotic Fund on account of some arrangement between the Patriotic Fund and the beneficiary. The Patriotic Fund has a committee which has made many investigations throughout the various cities of Canada. There have been cases where people have been drawing separation allowances to which they were neither legally nor morally entitled, and we have had to call upon the Patriotic Fund to make investigations. The declaration of which my hon. friend has spoken is the legal declaration which every person claiming separation allowance has to swear before a commissioner or a notary public. It is simply to get the evidence in the department so that we can have the account straightened out. If any injustice or wrong has been done to any person by an official of my department, he will cease to be employed in my department. I will make it my duty to investigate the matter fully and, if any wrong has been done, to rectify it.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am perfectly satisfied with the answer given by the minister. I am willing to let him have the dossier in my possession. It would then perhaps not be necessary for him to go through all the departments of the Government because many letters have been addressed to different departments.

Major-General MEWBURN: I shall be glad to have the papers.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am satisfied that there has been no ill-will on the part of the department, and the declaration made by the minister that the assigned pay and separation allowance should go direct to the dependents is quite satisfactory. If that is done, there will be no more grievance.

Major-General MEWBURN: If she is the lawful wife of the soldier.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Certainly she is. There is an error in the name on the Order Paper. It is not Mrs. Antoina Zwingle, it is Mrs. Wineas Zwingle.

Motion agreed to.

TREATMENT OF RETURNED SOLDIERS ON TRANSPORTS.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. CHARLES G. POWER (Quebec South): I desire to draw the attention of the Government to an article which appeared in the Ottawa Evening Journal, and to ask for some information from the Minister of Militia.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is this not a matter about which the hon. member could procure information in the ordinary course by placing a question on the Order Paper?

Mr. POWER: I rather doubt it. It is a matter of considerable urgency.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must say to the House at this early stage in the session, that the asking of questions on the Orders of the Day being called must be used most sparingly and only in cases of peculiar urgency. Hon. gentlemen have the privilege of having questions answered by placing them upon the Order Paper.

Mr. POWER: In this case, it is a question of peculiar urgency, because it refers to the return of soldiers from the front, and I understand that within the next month or so some 15,000 or 20,000 soldiers will return from England to Canada. In the Ottawa Evening Journal there is a despatch from Montreal, dated March 19, which gives the statement of a certain sergeant who returned on a boat which recently arrived on this side:

> On our boat they had 103 third cabin berths empty, absolutely empty, while wounded men and furlough men of the first contingent were confined below. They might at least have given these vacant berths to the cripples in the party. There was plenty of room on the boat, but the sleeping accommodation was disgraceful. For men who have seen active service for three and a half years to be kept under deck like that by officers who have never seen the front is a trifle hard to put up with, said the sergeant. You will hear more of it.

I simply desire to ask the Government if it is their intention to take immediate steps to remedy this evil if it exists.

Major-General MEWBURN: This is the first intimation I have had of the article which my hon. friend has read. As regards returned soldiers coming home on transports, the berthing and other arrangements are made entirely overseas, and we, on this side, cannot claim responsibility for such arrangements. Some three or four weeks ago an officer was sent overseas from Canada to take up with the overseas authorities proper berthing accommodation for the troops coming back. The article referred to is evidently an anonymous one. It does not mention the sergeant's name. If there are any complaints to be made so far as my department is concerned, those complaints should be made in the regular way, and my hon. friend can rest assured they will be thoroughly investigated.

If in the administration of the department I had to stop and pay attention to anomymous letters and anomymous correspondence in the newspapers, no work would ever be accomplished. There is already going on an investigation regarding transports, and a very minute investigation of another subject. As far as this particular article is concerned, I shall be very glad if my hon. friend would have the sergeant he refers to send in his complaint in writing to be investigated.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER.

ELECTION OF MR. GEO. H. BOIVIN, M.P., FOR SHEFFORD.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): The thirteenth rule of the House provides that a Chairman of Committees of the House shall be elected at the commencement of every Parliament as soon as an Address has been agreed to in answer to His Excellency's speech, and the second paragraph of that rule provides that the member elected to serve as Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees shall be required to possess a full and practical knowledge of the language which is not that of the Speaker for the the time being. Now your language, Mr. Speaker, is English, although occasionally you make successful excursions into the French language. Unfortunately, we are not blessed on this side of the House with a very large number of gentlemen who fulfil the qualifications required by the second paragraph of the rule which I have just quoted. The junior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chabot) does undoubtedly possess those qualifications, but he finds himself unable to undertake the duties. Possibly, there are one or two other members on this side of the House who might be considered as possessing the knowledge alluded to. However, it has always been the custom in this House that when the Chair is filled by a Speaker of British descent, the Deputy Speaker shall be one who traces his origin to the other great pioneer race in this country. It seems to me inadvisable that we should depart from that practice at the present time. I have spoken to my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition on the subject, as I would not care to make a motion of this kind with regard to an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House without conferring with him. The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin) has had an experience in this House of some six or seven years. He is eminently qualified by ability and by temperament to undertake the duties which would devolve upon the Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees. Moreover, he has shown a careful study and an intimate knowledge of the rules, as has been demonstrated on more than one occasion when questions of order were discussed in the late Parliament. I have, therefore, great pleasure in moving, seconded by Sir George Foster:

That George Henry Boivin, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Shefford, be appointed Chairman of the Committees of the Whole House.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend has stated the rules of the House correctly, and I hope the spirit in which he makes his motion, of recognizing the different elements which compose our population, will prevail at all times. The rule with regard to the election of a Deputy Speaker has worked satisfactorily in the past, and I am sure I hope it will continue to work so in the future. My right hon. friend has stated that, unfortunately for the Government, it is not blessed with many supporters speaking the language which ought to be spoken by the Chairman of Committees. I regret that as much as he does, but it is his own fault and not the fault of the people to whom he alluded, and when he mends his ways he may be sure of having better support.

For the moment I have to say to my right hon. friend that it is not in accordance with the practice in Great Britain that the presiding officer of the House should necessarily be a follower of the Government; my right hon. friend knows that as well as I do. In Great Britain it has happened over and over again that the leader of the House has recommended the appointment, not of one of his own followers, but of a member of the opposite party, for the Speakership. I think my right hon. friend has stated in the House that it would be preferable if we followed the practice that has prevailed in Great Britain, that the presiding officer should not be appointed on account of his politics, but quite independently of his politics, and I am of the same opinion also. That practice, however, has never been followed in this country, and I do not know that it will ever be possible to come to it, but at all events its merits are undoubted. The presiding officer of the House is really a judge between all sides. He is there in the Chair to mete out justice to all and in proper manner, and in this respect the duties of the Deputy Speaker are the same. Mr. Boivin, the gentleman whom my right hon. friend has selected, as I think everybody who has sat in the late Parliament will agree, is well qualified for the office. He is fair and impartial in character, and I believe that when in that Chair he will, as will be his duty, forget that he belongs to a party, and will be there simply to do justice to both sides. It is not a political office; it is essentially a judicial office. When my hon. friend the member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin) first saw his name mentioned in the newspapers as the possible choice of the House, with a very great sense of delicacy, with which I think I ought to acquaint the House, he was not quite sure whether he could accept. He consulted me about it, and I told him, without any hesitation, that if the choice fell upon him he should unhesitatingly accept the appointment, because it could not be considered a political gift. It is not the gift of the Government, but the gift of the House of Commons and of the people of Canada; or rather, it is a recognition by the House of Commons of the qualities which fit him for the position which he is now entrusted with, and for which I, for my part, am very happy to rejoice.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the right hon. gentleman that it would be most desirable if we could adopt in this country the practice which has prevailed in Great Britain. That practice has sometimes in Great Britain been obliged to withstand pretty severe shocks. In 1895, I recollect, there was a very grave question as to whether a Speaker of one party who had been elected about a year before should be continued as Speaker by the other party; but fortunately, the wise counsel prevailed and he was re-elected, and he served with great acceptance and great distinction. Possibly, the course which is being taken to-day may prove to be a step towards the consummation of the ideal, as to the wisdom of which I certainly agree with the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (Simcoe). Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. gentleman wish to discuss the motion?

Mr. CURRIE: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Prime Minister exercised his right of reply in closing the debate; perhaps I was remiss in not so advising the House.

Mr. CURRIE: According to the rules of the House, I understand that every member is supposed to be heard, even though the person who made the motion has been heard the second time. Unfortunately, I did not catch your eye, Mr. Speaker.

I have no desire to make any lengthy remarks on this subject, but I wish to state my objection to the motion, if no one else will oppose it except myself. It is true that it has been the custom to appoint a member from Quebec to the position either of Speaker or of Deputy Speaker, but there are other members in the House outside the province of Quebec who have a knowledge of the French language, and I think that some steps should have been taken to appoint one of those members. Moreover, if the province of Quebec is desirous of being represented in the person of the Deputy Speaker, the constitutional practice should have been followed, one of the members of the Opposition should have resigned and allowed a supporter of this Government to take his seat and the Deputy Speakership. That is customary and the constitutional usage; the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker of the House are chosen by the majority in the House. They represent the views of the majority of the House and have done so from the time of Onslow. The constitutional practice followed in England whereby occasionally a Speaker is chosen without regard to politics has not been followed in this Parliament. I sat in the House during the last session and I have not forgotten the opposition of the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Boivin) to the Military Service Act and to the attempts on the part of members on this side of the House to send aid to the soldiers in the trenches. After listening to the addresses of the leader of the Opposition so far this session, I cannot help thinking that, like the Bourbons, he never forgets and he never forgives. He had to bring in a lot of talk about reciprocity and that sort of thing. He has forgotten that when he was the leader of the Government this country was known to the outside world as a few acres of snow. To-day Canada has a place in the sun, and that place in the sun has been given to us by those men who have so nobly fought for Canada and the Empire in the trenches. What will the whole world say if this House appoints this man as Deputy Speaker—which no doubt, has been arranged to be done?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask the hon. gentleman in referring to another member to refer to him as an "hon. member."

Mr. CURRIE: All right, I will refer to the hon. member for Shefford. If this House elects him Deputy Speaker, we shall be electing a man who represents all that a majority of the people of this country voted against during the last election. I feel deeply on this question. I would almost say that it was a slap in the face for the soldiers in the trenches and of the electors who voted for this Government to appoint a member of this House to the position of Deputy Speaker who has opposed everything that the soldiers voted for and that this Government represents—that is all.

Motion agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that a message had been received from the Senate acquainting this House that the Hon. Messieurs Bostock, Boyer, Dennis, Douglas, Godbout, Gordon. Laird, Landry, McHugh, McLennan, Poirier, Power, P.C., Richardson, Taylor (New Westminster), and Webster, have been appointed a committee to assist his Honour the Speaker in the direction of the Library of Parliament, so far as the interests of the Senate are concerned, and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a joint committee of both Houses on the said Library.

Also a message acquainting this House that the Hon. Messieurs Crosby, Dennis, Dessaulles, DeVeber, Domville, Donnelly, Farrell, Forget, Legris, McCall, McLean, Pope, Prince, Ratz, Robertson, P. C., Sharpe, Talbot, Taylor (Leeds) Thibaudeau, Todd and White, have been appointed a committee to superintend the printing of the Senate during the present session, and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a joint committee of both Houses on the subject of the printing of Parliament.

And also a message acquainting this House that the Hon. Messieurs Landry, Taylor (Leeds), Thompson and Watson, have been appointed a committee to assist his Honour the Speaker in the direction of the restaurant of Parliament, so far as the interests of the Senate are concerned, and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a joint committee of both Houses on the said restaurant.

RE-ARRANGEMENT OF DEPARTMENTS.

NEW DEPARTMENTS CREATED.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide for the appointment of a Secretary of State for External Affairs, a Minister of Immigration and Colonization, and a Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment, and that the salary of each of the said ministers shall be $7,000 per annum; and also to provide for the appointment of a Parliamentary Secretary of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment and that the salary of such Parliamentary Secretary shall be five thousand dollars per annum; and to provide that the several salaries of the persons holding the said offices shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada for the periods during which they have respectively held the offices; and further, to provide that during the present war and for one year thereafter one or more other ministers, not exceeding three, members of the King's Privy Council for Canada, who may be named by the Governor in Council, may be paid such salaries or other remuneration as Parliament may provide, and shall not, by reason thereof, be ineligible as Members of the House of Commons or disqualified to sit or vote therein.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The necessity for making provision for a salary for the Secretary of State arises in this way—the Prime Minister has ceased to be President of the Privy Council, which position has filled for a number of years,—

Sir SAM HUGHES: I regret exceedingly to have to take the lead in asking the right hon. leader of the Government to speak a little louder. Gentlemen behind cannot hear, and I cannot hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: So far as the provision of a salary for the Secretary of State for External Affairs is concerned, the necessity arises owing to the Prime Minister having ceased to be President of the Privy Council. By statute it is provided that the Prime Minister shall be Secretary of State for External Affairs, but as he has received in the past a salary as President of the Council, no salary has ever been provided for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When the present Government was formed in October last the Prime Minister relinquished the post of President of the Council and it was therefore necessary to make some provision for salary for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A new ministry, that of Immigration and colonisation, has also been established, and a ministry of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment, as well as a parliamentary secretaryship to the latter department. This resolution makes the usual provision for these salaries. It is not intended to fill at present the parliamentary secretaryship of the Department of Militia and Defence which has been rendered vacant by the resignation of Mr. McCurdy, who has become Parliamentary Secretary of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment. So far as the remainder of the resolution is concerned, it makes provision during the present war for a salary to one or more ministers, not exceeding three, who are members of the King's Privy Council for Canada, and who may be named by the Governor in Council. It it provided that they shall be paid such salaries or remuneration as Parliament may provide and that they shall not by reason thereof be ineligible as members of the House of Commons or disqualified to sit or vote therein. This is intended to provide for a case like that of Mr. Maclean, who is Vice-Chairman of the Committee on Reconstruction and Development, but who does not otherwise preside over any department of the Government. It also provides for the case of Senator Robertson, who is a member of the committee and the chairman of a very important sub-committee with respect to labour conditions. I may say that insofar as both these gentlemen are concerned, they have, during the period since they assumed these duties, been as actively engaged in the work of the administration as any other members of the Government. In addition to the duties which I have mentioned as devolving upon Mr. Maclean, he has, during the absence of Sir Thomas White, carried on the work and assumed the responsibilities of the Department of Finance. However, it is in respect to his work as vice-chairman of the committee on reconstruction and development in the past year, in which he has been very actively engaged, that this proposed salary is intended to be provided.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Are these gentlemen named as members of the Privy Council?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. Maclean and Senator Robertson are both members of the King's Privy Council for Canada. They were sworn in as such when they became members of the Government in October last.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My right hon. friend has not mentioned who is to be the third minister.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN. There is no intention at present to appoint any third minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is only by way of precaution?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: By way of adequate precaution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We have no intention on this side to discuss the measure to-day, but I would like to have more information than my right hon. friend has given me. Perhaps he cannot give it to-day. We would like to know what the number of the members of the administration will be, including the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), the parliamentary secretaries, the Solicitor General and so on. I will not ask my right hon. friend to give that information to-day. I know that he is blessed with a good memory, but there are limits to his memory, and perhaps, in view of the numerous personnel of the Administration, his memory is not equal to the undertaking of giving me the particulars. In the meantime, instead of relying on his memory, he may perhaps look the matter up and, after consulting with his officers, he may be able to get a list of those who are now members of the Administration.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am confident that I can rely on my memory, but I can tell my right hon. friend that I shall certainly bring a list.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It might stand as an order for a return.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Might I ask my right hon friend the Prime Minister if he could, for the information of the House, give the functions of the Committee on Development and Reconstruction, presided over by my hon. friend the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Maclean)?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I laid the Order in Council on the table of the House on Monday last and I shall furnish my hon. friend with a printed copy of it before the commencement of the session to-morrow.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Are these ministers to accept office without consulting the people or to go back for re-election in the constituencies which they represent?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Under the Order in Council which is to be confirmed by legislation founded upon this resolution, my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) was appointed to the position which he holds and was in the enjoyment of a salary before he was elected. I do not understand that it would be necessary for him to seek re-election.

Mr. CANNON: May I ask the right hon., the leader of the Government if it is true that the Inland Revenue Department is to be merged with the Department of Customs?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I shall make a statement with regard to that when the Bill comes up again.

Resolution reported, read a first and second time and concurred in.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 13 to amend the Salaries' Act and the provisions for preserving the independence of Parliament.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING SALE OF CERTAIN COMMODITIES.

On motion of Sir George Foster the House went into Committee on the following proposed resolution, (Mr. Boivin in the Chair):

That it is expedient to provide that vegetables may be sold by the pound and that a dozen of eggs shall mean a dozen eggs weighing not less than a pound and a half; and also that packages containing human food or other commodities should be marked with the name and address of the fillers, and the weight, measure or quantity of their contents, but not including packages for export or imported into Canada, goods sold in bulk or broken packages, or fresh fruit and vegetables, and allowing for discrepancies in weight or measure due exclusively to difference in atmospheric conditions and other causes; and also to provide that firewood shall be sold by the cord, and every cord shall contain one hundred and twenty-eight cubic feet; and also to provide that every bag of Portland cement shall contain ninety-four pounds net weight, and four such bags shall constitute a barrel, and the bag shall be made of good strong fibrous material and have marked thereon the brand and name of the manufacturer and the net weight; but these provisions should not apply to articles held in stock; and also for the imposition of penalties for the violation of the law.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This is a resolution that is to form the basis of a Bill to be introduced. Most of the Bill to be introduced is similar to the one introduced last year and which was discussed in the House and distributed throughout the country. One or two additions are made to that. Probably any discussion which takes place upon it had better take place upon the Bill rather than upon the resolution.

Mr. BUREAU: I understand that eggs have been added?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, eggs and cord wood have been added.

Resolution reported.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF HAY.

On motion of Sir George Foster the House went into Committee on the following proposed resolution, Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

That it is expedient to provide for the inspection and grading of hay, the licensing of pressers of hay for sale or exportation, the charging of a fee of one dollar for such licenses, the labelling of pressed hay for sale, exportation or importation, the grading of straw, and the imposition of penalties for violation of the law.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Will the minister kindly explain?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This is a new Bill, providing for consolidation of, and some amendments and additions to, the present Inspection and Sale Act. As regards the inspection and sale of hay and the grades of the same, in the East that has been law for some time. No grades have been established for hay in the western part of Canada, and this resolution provides for grades in that section of the country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The same grades in the East and the West?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Oh, no, different grades. The grades established in the East, in the Bill to be introduced, are practically the same as they are at present. There will be new grades established for the West. Then there is provision for the inspection, which comes, of course, as a corollary from having grades fixed, and it is also proposed, for statistical purposes chiefly, to authorize the issuing of licenses for the pressing of hay to those who press hay for public sale and for export.

Mr. NESBITT: Do you mean to the man who presses hay, or to the farmer who gets it pressed?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: To the men who are pressers of hay, and that is the reason particularly for this resolution, in order to make provision for that change.

Mr. ELKIN: Mr. Chairman, in the East, at least, there is not any practical use for the law that now exists in connection with the inspection of hay. Hay is sold in the East both loose and pressed without any inspection. I would like to have further explanation as to the practical use of this resolution.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Inspection has previously been carried out in Quebec and in Ontario, and, I think, in other provinces; at least, there has been a provision for inspection which could be brought into force.

[Sir George Foster.]

I think that is true with reference to the East.

Mr. ELKIN: Not in the Maritime Provinces.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, I think so. However, I will have fuller information upon the introduction of the Bill. This is simply the resolution on which to base the Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I presume this new legislation must be necessitated by representations which have been made to my hon. friend to the effect that the present law was not sufficient. I have never heard that there was any complaint from the province of Quebec regarding the existing law. As I understand it this resolution is intended to extend the present law. The export of hay is of great importance in the province of Quebec as well as in other parts of Canada. If my hon. friend has any correspondence on this subject, any suggestions made to him by public bodies or others, I think he should bring it down. The matter is new to a great many of us, and the resolution provides for a very wide extension of the system of licensing. More information should be given.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: All the information in our hands will be brought down.

Mr. READ: The minister states that the inspection of hay applies in the East already. I think that is a mistake. At least, it does not apply to Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. I think it only pertains to the province of Quebec.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. READ: Not in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. PROULX: Will the pressers have to guarantee the quality of the hay?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: There are grades of hay established. The inspectors fix the grades, and then those who press it have their duties to perform, which include pressing it properly, keeping out foreign substances, and putting their tags upon it to show the quality of the hay.

Mr. EDWARDS: I see no pressing need for this legislation in so far as the province of Ontario is concerned. I have no doubt, however, that there is probably some necessity for it in the Maritime Provinces, and no doubt the suggestion for this legislation emanated from the East, as I understand there is now in the cabinet a gentleman who is an expert on hay.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. PROULX: A Bill was presented last year providing different grades of hay. In conversation with an extensive buyer of hay, I was told that the grading was impracticable. I hope that the Bill to be presented this year will provide a simpler classification. In the Bill introduced last year five or six grades were provided. My informant was of the opinion that it could not be successfully operated.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The Bill has been circulated very widely. More or less correspondence and actual conferences have taken place on the Bill as it will be brought down and so far as I can understand from the report of my Department, it has the practical consent of those who are engaged in the hay business. The House will have full opportunity of discussing the Bill and deciding as to whether it is one which ought to be put into operation or not.

Mr. BUREAU: Will hay which is not to be exported require to be pressed?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, hay that is sold in this market.

Mr. BUREAU: For all hay sold in the home market?

Mr. MICHAUD: What will be the practice in connection with the selling of either loose or pressed hay?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This will apply to all hay that is pressed for sale under the grades which are established under the Bill. It will not prevent a man from selling a bundle of hay if he wants to sell it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It is to apply when a sale takes place on the market?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes.

Mr. COPP: Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that the Bill has been printed and circulated to some extent? It has not been sent to any of the dealers this year.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It has been circulated all through the country.

Mr. COPP: The proposed Bill?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes.

Mr. COPP: We did not see it down in our part of the country. I would like to ask the minister if, after the Bill is introduced, time will be given for representations to be received from dealers in the Maritime Provinces if necessary?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Certainly.

Resolution reported, and read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the resolution be read a second time?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: At the next sitting of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: It being six o'clock, I now leave the Chair.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I suggest to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Sir SAM HUGHES: Mr. Speaker, I must respectfully enter my protest at the low tone in which the speaking is carried on across the floor of the House. It is impossible for members to hear what is being said.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am suggesting to my hon. friend that we go through the Order Paper and not come back this evening.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: We have Bills to consider to-night.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

VAN BUREN BRIDGE COMPANY.

House in Committee on the following proposed Resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to ratify and confirm an agreement dated the 8th day of March, 1918, between His Majesty the King and the Van Buren Bridge Company for a lease of certain lands situate in the parish of St. Leonards, in the County of Madawaska and Province of New Brunswick and lying between the International Railway and the National Transcontinental Railway, at the annual rental of twelve hundred dollars from the 1st day of May, 1918, until the 31st day of August, 1934, payable in half-yearly payments of six hundred dollars each on the first day of March and thirty-first day of August in each year; the first payment to be made on the 31st day of August, 1918, for the portion of the semi-annual term then expired, and the last payment to be made on the 30th day of August, 1934.

Hon. Mr. J. D. REID (Minister of Railways and Canals): The object, as the resolution itself states, is to confirm an agreement made between His Majesty the King and the Van Buren Bridge Company on the 8th March, 1918. This is a portion of the Bangor and Aroostook railway which runs from the State of Maine into Canadian territory and connects with the Canadian Government railways at St. Leonards. After entering Canadian territory the line crosses the Transcontinental railway and likewise the International railway also owned by the Canadian Government railways. The portion of the railway leased is a stretch about two miles in length between the International and the Transcontinental railways, and our object in leasing is to permit us to discontinue the maintenance and upkeep of two stations at St. Leonards. As it is now, trains operating on the International line run to a station that was built for that railway, whilst Transcontinental trains proceed to the station of that railway. By leasing this small portion of the line, trains on the International railway will run over the two miles into the station of the Transcontinental railway. In this way we discontinue the keeping up of the International Railway station. We have taken a lease until the year 1934. The reason for leasing instead of purchasing the two miles is because of the fact that this portion of the line is bonded and the bonds fall due when the lease expires.

Mr. MICHAUD: The International is operated by the Government?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. MICHAUD: And the International trains used to go to the Canadian Pacific Railway station instead of running to their own? I am very glad indeed that the minister is providing a Union Station for both the Transcontinental and International railways. I believe that $1,200 will pay the Bangor and Aroostook railway well for the privilege of running over the section leased; it is only a matter of operating a couple of trains a day that we are called upon to pay for.

Mr. MURPHY: I understood the minister to say in his explanation that the expiry of the lease would coincide with the falling due of the bonds.

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. MURPHY: Did the hon. gentleman intimate that it was then intended to purchase the line which is now being leased?

Mr. REID: That will depend upon the man who will then be occupying the position of Minister of Railways. The date is too far ahead for me to venture to make a prediction upon. Whoever is Minister of Railways at that time will be free to either purchase the line or make a new lease. In this instance I might say we are paying a rental which practically amounts to the interest on the cost of building the stretch of two miles.

Mr. MICHAUD: I should explain that International railway freight trains run over the line in question several times a day.

Mr. REID: This will be a portion of our line. The hon. gentleman stated there were only a couple of trains a day, but we will run all our freight over this portion of the system. In the past for any International line freight that went over this piece of railway we had to pay the Bangor and Aroostook railway. Now we control the two miles in question the same as though we had purchased it.

Mr. MICHAUD: The minister should understand that several through freight lines run over this line.

Resolution reported, read a first and second time and concurred in.

Mr. REID thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 14 to confirm an agreement between His Majesty the King and the Van Buren Bridge Company.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

MONTREAL HARBOUR ADVANCES ACT, 1914.

On motion of Hon. C. C. Ballantyne (Minister of Marine and Fisheries), the House went into Committee to consider the following resolution. Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend Paragraph (a) of Section 2 of The Montreal Harbour Advances Act, 1914, Chapter 41 of the Statutes of 1914, so as to provide that of the sum of nine million dollars which the Governor in Council was authorized by the said Act to advance and pay to the Corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, such sums may be advanced as are required to pay off and retire debentures of the Corporation of the par value of three hundred thousand dollars maturing in the year one thousand, nine hundred and eighteen.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the minister kindly explain?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The purpose of the Bill is to amend the Montreal Harbour Advances Act of 1914 to enable the Commissioners to retire, out of moneys to be advanced by the Government, debentures issued to the public and maturing during the year 1918, to the amount of $300,000. My hon. friend from Maisonneuve will understand that this is the usual way of handling the matter. When this money was advanced under the Act of 1914, the Harbour Commissioners thought they would have fully expended the money by the end of 1917, but that not being so, it was necessary to amend the Act as I have just stated.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

Mr. BALLANTYNE thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 15, to amend the Montreal Harbour Advances Act, 1914.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the Minister be in a position to state, at the next sitting of the House when this Bill is brought up, the programme of work on the Montreal Harbour?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Do I understand the hon. member to mean the programme of work we contemplate carrying on at Montreal during the coming year?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I shall be glad to give that information at the next sitting.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

PROPOSED TEMPORARY CONTROL OF IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

On the motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House went into Committee to consider the following resolution. Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, until the expiration of a period of three years after the termination of the present war, make regulations prohibiting the importation or exportation of goods of any class, description or origin, or produced or manufactured in whole or in part in any country or place specified in the regulation, either generally or from or to any country or place named in the regulation, subject to such exceptions (if any) as may be specified in the regulation, and to any licenses the grant of which may be authorized by the regulation.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am moving this resolution in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) who cannot be here this evening. It is merely for the purpose of founding thereon a Bill which is in precisely the same terms. If the hon. gentlemen will be good enough to permit the resolution to be passed pro forma, I shall not attempt any explanation of it in the absence of the minister who will give a full explanation of it upon the second reading.

An hon. MEMBER: Is the Bill printed?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I have a printed copy in my hand. Bills are not printed and distributed until they are introduced. This Bill has not been introduced. If the resolution passes, I shall introduce it immediately, and then it will be printed and distributed.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It seems to me to be a very large order for the Government to ask Parliament to give them this power until three years after the termination of the war. There may, of course, be some good reason for it. I can quite understand that during the war it may be necessary for the Government to have this power as to imports and exports, but why we should go so far as to give control of our import and export trade into the hands of the Government independently of Parliament for a period of three years after the war is over, it is difficult to understand. I trust some good reason will be forthcoming with regard to this proposal.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I entirely agree that there should be a full explanation of the grounds upon which the Bill is founded, and my hon. friend may rest assured that the Minister of Trade and Commerce will give his reasons very fully when he moves the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is it in virtue of this principle that the War Trade Board has been created?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: No, it has no connection whatever with the constitution of the War Trade Board.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What makes me suggest that there should be a full explanation of the proposed resolution and the creation of the War Trade Board is that I find that an Order in Council was passed about eight or ten days ago prohibiting the export of enumerated articles. I am interested in one—mechanical pulp, sulphite pulp. I went before the War Trade Board the other day in order to obtain a license for a company. On reading this resolution, I thought it was the same principle.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It may be the same principle in one sense, but the Bill has no connection with the establishment of the War Trade Board.

Mr. ELKIN: Might I ask the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, by what means he proposes to carry out the provisions embodied in this resolution? It is rather a broad resolution, and from many standpoints it might be dangerous for its powers to be carried out by what might be considered a War Trade Board. If the work is to be carried out by officials of the Government, the matter might have an entirely different standing from what it would have if they were carried out by the War Trade Board as at present constituted. It is very important from many points of view that we should know something further about the resolution. The members of the War Trade Board, as I understand, give their services voluntarily and without remuneration, but the board is not without influence. As we are at the present time importing many articles that are rather dangerous, this control should be exercised by officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce. As the resolution is a broad one and confers a great deal of power, it should be carefully considered by this House.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: There will be the most ample opportunity for discussion of the Bill upon its second reading, and afterwards in Committee of the Whole, where the greatest possible scope is afforded for any discussion of that kind. I am merely asking that the resolution may be passed pro forma in order that the Bill founded upon it may be introduced. The resolution itself provides that the regulations are to be made by the Governor in Council.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time, and concurred in.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 16 to amend the Customs Act and to provide for the temporary control of exports and imports.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE DOMINION FOREST RESERVES AND PARKS ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, the House went into Committee on the following proposed resolution, Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend The Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act, Chapter ten of the Statutes of 1911, and to provide that where, for topographical or other reasons, it is not expedient to use for public road purposes the existing road allowances, the title to which is vested in the Crown in the right of the Province, the Provincial Government may be permitted to lay out such roads as may be necessary for the convenience of the public, and may be granted title thereto in consideration of the surrender of such portions of the said road allowances as are not required for public roads; and notwithstanding anything in the said Act, a grant may be made to the Province of British Columbia of the minerals, within the meaning of the Mineral Act of the said province, located in any lands sought to be acquired for mining purposes in the Dominion Forest Reserves in British Columbia, under the provisions of the agreement between the Dominion and the said province as confirmed by Order in Council dated the eleventh day of February, one thousand eight hundred and ninety.

[Mr. Elkin.]

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: This resolution, I think, is self-explanatory. I should be glad if the Committee would pass it, in order that the Bill which is founded upon it may be introduced.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What are the minerals which it is proposed to transfer to the province of British Columbia.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: All minerals, I suppose, on those lands.

Sir SAM HUGHES: In many parts of the Northwest and British Columbia where railways are located, it is an easy matter to locate a wagon road alongside, to the great advantage of the settlers. At the crossing of rivers, streams and valleys, the same bridge would answer as a public highway. I take the liberty of suggesting that when the Bill is in Committee consideration might be given to this suggestion. The roads alongside the railway would be much shorter than the rectangular roads, and would be of great service to the settlers.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I shall bring my hon. friend's suggestions to the attention of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE: This resolution would seem to indicate that negotiations had taken place with the province in respect to its subject matter. If there is any correspondence, I suppose that it will be brought down upon the second reading by whoever has charge of the Bill.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I will draw my hon. friend's request to the attention of the Minister of the Interior, and he no doubt will see that it is complied with.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and concurred in.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 17, to amend the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RE-ARRANGEMENTS AND TRANSFERS OF DUTIES IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden (Prime Minister) Bill No. 2, to authorize re-arrangements and transfers of duties in the Public Service, was read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—transfers from one minister to another and from one department to another—amalgamate departments—orders hereunder to be laid before Parliament.

Mr. MURPHY: Does not the existing law with reference to the creation and organization of each department give the authority conferred by paragraph (a) of subsection 1?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think there is such a provision with respect to the Department of External Affairs and possibly two or three other departments, but there is no general provision of this kind.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Would the right hon. gentleman specify the cases in which this Act might apply? Am I to understand that presently certain departments are to be transferred to the jurisdiction of one minister only?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I gave one illustration the other day which I think is quite appropriate. Patents, copyrights and trade marks have been attached for a good many years to the Department of Agriculture. We have under consideration the advisability of transferring these matters to another department.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Like the Archives, which, I think, was transferred to the Department of the Secretary of State.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes. There are some other illustrations to which I need not allude at the moment. It may be possible to combine some of the departments. This is a general power; it does not permit an increase of the number of departments, but it does permit the transfer of a department or of a branch thereof from one minister to another. It permits also an amalgamation of two departments under one minister.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Sir Robert Borden moved the second reading of Bill No. 3, to confer the electoral franchise upon women.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Might I ask the right hon. gentleman to postpone this Bill until to-morrow?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Would hon. gentlemen like it to stand?

Mr. MURPHY: Until the right hon. leader of the Opposition is here.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Could the Bill be distributed in the meantime?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The Bill is printed in English and French and distributed. As my hon. friends have been very good in expediting business, I certainly shall not press the second reading of this Bill this evening, particularly as the leader of the Opposition is not present. There does not seem to be anything else to do except to adjourn, and I move, therefore, that the House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 8.38 p.m.

Friday, March 22, 1918.

The House met at three o'clock.

ESTIMATES FOR 1918-1919.

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Estimates for the year ending March 31, 1919, was read by Mr. Speaker to the House and referred to the Committee of Supply.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT.

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I ask if it is the Government's intention to have the usual Easter recess next week, which is Holy week, from Wednesday to the following Tuesday?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is the intention to have the usual recess from six o'clock next Wednesday afternoon to three o'clock on the Tuesday following.

THE GERMAN OFFENSIVE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir SAM HUGHES: In view of the reports concerning a very severe engagement on the western front I desire to ask if the Prime Minister has received any word as to the progress being made by our troops?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Nothing has come in since the offensive commenced, except the report in the press. I have asked the Minister of the Overseas Forces to keep us informed from time to time, so far as may be possible, especially with regard to the Canadian Expeditionary Force.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I should like further to suggest that before any figures are given out as to the casualties, they should first be verified. There should be no solemn faces amongst the people of the Dominion; we are prepared to face the worst.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not know of any announcement having been given out this year without it first being verified.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Perhaps not this year, but certainly last year.

QUEBEC SISTERS OF CHARITY ORPHANAGE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I ask for information from the Government with regard to a report I have seen from the city of Quebec that the military authorities have terminated the lease of a certain property in Quebec which has been under lease for at least forty years to the ladies called the Sisters of Charity, which has been occupied by them as an orphanage, and in which there are now not less than two hundred orphans. Has the lease been terminated? Personally, I think the Citadel property would be better adapted to the Government's military requirements.

MAJOR-GENERAL MEWBURN: The property has been occupied as my right hon. friend states, but it was considered valuable for military purposes, and an officer has been sent to Quebec to investigate the matter. The lease has not yet been cancelled, and nothing has been done in the way of removing the occupants from the building. I hope an amicable arrangement will be come to before action is taken.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The matter came up last autumn. Certain representations were made, in view of which it was arranged that those in occupation of the premises should not be disturbed during the inclement season, but I think it was pointed out then that the property might be required for military purposes this spring.

Mr. H. E. LAVIGUEUR (Quebec County): I have just received a letter from the Sisters of Charity in Quebec saying that they have received notice from the military authorities there. There are two hundred orphans in the building, which has been occupied for over fifty years and on which considerable sums of money have been spent. There is no way at all for the Sisters of Charity—

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not in order for the hon. member to enter into any discussion of this matter on the Orders of the Day. It having been brought to the attention of the Government, nothing further can be done at this stage.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I did not hear a word of what my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said. Hon. members sitting in this part of the House do not know what the building is to which he refers. I think we must insist on the words being spoken loud enough for the members to hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am sorry my hon. friend spoke too late. I should have been glad to speak louder if he had directed my attention to it earlier.

Mr. SPEAKER: Perhaps it would assist very materially if the hon. members themselves would indulge in less conversation.

SUPPLY—INTERIM VOTE.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My hon. friend the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. A. K. Maclean) some days ago called my attention to the fact that the Supplies voted by the House last session will expire on the 31st of this month, and he asked me to agree to voting the usual two months' supply in advance of the usual Supply Bill. I have no objection at all, but this vote is being taken on very short notice. I suppose it is all right, but I am not overburdened with confidence in my hon. friend the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MACLEAN: I can assure my hon. friend that it is all right. I move:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $26,282,144.31 being one-sixth of the amount of each item set forth in the main estimates for the year ending 31st March 1919, laid on the table of the House this day, be granted to His Majesty for the year ending 31st March 1919.

Mr. MURPHY: I have no objection to the adoption of the resolution, provided it be understood that consent to its adoption to-day will not preclude the moving at a later period to strike out any particular item to which any hon. gentleman may take exception.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Certainly.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That is always understood.

Resolution reported, read the first and second times, and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS.

On motion of Mr. A. K. Maclean, Acting Minister of Finance, the House went into Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1919, the sum of $26,282,144.31 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Resolution reported, read the first and second times, and concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL—INTERIM VOTE.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 18, granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public services for the financial year ending March 31, 1919.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times, considered in Committee, and read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION FOREST RESERVES AND PARKS ACT.

On motion of Hon. Arthur Meighen (Minister of the Interior), Bill No. 17, to amend the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act, was read the second time, and the House went into Committee of the Whole thereon, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—To authorize granting road sites to provinces upon surrender of certain road allowances.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I move that this clause be amended by inserting after the word "may," in line eleven, the words "by order of the Governor in Council."

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Would the hon. minister explain the reason of the legislation?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are several sections of an entirely different character all relating to different portions of the Act. This first clause is to amend section 9 of the Forest Reserves Act. That section provides that the Dominion may lay out roads in forest reserves. The previous section had provided that any roads that were already laid out were the property of the province and should remain the property of the province although embraced within a forest reserve. Now it transpires that certain of the roads which were the property of the province are unsuitable and that the provincial authorities desire permission to make new roads. But there is no provision in the Act whereby any new road within a forest reserve can be given to a province, and this provides that if the province surrenders the old road the Governor in Council may grant title to the new road that is given in lieu thereof.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I imagine that this legislation has been suggested by some case which has arisen in some of the western provinces?

Mr. MEIGHEN: In British Columbia.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: At the present time the reserve which will be immediately affected by this provision will be in British Columbia? Is it in contemplation that it will be applied immediately in any other province than British Columbia?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Act applies equally to all forest reserves but, from memory, the case that is now under review is in British Columbia. It is clear that the Act must be general in terms and in all likelihood it will be availed of in any province wherever a road is to be altered. There is no way of altering it now under the law.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not ask the question in any captious spirit. I believe that conditions may change in these reserves and that such legislation as this may be commendable. I am only asking for information if it is intended to apply this provision anywhere else than in British Columbia.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not even certain that British Columbia is the province where the immediate case arises but, from memory, I think it is, and I do not know of any more than one case.

Sir SAM HUGHES: The section reads:

Provided, however, that where, for topographical or other reasons, it is not expedient to use for public road purposes the existing road allowances.

Why not put it the other way and say:

Where it is more expedient to use new routes.

This would make provision for using the old road allowances as well as new routes. There are many places in the Northwest where it is of great advantage to the travelling public to have wagon roads laid out immediately adjacent to the railroads. If this were changed about as I suggested, it would not be restricted to any routes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I read the hon. gentleman's remarks yesterday, and what he said is quite correct; the Act at present provides for that. The Dominion may lay out a road anywhere without closing any other road.

Sir SAM HUGHES: That is all right.

On section 2—to authorize grant of minerals in forest reserves to Province of British Columbia, under agreement of February, 1890:

Mr. MEIGHEN: It will be remembered that the Privy Council has held that the title to the precious metals in the railway belt is in the province, and that the title to the baser metals and to the surface is in the Dominion. In the administration of the Act in the past, constant difficulties arose, which difficulties were got over by the agreement that is referred to here whereby it was provided that if an applicant worked mineral rights in the province, and lived up to the provisions of the Mineral Act of the province, he could acquire patent on payment of a fixed amount, or he could acquire title to the surface rights and to the baser metals. That arrangement has been working ever since 1890, and in consequence we do not administer any of the baser metals in the Railway Belt except coal, and there is very little coal. But when the Dominion Forest Reserves Act was passed in 1911, there was a clause of that Act by which the Minister was refused permission to convey title to any lands at all within the limits of a forest reserve. These lands were locked up and no one was empowered by authority of Parliament to issue a patent for any purpose whatsoever. The result was that wherever there were mineral claims in relation to these lands it was impossible to carry out the terms of the agreement of 1890. By this amendment we propose to make it possible to carry out the terms of the agreement in respect to forest reserve lands just as in respect to other lands in the railway belt.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I did not exactly follow what was said by my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen). By a decision of the Privy Council one class of metal was held to be the property of the province and another class of metal was held to be the property of the Dominion?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

[Sir Sam Hughes.]

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The baser metals were held to be the property of the province?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, of the Dominion; the precious metals were held to be the property of the province.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Under the law as it is to-day the baser metals belong to the Dominion, and the object is to transfer these baser metals to the province?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, not quite. The object is not to transfer the baser metals in toto to the province by any means. The object is to enable us to carry out the arrangement as to the transfer of the baser metals to the patentee of the province in individual cases, which arrangement we made in 1890 but which, by reason of the Forest Reserves Act of 1911, cannot now be applied in the case of forest reserves. Under the arrangement of 1890, it was provided that wherever a man was, under the law of the province entitled to a patent, having lived up to the regulations and to the Mineral Act of the province, he could get a patent from the province to the precious metals, and that he thereby became entitled to a patent from the Dominion to the baser metals and surface rights upon payment of a fixed amount. But, by the Forest Reserves Act, it was provided that no patent could be given under any conditions to any lands in the forest reserves. Consequently a patent could not be given to a patentee of mineral rights in the province. This amendment provides that we may carry out the arrangement of 1890 as respects forest reserve lands just as we could previously carry it out, and as we now carry it out, as respects other lands in the railway belt.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It means that the metals which belong to the Dominion may be transferred to the province and by the province granted to somebody for the purpose of exploitation?

Mr. MEIGHEN: May be transferred direct to the patentee of the province.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Exactly. Is not this possibly interfering with the policy which guided Parliament when it passed the Act of 1911, that is to say, to preserve the forest reserves certain restrictions are necessary as far as possible to keep the forests in a state of nature and prevent exploitation by human hands. The great tendency to-day is toward the exploitation of minerals in forests, and, in consequence, valuable quantities of timber land are destroyed every year. Now, as I understand, the object of my hon. friend is to permit exploitation of minerals. In many cases, in order to get at one good mine, it may be necessary to open ten, and all the dangers which I have mentioned may, therefore, arise in the forest. Do I understand that the policy of my hon. friend is that if a man goes into a Dominion reserve and locates a mine he would get title from my hon. friend, who is the administrator of the reserve, or would he go to the Government of British Columbia, and would the hon. minister give the land to the Government of British Columbia? Is that the object of the legislation? I am afraid that it will have to be very carefully guarded if the purpose of the Act of 1911, to preserve the forests, is to be maintained.

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: What the right hon. gentleman says is correct that in so far as this operates it does give encouragement to the exploiters of minerals, even in forest reserves. But, on the other hand, it must be remembered that by no Act of Parliament can we take away from a province what is now the property of the province even in forest reserves. By the Act of 1911 we closed the forest reserves in so far as we had control of them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It is the property of the province?

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: The provinces still own their own metals in these reserves.

Sir SAM HUGHES: In all the provinces?

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: No, in the railway belt. This clause has no application at all except to forest reserves in the railway belt of British Columbia, because in the forest reserves of the other provinces different conditions apply. It would be a serious responsibility for Parliament to take such action, or to refuse to take such action as would result in virtually denying to the province of British Columbia access to its own vested rights in the forest reserves. So some way has to be found. I do not think this a very serious matter, because I do not think there is much exploitation in the railway lands. All that I recommend to Parliament is that we comply with the agreement of 1890—and do not fall away from that agreement in the matter of our forest reserve lands. I know of no other way by which we may maintain our rights intact, and at the same time not deny to the province the strict benefit of all their possessions in these reserves.

Sec. 2 agreed to.

On Sec. 3—To take a piece of land out of forest reserve and park.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is the meaning of that clause?

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: Clause 3 defines the area of the Rocky mountain forest reserve.

An hon. MEMBER: That is not included?

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. The Rocky mountain forest reserve is defined in the Forest Reserve Act of 1911, and the description appears in the schedule to the Act. This excepts from that schedule a quarter-section of land. The explanation is that, in 1908, previous to the passing of the Act, there had been lands withheld from entry in contemplation of being finally included in forest reserves. Among the lands surveyed and held for inclusion was this quarter-section, and a map was sent to the agent of Dominion lands for the district concerned, namely, Calgary, on which the limit of the forest reserve was clearly shown, and the following words were included in the memo sent the agent at the time the map was forwarded:

> Please note that no homestead entries have been granted for lands lying west of the line indicated.

These words should have been:

> Please note that no entries are to be granted for lands lying west of the line indicated.

Had he looked at the map very carefully the agent would have seen that the intention was to exclude from entry the land west of that line. However, the agent gave entry to a Mr. Andrew Nelson on this quarter-section and another quarter-section. Before the mistake was noticed, Mr. Nelson had virtually earned patent for that quarter-section, and Mr. Nelson was not at fault. He had made his home there; he had made improvements; and it was not until, I think, very recently that the controller of the land patent branch discovered, that the land was in the forest reserve. It was felt the only equitable thing to do was to take this land out of the reserve inasmuch as it is just on the border in any event, and give Mr. Nelson title to it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I ask what Mr. Nelson has done upon that quarter-section? Has he put up a building or cleared the land?

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, he has complied with all the requirements of the Dominion Lands Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The remedy should then be to expropriate the land and to compensate the patentee. If you permit this man to start a farm or settlement in the reserve, you may thereby very materially affect the value of the reserve. These forest reserves are of the greatest importance and should be carefully preserved. Many thousands of acres of the most valuable timber land have been set aside in this reserve and you are permitting somebody to settle upon a quarter-section in it, and there is all the risk of fire which will arise and which might destroy that property altogether. If a mistake has been made, unless this man has a very valuable settlement, it would be far better to compensate him generously rather than to have him on the reserve. I think everybody will agree to that.

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: My right hon. friend's argument would have considerable force if this were a quarter-section within the reserve and not on the boundary of the reserve. But this is a quarter-section right on the end of it, and his own farm is right across the road. The two quarter-sections are the N.E. ¼ of 13-13-3 W. 5-M and the S.E. ¼ of 24-13-3 W. 5-M. My right hon. friend's remarks would have more force if the danger of fire were at all increased by his ownership of this land, but the fact is he has land right across the way, so there is virtually no change in this regard. I do not think it would be wisdom to expropriate. We have the power to do so under the Forest Reserve Act. If the land were enclosed far in the reserve it would be advisable to expropriate, but the recommendation of the head of the branch, who has all the facts, is that we should simply leave him undisturbed. In this same connection, many lands have been reserved for inclusion in forest reserves. and that the minister has power himself to remove those lands from such inclusion if it is found that it is not in the public interest that they be continued. He has not the power here, for the reason that these were lands that were not held for inclusion or were actually included in the first place. I am afraid we will pay pretty dearly for it. I think the officer who examined the ground probably knows that no serious detriment to the reserve is probable by the removal of this quarter-section.

Mr. MURPHY: Has he reported to that effect?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I will not dispute the facts because my hon. friend is familiar with them and I am not. I must say, however, that the principle seems to be a very vicious one. It would be far better under the circumstances to adhere to the policy of expropriation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understand there is no other case of entry within the forest reserve.

Bill reported.

INSPECTION AND SALES ACT AMENDMENT.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING SALE OF CERTAIN COMMODITIES.

Resolution in respect to the weights and measures of certain human food and other commodities read a second time and concurred in.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 19, to Amend the Inspection and Sale Act, (vegetables, eggs, food containers, firewood and cement).

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF HAY.

Resolution in respect to the Inspection and Grading of Hay, read a second time and concurred in.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 20, entitled An Act to Amend the Inspection and Sale Act, (Hay and Straw Inspection).

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RE-ARRANGEMENTS AND TRANSFERS OF DUTIES IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

On the motion of Sir Robert Borden Bill No. 2, to authorize re-arrangement and transfer of duties in the public service was read a third time and passed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

BILL TO CONFER ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ON WOMEN.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved the second reading of Bill No. 3, to confer the electoral franchise upon women.

He said: Before the Bill is read a second time, it is proper that I should give some explanation to the House. Hon. gentlemen are aware that in five provinces of the Dominion at the present time women have the right to vote in provincial elections. I am informed that a Bill conferring the franchise upon women has been introduced in the legislature of the province of Nova Scotia at its present session. If that Bill should pass, the position would then be that in six provinces of the Dominion women have the right to vote in provincial elections, and in the three other provinces they have not that right. Then the situation, so far as this Parliament is concerned, would resolve itself into three alternatives: either that we should leave the situation as it is at present, or that we should extend the franchise for Dominion purposes in each province to those women who enjoy it for provincial elections in such province, or third, that we should enact a measure in this Parliament which would enfranchise women generally, under proper safeguards as to naturalization, to which question I shall refer in a few moments. It has seemed to the Government advisable that the third alternative should be adopted.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Which?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: To enfranchise women generally throughout the Dominion. I do not depend for this upon the considerations which I have placed before the House as to the condition of provincial legislation on the subject. I do not even base it on the wonderful and conspicuous service and sacrifice which women have rendered to the national cause in the war. Apart from all these, I conceive that women are entitled to the franchise on their merits, and it is upon that basis that this Bill is presented to Parliament for its consideration. It is our belief that the influence of women exercised in this way will be a good influence in public life. We believe that beneficial results have ensued wherever the franchise has been granted to them; indeed the principle of granting the franchise to women generally was practically affirmed in the last Parliament.

There are, however, some considerations with regard to naturalization to which I must direct the attention of the House; those hon. gentlemen who were members of the last Parliament will recollect that they were then referred to. In 1914 the Parliament of the United Kingdom passed an Act known as the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914. That Act was passed also in Canada, and I think in some of the other dominions, in pursuance of a resolution which was adopted at the Imperial Conference of 1911, and which sought to bring about such an arrangement between the Mother Country and the self-governing dominions as would place naturalization on a more satisfactory basis than it had previously occupied. There was a good deal of correspondence and discussion between this Government and the Government of the United Kingdom with regard to certain provisions of that Act, but eventually, in 1914, we passed in this Parliament a measure which in every respect, I believe, corresponds with the second part of the Imperial Act to which I have alluded. By section 10 of that Act it is provided that the wife of a British subject shall be deemed to be a British subject and the wife of an alien shall be deemed to be an alien. In 1914, after our Act had been passed, an amendment was made in the British Act, and we made a corresponding amendment in our Act at the war session in 1914. Section 10, to which I have just referred, was amended by adding thereto these words:

4 p.m.

> Provided that where a man ceases during the continuance of his marriage to be a British subject, it shall be lawful for his wife to make a declaration that she desires to retain British nationality, and thereupon she shall be deemed to remain a British subject.

Apart from that, the qualifications necessary to any person who might desire to become a naturalized British subject in Canada under the Naturalization Act of 1914 were set out in section 2 of the Act, as follows:

> (a) that he has either resided in His Majesty's dominions for a period of not less than five years in the manner required by this section, or been in the service of the Crown for not less than five years within the last eight years before the application; and,
>
> (b) that he is of good character and has an adequate knowledge of either the English or French languages; and,
>
> (c) that he intends if his application is granted either to reside in His Majesty's dominions or to enter or continue in the service of the Crown.

The second subsection provides as follows:

> The residence required by this section is residence in Canada for not less than one year immediately preceding the application, and previous residence, either in Canada or in some other part of His Majesty's dominions, for a period of four years within the last eight years before the application.

One very important change that was made by this statute was the change in the length of residence required. Under previous Acts —which, however, granted only a local naturalization operative in Canada—the period of only three years' residence was required. In discussing at the last session the question of extending the franchise to women, I pointed out certain anomalies which would result unless some amendment were made in the Naturalization Act, or some other provision enacted to meet the possibilities to which I am about to refer.

Under the present law of Canada it is necessary that a man shall be either a natural-born or a naturalized citizen of His Majesty in order that he may exercise the franchise. But inasmuch as a woman merely by her marriage to a natural-born or naturalized British subject becomes a British subject herself, it might be that without some such precautionary enactment as I have referred to, a woman residing only a few weeks or a few months in Canada would be entitled to exercise the franchise. On the other hand, there is the converse difficulty: that a woman who was a natural-born British subject and who married an alien would, merely by the fact of her marriage, lose the right to vote. These questions seemed to present very considerable difficulty, and I had much doubt at one time whether they could be met and solved without an amendment of the Naturalization Act itself. I think there is a good deal to be said for some amendment which would give to a woman the right to determine her own nationality, notwithstanding her marriage, because if a woman, notwithstanding her marriage, is to have the right to exercise the franchise in this country, the natural conclusion therefrom would be that she ought to have the right to determine her own nationality. However, if we waited for any such amendment of the Naturalization Act, it is possible that we would have to wait a long time; therefore, we have endeavoured so to provide in this Bill that such difficulties as those to which I have alluded cannot possibly arise.

The measure is a very short one, and I hope hon. gentlemen will understand that its length does not at all correspond to the amount of time that was bestowed upon it before this solution was found. It is proper that I should give an explanation of the Bill, which is within very short compass.

Section 1 provides, in the first subsection, as follows:

1.—(1) Every female person shall be entitled to vote at a Dominion election who,—

(a) is a British subject;

(b) is of the full age of twenty-one years and upwards;

(c) has resided in the constituency in which she seeks to vote for a period of at least three months immediately preceding the date of the issue of the writ for an election in such constituency; and,

(d) is not disqualified on account of race, blood or original nationality to vote at elections for members of the Legislative Assembly of the province in which the constituency is situate in which such female person seeks to vote.

Hon. gentlemen will observe that a period of three months immediately preceding the election is required in the particular constituency in which the woman shall be entitled to vote. It follows from certain dispositions to which I shall refer later that the woman, unless she is a natural-born or a naturalized British subject, must have lived in this country for a much longer period. Paragraph (d) provides that we shall follow the enactments of provincial legislatures with regard to disqualification on account of race, blood or original nationality.

Sir SAM HUGHES: What is meant by "blood"?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I understand that this is the form of expression which has been used in some of the provincial enactments alluded to.

Sir SAM HUGHES: It is not shown as a quotation; that is why I asked.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: No, but the same language is used in order that we may follow precisely the law of the provinces in that respect.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Is there any intention of enfranchising the Indians? They are fighting at the front like heroes.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: We have not taken that into consideration in this Bill. Subsection (2) provides that

For the purposes of this Act a female person shall be deemed to be a British subject,—

(a) if she was born a British subject and is unmarried or is married to a British subject, and has not become a subject of any foreign power; or,

(b) if she has herself been personally naturalized as a British subject and has not since become the subject of a foreign power; or,

(c) if, being a married woman and previously an alien, she has become a British subject by marriage, or by the naturalization as a British subject of her father while she was a minor, and in either case has done nothing (other than in the second case by marriage) to forfeit or lose her status as a British subject, and obtain and presents to the official in charge of the preparation or revision of the voters' lists of the said constituency a certificate, under the signature of a judge or any court of record or of any superior court, under the seal of the said court, certifying that such female person is of the full age of twenty-one years, has resided in Canada a sufficient length of time, and is possessed of all requirements necessary to entitle her, if unmarried, to become naturalized as a British subject, and that she has taken the oath of allegiance to His Majesty; or,

(d) if, nothwithstanding she is married to an alien, she was at the time of such marriage a British subject by birth and has not herself sworn allegiance to any foreign power: Provided, however, that this paragraph shall not apply to the wife of an alien enemy.

The meaning of that is practically this: to be entitled to vote, a woman who has become a British subject by marriage, or through the naturalization, while she was a minor, of her father. who was previously an alien, must have lived in this country the necessary length of time and must in every way fulfil the qualifications which would be necessary in case she were applying as an unmarried woman for naturalization.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The House is very thin at the moment, and I do not purpose to discuss the principle of the Bill at this stage, as I understand several members wish to speak on it. I suggest that we give the Bill its second reading and go into Committee upon it, when the information I desire can better be given than across the floor of the House.

Mr. THOMAS HAY (Selkirk): Is an educational test to be provided in connection with this Bill?. If not, would it be necessary for the women to comply with the educational test of the province before being allowed to vote at a Dominion election?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My hon. friend perhaps did not observe that I pointed out the provisions of the Naturalization Act. Subsection (b) of section (2) of that Act provides that any person seeking naturalization must be of good character and must have an adequate knowledge of either the English or the French language; that is the only educational test. Inasmuch as this Bill provides that any woman who has not been naturalized in her own right must fulfil the same requirements as if she were seeking naturalization, the condition which I have just read would apply to her, and she must fulfil it before being granted the vote.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—Women to be entitled to vote:

Mr. STEVENS. There is one point I am not quite clear about. Paragraph (c) provides that the woman shall have resided in the constituency in which she seeks to vote for a period of at least three months. Do I understand that a woman from a foreign, but not an alien enemy country, who comes to Canada and is married to a British subject four months, we will say, prior to an election, thereby securing British citizenship, is able to vote?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: She must fulfil the qualifications required by paragraph (c) of subsection (2). Subsection (2) makes it necessary that she shall have resided in Canada a sufficient length of time and be possessed of all the requirements necessary to entitle her, if unmarried, to become naturalized as a British subject. She must reside in Canada for at least a year, and must reside within the Empire for at least five years.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: She must become naturalized, and in addition to that must have lived three months in the constituency.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If she becomes naturalized by reason of marriage or by reason of being a minor at the time when her father, being an alien, was naturalized, she must show before a judge of a Superior Court that she has fulfilled all the requirements that would be necessary if, being an unmarried woman, she were making an application for naturalization on her own behalf. The three months' residence in the constituency is an additional qualification.

Mr. DEVLIN: Those three months may be counted as part of the time?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Certainly.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I would suggest that instead of saying "three months," we say "ninety days." Some three months would be more than ninety days, and others would be less.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is pretty much the same.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There is no objection that I can see to paragraphs (a), (b), and (c), but I may call attention to paragraph (d) which seems to me most objectionable. It provides that every female person shall be entitled to vote at a Dominion election who,

(d) is not disqualified on account of race, blood or original nationality to vote at elections for members of the Legislative Assembly of the province in which the constituency is situate in which such female person seeks to vote.

Take the law of the province in that respect. If there is to be in any province any legislative enactment which prohibits a woman from voting, our law respects that part of the provincial legislation. If in British Columbia, for instance, an alien is disqualified on account of race, blood, or original nationality from voting in the province, she cannot vote in a Dominion election. If, on the other hand, in the neighbouring province there is no such prohibition, then she is allowed to vote in the Dominion election. I think that is the proper interpretation of the law. This provision was put in the negative. That is to say, we adopt the provincial legislation in the negative.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: In order to make the matter perfectly clear, permit me to say that we are merely carrying out in this respect, the same principles with regard to women which now prevail in regard to men.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not intend to discuss the principle of the Bill on the present occasion, but will reserve any remarks I may have to make on that subject. But the policy the Liberals have always advocated since the time of Mr. Blake, when we had the Franchise Bill, which was discussed at great length, was that we should adopt provincial legislation in the matter of the franchise. It has, I think, been contended by authors who have written on the subject that the franchise is largely a matter of education and tradition, and therefore, wherever there is a revision of legislative power, it has always been suggested that the proper body to legislate upon the franchise should not be the central Government, or the central power, but the local legislature. It is a specific provision of the constitution of the United States that the power to legislate upon the franchise is vested in the State. Congress has no power to legislate upon the franchise, and in every federal election, whether it be for the presidency or for Congress, is taken upon the franchise of the state. Today in the American Union there are states in which women vote for the presidency and states in which they do not. The reason for this legislation is that the franchise, as I said a moment ago, is largely a matter of education and tradition. There are communities which are more educated and more advanced, you may say, in the line of franchises than other communities. Take, for instance, the two nations which are today at the head of civilization in Europe. The franchise has just been granted in England to women, after a period of long education. I am satisfied that although France is supposed to be a democracy far more advanced than England, the reason why the franchise has not been given to the women in the country, is that in France education and tradition have not favoured that course. In my humble judgment, the Act would have been more useful if we had followed the policy of leaving the question of the franchise to be determined by the provinces. At present there are five provinces which have given the franchise to women. Those provinces are the five provinces west of the Ottawa river. According to my interpretation of our own law, the women of Ontario, of Manitoba, of Saskatchewan, of Alberta and of British Columbia have the right to take part in Dominion elections. Our law upon this subject is contained in chapter 6 of the Revised Statutes, section 10, as follows:—

> The qualifications necessary to entitle any person to vote at a Dominion election in any province shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be those established by the laws of that province as necessary to entitle such person to vote in the same part of the province at a provincial election.

This language seems to me very clear and it seems to convey the right of the franchise in Dominion elections in all the provinces where it has been given to women. We had a discussion, as my right hon. friend will remember, last session upon this subject, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) took the ground that the law did not apply because of some distinction as to the word "person" which is derived from the interpretation given by British jurisprudence. My hon. friend, however, has taken the view that the franchise should be extended to women in all the provinces, regardless of the fact that some provinces are sufficiently advanced to give the franchise to women and others have not done so. Five provinces have done so. A sixth will do it this year, because Nova Scotia will have such a law. Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec have not yet reached that stage, but they will endeavour, I have no doubt, to fall in line at no distant date. My hon. friend, however, instead of taking the provincial franchises in the affirmative, and saying that the law of the province shall apply to every woman in every province when she has the franchise by the law of the province, has provided that when any women is denied in any province the franchise by the legislature of the province, she will not be able to vote at a Dominion election. However, they may be on a parity there, and if she is denied the franchise by a province, she will be denied the franchise under this measure also. Would it not be more in accordance with the logic of things and with the best principles of legislation to take the provincial legislation not in the negative, but in the affirmative sense, and to say simply that the Dominion franchise shall be given to every woman who to-day has the right to vote in any province at provincial elections? It seems to me such legislation would be far more in accordance with the fitness of things than what is proposed by my hon. friend, in view especially of some other provisions to which I shall refer later on.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I entirely understand that the United States have a provision in their Constitution that the franchise adopted in the different states is to be used for elections to the federal Congress. We have no such a law in this country. I am not prepared to admit that it is not perfectly competent for this Parliament to create its own franchise law, apart altogether from the provinces. We need not discuss that at the moment. For the present we are proceeding along the lines of provincial legislation. We are guided by that in framing this law. There are certain restrictions in some of the provinces as to race and nationality in respect to men. We are simply providing in this Bill tnat there shall be precisely the same restrictions in respect to women. That is all. As we have followed the line of provincial legislation with regard to men, we think it proper also to follow the same line when we are giving the franchise to women. There is only one possible anomaly to which it is proper that I should draw the attention of the committee, and it has not been alluded to by my right hon. friend. I think this Bill gives to women a somewhat wider franchise in certain of the provinces than men enjoy at the present time. For example, there are certain difficult and intricate provisions relating to the franchise in my own province. The right is enjoyed by farmers' sons based upon a certain valuation of property. There is also a similar provision in regard to fishermen. These dispositions are not of a character to be made applicable to women, and inasmuch as women have waited a long time for the privilege of exercising their franchise, I do not think it will do any harm if they have a somewhat wider franchise than the men in the province to which I have alluded.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No, but it may create confusion. In my own province you give to the women universal manhood suffrage.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Womanhood suffrage.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is not the law in Quebec, although in most of the provinces they have universal manhood suffrage. Every man has a vote who is twenty-one years of age. In the province of Quebec the franchise is not given as a right, but it is made accessible to everybody. Every man in Quebec is a voter who is a land owner.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Does it depend on a property qualification in Quebec?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I think one qualification is that he must be the owner of land. The lessee of property of a value of $2 a month in cities is also a voter.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Does it not practically amount to manhood suffrage?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In practice it does, but it is not claimed as a right. No one has a right to go to the poll and say: "I am 21 years of age and demand a vote." He must show that he is the owner or lessee of land, or that he is a wage-earner getting $300 a year, or a professor, or a schoolmaster, or something of that kind. But under this provision every woman of 21 years of age will have the right to step into the poll and say that she is entitled to vote. No distinction is made by this Bill as to these qualifications applicable to men. All other considerations are put to one side.

Mr. READ: I draw the attention of the Prime Minister to paragraph (d) of section 1:

—is not disqualified on account of race, blood, etc.

In the province of Prince Edward Island there is a very large Micmac population, and there will be a technical difficulty in regard to giving the wives of Indians the right to vote. The paragraph reads:

(d) is not disqualified on account of race, blood or original nationality to vote at elections for members of the Legislative Assembly of the province in which the constituency is situate in which such female person seeks to vote.

The men have the right to vote in the province, but the women have not. As this paragraph reads, there will be difficulty in regard to the franchise of the wives of these Indians. I want to say in regard to the tribe of Micmacs that they have shown themselves to be the most loyal people in Canada. They have recruited over eleven per cent of the whole population of the tribe for service at the front, and I take it that the law does not intend to disqualify their women from voting. It is simply a technical matter, and it will be apparent to the right hon. gentleman if he looks closely at the Elections Act. I hope he will make provision to give these women the vote.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I shall take the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Read) into consideration. I do not know that I could quite follow them, as he did not speak very loudly, but I will read his observations in Hansard and give them the best consideration possible.

Mr. NICKLE: I may misapprehend the law, but it appears to me that there is a rather anomalous condition being created by paragraph (c) of section 1. This paragraph gives the right to a woman to vote if she has been three months in the constituency immediately preceding the date of the election; whereas, section 32 of the War Times Election Act, subsection 2, adopted the provincial residential qualification which sets out that the male voter must have resided for one year in the province. Will not an anomalous condition be created if a woman who has resided in the electoral district for three months is entitled to vote, whereas the man will have to wait a year? Take the case of two immigrants coming from the old country, a man and a woman, and both British subjects; the man would not be entitled to vote unless he had been a resident of a province for a year, whereas the woman would be entitled to vote if she had lived in the constituency for three months.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If they were both British subjects?

Mr. NICKLE: Yes. There seems to be rather an anomaly in this way that the Act penalizes those who have for a protracted period been entitled to the franchise and makes a concession in favour of those who are just receiving it.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I imagine that particular provision was not observed by the draftsman of the Act and I will direct his attention to it. We will see what should be done in that respect before the matter is finally disposed of.

Mr. NICKLE: Possibly I may misapprehend the provision of the Act.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Does not the Dominion Franchise Act allow a man to vote if he resides thirty days in the constituency or in the province?

[Mr. Read.]

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) was referring to the War-Times Election Act. I think the provision there may be different. I shall examine it further.

Mr. SINCLAIR: There is another point that I wish to draw to the attention of the Prime Minister. A residence of three months qualifies a woman to vote under this Act. If it is intended that the provincial lists shall be adopted, and if the recording of the names of these women is to be done by the officials of the province in Nova Scotia, I would point out to the right hon. gentleman that provision is made in that province that the revision shall be completed on the 5th of April each year and that the revision lasts for twelve months. If an election took place nearly twelve months after the revision there would be a large number of women qualified under this Act who would not be on the list. I am not clear as to whether it is intended that the local lists shall be adopted but if so there would be that difficulty.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If women were on the provincial list in Nova Scotia the difficulty would not so occur. Assuming that the legislation which I mentioned a moment ago should not pass in the legislature of Nova Scotia, and with respect to any other province where women are not placed upon the provincial lists, there would have to be some machinery provided under the Dominion Elections Act. Machinery already exists under the War-Times Elections Act which is in force for the time being. Before the Dominion Elections Act is to be resorted to, my hon. friend is quite right in suggesting that some machinery must be provided.

Mr. DEVLIN: I had it in mind to ask the Prime Minister that particular question. I see by clause 2 of the Act that the Act is to be construed as one with the Dominion Elections Act and the War-Times Elections Act. That very particularly affects the province of Quebec where, under the system adopted, enumerators have to be appointed. This system was not necessary prior to the last election. Is that system to continue and will enumerators have to be appointed?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: As far as the War-Time Elections Act is concerned, it will continue because it is one of the provisions of the Act. I have already explained that in the application of the measure to the Dominion Elections Act I think it is very probable that some additional machinery will have to be provided for placing the names of women upon the electoral lists in the Dominion.

On subsection 2, section 1—a British subject for purposes of this Act.

Mr. MORPHY: I presume that under the rules of the House when a Bill is in Committee, one may refer to a former section. I would like to make a remark about subsection (3) of section 1, which reads:

> Every female person shall be entitled to vote at a Dominion election who. . . . (d) is not disqualified on account of race, blood or original nationality to vote at elections for members of the Legislative Assembly of the province in which the constituency is situate, etc.

These terms are so abstract that I think they should be defined in some way in the Act. One can hardly understand exactly what they do mean. I confess I do not. The next point I would like to make is that, in my opinion, a Franchise Act relating to the whole of Canada, so far as women are concerned, should contain within itself clearly and distinctly all the provisions which go to show in what the franchise consists and the requisite qualifications of the person who is to enjoy the franchise. I must confess that the War-time Elections Act was a very difficult one to understand. Lawyers, as well as men of business, disagreed about it; and when we consider that our election machinery must be handled throughout the length and breadth of Canada by men in rural districts, educated no doubt pretty well, but still farmers, who have to take care of the rural polls, I submit that it is the duty of this Parliament to make the Election Act as plain as possible and not as complicated as this Bill appears to be. The working out of this Bill, as I see it here now, is going to be very difficult. There are too many abstractions in it. I submit that the Act itself should contain all the factors that show in what the franchise consists. Where it depends upon the Naturalization Act, let us have the naturalization clauses put right in the Bill, so that we can get down to a complete, concrete Act that can be understood by the very commonest man in the country.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is a very useful form of legislation to enact by reference. I really cannot see that there should be any difficulty about working it out as this Bill prescribes.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Could the hon. First Minister work out the last Elections Act in regard to enumerators and every thing else?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: No, I never had occasion to attempt it. I am not talking about the War-Time Elections Act, I am talking about this Act. I really cannot agree with my hon. friend from Perth (Mr. Morphy) that there is the lack of information in the Bill which impresses him. The first subsection seems to me to be tolerably clear, and I think I shall be able to show that the words which are used there have a distinct meaning within the law. However, I shall give consideration to what he has observed in that respect and shall speak further upon the matter when the Bill is next in Committee.

Mr. REDMAN: Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the attention of the committee to paragraph (c), subsection 2, section 1, giving British nationality to any woman who marries a British subject, or to any woman who qualifies on account of her father having been naturalized while she was a minor. If that is the intention of the section, it seems to me that a grammatical interpretation will not convey that idea. The subsection reads:

> If, being a married woman and previously an alien, she has become a British subject by marriage, or by the naturalization as a British subject of her father while she was a minor—

Now, it seems to me that the words beginning "if, being a married woman" grammatically govern the entire clause down to the word "minor," and if the first interpretation which I gave is the correct one, then the reading would be much more clearly conveyed by striking out the words "if being a married woman" and substituting the words "if, having been previously an alien, she has become a British subject by marriage, or by the naturalization as a British subject of her father while she was a minor." In the event of that not being the intention, then it would appear that any woman acquiring British nationality through the naturalization of her father while she was a minor, and who had married either a British subject or an alien, would not acquire British nationality which would enable her to exercise the franchise.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN. I think there is some force in what my hon. friend has observed. It probably could be corrected by inserting the words "or, if she has become a British subject by the naturalization as a British subject of her father." I shall make a note of my hon. friend's suggestion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is a great deal of force in the observation of my hon. friend from Perth (Mr. Morphy), that this Bill should contain everything that is intended. Let me call at once to the attention of my hon. friend the difficulty which arises. Subsection (c) reads:

> If, being a married woman and previously an alien, she has become a British subject by marriage, or by the naturalization as a British subject of her father while she was a minor, and in either case has done nothing, (other than in the second case by marriage) to forfeit or lose her status as a British subject, and obtains and presents to the official in charge of the preparation or revision of the voters' lists of the said constituency a certificate under the signature of a judge or any court of record, etc.

If I understand this aright, it is intended that the provincial lists should be used and that no special lists should be made. At the present time the provincial lists are used: we make no Dominion list. We accept the lists of the provinces, and I think that is quite proper. If that be so, it seems to me the application for registration should be made at the time that the lists are prepared. The time at which the lists are prepared differs in almost every province. In Ontario, I think, they are prepared in the month of September or thereabouts, and in Quebec also they are prepared in September. I do not know the practice in the other provinces. But it seems to me that the Prime Minister should provide that the application for registration should be made at the time the lists are prepared. Otherwise, if there is no period stated in which applications are to be made, when must applications be made? Are they to be made at all times, even on the day of voting?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I shal' consider what my right hon. friend has observed, but I should think it would follow as a matter of course, that the certificate must be produced before the woman can be put upon the list.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: She has to produce her certificate? In my own province the lists are prepared under the authority of the municipal council, in very much the same way as they are in Ontario. The secretary of the council prepares the lists and when ready they are submitted to the council and discussed by it. That system works very smoothly and creates no difficulty at all. Anybody who regards himself as qualified makes his application to the clerk who puts it upon the list and it is discussed by the council. I would suggest that something of the same kind should be provided for here: the woman goes to the clerk of the council with her certificate, which she has obtained from the judge, and then she can be registered. I want my right hon. friend to take into consideration the time when the lists are prepared in every province.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Should not the Bill contain some provision as to the preparation of the lists?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I have already explained my conception of the law. I think that under the War-time Elections Act there is machinery under which lists containing the names of women entitled to vote under this Act could be prepared. I have also mentioned in reply to my hon. friend from Antigonish and Guysboro, (Mr. Sinclair) who, I think, raised this point, that so far as the Dominion Elections Act is concerned, when this legislation comes to be applied, there must be some machinery provided for this purpose.

Sir SAM HUGHES: If you are depending upon the War-time Elections Act it will require all the lawyers in the House to interpret it, and then no two of them will agree.

Mr. NESBITT: Do I understand that paragraph (c), subsection 2, will be amended, and that women will be under the same obligation as men to reside in the country for a year and in the constituency for three months?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I said I would consider the point.

Mr. NESBITT: While on my feet, I would like to endorse what the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy) said, that this legislation would be much more intelligible if there were not so many references in it. It is a very tedious and difficult matter to hunt up the information necessitated by the many references. I see no reason why the Bill should not be more simply drawn.

Mr. NICKLE: I would like the Prime Minister to make a note of this point: Paragraph (c) of the subsection 2, section 1, reads as follows, speaking of married women who have become British subjects:

> If, being a married woman and previously an alien, she has become a British subject by marriage, or by the naturalization as a British subject of her father while she was a minor, and in either case has done nothing (other than in the second case by marriage) to forfeit or lose her status as a British subject,—

--and so on. Now it seems to me that would not confer on the woman who had been an alien and had become a British subject by marriage the right of voting if her husband were not living, because she is no longer a married woman.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I see my hon. friend's point and I will make a note of it. We shall be very glad if any other hon. gentleman has any observations to make upon this Bill so that we may get the benefit of the wisdom of the Committee.

Mr. NICKLE: While upon this subject, take the last part of the section dealing with minors. As I understand it a minor becomes a British subject if, during the period of being a minor, the father being an alien becomes naturalized, and on attaining majority the minor does nothing to deprive himself or herself of the citizenship attained. The last part of paragraph (c) says that a woman can vote and can attain British citizenship by virtue of the naturalization of her father, but she must produce a certificate from the Court that she has lived sufficiently long in the country to entitle her, in her own right, to become a British subject. The child might have lived outside the country and have attained British citizenship by virtue of the naturalization of the father but she would not have the qualification required by the Naturalization Act entitling her to be naturalized if the father had never been naturalized. What is the object sought in this? Is the object fo the Bill to confer on a minor the right to vote by virtue of the father's naturalization, or must the naturalization of the minor be under such circumstances that she could have attained it if she applied on her own initiative?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Of course no woman can obtain the right to vote unless she is already a British subject. When she comes with her application to put her name on the electoral list she must show that she has the qualifications which would at that time have entitled her to become a British subject if she had not become technically such by the naturalization of her father.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Take the case of daughters of aliens over twenty-one years of age, though the father becomes naturalized, yet the daughter, being over twenty-one, must also become naturalized.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: They can become naturalized and make the necessary application.

Mr. CURRIE: Is this Act intended to amend the War-times Elections Act?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The Bill provides that it shall be construed as one with the Dominions Election Act and with the War-times Elections Act. According to the tenor of its provisions it is therefore in amendment of both.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The War-times Elections Act is to be repealed.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: This legislation will operate until it is repealed.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE: Against such legislation as this I would certainly have entered objection at a previous session, because I have some difficulty in making up my mind as to the desirability of granting the franchise to women in Canada. I am bound to admit there is a very strong public sentiment in favour of this legislation in various parts of the country, but no such demand exists in the province from which I come. The women of my province do not want to vote and are not asking for the right. I respect very much those women who believe they are entitled to have a voice in the settlement of great national questions in which they are vitally interested, and I understand such a claim when coming from women who are earning a living for themselves and families. They are a great deal more entitled to the franchise than the society women who are so insistent in their demands for it. Then there is the sentiment of those other women—I believe they constitute the majority of the women of Canada—who feel that their exalted position as queens of their homes cannot but suffer if they meddle in our political battles, who feel that the duties of motherhood require all their devotion and all their energies, and who are quite willing to leave to the men the troubles and responsibilities of political administration. But, by all means, if women are to vote in some parts of the country they should vote in all other parts of the country as well. It is true that the fact that the women of some provinces would vote, while the women of other provinces would not, would materially affect the representation in this House, but the total number of women's votes in any province on any big question, when numbers are computed, might have such an influence as to militate against any discrimination in the electoral law of the country.

The second reason I have for supporting the Bill is that it may prevent the recurrence of what took place at the last election, when the Government, before appealing to the people, gave the franchise to a certain class of Canadian women—a class of women who were supposed to be easily carried away by the campaign the Government had in store for them—and refused it to others. I believe that such a thing must be prevented in the future. Any Government might otherwise be at liberty, under the pretense of settling great national or imperial questions, to select their own judges, to have their case decided by a sort of family jury. Certainly this must be prevented, and if this Act will be a means of preventing that I certainly shall waive all the objections which I should otherwise urge against it, and shall favour its passage in order that any future manipulation of the franchise may be done away with.

Mr. CAHILL: Why should there be any reference to the War-Time Elections Act in this Bill? As I understand the War-Time Elections Act, or that small part of it that is understood by any person, it disfranchised alien enemies at the last election and gave the franchise to women who were relatives of soldiers.

5 p.m. If this Act is to confer the franchise on women who are British subjects, what is the purpose of providing that the War-Time Elections Act shall apply? Is it with the view of disfranchising some of these women at a later date?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Without the enactment of this measure, under the War-Time Elections Act certain women only would have the right to vote. This Act is to be read with the War-Time Elections Act and if any by-election or general election should hereafter be held, under the War-Time Elections Act, all women as defined in this Bill would have the right to vote.

Mr. CAHILL: Is it not the intention of the Bill that all women shall have the right to vote?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes.

Mr. CAHILL: Then I do not understand how the War-Time Elections Act can in any way affect future elections held under this Act.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The War-Time Elections Act by its terms is operative only during a certain period. While it is operative or after it is operative all women as defined by this measure are to vote. Therefore, this Bill is to be read as one with the War-Time Elections Act and is also to be read as one with the Dominion Elections Act, so that under whichever Act an election takes place, women as defined in this Act shall have the right to vote.

Mr. EULER: Does not section 2, which states that the Act shall be considered as one with the War-Time Elections Act, particularly call into operation that part of the War-Time Elections Act which disfranchises citizens of alien enemy birth naturalized within the last fifteen years? If so, are not the wives of those disfranchised citizens thus also disfranchised? The point I should like to make—in this one should have the sympathy of every member of the House, notwithstanding what took place at the last election—is that under this Act, with the Conscription Bill in force, the mothers of men who are fighting at the front in the Canadian army may be disfranchised. Under the War-time Elections Act it was provided that even those who were of alien enemy birth should not be disfranchised if they had a son at the front. I think it was provided that the son should not be of age at the time of the election, but I am not sure about that. Under this Act, unless it is amended, it is quite possible that those who have been called to the colours under the provisions of the Military Service Act may find that their mothers, although good Canadian citizens, will be disfranchised because they happen to be of alien enemy birth.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is not the intention of this measure to take the franchise from any one who would be entitled to it under the War-time Elections Act. My hon. friend asks further whether the provisions with respect to women who have sons serving at the front would apply also to women under this Bill. I shall make a note of that and inform my hon. friend at a later date.

Mr. BUREAU: If I understand this Bill aright, it is not the intention of the Government to give the women a wider franchise than the men have at present?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am afraid that this Bill does go that length.

Mr. BUREAU: Of course, it is not because my right hon. friend threatened me the other day with the vengeance of the women's votes that I want to make this remark.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Oh, I did not threaten my hon. friend; I told him what might have been the result.

Mr. BUREAU: That is worse than a threat. I do not think the women ought to have a wider franchise than the men. Take the case, for instance, of an American coming across the line and marrying a Canadian girl. She goes to the poll and votes, while her husband who escorts her there is turned away and cannot vote.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Why should not that woman have the right to vote?

Mr. BUREAU: Perhaps we do not see things quite the same way; our mentality may not be the same. We certainly do not see everything from the same angle, as was shown in the last election, and that matter might be thrashed out in this House before we get through. Cases such as I have mentioned may bring disunion into the family.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: May lead to the divorce court.

Mr. BUREAU: Yes, and divorces may be made easier after a while. I saw cases in the last election where a family became disunited over voting. Take another case. In the province of Quebec a man must earn a certain amount a year before he can vote, and I think that is a fair provision. When election day comes round that man who has worked hard all his life and has been a good citizen may find himself in an old man's home, while the old lady, living just across the street, will be brought out to vote. I say that is unfair to these old men. If we had universal suffrage it would be alright, but I certainly do not think a woman should have the right to vote when her husband has not that right. I think these three cases I have mentioned should be looked into. I do not want to be accused of being egotistical. I may say that even at my age I do not fear the woman's vote, but I do not want to see a woman vote when the master of the house has not that right. I think her title to vote should be subject to her husband having the right to vote.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I acknowledge at once that there is some force in the observations of my hon. friend. But on the other hand, I would point out to him that we had two alternatives; either to prepare and bring down to this House an exceedingly complicated set of provisions which would endeavour to adapt to the case of women all the remarkably varied provisions of the franchise Acts prevailing in the different provinces with regard to men, or simply to bring down, as we have done, a plain, direct enactment that all women, being British subjects according to the definition in the Act, shall have the right to vote if they are twenty-one years of age. I think on the whole that is the better course of the two, because, my hon. friend will remember, however intricate or complicated the provisions with regard to the franchise may be in any of the provinces, the practical result is that there is manhood suffrage, and if there is manhood suffrage in effect, then there ought to be woman suffrage in reality.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I think the tenor of the discussion will lead the Prime Minister to see the necessity of adopting the suggestion of the hon. member for North Perth and having the Bill put in a concise form, eliminating all reference to other Acts. I am a fairly patient man, and I had a lot of good lawyers around me interpreting the last Dominion Elections Act, but I never met two lawyers yet who agreed on it. I hope that the suggestion of my hon. friend from North Perth will be followed. To my hon. friend from Three Rivers and St. Maurice (Mr. Bureau), I may say that I have yet to see in this Dominion very many men who go to the poorhouse on account of their wives.

Mr. BUREAU: I must protest against such a construction of my remarks. I think just the contrary; very often it is the wife who has kept her husband from the poorhouse.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Then she should have the right to vote.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Thousands of women are supporting idle, drunken husbands, and these women are deprived of the franchise while the lords of creation strut about and control the elections. By all means give the women the vote.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: We shall, of course, take into the very best consideration we can give to them the suggestions that have been made that this Act shall be comprehensive, but if those suggestions were carried out in their entirety we should have to embody in this Act the Dominion Elections Act, the War-time Elections Act, and all the provincial Acts that are alluded to; but I do not suppose the suggestion would go that far. It may be possible to include the provisions with regard to naturalization, if that is thought desirable, but it is utterly impossible to deal with the question of franchise under the present system upon the basis of inserting in any Act that is brought before Parliament all the relevant provisions that must be taken into account when the lists are made up. That would involve, in the first place, every provincial Act in the Dominion from one end to the other that bears upon the franchise, and if the suggestion were carried out to the full, it would also involve embodying in this Act the Dominion Elections Act, and the War-time Elections Act. We shall, however, take into the best consideration possible the suggestions that have been made, and see whether we can work out something that will meet the views of hon. gentlemen who have raised these points.

Mr. McKENZIE: I should like to bring to the notice of the Prime Minister the provision in paragraph (c) of subsection (2) in reference to the obtaining of certificates from a court of record or from a judge. That provision is going to work a great deal of hardship and expense. The Prime Minister knows that women cannot, as a rule, go before a court of record; judges do not care to have their courts swarming with women looking for certificates, and somebody else will have to get these certificates for them. But there is a worse feature than tnat. I can only speak for the constituency from which I come, but in my county there is a large section which is about eighty or one hundred miles away from a courthouse, or from any place where there is a judge, and it would be practically a physical impossibility for these women to get their certificates as provided in the Act. I do not see why any woman who is making application to be put on the list should not have the opportunity of satisfying the board, or whatever it may be, that she is qualified in every way under the Act, without being put to the expense and inconvenience of going before a judge for this certificate. There is no machinery here by which she can satisfy the judge that she is entitled to the certificate, and she should be in a position to appear before the court and satisfy the judge in that regard. There must be some procedure by which the judge is to be satisfied that she is entitled to the certificate. The Act is silent on that point, and a judge would be at a loss to know how he was to proceed to grant a certificate. When the Prime Minister is talking about the War-time Elections Act, as I happened to escape from its machinations as by fire, I have no particular spite against it, but let me warn the Prime Minister that this War-times Election Act stands away beyond anything that ever visited Egypt in its darkest days, and that those frogs, and other plagues of Egypt sink into insignificance compared with the terrors and dreads of the War-times Election Act. I would like to tell the Prime Minister that in the dear old province of Nova Scotia we are the best and simplest people in the world, and have got along for seventy or eighty years with the well-understood Franchise Act, where everybody gets his name on the list, and there is no trouble about it, and I would like to warn him that he is going to leave a very dark blot upon his name in that fair province, where he stands high and well to-day, if he introduces a measure similar to the War-time Elections Act, to create strife, dissension and dissatisfaction.

Hon. A. L. SIFTON: I was rather surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McKenzie) who has had some experience on the bench, should imagine that judges have any objections at all to women calling at their chambers, I have had some experience myself along that line, and I never heard of any objection being raised by any of the members of the bench in Canada until to-day.

Mr. McKENZIE: I was objecting to too many at the same time.

Mr. SIFTON: I agree thoroughly in regard to that, but if there is anything in this Act that would allow more than one lady to come to the chambers at one time, it certainly should be eliminated. But this paragraph was put in for the purpose of providing that, under no circumstances, will a female foreigner be able to vote without having the same qualifications as a male foreigner. There are hundreds and thousands of cases of women attaining the age, and becoming British subjects by the naturalization of their fathers, who have only been a few months in the country. It may seem an anomaly to those who have been in the habit of thinking that you had to remain three or five years in the country to become naturalized, but this clause was for the purpose of meeting the special case of people who had not spent any length of time in the country, but who were still naturalized British subjects. Thousands of foreigners have come to this country, leaving their families at home. They have spent the necessary three or five years in the country, and their families being minors, have arrived a short time before they became naturalized. Those families became British subjects two or three months after their arrival in the country. There are thousands of cases of that kind in Canada at the present time, people who became British subjects without having spent the necessary time here, and although in some respects it is necessary, in framing an Act of this kind, to give women additional powers over their brothers or their husbands in regard to this, there is no reason why, if you are making a new Act and taking in a new class of people, you should go back to the anomalies that have bothered the different provinces and the Federal Government in regard to elections for many years. The franchise has grown, and it has grown gradually, and conditions have arisen and been met in various places, but if you are making a new Act for the purpose of enfranchising a new class of people, there is no reason why you should not exercise a little common sense, and try and make it as fairly equal as possible. One thing was mentioned as an additional advantage given to women over men by reason of the fact that they would be entitled to vote as British subjects if they had spent three months in the constituency. This gets over an absurdity. In all the elections that have taken place for years there has been this difficulty: that a man might move from Quebec to Manitoba, or from Ontario to Saskatchewan a few months before an election and lose his vote. Thousands of such cases have occurred in former elections where good British-born subjects of the Eastern provinces have been deprived of the franchise that they have had for years. It was the intention of this Act to cut out the anomaly, so far as women were concerned, and as soon as an amendment is made to the Dominion Franchise Act it will be cut out, I think, as far as the men are concerned, so that if they live three months in a Dominion constituency and are British subjects they would be entitled to cast their votes.

Mr. DEVLIN: The remarks of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Sifton) confirm me in the opinion which I have held since this Bill was introduced. Why should not the Dominion Elections Act be so amended as to include under the word "elector" the word "female," and then extend the qualifications of an elector to the female as well as to the male?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That is what this Act does.

Mr. DEVLIN: But it is a separate Act. We are beginning to have too many Acts dealing with the franchise. My right hon. friend (Sir Robert Borden) has made some remarks respecting the War-time Elections Act. I cannot say that personally I suffered a great deal by the War-time Elections Act. We have in the county which I represent, honest men on both sides, Conservative as well as Liberal, and we never suffer from any dishonesty or disorganization in elections. Each time questions were asked respecting the franchise, it became necessary to take up the Dominion Elections Act, the Soldiers Vote Act, and the War-time Elections Act. In future elections we will have to take up the Dominion Elections Act, the War-time Elections Act—I hope not the Soldiers Vote Elections Act, because I trust the war will be over—and this new Act entitled "An Act to confer the electoral franchise on women"; whereas, the Dominion Elections Act could be amended in a very simple way to include these different provisions.

Mr. SIFTON: The only objection to that would be that it would not become law until the War-time Elections Act was repealed, and that would deprive the women of the possibility, in case of a by-election, of their votes. Another objection would be that there would be no provision for getting them on the list. The only provision there is for putting them on the list is in the War-time Elections Act.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I am in accord generally with the provisions of the Bill, and desire to congratulate the Prime Minister on redeeming his promise to bring down a Bill of this kind so early in the session. I think it will be met with favour throughout the Dominion of Canada, and the general principle has been accepted by a large number of the provinces, though our friends down by the sea are not moving quite as rapidly as Ontario and the West. There is one matter which I wish to speak about, which I do not see provided for here. Every male citizen who has the right to vote has the chance of becoming a candidate provided he will put up $200 and get the necessary nomination papers and so on. I do not know whether it is the intention of the Prime Minister that ladies hereafter will be eligible candidates for the Dominion Parliament or not. Whether that follows as a matter of course, or whether other special requirements will have to be complied with, I am not quite clear. Therefore, I would like the Prime Minister to say whether this is really enfranchising them and putting them on an equality with men in all respects, and if it is qualifying them to become candidates at the next election, or earlier, if there is any by-election; or whether they must be permitted through some other legislation to become candidates for the Dominion Parliament. I know that some of the more advanced of the women's franchise clubs believe that women should be on a full equality with men, if not a little more so. I think the hon. member for Three Rivers and St. Maurice (Mr. Bureau) put it very well when he said that if we give them full equality we should not extend the right to vote farther than we extend it to men. I do not understand from these provisions that that is the intention of the measure, though it may in a few cases work out that way. But it is very important that we should know whether or not women shall be eligible as candidates for the Dominion Parliament. My hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Steele) asks me what I think. I do not intend to express myself just now on that point. If I were going to run I would rather run against two men than against one woman. This is a question that cannot be downed without an answer, and if the Prime Minister is prepared to give an answer to it I would be very glad to hear it.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It would require the amendment, I think, of another Act. This is merely a franchise Act. As far as the general principle is concerned, I shall imitate the prudent reserve of my hon. friend (Mr. Cockshutt) who has just spoken.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There is an exception, which has probably been made after consideration, and it is this:

> Provided, however, that this paragraph shall not apply to the wife of an alien enemy.

Has this been considered?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: As I understand it the Bill provides that a woman who marries an alien shall not thereby lose her right to vote, but that this paragraph shall not apply to the wife of an alien enemy.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As to this I would have to make the same objection as that which we made on this side of the House to certain provisions of the War-Time Elections Act. The term "alien enemy" may be made elastic. The alien enemies that we have at the present time are three in number—Germany, Austria and Turkey. If I remember aright I think the exclusion which was made of alien enemies——

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am afraid my right hon. friend misunderstands the Act. If he would allow me to correct him, I would say that an alien is not entitled to vote. A woman who was, at the time of her marriage, a British subject does not lose her right to vote by marrying an alien. But she does lose her right to vote if she marries an alien enemy, who is a person born in an enemy country and who has not yet been naturalized.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understand that. If she marries a Swede she marries an alien, but she does not lose her right to vote?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If she marries an Austrian she loses her right to vote?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: If he has not been naturalized.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We have encouraged immigration to this country. The Austrians that we have in this country are Slavs; they are not Germans. There are very few German immigrants in Canada. You are preventing a union between a Canadian woman and a Slav. The purpose that we should have in connection with immigration is the unification of races as far as possible, and nothing is better calculated to bring that about than intermarriage. Why should you prevent a woman, if she wants to marry a Slav or an Austrian, from marrying him?

Mr. CURRIE: She is not prevented from marrying him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Yes, she is by this Act. She is not prevented from marrying him, but she is put in this dilemma, that if she marries she loses her vote, and if she wants to keep her vote she loses her husband. You should not put that temptation before her; give her the right any way. The objection I have to this is that it is not wise to prevent intermarriage; on the contrary, it should be encouraged as much as possible if we are going to bring people from any country to be citizens, although at the present time it would be rather awkward to authorize marriage with Germans, with whom we are at war, and whose mentality we know. But, as far as Austrians, or Armenians, or subjects of Turkey are concerned, I think this obstacle should not be placed in the way.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My right hon. friend will observe that a considerable departure is made by the section to which he alludes, because a woman is given the right to vote by that provision although technically within the eye of the law she is an alien and not a British subject. We have thought it wise to go that far for the reason that a woman who was a natural born subject in the first place might very reasonably be permitted to vote although she has technically lost her British nationality by marrying an alien. We thought it desirable to stop at that point and to prevent a woman voting who has married an alien enemy.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Supposing a woman marries an Austrian, or a man of alien birth who has become naturalized, her marriage does not disqualify her?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: No.

Progress reported.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

On motion of Sir Robert Borden, Bill No. 11, respecting the Department of Immigration and Colonization, was read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 3—Deputy Minister.—Clerks, etc.,

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Has a deputy minister been appointed yet?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: There has been no deputy appointed yet.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Has the department been organized as yet?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It has been organized to this extent, that the minister is conducting the department and he has taken over those officials of the Interior Department whose duties were concerned with immigration and colonization. He has not found it necessary as yet to appoint a deputy minister.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the Bill?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Before you report the Bill, I should like to ask the hon. minister if, before taking up the third reading, he will bring down a list of the officers who have been taken over from the Interior Department into his department.

Mr. CALDER: I shall be very glad to do that.

Mr. MURPHY: Would it be possible at the same time, to have a statement explaining what actions are confirmed as provided in section 5?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That merely relates to ordinary administrative actions so far as I understand.

Mr. MURPHY: A statement of those could be brought down.

Mr. CALDER: There is no statement of that kind. I might say that the Immigration Branch was a very distinct section of the Interior Department, and its whole personnel has been moved over. None of the officials attached to any other part of the Interior Department have been taken over with the Immigration Branch. The Immigration Branch was a body of itself within the Interior Department, and that branch has now simply become a department of the public service. I do not know of any particular information that I can bring down in connection with section 5. If the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Murphy) desires any particular information, and will let me know the nature of it, I shall only be too glad to bring it down to the House.

Mr. MURPHY: What I would like to know is what I am "confirming" by voting for that section?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN. All that section means is this: the department has been created by Order in Council, and the minister has been discharging his duties, that is to say, he has taken over this branch from the Department of the Interior. Since its establishment he has engaged in the usual administrative acts in respect of immigration which would otherwise have devolved upon the Minister of the Interior. It is merely designed to sanction his acts in that respect.

Mr. McKENZIE: Mr. Chairman, before you report the Bill I wish to record my objection to the addition of any new machinery of Government which involves a great deal of unnecessary expenditure. I do not wish to be understood as finding any fault with the head of this new department; I presume he is in every way a capable and desirable minister, well able to administer that department. During the balmy days of immigration in this country, hundreds of thousands a month came into Canada and were taken care of by the old machinery of the Department of the Interior; and thousands and hundreds of thousands of homesteads and homestead entries were taken care of by the machinery of the old department as well. Now that we have no immigration or homestead entries to speak of, I cannot, as an outsider though a member of this House, understand why, at this stage and at this time, under war conditions, when every dollar should be saved and when everything should be avoided that involves the expenditure of a dollar except for the purposes of war, we are establishing this new department with all that it involves. I remember well, when the present Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. A. K. Maclean), as the financial critic on this side of the House, before he struck the trail for Damascus, was loud in his criticism as to the expenditure in connection with these departments, but now he is not satisfied evidently with all the money he can spend in the old departments, but must create new ones in order to have fresh fields for his new zeal as a convert to the faith of hon. gentlemen on the other side. I think it is only fair to the country, and fair to the Government, that it should be pointed out that we have had no explanation why this new department was created. It has not been explained to this House in any way whatsoever why the Department of the Interior was not able to look after this business. It would appear to me the trouble was this: the Prime Minister wanted a new government; he wanted to take in new blood, and he would not take it in without making places for it, and his heart was too tender, he was too much attached to his dear old friends of the dear old times to have them removed, and therefore he took his carving knife and began to cut and carve the departments in order to make room for his friends. That is the only necessity that I can see. I do not think that is any justification. In the old land, when like circumstances arose, Premier Asquith made room for new blood by getting some of his old ministers to go out. There is no record in Great Britain where any department was cut in two to provide new portfolios. But here, whenever anybody was put out, it was done in a way in which almost anybody would like to go out. The ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Hon. Mr. Hazen, for instance, became chief justice of the province of New Brunswick at a salary of $7,000 a year, a very high position indeed. Almost anybody would be willing to go out under conditions of that kind. And going right down through the list, that is the sort of sacrifice that has been made by hon. gentlemen who left the Government. I strongly protest against this creation or splitting of departments when the business of the country does not require it, merely for the purpose of feathering a nest for foreign birds that wish to go into the Government.

Bill reported.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

THE ROYAL ASSENT.

A message was delivered by Colonel Ernest J. Chambers, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Deputy of His Excellency, the Governor-General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the Chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the House went up to the Senate.

And having returned,

The Speaker informed the House that the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bill:

Bill No. 18,—An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1919.

SELECTING STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN presented the following report of the Special Committee appointed to prepare report with all convenient speed lists of members to compose the Select Standing Committees of the House during the present session:

No. 1.

ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Messieurs :

Armstrong (York),	Jacobs,
Blake,	Keefer,
Boys,	Lapointe (Kamouraska)
Buchanan,	Lemieux,
Bureau,	McCoig,
Cannon,	McIntosh,
Carvell,	McKenzie,
Copp,	McMaster,
Crothers,	Meighen,
Davidson,	Mowat,
Demers,	Nickle,
Devlin,	Porter,
Doherty,	Reid (Mackenzie),
Douglas (Strathcona),	Sifton,
Fripp,	Tweedie, and
Guthrie,	Vien.—32.

No. 2.

ON RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES.

Messieurs :

Ames (Sir Herbert),	Lanctôt,
Anderson,	Lapointe
Andrews,	(Kamouraska),
Archambault,	Lapointe
Armstrong (Lambton),	(St. James),
Arthurs,	Lavigueur,
Ballantyne,	Leduc,
Blair,	Lemieux,
Bonnell,	Lesage,
Boyer,	Mackie (Edmonton),
Boys,	Mackie (Renfrew),
Bristol,	Maclean (York),
Buchanan,	MacNutt,
Bureau,	McCoig,

Cahill,
Calder,
Cannon,
Carvell,
Casgrain,
Chabot,
Charlton,
Clark (Red Deer),
Clements,
Cochrane,
Cockshutt,
Cooper,
Copp,
Crowe,
Cruise,
Currie,
d'Anjou,
Davidson,
Davis,
Dechêne,
Delisle,
Devlin,
Doherty,
Douglas (Strathcona),
Douglas (Cape Breton),
Edwards,
Elkin,
Ethier,
Fafard,
Fielding,
Fontaine,
Fournier,
Fraser,
Fripp,
Gauvreau,
Guthrie,
Harrison,
Hay,
Henders,
Hepburn,
Hocken,
Hughes (Sir Sam),
Kay,
Keefer,
Lalor,
McCrea,
McCurdy,
McGregor,
McKenzie,
McLean (Royal),
McQuarrie,
Maharg,
Manion,
Marcile (Bagot),
Marshall,
Martin,
Merner,
Middlebro,
Molloy,
Morphy,
Mowat,
Murphy,
Nesbitt,
Nicholson (Queens),
Nickle,
Pardee,
Pelletier,
Porter,
Power,
Richardson,
Savard,
Shaw,
Sheard,
Simpson,
Smith,
Stevens,
Stewart,
Sutherland,
Thompson (Weyburn),
Thomson (Qu'Appelle),
Trahan,
Tudhope,
Turriff,
Vien,
Wallace,
Wilson (Wentworth),
Wilson (Saskatoon), and Wright.—114.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee do consist of Twenty-five Members.

No. 3.

ON MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS.

Messieurs:

Ames (Sir Herbert),
Anderson,
Armstrong (York),
Ballantyne,
Ball,
Blair,
Blake,
Bourassa,
Boyer,
Boys,
Brien,
Bureau,
Butts,
Casselman,
Charters,
Cronyn,
Douglas (Cape Breton),
DuTremblay,
Ethier,
Euler,
Fortier,
Foster (York),
Fraser,
Fripp,
Harrison,
Hocken,
Lafortune,
Mackie (Renfrew),
McGibbon (Muskoka),
McLean (Royal),
Marcil (Bonaventure),
Martin,
Myers,
Pacaud,
Papineau,
Pardee,
Parent,
Paul,
Peck,
Power,
Prevost,
Proulx,
Reid (Grenville),
Richardson,
Robb,
Rowell,
Scott,
Sharpe,
Fulton,
Gauthier,
Glass,
Green,
Guthrie,
Sifton,
Steele,
Thompson (Hastings),
Tobin, and
Wigmore.—58.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee do consist of Ten Members.

No. 4.

ON STANDING ORDERS.

Messieurs :

Armstrong (Lambton),
Brien,
Burrell,
Butts,
Chabot,
Clarke (Wellington),
Cruise,
Deslauriers,
Doherty,
Euler,
Gervais,
Griesbach,
Hartt,
Maclean (York),
MacNutt,
McGibbon (Muskoka),
McGibbon (Argenteuil),
McIsaac,
McLeod,
Marcile (Bagot),
Mayrand,
Michaud,
Paul,
Seguin,
Steacy,
Turgeon,
Verville,
Wallace,
Wigmore, and
Wright.—30.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee do consist of Seven Members.

No. 5.

ON PRINTING.

Messieurs :

Bowman,
Brouillard,
Buchanan,
Burnham,
Cardin,
Charters,
Clark (Bruce),
Clarke (Wellington),
Crowe,
Currie,
Fontaine,
Hocken,
Hughes (Sir Sam),
Keefer,
Maclean (Halifax),
Michaud,
Murphy,
Prevost,
Reid (Mackenzie),
Richardson,
Shaw,
Verville,
White (Victoria), and Wilson (Wentworth).—24.

No. 6.

ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Messieurs :

Allan,
Andrews,
Archambault,
Ball,
Best,
Bonnell,
Boys,
Bureau,
Calder,
Cannon,
Carvell,
Chaplin,
Charters,
Chisholm,
Copp,
Crerar,
Crothers,
Crowe,
Davidson,
Devlin,
Edwards,
Fripp,
Fulton,
Gauvreau,
McCrea,
McGregor,
McIsaac,
McKenzie,
McMaster,
Maharg,
Meighen,
Merner,
Michaud,
Middlebro,
Morphy,
Murphy,
Nicholson (Algoma),
Parent,
Proulx,
Redman,
Reid (Grenville),
Scott,
Sheard,
Sifton,
Simpson,
Sinclair (Antigonish),
Spinney,
Thomson (Qu'Appelle),

Green,
Jacobs,
Lapointe (Kamouraska),
Mackie (Renfrew),
Maclean (Halifax),
McCoig,
Tremain,
Tudhope,
Turriff,
Tweedie,
Verville,
Vien, and
Wigmore.—61.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee do consist of Twenty-one Members.

No. 7.

ON BANKING AND COMMERCE.

Messieurs :

Allan,
Ames (Sir Herbert),
Argue,
Baldwin,
Best,
Bristol,
Burnham,
Calder,
Cardin,
Carvell,
Casgrain,
Chaplin,
Charlton,
Clark (Red Deer),
Clements,
Cockshutt,
Crerar,
Cronyn,
Currie,
d'Anjou,
Davis,
Dechêne,
Demers,
Denis,
Desaulniers,
Deslauriers,
Douglas (Strathcona),
DuTremblay,
Edwards,
Elkin,
Fielding,
Finley,
Fortier,
Foster (Sir George),
Foster (York),
Gauthier,
Gladu,
Glass,
Halladay,
Henders,
Hunt,
Jacobs,
Kay,
Lang,
Lavigueur,
Leduc,
Léger,
Lemieux,
Lesage,
Loggie,
Maclean (Halifax),
McCurdy,
McLeod,
McMaster,
McQuarrie,
Marshall,
Meighen,
Middlebro,
Molloy,
Nesbitt,
Nickle,
Pacaud,
Papineau,
Pardee,
Porter,
Redman,
Sexsmith,
Sharpe,
Sinclair (Antigonish),
Steele,
Stevens,
Stewart,
Sutherland,
Tobin,
Tolmie,
Trahan,
Tremain,
Turriff,
Tweedie,
Whidden,
Wilson (Saskatoon),
—81.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee do consist of Twenty-one Members.

No. 8.

ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION.

Messieurs :

Anderson,
Armstrong (York),
Armstrong (Lambton),
Argue,
Arthurs,
Baldwin,
Ball,
Best,
Blair,
Bourassa,
Bowman,
Boyce,
Brien,
Brouillard,
Burrell,
Marcile (Bagot),
Marshall,
Mayrand,
Merner,
Molloy,
Morphy,
Myers,
MacNutt,
McCoig,
McCrea,
McCurdy,
McGibbon (Muskoka),
McGregor,
McIntosh,
McIsaac,

Cahill,
Casselman,
Chisholm,
Clark (Red Deer),
Clarke (Wellington),
Crerar,
Cruise,
Davis,
Delisle,
Denis,
Desaulniers,
Douglas (Strathcona),
Edwards,
Finley,
Fournier,
Fulton,
Gervais,
Glass,
Halladay,
Hay,
Henders,
Hughes (Sir Sam),
Hunt,
Kay,
Knox,
Lafortune,
Lanctôt,
Lang,
Léger,
Mackie (Edmonton),
Maclean (York),
Maharg,
McLean (Royal),
McLeod,
Nicholson (Queens),
Nicholson (Algoma),
Paul,
Proulx,
Read (Prince),
Reid (Mackenzie),
Robb,
Savard,
Seguin,
Sexsmith,
Shaw,
Sifton,
Simpson,
Sinclair (Antigonish),
Smith,
Spinney,
Stacey,
Steele,
Sutherland,
Thompson (Hastings),
Thompson (Weyburn),
Thomson (Qu'Appelle),
Tolmie,
Tremain,
Truax,
Wallace,
White (Victoria),
Wilson (Wentworth),
Wright.—93.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee to consist of Twelve Members.

No. 9.

ON MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Messieurs :

Butts,
Campbell,
Cardin,
Chisholm,
Clark (Bruce),
Clements,
Fielding,
Gladu,
Hartt,
Hay,
Lang,
Lapointe (St. James),
Léger,
Loggie,
Manion,
Martin,
Munson,
McIntosh,
McKenzie,
McQuarrie,
Nicholson, (Queens),
Pelletier,
Read (Prince),
Rowell,
Sinclair (Antignoish),
Spinney,
Stevens,
Trahan,
Truax,
Tudhope,
Turgeon,
Wigmore.—32.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee do consist of Ten Members.

No. 10.

ON MINES AND MINERALS.

Messieurs :

Arthurs,
Blake,
Bonnell,
Burrell,
Cahill,
Campbell,
Cochrane,
Cockshutt,
Dechene,
Denis,
Fortier,
Green,
Harrison,
Hartt,
Knox,
Lalor,
Lemieux,
Loggie,
Marcil (Bonaventure),
McMartin,
Nesbitt,
Nicholson (Algoma),
Pacaud,
Pelletier,
Prevost,
Reid (Mackenzie),
Sexsmith,
Smith,
Tolmie, and White (Victoria).—CJ.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee do consist of Ten Members.

No. 11.

ON FORESTS, WATERWAYS AND WATER-POWERS.

Messieurs :

Argue,	Fraser,
Baldwin,	Halladay,
Bourassa,	Knox,
Bowman,	Mackie (Edmonton),
Boyce,	Manion,
Bureau,	Michaud,
Campbell,	Pacaud,
Carvell,	Parent,
Casselman,	Power,
Charlton,	Redman,
Cochrane,	Stewart,
Cooper,	Thompson (Hastings),
Ethier,	Thompson (Weyburn),
Fafard,	White (Victoria, Alta)
Finley,	Wilson
Foster (York),	(Saskatoon)—31.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee do consist of Ten Members.

No. 12.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Messieurs :

Ballantyne,	Lemieux,
Burnham,	Marcil (Bonaventure),
Chabot,	Mowat,
Devlin,	Munson,
Elkin,	McKenzie,
Foster (Sir George),	Nickle,
Kay,	Richardson—14.

And that the Quorum of the said Committee do consist of Five Members.

No. 13.

ON THE LIBRARY.

Messieurs :

Allan,	Lapointe
Andrews,	(Kamouraska),
Borden (Sir Robert),	Laurier (Sir Wilfrid),
Boyer,	Lemieux,
Chaplin,	Meighen,
Clark (Red Deer),	Myers,
Cooper,	Pardee,
Copp,	Rowell,
Cronyn,	Sheard,
Crothers,	Whidden—20.
Foster (Sir George),

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Six o'clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Adjourn.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There are a few Bills that have been printed, but nobody has had time to read them. I suggest to my right hon. friend that we have done a good day's work.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I had hoped that we might make some progress this evening. However, it is true that it is not a very long time since the Bills were printed and if my right hon. friend greatly desires it I shall consent to an adjournment now. I therefore move that the House adjourn.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at six o'clock.

Monday, March 25, 1918.

The House met at Three o'clock.

REPORTS.

Agricultural Department, 1917, Report of Agricultural Instruction Act and report of the Experimental Farms.—Hon. Mr. Crerar.

Annual Report of the Board of Railway Commissioners and Report of Telephone Statistics for the year ended June 30th, 1917. —Hon. Mr. Reid.

THE WAR.

STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER AS TO THE GERMAN OFFENSIVE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): I mentioned on Friday that I had sent a telegram to Sir Edward Kemp asking that we might be advised of the conditions which have developed in the German offensive, and I have a telegram from him this morning saying that the Canadians are not yet involved, and that he will keep us informed. The Minister of Militia and Defence (Major General Mewburn) has placed in my hands the latest official report which has been received and which reads:

Monday Morning Service.

Bulletin:

London, Mar. 25.—Fresh attacks by the Germans have developed northward and southward of Bapaume, the War Office announces. The British repulsed powerful attacks yesterday afternoon northward of Bapaume.

Bulletin:

Paris, Mar. 25.—The French on Saturday went to the assistance of the British and took over a sector of the battlefront, the War Office announces.

In the region of Noyon on the right bank of the Oise heavy fighting with the Germans is in progress.

Bulletin:

Paris, Mar. 25.—(Official)—The statement follows:

"French troops began to intervene on March 23 in the battle now being fought on the British front. They relieved certain of the allied forces and took up fighting themselves on this sector of the front.

"At the present time they are engaged in heavy fighting in the region of Noyon and they are disputing the heights of the right banks of the Oise with important German forces.

"Northwest of Rheims there has been a violent artillery action in the region of Courcy and Loivre. In the Champagne two German surprise attacks east of Suippe resulted in failure. French patrols took some prisoners near Tahure.

"There was much artillery activity between Arracourt and the Vosges. At daybreak German forces attacked the French lines east of Bleneroy and east of Badonvillers. The Germans were repulsed with heavy losses."

London, Mar. 25.—(Official)—The statement follows:

"The battle continues with great violence on the whole front. Powerful attacks delivered by the enemy yesterday afternoon and evening north of Bapaume were heavily repulsed. Only at one point did the German infantry reach our trenches, whence they were immediately thrown out. Elsewhere the enemy's attacks were stopped by rifle, machine gun and artillery fire in front of our positions, and his troops were driven back with great losses.

"During the night and this morning fresh hostile attacks have again developed in this neighborhood and also to the south of Bapaume.

"South of Peronne, bodies of German troops who had crossed the river between Licourt and Brie were driven back to the east bank by our counter-attacks."

So far as one can judge. the Germans are undoubtedly throwing absolutely their full force into this attack. It seems to have been met with as great success as was anticipated from the first. It is beyond question that very much depends upon the issue; and I know the hearts of the people of the whole country will be lifted up in intercession that the right may prevail.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Intercession is very proper, but with the view, in a slight degree possibly of helping on the cause, I desire to ask the Prime Minister the following questions. Possibly he might be in a position to answer them to-day, but it will do no harm to ask them in connection with this matter. My questions are:

1. Inasmuch as Canadians are engaged in the titanic struggle now going on for the preservation of human liberty, is the Government taking necessary steps to maintain to the highest degree the pride, the courage, the resolution, the steadfastness and the confidence of the splendid and gallant soldiers of Canada, as well as of the Empire at large, in this struggle?

2. Have the Government taken precautions in the management of the forces, the appointment and the promotion of officers therein and the granting of honours, awards and decorations thereto, that favour from female, society, creed or other undue influences, shall not prevail; but that all shall be awarded on the one basis of merit and fitness alone?

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. gentleman's preliminary remark would alone be ample evidence that these questions are not of sufficient urgency to permit them being asked on the Orders of the Day, and that they should be placed on the Order Paper in the ordinary course.

Sir SAM HUGHES: But my next two questions may be of sufficient importance.

[Sir Robert Borden.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Inasmuch as the replies cannot be obtained to-day, and it is desirable to adhere to the proper procedure, I would ask the hon. gentleman to adopt the ordinary course.

Sir SAM HUGHES: The other two questions are of great importance. They read:

3. Does the Government purpose doing anything to prevent panicky and sensational despatches, which merely cause nervous excitement among soldiers and population in Canada and overseas, from being issued by a few mentally epileptic newspaper reporters from overseas?

4. Has the Government any explanation of why the Allied forces, splendidly armed and equipped, and in chosen positions of their own, made up of the best men in the world, and numbering from seven to ten men per yard of front, recently gave way before an enemy not their equal in manhood nor superior in armament, even though they numbered thirty men to a yard of front in attack?

I think some action should at once be taken to prevent these panicky and sensational despatches.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think these questions might much more properly be asked in the ordinary way. Hon. members would assist much in the proper conduct of the proceedings if they would use sparingly the privilege of asking questions on the Orders of the Day.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I do not want to intrude in the slightest degree on your duties in this House, Mr. Speaker, but I think this is an occasion when nothing should intervene in the way of having the proper appreciation of these things placed before the country.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions marked with asterisks are answered orally.

MILITARY SERVICE ACT IN QUEBEC.

Mr. POWER.:

1. How many men have been employed up to March 15th in the registrar's office at Quebec under the Military Service Act?

2. How many public representatives have appeared before the Courts of Appeal in the district of Quebec?

3. How much money have they been paid?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. 43.

2. 20.

3. No payments have yet been made to these representatives.

Mr. POWER:

1. How many men have been employed by the Dominion Police in the Military District No. 5 of Quebec, to investigate and round up delinquents under the Military Service Act?
2. How many of these employees are returned soldiers?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. 46 men (including inspector).
2. Eight are returned soldiers.

ENLISTMENTS FOR OVERSEAS SERVICE.

Mr. DEMERS:

1. What is the number of those who have voluntarily enlisted for service overseas from the start of the war to date?
2. What is the number of volunteers who have enlisted for service overseas from the first of January, 1917, to the first day of September, 1917?
3. What is the total number of recruits who have enlisted to date?

Major-General MEWBURN:

1. 448,062.
2. 47,727.
3. 472,728.

NET FISHING IN MISSISQUOI BAY.

Mr. DEMERS:

1. What reasons have been adduced for the enactment of the Order in Council dated the 18th February, 1918, prohibiting net fishing in the Bay of Missisquoi and in the Canadian part of Lake Champlain?
2. Has such prohibition been ordered on account of representations made by the American Authorities?

Hon. Mr. BALLANTYNE:

1. That net fishing is not permitted in lake Champlain, and that the beneficial effects of such protection to the fisheries there was being seriously nullified by allowing seine fishing in Missisquoi bay, which is one of the most important spawning grounds of the lake.

2. The prohibition was adopted following representations by the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission appointed to consider the settlement of outstanding fishery questions between Canada and the United States.

MR. J. A. DUPUIS.

Mr. J. E. MARCILE:

1. Is Mr. J. A. Dupuis, barrister, still employed at Postal Station B, Montreal?
2. If so, is he attending regularly to work every day?
3. Was he granted leave of absence last fall?
4. If so, at what date did such leave begin and when did it take an end?
5. Is he still under leave of absence?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Yes, on account of illness.
4. November 30, 1917, to February 2, 1918. Absence from November 30, 1917, to January 2, 1918, was with pay. Absence from January 3 to January 23 was charged to annual leave, and absence from January 24 to February 2 was without pay.
5. No.

*Mr. J. E. MARCILE:

1. Is Mr. J. A. Dupuis, barrister, acting as representative of the Department of Militia in the Court at St. Hyacinthe?
2. Is he the same Mr. Dupuis, barrister, who is an employee of Postal Station B, at Montreal?
3. If so, does he get a salary, and how much per day, as representative of the Department of Militia?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN:

The answer given to me by the Department of Militia and Defence is:

1. No.
2. No information.
3. Answered by No. 1.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY DIRECTORS.

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. What are the names of the persons constituting the present Board of Directors of the Canadian Northern Railway?
2. What changes have taken place in said board since the month of August, 1917?
3. What is the name or names and residence of the person or persons directing the operations of said railway?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. Sir William Mackenzie, Sir Donald Mann, Mr. Z. A. Lash, K.C., LL.D., Mr. D. B. Hanna, Mr. R. J. Mackenzie, Mr. W. J. Christie, Mr. W. K. George, Mr. E. R. Wood, Mr. R. M. Horne-Payne, Major Graham A. Bell, C.M.G.

2. Hon. Frederick Nicholls and Hon. R. W. Richardson resigned since August, 1917, and Major Graham A. Bell, C.M.G., Ottawa, Ont., has been appointed a director since August, 19, 1917.

3. The general officers are as follows: Sir William Mackenzie, president, Toronto, Ont.; Sir Donald Mann, vice-president, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. D. B. Hanna, third vice-president, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. Z. A. Lash, K.C., LL.D., senior counsel, Toronto, Ont.; Hon. F. H. Phippen, K.C., general counsel, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. M. H. MacLeod, general manager, Western Lines, Winnipeg, Man.; Mr. S. J. Hungerford, general manager, Eastern Lines, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. W. H. Moore, secretary, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. Gerard Ruel, chief solicitor, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. Geo. H. Shaw, general traffic manager, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. L. W. Mitchell, treasurer, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. Lewis Lukes, asst. to president, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. A. J. Mitchell, asst. to vice-president, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. R.

C. Vaughan, asst. to third vice-president, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. A. J. Hills, asst. to executive, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. R. P. Ormsby, asst. to secretary, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. C. E. Friend, general auditor, Winnipeg, Man.; Mr. J. D. Morton, asst. comptroller, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. J. R. Cameron, asst. general manager, Winnipeg, Man.; Mr. D. R. Campbell, asst. general manager, Vancouver, B. C.; Mr. A. E. Warren, asst. to general manager, Winnipeg, Man.; Mr. A. E. Wilcox, general superintendent, Winnipeg, Man.; Mr. W. A. Browne, general superintendent, Edmonton, Alta.; Mr. W. A. Kingsland, general superintendent, Montreal, Que.; Mr. D. Crombie, general superintendent, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. J. Bain, general superintendent, Halifax, N.S.; Mr. E. F. Seixas, general electric lines, etc., St. Catharines, Ont.

London, England, offices, Orient House, New Broad street, London, E.C.; Mr. R. M. Horne-Payne, director representing the company in Europe; Mr. H. W. Harding, local secretary.

BOARD OF PENSION COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND:

1. What time have each of the Pension Commissioners given to the work of the Board during the year 1917?

2. How many officials are at present employed on the clerical and administrative staff of the Commission?

3. What is the total cost per annum in salaries for Commission and Staff?

4. How many complaints have been received by the Commission on behalf of members of the Canadian Forces or their dependents against amounts for disability allowed by the Board during the year 1917?

5. Is there any appeal from the decision of the Board regarding percentage of disability allowed?

6. Is it the intention of the Government to place the Commission under the control of the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment?

Mr. HUGH CLARK (Parliamentary Secretary):

1. Commander J. K. L. Ross has devoted the bulk of his time to the work of the Board of Pension Commissioners. He accepts no remuneration from the Government, his monthly salary cheque being returned regularly to the Receiver General. When unavoidably absent on account of his financial interests, his private secretary, whom he retains at no expense to the Government, keeps him informed daily as to pension matters. Colonel R. H. Labatt and Major J. L. Todd have devoted their entire time to the duties of their office.

2. The clerical and administrative staff of the board consists of the following: Head office, Ottawa, 437; district offices, 86; London, England, 58. In the case of London, England, pension matters overseas in the year 1917 were administered by the Pensions and Claims Board, the Secretary to the High Commissioner, and the Chief Paymaster, each of whom undertook certain duties in connection with the award of pensions. Commencing April 1, 1918, the Board of Pension Commissioners will take over this work, having established a branch in London with a staff of thirty-eight persons, replacing the fifty-eight persons previously employed by the above bodies.

3. The total cost of salaries for Commission and staff is as follows: Head office, $339,114.50; district offices, $79,338; London, England, $62,900. Under the new arrangement in London, England, the estimated cost to the British Branch of the Board of Pension Commissioners is $38,000 for salaries.

4. Approximately 20,000 pensions were awarded during 1917. Complaints from disability pensioners or their dependents to the number of 828 have been received during this period. Each case received careful consideration and adjustment where necessary. It was found, however, that in the great majority of cases the complaint originated in an insufficient understanding of the Pension Regulations on the part of the person complaining. In a proportion of the cases medical re-examination was ordered, the result being that the opinion of the previous Medical Board was concurred in in practically all cases.

5. Section 5 of the Pension Regulations as amended to October 22, 1917, states as follows:

> There shall be no appeals from the decisions of the Commission, but every applicant for a pension, gratuity, allowance or assistance may present his or her case either personally or by counsel before the full Commission sitting for the purpose of hearing the complaints of those who may have been dissatisfied with the decisions given in the ordinary course of administration.

6. Section 5 of Order in Council P.C. 432 reads as follows:

> "The duties and powers of the Minister of "Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment shall ex- "tend to and include the following:—"
>
> (a) Hospitals, Convalescent Homes, Sanatoria, for C. E. F.
>
> (b) Vocational education and training.
>
> (c) Provision of employment.
>
> (d) All matters relating to pensions for the persons aforesaid;
>
> Provided that nothing herein shall interfere with or affect the powers of authority of the Board of Pension Commissioners.

CUSTOMS, THE PAS AND DAUPHIN.

Mr. CRUISE:

1. What was the amount of Customs revenue received for the last fiscal year, 1916-17, at The Pas, Manitoba?
2. What was the Customs revenue received from the Dauphin Office for the same year?
3. What was the salary paid the Customs Official at The Pas for the year 1916-17?
4. What was the salary paid the Customs officer at Dauphin for the same year?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

2. $15,350.76.
1. $8,170.49.
3. $2,400.
4. Two officers at Dauphin, J. A. Ball $1,100, E. C. Batty $881.26. Officer E. C. Batty was absent on active military service overseas from Dec. 15, 1916, with civil pay equal to the difference between his regular customs salary, $1,000, and his military pay, $401.50.

Mr. NOEL CHASSE.

Mr. CANNON:

1. Is Mr. Noël Chassé employed by the Government?
2. If so, what is the position occupied by him, and what salary does he receive?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. Yes.
2. Private secretary to the Minister of Inland Revenue; $2,700.

Mr. ALLEYN TASCHEREAU.

Mr. CANNON:

1. Is Mr. Alleyn Tachereau, a Quebec barrister, occupying a position under the Government control, in and for the District of Quebec, in connection with the operation of the Military Service Act?
2. If so, what is said position, the salary thereto attached, and on whose recommendation was the appointment made?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. Yes.
2. Chief public representative. Six hundred dollars covering from the 1st February to the 1st April, when Mr. Taschereau has notified the Department of Justice, Military Service Branch, that he proposes to resign the office. Upon the recommendation of the Military Service Council.

RELEASE OF MEN UNDER ORDER IN COUNCIL.

Mr. KAY:

How many men have been released temporarily, and how many permanently, by the Minister of Militia under authority of Order in Council No. 3348, (a) prior to the 17th day of December, 1917, and (b) from December 18, 1917, to March 1, 1918, respectively?

Major-General MEWBURN:

(a) None.
(b) None.

MILITARY EXEMPTION TRIBUNALS.

Mr. KAY:

1. How many representatives were appointed by the Minister of Agriculture under Order in Council No. 3349?
2. What was the number in each of the provinces?
3. How many men have been released from military service to work as agriculturists through the efforts of these representatives?
4. Are any of these representatives attending the tribunals at the present time?

Hon. Mr. CRERAR:

1. 116.
2. Province of Ontario, 87; province of Saskatchewan, 29.
3. As the representatives did not report in detail the department is unable to give this information.
4. No.

MILITARY SERVICE.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Is the Government aware as to whether or not certain young men of military age residing in the District of Toronto inflicted wounds upon themselves to avoid military service, as reported in the Montreal Daily Star of February 28, 1918?
2. If so, has any action been taken to punish the said men?
3. If not, will the report be investigated?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. No.
2. No.
3. If definite facts are given, same will be investigated.

CONVICTION OF BRAULT AND SWAN.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Was a man named Brault recently sentenced at Montreal to one year's imprisonment for having made public speeches in violation of the terms of the Military Service Act, 1917?
2. Was a man named Swan recently sentenced at Toronto for the same terms for the same offence?
3. If so, are both men still serving the said sentence?
4. If not, have either or both of them been granted reprieve by the Minister of Justice?
5. Were both offenders treated alike?
6. If not, Why?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. No; Brault was sentenced at Toronto, his offence being that he persuaded persons to resist enforcement of the Military Service Act. He was not accused of "having made public speeches."
2. Yes; this man also was not accused of "having made public speeches."
3. No.
4. Swan has been released as a matter of clemency; and an application for clemency for Brault is at present under consideration.

5. The cases of both offenders were dealt with on exactly the same principles. The facts and circumstances bearing on the gravity of the offences and the exercise of clemency in the two cases were very materially different.

6. Answered by No. 5.

PAY OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Was an Order in Council passed in May, 1917, or at any time since, increasing the pay of the Medical Examiners under the Military Service Act?
2. If so, how much did they receive before the passing of the said Order in Council?
3. How much do said Medical Examiners receive at the present time?
4. Is the same rate paid to the said Examiners in all the provinces or in all Military Districts?
5. If not, what is the rate in each province or Military District?

Major General MEWBURN:

1. No Order in Council was passed authorizing an increase in the pay of Military Medical Examiners in May, 1917, nor since.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Military Medical Officers receive the pay and allowances of their rank. Civilian Medical Practitioners employed at mobilization centres under Military Service Act receive pay at: $5 per day of 6 hours to 8 hours; $8 per day of 8 hours or more. If away from their homes on duty, they receive $8 per day irrespective of whether they work 8 hours or not.

4. Yes.

5. Answered by No. 4.

RETURN OF SOLDIERS TO CANADA.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has any announcement been made by the Military Authorities that from fifteen to twenty-five thousand soldiers would be brought back from Europe to Canada before the month of June?
2. If so, how many of the soldiers to be so returned have been wounded?
3. How many of the said soldiers are unfit for military service?
4. How many Canadian soldiers are in France at the present time?
5. How many Canadian soldiers are in England at the present time?
6. How many Canadian officers are in France at present?
7. How many Canadian officers are in England at present?

Major General MEWBURN.

1. No.

2. Not available.

3. Not available.

4, 5, 6 and 7. It is not in the public interest to give this information.

[Mr. Doherty.]

STEAMER CHAMPLAIN.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Was the service of the steamer Champlain between Rivière Ouelle and Murray Bay in the Province of Quebec, discontinued on or about the 19th of November, 1917?
2. Was the said service resumed on or after the 17th of December, 1917?
3. If so, why was it discontinued, and why was it resumed?

Hon. Mr. BALLANTYNE:

1, 2 and 3. The C.G.S. Champlain was withdrawn for repairs on the 19th November and returned on the 23rd December, 1917. The vessel was replaced by the C.G.S. Bellechasse from the 19th to the 27th November, 1917.

WORK ON THE ST. CHARLES RIVER.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has work upon the St. Charles River at Quebec been suspended?
2. If so, why?
3. How much has the said work cost to date?
4. If the work has been suspended, will it be resumed at a later date?
5. Have precautions been taken to protect and conserve the work so far completed?

Hon. Mr. CARVELL:

1. Yes.

2. In view of present conditions, it was not considered absolutely necessary that work should proceed.

3. $1,266.93.

4. The resumption of this work will naturally have to be a matter for future consideration.

5. The Chief Engineer is now investigating with a view to determining just what is required.

DRY DOCK AT LAUZON, QUEBEC.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. When will the dry dock at Lauzon, near Quebec, be completed?
2. What is the total cost of said dry dock to date?

Hon. Mr. CARVELL:

1. It is expected that the dock will be completed about August 1st next.

2. $3,077,460.28.

CHARLES DESJARDINS.

*Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Was Charles Desjardins, alias Ti-Noir, who is now being tried at Montreal before the Court of King's Bench, ever employed by the Government?
2. If so, in what capacity, and at what salary?
3. Did the Department of Justice, or any of its officers, attempt at any time to secure a change in the amount and conditions of bail fixed by His Lordship Mr. Justice Pelletier in the above matter?

4. Did the Department of Justice, or any of its officers, deposit or advance the whole or any part of the amount required to secure the provisional liberty under bonds of the said Charles Desjardins?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1 and 2. Charles Desjardins was employed by the Dominion Police in the capacity of private detective at $2.50 per day. Not aware that he has the alias of Ti-Noir.

3. Yes.

4. The department deposited $10,000 in lieu of bail for Desjardins pending his trial.

QUEBEC POST OFFICE.

Mr. CANNON:

1. Has the construction work on the Quebec post office been finished?
2. If so, since when?
3. What amount has been expended on this work?

Hon. Mr. CARVELL:

1 and 2. Construction work is almost completed, some little work is still required such as polishing floors, completing stairways and removing debris about premises inside and out.

3. $500,100.95.

EXPORTATION OF CORDWOOD.

Mr. MICHAUD:

How many cords of wood have been shipped or exported from Canada to the United States during the year 1917?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON: Firewood exported to United States during the calendar year 1917 amounted to 14,689 cords.

RECORD BRANCH OF MILITIA DEPARTMENT.

Mr. FRIPP:

1. How many ladies are employed in the Record Branch of the Militia Department?
2. How many were summarily dismissed on or about the 19th instant?
3. How many of those dismissed have fathers or brothers overseas?
4. (a) How many of those dismissed had no near relatives in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces overseas; (b) and how many of this class were retained?
5. Does the Order in Council, giving preference to returned soldiers to appointments in the Government, not apply equally to their dependents?
6. If so, why were some of such dependents dismissed?

Major-General MEWBURN:

1. 586.

2. 211—but they were not summarily dismissed; they were given eight days leave of absence, with pay, when their services were no longer required.

3. 98.

4 (a). 113.

(b). 267.

5 and 6. No employees of this office were dismissed unless or until they: (i) were reported on as unsuitable by their section head; (ii) had appeared before the staff revision board and been classified as other than "good" or "very good." Consistent with efficiency, those employees with relatives serving overseas are looked upon as entitled to preference. In the absence of qualifications to render them suitable for employment, preference would not seem to arise, and the matter is solely one of compassionate grounds.

EXCISE OFFICERS AT BERTHIERVILLE, QUE.

Mr. GERVAIS:

1. What are the names of the Excise Officers who are now, and who have been employed in the Melchers Gin and Spirit Distillery Company, Berthierville, during the years 1915, 1916, 1917 and 1918?
2. What has been, and what are the respective salaries of these officers?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

Snowdon, J. W. $2,000, duty pay $150; Normandin, G. H. $1,550, $1,650, $1,750, $1,850, duty pay $250, $300, $300, $300; Oliver, H. $1,000, $1,000, $1,000, $1,000, duty pay $150, $150, $150, $150; Denis, J. L. $800, $800, $800, $800, duty pay $150, $150, $150, $150; Gariepy, L. N. $1,240, $1,250, $1,250, $1,250, duty pay $137.14, $150, $150, $150; Tellier, J. O. $800, $800, duty pay $125, $50; Oliver, J. A. $775, $875, $1,050, $1,100, duty pay $175, 200, $200, $200; Champagne, A. $900, $900, $900, duty pay $33.33, $116.54, $93.75; Langevin, H. H. $600, $600, $900, $1,100, duty pay $33.33, $116.54, $150, $95.42; Barrette, J. A. $725, duty pay $13.71; Champagne, J. O. $800, $900, $900, duty pay $41.67, $120.83, $150; Parent, D. J. $900, $900, duty pay $18.82, $109.41; Barrette, J. E. $925, duty pay $1,673.

POSTMASTERS—DORCHESTER COUNTY.

Mr. CANNON:

1. Who are the Postmasters in the County of Dorchester?
2. Where are their post offices located?
3. When were they established?
4. What salaries do these postmasters annually receive?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

Abenakis, Ste. Claire, Treffle Laflamme, 1 July, 1883, $50; Anvers Cranbourne, Romeo Bolduc, 24 January, 1917, $50; Asselin, Cranbourne, Maurice Brun, 15 November, 1916, $50; Barnard, St. Malchie, Amedee Girard, 1 June, 1916, $50; Barre, Langevin, Rev. J. Z. Raymond, 1 December, 1916, $50; Cadrin, Joliette, Athanase Royer, 1 February, 1913, $50; Chemin Neuf, Cranbourne, Jos. Bouffard, 1 July, 1913, $50; Coulombe, St. Isidore, Napoleon Lebreux, 1 January, 1899, $55; Cranbourne, Cranbourne, Patrick Colgan, 1 April, 1854, $50; Culdaff, Cranbourne, John O'Brien, 1 June, 1876, $66; Dijon, Standon, Rev. J. V. Rochette, 11 September, 1917, $50; Drouin, Standon, Chas. Corriveau, 25 January, 1917, $50; Feuille d'Erable, Cranbourne, Odilon Lessard, 18 June, 1912, $114; Fir Grove, Frampton, Napoleon Roy, 1 December, 1900, $54; Frampton, West Frampton, Dr. F. E. Boutin, Prior to 1848, $384.27; Garroz, Watford, Xavier Poulin, 1 December, 1914, $50; Genest, St. Bernard, Nap. Nadeau, 1 September, 1913, $50; Grand Rang, Cranbourne, Philias Laflamme, 1 April, 1894, $54; Guindon, Watford, Mrs. P. Rancourt, 1 November, 1913, $50; Hemison, East Frampton, E. Gregoire, 1 August, 1907, $50; Hennepin, Standon, Jos. Corriveau, 1 May, 1911, $50; Kirouac, Langevin, Mrs. Claudia Hebert, 1 October, 1913, $55; Lacasse, Frampton, Placide Brosseau, 1 January, 1913, $50; Lake Etchemin, Ware, J. L. F. Chabot, 1 March, 1866, $392.59; La Merisiere, Watford, Gualbert Desroches, 1 January, 1916, $50; Langevin, Langevin, Misael Languay, 1 March, 1867, $475.11; Lavery, Metgermette Nord, E. LeBel, 7 June, 1915, $50; Morrisset Station, Watford, P. Veuilleux, 1 July, 1910, $106; Mount Kinsella, Frampton, Jose. Humphrey, 1 November, 1912, $50; Mount Robson, St. Edward de Frampton, C. Hince, 1 December, 1899, $50; O'Farrell, Frampton, Frank Pare, 1 December, 1904, $60; Poliquin, Watford, Dorilla Dallaire, 1 October, 1913, $50; Poulin, Frampton, Philemon Roy, 1 September, 1913, $50; Quatre Chemin, Watford, Nap. Langelier, 1 August, 1903, $69; Rainville, Ware, Louis Jacques, 1 April, 1915, $50; Ravignan, Langevin, Thomas Bedard, 1 September, 1894, $55; Riviere Metgermette Nord, Metgermette Nord, Arch. Lamontagne, 1 February, 1914, $54; Riviere Raquette, Watford, Alph. Poliquin, 1 March, 1911, $123.15; Ruisseau a l'Eau Chaud, Frampton, Simon Fortin, 1 February, 1887, $75; St. Abdon, Ware, Octave Roy, 1 September, 1904, $54; St. Anselme, St. Anselme, E. Filteau, 6 January, 1849, $500.11; St. Anselme Station, St. Anselme, Ludger Audet, 1 November, 1893, $286.61; Ste. Aurelie, Metgermette, Jean Giguere, 1 August, 1884, $68; St. Benjamin, Cranbourne, Miss C. Veilleux, 1 September, 1895, $146; St. Bernard de Dorchester, St. Bernard, Mrs. C. A. Genest, 6 February, 1853, $267.61; Ste. Claire, Ste. Claire, Miss E. Cayouette, 6 January, 1849, $453.92; Ste. Edouard de Frampton, Frampton, Jean G. LeHouillier, 1 March, 1868, $50; Ste. Germaine Station, Ware, Achille Lacasse, 1 March, 1907, $209.80; Ste. Henedine, Ste. Henedine, Alf. Fournier, 1 April, 1854, $410.13; St. Isidore Dorchester, St. Isidore, Jean Turgeon, 6 April, 1852, $279.92; St. Malachie, East Frampton, Miss L. Turgeon, 1 October, 1864, $345.66; St. Malachie Station, Frampton, J. Lacasse, 1 January, 1912, $255; Ste. Marguerite de Dorchester, Ste. Marguerite, J. B. Gagnon, 6 April, 1852, $253.70; St. Nazaire de Buckland, Buckland, Gaudias Bechard, 1 April, 1894, $67; St. Odilon, Cranbourne, Mrs. Jos. Boivin, 1 April, 1883, $249.21; St. Prosper de Dorchester, Watford, Hector Samson, 1 June, 1882, $436.78; Ste. Rose de Watford, Watford, Ephraim Bougie, 1 July, 1882, $166; St. Zacharie, Metgermette, Hormisdas Poulin, 1 June, 1882, $366.25; Sevigny, Langevin, J. E. Audet, 1 February, 1912, $50; Springbrook, Frampton, John Bartholomew, 1 August, 1875, $60; Standon, Standon, Elzear Soucy, 1 February, 1855, $259.22; Vachon, Metgermette Nord, Achille Vachon, 1 April, 1914, $50.

[Mr. Doherty.]

INLAND REVENUE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CANNON:

1. What are the names and addresses of the employees of the Department of Inland Revenue who have been appointed since June 1, 1917?
2. What is the nature of their employment?
3. What is the amount of their salaries?
4. On what dates were they appointed?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

Westman, A. E. R., Ottawa, $50 per month, 30 June, 1917; Gray, W. B., Stettler, Alta., $250, 1 July, 1917; Hill, M. E., Ottawa, $600, 3 July, 1917; Rimmer, W. L., Hamilton, $900, 9 July, 1917; Barbeau, A. L., Montreal, $900, 23 July, 1917; Gallagher, W. J., Montreal, $900, 16 July, 1917; Papineau, D. McK., Montreal, $900, refused position; Gariépy, O., Montreal, $900, 23 July, 1917; Huot, D., Montreal, $900, 1 August, 1917; Ham, J. A., Ottawa, $1,100, 19 July, 1917; Hill, W. H., Ottawa, $1,300, 1 July, 1917; Handley, P., Victoria, $900, 25 July, 1917; Johnson, L. E., Ottawa, $1,300, 16 July, 1917; Lefebvre, J. M., Montreal, $900, 25 August, 1917; Steed, Thos., Revelstoke, B.C., $500, 1 July, 1917; Lavallée, J. O., St. Gabriel de Brandon, $1,200, 9 October, 1917; Lachance, L. C., Ottawa, $900, 20 September, 1917; Hibberd, Wm., Halifax, $20 per month, 1 Oct., 1917; Arpin, B. G., St. Hyacinthe, $800, 29 Oct., 1917; Morin, A. L., Quebec, $1,000, 2 Nov., 1917; Lalonde, A. Z., Montreal, $900, 16 Nov., 1917; Sanders, W. J., Ottawa, $1,100, 19 Nov., 1917; Desjardins, J., Ste Victoire, $800, 24 Nov., 1917; Branson, R. A., Winnipeg, $1,000, 22 Nov., 1917; Stubbs, W. R., Winnipeg, $1,000, 21 Nov., 1917; Larochelle, J. G., Montreal, $1,000, 6 Jan., 1918; Desrochers, J. O., Montreal, $1,000, 7 Jan., 1918; Penny, H. B., Calgary, $1,200, 14 Jan., 1918; Genereux, S., Ottawa, $30 per month, 15 Jan., 1918; Stokes, T., Halifax, $1,500, 11 Feb., 1918; Parker, E., Calgary, $1,000, 1 March, 1918; Wilson, J. B., South Hill, B.C., 1 Jan., 1918; McInnes, M., Amyox, B.C., 1 Jan., 1918; McIntyre, D., Penticton, B.C., 1 Jan., 1918; Pollick, W. C., Almonte, Ont., 1 Jan., 1918; McLeod, J. H., Prince Rupert, 1 Jan., 1918; Lesage, E. F., Vancouver Island, 19 Nov., 1917; Campbell, H. S., North Bay, Ont., 1 Dec., 1917; Abrams, B. S., Union Bay, B.C., 1 Oct., 1917; Ball, A. B., Comox, B.C., 1 Oct., 1917; Robertson, W. G., Courtenay, B.C., 1 Oct., 1917; Pineo, C. M., Port Albani, B.C., 1 Oct., 1917; Johnston, P. T., Esquimault Road, B.C., 1 Oct., 1917; Corbett, R. S. W., Pender Island, B.C., 1 Oct., 1917; Jarrett, R., Chemainus, B.C., 10 Oct., 1917; Brettingham, F. A., Duncan's Station, B.C., 7 Sept., 1917; Ladouceur, F., Buckingham, Que., 1 July, 1917; Moffat, S., Campbellton, N.B., 1 July, 1917. The last seventeen sell stamps on commission.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

For copies of all letters, telegrams, petitions and other papers and documents relating to the appointment of a preventive officer at Mulgrave, N.S., to fill the position made vacant by the death of the late David Murray.

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a return showing all the Commissions created since September, 1911, the names of the Chairman or Presidents and Members of the said Commissions, with the amounts expended in connection therewith including rents, travelling expenses, stationery, printing, advertising, telegrams, telephones, postage and all other expenses, as well as the reports made by the said Commissions.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

For a copy of all memoranda and petitions by Slav subjects of Austria, naturalized in Canada, setting forth grievances and suggesting remedies.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER:

For a copy of all petitions, letters or communications of any kind either asking for or opposing the importation of coolie labour, from the first of September last to date.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

For a return showing the total money value of the hard coal, soft coal, oil and gasolene imported into Canada during the years ending March 31, 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, and for each month since March, 1917.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS.

Mr. PREVOST:

1. What is the total amount of war contracts fulfilled in the Province of Quebec, from August, 1914, to January, 1918?
2. How many war munitions establishments are in activity in the Province of Quebec?
3. How many shells are manufactured weekly in said province?
4. How many hands are engaged in such establishments in said province?

Mr. CANNON:

1. Who are the contractors for the transportation of His Majesty's Mails in the County of Dorchester?
2. What sums do they receive annually for this work?
3. When were the contracts in each case given, and upon whose recommendation?
4. When does each of these contracts terminate?

Mr. POWER:

1. How many officers who were engaged in active service overseas have returned to Canada during the year 1917?
2. What was the reason for their return?
3. What was the rank of such officers?
4. To what battalion were they attached overseas and in what capacity?
5. What are their respective occupations and the amount of salary paid to them since their return?
6. How many were returned because they refused to revert to a lower rank in order to go to the front?

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. What number of Chinese entered into Canada during the months of September, October, November, December, 1917, and January and February, 1918?
2. How many have remained in Canada during the same period?
3. How many of them have gone to work in mining districts?
4. How many of them have gone to work as agriculturists?
5. Under what conditions were they admitted?
6. Was there any representation made to the Government as to the necessity of Asiatic labour? If so, by whom?
7. Was there any representation made to the Government against such immigration? If so, by whom?

Mr. CAHILL:

1. Has any money been paid to the Dundalk Herald, the Flesherton Advance, the Markdale Standard, the Durham Chronicle, the Grey Review, or the Hanover Post, for advertising or for any other reason since October 1, 1917?
2. If so, how much was paid in the case of each of the papers mentioned?

RESTRICTION ON SALE OF PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL SECURITIES.

DISCUSSION ON ORDER IN COUNCIL PASSED BY GOVERNMENT.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Maisonneuve) moved:

For a copy of all letters and telegrams exchanged between the Dominion Government and the various Provincial Executives concerning the Order in Council of December 22, 1917, respecting the sale of securities by provincial, colonial or foreign governments, municipalities and other bodies.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the question alluded to in the notice of motion is one which vitally interests the Dominion of Canada and especially the provinces. We are all aware that prior to Confederation there were two schools of thought as regards the respective powers of the Dominion and the provinces. It is a well known historical fact that at least one of the fathers of Confederation, Sir John Macdonald, was in favour of legislative union, but when it came to the test in England he had to yield to public opinion and to the well known views of his colleagues, notably Sir George Etienne Cartier, who favoured a federative union system. That it is the better system of the two need not be demonstrated. We are a heterogeneous nation, with a population scattered over a very large territory, and as a consequence the separation of powers is absolutely necessary in order to govern efficiently the various parts of this Dominion. A federative union for such a large country as ours is the only system to ensure civil and political liberty. And I would go further, Mr. Speaker, and state, without fear of contradiction, that even for a homogeneous people, scattered over a large territory, the local wants of the people can best be ministered to through a federative union system. If we take the case of the United States, we find that they are one people, speaking practically one language, with one system of laws, and yet that people, scattered over a very large territory, in order to minister to the local wants of that vast country, has adopted the federative system. It follows, as a matter of course, that if you have this federative union you must have legislative independence for each of the local legislatures.

Although that sound principle, Mr. Speaker, was embalmed in our Act of Confederation, it has been assailed many times since 1867, and the old feuds about the relative powers and jurisdiction of Dominion and provincial parliaments are still fresh in our minds. Sir John Macdonald accepted in the last resort, the principle of federative union. But it is only too true that in the years following Confederation, when Sir John Macdonald was in office, he on many an occasion challenged provincial autonomy. I need only refer to the classical cases, if I may so term them, which were the bones of contention between the Dominion and the various provinces, notably Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba and the Maritime Provinces. Let me mention only a few of those cases to refresh the memory of the Provincial Rightists whom I see before me. There were the Insurance case, the Escheats case, the Liquor Licensing case, the Rivers and Streams case; and last, but not least, the famous Ontario boundary dispute. In all those cases the uncompromising champion of centralization was Sir John Macdonald, and the uncompromising champion of provincial autonomy was Sir Oliver Mowat. The provinces, and indeed, the Dominion, owe that great statesman a debt of gratitude for his unfailing devotion to the cause of provincial rights. His policy may be summed up in the one sentence: the provinces were sovereign in their authority in order to make Canada united in its diversity. That policy, Sir, which had as its champion the late Sir Oliver Mowat, rallied around it the prime ministers of the then existing provinces, and many of the giants who played so prominent a part in the affairs of this country in the Dominion Parliament, notably the late Edward Blake, and my right hon. friend the present leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

That policy, Mr. Speaker, has been sustained by many judgments of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The battle for provincial rights has been won. At least that was my impression, and it was the impression of the public, until the month of December last when, after the election, an Order in Council was passed by the present Government, which I shall read in a few moments. I may be told that the fact of our being at war necessitated extraordinary and drastic measures. It is true that we are at war. It is also true that drastic measures are sometimes necessary, provided, however, they are in keeping with the spirit and within the four corners of the British North America Act, which is the Constitution of Canada. But the substitution of Orders in Council for Acts of Parliament on important matters such as the one to which I shall refer, is a dangerous weapon in the hands of any Government. The more dangerous is that weapon when such Orders in Council override, yes, directly override, the constitution. I claim that this is precisely what happened when in December last the Government attempted by Order in Council to control the borrowing powers of the various provinces of this Dominion. In order to make this point clear I shall quote the ipsissima verba of the Order in Council passed on the 22nd of December, 1917. It reads:

Whereas it is advisable that the Canadian investment market should be conserved to facilitate the borrowing of the large sums of money that will be required for the prosecution of the war and to enable His Excellency's Government, if need be, to fully avail itself of the loaning capacity of the country for the paramount purposes of national defence, and that the impairing of the market should be prevented by forbidding the offering and sale thereon of securities for raising money for purposes the execution of which may in the public interest be postponed until peace has been restored, provision being made for the issue by the Minister of Finance of a certificate permitting the offering and sale of such securities as the said Minister shall deem proper to except from such prohibiton;

Therefore His Excellency the Governor General in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance and under the provisions of The War Measures Act, 1914, is pleased to enact the following regulations and the same are hereby made and enacted accordingly:

1. It shall be unlawful within Canada, by or on behalf of any provincial, colonial or foreign government, municipality, commission, local government, institution, corporation or incorporated company, to issue, sell, offer or advertise for sale, any bonds, debentures or other securities evidencing an obligation to repay money borrowed, which may hereafter be issued by or on behalf of any such colonial or foreign government, municipality, commission, local government, institution, corporation or incorporated company as aforesaid, or any shares which may hereafter be issued of the capital stock, whether preferred or common, of any such corporation or incorporated company, or to purchase or agree to purchase any of the bonds, debentures or other securities or shares of capital stock aforesaid, unless the offering and sale thereof within Canada shall have been first approved by the Minister of Finance by his certificate of approval in writing:

Provided, that nothing herein shall affect the issue, offering, advertising, sale or purchase of any bonds, debentures or securities of the Government of Canada, or the trading in any bonds, debentures, securities or shares of capital stock, heretofore issued and placed upon the market, or which shall have been originally issued and placed upon the market with the approval of the Minister of Finance evidenced by his certificate as aforesaid.

The Order proceeds to declare that it will be a criminal offence to ignore its provisions. Now, Mr. Speaker, I must express my surprise that this Order in Council was passed by a Union Government. I can well imagine old members of the Conservative party who form part of this Government, and who are disciples of the late Sir John Macdonald, appending their signatures to such an Order in Council; but I am surprised beyond expression to find that such staunch provincial rightists as some of the hon. gentlemen who compose the present Government should have given their assent to it. On the other hand, I am pleased to know, and I say it with pride, that the first voice raised against this encroachment on provincial rights, was the voice of the Prime Minister of Quebec. Immediately this Order in Council was passed, the Attorney-General of Quebec, Sir Lomer Gouin, speaking for his Government, used the following language:

That in the opinion of the undersigned, these regulations are beyond the powers of the Federal Parliament which could neither adopt them directly, nor delegate the powers to enact them to the Government of Canada;

That the effect of the said regulations is to restrict the rights, powers and prerogatives of provincial governments, and, in particular, of the government of this province, in so far as regards the matters which the constitution governing us confers exclusively upon them, and that nothing in the British North America Act, 1867, justifies such an encroachment;

That the Order in Council in question was passed without the government of this province having been informed thereof, and that the knowledge that it acquired of it was so acquired through the press.

That it is of importance to strongly protest against this manner of interpreting our constitution by the central government, and against this attempt to do away with a right exclusively belonging to the provinces.

For the above reasons, the hon. the Attorney General recommends: 1. That the Government of Canada be informed that it is the intention of the government of this province to consider these regulations as illegal, unconstitutional, and in no wise binding on this province.

2. That a notice be published in the Quebec Official Gazette informing the public that in the opinion of this government the said Order in Council, dated 22nd December, 1917, concerning the issue of bonds and debentures in Canada is illegal and unconstitutional as far as this province is concerned.

I do not know the nature of the other protests which came from the other provinces, but I am sure that the Government did receive protests from some of the western provinces. I know that there was one from Manitoba and one from Nova Scotia; probably there were others.

I agree with the opinion expressed by the Attorney General of the province of Quebec that this Order in Council of 22nd December encroaches upon the rights of provinces generally, and therefore is absolutely unconstitutional. I cannot for the life of me understand the reasons which impelled the Government to act in that drastic fashion towards the Provincial Governments. The Order in Council was passed immediately after the Victory loan was launched and after all provincial governments had in every particular co-operated with the Minister of Finance to make that loan a success. Speaking of my own native province, I may say that the Government of Quebec subscribed a very large amount to the Victory loan—in the neighbourhood of $1,000,000, I believe. I may be wrong as to the figure, but in any case it was a very large sum. I cannot too strongly—how shall I say it—denounce the manner in which this Order was passed and made public. No notice was given; no consultation with provincial executives was had. I honestly believe that in this very serious time of financial stress through which we are passing, no better means could have been devised to impair and to shatter the credit of the provinces on the foreign markets.

I submit, then, that this Order in Council constitutes an encroachment on provincial rights. What is the guiding principle in the matter of the borrowing powers of the Dominion Government and the provincial legislatures respectively? By section 91, subsection 4, of the British North America Act, the Dominion Government is given, it is true, exclusive legislative authority with respect to the borrowing of money on the public credit. Though general in terms, this expression, "the borrowing of money on the public credit," must manifestly be, and, I submit, is, restricted by the context. How is it so restricted? In the enumeration of the executive powers of the provincial legislatures—section 92, subsection 3 of the British North America Act—we read the following: "The borrowing of money on the sole credit of the province." If it is suggested that there is a conflict between the right of the Dominion Government and that of the provincial governments to borrow money, I would say that the conflict is only apparent. There is no conflict in the powers granted to the Dominion and to the provinces respectively by the British North America Act with regard to borrowing. The field of legislation is divided between the two, for two distinct purposes. First, the Dominion Parliament has exclusive legislative authority to borrow money on the public credit of Canada for the peace, order and good government of Canada. Second, the provinces have the right to borrow money—to use the words in the enumeration, of executive powers, section 92—"on the sole credit of the province"—in order to the raising of a revenue for purely provincial purposes.

If it be argued that there is conflict—which there is not—between the borrowing powers of the Dominion Government and those of the provincial legislatures, it can be argued also that there is an apparent conflict in the British North America Act as regards taxation. Section 91, subsection 3, assigns to the Parliament of Canada "the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation," while section 92, subsection 2, assigns also to the provinces "direct taxation within the province in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial purposes." One would think at first sight, therefore, that there is a conflict between the powers of the Dominion Parliament and those of the provincial legislatures in the matter of taxation. The Dominion Government has the right to adopt any system of taxation, while the provinces have recourse only to direct taxation. The question came up before the Privy Council, and in referring to this apparent conflict Sir Montague Smith made the following observations, in the well known case of the Citizen Insurance Company vs. Parsons (7 Appellate Cases, page 108):

> So, "the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation" is enumerated among the classes of subjects in Sect. 91; but, though the description is sufficiently large and general to include "direct taxation within the Province in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial purposes", assigned to the provincial legislatures by section 92, obviously could not have been intended that, in this instance also, the general power should override the particular one.

And Mr. Justice Clement, in his work on the Canadian Constitution, page 459, speaking of the financial clauses of section 91, says:

> They are the necessary powers of mutually independent governments. The wider choice of methods allowed to the Dominion on taxation does not touch the question; no one would suggest that its power or indirect taxation could be used to raise a revenue for provincial purposes.

The same analogy exists, I submit, as regards the borrowing powers of the Dominion and the provincial governments. The same conclusions as were reached by the Privy Council concerning the taxing powers of both Governments must be reached in the present instance.

Let us now see whether by inference the Order in Council of the 22nd of December can be considered as constitutional. The only other portions of section 91, under which it is conceivable that an attempt might be made to support the Order in Council, are: first, the general language of the first part of section 91 authorizing Parliament to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada; secondly, the second subsection of section 91, providing that Parliament may legislate with respect to the regulation of trade and commerce; thirdly, the seventh subsection enacting that Parliament may legislate with respect to militia, military and naval service and defence, and fourthly, subsection 27, which confers upon the Dominion Parliament legislative jurisdiction over the subject of criminal law. The peace, order and good government clause is limited by a proviso, and, therefore, cannot be extended. Let me read this clause:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada, in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces.

What are the classes of subjects assigned exclusively to the legislatures? I find that by section 92, subsection 3, of the British North America Act, the borrowing of money on the sole credit of the province is assigned exclusively to the legislatures. Therefore, the Government could not, under section 91, under the peace, order and good government clause, pass this Order in Council. Could the Government plead that by passing this Order in Council it was merely regulating trade and commerce? What is the object of this Order in Council? Is it to regulate trade and commerce? It is to facilitate the borrowing powers of the Dominion by curtailing the provincial powers of borrowing, and I make the positive statement, which nobody can challenge, that neither the Government nor any of the provincial institutions or commissions aimed at by the Order in Council are engaged in trade and commerce. It might be stated that the Order in Council mentioned also incorporated companies which are the creatures of the provincial government, but there again the regulation of trade and commerce clause must have a restricted sense. This point was well put in a case with which the Minister of Justice is very familiar. In a case between the city of Montreal and the Montreal Street Railway, Lord Atkinson said:

> The same considerations appeared to Their Lordships to apply to two of the matters enumerated in section 91, namely, that the regulation of trade and commerce taken in their widest sense, these words would authorize legislation by the Parliament of Canada, in respect of several of the matters specifically enumerated in section 92, and would seriously encroach upon the local autonomy of the province.

And in a still more recent reference as to the Insurance Act of 1910, the present Lord Haldane, after referring to the decisions in Russel vs. the Queen, and Hodge vs. the Queen, added:

> Their Lordships think that as the result of these decisions it must now be taken that the authority to legislate for the regulation of trade and commerce does not extend to the regulation by a licensing system of a particular trade in which Canadians would otherwise be free to engage in the provinces.

Perhaps the best reason, if the Government had any good reason for passing this Order in Council, would, I presume, rest on subsection 7 of section 91, which gives the Dominion Parliament power to organize the militia, military and naval service and defence; but my answer to that is that provision has been made in the British North America Act in the shape of fiscal clauses. The fiscal clauses are subsections 3 and 4 of section 91, so that to provide for the militia, military and naval service and defence, the Dominion Government has within its grasp the necessary instrument either to raise money by any mode or system of taxation, or to borrow money on the public credit of the country. The sinews of war must be obtained in virtue and under the authority of the above subsections; otherwise, Sir, you destroy the autonomy of the provinces, and you may just as well dispense with the necessity of the provincial legislatures if, by an Order in Council, you can prevent the provinces from borrowing on their sole credit.

4 p.m.

In conclusion, let me say that this Order in Council, which came as a painful surprise to the Canadian people, who were under the impression that the battle for provincial autonomy had been fought and won, is, in my humble judgment, ultra vires, not only as regards the provinces themselves, but as regards municipalities, provincial commissions, institutions and other bodies coming within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. If the Dominion can assume control of the borrowing powers of the provinces it can also assume control of the taxing powers of the provinces, and if that can be done you should be logical and suspend the constitution of the country during the present war.

It may be contended, as it was contended on several occasions before the Privy Council, that provinces may sometimes abuse their privileges, their rights, especially in the exercise of such as may be termed concurrent rights with Dominion rights. But as has been decided by the Privy Council, injustice or abuse is no ground of invalidity. In the famous fisheries case I read in the book published by A. H. F. Lefroy, Appeal Cases, 1898, this statement:

> The suggestion that the power might be abused so as to amount to a practical confiscation of property, does not warrant the imposition by the Courts of any limit upon the absolute power of legislation conferred. The supreme legislative power in relation to any subject matter is always capable of abuse, but it is not to be assumed that it will be improperly used; if it is, the only remedy is an appeal to those by whom the legislature is elected.

In another case I find this question is referred to thus:

> They point out that upon the same principle, because under No. 7 of Section 91, of the B. N.A. Act the Dominion Parliament has the exclusive right of legislating as to all matters coming under the head of "militia, military and naval service and defence", and because any part of the land in the province of Quebec might be taken by the Dominion legislature for the purpose of military defence, and because that which had not been done as to some particular land, might possibly have been done, therefore, it not having been done, all power over that land, and, therefore, over all the land in the province of Quebec is taken away, so far as it relates to legislation concerning matters of a purely local or private nature, which they say, they think, neither necessary or reasonable, nor a just or proper construction.

I believe this is a very vital question which has excited public attention of late days. I know that the Government, after having passed this Order in Council, called the various provinces to a conference at Ottawa. I do not know what the result of that conference was, but surely representations must have been made against this drastic and, I humbly submit, unconstitutional Order in Council, and the object of my motion is to get all the papers connected with that Order in Council, the protests which it has elicited from various sources, and to know if the Government still maintains its position in view of the protests which came from the various provincial governments.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): There can be, and there is, no objection to the hon. gentleman having the papers that he has moved for. I do not purpose following him in detail in the very interesting discussion which he has entered upon with regard to the powers of the provinces and the powers of the Dominion, nor do I intend to take up the gauntlet that apparently he desires to throw down in defence of the attitude of Sir Oliver Mowat and other leaders of the past, with regard to certain questions which arose as between the Dominion and the provinces. These questions, as the hon. gentleman has said, have been settled. I think it was to be expected, when this country was endowed with a new constitution distributing the powers of legislation and the powers of government between the Dominion itself and a number of different provinces, that there would naturally arise questions as to the interpretation of the different dispositions of the Act that made that distribution, and it would naturally fall to those who, when those questions arose, were administering the government of the Dominion to take up the defence, if I may so express myself, of the rights of the Dominion with regard to any particular matter, and equally naturally would it fall to those who were charged with the administration of the government of the respective provinces to, as strenuously as they felt justified in doing, assert the more extensive view of provincial rights. In that condition, what happened is what one would naturally expect, that those charged with the administration of the Federal government figured in the position of defenders of the wider view of the powers of the Parliament of Canada, and the necessarily wider power of the Government of Canada, and that those charged with the administration of the government of their respective provinces found themselves defending and upholding the wider view of the provincial powers.

Those questions have been settled, and I am at a considerable loss to appreciate the hon. gentleman's apprehension that what he describes as the victory of provincial rights has been in any way disturbed or attacked by the Order to which he refers. With all respect for the opinion which he expressed—and I certainly entertain a very high respect for any opinion which he would express on a question of law, and likewise a great respect for the opinion of the hon. Attorney General of the province of Quebec whose professional standing I am very glad indeed to recognize—I venture to say that the view that there is anything unconstitutional in the Order in Council to which the hon. gentleman has referred proceeds upon a misapprehension. As I understand it, the Order in Council does not undertake, and does not in fact, alter or modify the power of the legislature of the province of Quebec to legislate with regard to the raising of money for provincial purposes. The Order in Council by its terms does purport to make it unlawful, and I believe does effectually make it unlawful within Canada, that there should be issued, or offered, or advertized for sale any bonds, debentures or other securities evidencing an obligation to repay money, and, makes it unlawful that this should be done on behalf of any provincial, colonial or foreign government, or any municipality, corporation or incorporated company; and so on. That Order in Council, in its terms, affects the power conferred upon provincial legislatures and their executive by the British North America Act. The power so conferred remains vested in them.

What in effect is the disposition of the Order in Council? It is that the Government of Canada, finding it necessary to avail itself of the resources of Canada for the purpose of enabling it to effectively carry on the operations necessitated by the state of war, has, if I may use the expression, commandeered the Canadian money market. I fancy that if any other of the resources of Canada were deemed necessary for the effective carrying on of the operations for the defence of Canada and of the Empire by this present condition of war, it would be a valid objection to the exercise of that power that any property or any resources of Canada, which this Government might deem it necessary to take in its power, should thereby be withdrawn from the possibility of provincial government or municipal government, or any corporations or persons whatsoever in Canada availing themselves of that resource. We have realized how valuable to Canada at the present time is the borrowing power of her individual citizens, and what an immense aid and assistance that has been to Canada in enabling her to carry on the effort which she has made in connection with this war. What does this Order in Council do other than secure to the Government of Canada the exclusive possibility of availing itself of this resource? If it be conceded, and I do not see how it can be disputed, that the Parliament of Canada has the right to legislate for the peace, order and good government of Canada, and more particularly for the defence of Canada, then it must be admitted that she has the right to legislate to secure the greatest possible advantage which can be derived for the purposes coming within the scope of these two powers and of the resources of Canada. That is what, in regard to this particular resource, this Order in Council does.

The Order in Council does not purport to limit the legislative powers of the legislatures of any of the provinces, nor the action of the executive in carrying out any power which it is lawfully entitled to exercise. All of the provinces still have, as they had before, their full legislative power to provide for the borrowing of money for provincial purposes. The only effect that results from this Order in Council is that a market that was open to them is open to them no longer because it has been found that the exclusive control of that market is essential to the Government of the Dominion for the purposes to which I have already referred.

That is the whole extent and effect of the legislation. The provinces remain entitled to borrow in such markets as they have access to. Their legislative power with regard to borrowing certainly remains in effect. What has happened is that this particular market wherein money may be found, and which it was deemed necessary to be preserved or conserved in order that this Dominion Government might have at its disposition these invaluable resources, is no longer open to the provinces and no longer open to any other body, municipality, corporation, or individual. The enactment goes no farther than that. If it be true that incidental to the exercise by the Government of this country of what seems to me its undoubted right in availing itself exclusively of this valuable resource, the operations of provincial governments in putting their loans on the market are hampered, it is a very unfortunate thing, but that does not interfere with their legislative powers in any way whatsoever. If the view that I put forward be sound it would be, I fancy, recognised that the argument of the hon. gentleman as to our interference with the borrowing powers, and as to the respective positions of the Parliament of Canada and the Legislatures of the provinces, with respect to legislation concerning the borrowing of money or concerning taxation for provincial purposes on the one hand or Dominion purposes on the other, is beside the question.

I am not able to grasp the analogy which he has endeavoured to establish as existing between this power which the Government has exercised and the power of taxation or the power of borrowing. The two powers, I would be disposed to agree with him, in so far as they are conferred upon the Dominion on the one hand and the provinces on the other, are powers to do the same thing but they are clearly differentiated as between the different purposes for which they were granted. I fail to follow my hon. friend in his contention that this Order in Council is an interference with the legislative powers of the provinces in connection with the raising of money by borrowing, or in connection with the raising of money by taxation. If the view which I have put forward be sound, and I have difficulty in seeing how it can be controverted, it becomes quite unnecessary for us to enter into any discussion of how far this particular legislation may be justified as being a regulation of trade or commerce, and I do not purpose going into that discussion. The Order stands, and I believe that it stands upon a solid foundation. It stands upon the power of this country, this one Canada as a whole, to avail itself of all its resources for the purpose of effectually carrying on these operations in connection with the war which are admittedly operations with regard to which the legislative power is exclusively vested in the Dominion Parliament and with regard to which, therefore, the executive power is necessarily exclusively in the hands of the Government of the Dominion.

Something has been said about the danger of the powers that have been conferred upon the Government of this Dominion by the War Measures Act. There is no doubt that those powers are exceedingly wide, and that they, therefore, impose upon those who are charged with exercising them with prudence and with care the duty of going not a step beyond the very wide bounds which Parliament chose to give to those powers. But, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that, so long as the subject matter of this Order in Council is a proper subject matter upon which this Parliament might itself legislate—and of that I respectfully submit there is no doubt—there can be no question under the War Measures Act the last Parliament vested the full power that it had in that regard in the Governor in Council—and I may add that the parliament of that day did that unanimously, fully recognizing the importance of the Government being placed in such a position that it would be possible for it promptly and effectively to take any or every step that it might deem to be necessary or advisable by reason of the conditions created by this unfortunate war.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think that, upon loking into the terms of the Order in Council, and more particularly its effect, it becomes clear that there is not any intention to attack any constitutional power of any province, and that in its effect it results in no infringement upon the legislative or executive power of any province; that it merely makes available to this Dominion of Canada—to the exclusion of the provinces it is true, as well as to the exclusion of all other bodies whatsoever and of all other persons—the money market of Canada, the borrowing power of the people of Canada.

Now, action of this kind is not without precedent. In the United Kingdom, at a very early stage of the war, the Imperial Government, found it necessary to take over into its own hands the entire control of its money market and to absolutely either exclude or restrict the access to that money market. It is not surprising that the Government of Canada should have found itself in the same position and in face of the same necessity with regard to the money market of Canada. Of course, in the United Kingdom there was no room for the suggestion even of any constitutional question with regard to it. I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is in this country as little ground for raising a constitutional question with regard to this exercise of power on the part of this Government. It is true that we necessarily must keep within the limits of the British North America Act, whereas the Parliament of the United Kingdom has no such restriction imposed upon it. But so long as we keep within the limits of the powers conferred upon Parliament by that Act—and I respectfully submit that what I have said makes it clear that we have done that—even if it did happen that inconvenience results to the provinces and other would-be borrowers, that is no sufficient reason to question the constitutionality of the action taken by the Government in this Order in Council.

Mr. ARTHUR TRAHAN (Nicolet): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in support of the motion. I do not intend to deal with the constitutional question but there is another point of view to which I desire to draw the attention of the members of this House. The preamble of this Order in Council says:

> Whereas it is advisable that the Canadian investment market should be conserved to facilitate the borrowing of the large sums of money that will be required for the prosecution of the war, and to enable His Excellency's Government, if need be, to fully avail itself of the loaning capacity of the country for the paramount purposes of national defence, and that the impairing of the market should be prevented by forbidding the offering and sale thereon of securities for raising money for purposes the execution of which may in the public interest be postponed until peace has been restored, provision being made for the issue by the Minister of Finance of a certificate permitting the offering and sale of such securities as the said Minister shall deem proper to except from such prohibition.

I quite agree, Sir, that sacrifices of liberty, and temporary suspension of laws can be justified when they are the result of imperious and unavoidable necessities for national defence. But, when they are not strictly based on such considerations, and if they be only the result of the natural tendency of all governments to reach after additional power; if they be the immediate consequence of the executive's scorn towards Parliament, provincial legislatures, municipal and similar institutions and the rights of citizens, then the sacrifice of civic liberties and the suspension of laws are without any possible excuse, and are illicit and worthy of blame. In European countries, where war exists, they have under similar circumstances for the salvation of the nation, suspended temporarily the application of certain laws, but they have never violated their constitutions. By this Order in Council our constitution is torn like a scrap of paper, as has been fully demonstrated by my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux). Supposing for the sake of argument that this Order in Council is absolutely constitutional, was the Government confronted by perils and unavoidable exigencies of national defence sufficient to justify it? To this question I believe we can answer in the negative. In support of this contention I will quote the opinion of a man whose judgment cannot be suspected of partisanship, and whose opinion is reported in The Montreal Gazette of March 21 as follows:

> Toronto, March 20.—Judge Denton has decided in favour of the London Life Insurance Company in the action brought by Mrs. M. F. Skimin for $500, life insurance on her soldier son Private Garnet Redvers Skimin, killed in action July 25th, 1916. An appeal will be taken.
>
> The question placed before Judge Denton was whether young Skimin was engaged in a military enterprise for the defence of Canada from invasion at the time of his death.

The Company claimed that within the terms of the policy Skimin was not so engaged, and therefore they were not bound to pay the amount of the policy.

Mr. Justice Denton, who rendered judgment in this case, is a member of the Supreme Court of Ontario. I concur in his view when he holds that this war is not a military enterprise for the defence of Canada against the invasion of an enemy, and I believe that I am right in concluding that the motive of national defence invoked in the preamble of the Order in Council in question for the purpose of justification, is, unfortunately, not well taken.

Moreover, there are many other reasons which militate against this Order in Council. In the Order in Council provision is made for the issue by the Minister of Finance of a certificate permitting the offering and sale of such securities as the minister may deem proper to except from such prohibition. How would that work, Sir? Either the sale of all such debentures will be authorized by the Minister of Finance, or authorization will be refused, or authority will be partly granted and partly refused, at the discretion of the minister. If the authorization for sale of all such securities is granted then this Order in Council is useless, and is only an encroachment upon the provincial autonomy, against which I strongly protest. If you interfere with provincial autonomy, Sir, you are going to break up Confederation, and that would be a national calamity.

Sir WILFRI LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. TRAHAN: If such authorizations are all refused, for reasons of financial necessity, we have, it seems to me, the conclusive evidence that the Government badly needs all the available money in the country and desires to monopolize it for its own purposes, to the detriment of provincial governments, municipal corporations and school boards, which, just as much as the Federal Government, represent the people of this country, and need funds for the building and maintenance of schools, roads, and all other municipal and local improvements. Finally, if the Minister of Finance uses his discretionary power by partly granting, or partly refusing, such authorization, you have, Sir, the establishment of a new mode of patronage, and a most dangerous one, because it deals with financial interests, and if exercised arbitrarily may cause the ruin of many commercial corporations, while at the same time tending to the benefit of their rivals. Suppose for a moment, there are two commercial bodies who wish to issue and sell such bonds, one friendly to the Government and the other adverse to it. What guarantee have we that in such circumstances there will be no favouritism? In these troublous times the temptations are very numerous, and we know by experience that the present ministers may be led into temptation and exercise the power of patronage.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. TRAHAN: Before the election the Government promised the abolition of patronage. But now, by this Order in Council they have created a new source of patronage. Therefore, from whichever point one examines this question, one must conclude that the Order in Council which we are discussing is nefarious and contrary to the public interest and to sound principles of public policy. For the reasons I have given, I, therefore, ask the Government to show that due respect for the law which is a guarantee of the peace, good order, liberty, prosperity and greatness of the nation. The Government must be the first to observe that respect, the first to present an example of proper regard for the Constitution. Otherwise the tampering, the manipulation, or, if you will permit me to use a French word the better to express my idea, the sabotage by the Government of the Constitution will tend, sooner or later, to bring about sabotage of the laws of the country by the people at large. I submit, Sir, that this Order in Council ought to be immediately repealed, because in my humble judgment it is an unqualified violation of the Constitution, an unjust encroachment upon provincial autonomy, harmful to Canadian credit and the development of our resources to their full extent, and because I am desirous of upholding Canadian interests above everything else and for all time.

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Trahan) contends that this Order in Council was promulgated by the Government purely and solely for the purpose of invading the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures and of prohibiting school boards, parishes and provinces from raising money by the sale of securities. The hon. gentleman left me with the impression that it was his view that the Government had no other purpose in the promulgation of this Order in Council than that provincial and local interests should be harassed and their rights invaded. Of course, if my hon.

friend chooses to look at the matter in this spirit he cannot possibly understand the reason or the purpose for which the Order in Council was passed. Personally, I cannot see why there should be any lengthy and serious argument upon the constitutionality of this Order in Council. I do not object to the provincial legislatures making their protests upon constitutional grounds; the matter may be debatable as a constitutional question. But I do say that in all the circumstances the provinces, having once stated their objection and expressed their opinion as to the constitutionality of the Order in Council, might well now let the matter there stand.

I do not agree with the hon. gentleman from Maisonneuve (Hon. Mr. Lemieux) when he says that the Order in Council was received with pain and surprise by the people of Canada. I deny that assertion. I have, during the past few weeks, come in contact with representatives of many of the provinces of Canada and have had expressed to me by members of provincial governments their approval of this Order in Council. In fact, I know of only one province in Canada which has gone to the trouble of expressing at length a formal protest against the Order. I refer to the province of Quebec—although the intention and purpose of the Government in enacting this Order in Council having been explained, the Government of that province has, I think, also changed its view, if not from the constitutional viewpoint, at least from the practical standpoint.

Does the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Trahan) mean to tell me that the financial necessity of the country in these days should give way to small parochial and provincial interests? He states that the motive in passing this Order in Council was to attack the borrowing powers of school boards, parishes and provinces; that it is an attempt to break the constitution. Well, I do say this: in these days provincial and parochial rights must, if necessary, give may to national interests. It is more important to save this country than it is to save the borrowing powers of small borrowing bodies. This Parliament has no desire—neither has the Government—to invade the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures; but in these days the Government must, at many times, do things which in ordinary times it would not attempt.

Let me explain in a few words the reasons which impelled the Government to pass this Order in Council. In carrying on civil Government and paying for our participation in this war, we are necessarily obliged to raise in one form or another a great deal of money. Hon. gentlemen know as well as I do that it is not possible to raise the necessary large amount for these purposes by the ordinary forms of taxation. We must, in the first place, provide sufficient revenue to carry on civil Government, and, in the next place, raise sufficient revenue to pay for carrying on our part of the war. Not only that; we must provide from time to time credits for carrying on the trade and commerce of the country. We could not export wheat; we could not export cheese; we could not export anything to-day unless the Government of Canada provided the financial resources or the credit in some form or other. In other words, the country must be self-contained financially; therefore, it is necessary that we be borrowers within Canada and for large sums. With these huge commitments for the present and for the future, is it unreasonable to say by Order in Council—particularly when we have the authority—that provinces, municipalities, companies and private individuals shall not issue and sell securities except by license of the Federal Government? It never was the intention of the Government that by this Order in Council provincial governments should be prohibited from borrowing upon the Canadian market. We realized that provincial governments could not go outside of Canada to borrow. None of the provinces can borrow to-day outside of Canada; neither can the Federal Government itself. When the Order was promulgated it became the policy of the Government to assist the provinces so far as they were unable to do so themselves by borrowing. Up to the present time one province has been loaned the sum of $2,500,000. The Dominion Government is also committed to make an advance of $3,000,000 to another province, upon terms, of course. A province which could not borrow upon fair terms in this country to-day could not borrow outside.

Hon. Mr. LEMIEUX: Which province, if you please?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN: I do not care to mention the province.

Mr. BUREAU: Why not?

Mr. DEVLIN: That is important.

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN: It is not important.

Mr. BUREAU: It is.

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN: That is altogether a question of judgment, and I propose to use my own judgment in the matter, for the time being, at least.

Mr. BUREAU: The Order in Council, I suppose, makes it unimportant.

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN: We have made it known to all the provincial governments that in the event of their requiring to borrow any substantial sums of money and being unable to make favourable loans in Canada, we shall advance them the sums required for a period of five years at the rate of six and one-half per cent interest, taking the obligation of the borrowing province therefor. Let me repeat that, so far as I know, no province in Canada, since being acquainted with the purposes for which the Government promulgated this Order in Council, has made any objection to it. It would be very undesirable and detrimental to the national interest to have municipalities or corporations selling on the Canadian money market large loans at low prices, which some would in many cases be obliged to do. This would affect adversely our market for Victory Bonds in the future. Last year over $400,000,000 was borrowed in this country by the Canadian Government, practically for carrying on our part of the war, by the sale of Victory Bonds. It will be necessary at the latter part of the present year again to appeal to the Canadian people for a similar loan, and by the same means. It is obvious, therefore, that if provinces and municipalities were allowed to go upon the market making loans at expensive rates, the market might be very seriously impaired for Federal purposes, when we again ask the Canadian public to subscribe to a further issue of Victoria Bonds for the purpose, really, of carrying on the trade and commerce of the country and for paying for our participation in the war. At least the Government is of the opinion it should have power to control the same if necessary.

Mr. Speaker, the argument made by the Minister of Justice convinces me that in the circumstances our jurisdiction is complete; that no constitutional argument can be urged against the validity of the Order in Council. As the Minister of Justice states that what we have done is to expropriate the money market of this country for Government purposes. We have not attempted to prevent provinces, or school boards, or parishes from issuing securities and selling them outside of Canada. We have not attempted to prevent provinces from imposing taxation for provincial purposes or anything of that character. All that we do say is that the Canadian money market may be necessary, even for the preservation of our national life, and if that be so, the Government were and are now of the opinion that we should exercise the right, if we have the power, of controlling, until the termination of the war, the securities which will be placed upon the money market of this country, and I think hon. gentlemen, upon reflection, will be disposed to agree with that view.

In the exercise of the control of issues made by provinces or municipalities or corporations, great care should, of course, be exercised. So far, I do not think a license has been refused by the Department of Finance. Our action, however, has had the effect that many issues would have been made were it not for the passage of this Order in Council; that is to say, that many persons knowing that their proposed issues were of very questionable importance, and perhaps even detrimental, to the country at this time, have declined to proceed with their promotions of one kind or another, and consequently have refrained from appearing before the Finance Department to ask for a license to sell issues of securities or shares. I promise my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) that in exercising the discretion to refuse or to grant a license to make issues of securities in this country the best judgment will be used. I do not think that up to date any body, any person, or any province is in a position to complain of the exercise already made by the Government under the authority conferred upon it by the Order in Council, and I do not think any opportunity will be given to make objection to the discretion which the Government may exercise in the future.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER: With the object which the Government may have had in passing this Order in Council, that is, to secure to themselves primarily and preferentially to anybody else the financial resources of the country, no one can find fault. I agree altogether with my hon. friend that it is of the utmost advantage, and I would say more, even necessary, that the Government should endeavour to obtain for themselves, in preference to everybody else, what financial strength there is in this country. The only question is as to the method by which the Government have attempted to carry out this purpose, which is laudable in itself.

5 p.m. They want to keep for themselves the available finances of Canada. The question is whether or not they have, under our constitution, the power to deprive the provinces, and all the other bodies which derive their powers from the provinces, of a similar advantage. My hon. friend has made a very complete and concrete case to the effect that the British North America Act specifically, in so many words, gives to the provinces the power to borrow. Section 92 of the British North America Act reads:

> In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say,—
> The borrowing of money on the sole credit of the province.

This is so clear that the Minister of Justice does not attempt to dispute it, but his answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) in regard to this, was very technical and, might I say, sophistical. His whole argument was this, and nothing else: We do not propose and we did not intend to, and we did not, in fact, interfere with the powers of the legislatures to borrow; that is to say, notwithstanding the passing of this Order in Council, the legislatures have this power to borrow just the same as they had before. Of course, they have. But laws are passed to be executed; laws are passed to have their effect. The Legislature of Ontario or the Legislature of Quebec may pass a law to borrow money, but it cannot execute that law if this Order in Council places that power in the hands of the Dominion Government. Thus the Minister of Justice leaves to the provinces a power which is barren and of absolutely no effect at all. Why was this power given to the provinces? Because it was well understood that the provinces in carrying out their undertakings might have to borrow, and if a province can pass laws, but cannot execute them, it is mere sophistry to say that the power of the province is not invaded. If a province has the power to pass laws, but not the power to execute them, there is invasion of its power. The argument of my hon. friend is simply sophistical, and it is mere playing with words to tell us that a legislature has power to pass laws which it cannot execute. When it was understood that their powers were being invaded, some of the provinces took alarm and claimed that the Dominion Government was going beyond its powers and was endeavouring to take away from the provinces powers which they had absolutely. I cannot see how my hon. friend can escape from the argument I have made on this point. The Order in Council goes too far. The Minister of Justice said that, under the law, we have, in war time, the right of eminent domain. We have the right of eminent domain at all times, in time of war as well as in time of peace. We can expropriate the property of an individual. We can pass a law to-morrow to take the property of Mr. So and So, but I do not believe that under the constitution we have the power to expropriate the property of a province.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think it has been held otherwise in the United States.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I have not heard of and I would like to know of a case in which it has been held otherwise.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am speaking from recollection. I remember having had occasion to look into the matter a few years ago, and I discovered, a good deal to my surprise, that, if my recollection is correct, the power of the Federal Government to expropriate the property of a state Government has been recognized.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My right hon. friend found it rather surprising. I should imagine he did, and it is to my surprise as it is to his, if it be so.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: We are both surprised.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It may be that under the constitution of the United States there is such a right, but my right hon. friend will not deny that up to the present the interpretation of the constitution of Canada has been that the legislative powers of the provinces were paramount within their spheres and that the legislative power of the Dominion was paramount in its sphere. If that be the proper interpretation of the constitution, I claim that in this country we have no such power as my right hon. friend has just stated. My hon. friend said a moment ago that only the province of Quebec had protested. I think I am right in saying that the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have also protested in the same manner as the province of Quebec. But I shall be sorry to dispose of that question simply upon a technical matter of this kind. While I am altogether behind the Government in their endeavour to secure to themselves primarily and in preference to everybody else the financial resources of the country, the Government, in my estimation, acted very unwisely when they acted as they did.

If they had consulted the provinces before, as they did afterwards, the question might have been settled otherwise and they would have obtained the unanimous consent of all the provinces. If they had said to the governments of the different provinces, "We are to-day in the midst of an immense danger, the cause for which we are fighting is paramount, and everything must subside before it" the governments of the provinces would have been willing to stand behind them. If the Government had said to the provinces: "If you have to borrow money, we ask you not to borrow it from outsiders but give us the privilege of lending it to you," it would have been much better. They might have made the same suggestion to the municipalities. The Acting Minister of Finance said they would have lent the provinces the money themselves. If they had said to the provinces, "Do not got to market and try to borrow, but come to us and let us assist you" that would have been the proper course, and I would highly commend the Government for taking it. My only regret is that they should have, in an unduly and in the most highhanded manner, attempted to override the power which the provinces acquired. We must avoid, as far as we can, all difficulties of this nature in normal times, and we must still more avoid them in war times.

Hon. Mr. SIFTON: Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my gratification that the leader of the Opposition thoroughly agrees with the policy which has been carried out, which was aimed at being carried out, under this Order in Council. The manner in which it has been done appears to be displeasing to some hon. gentlemen. The constitution would appear, in the words of the other speakers, to be in great danger, and, having been, for many years, one of the men referred to by the hon. mover of this resolution, as strongly in favour of the maintenance of provincial rights and the careful guardian of constitutional privileges from the provincial standpoint, I feel that I should not neglect the opportunity, on behalf of the provinces of thanking the hon. gentlemen for the extreme interest which they now take in the rights of those provinces. There were times when we could not get quite such strong views from some of them, or even from some of the members on this side of the House in regard to the rights of those provinces, and I am glad to say it is now generally conceded that the constitutional privileges of provinces should be recognized in all respects. In regard to this particular question the argument appears to be one that might more properly be addressed to the Privy Council when this question finally reaches there after the conclusion of the war. The brief that the hon. mover of the resolution had prepared was an extremely good one. It was one that would be very useful in arguing legal questions, but as he himself recognized, it is possible to prepare a brief on both sides of nearly every constitutional question that has arisen since Confederation. There has never been any great difficulty in getting eminent legal gentlemen to prepare very excellent briefs on both sides of the many constitutional questions that he has brought to the attention of the House this afternoon, and there has been, on many of these occasions, a reference to the constitution of the United States. It is one of the favourite places to go for analogy. The constitution of the United States, of course, varies considerably from the constitution of Canada. Their constitutions are ever so much more exact in their wording, being all written, and not depending upon common law at all. It is very easy to argue in regard to what is done and what is not done in the United States. But even in the United States, when occasion arises, we find that the Federal Government assumes authority, as the Federal Government does here on occasion, and the framers of the constitution of the United States would probably have been much surprised if they foresaw that such powers would be assumed as have been assumed by the Federal Government. We find that when the United States declared war their President assumed the power, as a war measure, of confiscating hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property of individuals in the various states, and we find that only the other day the President of the United States assumed control of thousands of miles of railway that were chartered by the various states of the Union, and that were not under the Federal control. These, Mr. Speaker, are matters of the same nature as are provided for in the Order in Council that has been under discussion this afternoon, and while I am not going to discuss this matter from the legal standpoint, as has been done so well by the Minister of Justice and by the mover of the resolution, I say that in this case, as in the cases I referred to, the Government of this country has only done what it was expected by every citizen of the Dominion it should do, to get the money that was actually necessary to conduct the war and to carry on the affairs of this country. This course may properly be followed further, and it may have to be followed further, if this country is to do what is absolutely essential at the present time. The question is vastly more important, even for the provinces themselves and the various municipalities, than the purely technical question as to whether, for a short time, their powers have been infringed upon by this Order in Council. It is quite proper for those provinces to file a protest with the Minister of Finance in connection with this matter; quite proper for them from a purely provincial standpoint to see that their rights are not infringed upon in a permanent way without protest. I must differ from the right hon. leader of the Opposition in regard to what the proper course was, because not one of those provinces would have felt they were justified, if they had been asked previously, in giving up one jot or tittle of their provincial authority to the Federal Government. But, it being an accomplished fact, every one of those provinces, I believe, is prepared to join in heart and soul and assist the Minister of Finance in the getting of the money that is absolutely essential at this time.

Mr. LUCIEN CANNON (Dorchester) (translation): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very attentively to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Sifton) and I must admit that his remarks somewhat surprised me, all the more so since he belongs to those western provinces for which the hon. leader of the Opposition did so much while he was at the head of the public affairs of this country.

The hon. minister felt called upon to reproach the hon. leader of the Opposition with having given expression, this afternoon to what is for him a new idea, the idea of protecting the autonomy of the Canadian provinces. I do not know if the hon. minister has a short memory, or whether his knowledge of public affairs is not sufficiently wide, but despite my youth and my inexperience, and although I have seen less of public life than he, I remember, Mr. Speaker, the struggle carried on by the hon. leader of the Opposition for the autonomy of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, at a time when his own province threatened to turn against him because of his principles. But the hon. leader of the Opposition on that occasion proved that he was not a politician who varied his principles to suit the circumstances, but that, always, he guided himself and his party by the immutable principles of that Liberalism to which we belong this year, as we belonged last.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the hon. minister in the English tongue, but I hope that he understands me when I say that we, the Liberals of the province of Quebec, were the first to fight for the liberties which his Government, a Government whose leader he remained until recently, have turned to their advantage.

[Mr. Sifton.]

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to retain the attention of this House very long. The main question brought up by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) was very ably discussed by the mover, as by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty). But permit me, Mr. Speaker, as a Liberal, to say this: the question before the House today is not a new one. It is the great question which has been raised in all the centres of colonization where the English, after leaving the old land of liberty, came here, on Canadian soil, to open up to civilization a new domain.

When the American colonies struggled and fought against the central power, why did they do so? To try and prevent that central power from destroying the liberty of the individual states.

Here in Canada, there is not a man in this House who does not know of the struggles that were fought in the province of New Brunswick, in the province of Nova Scotia, before these provinces became a part of Confederation; neither is there here a man who does not know of the great struggles that took place in this country before Confederation, and while Confederation was being formed, between the Liberals who wanted the provinces to safeguard their own liberty and the Tories who wanted to centralize all authority in one government.

Mr. Speaker, Confederation was brought about. On what basis was it brought about? It was brought about on the following basis, to wit: that we should have in this country two Governments; the Federal Government which was to concern itself with all questions of a general character and of a national character; and the provincial governments which were to look after matters of local interest, of a less general character. But, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that the Act of Confederation is such that the provincial powers are as weighty within the provincial sphere as is the federal power within the federal sphere, and that the government of Quebec, the government of Saskatchewan, the government of Alberta are sovereign governments just as the Government at Ottawa may claim to be.

But, Mr. Speaker, allow me to say this in closing: The hon. minister appealed to the patriotism of those who listened to him. We, of the Opposition, just as much as our friends on the other side of this House, are in favour of the triumph of the sacred cause of the Allies. At this moment we are passing through a solemn hour. We have as much unrest, as much anxiety in our souls and in our hearts as have our friends on the right. When millions upon millions of men are fighting on the soil of Europe to uphold what is most sacred and most cherished for us all, i.e.: the right to breathe in freedom; when in the old province of Quebec prayers ascend from every hearth for the triumph of the British flag which has given us the constitutional liberties which we enjoy; we must not, while we are laying down our lives, while our children are shedding their blood, we must not forget the fundamental principles which should always guide the governments of this country; it must not be that while on the one hand we go to shed our blood for the cause of Liberty on the other, in our own country, the provinces lose their prerogatives.

Mr. Speaker, if the Government formed last year is always inspired by the lofty ideas and the great principles which presided at the birth of Confederation; if the Union Government lays aside a policy which sets the provinces against the federal authority and declares for a policy of veritable union, of true understanding, the nine provinces will stand behind it in the prosecution of this struggle which must lead to an ultimate victory, though it may be that just now we are experiencing a few hours of difficulty.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution of the hon. member for Maisonneuve shows that the Liberal party, in this matter, respects the high principles which presided at its birth, which have fortified it in it's struggles, and which allow us young members on this side of the House to hope that as long as these principles are not forgotten, we may perhaps suffer defeat, but the dawn of the morrow will always find us as strong, just as mighty, clothed in the principle which will have guided us thoughout the battle.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION DEPARTMENT.

On motion of Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Borden, Bill No. 11, respecting the Department of Immigration and Colonization, was read the third time.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT.

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SUPERINTENDENT AND INSPECTORS.

On the motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), the House went into Committee on the following proposed resolution; Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

That it is expedient to amend the Penitentiary Act, Chapter 147, of the Revised Statutes, and to provide that the Governor in Council may appoint a Superintendent of Penitentiaries, who shall be an officer of the Department of Justice, and superintend the administration and business of the penitentiaries, and who shall be paid such salary as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council; and three Inspectors of Penitentiaries who shall be classified as officers of the Department of Justice, in sub-division B of the First Division of the Civil Service, and shall each receive a minimum salary of twenty-five hundred dollars per annum.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will my hon. friend explain?

Mr. DOHERTY: The reason for introducing this resolution, upon which a Bill is to be founded, consists in the fact that it has been found necessary to provide salaries for the offices that it is proposed to create. The Bill, which will be founded upon this resolution, proposes to modify the present Penitentiary Act in this respect: Under the Act the chief officers in control and having direction of the penitentiaries are two inspectors holding equal rank and performing duties that would belong to an inspector proper, that is the inspection of penitentiaries, and the duty of directing and controlling, under the Minister of course, the administration of the penitentiaries. I have now been connected with the administration of penitentiaries for some few years, and I think I may safely say that in practical operation the system does not work out to the best advantage. It has appeared to me, and I hope when we come to deal with the measure I shall be able to carry conviction to the House, that we would get a more efficient administration of the penitentiaries if we separated the work of inspection from the work of management, control, and direction, taking the latter and putting it into the hands of one officer who, under the minister, would have the responsibility, and providing at the same time for an officer who would hold the title of inspector and who would in reality perform the duties corresponding to that title; that is to say who would inspect the penitentiaries, and report on their condition in order to keep the superintendent, and through him, the department and the minister in touch with what is going on within these institutions. The Bill itself contains provisions, following upon that change of system, with regard to the making of regulations and so forth, transferring in effect that portion of the duties of the present inspectors which consists in the general direction of the penitentiaries over to the superintendent and making the modifications in the system which are necessitated by that transfer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I ask the minister in what respect he has found the present system deficient?

Mr. DOHERTY: It does not seem to me desirable that we should have two officers jointly, and upon a footing of perfect equality, acting in the direction of the penitentiaries. I think unity of control is highly important because it means unity of responsibility. There are great practical inconveniences from combining the duty of direction with that of inspection because the latter necessarily calls for absence from Ottawa. If you are going to have effective inspections of these seven institutions scattered over all the provinces you must necessarily have an officer in a position at any time it is thought desirable to proceed to these different penitentiaries and ascertain what is going on there.

There are advantages even in these visits, perhaps, being made not at stated periods when everybody expects the inspector, but in having all of the institutions in the position where the inspector may drop in at any moment. Now, it is, of course, impossible for the inspector to be in two places at once, "barring he was a bird," as one of my fellow-countrymen said, and we do find it necessary to have some one practically all the time in Ottawa to superintend, control and direct the management of these institutions. I venture to say that it is a more practical and businesslike method to have an officer to do the work of directing operations, and to have officers constantly available for the work of inspection proper. Inspectors, charged simply with the work of inspection, will, of course, not be held as of the same rank and importance as the superintendent or as the inspectors of the present day, and it will be noticed that we provide a smaller salary.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I ask who the inspectors are at the present time?

Mr. DOHERTY: The inspectors at the present time are Mr. Douglas Stewart and Brigadier-General Hughes. General Hughes is absent on leave, and has been absent since the outbreak of the war, serving his country in a military capacity. That fact, of course, has also hampered our operations. We have been trying to get on with one officer who has been carrying on the duties of superintendence as well as of inspection.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I have not the advantage of knowing Inspector Hughes, but I know Mr. Douglas Stewart very well, and he is a very competent officer, and if the hon. minister could show me and the House the importance of providing assistance to Mr. Stewart, I think it would go very far towards the very natural objection to increasing, at this time especially, the personnel of any department. Mr. Stewart has occupied his present position for more than twenty-five years, and he is one of those servants of the public who have given intelligence, zeal and honesty to the discharge of all his duties, and if the hon. minister were to bring a report to the effect that Mr. Stewart is suggesting this arrangement, for my part I should certainly be disposed to agree at once to the change.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not in a position to say that the change is the suggestion of Mr. Stewart. It is the result, as I said, of my own experience of the administration of these institutions since 1911, and when we come to deal with the measure itself—we are now dealing with the resolution principally with respect to the question of salaries—I hope to be able to satisfy the House that the proposed system will prove a more effective one; and while it is true that it will operate to increase the number of officers dealing with this function, I may point out that it will not necessarily operate to increase in any material degree the expense of carrying on the work.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I cannot see that. At present, I understand, we have only two inspectors to do the work. Under this legislation you will have a superintendent of penitentiaries and three inspectors besides, making an increase of two in the staff.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is an increase of two in the staff, but the two present inspectors cost jointly $8,000. If we have but two inspectors—because we won't necessarily have three—at the salaries mentioned the cost would represent $5,000. If we pay the proposed superintendent the present salary of an inspector, the increase in expense would be only a thousand dollars. While there may be that extra expense, I do very confidently submit to the committee that there must necessarily be an increase of efficiency. It is not a matter of dealing with the personal qualifications of any one holding the office; I am speaking of the system. Where you have a system with one man charged with the direction and the responsibility, and where you have people who may be thoroughly suitable people to do the inspection charged with the inspection, it does not necessarily follow that the qualities that make a good inspector make a good man to direct and control the administration of the penitentiaries. There is need, I may say, for an improvement in many respects in regard to the carrying on of the work of the penitentiaries, and probably of important changes with regard to the interior administration, more especially in connection with the work to be done by the superintendent. I am satisfied, and I commend that view to the committee, that we will get a situation where it will be more easy to carry out a proper system of efficient administration if we divide these two perfectly distinct classes of work, and if we arrive at a situation where, for the general direction and control, there is one responsible officer.

Mr. BUREAU: Did I understand the Minister of Justice to say that the two present inspectors are costing $8,000 and that the three inspectors will not cost any more, or did I misunderstand him?

Mr. DOHERTY: I did not say they would not necessarily cost any more. I pointed out that the inspectors, if this Bill be passed, would be officers of a quite different class from the present inspectors, and that the salary, at all events the initial salary that is mentioned, would be such that two of these inspectors will cost but a thousand dollars more than one of the inspectors costs at the present time. That to get the better system it will probably cost something more I do not desire to dispute; but I feel very strongly that the better system, which I am satisfied could be got by a reconstitution, is worth any increase that it may necessitate. I pointed out that, if we had but two inspectors under this new system, with a superintendent, and if the salary of the superintendent were fixed at the same amount as that of one of the present inspectors who exercise the superintending power, there would be an increase of a thousand dollars in cost.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Whilst I agree with the leader of the Opposition that this is not the time for increased expenditure, I would forgive the hon. Minister of Justice if, in order to increase the efficiency of the administration of the penitentiaries, there would be, following the creation of these two new offices, some sort of prison reform in the Dominion. There is no doubt that we have many more penitentiaries than we had at the time that Mr. Douglas Stewart was placed at the head of that service, and that the new provinces and the increased population have at least doubled the duties of that office. The point I wish to make is, that, if the creation of the new offices will give a better administration of the penitentiaries in the way of prison reform, I have no objection to the Bill. My hon. friend (Mr. Doherty) knows by past experience in this House that serious revelations have been made as regards the treatment of convicts in our penitentiaries which certainly drew from the Department of Justice very drastic reports. I do not go as far as to say that the administration of our penitentiaries should be on a par with the new system at Sing Sing, where the Governor is the pal of all the convicts, although it has been found that that system has worked wonders in some cases.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX: But certainly, and I am sincere in what I am now stating, there is need of more efficiency in the superintendence of the penitentiaries. Society is too apt to forget the convict once he has crossed the threshold of the penitentiary, whereas he should be followed into the institution and helped to become a man once more.

It was my good, or bad, fortune, some years ago, to visit the Kingston penitentiary, a splendid institution, but I was sorry on that occasion to notice a number of young convicts of about nineteen years of age associating with older convicts of the age of fifty, sixty, and seventy. I noticed, too, that these young men were breaking stones with the older convicts, and possibly learning by that association the tricks of much more serious crimes than had brought them within the penitentiary's gates. I would point out, also, that there are methods of punishment inflicted on the convicts which are out of date, methods which, though quite proper in the middle ages, are in the present century antiquated and out of place. I repeat that if efficiency in the conduct of the penitentiaries will be increased by the appointment of the officers mentioned I raise no objection to the resolution. I sincerely hope that the Minister of Justice will respond to public sentiment on this matter, for that sentiment is not a fictitious one. I do not go the length of saying that you should allow associations of ladies to send flowers to men condemned to death who are to be conducted to the gallows the next morning; but I say that there are certain means of improving the moral conditions of the convicts which ought to be appreciated by the superintendent of these institutions. Undoubtedly we must change some of the methods now in vogue for the sake of society and in the best interests of those poor creatures who are unfortunate enough to be incarcerated within the walls of a penitentiary.

Resolution, read the first and second time, and concurred in.

Mr. Doherty thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 21, to amend the Penitentiaries Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

MONTREAL HARBOUR ADVANCES ACT, 1914.

On motion of Hon. C. C. Ballantyne (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) Bill No. 15, to amend the Montreal Harbour Advances Act, 1914, was read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, the Deputy Speaker in the Chair.

On section 1—C. 41 of 1914 amended so that advance of $9,000,000 may also be used to pay $300,000 of debentures maturing in 1918.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the minister please explain?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: When this Bill was introduced, the member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) asked me to advise him what the programme of the harbour commissioners of Montreal would be for the season of 1918. Following the rigid policy of economy that the Union Government is putting in force, I am holding down as well as I can the expenditure on the port of Montreal for the coming season. The harbour commissioners, subject to my approval, propose to spend during the coming season a total of only $220,000. Their intention is to continue the Montreal harbour system of railways further down the harbour in order to supply the various industries there and new ones which we hope will be located. That is estimated to cost $150,000. Then there is an amount of $15,000 for roadways and railway tracks on wharves. The dredging that will be required in connection with this extension of harbour railways is estimated to cost $50,000. Then there is $5,000 for electric system, power and lighting, making a total expenditure for the coming season of $220,000. In 1917 the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal spent a total of $705,000; in 1916, $1,237,918.31; in 1915, $1,922,581.69. The hon. gentleman will see, therefore, that the amount we propose to spend for the coming year is very small compared with the amounts spent in previous years. In addition to the $220,000 expenditure to which I have alluded, an amount of $300,000 will be available to retire the debentures that this Bill calls for.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The committee will be very much interested in the statement which has just been made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. No work is more familiar to my hon. friend than the work of the Montreal Harbour Commission. Indeed, if I should express regret it is that my hon. friend is not still at the head of that commission rather than in the bad company in which he now finds himself. But, to be serious, while we are speaking of improvements at the harbour of Montreal, may I ask my hon. friend if precautions are being taken in all ports of Canada where munitions are stored to avoid any such disaster as that which occurred at Halifax last December? I am informed by an authority whom my hon. friend knows well— the harbour master of Montreal—that during several months of the year the city of Montreal is exposed to the same danger as that which brought about the disaster which took place at Halifax. I myself have seen the shells and other munitions there. It seems to me that any such danger can be obviated if proper precautions are taken. The people of Montreal and of other ports through which shells are being shipped look upon the minister to prevent in the future the recurrence of what has happened in the past.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I deeply sympathize and so does the Government, with those who suffered by the terrible disaster which overtook the city of Halifax on December 6th last. So far as the port of Montreal is concerned, one of my first acts when I became minister was to call the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to Ottawa and to give them the most explicit and clear instruction that for the coming year no high explosive should be stored or loaded in the centre of the port of Montreal, or in what might be more properly termed the congested area. I have arranged that during the coming year all high explosives will be loaded many miles east of congested portion of the Harbour, in what is known as opposite Pointe aux Trembles. That is another reason why we are extending the railway tracks down there. A special shed is being built for that purpose, and every precaution is being taken to avoid accident. I am also having expert navigators draw up very carefully prepared rules for the guidance of munition ships entering the port of Montreal or any other of the seaports on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. With the precautions that are being taken in the matter of loading high explosives and the providing of rigid rules for the guidance of munition vessels and all other ships entering seaports, we hope to avoid any such unfortunate disaster as that which took place at Halifax.

Mr. MURPHY: I observe that the first item of $150,000 covers the greater part of the proposed expenditure during next season. To what service will that item be specifically applied?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Harbour Commissioners of Montreal have their own traffic department; that is to say, all the railways bring their loaded freight cars to a certain point and then the Harbour Commissioners' traffic department, with their own engines, pick up the cars and place them at the various sheds throughout the harbour, or take them further east, as may be required.

Mr. LEMIEUX: On their own rails?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes. Prior to the Harbour Commissioners doing that, the port of Montreal was very much congested, because the large railway companies very often used the harbour terminals as their own railway terminals and thereby very seriously blocked the traffic. When I was a member of the Montreal Harbour Commission my colleagues and I organized what was known as a traffic department. We bought our own engines and had our own expert men to handle the traffic and I think they handled considerably over 100,000 cars during the first season. The Harbour Commissioners have now extended the railway quite a considerable distance below the Vickers' shipbuilding yard, and this $150,000 is to continue it further east so as to serve the large industries that are located in that district.

Mr. MURPHY: Approximately how far east?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The railway at the present time goes down, if my memory serves me aright, about one mile below the Vickers' works, and it is the intention to extend it—I cannot give the exact mileage, but I should say a couple, and possibly three miles.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Civil Government—Department of Finance and Treasury Board, salaries and contingencies, $203,212.50.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the Acting Minister of Finance kindly explain the increases in the various departments?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: There have been no additions to the staff of the department, so that the number of employees in this department is exactly the same as last year, and the increases in salaries are due to statutory increases. Hon. gentlemen will remember that at the last session of Parliament an Act was passed granting an increase of $100 to the second and upward divisions.

Mr. LEMIEUX: A flat increase?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Yes, and owing to that amendment, and promotions which came in the regular course, the total amount for salaries required this year is about $6,000 more than last year. The other increase is for printing and stationery. Last year this vote was $7,500. This year the department is asking for $15,000. This is due to the fact that larger quantities of stationery than usual are required in the Department of Finance on account of public loans and matters of that kind, and it is also due to the increased cost of paper and stationery. I am instructed that the increase is due entirely to these two facts. There is also an increase of $3,500 for sundries which is also due largely to the increased cost of sundry articles from time to time required by the department.

Civil Government—departments generally—contingencies—care and cleaning of departmental buildings, including amount of $100 to E. Snowdon for firing noon gun, $310,000.

Mr. BUREAU: How is the increase of $35,000 justified?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The char service of the Government buildings is attached to the Department of Finance. Possibly it might better be attached to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. BUREAU: Was not that work until this year in the care of the Department of Public Works?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: No. The increase is due to the fact that a larger number of buildings than heretofore are to-day occupied by the Government in the city of Ottawa. It was found necessary during the present year to employ three additional men and 103 additional women. This increase covers increases in wages and the increased cost of some small materials required from time to time.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Are these additional employees in connection with the Victory Loan?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Partially.

Sir SAM HUGHES: How many additional clerks have thus far been called into the service on account of the Victory Loan?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I am unable to answer the hon. gentleman at the moment. The cost of that service is not included in this appropriation. I should imagine there were some 300 additional clerks employed by reason of the Victory Loan.

Mr. BUREAU: Does that require the use of an additional building, or is their work being transacted in the offices of the Department of Finance?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: It is largely conducted in the offices in the East block occupied by the Department of Finance, but they are not quite sufficient to house the number of employees, and just a few days ago a building was secured in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. BUREAU: Where?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I am unable to say exactly where.

Mr. COPP: Is the extra rent of the building secured a few days ago included in this appropriation?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: No. This has nothing to do with rentals of buildings.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In regard to the housing of the employees of the Department of Finance, I noticed the other day, when going to the office of Mr. Breadner, the gentleman who has charge of the income tax, that hundreds of young girls were being placed in the lobby, working under very great disability and under conditions which were not at all hygienic. I do not know if rooms cannot be found in that building and accommodation provided for those young girls. I should say that the accommodation at present is very poor.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: What building is that?

[Mr. Bureau.]

Mr. LEMIEUX: The East block.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I am sorry to say a great number of people are employed in the Finance Department who are obliged to work in the hallways of the building. No other space was available in any of the departmental buildings, and space could not be secured anywhere else in the city.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Other places are being secured, are they not?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The department rented another building somewhere in the city a few days ago. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is hardly a fair way in which to ask employees to work. The department has in mind asking the Government to construct a temporary wooden building just behind the East block, because it will be necessary to employ a large staff in connection with this loan for some two or three years probably.

Department of Insurance—
Salaries.. ....$	35,950 00
Contingencies..	32,500 00

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The details of this item appear on page 36 of the estimates. There is a slight increase in this vote, but only one additional person has been added to the service. The increase, therefore, is largely attributable to the statutory increases.

Mr. MURPHY: What services are performed in connection with the item "valuation of securities."

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: All the insurance companies are obliged under statute, to deposit securities with the Government, particularly foreign companies. I am unable to say at the moment what relation there is between the volume of the business or capital of the company and the amount of securities deposited, but at least there are securities in a very large sum deposited with the insurance branch of the Department of Finance, and I assume it is necessary to have responsible clerks to value these securities.

Mr. MURPHY: Would that not be part of the ordinary duties of some of the members of the staff? My inquiry is directed to ascertain why there is a special item, as distinct from the salaries paid officials.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: It has been customary to have this item, and I shall inform my hon. friend about it at some other meeting of the committee.

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU: I see an item under "Contingencies" of "Printing, binding and stationery including cost of annual report, $21,000." Can my hon. friend tell me how much is paid yearly for the printing of the annual report of the Insurance Department?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I have not the information at hand this moment. If the hon. gentleman desires it, I shall be pleased to give it to him at another meeting of the committee.

Mr. BUREAU: Looking over the Auditor General's Report I find a departure from the custom of previous years, and that instead of printing the Auditor General's Report in both French and English, the headings only are printed in French. I suppose that following the same line of economy, the insurance report, as well as the report of unclaimed balances in the banks, would lend itself to being printed in the same way as the Auditor General's Report is printed. It would even be more appropriate to print only the headings of these reports in French than in the case of the Auditor General's Report. If you introduce economy in this way into the printing of the Auditor General's Report, you should at least provide that items pertaining to Quebec should be printed in French, because they are more looked into by the French people of Quebec than by the people of the other provinces. Be that as it may, if this economy is going to be made in the printing of the report, it ought to be further considered.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The cost of printing and stationery generally, has very much increased over that of two or three years ago. Higher wages are paid to employees, and the cost of paper is very much greater this year than it was twelve months ago. Compared with two years ago I would imagine the increase is at least 100 per cent in some grades of stationery, and more than 100 per cent in other grades. The increase is undoubtedly due to that.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE: I do not know whether this is the time to ask the question, but on this matter of printing, might I ask the acting-minister if the departments are managing their own printing now? Is the Printing Bureau managing its own printing, or is it given out in job work, as it often has been? And, if any printing is given out, I suppose now that we have struck the age of economy and no patronage, the work will be given by tender and contract, and not as a matter of patronage. Possibly this is not the time to make this statement, but I am reminding the minister of it, and I would like to know if the Printing Bureau itself is managing the printing of the Government or is it given to outside parties?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Whether the hon. gentleman has asked this question at the right time or not, I think we have struck the age of economy and no patronage in public expenditure—at least I hope so. I cannot answer the hon. gentleman feeling perhaps that I am wholly accurate, but I think the departmental reports are largely printed at the Printing Bureau. Considerable printing, however, has heretofore been done outside, but I have been informed by the Secretary of State, who has charge of public printing, that he anticipates that hereafter the department will be able to do most, if not all, of the printing required by the several departments of the Government.

Mr. A. R. McMASTER: I hope I will not be regarded as taking an undue liberty if I ask the hon. gentleman on the front benches on both sides to speak louder. They have pleasant little conversations with each other across the Table, but in other parts of the House we are not in the matter at all, and in order to thoroughly understand what is going on, as we would like to do, we must ask hon. gentlemen on both sides to speak louder.

Mr. MURPHY: My hon. friend (Mr. Maclean), in reply to the member for North Cape Breton, remarked that the Government had struck the age of economy and no patronage. Possibly my hon. friend meant that some of his colleagues had struck it so hard that they had knocked it out completely, and restored the old order of patronage, because I can give some instances where the old order still prevails. But that, I admit, would not be particularly germane to these estimates. I merely ask what is the extra clerkship, if it has been filled, and, if so, by whom?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: An additional clerk was added to the third division on the request of the Superintendent of Insurance.

Mr. MURPHY: Has it been filled through the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I should think so.

Mr. MURPHY: Does my hon. friend know?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I have knowledge of one appointment to that division within the last three or four weeks and that was filled by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MURPHY: Is that the one we are discussing?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Yes.

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU: Can the Acting Finance Minister tell me where the Insurance Report was printed last year, whether at the Montreal Gazette office or at the Bureau?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I cannot answer that question.

Mr. JACQUES BUREAU: Can the hon. gentleman tell me where he is going to get it printed this year?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: That report will be printed at the Printing Bureau, if they are at all able to do the work, and, if not, I suppose it will be printed elsewhere.

An hon. MEMBER: At the Toronto Globe?

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE: I would like to ask if the hon. member for Brome is in the House.

Mr. McMASTER: I am here listening.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE: I need not remind hon. gentlemen that this is a new Parliament with a great many new men. Items of expenditure will strike this House now perhaps more vividly and forcibly than at any other time. It is well that it should be brought to its attention that whenever we spend money there must be some good reason for it and hon. members will go home with the impression that this is an honest Opposition whatever the Government may be. There is an item of $6,500 for travelling expenses. Some of my good friends from the province of Ontario who are accustomed to living on the farm would think that a man would do a lot of wandering around for $6,500. Perhaps it would be well for the minister to tell us what good results the Dominion of Canada got for this expenditure of $6,500.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I hope my hon. friend does not assume anything else than that the country received very substantial benefit for any sum paid out in the past for travelling in connection with the superintendence of insurance. I have before me the Auditor General's Report for 1917 and I would gather from it that this amount was required to pay the travelling expenses of officers of the department because they must travel throughout the provinces of Canada inspecting the several insurance companies doing business. My hon. friend will realize that this is absolutely necessary and that it incurs an expenditure.

[Mr. A. K. Maclean.]

We are asking Parliament to vote money for that purpose.

Office of the Auditor General—
Salaries ....$	150,125 00
Contingencies	10,000 00

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: There are two less employees in this branch of the Department of Finance. The increases in salaries to be paid are due to the fact that in the second division, sub-division B, there have been two advances. In the first division and the third division there is a less number required than last year but the result is an increase in salaries of some $3,000. There is an increase in printing and stationery. What I have said in respect to printing and stationery in the other branches of the Department of Finance is equally applicable to this.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand the minister to say that the number of employees has decreased and the salaries increased?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: How is it that in the Auditor General's office they can decrease the number of employees at a time when the expenditure of the country has increased a thousandfold? If I understand rightly our organization, that is the branch of the public service where all our financial arrangements and expenditures are controlled. I see that in the Department of Finance they are increasing the number of employees, whereas, in the Auditor General's office, which has to scrutinize the public expenditures, they are decreasing the number of employees and increasing the salaries. There may be something in increasing the salaries and trying to get more work out of the men, but I do not believe that as the work increases you are going to get more efficient service by saddling half of the staff with the whole of the work and leaving the others out altogether. If your work is going to increase in proportion to the increase in expenditures, I do not understand how there can be a proper audit of the public accounts if you decrease the staff in the way that has been suggested by my hon. friend.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Would the minister state the reason for the falling off in the travelling expenses as between 1917 and 1918? Does that item in 1917 include the expenses of the Auditor General's trip to the old country?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I think that is the explanation.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Did he submit a detailed report of his visit to the old country?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I cannot answer my hon. friend. I imagine he made a report to the department.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I have not seen it.

Mr. CANNON: What is the meaning of the item: "including advice to the Auditor General?"

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The Auditor General occasionally requires the advice of counsel and I assume it is considered quite proper that we should make it possible for the Auditor General to obtain it.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Does he choose his own counsel? He does not have to take the counsel assigned to him by the Department of Finance?

Mr. FIELDING: The very object of this is that he shall have independent counsel if he desires. This is an item that has been in the estimates for many years. In some years I do not think it is used but the object is that if there is a difference of opinion, such as will occasionally arise between the Auditor General and the Government, if he wishes to do so, he may obtain independent counsel. There is nothing new in the item and it is a very useful one.

Mr. BUREAU: I am anxious to know how it is that in the Auditor General's Department, where the work is increasing more than in any other department of the Government, they can afford to dispense with the services of employees. If there is going to be an audit of the expenses of the public treasury we want to know what kind of an audit it is going to be. We want to know what kind of economy it is that diminishes the control over the public expenditure for the sake of a couple of, I suppose, very small salaries.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Do I understand the hon. gentleman to take the view that the number of employees in any department of the Government should not be diminished whether there be reasons for it or not, and that efficiency can only be maintained by retaining the old number in each department? Apparently there is a decrease in the number of employees in this branch, but I assume that the Auditor General is quite prepared to carry on his work efficiently with the decreased staff as well as he could with the staff of last year. I think it might be said that any department could be carried on much more efficiently by a reorganization and decrease in the number of employees. I had rather hoped that my hon. friend would commend the department for assuming to carry on the work of this branch with a lesser number of employees than before.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Would not the reason naturally be that during the war the expenditures in connection with the ordinary departments of Government have fallen off and are now concentrated in the Militia Department?

Mr. BUREAU: Are the accounts of the Militia Department audited by the Auditor General?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I am not personally acquainted with the matter of the auditing of the militia accounts as hon. gentlemen will well understand. I understand that the Militia Department has its own auditing staff, and I assume that its accounts are subject to the control and supervision of the Auditor General. The suggestion is being made at the present time that the auditing staff of the Militia Department be taken over by the Auditor General, and it is now being considered by the Government.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend asked me just now if I thought the efficiency of the department depended upon the number of employees. I do not consider numbers alone, but quality as well. It might be that in other departments you could decrease the number of men just now without affecting the service very much. But what I want to impress upon my hon. friend is that, of all the departments of the Government the one which is most heavily saddled just now on account of the war and of the increased expenditure and the enormous amounts to be vouchered through is the Auditor General's Department, and for the life of me I cannot see how it is that when we were spending 120 millions a year there was a staff the same size as there is to-day, and now when we are spending 300 or 400 millions annually we are going to decrease the number of employees. I do not think the Auditor General can accomplish treble the work by decreasing the number of men at his disposal.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: As I have informed the committee, it will be understood that while the expenditures of the Militia Department are exceedingly great to-day, still they have their departmental audit which, of course, relieves the Auditor General of a great deal of work. A great proportion of the purchases of the Militia Department and of the Naval Department are made by the War Purchasing Commission. In that branch of the service they have something equivalent to an audit, or, at any rate, their system of conducting the purchases for these departments naturally relieves the Auditor General's staff of a great deal of work. I think it is quite possible for the Auditor General to carry on his work with the number of men he has been accustomed to have, namely about 100. He is an officer perfectly independent of any branch of the Government, and if he feels he has not sufficient assistance he knows that he can readily get it by asking Parliament.

Mr. CANNON: Can the hon. minister tell me where the printing for the department was done last year?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: At the Printing Bureau largely.

Mr. CANNON: Not at L'Evénement, at Quebec?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I am not sure as to that. If my hon. friend suspects that there was any done there, or knows that there was, I shall be prepared to accept his statement.

Mr. CANNON: I have no statement to make.

Mr. BUREAU: Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there were auditors in the Militia Department and also in the War Purchasing Commission?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: No, I did not say they had auditors.

Mr. BUREAU: Well, what have they got?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: They have quite a large staff—

Mr. BUREAU: Excepting auditors.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The staff which purchases independently of the departments the necessary commodities for our Canadian army and navy—

Mr. BUREAU: That is not what I want to get at. Who controls the accounts and the amounts that are paid?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Ultimately, they are subject, of course, to an audit by the Auditor General.

Mr. BUREAU: Then the Auditor General is not relieved of any work that my hon. friend claims he is relieved of by having the purchases made outside the department?

[Mr. A. K. Maclean.]

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I would think that if purchases for our army and navy are made by an independent commission, established purely for that purpose, it would tend to lessen the audit work of the Auditor General. I think he should feel, at least, that the purchasing would be less liable to errors and discrepancies of one kind and another.

Mr. BUREAU: What difference is there between the purchases made by an independent commission or purchases made by the Department of Public Works? Will the hon. gentleman insinuate, for instance, that the purchases made by the Minister of Public Works——

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The hon. gentleman cannot get me to insinuate anything.

Mr. BUREAU: Why should my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, who is accountable for his department, and who sits in this House where he can be criticised, be subject to an audit and a man who has no responsibility whatever, who is appointed by Order in Council, so subject? I say that cannot be explained, and I cannot swallow that explanation.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: My hon. friend has been swallowing it for two or three years.

Mr. BUREAU: I left it to you to test, which you did at that time.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I am talking about the matter of auditing. My hon. friend is putting up a man of straw for the pleasure of knocking him down. If my hon. friend wants me to make some insinuation against somebody else——

Mr. BUREAU. No, Mr. Chairman, that is not my way of discussing. I want to get the explanation. I want to know what difference there is between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and these gentlemen who are appointed by Order in Council in the matter of auditing. You want his accounts to be audited, but you do not want Mr. Flavelle's accounts to be audited.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The Minister of Militia, or the Minister of Naval Affairs, is as responsible as any other minister for the expenditure of his department notwithstanding the fact that to some extent purchases are made by the War Purchasing Commission for the two departments mentioned. I cannot quite follow the protest of my hon. friend. If it amounts to anything it is this: that he objects to the Auditor General's Department having ninety-nine persons upon the staff. Does he think it should be 101 or 120? I think he should commend the efforts of the Auditor General to perform his duties with a smaller staff than he had last year.

Mr. BUREAU: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend cannot shift his ground like that. I do not object to the number of men. What I object to is that these gentlemen appointed by the Government, or appointed at the suggestion of the Government, who are not responsible to the people, will buy goods and spend the public money—for, after all, it is our money whether raised by taxation or by Victory Loans; it is the people's money and they have to pay it back —without being subject to the same surveillance as the other members of the Government who are at the head of a department. One of two things is true: either the Auditor General is relieved of a certain amount of work because the purchases made by this Commission are not audited——

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: They are audited.

Mr. BUREAU: If so, where does the the Auditor General's relief come in? His work must increase because the amounts to be audited are increasing. If the Auditor General can do all this work with a smaller staff, we have reason to be suspicious and to have doubts as to whether this work is not being done in too much of a hurry. Either these accounts are audited or they are not. If ten times the number of accounts are being audited to-day than were being handled two or three years ago, I do not see how he can decrease his staff, unless the Auditor General's Department has been a home for loafers in days gone by. I say the country does not get the protection it is entitled to, and the people have not all the safeguards they should have around the expenditure of this money.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Would there be anything in the suggestion that another party was in power a few years ago, and that the Auditor General required more men to do the work?

Mr. BUREAU: I refer to last year.

Sir SAM HUGHES: No, when my hon. friend's party was in power.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: My hon. friend (Mr. Bureau) is labouring under some misapprehension. The payments made by the Government, no matter in what branch, are audited by the Auditor General. While it is true that public expenditures are very much greater this year than in pre-war times, it does not follow that the Auditor General's staff need necessarily be increased to any great extent. It might not require more work to audit an expenditure of a million dollars than one of $100; possibly it might be very much easier, because in connection with military and naval affairs expenditures are made involving large amounts in the aggregate, but nevertheless they are very easily audited and the details of the expenditure very easily and readily acquired.

Mr. BUREAU: There are new items of expenditure.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I assume, that the number of the staff at the Auditor General's Department as now constituted, namely, ninety-nine, is sufficient to audit the public accounts of this country, but if that official needs further assistance I suppose he will make the necessary request. Until he does I do not think any department of the Government will be, or should be, anxious to add more men to his staff.

Mr. BUREAU: Certainly not.

Mr. DEVLIN: In my opinion the Auditor General, Mr. Fraser, should be commended by this House for the way in which he carries out his work. I do not think there has ever been a more competent servant of the country than the present Auditor General.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DEVLIN: He carefully scrutinizes the accounts and he certainly gives entire satisfaction. Any one who goes through the Auditor General's Report will find that whenever there is any doubt as to any items of expenditure the Auditor General is certain to call for vouchers with respect to it. I have listened to the remarks of my hon. friend from Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) and to the answers given by the Minister of Finance, and I think that the point raised by the former is very well taken, and ought to commend itself to the very serious and earnest consideration of my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean). I am sure that though some people's memory may be very short, he at least cannot forget that there was a time in his existence when he was a Reformer. When seated on this side of the House he, in common with others in our ranks, sought to suggest certain reforms to the gentlemen occupying the ministerial benches. To-night he has been advised by another Reformer, (Mr. Bureau) and he meets that advice by the remark: "Oh, well, this has existed three years, and there was no very great criticism about it." What existed two or three years ago was the system of verifying accounts in the different departments. There has been one Auditor General to review the expenditures for Canada, but a system has grown up under which there are too many auditors in the different departments who try to induce the Auditor General to accept their audit and are not willing that he should criticise the audit which they make. That system ought to be abolished, and Mr. Fraser should be given the necessary staff to audit all the accounts, I do not care how many it may take. We learned from an Order in Council laid upon the Table the other day that a staff had been appointed through the introduction of an innovation which will cost the country over $200,000. I refer to the staff of the Food Controller. We have that official expending thousands of dollars upon food control in this country and from that expenditure we have obtained absolutely nothing. There has been some advice to the women of the country and to the grocers and other dealers, and a great deal of advice to Sir Joseph Flavelle and the companies in which he is interested, but there has been absolutely no action taken. That money could very well be saved to this country. I suggest in all good nature to the new Minister of Finance that one of the reforms which he should inaugurate in the present Government is a reform along the lines proposed by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau), viz., to cut out the different auditing systems in the several departments, and place that auditing under the one head, Mr. Fraser. We find, and I am sorry to note it, that the expenditure on civil government for this year is going to cost over $1,000,000 more than it did for the past twelve months. One would almost think that we were going through an absolutely normal period, one would almost forget that we are passing through the most critical period, not only in the history of Canada, but of the Empire. We have been informed by the Finance Minister no later than to-day that we cannot borrow money in the United States or in England, and I know that we are not going to Japan, to the West Indies or to China to try and get it. We have got to raise whatever money we need in this country, and we will do so if the people are in a position to lend whatever money is needed. In view of the prevailing situation it becomes imperative for the new blood in the Cabinet—and there are good and earnest men there—to introduce reforms. Some of the old timber has disappeared, and although some of it is still left, it will disappear.

[Mr. Devlin.]

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE: There is very little left of it to-night.

Mr. DEVLIN: I suggest to the new timber that they should try and save the money of the people of Canada. A glance at these estimates would not disclose that we are in a wartime period. One would imagine that we could go to Washington as often as we liked and continue those trips that Sir Thomas White made for the purpose of getting money. And yet, the present Minister of Finance tells us that we cannot obtain money outside the country. In that case it becomes imperative to save every twenty-five cent piece, and I say this increasing of staffs and multiplication of departments where they are not necessary is an extravagance. I appeal to my hon. friends upon the other side of the House, who for want of a better name I will call the new timber in the Cabinet, to do their utmost to try and get the old members of the Government to forget the old system of expenditure and audit which used to prevail and try and introduce some reforms.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE: On this question it is suggested that the Auditor General does not exercise the same functions or powers as formerly. The ordinary member of the House, such as myself, believes that we have some protection in the Auditor General, that everything in the way of expenditure has to go under his eye, and that he has to be satisfied that it is for a good and sufficiently proper purpose before the money is paid out. If it is the fact that round-about methods have been found by which the vouchers are passed, cheques signed, and the people's money paid out for commodities without undergoing the rigid scrutiny of the Auditor General, we most certainly protest against it. I would like to ask the minister if there were many appeals from the Auditor General this year to the Treasury Board in which the Auditor General was overruled?

Mr. J. D. REID: I am a member of the Treasury Board, and as far as I am concerned I do not recall any such appeals last year.

Mr. McKENZIE: The Minister of Railways understands to what I am referring. He knows that in the past there have been a great many of these appeals in which the Auditor General has been overruled.

Mr. J. D. REID: I do not remember of any such case last year.

Sir SAM HUGHES: The Report of the Auditor General will disclose whether there have been any such appeals or not.

Department of Public Works—
Salaries ....$	574,955 00
Contingencies..	56,000 00

Mr. BUREAU: How does that compare with last year?

Mr. CARVELL: The decrease would be $45,000 but for the statutory increases, which bring it down to about $31,000. In addition, the number of clerks and officials in the department has been reduced from 396 to 350. Among the 350 there are 20 or 21 vacancies which will not be filled. Salaries are provided for in this vote for the 20 or 21 who are not there and who will not be there, but during the year certain officials are entitled to promotion, and if a man is promoted from subdivision B to subdivision A of the second division and there is no provision for his salary in the higher class, he could not receive it. This vote is left in the estimates, therefore, for that purpose. I assure the committee that not one of the positions will be filled except by promotion. About 25 men who are away from the department on military service are drawing full civil pay. These are the men who enlistetd prior to the Order in Council of November or December, 1915. Then, we have made up a list of 62 officials who are available for other departments of the Government.

Mr. BUREAU: Does that mean dismissal?

Mr. CARVELL: No, but they are available for other departments of the Government if their services are required. I see no reason why it would not be possible to absorb these unnecessary officials into other departments which require increased staffs, and it is the intention so to absorb them if at all possible, rather than bring in outside men. There may be a number of these whose services could be dispensed with; some may be old men who would not be acceptable to another department requiring assistance. There are in the department—I think I might as well make the suggestion here, because it has to be faced—probably 20 employees who have outlived their usefulness; men and women who have spent the greater part of their lives in the department and who are not entitled to superannuation or retiring allowance of any kind. Their services are not required; indeed, they are not rendering very much service to the department. It would be cruel to turn them out on the world, and I think that provision should be made for a retiring allowance of some kind to cover employees of this class. We could then get rid of them in the department, save the room which they are occupying, and get along without filling their positions by younger persons. On the whole I am satisfied that we could make a reduction of about 100 officials in the department and do very nicely indeed whatever work may be necessary. Not much work is being done in the department at present, and this very largely accounts for the statement which I have just made. We could however, get along without quite a number that we now have on the pay roll.

Mr. CAHILL: I notice that in the item for printing and stationery there is a saving of $6,000. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works could inform the acting Minister of Finance (Mr. A. K. Maclean) where he expects to get his printing done.

Mr. CARVELL: I have had so many things to think about during the last three or four months that I have not gone into this matter. I only know that my deputy says that he can get along with $11,000 instead of $17,000 and when he tells me that I know he means it. I have no knowledge of where the printing has been done. I do know that the report of the department which I have in my desk—I intended to table it to-day, but I was talking to my colleague when motions were called; I shall lay it on the Table to-morrow—has been very much reduced in size, and that accounts to some extent for the reduction. I cannot give the details now, but I will furnish them to my hon. friend if he so desires. It will be noticed also that there is a large reduction in clerical and other assistance, a reduction of $14,000 in travelling expenses, and a small reduction in sundries. The expenditure for contingencies is reduced from $85,000 to $56,000. I am satisfied that we can keep within the amount asked for in this vote.

Mr. LEMIEUX: We have seen in the press of late that Mr. Horwood has been given leave of absence. Is that a temporary or a permanent leave of absence, and if Mr. Horwood has resigned, on what ground did he do so?

Mr. CARVELL: Mr. Horwood's leave of absence is permanent.

Mr. BUREAU: The minister has said that 62 officials are available for other departments. At Three Rivers there is a resident engineer and also a district or consulting engineer. In the Public Works office at that point there is a staff of five or six and I understood when I left home that there was great anxiety among them.

It was reported to me, not that they were to be transferred to other departments, but that they were to have the same fate as Mr. Horwood; leave of absence, the permanency of which would be confirmed. Is there ground for such a fear on the part of these men, and if so are they to be available for other departments, or will their services be entirely dispensed with?

Mr. CARVELL: The 62 officials to whom I referred are in the inside service at Ottawa; the list has no reference to persons in the outside service. I have not yet been able to make up a list of the officials outside of Ottawa whose services can be dispensed with, either temporarily or permanently. I can assure my hon. friend that the number is very large. I will endeavour to transfer these officials from one part of Canada to another in order to find employment for them where it is possible. I may as well say that it is my opinion that I shall be unable to find employment for a great many of these men. I regret it exceedingly; I realize that it is a hardship, but on account of the reduction of business in the department I see nothing to do but to ask them to obtain employment in some other capacity.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Are many of these men fit for overseas service?

Mr. CARVELL: I really could not answer the question. I should imagine that—in fact, so far as I know, every man who comes within the Military Service Act has been drafted. I know some of them have. The great majority of these men are middle-aged men, and I again state I am very sorry to have to make the announcement. There are many good men throughout the Dominion, most of them in the engineering and architectural branches of the department whose services are simply not required, and I have hesitated to relieve them permanently. I am getting reports from every engineering district in Canada; in fact, I have them in most cases. I find that the chiefs of the engineering departments are as reluctant as I am to make recommendations dispensing with the services of those men, but nevertheless that must be done, and while it may be a hardship, I see nothing to do but to do business on business principles.

Mr. BUREAU: This answer was elicited by my question having special reference to Three Rivers. I may tell my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Militia (Sir Sam Hughes) that so far as Three Rivers is concerned, the six or seven engineers, into whose souls the fear of God has entered and, perhaps a little more, the fear of losing their situation, are all married men and fathers.

Mr. MURPHY: Has the Minister of Public Works appointed a successor to Mr. Horwood?

Mr. CARVELL: No successor has as yet been appointed.

Mr. MURPHY: Does the minister intend to appoint a successor?

Mr. CARVELL: I should imagine we could not get along very well in the Public Works Department without a chief architect.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Then I would say: Let Mr. Ewart come back, and be chief architect. He has always been a very honest and efficent official, and I do not know why he was put out of the department under the late Administration. Mr. Ewart is quite able to fill the position to the satisfaction of the public.

Mr. CARVELL: I think my hon. friend will allow me to say that Mr. Ewart has no warmer admirer in Canada than myself. I have known Mr. Ewart since I first became a member of Parliament. I know that he is a man of the highest integrity and possessed of the greatest ability. Mr. Ewart, is seventy-seven years of age and he now occupies a very responsible position as consulting architect on the new Parliament Buildings. I do not think—I do not want to state any question of policy—Mr. Ewart would consider the position for a moment, and possibly it would not be fair to ask a man of his advanced age to assume the duties of chief architect of the Department of Public Works, in view of the very important work which he is now performing.

Mr. BUREAU: Last year the Minister of Railways and Canals was Acting Minister of Public Works when we passed the estimates. There was an item of $4,000 for an architect. If I remember aright, we were told at that time that the item was for salary for one Mr. Wright, and for once during that session there was unanimous praise and unanimous consent on both sides of the House that Mr. Wright should get the appointment and salary. We all knew Mr. Wright very well. The Minister of Railways and Canals, as has usually happened, quietly swam away from the question and said he could not promise anything; that he was not Minister of Public Works; that he was only acting; but he led us to believe that Mr. Wright was in his mind at the time and had been in the mind of the Minister of Public Works, and the impression was conveyed that he was to get the appointment. May I ask the minister if the same amount is being re-voted, and if there has been any switch to this appointment of Mr. Wright?

Mr. CARVELL: I am not a mind reader; much less would I try to read the mind of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. BUREAU: Especially a year ago.

Mr. CARVELL: I think I have a recollection of the incident to which my hon. friend refers. I have always been a fairly close attender on the sessions of the House, and I can only say that Mr. Wright has been in the service of the Government down to the present time in another capacity. He has been either architect or consulting architect of some kind in connection with the Union station that is now being erected in Toronto. It seems that a certain percentage of that station is being paid for and looked after by the Federal Government to be used in connection with federal purposes, and Mr. Wright has been employed in the capacity of architect. Mr. Wright is now back in Ottawa in the office of the chief architect, and I think I can assure my hon. friend that the country will not lose the services of Mr. Wright.

Mr. McKENZIE: Perhaps we shall be asking the Minister of Public Works to take us too much into his confidence if we ask him how he proposes dealing with the outside service of his department. It is not very large, but there is considerable outside work in connection with the Department of Public Works. Now that patronage is dispensed with and members have nothing more to say about who shall be appointed as inspector of a breakwater, or inspector of a wharf, or inspector of any other work that will be going on outside, the minister would, perhaps, be getting clear of questions if he would tell us once and for all how he proposes dealing with the outside service, who shall be his agents in order to obtain the service he must have in connection with outside work, and, in short, what method of operation he is going to substitute for the old fashioned way of patronage?

Mr. CARVELL: The answer is very simple. Immediately on assuming the duties of this office, I invariably ask the engineers of the different districts or the chief government officials of the departments interested to make recommendations to all such positions as those to which my hon. friend has referred. That method was continued for a few months. If my hon. friend will read the Order in Council tabled a few days ago regarding the duties of the Civil Service Commission, he will find that so far as all employees of every class and distinction are concerned, they must be appointed by the Civil Service Commission. Some of the positions require an examination. In the case of temporary employees and ordinary workmen, which class would include the foremen to whom my hon. friend refers, such appointments are made by the recognized agent of Government—I think those are the words of the Order in Council. I think the names must be sent within thirty days to the Civil Service Commission, who have the right to confirm the appointment. The net result of the transaction will be that the district engineers, so far as the engineering department is concerned, or the superintendent of buildings —I think there is such an official in most of the provinces—will have the right of appointment of the class of officials of which my hon. friend has spoken, subject to the confirmation of the Civil Service Commission. That is the manner in which these people will be appointed.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does that apply to ordinary labourers?

Mr. CARVELL: Yes. The Order in Council says: All temporary employees. That takes in foremen of works, all persons except those who would come strictly within the Civil Service; that is the class of officials who would require to stand the competitive examination, from a list of which persons the appointments would be made.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE: In connection with the engineers, I would like to bring a matter to the notice of the minister. We have in the Maritime Provinces a great many public wharves, breakwaters and structures of that kind, on which a great deal of money has been expended, and these structures are very useful to the public. Repairs to those structures and wharves generally—almost always—awaited a report from the member. The member for the county would report to the engineer, or to the minister, that such and such a place required some expenditure. Very often that is neglected, and very often no attention is paid to the recommendation the member might make. It might be thought he was looking for patronage or the expenditure of money in his county. I would like the minister to make his engineers responsible for the upkeep of those structures. There are hundreds of thousands of dollars lost by reason of the fact that those structures are allowed to fall into decay and not properly looked after, and if the engineer is made responsible for the condition of those works he will be called upon to say what repairs are required, look after them, report them and have the work done, and prevent such waste as I have mentioned, and the responsibility of reporting as to what may be required for improvements of that kind would not be thrown upon the member.

Mr. CARVELL: This is the first time I have ever heard the engineers criticised for not submitting reports to the department. I have not had time to read them all, I have tried to study up the items to some extent in preparing the estimates as printed. I think I am safe in saying that if I had incorporated in these estimates all the reports that have come from the engineers as to works that would be reasonably necessary I would have had a great many million dollars in the estimates that are not there to-day. I am always glad to have the advice of members as to necessary public works in their constituencies. I have tried to listen to every hon. gentleman who has had a suggestion to make, although, I am sorry to say, during the last week I have not been able to find time for all who wished to see me, but in the future I will be only too happy to listen to the recommendations of any member of the House. I want to assure members, however, that after I receive their recommendations I shall invariably ask the engineer for a report. I have sent out to all engineers in Canada a circular letter informing them that when I ask for information I want facts, and we will draw the conclusions in the office, and I intend to act upon those recommendations just as far as it is possible to do so.

This raises the question which I might as well discuss for a moment. Under the present financial conditions, as I view them, it is simply impossible to obtain money to be expended on public works that can be allowed to stand for two or three years. I dislike turning down a request for a public work in any portion of Canada, as much as any man who ever occupied this position. I would like to be able to go on and build. I think I could build in a fairly economical manner, but until such time as the financial condition of the country is different from to-day I do not feel justified in spending money on any public work that is not actually necessary. And, unless I change my mind very much, I do not think I will spend very much money during this year or next, except on the class of work I refer to. I realize that very nice questions arise as to what is necessarily a public work, and possibly there might be a very sharp distinction between my definition of the term and the definition suggested by other people in Canada. When that occasion arises we will have to apply to the engineers and exercise the very best business principles which we are able to command, and I want to assure the House that any decisions at which we arrive will certainly be along business principles, and also in accordance with the policy of not spending one dollar which the public service of this country can get along fairly efficiently without spending.

Mr. McKENZIE: The minister did not hear me, or else he misunderstood what I said. I did not suggest for one minute that, as far as I was concerned, I was asking for any new public work.

Mr. CARVELL: I certainly did not intend to insinuate such a thing, and do not know why my hon. friend should have taken such an inference from my remarks.

Mr. McKENZIE: I refer to works which have been constructed which are allowed to fall into decay because they are not looked after. I find in my county that engineers expected me to report to them, or expected me to report to the department where repairs were necessary, and then the department would ask them to make a report. That has been the practice in my part of the country. Somebody would tell me a wharf was out of repair, perhaps the end was out of it, the ballast was falling out, and the wharf was going to pieces generally. I would report that to the minister, and he would ask the engineer to report on it. That was a roundabout way, causing delay and loss. I am saying to the minister that the responsibility of seeing those works are kept in proper condition should be on the engineer, and that means that he should acquire that knowledge and look after that. I did not refer necessarily to any new public work.

Mr. CARVELL: I think, on reflection, I did not answer that branch of my hon. friend's question. I quite agree with him that the duty should be placed upon the engineer in charge to make the necessary recommendation to the department, and to see that the public works are kept in as reasonable a state of repair as possible, and it is certainly my intention in future to see that the engineers acquaint themselves with the conditions in their respective districts and keep the department properly advised.

Mr. FIELDING: I would cordially commend the decision of the minister with respect to new works, and, for that matter, with respect to old works, if they are not of an urgent character. I notice in the estimates quite a number of items for repairs. I take it for granted they are necessary and proper. I would not like to assume that only those mentioned in the estimates are in need of repair. I think if my hon. friend will inquire of the engineers in the different parts of the country he will find there are many items which should be dealt with in the supplementary estimates. If I could think my hon. friend had them in mind, I should be quite content, but I should not like to assume for a moment that in the section of the country from which I come this list represents all repairs needed. I hope my hon. friend will ask the engineers of the district to report, not in regard to the ordinary repairs, but with regard to those really urgent, to prevent the works going into decay. I trust when the supplementary estimates come down works of that character will be provided for.

Mr. CARVELL: This is a new phase of the question to me. I have never heard it presented in this way before. I have had some experience on both sides of the House, and I have myself occasionally, I think, if I remember correctly, criticised over expenditures. I have not been in the habit, however, of inviting the Government to go on and make additional expenditures. Therefore, this is really a new situation to me. Notwithstanding the very earnest appeal made by the hon. member for Queens and Shelburne, I think if very high hopes are being built upon a long list of supplementaries, there are some disappointments in store for hon. members, because we have combed these items pretty carefully. We have reports from engineers as to requirements, and, as I said a little while ago, if we had to comply with all the requirements of the different engineers these estimates would contain a great many more millions, and while I do not say there will be no supplementaries, yet I do not want to hold out any alluring hopes that the list will be extensive.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not desire a long list of supplementary estimates. If we had such a list I should feel at liberty to criticise them, but I want to follow the line taken by the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton and Victoria in regard to the maintenance of works already in existence. I would stand with the hon. minister in respect of new works. I think new works almost of every kind might properly be postponed for the present, and I certainly would not ask my hon. friend to undertake to build any new works, unless the circumstances were extraordinary, and I do not anticipate that, but I know all over the country works are going into decay, and I have a shrewd suspicion that the main list which the hon. gentleman has in his estimates by no means covers the cases of the urgent and necessary repairs.

All I suggest is that my hon. friend shall obtain reports from the engineers. I do not want him to obtain them from the member for the county. I am not so familiar with the scheme which the hon. member for North Cape Breton suggests, but I think that in better days—and this is a policy which the Government might resume—we did not allow a member to dictate what was going to be done. We want the present Government to obtain from engineers and responsible officers in different parts of the country reports as to what repairs are necessary in order that the work already done may not go to decay. If it be a wasteful work, if it is a work that should never have been constructed, let it go to decay, but if it is a useful work, let us try to keep it alive.

Mr. CARVELL: I have not gone over these estimates very accurately, but I think hon. gentlemen will find that there are general votes in practically all the estimates which can be used for necessary repairs to works of a small nature. That is the reason these votes are put in. If there are any places, such as have been referred to by the two hon. members from constituencies in Nova Scotia, where repairs are necessary, I will be very glad if they will give me the details.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Get the engineers to give the details.

Mr. CARVELL: I will get the engineers to give the details too. We have reports from nearly every engineer in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING: Of recent date?

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, within the last four or five months they have all made reports.

Mr. FIELDING: The reports upon which estimates are prepared are generally sent in quite a considerable time before the estimates are made up and by the time the estimates reach the House very often there are later and other works which need attention. That has been my experience in the past.

Mr. CARVELL. I would be only too happy to give the matter my very best consideration, but I still think that provision has been made in these estimates for all really necessary repairs to public works.

Mr. PARENT: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) referred this afternoon to the St. Charles River works at Quebec. These works have cost up to date about $1,300,000 although they are not in a very advanced state. It is currently rumoured in the streets that if these works are not attended to right away they are bound to fall into a very bad condition with the result that the country will lose a very large amount of money. I would like my hon. friend to attend to this matter. I would suggest that he ask for a special report on these works. Probably he can find some means of getting the money through supplementary estimates, to provide for the carrying on of these works.

Mr. CARVELL: While these do not come under the civil list, I would be very glad to answer the hon. member (Mr. Parent) or any other hon. member, with regard to any public works in Canada. I did not personally visit the St. Charles River works but I have no hesitation in saying that the St. Charles River development works, if that is the proper name, are not essential public works in Canada to-day. The work at that point was discontinued advisedly but every precaution has been taken to see that there shall be no deterioration in the portion of the work that has been constructed. We attempted to effect a settlement with the contractors. The larger portion of the money due them, including the deposit and drawback, has been returned to them. The balance is ready for them at any time. They are asking to be paid a certain amount of money on account of the closing down of the works. That is a matter under negotiation by the department and therefore I would not be justified in discussing the details of it.

Mr. FONTAINE (translation): Mr. Chairman, will the minister state whether provision is made in the estimates of the Public Works Department for repairs to the bridge called the Chaudière bridge, between Hull and Ottawa. That bridge is in very bad condition. Care must be taken not to allow too heavy loads to be carried over it, and automobiles must reduce their speed to five miles an hour when crossing over it. I should like to know whether an item has been put in the estimates for repairs to that bridge. It seems to me that such a work would come within the scope of urgent public works.

Mr. CARVELL: In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Fontaine) I may say that he will find on page 73 of the estimates an item of $120,000 for a new bridge to replace the present Union bridge over the Ottawa river between Ottawa and Hull. That was voted in 1917-18. My hon. friend will see that the same amount is in the estimates to-day as a revote. I am not in a position to state to him exactly what the department will do about this very important matter but for fear that there should be any misunderstanding about my attitude at least I want to say that I never could see by what reason the Dominion of Canada should build a bridge for the people of Ottawa and Hull across the Chaudiere falls. There may be some reason for it. Possibly there may have been some old arrangement; I do not think there was an agreement. I have been trying to investigate the matter. I can say to my hon. friend that negotiations are now under way between the Public Works Department and the provinces of Quebec and Ontario by which I hope provisions may be made for the reconstruction of this bridge. These negotiations have reached pretty nearly the concluding point. Perhaps it would not be quite proper that I should state what they are until the matter is finally settled, but I have very strong reasons for believing that an arrangement will be made by which the bridge will be constructed, but not entirely at the expense of the Federal Government.

Mr. McKENZIE: Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN: I beg to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that we are wandering very far away from the item under discussion. I did not want to interrupt the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Fontaine) the first time he arose to speak in this House, but in spite of the good will of the hon. the Minister of Public Works I think I must courteously draw his attention to the fact that the item under consideration is salaries in the department and that we should not wander any further away from this item at the present time.

Mr. McKENZIE: I was not wandering because I had not begun to speak.

The CHAIRMAN: I did not mention the hon. member (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. McKENZIE: When I wander it will be time enough for the Chairman to call me to order. I was just saying to the minister, just to finish this wandering, that I understand it is a sort of conventional understanding in Canada that all interprovincial bridges are built, or at least assisted, by the Federal Government. I always thought that was the practice.

Sir SAM HUGHES: In connection with the letting out of a number of the officers of the department, engineers and officers of one class and another, which the minister has referred to, might I make a suggestion? We have a new department, that of Immigration and Colonization. At the conclusion of the war there will be scope for measures of a great deal of usefulness to that department. From one end of the Dominion to the other there will be need for the building of roads, for the construction of railways, for systems of drainage, to open up the new parts of the Dominion in order to carry on the necessary works in connection with colonization, upon which these officers could be employed. I should like to make this suggestion to the new Minister of Colonization.

Mr. CARVELL: I accept that suggestion as being a very wise one. I may tell the hon. gentleman that a committee of the Government was formed something over two weeks ago which is now investigating the conditions of the Civil Service in all the different departments with the object in view of ascertaining how many officers, both in the Inside and Outside Services, will be available for just such work as my hon. friend has referred to.

Mr. COPP: My hon. friend referred to an Order in Council that had been passed some time ago in regard to appointments to the Outside Service, an order which must commend itself to every member of this House. Does that order refer only to his own department or to all departments of the Government?

Mr. CARVELL: To all departments of the Government.

Mr. COPP: Will postmasters have to pass examinations?

Mr. CARVELL: It means that postmasters will have to be appointed by the Civil Service Commission. I do not know what kind of an examination will be required. It does not necessarily mean an educational test, but an examination of fitness and character; and, I would say among all other things, the location of his place of residence or shop or whatever it may be. It will be an examination in order to see that he is properly qualified for the position.

Mr. COPP: In every particular.

Mr. CARVELL: I hope so.

An hon. MEMBER: He would not have to be a man of letters, I suppose?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. CARVELL: If he can read the postcards, I suppose he will be satisfactory.

Department of External Affairs—
Salaries ....$ 49,137 50
Contingencies.. .... 15,500 00

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The increase is due to the fact that a portion of the staff has been transferred to the Department of External Affairs from the Privy Council on account of the Prime Minister becoming Minister of External Affairs and relinquishing his position as President of the Privy Council.

Mr. CANNON: Will Sir Joseph Pope be the head of the department?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: As he is now?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes.

Mr. MURPHY: There is an increase in the third division, sub-division A.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That increase is due to the transfer of a portion of the staff from the Privy Council to the External Affairs. When I went over to the Department of External Affairs I took them with me.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does the Department of External Affairs publish an annual report?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Yes.

Department of Railways and Canals—Salaries, including Assistant to Minister at $5,000; Solicitor at $5,000; Inspecting Engineer at $4,000; Chief Auditor at $2,800; Assistant Engineer at $2,800; C. E. Stevens at $2,100; R. Dorman at $1,800; J. H. Arthurs at $,600—$203,112.50—Contingencies—$28,000.

Mr. J. D. REID: In the details of this estimate, which appear on page 29, you will see that there is an increase to the assistant to the minister, Mr. Graham Bell, from $4,500 to $5,000. There is also an increase to the Solicitor, Mr. Fairweather, from $4,500 to $5,000. In the first division, sub-division A, it would appear that there is an increase in the number of officials from 13 to 16. This does not really mean that we are increasing our staff. We are bringing in from the Outide Service Mr. Alexander Ferguson as Inspecting Engineer at the same salary that he has been receiving. Then Mr. F. M. MacLellan, the Chief Auditor, is being promoted from the second division sub-division A. We are making provision in that class for a private secretary.

Mr. LEMIEUX: A private secretary to whom?

Mr. J. D. REID: To the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What became of Mr. Yates?

Mr. J. D. REID: Mr. Yates is still in that class, although he is doing work in the Privy Council.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He is a very excellent official.

Mr. J. D. REID: A splendid official.

Mr. McKENZIE: Will the private secretary have to pass the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. J. D. REID: No. In the first division, sub-division B, two additions are being made. They are Mr. R. H. Lang, Assistant Accountant, who was promoted, and Mr. C. E. Stevens, who has been brought in from the outside service.

Mr. MICHAUD: Is Mr. Stevens located at Moncton?

Mr. REID: I cannot say at the moment. In the second division, subdivision A, we are promoting Mr. R. Dorman from $1,600 in subdivision B to $1,800 in subdivision A, and we are transferring Mr. J. H. Arthurs, auditor, from the Outside Service to the Inside Service. In second division B, there are three vacancies which will not be filled, and in the third division A we are dropping one appointment. While it might appear that we have one more official on the list than last year, the staff is not really being increased; we are transferring some of our men from the Outside to the Inside Service.

Mr. CANNON: Does this item include the staff working on the construction of telephones?

Mr. REID: No.

Mr. CANNON: Does not the minister's department look after the construction of the telephones?

Mr. REID: No, the Department of Public Works.

Mr. McMASTER: Is the $500 increase to the assistant to the minister a statutory one?

Mr. REID: No.

Mr. McMASTER: Is the increase of $500 to the solicitor statutory?

Mr. REID: No.

Department of Customs—
Salaries ....$	361,775 00
Contingencies..	25,000 00

Mr. SIFTON: These are practically all statutory increases with the exception of one.

Mr. MURPHY: What is the one in question? Is it a new position?

Mr. SIFTON: It has reference to my private secretary.

Mr. McMASTER: Is the minister in a position to tell us what amount was collected through Customs last year in comparison with the year before, so that we can see what ratio of expense it took to collect the revenue that was collected by the department?

Mr. SIFTON: The amount collected was considerably larger, and the estimates amount to exactly the same.

Department of Naval Service—
Salaries ....$	208,850 00
Contingencies..	50,000 00

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The number of employees in the Naval Service is 139, an increase of six over the number provided for in 1917-18. The increase is to provide for the appointment first, of an officer in charge of the Western Division of Fisheries, and five extra stenographers; all, of course, subject to the approval of the Civil Service Commission. The others are the usual votes.

Mr. MURPHY: There are five increases in the first division, subdivision B. Will the minister explain what they are?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There is an appropriation for the appointment of an assistant to the Superintendent of Fisheries, and two promotions in the tidal service, two in the Accounts Branch, and one in the Fisheries Branch.

Mr. CANNON: What does the item of $50,000 for contingencies cover?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: This item is the same as last year and covers all items of office expenses, travelling expenses, stationery, printing, telegraph and telephone calls, and also any temporary clerks that are needed.

Mr. McKENZIE: I notice for the first time a new title, that of Deputy Minister and Controller. Will the minister please tell us what is meant by controller? What does he control?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry that I cannot inform the hon. member what that means. But I presume the deputy minister has always been designated as Deputy Minister and Controller of the Naval Service.

Mr. McKENZIE: The title may have been there before, but I have never noticed it.

Mr. CANNON: Last year the employees of the Marine Department were subject to the recommendations of a committee, entitled, The Conservative Committee of Patronage. Has the minister received of late any recommendations from that committee, and if so, have the recommendations been considered?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am very glad to inform the hon. member that I have received no such recommendations, and if I had I certainly would not pay the least attention to them. While I have the honour of being Minister of Marine and Fisheries and of the Naval Service, I am going to administer this important portfolio to the best of my ability, and I do not intend to recognize any patronage committees at all.

Mr. CANNON: I congratulate the minister upon that decision. We are evidently going to witness a change for the better.

Mr. POWER: Will the same principle apply to dismissals?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Certainly.

Department of Inland Revenue—
Salaries ....$	190,025 00
Contingencies	28,000 00

Mr. SIFTON: There is a small decrease in the number of clerks; 123 last year, and we are voting now for only 120.

Mr. BUREAU: We have seen in the papers that the Department of Inland Revenue is to be merged in the Department of Customs. The member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) some time ago asked a question in the House in regard to this matter and the Prime Minister replied that he would make a statement shortly. Before we vote any moneys under the head of Inland Revenue we should know exactly what is proposed to be done with that department. If it is to be merged with the Department of Customs, the committee should be informed what branch of the latter department will handle the work heretofore done by the Department of Inland Revenue.

Mr. SIFTON: I am sorry that I cannot give full information, but I will give the hon. gentleman all that I have. At present I am acting-Minister of Inland Revenue. Nothing further than that has yet been done. There is a Bill before the House in connection with changes in departments, and if Parliament passes that Bill, possibly something may be done along the line of merging the two departments. If there is a merging, it will be of the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments.

Mr. BUREAU: The Bill before the House does not give much information. If it is the Bill that I have seen—and I suppose it is the Bill to which my hon. friend refers—the Governor in Council is given power to transfer one department to another or to make any change without the House having any knowledge of it and without Parliament first passing upon it. If the two departments are merged, does it mean that they will keep their identity while under one minister? Will the work of the deputy ministers be done by only one deputy minister? We now have the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, and the Commissioner of Customs, which corresponds to the position of deputy minister. Surely the Bill which is before the House has not been introduced without some action being thought of or contemplated. There must be some plan in the mind of the minister or of the Government as to what change is to be made and how the merger is to be effected. I should like the details with regard to these points; they would help a good deal when the Bill to which my hon. friend has referred comes before the House. Before I agree to give the Government the right to form a department or to change, combine, or create new departments, I want to know exactly what these new departments are going to be. Heretofore all new departments have been created by the legislative power which at the time of the enactment knew what the authority of the department was to be, the scope of its activities, the officials to comprise it, and so on.

Mr. SIFTON: I am sorry that it will not be possible to give an absolutely definite statement to-night as to what may happen with regard to a suggested union of two departments which it has not yet been decided to unite. I would think that after the passing of the Bill would be quite time enough to decide what officials in connection with the two departments would be necessary. So far as the Inside Service of these departments is concerned, I would say that it would be largely necessary to carry them on separately. They are distinct and separate classes of work, and, at this point at least, would have to be looked after by different classes of men. In a large number of places outside of Ottawa, particularly in small districts, it might be possible to unite the work almost completely and to effect a considerable saving, or at least to secure greater efficiency by opening additional offices for the accommodation of the public with the same expenditure. Very large economies could be made in some places in Canada and a better class of work done by the officials of both departments. If the amalgamation proceeds, it is along that line that the economies will take place and more satisfactory work in the interest of the community be done.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Will there be a private secretary in each department if the two departments are amalgamated?

Mr. SIFTON: If the two departments are under one minister I would not think it essential, but he would be apt to work at something else.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Who is the private secretary at present?

Mr. SIFTON: I have no idea.

Mr. CANNON: I was told this afternoon that the private secretary of the Minister of Inland Revenue was a gentleman by the name of Chasse, who receives a salary of $2,700. How can he draw a salary of $2,700? In the estimates of last year only $600 was voted for this purpose.

Mr. SIFTON: A private secretary enters the department in one of the subdivisions of the Inside Service, and the $600 is voted separately and added to his salary so long as he remains private secretary. If his salary is $2,700, $2,100 is voted in one of these divisions and $600 as private secretary. If he ceases to be private secretary he goes back to the other division at $2,100 and loses the $600.

Mr. CANNON: He would be occupying two positions for which he would be receiving $2,700, $600 as private secretary and $2,100 for his work in the department?

Mr. SIFTON: No, he would be voted $2,100 plus $600, but he would not be doing any work in the division while he was occupying his position as private secretary.

Mr. CANNON: Who is head of the department now?

Mr. SIFTON: Temporarily, I am.

[Mr. Sifton.]

Mr. CANNON: The former minister is on leave?

Mr. SIFTON: I am not aware of that; I was appointed acting minister.

Mr. CANNON: Has he been given permanent leave?

Mr. SIFTON: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BUREAU: The minister, in speaking about the changes that are to be made in the department, says he is not exactly aware what changes are to take place. The minister says: When we get authority to do the thing, then we shall see what we shall do. My contention is that the minister should tell us what he is going to do before we decide whether we shall give the authority to do it or not. That is where the cleavage comes in between the minister and myself. I claim that the House of Commons ought to know exactly what it is legislating on. If changes are required to be made in the department, and we are to be asked to authorize those changes, we should know what things we are voting before we vote, and before we agree to this Bill, we ought to know exactly what the Bill means and what it is intended for. That is where the minister and I do not exactly agree.

Mr. SIFTON: I would not like to disagree with the hon. member at all. My contention in regard to this was that it had nothing to do with these estimates, and that when the Prime Minister brought up the Bill and asked the House of Commons to pass it, then would be the proper time to find out what he meant by it. I have no doubt he will be able to give the House full information as to what it is for and what he would like to have done under it, but this has nothing at all to do with the salaries of the Inland Revenue Department, upon which, as far as is possible, I am willing to give all the information, and I am also willing to give information in regard to anything else that I know, but I cannot give any information in regard to what somebody else knows.

Mr. BUREAU: I thought the proper man to apply to was the minister who was at the head of or to be at the head of the particular department.

Mr. SIFTON: The Prime Minister settles that.

Mr. BUREAU: The question is now that there is going to be a merger of two departments, and my hon. friend, being acting minister of one and minister of the other, ought certainly to be the man whom the Prime Minister would consult if any changes were to be made.

Mr. SIFTON: Possibly he will do so.

Mr. BUREAU: The Prime Minister would also probably accept the suggestions and recommendations of this particular head, because I suppose the Prime Minister has enough to do without being the active administrative head of each department of the service. I do not want to get into the confidence of the minister or to have him betray any secrets; but if this merger is going to take place under the authority of Parliament, I want to warn the minister if he is called upon to give any information, we shall endeavour to the best of our ability to exact this information from him if this Bill is going to be utilized to merge the Department of Inland Revenue with the Department of Customs.

Mr. McKENZIE: Perhaps at a later stage I shall ask the minister about this matter that I wish to speak about. I know of my own knowledge that in my constituency two preventive officers in the Inland Revenue Department have been dismissed. I have not been able to ascertain why they have been dismissed, but I was told by a very reputable gentleman from a part of the country where one of the officials was dismissed that since the dismissal illicit stills have sprung up in that place and a very undesirable condition has arisen.

Mr. CARVELL: In Cape Breton?

Mr. McKENZIE: I did not mention any place.

Mr. CARVELL: I should hope not.

Mr. McKENZIE: On the general principle that everything of a live nature is going on in Cape Breton, perhaps the hon. gentleman is right. I wish most seriously to call the attention of the minister to the matter. This officer was keeping down this sort of thing. The place is in an out-of-the-way part of the country, and I am told by this gentleman, who is the parish priest in this place, that the moment this man was dismissed, old troubles began, old stills were started up in the woods, and a condition of things brought about that is highly undesirable. I would ask the minister to inquire from his deputy in that department why those men were dismissed, and if it is his intention to keep some supervision over those districts by making other appointments.

Mr. SIFTON: Will the hon. gentleman tell me the names of those men?

Mr. McKENZIE: The man who was dismissed from the locality to which I referred was Donald McLellan. The name of the other man was John J. McKinnon, who was preventive officer in a part of the country quite distant from where Mr. McLellan is officiating. The part of the country where the trouble has arisen is where Mr. McLellan was officiating.

Mr. CANNON: The other day I asked the Prime Minister whether the two departments of Customs and Inland Revenue were to be merged, and the Prime Minister replied that in a few days he would give out a statement in regard to the matter. If such is the case, I do not think it is fair for the Government to ask the Opposition to vote this special item before the statement is given. Who is to administer this money? Who is to be responsible to the people? Who is to be responsible to the members of Parliament? We do not know. I do not think there is any haste or hurry. Why not delay the item until the statement is given? Then we shall be in a better position to judge if the money is put into proper hands.

Civil Government—Department of Agriculture—
Salaries and contingencies....$ 633,850 00

Mr. CRERAR: The increase in salaries is due to the usual statutory increases. The other items remain the same as they were last year.

Mr. CANNON: Would the minister say if there is a gentleman whose occupation is that of distributing bulls throughout the Dominion? Maybe the minister is not aware of this special matter, but last year there was quite a discussion in this House on a most interesting subject, that of cattle distributed freely throughout the county of Dorchester, then represented by a minister in Sir Robert Borden's Cabinet. I would be very much interested, as being the successor of this hon. minister and also as residing in the same county, to know the name of the gentleman who made the distribution last year, what was his salary and how many bulls he distributed.

Mr. CRERAR: I regret that I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information he desires. I can assure him, however, that the item, if there is such an item, is not included in this list.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—
Salaries, including transfer of F. A. Willsher at $2,200, and of G. L. MacLaren and T. F. Murdock at $1,450 each $224,500 00
Contingencies.. .... 31,000 00

Mr. BUREAU. May I ask for an explanation about the transfer of Mr. Willsher and Mr. Murdock? Are they transferred from one branch to another?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: These three employees have been transferred from the Marine and Fisheries Department at Prescott to Ottawa, and we particularly need the services of these men now in connection with our shipping programme. They are expert draftsmen.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does the principle apply to the department as regards the outside service, that all appointments will be made under the Civil Service Commission? I understand that the Harbour Commission of Montreal and the Harbour Commission of Quebec have certain appointments to make. Are these appointments subject to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No. The Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and Quebec have full jurisdiction in these matters.

Mr. LEMIEUX: They retain their own standing?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Just as in the past.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand the position of Harbour Master of Quebec is vacant. I do not know if any recommendation has been made to the department through the Commission in Quebec, but, if none has been made, I would be pleased to recommend to my hon. friend the name of Capt. Bernier, the gentleman who has done so much for Canada, who has discovered new lands and planted the British flag in the northern regions of Baffin's Bay. I simply throw out the suggestion to my hon. friend.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No representation or recommendation has been made by the Harbour Commission of Quebec, but when it is made I shall be most happy to take into consideration what the hon. member has said with regard to Capt. Bernier.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I will not take the matter up to-night, but I suggest to the hon. minister that, on some future occasion, he should take the House into his confidence in regard to the shipbuilding industry in Canada, and also in regard to the question of transhipping of fish in frozen compartments overseas.

Mr. McKENZIE: I wish to bring to the notice of the minister that he has two deputies in his department, one in the Department of Naval Affairs and the other in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I observe that one of those deputies receives $5,000 and the other $6,000. I observe in the estimates the items of the Department of Agriculture appear on page 26 and items of the Department of Marine and Fisheries on page 27. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture gets $6,000, and the able and efficient Deputy of Marine and Fisheries receives $5,000. I should like to know from the minister why there is such a striking difference between those two men. I venture to think there is not a more efficient deputy in the whole outfit than the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I cannot see why he should not be getting $6,000 as well as any other deputy in the department.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Include the Deputy Minister of Militia also. I should like to say a word for the Deputy Minister of Militia. He is an excellent officer, and has worked for many years at a salary of $5,000. I have always been endeavouring to have his salary increased to $6,000, but have never succeeded.

Mr. McKENZIE: I should suggest to the ex-Minister of Militia and Defence that he will only get the crown of life by persisting to the end, and I should like to tell him to continue to persist until the deputy minister gets $6,000. I hope the suggestion I make to the minister will be adopted, because the distinction is somewhat striking, and might be regarded as odious, that one department is divided into two branches, and the head of the more important branch only receives $5,000, while the head of the other gets $6,000. That requires some explanation.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is very pleasing to hear the words of commendation that the hon. member has been good enough to express in regard to Mr. Johnston, the most efficient deputy of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I quite agree with all the hon. member has said, and, without committing any breach of confidence with my colleagues, I might say that I have been on various occasions fighting very strenuously to put the efficient and able Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the same footing as the efficient deputy in charge of the Naval Service.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE: Hear, hear.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: But I find in my brief experience in public life that the wheels of Government move slowly, and one cannot accomplish all that he sets out to do, and I am sorry that Mr. Johnston's salary does not stand at $6,000 instead of $5,000. I still have some hopes that before Parliament adjourns in some way or another some suitable recognition of Mr. Johnston's services may be made. For the moment, I am sorry the salary has to stand at $5,000, but I thank the hon. gentleman for what he has said. I cannot speak too highly of Mr. Johnston. He is a very efficient, loyal and painstaking officer.

Mr. MURPHY: In connection with the officials transferred from the Outside to the Inside Service, what becomes of the positions vacated? Are the positions in the Outside Service to be filled or abolished?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I was not expecting the Civil Government estimates to come up to-night, and I could not get in touch with Mr. Johnston and I have not all the details I would like to have, but I should judge, inasmuch as the number of employees this year is 125, four less than last year, that the positions at Prescott are not being filled, but I will not give that as a positive answer. I will furnish the information at some other time.

Mr. MURPHY: When the hon. minister mentions Prescott, he at once makes me suspicious. He has told me somthing I did not know, and I want to point out to my hon. friend that there would be no indication in these estimates as to what becomes of the positions in the Outside Service to which I referred. These relate only to the Inside Service, and my inquiry is, what becomes of the positions in the Outside Service from which transfers have been made to the Inside Service?

Mr. J. D. REID: My hon. friend need not be much alarmed about Prescott. The only one in this list who comes from Prescott is Mr. T. F. Murdock. He was appointed to a position at Prescott probably eight or nine years ago. He is a very capable young man, and was transferred to Ottawa, promoted probably some three or four years ago. He is now being put on the Inside Service, and it is a promotion for him. He will get his statutory increase. He is a fine young man, born in Prescott—

Mr. McKENZIE: He could not help that, I suppose.

Mr. REID: and deserves every consideration.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand from the minister that he was transferred some three or four years ago from the Inside Service to the Outside Service?

Mr. REID: No, he was transferred from the town of Prescott, where he was employed in the Marine and Fisheries Department. The department here called him from Prescott and gave him employment and promoted him. Now I see they are transferring him from the Outside Service to the Inside Service permanently.

General Consulting Engineer to Dominion Government—
Salaries.. ....$	7,600 00
Contingencies	150 00

Mr. J. D. REID: This is an item that has been in the estimates for many years. This was to pay the salary of the late Sir Collingwood Schreiber $6,000, and his private secretary $1,600. I am sorry to say that Sir Collingwood Schreiber died two or three days ago. But his place will have to be filled and I would like to have this item remain in the estimates.

Mr. MURPHY: What is the minister's reason for saying that his place will likely have to be filled? What work will a successor to Sir Collingwood Schreiber be required to do?

Mr. J. D. REID: In the Department of Railways and Canals they have always had a consulting engineer. Sir Collingwood Schreiber has filled that position for many years.

Mr. MURPHY: He was the first.

Mr. J. D. REID: He was there for many years. There are more railways being added to the system and there will probably be a great deal more work to do. At all events I feel like leaving that item there in the meantime until we can consider the situation.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will this come under the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. J. D. REID: I presume so; they will have to issue a certificate.

Mr. MURPHY: Why is this position necessary in view of the very excellent appointment made by the minister, according to the newspapers, of Mr. Gordon Grant, formerly engineer of the Transcontinental railway? He has been added, I understand, to the hon. gentleman's staff. Why does the minister want this item, if that is the case?

Mr. J. D. REID: The hon. member, of course, is aware that Mr. Gordon Grant occupied the position of chief engineer of the Transcontinental railway. He has always been paid out of that vote. That vote may eventually cease. Then, of course, Mr. Grant's position would be ended. If I had an item of this kind in the estimates, and I found it necessary to have a consulting engineeer, Mr. Grant might be used there or elsewhere; at all events, it has been necessary to have a consulting engineer. I believe that the increased work that will be necessary in the Railway Department on account of the increase in the railway systems to be attached to the department will necessitate the employment of a consulting engineer. For that reason I would ask that the item remain for the present year.

Mr. MURPHY: I do not understand the position as stated by the minister. My recollection of the statement in the newspapers is that the hon. gentleman had added three engineers to the staff. Mr. Gordon Grant was one, another was a railway and bridge engineer and there was another. Is that the fact?

Mr. J. D. REID: I brought into the department a gentleman named Mr. A. E. Warren who was operating man on the Canadian Northern railway and who, from all I could hear previous to his coming in, was an excellent man. He has certainly done great work during the past winter in assisting in the operating of the railways.

Mr. MURPHY: What is his salary?

Mr. J. D. REID: He has been an employee of the Canadian Northern railway, and he has not yet been transferred to the department. He is still being paid by the Canadian Northern railway. He has been general manager at Winnipeg. I intend getting him into the department because of the good work he has done. It will be necessary to have an expert operating man in the department because of the large addition to the Government railway system. Then I also have made arrangements to secure the services of Mr. Monserrat, who designed, and was chief engineer of, the Quebec bridge. He was the engineer in charge of the construction of the bridge. I think every hon. member will agree that Mr. Montserrat deserves every credit for the splendid work he did in connection with that work. Although the bridge is practically completed it has not been taken off the contractors' hands. We are operating it.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It has not yet been accepted by the Government?

Mr. J. D. REID: It has not yet been finally accepted. Mr. Monserrat's services would be dispensed with when the work was finally taken off the contractor's hands, which may possibly be within a few months. Mr. Monserrat called upon me and asked whether his services would be dispensed with immediately on taking the bridge off the contractor's hands. He stated that when he accepted this position his intention was, when the work was through, to settle in Montreal and take up the work of a consulting engineer. He also said that when they built the bridge over the Clyde they thought it well to employ an engineer for a year to take notes and see if there were any deflections. Mr. Monserrat asked me if I would retain him for a year for that purpose. At times during the last year we used Mr. Monserrat in the several departments in cases of arbitrations. He is a very high class man. I asked him if he would come to Ottawa and assist us at Ottawa not only in the Department of Railways and Canals but in any department in so far as consulting or arbitration work was concerned, and also keep in touch with the Quebec bridge work during the coming year. Mr. Monserrat agreed to do that. Therefore we will have Mr. Monserrat's services at Ottawa during the time that it will not be necessary for him to spend on the Quebec bridge. I have increased the staff by these two men. I feel that I will have to get probably one or two of the best men that we can get in connection with the railway system right here in Ottawa because of the increase in the work resulting from the addition to the Government railway system. That is the situation so far as the Department of Railways is concerned.

Mr. MURPHY: What is Mr. Montserrat's salary?

Mr. J. D. REID: He was paid $12,000 a year as Chief Engineer of the Quebec bridge, and I agreed with Mr. Monserrat that his salary would, of course, remain the same, at least while he is still in charge of the Quebec bridge. It was finally decided that it was not necessary to have a man of his experience and ability in that position after completion of the construction.

Mr. POWER: Might I ask the hon. minister what portion of the $7,600 is to be paid to Mr. Monserrat and what portion to the other gentleman?

Mr. J. D. REID: There will be no portion of that amount granted to Mr. Monserrat. There is an item in the estimates for the Quebec bridge, to pay the final amounts that may be due, and Mr. Montserrat will be paid out of that vote. If I find that it is necessary to have some other expert in the Railway Department this item would be used for that purpose entirely. If not, there will be no expenditure made in connection with it.

Mr. PARENT: Would the minister tell the House who is operating Quebec bridge now?

Mr. J. D. REID: The Government Railway system is operating it, and as the hon. member knows, there is quite a large traffic over that bridge, both passengers and freight.

Mr. PARENT: I understand that the Government is allowing that traffic, although the bridge has not been accepted by the Government.

Mr. J. D. REID: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: Is the Government paying any toll for using the bridge while it is still the property of the contractors, or has any specific arrangement of that kind been made?

Mr. J. D. REID: We are simply taking it over.

Mr. CANNON: Do any railways pay toll?

THE CHAIRMAN: Order. The Quebec bridge is very far from the item under consideration.

Mr. CAHILL: The minister states that he will require the services of another gentleman to replace the general consulting engineer, because of some roads that they are taking over. Would he be good enough to tell us what roads are proposed to be taken over by the Department of Railways and Canals, and whether they are to be operated by the Minister of Railways. Also if the employees will come under the Civil Service Act, or if that will be a patronage outlet for the Government?

Mr. J. D. REID: On the regular estimates of the department it is my custom to make a statement of the whole railway situation, and on those items I will be able to give the hon. member a full answer.

Mr. CAHILL: The question arises as to why this man should be appointed, and why this item should be voted, and the answer, apparently, is that the Government purposes taking over some railways.

Mr. J. D. REID: Of course, the hon. member was not in the House last year, but he has, no doubt, read the newspapers and knows that we have taken over the Canadian Northern system.

Mr. CAHILL: I have never seen any statements in the newspapers to the effect that the railways were to be operated by the Railway Department.

Mr. McKENZIE: There is just one word I wish to say to the minister. I am always anxious that the minister should secure the very best talent that he can get for his department.

Mr. J. D. REID: It is necessary.

Mr. McKENZIE: I have always suggested that they should get big men, not only in the minister's department, but in all others, so that when anything unusual comes up, or any big business had to be done, they would not be obliged to run around the country looking for men. But I would advise the minister to get the very best engineer that he can get, and to make him, not a consulting engineer, but his chief engineer, placing the other officials in their proper order under him. If he has a first class chief engineer at the present time he does not require a consulting engineer at all. Let him make his best man his chief engineer, and put the others as subordinates under him.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Maclean the House adjourned at eleven p. m.

Tuesday, March 26, 1918.

The House met at Three o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

REPORTS.

Report of the Department of Public Works for the year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Carvell.

Report of the Department of Customs for the year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Sifton.

Report of the Department of Labour for the year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Crothers.

RESIGNATION OF HON MR. SEVIGNY.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): I have the permission of His Excellency the Governor General to communicate to the House the letter of the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Sevigny) conveying his resignation and the reply I made to that letter:

Ottawa, Ont., March 7, 1918.

Dear Sir Robert,—

In view of the result of the election in the Province of Quebec, I deem it advisable to render my resignation as a member of the Government.

Since I entered the Cabinet, I did my utmost, together with you and my colleagues, to fulfil my duty in the interest of the country. The hard exigencies of the war imposed upon us tasks difficult but necessary, and the conduct of our soldiers and of the Canadian people since the month of August, 1914, gave us to understand that we could not ignore our responsibilities. The immense majority of the people have declared by their vote that their patriotism and courage have not been lessened by the terrible trials of these last years. That vote of confidence in our policy is certainly a great consolation to me, notwithstanding the defeat I have suffered in my Province. Another consolation I experience is to have remained true to those who fell on the field of honour, to those who made the glory of our country, at the price of the most noble sacrifices, and also to have remained faithful to their families who have suffered for the holy cause our country espoused freely and unanimously in August, 1914.

I hope, dear Sir Robert, that the French Canadian minority will soon consent to have representation in the Government. I know you have done everything possible to urge Sir Wilfrid Laurier and other French Canadians to enter Union Government. I have witnessed your efforts to obtain the union of all races and, as a French Canadian I do not hesitate to hold responsible for the present isolation of Quebec those who failed to carry out their sacred duty of giving to my Province a proper and patriotic direction in this terrible crisis which our country has to face with the rest of humanity.

Rest assured that the great majority of the French Canadians want representation in the Government and that you will soon learn that the Province of Quebec does not wish its isolation. I am convinced that you will always be disposed to treat with justice the French Canadian minority, as your responsibilities show you clearly that the future and welfare of Canada rest upon union and harmony between the races inhabiting our country.

I was pleased to ascertain, in my conversations with my colleagues, that they wish the present division to cease.

I shall always retain very pleasant recollections of my relations with you, particularly since I entered the Cabinet. Often, in the trials I had to endure, I found consolation in your kind words and in your noble conduct.

Despite the difficulties caused us by the exigencies of the war, I have confidence in the future of my country, because you and your colleagues have decided to devote to Canada all your ability and patriotism.

Believe me, dear Sir Robert,

Yours very truly,

ALBERT SEVIGNY.

To which I replied as follows on the 9th of March:

Ottawa, Ont., March 9, 1918.

Dear Mr. Sevigny,—

I have your letter of the 7th instant, and I have received with great regret the announcement that you consider it your duty to tender your resignation as a member of the Government. Under conditions of great difficulty and trial you have exhibited remarkable courage and devotion in adhering steadfastly to your ideal of duty. Although for the present you have failed to secure from your Province the support to which you were entitled, I am confident that the not-distant future will bring to you well deserved vindication and a thorough justification of your attitude upon the great questions which have been debated and determined during the past year. As you well know, it has been my constant desire that the historic Province of Quebec should at all times be adequately represented in the government of the country. If my efforts have been unavailing, I am not responsible for that result. I should esteem it my duty as well as my pleasure to use my best endeavours for the consummation of such arrangements as would enable you to remain in the Government. On the other hand I realize the force of the considerations which you expressed to me in conversation and which in your opinion make it desirable that you should retire for the present. I have no doubt, however, that you have still before you a great future in the public life of the country. Be assured that I have the happiest memories of my association with you in public affairs; and I send my best wishes for every success in the years to come.

Believe me, dear Mr. Sevigny,

Yours faithfully,

R. L. BORDEN.

Hon. Albert Sevigny,
Ottawa.

The resignation has not yet been formally accepted but it will be accepted at the end of this week. It is the intention to consolidate the Department of Inland Revenue with the Department of Customs under the Act which has just passed its third reading in this House.

WEDNESDAY NIGHT SITTINGS.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That, on Wednesday, the 3rd April next, and on all subsequent Wednesdays to the end of the Session, the House shall meet at three o'clock p.m., and that the sittings on such days shall in every respect be under the same rules provided for other days.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That, on and after Wednesday, the 3rd day of April, Government Notices of Motion and Government Orders shall have precedence on Wednesdays and Thursdays, until the end of the Session, over all business except questions by Members and Notices of Motion for the Production of Papers.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr Speaker, I am sure that it is the intention of every one to have as short a session as possible. I would suggest to my right hon. friend that he leave Wednesday, the 3rd of April, for private members, amending his motion to read "after Wednesday, the 3rd day of April."

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That will be agreeable.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion passes with the omission of the words " on and."

Motion agreed to.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That when this House adjourns on Wednesday, the 27th instant, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 2nd day of April next.

Motion agreed to.

THE WAR.

ENEMY VIOLATION OF RED CROSS RULES. HEROISM OF CANADIAN NURSES.

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. Speaker, I have received a telegram with regard to the great offensive now being carried on on the Western front by the enemy, but it contains nothing, I think, of importance beyond what has already been communicated to hon. members and to the public generally through the press. I have, however, a telegram from Sir Edward Kemp, which I should like to read. It is prefaced by a statement that it embodies a message which was received from Mr. Rowland Hill. It has been submitted to the Censor, and is, therefore, proper for publication. It is dated March 25th:

Premier,
Ottawa.

London, March 25th, 1918.
War Correspondents' headquarters, France,
March 21st.

"Deliberate violation of Red Cross rules marked the opening of the Huns' much advertised great western offensive. Long range guns of the Germans have searched out hospitals which have been established over two years. Two Canadian casualty clearing stations, which have worked unceasingly through battle storm and lull of more peaceful times, were among the sufferers. The railway siding on which they were situated was considered out of the zone of ordinary shell fire. It was known to the Huns as a hospital centre, for, in one of his communications, he mentioned the fact that he had bombarded it "as reprisal" for alleged dropping of bombs on one of his hospitals.

"Day by day wounded have been gathered into these four hospitals—two British units adjoined Canadians—there to be patched up and rested until fit for comparatively comfortable trip south in well-fitted ambulance trains which regularly loaded at siding. When terrors of attack and counter attack at Passchaendaele were raging seven or eight miles away it was these hospitals that bore the brunt. One of the Canadian units has a record of over three thousand cases "cleared" in one day.

"Work went on without cessation—Australians, Imperials, Canadians, Germans, too, salved from the human wreckage on the ridge. It is hard to make an operating hut light-proof. It is impossible to operate on a wounded man in the dark, so the Hun bombers night after night in those busy days forgot immunity of Red Cross and dropped their bombs around hospitals. Plucky Canadian and British nurses stuck it through the great battle which ended with our troops taking Passchaendaele, although some of these brave, devoted women, finally had to be sent south to where there was rest haven for nurses. They left their bright home in Flanders, in which they took so much pride, in as short a time as possible. It had become an oasis in this almost deserted part of Belgium. Friends in the Canadian Railway troops who worked in the sector had built them fireplaces in their huts and fitted other little touches of home, and they themselves had put the care and labour of months into making them comfortable. The luxury of arm chairs, damask curtains, polished brass, even cut glass and original oil paintings, helped these nurses from overseas to remember there were such things back in that world they had left across the Atlantic when they volunteered for duty. Their environment kept them gentle, womanly, Canadian, among all the flotsam of war, and it was reflected to the thousands of shrapnel-torn, mangled patients they helped on the first stage of the road to recovery. Then came the eruption. In the middle of the night two big high explosive shells (their bases showed they were from a German twelve-inch naval gun) landed twenty yards from the Nursing Sisters' quarters. Steel splinters tore through the sides of their huts as though they were paper. Fortunately not a sister was wounded and, as the Canadian girls assembled at emergency call, two more shells hit almost in the centre of the hospital camp. Officers and sisters and staff worked heroically to clear out patients during the dismal rainy night. There were many delicate cases to be handled where sudden jars perhaps meant death, but all through the night, punctuated by the devilishly regular explosion of other shells, wounded were loaded on hospital train and sent to safety. Only then did nurses seek shelter in another Canadian hospital out of line of fire.

"With daylight, news arrived that the storm had broken on another part of the line. 'Have surgical teams ready proceed on duty immediately'—the message from headquarters. That meant Canadian surgeons ready to go anywhere, and those steel-nerved girls from the Dominion who deftly act as surgeons' extra right hand here in these operating theatres along the front, where a second lost means the difference between life and death, to go with them. There they are to-day, working bravely and stoically, though in the spare moments they occasionally have their thoughts must go back to that home they so suddenly left—that little home in the west up in Flanders they had become so attached to. It is not always in the fighting line you feel the hardships of war."

Kemp.

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

Rt. Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER (Minister of Trade and Commerce), moved the second reading of Bill No. 4, to provide for the time in Canada being in advance of the solar mean time during the summer months.

He said: Mr. Speaker, last year, in introducing this Bill on the 23rd of July, I gave a short resumé of the history of daylight-saving legislation. I do not intend to repeat that history to-day, but as there are a large number of new members in this House, hon. gentlemen will probably bear with me while I make a very short summary of what I stated last year, following it up with a statement of what has occurred since that time along this same line. Daylight saving legislation has not been many years in force in any country. It is an example, probably, of one of the most rapid changes from a merely academic question to great practical use and benefit, through enactments in the law and practice of the countries in which it has been adopted. Without going into the history of the agitation before the early enactments, it is sufficient to say that the first daylight saving legislation was passed in Germany about the year 1914, the year of the beginning of the war. In 1916 it was adopted as an experiment in Great Britain, and put into operation for a period of between four and five months. After that experiment, a committee was formed to make a thorough examination of the effects. In France, in Austria, in Holland, and in about ten other European countries bordering on those communities, daylight saving legislation was put into force in 1915 and 1916. The British Parliamentary Committee formed to make an investigation, not only took cognizance of the effects in Great Britain, but continued and extended their investigations to these other European countries as well. Therefore their report covered the whole area of practical daylight service in legislation and in practice. That report was handed in during the late fall of 1916 or winter of 1917. It is now to be found in the records of this Parliament and can be referred to by any person. The report was an exhaustive one; questionnaires were sent out to all possible sources of authoritative information, embracing all classes of business and of general activities. The investigation was not confined to the economic effects of the measure, but also went into the effects of daylight saving upon the public health and public morals, its effects upon the schools, and generally almost every activity of life. After saying that the report of that committee was entirely favourable to the re-enactment of daylight saving legislation in Great Britain, I think it would be well to give two or three quotations from their report with reference to special phases of it, and I will trouble the House to that extent.

In respect to public health the delivery of the committee was in one section as follows:

> We have devoted particular attention to the question of the effect of "summer time" on the health of children, and we have been glad to find that, in spite of certain statements which have been made to the contrary, the bulk of the evidence favours the conclusion that in the case of children also "summer time" has proved a success.

The committee made investigation with reference to public health and morals, and their conclusion is favourable along that line as well. As to the general workers interested, this is their statement:

> The general view of employers, as expressed in the replies to the questionaires, was that their employees had taken full advantage of the extra hour's daylight; and while the majority were not in a position, with so short a period of observation, to state positively whether or not an improvement in health had resulted, a number had noticed increased vitality in their workers, and in some cases an improvement in the standard of the work. Only one or two employers recorded the appearance of any ill effects in the shape of tiredness and irregular time keeping. We have had evidence from all sources of the value of the extra daylight to the very large number of workers who cultivate gardens and allotments.

They conclude:

> Taking the whole of the evidence, we are satisfied that the great bulk of the working classes are favourable to summer time, and we are convinced that they stand to profit by it as much as, and in many cases more than, any other section of the community. Such real inconveniences as have been experienced will, we believe, be remedied with a little more experience of summer time conditions.

With regard to children's sleep, this is their utterance:

> We are glad to be able to report, as a result of all the evidence which we have received, that while in a certain number of districts a tendency to shortened sleeping hours has been noticed, the fears which were entertained in the matter have not in the main been justified.

As to trade, industry and commerce, they conclude:

> The comprehensive inquiries which we have described in paragraph 9 above, show beyond all question that the opinion of employers in every trade, industry, and business throughout the country, is overwhelmingly in favour of summer time.

Economies in artificial light and fuel are thoroughly satisfactory.

Coming to agriculture, in regard to which more objections have been raised than with reference to any other branch of activity, they say:

> In spite of such difficulties as have been recorded, a very large majority of farmers and war agriculture committees are in favour of the renewal of the Act, and the majority even of those who are of opinion that it was not advantageous to agriculture consider that it should be renewed, as they recognize its great benefits to the community at large.

As to foreign countries, the committee reports upon France, Germany and Austria, and in the main, come to about the same conclusions as they arrived at from their investigation of conditions and effects in Great Britain. Summing up I will read the paragraph in which they conclude their report.

> Taking the evidence we have received as a whole, we can unhesitatingly say that the vast preponderance of opinion throughout Great Britain is enthusiastically in favour of summer time and of its renewal, not only as a war measure, but as a permanent institution. As we have already pointed out, some difficulties have undoubtedly been experienced, but not to anything like the extent predicted by the critics of the scheme, and we have not heard of any that could not be overcome with good-will and organization. Indeed, the experience of summer time in 1916 has converted many of its former opponents into hearty supporters. Moreover, as we have pointed out elsewhere, many of those who still hold the view that summer time may be prejudicial to their own interests admit that the general public advantages arising from it more than outweigh any inconveniences that may be caused in particular cases.
>
> In a few years we believe that what opposition still remains to summer time will have completely disappeared, and that the whole nation will regard it as a wholly beneficent measure. We recommend, therefore, that summer time should be reintroduced in 1917 and in subsequent years.

It was reintroduced in 1917 in Great Britain, and Great Britain had an additional summer experience of its workings. It worked so well last year in Great Britain that this year they have put it into operation again, but with an extension of the period, thus bearing testimony to their view of its advantages. On 24th March the clock was set forward one hour in Great Britain, and will remain set forward until 29th September, when it will revert again to the old position. That shows, then, the progress as resulting from experiment, then examination and report, and then another year of experiment, insofar as Great Britain is concerned.

Coming to the United States, last year the Senate made a very thorough investigation into the whole question, taking in all activities, all associations, all societies, all forms of work in the United States. The Senate carried on that investigation for a number of weeks, and it was participated in by those who might be counted as speaking for the intelligent, forward-looking and enterprising people of the country generally. As a result of that investigation, the Senate not only recommended, but passed a Daylight Saving Bill. But it was in late June, 1917, when they passed it, and they came to the conclusion that at that late period of the year it would be better not to put it into force, and so they transmitted their Bill to the House of Representatives. In the House of Representatives the Bill came up early in the year. It is worthy of special note that whilst the measure was under discussion in the House of Representatives two gentlemen appeared there in support of the measure, and even in favour of an extension of the time set in the Senate Bill by adding a month at each end of the period. Mr. Garfield, Chairman of the Fuel Committee of the United States, and Mr. Hoover, Chairman and Director of food production and regulation in the United States, were the gentlemen who appeared and made those pleas, one representing fuel conservation, the other food production generally. As a result, the Bill passed in the House of Representatives by a large majority; I think the vote was 252 to 40—you might almost say it passed unanimously. This was the decision after thorough examination of the subject and after hearing representative delegations from every industry and activity in all parts of the United States. If there is one thing more than another pressed forward in Great Britain to-day, it is production, and especially food production. The Daylight Saving law has been in force during two summer seasons and has now been placed a third time in operation. In the United States the two great questions are fuel conservation and food production. After full examination and after the results of that examination had been allowed to be canvassed for more than six months the House of Representatives, as I have said, made its own investigation and then gave the measure practically unanimous approval. The inference from these instances is plain, and I know it will commend itself to this House and to the Canadian people as well.

Probably it would be a good thing to read briefly from the report of the Interstate Commerce Committee which took the matter up first in the routine order in the House of Representatives, examined it, and passed on their report to the House. First, I would refer to the general industries of the country. The United States chamber of commerce has a membership of about 450,000, has its affiliations all over the United States, and is probably the foremost and most representative business body or association of business men in the world. The chamber of commerce took this up before the agitation reached the Senate, and, through their organizations, obtained expressions of opinion from all the wide area that they represented. Their chairman, in making his report, says:

> We have acted favourably on this question. Our committee have presented a report. Some of the members of the committee are here. It was passed unanimously by that body, meaning that the manufacturers, mercantile houses, and business establishments throughout the country, real estate interests, banking interests, and others that you might call general business interests, are in favour of the proposition.

That expresses broadly the sentiment of the business interests of the United States, as represented through these chambers of commerce. With reference to the federation of labour, it is well to put on Hansard, I think, the resolution of the American federation of labour. It reads:

> That we urge the inauguration of the daylight saving project for the conservation of time and opportunity for greater leisure and open-air exercise for the masses of the people, and we insist that in order that the change may be beneficial it must have its general application throughout the whole United States. We will gratefully receive from and actively give to any groups the fullest support in the attainment of the daylight saving project, so long as it shall be utilized for the purposes herein declared.

I may say, incidentally, that President Gompers is entirely in favour of the daylight saving measure, and used his very great and widely extended influence towards its passage, through the Senate and House of Representatives. The latter part of the report of the interstate commerce committee of the House of Representatives, has this to say:

> The hearings contain information as to the result of similar legislation in foreign countries. It is believed by the committee that the possible benefits to be derived from such a measure are more than sufficient to offset the objections which have been presented. It is recognized that these objections are not without some foundation and force. In view, however, of the increased food production which will be brought about under the Bill, the comfort and convenience which it will bring to labourers and the public generally, and the saving of expenses, especially relating to light and fuel, it is believed by our committee that the measure should be enacted.

It was upon that representation, with others, that the Bill was passed by the majority which I have already stated.

So far as Canada is concerned, hon. gentlemen probably know as much about the question as I do. There have been attempts for restricted operation of daylight saving in municipalities, towns and cities in various parts of our country. It has always, however, been felt that the localizing of daylight saving is a handicap, because you get out of touch with general time and with all the activities and operations that are carried out under general time. In some cities which tried daylight saving, they had one, two, or three different kinds of time, and that, of course, caused confusion. Notwithstanding all that, the testimony from the towns that have tried it is, in the main, very favourable to its operation and results, and quite a number of cities in Canada retain it until this day.

It has, however, always been felt in Canada that there were two objections to daylight saving: first, that to be effective it should be nation-wide, and secondly, that in our peculiar apposition to the United States of America along such a long border line, it would conduce to the smooth and efficient working out of the system if the two countries acted on a parity in this matter. The present Bill tends to meet both those objections. If it is adopted, we shall have nation-wide daylight saving operating in the Dominion of Canada, and we shall have also coterminous with us the operation of the daylight system in the whole of the United States of America. The Act which was passed and which received the President's signature a few weeks ago is of a double nature. In the first place, it establishes a standard time with zones over which this time is operative. In the second place, it fixes the daylight saving period from the 31st day of March to the 31st day of October, making it a seven months' period, or two months longer than that provided for in the Bill first passed by the United States Senate. Therefore, at two o'clock in the morning on the 1st day of April, United States' clocks will be set one hour ahead, and from that date until the 31st of October time will be operated on that basis.

It was probably possible for the Dominion Government to have put daylight saving into operation under the War Measures Act, but some of our critics have incidentally mentioned the fact that the War Measures Act appears to have been pretty hard-worked during the last year or so, and as Parliament was on the point of being assembled, it was thought better that we should bring this measure before Parliament, even at the risk, if it were favourably received, that we should not be able to begin its operation coterminously with the United States. The Bill provides that it shall come into operation on proclamation by the Governor in Council, so that it may be brought into operation at any time it is considered most advantageous. Bearing in mind, then, the fact that these two objections which have hitherto had a good deal of weight will, by this measure and by the legislative action of the United States of America, be done away with, the problem is a plain and easy one for us to make up our minds upon. I think I can state, without going beyond what is actually the fact, that all interests, certainly all the important interests, in the Dominion of Canada are, under the circumstances, strongly in favour of following the lead of the United States and the other great and progressive countries of the world by establishing a daylight saving system in Canada. I think that is true of all the business interests, without any exception. I have here a large number of recommendations which I do not intend to read to the House. They will be placed upon the Table so that those who wish to consult them may do so.

Almost the only objections that come are from rural communities, on behalf of the productive interests as carried out by general farming operations. Insofar as small-lot production, adjacent to towns, cities and villages, is concerned, there is no doubt at all that the daylight saving, giving the extra hour at the end of the day, will very greatly tend to increase that kind of production, but the farmer in a larger way is a little bit suspicious as to how it will work in reference to his operations. I want to put before that class, and the gentlemen who represent that class, the consideration to which I adverted a moment ago. Surely the result of examination and actual experiment on the part of ten or twelve great countries of the world for three or four years, and particularly of countries in which agricultural development is a great activity, should hold good also for the farming communities of Canada. In Great Britain, the United States of America, Denmark, Holland, Sweden—all very large'y agricultural countries—we find the consensus of opinion overwhelmingly in favour of the continuation of the system after an experiment of a year or two years, or after thorough inquiry, as in the United States. Granted all the uncertainty as to how a new measure may work out, and still the weight of argument seems to be favourable to the belief that our fears or suspicions in this case are not very well grounded. Anyway, co-operation and goodwill, as the committee report, will go a long way towards remedying those difficulties which at first will occur. In Great Britain even though agriculturists in certain sections felt that the scheme had been productive of difficulties in their case, yet the large majority felt otherwise, and even the minority felt that if it was for the general interest then the general interest should rule. I think analysis and a little thought will convince one that the measure would not be a menace or danger to the general farming interests. This legislation does not make any man get up an hour earlier or eat his dinner at a different time unless he chooses to do as others do. Sometimes it is almost borne in on one that the backbone of the opposition to this scheme with some persons is that it is interfering with Providence; that as Providence placed the sun in the heavens as the basis for our time, we should therefore not interfere with Providence; it is almost an act of impiety, they think, to put on the clock for an hour. Now I do not think we need push our theology that far, as a moment's consideration will show. We do not go by the sun now; we go by the clock; and the clock is a convention, which is kept up in order to avoid the innumerable difficulties which would be encountered if every man on every meridian went by solar time. But the clock is not our only convention. After we have had that for a great many years, the general business interests of the country, particularly the transport interests, come along and say that we must have another convention in addition to the clock, and so they arrange zones within which the time will be the same; that is simply an artificial contrivance the purpose of which is to enable communities to act together, where keeping to the solar time, or even to the clock. would cause great inconvenience.

You will excuse me, Mr. Speaker, for turning my back on you, but I had to do that, relying on old friendship, or else be "hollered" at by the gentlemen at the back who cannot hear me speak when I address the Chair; so I acted on the principle of the greatest good for the greatest number. I think I have said all that is necessary in putting this matter before the House, and I will leave it to the sense of the House to take the measure up and push it through. Some one told me to-day that I was trying to knock daylight out of people, that is not quite correct. I am on neutral ground; if I knock one hour of daylight out of people at one end of the day, I knock another hour into them at the other end of the day.

Mr. E. L. RICHARDSON (Springfield): If this legislation is put through I presume the railways will be compelled to conform to it.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Oh, yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON: That was the rock on which we split in Winnipeg. We adopted daylight saving there two years ago, but were obliged to discontiue it because the railways had a different time.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: When my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) asked a similar question last year, I think I mentioned the view of the railways and read a communication from Sir George Bury, in which he set all fears on that score at rest. Only to-day I received communications from the railways wanting to know whether it could not be arranged to have the measure go into operation simultaneously with the American measure.

Mr. A. B. McCOIG (Kent): Mr. Speaker, this being the first opportunity I have had of speaking since the new Parliament assembled, let me join with your former colleagues and other hon. gentlemen in extending to you my hearty congratulations on again being elected as the Presiding Officer of this House. With regard to this Bill, I was elected as an independent Liberal, with full authority to support any measure the Government brought forward which I thought would be in the best interests of the prosecution of the war. I regret that on the first occasion I rise in this House, it is to oppose the legislation just brought down by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and which he has so ably explained in his address. I regret that in bringing forward this Bill he has not given to the labouring people and the producers of this country the attention they deserve. I represent a rural constituency and urban, perhaps the largest constituency in this house, and since this Bill has been on the Order Paper I have taken every opportunity of ascertaining the views of the labouring people in my home city and in other large towns, and I say without hesitation that in interviewing these people I have received no demand or request of any sort for such a change as is now proposed. The measure has no support whatever in the rural sections. Every agriculturist whom I have come in contact with is absolutely opposed to changing the time. One gentleman said to me: "It will mean a great decrease in production if the measure is put into force." It means that the farmers will have to wait one hour more in the morning before going on their land.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: My hon. friend's argument might be made stronger if a question were asked now and then. What is there is this Bill to prevent a farmer going on the land at any hour that he chooses?

Mr. McCOIG: There is nothing to interfere with the farmer going on his land when he pleases. The trouble is, there is nothing in the Bill to prevent his employees quitting when they please. They will quit at six o'clock, which is the universal hour. When this Bill goes into effect the farmer will lose one hour's work, and that will lessen production to a very great extent. The main argument advanced by the minister in favour of the measure was that it was a measure of reciprocity with the United States; the United States was doing it, therefore Canada should do it. The minister thinks we should be very considerate of the United States at the present time. Let me tell him that what the producers of this country most desire is reciprocity in the seeds we require. If the minister would direct his energy along that line it would be appreciated by all the producers in Canada. He might go further and give us reciprocity in the implements required for production, thereby preventing the corporations exacting exorbitant profits from our farmers, and I sincerely hope some action will be taken along that line.

I have had representations from almost every farmers' club in Canada protesting against this legislation. Digressing for a moment, let me point out that the reason why the farmers are organizing these clubs is because they believe the Government are not thoroughly in touch with their requirements. Let me read a resolution adopted by the Wallaceburg Branch of the United Farmers of Ontario bearing on this question:

To A. B. McCoig, M.P.,

Dear Sir:—We the members of the Wallaceburg Branch of the United Farmers of Ontario feel that if the daylight saving scheme, as proposed at the present time, is put into effect, it will greatly inconvenience us in our farming operations.

In farming as in no other industry we are dealing with the successful growing and harvesting of plants which require the strict observance of certain fundamental principles. Many of these principles are dependent entirely on weather conditions over which we have no control, as we instance here. In the cultivation of certain hoed crops, when they are very young, when the harrow or weeder is used, the young plants are very brittle in the early morning, but in the late afternoon can be and are successfully worked; especially is this true of corn and beans. Beans in this country are very much subjected to disease. At no time in the life of the bean is disease more easily spread than when the plant is wet with dew. One of the most closely observed rules in prevention of the spread of this disease is never to work among the plants when they are damp, as this retards morning operations rather than hastens them.

I can assure the minister from my own experience that the plants can be very easily injured when they are damp, as those who have had any experience with this particular crop will agree. The same remark applies to the other hoed crops in southwestern Ontario, and hon. gentlemen will readily see the objection to getting men out from the city to work on these crops, and then when they are on the farm being unable to put them to work for an hour later. The resolution continues:

The same is true in the harvesting of all crops. Hay, especially the clovers, which are the most valuable for hay purposes, should never be cut or handled when the dew is on them. Exterior water moisture when incorporated in clovers decreases their palatability and keeping qualities.

That is absolutely true. Every agriculturist in the House will agree that we have to wait until half past eight or nine in the morning until we can safely go into the hayfield. If this measure passes, the quitting hour for the hired man will be one hour hour earlier, that is five o'clock, and the farmer will therefore lose one hour of valuable time. This measure will shorten the day to such an extent that a large portion of the hay crop will be damaged, if not rendered unfit for the purpose required. The resolution goes on:

Grain cut and bound up into sheaves, damp, requires a longer period to dry in the stook, and has a tendency to become musty.

This measure, if passed, will mean that we shall not only be unable to harvest the crop as successfully, but when threshing time comes the day will be one hour shorter. It is impossible to start threshing or cutting grain until it is dry, otherwise sweating will take place and diminish the feeding quality of the grain. The resolution goes on:

We believe that everything should be done to increase production and save our crops in the best possible manner. Moving the clocks on one hour means the addition of time to that part of the day when cultivation and harvest can least afford it, and cutting off from the part of the day which is most valuable. All this is not so much related to the farmer himself, as to his hired help. The farmer has often to work into the night because he cannot work in the grain early in the morning; but most of his day labour will not do it, and often much of his regular help.

As I said before, the hired help will quit at five o'clock and the farmer will have to work on from that hour himself, short-handed. It goes on:

The high school boy and factory hand, used to his hours, will demand the observance of the change of time that he may enjoy the extra hour's fun in town in the evening with his fellows, thus losing to us that hour of the day when it is most valuable. Cultivation starts in earnest in May, and harvest is not done till Fall, so the farmer is due to lose much valuable labour throughout the season when it is most needed.

We therefore urge you to carefully consider our point of view, and to defend us in this urgent year of greater production.

Yours sincerely,
United Farmers of Ontario,
Wallaceburg Branch,
Wm. McCreary, President.
Leo O'Neil, Secretary.

This is only one of the many petitions which have been forwarded to me, but I shall not read the others as I feel this puts the case very clearly before the House. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) is not in his seat. We are all looking for great results from the administration of one who has had such a vast experience in the western provinces, and I hope soon to be able to congratulate him on bringing down meeasures which will be of a progressive character. But a measure such as this is more in the interests of the pleasure-seekers in the large centers than in the interests of the producers, and if we are to have greater production this year, some more effective measure than this will have to be introduced.

Mr. THOMAS HAY (Selkirk): I have listened with interest to the remarks of my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. McCoig), and I am very much in accord with his views. I think production in Canada will be lessened by the passing of this measure. My hon. friend has stated the facts correctly with reference to the hay crop and the harvesting of grain. Very often we have to wait for an hour in the morning, and sometimes two hours, until the sun is sufficiently strong to dry the grain. From the standpoint of the working people also, I am opposed to this legislation. I am satisfied that in western Canada, at all events, with our long period of daylight, this measure would mean the taking off of one hour from the working classes in the morning, which could not be made up to them at night. By this legislation they will be compelled to get up and go to work an hour earlier, but certainly they will not go to bed an hour earlier, for people will not go to bed as long as daylight is over the land; so these people will not get the extra hour's rest in the evening. Daylight saving is largely an experiment.

While it seems to have worked all right in European countries, and while we have certain reports to that effect from those countries, I am satisfied that it is still in the experimental stage. Brandon and Winnipeg tried it in 1916 and they have discontinued it since. That does not say much for the Bill. The only real, good argument that could be advanced for the adoption of this Bill at this time would be the fact that the United States are adopting the same system. With reference to the school children, if the schools were all opened and closed according to the time proposed by this Bill, it would not be in the interest of the health of the children. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) says that according to reports the health of the children has not been impaired in the older countries, but I do not see how it can work out in this country if the working men and the school children are compelled to get up an hour earlier and lose an hour's rest in the evening. That certainly would not be in the interest of the children. I cannot see how production would be increased by the adoption of the Bill. Personally, I feel satisfied that production would not be increased. If the farmers and the farmers' wives were compelled to observe the time prescribed by this Bill, it would mean that they would have to rise an hour earlier. The hired help would quit an hour earlier in the evening. That, in my opinion would not increase production. My right hon. friend said that the most important industries of the country were unanimous in asking that this Bill be adopted. I have not heard any request from any of the organized bodies of farmers for a change of this kind. I do not think they have made such a request and I do not think it is their intention to do so. The great problem before Canada to-day is that of the production of more food and I am satisfied that food would not be produced as largely if this Bill were adopted as it would under the old time.

Mr. F. H. KEEFER (Port Arthur and Kenora): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I shall be able to throw any light, whether daylight or otherwise, on this Bill, but I would like to say as one of the members from the western part of Canada, where they have long daylight, or rather twilight—and I do not know whether they have it any longer than any other place of the same latitude—that we have tried this daylight system municipally for years past and we have found it a thorough success. We would not under any circumstances go back to the old system. The reason for adopting this system was to give artisans one more hour of daylight in the summer months. I have seen, prior to the war, men from stores, shops and factories down in the Current River park playing their full game of baseball after their evening meal. Surely that is beneficial to them. I know of no objection to this Bill. Certainly there is none with regard to the school children. We have tried that out also and it has been successful. At first the mothers had some difficulty in the summer months, in getting the children to go to bed a little earlier than they were accustomed to before, but the experience in that part of Canada has proved that daylight saving is practical and beneficial.

I do admit that in so far as the agricultural labouring classes are concerned there may be something to be said on the other side, but I would point out, as the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, that there is nothing in this Bill to tell the man to go to work before the dew is off the grass or compel him to stop work whilst there is time for him to work. If it is necessary in the interest of production, he will continue to work especially if the farmer sees fit to give him extra pay for overtime as he ought to. I am one of those who believe that the farm labourer should receive his overtime just the same as the worker in the manufacturing industries. If there be any hardship caused by the adoption of this system, it can be compensated for by extra pay.

As to increased production, I think a little consideration will show that it will be decidedly helped by the adoption of this measure. Take, for example, what occurred in the cities at the head of the lakes. Last year, by the cultivation of gardens and vacant lots, they produced about $100,000 of increased value; Fort William about $50,000, and Port Arthur about the same amount. That was done by men after hours, chiefly. I have had communications from there already asking that the shops and stores be ordered closed at five o'clock to allow them to get on the land and to do their work. The people of these cities are greatly interested in the increased production of food in order to help our allies across the seas. I have been connected with the food control work since last October and I know something of what this garden work means and the extent to which it has been carried on all over Canada. My firm conviction is that, while we may lose the work of five agricultural labourers, we will gain that of more than a hundred industrial labourers within the cities and towns. I urge the adoption of this Bill strongly in behalf of increased production.

Mr. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of diffidence that I, as a new member, rise in this House to voice my opinions, but I have risen for the same reason that my hon. friend from Port Arthur (Mr. Keefer) has addressed the House. I did not know that my hon. friend from Port Arthur was going to speak on the Bill, or probably I would have advised him to handle it entirely from the standpoint of a city where this method of advancing the time has been in force for a number of years. Just as my hon. friend from Port Arthur has stated, at the head of the lakes, at Fort William and Port Arthur, this method of saving daylight has been in force for many years, and there has never been any complaint from any group of people or any class with regard to the conditions caused by it. On the contrary, the great consensus of opinion is that it is conducive to health and advantageous in all manner of works. Besides representing the city, both the member for Port Arthur and myself represent rural constituencies. My constituents knew that this Bill was coming before the House, and although I have had a great many letters from them on different matters pertaining to my work here, no one has mentioned any opposition to the Daylight Saving Bill.

There are many reasons why this Bill should be adopted. First, let us consider it from the medical standpoint. I have been practising for fourteen or fifteen years, and I think I can speak with some authority on the medical side of the question. In what I say from this standpoint I believe that I am voicing the opinion of a number of medical men in this House. And just here, in passing, let me say that I am very much pleased that there are so many medical men in the House. A good deal of opposition is manifested in the press at times to so many lawyers being in the House, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the medical men who have come here in such large numbers will endeavour to counteract any evil influence of the lawyers.

Coming to medical reasons, I believe, as every one who looks into hygienic questions believes, that sunlight is necessary for health. Every little boy who has ever gone fishing knows that if he picks up a board to look for worms he will find the grass underneath the board white and anaemic, because the sunlight has been excluded. The same thing applies to human life. I know of quite a little experiment which, no doubt, all of the medical men in this House have read of, in regard to an infection of tuberculosis, which was experimented with on rats some years ago, and the same thing applies to human life just as it does to any other form of life. A dozen rats were infected with tubercle bacilli. Six of them were put in the cellar of a house where the surroundings were unsanitary, and where the sunlight was excluded. The other six rats were allowed to run about in the fresh air and sunlight. I remember distinctly that the six rats which were kept in the cellar of the house and prevented from taking in the proper amount of fresh air and sunlight died as a result of the small degree of inoculation which they had received. The other six lived because of the counteracting effect of the fresh air and sunlight. That is a little point, in passing, from the medical standpoint, but I believe it an important one.

Then, there is the economic standpoint, which is of great importance at the present time. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has very ably dealt with that side, and probably I should not presume to mention it. But there is the point of the saving in coal which will result from the lack of necessity of generating so much electricity for the house to use. There would also be a saving of oil, where oil lamps are used in the country where electricity is not available. This will result in a saving of fuel, and we all know that the fuel situation is a difficult one to handle. As a consequence there will be a saving of transportation. Honourable gentlemen from the West know that the transportation question is also a very difficult one to handle, particularly at the time of the year when the great crops of the West are coming East. They know that a saving in transportation at that time will be an advantage to the country. So that these two questions, coal and electricity, fuel and transportation, will be helped.

I have heard a number of hon. members object on the ground of loss of production. I was going to mention the same fact that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Keefer) referred to in connection with the head of the lakes. We have had this daylight saving rule in operation for some years, and whatever action may be taken here, we have no intention of going back.

At the head of the lakes, production has been marvellously increased, particularly in the vacant lot gardens, to the extent, as the hon. member said, of $100,000, at the cost of a few hundred dollars for minor clerical work. I believe that all over this country you will find that a greater production will result, particularly of the garden variety. I do not doubt that hon. members from more rural constituencies than mine know whereof they speak, and that there will be some disadvantages. The greatest objection is due to the fact of the misconception that we will be getting up earlier in the morning. Except for the one night, when the hands of the clock are shoved one hour ahead, and you do miss one hour's sleep, there is absolutely no difference. I venture to say when one travels to Port Arthur or to Fort William—which use eastern time, but which should use western time—if he did not change his watch he would notice no difference.

Then, there is one point that has not been mentioned, and in these days of moral uplift it may be worth mentioning, that is the effect of daylight saving on the morals of the people. It has been claimed that morals have been greatly elevated as a result of this measure. I know very little of the actions, or of the methods of acting, of the Devil, but some of my friends who claim they do, tell me that he prefers to act in the dark. I believe we may even raise the morals of this country slightly in this matter.

Then, there is another little point, affecting the returned soldier. Hundreds and thousands of soldiers are coming back here, maimed and broken. If they are given longer hours of daylight it will make it easier for these men to get around. Some will think this suggestion far fetched, but it is a fact that it will be much more difficult for a man using crutches—and we shall have many of them in this country—to get around in the dark than in the day. I wish to support very strongly the passing of this Bill. I think it will be a good thing in peace times, and I consider it is a much better thing in war times.

Mr. GEORGE BOYCE (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to the arguments in this debate, and while I am unprepared, owing to not knowing that this Bill would come up to-day, I must give you the views of a farmer. I have been a farmer all my life, and if this Bill passes I think it will do a very great deal of harm to the farming industry of this country. There is no question that, if it went to a vote, ninety per cent of the farmers would vote against the proposal. I was rather amused to hear an hon. member say, in effect: Make it a law, and you farmers can break that law. Now, farmers are not lawbreakers; we want a law made that will give us justice. It has been advocated by medical men who do not know very much about it, but I, who have practised farming all my life, say it will be a very great handicap, in the time of harvest especially. For one, I would not say to the business men of the cities, towns and villages that this law should not be passed. But do not at the same time bind the farmers hand and foot to lose the best part of the day for us, which is in the evening. In the morning we have to wait until the dew dries. We cannot handle our hay, or our grain in the early morning, because if you bind it up wet it will rot; you have to wait until about eight o'clock.

Then the hired help has been mentioned. The hired help will work according to the whistle of the city. This is war time, and the farmers are interested in the welfare of the country and are trying to produce all they possibly can. If you handicap us so that we cannot work there is going to be a very serious loss. I trust that hon. gentlemen will eliminate that part of the measure which has anything to do with the farming community, and let farmers use their judgment as they see fit. We are told that daylight saving has been adopted in the United States, and in other countries, but I want to ask hon. gentlemen what has been done by the board of trade of the city of Hamilton? They are up right straight against this plan being adopted. I have many letters from my constituents, which I did not bring to-day, stating that a petition could be circulated and that they could bring down one thousand farmers from the county of Carleton to protest against this measure in the interest of the agriculturist.

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (Toronto West): Mr. Speaker, from the standpoint of a real city, I would like to express my approval of the Bill. As a matter of increased production, allow me to point out that it has been estimated that in the cultivation of the back yards in the city of Toronto a million dollars worth of produce can be grown annually. During the past two or three years a large quantity of produce has been secured from back-yard gardens. It has had a most important and elevating effect upon the whole population. There is no doubt at all that engaging in gardening operations has an uplifting moral effect, and if there is one thing that is necessary in a large city like Toronto or Montreal it is that anything that conduces to that uplift should be adopted.

Now, under the present hours, if we can produce a million dollars worth of garden truck in the city of Toronto, with an extra hour of daylight in the evening that production could be very greatly increased in Toronto and elsewhere. As you know, Sir, in our city nearly every house is a self-contained home. Our people all have pieces of garden land, and if we could get them to undertake this production, and we are succeeding in doing to a very satisfactory degree, it would mean a great deal for the city of Toronto.

I submit for the consideration of the farmer members of the House that it is the duty of Parliament to consider with some care the situation in a big city. The people who reside in the rural districts live under the very best conditions that human nature can enjoy. Those who live in the cities, in surroundings more or less congested, merit some special consideration from the law-making power; and anything that will conduce to their welfare is well worthy of the careful and thoughtful attention of the House and of the farming community as well. I think it will be found that the urban population in Ontario is about as large as the rural population if not larger, and bearing in mind the possibilities of increased production in all the towns and cities of the country; that means a very great deal in the way of increased production. Take cities like Woodstock, Guelph, St. Thomas and Galt, where the workmen employed in the factories live in houses with an acre or so of land attached, the extra hour possible under this Bill will enable those men to cultivate their lands, with very much better results than can possibly be achieved under existing conditions. The farmer's business is to cultivate the land. If the dew did not rise until twelve o'clock he would have to gather in his grain or his hay after that time, and it would be just as easy for him to engage in some other occupation in the meantime, and to garner his crops later in the day. I quite concede that those who have to employ labour to work their farms might have some difficulties with individuals, but it seems to me that is a matter which can be easily arranged between the employer and the employee. No hardship would be involved in asking the employee to work the statutory hours fixed under this Bill, instead of those which prevail at the present time. I think those who speak for the farmer are anticipating a difficulty which is not likely to arise to any great degree. In my opinion a little suavity and kindness, as well as consideration in the dealings of the farmers with those who work for them, would overcome any difficulties that are likely to exist. I feel satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that a year's experiment with daylight saving would result in the conviction in the farming as well as the urban communities that this legislation is something that should be permanently adopted.

Mr. W. D. COWAN (Regina): Like the member for Port Arthur and Kenora (Mr. Keefer), I can speak from experience on this subject, because in the city of Regina, from which I come, daylight saving has obtained for, I think, the past four years. I have during all that time opposed daylight saving, not because of any demerits in the measure itself, but because of the fact that we found ourselves out of harmony with the surrounding villages and towns. But, as far as the city of Regina itself is concerned, you could not induce it now to repeal the daylight saving by-law, although on two occasions during the past four years we have made efforts to do so. At one time petitions were circulated throughout the city asking that a by-law be again submitted to the people for a vote on the question, but enough signatures to that petition could not be obtained to make it worth while dealing with the matter. That will indicate to you, Sir, that the people in the city in question, living under daylight saving, as they have done for four years, are fairly satisfied with it. Furthermore, one of the members of the Regina city council happens to be the largest farmer in that locality, and we find that the farmers contiguous to the city have all adopted the one-hour-past time to be in harmony with Regina itself. The surrounding towns and villages, of course, have not yet done so. The farmers, however, who live contiguous to the city have done so, and all speak strongly in its favour. The farmer member of the Regina City Council to whom I have referred, indeed was the strongest supporter of the past-time hour that we have in that body. Therefore, my experience indicates to me that it would be wise to follow the Minister of Trade and Commerce in this matter and give daylight saving a nation-wide trial. While on this subject let me say that the city of Regina enjoys the distinction of being the most advanced of all Canadian cities in the matter of vacant-lot gardening. In this we have really set the pace, and our city in the summer time, by reason of the fact, is well worth seeing. If such is the case it is because we have had daylight saving in operation for the past four years. Under all the circumstances, I most heartily support the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the Bill which he has submitted to the House.

Mr. A. B. COPP (Westmorland): As usual, we have the city representatives telling the farming communities how they should operate their farms, and what treatment they should accord to their help in order to get them to work an extra hour, after the city people have gone to their different recreations. I represent a constituency in the Maritime Provinces where there are not only farmers, but towns and cities in which manufacturing and other industries are carried on. Last year, when this Bill was introduced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I received a very large number of letters and telegrams in opposition to the measure from agriculturists in my constituency. Since Parliament opened I have received other communications to the same effect. It seems to me there are only one or two practical considerations arising in regard to this measure: one is the advantage—and an advantage it is—to those who are employed in shops, factories, and work of that character, to have the extra hour in the evening for recreation. No doubt there is something in favour of the Bill to be said on that account. The argument advanced by my hon. friend from Port Arthur and Kenora (Mr. Keefer) that he had seen clerks employed in dry goods establishments enjoying a game of baseball after their day's work is all very well for those men; but it seems to me that at the present time the vital interests of the people of this country are concerned in the question of greater production. To secure that result appeals have been made to the farmers of the country, not only by this Parliament, and by the ministers of agriculture of the Dominion and the several provinces, but men have been specially sent out from the cities to impress upon the agricultural population in the different localities that it was their bounden duty to their country to produce more. Now to achieve that result the farmers must have all the facilities that can possibly be provided. So far as the great majority of the people of Canada are concerned, I do not think it matters at all whether we have daylight saving or whether we do not. When we get down to the question of greater production—and I am speaking from a local point of view only because I am not familiar with the farming operations in the province of Ontario and in the greater provinces of the West—we must bear in mind practical conditions. In the Maritime Provinces the heavy dews remain two or three hours in the morning, and it is impossible for farmers to do work during that time.

You cannot work with the hay, nor with the grain, you cannot cultivate root crops because of the dampness. It is against the growth of the crop if you work while the dew and dampness are on the ground While I am not what you would call a farmer absolutely, I do some farming in the way of cutting and curing hay, and I know that during haying operations in my county, and the Maritime Provinces generally, for hay-making and harvesting the hour between five and six o'clock in the afternoon is worth any two or three hours in the morning, and it is important to the people who have this work to do that they should have this hour. The answer might be made that there is nothing to prevent the farmer going into the field and working the extra hour. That is very true, and they do it; they not only work that extra hour provided by the Daylight Savings Bill, but they have in the past worked an extra two hours to save their crop. I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that a large number of the farmers in my section of the country are compelled to hire a great deal of labour to assist in harvesting their crops, and the farm labourers will stop work at six o'clock, the same as the working men in the cities and towns adjoining. For that reason I say it is a very great inconvenience to the farmer, it would be a great hindrance to him in producing and harvesting his crop, and would prove a very great disadvantage. Personally, it makes no difference to me, and I have no feeling one way or the other, but on behalf of the farming population, a large number of whom I represent, I protest against the passage of this Bill.

Mr. EVAN E. FRASER (Welland): I did not intend to speak on this measure because I thought it would be argued out along slightly different lines, but I may say that the first money I earned in my life was working for a farmer during haying and harvesting, and every morning at half past two he would get up and say: "Hurry up, boys, get up, day is breaking, time to go to work." If I were working for that farmer at the present time I would hate to see this Bill come into force, but representing, as I do, eight large townships, and knowing that that custom is not in vogue now, and having had occasion during last September, October and November to go around and call at their houses on my own private business, I found, on looking at their clocks, that in nearly every house the clock was pushed on anywhere from a quarter of an hour to an hour, and when I would make a remark as to the time they would say: "It's all right, Fraser, we know that clock is three-quarters of an hour fast." I have not had any protest from the farmers of the county of Welland against this Bill, and I am heartily in accord with it because I spent last summer over in England and France, where dalight saving was in force, and outside of the first week, when we had to get up an hour earlier than usual, everything moved along like clockwork.

Mr. F. L. DAVIS (Neepawa): I would remind the House of a practice that was initiated by the city of Portage la Prairie which is of importance in this time of greater production. The business men of that place began closing their business places at four or four thirty, and motor parties were formed, who took the employees and the businessmen themselves to the fields where they stooked the grain. Thousands of acres of grain were put up in that way, which would not have been put up but for that assistance. They worked from the time they arrived in the fields until dark. The passage of this Bill will add one hour to that labour, because it is a class of labour that is right at the doors of the farmer, and in this time of shortage of labour which apparently threatens us for the coming year, it will add millions of hours to the assistance the farmer gets in the fields and will offset, at least in the West, any loss that the speakers who have put up a contention in favour of the farmer have referred to.

Mr. JOSEPH READ (Prince): As representing one of the purely agricultural districts in the Dominion of Canada, in Prince Edward Island, I want to say that the objections of hon. gentlemen to this Bill are not well taken. In our province the farmers get up any time after five o'clock in the morning, and, as a matter of fact, as far as labour is concerned, we have no labour. The people have to do the work themselves. The women and children have to turn out and work, and there is nothing in the Bill to stop people from working as late as they like. The hon. promoter of the Bill (Sir George Foster) pointed out the fact that the United States had adopted this measure, and because they had adopted it we should adopt it. In other words, I am glad to see my hon. friend is beginning to view the question of reciprocity in its proper light. But I want to tell the hon. gentleman, and I want to tell the House that what is true in regard to this Bill, so far as reciprocity with the United States is concerned, was also true of the old Bill that was voted down in 1911. The advantages are all on the side of Canada. Hon. gentlemen who live in the far north of this country will, perhaps, know that the days are very much longer in that district than in the parallel of latitude to the south of it. The further north we go the longer the day becomes in the summer time, and, consequently, whatever advantage there is in the United States is of two-fold advantage to the Dominion of Canada, so far as the question of solar light is concerned, because our days, after the 21st and 22nd of March up to the 22nd of September, are always longer than the days in the United States, which are all south of the 49th parallel of latitude. Consequently, if the Americans have adopted a good system, and it is an advantage to them, it will be of very much more advantage to the people of Canada.

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): As representing one of the constituencies of the Pacific coast, I support the Bill. Although we have not had daylight saving in British Columbia, the matter has been discussed a great deal. The late Col. Hart McHarg—whom, no doubt, a number of the members of this House knew—who went over with the first contingent, and gave up his life to the cause of the Empire, was largely instrumental in bringing the matter before the different organizations, such as boards of trade, and so forth. I think I can safely say that all those organizations passed resolutions in favour of the Bill, and I know that in my constituency, which is a farming community to a certain extent—perhaps the best farming district in the whole of British Columbia—there is absolutely no objection to the Bill. Other organizations are also favourable to it. The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated the case in favour of the Bill so well that I do not care to add anything further, except to say that in our constituency we are very much in favour of it, and were very much disappointed last year when it was dropped.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka): I should like to say one word in approval of this measure. I do so at the request of a large number of my rural constituents. I think we are wandering away from the subject. We are discussing theories which, after all, will probably prove to be without any foundation in fact. We are forgetting that daylight saving has been tried out in Germany, France, England, and that it has proved an entire success. I myself was serving with the forces in France when daylight saving was first introduced there, and I never heard one objection to it from any person, although I talked with people in the farming communities, with people in the cities and with my comrades in the army. I did the same thing in England, and daylight saving is voted by one and all as being a great advantage to a country. I do not think that the objections which have been raised here have any foundation at all in the face of the fact that we have the actual experience of the countries that have tried it out.

Mr. W. F. NICKLE (Kingston): As the debate this afternoon has developed into a general discussion, I would be remiss if I did not put on record before the House the feeling of my constituents. As you know, Sir, the riding that I have the honour to represent is purely an urban one. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken), said that he spoke for a city that was a city. I speak for a city that was a city when Toronto was "Muddy York." I speak for a city that, I am happy to say, has in time past been a conservative city, and one that to-day has shown itself ready to adopt new ideas, and I am, therefore, in favour of this Bill. When this question of daylight saving was first advanced in this country, I thought it was a new fad that would only be adopted by faddists, but I had the privilege in 1916 of being in England, and one thing that impressed me was this, that the daylight saving or longer hours of daylight that might be enjoyed by the people, was an immense advantage, particularly to the working classes. They left work nominally at the same hour by the clock, but really one hour earlier by the sun, and it gave them a singular opportunity of enjoying outdoor life in a way that they never had before, and so far as I could gather, public sentiment, one and all, approved the change and thought it was a change that should be made annually. Viewing the matter also from the point of view of the children—and I think in a subject of this sort the children should be considered, particularly, the children of the cities, the children in the country always have plenty of fresh air, but the children of the cities, particularly those who live in large cities or industrial centres, have not as much opportunity of enjoying the fresh air and sunlight as we would like them to have—this daylight saving scheme has certainly meant for them one hour more of outdoor life. Objections have been raised by parents of one class of children, that is the child that is only sufficiently old to remain up until, as we now measure time, about seven o'clock. Parents in England told me that they found some little difficulty in getting children of that age to bed at seven o'clock, but they thought the balance of convenience to family life was in favour of daylight saving, as they considered their other children were stronger and healthier because they had the opportunity of being more out of doors.

I would like to make the plea to the House on another ground and that is on the ground of the heaviness with which the high cost of living is bearing on the mechanics and labouring classes of the cities. The cost of food has been enhanced very much during the past few years, and although wages have made a radical advance, they have not increased as rapidly as has the cost of living. The net result is that many people, in order to make both ends meet, have found it incumbent upon them to cut off from their daily diet many things they should have. Last year in the city of Kingston we inaugurated a municipal gardening scheme. The people seized upon it with avidity, and they worked at it enthusiastically, with the result that many people this year had a supply of fresh vegetables that, if that scheme had not been effected, they would have had to deny themselves. I am thoroughly convinced that if we can get one more hour of daylight, it will mean a very much greater increase of production by the city people, and I would like to see those who represent rural ridings try to meet us in this way.

5 p.m.

I do not think the objection launched by certain members in this House to the Bill, on the ground that it means the public will go to bed by sunlight, is sound or tenable. I have sent for a Canadian Almanac, and I find that practically speaking, in this part of Canada and as far west as Fort William, the sun goes to rest at eight o'clock, with the result that twilight will be over at nine, as we to-day measure time, and, if the clocks were set back one hour, at ten o'clock night would be on for practical purposes and for the purpose of sleeping. I do not know how it is with farmers in other parts of the country, but so far as farmers in that part of the country from which I come are concerned—and I live in the country during the summer—they do not work by the clock; they work by the sun, and those of my constituents who go out into the country for summer work tell me that one of the objections they have is that they do not work so many hours by the day, but that just as soon as the first cock's crow is heard, the voice of the farmer's son is also heard calling them to work, and that sleep comes only when night sets in. It seems to me, taking everything into view, that the passage of this Bill would be advantageous to the country at this time, as it would increase production in the cities, be an economic saving, and certainly if there was enthusiastic co-operation on the part of the country people, I believe there would be no less production in that part of Canada.

Mr. AUGUSTE T. LEGER (Kent, N.B.): As the representative of a farming constituency in the Maritime Provinces, I think it is my duty to say a few words on this Bill. I agree with many speakers that in cities and towns daylight saving will certainly be acceptable, but in the communities surrounding those cities and towns, it will not, so far as I know, be acceptable. As a farmer I find it difficult, in the little town in which I live, to hold the men to their work after six o'clock. As has been said by several speakers in this debate, in the forenoon nothing can be accomplished so far as harvesting the hay or grain crop is concerned. Therefore, the farmers, in order to harvest their crops, have to make use of the afternoon and the evening until a late hour. If this Bill becomes law, it will certainly cause very great injury to farmers residing within a few miles of every town and city. The hired man will not work for half an hour after six o'clock, which under this Bill will be five o'clock. Most of the harvesting is done between noon and six or seven o'clock in the evening; otherwise it is almost impossible for any large farmer to house his grain in good condition. The farmers who reside near cities and towns say that if this measure becomes law, they will not be able to keep their men on the farms, nor their sons who have learned to be farmers.

The people in the cities and towns will be enjoying themselves while these sons will be right on the farm and working to a late hour in the evening. The sons will say to their father: We are not going to stay on the farm, because here we do not enjoy the pleasures of the people in the cities and the towns. I believe the adoption of this Bill will discourage many young men in the country and will prevent them from staying on the farm as they should. The agriculture of this country ought to be encouraged instead of being discouraged. I think the time has not yet arrived when such a Bill as this should be adopted. Representing as I do a constituency composed mostly of farmers, I did not want to allow the occasion to pass without saying a few words on this important measure.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): Mr. Speaker, I was brought up with the idea that early to bed, early to rise, makes a man healthy and wise. I still believe that. It may make him wealthy, too. But if it makes him healthy instead of wealthy, or both, so much the better. There is a principle underlying all legislation. Those who have discussed legislation have laid down certain principles concerning it and they have laid down the principle that legislation must work itself out, it must justify itself. The only thing to do is to make the experiment. All progress in the way of legislation is largely experimental. I would like to see the experiment tried. I am disposed to support the Bill and to have the experiment made. If it is wrong, and if it does injure the farmer, then the law may be repealed. I agree with what has been said by farmers in the House to-day that in the early hours of the morning you cannot go on the land. I have noticed the ploughs held up in the morning, when they were doing fall ploughing, by frost in the ground. But there is a way of overcoming that, and then there is other work on the farm that can be done. What has been said about the hay crop and other crops is also true; you cannot go to work early in the morning. I agree with what the hon. member for Kent, N.B. (Mr. Leger), has said in regard to his locality, that you cannot do work so well in the morning as later on. But these things must adjust themselves. A way must be found of adjusting the farm labour question, of paying the farm labourers for their work and applying that work at such times as will best conduce to production on the farm. All this has to be worked out. Another reason in favour of this change is that the United States of America believes that it will be to the general advantage to have the clock put forward an hour, and therefore my idea is that the experiment ought to be made here. We ought to try it out and if it is as advantageous as it has been in many other countries, we ought to make the experiment. If it is not successful, we can repeal the law.

We have now come to a point in the world's history where we are confronted with the question of the reconstruction of the world, by reason of this war. There are a lot of progressive measures that must be adopted. Perhaps this is one of them. The reconstruction of the calendar is another, and the standardizing of weights and measures is another. All these things are going to be tried out and experimented with. I think that most of them will be dealt with on the lines of progress. Our railway and transportation questions is a most important one, and the transportation question in Canada is the same as it is in the United States. They are going to take up in the United States this daylight saving proposal. We will have to do it here. We have the same system of running our railways in Canada that they have in the United States. The signals and the rules governing the men who operate the railways are absolutely the same; they have been continentalized; and if we are going to keep up with the march of progress we must continentalize a lot of things. There are other interests as well as the farming interests in this country, and I believe the farmers will have to put up for a time with the operation of this Bill while we see how it works out. The great economic re-organization in America is at hand, it is here now; it is up to us and we must move on progressive, continental lines. We have got to continentalize the law; we must make changes in the general law. We have to define what the maker of a note is and what the endorser of a note is, and we have to do it on broad, general lines. We have been giving too much time in the past to defending local interpretations of these things. If America is to be what it ought to be, and if we realize the meaning of this war of democracy, of progress and of reconstruction, we have to start out on broad lines and on many questions we have to do as our neighbours to the south of us have done.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: My hon. friend says "hear, hear," and I know what he is coming back to. I am prepared to argue that question again if it has to be argued. But in view of that reconstruction, in view of the fact that we have the same labour laws and that labour unions work practically on the same lines, we have to get in line with the rest of the continent and at least go the length of making experiments. I say to the farmers: Try this system, and if it cannot be worked out you will have a grievance and we can then repeal it. I believe that, to farm well, you must farm in the afternoon. Perhaps the best way to increase production, if I may suggest it, is to have a double shift on the farm. It might mean time and a half or pay and a half, but that is the way you get increased production.

An hon. MEMBER: Where are you going to get the labour?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: There is a capital way of raising labour, and that is for every man to raise a family. I know Quebec and I commend Quebec in regard to that. They have not perhaps that scarcity of labour that we have in the West. Well, then, follow Quebec's example; go any place where you get a good example. I agree with what the doctors and others have said, that a good reason, in the line of uplift, for adopting this Daylight Saving Bill would be that it would enable people to do their work in daylight. That principle ought to be applied to lots of things. I would like to see the public offices all over the country opened at seven or eight in the morning. I would like to see the public offices here in Ottawa opened early in the morning. They do start at nine o'clock now, and a great improvement has been made in that respect. Business in the cities and work on the farm could be better done earlier in the morning than later in the afternoon. Perhaps a fair compromise would be to make the noon hour longer. But there is a way out of all these things and the proposition now before the House is that we make the experiment. For that reason I am going to support the Bill. I am going to be governed by the experience of the countries where the experiment has been tried, and wherever that experiment has been made the consensus of opinion is that the law ought to be continued. Our farmers from the West have a good reason for their objection, that you cannot harvest in the morning, that there are certain crops you cannot touch in the morning with tools, and that the best time in the day to take in the crop is late in the afternoon when everything is dry. But if daylight saving becomes the general law we shall have to adapt our farming to it. How far it can be worked out I cannot say, but I believe it will work out perfectly. However, let us make the experiment and keep ourselves in line with American progress and American democracy. And, speaking of American democracy, it is making its fight to-day against the tyranny of the dynasties of Europe, and we have got to march in line, and we are marching in line, and the Americans are with us now and we are with them, and we have these great progressive reform movements coming, and they are coming with a rapid march. We are starting now, I think, the reconstitution of the world. My whole advice is: Let us see if we cannot work out a new set of conditions in America, suited to ourselves and suited to America; and by that we will do much more for the benefit of our whole people. Now, this measure is on that line; it is simply an experiment, and it has proved to be a successful experiment wherever it has been made, and I think the House and the country will endorse this proposal.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George Etienne Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I support this Bill. My only object in rising this afternoon is to correct a slight inaccuracy of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. In his remarks this afternoon, he stated that this measure, or a measure similar to this, originated in Germany a few years ago. He evidently overlooked the fact—because I know that he is a great Biblical scholar, having given a great deal of attention to the Bible before becoming immersed in Tory politics—that my great ancestor, Joshua, three thousand years ago, commanded the sun to stand still. You remember that it was at a time when my people were at war with their enemies. The British army to-day is in occupation of that very country which Joshua at that time occupied, and we can very well say, therefore, in passing this Bill, that it is purely a war measure and nothing else, and I am sure that fact will satisfy very many of the hon. members on the opposite side of the House, who do not seem to be following the lead of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on this important question.

We had the Franchise Act passed last year, which we were assured was introduced purely as a war measure, and which was passed with the approval of hon. members opposite, with the result that subsequently at the general elections the present Government were returned to power. Then we have the Women's Franchise Bill, which is being introduced this year, during war times, five years ahead of another election, but, of course, that is also a war measure; and this Daylight Saving Bill can also be considered to be a war measure for the reason that I have already mentioned.

With regard to our friends, the farmers, I have no sympathy at all with those gentlemen.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. JACOBS: We who live in the city, who are obliged to dwell in the city, when forced to pay extortionate prices for commodities produced by the farmers, how can they expect us to have any sympathy with them? I firmly believe that the reason they are opposing this daylight saving is because they imagine that when we in the cities utilize our little back yards we will come into competition with them and help to reduce the cost of living. Therefore, from whatever point of view you look at this question, I am sure that this House will not concur at all in the views of our friends the farmers, and will adopt the attitude of those of us who are obliged to live in the cities. They may say: "As we are not disturbing your red light, why disturb our daylight?" Perhaps some of the red lights in our district are patronized by a good many of the "daylight" gentlemen who come in from the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. JACOBS: I wish to say that I am heartily in support of the Bill, and I trust the hon. members on this side of the House will give their undivided support to it, because it is a Bill which ought to meet with the approval of all right-thinking and progressive men.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, the hon member for South York (Mr. Maclean) began his address this afternoon—in the course of which he discussed daylight saving, the railway situation, the war in Europe and several other minor matters—with a quotation, that those who go to bed early and rise early become wealthy and wise—

Early to bed and early to rise,
Makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that there ever was a saying which was a bigger lie than that one, at least, in its application to those who live in country districts, and who follow at least two of the suggestions contained in that proverb: they go to bed early and they rise early. Those whom we are pleased to designate as the backbone of the this country, at least once in every four years, immediately before the election, certainly as long as I have known or read of that old saw, have been in the habit of going to bed early and of rising early, and of working long hours, and while that custom may have added to their sum of wisdom, and though I am doubtful as to whether it has improved their health, I am very certain it did not add to their wealth.

I am also quite certain that hon. gentlemen in this House at various times, like the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Jacobs), who was complaining or whining, if I may use the word, about the high cost of living, never expressed any particular concern about the agriculturist or farmer who went to bed early and rose early and worked long hours, when he was only obtaining seven or eight cents a dozen for his eggs and, perhaps, fourteen or fifteen cents a pound for his butter. It has come to the time now when the farmer is getting a price for his eggs, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to sit up late at night and to introduce a Bill to regulate the weight in a dozen of eggs, a measure which will have the result of forcing the farmer to breed a type of hens whose output will weigh a pound and a half to the dozen, because under the Bill, the farmer will not be able to sell any eggs that weigh less than a pound and a half to the dozen.

Now, Sir, the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) informed the House, with due modesty, that he spent a part of each year in the country. I do not think daylight saving will affect the movements of the hon. member for Kingston in his farming operations during the time he spends in the country. You do not need to think he is supporting the Bill on that ground.

I want to ask this House seriously to consider one question. We have had a good deal said and written about greater production. The Government, acting in co-operation with the provincial governments, inaugurated last fall a greater production movement. They sent men through the country districts, asking the farmers to increase the amount of their acreage, to get ready a larger acreage for seeding in 1918, and to increase the amount of their live-stock, and, especially, to raise more hogs. The situation at present in the province of Ontario, at least in the part I come from, is this: that because our farmers cannot obtain to-day bran and shorts for the feeding of their hogs they are being compelled at the present time to feed some of the grain which they require for seeding this year. I have heard of no specific action on the part of the Government seeking to control those who handle these commodities, to prevent them from forcing the farmer, when he applies for two or three hundred of bran or shorts, to take at the same time an equal amount of flour, otherwise they will not give him the feed required for his stock. Therefore, while we have theoretical encouragement to the farmers and a great many lectures on greater production and all that sort of thing, when it comes down to actual practice it seems to me they get very little to encourage them.

Now, am I right or not in stating that during the season of 1917 the farmers of this country, to use a common expression, were up against it for getting labour; they found it exceedingly difficult to get help? It was harder for the farmer to get the necessary help to carry on his operations in 1917 than it was in 1916, and I venture to say it will be much harder for him to get the necessary help to carry on his operations in 1918 than it was last year. That is, I believe, a fact. Is not this also a fact?—that you increase the difficulty of the farmer to get the necessary help on his farm if you make conditions in the cities and towns so much more attractive than those conditions can possibly be made in the country districts.

The man in the country is up against the seven, eight or nine-hour movement which the labouring man demands in the cities and towns. The hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) speaks of two shifts on a farm. If the hon. gentleman does not know any more about farming than about other matters which he asks the House to experiment on we had better not follow his advice. I venture to say, if you were to put in small print what the hon. gentleman does not know about farming it would make a larger book than any now existing in this country between the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans. The hon. member talks glibly and theoretically of two shifts on a farm, when it is impossible to get sufficient men for one shift on a farm at the present time, and if he knows anything about the conditions in this country he ought to be aware of that fact.

I am free to admit that daylight saving is an attractive thing for people residing in cities and towns, and I do not blame those members who represent urban constituencies for supporting the Bill. If the enactment of the measure were for the general benefit of the whole country, I would say: Very good, let those who will not be benefited submit. But will it be in the general interest of the country? Do not the farming class compose the majority of the population of this country? When the Minister of Trade and Commerce refers to legislation similar to this having been adopted in England, France, Germany or Holland, I tell him that in my judgment the conditions here are not the same as in the countries enumerated, and therefore, that argument loses weight. The farming population form the majority in Canada, and I would ask whether any real attempt has been made to ascertain their opinion with regard to this measure which affects them so vitally, as everybody must admit. It is quite easy in cities and towns to judge the trend of popular sentiment and submit it to the Government through the medium of boards of trade, municipal councils and other organizations. It is not so easy to ascertain the views of the people living in the rural districts, and I am not so certain that we are at all times as anxious to ascertain their opinion as we should be. I honestly believe that if this Bill passes at the present time it will increase the difficulty which the farmer already has in getting that labour which is absolutely necessary to him if he is to carry on his production. Arguments that might be put forth under normal conditions fall to the ground at the present time, when a great war is raging. Whereas this Bill might be right and proper in normal times, I believe that at present, when the farmer is being urged to put forth every possible effort to produce all he can, it is not wise to do anything which will lessen his opportunity of getting the help he must secure if he is to produce what we are expecting and asking him to produce.

Reference has been made to what has been done in cities and towns in the way of cultivating back gardens. So much has been done in Port Arthur and Fort William, so much in the city of Toronto, and so much in the city of Kingston. Why, it reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of certain gentlemen who undertoook to give advice to the farmers in the matter of production, but who knew very little about the subject. They knew that potatoes were cut up and planted in order to secure a crop, and they thought the same thing applied to raising turnips; they thought you should slice up turnips and plant them and then you might expect a crop.

The farmers, Mr. Speaker, I need not say work early and late; and yet some people complain that they receive too much for what they produce at the present time. How many of those who complain about the price they have to pay for a bag of potatoes or a pound of butter have gone to the trouble of ascertaining how much their production cost the farmer? The consumer estimates the farmer's profits by the amount charged him for produce but ignores the fact that not only the farmer but his wife and every one of his children with unremitting toil have participated in the work of production. In the case of an article produced in a city factory you are told what the overhead charges were; so much capital was invested in the building and plant, and so much in the machinery, and all that sort of thing. It is figured out exactly how many people are required to produce that particular article and the amount the manufacturer should receive by way of profit. But in estimating what it costs the farmer to produce his crops the factors of expense to him are not taken into consideration at all. No regard is paid to the capital he invested or the money he has spent on machinery, or what earnings should be credited to himself and to his wife and family for their work. In my judgment, no matter what argument may be advanced in favour of adopting daylight saving, its enactment at this particular time will greatly increase the farmer's difficulty in obtaining help in order to carry on his operations. Believing that, and also believing that no real effort has been made to ascertain the opinions of the farming class, who form the majority of our population, I desire to express my opposition to this measure.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): The fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has again brought forward this year a Bill which he introduced last year is a great tribute to his tenacity, but I do not know that it is quite as strong a tribute to his political sagacity. I do not think that the Bill had a friend in the House last year except himself. The thing that strikes one most about the debate which has just taken place is the acute division of opinion between those dwelling in the country and those dwelling in towns. I myself have very grave doubts, under the circumstances in which the Bill received so little approval last year, followed by the circumstances in which the Bill produces such an acute division as that to which I have just referred this year, about the wisdom of the Government in having introduced the measure.

I was not impressed with the speech of my hon. friend the minister (Sir George Foster). It is not the first time that he has failed to impress me, but when he has a good case he can generally produce more convincing arguments. His main arguments were three in number. He produced an argument from precedent. His first precedent was that of Germany. That argument naturally did not commend itself to me. I think we should examine all precedents coming from that portion of the world with the utmost care. He joined with that argument, however, the precedent of the Old Country, and the same objection to following the precedent of Germany exists to following the precedent of the Old Country in this respect—which has just been pointed out by my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards)—that the conditions in Canada, because of the magnitude of the country, and because of other reasons which have been mentioned, are totally different from those of Great Britain. You have in the countries of Europe one time. Greenwich time prevails all over the United Kingdom. As to the precedent of the United States, it does not apply, because it does not exist. As far as I know the history of the question, this matter is only now being introduced into the United States, and, therefore, it has not been experimented with there, so that they can give no precedent, either for or against. Consequently, the argument which the minister presented from precedent falls absolutely to the ground.

His second argument was that this Bill in some way or another would tend to greater production. I did not gather that he meant greater production on the farm. If he meant that, I think he was wrong. If he referred to the backyard production in the cities, I do not know really that it is a wise thing to depart from the customs coming to us from time immemorial in the arrangement of our time for the sake of temporary production of a few onions and cabbages in the backyard. But why should this Bill be needed to promote backyard production in itself? If I lived in the city, I should find gardening most pleasant, as I find it in the country, in the earliest hours of daylight, and there is nothing in the present condition of our practice or law that would prevent these energetic agriculturists in the city from cultivating their backyards as early as they like. In that connection, may I say, with regard to this very question of home production, I am one of those whom the minister seems inclined to talk at a little, who are inclined to get guidance from Providence in this matter, and I think that if we want to learn to produce wisely, well and abundantly we cannot beat the sun. After all, the alteration of our clocks and the practices of our agriculturists are very small affairs in production, compared to the magnificent efforts of the sun. Mr. Speaker, I stand with the sun. May I say at this point that I stand with the sun to this extent: that I am as dispassionate a man as there is in this House on this question, and my experience is that where farming has been carried on with some success everyone rose with the sun and went to bed with the sun, and worked during the hours of the day when the sun was shining. To these gentlemen who are interested in production within cities, let me repeat the remark I made a little while ago, that if they will repeat my experiment their efforts will be attended with success. I recommended to my hon. friend from South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) who is a large landowner, if he is not a farmer, that if he would get up as early as the sun, and go to bed as late as the sun, he would find all the time he needed for production, if he had any time to spare from his journalistic and political work. With regard to some kinds of production on the farm, this innovation will produce very serious disadvantages. There is a great deal in the argument we have heard from farmers about making hay with the dew lying on the hay. There is a great deal of strength in that argument, and a great deal of strength in the argument we heard from the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Boyce) and hon. gentlemen from other constituencies.

The third argument of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, I think, was that this Bill afforded greater opportunity for leisure and open-air exercise. That is surely a very far-fetched argument. Every man in this House, whether he lives in the town or in the country, has twenty-four hours every day he lives. He has all the sunshine that is coming to him in the part of the world in which he lives. He has the whole of the forty miles of atmosphere that rises above us all, and all that he needs to do is to get up early enough, and stay up late enough, to take advantage of it. That is the speech of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I may say that that argument has not been upset. It has been well said, if any hon. gentleman did say it, but I am not aware that I made such an argument.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: I took down the words in regard to open-air exercise, and so on, as the hon. Minister spoke, but my hearing may be bad and my writing may also be bad.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I did not refute it.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Then I am satisfied that my statement needs no further confirmation, because it is accepted by the hon. minister. I took down his words as he uttered them, and I was very close to him.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It does not matter.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Having produced the condition in the mind of the Minister that at least some of his arguments are wrong, I think I will leave what has been said in support of the Bill, and offer a little more briefly my objections. My first objection has been hinted at on the other side of the House, although I do not understand why the objection should have come from my hon. friend who used it, because I understand he is supporting the Bill. I do not think it is wise unduly to increase the number of war measures. In other words, I do not think it is wise, I think it is unwise, to increase, without a very definite benefit in view, the number of laws that have to be enforced, even in war time, because if we pass a Bill we are going to enforce it. That, I think, will appeal to any citizen of a democratic country, and I am bound to repeat that the arguments by which this measure has been supported in this House this afternoon certainly did not seem to me to make the change so assuredly beneficial as that we should add it to the list of these war-time measures or measures partaking almost of the nature of autocracy. One can understand the ease with which such a measure can be introduced in Germany, but I do not think we should unwisely increase the number of such measures in this country.

My second objection is a moral objection. I believe that early rising is a virtue. There are differences of opinion about that. The most distinguished opponent of that view is the famous British literary essayist, the beautiful writer, Charles Lamb, who demonstrated, of course, with all his particular wit and ability, the follies of rising in the morning; but I believe early rising is a virtue, and if gentlemen differ on the subject, that is another argument against the passage of the Bill. Clearly, if there be acute difference of opinion in regard to early rising, then we should let people lie in bed if they want to do so—governments should, in any event. But if it is a virtue to get up early or to go to bed late, that is a question that on the whole men and women would do well to settle for themselves. My hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) does not have much use for the old proverb: "Early to bed, early to rise, makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise." I am pretty certain about the health; I am pretty certain about the wisdom, for many of the men who have got very wise have read much, and read early in the morning. And about the wealth, if early rising does not lead to a quantity of wealth, in the case of the farmer—and here I am sure my hon. friend from Frontenac will not disagree with me—it is well-gotten wealth anyway, and I would rather have one well-gotten dollar than ten badly-gotten dollars. Therefore, there is very much to be said for the statement that a dollar made in the early hours of the day is worth ten dollars made at a later hour. But my point is this: that unless there is some good and solid reason for this change, it is a matter that ought to be left to be settled by the individual, whether it be a moral practice to rise early in the morning or not.

My third objection is one that has not been taken any notice of, so far as I know, during the debate, and I have listened to the discussion with extreme care. In Great Britain and Ireland there is one time, Greenwich time, that applies to the whole country. You have the same thing in France and in Germany. In this country we have a great deal of difficulty, owing to the size of the country, to adapt ourselves to the operations of the sun. As every hon. gentleman in this House knows, we have to change our clocks to a certain extent now so as to get on reasonable terms with the sun. We have to divide our country into sections. The practical difficulties of that are great enough, but this Bill, so far as I can understand it, proposes to make the difficulty greater by altering the time still further an hour as between the clock and the sun. What will be the effect of that? I do not know whether this question has been argued in the House of Representatives where they seemed to carry the Bill so easily. At the eastern edge of each section, people are rising one hour before the sun's time now.

An hon. MEMBER: About half an hour.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Nearly an hour. I never like to err on the side of extreme statements, but if you alter the time an hour in each section, at the eastern edge the people are rising an hour before the sun's time. If this measure becomes law, you will increase by another hour those difficulties which have been spoken of. You will increase a difficulty which is already a real, practical difficulty in the life of the people in this country. That is why I said to begin with that the precedent of Great Britain carries me no distance whatever. Our conditions are different from those in Great Britain, and this particular condition introduces a very great practical difficulty into this question. As a matter of personal experience I may say that the making of hay on my own farm, which happens to be near the western end of the section, has to be postponed every day, and in the case of the people who live in the eastern part of the section in which I live, they will have to postpone the commencement of their real day's work still further, and a very great difficulty will be placed in the way of hay-making and other matters. Mr. Speaker, I have practically nothing more to say, and I do not need to ask you to suppose it is six o'clock to make an expeditious change in the time, as this Bill is proposing to do. I hope the Government is not staking its fate on this measure. I am anxious, at least, to give the new Government a trial, and I should not like them to fall upon a question upon which they had a good deal of guidance as to public opinion last year. If they do stake their fate upon the measure, then I shall have to do what one vote will do to put them out of power.

At six o'clock, the House took recess

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL.

WESTERN POWER COMPANY OF CANADA, LIMITED.

Mr. F. B. STACEY (Westminster District) moved the second reading of Bill No. 10, to enable the Western Power Company of Canada, Limited, to own and operate the railway of the Western Canada Power Company, Limited. He said: In moving the second reading of this Bill I have only a very few words to offer. I understand that by previous legislation the Western Canada Power Company, Limited, reorganized under the name of the Western Power Company of Canada, Limited. The original company had power to operate a certain short railway, and in the reorganization, by some omission, this railway was not included. The object of this Bill is to grant the new company power to operate the railway that was operated by the previous company.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who are the directors of the company?

Mr. STACEY: I cannot say offhand, but the manager's name is Mr. William McNeil.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

[Mr. M. Clark.]

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

Consideration of the motion of Sir George Foster for the second reading of Bill No. 4, to provide for the time in Canada being in advance of the solar mean time during the summer months, resumed.

Mr. A. R. McMASTER (Brome): In listening to the debate on this interesting Bill this afternoon, I was struck with one important fact. I had thought that when the Government brought down a Bill, that Bill crystallized the united wisdom of the party which the Government represented on that subject, and I was somewhat surprised, Mr. Speaker, to see that the heaviest attacks upon the Bill came from gentlemen sitting on your right hand. There were some remarks made about the Bill which I think require some consideration. There was that argument in favour of the Bill that by advancing the clocks of this country one hour, we should succeed in raising the moral tone of this country—"the moral uplift," I believe were the words employed by one of the speakers this afternoon. I am as anxious as any one to see the moral tone of this country raised, but I should imagine that if that could be obtained by any form of procedure such as this, moral reformers long ago would have set forward the clock many hours. I have the honour, although I practice law in Montreal, to represent an agricultural community. I wish to see production increased, and if this Bill in my opinion would increase production, I would lend whatever force my voice had in its support. But, not being a practical farmer, like a good lawyer I am governed by the opinions of those who know better than myself; I have reference to authority, which is what lawyers do when they have a difficult question to consider. Now I should take it that the informed agricultural authority of this House is expressed by the agriculturists who have spoken from the different provinces of this Dominion against the Bill this afternoon, and therefore I think it would be unwise at this time to pass it. If a vote is taken on this Bill, although I am as anxious as any one to have production increased, as the information which lies before me is that it will not increase but decrease production, I shall be obliged to vote against it.

Mr. P. R. Du TREMBLAY (Laurier-Outremont): I do not intend to make any lengthy remarks on this Bill, as I think the ground has been pretty well covered by hon. gentlemen this afternoon. I do not see how this Bill would affect the farmers.

The fact is, farmers rise early in the morning anyway; they begin work at five or six o'clock, so I do not see how this Bill would help or harm them. It would rather affect the people in the cities.

It would be a good improvement, especially for the labourers living in the cities, if this measure became law. It would give them an hour in the afternoon to get a rest, especially in the summer time. I understand that this principle has been accepted by the union men of the city of Quebec. I would have liked very much to have had some more information from the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) this afternoon as to whether the labour unions in Canada have been asked what they think about this question and what they say as to the wisdom of passing this Bill. For the reasons which I have stated, I shall support the Bill. It is an advanced movement on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and not merely an advance of an hour in the time. It is certainly not in accordance with the ordinary policy of the right hon. gentleman. Probably this will be one of the few opportunities given to me to support one of his measures. However, on this question, I think I would well represent the interests of my people by giving my vote for this Bill.

Mr. J. ALFRED LEDUC (Westmount-St. Henry): Mr. Speaker, amongst my constituents there is a large number of people employed in industrial establishments and also in offices and banks. The adoption of this system would give them the advantage of rising a little earlier in the morning and would enable them to conclude the day's work an hour earlier in the evening. As probably some of you are aware, Westmount is called the little Ontario. The people of Westmount are cultivating all the land that is available for that purpose and the daylight saving scheme will give them an opportunity of devoting more time to the production of food. I think I am safe in saying that the working classes in the industrial part of my constituency are in favour of a system which would give them two or more hours of leisure in the evening. I am not disposed to say anything further on the matter because I think the features of this measure have been fairly well discussed and explained. I am of the opinion that the farmers should harvest their crops in the afternoon and work at something else in the earlier hours of the day. I am sure they will be able to do it just as well as the people in the cities are.

Mr. WILLIAM D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the Daylight Saving Bill now before the House appears to have been made the occasion of something of a field day for the new members of the House. Being a new member myself I would ask your indulgence to discuss very briefly the merits of this proposition, which has engaged the interest and the attention of the people of the constituency from which I come. That has been the case from the time that, six or seven years ago, a former member of this House from the county of Huron now, I believe, a member of the judiciary, first introduced a Bill to this effect. I noticed that the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), during the course of his remarks this afternoon, addressed himself almost entirely to the members on his own side of the House. I took it as rather a compliment to this side of the House inasmuch as I quite appreciated, what he probably thought, that it perhaps required a little more effort to bring the light to members on the other side of the House than to members on this side.

I have always found it difficult in the last few years to appreciate the objections which have been raised to the principle of the Daylight Saving Bill. I listened this afternoon to some of the members of the House from rural constituencies, and while I admit the argument which they put forth made some impression upon my mind, I am still quite unconvinced that the disadvantages which they mentioned in any sense counterbalance the most decided advantages which are bound to result from the enactment of this Bill. It seems to me that Canada, which never lags behind in anything, ought to get into step with the other countries in the world in regard to this matter. The Daylight Saving Bill is based on one definite principle as I see it, a principle that everybody must recognize—that for our different working activities daylight is undeniably preferable to darkness. I believe every hon. member of the House will grant that. The question then arises as to the method by which the daylight which we now waste early in the day can best be made available in the interest of the people. This Bill proposes to transfer one hour of daylight, now wasted by most of us in bed, from the morning to the other end of the day. Some hon. members state that we can utilise the daylight, that we can remedy the evil, if there be an evil, just as well by each one of us individually rising earlier in the morning if we so desire. But I contend that the advantage and usefulness of this Bill will be almost entirely negatived unless the change is brought forward in such a way that the principle is adopted by every one. The man who rises an hour earlier in the morning in the absence of the enactment of this Bill will find that he can do very little unless his neighbour is also up at the same time so that he may be enabled to do business with him; otherwise, he might as well remain in bed himself.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) raised the point that it would be quite possible for us to use the hours of daylight without the enactment of a Bill. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not care to put my opinion against that of some of the experienced members of this House, but I believe that the chief reason why this Bill should pass is based upon the fact that we are all creatures of habit. To-day, practically all our activities are confined to certain definite hours. We rise, retire, go to business, go to church and to the theatre at a certain fixed hour. Children go to school at a certain fixed hour. In fact, all our waking activities are based on a certain definite system based on the clock, and it has become a fixed habit with us to do that. Now, the waking activities of all of us are so inter-related that, in order to secure the greatest amount of efficiency, it is necessary that we also co-ordinate those activities, which is absolutely impossible, I contend, except by some such definite system as is fixed by the clock. Now, here is the point to my mind: this habit of working, or playing if you like, according to the hours of the clock is a constant one. The hours which we have for rising, retiring, playing, going to meals, or going to church, or for any other activity in which we may engage, are the same in winter as in summer, in fall as in spring. During the winter no object could be gained by changing the hands of the clock, because the hours of daylight in winter are so short that we already use in our daily activities all of the daylight which we have during the winter hours. But as the spring advances our habits remain the same; we still do everything according to the hours of the clock; but the balance otherwise is disturbed. The sun does not rise at the same hour; the balance is gradually disturbed; and as the sun advances we find that we are wasting in bed hours of daylight, and using at the conclusion of the day, for the purpose of pleasure or business, as the case may be, for at least our waking activities, the hours of darkness at the other end of the day.

Now, the practical effect of moving the hands of the clock forward one hour in the spring is, as my hon. friend from George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) said of Joshua, that we actually make the sun, not to stand still, but to rise one hour later and to set one hour later, so that we find in the morning, instead of attempting to sleep during the hour of daylight, that we have the darkness during which to take our rest, which is the proper time, and at the conclusion of the day, we have until nine or nine-thirty for our daylight activities. The man who has formerly had to lay down his work, his spade or rake if engaged at production, will find that he can work until nine-thirty, and so on. It is unnecessary to dwell at any length on the advantages that will arise from this practice; they will occur to almost every man.

But I do believe this, that hon. members have, perhaps, allowed themselves to be influenced rather too much by the objections that have been raised to the Bill than by the many manifest advantages to be gained by its enactment. Practically the only objection that I think carries any weight is the one advanced first by the hon. member from the city of Chatham (Mr. McCoig), and that is on account of the farming interests. I have, of course, heard the objection that has been raised, that it was undignified to interfere with the clock. Well, to paraphrase a biblical saying, the clock was made for man and not man for the clock. About a year ago I read a report on the subject taken from an English publication, and practically the only objection that was made there, and which I think you will all fully appreciate, was made by a gentleman who stated that he could not see why anybody should want to do away with the beautiful electric light, and it turned out that he was a director of the electric light company. The one valid objection—I think it is not a very strong one—is on the part of the farming community. The statement is made that, if the hours of work conclude one hour earlier under this Bill the men who are hired for farm work will quit that much earlier, and the interests of production will suffer. Well, I am quite ready to take the word of the men who state that this is apt to occur; but so far as my experience of the farm goes—and I still think that it obtains—or, at least, I think it still obtains in the part of the province from which I come—the farmers do not govern themselves by the clock at all. They get up with the sun and they do not go to bed with the sun. They work in the fields until the sun sets and then they do the chores afterwards. So I do not think it will affect the farmer to the degree that, perhaps, we have been led to believe. In any case, Mr. Speaker, it is well worth while trying the experiment. I believe there is no doubt whatever that the advantages that will follow the enactment of this Bill will outweigh any of its disadvantages. And if we do find that, during the course of the year, the disadvantages are very serious, the House can repeal the Bill next year.

Mr. WILLIAM SMITH (South Ontario): I do not desire to waste a great deal of time over this Bill, but it appears to me, as an old member of this House, and representing the interests that I do in the county of Ontario, that I should say a few words. And in my remarks to-night I may make some statements that may not have the sympathy altogether of the members of this Government. And allow me to say this at the outset; when I say that I am not asking from this Government or from anybody in this country any particular favours—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SMITH: I stand by myself and by myself alone.

Some hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. SMITH: When I say that it does appear to me that this Government, or the hon. minister who is introducing this question, has not consulted one of the great interests of this country, and that is the farmers of Canada. And when I say that, looking back over the past—not including the years when the Conservative party have been in power, but back of that—and trying to look into the future, I cannot see for the life of me where the farmers are going to get a great many favours from this Government. Now, looking back I cannot find where the farmers have been for a moment considered, and looking into the future I do not expect that they are going to be considered. And when I say that, I do it for two reasons. In the first place, I do not expect any consideration from this Government; and, in the next place, I do not want it. This Bill, as I understand it, affects in a general way the people of Canada. It has been considered outside of our country, in the country to the south of us, and in the Mother Country. In the United States they have taken it into their serious consideration and have adopted it. The Mother Country has done likewise. But there are conditions in both of these countries very different from what we find in Canada. Now, we have just as much daylight to-day as we had when I was a boy, and that is a good many years ago. We have just as much daylight to-day as we had a hundred years ago, and we are going to change our course out of consideration for this Government. I will repeat that we are enjoying as much daylight to-day as we ever did. I happen to be one of the few members of this House directly interested in agriculture. My life has been spent upon the farm, and if adequate reasons could be given why we should change our method of living I should be quite prepared to do so. But, in view of the experience of the past, I can see no reason why we should adopt the procedure recommended here. We are being told that we should be able to produce more. Take my own farm for example. In whose time are my men going to make this production? They will get this extra time, and the next morning they will return to duty after having done their best work for themselves. During the last ten years I have been a fairly close observer of agricultural matters. A comparison has been made to-day between the work done in the morning and that done in the evening. There can be no question but that there is a great difference. We have in the spring a certain amount of frost and a certain amount of rain. We cannot go on in the early morning with certain farm work, and yet we are being told that there must be greater production. How is it going to be done? The best hour in the whole 24 is that between five and six o'clock in the evening, which is going to be cut off. Do you mean to tell me that my farm employees living near towns of considerable size, are going to do as I tell them? Will you tell them, "You must continue your work," and expect them to obey implicitly? No, they are going to spend the hour at their disposal in the town, and yet this precious Government of ours is asking us for greater efforts towards increased production. I do not think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) has taken the advice of the farmers of the country in respect to the introduction of this legislation. I know what their opinion is, and I say unhesitatingly and advisedly, that you cannot find a farmer in the whole country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, who desires this change to be made. You often hear the statement, "The greatest good for the greatest number." Is this legislation likely to result in the realization of that idea? There have been times in the last ten years when it was quite impossible to turn a wheel upon the land in the morning. Rain had soaked the ground so thoroughly that machinery would not turn upon it, but later in the day, between five and six o'clock, that difficulty disappeared. With such a restriction as is proposed here, how will it be at all possible to carry out the enhanced production so strongly urged? I am just as strong an advocate that the farmers of Canada shall take their proper position and pay their fair proportion of taxation as anybody, but I say to the hon. gentleman who has introduced this Bill, "For heaven's sake leave the farmers alone." I admit the farmers do not know everything, but they are thoroughly conversant with their own business, and no outsider can tell them what is best to do. If the hon. gentleman is determined to force this measure upon the House and upon the country, he may find out in the course of time that whilst the farmers of Canada have been hewers of wood and drawers of water, they are not going to continue in that humiliating position forever. I tell the Minister of Trade and Commerce that, great as he may deem this Bill to be and much as it may be in the interest of some people in this country, he may find later on that all those people who have been doing things for the Union Government may pull back the stake.

Mr. D. SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I have followed with a good deal of interest the debate which has so far taken place on this Bill, and more especially the arguments which the Minister of Trade and Commerce advanced in his usual masterly manner in its support. I had not intended to say anything on the question, although I have my own opinion with regard to it. I come from a constituency which is very evenly divided as to rural and urban population, and I have not received a request from anyone in that constituency, either last year or during the present year, to support or oppose such a measure. I have been very much impressed by the arguments made by those who favour the Bill. I cannot help but feel that there has been some deception practised, if I may use the term, in favour of the adoption of this Bill. Reference has been made to the statement of Mr. Gompers in the United States when he gave the true version as to why there was such a strong desire for a Bill of this nature, which was that the people would have greater opportunities for leisure and outdoor exercise. Any one who has closely observed the people who are agitating for the enactment of this measure realizes that their anxiety is not so much to increase the production of the country at the present time as it is for greater opportunity to enjoy themselves. The agitation is being waged by those who are anxious to have greater opportunities for bowling, tennis, motoring and things of that nature. These people speak about the desirability of daylight saving and the advantages of summer time. If you could increase the length of summer time I would heartily favour such a measure; that is to say, if a month could be taken off the winter and added to the summer, but I cannot see that the argument has any foundation whatever. I do not see that such an arrangement is going to effect the saving of daylight in any particular. But what I am alarmed about is: At this particular time when we ought to look at questions soberly and realize the seriousness of the conditions which confront us, when we hear about people in the Old Land having to draw in their belts,—and they are prepared to do it,—we must realize that production in this country is the most important problem that is facing our people to-day. Those who are not physically fit to take up arms and beat the enemy should devote their entire energies towards increasing production in this country, because, judging from what is taking place on the Western front, we must not be at all surprised if this conflict rages for years and years to come. Is it a time for leisure and sport? No. It is a time to look on the question soberly and consider what the effect will be. Why is it we have been agitating our minds for years past as to why there was a movement from the country to the city? People say that those in the country labour too long, and that advantages are lost, and, therefore, the people will not remain there. The hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Smith) points out what will happen with regard to employees when they find the people of the neighbouring towns out playing tennis, bowling, and so forth. Can you expect these men to stay on the farms and increase the production of the country under these conditions? People say: "Look what we will grow in towns and cities if we have more time to ourselves after the day is over." That is all very well. The hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Hocken) says it is estimated they can raise a million dollars worth of food products there. I have lived in Toronto for several years, and my observation was that the man who grew vegetables did most of the work early in the morning, and not in the evening. In the evening he was prepared to rest. You will find that is the case in the towns and cities throughout the country. The man who raises vegetables, to meet the requirements of the people, does it in the morning when it is cool. I do not believe there is any force in that argument at all. I believe the effect will not be good. I do not think that this is a time to introduce freakish legislation. It will be time enough, if it is demonstrated in other countries that this is a good measure, to introduce it at some future time; the Lord knows we have enough to do at the present time.

Mr. S. F. GLASS (East Middlesex): When this question was before the House last year I felt it my duty, in the interest of those I represent, to oppose it. If I were asked the reason why I opposed it then, and the reason why I now oppose it, I would admit that, aside from the interest of the constituents whom I represent, I would find some difficulty in answering. But, Sir, I want to say that the hon. members of this House who have discussed the attitude of the farmers of this country have spoken in entire accord with the experience of the people of my own district. Every township council, every county organization, all the organizations of the district which are in session for the purpose of considering the interests of agriculturists, have expressed their opposition to this Bill. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member from Kitchener (Mr. Euler), and I was led to conclude, after hearing his remarks, and the remarks of other members who represent what might be called industrial constituencies, that there is a line of demarcation or division on this question, and that those who represent the interests of agriculture are opposed to the scheme, and those who represent sections of the country which have industrial concerns are in favour of it. But I also find that, so far as labour is concerned, there is by no means unanimity with reference to it, because only last week, in the city of London, one of the labour organizations placed on record its opposition to this Bill. The county council of Middlesex met last Saturday afternoon, the time fixed by the province of Ontario for all county councils throughout the province to meet, to take seriously into consideration the need of unusual effort to stimulate greater production this year, and advocated the very principles enunciated by my hon. friend the member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) and the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Smith), that it simply meant, so far as they were concerned, that they could not possibly achieve the best results in production if the time were changed. I asked a farmer in my district, when I was last at home, "What is the objection of the farmers to this Bill," because I wanted to be enlightened, and he said, as the hon. gentleman from South Ontario also said, that the very best hours of the day for the farmer are those between five and seven at night, the very hours the measure proposes to cut out and for which they will substitute the hours in the morning. By cutting out those two hours you are taking away more than would be represented by three or four hours of the morning, because in the early morning hours, as has been stated, the ground is not fit for operation, the heavy dew preventing any work in harvesting at that early hour. He also said that farmers, have to look, to an extent, to assistance from industrial labour in order to give greater production, and the organized labour men who come out to the country to assist the farmers have certain regulated hours, and notwithstanding the fact that they are assisting in the production of the country, they make their hours of labour conform largely to the regulations that govern labour unions in cities and towns. I think we are taking away from the farmer a valuable space of time for which we give him no equivalent. The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) has pointed out the absurdity of "daylight saving." There is no saving of daylight whatever. This was tried in London two years ago. It was brought forth as a very desirable measure and had the support of the board of trade and the city council, and the citizens were unanimously behind the proposition and wished to try it out. They experimented with it for about two months, and they were so tired of it that every labour union and every organization which had asked to have this proposition introduced, with equal force opposed it and asked for its repeal, and it was repealed in midsummer. That is the condition that prevailed two years ago. I am ready to admit that in the United States, in industrial centres, there is a strong sentiment amongst labour unions and a class of labour men that this change is desirable. It only shows that there is a difference of opinion amongst that class as well as amongst the members of this House, but I think I am right in saying that there is absolutely no doubt about the opposition to this Bill in all parts of the Dominion of Canada so far as the farming interests are concerned. I cannot support this measure in justice and in deference to the opinion of the people whom I represent here. Every organization in the district which I represent which is interested in agriculture has placed itself on record as opposed to this Bill, and I have more letters from all parts of my district expressing opposition to this measure than I have had in respect to any other measure presented in this House.

It is natural that we should have differences of opinion in this House. Personally, I cannot see how it is going to make a great deal of difference to the labouring man or to the agriculturist if this measure is passed. The farmer works from sunrise to sunset in any event. But there is this point which was made by the person to whom I referred. This farmer opposed this measure for the reason that under the changed conditions that exist at the present time a great deal of industrial labour is being forced out on to the farms and a great deal of industrial labour is also going voluntarily on to the farms, and an endeavour is being made to organize industrial labour so as to let as much as possible get out on the farms to help production. The farmer makes a strong point there, namely, that this labour, which has certain regulations governing the hours of toil in industrial centres, will want to be governed by the same regulations when it goes to the country. From that point of view the farmer naturally sees a very strong reason to oppose the Bill.

I regret very much that I was not in the House to listen to the remarks made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in favour of the Bill, but last year he introduced a similar Bill which was thoroughly discussed on that occasion, and I find that the nature of the opposition to it to-day is the same as it was a year ago. So far as the farm interests are concerned, there is a prejudice and an opposition to the Bill that cannot be overcome.

Mr. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria City): I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion that has taken place this afternoon and evening. I feel that, representing a city constituency, I must support the measure. It will be of tremendous advantage to all workers in cities to have an extra hour of sunshine and fresh air in the evening. In the city of Ottawa alone it will affect thousands of people who have to put in the greater part of the day inside buildings where they do not get any sunshine. Under those conditions I think it will be very beneficial, particularly so when we find that such diseases as tuberculosis and others are prevalent in the country. As a farmer and stock man I can see no real objection to this measure from the farmer's standpoint. I am speaking now particularly of the Pacific Coast section. If the farmer will use a little judgment in handling his help, he will easily overcome any little arguments that to-day have been presented against this measure. I was very much interested in what was said by the hon. member who wished to have his summer extended. I can advise him if he will go to the city of Victoria he will have no difficulty in having it extended several months.

Mr. F. N. McCREA (Sherbrooke): Having been born and brought up on a farm, and still having some knowledge of farming, because whilst not a farmer, I am connected with a concern that does a great deal of farming, stock raising and so on, being the representative of a city constituency and also being quite a large employer of help, I think I speak on this subject with some knowledge. After listening to the speeches this afternoon and evening, I am puzzled to know what special advantage is to be derived from this measure or what great good it is going to do to anybody. It is said that if the clock is moved forward an hour, a great benefit will accrue to the labouring classes, the people of the cities in particular. Listening to the addresses which have been delivered on this subject to-day, I have noticed that practically every man who represents a city district is in favour of the Bill, whilst those representing the rural districts and farming communities are opposed to it. Evidently, the city people are in favour of the Bill. It would be well for the residents of the cities to utilise the time they have now as the clock stands, and instead of getting to their business at nine or ten o'clock in the morning, to get up a little earlier and make use of the time between seven and nine o'clock. In many of the large cities you cannot find a man to do business with practically before ten o'clock in the morning. If the saving of daylight is going to be of so much benefit to the residents of the cities, let them show their good faith by using the daylight as it now exists and the clock as it now stands. Whether the clock is moved forward an hour or backward an hour, I do not think it will make any material difference to the farmer, his wife, sons or daughters, because the farmer generally gets up as soon as the sun rises and his family get up with him, and they are busy from that time until the sun sets. It will, however, make a very material difference to the help employed by the farmer. This matter has been very thoroughly explained, and I think every man who has any knowledge of farming understands that in the early morning you cannot do to advantage the greater part of the work on the farm. The dew is then on the ground, so that the ground is wet, and weeding or anything of that kind cannot be done to such great advantage as in the heat of the day when, if you cut weeds, they will be immediately killed off by the heat of the sun's rays instead of sprouting again. The farmer's help, if the clock is moved forward one hour and six o'clock is called seven, will in the majority of cases not be found on the job at what is supposed to be seven o'clock. When five o'clock comes, or six o'clock according to the new time, that will be quitting time with him, and the farmer will find it very difficult to have him continue his work, especially if he sees his comrades and friends, who are labouring in the cities or on other jobs outside of farming, leaving their work, putting on their ball clothes and going to the ball field or bowling alley or some other place of amusement. Thus, the men on the farms and the farmers' sons will begin to be restless. At this particular time when the farmer and every other man who produces is being admonished, advised, coaxed, persuaded to produce more, if we want the farmer to produce, we must give him the best part of the day for the work of production, and in harvesting or haying or practically any other work on the farm, the hour from five to six o'clock in the evening is worth more than the two hours from six to eight o'clock in the morning. Under any circumstances, the legislation passed by this Parliament should, at all times, have a tendency to attract men to the farms. We have heard the admonition given to the young men to go back to the land. If we are to get them back to the land, the best way to get them there is to make the land attractive, and if by legislation you make the hours of labour from six o'clock in the morning to five o'clock in the evening, you will find it will be very difficult to keep help on the farm. It is said that by his method of putting the clock forward one hour, there is going to be a great deal of cultivation in the backyard; that the citizens are going to flood this country with their production. I did a little of that myself last year, and I did not have great success.

9 p.m.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: You are a poor farmer.

Mr. McCREA: The ground was well cultivated, but the season was against us and we did not succeed. It is a fact that some men in the cities who have ground to cultivate will cultivate it, but for one man in the city who uses his spare time after five o'clock in the production of food you will find nine men going to some place of amusement, and I doubt very much if this extra spare time will be conducive to their physical, intellectual or moral welfare. I can see no advantage in this measure, and if it is the joint production of the best brains and ability of the Union Government I have not much hope of what will follow. If this measure becomes law, I believe it will be detrimental in a very great degree to the farming community, and it will be of no benefit to the city people except to give them a little more time in which to do less work. For instance, I, as an employer of labour, know this: that if a man who works from six in the morning till five in the afternoon spends the evening from five to eight o'clock working for himself, no doubt harder than he works for me, he will come back to-morrow not as good a man as if he had not done that, and the consequence is that he is not giving value to his employer; but only a very few of them do employ their evenings that way. I am safe in saying that 90 per cent of the working class in the cities will not be engaged in backyard cultivation. I believe the Government are sincere and anxious to have production increased, but I think they would make a serious mistake if by any legislation they hampered the efforts of the farming community to increase the production of supplies that are so urgently needed.

Mr. H. H. STEVENS: I had not intended to say anything on this Bill, but the observations of my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. McCrea) lead me to say a few words. He states that one of the main reasons why he is opposing this Bill is that if it is passed the labouring men of this country may be guilty of the crime of going home and enjoying themselves working in their garden, and perhaps coming back the next day less able to carry out the arduous day's work which their employer is demanding. If a good reason were wanted in support of the Bill, that one of my hon. friend is an excellent one, namely, that it would give the labouring men of the industrial centres a little more daylight which they could spend with their families or enjoying themselves in their gardens.

There are just three phases of this question which appeal to me. First, in considering the arguments put forward against the Bill I find that they are restricted almost entirely to the farming community, and I find that the opinion of the farmers' representatives in this House is divided about equally, about as many supporting the Bill as are opposed to it. On the other hand, you will find supporting the Bill representatives of the following classes: first, the artisan class, and while I fully appreciate that the farming community deserve every consideration, I do not think they deserve any more consideration than the artisans, who also have a perfect right to be represented here, and their representatives say that this Bill will benefit the artisan class. Then there is the clerical class, which class, I think, has less representation than any other in the public bodies of this country; I mean the claims of the great army of persons working in offices, in large departmental and smaller stores in the cities, who are confined very often in air that is not too good. This class is certainly entitled to as much of God's sunlight as any other class, and this Bill will benefit that class to a very large extent. Then there is the business man, who will go out and play his game of golf or bowls—a comparatively small class, but deserving of representation. Then there is the domestic class—the women who have to stay at home and do the cooking for the artisans and the clerks and the business men. Surely they are entitled to consideration. We have, therefore, the representatives of these various classes supporting the Bill, and opposed to it a divided class, namely, the farmers. Another argument, advanced by my hon. friend from South Oxford, I think, was that this was freakish legislation; it was quite time for Parliament to consider such legislation, he said, when it had proved a success elsewhere. Accepting that challenge, I would direct his attention to France, Great Britain, and the United States, our leading Allies, in all of which countries daylight saving has been adopted, not to mention other countries. That is a reason in itself why we should adopt this measure. It will undoubtedly benefit a very large section of the community; it may, granting that the arguments are correct, work some disadvantage to another class, but it seems to me that the advantages of the Bill outweigh the disadvantages, and I therefore intend to support it.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. ALPHONSE VERVILLE (St. Denis): I have heard the arguments pro and con given in this House this afternoon, and I have seen that the two big factors in the country are really divided in their opinion. We have heard a good deal about farmers and production, but we must also bear in mind that the large industries of the country must also produce. The farmers are doing their utmost to increase production. Whenever there has been a change in the hours of labour for the artisans in the city or the workers on the farm, the same old question always came up. It arose when farm labourers were working from sunrise to sundown, and it came up again when the hours on the farm and in industries were changed from twelve to eleven and then again when the hours were changed to ten. But in spite of this reduction of working hours, production did not diminish. This is largely due to the labour-saving devices that have been introduced; it now takes less labour to produce a given amount on the farm or in the factory, and also less time to produce that amount. Daylight saving means much more to a large section of the community than simply saving daylight. Economy has been preached in this House by the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce as well as the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers). This Daylight Saving Bill will be the means, perhaps, of effecting a great saving. In the matter of lighting alone this would mean a saving, taking the number of families we have in Canada, of over $5,000,000. Figure it up in any other way you like and you will find that it is going to save a large amount of money not only to the artisans in the cities but also to the farming community. I do not want to look at this question from the artisan's standpoint alone. My hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) this afternoon defended the farmer and showed to the House that farmers were placed at a disadvantage because of the manner in which they have to sell their goods. He forgot, perhaps, that it is not the farmer, and that it is not the consumer in the city, who is responsible. The farmer, I know, is not getting enough for the goods he is producing, and I know also that the consumer in the city is paying very much more than he should for the goods he consumes. Stop, if you can, the middlemen, the men who are living on the work of the producers, the parasites who are using other people's labour and thriving on other people's industry. Stop them if you can. Let us deal as directly as possible with the farmer, and if we do he will get higher prices. Then he can afford to accept this daylight saving proposal. You can only extract a certain amount of work from any man whether he works on the farm or anywhere else. There is a certain amount of productive power in each man, and you can extract so much of that productive power and no more. Be it from six in the morning until five at night, or from seven in the morning until six at night, you are going to extract from him the same productive power exactly.

It has been stated this afternoon that there are times of the day when you cannot take the crop in. That may only last four or five weeks in the Fall, and if that is so it is not an objection to this change. You may call this proposal radical if you like. We will perhaps, before the end of the present session, have introduced some measures that will be considered radical by hon. members on the other side of the House; and some of these hon. gentlemen shrink from anything that appears radical. I hope we shall. As far as I am concerned, these measures will never be too radical for me. I am here to support any measure that may come before this House to alleviate, to as large an extent as possible, many of the sorrows which oppress people in the cities and in the country, and which many hon. members in this House may know of, but which, unfortunately, some of them ignore. Perhaps hon. members from the larger cities do not ignore them, although no doubt some of them do. I am satisfied that this Daylight Saving Bill will be of advantage to the labouring classes. I want to make it possible for a workman, when he goes home, to at least know what colour his children are as a result of being able to see them by daylight, and I want him to have an opportunity of taking a little stroll around the streets with his family. There are some industries to-day operated in such a way, even in the summertime, that the fathers of families, being obliged to travel long distances in order to reach their work and to return to their homes, are only able to see their children on holidays and Sundays. I believe this Bill is a good measure and that it should be approved by this House. Let us try it.

Mr. T. M. M. TWEEDIE (West Calgary): Mr. Speaker, in the city of Calgary they experimented with daylight saving for a certain time and, judging from the results, it was not a success. The failure of the plan in the city of Calgary was due to various causes rather than to any inherent disadvantage in connection with the principle of daylight saving. There is a large surrounding country doing business with the city, and there was no similar Act in these outlying districts. Therefore, daylight saving cannot be said to have had a fair trial in that city.

An hon. MEMBER: Louder.

Mr. SPEAKER: Hon. members are constantly calling "louder" in the House, but I would point out that half of the noise in the House is due to the cumulative effect of conversations of various groups throughout the House and adjoining portions of the chamber. If hon. members will show a little more consideration we would have far better order in the House and we could hear much better.

Mr. TWEEDIE: I believe that on the whole this would be a popular measure in the city of Calgary and throughout the towns and rural parts of the province of Alberta. It seems to me that this discussion has taken a turn as if we were dealing with legislation which was placing a restriction on a certain class of the people. I cannot observe in the Bill anything which will place any restriction upon agricultural industry. But I can observe something which has been referred to in many of the speeches that have been delivered tonight, that it will work out very greatly to the benefit of the industrial parts of Canada. I believe, as many hon. members have said, that we should encourage the industrial classes in the cities and do everything in our power to promote their happiness, their health and their welfare. I believe that by the enactment of this Bill we will be contributing to those measures. It has been argued by some who have been speaking on behalf of the agricultural interests of this country that if men who are employed in city stores, offices and factories are allowed to leave their work one hour earlier than they do at the present it will set a very bad example to the men who are employed upon the farms and production will be reduced to that extent. I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentlemen who advance this view to the fact that there have been enacted in many provinces in Canada regulations relating to the employment of labour, regulations which have for their object the reduction of the hours of labour, regulations which have for their object the giving of a half holiday——

An hon. MEMBER: Where?

Mr. TWEEDIE. In Alberta where I come from and which is one of the greatest agricultural provinces in Canada. We have in force in Alberta a factory act which, I think, is more stringent than similar laws in any province in Canada. We have in force in the city of Calgary by-laws which give to the employees in that city a half holiday but I have never heard one single argument that because these employees receive a half holiday, and because the merchants are compelled to close their stores at a certain hour, this has gone out into the country and consequently the farm labourers are asking that they shall have a half holiday every week or that they shall have an equal number of hours of labour with the men in the city. We must realize that we are passing through an era in the history of our country in which there are more economic and social changes than in any other period. I was very sorry to hear one hon. gentleman say to-night that he did not expect anything for agriculture from this Government, because I do not agree with him. I expect great things for the farmers from this Union Government. But when we are considering that question we must bear in mind this fact, that the agricultural industry in Canada is rapidly becoming divided into two classes. We have the small holder, the individual farmer who tills his own soil with the help of his wife and family, and who produces his crop and markets it. On the other hand, we have what we may term the capitalistic agriculturist, the man who is not satisfied with the quarter section or the half section, but who is acquiring great holdings which he cannot reasonably till himself, and for the purpose of producing it is necessary for him to go out into the labour markets of the world and find the necessary help. And I wish to call to the attention of the farmers of the East, if they do not realize it as the farmers of the West do, that when they are making such great demands on the labour market of this country they are coming to the stage in their productive history when they will have to deal with organized labour on the farms, just as the manufacturer in the city has to deal with organized labour in his business.

Now, so far as this Bill is concerned, it seems to me, as I pointed out at the start, that it is not legislating against any class of people, but it is legislating in favour of a great number of people in the Dominion. So far as the employment of farm labour in the agricultural districts is concerned, if they are farming such large areas that they require additional help, it is a matter of contract. The farmers make their bargain with the men when they take them out from the city or elsewhere to work on their farms; they determine their hours in their contract, and there is nothing in this Bill that would interfere in the slightest degree with the farmers making those arrangements. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that by the adoption of this Bill production will be retarded in the slightest degree; on the other hand, I believe that we will have greater production than we have ever had in the past.

Mr. FRANÇOIS J. PELLETIER (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak on this question, but it is so interesting that I cannot withstand the temptation. Coming from a farming country, it is my duty to speak in the interest of those whom I represent. Most of my constituents are farmers. In my part of the country, in the late spring, even in the month of May, we still have frost, and even around the 15th of May we are only beginning to do the spring ploughing Last fall, we were unable in our part of the country, to do any fall ploughing, because frost came so early. Furthermore, many of our young men were trying to go to the appeal tribunals in order to remain on the farms, and quite a number of them have been conscripted. Therefore, if we take our young men away to-day, how can we do our work on the farm? And if we take an hour of time away in the fall, we cannot do any ploughing on account of the frost. We have no tractors; we have to use horses. If there is a couple of inches of frost in the ground, even two or three horses can do hardly any ploughing, and if you do plough when there is frost two or three inches deep you will certainly turn ground that will not give you any production, as an hon. member said a while ago; and he is a farmer and knows that what I say is right. We have to leave farming to the farmers, and we have to give them the best advantage possible. Now, at a season when you cannot plough early in the morning, in the evening, between five and six o'clock, or six and seven, the ground is in such condition that you can plough very easily. Furthermore, the noon hour, between one and two, during the summer season, in haying time, is about the hottest of the day, and if this change is made the work will have to be done during that hour, and it will be that much harder on the farmer. It was said this afternoon that it would be against the interests of those who were cultivating their yards in the city to oppose this Bill. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, if we must look to the interests of those who are raising wheat, or of those who are raising a small patch of vegetables? It seems to me that first of all we must have bread, which is what we are all looking for, and to do that we must give the farmers all the chance possible. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly opposed to the Bill, and shall take pleasure in voting against it.

Mr. JOHN BEST (Dufferin): Mr. Speaker, representing an agricultural county as I do, I cannot see where this Bill is going to do any good. If the hon. minister who introduced the Bill had lengthened the time out one hour, then I could see where we might get a little benefit out of it. If the hon. members who spoke this afternoon are sincere in the statement that they want to have greater production, I cannot see why they cannot work an hour longer in the morning as well as at night.

Now, the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Tweedie) said that in Alberta they have legislation whereby they take a half-holiday once a week. I presume he means that that applies to the cities and towns. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that with all the talk that there is about greater production and the scarcity of food at the present time, I believe the Government is misled in the cause. It is not in the last two or three years that it has occurred, but it is just such legislation as the hon. member for Calgary said has been in force for from five to fifteen years that is taking the young men away from the farms. They want to go to the cities where the hours of labour are short, and where they can have pleasure in the evening. This has been going on until, at the present time, the farms are almost depleted. The county I have the honour to represent at one time had a population of 24,000, and I think the population now is about 17,500.

I believe that this Bill will affect production and affect it seriously, because there is not the slightest doubt in the world that if men in the towns and cities quit work at five o'clock and the hired men on the farms are compelled to work until six o'clock the latter will become dissatisfied. I want to say that during the last two years a farmer dare hardly tell his hired man how he wished anything done; if he did that man would tell him to go where there was no winter and do it himself. I have seen the statement in the papers, I think it was by an employee of the Government, that it was expected there would be about a million acres more under cultivation in the province of Ontario. Now, if you ask the farmers of Dufferin and Simcoe counties and the adjoining constituencies as to that, they will tell you that that man ought to be in the asylum. I agree very largely with the remarks of my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Smith) as to the Bill, except that I do not concur in what he said of the Government. I believe the Government is trying to do what is best for the interests of Canada as a whole, but I do say that in this matter their information as to the sentiment behind this Bill must have been obtained from towns and cities, and not from the farmers. I do not know of one farmers' organization in Canada to-day that is asking for this measure. I remember quite well the feeling that was expressed about it last year when county and township councils, as well as many farmers' organizations, passed resolutions in opposition to it. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of this country are just as loyal to the Empire as any other class, and they are just as willing to do what they can to advance production. I think production is the greatest issue there is to-day in Canada, but the farmers do not want legislation put on the statute book that will affect their labour, and there is no doubt at all that this legislation will do so. Having farmed all my life, I know that if some of my neighbours allowed their men to quit work at five o'clock the rest of the hired men would clamour to be allowed off at that hour also. There is not a farmer within my hearing who will not agree with me that from the time when haying starts until the harvest is all in the barns no man can take a binder in the field before seven or eight o'clock. If he does so, his grain is wet with the dew, and must be kept out until it is dry. He cannot put his hay in the barn or it will spoil. Therefore, he must wait until about eight o'clock to commence operations. Now if on the average he cannot get to work before eight o'clock and his men quit work at five o'clock, how is he going to get his work done? Some hon. gentlemen from cities have been urging shorter hours for the working men. All I want to say is that if the farmers in the province of Ontario with whom I am acquainted had not worked longer hours than the men in cities their farms would not be half cleared to-day and they would not be producing such crops as they are producing. As a matter of fact they generally work from twelve to sixteen hours, and if this legislation is enacted it will surely restrict the labour for which they are willing to pay, and pay good wages at that. I think it is time the farmers of the country were consulted before legislation such as this, in which they are so greatly interested, is introduced.

Mr. A. B. HUNT (Compton): After listening to the remarks of hon. gentlemen from both sides of the House, I deem it my duty to enter my protest against this legislation. This is beyond question a time when greater production is needed on the farm. But the Bill will have a tendency to lessen production rather than increase it. I do not wish to take up time unnecessarily. The measure has been pretty well discussed by hon. gentlemen on both sides, and therefore I merely enter my protest against the Bill and state that I shall register my vote against it.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Shelburne and Queens): A fellow-member has called my attention to what he regards as an important fact; that in this flood of interesting debate no representative from the best province of the Dominion has yet uttered a word. If the debate were to conclude without a single word being uttered from Nova Scotia there might be some doubt as to the legality of the Bill after it had gone into operation.

However that may be I find that there is a conflict here between representatives from the cities and towns and those members coming from the country districts. It is very useful in such a case to be able to get the dispassionate opinion of some absolutely unbiased person. I do not happen to have any large city within my own constituency. I am sorry for that, I should be very glad if there were. We have a couple of pretty little towns, but no very large farming population. I do not believe my people are going to be affected by this Bill one way or the other to any considerable extent. I know that our people go to bed earlier down there. Just at this hour when we are discussing this Bill, in my constituency all respectable people are going to bed. Whatever you may do with this measure—and I may say that I am in favour of it—I do not think it is going to be a matter of serious consequence to my constituency. In any event the fishermen, the lumbermen and the shipbuilders there are going to start in and work just the same no matter whether this Bill passes or not; but I do feel that, strong as the argument is from the point of view of the farmers on this question, and there is much force in it, there is a very strong argument in the appeal made on behalf of the workmen in the cities. I do not for a moment say that their claims are equal to those of the farmers, but the conditions of the workmen in our cities and towns surely entitle them to much consideration. It is admitted, I think, on all hands, that so far as the workmen in the cities and towns are concerned this will be a useful measure, and to that extent it is certainly deserving of our most serious consideration. If I believed that the Bill was going to prove an injury to the farmers of the country I would not for a moment support it. Although there is no very great farming vote in my constituency I realize that, looking at this question broadly, the farming interest is the great and paramount interest at all times, and never more so than at this moment. But the farmers, most of us know, are conservative—with a small "c" remember. They are not ready as a rule to make changes, they look with suspicion upon everything of the kind. I am not surprised that in this case they have been in doubt, and that that doubt has crystallized in some cases into strong opposition to this Bill. The history of this legislation everywhere shows that in its early stages it was received with doubt. Over in England that very strong workingmen's advocate, Mr. Willett, drew the attention of Parliament to this matter some years ago. He was laughed at and jeered at, but, nevertheless, although poor Willett did not live to see it, his proposition now forms a very important part of the legislation of the Mother Country. After it has been adopted there, and also adopted in the United States, surely our farming friends will admit that this legislation must have some considerable merit. I think the farming interest is needlessly alarmed. The condition of the farmer is such that he is not going to be governed by the clock but by his own convenience.

There is something in the argument that the farm labourer, the hired man, will be unwilling to work after the hour when he thinks that his fellow workman in the city has ceased to work; but I think, taking it all in all, the farmer is in a better position to act independently. In the cities and towns the various classes of labour are more or less inter-dependent, one branch of business cannot go on unless the business across the street is going on at the same time. It is not so with the farmer; he can arrange his own business, and he need not care what his neighbour is doing.

I appreciate the force of the argument about the farm labourers, but I think that the arguments in favour of the Bill are so strong, and the experience of other countries so greatly in favour of it, that it is reasonable to ask our farming friends to allow the Bill to be passed and give it a trial. If the measure does not prove to be as good as we hope it to be, as good as it seems to be in other countries where it has been tried, we shall have time to repeal it before much harm is done.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question, question.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must direct the attention of the House to the fact that if the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce exercises his right to reply, he will close the debate.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (Cape Breton and Victoria): Before the minister speaks, I wish to state I have no decided views on this Bill, and for that reason I would like to have more information in regard to it than we have so far received. It would appear to the outsider that this Bill did not receive the consideration in the Cabinet, or in the Government, that it should have received before being introduced in this House. There are certain gentlemen with certain portfolios in the Cabinet who should enlighten us to some extent, or give us their views upon this subject, which is one of very great importance. We have in this Cabinet a Minister of Labour who is supposed to be in close touch with the views of labour all over this country. Labour in all its phases has the right to look for guidance and help to the Minister of Labour, and I am sure that hon. gentleman is disposed to be as useful to the great body of people he represents as he can be, and if the Minister of Trade and Commerce applied to him for the views of labour on this subject, I presume he would be in position to put himself in touch with the proper avenues of information in connection with the various associations which represent labour and give the Minister of Trade and Commerce the consensus of opinion among that very important class. We have not heard from the Minister of Labour, (Mr. Crothers) and I am afraid that, if he were asked for the views of the bodies he is supposed to represent in this House, he would have no very live or fresh information from them. In this I may be mistaken, but the hour is not too late, and if the Minister of Labour has any well defined views upon this subject, and if he has gathered proper information from the different bodies that he is supposed to represent, we would like to hear from him on this very important question. We have another gentleman representing another department in this House, the Minister of Agriculture. He is a farmer, I understand, and in the widest possible way and in the most concrete manner represents the farming interest and communities, and is in touch with the farmers of this country. As an outsider who has been brought up on a farm, and in close sympathy with the farmer, although a lawyer by profession, I would expect the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) to tell those of us who are not so well versed in the requirements of the farm as we ought to be, what his views are. We would not be going too far if we expected the Minister of Agriculture to be in his seat, closely watching what was being said by hon. members who are here. He is here to represent the views of the farmers and to impress them upon this House, and the Cabinet, and he should give this House the conclusions which he has reached and the advice which he gave his brother ministers in the Cabinet before this Bill was introduced. We have no such information and no such light from men whose business it is to be well informed upon questions of this kind. For that reason it is somewhat puzzling to a person like myself to know whether I am serving well my constituency by voting for or against this Bill. I represent a large body of labouring men, perhaps about as large as in any other rural constituency, as I may call my constituency. I represent also a large body of farmers, a mixed community. I am honest in stating that I cannot say now, with all the study this Bill has received, which way I could really vote on it in the best interests of my constituents, and if I had any advice to give the Government it would be to withhold this Bill for a while, and get in touch with the different interests of the country and ascertain positively by the best means what is the real sentiment of the country upon this question. I can assure the hon. minister that there is no well-matured or well-defined public opinion upon the question, and that, so far as the province from which I come is concerned, the question has never been carefully considered. I venture to say that Nova Scotia is in much the same position as the other provinces of Canada as far as due deliberation on this question is concerned. I desire to say to the Government, and to the hon. gentlemen in charge of this Bill, that there is at least danger, by forcing this Bill upon farming communities, that he is going to create dissatisfaction and dissension in the country, and this is a time when no friction of any kind should be created which can possibly be avoided. We want to have the farmers, labourers and everybody in this country with their minds on the one thing, and one thing only, namely, that every ounce of strength and everything we have, without any disruption or disturbance, should be guided and directed to the one object of winning the war. In the community from which I come, where there is a great deal of steel and coal producing, they are in fixed grooves about the divisions of the day. I never in my life spoke to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce with more sincerity than I do at present. Everybody knows me in this House to be a hard-shell partisan, and there is no mistaking what I am, but I talk earnestly and deliberately to the minister, because this is not a party question. Nobody is taking a party view of it, and I am not. In the coal mines and steel works the day is fixed in certain divisions. Certain classes of men have to get up at four o'clock in the morning, and some at three o'clock in the morning, go down in the mines and operate, and prepare the way for workmen to come on later in the day. I am afraid that, with the tension that is upon our people now in the production of steel and coal, with every man at his post at certain divisions of the day, and at certain hours, if this Bill is passed it will be throwing them largely out of joint, and creating a condition of things that might cause friction and dissatisfaction. Things are going along in a first-class way, and I would, in all sincerity say to the minister and to the Government that it is only a year ago since we had this Bill before us, and there was nobody in the House who would stand as godfather for the Bill. It had to go unbaptized without receiving any ceremony or sacrificial blessing at all. I am surprised that a man of the hon. minister's experience and caution, unless there was a great cry or demand for it, should force it upon this Parliament again within such a short time, without having satisfied himself that he was on a much safer ground than he was on before. I was in this House when the Bill was introduced last year and said something about it. I remember the complexion of the House, and I see very little difference. There are more people in favour of it now than there were then, but I see that the men who were against it then are against it now, and there are no converts to the cause of this Bill of those who were in the House when it was introduced before. The minister is going to force this Bill to a division; he is going to make a serious division in this House, and he is forcing upon the farmers and other classes of the community legislation for which they are not asking and which many of them are opposing. If this is an experiment, as the minister himself and the best friends of the Bill say, I venture to tell the Prime Minister and the Government and our friends in this House that this is no time for experiments; it is a time for the best use of such machinery as we have and for the putting forth of every power we have along the old lines looking to the best possible results.

Mr. J. P. MOLLOY (Provencher): As a farmer and as an employer of labour, I desire to say a word in opposition to this Bill. In Western Canada to-day employers of labour are paying a higher rate of wages for farm labour than they ever did before. They are paying from fifty, sixty, seventy to eighty dollars a month and more, depending upon the locality. The board, figure it as cheaply as you can, runs from seventy-five cents to a dollar a day. In Manitoba, in the rush of seeding and more particularly in harvesting time, if you apply to a labour bureau for men, they may say: We can get you a certain number of men. If you are not there with an automobile, if you have one or, if not, if you do not hire one to take the men out to the farm, they will not go with you but will go with the man who is willing to furnish that convenience. The labour people in the West have the farmer pretty nearly by the throat at the present time. If you are going to legislate and put it on the statute book of this country and publish it broadcast that a farm labourer will start work at a certain hour in the morning and will finish his day's work at a certain time in the evening, according to law, you are putting impediments in the way of the greater production which is needed in this country more than anything else at this time.

So far as gardening in the cities is concerned, many intimate friends of mine had gardens and they did not raise enough in their back yards to pay for the hoeing. Gardening is not a profitable business except when it is carried on by very experienced men.

As a farmer and as an employer of labour I am opposed to this Bill. It is not in the interest of the farmer. I have no complaint so far as labour is concerned itself.

The men on the farm that I operate, from the day seeding commences until the day fall ploughing closes, have never been in bed after half past four in the morning, and have never left work until half past six at night. If you set the clock forward an hour, those same men, following the law, and the custom, as custom it will become, will get up at half past three o'clock. That will not benefit the farmer because, in the early days of spring and in the late days of fall, it is black darkness at that hour in the morning. Men cannot work at half past three in the morning, in the latter part of August, September and October, nor can they do it in the month of April. They can do it in the months of June, July and the first part of August.

Another point of view of the western farmer is this: In eastern and southern Manitoba we have to summerfallow largely to produce the crops we are producing, and the work of destroying the weeds must be done in the months of July and August in the very hot weather. If you quit work at five o'clock in the evening, your summerfallow will not receive the same benefit because you do not spend the same time on it as if you worked until six o'clock in the evening. No farmer from Manitoba will contradict my statement that the sow thistle must be destroyed in the heat of the day in July and August. If you are going to start a sort of Sunday school farming operation, letting the hired man quit when he chooses, that is not going to be in the interest of the people at all. Who have asked for this legislation? The people in the cities. Then let the people in the cities have all the daylight saving they wish. We say: Do not interfere with us. This is not the day of baseball, as an hon. member said. We are not looking for ball players according to the Act which was passed here at the last session, and which I opposed. I refer to the Conscription Act. We are not looking for baseball players by any means.

10 p.m.

Another hon. gentleman stated to-day that the passing of this Bill would aid transportation. Daylight saving will not aid transportation, so far as the output of the western farmers is concerned, one-hundred thousandth part as much as the lowering of the freight rate. On that ground I am opposed to the passing of this Bill. Personally, I do not think it will make any difference to me, but, as the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. McKenzie) has said, it has come before the public; but it is doubtful if it has the sanction of the Government; the Minister of Agriculture, who is a western member and citizen, and the Minister of Labour, have neither said a word in regard to it. Why then, should we accept this Bill simply because the Minister of Trade and Commerce or any other member of this House has brought it forward on the weak grounds on which he has introduced it?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I do not intend to make very many remarks in closing this debate. I think I am voicing the feeling of this House when I say that the debate we have had this afternoon and evening has been a very interesting and very frank one. It is exactly that kind of frankness which makes a debate interesting. My hon. friend who sits opposite to me (Mr. McKenzie), and whom I must congratulate at this particular moment upon his advancement in the councils of my hon. friends on the other side, declared that this was not a party question. I quite agree with him on that. I think he designated that properly. The Government must bring in the Bill and become responsible for it, but it is not in any narrow sense a party measure. This is a national measure, and it appeals to both sides of the House, and so far as I know neither at the inception of the Bill, and certainly not during the debate to-day, have any party issues been raised. We have had a frank expression of opinion by gentlemen from the different provinces, and we have not all agreed with one another.

Someone has said that this is not a time for thoughtless legislation; I think someone used the word "freakish." No, it is not; I absolutely agree with that. If there ever was a time when fads and freaks of legislation were at a discount, it is during this year and last year and the year before, in the great parliaments of the world. These have been war years when men's souls were tried, when fads and freaks had little chance for lodgment in the legislatures of the world. Daylight saving in one form or another has approved itself to every great country at war during the last three years. It has approved itself to France repeatedly, it has approved itself to Great Britain repeatedly, it has approved itself to Italy, it has approved itself to the United States of America, and to some ten or twelve of the chief and foremost countries of the world. During the last three or four years every important country in Europe with the exception of Russia has put such a measure upon its statute book. Whatever may be said about geographical differences from European countries, we have to the south of us the great United States, which spreads over zones and takes in conditions as nearly parallel with our own as it is possible to find between two countries. It is a country which has democratic institutions probably as well based as any country in the world; it is a country where there is a complete facility of representation of every interest in the legislative bodies before a Bill becomes law. That country has given two years of examination to the question of daylight saving, and has come to the conclusions which I have stated here this afternoon. They were not seeking to enthrone fad or freakish legislation. What impelled the United States and Great Britain and France to put this legislation upon their statute books was not to appeal to fads or freaks or anything of that kind; it was to aid in production and to strengthen the hands of the country for the war which it was carrying on. Taking the United States as an example, let me speak again of what I mentioned a little earlier in the day. Who were the two men who stood for this legislation in the House of Representatives, who urged its speedy enactment, and who appealed for two months more of it rather than the five months provided by the legislation which had passed the Senate? They are two men who are not airing fads, men at the head of the two great agencies for the conservation of fuel and the production of food in the United States of America, agencies not merely for the purpose of conserving fuel and producing food for commercial purposes, but conserving fuel and producing food in order to strengthen the hands of those who are carrying on the war. There was no question of thoughtless legislation. This is too serious a time in every country engaged in the war to have their legislatures spend a single moment passing faddish or freakish legislation.

The great purpose underlying this legislation is to strengthen the hands of those who are carrying on the fight for freedom and for liberty. Now I think that ought to appeal to us, and I think it does appeal to us. Take the farming population of the United States, take all the active interests of the United States with their complete representation in both their legislative Houses, and with two years in which to make their opinions known—a country which, like our own, is very largely made up of farmers, and extends over zones quite as liberal as our own, over latitudes and longitudes which are quite as extensive as ours—it hardly needs more than the presentation of the fact to lead one to conclude that there must be something important, something strong and powerful in the thing itself to appeal in that way to such a people, and to bring about the result shown in the two legislative bodies at Washington. I think that should remove from us the fear that this legislation is an unknown thing which may have involved in it the perils or difficulties and inconveniences which some men fear. Similar fears were expressed in England. If you will read the report of the Commission that enquired into this matter, and which I mentioned this afternoon, you will find that the same fears were voiced, and honestly voiced, as have been expressed around these benches to-day. Those fears were expressed by agriculturists in Great Britain, and it was almost solely from them that opposition came at the inception of the scheme. What does the report of that Commission say which was appointed to make that investigation? It says that these fears have been proved to be largely unfounded; that many of those who voiced those fears against this legislation in 1916 were in favour of it being renewed in 1917. Then came a period of actual and practical working out of the legislation, and in a country which is more interested in the extended production of food than any other country engaged in the war, the working out of that legislation in its second year proved so satisfactory that this year not only was it again put into operation without a dissenting voice, but the period during which it remains in force has been extended. Surely, that must tend to allay our fears. Surely, it is not an unknown step we are taking, not an unknown sea into which we are steering our bark. This legislation is proposed in the light of one of the most signal examples of the stepping up of an idea into practical legislation that the world has ever seen, and in a period of the world's history which has been the most strenuous and the most serious that the world has ever known. I think that ought to weigh with us; it weighed with this Government.

Something has been said with reference to all the members of the Government not having spoken on this Bill. I was surprised at the modesty of my hon. friend who sits opposite me (Mr. McKenzie). He, who has been a farmer, who has lived in the very centre of an industrial district, who has been a lawyer and is yet, who has been a judge and who has had the greatest of all opportunities for knowing everything—a member of Parliament—comes here and says that he does not quite know how he should vote because he has not heard from the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Agriculture. What modesty my hon. friend has cultivated in this last year since we met him before! Before that I could not have credited him with such intense modesty as that. I did not believe that my hon. friend was bending forward in intense anxiety, to know what my hon. friend the Minister of Labour should tell him to do or what my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture should advise him to do, before he could vote intelligently on this question.

Let us look at another phase of the question. As my hon. friend from Queens-Shelburne (Mr. Fielding) and others have said, there is just one point in the argument against this Bill that appeals to me, and it is the position of the farmer who is contiguous to the city or town and who has to hire help upon his farm. He says that there is a possibility in that case of his farm labourer knocking off work at the hour, getting away and having a good time. He fears it. He is suspicious that that will be what will happen.

Mr. SMITH: Is not that true?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: How can we tell whether it is true or not unless it is tried? Yet, it has been tried and that is the way we tell whether it is true or not. It has been tried exactly in the same way in Great Britain. Where we have one town in close proximity to the acres that the farmers are tilling, they have half a dozen. They are in the midst of towns and cities. The very same fear that my good old friend has voiced here to-night was in the hearts of the farmers, and was expressed. It has been put to the test of three years of actual, practical working and it has not proved to be the trouble that it was supposed it would be. My hon. friend, I think, will find that it will work out in the same way here. But let us give it a little analysis. Here, are all the farmers in Canada. Amongst all the farmers of Canada there are a large number who do not hire any help at all. How many are there of those in this country? Are they one-half? Are they two-thirds? Whether they are one-half or two-thirds, you must eliminate those entirely; this Bill cannot affect them on the labour question one bit. The father, the sons, the daughters, the mother—all can keep pegging away at the farming business from the time they get up in the morning until they leave it at night, and no labour difficulty comes to them, because this Bill does not make it obligatory upon them to rise at any hour, to eat at any hour or to go to bed at any hour. They go to work as they please and there is no prohibition or penalty in that respect. Therefore, you have the larger part of the producing people of the country outside of any deleterious influence from a bill of this kind.

Coming down to the others, there are those who do employ labour. But they are not all next-door neighbours to the city or the town; consequently, it will not have that direct influence upon them which is feared if it were shown that the labourers upon the farms would be drawn away from their work and would work like hours to those in the cities. Making a division of those then who do employ hired labour, you find that a large proportion is outside of the direct influence of the city, town or village. Then you come to those who are closer to those places and may be somewhat affected by that fact. But you have to take the average in this sort of thing. It would not do for a man who happens to live on a farm close by a city to make opposition to a thing that does not affect three-quarters of the farming and producing community because it might possibly affect him. I just wanted to make that simple analysis to help us to think as broadly as possible in coming to a conclusion in reference to this question.

Without this legislation, we should be, within a few days, in regard to the United States of America, through our commercial transactions with that country in the way of transport, in a position in which we never have been before. On the first day of April their time changes, their clocks go ahead. All their operations in the way of exchanges, commission houses, banks—all the different associations of business and enterprise works along an hour in advance of ours. That might make an important difference in reference to ourselves, and it has to be taken into account. All our prejudices, or all our arguments, will not affect that in the least. It is going to come into operation on the first day of April and it will remain in operation until the 31st day of October. We must have some regard, when we give our votes upon this measure, to the relations which must take place between them and us during this very long period of the year.

Mr. SMITH: What about 1911?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: What about 1911? It is a characteristic of political warfare that wherever one can get the blade of the sabre in the flesh of an opponent, there is a great temptation to give it a little turn. But what under heaven has a thing that took place in 1911, or did not take place in 1911, to do with the matter of our making a decision upon a Daylight Saving Bill? Surely, whilst we may take the fun of a joke and of a jab in good fashion, we must as sensible people—and I appeal to my hon. friend directly opposite me—cut that out from our consideration when we come to the analysis of the Bill which is in hand.

My hon. friend from Montreal, St. Denis (Mr. Verville), stated the position of labour. I think he stated it fairly well, but I want to add one thing. I am not at all of the opinion that under these circumstances, and in these days, if you give to the great labouring classes of this country, to the clerical classes and to the people who are engaged in sedentary employment, an extra hour, they will all throw up their hats, shout at the top of their voices and go on spending that hour in a scene of jollification or in a lazy pleasure-seeking way. I think there is a spirit abroad in this country which leads every thinking man and every thinking woman to feel that this is the day and this is the year during which they should employ every hour that they have in the production of the food that is so necessary to this country and to the world. You talk about putting people back on the land. Here is one of the most excellent opportunities of giving people a taste for going back on the land. High prices are prevalent and the pressure of living is strong. Every labouring man who has a bit of a plot of land has the incentive in him to get to work on that land and do something to ease the burden which is upon him and to aid in acquiring what is necessary for his existence at least. To my mind, if you give an hour a day six days in the week to the labouring men of this country from ocean to ocean, you will put an exceedingly large number of hours into productive work which in the end will total an immense addition to the food products raised in Canada.

You will instil into the hearts and implant in the tastes of these people a desire for repeating next year what they do this year. That is, you will instil a taste for the soil, and that will instil itself into their children, and there is no better school, to my mind, in which to bring back the people to some participation in the cultivation of the land than lies in the facilities which a Bill of this kind will give in Canada, which it has given in Great Britain, and which it will give this year in the United States.

Now, I have kept the House too long, but I want to state this one thing further. An hon. member asked me when I came into the House to-night if this Bill could not be made just for one year, and not permanently. He had the impression that it was a permanency. In no country has daylight saving been made a permanency although in every country in which it has been tried temporarily for a year, it has gone on into the next year, and into the following year again; and the general impression to-day is that it has come to stay in those countries where it first came as a temporary expedient. This Bill is for this season only. My hon. friend from Queens and Shelburne (Mr. Fielding) will not need to come back next year, if the Bill does not work well, to have it repealed. Its effect ceases at the end of the season, and the duration that is given to it is in the choice of the Governor in Council; it will be proclaimed in and for the length of time that is necessary.

One word more, and it is with reference to the railroad traffic. Some hon. gentleman enquired as to whether or not railroad traffic would be helped by it. The universal testimony in Great Britain, and the sentiment in the United States, is that railroad accidents and casualties will be lessened, and that the transport of freight will be greatly extended.

I do not want to conclude my remarks without saying one word as to the saving, economical qualities in the Bill. In the United States the careful estimate is that the lighting bill alone of American families will be eased by the sum of $40,000,000. In war time that is a wonderfully economical saving to make. In Canada it will effect a somewhat equal saving in proportion to our population.

An hon. MEMBER: How can it?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Just in this way: that from April until the end of September or October there are certain hours of darkness or semi-darkness in which people use light. Now, it has been said in this House that you may make all the daylight saving legislation you like, and you may set the clock ahead, but the people will not go to bed by the clock. That was said in Great Britain, in France and in every country in which this legislation has been introduced; but the working out of it was exactly the reverse. People do go to bed by the clock. And if they save an hour of lighting in all those months, that is where the saving comes in in their light bill. Mr. Garfield makes the calculation that in the United States at least 1,000,000 tons of coal in the manufacture of light will be saved, and one million tons of coal is a large item in these days when coal needs so greatly to be conserved. The calculation made out of the actual year's experiment in Great Britain was that a large saving was made in coal, in gas, in oil for lighting, and in the electrical and other lighting in the homes of the people. What has taken place there will take place with us. I am sorry to have imposed so long on the House in my second series of remarks, and facing you at this time, Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the second reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and the Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Civil Government—Department of Labour—Salaries $58,287.50—Contingencies $15,000.

Mr. BUREAU: Is there any increase in this amount?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: There is a decrease.

Mr. MURPHY: How does that happen?

Mr. CROTHERS: There are fewer civil servants employed in the department than there were last year.

Mr. MURPHY: I draw the minister's attention to the fact that the estimates give the same number this year as last, although the total shows a decrease in the amount. Has somebody's status been reduced?

Mr. CROTHERS: Nine of the items represent vacancies that have not been filled. My hon. friend knows the practice. For example, where a clerk dies, or is promoted, the position that was previously held by him still appears in the estimates year after year until the vacancy is filled.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has Mr. Gerald Brown, who was assistant deputy minister but was relieved of his duties, been given employment in another department of the Government?

Mr. McMASTER: I do not want to make a nuisance of myself about the matter of speaking louder, but really if it is desired that the private members, or back benchers, should take an intelligent interest in what is going on, we must ask the gentlemen who are leading on both sides of the House to speak in an audible voice. They should follow the example of the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker, who enunciate clearly and distinctly.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CROTHERS: I understand the gentleman to whom the member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) referred is employed in another branch, but I have no personal knowledge of it.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Perhaps the Prime Minister can inform the House as to what Mr. Brown is now doing.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. Gerald Brown is now acting as secretary of the Reconstruction and Development Committee.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is his salary there?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not recollect at this moment; I will ascertain and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Would the minister state if the report is true that a strike is in progress in one of the large coal mines in Nova Scotia, and if so, what means he is taking to prevent that strike?

Mr. CROTHERS: My latest information is that at a meeting next month the miners will take a vote as to whether they shall strike or not. In the meantime they are at work.

Mr. BUREAU: Do these items cover the salaries of those officers in the department who have charge of collecting the statistics upon which are based, or ascertained, the current prices of different commodities?

Mr. CROTHERS: They include the officers of that description, headed by Mr. Bryce Stewart.

Mr. BUREAU: Will the minister give a short statement as to how many of these officers he has now, and what information they are gathering? Is the information obtained by inquiry of the retail or wholesale dealers as to what prices they are asking for the various commodities?

Mr. CROTHERS: This information is obtained in different ways. We have, as my hon. friend probably knows, an officer in every town and city in Canada having a population of ten thousand or over. This officer also acts as a correspondent of the Labour Gazette and reports as to prices generally once a month, although he has been required to report twice a month. We get reports from these officers, also reports from the markets, and from wholesale and retail dealers.

Mr. DEVLIN: I understand that part of the staff is to be transferred to the new Food Control Board. Is that correct?

Mr. CROTHERS: No part of the staff has been transferred.

Mr. DEVLIN: Will there be a transfer of a portion of the staff in future?

Mr. CROTHERS: That is not correct, as far as I am aware.

Mr. DEVLIN: Then do I understand that Mr. O'Connor will carry on his operations under the Department of Labour in the future, as he has in the past?

Mr. CROTHERS: I am not able to inform my hon. friend as to what may occur in the future.

Mr. DEVLIN: Well, in the immediate future?

Mr. CROTHERS: Mr. O'Connor is still occupying the place he has occupied since a year ago last November, and there is no intention of removing him at the present time as far as I am aware.

Mr. DEVLIN: With the creation of the new Food Control Board, will operations as respects the prices of commodities in Canada be continued under the Department of Labour, or will they be tranferred to the new Board?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Regulations in regard to the control of food prices are embodied in the Orders in Council recently placed on the Table. One, I think, has been passed recently which has been published in the press.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend (Mr. Crothers) stated that the statistics taken in the department have reference only to the current prices. Reading the report of his department issued in 1917, but covering the year 1916, I read on the first page that we have made progress in that line. I forget the name of the gentleman who signs the report; I think it is Mr. Acland, if I am not mistaken, but what struck me is this: He says ,in effect, that for some years, and as far back as 1907, they have been trying to follow the changes in the prices, but that for 1915 and 1916—the period covered by the report issued last year—they have also statistics as to production in the various parts of the country. Now, I want to ascertain from the minister if those statistics are obtained from the same source on which are based the retail and wholesale prices of commodities, or from another source altogether? In the city of Three Rivers the gentleman who reports to the Labour Department—and I have occasion to meet him sometimes—makes inquiries more as to labour conditions than he does with respect to prices of commodities which are considered the necessaries of life. I should think that this man, living in the city of Three Rivers, and inquiring mostly from mills, manufacturing establishments and shipyards, would not be the proper authority to afford information to the minister as to the production of foodstuffs in and around Three Rivers as far as the necessaries of life are concerned.

Mr. CROTHERS: I have not before me the report to which my hon .friend refers, and which is prepared by the Deputy Minister of Labour, but in addition to the sources that I mentioned to him a moment ago, we issue questionnaires monthly, I think to wholesale dealers and leading retail dealers, concerning food, clothing and fuel. We get monthly reports from these people, in fact they set forth a great many items as to the quantities they purchase and the prices that were paid for them, the quantities they have sold and the prices at which they were sold. That is a very important source of information that we have in addition to the one I mentioned to my hon. friend a moment ago.

Mr. BUREAU: With reference to production, I might tell my hon. friend that if I had sold 100 tons of coal, or 100 bushels of potatoes, that would not give him any idea or any information as to the production of coal or potatoes in that particular district. I understood from the report that the figures as to production were being ascertained in the department now. I want to know on what information they were obtained.

Mr. CROTHERS: I rather think the hon. member for Three Rivers is wrong in his interpretation of the words used by the deputy minister in that report. We do not get any report from the farmers as to the quantity produced, so that if he used the word "production," he did not use it in the sense of the quantity produced by the farmers.

Mr. VERVILLE: Who is the Fair Wage officer in the eastern part of Canada? Has he an office in Montreal? How much salary is he receiving? By whom was he recommended for the position, and what is his territory?

Mr. CROTHERS: The gentleman who represents the Labour Department in the province of Quebec is Théofile Bertrand. He was appointed about a year ago, at a salary of $1,500. I cannot recall who recommended him, but he was appointed on my own judgment. Several gentlemen spoke favourably of him. I sent for him, talked the matter over with him, and satisfied myself that he was a suitable man for the position, before making the appointment.

Mr. VERVILLE: He must have been recommended by some one, whether by an organized labour body or an individual. Can the hon. minister tell me whether he was recommended by any labour body in Montreal?

Mr. CROTHERS: I rather think not. My impression is he was not recommended by any labour organization, but was recommended by several leading labour men.

Mr. VERVILLE: Was anybody recommended by an organized labour body for the position?

Mr. CROTHERS: I think not. There were other names mentioned, but I think they were not recommended by organized labour.

Mr. JACOBS: I should like to have some information in regard to the item of "Packer and Sorter, $762.50". What are the duties of that officer?

Mr. CROTHERS: Various duties. I do not know that the words "packer and sorter" clearly define what those duties are.

Mr. JACOBS: Not a pork packer?

Mr. CROTHERS: No. You will see these officers are mentioned in each one of the departments. They perform different kinds of labour—messenger work principally.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I may say that I hold no brief for Mr. O'Connor; I have met him occasionally, but there have been rumours of late that he might be transferred to another department, or that his services might be dispensed with. I have seen this assertion in some of the newspapers. I hope this is not true, because I can assure my hon. friend that Mr. O'Connor enjoys the fullest confidence of the Canadian public, and especially of the Canadian consumer. The revelations he made in the investigations which he held during the last year have brought his name very prominently before the public. I refer particularly to the revelations which he made concerning the bacon inquiry and the egg inquiry. Generally speaking, the cold storage conditions in the country have aroused public opinion to such a pitch that I am inclined to believe that Mr. O'Connor is very much needed in the position he now occupies. I hope my hon. friend will disprove those rumours, and state to the House and to the country that Mr. O'Connor is going to remain where he is. During the war, when we are facing a very serious condition in regard to the high price of commodities, this gentleman has shown so much ability and so much regard for the public and for the consumer that I hope he will continue in his good work. I would not mention the matter but for the fact that I have read statements in the press that Mr. O'Connor might perhaps be shifted elsewhere. I know there are many interests that would be anxious to see Mr. O'Connor out of the way, but it so happens that Mr. O'Connor has struck a note which brought from the public the response that he was needed. He is possibly to-day the most fearless official in the general public service, on account of his honesty of purpose, ability and keenness. I have read his various reports, as my hon. friend has read them; they cannot be discounted. Mr. O'Connor has aroused public opinion, and it would be a sorry day indeed if his services were dispensed with, particularly at the present moment, under the pressure of some of the firms which were investigated by him during the course of last year. I do not think it is the intention of my hon. friend to dispense with Mr. O'Connor's services, but I would like him to assure us that Mr. O'Connor is there to stay, where he is without fear or favor doing such splendid work for the consumer.

Mr. CROTHERS: I quite agree with my hon. friend. Mr. O'Connor is a very capable and exceedingly industrious man. He works all night very often, and he is a fearless gentleman.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And honest.

Mr. CROTHERS: He has made a number of very valuable reports. Any one who has read the reports he made on sugar, will observe that he followed the sugar from the field where it is grown in Cuba to your table, and the report was so thorough and satisfactory that there have been no complaints concerning sugar since.

Mr. LEMIEUX: But the bacon report was the best.

Mr. CROTHERS: He made a very valuable report in regard to the coal. He has the means of ascertaining monthly by sworn statement the quantity of coal that comes, for instance, into the city of Ottawa. He is in communication with all the leading coal dealers in Canada and he gets a sworn statement from each one monthly of the quantities of coal they receive, the prices they pay for it, the quantities they sell, and the prices they sell it for. He keeps track of the cost of the manufacture of bread. He can tell you what it costs to make bread in Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal or any other town in Canada. His report on the question of bacon, as my hon. friend said, was confirmed by a very capable commission that was afterwards appointed, and in substance everything that Mr. O'Connor had said in his report was confirmed by that commission. The report is a very valuable one, and the people of Canada, in more ways than one, are receiving and will receive benefits by reason of the report Mr. O'Connor has made on bacon.

Mr. CANNON: Has the Government taken any action on the bacon report?

Mr. CROTHERS: A very important action was taken by Order in Council fixing the taxation of the profits of packers. That was probably the result of the work done by Mr. O'Connor and his very able assistant. He has had assisting him a young lady, Miss McKenna, who took a special course in economics at Toronto University, who had a fellowship in the University for several years, and who did a great deal of practical work. She has rendered Mr. O'Connor very great assistance. I am sorry to say that we shall probably lose her services very soon because she got married a short time ago. It will be a misfortune if Mr. O'Connor ceases to work as he has been working for some time, and I think I can assure my hon. friend that he will continue in the position in which he now is.

Mr. DEVLIN: I do not want to delay the minister in passing his estimates, but we are now at a very important item. The minister has already spoken of the action which Mr. O'Connor has taken in inquiring into the prices which prevail for different commodities. I have not the Order in Council before me, but I think I am right in saying that in the Order in Council creating the Food Commission power was given to take action to remedy any excessive price that was charged by dealers in commodities. The minister says that the only action which was taken was to tax the profits of packers such as Sir Joseph Flavelle, who was referred to by an hon. gentleman on this side of the House. This is a matter which concerns the whole people of Canada and the Allies. This evening I find that an organ in this city, which supported former Government and which offers very strong support to the present Government, has an editorial to which I wish to call the minister's attention. It runs as follows:

> At the inquiry being conducted by Commissioner Tustin in Winnipeg into the destruction of several thousand pounds of chicken taken from the storage of the William Davies Company—

I presume that is Sir Joseph Flavelle's company.

> —after it had spoiled, it has been stated in evidence that during the time the chicken was in storage the company refused to sell chicken to the Winnipeg General Hospital at the market price.

I do not always rely upon what I read in the newspapers. I am sorry to say I place extremely little faith at times in what I read in this paper, the Ottawa Evening Journal, but I will give Mr. Ross credit for this fact: that when he publishes in his editorial column an instance such as that, he must have ascertained the veracity of it. I call the minister's attention to this particular fact. There has been too much of this going on, and certain of the people of Canada are suffering from it. If the minister will allow me to remind him, without unduly speaking of myself, before the war started I called his attention by way of question in this House to the increasing cost of living, and I asked him to take some action to remedy, or at least to meet, the situation confronting Canada. From that day to this no action has apparently been taken. I may not be right in stating, but I think I am, that by the original Order in Council the minister has the power to take some action other than taxing the companies by way of a tax on profits. Sir Joseph Flavelle will pay his war tax the same as every other individual in this country. Everybody at the present moment is trying to do his utmost to help the Allies. We have had examples in this city quite recently in the collection for the Patriotic Fund. I know of an incident of one poor woman a widow with ten children giving ten cents, wishing to give her mite towards the Patriotic Fund and thus help the soldiers who are battling for the cause of liberty. Whilst the people are making these sacrifices, should not the Minister of Labour, if he has the power—and if he has not he should get it—take some action to keep down undue profits? I represent a rural constituency, and I thoroughly understand from the discussion to-day the difficulty of getting farm labour. I understand that what is produced on the farm to-day must, of necessity, cost more than it did a few years ago. I take all that into account. Farm labour is high. That has been stated upon the floor of the House to-day. Everything the farmer buys to-day he has to pay dearer for. Therefore, he must sell his goods dearer. I do not think any exception is taken by the people of this country as to what they have to pay the farmer by way of legitimate profit. Exception is taken by the people to what they have to pay by way of excessive profit to the speculator. If any action on the part of the Government becomes imperative at the present moment, it is some action to save the country from the speculator in commodities. I would like to ask the minister, if he has the power under that Order in Council, if he is going to do anything to remedy the conditions in this country with reference to excessive profits, and if he has not that power, whether he proposes to get it.

11 p.m.

Mr. CROTHERS: My hon. friend refers to the original order of November, 1916?

Mr. DEVLIN: Yes.

Mr. CROTHERS: That order provided, amongst other things, that no prosecution can be instituted without the consent of the Attorney General of the province.

Mr. DEVLIN: But it gives power to the Government?

Mr. CROTHERS: Not to the Government in particular, but to my hon. friend in his riding, just as he has the power to institute a prosecution in any other case.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: Has he the power to fix the price?

Mr. CROTHERS: No, to prosecute.

Mr. DuTREMBLAY: I understand that the price of paper has been fixed.

Mr. CROTHERS: I do not quite see what relevancy that has to this Order in Council which deals with food.

Mr. CANNON: Why not fix the price of food if you fix the price of paper? Paper is less important than food.

Mr. CROTHERS: This Order in Council does not empower this Government to make any prosecutions. Speaking generally, when we pass a criminal law or quasi-criminal law, it is not part of the duty of the Dominion Government to enforce that law, except perhaps as concerns the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments. If, for instance, a horse is stolen, the man who has lost that horse does not come to the Minister of Justice at Ottawa, but to the County Crown Attorney, or to the Attorney-General of the province. This Order in Council provides that no prosecution shall be instituted without the consent of the Attorney-General of the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, and it is up to any individual to secure the consent of the Attorney-General and proceed with the prosecution.

Mr. DEVLIN: I understand that thoroughly well, but when the Dominion Government enacts particular legislation carrying with it a penalty, as in the instance just cited by my hon. friend, who is an exceptionally good lawyer, the Dominion Government initiates proceedings. I thoroughly understand that the Dominion Government did not wish to take proceedings without the consent of the Attorney-General of the respective provinces. I am not so particular as to the form by which the Dominion Government proceeds, or as to the technicalities of the law. What I want to get at is prosecution in the case of excessive profits. I do not think there will be entire satisfaction among the people of Canada at the present moment, when the minister says the member for Wright has the power to prosecute. I will tell the minister this, right away, that whatever case of excessive profits comes into my hands for prosecution, will be prosecuted to the utmost limit. What the people expect is for the Government to initiate proceedings against those making excessive profits. We have a Solicitor-General for that purpose. He could very well undertake that work, but to think that absolutely no action is taken during war time, at a moment when we require to conserve all our resources, and when all our money is required to carry on the war and the affairs of this country—why, it is really tantamount to criminal, and I think the Minister of Labour, if charged with this work, ought at once to proceed to get power to prosecute.

Mr. CROTHERS: There would not be many complaints, because my hon. friend says he has not received one in eighteen months.

Mr. DEVLIN: I am not going to let the minister run away with these little niceties.

I said that if a case comes into my hands to prosecute I will prosecute it. I do happen to be a crown prosecutor, and I try to exercise all possible leniency consistent with doing my duty towards the public, but if the minister comes before a court where I act and gives into my hand or to the local authorities a case of excessive profits, I do not care who the man is, whether it is Sir Joseph Flavelle, his agent, or any one else, he will be prosecuted.

Mr. CROTHERS: Do I infer that no such complaint has been made to my hon. friend as crown attorny during the last eighteen months? Because he has said he would prosecute if a case did come into his hands.

Mr. DEVLIN: The minister may not be as familiar with the system of law in the province where I practise as in his own province. But if he is as familiar with the system, then his duty is to see the officers charged with the administration of the law in that province and to place in their hands cases such as the one which I have read to-night. The minister knows as well as any one that such cases are happening every day. In this case at Winnipeg, where the General Hospital was deprived not only of a commodity, but of what is a necessity in the case of sick people, the minister immediately on receiving his report should take steps to place the case in the hands of the provincial authorities for prosecution, and not wait until an individual or until a member here or there takes action. He should see that action is taken himself.

Mr. CROTHERS:: My hon. friend must know that we have no jurisdiction over the officers of the province of Manitoba. It is the duty of the attorney general of that province to give direction, if any one is to give direction, to the several county crown attorneys, if they have them there. I have no jurisdiction over them.

Mr. DEVLIN: You have a right to lay a complaint.

Mr. CROTHERS: So has my hon. friend.

Mr. DEVLIN: It is your duty, but it is not mine.

Mr. CROTHERS: It is not my duty any more than my hon. friend's, and I think I am busier than he. He might take a little time to lay some of these complaints, and not trouble us with them. As soon as I heard of the chicken that had spoiled in cold storage in Winnipeg. I wired the manager of that concern, and he referred my wire to the head office in Toronto, who wrote me at once concerning the matter. A few days later I got an explanation from the manager of the concern in Winnipeg, which satisfied me there was no intention of wrong-doing, and I think the explanation would be perfectly satisfactory to my hon. friend; I shall be very glad to show him the letter. I am satisfied that the chickens were not kept in storage for a very long time for any improper purpose, because they were bought very much cheaper than they are now, and there was no sense in keeping them and buying others at a higher rate. Upon the information I got from Toronto and Winnipeg I am satisfied there was no intention of wrong-doing.

Mr. JACOBS: The minister states he has no jurisdiction over the officers in Manitoba. I should like to instance a case in connection with La Banque Ville Marie when Sir Charles Fitzpatrick came down from Ottawa, as solicitor general, to prosecute the people who were responsible for wrecking the bank. Under this Government, however, we have the surprising spectacle of a representative of the Justice Department coming to Montreal not to prosecute but to give bail for offenders, the first time in the history of this country that that kind of thing has ever happened, and it would be worthy of an opera by Gilbert and Sullivan if they were alive to-day. King George, through the Attorney General of the province of Quebec, prosecutes, and King George, through the Attorney General of the Dominion of Canada, gives bail.

Mr. CROTHERS: I would ask my hon. friend to bring that matter up when my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) is present, as he is more familiar with it.

Mr. McKENZIE: Perhaps it would be well to know from the minister if the abolition of patronage applies to his department as well as to other departments. Here is a paper which has been sent to me from the town of Elgin which my hon. friend knows. The Westport Mirror was sent to me with a marked announcement in it and which I read with surprise in view of the fact that there was to be no patronage in this country in the future. This is the notice:

NOTICE.

A meeting of the executive of the Liberal-Conservative Association of the village of Westport will be held at the office of W. M. Ewart on Wednesday evening, March 27 next at eight o'clock p.m. All persons who wish to apply for work on the Government Stone Quarry will kindly notify the Secretary before that date.

W. W. Russell,
Secretary.

Mr. J. D. REID: That is the stone quarry for the local Government, not for this Government.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am told it is for the canal out here.

Mr. J. D. REID: No.

Mr. McKENZIE: The Minister of Railways is always on hand with excuses, but I am told by the person who sent me this paper that the stone is for the Welland canal.

Mr. J. D. REID: The Welland canal has been shut down.

Mr. McKENZIE: I mean for the Rideau canal. I would like the minister to make inquiry and to ascertain if there is any truth in the statement that the secretary of the Liberal-Conservative Association is so blaspheming the holy doctrine of no patronage as to be calling people together so that he may exercise the patronage that is in his hands.

Mr. CROTHERS: I do not know whether my hon. friend refers to the provincial Government or the Dominion Government. If it is the Dominion Government, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals will know something about it. I do not employ these labourers. But he asked me about patronage. Let me just tell the committee what I have done during the last six years. I am not going to tell the whole thing. During these years I have never recommended a man for a position who asked for it. I think that, prima facie, the man who asks for a position in the Government is not qualified to fill it. It is a public declaration of his inability to make his way in the open field of competition. I have never in six years recommended for a position any man who asked for it because I have assumed that he was not fit for it.

An hon. MEMBER. But some of his friends asked for it.

Mr. CROTHERS: No, his friends did not. I can give case after case. Such men were not recommended by me nor were they appointed. While I have been a member of this Government for six years, I have never recommended a relative to a position; neither has a relative ever been appointed to a position either in my department or in any other department of the Government.

Mr. VERVILLE: The minister says that he has never recommended or appointed anybody who asked for a position. Coming back to the fair wage officer I mentioned, he said that he did not know about him, but I hope he will know next time.

Mr. McKENZIE: At the opening of this discussion some person asked about a labour difficulty down in Nova Scotia. I understand that there has been difficulty in the steel works at Sydney Mines. I think the minister is using his influence in mediation between these two bodies as much as possible. His influence, or the influence of some capable officer in his department might bring these two bodies together when they would not come together themselves. It has been found that when an entirely disinterested person, a person of influence, or an officer from the department, goes to the place he is able to do work in the way of conciliation that these men will listen to, when they would not pay much attention to the efforts of others. I hope the minister will use his best endeavours to bring these men together because it would be a very serious matter to have a strike in the steel or coal works in that place or anywhere else in Canada. If it can be avoided, I hope the minister will try to do so.

Mr. CROTHERS: Efforts have been made for several weeks, and a gentleman was sent from here to Sydney Mines, with that object in view? We thought we had the matter thoroughly settled but it seems that the employers did not carry out the understanding that we thought had been definitely reached. Efforts are still being made and we hope a strike may be averted.

Mr. BUREAU: When I made the remark to the minister that I found by the report that the inquiry as to prices had been extended to production, I was not sure as to what the report actually contained and the minister thought I was mistaken. I would like to read to him from the seventh annual report on wholesale prices in 1916-17, published by the Department of Labour. This is a letter from Mr. Ackland to the minister and it says:

The earlier reports dealt exclusively with the course of wholesale prices, but the later volumes include statements of the situation as to retail prices and prices in other countries with information as to production and market bearing directly on current prices.

"As to production and market." My inquiry was: What is the source of the information or from what statistician does he get this information as to production?

Mr. CROTHERS: I thought when the hon. gentleman, in referring to the matter a few moments ago, was speaking of the report I put on the Table to-day.

Mr. BUREAU: No, I have not seen that.

Mr. CROTHERS: That is not the one. It is the other one that was issued a year or two before. Mr. Stewart is the man who provides the statistics of both wholesale and retail prices.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend again states that Mr. Stewart compiles the statistics in reference to prices. That is all right; I am satisfied as to that, but what I want to know is: Who is gathering the statistics and from what source is that statement as to "production and market" conditions obtained?

Mr. CROTHERS: I do not think that refers to the production of the land.

Mr. BUREAU: "Bearing directly on current prices"—what production would that be?

Mr. CROTHERS: We have factories producing. I do not think he refers to farm products.

Mr. BUREAU: The prices that are current are wholesale prices in Canada. That covers every commodity required in ordinary life, all the necessaries of life, everything that is consumed by the ordinary man. So far as potatoes are concerned, I do not know what factory has been producing, or how he can get his information as to the production of potatoes.

Mr. CROTHERS: He gives the prices of potatoes, not the prices the farmer gets. However, I will be glad to make special inquiry from Mr. Stewart, and let the hon. gentleman know to-morrow.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Last year the hon. minister laid on the Table, and there was distributed amongst the members, a summary of some amendments proposed to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, which were not proceeded with. Does the minister intend to proceed with these amendments this session?

Mr. CROTHERS: I have already prepared a Bill, I may tell my hon. friend to make certain amendments to that Act.

Mr. CANNON: The minister has mentioned Mr. O'Connor. Mr. O'Connor has had several investigations, the reports of which I have read in the papers. I would like to know from the minister if Mr. O'Connor is only going to make reports, or if the Government intends to take any action as to the fixing of prices of food stuffs. That is what the people of our province, and not only of Quebec, but of all Canada, cannot understand, how this Government, which is supposed to take all kinds of measures to promote our share in this war—and we are all in favour of the war; we are all in favour of helping the Empire—does not fix prices on foodstuffs. How can people help when they are starving, and people are commencing to starve in our cities. Has the hon. gentleman taken any steps towards definitely fixing prices of foodstuffs, as is being done in other countries?

Mr. CROTHERS: My hon. friend is probably aware that there is no provision in this Order in Council that we have been administering for the last eighteen months authorizing us to fix prices. There is what is known as a Food Board in Canada to-day, and anything that is done by way of fixing prices is done by that board.

Mr. CANNON: Could not another Order in Council be passed giving power to this new board to fix prices? I understand that Orders in Council can easily be passed in these days.

Mr. CROTHERS: I think they have power already.

An hon. MEMBER: Does Mr. O'Connor suggest minimum prices on foods when he makes his reports?

Civil Government—Department of Immigration and Colonization—Salaries $129,292.50—Contingencies $25,000.

Mr. BUREAU: There should be some understanding arrived at if we are to take up further estimates to-night.

Hon. Mr. REID: I understood from the Prime Minister that whenever the request was made to adjourn we would do so. The only object in passing some of the Civil Government estimates is that when we go into Committee on certain days we would have some of the estimates already introduced to go ahead with.

Mr. BUREAU: The item now before us is for a new department, which we know very little about, and I think this is not a proper hour to take it up.

Mr. REID: Then there is another department here.

Mr. BUREAU: I would suggest that we had better adjourn now.

Mr. McKENZIE: The hour has arrived at which the Prime Minister mentioned we should adjourn.

Mr. CALDER: I would like to say, before we adjourn, that in the printing of the estimates for this department, a mistake was made. The original estimates as prepared by the department were afterwards corrected, and these corrections were sent to the Finance Department, but for some reason or other they were not included in the printed estimates; so that before the committee rises, I would like to send some typewritten copies across to hon. gentlemen opposite so that they and other hon. gentlemen will have the correct estimates before them. I might explain that the error occurred in this way; that certain promotions have been made in the department and as a result of those promotions there were certain vacancies created. Instead of there being 85 officers in the department, there are only some 83, the two increases being the deputy minister and my own private secretary.

Mr. BUREAU: As the corrections are in typewritten form, there will be time to have them printed and distributed through the post office.

Progress reported.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, the House adjourned at 11.36 p.m.

Wednesday, March 27, 1918.

The House met at Two o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 22, respecting the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers and to change its name to "The Engineering Institute of Canada."—Sir Herbert Ames.

Bill No 23, to incorporate Merchants Casualty Company.—Mr. Andrews.

Bill No. 24, respecting The Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.—Mr. Fripp.

REPORTS.

Report of the Department of Railways and Canals for the year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Reid.

Report of the Postmaster General, for the year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Doherty.

Report of the Department of Indian Affairs for the year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Calder.

Report of the Department of the Interior for the year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Calder.

Report of Hon. W. J. Hanna, Food Controller, covering the period in which he discharged the duties of that office.—Sir Robert Borden.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Sir Robert Borden moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House will unite with them in the formation of a Joint Committee of both Houses on the subject of the Printing of Parliament, and that the Members of the Select Standing Committee on Printing, viz.:—Messieurs: Bowman, Brouillard, Buchanan, Burnham, Cardin, Charters, Clark (Bruce), Clarke (Wellington), Crowe, Currie, Fontaine, Hocken, Hughes (Sir Sam), Keefer, Maclean (Halifax), Michaud, Murphy, Prevost, Reid (Mackenzie), Richardson, Shaw, Verville, White (Victoria), and Wilson (Wentworth), will act as members, on the part of this House, on the said Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George-Etienne Cartier), moved for leave to introduce Bill No 25 respecting Bankruptey.

Mr. SPEAKER: When I first saw this notice on the Order Paper, I had some doubt, in view of Rule 50, as to whether it was competent for the hon. member to introduce such a Bill without its having previously been passed upon in Committee of the Whole. But, apparently, the uniform practice of this House has been that Bills in respect of bankruptcy have not been deemed to be trade Bills as such, and therefore it may be introduced in the manner in which the hon. member proposes to introduce it.

Mr. JACOBS: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is a somewhat elaborate and comprehensive document, and if I were to give to it the time which it deserves, my explanation would probably keep the House here over the Easter recess. As hon. members are aware, there is no Bankruptcy Act in Canada. In that respect, Canada differs from practically every other civilized country; and it is proposed by this Bill to put Canada in line with other countries. As the House is aware, bankruptcy is within the purview of the Federal authority. No province can legislate with regard to bankruptcy, because of the fact that that subject is particularly declared in the British North America Act to be—like banking, railways, and so on—within the purview of the Federal authority. Of course, in the absence of any Bankruptcy Act, provided by the Federal authority, the provincial authority has done what it could to correct the anomaly which now exists.

The main purpose of a Bankruptcy Act, as I understand it, is to see to it that a debtor in certain cases obtains a discharge from his creditors. Now, we have not since 1880 had anything of the kind in this country, and it is high time that a measure of this kind should be passed. It is usual in these days for hon. gentlemen in introducing Bills to state that they are merely introduced as war measures. That seems to cover a multitude of sins—anything which you can declare to be a war measure receives the attention of this House. I think I can claim for this Bill that it is essentially a war measure at this particular time. We must be prepared, when the war comes to a close, to be able to handle the situation which is bound to arise in this country as a result of the long-continued struggle and of the readjustments that will have to be made. Our legislation will have to be sufficiently elastic to take care of the situation. Many people will find at the end of the war that it will be necessary for them to reconsider their position; and it is only right, I submit, that the necessary legislation should be provided for that purpose.

At present no distinction whatever is made as between the honest and the dishonest debtor in the matter of obtaining a discharge; they are all thrown into the discard. By this measure it is proposed that the courts shall carefully scrutinize the business dealings and the business relations of traders, and shall make a distinction—shall separate the sheep from the goats. When the court is of the opinion that a debtor has been obliged to assign through misfortune, he should be given the necessary relief. If, on the other hand, it should be found, in scrutinizing his affairs, that he wrecked his own business wilfully, then, of course, he should receive no relief whatever. That is the crux of every bankruptcy law, and it is for that reason that I have introduced this Bill for the consideration of hon. members.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by asterisks).

HON. MR. SEVIGNY'S STATUS.

Mr. CANNON:

1. Is Honourable Albert Sévigny occupying a post or fulfilling a function under the control of the Crown, or is he a member of any Commission appointed by the Government?

2. If so, what is that post, function or commission, and what is the remuneration thereof?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): This question was sufficiently answered by the announcement I made yesterday.

EMPLOYEES ON GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. How many employees of every description were on the pay-rolls of the Government Railways on the 31st day of December last, including any and all railways in Canada owned or controlled by His Majesty?

2. How many men were employed in Canada on ships owned by His Majesty on same date?

Hon. J. D. REID:

1. 20,917, were on the pay rolls of the Canadian Government railways, on December 31st, last, of whom 1,901 were employed on steamers and car ferries and 480 were on military service in receipt of full military pay.

2. Agriculture.—Men employed on ships in the Quarantine Service: On S.S. Minoca, Halifax, N.S., 8; on board Madge, William Head, B.C., 10; on launch Evelyn, Prince Rupert, B.C., 1. At Grosse Isle, Quebec, two boats of this service were laid up for the winter in Louise Basin, Quebec, with one watchman in charge. At the other stations hired boats are used.

Marine and Fisheries.—427.

Naval Service.—It is not considered advisable in the public interest to give the number of men borne on the books of ships under the control of the Naval Service Department.

MILL FEED, BRAN AND SHORTS.

Mr. KAY:

1. Has any order been passed by Mr. McGregor prohibiting or restricting the shipment of mill feed, bran or shorts from any place in Western Canada to the Eastern Provinces?

2. If so, (a) what is the order, (b) and how long will it remain in force?

Hon. Mr. CRERAR:

1. An arrangement has been made with the mills west of and including Kenora that they will not ship bran or shorts east of Kenora without a written consent from Mr. McGregor.

2. (a) Answered by No. 1. (b) The arrangement is expected to continue as long as it will facilitate the distribution of feed at a minimum cost and tend to reduce transportation difficulties.

Mr. KAY:

1. Has any effort been made to enforce the regulations of the Food Controller, regulating the price of bran and shorts?
2. Have any actions been taken for contravention of this regulation against dealers in the Provinces of Quebec or Ontario?
3. If so, give names and penalties enforced?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. It is the duty of the local officials charged with the administration of justice through the departments of the respective Provincial Attorneys General to deal with the breach of the laws, Orders in Council and regulations thereunder, (including any relating to bran and shorts) in the same manner that any other breach of the law is punished by the local judicial authorities. In addition it is the public duty of all citizens and local provincial and municipal police officials to lay complaint and have the laws obeyed. The Canada Food Board, whenever any breach of the regulations relating to food is specifically brought to its attention, will take and have taken the necessary and proper steps to prevent such infraction, even, if necessary, by the cancellation of license to do business.

2. Yes.

3. As the Canada Food Board does not, of itself, prosecute, it is not able to state what prosecutions have taken place in the different provinces, and information should be sought from the departments of the respective Provincial Attorneys General. But the Canada Food Board has been advised by the Crown Attorney for the county of Lambton in the province of Ontario, that he had prosecuted, upon the information of Mr. H. A. Gilroy, President of the Lambton County Co-operative Association, a miller, by the name of John Wheeler, of Alvinston, before the local magistrate, for overcharge on bran and shorts, who pleaded guilty and was fined $10 and costs. As appears from the following letter from Mr. Gilroy, of Alvinston, the complainant therein, it is expected that this prosecution will cause the millers to obey the law, viz:

The Lambton County Co-Operative Asociation.

Alvinston, March 19th, 1918.

E. R. McDonald, Esq.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:

Replying to yours of 16th inst. I have no later receipts. None since March 11th, and thanks to your efforts I have every reason to believe that the mills are obeying the law, not only Wheeler but some of the larger concerns who were formerly quoting shorts $40 per ton car lots F. O. B. Toronto. I would respectfully suggest that you take action to have papers stop carrying ads. for Low Grade Flour and in fact all illegal products of milled wheat. They are quoted every day in daily papers. Now sir, as head of this (above) Association permit me to convey to you our thanks for your prompt efforts in this matter, also to have you convey same attitude to Mr. W. P. McDonald, Dist. Representative for Lambton County at Petrolia, Ont., who was of material benefit in bringing the issue to a successful conclusion.

Respectfully yours,
H. A. Gilroy.

Mr. KAY:

1. Is the exportation of bran, shorts, and mill feed from Canada prohibited?
2. Is the exportation of said feeds allowed by license?
3. If so, how many licenses have been issued between August 1, 1917, and February 28, 1918?
4. To whom, and for what amounts were said licenses issued?

Hon. Mr. CRERAR:

1. Yes.

2. Yes, in special cases.

3 and 4. At their special request licenses were granted to the Governors of various West India Islands and Newfoundland, as follows: Bermuda, 12,500 pounds; Trinidad, 17,000 pounds; British West Indies, 50 bags; Trinidad, 100 bags; Bermuda, 600 bags; Newfoundland, 700 bags; Turks Island, 100 bags; British West Indies, 5,000 pounds; Newfoundland, 500 bags; Bermuda, 600 bags.

INTERNMENT OF SIEFRIED H. MINDHEIM.

Mr. POWER:

1. Is Siefried H. Mindheim at the present time interned at Fort Henry, Kingston, or elsewhere, as a war prisoner?
2. If so, since what date, and for what reason?
3. If not, when was he discharged?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. Yes, at Kapuskasing.

2. Since May 29, 1915, being a Prussian reservist, and from his actions, intelligence and education deemed to be a danger to the State.

3. Answered by No. 1.

APPOINTMENT OF FRENCH CANADIAN MINISTERS.

*Mr. HOCKEN:

1. Has the attention of the Government been called to a statement which appeared in the Globe, Toronto, of March 21, to the effect, that in regard to the Quebec representation in the Cabinet, while no definite developments are expected in the near future, it is understood that tentative proposals have been made to several prominent French Canadians on both sides of politics, that these pourparlers are still in a tentative stage and that it is expected that if arangements cannot be carried out during the present session for the entry of two French Canadians into the Government and for securing seats for them, the matter will be arranged, at any rate, before the beginning of next session?

2. Have any negotiations been entered into by the Government to secure seats now held by members of the Opposition in the province of Quebec for supporters of the Government to enable that province to secure French representation in the Cabinet?

3. If not, is it the intention of the Government to enter into negotiations for that purpose?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The reply to the first and second questions is, No. In reply to the third question, I may say that the subject has not been under consideration.

POSITION OF CHARLES HARMAN.

*Mr. MURPHY:

1. Has the attention of the Government been directed to the following letter published in the Toronto Globe on January 12, 1918:—

"Porter, Butler & Payne,
"Barristers, Solicitors, Notaries Public, Etc.
"Belleville, Ont., December 22, 1917.

"Chas. Harman, Esq.,
"Frankford, Ont.

"Dear Sir,—Notwithstanding I had you appointed to your present position upon the recommendation of your friends at Frankford, I am now informed by them that you have entirely forfeited their confidence and right to maintain the position which you now hold. You will therefore let me have your resignation at once, otherwise I shall have to take it up with the Department and have you dismissed.

"If I do not hear from you within the next week I shall take it up with the Department.

"Yours truly,
"E. GUSS PORTER."

2. Was Charles Harman employed by the Government as an axeman on the Trent Valley Canal?

3. If so, was he dismissed from such position?

4. What was the reason for his dismissal, and the date thereof?

5. Is the Government aware that Ross Harman, the son of the said Charles Harman, volunteered for service with the Canadian Expeditionary Force and was killed at the front prior to the general election of December last?

Hon. Mr. REID:

1. No.
2. Yes.
3. No.
4. Answered by No. 3.
5. The Government have no information.

ADVANCES TO PROVINCES.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska):

1. To which of the Provinces of Canada has the Government loaned or advanced sums of money as stated by the Acting Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on the 25th of March, 1918?

2. What sums have been so loaned or advanced to each province, respectively?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:

1 & 2. Ontario, $2,000,000; Saskatchewan, $2,500,000.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN.

Mr. Verville:

1. What sums, if any, have been paid since the first day of August, 1917, to the Canadian Northern railway or to any persons, firm, corporation, bank or company in trust for and on behalf of the Canadian Northern?

2. Under what authority have these sums been paid?

3. If by virtue of Orders in Council, what is the date of each of said Orders in Council, and what is the amount authorized by each of said Orders, and so paid?

CANADA FOOD BOARD.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

For a copy of the Orders in Council creating the Canada Food Board, and all correspondence antecedent or posterior to the Order in Council with respect to the same as well as of all regulations not already brought down.

He said: The statements which were read yesterday and the day before by the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) with regard to the battle which is now going on in France make it very plain that the conflict in which we are engaged will be a very prolonged one. However the present battle may terminate, it will not be the end of the war, although it may mean the end of a chapter. Should the battle end disastrously for the Allies, and should the Germans, as contemplated in the announcement of General von Hindenburg, made some few weeks ago, reach Paris, I think we know enough of the disposition of the French people to-day to realize that, even if Paris were to be bombarded and destroyed, the plough pass over its ruins, and salt to be strewn over the soil, the French people would not, under any circumstances, surrender nor abandon the fight. As to Britain's share of the struggle, we know very well from the character of its people that once they have entered into a fight they will continue to the bitter end, whatever that end may be.

It has been a singular characteristic of this war that up to the present time there has been no decisive victory, unless it be perhaps the victory of the Marne River, which put an end forever to the plans of the German staff to reach Paris in six weeks, then force France to surrender and sign a peace, and next turn upon Russia. There has been no decisive victory on either side, and after the battle of the Marne the plan adopted by the military staffs of the Allies seems to have been to resort to a war of attrition—that is to say, to a war of exhaustion of the enemy's forces and resources, supplies and munitions. The plan undoubtedly was well conceived; it was to encircle the central empires of Germany and Austria by an iron wall, having France to the West, Italy on the South, and Russia on the East, and to enforce a blockade of the Northern Seas. Undoubtedly if the plan had succeeded as it was conceived it might well be supposed that at the present time Germany would have been defeated, if not by an overwhelming, certainly by a decisive victory. But the collapse of Russia has shattered all these hopes. The other day the Prime Minister, speaking on the Address, expressed the hope and the possibility that Russia will find herself again and become once more an effective factor in the war. That Russia will come back again to its former strength, I believe can be hoped for, but that that country will be a factor during the balance of the present war seems to me absolutely beyond possibility. If the leaders of the Russian revolution had not been simple idealists, if they had been practical men, they would have realized that the attempt to create a republic, or any kind of constitutional government, out of the uneducated masses of the Russian people would fatally end in disaster, failure and anarchy; and though, for my part, I entertain the hope that there, as elsewhere, democracy will triumph, it is beyond the possibility of belief, it seems to me, to suppose that out of these uneducated masses you can have for many years to come a regular government. The battle, therefore, is to be fought and won quite independent of Russia, and it is to be fought and won on the lines adopted after the battle of the Marne: that is to say, through a war of attrition and exhaustion of the enemy. Unfortunately, after the collapse of Russia, and the introduction of a new feature into the war by the employment, in violation of all international laws, of the submarine against neutral as well Allied merchant vessels, the exhaustion is on the one side as on the other; and it is impossible to carry on the war with all the strength and vigour necessary, unless we have adequate production of food. This fact has been made very evident by the report made by Mr. Hanna on the 24th of January last, and which has been laid on the table of the House by the Prime Minister. In that report Mr. Hanna says:

> The dire necessity of saving wheat for the Allies is illustrated by the fact that of the 450,000,000 bushels required until the next crop is harvested, Canada and the United States can only supply, from supplies in sight, 150,000,000 bushels. Comparing the supply of wheat from America for the period from August 1st, 1917, to December 15th, 1917, with the same period of 1916, the former is only 13-23rds of the latter.

These figures are simply appalling, and evidently all possible efforts must be directed towards increasing the production of food.

But we have only to look at our own domestic condition to see another aspect of the case. The price of food products of all kinds has been soaring steadily until there is not a housewife in the land, even among those of ordinary or average income, who does not spend anxious moments every day in devising ways and means to supply the family table. If the cause of these soaring prices were simply the law of supply and demand, the Government would, perhaps, have been powerless—at all events largely so—to remedy the situation. But it is admitted on all sides that the cause of these soaring prices is to be found not in the inexorable law of supply and demand, but largely in the hoardings of food by heartless speculators who are attempting to build up fortunes out of the hunger of the masses. This situation is patent to everybody. That the Government themselves could not ignore it is evidenced by the fact that some few months ago they decided to take steps to control, so far as they could, the prices by the appointment of a Food Controller. Certain departmental and governmental orders have been brought down on this subject, and the first to which I wish to refer is that which establishes the food controllership. On 16 June last the following Order in Council was passed:

> 1. The Governor General in Council may appoint an officer to be known as Food Controller for Canada, who shall hold office during His Majesty's pleasure.
>
> 2. It shall be within the power of and it shall be the duty of the Food Controller,
>
> (a) To make such inquiry and investigation as he deems necessary for the purposes hereinafter set forth, into the quantities, location and ownership, and into the sources of supply of any article of food used by the people of Canada and into the prices at which same is sold or held for sale and the causes of such prices.
>
> (b) To ascertain the food requirements of Canada and to facilitate the export of the surplus to Great Britain and her Allies.
>
> (c) To make regulations where he deems it in the public interest and subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council.
>
> (1) Governing the prices of any article of food and the storage, distribution, sale and delivery thereof.
>
> (2) Providing for the conservation of food and the prevention of waste thereof and governing the consumption of food in hotels, restaurants, cafés, private houses, clubs and other places.

(3) Respecting the manufacture, preparation, storage and transport of foods.

(4) Authorizing the Food Controller to purchase, requisition, store, sell and deliver food.

3. For all the purposes of these orders, the Food Controller shall have the powers of a Commissioner appointed under the provisions of Part One of the Inquiries Act.

So far as this Order in Council goes, no fault is to be found with it. It is comprehensive, but while it provides for the conservation and distribution of food, it makes no attempt whatever to take hold of the question of the production of food.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I do not quite understand my right hon. friend's last observation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My last observation was that in the Order in Council there is nothing that I can see which tends to stimulate the production of food. The regulation is simply for the preservation and control of the food supplies already existing; no attempt is made to encourage production. The observation which I have to make regarding this Order in Council providing for the conservation of food and the controlling of prices is simply this: nothing has been done of a drastic character to bring down prices and to preserve effectively the food supplies. As I have said, this Order in Council was passed on 16th June. On 21st June Mr. Hanna was appointed Food Controller. On 9th August the first Order was passed under the authority conferred upon Mr. Hanna, in which he defines 'restaurant," "public eating place," and "bacon." On 18th August another regulation is passed prohibiting the exportation of flour without a license. On 24th August the sale of all canned vegetables is prohibited, while fresh vegetables are available. On 11th August a regulation is made to compel producers and manufacturers to give to the Government all information respecting purchases, sales and production. On 19th October a regulation is passed forbidding the sale of all cereals known as breakfast foods except under license. On 21st October, just two days afterward, that Order is suspended to become effective on 1st January. On 23rd October the importation of oleomargarine is allowed. On 2nd November a regulation is passed that no grain which can be used for food shall be used for the distillation of potable liquors. On 15th November a regulation is made prohibiting the exportation, except under license, of a large list of commodities. On the same date manufacturers and dealers are prohibited to manufacture or sell, without license, any kinds of food which the Food Controller may from time to time designate. On the same day a regulation is made that flour mills of certain capacity are not to manufacture except under license. On 27th November a regulation is passed concerning the manufacture of malt, and on 3rd December the export of certain commodities except under license is prohibited. On 24th December a regulation is passed concerning transportation by rail. On 21st January a regulation is passed prohibiting flour mills, without regard to capacity, to manufacture except under license. On 12th February a further regulation is passed concerning public eating places. On 9th March an Order in Council of some importance was passed, from which I quote the following:

His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Right Honourable the Prime Minister and under the authority of the War Measures Act, 1914, is pleased to make the following regulations and the same are hereby made and enacted accordingly:—

1. No person, firm, association or incorporated company shall engage in the slaughtering of live stock, or the manufacture of products therefrom, the gross value of whose sales from such business shall exceed seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars during any one year, without a written license from the Canada Food Board under provisions made by them in that behalf.

2. A licensee shall, so far as practicable, so fix the prices on his sales that the profit thereon or on that part thereof not expressly excluded from this limitation, shall not exceed two per cent. of the gross value of his sales during any one year.

Then again there is an Order in Council of 12th March, 1918. This is the last Order which has been brought down, giving power to the Board to prevent the hoarding of food. This is a summary of all the regulations, of all the action taken by the Government in order to regulate the prices of food and, if possible, to keep them within reasonable and legitimate limits. I say, without fear of contradiction, that the action of the Board has been a great disappointment. We had a right to expect much more than has been done by the Board. Nothing effective has been done to bring down the prices of food, the high cost of which is weighing so heavily upon the people.

But if the Board has been slow to move with regard to taking effective action, the Board has not been slow with regard to organizing itself, its staff, and paying very high salaries. Mr. Hanna, to his credit be it said, would not take any salary for his services, but Mr. Hanna, who had been appointed on 21st of June, 1917, obtained, on 3rd July 1917, an Order in Council appointing a pretty large staff of highly paid officials. On that date the appointment was made of Samuel Elsworth Todd, as chief of the Food Controller's staff, at a salary of $4,500 per annum, of Walter Abraham Willison, as chief of the educational branch, at a salary of $4,500, and of Frederick William French, as chief of the organization branch, at a salary of $250 per month and living expenses not to exceed $100 per month, or a total salary of $4,200 per annum. What is peculiar is that I have not found stated anywhere in the regulations the powers and the duties attributed to the several officers who are paid these high salaries. I would have supposed that an Order in Council would be passed to designate the powers and duties of the Chief of the Food Controller's staff, Mr. Samuel Elsworth Todd, and the same with regard to Mr. Walter Abraham Willison, who was appointed chief of the educational branch at a salary of $4,500. Nothing, however, is shown in the regulations as to what are to be the duties and powers of the chief of the educational branch. Education is a very broad word. Who are to be educated? What is the education to be in, and what is intended by that? As to this, we are left altogether in the dark. Then you have the appointment of Mr. Frederick William French, as chief of the organization branch. What does the organization branch consist of? As to that we are also in the dark. Later on the staff was much enlarged. On 23rd August, 1917, the following Order in Council was passed, approving a recommendation of the Food Controller:

The Food Controller recommends, in order to obviate the necessity of having an Order in Council passed to confirm each and every appointment, and as a number of the said appointments will be for short periods, that authority be given for the appointment of persons to fill the following positions when required at not more than the salary set forth:

Stenographer and secretary, $1,000; stenographer and secretary, $1,000; Assistant to Chief of Educational Bureau, $3,000; Special clerk, $2,000; clerk, $700; clerk, $700; stenographer and secretary, $1,000; French stenographer and secretary, $1,000; stenographer and secretary, $1,000; clerk, $1,000; Domestic Science expert, $1,200; Domestic Science expert, living allowance $50 per month, $600; stenographer and secretary, $1,000; Abattoir expert, $2,500; Assistant to Chief Food Industries Bureau, $2,000; stenographer, $900; clerk, $1,000; stenographer, $900; clerk, $1,000; clerk, $1,000; stenographer, $1,000; stenographer, $900; accountant, $1,800; assistant accountant and clerk, $1,500; Chief files clerk, $1,200; files clerk, $800; files clerk, $700; clerk, $600; messenger, $500; messenger, $500; Press reader, $1,500; secretaries for special committees, $3,000.

The total is $38,000. These figures are large enough, but they are nothing in comparison with the organization which was made later on after the resignation of Mr. Hanna. Mr. Hanna resigned on January 24 last, and two days afterwards the following Order in Council was passed:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a memorandum dated January 24, 1918, from the President of the Privy Council, submitting that the Food Controller, under the authority of the Order in Council of June 16, 1917, has recommended that the appointments authorized by the Order in Council of July 3, 1917; August 23, 1917 and October 8, 1917, be cancelled, and that authority be given for the appointment by the Food Controller of persons to fill the following positions at salaries not to exceed in any case the amounts specified for the several positions.

I commend to the attention of the House the staff which is here provided for:

Chairman of Executive Council, $5,000;

What is the Executive Council of the Food Control Board? I do not know; it has been impossible for me to find in the correspondence that has been brought down what is the Executive Council, what are its duties and powers. At all events, the Chairman of the Executive Council is to receive a salary of $5,000.

Chief of Staff, $4,500;

What is the Chief of Staff? What are his duties? There is nothing to show in the papers brought down.

Assistant Chief of Staff, $4,000; three administrative heads, each $4,200; nine department heads, each, $3,500; Secretary Executive Council, $3,500; Clerk to Chairman Executive Council, $3,500; Chief Files Clerk, $1,200; Private Secretary to Dominion Chairman National Committee on Food Rersources, living expenses, $2,000; Private Stenographer to Dominion Chairman, living expenses, $500; Accountant, $2,800; Acountant, $2,600; Accountant, $2,500; nine special clerks, each $2,000; Domestic Science Expert, $2,000; French Writer for Educational Department, $2,800; Special Writer for Women's Publications, $2,000; Press Reader for Educational Department, $1,600; Clerk for Roneo machines, $800; Hotel Inspector, $2,000; Traffic Manager, $2,500; thirty stenographers each, $1,200; four stenographers each, $1,000; Clerk for Inquiry Office, $1,500; fifteen clerks for Export and Import Registration and licensing each, $900; four messengers, each, $700.

These appointments number ninety-two, and the amount involved is something like $165,000. In addition, there is provided for stenographers and secretaries for the provincial committees the sum of $9,000; for organizers for food conservation in provinces, $16,000; and to provide secretaries for special committees, $4,000. The Food Controller himself is paid a salary of $7,000, which brings the expenditure for this branch up to something like $200,000 a year. Now, I submit in all conscience these figures are simply extravagant in view of the work that has been done by the Food Board. On the 4th of February last Mr. Thomson, of Victoria, B.C., was appointed Food Controller in the place of Mr. Hanna. Of Mr. Thomson, I, for my part, know nothing. Although I have been a pretty long time in public life, I must say that until I saw his name mentioned I had never heard of him. That is not to his discredit, I admit; he may be a very good man; but I do submit that it was not sound policy to appoint to this position a man who was absolutely unknown. Mr. Hanna, on the contrary, was a man well known and well tried in public life, and of great ability. I think his appointment was a judicious one, but I cannot say the same with reference to Mr. Thomson's appointment. Two days afterwards the Food Controller's office was completely reorganized. Up to that time we had had a Food Controller. Now we have a Food Board. It was on the 11th of February the Order in Council was passed creating the Canada Food Board, "the said Board to consist of a Director of Food Conservation, a Director of Food Production, and a Director of Agricultural Labour; that the Board shall be under the jurisdiction of and shall report to the Governor in Council through the Minister of Agriculture." A few days afterwards Mr. Thomson was appointed Director of Food Conservation and Chairman of the Board; Mr. Charles A. Dunning, well known as a member of the Government of Saskatchewan, was made Director of Food Production, and Mr. James D. McGregor, well known also in the business world, was made Director of Agricultural Labour. I would call the attention of the House to this: three different positions were thus created, the Director of Food Conservation, the Director of Food Production, and the Director of Agricultural Labour—but here again there is no inkling of the powers or of the duties imposed under any of these heads. Perhaps I may be told that the powers and duties are sufficiently indicated by the titles, "Director of Food Conservation," "Director of Food Production," and so on. Well, I imagine that the duties imposed on the Director of Food Conservation are similar to those imposed on Mr. Hanna—that all the duties delegated to Mr. Hanna on June 16 last by the Order in Council which I have read are now delegated to Mr. Thomson. Then there is the Director of Food Production; what are his duties and powers? I alluded some time ago to a newspaper article which I read in the House to the effect that Mr. Dunning had been directed by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) to buy one thousand tractors with a view to helping in food production. So far so good; that is something done at all events, but not very much, for, after all, what it amounts to is simply the removal of the customs duty on tractors. That is better than nothing at all, I admit, and I express my satisfaction at that. Then what are the duties and powers of the Director of Agricultural Labour? How is he to be employed? I know that several schemes of a more or less extended nature have been put before the Government with a view to increasing food production in this country, by bringing under cultivation a larger acreage than has been tilled in the last few years. That may be a step in the right direction, but what I complain of is that in this respect the action taken by the Government seems to have been very slipshod, to say the least; there is no complete or definite information, unless it be contained in some Orders in Council or regulations which have not been brought before the House. One would suppose that when this Government brought down the Orders in Council on the opening day of Parliament they would bring down everything which would instruct the public as to the character of the actions which they have taken to improve the food situation, which admittedly is painful. But this information is not given in the Orders in Council brought down. Therefore, I beg to move the motion which is now in your hands, Mr. Speaker.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I have a general idea, gained by virtue of being a member of the Council, of the duties of the Food Controller and of his operations, but that department was really in the hands and under the direction of the President of the Privy Council, who unfortunately, by reason of illness, is not able to be present in the House. I shall therefore simply advert in a general way to some of the remarks made by my right hon. friend. There are two phases which he has passed under review; one was his resume of the work of the Food Controller as Food Controller, and the other, about which he seems to have the least information, had reference to the second stage, when the Food Controller's work was merged into the larger organization known as the Canada Food Board. With reference to the latter my hon. colleague the Minister of Agriculture has more knowledge than I, and will probably say something when I shall have finished.

I am not going to follow my right hon. friend in his prefatory remarks as to the urgency of the food situation consequent upon the general war situation as it has developed. I have no objection to take to his remarks in that respect as a fair review of the situation.

I have stronger hopes that the duration of the war will be less than my hon. friend seems to think. However, that is a mere matter of opinion, and no one can tell with certainty. I do not agree with the right hon. gentleman when he says that it is not the operation of the law of supply and demand that causes the high and advancing prices in this country. Prices have advanced throughout the world, and prices in Canada have probably been less than in most, if not all, of the other countries. I think the main reason for the increasing prices is in the relation of supply to demand, taken in conjunction with the necessary means for getting the supply to the place of demand, that is, the general transportation question—and how that question comes in will be evident if we take the cases of Australia and New Zealand into consideration. In Australia there are millions of bushels of wheat lying stacked, the result of two years' crop, the larger part of which surplus remains to this day, simply because it is impossible economically to ship it to the centre of demand, on account of the great distance to be traversed and the scant supply of ships. The same condition prevails with regard to New Zealand. Their warehouses and wharves are stacked up to the brim with food supplies. If the transport problem had not been so difficult, that grain and food supply in Australia and New Zealand would have been brought to the centres of demand, and would have largely prevented the increase in prices. It being found impossible, on account of transport difficulties, to move those great supplies, the nearer sources of supply have been drawn upon; that is the North American continent, and partly the South American continent. True, the question of distance is a factor, in connection with Argentina, though only in a secondary degree as compared with New Zealand and Australia. Thus the weight of the burden of furnishing supplies has to be borne by the United States and Canada, the distance being short, in comparison with other countries. These problems, combined with the awful waste of food which takes place in war time, bring about the high cost. The abstraction of productive power from the harvest fields of the world, turned as it has been to active warfare and the subsidiary supports of active warfare, has caused an insufficiency of supply, and, therefore, a tightening of prices. I do not think any person can dispassionately review the conditions and come to any other conclusion than that these conditions have been the main and the basic reason why the prices of food products have gone up continuously and uniformly, and why, therefore, we are under this burden of the high cost of living. There are subsidiary local reasons that may accentuate this condition. But I make the statement, and I challenge contradiction in this House, that hoarding or speculative holding has been a comparatively trivial factor in increasing the cost of food to the consumers of this country. That is borne out by investigations which have been made in both the United States and Canada. Bear in mind that, under modern systems of food supply, the refrigerating storehouse and the warehouse are necessities in times of peace, and in times of war they become still more necessary, because transport is uncertain and the food supply must be gathered in central places and kept there so that when vessels are available the supply may be ready for them and they may not have to wait in port. Meat and dairy products have to be stored, to be kept in edible condition, and that can only be done by means of cold storage. I remember being West and going through the immense storage houses in Calgary and other places. There was at that time a very large amount of meat products in storage, and why was it there? Every pound of the million dollars' worth of produce stored there was under contract to be supplied to Great Britain or the other Allies. It was there, Sir, at their order, ready for immediate transport, whenever they should send for it. We must take into account that storage and warehousing, and their consequent cost, are absolutely necessary in the modern ways of doing business, and that the necessity for these is accentuated when transport conditions as they exist are present. But when you speak of hoarding for gain or speculation in this country, it is a negligible factor in increasing prices. As a local influence it does not enter largely into the general increase in commodity prices.

I submit these observations in reply to what I think is not only a false but a mischievous doctrine to be preached at the present time. Everybody knows that there is trouble enough in the country with the burdens that we are bearing, and with the cost that we have to bear, without giving currency to an opinion that this increased cost is largely due to the fact that there are soulless speculators and hoarders doing their work of holding back the necessary supplies. To a certain extent, that does take place, and under the best system you can have, there will be something of that kind; but I make the assertion that this has not been a large factor by any means in the cost of food in Canada. I have had occasion to make investigation lately with reference to the wheat supply, the statement having been made that the wheat has not been coming out from the West from the farmers' hands, that the farmers are hoarding wheat with the idea that they may obtain a greater price another year. Very careful consideration has been given to that question, and the answer has been received—and I think a satisfactory answer—that after as complete an investigation as could be made, it is not a fact to-day that the farmers in the West are hoarding their surplus of wheat but rather their wheat is going out; compared with other years and considering the means of transport at their disposal, there has been an outpouring of the wheat, rather than a hoarding of it. There are gentlemen in this House who have a great deal to do with the production and transport of wheat, and I leave it to them to say whether I am within bounds in making that statement.

3 p.m.

I come now to the next point with which my right hon. friend finds fault in the papers that I brought down with reference to the Food Controller—and I hope he will keep that word "controller" in his mind. He has been talking about the Food Controller. The Food Controller was appointed to control, he was not appointed to produce, and consequently the criticism of my right hon. friend that in those duties assigned to the Food Controller there did not seem to be anything which took hold of the greater question of the production of food falls to the ground. The Food Controller here, as in other countries, has been appointed for the purpose of controlling food. I know that a very general notion was held that when the Food Controller was appointed the first thing that would be done would be the establishment of a scale of prices beyond which nobody should charge for that which they sold, that pork would be so much, beef so much, bacon so much, and so on all through the list, and so the consumer would be protected. I think my right hon. friend's own good sense, devoted to consideration of a proposition of that kind for fifteen minutes, would show him that such a thing was impossible. The experience of all countries, during the last four years, has gone to show that that is not the way to arrive at a wise and economic solution of the problem. The Food Controller was appointed to control food; to see, in the first place, that no food was wasted; to take hold of the question of the handling of food, after its primary production, in its several stages, and so to regulate it that the best methods of providing the most economical foods should be carried out. The long series of Orders in Council read by my right hon. friend and the powers given one after another in these Orders in Council, show the graduation of the work. When Mr. Hanna was appointed Food Controller many people in this country expected that on the next day he would come out with a schedule of prices, and with restrictive measures which would be productive of a fall in prices. Mr. Hanna had before him a problem greater than had been presented to any man in the Dominion of Canada. He had to study that problem. A step in the way of executive control without a thorough study of the bases on which it would be founded, might have landed him in error after error, of a costly nature, and probably every step would have to be retracted. Therefore, in the early period of his term of office the Controller made a careful examination in order to obtain reliable information to enable him to take the secondary steps. That took time. It also took brains. It also took muscle, and organization was necessary. Organization is impossible without men who are fitted to organize, and if my right hon. friend will just pay a moment's attention to the designations of the officers that were appointed, from time to time, he will see what their general trend of work was, and will realize that it would have been nothing less than stupid inefficiency to put low paid clerks in those positions which required the very best brains and the very best organizing capacity and experience that could be obtained.

I think the House will go with me in that opinion. You cannot get this definite, though, well-digested information except through very careful organization; and for this you must have captains of organization, men of experience and organizing ability, fitted to get the facts and to marshal them; and to these men you have to pay commensurate salaries. Now, I am not going into the particulars of these officers and these salaries; I am just going to leave my remarks with that general statement which I think will approve itself to the House.

As my right hon. friend read on, he came to gradation after gradation in this service. It crept up through the general regulation and restriction of the public eating houses, which were not difficult to get at. It crept up through the general organization to keep expensive foods from being used where healthy and less expensive foods would take their place. It went along the lines of the border between ourselves and the United States for three thousand miles in a regulation coterminus with the regulations in the United States, as to imports and exports from one country to the other. The whole of the food imports and exports of the Dominion of Canada had to be placed under the Food Controller, because on the other side of the line, Mr. Hoover, the Food Controller in the United States, had that power put in his hands by the President's proclamation. Mr. Hoover had to collaborate with Mr. Hanna, and Mr. Hanna had to collaborate with Mr. Hoover, and in the interdependence of the two countries for food supplies the closest work between the two controllers—team work so to say—had to be carried on. That required organization, and it required organization of good brain power and of good experience, in order that it might be effectively carried on. If my right hon. friend could have spent a week, as I have spent some hours, in meetings and consultations with the different committees of experts in these different lines who came here to Ottawa and stayed for a week, for ten days, for two weeks when necessary—collaborating with the Food Control Department's officers as to the regulations which could be put in force, how they could best effect their purpose, exchanging advice and translating it into practical activity—he would not be surprised at the time that had to be taken, and at the amount of work in organization that had to be put through. For a country like Canada, that cannot be done without a great deal of labour and organizing power, and a great deal of consequent cost.

Then we come to the point where the Food Controller brought the mills of the country under license. For what purpose? Two purposes. In order, in the first place, to regulate their production of flour so that the least expensive flour of edible quality could be produced and the greatest good, therefore, extracted from the grains of the country, and in the second place, that we might use these powers coterminously with the United States, in order that what went on in the one country should not be balked of its purpose by something which took place in the other. So that that system extended itself until in the production of food the system of licensing has extended over the whole Dominion.

Then came the live stock regulation about which my hon. friend read. It was with reference to the killing and the dressing of stock—such and such were not to be disposed of within certain limits of age, and so on, through the different gradations, looking to the conserving of the supply of meats. Now, in reference to cost, the basis of action is decided upon as in the case of the packers. Instead of fixing prices, it was thought better, by a thorough cost system, to get at what it cost the packers to produce, and then to limit them strictly to a reasonable profit. I think you get the most economical and effective solution of the business in that way. Instead of placing prices on this, that and every other product that goes into consumption, you get at it at the place of manufacture as in the case of flour, bran and shorts, and you prevent inordinate profits by fixing the maximum beyond which they cannot go. Then, by careful co-ordination and supervision, you make sure that the people get the products at those reduced figures, so far as supervision can make that possible.

Now, I think I have come pretty nearly to the end of the remarks which I propose to make on the Food Controller, and I am going to hand this business over now to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) for his remarks with reference to the Food Control Board. Before I leave the subject entirely, however, I would make this further observation. My right hon. friend read a list of 92 employees and of salaries and expenses therewith which would total up to about $200,000 in the year, and, without any analysis at all as to either the necessity or caliber of those appointed, the requisite qualities that they should have and the fair remuneration that should be paid, he came to the conclusion that this was an example of wanton waste and prodigality. I do not think he proved his conclusion. I think that, in order to show that his conclusion is right, he would have to go into the amount of the work done and the quality of the help that is needed to do the work, and deduction would then follow according to the facts. I am certain of this, that in Mr. Hanna's work in the capacity of Food Controller, and so far as I know in Mr. Thomson's work in his capacity as Chairman of the Food Board, they have done most excellently. They have done as good work as any other two men could have done. My right hon. friend approved of the appointment of Mr. Hanna because he knew Mr. Hanna, and because Mr. Hanna had been a political figure, and therefore he was well known and had responsibility. If a politician had ben put into this position, I can conceive of the criticism that it was for a political purpose and to serve some political or party end. Mr. Thomson did not come before the Government or the country in that way. My right hon. friend said that he had not heard of Mr. Thomson before. That is nothing against Mr. Thomson. I think my right hon. friend would agree with me in that. Mr. Thomson was in Mr. Hanna's office almost from its inception. He was chosen by Mr. Hanna; he gave his services; his services approved themselves absolutely to Mr. Hanna, and Mr. Thomson naturally, in the way of promotion, worked through that gradation; and that, added to his own well-known business abilities, signalized Mr. Thomson as the successor of Mr. Hanna, and in that way he came to be appointed.

That is all that I have to say on this subject. I am sorry that I have not such an intimate knowledge of the details of the question as to enable me to go into the matter more in detail, but my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will have the report of the Food Controller and that probably will give him a good deal of information. When he receives the additional information called for by the resolution which he has submitted to the House he will have much more data with reference to the broader field of the Food Board.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright): The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) began his remarks by saying that the question offered to the House by the leader of the Opposition contained two phases: the one respecting the merging of the Food Control Office into the Food Board, and the other respecting transportation. As to the first phase he very frankly said that although a minister of the Crown, and supposed to be familiar with everything that goes on in the Cabinet Council, especially relative to questions which closely affect this country and the Allies during the present war, he knew nothing or little, and we are to hear from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) later upon that aspect of the question. In respect to transportation, the other phase, the minister did not enlighten the House.

[Sir George Foster.]

Nevertheless there were still three salient points about his remarks. The first dealt with the increase of prices which he put down to the usual doctrine of the operation of the law of supply and demand. The second that it was a mischievous doctrine to preach to this country that there was hoarding going on in Canada, when there was really little or no hoarding; and thirdly, the credit that ought to be given to the Government for the very long list of Orders in Council, as the minister put it, giving powers to the Food Controller to act. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce immediately to the statement which was made in this House last evening by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) dealing with exactly the same subject, when the latter was not altogether in accord with my right hon. friend (Mr. Foster) in stating that the increases in prices were due to the operation of the law of supply and demand. In fact the Minister of Labour did not know why the prices should be increased, but he said that the Government had taken action by taxing excessive profits. I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he does not think that a more solid reason than that of the operation of the law of supply and demand is the one given by those who have studied political economy, especially during the present phases of our history, and who find that the great producing class, the farmers of Canada, are receiving absolutely no protection from the Government, whilst every other class of the community is being looked after. Let me draw the Government's attention at once to the fact that since the inception of the war they have been urging the farmers of Canada to produce more and more, and still more. But whilst they have been so preaching they do not seem to have been concerned with any action to aid the farmers in greater production. Their sole concern has been to aid other classes of the community in making excessive profits in what they have to offer to the public. To be just in my criticism, however, I should give the Government credit for the action which they took in removing the duty on tractors. The farmers —and I speak now on behalf of a great many of them—are truly grateful to the Government for having removed that duty. They feel that the Government have realized that this is truly a war measure, and the only effective war measure dealing with food production which they have undertaken since they assumed office. The removal of the duty on tractors must immediately show to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that there were other influences regulating the price of commodities as that removal tends to help the farmers towards cheaper production. The only surprise our farmers seem to have, Sir, is that whilst the Government removed the duty on tractors, thereby reducing the price upon certain tractors to the extent of from $250 to $400, they did not go a step further, and abolish the duty upon harrows, seeders, mowers, rakes, binders and threshing machines. There is in this country a certain class of farmers who are not great users of tractors; but I think every kind of agriculturist in Canada operates a harrow, a seeder, and a plough.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but it seems to me that he is getting a long way from the resolution before the House. I cannot see that there is any connection between this resolution and the tariff.

Mr. DEVLIN: Before you give a ruling upon the point, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say this to my right hon. friend: He spoke of the hoarding by the farmers; of matters affecting transportation; of the law of supply and demand. Following my right hon. friend upon those lines, I thought it would be in order to point out, as relating to the influence of supply and demand the enhanced cost of farm production as one of the possible reasons for the increased price of commodities. Does my right hon. friend persist in my not going on?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: No, I simply called my hon. friend's attention to it, that is all. I thought that he would come back to the subject himself, but that he might come back a little more quickly if I brought the matter to his attention.

Mr. DEVLIN: Perhaps my right hon. friend thought that by interrupting at this point he might cause me to forget the farmers.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Oh, no; a Devlin never forgets.

Mr. DEVLIN: If there was a reason for removing the duty upon tractors as a means of reducing the cost of commodities, there were three reasons for removing the duties on ploughs and harrows also. Of course, that is a matter which my right hon. friend and the Government will deal with. But I desire to emphasize the fact that the increased cost of production increases the cost of commodities coming from the farmers. A slight concession has been made to the farmers—a concession to which my right hon. friend has taken exception. It was natural, Mr. Speaker, that my right hon. friend—the great protectionist, who would build the tariff wall higher and higher—should be startled to find that one stone or one brick had fallen out of the tariff wall. I submit that he should go a step farther as a war measure—for I believe that this removal of duties is only for a certain time; it is a tentative war measure. The Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Crerar) must, of course, have certain tendencies along the line of lower tariff, and I suggest that he keep prodding the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) with a view to getting him to remove the duties on farm implements and other things which the farmer requires. He knows, does he not, that if you keep down the cost to the farmer of the tools of production the farmer will be able to charge lower prices for the commodities which he has to offer?

The Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that we would very shortly have, if we have not now, the report of Mr. Hanna. I happen to have it in my hands, and as the minister was speaking my eye glanced at certain lines in that report which bear upon the very question under discussion. They are as follows:

> What that supreme consideration was is the winning of the war, and the requirements for that purpose are summed up in a statement made by me:
>
> "Far greater than the necessity of production for home supplies is that for the supply of Great Britain and our Allies. Great Britain is producing more of foodstuffs than for many years, but the supply is, of course, wholly inadequate for her population and her armies. Belgium is practically all in the hands of Germany; so also is a considerable portion of France, Serbia, Rumania, and Russian Poland and now a portion of Italy is in the hands of the enemy. The productive power of our Allies is lessened by the number of inhabitants in arms. The situation in France and Italy from a food point of view is serious and that is what makes the demand in Canada and the United States for conservation of resources and increased production so imperative. To feed the Allies is the paramount duty of North America. It is far greater than the necessity of production for home supply or the cost of living. Unless the war is won, nothing matters."

Yesterday we listened to gentlemen in this House speak about production in the back gardens in the cities. I think that every man who lives in the city has a bit of a fad about gardening. We all go out in the spring time, if it is only to get the air, taking with us a hoe, a rake and possibly a spade. We go out around our grounds; we rake, and we use the hoe and the spade.

We plant seeds, and sometimes plant others on top of them, forgetting that the first row had been planted. We forget the distances between the rows; we do all kinds of things. Mr. Speaker, I should like you to see the crops that annually grow in the garden that I attempt to cultivate in the city. I think that that is the experience of most city people. If we are to depend entirely upon the production from the back yards or gardens in the cities to help win the war, then God help Great Britain and her Allies. But, Sir, the question is serious; it is of greatest moment; it is the vital question of the day.

I should like to state to the House and to the country what the Government is urging us to do. On Saturday February 9, 1918, the Government publication known as the Canada Food Bulletin published news that a statement had been made by Baron Rhondda in his address to the farmers of England that unless the extreme limit of production is reached, the countries of Europe faced "that starvation which is followed by disease and death." The article goes on to say:

> A statement of this kind made by a man of Baron Rhondda's position and reputation surely should bring home the necessities of the case. Added to this, the people of Canada must realize the seriousness of the situation when the Ministry of Food in France announced that, on the 23rd day of December, after a complete survey of the country had been taken, there remained only enough wheat and flour in the land of France to sustain her civilian population for three days.

The people of Canada, and the people of Europe who are fighting with us, will not be satisfied with the statement coming from the Government of Canada that we would get more food over to them if it were not for the importance of doing what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, namely, taking considerable time appointing captains of teams, taking considerable time increasing staffs in the Government, taking considerable time passing Orders in Council giving powers here, there and everywhere, and preaching doctrines that do not interest the people of this country or the Allies in general. What is demanded at this moment by the people of this country who have faith in the Union Government, who are awaiting action by the Union Government, is not a lot of Orders in Council, not doctrines to be preached, not officers to be appointed; they want action and they want the action performed at once. Imagine the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce being cabled abroad: "We cannot supply more, because the question of transportation is to be considered." What has been the action of the Government in taking over the railways in Canada if not as a war measure, to prevent all difficulties in the way of transportation? What England is waiting for at the present moment is action, and we have at the present moment, I am sorry to say, if we judge by the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to-day, the most inactive Government that we have had in this country since Confederation was formed. The provinces of this Dominion are doing a great deal. We find a campaign of education going on in the province of Ontario. We are handed pamphlets with headlines such as this:

> Hunger, famine, disease and death. The food wanted by mankind does not exist. The word "shortage" is not strong enough. The whole world is up against a nasty thing familiar to the people of India, called "famine."

My right hon. friend answers the appeal by saying: We are appointing captains of teams; we are organizing; we are preparing a staff now that is going to cost this country over $200,000 in civil government alone. What will the people of Canada say to that? When we were yesterday considering the estimates for civil government in this country, we found that a whole department would cost this country about $118,000, in some cases less than $100,000, but we find to-day one branch of one department is going to cost the country over $200,000. Is this action on the part of the Government? Is this what my hon. friends opposite were elected for? Is this what the Union Government was formed for? Is this what hon. gentlemen, running as Union candidates, represented to their constituents they were coming to Parliament to support? We on this side of the House were put down as disloyal citizens of this country. I want to say in this House to-day, and I want my words to go out into the country, that if there is real patriotic sentiment wishing action to be taken in the way of winning the war, it is to be found upon this side, through the words and efforts of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads the Opposition, and of the small band of followers who sit around him. He has stated that in all war measures he and we would give the Government our support. But what are we here in Parliament for? What have we seen the Union Government doing? Considering whether the clock should be put one hour ahead or one hour back, considering communications which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has had with the moon and the sun. And now because we venture upon a subject which is of paramount importance as a war measure, the Minister of Trade and Commerce says: Tread slowly for fear you may not be perfectly in order. He tells us that transportation is the cause of our not being able to get our supplies over to the other side. I am afraid that there is not such cohesion amongst the members seated upon the treasury benches as those sitting upon this side of the House as the people in the country who support them would hope to see.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) will speak on this subject. He met a delegation in the city of Ottawa a short time ago. He listened to statements that were made, and he did not hold out to the farmers of Canada, who came to consult with him upon the question of greater production, the difficulties of transportation. His one idea, the idea that was paramount in his mind was: Labour in this country required for the farms. He said that we must get labour; we absolutely require labour, and without labour we cannot produce more.

Mr. CRERAR: I think, if the hon. member will permit me to say so, he has been misinformed.

Mr. DEVLIN: I accept, of course, according to the rule of debate, my hon. friend's statement, but before I get through with my remarks I hope to be able to point out to him the exact words as we find them in the Canadian Food Bulletin. The Canadian Food Bulletin must be wrong, or my hon. friend is wrong, or we are all wrong. This is the Canadian Food Bulletin issued by the Dominion Government. I understand it is now the official organ of the Minister of Agriculture. Am I right?

Mr. CRERAR: That is not correct.

Mr. DEVLIN: Is this department not under my hon. friend now?

Mr. CRERAR: The publication to which my hon. friend refers is issued by the Canada Food Board. It was issued by the Food Controller prior to the formation of the Canada Food Board, and it is for the purpose of keeping the public informed as to the work being done by the Board. It is not the official organ or publication of the Minister of Agriculture, nor of the Government.

Mr. DEVLIN: I must again accept the statement of the Minister of Agriculture. I am altogether at sea if I am to believe the Government publications and disbelieve the Minister of Agriculture, or believe the Minister of Agriculture and disbelieve the Government publications. I have in my hand an extract from the Canada Gazette, dated February 15, 1918, which informs us that:

> His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture, and under and by virtue of the powers in that behalf conferred on the Governor in Council by the War Measures Act, 1914, is pleased to order and it is hereby ordered:—
>
> That a Board be created to be called the Canada Food Board; that the said Board consist of a Director of Food Conservation, a Director of Food Production, and a Director of Agricultural Labour;
>
> That the Board shall be under the jurisdiction of and shall report to the Governor General in Council through the Minister of Agriculture.

The Food Board, therefore, is a branch under the direct jurisdiction of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture. Am I wrong? If I am right, the Minister of Agriculture must of necessity be wrong. I do not wish to make any misstatements in the House, and I know my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture does not either. I wish to put him right again, if I may, through the publication of which I spoke a moment ago, this very Canadian Food Bulletin, which is published by the Food Board, which is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture. On page 16 of the issue of January 26th, 1918, I find the following:

> The problem was discussed at a meeting of the Provincial Ministers of Agriculture, Deputy Ministers and other representatives in Ottawa on January 16th and 17th, under the Chairmanship of Hon. T. A. Crerar, Minister of Agriculture in the Dominion Cabinet. A number of suggestions were made by the various representatives of the Provincial Governments attending, to be considered and discussed.
>
> Mr. Crerar referred to the fact that the Allies looked to Canada in 1918, for an increase of 250,000,000 bushels of wheat over the amount supplied in 1917. United States winter wheat, he pointed out, had amounted in 1917 to only 420,000,000 bushels as compared to an average for six previous years of 600,000,000 bushels. The prospect of the Spring wheat crop of 1918 was not bright. Labour was the essential factor and the chief problem.

Therefore, I am right, if this report is correct; but if the report is incorrect, I am wrong. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture has another publication, the eternal verity of which he will not deny; it is known as the Agricultural Gazette of Canada, a Government publication sanctioned by the Minister of Agriculture. In the issue of January, 1918, a reason is given for the lack of supplies, especially of wheat going to the United States; and I find that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was again astray in his explanation of why we were not able to feed the Allies as we had hoped. At page 111, in a very able article by Mr. T. K. Doherty, LL.B., upon "Agricultural Statistics, the wheat situation, present and prospective," I find this statement:

> The estimates for the coming year are based upon only such quantities as shipping facilities will probably allow.

Upon only such quantities as shipping facilities will allow; mark that. Mr. Doherty estimates the prospective export from the United States for 1917-1918 at 140,000,000 bushels, from Canada 185,000,000 bushels, from Argentina 100,000,000 bushels, Australia 85,000,000 and from India 65,000,000 bushels, and then goes on to say:

> Owing to shortage of shipping and comparative distances, it may not be safe to count on Australia and India doing much better than the past year.

The minister also made that statement. The article continues:

> During August, September, October and November, with an exceptionally large shipment in the latter month, Canada shipped nearly 71 million bushels compared with 71 millions shipped last year. For the first three months, however, the United States are over 30 milions short of the shipments in the same months last year. Since our last report on the situation the United States official estimate of production has been reduced by nearly 10 millions. It will therefore be all the more difficult to realize the export of 140 millions credited to the United States.

I think that sums up pretty well the situation respecting the possible supply and transportation of wheat and other commodities to the Motherland.

Before I resume my seat, I am going to suggest to the Government a second means by which food production may be had at a cheaper rate. My first suggestion was for some protection for the agricultural classes of Canada by reducing the tariff. My second suggestion would be to lessen the debt upon the people of Canada, and especially upon the farmers who contribute two-thirds of the basic wealth of this country, by curtailing the extravagance of the Government. The expenditure caused by this unduly increasing of staffs without very good reason is difficult for the people to bear. The Government ought to take a leaf out of the book of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Carvell) in the determination he has shown he possesses in lessening the expenditure of his department as much as possible. There are other ministers, unfortunately, who are not so careful of the people's money. I would remind the Government—a new Government—that they must not act as the beggar on horseback who drove to the devil. The people of Canada are at the present moment overburdened with taxation.

I do not want to suggest that we have not in this country great wealth. I will admit that there is a great deal of money in Canada; there are classes of extremely wealthy people. But although we can call Canada a wealthy country, the people must not be overburdened by taxation. I will take for comparison the item of civil government, which is perhaps the smallest item of the Government's expenditure. When my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) left office, civil government cost $4,198,000. That expenditure went on increasing every year, until we find this year there is an increase of one million some hundred thousand over last year. My hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) has given a very sound reason for this, namely the appointment of captains of teams and so forth. Nevertheless, important as the captains of teams may be to the country, we must see to it that their operations do not cover too extensive a field, because each increase in civil government of necessity means a great increase in public expenditure. My right hon. friend has stated this afternoon that the appointment of the new Food Board, will involve an expenditure of over $202,000 for salaries alone. That will mean, by the end of the year, a large amount for travelling and living expenses, stationery and every other class of expenditure that goes to form the general expenditure of the department. I want my hon. friends opposite, who apparently show a tendency not to let this Government run away with the money of this country, to keep tabs on the Government and see that they do not go too deeply into expenditure. Hon. gentlemen must remember that I make an exception in the case of money directly expended for the purpose of winning the war. I do not think there is a man on this side of the House who will not sanction such an expenditure. If we are able to keep down the expenditures and prevent extravagance, and help the farmers to produce more, then we shall be able to offer, not only to the Allies but to the people of this country, cheaper commodities. I am very glad my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) brought up this question this afternoon, as it is one of the most vital problems in war time, and, as a great many authorities put it, the most vital question as affecting this country.

4 p.m.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will state quite frankly that I rise with a little diffidence to address the House for the first time. It is somewhat of an ordeal for a new member; it is particularly an ordeal for a man who has had no political experience, and who has launched his bark upon the stormy sea of politics under rather exceptional and unique circumstances.

I am not going to attempt to follow my hon. friend (Mr. Devlin), who has just spoken, in all the rambling remarks that he has addressed to this assembly. As Minister of Agriculture, as a member of this Government, I wish to assure this House that I shall at all times welcome criticism of my department. I would have welcomed the address of my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat a great deal more if he had offered some constructive criticism in his remarks. He has failed, however, to do so. His address, if I may say so—and I desire to say it courteously—was rather one of fault-finding than one where any criticism was offered that would be of assistance.

Now, in surveying this whole matter of food conservation and food control, it is quite obvious that we are faced with serious difficulties. It is true my hon. friend would get over difficulties by cutting out all expenditure in connection with this matter, and the logical outcome of his remarks would be to abolish the Food Control administration entirely. In organizing the Department of Food Control, the Government of the day were faced with serious difficulties. Those difficulties were not incidental to Canada alone. They faced the Food Control administration in Great Britain and also the same administration in the United States. And they have faced the Food Control administration in Canada. It is a new experience for a people such as we are to be regulated in these little every-day matters of life in which we have claimed the right to exercise the greatest freedom; and, consequently, anything that aims at restriction or control is new; the people have to become adjusted to it; they have to get their ideas adapted to it. As a result, our difficulties in Canada were no less in that respect, Mr. Speaker, than they have been in the other countries to which I have alluded.

Now, my hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Devlin) and the Right Hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) offered considerable criticism of the cost of the food administration. I am told, and I believe the fact can be verified, that the United States Congress has appropriated over five millions of dollars to bear the expense of the food administration in that country for one year. When my right hon. friend criticises the expenditure of a couple of hundreds of thousands of dollars in Canada, I think he is rather wide of the mark unless his criticism can be directed to the point that the money is not properly expended.

Mr. BUREAU: That amount is for salaries alone.

Mr. CRERAR. My hon. friend refers to salaries alone. How does he expect to run a food administration department without payment of salaries? I was in the office of the Food Board the other evening, and on the desk of one clerk there were copies of forty telegrams that had been sent out issuing special licenses for the export of food from Canada in that one day alone. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite: Is it possible to carry on that work without expenditure? It cannot be done. If criticism can be directed against the character of the expenditure, if the money is wasted, if there are no results coming from it, then criticism is justified. But to say that we must not spend money for food administration simply means that we throw the whole thing by the board and let it go.

I desire to deal more particularly with the administration of the Board for the past few weeks. The hon. member for Wright made a statement which is quite correct, that only for a few weeks has the administration, or rather the direction, of the Food Board been under the Minister of Agriculture. Consequently, I am not very familiar with the administration, prior to that time. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has dealt with that, and I do not need to allude to it. Coming however to the present case, what is the fundamental principle that underlies the operation of the Food Department's administration? It is not the exercise of compulsion in respect to the people as to what they shall or shall not eat. The aim is to secure the desired result by inviting and securing the co-operation of the people in the policy that is desired. Criticism has been directed against the Food Administration inasmuch as it has failed to regulate prices. Sir, the regulation of prices, the fixing of arbitrary prices that interfere with the ordinary working of those laws that are as old as history itself, is sometimes a very dangerous proceeding. After the food administration was formed in the United States, if my memory serves me right, I think within two months after its formation, steps were taken to control the milk supply of the City of New York. In their zeal and anxiety to meet the public demand and the public need, a price was arbitrarily fixed for milk. What was the result? In less than three months that set price had to be removed. And tens of thousands of dairy cows had to be slaughtered, simply because the producers of milk could not operate under the price that had been fixed. In that case the fixing of a price tended directly to defeat the very object that was desired. Consequently, the fixing of prices of any commodity must be very carefully investigated, and closely analysed, in order to see that the delicate balance is not upset, and that we do not land in a worse position than that we seek to escape from.

Having overlooked the fact, Mr. Speaker, that this discussion might come up this afternoon, I have not at my hand some information that I should have had if I had known it was coming up. But I can say this, that the fundamental principle underlying the food administration is to exercise control by way of license over the various lines of business. We have brought the bakers of Canada, the millers, the fish dealers, and several other lines my memory does not recall, under license. To-day the wholesale grocers of Canada are being brought under license, and the retail grocers will be brought under license as well. Now, coming from western Canada, I speak with some knowledge of the benefits that come from the licensing system. That has been one of the great protections in our grain industry. In western Canada especially, years ago, I believe, when the Government of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition was in power, the system was introduced. To-day no dealer in grain in western Canada can do business under the law of the land unless he first secures a license. That license sets out certain conditions on which he must do business, and not only that, the forfeiture of that license, or its withdrawal, deprives him of the right to do business. In that way a salutary influence can be exercised over the dealer. It is practically the same principle that we are endeavouring to work out in respect to the food administration in Canada; and I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that when it gets in full operation it will have the same beneficial results. To-day we are bringing under license, speaking from memory, over 40,000 retail grocers. License fees are being charged, and I want to tell my hon. friend from Wright, who is disturbed as to where this expenditure is leading us, that we expect in the food administration to receive in license fees alone this year over $250,000, and in that way the expense that is incidental to the control will be met from the business itself. That is perfectly proper. Every grain dealer in western Canada today, depending upon the volume of the business he does, has to pay a license fee in order to secure his privilege to do business.

But I am going to be very frank with the House and say that you cannot organize an immense organization of this kind without a great deal of difficulty. You have got to get the men. And I want here to bear testimony to the zeal and earnestness of the men who are to-day working in the food administration. It is true they are getting salaries that may look large. These men, Mr. Speaker, are getting no higher salaries —in some cases not nearly as high—than they could get if they went out into the commercial world and sold their services in the usual way. I think they are rather to be commended for their willingness to serve in this way. There are men working in the food administration who have worked there for months without any remuneration at all excepting their living expenses. I think men are to be commended for that.

The question, however, of production is one of the vital questions that face us in Canada at the present time. There is no doubt that the food situation in the world to-day is serious, very serious, and we in Canada, the people in North America, must bend our energies and use every ounce of strength we possess to raise to the very highest maximum possible our production of foodstuffs in the present year. The inability of Europe to feed herself arises from two causes. First, from the withdrawal of millions of men in Italy, France and Great Britain from the ordinary avocations of agriculture to the pursuits of war, and second in certain cases, from the absence of the fertilizer that is essential to maintaining the productivity of the soil. It is true that the withdrawal of men from agricultural labour in the countries in question has been met to a certain extent by the work of the women available there. To-day I am told that in Great Britain over six hundred thousand women are engaged in manual labour of some kind or another in agriculture. In France hundreds of thousands of women are working in the fields who knew nothing of this work before the war broke out. I sometimes feel, Mr. Speaker, that we in Canada have not quite realized yet in many respects that we are at war; that is, the reality of it has not come home as closely to us as it has to the people who have lived under the very shadow of it for years. But we must bend our efforts and our energies, we must increase our efforts in Canada to meet this situation. The need for men we know is great. The need for food is great also, and we must set about meeting these needs with as great energy, as great care, and as much ability as we possess, in order to organize our country in these respects so as to stand up under the mighty burden that we have to carry. I am hopeful, nay, I am certain, that good results will come from the effort that is being made at the present time to stimulate production in this country.

Criticism has been directed against the creation of the Food Board, inasmuch as it provides for a Director of Production and a Director of Agricultural Labour Now one of the difficulties we are meeting is that of securing labour. The purpose in creating a Director of Agricultural Labour, was to have a man in charge of that work who would make it a special study, and already good results are coming from it. In consequence of that effort, and the work of the Food Administration, there are being enrolled in Canada over 25,000 boys from the age of fifteen to nineteen, to work on the farms, boys from the towns and cities who otherwise, unless this organization had taken place, would not have been available for farm work. I have spoken to several farmers in Ontario who had this class of help last year, and they stated that it was the most effective help they have had. Again, an effort will be made to secure by voluntary enlistment, men from the towns and cities.

Mr. J. READ (Prince, P.E.I.): Why do you not conscript them?

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend asks, "Why do we not conscript them?" You can conscript men and apply discipline to them when you have them in the mass; but to conscript an individual and send him out to farm work is rather a doubtful experiment.

Commencing with the provinces by the sea, Nova Scotia has set itself a fine objective this year. It is going to produce enough wheat and coarse grain to supply its demands, whereas every other year it has imported. The province of New Brunswick is in the same position. In the province of Quebec, where ordinarily they produce about a million bushels of wheat and consume about twelve million bushels, they are aiming this year—and the provincial authorities tell me they expect to realize that aim—to produce enough wheat to feed themselves, which will release ten or eleven million bushels of wheat to go overseas. Ontario will also increase its wheat production. In the western provinces we will have, I venture to say, the largest acreage that we have ever had in respect to grain production, and if we are only favoured with a good season we will probably have the largest crop of wheat that the West has ever had. But I want to impress this fact upon our people: In order to get these results in the different provinces, in order to supply the help that is necessary to make up the deficiency in labour, we must have recourse to organization, and you cannot do that unless you get men and if you get the men you have got to pay them.

I want to make one other observation before I close, and it is this The people of Canada have not been as economical as they should have been in the past; I think we have been rather an extravagant people. To-day we are driving home to the people of the Dominion, through the educational work carried on under the auspices of the Food Board, the great need of thrift and of saving. I hope, in fact I am sure, the effort will bear fruit in the future. There is no disguising the fact that we have to face very heavy burdens after this war is over. We can only successfully meet those burdens by encouraging in every way possible the principles of thrift among our people. We have got to produce, but above everything we must save; and to-day the educational work that is being carried on by the bulletins that my hon. friend (Mr. Devlin) alluded to, and carried on through the medium of addresses, through moving picture shows and pictures thrown on the screen, and meetings held throughout the country, and utilizing every agency that can be utilized, is driving home to our whole people this principle of thrift, this need of saving, and they are realizing to-day as they have never realized in the past what can be done by a little effort in the way of saving, the conserving of food supplies, and the conserving of everything. I venture the statement that the money that is expended upon the Food Administration will be justified in the years to come by the results that will flow from the efforts being made to-day; I am as confident of that as I am that I am standing here now.

The Department of Agriculture is not perrect, neither is the food administration. I, for one, will welcome criticism at any time, that is helpful, constructive criticism. I desire as much of it as I can get; but, if my hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Devlin) will permit me to say so, not very much good will come from the sort of criticism in which he indulged this afternoon. The task ahead of Canada is a great one. We have the task of providing foodstuffs, of concentrating Canada's effort and energies in the prosecution of the war. No one can read the news that comes from the front these days without some feeling of concern as to what the outcome will be. I am inclined to agree with the leader of the Opposition that the war may be greatly prolonged before the principles for which we are fighting, and the liberty of the countries whose freedom is threatened, are made safe and secure. We can meet the task before us, but we must organize and throw every effort whole-heartedly into it. If we do that I have no doubt whatever as to the result nor as to the great part that Canada will have played in this struggle.

Mr. JAMES A. ROBB (Chateauguay-Huntingdon): Mr. Speaker, with very great pleasure and interest we have all listened this afternoon to the maiden speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar). It did occur to me, and it may have occurred to other members of the House, that in his somewhat rambling address the minister felt that he was obliged to offer an apology for a foundling which he and some of his friends had adopted. We in Canada are so closely associated with the United States that gentlemen on both sides of the House are now united in the belief that any legislation enacted in the United States necessarily affects Canada. We had evidence of that yesterday afternoon in the discussion which took place on the Daylight Saving Bill, the whole argument in support of which, as presented by the right hon. gentleman (Sir George Foster) who introduced it, being that it had become necessary in Canada because a similar measure had been adopted in the United States. The whole argument offered this afternoon in favour of the organization of a food controllership in Canada was that the United States had appointed a food controller. We are reminded that when the United States in May last decided that they should have a food controller, and appropriated for the purposes of that official's office $5,000,000 for one year, immediately there was started throughout Canada a newspaper campaign in favour of the appointment of a food controller in Canada. Friends of the inner circle could see in the appointment of a food controller in the United States another opportunity to secure place and profit for their friends if a similar office was established in this country. The case as presented this afternoon by the leader of the Opposition proves that in that respect the gentlemen who urged upon the Government the organization of a food controller's office were not mistaken—and the figures given have not been denied by the Minister of Trade and Commerce or by the Minister of Agriculture. In the six months during which we have had the luxury of a food controller, the cost of the administration of that official's office has run up to $200,000, exclusive of travelling and office expenses, rents, stationery, telephones, etc. If the cost was $200,000 in six months, in one year the cost would be $400,000; so we find that already the expenditure in Canada is per capita the same as it is in the United States, and that in these figures travelling expenses and the cost of heat, stationery, etc., are not included.

Mr. CRERAR: I do not wish to interrupt, but I desire to correct my hon. friend on one point. The total expenditure to the end of February for salaries in the Food Controller's office from the time of its inception was $49,758.

Mr. ROBB: I accept the statement of the minister, but he must not forget that the figures I gave are in the statement presented by Mr. Hanna in the report which I hold in my hand.

Mr. CRERAR: Estimated.

Mr. ROBB: The Order in Council goes to show that since Mr. Hanna left the office the expense has been very largely increased. I am credibly informed that the Food Control office in Canada, organized in the month of June, has already moved three times in order to provide increased accommodation for its ever-growing staff. First they were established on Bank street, in a building three or four stories—I remember visiting it. Then they moved to this building, and now they are on Rideau street—ever moving to secure a larger building. The newspapers tell us that the Government purpose during this session to introduce legislation to provide for a much larger building in Ottawa in order to accommodate their ever-increasing staff of civil servants.

I now come to a point on which I agree with the Minister of Agriculture: that price-fixing leaves much to be desired in the way of increased production. Food control is a new feature of warfare; this is the first time in history, according to Mr.

Hanna's statement, that food control has played any part in war. In Germany, where the food control movement started, price-fixing was a mistake. Price-fixing in France was a mistake, for France has removed the maximum prices upon potatoes, milk, butter and cheese. Price-fixing in England was a mistake. We have the statement, published in the London Times in the month of January, that because of the limitation fixed upon the price of bacon in England the supply of bacon gradually dropped away; the people of Great Britain found themselves short of that commodity because it was being sold to another country where more money was being paid for it. The fixing of the price of butter in England was a mistake. The people there, according to this letter in the London Times, fixed a price for butter which was lower than the cost of production, and the result was that the people of Denmark and Holland found a better market for their butter, and the commodity itself went to enemy countries. That has been the experience in the matter of price fixing in the old land, and same applies to Canada. Price-fixing in this country has not encouraged our people to greater production, and after all it is greater production that we require.

In the statement which Mr. Hanna filed upon leaving office, he practical'y admits, after an experience of six months, that price-fixing in this country has been a mistake; that it has not brought the results expected of it, and that wherever profit ceases, production ceases. As the leader of the Opposition pointed out this afternoon, in the organization of this Food Control Bureau, involving an additional expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars, no attempt was made to provide greater production. Every step taken by the Food Control Bureau resulted in a restriction of production. I think the Minister of Agriculture agreed with that in his address this afternoon. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was very frank; he told us that the food controller had not been appointed to encourage production. Well, if that is true; if the Food Control Bureau was not appointed to encourage production, surely they should stand out of the way and not hinder increased production. I should like to prove to the Minister of Agriculture—who, I believe, is sincerely desirous of increasing production—that the action of the Food Control Bureau has very materially hindered additional production, at least in eastern Canada. Last fall, at a time when corn could be moved freely, the food control offices of Canada and the United States placed certain restrictions on the importation of corn into this country. It is no secret that a deputation from the Montreal board of trade, representing very large interests, came to the Government and asked for a blanket license to import certain quantities of corn before the close of navigation, and that this request was flatly refused by the Food Control Bureau. The deputation discovered, while visiting here, however, that a certain distillery in eastern Canada had a blanket license to import 100,000 bushels of corn, and the Government had a very bad half hour with those gentlemen, who were supporters of the Administration. Those were the conditions that prevented the starch men and the dairy men of eastern Canada from getting in their supply of corn at a time when conditions were favourable to their getting it in. Time passed. We were told that the United States had the largest corn crop in its history. We are now told that corn is rotting in the fields of the United States because people have not been able to move it, and why? Because the Food Control Bureau and the Railroad Control Bureau in the United States, working with the Food Control Bureau in Canada, have so manipulated and interfered with the doing of business by men who are accustomed to doing business that they have been unable to move this corn. What is the result? The result is that in eastern Canada dairymen have been keeping less stock and are not providing for the enlargement of their herds, as the minister would wish them to do.

But the Food Control Bureau has been interfering not only with international trade, but with interprovincial trade. A member of the minister's Food Control Bureau has absolutely prohibited flour mills of western Canada from shipping bran and shorts to eastern Canada. Does the Minister of Agriculture deny that statement? I wish to repeat it. A representative of the Food Control Bureau in western Canada has ordered the flour mills there not to ship straight carloads of bran or shorts or mixed carloads of bran and shorts to eastern Canada. What is the result of that? In any farm paper published in Quebec or the Maritime Provinces the minister will find announcements of dispersion sales, farmers being disposed to sell their herds because they cannot get bran and shorts to feed them. The result will be a decreased production of butter and cheese in eastern Canada. I believe the Minister of Agriculture is desirous of remedying these conditions. He has asked this afternoon for some constructive criticism. I would suggest to him that he recall the order of this gentleman who interfered with interprovincial trade and allow trade to be done as it was done in the past, by men who know how business should be handled.

I have no desire to prolong my remarks because I know there are others who wish to speak on this subject; but the minister in his defence of, or rather apology, for the Food Control Bureau told us that the Food Control Bureau were now arranging to license all the bakeshops, all the retail grocery stores and all the wholesale grocery stores throughout Canada, and that we were to get a revenue of not less than a quarter of a million dollars. I think the minister was very modest in his estimate of the revenue we shall receive if that scheme is carried out, but who is going to pay the license? It will be passed back to the consumer, and so the action of this Food Control Bureau will be helping, not to reduce the cost of living in this country, but to increase it. Here is another opportunity for the minister to step in and correct a policy that, I am sure, is not meeting with the favour of the consuming public of Canada.

With these few observations I leave this subject, in the hope that we shall have a statement from some member of the Government that the Food Control Bureau is at least to be taken in hand, so that not only the expense of that bureau will be reduced, but its attempts to interfere with business throughout the country shall not tend to increase the cost of living to our people.

Mr. F. S. CAHILL (Pontiac): The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster) made reference to the fact that the profits on packing products would be kept down to the amount of two per cent on the turnover. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) suggested that he would like constructive criticism, but he could not see any in the remarks made by the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin). He said that it is not the intention nor the wish of the Government to interfere with or to set prices. As the representative of a farming constituency, I would like to point out to the minister that the farmer finds that the packer is allowed to make a profit not to exceed two per cent, which, as any hon. member knows, is a greater percentage than he made during the last three years. If the minister will refer to the profits made by the packers he will find that they do not amount to two per cent of the turnover. A packer will turn over his product, perhaps, once a month, or oftener, and if you multiply his profit by twelve it amounts to much more than two per cent. The greatest packer of Chicago, Mr. Ogden Armour, states that their profits never exceed one per cent of the turnover. If this is not correct the minister will be able to give the information to the House and to the country, but it is one of the things in which the country people are interested when the Government is asking them to produce more.

I would like, at this point, to make a distinction between the agriculturist and the farmer. My constituency is composed entirely of farmers. I once asked one of my constituents what was the difference between an agriculturist and a farmer. He said: The farmer works with his hands, and the agriculturist works with his mouth. We heard a good deal of that yesterday in this House in connection with production. A great deal of advice is being handed out in regard to greater production. If you are going to regulate the price of wheat, and you say you do not believe prices should be regulated—wheat is the only article I know of, the price of which has been regulated by the Food Board or by the Government—that naturally brings to the farmer's mind the idea that the price of his product in the raw state is being regulated, but that there is no regulation of the profits of the man who handles the manufactured article. The farmer has been told of great packing companies in this country who have made wonderful profits, and he is led to believe that that is allowed to go on after the commodity gets out of his hands. If this Food Board could do something to convince the farmer and the producer that he is being taken care of equally with the packer, that would be some help towards production.

We were glad to notice one of the few things of a constructive nature done by the Board. Their first action was to remove the duty from some farm implements. The Minister of Agriculture stated that the hon. member for Wright did not offer any constructive criticism. Will the minister advise this House that he thinks a reduction in the tariff on implements would be against the interest of production in this country? Does he not think that a cheaper implement to the farmer would be an aid to production? Would it not be an encouragement? It is my firm conviction that if we had free trade in implements with the United States it would be the means of getting us a large number of immigrants from that country who would become producers on our western prairies. The fact that they have to pay so much more for implements in Canada than in the western States is more or less of a barrier to their coming to western Canada. At this time when we are looking for producers and increased production I was glad to hear the Minister of Agriculture say that he does not agree that the war is over. I think we have all insisted too much on the war being over to-morrow, and not making preparations for its continuing a year or two longer. I think we should bend every effort towards production and the winning of the war, let it end as soon as it will; it cannot end too soon for us. If we make our plans on the basis of its ending to-morrow, and it should continue a year or two longer, we are undoubtedly handicapped, whereas if we make our preparations on the basis of the war continuing some time, it will be a gain to us even if it should end to-morrow. As far as constructive criticism is concerned, if we would seriously consider the question of cheaper implements for the farmer and cheaper production, it would be very much more beneficial to him than his added hour of daylight. We have a Bill before us to enable us to bid our neighbours to the south the time of day on equal terms; I think we might go a little further and allow our farmers to procure their implements on equal terms with the farmers to the south of us.

Mr. L. T. PACAUD (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, the debate, through the speeches which have already been made, has robbed me of arguments which I intended to offer the House, and I shall therefore willingly curtail my remarks somewhat.

The question of the food supply which is raised by this motion involves considerations which are of the utmost importance both to our country and to our Allies. No other question, Sir, has stirred and aroused the people of Canada more fervently, more deeply or more unanimously. This intense feeling which has been growing and spreading steadily since the outbreak of war may easily be explained by an impartial survey of conditions as they have existed and still exist in Canada at this time. On the one hand we have the prohibitive prices, which deny to the masses the very necessaries of life, with the accompanying hardships and misery. On the other hand we have the revolting disclosures that have been made from time to time concerning the hoarding of food, the cold storage operations, the nefarious greed of the profiteers. These, Sir, are the outstanding facts which cannot be denied. Mr. O'Connor has exposed them to the public. We had the story of the bacon manipulations; we had the egg disclosures; and more recently, and through another source, we heard of hundreds and hundreds of pounds of chicken left to rot in cold storage at Winnipeg. These may serve as illustrations of what is going on in Canada on a very large scale. Sir, in the face of such disclosures, nothing effective was done or attempted to be done by the Government to remedy such an evil. Are we not tempted, Sir, to laud the patience of the Canadian people in the face of such provocation from the men who daily exploit them, from the Government who refuses to protect them?

What has the Government done? A Food Board was created and a Food Controller was put in control. The Order in Council creating this board gave the Controller clearly defined powers. He had the right "to govern the prices of any article of food and to supervise the storage, the distribution, the sale and the delivery of these articles." Why were not these powers exercised, exercised especially in the cases which have been brought to the attention of the public by the High Cost of Living Commissioner?

Instead of taking immediate steps to curtail this open exploitation of the public, the Government, through its commissioner, preferred to follow the easier course of preaching economy to the people. Under the circumstances which I have related, I say that these mere words, followed by no effective action, may have satisfied the cold storage magnates, but they certainly have not satisfied the people of this country.

We have in Canada an abundance of food, sufficient not only for our own needs, but the greater bulk of which is exported to allied countries. This brings me to another phase of this same question—the campaign of production which the Government has so fervently prosecuted of late. To this campaign all loyal Canadians will give their hearty support. We all recognize that upon the success of our devotion to food raising depends in a large measure the victory of our boys at the front. We know that the world faces to-day a food situation which is nothing short of appalling. We know that the supply is not sufficient to feed the world's armies, let alone the civilian population. But, Sir, this is not all. We have had occasion to hear the representatives of Britain making to us an appeal,— an appeal which will surely be heard and responded to, and which has thrilled each one of us in a patriotic determination to strive every nerve to do what is requested of us. Lord Rhondda, the British food controller, for one, has made his plea quite clear. "We look," he says, "to the resources of Canada and the indomitable energy of Canadians for an answer that will shatter Germany's threat of starvation." He tells us, that it is vital for the United Kingdom and the Allies to obtain from Canada foodstuffs in far larger quantities than under peace conditions. His frankness even goes so far as to recall to us that an increased export of food supplies must be forthcoming, even though the achievement of this task entails diversion of effort from other enterprises. It is Canada's duty to prove her efficiency and her determination. This plea must not be left unanswered. May I be permitted to confess that these words of the British food controller are comforting to those of us who through motives which cannot be challenged, opposed a measure which we sincerely believed if put into operation would decidedly diminish if not defeat our effectiveness in this war, by laying aside the most formidable weapon which could have been used against the enemy. We faced a storm of abuse and slander, but these attacks did not deter us from what we believed was our plain duty. We have at least the consolation of knowing that our conception of duty was shared, in some measure at least, by the brightest minds of Britain. What we need to-day, is a larger acreage and higher yields for the years to come. We need to increase our productive capacity, the problem is with us, and it must be solved. Upon its solution, to my mind, depends the success of our allies and ourselves in this war. To achieve our purpose, it is obvious that we need farm labour. It is not less obvious that it is a national necessity that we should remove the duties on farming implements. The Government have started in their task by means of the registration of the man power of the Dominion. I believe that, though that is a good step in the right direction, it has come a little late; it should have been done at the very beginning of the war. Nevertheless, I sincerely hope, that in its results it may procure more information and attain better results for Canada and for the Empire than has been achieved by the now famous National Service cards of a year ago.

Mr. J. E. FONTAINE (Hull) (translation): Mr. Speaker, I am perhaps a little audacious in rising to take part in this debate, since I have just entered this Parliament, and am in nowise familiar with Parliamentary procedure; nevertheless, when the voters of Hull county, which I have the honour to represent, elected me by acclamation on the 19th of last November, I gave them my solemn promise that I would seize upon every opportunity offered to protest against the exorbitant cost of living and try to bring it down if it were possible to do so. It was reserved, Mr. Speaker, for the right hon. leader of the Opposition, to afford me this opportunity in bringing about this debate this afternoon; for him who, in contrast to the hon. gentlemen seated on the other side of the House, has always been the protector and the defender of the people against the trusts and the monopolists.

It is useless, I believe, for me to say that the present cost of living has reached a price so high that the consumer is forced to deprive himself even of necessaries of life. I could mention things, foods like flour, bacon, eggs, which have surely increased 50 and even 100 per cent. If, at least, Mr. Speaker, salaries had increased in proportion; but I see, by the reports of the Labour Gazette which I have here before me, that salaries have not been increased by more than 15 to 17½ per cent. There has been a general protest. I remember, in the city of Hull, where I reside, on the other side of Ottawa, hearing Mr. Watters, the president of the Labour Unions of Canada, denounce the Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) and even denounce the Prime Minister of this country because the workingmen could not procure the necessaries of life with the low salaries they were paid.

In the face of these protests the Government thought they would calm public opinion by appointing what they called a Food Controller, and it was then that the Government told us of the appointment of Mr. Hanna. Everybody was satisfied, the people believed that the Government was sincere and that by their appointing a Food Controller we could at least earn enough to enable us to buy the necessaries of life. The irony of it, Mr. Speaker! The Controller was well and duly appointed; he was given spacious offices, and it is said that his suite was furnished with luxury and that he was given a staff, both very numerous and very expensive—if I believe the gentlemen who have preceded me—and still he was not controlling; the cost of living was soaring all the time.

A moment ago I heard my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs, say that the appointment of the Controller did not aim at control. My Lord! we were well aware of it, he never did control! His duty consisted simply in seeing that no food was wasted. Could he have forgotten what my hon. friend from Mégantic (Mr. Pacaud) said a while ago? Haven't we learned, in the last few days, through the newspapers, that a large quantity of foodstuffs, hoarded in storage warehouses in order to boost prices, had been sent to the incinerator in the city of Winnipeg? Well! if the duty of the Food Controller was to prevent the waste of foodstuffs, why did he allow such an enormous quantity of food to find its way to the garbage heap? Is it because those implicated are the friends of the Government? I ask you that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BUREAU (Three Rivers): Sir Joseph Flavelle.

Mr. FONTAINE (translation): My hon. friend brings to mind the name of a certain Mr. Flavelle. I remember that it was precisely this name Mr. Watters who gave us, at Hull, the history of this fellow Flavelle; he even told us that he was at the head of the William Davies Company and that he had found a way to make millions of profit while the people were starving to death. It seems to me, then, Mr. Speaker, that when the Government asks the people to subscribe to War Loans; when they ask the people to give generously to the Patriotic Fund and to the Red Cross; while they continue to crush the people with taxes, it seems to me, I say, that the people have at least the right to be protected by their Government, and still the Government has not given them this protection.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I have properly understood the hon. minister when Mr. Hanna had disappeared from the scene as Food Controller, he was replaced by three Controllers. Will they control more than their predecessor did? I do not know, but I may say without fear of error, that in the city of Hull, which I have the honor to represent, and which is essentially a city of working-people, the price of food has not been reduced one single cent. I wonder why the Government does not fix a maximum price for certain articles of food as it has done for newsprint. Was it led to take this action through fear of the press, or to compensate the newspaper proprietors nearly every single one of whom supported the Union Government? So I think it is high time, and even imperative that something was done in this matter.

Perhaps my friends on the other side of the House will accuse me of disloyalty because I speak of this question "in War Time" as they say. I would say in reply to these gentlemen that we on this side represent the principles of Liberalism and that we have as much at heart as any one the ultimate victory of the Allies. Each and every one of us, Mr. Speaker, holds that Belgium must be restored, each and every one of us desires that Old France and the British flag will be the victors in this conflict! But more than that, what we want is that the people who bear and who will continue to bear the burden of this war, be protected by the Government.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK (Red Deer): I forgot that the House met at two o'clock to-day, and, therefore, I had not the pleasure of listening to the speech of my right hon. friend opposite (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), but I have followed the debate since I came into the chamber. I may say that I have been a member of this House for nine years, and if a humble member of the rank and file may compliment a minister, I should like to say very sincerely that I have not listened to a more able speech than that delivered by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar). He will in due time develop into a powerful speaker. The hon. minister is an old friend of mine. In fact, so persuasive was he, Sir, that at one time while he was talking I said to myself: Almost thou persuadest me to be a controller. That is rather a difficult task. I objected yesterday to any control being placed upon the time at which I got up or went to bed. There are other things about the life of the country that have been controlled the controlling of which did not meet with my absolute approval. In regard to this particular fact, there was advanced by the Minister of Agriculture a very strong plea of justification of, at any rate, some of the work of the Board. If they had done nothing more than organize the arrangement by which these twenty-five thousand boys are going to work on the farms this summer, then I think that their existence as a Board has received some justification. There is a further argument that was presented by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) the other day as to the amount of organization needed whereby large sums of money are to be diverted to the provinces, to be spent in the various provinces along rational methods, under the control of very able men, with a view to promoting production in western Canada. But I should like, as far as any words of mine can reach the Food Board through the Government or through the press, to say to them very sincerely: "For goodness sake, whatever you do, control your expense, and also control your controlling." I find myself in absolute agreement with an old friend, who now is honoured by being the chief whip on the other side of the House (Mr. Robb), as to the difficulties of the regulation of prices. It is an extremely difficult process, and I understand, as far as I have been told the facts of the question, that what my hon. friend opposite said about it is correct, that it is an attempt at work that has broken down in many, many cases in the other belligerent countries on the continent of Europe. It is against the fundamental laws of economies, and even in war time it is extremely difficult to go against law. We would create more havoc than we would do good. There is a more excellent way than controlling and the fixing of prices.

5 p. m.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: I am very glad to have the endorsation of my right hon. friend. I did not have it in the election, but in his heart he was not very much opposed to me. I still share with him very fully a great distaste of anything in the nature of control and a very great love of anything in the nature of freedom.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: My right hon. friend anticipated what I was going to say. The free way is the more excellent way, and it is freedom that we are all fighting for at the present moment. It is one of the mischievous results of this war that we have become, or at any rate we think we have become, autocrats ourselves to put down autocrats. I think that one could in some measure establish that position. Because, after all is said and done, if a man is coming to knock you on the head with a bludgeon, and you refuse to use the bludgeon in your own hand, you are going to come very badly out of that contest, and your strict adherence to the principles of pacificism would work out very badly for your cranium.

An hon. MEMBER: In Russia there is that situation just now.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Yes, even the principle of freedom can be carried too far. I do want to say in reference to the subject that my right hon. friend is raising, that it has met a very large body of opinion which is distressed, and distressed in the most practical way, by what is one of the greatest evils we have in Canada at the present moment, and that is the enormous cost of living to a large number of our people who live on very narrow incomes in our large centres of population. The cost of living is a very real evil in the large centres of population, and it is a real evil that grows up in spite of the Food Control Board. That, I understand, was the position which was brought out in the speech which I had the misfortune to miss hearing. In any case, that position is distressing and is exercising the minds of our people.

Now, it goes without saying that we shall not only help the war but we shall lower the cost of living if we increase production. I want to make two practical suggestions in the most serious spirit, and in a spirit most desirous of being helpful to the Government—I made a great many suggestions to the previous Government to which they did not pay any attention. I want to make a suggestion which I made in my Budget remarks last year, however, and which I repeated in a parenthesis in the remarks I made on conscription. I am going to make this suggestion with very considerable confidence, because I am perfectly sure that my strongest supporter will be the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster). I cannot understand why, having regard to the cost of living, the Government does not at once take the bold step of putting all articles of food on the free list. I cannot understand why they do not do it. I am perfectly serious in the matter; I said so in the Budget debate of last year, and I gave some reasons, reasons which I know will appeal to my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. They must appeal to him. I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that in the very first weeks of the war Germany—the first precedent that my hon. friend mentioned yesterday about daylight saving was derived from Germany—Germany, a strong protectionist country, swept the duties off almost all her foodstuffs. She knew all the difficulties that the war would bring about in connection with her food supply. She knew the trouble she was going to have to get food for her people. She knows it better to-day. And she swept the duties off foodstuffs in the very first days of the war. Her example was followed by almost every other country in Europe, whether belligerent or neutral. Britain did not need to do it, because she had the good sense to sweep the duties off foodstuffs, whether in war or peace, seventy years ago.

Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is up against his own precedent of yesterday. Is the precedent of Germany and these other countries only good for daylight saving? I submit to his judgment that it is equally good for free food. I say, in courteous language, that I hope he will stand up to his own thinking, and to his own precedents, and press this matter before the Budget. There would be no use my mentioning this matter on the Budget; of course, once the Government has brought its Budget down, it must stand by it. Therefore, I want to be in time, and I am very sincere in this matter, in offering these observations, and in calling for the support of my right hon. friend at least in this simple suggestion. It may be said that it would not have much affect on the price of food. Well, we have a right to the advantage of a trial.

And I regret another of my hon. friend's arguments yesterday, and the arguments of many others who supported the proposition, when they said: This change in the clock cannot do any harm anyhow; it is an experiment, and one supported by the precedent of these foreign countries. I submit that free food is in identically the same position; we have the precedent of these other countries for it, and if it does not do any good to the people of the towns, at any rate it will not do any harm, and you can take the duties off food just as you dealt with time in the matter of daylight saving. I think the parallel is an absolutely perfect one, and I am sure that my hon. friend (Sir George Foster), for whom I have the very greatest regard, and who I am glad to see in his old fighting form in this House, is getting his thinking cap on in regard to it.

I have another simple suggestion to offer to the House in regard to the question of production. Cheap food is good, plentiful food is good, and plentiful food means inevitably too cheap food. The method by which I suggest that we should help the increased production of food is the simple one of placing all agricultural implements upon the free list. That would be an act of justice to the farmer, because if you place all food on the free list you take every vestige of protection, in the technical sense, from the farmer, and he surely has a logical claim to turn round and say to Parliament and the Government: If you expect me to produce more foodstuffs of all kinds in open competition with all the producers of the world, without the help of any protection, then in the name of common justice, afford me the encouragement to give you this increased production by granting me free implements with which to do it. That is a just, an equitable, a logical arrangement, and I think it would be an admirable experiment. It would have the element of courage in it, too, though perhaps not very much courage, seeing that it is supported all along the line by those precedents which led my hon. friend (Sir George Foster) so heroically to stay with that subject of daylight saving. I am a farmer myself, with three sons in khaki and only one left at home, and working like a nigger myself in all the time I had left to work after the multitudinous talk of last summer and the equally multitudinous talk of the election. We have done considerable producing; but we are prepared to face the competition of the world, as far as I am concerned. My three sons in khaki are fighting for freedom in Europe, and I believe in it here. I am prepared to support my views here with the same British courage with which my sons are supporting their views and principles upon the firing line, and I think there are a great many farmers like that in western Canada. We do not fear free food in western Canada. We are such good Canadians, and we believe so much in our country, that we know we can produce the stuff that will baffle competition anywhere. Just as our boys on the firing line are at the top of the tree for courage—because that is one part of the British line; they cannot even bend, let alone break it, so the farmers in the West are prepared to carry this principle of free food into the legislation of the country. but they follow that up by saying: Give us free implements wherewith to produce. I once heard a lecturer, Sir, when I was younger than I am now, on the inhabitability of the planets round us, and the lecturer went far to prove that really there were inhabitants on the planet Mars. In later years I have thought often of that lecturer, and if I had any good reason for it I would like to go to Mars, should there be people there, and meet its inhabitants. I would like to meet the people of Mars to see if there is anybody so foolish on that planet as to suppose that a good method of increasing your production is to increase the cost of the implements by which you produce. It seems so ridiculous on the face of it. If a man came from Mars who had not dealt with problems of this kind, who had an open mind and was free from prejudice on the matter, I would not be afraid, even if he passed through Toronto on his way, to convince him in a few minutes that one of the easiest ways to increase production of food would be to make food free and to free from duty the implements with which to do your producing.

I submit to the House and to the Government that, so far as the farmers of this country are concerned, especially the farmers of western Canada—and I have good hopes that there is going to be union of thought between the farmers of western Canada and the farmers of Ontario on more things than the war—we should be given this opportunity of increasing production. And I was going to say, to finish the sentence as I began it, that the appeals to these farmers will fall upon deaf ears from a Government which persists in refusing to supplement its demand that the farmers should increase their production by giving them greater facilities, by making cheaper those implements with which they produce. What is the sense of stopping at tractors? There is no logic or sense in stopping there. Go the limit on this question; let us have free implements all round. Then we will produce and produce hard enough and fast enough. I must not leave this point, without clinching it and completing it as far as I know how, by referring once more to the fondness which exists in the Cabinet, which rules this country at the present moment, for precedent, and even for precedent as they find it in the United States. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar) has justified the Control Board and the expenditure of that Board, by the existence of a similar board and the expenditures made by that board in the United States. Daylight saving in Canada was justified by the Minister of Trade and Commerce yesterday —and he did not justify it in any other way that I can see—by referring to the precedent of the United States and of the other countries of Europe. The logic is unbreakable. They have got free implements in the United States. For years and years the protectionists of this country used to say: it would be all very well to give you these free implements, but look at the tariff that is against us in that country. That argument has now gone, by the wise legislation of the United States. You have the precedent of the States on that, as on other two things to which I have referred, and I want to bring this argument to bear upon my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I do not think the Prime Minister will be hard to persuade if the number of his colleagues in favour of this salutary measure is sufficient.

[Mr. M. Clark.]

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford): There are some of his colleagues that you cannot persuade.

Mr. CLARK: I thought my hon. friend had left the chamber.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: Oh, no; he is right here.

Mr. CLARK: I will be very glad, indeed, to have my hon. friend smash my logic to atoms. I am glad he is here, and I hope he will speak immediately I take my seat, but he might make a better speech after he has read what I have said. I ask him, when he does speak, to say how the precedent of the United States can be good in daylight saving and in the matter of the Food Control Board, and bad in the matter of agricultural implements, and I should like him especially to tell me how he would convince that travelling inhabitant of the planet Mars that the way to increase food production is by making the implements by which to produce it dear.

I have spoken very sincerely, from convictions of a lifetime's duration on this subject. As a strong supporter and a well-wisher of the Union Government in the one specific and great purpose for which it was formed, I appeal to that Government to give earnest consideration to the remarks that I have ventured to address to them. I have come to the stage, Mr. Speaker, when I think it is well that we should all think this war may last longer than some of us hoped. The longer the war is going to last, the stronger my arguments are. The longer the war is going to last, the more the problem must be grasped of raising all the magnificent amounts that can be raised from those boundless tracts of arable land that we have in western Canada. Let the war be long or short, we are in it to the finish, and we are in it to win it. I submit respectfully to this House that even a patriot like the member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) will not shrink from the sacrifice of giving away the petty duty on his implements if it is going to help to produce more and to win the war.

Mr. JOSEPH READ (Prince, P.E.I.): Mr. Speaker, it must be almost amusing to the older members of this House to hear a trumpet call from the other side, considering the company in which the member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark) finds himself. My hon. friend and I do not quite agree. I claim to be a Canadian free trader, and he appears to be an Old Country free trader. There is a considerable difference between the free trade that Canada requires and the free trade that Great Britain requires and has adopted. I quite agree with him in his remarks with regard to free food. On that point, however, I have a motion on the Order Paper, and I will not enter into a discussion of the matter just now. In fact, it may not be necessary to discuss the resolution that I have on the Order Paper, because it is quite possible that the Government may see its way clear to adopt the suggestions in the proposed motion as a war measure. Therefore I shall wait until we see what announcement is made in the Budget.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the Minister of Agriculture. I want to warn him to be very careful; he is not in the best of company. I warn him to be very careful in regard to the expenditure that is likely to take place in Government departments. I wish to draw my hon. friend's attention also to a fallacy in one of his arguments in regard to the imposition of licenses. This license system may be injured very much by charging too much for the licenses, especially to dealers whose business is small. The revenue that would come from a license system will simply be added to the cost of living. Just before I left home I went to the office of a firm in Summerside and I saw on the wall five or six different licenses. I inquired what they were, and found that one was for one kind of coal and another for another kind; another for dealing in wholesale vegetables, and so on. Then there was a notice to the effect that if the firm sold cheese they would have to take out another license. As a matter of fact, if this license business is going to be carried too far by the Food Controller many small dealers may be put out of business. That is not according to the principles of Liberalism—and there are a good many Liberals on the other side of the House, perhaps almost as many as there are on this side. It is well that this should be brought to their attention now so that they may not be inclined to let gentlemen of the other stripe dominate the Government in that direction.

The old adage, a penny saved is a penny earned, applies to food control and to the cost of living. One of the greatest wastages that has occurred in Canada has been wastage in transportation, by reason of the very fact that the people have been refused free food. They have been forced to convey the food for a long distance, when by simply exchanging their customers the food could be carried at half the cost. However, that is a matter that will come up later, and I shall not deal with it now.

The question of labour is a very important one. My hon. friend says that the Government are going to look for voluntary labour. Well, if the voluntary system will secure labour, by all means use it. The greatest glory that surrounds the Canadian boys at the front; the greatest virtue that has been accorded the Canadians, is that the splendid effort made by this country in the war was the result of voluntary self-sacrifice and service. That is the basic principle of the great Christian religion—that a man lay down his life in order that another may live. That was the glorious virtue of the Canadian people in this war till a few months ago. If by the voluntary method boys from fourteen years of age—even from thirteen and twelve years of age—up to their attaining majority or leaving school can be obtained, by all means get them out of the cities and put them to work on the farms. I was born and brought up on a farm, and I am in a position to say that in view of the fact that so much farm machinery is now used, boys of ten and twelve years of age can in many cases do as much work as a man.

The Minister of Agriculture dodged the question of labour. Why did he do so? Simply because he knows that this Government made a tremendous mistake in not conserving the manhood of the country for the purposes of labour rather than use them for purposes that were not as much in the interests of winning the war. More useful ends could have been attained if many of the young men had been kept at home, or, indeed, if a number of those who did go and proved unfit for active trench work had been brought back from Europe. They should do that now. Every man who is not physically fit to go to the front lines in France should be immediately brought home and put to work on the farms.

What we want to do is to create an atmosphere throughout this country in favour of more plentiful production. Greater production is the most important matter we can bring before the attention of the people of this country. It is the history of all great wars that they have been followed by famine and pestilence, and greater production is required to obviate that, in the case of this war. It is quite immaterial, so far as the necessity for food production is concerned, whether the war lasts a long time or not. If the war were to end tomorrow, the same difficulty would arise, and we would be up against famine conditions. In this country, in which we have probably the largest acreage in the world in proportion to population, it is our duty to increase production in preference to anything else, and in connection with that it is our duty also to increase transportation facilities, because, without adequate transportation facilities, increased production will be of very little avail.

Mr. W. F. COCKSHUTT (Brantford): From this same spot a few moments ago, came some arguments to which I cannot quite assent, and I think perhaps I might be misunderstood if I did not place on Hansard my views in opposition to the speech made by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Michael Clark). He has taken upon himself to give the Union Government a little advice, and although I believe he is a thorough supporter of the Union Government, I do not know that he is any more a supporter of it than I am, and I would advise the Union Government not to follow the advice given by the hon. member for Red Deer to-day.

Mr. MURPHY: Perfect union.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I claim as much sincerity as the hon. member for Red Deer possesses, and he possesses a lot. He says that three sons of his are serving overseas. I am on a par with him in that respect, because I also have had three sons serving overseas. In that respect, therefore, we stand together. I think I was the first member in this House to ask for the appointment of a Food Controller, which is the question under discussion to-day. I did not at that time ask for free food, that is, food to come in free of duty, and I do not ask it now. I believe the farmers of Ontario do not ask it, even if the farmers of the West do. The hon. member for Red Deer says that the farmers of the West want free food, and that free implements should follow in the wake of free food. As I understand the formation of this Government, it was the purpose to allow all such questions as the hon. member for Red Deer has raised to stand in abeyance during the war. The hon. member for Red Deer and myself are a unit so far as winning the war is concerned. We both believe in placing all the members of our family in khaki, and every member of the Cockshutt family that could go, that was fit, has gone, so that in that respect I do not take a second place to my hon. friend. The hon. member says that I could not defend my patriotism if I opposed the removal of the duties on implements. My hon. friend even went so far as Mars, and said that I should try to convert its inhabitants if I went there. I have not the acquaintance of the inhabitants of Mars, and if they are as hard to convert as is the hon. member for Red Deer, I should be wasting my time. If the Government purpose meddling seriously with the tariff, they are breaking what we understood in our section of the country was an agreement, that is, that those matters were to stand in abeyance during the war.

That is what we understood, and that is what we stated from the platform and that is what we now believe. The duties on implements cannot be removed unless you are prepared to remove all the duties on all the raw materials that go into all those implements, and that would mean a tearing to pieces of the tariff from top to bottom. Let no one run away with the idea that it can be done with the stroke of a pen. A thousand and one things go into the manufacture of implements and, speaking as I do with some knowledge of that business, I want to say that if the hon. member for Red Deer is as efficient in his farming operations as the implement manufacturers are in their operations, he is making more money on the farm and doing it more efficiently than I give him credit for. It may be true that everything is being done on the farm that can be done, but if the farmers are just as efficient as the implement manufacturers, they have gone a long distance in the way of producing up-to-date articles at the proper prices. The implement manufacturers of Canada have been able to compete in the markets of the world where they have a fair opportunity, and they are prepared to do that now, but they cannot do it if you charge duties on all raw materials that go into the construction of those implements, and remove the duty on the finished article. Many of those raw materials pay as much duty as the finished article, and up to 35 or 40 per cent. Every one of those articles which enters into the construction of those implements has duty on it, and thousands of workingmen just as patriotic and honourable as any other body of citizens in Canada are making their livelihood out of the implement business. It is not a question of a few manufacturers; it is a question of tens of thousands of workingmen who rely upon this industry for their daily bread; and their wages, which are high, are bound up with the success of this great enterprise. I ask, therefore, that the Union Government take no such foolish step as the hon. member for Red Deer has mentioned.

Some hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. COCKSHUTT: I say foolish step advisedly, and for the peace and harmony of the splendid party that is on this side of the House I advise the Union Government to go very slowly in following the advice of my hon. friend from Red Deer, who has thought on only one side of this case, and who has brought the same heterodoxy from the other side over here on this one particular point, although in every other respect he seems to be as sound as a bell. In the sole matter of free trade and protection, he is apparently still in the darkness that he brought over with him from the old country, a free trade country, many years ago. Ontario farmers know just as well as Ontario manufacturers what this question means. It is a matter of live and let live in the Dominion of Canada. There are more than half a million workers engaged in the manufactures of the Dominion. Close on to the same number of men draw their living from the factories that draw it from the farms and there are more workers off the farms in the Dominion than there are on the farms, if it comes to a matter of population. According to a recent census—I do not think there has been one fully taken since 1911—there were 900,000 workers in the forests, factories, mines and railways, as opposed to 700,000 upon the farms, so that more than half our people are industrial. I for one say that a dollar produced from the mine or the forest or the fisheries is just as good as a dollar produced from the farm. I may not have a following in the House in that regard, but we manufacturers look upon ourselves as producers, as men who have produced an honest dollar from the calling in which we are engaged, and which we have endeavoured to systematize and to bring up to the perfection which it has reached in this Dominion to-day. I say with all sincerity that there is no country in the world, with the solitary exception of the United States, and that only in some few respects, that sells implements as cheaply as they are sold in the Dominion. That is the truth; it cannot be gainsaid, and to-day Europe has been sending orders to Canada.

Thousands of orders have come to Canada recently in order to increase production over there, and they did not ask whether these implements or the material in them had been subject to duty or not. They recognized that Canada is producing a class of implement the Allies want, and the consequence is that these implements are going over there to-day in large numbers. Why, then, disturb the splendid relations in which we live at the present time? We in Ontario have not asked for free food. I do not believe that would relieve the situation at all, practically speaking; I do not ask any farmer to forego protection on his products. The farmers in the West may think that is the proper policy, but the farmers of Ontario have voted time and again in favour of protection of farm products, and have got duties ranging from ten to fifty per cent on the various products of the farm. If I have a word of advice to give the Minister of Trade and Commerce—I do not think he needs it, for I believe he is as sound as he always was on this question—it would be to let well enough alone during the war. I am sure the hon. member for Red Deer and myself, if we had rifles here to-day, would both go into the firing line and relieve, so far as we could, the boys who are wanting a rest, and I ask him now to forego his free trade proclivities until after the war, and I will endeavour to forego my protectionist proclivities until after the war. I will not ask for any increase in duties if he will agree not to ask for any reduction in duties. Then, if I tried to steal a march on my hon. friend, and said to the Government: Impose a duty of 10 per cent on this, that, or the other manufacture, because it will be a fine thing as a war measure, he would rightly say that I had broken the arrangement that I professed to believe in, which is to let things stand as they are until after the war. Let us go on together to win this war. The situation is critical both with regard to food and with regard to men, and let us not lose sight of the main proposition in haggling over these different matters that might come between us. Let us unite to do our best for the Allies in every respect. I think that the resolution that my right hon. friend has brought in is a very good one. I should like to have dwelt on it more fully, but it is almost six o'clock, and I do not propose to go into the food question further than to say that I hope my right hon. friend will remember that though he knows how little the Food Board has done, he does not know how much worse it would have been if we had no Food Board at all. The Food Board has done a lot of good. They have set certain prices; they have educated the people, and when my hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Devlin) endeavoured to show that nothing had been accomplished by the Food Board I think he failed miserably, and the minister answered him very finely in the splendid address he gave. In nearly all the cities and towns throughout this Dominion you will find in nearly all the houses food cards in the windows. Nearly every housewife is carrying out the recommendations of the Food Board, endeavouring to reduce the consumption of those articles that we can best ship and which are required for our soldiers, and increasing the consumption of those articles that we cannot ship. All this is a matter of education, and the Food Board has done, and is doing, a splendid work in this direction. I was pleased to hear the Minister of Agriculture say in answer to the point raised by the hon. member for Wright about the tremendous salaries that are being paid in connection with the Food Board, that these are more than offset by the licenses given out to grocers and others dealing in foodstuffs. I believe the license system is an admirable one, and I have great faith in it as a regulator of food prices. If we have not food to spare a license cannot be obtained to ship it out, but if we have, then a license can say how much shall go out and where it shall go. I advocated that in this House over three years ago. I believe it is a splendid system, and if carried out in the spirit in which my hon. friend has explained it this afternoon, I believe it will have a very beneficial effect on the food resources of this country.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

Tuesday, April 2, 1918.

The House met at Three o'clock.

RETURN OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE.

ELECTION IN THE YUKON DISTRICT.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certificates and reports of the election and final returns of the members of the House of Commons to serve in the Thirteenth Parliament of Canada, and also a special report in respect to the election for the electoral district of Yukon Territory.

As the latter report is very voluminous, I have issued instructions that it be printed as an appendix to the Votes and Proceedings, and that copies be circulated among the members at the earliest possible moment.

REPORT.

Report of the Department of North West Mounted Police for the year ending September 30, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Rowell.

[Mr. Cockshutt.]

AMENDMENT TO REPRESENTATION ACT, 1914.

PROPOSED CHANGE OF NAME IN BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSTITUENCY.

Mr. F. B. STACEY (Westminster District) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 26, to Amend the Representation Act, 1914.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Will the hon. gentleman please explain the nature of the Bill?

Mr. STACEY: The object, Sir, is simply to change the name of one electoral district in the province of British Columbia. Under ordinary circumstances, possibly, the name of an electoral district may be of comparatively minor importance; but in this particular case it is the cause of great confusion, inasmuch as the adjoining constituency is known as New Westminster, whereas that to which the Bill refers is now called Westminster District, and confusion has already arisen because of the similarity of the names. It is therefore deemed desirable by those immediately interested that a change should be effected. With regard to the proposed name of the riding, the object is two-fold. The constituency in question lies adjacent to the Fraser river, on both its north and south banks, for a distance of from sixty to one hundred miles, and the locality therefore seems to suggest a suitable title. In addition it perpetuates a name that should be cherished in the annals of Canadian history. For these two reasons, I beg leave to introduce this Bill to change the name of this constituency from Westminster District to Fraser Valley.

Motion agreed to and Bill read first time.

MILITARY SERVICE ACT, 1917.

DISTURBANCES IN QUEBEC—STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER.

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): Before the Orders of the Day are called, it is proper that I should make a statement with respect to certain deplorable incidents which have occurred in the city of Quebec during the past four or five days. Those incidents commenced on Thursday evening last. It appears that a young man named Mercier had been asked by the Dominion police engaged in the enforcement of the Military Service Act for his exemption certificate, which he did not have with him. He was taken into custody until the certificate could be produced. As a matter of fact, under the provisions of section 15 of the Military Service Act, it was his duty to produce it when called upon to do so. The certificate was sent for and produced, whereupon he was immediately discharged.

I am speaking of all these matters under this reserve: we have not yet a full, detailed, official statement of what took place. I hope that it will be forthcoming tomorrow, and if so it will be presented to the House. In the meantime, with that reserve, I am giving the facts so far as they have come to the attention of the Government.

Subsequently it seems that a number of men pursued some ten or twelve of these Dominion officers engaged in the enforcement of the Military Service Act and the officers took refuge in one of the police stations of the city. Eventually those who were making the attack forced their way in, and some of the officers sustained very serious injuries from the handling to which they were subjected by those who assaulted them.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Were the officers military or civic officers?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: They were Dominion officers engaged in the enforcement of the Military Service Act. It would appear so far as the Government has information at the present time that the disturbance might have been put down without much difficulty if proper effort had been made by the civic authorities. However, these men sustained the injuries to which I have alluded, and while the affair occupied a considerable time, nothing more of importance seems to have occurred that evening.

On the following evening an attack, apparently organized in advance, was made upon the registry office which contains the records connected with the Military Service Act. According to the information which has reached the Government, it would not have been difficult, at that stage even, to prevent what took place. Again I repeat that according to the information which thus far has come to us, no adequate or reasonable effort by the local authorities was made to prevent the disturbance and preserve public order. Accordingly the building was ramsacked and I believe it was set on fire; but fortunately all the important records came through without serious damage. They happened to be in a room other than that to which the crowd gained entrance, and where the crowd apparently thought that the records were kept. Consequently, very little loss of important records has occurred.

Then, on that or the following evening other unfortunate and deplorable incidents took place. Newspaper offices were attacked and wrecked, and attempts were made to procure arms. The situation on Saturday appeared to be so serious that the Government decided that the garrison of the city of Quebec should be reinforced, and on Saturday evening and on Sunday about one thousand additional troops were sent in. These are there now, under the command of General Lessard, who on Saturday was ordered to proceed forthwith to Quebec to take command and who arrived there, I believe, on Sunday afternoon. The troops which were sent from some parts of Ontario are troops which have been under training, I believe, for some time and have been gathered from various parts of Canada.

The most deplorable incident, however, is that which occurred last evening, and which resulted in loss of life. From the information in the possession of the Government it would appear that four persons have been killed and a great many wounded. I believe that about sixty persons who were actually engaged in the assault have been taken in charge by the military. The troops, so far as we can judge from the information presently available, acted with great restraint and moderation. They were pelted with bricks and stones; a great many different attacks were made upon them; they were fired upon with firearms of various kinds, and eventually the fire was returned.

So far as the enforcement of the Military Service Act is concerned, it is the duty of the Federal Government to see that it is enforced. We have endeavoured in all parts of the country to enforce it with impartiality, fairness, consideration and firmness. We shall continue to do so in the future, and we shall see to it that Federal officers engaged in the enforcement of the Act are adequately protected, if the local authorities fail to give them that protection which ought to be accorded. I say this in all calmness, and in the assurance that this duty on the part of the Federal Government will be recognized universally in the House and throughout the country, and even by those who in the first instance were opposed to the principle on which that law is based.

Further than that, if in any part of this country it appears that, by reason of the enforcement of this Act, the municipal or local authorities are unable or are not disposed to preserve public order, it will devolve upon the Government of this country to see that public order is preserved, and we intend to perform that duty.

The incidents which have taken place have made it apparent to the Government that some amendments will be necessary to the Military Service Act. One of those which is now in preparation is this: That persons who engage in active or forcible resistance to the enforcement of the Act shall be forthwith enrolled in the military forces of Canada, without regard to whether their class has been called out; without regard to any exemption that they may have procured, and subject only to the consideration that they are within military age. I believe that is a proper principle to adopt. If any persons in this country are disposed to wage war upon the civil authorities of Canada engaged in the enforcement of this Act, then it seems to me they may well be given the opportunity to exercise their warlike spirit upon the enemies of their country.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER: With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I may, I hope, be permitted to say a word upon this matter, especially as the trouble which has taken place in the city of Quebec has occurred in the electoral division which I have the honour to represent in this House, and which I have represented in Parliament for more than forty years. My view is the same as that of the Prime Minister: that the law is to be observed. And, following the remarks that my right hon. friend has uttered, I may state that the law will be observed even by those who do not believe in it. The law, whether it is right or wrong, good or bad, judicious or otherwise, is the law, and it will be observed in Quebec as elsewhere. My right hon. friend made his statement under reserve to-day. I shall await what he has further to say upon the subject. I shall only say that, while the law is to be observed and must be observed, it is possible to have it enforced in such a way as to provoke public sentiment.

Mr. J. BEST: Oh!

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I shall make good my words when the proper time comes. But if the law is enforced with proper regard for the rights of the people, my right hon. friend can be sure of it, there will be no difficulty at all in carrying it out.

[Sir Robert Borden.]

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I shall, of course, be very happy to hear any suggestions the right hon. gentleman has to offer in that regard, but I would like to make this observation: The incident which seems to have provoked the first disturbance in the city of Quebec is an incident which has occurred hundreds, if not thousands, of times in other parts of the country, and has had no such results as those which occurred on Thursday last. That might perhaps be borne well in mind.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not know how the law has been observed elsewhere, but I take especial interest in the city of Quebec, as I happen to be one of its representatives in this House, and, in my humble judgment, the law will be observed there as in other parts of the country.

THE WAR.

CABLE DESPATCHES FROM SIR EDWARD KEMP; HEROIC DEEDS OF CANADIANS.

On the Orders of the Day:

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Mr. Speaker, I should like to read two or three despatches which have reached me this morning from the front, and which will be of interest, not only to hon. gentlemen in this House, but to the people of the country in general. There are three despatches which have been sent to me by Sir Edward Kemp and which embody reports received from Mr. Roland Hill at the front. The first one is as follows:

War Correspondents' Headquarters, France, March 28.

Fighting, digging, blowing up roads and bridges, Canadian railway troops have been worthily keeping up the traditions of Ypres and Vimy. A majority of the battalions were in the battle area and close to that heroic British line that gave but never broke. They fought at Gouzeaucourt and a good majority of them are old soldiers. One company of an Ontario Battalion whirled into the fight at Ham with a veteran British Division and stayed with them two days, fighting every inch of ground. Another railway battalion rescued three heavy howitzers, repairing their broken line and loading the big guns on trucks when the British infantry were holding back the Huns only a few hundred yards away. In Peronne sector another battalion, after getting all its equipment and rolling stock away, organized ambulance trains on what tracks were left, carrying out wounded. When the last engine and night cars came through, the track had to be mended seven times in less than an hour. One company of Canadian railway troops of a battalion that fought with the Americans at Court put up a wonderful fight to rescue a big railway howitzer. They patched up the shell shattered line with any material at hand, got it over a quarter of a mile when broken rails spread and the task seemed hopeless. They bumped the twenty ton truck over ties for another hundred yards and found themselves alongside an old engineers' dump. The line ahead was torn and twisted and there were no rails to be had. Canadian railway builders started to construct line with heavy dugout timbers from the dump. The big gun was hauled another hundred and fifty yards towards safety when the Huns were sighted almost upon them. The battery commander reluctantly decided to blow up the great howitzer. He gave the railroad men ten minutes to construct some kind of a line to take the engine out and then destroyed his big pet. As the retiring infantry came up the gun crew and Canadians piled on the engine and steamed away through a hail of German bullets to safety. In no place where we had to retire were railway lines and bridges left intact. All the first day from Arras to Ham the battalion were running back rolling stock and blowing up the line. In many places they were doing their work of destruction with American engineers and more than once little companies of both found themselves alongside each other in the fighting line. When their own part of the work was cleared the majority of companies were gathered in under command of their own Canadian Brigadier and day and night they continued to give effective assistance in other directions. "And when they are wanted," declares one Canadian Colonel who has commanded troops in the line "they will be there, also ready to do their bit with rifle and machine gun."

The second cable reads:

War Correspondents' Headquarters, France, March 29.—One of the largest Canadian hospitals found itself medically strategical centre of the great battle which raged the first week. The whole front between Arras and Peronne contributed to fill wards. In those first days not a single ambulance convoy was turned away. Teams of surgeons and nurses from other Canadian hospitals outside the battle zone came down to help. From Halifax to Victoria was represented in this little brigade which, day and night, none hardly pausing for rest, fought to rescue battered human remnants. Wounded German prisoners were treated just as our own men. "I wonder if they are treating British fighting men like we are theirs?" asked a Toronto surgeon who only a few days before had narrowly escaped death by shelling of his hospital nearer the line. Extra tables were crowded into operating rooms, and still the line of stretchers where operation was necessary to save soldier's life continued to grow. In a large building adjacent to the hospital, there was the theatre. Notices were posted that "The Follies" would play there that night. Keen eye of the Canadian colonel in command spotted rows of electric lights and arc lamps that were to illuminate the stage. "Put two tables up there," he ordered, pointing to the stage, "and one down there in the orchestra." In half an hour white-robed nurses were busy giving anesthetics and surgeons were operating. In the body of the hall where there was to have been a merry audience laughing at quips and jests, were battle-battered soldiers on stretchers, too weak even to notice the great drama of war that was being played under the limelights on the busy stage. I recognized one of the surgeons. He was from a Toronto unit. Three days before, he had been working in a casualty clearing station near Ypres. Suddenly the hospital became almost a Field Ambulance and then they had to abandon all their huts. They worked all night getting their wounded and stores away. Next day the surgeon was operating in a hospital at Amiens, and then he came to this great centre to find most of the unit there too, sent as reserves into the wonderful fight which medical services have put up. Hospitals have had to fall back with armies they served, but always they are somewhere else next day, huts and tents up, doctors and nurses cheery, even if terribly fatigued, again busy with their work of mercy.

The next, dated London, April 1, 1918, reads:

Canadian officers who were acting as town Majors in places like Ypres, Royalcourt and Bus had exciting experiences before they retired. Their duty was to see that all stores which could not be moved were destroyed, and they spent their last evening in their respective centres blowing up what little ammunition was left, and burning up and obliterating canteens that might yield supplies for advancing Huns. They came out with the last of the British troops and gave a graphic story of how complete was the destruction of roads, bridges and railways which might have been of use to the enemy. Ypres was one of the largest railway centres in the sector. In addition to the Canadian Railway Construction Battalion, there were Canadian Railway Operating Companies at this point and large yards with immense quantities of both standard and narrow gauge rolling stock. Of the latter all the Huns obtained were two derelict light railway engines and about a dozen trucks. Bridges over the Nord Canal were all destroyed. Miles of sidings in the valley at Ypres were mined and rendered completely useless. Repair shops, after lathes and other machinery had been taken away on the last trains, were burned and even the dugouts destroyed. A delicate compliment is paid to the Canadian Railway destruction troops in German communique on Thursday. It says: "Our Railway troops are now coping with traffic behind the front and are working ceaselessly on the reconstruction of destroyed railways." That means to make the lines fairly effective.

THE QUEBEC DISTURBANCES.

NOTICE OF A MOTION TO ADJOURN THE HOUSE.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe): Did I understand the right hon. leader of the Government to say that a date will be fixed for a debate on the Quebec riots?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I merely said that to-morrow a fuller statement would be given after we had received official reports.

Mr. CURRIE: Might it not be well to fix, say, Thursday for the debate? Otherwise, I wish to give notice that on Thursday next I shall move for leave to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing this matter.

INCOME TAX RETURNS.

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX: I ask the Acting Minister of Finance whether, at the request of various boards of trade and business corporations, he is extending the time within which the income tax returns have to be made? I noticed in the financial press last week that a movement was on foot for that purpose, and as a great many people do not fully understand the operation of the Act, I think if my hon. friend would grant a further delay it would be all the better.

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN (Acting Minister of Finance): No further delay has been proposed; in fact, it would be hardly possible. However, upon request, we shall be pleased to consider any suggestion for reasonable delay.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

AD HOC JUDGE.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice) the House went into Committee on the following proposed resolution, Mr. Boivin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Supreme Court Act, Chapter one hundred and thirty-nine of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, and to provide that the Judge of the Exchequer Court, or if he is absent from Ottawa or for any reason unable to sit, a Judge of a Provincial Superior Court may, on the requisition of the Chief Justice or in his absence, the senior puisne Judge, attend at the sittings of the Court and act as an ad hoc Judge for such period as may be necessary; and that the said Judge so attending may be paid his travelling expenses and receive a per diem allowance for living expenses of ten dollars for each day that he is necessarily absent from his place of residence.

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose of the measure which is intended to be based on this resolution is to obviate an inconvenience that has arisen at different times in the past, and that presents itself perhaps, more acutely at the present moment. As the members of the House are aware, a quorum of the Supreme Court consists of five of its members. Whenever by reason of circumstances it is not possible to unite such a number of the members of the court, while it is still possible for the court to proceed with four members only, the result of such a proceeding is not found to be satisfactory in practice. That litigants reaching a court of ultimate appeal should find themselves face to face with a court so constituted that it may possibly divide evenly, with the result either that the judgment appealed from may be considered standing or affirmed, or a rehearing be ordered is obviously not desirable. The purpose of this measure is to make it possible, when by reason of illness, unavoidable absence, or other sufficient cause, five judges are not available for the holding of the term, for the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court or the senior puisne judge, in his absence, to call an ad hoc judge to fill the place of the judge who may be prevented from taking part in the sittings of the court by any of the causes which I have mentioned. This power, I think I can safely say, is vested in the Chief Justice of all the provincial courts; certainly that is the case in the province from which I come. We propose to empower the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, or, in his absence, the senior puisne judge, to call in as an ad hoc judge first the judge of the Exchequer court, or if that judge for any reason should not be available, then a judge of the superior court of any province.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Any of the judges of the Exchequer Court?

Mr. DOHERTY: As at present constituted, there is but one judge of the Exchequer Court, with an assistant judge. This measure does not propose to call in the assistant judge of the Exchequer Court, but the judge of the Exchequer Court, or if he is unable to act, a judge of the Superior Court of any of the provinces. The reason the measure had to be premised by a resolution is simply that it makes provision that where an outside judge is so called in he shall be paid his travelling expenses and the ordinary per diem living allowance which is allowed under the general law to any judge who is called upon to serve at a place other than the place of his residence.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I understand there is no provision in the Supreme Court Act for retiring a judge with superannuation after a certain period of service.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, yes.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I understand not. Would it not be an opportune time to insert a clause in this resolution that a judge, after a certain tenure of office, might be retired, under the Supreme Court Act, with superannuation? It is possible, as I understand the law, for an officer to occupy the position of a judge in the Dominion of Canada long after the period of his usefulness has passed. Will it be possible, when this Bill is before the House, to amend it in that respect, without any further resolution?

Mr. DOHERTY: It would not be possible in a measure of this kind, nor, indeed, in any measure passed by this Parliament, to make provision for the compulsory termination of the holding of a judicial office by any judge of the Superior or High Court, because under the provisions of the British North America Act the tenure of office of the judges of the High Court continues during good behaviour. There is no power, therefore, either in the Government or in Parliament, to compulsorily terminate the holding of such an office. The hon. gentleman is aware that there are certain provisions under which, if a judge voluntarily retires at a certain age, he becomes entitled to a superannuation, determined according to his period of service and age. But there is no power in this Parliament, as I understand the law at all events, to make provision such as the hon. gentleman suggests. I think, in order to attain that result, if Parliament considers it desirable, it would be necessary to amend the provisions of the British North America Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I have listened with great attention to the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) and I may say at once that this proposed measure strikes me as being right. I am informed that of late many litigants from various parts of Canada were held up because there was not on the Supreme Court bench the number of judges required by law to hear cases. However, the legal fraternity accepted the fait accompli, and legislation is proposed to-day to obviate such a state of things in the future. About 1896 or 1897 similar legislation was under consideration, if not presented, by the then Minister of Justice, Sir Oliver Mowat. I do not know if the Bill was ever printed, but, at all events, there was an intention on his part, expressed in the Senate where he held a seat, to appoint ad hoc judges in such cases as the present Minister of Justice seeks to provide for under this Bill. However, the measure was not introduced, and to-day we see the necessity of it. I should like to call the attention of my hon. friend to one point. The Chief Justice will be empowered to request the services or attendance of the judge of the Exchequer Court. Everybody in this House, and everybody in the legal fraternity or in the judicial world, has the highest regard for the Chief Justice of the Exchequer Court. I say the Chief Justice advisely, because it is a well known fact that there are two judges in the Exchequer Court, the Chief Judge and the Assistant Judge. The Assistant Judge has the same power as the Chief Judge, and both are men of very high standing. I do not see why a distinction should be made, and, on the contrary, I think there are reasons—which my hon. friend will easily understand—which would seem to require the presence of the Assistant Judge. I need not dilate at any length on that special phase of the case, but I know that at certain times there may be reasons why the Assistant instead of the Chief Judge should be called upon to act. My hon. friend will perhaps consider the point when he introduces the Bill. As regards the ad hoc judges coming from the Superior Courts, I have nothing to say. I do not know whether there will be a distinction between the Chief Justice of the Superior Court, the Assistant Chief Justice and the other judges or whether all judges of the Superior Court will be made eligible.

Mr. DOHERTY: With regard to the suggestion concerning the Assistant Judge of the Exchequer Court, I will be very glad to consider the matter. It will be open to us, I think, to make an amendment, if it is decided upon, when the Bill is introduced. I may say that there was no intention, in providing for the services of the Judge of the Exchequer Court to cast any reflection on the learned Assistant Judge of that Court. As to the suggestion that there might be occasion when it would be desirable for special reasons that the Assistant Judge should act, I think the hon. gentleman will find, when the Bill is introduced and the circumstances considered, that it will be very easy to make a provision which will be found adequate.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and concurred in.

Mr. DOHERTY thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 27, to amend the Supreme Court Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION FOREST RESERVES AND PARKS ACT.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior) moved the third reading of Bill No. 17, to amend the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act.

He said: Before the Bill is read the third time, I wish to call attention to a feature of the amendment which has developed. The Bill as it stands provides for the extension of the terms of the agreement of 1890, between the Dominion and the province of British Columbia, so as to make it applicable to forest reserves. It makes it applicable to forest reserves, or at least, not inapplicable to reserves as it was the intention that it should be applicable to forest reserves. However, the Bill as it reads, is applicable not only to forest reserves but to park reserves. The Department of Justice advises us that in the original Order in Council, which constitutes the agreement between this Government and the province of British Columbia, there is no provision which requires its application to park reserves, and the officers of the parks branch are very desirous that the parks should be preserved from invasion at the hands of miners or others. Consequently, I wish to move:

That the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend it as follows: "That clause 1 of the Bill be amended by striking out all the words from the beginning of the clause to and inclusive of the word "expedient" in the second line thereof and substituting therefor the following words: "Provided however, that where in a Dominion forest reserve, outside of the area of the Dominion Parks now or hereafter established, it is not expedient for topographical or other reasons."

Then it would read on:

To use for public road purposes the existing road allowances, the title to which is vested in the Crown in the right of the province, the provincial governments may, by order of the Governor in Council, be permitted to lay out such roads as may be necessary for the convenience of the public, and may be granted title thereto in consideration of the surrender of such portions of the said road allowances as are not required for public roads.

It is desired that parks be not opened to the laying out of provincial roads the same as forest reserves.

Sir SAM HUGHES: A public road, I presume, means a wagon road, not a railroad?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not a railroad. The chief amendment is to the second clause. I wish to move, as relating to this clause:

That clause 2 of the Bill be amended by adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided that this section shall not apply to any Dominion park now or hereafter established."

It simply limits the operation of the Bill to forest reserves and does not include Dominion parks.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee on the Bill, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

[Mr. Meighen.]

On section 1—to authorize granting road sites to provinces upon surrender of certain road allowances:

Mr. MEIGHEN moved that the section be amended by striking out all the words from the beginning of the clause to and inclusive of the word "expedient" in the second line thereof and substituting therefor the following words: "provided, however, that where in a Dominion forest reserve, outside of the area of Dominion parks now or hereafter established, it is not expedient for topographical or other reasons," etc.

Mr. BUREAU: I think you read, in the tenth line, the words "vested in the Crown in the right of the province, the provincial government may by Order of the General"—

Mr. MEIGHEN: May by order of the Governor in Council.

Mr. BUREAU: Those words are not in the Bill I have here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The words "by order of the Governor General in Council" were inserted in the Bill while in committee.

Mr. BUREAU: Why are Dominion parks exempted from the right of changing a highway for topographical reasons?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is desirable that no other authority than the Dominion shall have power to enter the parks. There could not be the same objection to allowing the provincial authorities to make roads in forest reserves. Forest reserves are not beauty spots as are the tracts reserved for park purposes. If the provincial authorities were permitted to enter the parks, our control would not only be invaded but it would be very seriously impaired to the detriment of the parks. There is nothing in the original agreement by which we are in any way enjoined to allow the provincial authorities to make roads through parks.

4 p.m.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 2—to authorize grant of minerals in forest reserves to the province of British Columbia under agreement of February, 1890:

Mr. MEIGHEN moved:

That clause 2 be amended by adding to the clause as within the printed Bill the following proviso: "Provided that this section shall not apply to any Dominion park now or hereafter established."

Mr. BUREAU: That is on the same principle as the previous amendment?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The same principle exactly.

Mr. FULTON: As this Bill effects the constituency which I represent, I would like to make a suggestion to the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) in regard to it. I think I am right in surmising that the cause of the amendment being brought in was a difficulty that arose in connection with certain mineral claims in the Highland Valley near Ashcroft. These claims were located prior to the establishment of the forest reserves by the Act under which they are now constituted. When the owners came to apply for Crown grants they found that, the reserve being established, the Crown grant could not be obtained, as the Forest Reserves Act prevented the Dominion from transferring the minerals or surface rights to the province. In the case of these mineral claims, it is only right that the applicant should obtain a grant not only for minerals, but for surface rights. I understand from the minister that has been recognized and that a Crown grant in respect to these mineral claims will be issued in due course; that is, that the right to the minerals and the surface rights will be transferred to the province so that the province may grant them to the locator under its Mineral Act. It seems to me that, now that the Dominion Government has recognized the principle of allowing these forest reserves to be entered and the mineral claims within these reserves to be developed, the department might go farther in the matter. There is nothing in the amendment which provides for the granting of the surface rights along with the grant of the minerals. I feel sure that the locators of mineral claims, or the parties who undertake to develop these claims, will want to be assured as to what rights they will get. In my opinion, they should get more than they can get under the provisions of the Forest Reserves Act, namely, a license or a lease. Mining companies are very sensitive, and they are likely to hesitate in the expenditure of a very large amount of capital unless they can have a more permanent title surface rights than can be obtained under the Forest Reserves Act at the present time. If, however, the minister does not feel that he can go that far, an assurance might be given in the Act itself that the surface rights will be dealt with at the same time that the mineral rights are transferred. These companies will then know what title they will get to the surface rights, and it is absolutely necessary for them to have some rights upon the surface in order to develop the claims. I would suggest that in this clause some provision be made whereby these men will know that they will get the right to use the surface.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The case that the hon. member (Mr. Fulton) refers to had something to do with bringing to the attention of the department the necessity of this amendment; that is quite correct. The case he refers to, however, as he explained clearly himself, was one in which the mineral rights were acquired prior to the establishment of the Forest Reserves Act, and by a saving clause of that Act, no rights that had previously been acquired were to be interfered with. In the next place, the department felt that it was in a position to grant the mineral rights and surface rights in respect of the lands covered by the Mining Act in the province of British Columbia. The present Bill purports to take care of cases that have arisen since the establishment of the forest reserves, and to provide a means whereby the parties interested will get all the mineral rights that belong to the Dominion—that is, all the rights to the baser metals. The hon. gentleman suggests that there should be some provision in the Bill which would make clear to the party dealing with the mine what his surface rights are to be as well. Under the Forest Reserves Act—I think it is section 17, at all events, under the section of the Act which empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations—power is given to make regulations for the leasing or licensing of surface rights, and regulations have been made providing for the leasing of such rights. Under those regulations any miner who lives up to the provisions of the law of British Columbia is able merely by applying to the department, to secure a lease of the surface rights. The hon. gentleman states that capital is timid, and would be more likely to invest if the applicant was aware that he could get the fee simple. That is in a measure true. This, however, was the policy established in 1908, by the Forest Reserves Act, in relation to rights in forest reserves. I call attention to that fact first; but, secondly, and more important, an Act was passed by this House in 1914 whereby the granting of the fee simple to mineral claims—the granting of the fee simple in relation at all events to coal rights and the greater mineral claims—was put an end to and a system of leasehold established. Since that time, under the authority, indeed under the instructions, of Parliament, the administration of our resources has been taken care of, as a matter of fact, by a general policy of leasing.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What about your royalties?

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the royalties have been reduced too in very many cases.

Mr. LEMIEUX: From ten to five cents.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, from ten to five cents in the case of coal. In the face of that policy laid down by Parliament, it would be scarcely fitting now to introduce legislation that would re-establish the old conditions, and in relation to the very class of cases where they never formally obtained at all. Instead of moving in that direction, Parliament has been moving in the other direction, and moving very rapidly. So it appears to me the proper course now is to leave to the applicant his right to leasehold. I have no hesitation in stating that applicants who conform to the law of British Columbia and to our regulations will receive and be entitled to receive under those regulations, a lease of the surface rights, and I do not think he can ask for more.

Mr. FULTON: I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that under this Bill the baser minerals will be transferred to the province to deal with, and the province will issue a Crown grant, notwithstanding the policy of the Dominion in adopting a lease. The only question is with regard to surface rights, and it would be rather anomalous that the miner should have a Crown grant of the minerals and only a lease, or license, with regard to the surface rights. He has a grant for all time of the minerals, and license or permission only and that for a limited period to use the surface rights. What I suggested was that there should be an assurance that he would get the right, possibly by way of a Crown grant, and if not in the form of a license or lease, to enable him to work the minerals for which he will have the Crown grant.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have given the assurance, provided, of course, the miner complies with the Provincial Mining Act and with the regulations of the department. He has to do that before he can make application.

Bill reported as amended.

[Mr. Meighen.]

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

House in Committee on Bill No. 4, to provide for the time in Canada being in advance of the Solar Mean Time during the summer months.—Sir George Foster.

On section 1—Act cited as The Daylight Saving Act, 1918.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand that the new legislation is in force in the United States.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It has been in force since yesterday, has it not?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Since 31st March.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And as a consequence our trains have to wait an hour at the boundary line?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: At some points.

On section 2—Time advanced one hour.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Instead of Solar Time I propose to make an amendment by striking out the last line and substituting therefor:

> in each province shall be one hour in advance of the time which under the law of the province is the time prescribed for such province, and if there is no time so prescribed, of the accepted standard time.

In each of the provinces of the Dominion, with the exception of Quebec, standard time is the accepted and legalized time. On inquiry from the Attorney General of Quebec I find that eastern standard time is the accepted time in that province, but that there is no legalization of it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is meant by "accepted time?"

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It is the time which is accepted in the province. Eastern standard time is carried out there, although it has not been legalized by Act of Parliament. The amendment provides that the time shall be one hour in advance of the standard time as it is legalized in all the provinces, or in any province in which it is not legalized, of the accepted time, which in Quebec is eastern standard time.

Mr. BOYCE: Would it not be well, Mr. Chairman, so to word this Bill as to provide that county or township councils may adopt the law or not, as they see fit? This measure is going to work great hardship on the farmers. As a farmer, I have no objection to the people of the cities adopting such a measure as this if they wish to spend the day playing ball and amusing themselves, we farmers are not going to find fault. But in this serious time, when we should all be united with the object of producing food, the loyal farmers of Canada consider that no new legislation of this kind should be enacted. I trust that this suggestion will be carefully considered. Seventy thousand of our farmers are now fighting at the front trying to uphold the rights of the British Empire, and we should not make it any harder for those who are at home to solve the great problem of producing food for the people. We should, therefore, be permitted to use our own judgment in the matter of the saving of daylight. We have to get up early in the morning anyway, but we cannot start work until the dew dries, especially during haying and harvest time, and if this Bill passes we shall lose two hours of valuable time in the evening.

Mr. HALLADAY: I do not believe that it is the intention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to turn the sun back an hour or to compel the sun to rise in the West and set in the East. I represent one of the largest farming constituencies in the Dominion. I have farmed a number of years in Manitoba and Alberta, and I know whereof I speak. I cannot see how the passing of this measure will increase or decrease production in our part of the country. Show me the man who is not up with the sun at harvest time and working until the sun goes down, and I will show you a man who is not keeping pace with his neighbours. It is absolutely necessary that we gauge our work by the sun, not by the clock. We in the West are not troubled with the dew, but the passing of this Act does not force our eastern farmer friends to get up one hour earlier than they do at present. I cannot see that the measure will adversely affect the farmers of Canada, but I can see that it will give the great army of indoor workers an extra hour of sunshine, and for that reason I am prepared to support the Bill.

Mr. McKENZIE: I suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he is seriously encroaching on the Sabbath day. For at least two thousand years the Sabbath day in this country has begun at a certain hour; it has been so established by Divine decree.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: You are given twenty-four hours of it; that is quite enough for you.

Mr. McKENZIE: The good, conscientious people in my part of the country will object strenuously to my right hon. friend's encroachment on the Sabbath. An old magistrate in my county once said to a minister: when I find that you are on one side and Moses is on the other, I am with Moses every time. In the same manner, when I find Divine Providence fixing the Sabbath at a certain time, I stand by Divine Providence when I find that the Minister of Trade and Commerce alone is on the other side. But, laying all jokes aside, in our part of the country men who have to go to work at twelve o'clock Sunday night will object very seriously to going to work at eleven o'clock instead of twelve; they will regard themselves as working on the Sabbath day. It is worthy of consideration whether the sanctity of the Sabbath can be thrust aside by simply altering the clock.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: My hon. friend's authority must be biblical; I would like him to give me the chapter and verse. I know that he can do so very easily.

Mr. McKENZIE: I would refer my hon. friend to the twentieth chapter of Exodus, where it is laid down that we should remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy; no part of it is to be transgressed.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 3—annual enforcement:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I was under the impression that the Act was to be for one year only, as an experiment.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It is not so expressed in this section.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I meant that the Act should apply to the summer season applicable during the year. The provision that the Act shall be enforced each year during such time as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council was made for this reason: we should have liked to bring the Act into force coterminously with the Act in the United States, but legislation had to be provided, and it was not known exactly when this legislation would be through. Therefore, a clause was put in giving the Governor in Council power to call it into force.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: But the amendment goes much further than my right hon. friend intended.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: No.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Yes, I understood from my right hon. friend the other day that this measure was to be an experiment for only one year, and that it would have to be renewed if found satisfactory. Under the section as amended, it is in the power of the Governor in Council to carry it on from year to year without any reference to Parliament at all. If that is not what my right hon. friend intended, he should amend the section accordingly.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The Act shall be in force during the present year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is it.

The CHAIRMAN: The section, as amended, reads:

This Act shall be in force during the present year, for such time as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 4—Adjustment to meet special conditions:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is the meaning of this section? Has my right hon. friend any concrete case in mind?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER. This is copied entirely from the English Act, and is meant to provide a means for making any adjustments which may be found necessary.

Mr. McMASTER: What kind of adjustments?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Adjustments where times clash, for instance.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My right hon. friend has a copy of the Bill. I thought he might have a case in mind.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I have no case in mind. This is simply a precautionary section.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—power of Railway Board to advance standard time one hour:

Mr. MORPHY: Supposing the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada did not advance the standard time used by railway companies, what a muddle we should be in in this country if trains were running on one time, farmers working on another and industrial men on another.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The railroads will not object to the change in time. What this section is meant to do is this, which is taking place now under the regulations in regard to standard time and the running of the railways in the United States of America. It is often inconvenient, although they divide the country up into zones, that those zones shall be absolutely fixed as regards certain lines of railway, for instance, at terminal points or divisional centres that run a little beyond or fall a little short of the limiting meridian. In that case the Interstate Commerce Commission in the United States has the power, and our Railway Board here will have the power, to extend or set back the time within the zone for the traffic on that line.

Mr. McMASTER: In section 2 a certain interpretation is given to standard time. I think, therefore, it will be necessary to make section 5 agree with that. I would also suggest that the powers of the Board of Railway Commissioners should be only in accordance with the Act, that is to say, their powers to make this change should be no wider than the terms of the Act.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: That is done, is it not? In the first place, as to time, section 5 says:

The Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada shall have power to advance by one hour the standard time.

It is standard time that has been adopted. Then as regards the carrying out of the power, the section goes on to say:

—and to make such orders as may be necessary for the convenient carrying out of the provisions of this Act.

They cannot go beyond the provision of this Act. Does not my hon. friend think that is sufficiently safeguarded?

Mr. BUREAU: The period of time for which they can make the order is not limited?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: They have to conform to the the Act, and the time during which the Act is operative is prescribed by the Order in Council. It does not seem to me they can get further than that. It is just as binding upon them as though the times were stated in the Act.

Mr. MORPHY: When I spoke I had not the Bill before me, but it struck me that this Parliament, in the method of expression in the section, is not exercising its functions over the Railway Board. The section reads:

The Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada shall have power to advance by one hour the standard time used by railway companies in Canada.

Why not make it imperative that they shall advance the time? Why give them an option? Unless this Parliament makes up its mind as to what they shall do, and unless this Bill makes it clear that they shall do it, there is bound to be confusion if they do not follow the Bill. There may be reasons why they should not advance the time; there may be reasons why they should.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I would think that this gives all the power that is necessary. The Act in the first place, shows its intention. The Board of Railway Commissioners, making arrangements for the railways are given power to advance the standard time by one hour. In some cases they may not require to advance it by that hour, for instance, in the case of a junction point which is just short of the meridian at which the time changes. If my hon. friend will look at a railway map of the United States, he will find instance after instance in which the railways do not run on standard time right up to the meridian point, simply because it would upset matters and be generally disadvantageous to do so in those cases.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Our conditions with regard to latitude and longitude are about the same as the United States, and we should follow them as closely as possible.

Mr. McKENZIE: I suppose there will be no question raised that this Bill does not apply to Government Railways. Section 5 refers to "railway companies," but Government railways are not railway companies.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It will be impossible for them to work out of joint with the other railways.

Mr. McKENZIE: I presume the intention is that this legislation shall apply to all railways. I was just bringing to the notice of the minister the wording of the section.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I have no objection to inserting after "railway companies" the words, "including Government railways."

Mr. McKENZIE: That would remove all doubt.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On the preamble:

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The preamble will have to be changed to accommodate itself to the change made in the Act. I therefore beg to move that the words "solar mean time" be struck out and the words "accepted standard time" be substituted therefor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Before the preamble is adopted I should like to ask the minister if there has been any pronounced demand for legislation of this nature, and if so, from what quarters it has come. It seems to me this legislation is introducing a disturbing element into the country and so far as I can see there is absolutely no need for it.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: I have already laid on the Table a list of the public bodies and companies by whom application has been made for this legislation. There is a very general desire all through Canada by all branches of industry and business for the adoption of the Daylight Saving Bill. With reference to the farmers, as I stated in my explanation of the Bill, there is a fear that it may work prejudicially to their interests so far as keeping labour at work during the latter part of the day is concerned, and a number of representations from farmers' organizations and municipal councils, as well as individual opinions voiced here in the House, have come to the department not favouring the legislation; but as we progressed in the discussion of the question the other day, the objections to this legislation were all pretty thoroughly thrashed out, I think, and the consensus of opinion in the House seemed to be that the Bill would work advantage to the greater number. I laid stress on the experience of other countries. Exactly the same fears were expressed in Great Britain and France, and the United States as have been expressed here, and when it came to the practical working out of the measure, those fears were proved to be groundless to a very large extent if not altogether. Experience has taught that a measure of this kind is of very great benefit, and is not, on the whole, detrimental to the farming interests.

Mr. McMASTER: Has any association of farmers told the minister they were in favour of this legislation?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: At a very large meeting indeed, representative of western farmers and of persons intimately connected with the farming districts in Saskatchewan, including reeves and other municipal officials, this matter came up and a resolution was passed favouring the Daylight Saving Bill. That voiced a widespread opinion in the province of Saskatchewan, which is a representative farming community, and ought to be taken as pretty well indicative of the farmers' feelings.

Mr. McMASTER: It would seem to me that people who grow grain almost exclusively are hardly representative of farmers; they are specialists. Before the preamble passes, I should just like to put this on record. I am the representative of an agricultural community in eastern Canada and since this legislation was before this House for discussion on the last occasion, I have made it my business to find out from the farmers in my county what they thought about it. One of the leading farmers writes me as follows:

> In regard to the Daylight Saving Bill, my opinion is that it is worse than useless in these eastern provinces. During hoeing, haying, and harvesting, of both grain and root crops, they are so wet with the dew that we cannot do much with them before seven, and sometimes it is eight o'clock or even later before they are dry enough to work in. One hour from five to six in the evening is worth three or four early in the morning, especially during the haying and harvesting time. However, I think that the farmers will not pay much attention to it; but men who work by the day in haying and harvesting time may want to commence one hour sooner in the morning and stop one hour earlier at night. If so, I think it will be a discouraging feature to a Greater Production campaign.

That is the evidence of a practical farmer in the county of Brome, and a member of the Quebec Council of Agriculture. I put these matters before the minister, because it seems to me that, however useful the work done by people in their backyards may be in the way of growing vegetables and other products, the man we have to depend upon for greater production in the country this coming season is the farmer, and I am very much afraid that the minister is running counter to the best opinion of the informed agriculturists in the country East and West, and especially in the East.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: With reference to the application received from the farmers of Saskatchewan and Alberta, I should like to point out that conditions in western Canada are very different from conditions in Ontario. The daylight is much longer in those provinces than in Ontario. They do not have the heavy dews that we have in the older provinces. That fact is quite apparent to every one, and, consequently, it is not going to affect them to any marked extent. I was a little surprised at the minister stating that applications had been received from practically all industries and businesses. If agriculture is not an industry or business in this country, I should like to know what is. I think it will be generally conceded that the most important industry that we have in Canada at this particular time is farming. I say most emphatically that little consideration has been given to the need for greater production by the introduction of this Bill at the present time. I believe consideration has been given to those who are anxious to have more time for recreation and pleasure rather than for production. I think that this is not the proper time to introduce this measure, and I believe the minister would be well advised, in view of the serious condition confronting us, if he would hold this legislation back until some time in the future, when conditions will not be as serious as they are at present. If the people in towns and cities are anxious to extend the daylight, as they term it, they have absolute power to do so. They can pass legislation for that purpose when it does not affect any one but themselves, but you are going to make this measure apply to other people, who will be very seriously and very materially affected. I believe this Bill will prove more disastrous to the cause of agricultural production in this country than the propaganda that is being waged for greater production will accomplish. I think it will much more than offset anything that will be gained by the propaganda. I expressed my views on this matter when the Bill was up for second reading, and I desire now to make myself clear, and to warn the Government that this is a very inopportune time to introduce legislation, which, I am quite confident, has been largely urged by people who are anxious to have more time for leisure and sport at a time when such matters ought to be foreign to our minds.

Mr. THOMAS FOSTER: I congratulate the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the introduction of this Bill. It shows that he is progressive and is meeting the demands and desires of the people generally throughout the Dominion. There has been some objection to the Bill, and I do not think it is altogether becoming to those who have raised the objection when we consider what the large cities and the smaller cities and towns are doing to assist in greater production. Take the city of Toronto with its large population: we are told by one of the city members of the great production in Toronto in the backyards. The Council of the city of Toronto last year granted the sum of $2,500, and certain citizens also made contributions, and altogether six or seven thousand dollars was raised to assist in greater production, and to educate the boys and girls of the city. The Rotary Club, which has had this matter in hand, raised this amount of money. They first secured a supervisor, an expert on soil and seed, who gave instructions and lectures to the boys and girls of the city. To illustrate the result of that movement, this year the farmers made application to the city for many of the boys who assisted them last year. Altogether they applied for some 15,000 boys to assist in greater production. I may say further that this movement has a tendency to interest the boys and girls in the work, and to create a desire for greater freedom and open air in the country than they have enjoyed in the past. Thousands of those boys and girls who have gone to the farm to do the seeding and other work will drift back eventually and become permanent residents of the outlying districts. Surely that is a consideration. We are getting greater numbers from the city, and we will educate them along the line of freedom and open air. There has been some opposition, although not a unanimous opposition, from the farmers throughout the Dominion. One hon. gentleman who spoke this afternoon is a very extensive farmer in the West, and he expressed his approval of the measure. Many others have done so. Therefore, I think, after the debates which have taken place in connection with this Bill, that it is a move in the right direction, and will benefit the farmer. The farmers may not feel the benefit at the moment, but in a very short time they will be surprised at the response which will come from the cities, towns and villages in the way of assistance. I therefore, congratulate the hon. minister on bringing this measure forward at this time. He is progressive and desires that the young Canadians shall be in advance of the young people of the great country to the south. They are a few weeks in advance of us in the United States, and, although they are a great and progressive people, we want to show them that we are up to date, and that in a short time we will be ahead of them in this matter.

Mr. SMITH: I expressed my views last year as fully as I thought desirable, but I desire to refer to an article which appeared in one of the Ottawa papers, which had all the earmarks of being inspired, which stated that no supporter of the Government had a right to express an opinion in opposition to any measure the Government submitted to this House. I desire to say, as a supporter of this Government, not as its slave, that my idea in connection with this Bill is that they have not touched one of the great fundamental principles of agriculture, namely the details of farming. My view, after long years of experience with many of our leading public men, is that, whilst they may know a good deal about some things in connection with farming, they do not know enough of the details which go to make up farm life and which go to make a really prosperous farmer. We are told the farmer can do as he likes. I know that I can go to bed when I like, no matter whether the Bill passes or not, and I can get up when I like; but I cannot control my men. The whistles are blowing and the bells are ringing in the surrounding towns, and when the city men get through their work at five o'clock, do you mean to tell me I can control my men? I say no. If I could appeal to the hon. minister, my appeal would be along the lines of the remarks of the hon. gentleman from South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), that the hon. minister should, for a time at least, withdraw this Bill. It appears to me that the time is inopportune, and that the enforcement of such a measure would be irritating and disturbing, especially when you consider that our boys across the water are being battered in every possible way. This Government should have bigger and greater things to consider than this Daylight Savings Bill.

Mr. ARGUE: The minister has made reference to a public body in Saskatchewan representing the farmers asking for this Bill. I would like to know what body in Saskatchewan that is. I represent a constituency in Saskatchewan, and there is only one association there that has the right to speak for the farmers. That is the Grain Growers' Association. Is that the association which asks for it?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: No; neither for nor against in so far as they are concerned.

Bill reported.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior) moved second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

Mr. BUREAU: Are the amendments contained in this Bill detailed amendments to the various clauses, or are they following a principle, or are they for the purpose of changing or improving the administration of the Act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman's first statement is absolutely correct; they are detailed amendments clause by clause, and there is no general principle running through them whatever. They do not in any way radically amend or change the principle of the Dominion Lands Act. There is no fundamental change except the feature of the Bill which I referred to on its introduction, namely, that which confirms an Order in Council withdrawing altogether Dominion lands from purchased homesteading and pre-emption.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the second time, and the House went into committee on the Bill, Mr. Boivin in the chair.

Mr. McKENZIE: These amendments are so extensive that it is almost a pity that the minister did not consolidate the Act. It disturbs, perhaps necessarily, the previous Act very much, and I think it would have been almost as well to have consolidated the Act entirely in order that when one gets the Act as consolidated he will have the whole of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We are close to the date of a general consolidation of the Dominion statutes. I do not think the amendments are of sufficient importance to warrant one in bringing in a new Dominion Lands Act for the reason, embodied in the remarks of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau), that there is no fundamental change in principle. They are amendments in the strictest sense.

On section 1—Declaration as to improvements prior to entry and valuation by homestead inspector:

Mr. BUREAU: If I understand this rightly, it is to give sanction to the clause which existed in the old Act which left it to the judgment of the minister to cancel the entry if the improvements were not reported by the entrant. Now you cannot grant entry unless he who makes application first discloses the improvements which are made either by himself or by his predecessor or predecessors—is that the change which is made?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The old Act was worded something like this: that the applicant for entry should make a declaration as to the value of the improvements, if any, that were on the land, and it was provided that later on the minister had power of cancellation in the event of anything false being so declared.

5 p.m.

[Mr. Bureau.]

The purpose of this amendment is to give legality to what has been the practice of the department, that is, in each case to make compulsory a statutory declaration, to provide for a homestead inspector's report and to provide that the improvements must be paid for. That is not provided for, I think, in the old Act. I have just sent for a copy, but there are no copies in this building at the present time, and we can only get them by sending to another building. This provision legalizes the existing practice of requiring that the homestead inspector's report must be received. Then the amount of the improvements must be paid by the applicant. Furthermore, it provides that where there is a seed grain mortgage registered against land on the records of the department the amount to be paid by the applicant, before the entry can be completed, shall include the amount of the mortgage, that is in so far as the seed grain mortgage exceeds the amount of the improvement. Of course, the original entrant gets the value of the improvements, and the Government is enabled to get rid of the entire seed grain mortgage.

Mr. BUREAU: Would the minister give me a concrete case? I do not exactly understand what is meant with respect to improvements and the excess value of the seed grain mortgage. Supposing I make entry on a piece of land, and my predecessor has made $500 worth of improvement but owes $500 for seed grain?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then you would have to pay $500.

Mr. BUREAU: That amount only?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: The Government reserves to itself the right to collect from the men who bought the seed grain; that is the mortgagor, the amount of the mortgage, and there is no discretion in the matter of paying it back?

Mr. MEIGHEN: In the case my hon. friend refers to, where there were improvements to the value of $500 and a seed grain mortgage of the same amount, the entrant would have to pay that $500, which amount would go first to the credit of the former entrant who had abandoned the land or whose patent had been cancelled. Then it would be placed against his obligation for seed grain, thereby discharging that obligation, and we would get our money back.

Mr. BUREAU: Then the money is paid to the Crown?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: I understand.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Had there been no seed grain mortgage the minister would have had power to give that $500 to the former entrant. Now we simply absorb it to satisfy the seed grain mortgage. If the seed grain mortgage had been $600 he would have had to pay the whole of that sum, and the minister then could give the excess of $100 to the former owner.

Mr. KEEFER: I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior how the law would operate in the case of a man who had placed a mortgage on his homestead in order to buy a tractor?

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend is under a misapprehension. No man could mortgage his homestead to buy a tractor. The only way a homestead could be mortgaged is for seed grain under a special Act. The case he cites is not in point.

Mr. McKENZIE: How does the Government or the minister, ascertain the value of those improvements?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under clause A.

Mr. McKENZIE: Do I understand the practice to be that if a man goes in and takes an entry on land, and fails to comply with the regulations, and is either ejected—I believe there is a process of that kind sometimes—or abandons the place, but has made some improvements before abandoning it, the Government still recognizes his right to be paid for his improvements? In such event how is the value ascertained?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We do not recognize it as a right, but the minister has had power—at all events he has exercised the power for many years—of transferring the value of these improvements as paid by the new entrant to the old entrant if he could be found. It was not always done, but virtually always. It was not paid to him as a right, he could not have sued for it, but as a matter of course, the value was given to him. He had improved the land to that extent and it was felt to be his money. The value is ascertained on the basis of an inspector's report, and the entrant has to make a declaration as to what he deems the value should be. If the amount is too low he has to pay the balance before the entry is completed. If the amount is too high then he gets a repayment. If the man makes a false declaration he will not get the entry at all.

Mr. BUREAU: Are these powers exercised by the minister himself?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, not by the Governor in Council.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Does not the minister think the clause is too severe altogether? The law which it is now sought to amend reads as follows:

> A person applying for entry for a homestead, a preemption, or a purchased homestead, shall declare, before being granted entry, what improvements, if any, there are upon the land with respect to which his application is made, and shall pay the value of such improvements,—

Should he fail to make such declaration his entry shall be liable to cancellation in the discretion of the minister. Now, as I understand the amendment, the party who seeks to make entry is bound to declare what improvements there are upon the land, and to pay at once what charges there may be upon it. Would it not be preferable to wait a little while before exacting a payment? The entrant may be a poor man, and if you require him to at once pay whatever charges there may be on the land he may not be able to do so. On the other hand, if you allow him to work his homestead for a few years his circumstances may be improved to an extent that will enable him to defray whatever charges have to be met. I am afraid that if you compel an entrant to pay these charges immediately upon applying for entry on the land which has been deserted by its previous owner you will possibly prevent him from making entry, whereas if you allow him to work the homestead he may get more firmly on his feet and obtain that improvement in his circumstances which will make it easier for him to pay the necessary charges. Of course, the Government must have sufficient protection in cases of this kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The applicant has always been compelled to pay at once the value of the improvements, it being recognized, doubtless, that he got the benefit at once of the existing improvements. For example, if there was a house on the land he got the advantage of that house and was thus able to enter upon and cultivate the land more quickly than he otherwise could, and therefore enjoyed greater benefit by reason of the fact. There has been no hardship in the past in collecting the value of the improvements. My right hon. friends' remarks may have greater weight with regard to the case of seed grain, fodder, and other relief. The new entrant does not get the benefit of that; the former entrant gets the benefit of the seed grain, fodder, and other relief. So far as we have carried out the practice which will be here made law. We have not given anything to any one abandoning a homestead where there was a seed grain mortgage against it unless he paid the amount due. It may be worth considering whether or not the minister should not have the power to grant an entry subject to the payment of the amount of the seed grain mortgage, in so far as it exceeded the amount of the improvements, such amount to be paid prior to the issue of the patent. I would rather have the legislation go through in this form because these seed grain mortgages have been due since the spring of 1915. We have not been quite as successful in collecting them as we had hoped. Approximately half have been collected, but there would seem to be no reason why more should not be collected. However, the utmost efforts have been made to get them in, and all concerned are most anxious to exert every possible pressure to attain this end. By "all concerned" I mean the farming communities and organizations themselves. The farmers' organizations and loan organizations are most anxious that these liens be removed as rapidly as possible. While liens against abandoned homesteads may have to be taken up by homesteaders who have a little money, it seems to me that the advantage we get is well worth that discrimination, if you call it such, in their favour. We will get the money in, whereas if we let it stand until the man gets his patent, he may postpone the getting of his patent a considerable time, and cause us to be out of our money that much longer.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Has any provision been made for the collecting of taxes which may be due on a homestead, which has been abandoned, for the municipality or school district in which the land is situated?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not looked into that point, but my belief is that the homesteader's interest in the land is taxable, but once his interest is gone and the land reverts to the Crown, the right of the municipality to that tax lapses.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—cancellation and compensation for improvements:

Mr. BUREAU: What is the difference between this and the similar clause of the old Act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under the old Act compensation could be paid to the former entrant, but now power is taken to pay it to any dependent. There are some cases where a homesteader abandons his land and his wife and family at the same time. Under the old Act we had power, if we could find the man who had skipped out and was the least deserving of all, to give the money to him. We could not give it to those who were most deserving of it and who had been deserted.

Mr. BUREAU: That is the only change?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On sections 3 and 4—requirements for homestead letters patent; computation of period for performance of requirements.

Mr. McKENZIE: Does the word "residence" in this section mean from the time that the man takes possession, or from the time that he begins to reside on the land?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Begins to reside on the land.

Mr. McKENZIE: That means he must have a house and live in it before he is a resident?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. McMASTER: I do not like the word "shifted" in line 42; I think the word "changed" would be a better one. We do not shift dates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I brought this matter to the attention of the draftsman, who informed me that this clause was before a committee of Parliament last session and was approved in this very language. I believe also that it is the language that was used prior to 1908 when the same principle was invoked. In 1908 stricter rules were adopted as to computation of residence, and it is now desired to come back to the more lenient rule. Cases of great hardship have arisen. Under the rules as amended a man might reside for thirty-five months on his land and still not have covered the necessary eighteen months in occupation of the land. In fact it was found to be impracticable to be fair and just to homesteaders and at the same time follow strictly the rules laid down. The proposed change gives a wider scope; it enables us to compute the residence years in one of two different ways, or part in one and part in another. In every case, of course, a man has to put in six months of residence in each of three separate years. I do not know why the word "changed" would not do just as well as the word "shifted," though perhaps "shifted" is a little more comprehensive.

Mr. McMASTER: It may be western, but it is not good English. I would ask the minister to agree to that change. I should not like to be a member of a legislature which talks about "shifting" dates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am agreeable to the change.

Mr. BUREAU: The old section provided that only in the case of unsurveyed lands could the date of residence be computed as before entry. When a settler went on a piece of land that was not surveyed and made entry after it had been surveyed, he had the privilege of having his entry computed as from the date of his commencing residence.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is provided for in another section. That is the law.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

On section 1—declaration as to improvements prior to entry, and valuation by homestead inspector:

Mr. MEIGHEN: I beg to move, inasmuch as from a date about two weeks ago, purchased homesteads and pre-emptions cannot be entered for, that section 1 should have these words in lines 7 and 8 omitted:

For a homestead, a pre-emption or a purchased homestead.

The clause will then read:

A person applying for entry shall declare.

Mr. BUREAU: The word "entry," I suppose, covers everything in accordance with the interpretation section at the beginning of the Act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Amendment agreed to.

Section 1 as amended agreed to.

On section 5—absence on military or naval service, and for three months after discharge, to be counted as residence:

Mr. BUREAU: This adds the naval service and service with the Allies, which were not in the old Act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. Under the old Act any one engaged as a member of a military force enrolled under the authority of the Minister of Militia and engaged as a member of that force in the suppression of an outbreak or insurrection in any part of the British Empire, or in the defence of the British Empire against a foreign power, is entitled to the benefits therein set out. He is entitled to count as residence the time during which he was so engaged and also three months after his discharge. This amendment extends those benefits to members of the British and Allied forces, and it also includes within the scope of the section-holders of purchased homesteads or scrip locations. Not only are homesteaders so entitled, but men who are in the position of having purchased homesteads, and purchasers of South African scrip locations, are also included.

Mr. ARGUE: I would like some information with regard to our soldiers who are at present overseas. Last week I received a letter from Major Cameron who enlisted in the city of Swift Current, and I know many other men who went from there who, before they went away, were given to understand that their time of enlistment would apply on their homesteads. Some of them entered for their homesteads before they enlisted; some of them entered after they enlisted. Major Cameron informs me that the time of those men in his company who entered for a homestead after enlistment does not apply on their homesteads. I do not see why such a distinction should be made. I do not see why the time of a man who entered for a homestead yesterday and enlists to-day should apply on his homestead, while the time of a man who enlists to-day and enters for a homestead to-morrow is not permitted to apply on his homestead. Both men are fighting for their country. They may be men from the same place, perhaps even boys on neighbouring farms, and they may have enlisted in the same battalion the same day. One man on his return will receive the title to his homestead, while the other is told he cannot have it unless he puts in eighteen months' homestead duties. Is that the meaning of this section?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not the meaning of this section at all, but speaking generally, my hon. friend's statement of the law is correct. What we are doing is simply amending and extending the benefits of section 22 as it has always read. I may, however, answer what my hon. friend asks. Under the ministry of my predecessor that rule was adopted, and personally I find no fault with it. At first sight it appeared to me to be an arbitrary distinction, but I think it is founded on a sound principle. It is, indeed, the principle recognized in this section as it has always existed. A man who is a bona fide homesteader and who then enlists in His Majesty's forces, or in an allied force, if he has been a resident of Canada, is entitled to credit in his residence duties all the time occupied during his enlistment. There was a body of opinion that urged that the same advantage should be given to the man who homesteaded after his enlistment; that he should also be allowed to count the time occupied during his enlistment as residence on his homestead, but I think a few moments' serious reflection will show that that would open the door to a very great abuse of the homesteading privilege. If that were to be granted, then it would only be reasonable to expect a flood of entries from every one who enlisted, who did not, perhaps, intend to become a bona fide homesteader at all, but by the mere act of entering after enlistment, he, if he were enlisted for three years, would be entitled to a free grant of land, merely upon having certain improvements done. In that way the whole settlement provisions of the Act would be obliterated. The whole spirit and purpose of the Homestead Act would be so abused as to be practically wiped out. It is true, when you come to distinguish, as my hon. friend does, between the case of a man who homesteads the day before he enlists and the case of a man who homesteads the day after he enlists, the distinction appears very arbitrary, because between those two there is virtually no distinction; but the line of demarcation must be found between one case of a bona fide homesteader and the other, and that is the only place I know of to locate the line. In the case, however, of those who have homesteaded after enlistment, consideration has been shown. They have been granted protection of their homesteads while they are on duty. That land is reserved for the soldier so long as he is on active service, and will be reserved for a sufficient length of time to enable him to locate on it after he returns. That will be his homestead, entirely irrespective of his right of entry under the Soldiers' Settlement Board.

Mr. ARGUE: According to the minister's ruling, it would seem that all that is required to make a man a bona fide homesteader is that he go on his homestead one day before he enlists.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the extreme case.

Mr. McMASTER: I notice that the soldier is allowed three months after his discharge to go on his homestead. The question arises in my mind whether that period is quite sufficient. When the war is over we expect there will be a great dearth of shipping, and in the case of a Belgian or French reservist discharged in Belgium or France, there might be a delay of several months before he could get passage home. Has the minister considered that point?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under this Act we can give him as much time as we wish in which to take up his residence duties. All that this Act fixes is that the time during which he is absent on military duty shall count as residence on his homestead plus three months more. I do not think it would be well to extend that three months. I fancy that in the great majority of cases it will not be necessary, because the residence duties will already be done.

Mr. BUREAU: Has the minister considered whether it might not be advisable to extend this privilege to any man serving in the forces? I see that it is provided that the minister may "permit him to resume his residence upon his homestead, preemption, purchased homestead or land located by him under any land warrant or scrip," and it says that the time "may" be counted as residence. Why not use the word "shall" if this provision is solely for the benefit of the entrant?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The word "may" is almost invariably used in association with the conduct of the minister, and in this case I think it is the better word. There may be an exceptional case where it would be deemed justice not to apply the rule at all.

Mr. NESBITT: Is there a provision that the wife can take over the homestead in the case of the husband's death?

Mr. MEIGHEN: In case of death the patent is granted forthwith and in the name of the deceased soldier. This has been done by Order in Council ever since some date in 1915, and we are now making statutory what is now law by virtue of the Order in Council of that date. If a man is so disabled as not to be able to resume his duties his patent is granted to him. If he is killed the patent is granted in his name just the same as if he had lived.

Mr. NESBITT: His heirs would have to take out letters of administration?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes.

Mr. CROWE: Suppose there is a certain sum of money due on the purchase price in the case of a soldier who has been killed, and that his widow who has remained on the land while her husband is overseas cannot afford to pay the balance; what would the Government do in a case of that kind?

Mr. MEIGHEN: She could raise the money on the land.

Mr. CROWE: Is it right to ask a woman who has given her husband to the country to raise this money? She may be bringing up three or four children on the land, and that is surely a benefit to the State. I think there should be some clause in the Act providing for a case of that kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: So long as the woman is able to raise the money and get the patent, there is no difficulty in her way except the financial one. Of course, if we were to take the ground that wherever there is a debt to the Crown by the widow of a deceased soldier, that debt should be cancelled, we would be open to the charge of inequality because it would hardly be fair to treat the widows of soldiers who were indebted to the Crown on one scale, and the widows of soldiers who had discharged their indebtedness on another scale. There can be no inconvenience to the widow in paying her debt so long as she gets the land immediately. She gets the patent and pays what indebtedness there may be due on the land to the Crown.

Mr. BUREAU: I agree with the minister's contention if the indebtedness has been paid off after the soldier has been enrolled. But I do not see why the widow should get the refund if the deceased soldier had discharged his indebtedness before he enlisted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Suppose there are two men side by side; one man pays off his indebtedness because he owes it, and is able to; the other man is also able to pay, we will suppose, but does not do so, because he is getting the money at five per cent. My hon. friend would say that in the case of this second man, if his widow paid while her husband was at the front, the money should be refunded to her, but that in the case of the other one who is honest enough to pay before going to the front, the money should not be refunded?

Mr. BUREAU: I assume that these people are honest and that they will pay when they have the money. My hon. friend assumes that they won't pay when they have the money, preferring to have the use of the money at 5 per cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are both honest.

Mr. BUREAU: Then why not alleviate the widow's burden without necessarily having to refund to the other woman the money that has been paid? The woman in the second case is on the land with her children and is not deprived of anything; she has everything the farm has produced. The two cases I submit are not on all fours. However, I do not take any exception.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend would penalize the one who was prompt and pay a premium to the one who was not prompt.

Mr. BUREAU: I assume they are both honest.

Mr. CAMPBELL: As to the question raised by my hon. friend regarding the different status of a man who entered, either before enlistment or immediately after, it seems to me this matter is passed over rather lightly. I recognize the contention of the Minister in this respect, that there must be some arbitrary line drawn, but surely not one quite so arbitrary as suggested. The point is that the man should be a bona fide entrant. Should there not be some way of providing what a bona fide entrant is? I know of young men who enlisted early in the war who did not know about this regulation, but when it became known, others made entry for homestead, and they were put in a different position entirely from those who first enlisted, because if they entered after they enlisted they would have a different standing entirely from those who entered before enlisting. It would seem to be quite reasonable that there should be some clause setting out what a bona fide entrant is—some provision such as that a man must be on the ground, or must have done something in connection with the land, to make him a bona fide entrant.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are cases, no doubt, of inequality under this law. As I stated before, I was impressed with the need for a change when the question was first addressed to me. At that time I was not minister of this department. I took the matter up with the officials and the minister of the department, and I was persuaded that the line was drawn in the best possible way. I do not know of any rule that could be adopted that would better determine the bona fides of an entrant, or better determine his right to be considered a homesteader that the fact that he entered his land, paid his entrance fee, and committed himself to his homestead quarter section. Some better rule might be discovered, and if the hon. gentleman would think the matter out, and make a specific suggestion, I would be very glad to consider it. But we must remember that up to this point, in the administration of the department, entrants who made their entry, and then enlisted, got the benefit of this provision. You have to bear in mind that, up to the present time, they got the benefit of this provision. What the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan suggested was not that you should go back, but taking the case of the man actually residing on the land, that you should not only give him the right, but extend the right to others who had not resided on the land. I was combatting that suggestion. If my hon. friend would suggest a specific rule as to a fairer test to apply to decide whether the homesteader should get the right to count his enlistment time as homestead time. I would be very glad to consider it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: My idea is that it should be either one thing or the other, either along the line suggested by my hon. friend from Saskatchewan, to put them all on the same footing, by giving everybody the right, or along the other line, and provide that no one shall be given the right, unless he is a bona fide entrant. But the word "bona fide" should be defined in some way.

Mr. REDMAN: This question of allowing time to count in the case of a soldier filing subsequent to enlistment has been brought to my attention hundreds of times. On several occasions when regiments were going overseas from Calgary almost the entire regiment went down and filed, which, of course, would be subsequent to enlistment. This matter has been brought to my attention by men who have pointed out the extreme cases cited by the minister. I quite realize, that if we should make an absolute rule we might have difficulty in that others who are overseas might file, and so practically all the available suitable land would thus be taken up and not developed. I would suggest that the matter should be carefully considered with the view of providing, if it is at all possible that those who have already filed subsequent to enlistment should be given their homesteads. I do not know the number who have so filed, but the relative importance of the question can be better understood when the number is ascertained. There is a great feeling of unrest in regard to these cases.

Another matter which has to be taken into consideration is the Soldiers' Land Settlement Scheme. It seems to me there might not be sufficient suitable land to give a homestead to each soldier under this Act, and also provide for him under the Land Settlement Scheme. It is very possible that if the regulations should allow them to keep the homesteads under this Act they might have to keep them in lieu of the land they would obtain under the Soldiers' Land Settlement Scheme. If we had the information as to the number who have filed we would then know whether it is possible to grant them this privilege.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend from Calgary will bear in mind that if all enlisted men who have entered and homesteaded recently were granted this privilege, then we would be in difficulties with the other man who had not entered. He would say: "You said you would not count my enlistment time; therefore I did not enlist, and you have discriminated against me grossly." I do not know what answer you could give him. Therefore I think, subject to any suggestion that may be made, that we had better stick to the rules we made, especially because it is not improbable that many of the returned soldiers, in view of the privilege that is granted them of making the soldier entry as well as the homestead entry, will want to abandon the entry they have made and will want to re-enter again, in a locality where they can have the homestead and soldier entry together. In view of that, I think there would be very great difficulty encountered if we receded from the rule we have followed so long.

On section 6—issue of Letters Patent to British subjects only:

Mr. McKENZIE: The minister realizes, I suppose, that he is departing from the English common law. This is the first time, I think, in the history of legislation in any British country that we have drawn this distinction. At English common law an alien can hold all kinds of property except property in shipping. That has been the law for ages and the minister is now departing from it. It is a very radical change and it ought to be very carefully considered.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend is not quite accurate in his dates. This has been the law ever since we have had homesteads in Canada. An entrant could not, while he was an alien, get a patent of land. It does not change the law in that regard at all. He can hold property but he cannot get a patent. He cannot get any homestead privileges in this country, and he never has been able to in so far as I know. Under the law as it stood an exception was made in the case of the legal representative of a deceased entrant and also an entrant who had become insane or mentally incapable. Those exceptions have existed since 1908, and the effect of this amendment is to add three other exceptions of a very similar character. The principle which my hon. friend suggests as being violated has not been a principle in regard to our homesteads since we have had homesteads in this country.

Mr. McKENZIE: I concede the superior knowledge of my hon. friend as to these dates, but at the same time there seems to be no principle in this Bill. A foreigner can come to Ontario and buy land and there is nothing in our jurisprudence to prevent it. He can buy a farm, put his deed on record, and he owns it; but his brother, who comes from the same country and who has in every particular the same qualifications, cannot get land in the Northwest.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He can buy land, but he cannot get a free homestead.

Mr. McKENZIE: I cannot, on any principle of law, recognize any difference between a man qualifying himself by going through the different stages to get land in the West, where he has to go through this homesteading process, and a man, who has the money, coming in and buying a farm. You can buy a farm in Ontario while at the same time being an alien. I cannot see the force of the objection to a man under similar conditions going through the different stages to qualify himself to get a farm in the West, and if he qualifies himself to get a title, putting it on record just as the same person could buy a farm in one of the older provinces. There may be a reason, but so far I have heard no sufficient explanation.

At six o'clock the Committee took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 6, respecting The Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company.—Mr. Stevens.

Bill No. 7, respecting The Canadian Indemnity Company.—Mr. Allan.

Bill No. 8, respecting The Cosmos Cotton Company.—Mr. Spinney.

Bill No. 9, respecting Fraser Lumber Company, Limited, and Fraser Companies, Limited.—Mr. Elkin.

Bill No. 22, respecting The Canadian Society of Civil Engineers and to change its name to "The Engineering Institute of Canada."—Sir Herbert Ames.

Bill No. 23, to incorporate Merchants Casualty Company.—Mr. Andrews.

Bill No. 24, respecting The Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company. —Mr. Fripp.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in Committee on Bill No. 5, to amend The Dominion Lands Act, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not think all the paragraphs have been read. With reference to paragraph (e) of section 6, dealing with an alien female infant who has been granted entry for a homestead, and who is prevented from becoming a British subject by the provisions of the Naturalization Act of 1914, I would like the minister to give me a concrete example of such a case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Take, for instance, the case of a woman who complies with the conditions enabling her to get entry and who marries an alien. She is not empowered under the provisions of the Naturalization Act to naturalize, consequently she could not qualify to get her patent at all unless this provision was inserted.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Area of cultivation may be reduced.

Mr. BUREAU: Under the old Act the power to state the area of cultivation required was a matter for the Governor in Council, whilst this amendment brings it directly under the jurisdiction of the minister. Is there any particular reason why the change should be made?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under the former law, in case of pre-emption as distinguished from cases of homesteads, the whole township had to be declared of the character set out here in order to enable any pre-emptor to have his cultivation reduced. In that case, one-half of the township might be incapable of having the requisite duties performed on any quarter-section, and the other half might be just the other way. Indeed, you might have a case in which the law could be applied to one-half of the section and not to the other half. The first object of this amendment, therefore, is to permit a distinction between one pre-emption and another pre-emption, not between one township and another township. That being the case, it becomes desirable that the necessity for an Order in Council should be dispensed with. The recommendations are made on the report of the homestead inspector in each case, and I do not see any value in the intervention of the Governor in Council. In other instances also the necessity for Order in Council is being dispensed with. The time of Council has been taken up with the reading of Orders in which members of Council do not take any interest, and which of necessity must be a matter of administration, to be left to the responsible minister.

Mr. BUREAU: In the official Gazette I often see recommendations by the minister to extend the time of a man's residence on a homestead and the like.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That would be in the case of a homesteader. The Order in Council would set out that that particular homesteader was relieved of his duty, but in the case of a pre-emptor the power was given to place townships, not single pre-emptions, in that category.

Mr. BUREAU: The publishing of those Orders in Council in the Gazette must serve as an official report available to the public, and also as a precedent in the case of further applications of a like nature being made. Unless there is some objection other than that of taking Council's time in reading the recommendations, I do not see why this change should be made. Otherwise, there is no way of ascertaining what changes are made or what conditions are required by the minister.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The regulations are known to homesteaders who can easily secure copies of them, and who therefore know the conditions under which their cultivation duties may be reduced. I do not think the public generally are sufficiently interested in whether a certain homesteader has his ploughing duties reduced from thirty to twenty acres to warrant the publication of each Order in Council in the Gazette.

Mr. BUREAU: But the settler is.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The settler is, but he knows it without reading the Gazette. I doubt if there is one settler in the whole West who takes the official Gazette.

Mr. BUREAU: If some one made an application to my hon. friend in the course of his practice of law with regard to the reduction of cultivation duties, my hon. friend would probably refer to the Gazette.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If I were the practising lawyer I would go to the regulations and there find the conditions under which my client was entitled to apply for a reduction of cultivation duties. The reduction would then be made, and my client would have a letter from the department, stating that his area had been reduced. That is all the authority he needs; I do not think that either the laywer or the entrant would look at the official Gazette.

Mr. BUREAU: No, but there should be a general rule.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The only rule you can have is in the regulations. One man might have a homestead in which thirty acres would be required; another right across the road might have a homestead where eighteen acres would be required, and some one else to the north might have one where twenty-five would be required—all depending on the varying character of the soil.

Mr. BUREAU: It is concentrating everything in the minister's hands.

Mr. MYERS: I suggest to the minister that he incorporate in this provision some discretionary power to reduce the area of cultivation where land becomes flooded, and it is impossible to get under cultivation the number of acres required by the Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I see no objection to inserting the word "flooded" after the words "wooded, rocky."

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 8—holder may obtain patent by extra payments where he is in default for residence duties solely:

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under the law as it stands now and has stood for about three years the pre-emptor who has obtained patents for his homestead and is in residence on either his homestead or his pre-emption may, if he has done his cultivation duties and effected the necessary improvements, secure his patent by simply paying up. Previous to three years ago that was not the case; the pre-emptor had to complete his residence duties as well in respect of pre-emption, and might complete them on the homestead. This rule was relaxed three years ago to the extent of enabling him, if he continued in residence after he was through with his homestead duties and had his patents, to dispense with all the other residence duties by simply paying up. Cases, however, arose where the homesteader who had pre-empted left his homestead, forsook his residence duties altogether, came back and reinstated himself as a resident on the homestead, and then demanded his patent on the payment of $3 an acre. Cases of hardship arose where the department had to require such a man to perform his three years' residence duties. This provision, therefore, is to enable the department to give him this answer: you have abandoned your residence duties; if you do not want to go ahead and perform them you must pay $3 an acre extra for the land. There are cases where men who are in business want to avoid the necessity of the residence duties, and where it is felt that it would be equitable to allow them to do so on paying that extra price for the land.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—certificate of recommendation to holder of entry for a pre-emption on completing all duties except payment:

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand that certificate to have the same value, so far as the rights of the entrant on the land are concerned, as if he had the patent? He can dispose of his interest?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: But before the patent is issued, the patentee, or whoever gets his interest in the land, has to pay the purchase price. What is the particular object of this? Has there been any hardship on the homesteader because he could not get the money?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hon. members who were in the last Parliament will remember that this subject was pressed upon the House by the hon. member who then represented Saskatoon. Very many cases arise where the holder of a pre-emption owes the pre-emption moneys to the Crown. He has performed his cultivation duty; he desires to raise a loan with which to pay off the Crown; but he cannot do so; he can do nothing at all with his land until he secures his patent. In order to meet difficulties of that kind in relation to homesteads, there previously was a provision in the law for granting certificates of recommendation for homesteads, but those were abolished in 1908. There was not the same reason for the certificate of recommendation for homesteads that there existed for certificates of recommendations for pre-emptions, because there could be no money owing to the Crown in relation to homesteads, homesteads being free. But where a pre-emptor finds himself in the position that he wants to pay off the Crown, but there is no means by which he can put a loan on his pre-emption in order to pay off the Crown to get the patent, he is practically forbidden access to the money markets. This provision gives him that access for the period of a year, which period may be extended at the discretion of the minister. The effect is that he can deal with his homestead as if he owned it, subject, of course, to the possibility of that certificate of recommendation failing unless lived up to within the year.

Mr. BUREAU: In a case like that, would the lender put his mortgage on record before the Crown was paid off? What would be the effect, supposing I advanced a man $1,000 upon a pre-emption and he gave me a mortgage and I put my mortgage on record before the patent was issued?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The certificate itself sets out what he owes to the Crown, and any rights he has to mortgage or deal with his land are naturally subject to the indebtedness to the Crown.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Entry for purchased homesteads:

Mr. BUREAU: That is the same thing as for pre-emption.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The same thing in the case of a purchased homestead.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Myers moved to amend section 10 by adding the word "flooded" after the word "rocky".

Mr. McMASTER: Might I point out that by adding the word "flooded" there, you make it possible of interpretation that the land must always be flooded? I would suggest it would be better to say "or subject to floods from time to time". I believe that is the meaning of the amendment. I do not apprehend that, in order to have the benefits of this proviso, the land must always be flooded. I would imagine it would be subject to floods from time to time so that it could not be cultivated as fully as if it were not subject to floods.

Sir SAM HUGHES: I think the point is very well taken. In the Northwest there are tens of thousands of acres of good land that are flooded at times. Such land could be made arable by drainage. Rocky land could not be made good by any process known to farmers. In my opinion the word "flooded" should not be inserted at all. I can point out to the Minister of the Interior tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of such land in the Northwest of Canada that in time will be the best land in the country, and all it wants is a little drainage. Although that land is flooded to-day, it should not be exempted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The section as it has been amended at the suggestion of the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Myers) is the best possible for the following reason. It is not intended to exempt land that is only subject to flooding, that may be all right one year and perhaps flooded another year, because the homestead duties can be performed the second or third year. If you make it simply "subject to floods," then the door is opened too wide, because there is a great proportion of land, as the hon. member for Victoria (Sir Sam Hughes) has said, that is subject to floods. But take the case of land say adjoining lake Manitoba, which is near my own home. A man may homestead a quarter-section there, and there may be only a fraction of that quarter-section that is really capable of cultivation. Why? Because the rest is flooded by the lake. It is not only subject to the floods, it is flooded land, and it is only right and proper that in a case of that kind his duties should be proportionately reduced. It has been the practice of the department so to reduce them. To put the word "flooded", as suggested by the hon. member, covers a case of that sort. If you use the words "subject to floods," the door is opened too wide, and it would enable a reduction to be made, because merely in a certain year the land was covered by water, and in such a case the duties might be capable of being performed the next year.

Sir SAM HUGHES: As the minister is aware, two or three charges of dynamite properly placed might drain all the flooded land around lake Manitoba. I can point out one place in the Northwest, that I have had in view for a long time, that is flooded on account of a beaver meadow. We have not secured it yet, but we are watching for an opportunity to get hold of it. A week's digging will drain it. Although that land is flooded to-day, at an expenditure of less than fifty dollars it can be made arable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In a case of that kind it will be the duty of the minister to reduce the area of cultivation.

[Sir Sam Hughes.]

Sir SAM HUGHES: If he has the authority, that is all right.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 12—sale of agricultural lands to entrant prevented from completing duties but with equitable claim:

Mr. BUREAU: Is not that provided in the old Act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: This section is the same as the old Act except that the power is placed in the hands of the minister, instead of in the Governor in Council. My hon. friend will agree that any man who has had the training of a Solicitor General can be trusted with that.

Section agreed to.

On section 13—sale or lease of lands unsuitable for cultivation:

Mr. MEIGHEN: This section is important in this sense: it gives the department the same power to deal with lands that should be reclaimed by drainage that it now has with regard to lands that should be reclaimed by irrigation. Section 34, if this amendment is agreed to, will read:

> Lands unsuitable for cultivation without the aid of irrigation or drainage, or lands required in connection with any system of irrigation or drainage may be sold or leased in such manner and under such terms and conditions as are fixed by the Governor in Council subject to the provisions of the Irrigation Act.

In November, 1916, conferences were held between representatives of the Governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and representatives of the Irrigation Branch of the Interior Department, at which arrangements were arrived at drawing the line of responsibility with regard to irrigation and drainage as between the provinces and the Dominion. These arrangements were afterwards implemented by legislation in Saskatchewan and Alberta, and I think also in Manitoba, but at all events, in the other two provinces. A scheme was also devised at the conference whereby the provinces might enter upon irrigation and drainage enterprises affecting Dominion lands, and the responsibility of the Dominion with regard to those enterprises was defined. Therefore, it is now the part of wisdom to place the drainage lands of the Crown in the same position as the irrigation lands, so we can deal with them as we are now able to deal with the irrigated lands.

Mr. BUREAU: Has there ever been any arrangement between the provinces and the Dominion with regard to what are known as the marsh lands, or has there ever been any transfer of these lands?

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend refers to the swamp lands?

Mr. BUREAU: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Those lands have been transferred from the province of Manitoba to the Crown; there were none in the other provinces.

Mr. BUREAU: It would be to lands of that sort this Act would apply in the other provinces?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes; such of those swamp lands as are unsuitable for cultivation without the aid of drainage. Portions of those lands may not need drainage at all, even though described as swamp lands.

Section agreed to.

On section 14—Regulations to control disposal of timber and pulpwood berths:

Mr. LEMIEUX: These lands are disposed of by public tender?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. The object of this section is to enable the Governor in Council to extend the area in the case of pulpwood leases. Of course, a pulpmill will not be established on the basis of an area that is insufficient for its requirements for any reasonable length of time.

Mr. BUREAU: The object is to increase the area in the case of pulpwood?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. McMASTER: I am not familiar with the original law, but paragraph (c) of this Bill says: "no offer by tender shall be accepted unless accompanied by the full amount of the bonus." I suppose bonus and bid mean the same?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, in a sense. Tenderers have to agree to pay the license fee, which is fixed. Then in addition to that they give a bonus, which really means a bid.

Mr. McMASTER: It does not mean they will have to accompany their bid with the full purchase price?

Mr. MEIGHEN: With the full purchase price except the license fee, which is based on the amount of timber cut.

Mr. McMASTER: Might I suggest that that might operate against the poorer tenderers, and perhaps result in the department's not getting as high a price as might otherwise be obtained.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It has always been the practice to collect the purchase price of the berth before the timber is cut. I think it would be rather the part of folly to wait until the timber was partially or wholly cut before collecting the purchase price of the berth. As soon as a man goes into one of these berths he immediately commences to deplete the supply, and we collect as he proceeds to cut, the license being in proportion to the amount taken off.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It has occurred to me that in the far Western Provinces through lack of sufficient advertising and on account of the long distances, there might be a very limited number of tenderers, and as a result the pulpwood limits, which are very valuable to-day, might be sold for a song. What is the policy of the department with regard to these sales? Is an outside price fixed after a preliminary cruise of the limits? I understand that in Quebec and Ontario the outside price is generally based on the report of the cruiser.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is the practice of the department and has been since 1908, to have a cruise of the area made by an inspector, and an upset price is fixed, based on his report.

Mr. LEMIEUX: By the department?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and sixty days' advertising in every case—a minimum of sixty days in one newspaper of local circulation, and in one newspaper of at least provincial circulation. All timber berths are sold by public auction, so that every possible chance to exploit the department, I think, is eliminated.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Does the minister state that it was the practice to have these limits cruised?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Sir SAM HUGHES: How long since?

Mr. MEIGHEN: 1908.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Will the hon. minister explain the system of opening tenders in the department? In ancient days we have heard that there was a possibility of tenders not being properly looked after in the department.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The system is to have no tenders. The sale is by public auction; consequently there are no tenders to open.

Mr. CAHILL: Where will the auction be held?

Mr. MEIGHEN: At the office of the crown timber agent for the district.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand that when the limit is put up the bidders pay in cash so much per mile, which is called a bonus?

Mr. MEIGHEN: So much for the entire berth. That is the bonus. Then, in addition to that, the bidder has to pay so much per thousand feet.

Mr. BUREAU: That is the stumpage?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: Does he not pay a yearly license?

Mr. MEIGHEN: He pays five dollars per square mile in addition to that. There are other elements in the payment. There is the stumpage of fifty cents per thousand which he pays, then five dollars per square mile, and then the bonus.

Mr. BUREAU: The five dollars is for the license, and he pays the stumpage as he cuts?

Mr. MEIGHEN: And an auction sale is held to ascertain what bonus is to be paid besides. The man paying the highest bonus gets the limit.

Mr. FULTON: It appears to me that in many cases it may be a very great hardship to have to pay a bonus in a lump sum, especially in a case where, as often happens, timber being much more inaccessible now than in previous years, it is necessary, either to put in a railway or build flumes in order to get the logs out. This entails considerable expenditure of capital, and it might very well be that the bonus should extend over a number of years, instead of being paid in a lump sum. To my mind the license fee is too small, and it has given rise to this practice, in many cases, even after the timber berth has been logged off, the company holding it continues to hold it, and pays a small annual rental, which does not amount to anything, but the berth is a great asset to the company in making a statement on paper to the shareholders or the bank. They may have a good many square miles of holdings, but a large proportion of them may have been logged off, and yet on paper they have still very large holdings. In this way they are in a position to show these berths as an asset in their statement to the shareholders.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The answer to the first inquiry is that the bonus does not require in certain cases to be all paid at once. The regulation reads:

> 6. Purchases to the amount of one thousand dollars or under shall be paid in cash at the time of sale. Purchases over one thousand dollars and not exceeding five thousand dollars shall be paid one-half in cash at the time of sale, and a note or notes shall be given for the remaining half of the purchase price payable in three months with interest at the rate of five per centum per annum. Purchases over five thousand dollars and not exceeding ten thousand dollars shall be paid one-third in cash at the time of sale and notes shall be given for the remaining two-thirds of the purchase price, payable in three and six months, with interest at the rate of five per centum per annum. Purchases exceeding ten thousand dollars shall be paid one-fourth in cash at the time of sale and notes shall be given for the remaining three-fourths of the purchase price, payable in three, six and nine months with interest at the rate of five per centum per annum. Notes given as herein provided shall be made payable at a bank in the city or town in which the sale is held or at a bank in the city of Ottawa.

So that, the department provides that in all cases under one thousand dollars the payment shall be in cash, and provides in every case for such payment as will enable the Department to receive the money before its security is gone. That meets the objection raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. FULTON: Then why does the regulation say that the tender shall be accompanied by payment of the full amount?

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend will see that clause C reads:

> No offer by tender shall be accepted unless accompanied by the full amount of the bonus.

Where it is sold by tender, that applies. Where it is sold by public auction, the regulations which I have just read apply. The practice is to sell entirely by public auction. This amendment leaves the matter just as it stood before in that respect, that wherever the sale is by tender the full amount must be paid.

Mr. FULTON: In both cases it might be taken into consideration whether the principle might not be extended still further, so that the balance of the bonus unpaid might remain a charge on the remaining timber to be taken out. In that way the bonus would not be lost, because the money would be collected as the berth was being depreciated in value by the timber being taken out.

Mr. BUREAU: Is the uniform price of the license five dollars per mile?

Mr. MEIGHEN: East of Yale the uniform price is five dollars per mile. West of Yale it is five cents per acre.

Section agreed to.

On section 15—conditions of licenses—erection of mills:

Mr. BUREAU: In the case of an ordinary timber limit the purchaser has to erect a mill within a certain time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: It must have a capacity, I think, of a thousand feet a day for every two and one half miles purchased, and it must be operated six months in the year. Is there any regulation, or any provision, that forces the purchaser of a pulpwood berth to erect a mill and operate it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We have no provision up to the present time for selling the timber limits for the purpose of the pulpwood industry. This is our first venture in that line. We have already provided, in order to meet the new conditions, that no timber limit shall be larger than twenty-five square miles. We here enact the clause that imposes on the pulpwood operator a corresponding obligation to that all along imposed on the lumber operator. But we have not had experience enough to enable us to say just exactly what character of mill that man should erect, and within what time, and so forth. Consequently, pending that provision, we place the power in the Bill to enable the minister to fix the nature of the mill to be erected, just as stated here.

Shall erect a mill or mills of such capacity and character, and at such point or points, and at such time or times, as the minister may decide.

Experience will teach us in this, as in the case of lumber mills, what should be required.

Mr. BUREAU: Has any discussion taken place with the officers of the department, or those who have been more especially charged with looking after the pulpwood berths, as to the conditions that will be imposed on the purchaser, the capacity of the mill, and the number of months it will have to be operated, or the quantity of wood the purchaser will have to saw a year?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The form of regulations with respect to pulpwood has not yet been discussed with me. The officers of the department have the matter under consideration.

Mr. BUREAU: Will those regulations be published in the Official Gazette?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Has the minister considered the point about the control of the limit. As I understand the law, the minister has the option of saying whether or not he will wipe that man out. In other words, the minister, or officers of the department, could close a man out by requiring him to put up a mill of a certain size and under certain conditions, and operate it in a certain way, and could make it impossible for the owner to carry on business. Why not fix it more definitely, and have a general clause in the law.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would be desirable to fix it definitely, but we have not the data to enable us to do it, and we do not think we are able to make all the provisions, at all events without some experience in the operation of the pulpwood industry.

Mr. CAHILL: Is it the intention of the minister, before advertising a limit for sale, to set out the regulation as to the mill, and the cutting of the wood that would be necessary on that particular limit?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. MACKIE: With reference to the amendment to section 15, I would like to ask why the minister is given discretionary powers as to the points at which mills have to be erected in connection with pulpwood concessions. At certain points along the Athabaska river where there are enormous areas of pulpwood, there is natural gas and at many places there are valuable water-powers. It might be more advantageous to the owner of a timber berth to erect his mill at a point where these natural resources could be made use of rather than at the point which the minister might designate. Therefore, I would ask why it should not be left to the owner to say where his mill should be located.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think it is only proper that the department should have some say as to the location of the mill. It is quite true that no matter what power you put into the hands of the minister he may so exercise it as to be oppressive, but I think the principle is sound that the minister should have some supervision as to where the mills should be located in reference to the timber berth which he puts up for sale. Of course, the tenderers for that berth would be in a position to inquire as to what the requirements of the minister would be in that regard; and so they would not be purchasing in the dark. This is similar to the regulations that have been in force for years in reference to lumbermen.

On section 16—withdrawal of portion of timber berths from license after notice:

Mr. BUREAU: Why has the notice been shortened from one year to sixty days?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The main purpose of the amendment is to enable withdrawals to be made for other useful purposes as well as for agricultural purposes. One year's notice has been given in the past, but the experience of the department is that a year is quite unnecessary and it is believed that sixty days is sufficient. When a year's notice is required it makes the regulation of very little value.

Mr. BUREAU: It may not give a person sufficient time to remove camps or other things if only sixty days' notice is given. If it were in the summer season, or in the logging season, and the licensee were given notice to get out, it might mean that his license would be cancelled, his land withdrawn and he would not be in a position to take his property away.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In such case a longer time would be given. This is simply a minimum of sixty days, because in most cases sixty days is sufficient, but wherever more is in equity required, it is given.

On section 19—pulpwood included and area of tract extended;

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is to make a limit not exceeding one square mile and it is to include pulpwood as well as timber and cordwood.

On section 22—no department employee to purchase land;

Mr. BUREAU: That is to prevent employees from dealing in land?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. It means that an employee cannot get a homestead entry or deal in land in any way.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Does that prohibit an agent of the Government in the United States from dealing in land?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Sir SAM HUGHES: In the olden days Government land or immigration agents in the United States were privileged to take commissions on the sale of land, and I say advisedly that it was a very good plan. That was stopped and it had a very injurious effect on immigration coming into our Northwest from the United States. I do not know whether this would affect it or not. There is no reason why Government agents bringing in immigrants should not be authorized to sell land and take a commission on it.

9 p.m.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It does not affect that point at all. The law as it stood forbade any employee of the Government to locate any land or act as agent for any other person in that behalf, and any employee violating that subsection was liable to dismissal. This amendment provides that an employee cannot take land by homesteading it or otherwise.

On section 23—Cancellation of letters patent or recommendation issued in error.

Mr. BUREAU: This is to allow the amendment of the certificate?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is all, on account of the certificate or recommendation.

On section 24—Cancellation of patent if issued through fraud, improvidence, or in error.

Mr. BUREAU: Is there anything in the old Act which authorizes the department to take action similar to this?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under the law as it stands now, when the patent has once issued the only way the department can have it cancelled is by laying information in the Exchequer Court. That will still prevail, but additional provision is made.

Mr. BUREAU: That is, after the patent has issued?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Justice Department has held that as soon as the patent is sealed it is issued, even though it remains in the department. Consequently, we cannot prevent the man from getting the benefit of that patent, even though we find it has issued through fraud. The amendment enables us to cancel under such circumstances.

Mr. McMASTER: I do not want to get the reputation of being a purist in language, but the word "improvidence," I think, is intended to connote carelessness. I think what the law intends to convey is that the instrument has issued through fraud, or carelessness, or error. "Improvidence" really means extravagance, and I do not think that is what is intended to be conveyed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think it is better to retain the wording as it is, because in the old Act exactly the same words are used: "Whenever letters patent, or other instrument respecting land have issued through fraud, or improvidence, or in error, any court having competent jurisdiction"—and so forth. When we are putting a proviso into the Act we had better follow the same language. Doubtless there have been cases decided upon this provision, and I think the language should be continued.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am not familiar with the wording of the old Act. Is the language here much the same as it is in the old Act?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The language is the very same. We are using the old section just as it is, which enables us to go to the courts and secure cancellation of a patent issued through fraud, or improvidence, or in error; but it is provided in addition that if the patent had not left the department, even although legally issued at the time and with the seal of the Crown affixed the minister, upon proof of the improvidence, fraud or error, may himself cancel the patent without going to the court at all.

Mr. McKENZIE: What strikes me is that there may be cases where the patentee may regard himself as being harshly treated if he has not got the right to appeal. In this case the minister seems to be the sole judge, and no machinery is provided whereby the man interested has the opportunity of presenting his case. In connection with matters arising under other departments that opportunity is given. For instance, in the Department of Customs, if a vessel is seized for infraction of the customs laws, or improper entry, the minister may declare that the vessel be condemned, but the owner is given the opportunity of appeal within thirty days, either to the Government or to a court. Now I would like to see a loophole here for a man who feels himself aggrieved to present his case before some independent court, or to appeal to the Governor in Council.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The situation is this: Up to the issue of a patent to a homesteader or a pre-emptor the minister is the judge as to whether or not he has earned that patent. There has never been any need for a court of appeal over the minister, although I presume that if a man claimed to have lived up to all requirements of the law and then been arbitrarily refused his patent by the minister, he would be entitled to action against the Crown, and he is entitled to that yet. But subject to that right, the minister has had the power of decision as to whether or not the patent was coming to that man up to the moment of issue. After the issue then the minister could no longer decide, but if he wanted the patent cancelled he had to go to the court. All this amendment does is to extend that point very slightly. The minister has the power to decide not only up to the moment of the legal issue, which is the sealing of the patent with the seal of the Crown, but up to the moment that the patent leaves the department on its way to the patentee. I went into the matter with the Department of Justice and held that the patent was not issued at all until it left the department. However, the Department of Justice took the view, and I think rightly, that the patent legally issues when the seal of the Crown is affixed. We therefore think that the minister's power should still be exercised, and should still prevail, up to the moment that the patent leaves the department.

On Section 25—Stock in lieu of cultivation in case of certain quarter-sections.

Mr. BUREAU: Will the minister indicate what changes, if any, have been made with reference to the substitution of cattle for the cultivation of the land?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Act says that the holder of a pre-emption which is not of a class suitable for agriculture may substitute stock in lieu of cultivation, notwithstanding the fact that there may be a sufficient area of arable land on the homestead to allow the performance of cultivation. If the required area of arable land can be found either upon his homestead or his pre-emption, the practice is to require the entrant to do the necessary cultivation, and it is desired to bring the Act into conformity with the practice. That is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. MYERS: I would suggest that the minister use his discretion as to whether it is necessary for substantial buildings to be erected in certain localities.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of course, where a homesteader has his pre-emption as well, he may use the buildings now on the homestead. He may utilize those buildings wholly, and at the same time avail himself of the stock substitution regulation with regard to his pre-emption; but it has never been felt that we could do away with the necessity of the buildings altogether and merely allow the homesteader to put stock on the land. To do that would be to invade, too seriously, I think, the spirit of the regulation which requires the use of the land as a homestead for the purposes of agriculture.

On section 26—Patent to be issued in name of deceased entrant in certain cases:

Mr. MEIGHEN: In British Columbia, while there is provision for the appointment of an administrator of the estate of a deceased person, no power is given to the administrator to acquire in his own name the real property of the deceased. Under the law as it stands now, therefore, there is imposed on the Department of the Interior, in relation to the Peace River land and the railway belt, the obligation of ascertaining who the heirs are. We think that is no part of our duty, and we are providing that in such cases the department, when the time comes to issue patents, may do so in the name of the deceased person. We do that now in the case of deceased soldiers, and we shall be doing it, if this Bill passes, in the case of patents of lands in British Columbia.

Mr. McKENZIE:: No province, so far as I know, gives the administrator power so to acquire real estate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The administrator has this power in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. McKENZIE: At common law he would not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would be his duty at common law simply to see that the estate was distributed to the heirs; but in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, where our Crown lands are, the administrator has power to take to himself the legal estate of the real property, and that enables us to convey to the administrator as soon as he is appointed any lands to which the deceased was entitled. We cannot do that in British Columbia; we are compelled to search out the heirs. We now wish to issue the patent simply in the name of the deceased and have the administrator distribute it according to the law of the province.

Section agreed to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before we come to the preamble I wish to submit an amendment which is to constitute section 27 of the Bill, the present section 27 to be section 28. The effect of the amendment is really to ratify the Order in Council, the spirit and purpose of which I stated to the House on moving the introduction of this Bill—to abolish altogether purchased homesteads and pre-emptions:

27. (1.) The privilege of pre-emption entry on Dominion lands as provided for by section 27 of the Dominion Lands Act, Chapter 20 of the Statutes of 1908, as amended by sections 2 and 3 of chapter 27 of the Statutes of 1914, is hereby withdrawn.

(2.) The privileges of purchased homestead entry as provided for by section 28 of chapter 20 of the Statutes of 1908, as amended by section 4 of chapter 27 of the Statutes of 1914, is hereby withdrawn.

(3.) Where land has been reserved for pre-emption entry for any homesteader who is on active military service, or where notice has been issued to any person allowing him a specified time within which to appear and secure pre-emption or purchased homestead entry for a given quarter-section, such land may be sold to the homesteader or to the person so notified, at the rate of three dollars per acre, subject to the duties, terms and conditions which would have obtained if the pre-emption and purchased homestead privilege had not been withdrawn.

(4.) This section shall be deemed to have come into operation on the twentieth day of March, 1918.

Mr. BUREAU: Why is the twentieth day of March particularly mentioned?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was the date the Order in Council was passed abolishing purchased homesteads and pre-emptions. It was considered wise to do it by Order in Council and subsequently to ratify it by legislation, for if we simply waited for the passing of the legislation there would likely be a rush for homesteads and pre-emptions, and to that extent the purpose of the amendment would have been defeated.

Mr. BUREAU: The old provision is in force only in respect of those who enlisted and are now at the front, and who made application for homestead before they left?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE: It must have been a great relief to the broad-minded, non-partisan Minister of the Interior when patronage was abolished in all departments, for I am sure that it would grate upon his nerves and feelings if he had to divide the population into two camps and be kind to some and do nothing for others. But something is still lingering behind which looks like patronage, and it is found in the different Tory newspapers in my part of the country. In the Sydney Post, for instance, which I have before me, I find a synopsis of the coal mining regulations, to which is appended the name of the Deputy Minister of the Interior. This notice finds its way into all the Tory papers of Nova Scotia, but by no chance gets into others. If patronage is abolished the minister should eliminate this patronage altogether, or, if such advertising is necessary in his department, give a share of it to the Grit papers, which are, if anything, more widely read in Nova Scotia than the Tory publications.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend's principles are sound, but his information is rather antiquated. Patronage is abolished wholly. The advertisement my hon. friend refers to is, I assume, from a paper of last month, because while it was possible for us to abolish patronage, we could not regard existing contracts as "scraps of paper."

Mr. McKENZIE: The date of this paper is March 22.

Mr. MEIGHEN: These contracts are contracts, and all of them expired, I think, at the end of March; but after the expiry of these contracts, these regulations are no longer inserted in any paper, Unionist, Liberal, or Conservative, and thereby the country is saved a very large annual outlay.

Section agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. MEIGHEN: I shall not ask that we carry the preamble. I wish to leave the Bill in Committee for this reason: I have under consideration an amendment which I purpose submitting, providing for a change in the law relating to the interest on school land sales. The amendment will be ready when the House next goes into Committee. I, therefore, move: That the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BUREAU: Will the minister tell us the purport of the amendment?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I speak what is now in my mind in this regard. It is this, that as to all future sales the rate of interest shall be raised from 5 per cent to 6 per cent with 7 per cent on arrears. That is to say; suppose that the terms are one-tenth down and the balance one-tenth yearly for nine successive payments with interest at six per cent; then if a purchaser permits his payments, whether of interest or of principal, to run into arrears, he shall pay seven per cent on those arrears. As regard past sales, a difficulty arises, because they have been made on express terms, and, of course, in so far as a purchaser lives up to those terms, his contract will not be interfered with; but where a purchaser fails to live up to those terms, the department has not power to raise the rate of interest without his consent, and it is proposed to ask for power, on obtaining his consent, to raise the rate of interest on arrears to seven per cent in respect of those sales as well. We are, of course, able to obtain his consent unless he is prepared to pay up the arrears, because the power of cancellation is vested in Council.

Mr. BUREAU: It will not be a hold-up?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The idea is that as regards arrears the rate of interest shall hereafter be seven per cent, and that in new sales the rate of interest on money not in arrears shall be six per cent. The idea is to make it in the interest of purchasers to pay up in accordance with their contracts and not merely to hold school land for purposes of speculation and not even pay interest or principal.

Motion agreed to, and progress reported.

VAN BUREN BRIDGE COMPANY.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Reid (Minister of Railways and Canals), Bill No. 14, to confirm an agreement between His Majesty the King and the Van Buren Bridge Company, was read the second time.

Mr. REID moved that the House go into Committee on the Bill.

Mr. BUREAU: We have not had much information in regard to this contract, which is a long one, and it would be worth while looking over it before we go into Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. REID: The Bill has been on the Order Paper for a week or so, and the agreement is printed in the Bill.

Mr. BUREAU: The minister knows how it is with these agreements. It is necessary to know what brought about the agreement, why it was brought about, and what were the considerations.

Mr. REID: I will explain it when it gets into Committee.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee on the Bill, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—agreement of 8th March with Van Buren Bridge Company confirmed;

Mr. REID: This Bill is to confirm an agreement for the leasing of a stretch of about two miles of the Bangor and Aroostook railway between the International and Transcontinental railways. The Bangor and Aroostook railway runs from the state of Maine across the Transcontinental and up to the International, and our object in leasing this line is to do away with the upkeep of two stations. When this agreement is ratified, the trains now going over the International will go over these two miles of line, and the Transcontinental station at St. Leonard will serve as a union station for both lines. We shall then require but one set of station agents and shall save the operating expenses on two miles of road. The lease expires in 1934, which is the year when the bonds of this railway fall due. The owners could not sell this railway or we would have purchased it. The rental is $1,200 a year, which is the estimated amount of the interest on this portion of the railway. At the expiration of the lease the Government will have to consider whether to take a further lease or purchase the two miles.

Mr. MICHAUD: I have just arrived from home where I had an opportunity of interviewing the residents of the village of St. Leonard, and I have here a petition, also a number of letters and telegrams, protesting against the leasing of this road, if it be the Government's intention to have a union station for the International and Transcontinental.

Mr. REID: Our object in acquiring this piece of road is to have a union station for the International and the Transcontinental. At present passengers coming in on the International have to drive or walk over the Transcontinental if they are going on to Levis or Moncton. The union station will obviate that.

Mr. MICHAUD: It is all very well for the minister to say that if passengers on the International want to go to Quebec or Moncton they have to walk or drive over to the Transcontinental railway station, but as a matter of fact the Transcontinental train passes through St. Leonard, going west, at three o'clock in the morning, and going east, at twelve midnight; so hardly any one travels over that road because of the inconvenient hours. On the other hand, it is very easy for them to catch the Canadian Pacific, which runs parallel to the Transcontinental. The people of St. Leonard object very strongly to the idea of this union station. It is proposed to be built outside of the village altogether, about a quarter to half a mile away. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I shall read the following petition without reciting all the names, prepared by the citizens of St. Leonard against this proposed legislation:

[Mr. J. D. Reid.]

To the Honourable Minister of Railways and Canals of Canada, Ottawa, Canada.

THE HUMBLE PETITION OF THE CITIZENS OF THE VILLAGE OF ST. LEONARD, IN THE COUNTY OF MADAWASKA, AND PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

HUMBLY SHEWETH:

That we the undersigned citizens and residents of the Village of St. Leonard, N. B., are desirous that the terminus of the International railway shall remain at its present location and are all strongly opposed to the erection of a Union Station at or near the St. Leonard Station of the National Transcontinental railway for the following reasons:

1. That the present location of the terminus and station of the International railway is to the best advantage to all the citizens of the said village, and to the best accommodation to all the travelling public;

2. That there is no local train service on the National Transcontinental railway of any kind for passengers nor other local accommodation. The only passenger trains are the one north-bound due at St. Leonard, N. B., at 12 p.m. and the south-bound at 3 a.m., thereby no train service at the dispositions of the local travelling public;

3. That passengers from the International Railway points desirous to make connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway trains for local points, as well as passengers from other points to points on the International railway, would be compelled to travel for a 10 minutes' walk or in cab, the baggage to be transferred by truck teams, if the proposed union station is built at the Transcontinental railway, to the great disadvantage of all the passengers as well as the citizens of our village. Furthermore that it will be removing local train accommodation from the most business centre of our village to a location most out of the way for all the people's advantage, except a very few families in that direction.

4. That such change in the terminus of the International railway and its passenger station and freight office will lead beyond any doubt to the detriment of the future as well as of the present welfare of our village and its citizens.

And further pray that this our petition be approved as to the views and opinions of the undersigned, and that instead of a Union Station being built at the Transcontinental railway as proposed, a passenger station be built at or near the place of the present terminus and yard of the International railway at or about the most business centre of our village.

We therefore humbly pray and urge for your serious consideration the urgent need of granting our request.

As in duty bound we will ever pray.

This is signed by all the merchants of the village of St. Leonard. I think there are between 70 and 100 signatures, including members of the legal profession, customs officers, postmasters, station agents and men of other professions. I have no doubt the hon. minister wants to do what is right by the people of St. Leonard. I have visited the place where the station is proposed to be built, and I have also seen where the old station in connection with the International railway was built. You are doing a great harm to the people of St. Leonard if you remove the present station of the International railway and build a union station outside the town altogether. While they were trying to get an Act passed in this House to build that short line of railway, to unite the Van Buren bridge with the International railway, the citizens of St. Leonard objected strongly to that short line of railway, for the reason that the Americans were building a bridge over the St. John river in order to connect with the International railway, for one purpose only, namely, to be able to transport our national resources in the province of New Brunswick into the state of Maine. They have been transporting our national resources, pulpwood deals, manufactured lumber, and other kinds of wood. When the Act was about to be passed in this House I received a message from the citizens of St. Leonard asking, before the Act be passed, that a certain provision be inserted. I could not obtain the Act to-night, but I will produce it at the next sitting of the House. The telegram was as follows:

> Give your hearty support for railway bridge here providing that it is strictly understood that International station and terminus remain in St. Leonard Village at its present location.

That is where the station of the International railway is now built. They ask that it shall remain where it is. I do not think the minister will desire to remove it at the present moment unless he wants to change the whole line. That telegram is signed by five citizens of St. Leonard.

Mr. REID: Do I understand that is the charter that was got by the Van Buren Bridge Company, or by the International Railway Company?

Mr. MICHAUD: I believe it was the Van Buren Bridge Company, and they are the people who built up the short line of railway which you are about to lease under this Act. If you are going to lease that short line of railway, and remove the railway station, because you are buying that short line of railway, you are not following the provisions of the Bill. The Bill says you cannot remove the station except to the International railway, and that the terminus shall remain at St. Leonard in its present location. From my point of view, it would be unfair now to change the whole law. I have been asked to state by whom this message was signed. I find the following signatures: F. C. Rivard, J. R. Cyr, B. R. Violette, Raymond Hebert, A. J. Violette. These are the leading men of the village of St. Leonard. I would ask the hon. minister to give me an opportunity at the next sitting of the House to produce the Bill passed in 1913, wherein we can find a clause providing that the terminus of the International railway and its station cannot be changed from one place to another. I hope he will give me an opportunity at the next session of the House to produce the Bill.

Mr. REID: Of course, the hon. gentleman knows the locality better than I do. I have never been in St. Leonard, and I have simply to take the statement of the officials of the road. As I understand the situation, there are now three railway stations in St. Leonard, the National Transcontinental station on the through line between Levis and Moncton, the Canadian Pacific Railway station on the line that runs through St. Leonard, and the station of the International railway. The Government owning both the International and the Transcontinental and keeping up two sets of employees at the two stations, I think the House will agree with me that that is hardly fair or right. The proposal is that the International railway shall have its terminal at the Transcontinental station. If this is not done, we must keep up the two stations. You may change the location of the station on the International, but you must maintain the station on the main line between Levis and Moncton. When the matter was brought to my attention by the officials of the department it struck me as a reasonable business proposition and one to which I could not see that any person could object. The hon. gentleman raises objections, one of them being that the trains go through on the Transcontinental road, that there are no local trains and therefore, it would not be of service. I can hardly see that is a reason why the trains should not have their terminus at the same station. I do not see why you should keep the International station where it is because it is a little nearer the Canadian Pacific. The hon. gentleman has raised two questions which of course I shall look into. One is that the station on the Transcontinental is not proposed to be placed in as convenient a spot for the public. If the Transcontinental had their station built there, and all completed, it would be rather difficult to move it now. I do not see how I could agree to that, without looking further into it. The hon. gentleman also referred to a clause in the charter for this bridge across the river between the state of Maine and province of New Brunswick at St. Leonard. It must have been when that charter was granted that the clause the hon. gentleman mentions was inserted in the Bill. If there is anything of that kind in the charter it was not brought to my attention. I do not wish to press the Bill until everything is thoroughly understood. I am quite willing the Bill should stand over. I will go into the question with the hon. gentleman, so that we will thoroughly understand the whole situation. I thought the Bill was so reasonable and fair that there would be no objection to it whatever, but until the hon. gentleman has all the time he wishes to look into it, I shall not press the measure.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Fisheries—salaries and disbursements of Fishery Officers and Guardians, including the expense of the Advisory Board and an allowance of $200 to W. J. E. Casey, Secretary thereof, Fisheries Patrol Service and Oyster Culture, $400,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: There is a decrease.

Hon. C. C. BALLANTYNE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Reid, that the words "and an allowance of $200 to W. J. E. Casey, secretary thereof," be struck out. I would like to drop this provision because Mr. Casey has been otherwise provided for. The officers of the department who are members of the advisory board receive no remuneration, but when Mr. Casey was made secretary he was in the third division, and as his salary could not go beyond $1,200 per year, it was considered that he should have extra pay. He has since taken the examination for the second division and will be promoted this year to subdivision A of the second division at $1,600. He is now receiving this amount with the allowance as secretary of the advisory board.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who are the members of the advisory board?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Nova Scotia: H. B. Short, Digby; W. C. Smith, Lunenburg; A. King, Halifax; G. A. Hemen, Arnold. New Brunswick: A. B. Carson, Rexton; F. T. B. Young, Caraquet; John Jackson, St. John. Prince Edward Island: C. H. B. Logworth, Charlottetown. Quebec: A. Arseneau, Magdalen Islands. British Columbia: F. H. Cunningham, New Westminster; O. H. Nelson, Prince Rupert. I am thinking of doing away with this advisory board. I think we can get along without it, but that has not been definitely settled upon as yet.

Mr. COPP: What were the expenses of the advisory board last year?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The expenses for 1916-17 were $815 and the allowance amounted to $620, making a grand total of $1,435.02.

Mr. McKENZIE: The minister has appointed quite a number of inspectors; or perhaps they were appointed before the minister took charge of the department. I understand their duties to be connected with the inspection of salted and pickled herring. I would like to know how many there are of such officers, and if he has any reports from them, or what services they are rendering. Are they of any particular advantage to the fishing industry of this country? Reports have come to me from time to time that in the part of the country from which I come there are a great many of these officers drawing big salaries and doing nothing.

10 p.m.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is quite true that the department has a very large number of guardians and overseers, and also what are called, fishery inspectors. The guardians, as the members of the House are no doubt aware, do not hold their positions, except to the extent that they have been engaged from the first of April in one year to the first of April in the year following. We have, in my opinion, altogether too many guardians. I also have my doubts in regard to the efficiency of those guardians, and as their term of office expired on the 31st of March we have not got, at the moment, any guardians at all from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I have caused, through the officials of my department, the very strictest instructions to be conveyed to the various inspectors of fisheries from one ocean to the other that they are only to engage such guardians as they deem necessary, that they are not to engage a guardian for any political leanings he may now possess or may have had, but solely for his efficiency. Possibly it may be necessary to pay this class of official a little higher wages than the department has been in the habit of paying in the past, but we hope by the means stated to secure efficient and live guardians. I do not think that we shall need more than one half the number that we have had in the past. The number may even be less than that—I cannot for the moment say—but the instructions are that no guardians are to be taken on unless they are really wanted. In that event, the period of service is to be for the week, or the month, as the case may be, and when these men's services are no longer required they are to be allowed to go. As far as the overseers are concerned, if there are any vacancies in their ranks—and this also relates to the guardians—the appointments will have to be made by the Civil Service Commission. What I am trying to do, however, is to place the responsibility on each one of the superintendents of fishery districts throughout the country of putting his district on a proper basis. Each will be held responsible for his district and the overseers and guardians under him; if these overseers and guardians do not perform their duties efficiently the inspector has authority to dispense with their services without referring the matter to Ottawa at all. Now if it should transpire later on that the inspectors of the various districts are not performing the duties that they are called upon to discharge to the Government and to the department, their services will also be dispensed with. I have not been long enough in the department to form an accurate opinion as to the efficiency of the large number of guardians, overseers and inspectors that we have, but I hope to familiarize myself with these matters as time goes on. At the present time we have eight hundred guardians, and I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that we do not need anything like that number.

Mr. Du TREMBLAY: How many inspectors have you?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will give you that information in a moment.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Can the minister tell me what portion of the vote of $400,000 is applied to the fisheries patrol service?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The appropriation for that service is $190,000 and the expenditure to February 28, $187,073.72. We have 134 overseers, 800 guardians and 28 inspectors.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Some years ago oyster culture was carried on in the waters of Prince Edward Island. I am sorry to say that the succulent Malpeque is fast disappearing, and the same fate appears to be overtaking the oysters at Miscou, New Brunswick. I think it would be in the interest of consumers if the department would, under the diligent and energetic direction of my hon. friend (Mr. Ballantyne) look carefully after this food. The Malpeque oyster is, as the minister knows, a very excellent food, and commands the respect of all the connoisseurs in North America. It is really a pity to see the excellent Malpeque oyster disappearing so rapidly. I remember that some years ago an effort was made by the department to promote oyster culture, but I do not know what progress has been made.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The private oyster beds have been taken over by the several provincial governments, therefore, oyster culture is now in the hands of the provincial authorities.

Mr. COPP: I want to ask a question or two of the minister, and at the same time to congratulate him upon the resolution he has made in regard to the carrying on of the business of the department. I have had occasion during the last two or three years to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whilst the estimates were under discussion, to a situation which prevailed in the province from which I come in regard to the inspectors, fishery overseers and wardens, and I have never yet been able to get an absolute answer as regards these different classes of officers. Now, there is a multiplicity of officers along all the sea coasts of Canada who pretend to look after the fishing rights and interests in their respective localities. I find on pages R 46 and 47 of the Auditor General's Report for the year ending 31st of March, 1917, reference made to the fishery overseers and inspectors in the province of New Brunswick. Did I understand the minister to say that the term of office of the overseers and wardens expired on the 31st of March last?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, what I said was that the term of office of the wardens, who are also known as guardians, did expire on the 31st of March, but not so with the overseers or the fishery inspectors, who are permanent.

Mr. COPP: I have noticed that there are inspectors, overseers and wardens, and also special guardians. In the province of New Brunswick, I notice, the special guardians during the year ending 31st of March, 1917, cost $33,933.85. Am I to understand that these officers have been abolished, and that there are no special guardians in existence to-day?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. COPP: So much with respect to that. I have on previous occasions drawn the attention of the department to what I believe to be an absolutely irregular, unnecessary, and unbusinesslike way of engaging and paying the overseers and wardens. It is a different matter with the inspectors. There is a certain number of these officials who have prescribed areas over which they exercise control.

There are a number of inspectors, each in charge of a zone or area and each in receipt of a fairly good salary. One of the inspectors in New Brunswick gets $2,000, besides travelling expenses, $787; allowance for stenographer, and so on. The overseers and wardens are also paid salaries. For instance, Mr. Prescott, of Baie Verte, gets the magnificent salary of $150 a year, but for travelling outlay he received last year $752.70. I know the location; I know what has taken place in that office during the last number of years. These men are paid practically no salary, but they send in a report as to mileage and that is the way they make up their salaries.

Mr. J. D. REID: They cannot live on $150.

Mr. COPP: No, they cannot live on that amount. In the same locality there is an inspector at Barachois, Mr. Vinneau, whose salary is only $120 a year. He does the same work as Mr. Prescott, but strange to say his travelling outlay last year was $1,022.30. This is an indication of what has been taking place in the department for some years.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: These guardians are allowed ten cents a mile when they travel. Apparently these two men have done considerable travelling; I have no way of checking that up just now.

Mr. COPP: The department should have some check on these matters. They should pay these men a reasonable salary and require them to make proper returns and give full value for what they receive, or be subject to dismissal. What is true of these two cases is true of the other overseers and wardens. I hope the minister will see that his department is placed on a business basis and operated along business lines, irrespective of political favours.

I wish also to bring to the attention of the minister a matter that was referred to in the House early last session. Along the shores of New Brunswick, not far from my own county, illegal lobster fishing has been going on. The inspector sent his patrol boat out, caught the men fishing lobsters out of season, seized the boats, and, I think destroyed one. When it was found that boats belonged to some person friendly to the Government, close to the department, a commissioner was appointed to investigate the matter, and I have a copy of the return that was brought down containing all the evidence. I notice that an amount for legal expenses is charged up in connection with this investigation. If the minister will look at the commissioner's report he may readily draw a conclusion whether there was illegal lobster fishing in this case and whether the person whose boats were seized was properly dealt with by the inspector. The inspector tried to do his work in a proper manner, but as soon as it interfered with some who had pull, the inspector's jurisdiction was set aside, the matter taken out of his hands and a commissioner appointed to investigate. I draw the minister's attention to these facts simply to point out to him that he has a great gulf or chasm to bridge in order to get away from what has been going on in his department during the last few years.

Mr. DUFF: I have listened with a great deal of interest to the explanation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with reference to this item. I am pleased, indeed, to hear that he is going to make a change in the appointment of fishery guardians. The minister should be congratulated that at last he has taken hold of this part of his department in a businesslike manner. The county from which I come is, perhaps, the largest fishing county in Canada—and I have in mind other counties in Nova Scotia where these guardians have been appointed during the last twenty years and where there was really no necessity for them at all. I suggest that great care be exercised with reference to those who appoint these guardians. I think the minister said that the appointments were to be made by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The appointments are in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, but if that body needs any advice —and I assume it will—the inspector of the district in question would be the man from whom we should seek advice. If we find that he is not giving us the kind of advice that we would expect to get from a business man then we will put another inspector in charge of that district.

Mr. DUFF: I conclude my remarks to the minister by merely saying that the House would like him to give instructions to those inspectors to be sure to employ men who are not partisans, but who will do their duty.

Mr. VIEN: In regard to the minister's explanation as to the decrease of $101,000, I understand that the decrease in the number of overseers will account for some portion of it, but I would like to know what portion of the decrease is accounted for by the decrease in the staff and what portion by the decrease in other expenses.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I do not agree with the cut in the estimates of $101,000 that has been made here, and I think I shall be forced a little later on to insert it in my supplementary estimates. I really do not think the cut should have been made at all, but economy is the watchword now, and the cut was rather forced on me.

Mr. McMASTER: We were going to congratulate the minister on the decrease.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. McKENZIE: Wait a minute. We are not talking for talk's sake; we want to get some practical result out of this inquiry. Before the commissioner came in, I was asking the minister about the inspectors of pickled fish, quite a number of whom were appointed under the Act that was passed in this House two or three years ago. The Opposition very severely criticised that Act at the time it went through, objecting that no benefit to the people would result from the appointment of a number of officials. In the part of the country from which I come, which is largely a fishing district, those inspectors are of no practical value or utility to the district at all. They are drawing salaries for which they give no real return. In the island of Cape Breton there are one or two of those inspectors receiving large salaries, and, I suppose, large travelling expenses, and I would like to know from the minister what quantity of pickled fish they have examined and of what practical utility they are to the country generally, and particularly to the fishing industry. If he finds they are not turning out to be of benefit to the fishing industry and to the people generally, I think, even if they have been appointed under the Act, it would be proper economy to dispense with their services and to use the money for some more necessary purposes.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Will the hon. member be good enough to wait until we come to that appropriation? I shall be very glad to give the information then.

Mr. McKENZIE: We are now on an item relating to inspectors. I do not want to be talking in too partisan a fashion, but we must bring matters to the notice of the minister. I do not know whether the minister likes this or not, or whether it suits him or not, and I am not going to say; but it is all very well to drop patronage at this stage when every crevice, every corner, every conceivable office is filled with Tories. The minister says: I will not do anything; I will not exercise any patronage; I will pass it on to another man. Let us inquire who he is. He is a Tory of the Tories, and if any latitude is left to him, he is going to swing the old axe in the old way, and the old patronage will continue. That is human nature. I am afraid the minister will find that he and some of his brethren are in the position of the old gentleman who was passing away into the eternal bliss that awaited him and who said to his spiritual adviser: "I am willing to forgive everybody and I do forgive everybody; but there is one man whom I will forgive, but you, John,"—(pointing to his boy)—"look after him after I am away." The minister may say: I will not exercise any patronage; I will do nothing of that kind, but I will hand it down to the inspectors. Who, pray, is the inspector? A very strong partisan, and if he is given latitude to select men, he will naturally—and I do not blame him for doing so—select his own friends. That is what will happen, at least, in our part of the country. It has often been thrown at me from across the floor by members from British Columbia that they are not as partisan as we are, but I speak from observation in my own little province by the sea. I hope this thing will pass off and appointments made, not because of partisanship but because of fitness for the duties of the position.

Last year, I brought a matter to the notice of the department. In my county we have an official who was charged by one of his neighbours with destroying property without justification. This neighbour sent letters to the department, but he was told by this official: You need not make any reports about me; you can save your breath; you can save your paper; this is a Tory Government; there are Tory officials, and they will simply laugh at you. I sent these letters to the minister's department, and I received a letter from some official—I forget his name now—stating that inquiry would be made into the matter. I believe this official who scorned the idea of being brought to time because he was a Tory is still in office, and I have not heard that anything has been done about the matter. I do not want to mention any names. This man is in the district of Little Bras d'Or, in the county of Cape Breton. It is very easy to find out who he is. The letters are on file. I hope that official of the Government will not be permitted to sling lip—so to speak—at his neighbours and say: I can ride roughshod over you; you have no remedy because I belong to the Tory party, and you can whistle for your porridge for any good it will do you.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am too old in years to learn any of the political tricks to which my hon. friend refers. I am, as he knows, an amateur politician, and rather proud of that fact, but I do claim to be somewhat of a trained business man. I do not know of any other way to rid the department of the influence the hon. member has referred to except to place responsibility where it properly belongs. I have already placed the responsibility on the inspector of the district. If the hon. member finds that the inspector of the particular district that he represents is not acting fairly and is making appointments on a political basis and not on an efficiency basis, and he brings that to my notice, I will guarantee him instant dismissal of that inspector, I do not care how long he may have been in the service. With such a large department as that over which I have the honour to preside, reaching from one ocean to the other, I could not possibly adopt any other course. I do not know, of course, all the particulars of every division and constituency throughout the country. I cannot do any more than emphasize what I have already stated, namely, that it is the only business way to put the matter into the hands of the inspector that is in charge of the district. I will see that he carries out his orders in the way he should. If he does not, I will discharge him.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: Until the minister made the statement that he was thinking of re-inserting the item of $101,000 in the supplementary estimates, I felt like congratulating him. I quite agree with his suggestion that a good many of those overseers could be eliminated without any injury being done to the service. I would advise the Government as a whole to take into consideration whether it is not in the public interest to have the Department of Fisheries a separate department altogether from Marine and Naval. There is plenty of room for such a department in the Government, because I think some of the new ministers have not too much to do. The fishing industry is one of the most important industries in the Dominion; it is to-day second only to the industry of agriculture, and it is not half exploited. Now that meat is scarce, the people are beginning to ask for more fish, and evidently that means more brains. You cannot do better than to make the Department of Fisheries an entirely separate department.

With regard to the falling off in the production of oysters, that has perhaps resulted from the importation of American oysters. As far as the Malpeque beds are concerned, I think our local government is perhaps more largely to blame than the Federal Government. They began to encourage the importation of a large number of American oysters, and from all we can find out, it would appear that they have introduced a disease which has decimated the native oyster almost entirely. Either that is the cause, or it is one of those freaks of nature where it sometimes occurs that these luscious bivalves have periods of increase and periods of decrease, or it may be because in the great Richmond bay, which produces Malpeque oysters, they have permitted indiscriminate lobster fishing and perhaps induced the starfish to come in there and destroy our oysters. There is no question, however, that the oyster industry of Malpeque, or Richmond bay, Prince Edward Island, the great field of that fine bivalve, misnamed Malpeque—I think it should be called the Richmond Bay—oyster is becoming almost extinct. It would be well for the department to look into that matter and see if they can if possible discover the real cause and remedy it.

If the minister expects to have non-partisan appointments, he will not have them by giving the inspectors power to make them, because the inspectors, as a rule, are far more partisan than the men who appoint them. That is true as far as my county is concerned. It is true of our province that the man who is appointed is appointed because of his extreme partisanship. If the Union Government is to warrant its existence at all, it should warrant its existence on the basis of non-partisanship and no patronage.

Mr. FIELDING: May I suggest to the minister that at a convenient time—I shall not say he should do it now, because it is rather an important matter—he should give the House some authoritative information as to what has been or is being done by a rather important commission which has recently held sittings to inquire into fisheries matters? It is a commission of an international character. According to the reports in the public press, some very important changes are being made in our fisheries, but I am not taking exception to any action of the commission. I am inclined to think some of the recommendations I would cordially approve, and I am not sure I would oppose any of them. I am aware, however, there is some discontent in Nova Scotia as to what is regarded as the insufficiency of the opportunity given to people who wish to be heard on the subject. The commission came to the conclusion that they ought to have a public hearing in Canada, and they selected one point in the Maritime Provinces, the city of St. John. If only one point could be chosen, I would find no fault with the city of St. John, which is central. It seems to me—and I know it is the impression in the fishing communities—that in a matter of such great importance, opportunity should be given by the commission for hearings at other points.

There may have been good reasons why this could not be done. I am not making my suggestions to my hon. friend in any critical spirit, but this is a large question; very much has been said in the press about it, and I only take advantage of this occasion to say that at a convenient time when he has had the opportunity of studying the matter he might give the House official information as to what has been done or is being done at this moment, by the important commission which has been charged with the duties of investigating the fishery affairs not only of Canada but of the United States.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I shall be very glad to give the hon. gentleman the information he asks for. The commission have not yet finished their sittings, and in the course of a week or two will be going out to British Columbia. As hon. gentlemen know, this is an international commission, the American representatives being Hon. Wm. C. Redfield, Hon. E. C. Sweet, and Dr. H. M. Smith; and the Canadian representatives Chief Justice Hon. J. D. Hazen, Mr. G. J. Desbarats, and Mr. W. A. Found, Superintendent of Canadian Fisheries. Without going into detail, what this commission have accomplished with regard to eastern Canada is simply this: In the past Canadian vessels were not allowed to land or dispose of their catch at American ports, nor were American vessels allowed to land and dispose of their catch at Canadian ports, but arrangements have recently been arrived at whereby this will be possible in future for the fishermen of both countries. This agreement was readily agreed to by the American representatives, and it is highly appreciated not only by the Government of Canada but by the people as well. In addition to that, in the past we have had a close season for lobster fishing, and during our close season, American smacks used to fish for Canadian lobsters outside the three-mile limit; but now an agreement has been reached whereby the American Government will not allow American smacks to fish outside the three-mile limit during our close season for lobster fishing. I am sure hon. members will agree that these concessions are of the greatest importance not only to the fishermen of Canada but to the country itself. Of course I cannot foretell what decisions will be arrived at when the commission hold their sittings in British Columbia. There are many important problems for them to solve, particularly the question of the conservation of salmon.

Mr. KAY: I am very glad to hear the minister say that the commission has not finally closed its sittings, because I would suggest to him that he take up with the Canadian representatives of that commission the question of fishing in Missisquoi bay.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It was an error on my part not to mention that. At the request of the Canadian Government, during the sittings of the commission that have recently been held, it was mutually agreed between the two countries that there should be no commercial or seine-net fishing in Missisquoi bay. The hon. member knows of course, that Missisquoi bay forms a very small part of lake Champlain, and the United States Government have been urging the Canadian Government for a great many years to prohibit commercial fishing in Missisquoi bay, as that was the chief place where the fish from American waters came up to spawn.

Mr. KAY: Notwithstanding what the hon. minister says, I should like to submit to him certain reasons why the views of the American Government should not have been acquiesced in so readily by our commissioners. For some forty or fifty years new fishing has been allowed in Missisquoi bay from the 1st of March to the 15th of April. A very considerable quantity of fish is caught there during that period, the average for the years 1916 and 1917 being 164,000 pounds, or 82 tons of fish. The contention of the American Government is that seining destroys the pike that infest lake Champlain, but as a matter of fact, only 34,000 pounds, out of this 164,000 pounds, are pike, the balance being what fishermen call "rough fish," largely made up of perch and fish which are not game fish. I may say that bass fishing is very good in lake Champlain and Missisquoi bay, but the fish cannot be retained by the fishermen. They catch very few, and those are returned to the lake unhurt. It would appear to me that, especially at this time when we are urged to consume as much fish as possible to save meat for the Allies, the commissioners should have considered the matter very seriously before they prohibited the catching of this large quantity of fish so near to Montreal, which, I presume, is the largest fish-consuming city in Canada. The Government can hardly expect the people to take their propaganda for eating fish and saving meat very seriously when they prohibit the catching of a large quantity of fish, for the purpose of allowing pleasure fishermen with rod and line to catch fish in lake Champlain. The department says: That the United States Government, in conjunction with the authorities of the States of New York and Vermont, are trying to build up the fisheries of lake Champlain, with the purpose of making the lake a favourite summer resort, commercially the fisheries could never attain much importance. It is a question of whether, in normal times, this is a perfectly true statement of the facts, but surely even the United States Government, who are at present our allies, would not wish to deprive this country of a large amount of fish, simply with the object of making an attractive summer resort of the villages on the border of lake Champlain. As the hon. minister has said, this has been a question which has been debated between the two countries for a great number of years. There have, apparently, always been very good reasons which have compelled, or impelled, our Government to refuse the request of the United States to prohibit seining. I personally am quite convinced that during this period of six weeks, which is before the fish are spawning, more pike will be destroyed by the large number of perch left in the lake than are taken out by the seine. The perch abound there in great numbers, and they live on the newly-hatched spawn of the pike and bass. So that I think this prohibition of seining will really result in a large increase of perch, and, therefore, in a large decrease in the number of sporting fish. However, at the present time, I base my request to the Government largely on the importance of securing all the fish possible for consumption in this country.

There is another matter which is worthy of attention. These fishermen have been fishing in this lake under license from the Government, as I said before, for some forty or fifty years. The season commences on the first of March, and the Government passed an Order in Council on the 18th day of February. This was not published in the press until about the 23rd of February. I know that the fishermen have quite large investments in their seines and ropes, and several of them who fish in this lake purchased new equipment this year. It would hardly seem fair to these men that they should be deprived without some notice, of what they have regarded for so many years as a right from the Government to fish. I would urge the hon. minister to take this question up with our Canadian commissioners, and procure evidence from local people as to the truth of the assertion of the United States commissioner, in order that, for another year, the rights of fishing in lake Champlain may be restored.

Mr. DEMERS: I am glad that the hon. gentleman from Missisquoi (Mr. Kay) has brought this matter to the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, because we, in that part of the country, are interested in this question, which is a very important one for us. I believe the Government has misjudged the true situation, and that this question was not fully considered. Apparently this Order in Council was the result of mutual concessions between the United States and Canada, but I believe that the only concession was on our side. I submit that there can be no comparison between the action of the United States Government in prohibiting the importation of lobster taken outside of our territorial waters and the action of the Canadian Government in prohibiting at any time fishing by means of nets in Missisquoi bay and the Canadian waters of lake Champlain. Our close season for lobster fishing is as beneficial to the United States as to Canada. With our protective legislation as to lobster fishing, lobster is more plentiful not only in Canadian waters, but outside, and even in American territorial waters. But in this case it is not the same thing at all. Here we have an Order in Council passed by the Canadian Government which will be beneficial only to the United States. Pike perch is not lobster and lobster is not pike perch. Lobster is not a migrating fish as pike perch and bass are and the consequence of this difference is that as pike perch and bass resort to Missisquoi bay in springtime for spawning purposes only, as soon as the spawning time is through these fish migrate to American waters and never come back. By their nature they always tend to go upstream; and they go into American waters and do not come back. I submit that by this Order in Council we will be deprived of this kind of fishing at all times and the only result will be to give the benefit of that kind of fishing to the Americans, particularly American sportsmen.

But there is another aspect of this question which should be considered by this House. There are a good number of families of fishermen who for two or three generations have been partially engaged in this occupation. During the winter time they go to large expense in order to be ready for the season and they rely very largely on fishing for their living. Just at the opening of the season, without any notice, and although this question has been studied for many years, there comes an Order in Council which says that all this expense to which they have gone shall be a complete loss and that they must look elsewhere for their living. I do not think that is fair or reasonable, and I blame the Government for having acted in this matter by Order in Council. If this Government, or the minister, wished to imitate the Americans, for whom some of them seem now to have so much admiration, they had excellent occasion to do so. They could have introduced a Bill into this House as the Americans have done with regard to the question of the lobster fishery, and as we can see by the letter which my hon. friend received from the department. We see that with regard to the question of the lobster fishery the United States have not yet made a concession, but they have introduced a Bill into Congress. They did not pass any Order in Council. I think this Government would have done better to have imitated the action of the United States Government and introduced a Bill into this House. That would have been more democratic, more constitutional, and in that way the Government would not have hurt these poor fishermen.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry that I cannot agree with the hon. members who have spoken. As hon. gentlemen are quite aware, lake Champlain, which is owned by the United States, is fifty miles long and seven miles wide. I am sure that hon. gentlemen are also aware that for many years the United States Government have not permitted any nets to be used in lake Champlain. Our great ally is standing shoulder to shoulder with Canada to-day, not only with her men at the front but also giving us freely of her money. Our American friends also have granted to Canada the vast privileges that I mentioned a moment ago by allowing our fishing vessels to clear for American ports and to dispose of their catches there. They own lake Champlain, fifty miles long and seven miles wide, and we own Missisquoi Bay, which is only from three to five miles wide: They are anxious to preserve the fish of lake Champlain and have been pressing upon us, a friendly nation, for years, to prohibit net fishing for perch at the time of the year when the fish are spawning. What attitude should we have taken? It has been clearly proved that this is the time of the year when the perch spawn. It also has been clearly proved that Missisquoi bay is the spawning ground of the perch. Hon. gentlemen have said that probably this action was taken very hurriedly. I wish to assure them that it was not done hurriedly at all. We have on the international commission, men who understand thoroughly the fisheries of Canada and the United States. When representations were made from the States of Vermont and New York before this international commission when it was sitting in the city of Boston as to the effect of this net fishing, when it was asked to prohibit net fishing of perch in this small Missisquoi bay, was it not the logical, the businesslike course for Canada to say to her cousins, that Canada would agree to the fair proposition that our allies made? I think the House will take this broad view of the question. We cannot take a local view of a question like this, and even if we did, I do not see any ground that would cause the commission to refuse to give to our American friends the very fair concession that the Canadian Government has just granted.

11 p.m.

Mr. KAY: Would the minister tell the committee if he considers such action proper at this time, in view of the very urgent appeal for food production and conservation made by the right hon. the Prime Minister no later than last week to the Canadian people when he uttered the following words:

> It is the earnest hope of the Government that every citizen will realize his or her personal individual duty to adopt and carry out the suggestions made by the Canada Food Board.

Mere perfunctory observance will not be enough; the crisis is grave and urgent beyond possibility of exaggeration, and it will only be through an earnest sense of individual responsibility that Canadians will be able in this matter to honour their obligations to their heroic soldiers overseas who are defending our liberties at a cost beside which any personal inconvenience or discomfort on our part is insignificant.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these are weighty and serious words from the Prime Minister. Does it not seem to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that even the amount of ninety tons of fish, in view of the great scarcity of food, is more important at this time, not only to Canada but to the Allies, even to the United States herself? I consider that this is more important than the interests of a few American sportsmen who propose catching a few more pike when they are fishing during their holidays in the summertime. That, Sir, is to my mind one of the very important aspects of the case at the present moment.

With reference to the fact that the United States Government have prohibited seine fishing in the waters of lake Champlain, I might say that formerly that government permitted seine fishing in the channel leading from lake Champlain to Missisquoi bay. This channel is about three miles long and about one-half to three-quarters of a mile wide. It is the only passage, of course, by which the fish come from lake Champlain to Missisquoi bay, and when seining was permitted in lake Champlain, that was where all the seines were, and they practically stopped the fish from getting up at all. They caught every fish, or nearly every fish, that came up, whereas the fishing in Missisquoi bay is not done anywhere near the channel. As to the fish being caught by seines when they are spawning, I would again draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the close season begins on the 15th of April, and that when the close season begins, which is the time when the fish are supposed to spawn, the fishing is stopped.

To assist in the establishment, maintenance, and inspections of cold storage for bait, the conservation and development of deep sea fisheries and of the demand for fish and to provide for better transportation facilities for fish—$110,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The Minister of Railways is present (Mr. J. D. Reid), and I would therefore ask whether any refrigerator cars have been provided for the transportation of fish. It is all very well to keep the fish in cold storage at the various harbours, but it is important to transport that fish in cold storage, on the Government cars, from the Maritime Provinces to inland points. For some years past accommodation of this nature has been provided, and I would like my hon. friend (Mr. Reid) to tell me what has been done lately in that regard.

Mr. J. D. REID: We have a number of refrigerator cars on the Government railway system, but the business of transporting fish is increasing and we need more cars. Within the last few days I have awarded a contract for, I think, one hundred and fifty or two hundred and fifty refrigerator cars. The Canadian Northern Railway system have a number of refrigerator cars, and there are a few belonging to the Canadian Government Railway system, but not a sufficient number. However, it takes some little time to procure new cars, and I sent the superintendent of car service away a few weeks ago to buy some second-hand cars so that we might get a few that we could use in the meantime. We are preparing as fast as possible to increase the number of cars for this particular service. Of course, the Amercian lines are taking a lot of these cars to the other side—even a number of those that we have, and when they get over there it is very difficult to secure their return. This applies not only to refrigerator cars, but to box cars and freight cars.

Mr. LEMIEUX: There will be a debate on this question later on, and at present I am mainly concerned with the consumption of our fish in Canada, and I would ask my hon. friend to see that a number of refrigerator cars are put aside for the Canadian service proper. He is aware that for months to come fish will be more and more in demand. It is an excellent food, and certainly the fish found in Canadian waters are of a very superior quality. It is a thousand pities that more fish is not consumed inland—in Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Kingston and elsewhere. I represent one of the maritime constituencies and I know the great need for refrigerator cars. However, I have a motion on the Order Paper in regard to this matter, and intend to bring it up again.

Mr. J. D. REID: It was brought to my attention within the last month that cars should be obtained almost immediately for the carrying of such products as have been mentioned, between the lower provinces and, say, Montreal and Ontario. As I have said, I have arranged to purchase ten or fifteen second-hand cars, which will be available within the next month or six weeks. We have awarded a contract for a large number of new cars, but they will not be delivered until September or October and these second-hand cars will be available in the meantime for the short run between Montreal and the lower provinces.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have a limited refrigerator express service now one day each week from Mulgrave and Halifax to Montreal, the Department of Marine and Fisheries paying for the icing of the car as well as one-third of the express charges. In addition, we have a refrigerator fast freight service from Mulgrave and Halifax to Montreal three days each week, the department guaranteeing the earnings of the car on each trip west to be at least $35 plus the cost of icing. I sympathize with the suggestion of the member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) that it would be well to have more refrigerator cars; we hope to have an express system instead of the system I have just referred to. Hon. gentlemen will see that the Government are doing a good deal in paying the charges which I have mentioned.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In the large centres more fish will be consumed in future, and if it can be obtained at reasonable prices certainly the community at large would be much benefited. Some years ago the Department of Agriculture paid bonuses to cold storage establishments in different parts of Canada. Is there not also an arrangement whereby the Department of Marine and Fisheries, with a view to encouraging these establishments amongst the fishermen, grants the latter a bonus on their cold storage operations, subject to plans and regulations adopted by the department?

Mr. JOSEPH READ: I take it that the matter of refrigerator cars comes under the Department of Railways?

Mr. J. D. REID: Yes, the Department of Railways furnishes the cars.

Mr. J. READ: When the Minister of Railways brings down his estimates I hope that he will have made provision for a very much larger number of refrigerator cars than appears to be now contemplated. A great number of these cars will be needed in the immediate future for the service between Prince Edward Island and Ontario and Quebec, for the carrying not only of fish, but of potatoes as well.

Mr. J. D. REID: I do not mean to say that the 150 or 250 cars that we are ordering are entirely for the carrying of fish. Officials of the Canadian Northern and Government railways met and decided that we should order the number of cars that I have mentioned, for the carrying of apples, fish, potatoes and other articles which should be transported in refrigerator cars. When my estimates are brought down I will have full information on this subject.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am glad that in this item the minister is making provisions for assisting the establishment, maintenance and inspection of cold storage for bait. The fish used for bait in Nova Scotia is a small kind of herring which comes in large quantities around the coast in the spring and is to be obtained only during a short period of time, possibly a month or so. Unless he catches sufficient quantities of that small herring at that particular season, the ordinary fisherman cannot get it at any other time and is not in a position to furnish himself with all the bait that he will require during June, July, August, September, and late in the season. It is all very well to say that the fishermen should themselves provide a place for the storage of bait, but the experience of the last fifty years is that they will not do it, and fortunes are lost, one might say, because the fish come in large quantities around the coast and the fishermen cannot get them unless he has the bait. For many years I have urged that some such provision should be made as is effective in the colony of Newfoundland, where the Government obtains and sells bait to the fishermen. I suggest not that the Government give the bait away, but that facilities be provided for the storing of bait at suitable places and that it be available for sale to the fishermen at all times while fishing is on. I hope that provision made by the minister under this item is a beginning in that regard. We are too niggardly about the spending of a few thousand dollars, even a million dollars, on the fishermen. We have no conception of the immense wealth that is at our doors, particularly in Nova Scotia, in connection with the fisheries—wealth of which we are getting only the fringe. Thousands of tons of the finest fish come along the shores, and we take only one of every million of them, simply because we are not properly equipped. I can assure the minister and the Government that any money they spend in providing bait facilities to encourage the fishermen in the catching of fish will be money well spent, and the people of Canada will appreciate and praise what they are doing in that direction.

Mr. DUFF: I am glad to hear my hon. friend speak of the necessity for cold storage facilities in Nova Scotia. I think I am correct in saying that there are at present mechanical bait freezers at Halifax, Canso, Port Hawkesbury and Lunenburg. These mechanical bait freezers are doing excellent work, much better than the smaller freezers. The small bait freezer has not been a great success, but the large bait freezer has been doing excellent work. I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and of the Government to the absolute necessity, in view of the fact that we are asked to produce more, of providing further bait facilities. As far as my own county is concerned, at present we have about 125 vessels engaged in deep sea fishing, and these vessels have to send as far as Providence in the United States, for their bait. About three weeks ago about 25 cars of bait were imported from there to Lunenburg, to partly supply the fishermen with the bait they require for their first fishing. I would suggest to the minister that if any place in the province of Nova Scotia deserves to have a bait freezer it is the county of Lunenburg. If a bait freezer were established there, the fishermen would be so encouraged that they would go into the steam trawling business, and inside of two years there would be a considerable number of steam trawlers fishing out of Lunenburg and other parts of the province. This would mean that the production of fish in Nova Scotia would be increased two-fold. I trust the minister will take this suggestion into consideration, and agree to have at least one bait freezer at Lunenburg, and another at North Sydney, where the vessels call in the fall of the year.

To provide for fisheries Exhibit at Canadian Exhibition at Toronto, $5,000.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: I understood that all the exhibitions were going to be cut out this year. Is there any real reason for this exhibit at Toronto?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: According to the information I have here, I think the department are fully justified in continuing this exhibit. During the exhibition we run a good fisheries restaurant on the grounds, where we serve a fish dinner at 35 cents. During the ten days of the exhibition last year, we served 38,772 fish dinners, and our exhibit only cost $4,399.02 and the restaurant $5,455.07. This year we have cut the item down from $10,000 to $5,000, and I really think in view of the information I have here, I am justified in asking the House to pass this small amount.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Mr. McKENZIE: Have you increased the price of the dinners?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

Mr. KAY: A few moments ago the minister stated that economy was the watchword of this Government. Now it does not seem to me that an expenditure of even the small amount of $5,000 is necessary for a fisheries exhibit at the Toronto exhibition. I have at the present time a resolution on the Order Paper urging the Government to prohibit all exhibitions this year, and to be consistent with the view which I very strongly hold, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. McMaster, that this item be struck out.

Mr. McMASTER: It is not necessary for me to make any lengthy remarks on this motion at this advanced hour of the evening. The Government has very properly been making an appeal to the Canadian people for thrift and economy. With the price of bacon and other meats as high as it is in Toronto, is it necessary to encourage the Toronto folk to eat more fish by supplying them with these dinners?

Mr. JACOBS: More brains.

Mr. McMASTER: I think it would be only fitting if the Government set an example of economy and thrift to the people by cutting out this item, and therefore I have much pleasure in seconding the motion.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I would remind my hon. friend from Brome that this is not simply a Toronto Exhibition, but a national exhibition, to which people come from not only all parts of Ontario, but from all over Canada. When we take into consideration that very nearly 39,000 fish dinners were served by our restaurant on the exhibition grounds last year, and if, as my hon. friend from Cartier suggests, this is going to add to the brain power of the people of Ontario, I think the House, appreciating as it does the value of advertising, ought to feel justified in voting this small item.

Mr. JACOBS: We have voted the amount so often without results in added brain power that I think it should be cut out.

Mr. McKINLEY: Or the vote made very much larger.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: My hon. friends must appreciate the advertising value of this exhibit, when they remember that the Canadian Exhibition at Toronto is visited by nearly one million people every year. Surely hon. gentlemen do not wish to retard the fishing industry of Canada by objecting to this small sum.

Mr. ROBB: I must say that earlier in the evening I told the Government Whip there would be no vote to-night. Perhaps the Government would consent to adjourn and leave this item over.

Mr. REID: If there is any objection to this item we could let it stand and take up some other item; it is only for a small amount anyway.

Mr. McMASTER: It is not simply a question of $5,000, but it is a question of spending $5,000 for something that is not absolutely necessary, and then spending $3,000 on some other work that is not absolutely necessary. It is here a little and there a little, and it comes to a considerable sum in the aggregate. We are merely asking the Government to show the sincerity I am sure they possess in their desire that the people of this country should economize.

Mr. J. D. REID: The Toronto Exhibition is a very large one, I suppose the largest in Canada. It has been customary to have an exhibit there. The item has been cut down this year to $5,000. People come from one end of the Dominion to the other to attend this exhibition. It is quite evident that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, after taking the matter up with the officials, has come to the conclusion that, rather than do away with the item altogether, it would be better to spend a small amount. However, if there is any objection to it, there is no reason why the item should not stand.

The CHAIRMAN: I beg to say that the motion of the hon. member for Missisquoi is not in order, because he moved to reject the resolution in its entirety. The only way to do that would be to vote against it. The resolution will stand for further discussion, and members of the Opposition have a perfect right to vote against the resolution when it is again brought before the Committee. Any motion to have it struck out is unnecessary.

Item stands.

Salaries and maintenance of fish breeding establishments, $300,000.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I wish to draw to the attention of the Committee, and of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) that the Government have cut this item down $100,000, which is in keeping with his wishes.

Mr. McMASTER: Yes, but I hope the good impression made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not be removed in a moment by a statement that he will place another fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars in some supplementary estimate. He raised our hopes very high. He pointed out $101,000 of a decrease in item 227, and when we were prepared to congratulate him he said that in the supplementary estimates some further amounts would be brought down.

To provide for the inspection of pickled fish, $15,000.

Mr. McKENZIE: Now that explanation about those inspectors will come in.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Do you want to know the names of the inspectors?

Mr. McKENZIE: I want to know what they are doing, their justification for living.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I think the hon. gentleman is aware that these inspectors are called upon to inspect pickled fish there, and while it is voluntary we have given some consideration to the possibility of making it compulsory later on by introducing legislation, probably next session. In the meantime, I might state that those inspectors inspected last year in all 8,977 barrels of herring and mackerel. Of these 3,083 failed to pass the inspection.

Mr. McMASTER: The cost of inspection is almost $3 a barrel.

Mr. DUFF: In my county alone there must have been 20,000 barrels of pickled fish caught and handled, and I do not think the inspector ever saw 100 barrels of fish. I think in the interests of economy the money spent in my county, at least, could be very well saved, and the inspector's services dispensed with.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am not very much of a fisherman, nor am I very much interested in fish, except that I represent a large number of fishermen. It has been dinned into my ears continuously that we have an inspector residing in the city of Sydney receiving a very considerable salary and he is not doing anything. I should like to know if in the four counties, Inverness, Richmond, Victoria and Cape Breton, there has been any inspection which would justify the existence of an officer of this kind, at a high salary. If he is earning the salary, I have no objection, but if he is sitting in his house or attending to his other business and receiving public money that he does not earn, I would certainly object.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am advised by the superintendent of fisheries that the salary of the inspector at Sydney is $1,200 a year; and that he has made very many inspections there. I am sorry I cannot tell the hon. gentleman the exact number to-night, but I will be very glad to furnish the information to-morrow.

Mr. McKENZIE: The furnishing to me of the information does not concern us very much, but I want the minister to inquire if this man is earning his money.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will be very glad to do that.

Mr. McKENZIE: He does not need the salary, because he is a well-off man, and a big merchant.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I thank the hon. gentleman for bringing the matter to my attention. I shall look into it to-morrow; if this inspector is earning the money he will remain—if not, he will go.

Mr. COPP: I want to ask a question in regard to fish hatcheries. You have reduced the estimated expenditure $100,000. Is it the intention to close up some of the fish hatcheries, or is this a reduction of salaries?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There is a saving of $30,000 a year in not reopening the fish hatcheries, and there are other matters which go to make up the reduction.

Mr. COPP: Is there a reduction of salaries?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No. The largest item is the $30,000 to be saved by not opening up the lobster hatcheries, and, in addition to that, we are not going to carry on the usual programme adopted by the Government. We are going to curtail, and that is one of the reasons that we have every effort possible to make the handsome reduction shown here of $100,000.

Mr. COPP: Are you closing the fourteen lobster hatcheries?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Closing them all.

Mr. COPP: For what reason?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am not an expert fisherman, but I have taken the best technical advice I could from those on the spot, and also from expert technical people who have devoted a great deal of time and study to the lobster industry, and I have been informed—and I think credibly informed—that the lobster hatcheries do not produce within 70 per cent of the small fry which would be produced if they were allowed to go on in the usual way. I think the hon. gentleman is aware that when the female lobster is caught, it is taken to the canneries, and the eggs are brushed off, then an officer calls for these eggs, and they are put into a jar, and hatched in the hatchery. I am told that in this way there is only thirty per cent production.

If the eggs are allowed to remain on the female lobster in the usual way until the time has arrived when the female extrudes her eggs, there is a one hundred per cent production. We have, therefore, decided not to continue the hatcheries and consequently we can save $30,000 a year.

Mr. COPP: I had occasion to read the very interesting and valuable report made by Prof. Knight on this question, and he advises very strongly against the further maintenance of these lobster hatcheries. Has the department come to the conclusion absolutely to do away with these hatcheries and dispose of the property?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is the final decision of the department to permanently do away with these hatcheries and we are going to advertise the buildings and lands for sale.

Mr. KAY: Referring again for a minute to the question of seine fishing in Missisquoi bay, I would ask the minister if he would not consider the advisability and fairness of indemnifying these fishermen for the expense they have gone to in preparing for the season's fishing under the impression that they would get their licenses as usual.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. gentleman's recommendation will be taken into consideration by the Government.

Mr. McKENZIE: I notice the minister says he is going to abolish the lobster hatcheries. He told us that the better way was to rely upon the natural propagation of the lobster. Our difficulty in the Maritime Provinces has been that the lobster fisherman catches the berried lobster as well as the other, and uses it. Has the minister any well matured scheme by which he can protect the mother lobster?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That question has also received very careful consideration by myself and the technical officers of the department. We are going to send Prof. Knight down there, together with some students who have given a great deal of time and thought to this industry, and we are going to carry on a campaign amongst those lobster fishermen to endeavour to prevail upon them as far as we possibly can to return to the sea every female lobster they catch. Just how far we will succeed time will tell.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has my hon. friend any news about the Stanley? The fishermen on the Magdalen Islands are waiting patiently for a ship. A member of the Quebec Government wired me to-day. The Minister of Agriculture wants to ship grain to the people of the Magdalen islands, and he wants to know if the Stanley is to be sent in a few days.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry to inform my hon. friend that the Stanley was damaged by ice when she went to the rescue of the Russian steamer. She is being repaired in Halifax now and I hope to receive definite information by to-morrow. I am fully seized of the necessity of sending the steamer Stanley to the Magdalen islands as I understand the fishermen are badly in need of gasolene and coal oil. I hope to be in a position to let my hon. friend know definitely to-morrow.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: I would ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the members of the Government to make inquiries to ascertain where the $160,000 paid in fishing bounty comes from so that we will have that information when the question comes to be discussed in the House. It strikes me that this is the interest which is being paid on the $5,000,000 that was granted under the Fishery Award in 1872 or 1873. I think it would be just as well to look into that so as to be able to present the information to the House when the matter comes up.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I can answer my hon. friend by telling him he is perfectly correct in his statement. This bounty is the interest under the Award which was made in 1877.

Mr. READ: When that item comes up I want to point out that there is an unjust and unequal distribution of the money.

Mr. FIELDING: The item will not come up, because the payment is fixed by statute.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand, as a result of my ramblings in the county of Gaspé that a very large number of the fishermen transfer these bounty cheques to the merchants on the coasts, sometimes for a very small consideration, and that they regret after a while that they have negotiated these cheques. Was there not a regulation passed some years ago whereby these cheques were honoured by the department and paid only to the fishermen and whereby merchants getting hold of these cheques could not use them?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That is quite true.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does that condition still exist?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The money is paid directly to the fishermen and not paid to the merchants?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Quite so. I appreciate very much the way in which the committee has helped me to get my estimates through. There is just that little Toronto item if you want to clear everything off.

To provide for a fisheries exhibit at the Canadian Exhibition at Toronto, $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. McMASTER: Under pressure brought by the representatives of the Maritime Provinces who evidently wish to stand in well with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Progress reported.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Reid the House adjourned at 11.56 p.m.

Wednesday, April 3, 1918.

The House met at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 28, respecting The Belleville Prince Edward Bridge Company. — Mr. Porter.

Bill No. 29, respecting a patent of O. G. C. L. J. Overbeck.—Mr. Fripp.

MOTIONS FOR RETURNS.

SUGGESTION BY MR. SPEAKER TO SAVE UNNECESSARY EXPENSE.

Mr. SPEAKER: I wish to direct the attention of hon. members to a matter affecting the practice of moving for returns. Experience has taught us that in many cases hon. members move for returns which have been previously moved for and obtained. Many of these returns involve a great deal of clerical work and consequent expense, and hon. members will assist very materially in the desire to save money and to prevent waste if, having moved for returns, they get in touch with the department concerned in order that they may advise as to the particular information which they require. If hon. members will communicate with the proper officers of the House before moving for returns, they can ascertain whether returns previously brought down cover the information which they desire. By exercising care in this respect hon. members can assist very materially in saving public money.

MILITARY SERVICE ACT, 1917.

DISTURBANCES IN QUEBEC—REPORTS FROM THE MILITARY AUTHORITIES READ BY THE PRIME MINISTER.

On Motions being called:

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): As the Orders of the day may not be reached until rather late, I think it desirable that I should give to the House the information which I promised yesterday with regard to the recent very regrettable events in the city of Quebec.

The first document which I shall read is a summary of a number of communications which have been received from the military authorities in the city of Quebec by telephone or by telegram. It is as follows:

Ottawa, April 2, 1918.

On 29th March information was received that on the previous night a clash had occurred between police and civilians at Quebec, in connection with the administration of the Military Service Act. It was reported that civilians had badly damaged the police station, in which three detectives had taken refuge from the mob, and that one of them had been severely injured. The General Officer Commanding Military District No. 5 (Brig. General J. P. Landry) was called upon for a full report and the Inspector General, Eastern Canada (Major General F. L. Lessard) was warned to hold himself in readiness to proceed to Quebec. Same day General Landry reported that there had been a disturbance that No. 3 Police Station had been stoned and wrecked, and that four men had been injured. The Mayor thought he could deal with the situation and that military asistance was not required. The Mayor was assured that military assistance in case of urgency was available, but he stated that he expected to be able to cope alone with any outbreak. Reports were received from other sources throughout the afternoon and evening that the situation threatened to become more serious and the General Officer Commanding was ordered by telegram to work in cooperation with the civil power but in case of urgent necessity to act on his own initiative, avoiding a collision if possible. About 10 p.m. General Landry reported by telephone that the offices of the Quebec Chronicle had been attacked and that a large mob was destroying the Registrar's office. The Mayor had requested him to call out troops but as the requisition was not in order he (the Mayor) had left to obtain further signatures. As reports were of an alarming character General Landry asked for instructions. He was directed to use his own discretion and to take such action as he considered necessary to restore and preserve order. Accordingly the troops were ordered out. There was no clash and by 10.30 order had been restored, the annex of the Auditorium Building having been set on fire and the offices of the Chronicle having been wrecked.

About mid-day March 30, the G.O.C., M.D. 5 reported that situation was getting worse and he required 1,000 men additional to the 800 already available. Orders were at once issued to move the number of troops called for to Quebec, and General Lessard was directed to proceed from Halifax to Quebec, there to assume general command. On the night of the 30th there was further disorder; the mob was very unruly, the troops were ordered out, several soldiers were injured, and a hardware store was looted in search of arms.

On 31st a report was received that riots had broken out during the day, pickets were attacked on duty while removing arms and ammunition from the stores; two officers were injured, revolver shots were fired at a street car, and another store was looted in search of arms and set on fire. On this day General Lessard arrived and assumed command.

On Monday, April 1st General Lessard took the precaution to cause notices to be placarded and published in the press advising the public against taking part in unlawful assemblies, pointing out the risk they ran of being killed or injured, if they did so, and notifying all concerned that the authorities, should necessity arise, would use every means at their disposal to maintain peace, and order. Citizens were at the same time warned not to leave their dwellings and not to mix with the rioters who were causing disturbance throughout the city.

At nightfall, however, in spite of the notices which had been published, a large crowd assembled; and from house-tops, side-streets, snow banks and other places of concealment the rioters opened fire point blank on the troops who as on the previous nights displayed great steadiness, and forbearance under severe provocation. But at length, after several soldiers had received bullet wounds, it became absolutely necessary for the troops to return the fire—in self defence, for the protection of the public and to prevent the situation passing entirely beyond control.

Five soldiers were wounded, and of the crowd four were killed, many were injured and fifty-eight were arrested.

By 1.20 a.m. next morning order had been re-established and by 5 a.m. the troops had returned to barracks.

We have information to-day that perfect order is still maintained in the city under military direction.

The next report is from Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. Machin, Director of the Military Service Branch. It is dated Ottawa, April 2, 1918, and is addressed to the Hon. the Minister of Justice, Ottawa::

Sir,

I have the honour to report that, in obedience to your instructions, I left Ottawa on Friday the 29th ultimo at 4.30 and proceeded immediately to Quebec, arriving there early the following morning. I was met by Captain Desrochers, the Inspector of Dominion Police, at that point.

This officer had suffered at the hands of the mob the previous evening and was still showing evidence of having been very severely handled.

It appears that on Thursday night, the 28th ultimo, two Dominion constables named Belanger and Evanturel were, in pursuance of their duties, searching for defaulters in St. Roch, and visited a bowling alley where a young man named Mercier was asked to produce his exemption certificate or papers to show why he should not be in uniform. He stated that he had received a certificate of exemption but did not have it with him and that it was at his house. The police then took the young man to the police station, telling him that he would be released immediately when his papers were forthcoming. The certificate of exemption was sent for by a friend and afterwards produced and Mercier was liberated.

Shortly afterward, the Dominion Police to the number of fifteen were mobbed by a crowd which had gathered, it is stated, at a bowling alley in St. Roch which, it is alleged, was the headquarters for the agitators. The Dominion Police took refuge in No. 3 Municipal Police Station and the mob, which by this time had grown to very large numbers, possibly two thousand, proceeded to demolish the building and finally over-powered the Municipal Police who had refused the mob admission to the police station, seized about twelve of the Dominion constables and started to wreak their vengeance on them, seven or eight of whom were wounded, two quite seriously and Captain Desrochers himself being badly battered about. This affair lasted for nearly two hours during which time Captain Desrochers telephoned from the police station to the G. O. C. for a military escort to come to the rescue of the Dominion Police and take them away from the mob. Captain Desrochers was referred to the Mayor with whom he had previously been in touch and as a result the Mayor came to the police station and made a speech, but without effect, the crowd subsequently taking the action I have just related. The Municipal police at this station tried to keep the crowd out but lost control, mob rule resulting.

Captain Desrochers states that he requested the Chief of Police to call out all available Municipal police to the aid of the Dominion Police, who had sought refuge in No. 3 police station, but this was not done, twelve police only being placed on this duty and this number was not increased, although Captain Desrochers pointed out how inadequate this force was.

Captain Desrochers telegraphed the full facts here and by three o'clock on Friday the 29th ultimo, it was known here that an attack was contemplated on the Registrar's office at Quebec, that night. On my arrival in Quebec on Saturday the 30th ultimo, I found that the rumour had been carried into effect with the result that two newspaper offices had been wrecked and the Registrar's office had been set on fire. The contemplated action of the mob had been repeatedly communicated on Friday by Captain Desrochers to the Mayor and the G. O. C. Captain Desrochers informs me that no adequate protection was afforded by the Municipal authorities to save the Registrar's office and that a small force of the city police who had been placed in front of the Registrar's office were not only inadequate for its protection but were quiescent when the mob started to attack the place. On Friday the 29th ultimo, Captain Desrochers, although himself injured, remained all day at the Central police station in company with the Chief of the City Police to whom he repeatedly urged that all available Municipal police be placed on duty, giving information as to the rumours which had reached him concerning the proposed attack on the Registrar's office. It is stated that a force of from sixty to seventy men might have been sufficient to have prevented, at the outset, the ransacking and burning of the Registrar's office. The Chief of the City Police received reports from patrolmen with the result that he persisted in his opinion that no trouble was to be anticipated and that Captain Desrochers was unduly alarmed. At eight p.m. on Friday the 29th ultimo, the Chief of Police being absent and supposed to be with the Mayor, a message was received at the Central Police Station to the effect that a crowd was marching up from St. Roch to the Auditorium. This message was repeated over the telephone to the Mayor, Captain Desrochers being present when the telephone message was sent. The mob marched up town and back to St. Roch. Following this move, twelve police, all that had been provided by the city police, were sent to the Auditorium. The crowd returned up town from St. Roch in very increased numbers and proceeded to smash the two newspaper offices, which were practically demolished. The crowd then proceeded to the Registrar's office at the Auditorium,—this would be about 9 p.m. Captain Desrochers telephoned the G. O. C. and informed him of the situation, when he was asked where the Mayor was. Apparently the G. O. C. contemplated that the Mayor would be at the scene of disorder. Captain Desrochers then went from the City Hall to the General Post Office and to Military Headquarters, and was there informed that the Auditorium had been attacked, the windows, etc., being smashed though the rioters had not then penetrated the building. After a short interview the G. O. C. succeeded in communicating by telephone with the Mayor, who immediately proceeded to Headquarters, where he was handed a prepared copy of the Riot Act, and requested to proceed to the scene of riot and read it. The Mayor left in company with the Chief of Police for the scene of the riot. It appears that the Mayor and Chief of Police, in their trip to Military Headquarters, had passed the Auditorium, as Captain Desrochers was informed by the Chief of Police that the crowd were then in the building and throwing the records into the street. Captain Desrochers is of the opinion that both the occurrences would have been avoided if the civic authorities had taken notice of his repeated warnings and a proper display of protection had been made by civic police as requested by him.

The facts as to what transpired between the military authorities and the Mayor must be obtained from the former as I have no knowledge of it other than hearsay. After the Registrar's office had been set on fire, the fire brigade were called out, but owing to the action of the mob in preventing the firemen from performing their duties great damage was done to the building and records before the fire was brought under control.

After careful investigation I find that the greater portion of the most important records were saved, as they had been locked away in a back filing room and were apparently overlooked by the mob, smoke and water being the cause of damage to these documents which with the exception of possibly one thousand names will be saved and from which new records can be made up. All the office furniture, Chief Public Representative's files and documents, stationery and supplies—in fact everything except the small filing room already spoken of—have been totally destroyed. Steps are now being taken to re-establish the Registrar's office at Quebec and I contemplate having this office in full working order at an early date.

As the lives and personal property of the Dominion Police had been threatened I instructed Captain Desrochers to have his men scattered and for the present to make no arrests. The work of the Dominion Police in Quebec, therefore, for the moment is suspended. Captain Desrochers informs me that there has been, since the commencement of activities by the Dominion Police, threats made against individual members of the force and what work they have been able to accomplish has been done in the face of a hostile attitude from practically every source.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd) H. A. Machin.
Director, Military Service Branch.

REPORTS AND PAPERS.

Detailed statement of remissions of customs duties and the refund thereof, under section 92, Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, through the Department of Customs, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Sifton.

Detailed statement of all bonds or securities registered in the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada since last return (31st January, 1917) submitted to the Parliament of Canada under section 32 of chapter 19 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906.—Hon. Mr. Sifton.

Memorandum of conferences between representatives of labour and the War Committee, January, 1918.—Hon. Mr. Rowell.

COUNCIL FOR THE INDIAN TRIBES OF CANADA.

Bill No. 30, to incorporate a council for the Indian Tribes of Canada—Mr. Porter—introduced and read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by asterisks).

THE STEAMER COURCELETTE.

Mr. POWER:

1. Is the Quebec Harbour Commission owner of a steamship called the Courcelette?
2. If so, when was this boat bought, from whom, and at what price?
3. For what object was it bought?
4. For what object has it been used?
5. What was the number of persons who composed the crew in the months of July and August, 1917?
6. What salary was paid to each?
7. What excursions were made by the said steamer during the months of June, July and September, 1917?

Hon. Mr. BALLANTYNE:

1. Yes.
2. September 28th, 1916; Canadian Salvage Association Ltd.; $27,000.
3. General service boat for inspection of port and harbour, and harbour works.
4. As general service boat for inspection of port and harbour, and harbour works.
5. July, 13; August, first two weeks, 13, 2nd fortnight, 12.
6. Captain $92.40; mate, $46.20; 1st engineer, $101.60; 2nd engineer, $65.30; fireman, $18; fireman, $23.25; fireman, $15; steward, $46.20; cook, $51.30; mess boy, $11.25; sailor, $24.50; sailor, $24.50; sailor, $24.50.
7. The boat was used for visiting the port of Quebec, two or three times by the commissioners and guests; twice by the Lieutenant-Governor and guests, three times by ministers of the Crown and guests; once by Mr. T. W. Lamont, member of the firm J. P. Morgan & Co., to Moisie river at the request of the Department of Marine; expenses of this trip were paid by Mr. Lamont. It was used in connection with the putting up of the Quebec bridge, and twice in connection with shipbuilding plant at Island of Orleans, and once visiting the harbour with Mr. K. Yamagishi, representative of the Mitsubishi Shipbuilding Company of Tokyo, Japan.

OLEOMARGARINE LICENSES.

Mr. LEDUC:

1. How many firms have asked for licenses for the manufacture of oleomargine?
2. How many firms have been granted such licenses?
3. What are the names of said firms?
4. What are the names of shareholders?
5. Are the licenses limited?

Hon. Mr. CRERAR:

1. 15.
2. 2.
3. The Harris Abattoir Company., Ltd., and the Swift Canadian Co., Ltd., both of Toronto.
4. The Department of Agriculture has no information.
5. The licenses are not limited, the only conditions being comformity to the law on the part of those holding them.

OTTAWA POSTMASTER.

Mr. PROULX:

1. What commission, if any, did Mr. A. G. Acres, Postmaster at the City of Ottawa, receive from the Government, for the purchase by him for the Government, of the land situate on the North side of Wellington Street and on the West side of Bank Street?

2. Did Mr. Acres, or the real estate company with which he was connected before being appointed Postmaster of Ottawa, ever act for the Government in connection with the purchase of any other property?

3. Did Mr. Acres hold any position in the Militia of Canada, or in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces overseas?

4. If so, what was the position, and what was the salary attached thereto?

5. How much did he receive for allowance, living and travelling expenses?

6. How long was he overseas?

7. Did he go to France? If so, how long was he there?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. $22,260.42.

2 No information.

3. Yes.

4. Hon. captain and paymaster, 77th Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, with pay as follows: Regimental pay, $3 per diem.

5. Field allowance, subsistence allowance and travelling expenses $867; separation allowance from 1st August, 1915, to 31st December, 1916, at $40 per month $680.

6. On strength overseas, three months and eleven days.

7. No.

DISTRIBUTION OF FRUIT AND VEGETABLES.

Mr. GAUTHIER:

1. Has the Government appointed an agent of Transportation to control a regular distribution of fruits and vegetables?

2. If so, when was such appointment made?

3. Who has been appointed to this position, and what is his salary and duty?

4. Under the direction of which Department of the Government is he acting?

Hon. Mr. CRERAR:

1. Yes.

2. On the 26th September, 1917, for a period of four months.

3. H. H. Schaefer; $200 per month; to assist in the movement of the apple and potato crops.

4. He is no longer in the employ of the Canada Food Board, his duty ceasing on the 26th January last.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY; NORFOLK COUNTY.

Mr. CAHILL:

1. Did the Customs Department, or any other Department of the Government, hold an inquiry at Simcoe, or elsewhere in the County of Norfolk, at any time since January 1st last? If so, where, and on what dates?

2. Was such inquiry the result of charges or of complaints made to the Government or to any Department thereof? If so, by whom were such charges or complaints made?

3. Were the Dominion Canners involved in such inquiry or investigation? If so, were their books gone into?

4. Did such inquiry relate to Government contracts or drawbacks? If not, to what did it relate?

5. What was the result of such inquiry?

6. Was a report made? If so, to whom, and will the papers be brought down?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON:

1. Officers of customs held an inquiry at Simcoe on February 5th, 1918, and subsequent days.

2. Confidential information received by the customs led to this inquiry.

3. Yes. Their books were examined.

4. The inquiry related to drawback claims of the Dominion Canners.

5. The result of the inquiry was that some errors were found in the claims, and these were rectified.

6. A report was made to the Department of Customs. The papers will be brought down as usual when ordered.

PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL DEBENTURES.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. Was the subject relating to the issue, sale and negotiation of provincial, municipal and other debentures, as set forth in the Order in Council dated 22nd December, 1917, considered by the Provincial Premiers of Canada and the Federal Government, at the Conference held at Ottawa, in February, 1918?

2. If so, what was the decision arrived at?

3. If not, why was the subject not considered?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: It is my impression that the report containing the conclusions of the conference has been laid on the table of the House. The report contains all the information available.

CONFERENCE OF PROVINCIAL PREMIERS AT OTTAWA.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to produce before this House copies of the proceedings of the Conference held at Ottawa, in February, 1918, between the Provincial Premiers of Canada and the Government; also, copies of the resolutions adopted and the remarks made in relation thereto?

2. If not, why?

3. If so, when will the said copies be produced?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The report has been laid on the Table, about two weeks ago, I think.

ARRESTS UNDER THE MILITARY SERVICE ACT.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. Out of the 3,895 men arrested by the police in virtue of the Military Service Act, 1917, how many were arrested in each of the provinces and the Yukon Territory?

2. Out of the 7,946 men enlisted in the United States, under the operation of the said Act, how many were from each of the provinces, and the Yukon Territory?

Major-General MEWBURN:

1. Following are the figures of men apprehended under the Military Service Act, divided into military districts:

Military	District	No. 1	295
"	"	" 2	471
"	"	" 3	507
"	"	" 4	710
"	"	" 5	108
"	"	" 6	292
"	"	" 7	105
"	"	" 10	447
"	"	" 11	378
"	"	" 12	405
"	"	" 13	177
Total			3,895

Information is not available in this department as to how many were apprehended in the different provinces, except in so far as they are co-terminous with the territorial limits of the districts.

2. No men have been enlisted in the United States under the operation of the Military Service Act.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS.

Mr. POWER:

1. Who are the commissioned officers employed at Quebec by the Military authorities in connection with Recruiting Branch, Army Service Corps, The Royal Canadian Engineers, The Royal Canadian Garrison Artillery and The Royal Canadian Artillery?
2. How long have they been connected with each branch?
3. What service is each of them performing?
4. What salary is each one of them receiving?
5. Who are those among them who have performed service overseas and how long have they been actually at the front?
6. How long were they in the trenches?
7. To which battalion did they belong when overseas?

Mr. W. H. WHITE:

1. How many local tribunals were established throughout Canada under the Military Service Act?
2. What remuneration per diem was allowed each member of such tribunal?
3. What was remuneration per day for Secretary of tribunal and also for constables or caretaker of the Tribunal Sessional Chamber?
4. What has been the total expenditure to date on account of tribunals under the Military Service Act?
5. Are there any outstanding claims unpaid?

[Mr. Trahan.]

Mr. MIDDLEBRO:

1. How many Victoria Crosses have been awarded to members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force to date?
2. What is the name, address, battalion, and rank of each recipient?
3. What is the official respective record in respect of which each decoration was given in each case?

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Mr. TRAHAN:

For a copy of all judgments rendered up to date under the operation of the Military Service Act, 1917, by the Central Appeal Judge.

OLEOMARGARINE.

MOTION BY MR. J. E. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (E. Lambton) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Order in Council governing the manufacture, importation and sale of Oleomargarine should be amended and more strictly enforced, in order that the great dairy industry of Canada should be adequately protected.

He said: I feel I should preface my remarks by stating my position on this question. I do not intend to oppose the manufacture, importation or sale of oleomargarine in Canada at the present time, but I shall endeavour to show hon. gentlemen that the regulations are of such a nature as to allow fraud and deception to to be perpetrated. I do not believe that the ex-Minister of Agriculture was responsible for these regulations. I am sure we all appreciate the efforts he put forth on behalf of agriculture, and I am satisfied that no man ever filled the portfolio of agriculture in the Dominion with greater satisfaction to the farmers and all interested in the farming industry than did the ex-minister. As to the present Minister of Agriculture, I am sure the people of Canada must feel deeply indebted to him for joining the Cabinet, and offering his services in the development of our greatest industry. He, too, had nothing to do with the framing of these regulations, because they were already framed and placed before him a day or two after he took office. The men who, in my opinion, were responsible for these regulations were the oleomargarine manufacturers in Canada and the United States, and I think I shall be able to show that the regulations are framed entirely in their interests. The first Order was dated Tuesday, 23rd October, 1917, and the second clause of it reads:

For the purpose of these regulations, "oleomargarine" shall mean and include oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, or any other substitute for butter which is manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that from milk and cream.

This opens the door, not only to oleomargarine but to margarine, butterine or any other substitute for butter. I do not believe that the dairymen of Canada understood that the Government intended to allow all kinds of butter substitutes to come into this country free. I respectfully urge that the words to which I have called attention other than the word "oleomargarine," be struck out of these regulations, namely, the words, "margarine, butterine, or any other substitutes for butter which is manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than milk or cream". If you are going to allow margarine products to come into Canada, you open the door to a condition of affairs such as exists in the United States to-day. Last year there were over two thousand prosecutions in the United States having reference to the manufacture of oleomargarine, and over 4,000 men were summoned before the courts. This has been going on in the United States for years and years, and we have been very fortunate in Canada to be in a position not to permit this condition of affairs to exist. I will take the case of nut margarine. In the United States there are eleven different kinds of nut margarine manufactured. Not one of those products can be manufactured, as I understand, without introducing into it benzoate of soda, a most injurious constituent of food, in order that it may be preserved. Clause 5 of the regulations reads:

> Oleomargarine shall not be manufactured in any premises used as or connected with a butter factory, and no butter manufacturer or any person who handles butter for the purpose of re-working or mixing it, shall be given a license to import or to manufacture oleomargarine.

It simply means that the butter manufacturers of the country are forbidden in any way to take oleomargarine into their plants, or to take any of the oils to manufacture the products that are being used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. I am confident—and I speak for the dairymen of Canada—that they do not want privileges extended to them of using, in their process of manufacture, the oils that are mixed in the oleomargarine, but, on the other hand, they ask that their industry be surrounded with sufficient safeguards, so that their products may be reasonably protected. Clause 7 of the regulations reads:

> No person other than a manufacturer of oleomargarine shall mix oleomargarine and butter.

On the one hand, while the butter manufacturers are not allowed in any way to mix the oils, the oleomargarine men are allowed to import butter into their plants and mix it in any way they choose, bring it in, as they have been doing, in a coloured state, and turn it out as a substitute for butter, and make it as palatable as they possibly can. The dairymen do not believe that it is reasonable or fair that the butter should be taken into the margarine plants for the purpose of manufacturing an article which is supposed to be a substitute for butter, and which is made palatable by the very butter itself which is the product of the dairy farms of this country. Another clause to which I wish to call the attention of the minister reads:

> In all hotels restaurants and public eating houses where oleomargarine is used there shall be prominently displayed in some conspicuous place a placard containing the words "Oleomargarine served here" in capital black letters not less than one and one-half inches long.

I understand this clause is not being enforced in any way whatsoever, and that there are mighty few places that are carrying out the instructions laid down by the minister in this regard. We are either going to enforce the regulations, or else we are going to do an untold amount of injury to the public and to the dairymen of Canada. Further, I wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that the customs regulations allow oleomargarine to be imported into this country in a coloured form. I hope the Minister of Customs will undertake to instruct his officers in regard to the meaning of the word "tinted." The outcome is that this oleomargarine is coming in, and if they are allowed to use a considerable amount of butter to make it palatable, then the butter is put into the oleomargarine in the United States to be shipped into Canada. The dairymen of Canada thought they had a protection of four cents a pound on butter coming into Canada from the United States, but in that regard this protection is largely wiped out, especially if you allow them to mix the butter fat with the oleomargarine in the United States, colour it, and send it into Canada in that condition. I feel that these clauses of the regulations should receive the most careful attention of the minister, and I am sure they will.

Has the minister taken into consideration the enormous number of inspectors that would be required to investigate the conditions in regard to the manufacture, sale and importation of oleomargarine? I can hardly believe that he will attempt to say that the laws are being enforced by these inspectors. I am satisfied that he will not say that they are enforced. If the minister will be good enough to tell me how many inspectors are looking after our interests in this matter I would appreciate it very greatly. I will call attention to a further Order in Council that was passed on Monday, the 19th November, 1917, clause 4 of which reads:

> That the probable output of the proposed establishment will be sufficiently large to justify the employment of an inspector.

While it is true the Government intend to appoint inspectors where the manufacture of oleomargarine is carried on, yet it is quite evident that the manufacture of this product will be entirely in the hands of the large packing companies. I understand that the oleo oils cannot be obtained from the Canadian packers. I am so informed by men who have been anxious to enter into the manufacture of oleomargarine. In clause 6 of the more recent regulations I find the following sentence:

> No milk shall be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine unless it is from tuberculin tested cows or else has been pasteurized before using, and no butter shall be used in such manufacture unless it is free from rancidity or any objectionable odour.

The original Order in Council did not allow milk and cream into the oleomargarine manufactories, but this order allows the milk and cream to be taken into the oleomargarine manufacturing plants and to be there used in any way they care to use it, in order that they may perpetrate a fraud upon the public and undermine the dairy industry.

This great industry of Canada, the dairy industry, has developed to such an extent that the production last year amounted to over $200,000,000. We have in Canada cattle and milch cows that are valued by the department at $544,000,000. Surely this is an industry that is worthy of our very best attention. I thought that possibly I might be able to amend these regulations in some way, but I find that the rules of the House debar me from doing so. Therefore I can only offer to the minister the following amendments to the regulations governing the manufacture, importation and sale of oleomargarine. In clause 2 of the Order in Council dated October 23, 1917, I propose that the words "margarine, butterine or any other substitute for butter," in the second line, and the words "or any part" in the third line, be struck out, and that clause 7 be struck out. Further, I propose that the Order in Council, dated October 19, 1917, be amended by striking out the last three lines in clause six, and that the words "or butter" be added after the word "milk" in the ninth line. These are some suggestions which I wish to place before the House.

I am sure that the minister is deeply interested in this question. He must be interested in the dairy industry of our country, because the great Northwest has been developing along these lines to a wonderful extent. Take for instance the province of Alberta. Mr. George H. Barr, of the Dominion Dairy Division said that winter creamery butter from the province of Alberta was equal to the June make of Ontario in quality and flavour. The extent to which t he dairy industry has developed is noteworthy. Dairy Commissioner Marker estimates the value of the output in his province as follows: in cheese, creamery, whole milk, cream and home dairy butter at $25,000,000. Since 1911 the number of milch cows has increased from 147,000 to 326,000 and during that time the total value of dairy products has increased from $7,855,000 to $25,000,000 per annum. The make of cheese has advanced in that time from 40,000 pounds to 1,250,000 pounds per annum. The cry of Alberta is that when Alberta is farmed as Denmark is farmed Alberta alone will be able to feed the whole British Empire. Similar statements might be made in regard to all the western provinces showing the enormous development of this industry owing to the encouragement it has had in years gone by. Look at the estimated dairy production in Canada in 1917, as shown by the following figures:

ESTIMATED DAIRY PRODUCTION IN CANADA 1917.

	Pounds.	Value.
Cheese	192,000,000	$ 41,760,000
Creamery Butter	74,000,000	31,080,000
Dairy Butter	150,000,000	60,000,000
Condensed Milk & Milk Powder.		8,000,000
Value of market milk and cream, including ice cream		50,000,000
Total Value		$190,840,000

EXPORTS.

	1916. Pounds.	1917. * Pounds.
Cheese	180,733,426	174,000,000
Butter	7,990,435	3,709,392
Condensed Milk	15,858,622	30,000,000

* Estimated.

This merely goes to show the enormous development and possibilities of this industry. The people have not a proper conception of the large capital involved in this industry. The dairymen have increased Canada's production of cheese by 45,000,000 pounds per year since the war broke out. In 1917 the cheese commission handled for export 1,860,237 boxes of cheese, or 155,662,463 pounds. The cheese crop exported through the regular channels before the cheese commission began operations amounted to 123,909 boxes weighing 10,656,174 pounds. There are 15,000 boxes yet to be delivered, making a total exportable surplus for the year 1917 of about 2,000,000 boxes, or 172,620,000 pounds of cheese valued at $37,544,850, an increase of over $4,000,000 as compared with 1916. These figures cover only the cheese shipped to the United Kingdom; shipments to other countries amount to over 1,000,000 pounds. In addition to this the amount of consumption has greatly increased. In 1914 our exports amounted to 135,000,000 pounds, while to-day the export is 180,000,000 pounds, or an increase of 45,000,000 pounds over 1914.

I am giving these figures to show that the farmers have increased their production of these commodities, and that they have improved the standard of our dairy products very materially. The present price of cheese in Canada is surely very low when you take into consideration the fact that the products the farmer feeds to his cattle have doubled in price, that the price of cattle has more than doubled, and that labour cost has very materially increased. In addition to that, all the other expenses connected with the development of the industry have materially advanced. Cheese at the price at which it sells to-day is perhaps one of the cheapest food products you can find on the market. The dairymen of Canada have practically control of the cheese market of the United Kingdom. They have had control of this market for many years. They have been assisted year after year to develop their industry and to bring it up to the greatest possible perfection in order that they might be able to create a profitable market abroad. Are we justified in doing anything to retard its development? I do not think we are.

Then, let us consider the butter industry. The total production of creamery butter in 1916 was 82,564,130 pounds, valued at $26,966,355, and the production of home made butter was 137,110,200 pounds, or 68 per cent of the total butter production of 201,808,365 pounds. At fifty cents a pound this production has a value of $100,904,182.50. The price of fifty cents a pound has been criticised to some extent, it is true, but if the people of Canada will take into consideration the increased expenses in connection with the manufacture of butter, I am sure they will not consider the price very greatly in excess of what it ought to be. In 1900 we only produced 36,667,739 pounds of creamery butter, while in 1916 we produced 82,564,130 pounds. We exported to the United Kingdom in 1916, 7,121,468 pounds of butter. Previous to the war we imported enormous quantities of butter from Australia and New Zealand to supply our demand.

Now, within the last few years we are not only able to supply the amount required in Canada, but we have been able to export over 7,000,000 pounds of butter. The Minister of Agriculture remembers, no doubt, that not many years ago we were exporting butter to the north-west provinces from the eastern provinces. Now, things have changed, and butter is coming to the eastern provinces from the West, and is sent out to the markets of the world in enormous quantities, increasing in volume year after year. The statistics of the Trade and Commerce Department for February 1916, page 34, give the value of milch cows at $274,081,000; and of other cattle at $270,595,000, making a total value of over $544,000,000. The increase in value of milch cows in three years is estimated at $76,000,000; the increase in the value of "other cattle" is given at $66,000,000; or a total increase of $142,000,000. The estimated number of milch cows in Canada is 2,666,846. We have 993 creameries in Canada, and 1,813 cheese factories, also 624 combined factories, making a total of 3,430. The patrons of these factories total 221,190. That means 221,000 families, or over one million people, engaged in the dairy business in Canada, with their cattle, barns, implements, cheese and butter factories, and all the appliances used in the operation of this industry. The Canadian exports of butter in February of this year, as compared with February, 1917, had increased from 50,000 pounds to 400,000 pounds; of cheese from 3,600,000 pounds to about 5,000,000 pounds; of eggs from 95,000 dozens to 134,000 dozens; of beef, from 1,500,000 pounds to 10,500,000 pounds; of bacon and ham from 15,600,000 pounds to 16,150,000 pounds.

4 p.m. I quote these figures to show the enormous development of the agricultural industry along these lines, and to indicate the care that the Government should use to see that no legislation is put in force that would interfere in any way with the wonderful development of this branch of commerce in our country.

We are calling for increased production. The farmers, I feel, have answered the call. The national cry is: "More beef and more bacon." The dairy industry of Canada has been fostered for years by our farmers' institutes, our travelling dairies, our experimental farms, and by the Dominion and Provincial Governments, and it would be nothing short of a calamity if, by introducing legislation such as I have read, we were to discourage or to undermine to any extent the development of this great industry. What would a few million pounds of oleomargarine amount to, if by bringing it into this country we permanently injure the great industry to which I have called attention.

We are teaching agriculture in the schools. Our agricultural colleges are rendering great assistance. Both are doing everything possible to develop the live-stock industry. We have "better farming trains," demonstration trains, district representatives, co-operative societies, printing and publishing facilities, women's institutes, demonstration farms, experimental farms, and livestock associations, all assisting in the development of the dairy industry. Therefore, I respectfully urge upon the Minister of Agriculture the need of investigating the suggestions I have placed before him, and of immediate action being taken to safeguard the public of Canada. When you give the dairy industry of Canada proper protective legislation in regard to the importation, manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, you protect the public against being defrauded and deceived. I do not feel that I should resume my seat without again asking the Minister of Agriculture to see to it that he put forth his best efforts to have the regulations changed in such a way that they will protect the great dairy industry of Canada.

Mr. GUSTAVE BOYER (Vaudreuil) (translation) Mr. Speaker, last year I had the honour of laying before this House a petition signed by nearly 29,000 farmers of the province of Quebec protesting against the admission of oleomargarine into this country.

I was very pleased to hear the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) speak so interestingly of that question here today.

[Mr. Armstrong.]

When we made our protest last year 800 agricultural societies of the province of Quebec adopted a resolution which they forwarded to the Minister of Agriculture. I myself went to see the hon. Minister and asked him to kindly consent to receive a delegation composed of all the higher personages, that is of the chairmen and secretaries of different societies, agricultural and otherwise, of the province of Quebec; at that time the hon. Minister of Agriculture made me this answer: "There is no need of coming in a delegation to Ottawa as the Government will not adopt any Order in Council before submitting the question to Parliament itself." Well, this was not done; and, when the Government recently adopted this Order in Council, I came back to Ottawa in company with certain agricultural authorities of the province of Ontario; but so far our efforts have been fruitless.

I realize that as things are at present the farmer cannot suffer a great deal through the introduction of oleomargarine into the country, because we cannot make enough butter for export overseas. The danger is not immediate; but the danger will become really serious if this measure is persisted in after the war, and the strongest proof of this was demonstrated by the hon. member for Lambton. We have at present in this country a material organisation worth millions of dollars represented in factories and herds; and if you remember well it is not so very long ago that we had to import from New Zealand the surplus of butter that we required for our own consumption. We have directed all the efforts of the farmers towards a greater production of butter and we have succeeded in bringing this production to the point where it is today.

This Order in Council, as the hon. member for Lambton explained so well, is too broad, it is too pregnant with danger, it opens the door far too wide to wrongful uses.

We have first the product called oleomargarine; next we have margarine; and finally, butterine. There is a little difference between these three products. Margarine is manufactured exclusively from beef suet; butterine is derived in part from beef suet and in part from a mixture of half milk and half butter, while oleomargarine is made from beef suet and cotton-seed oil. This last has the most nutritive value and is the best substitute for butter.

Now, if these products are allowed into the country free of duty; if, still further, their manufacture is permitted here; if this measure remains in force after the war, the results will be disastrous for the farmer. The departments of agriculture in the different provinces have done a great deal towards persuading the farmer to give more attention to butter manufacture; and if today their efforts are opposed and favour shown these butter substitutes, we will discourage our population and that will be the end of dairy industry.

As my hon. friend from East Lambton so well established a moment ago, the nature of butterine, of oleomargarine and of margarine is not the same; there is a decided difference between each one of these products; and if we continue to allow the manufacture of certain substitutes which in reality are products of very inferior quality, and which will be thrown on our markets in great quantities, what will happen? We will discourage our farmers and they will almost entirely abandon this industry; all that we have accomplished to create and develop the dairy industry will be wasted effort and, moreover, our markets will be glutted with inferior products which, no matter what may be said, can never replace real butter made from pure cow's milk.

Let us come now, Mr. Speaker, to the principal reason put forth to justify the permission granted for the manufacture of these substitutes. We were told that it was in the interest of the working-classes on account of the high price of butter. That is not so; I believe that it was rather to insure greater profits to a few canning factories; and the enormous profits derived from this manufacture will be limited to these few canners, while in the case of butter the profits go to an entire class of the population, the agricultural class.

Now, Mr. Speaker it is said that the farmers have no reason to complain of this measure since it was endorsed with a view to their protection. That is false; the measure is entirely to their detriment.

I remember that before this measure was adopted the women's societies in certain cities asked the Government to pass this law on the pretense that it would reduce the cost of living. Let's get at the truth in this matter. Oleomargarine sells for 37 cents a pound and butter is selling just now for 50 cents. The manufacture of the first of these products costs in the neighbourhood of 12 cents a pound; and still it is sold for 37 cents. Now I wish to ask any man of common sense if there is such an enormous margin between the cost price and the selling price of a pound of butter as in the case of oleomargarine. No, Mr. Speaker, the people of this country are the victims of robbery, pure and simple, when the market price of a substitute composed of grease fat, cottonseed oil and other animal products is 37 cents per pound, while the cost of manufacture is merely 12 cents, and I declare further that the Government which legalises this robbery is as guilty as are the manufacturers themselves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this product is sold for 37 cents a pound, is it because it really has this value? No, if it brings that price it is only so as to swell the profits of the manufacturers.

What danger theatens the country, if the manufacture of this product continue to be allowed? Precisely the same which threatened and which injured certain States of the Union. The sale of these substitutes on the markets of the States had for effect the discouragement of the dairy industry; and this is so true that immediately following the adoption of this measure by the States the stock in the milch herds fell away, on account of the strong competition that these substitutes brought to bear against dairy products. Not very long ago merchants from these same States travelled through the province of Quebec and through Ontario and the different eastern provinces buying what milch cattle they could procure in order to fill up the gaps in their own dairy stables at home in the States. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, these same States today form a group which vigourously opposes and always has opposed the authorization by the United States Government of the manufacture of oleomargarine and of butterine. They met with some success; but the united interests of the American manufacturers were so powerful that they succeeded in having the authorisation of the manufacture of these products continued. Now as to taste, there is not an enormous difference, since it is always possible to impart to this product the flavour of real butter. You can't give it the aroma of butter but you can come very near to giving it the butter flavour.

Well, things remained at that stage with the American Government for several years; and then the manufacturers of these substitutes got busy again and asked the legislature to permit them to colour their oleomargarine. They said to the legislature: "Put on a tax of 10 cents a pound if you wish, but let us colour this product." They want to make it easier to fool the public, for no one but an expert could tell the difference between real butter and this product.

In the United States they allowed this change, but they put on a tax of 10 cents per pound. Do you know what happened? To elude the law the manufacturers continued to sell their product without colouring; but they took the precaution of putting in the same wrapper which enclosed the brick of margarine capsules containing a solution which, mixed with a certain quantity of water, gave to the margarine the appearance of butter. That is how the public and the Government were fooled for several years. According to an official bulletin the American Government was mulcted of several million dollars in this way.

We have allowed the importation of oleomargarine into this country and we have authorized its manufacture here.

I say now, after the study that I have made of the matter, that this industry will remain in the hands of a few people. Before long these people will control the oleomargarine market just as was done in the United States.

Some will answer: but in England, in Denmark and in other European countries aren't these substitutes manufactured and imported? I admit that; but England's population is so dense that she cannot manufacture all the butter she needs for her own consumption. The Danes manufacture an enormous amount of butter and also oleomargarine, and they prefer to eat margarine so as to export a greater quantity of their products; but here where we have a tremendous expanse of territory, the best of grazing lands and a climate which is favourable to the dairy industry, to authorize the importation and the manufacture of these butter substitutes is to put a stop to the progress of the dairy industry, in order to meet the demands of the manufacturers of these products.

As the hon. member for Lambton said a moment ago, we have equipped the entire country for the dairy industry. This represents a considerable outlay of capital. What will become of this capital if tomorrow this organisation is opposed by the oleomargarine factories?

Now, the strongest argument in favour of oleomargarine is that the sale or the manufacture of this product will reduce the cost of living. I am willing to admit that, even at 37 cents a pound oleomargarine still costs less than butter at 50 cents; only for 50 cents you do get a pound of butter, whereas for 37 cents you do not get the value of a pound of butter, you do not even receive the cash value of your 37 cents, since it does not cost that much to manufacture oleomargarine.

As the hon. member for Lambton said a moment ago, the Order in Council is too wide, because it allows the importation of all the products which resemble butter.

I will be glad to vote for the resolution of the hon. member from Lambton because I believe it to be wise and I feel sure that all those members who represent agricultural communities believe as I do. We are here to protect the farmers' interests, and to shield the dairy industry which we have established in this country after a great deal of ceaseless striving. This is not the time to offer the public a product which is not butter and which cannot replace butter; before long, oleomargarine will be sold not for 37 cents but for 50 cents; in the long run it is still the poor down-trodden consumer who will bear the burden.

Mr. MICHAEL STEELE (Perth South): Mr. Speaker, representing, as I do, an agricultural constituency, one of the leading dairy districts of Canada, I need offer no apology for giving expression to a few thoughts on the subject which has been brought to the attention of the House so well this afternoon by the member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong).

The history of the county of Perth relates that some eighty or ninety years ago there were transplanted from good old Scotland to a certain township of the county of Perth representatives of the clan Crerar. Those representatives took root and grew in our county, developing into some of the leading representatives of the live stock industry in western Canada. I have confidence that any member of that clan, later transplanted to the prairies of the West, would not be a true representative of the clan should he not retain a very great interest in the live stock and dairy interests of Canada. Believing that, I am sure that the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. T. A. Crerar) has a deep interest in the dairy industry, and it is no evidence of lack of interest on his part that steps have been taken by the Government to permit the importation into and the manufacture of oleomargarine in this country.

I need not emphasize the importance of the dairy industry, which has been brought to the attention of the House by the member for East Lambton. We in this country all recognize the great importance of that industry, and believe that it should not be interfered with in any respect without good cause. We know, too, that the cost of producing dairy products in the last few years has increased about seventy-five per cent. The increase in the price of dairy products has scarcely kept pace with the increase in the cost. As the statistics given by the member for East Lambton go to show, there is no scarcity of butter in Canada. The argument put forward in support of permitting the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine—that it is required because of the shortage of butter—is not based on fact. I repeat that there is no scarcity of butter in Canada; more than that, dairy foods are among the cheapest, even at the present high prices, which the people of Canada can use. Let me give you the cost of various dairy products, at present prices, per one thousand energy units or calories: butter, at 43 cents a pound, 14 cents; cheese, at 30 cents a pound, 13 cents; milk, at 10 cents a quart, 15 cents. Compare these prices with the prices of some of our meats. Sirloin steak at 32 cents will cost 23 cents per one thousand energy units. Pork chops at 36 cents a pound will cost 25 cents per one thousand energy units. We see, therefore, that dairy products are very much cheaper than the meats which we love so well. If we except cereals, there are among the leading foods which we consume no cheaper foods than dairy products.

With these facts before us, it is only reasonable that we should inquire why oleomargarine was demanded in this country. The demand came not from the consumers to any great extent—although a limited number of the consumers of butter did ask for it—but largely from the firms and interests who were anxious to enter upon the manufacture of oleomargarine. For months a continuous stream of articles and advertisements appeared in the newspapers calling the attention of the people of Canada to the necessity for oleomargarine and to certain arguments why this product should be used. I say that the demand came from these parties, who are not interested in the dairy industry, but who are rather competitors with our farmers in the production of dairy foods.

It is most important that Canada maintain the standard of purity and the reputation of her dairy products. We have built up a reputation in this respect which is possibly unsurpassed by that of any other country in the world, and it is most important that we should maintain it. This we can do only by looking after the standard of purity of these products. The United States lost their export trade when they began to dabble in adulterates of their dairy products and to offer substitutes therefor, and the same thing will happen in Canada if we permit a similar system to be adopted here.

A condition exists in Canada which does not exist in other countries where the demand for oleomargarine has been great. In the European countries, and possibly in the United States, the production of dairy products and butter does not supply the demand, but in Canada our production is greater than our requirements—and we have not yet nearly reached the limit of that production.

One of the arguments put forward by advocates of oleomargarine was the price of butter. I have pointed out that butter, even at present prices, is one of the cheapest foods that our people can use. Another argument was the scarcity of butter. I have shown that butter is not scarce in Canada; the fact that we have been able to export from eight to ten million pounds during recent years goes to show that there is no scarcity of that product.

The third argument is a rather peculiar one: that there is necessity for additional fats for our people. If the manufacturers of oleomargarine can show us that they are producing for the people any additional or increased quantity of fats, then we may say that there is something in the argument; but as a matter of fact they are not. There are no more fats now than there were before the manufacture of oleomargarine was commenced; the only change is one of form.

Oleomargarine is put forth as a substitute for butter. It is not and never can be a substitute for butter. Butter has many advantages over it; I will not take time at present to set them out in detail. It is, however, recognized by every one that butter is more easily digested than oleomargarine, and that for children it is incomparably better than oleomargarine. Oleomargarine is not a substitute for butter, and was never intended as such; it is intended only as an imitation, and the manner in which it is manufactured and put up is evidence of that. For instance, it is coloured to look like butter; it is flavoured to taste like butter, and it is priced so as to come as near to butter in that respect as the market will permit.

What is the composition of this substance known as oleomargarine? The manufacturers use very nice terms to describe its composition, but, using ordinary every-day language, I would say it consists chiefly of tallow, lard and cotton-seed oil. Nor is the composition always uniform. We have from twenty-two to forty-seven per cent of tallow in different samples. Of lard, we shall find from six to twenty-eight per cent in the different samples. Of cotton oil, we shall find from fifteen to forty-nine per cent in the different samples. You see, therefore, there is a very great variation in the composition. If oleomargarine is allowed to be made in Canada, there should be some uniform formula which the Canadian manufacturers shall follow, so that the consumers of this substance will know exactly what they are eating.

Butter is used to some extent in oleomargarine. I doubt, however, if it is used to the extent to which some manufacturers claim it is used. Why is butter used in oleomargarine if the fats therein are as good as butter fat? Butter is used rather to defraud and deceive the people. It is used to make the oleomargarine look like butter, because the manufacturer recognizes that one of the strongest claims which oleomargarine has upon the people of Canada is that it looks like butter.

When oleomargarine is allowed to be manufactured in this country, we are building up competition with the production of dairy products. With that competition there will necessarily be a reduced production of butter and cheese. Reduced production of dairy products means a vast loss to the Dominion of Canada, especially in these days. It means a reduced production of butter, and that means a reduction in the amount of fat in the world, and we know the world is calling for fat. It means not only a reduction of fat in milk and butter, but a reduction in our dairy herds. The more keen the competition, the more difficult it is for our dairymen to maintain their industry, and the more difficult it is for our dairymen to maintain their industry the more temptation there is to reduce their dairy herds. With the reduction in our dairy herds, there follows a reduction in our livestock industry and our meat producing animals. There follows also, a reduction in our hog industry. These are results which we in Canada, I am sure, do not wish to see at the present time. Not only does it mean a reduction in our meats and daily food, but, as the dairy industry is essential to the fertility of the soil, it means lessened cereal production. That, I am sure, is felt by the farmers of Ontario as well as by farmers throughout the remainder of Canada.

There is another reason—and this resolution to-day deals with it very directly—which seems to me is a strong one why oleomargarine should not be permitted to be manufactured in this country at all. We find that in all countries in which it is manufactured it is surrounded by many regulations, but we find also that, notwithstanding all the regulations that are brought forward, there are very great numbers of violations of the law and very great numbers of frauds perpetrated by the manufacturers and by those who deal in oleomargarine in either a wholesale or a retail way. In 1914, in the United States there were 2,705 prosecutions for violations of the oleomargarine law. In 1915, there were 2,777 prosecutions. In 1916 there were 1,882 prosecutions. Those prosecutions included manufacturers, wholesale and retail dealers, and forty-four of the violators of the law were sent to jail. Since 1902, it is estimated that the United States has lost $27,000,000 in revenue owing to frauds perpetrated in connection with the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, and that in the same time there have been sold about 200,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine as butter. The manufacturers of oleomargarine have frequently a distinct objection to putting their product on the market before the people as the article which they manufacture, but they have a strong desire to put it before the people as butter, knowing that after all, the people have a preference for butter over oleomargarine.

In Great Britain there are no regulations against the colouring of oleomargarine, so that the frauds in that country are even more numerous than they are in the United States. Under our regulations, if oleomargarine is allowed into this country coloured it means that the difficulties in the way of our protecting the dairy industry against the imitation will be that much greater, and we shall have the same condition as exists in Great Britain.

Under the Order in Council, oleomargarine is now admitted into this country, but there is no reason at all why, under the regulations, the manufacturers of oleomargarine should have a preference over the manufacturers of butter. It seems to me that the framers of the regulations now in force must have been impressed by the science of eugenics and they decided to adopt that science in administering the importation and manufacture of this article, for this reason, that while the manufacturer of oleomargarine may add butter to his product, the manufacturer of butter is not allowed to add oleomargarine to his product. How does that work out in eugenics? It means that if you mate oleomargarine with butter you improve the oleomargarine, but if you mate butter with oleomargarine you impair the quality of the butter. It is a new science adopted by the department. I hope they will not carry it very much further along this line.

Another matter which I think the department should insist upon in connection with the manufacture of oleomargarine is that while there should be a uniform formula followed by the manufacturers, the price of oleomargarine should also be set. There are objections to that, I know, but if the intention of the manufacturers is, as they state, to give to the people of this country who are unable to pay the higher prices for butter, the fats which they require for the replenishment of their bodies, then those fats should be supplied at a price which is not exorbitant. The Department of Agriculture should fix the price of oleomargarine so that it will not be put on the market only a few cents, say six or eight cents, below the price of butter, just a sufficient difference to attract people who want a cheaper article. I am glad to know that this Order in Council was put through as a war measure, and I trust that when this war is over it will be removed, and that our dairy industry will not be any longer threatened with the competition and the frauds which will exist under the Order in Council that has been passed regarding the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine.

Mr. E. W. NESBITT (North Oxford): I am very sorry that while I have had an opportunity for some years in listening to my hon. friends on the other side of the House, I still could not this afternoon follow my hon. friend opposite who spoke on this question. I rise merely for the purpose of endorsing what has been said by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. J. E. Armstrong) with reference to oleomargarine. If the regulations are in any way loose they should be made absolutely tight. If oleomargarine is imported into this country it should be imported in such a manner that it can be guaranteed to be pure and manufactured in a first class manner. There was undoubtedly a demand from the people for oleomargarine on account of the high price of butter. My hon. friend from Perth (Mr. Steele) says he comes from one of the best dairying districts of Canada; that is quite true, but I come from the very best district.

Mr. McMASTER: Question!

Mr. NESBITT: There is no question about it. I confess that the farmers of my constituency were very much opposed to oleomargarine being imported, but the townspeople wanted it, and so long as this Government is here to represent the interests of all classes of the people, they will have to act according to their best judgment. We may as well face the truth that workingmen in the cities and towns cannot afford to buy butter at its present price; but it is also true that if oleomargarine is well made it cannot be sold very much cheaper than butter, though it can be made more extensively, if I may use the word, because it is manufactured in a slightly different way. Personally, I do not believe that oleomargarine, if well made and sold under proper regulations, will decrease the price of good butter to any considerable degree; and if the butter is not good, it is no better than oleomargarine, if as good. I am happy to say, however, that in Ontario, at all events, and I hope in all the other provinces, the butter that is made nowadays is very good. Before the war it could compete in Europe with the very best Danish and Irish butter, and that is saying a good deal. I shall not take up longer the time of the House. I only rose to say that I absolutely endorse the suggestion of my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) that the regulations, if too loose, should be tightened, and the greatest possible care taken to see that the oleomargarine is well made and to prevent fraud of any kind in its sale. If we are to import oleomargarine, the conditions surrounding it up to the time of its importation should be absolutely first-class in every way. The farmers who are opposed to the importation of oleomargarine fear that it may reduce the price of butter to some extent, but, so far, I have not heard of its having had that effect in the section of the country where I live. I believe as firmly as I believe I am standing here, that if the Government are cautious and surround its importation, manufacture and sale with proper regulations, good will accrue rather than harm to the people generally.

Mr. F. H. KEEFER (Port Arthur): I wish to concur in what has been said by my hon. friend from Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) with regard to the good results that may be expected from the importation of oleomargarine into this country. The reason why it was introduced was to supply the poor man's table with the fats that are essential to the human constitution. The price of butter, not through any corner in the dairying industry, not that the dairymen were getting too much—in fact, they were not getting enough—had gone up very considerably, because of the immense demand by the Allies, chiefly for evaporated milk for the soldiers. The milk that was used for that purpose came into competition with the milk used in the manufacture of butter, and forced the price of butter up. The price of butter was not too high; it rose to fifty-two, whilst formerly it was down to thirty or thirty-five cents. Complaints were coming in from various directions that working people were compelled to do without the animal fats which they absolutely needed. It was therefore deemed advisable in the interests of the working man of this country to allow the importation of oleomargarine as a war measure. The objections which have been raised on account of any possibilities of fraud were met by the Order in Council. The frauds in connection with the revenue of the United States were incurred because of the excise duty on the manufacture of oleomargarine. In drawing up the regulations it was thought advisable not to have this duty, and thereby avoided the difficulties they have had in the United States, and we are also getting the oleomargarine at the cheapest possible price. That also answers the argument that it was the interests who urged the Government to allow the entry of oleomargarine. If that were so, why let it come in free of duty? Any householder to-day in Canada—he does not have to be a dealer—can apply for a license to import oleomargarine and obtain it without having to pay any fee. The sole reason for allowing the importation and sale of oleomargarine is to supply the necessary fats for the poor man's table. With regard to manufacture and fixing a price, it it not advisable to put a maximum price on anything if it is possible to avoid it. That is the very reason why oleomargarine has been brought in; two courses were open: one was to fix a maximum price for butter, which would have been most detrimental to the farming interests of the country, or secondly, to help out the situation by importing oleomargarine. If we fixed a maximum price for oleomargarine, we should be defeating the very object of the regulations allowing it to come in. With regard to the manufacture of oleomargarine in this country, the regulations are not unchangeable like the laws of the Medes and Persians, but are in the hands of the Department of Agriculture, who have the dairying industry of the country most at heart. If the regulations are found to be too loose they can easily be amended, but in my opinion they are most stringent, far more stringent than in the United States, where many complaints have been received on account of the strictness of the Canadian regulations. I should like any member of this House who has any doubts to see some of the letters which have come in since oleomargarine has been allowed to be imported—letters of gratitude from workingmen who heretofore were unable to buy the necessary fats—thanking the Government for what has been done.

Mr. W. F. NICKLE: We have heard from the member from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), and the member for South Perth (Mr. Steele) this afternoon that in the interests of the farmer the importation of oleomargarine into this country should be prohibited.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: I did not say that.

Mr. NICKLE: I will change the word to regulated. The reasons given in support of their argument are these: First, that if the product is improperly manufactured it is detrimental to health, and secondly, that there should be regulations because there is a possibility of the importation interfering with the dairying industry. In so far as they assert that every protection should be thrown about the commodity to see that the people are not given food that is injurious to them, I am in hearty accord with them, but when they assert that there was in this country prior to oleomargarine being permitted to be imported sufficient fats to meet the ordinary requirements of the people, I must differ with them, and differ most radically.

In a constituency which has no rural electorate, I know as a fact that butter has reached such a price that it is impossible for the poorer-paid class of the community to purchase it at all, and this class is using dripping and other sorts of fat to take the place of butter and similar commodities, which have hitherto been used on their table. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Steele) argues that, because Canada prior to the war exported butter, there was more butter manufactured in Canada than we actually required. I am quite prepared to admit that, if Canada was manufacturing more butter than she can consume and was exporting butter, there might be something in the hon. gentleman's argument, but the figures are there; for the year ending March 31st, 1914, Canada exported 1,228,753 pounds of butter, and during the same period she imported 7,000,000 pounds of butter, which would lead us to the conclusion that Canada was not making enough butter to supply her wants, and had to import a large quantity. For the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1917, Canada exported 7,990,435 pounds of butter, and the reason she was exporting such a large amount of butter, as compared with what she exported in 1914, was that in England the price of butter had been fixed at somewhere over 53 cents, and in the United States I think the price was 50 cents a pound. In other words, the price of butter was determined by the export price, and you could obtain in Great Britain, owing to the necessities of the case, a sufficiently large price to justify exporting the article to that country. The result was that so much butter was exported from Canada that a sufficient quantity to normally supply the needs of the country was not retained in Canada. The price rose from 35 cents to 50 cents a pound, and the foreign market was practically unlimited. In 1914 Britain imported 446,000,000 pounds of butter, and in 1916 she imported 224,000,000 pounds. In the year 1913-1914 England imported from Norway, Sweden, Denmark and the Netherlands 250,000,000 pounds of butter, and in 1916 she imported from other countries 132,000,000 pounds of butter, and there is now an embargo on exportations from those countries, which would lead to the conclusion that the demand for butter from Canada will increase. You might say, "Oh, you are only directing your argument to present day conditions." True, that is the position I have taken so far, that the conditions of the war have increased the price of butter, and the conditions in the cities are bearing so heavily on the working classes, and the necessity of people obtaining an article to take the place of butter is so great that the people are entitled to have a cheaper product. I regret we are only importing at the present time 1,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine per month from the United States. From the constituency from which I come, we get oleomargarine at 32 cents a pound. I think butter sells from 45 to 48 cents. I have used oleomargarine.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: How did you like it?

Mr. NICKLE: The Minister of Trade and Commerce asks me how I liked it. Used on bread, I may say that oleomargarine was not as satisfactory to me as the commodity I got in England with him, at one of the hospitals, but for shortening purposes I am informed by those of my household, that it most satisfactorily takes the place of the higher priced article.

Now, in regard to the war—What are the conditions in Europe to-day? The herds of Europe are being depleted, and it is going to take time to restore the conditions which existed prior to the war, and it seems to me that high prices for a long time are bound to prevail in regard to butter. At the present time I understand that Canada is supplying less than 2 per cent of the requirements of Great Britain in the matter of butter, and supplying, on the other hand, somewhere about 67 per cent of the cheese requirements. If these figures are correct in regard to Canada's position as an exporting and importing country, and if the suggested conditions exist after the war, it does not seem to me unreasonable that we who live in the city should ask of those who live in the country that, for the present, at least, the importation of oleomargarine into Canada should be allowed, but under such conditions as will ensure that the imported or manufactured article shall be sanitary and safe as a food product.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The reason I desire to say a word on this subject is that I represent a constituency which, in the matter of cheese production, stands fifth or sixth in the counties of the province of Ontario. In eastern Ontario we are not so much concerned in regard to the manufacture of butter as they are in western Canada. Eastern Ontario and western Quebec are vitally concerned in that part of the dairying industry which has relation to the production of cheese, and anything which has a tendency to prejudicially affect the dairy industry in regard to the production of cheese in those portions of the two provinces is entitled to the very earnest and careful consideration of the Government. For a great many years the farmers of the eastern part of Ontario and the western part of Quebec have worked long, earnestly and intelligently to build up an industry which has made a name for this country, and an industry on which the farmers of those parts to which I refer depend, I might say almost entirely, for their revenue and their sustenance. I wish to commend the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), and the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Steele) for the information they have given the House this afternoon. They have given us figures with regard to the amount of capital invested in the dairy industry and the amount of the product of that industry, and those figures must impress every person in this House with the very great importance of that industry to the Dominion of Canada. Therefore, I approach this question from this standpoint: how will the importation and the manufacture of oleomargarine in the Dominion of Canada affect the people engaged in the great dairying industry? I am not going to raise any objection to the regulations which have been passed by the Government as war regulations allowing the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine. While the people in my part of the country do not altogether like the regulations which have been adopted, as they are not in accord with their ideas of what is in the best interests of dairying, they have raised no serious objection regarding it as a war measure, being prepared to abide by the result until such time as the war is over. But I would raise a very strong objection to the permanent adoption of any regulation or the passing of any law which would allow the importation or manufacture of oleomargarine in the Dominion of Canada after the war is over. I cannot agree with the argument which has been advanced by the hon. gentleman from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) with regard to a portion of the people in that city being unable to provide their table with butter because of the high price. If it can be shown that the fats which are unquestionably needed for the health of our bodies cannot be otherwise obtained, I will admit that his argument is a proper one, but I am not prepared to accept the statement that there is justification for permitting the importation and manufacure of oleomargarine in Canada because of the high price to which butter has risen in this country.

I am not prepared to accept that, because, while it is true that the price of butter in 1916-17 was a few cents higher than it was in 1912 or 1913, the consumer, taking into consideration the wages that he was receiving in 1916 and 1917, was in a better position to purchase butter at the price at which butter was selling in 1917 than possibly he would be able to pay the price they were charging for butter five or six years ago. I do not believe that a workman in Kingston, or in any other city in Canada, was deprived of the use of butter because of the price of it. I may be wrong in that; of course, we all have the right to our opinions.

There is another point I want to call attention to. Large quantities of oleomargarine are in use in Great Britain, about 1,000,000,000 pounds a year. I believe the consumption in the United States is some 500,000,000 pounds a year. My information is that in 1911, of the 500,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine produced in the United States only 92,000,000 pounds was actually sold over the counter as oleomargarine. Over 400,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine was sold over the counter in the United States as butter. Let me give an illustration. Here is a storekeeper and he is handling butter and oleomargarine. A farmer comes along with his basket of butter in the morning, he has 25 pounds of butter, and he says: "What will you give me for the butter?" The storekeeper says: "I will give you," we will say, "48 cents a pound for your butter." "Very good." He takes the farmer's 25 pounds of butter, pays him 48 cents a pound, and he puts it on one side. Then he buys 100 pounds of oleomargarine at what price I do not know—we will say 20 cents a pound, if you like, or at very much less than he paid the farmer for the butter. He also puts that on one side. A customer comes in and says: "I would like to buy five pounds of butter." This customer is one who pays his accounts regularly and it will not do for the grocer to take any chance on fooling him, so he goes and gets the butter which he bought from the farmer; he weighs the customer out five pounds and makes a profit of about ten cents. Another fellow comes along, a poor labouring man, and he also wants to buy five pounds of butter. He is not very expert in telling the difference between oleomargarine and butter, he does not pay his accounts quite so regularly and the storekeeper can take a chance on fooling him. So he hands him out five pounds of oleomargarine as butter and gets the price of butter, pocketing a profit of 30 cents or 20 cents a pound. That is no fairy tale. It illustrates what is actually taking place throughout the United States. They have an excise tax on oleomargarine over there and the manufacture is under government inspection. They are thus enabled to know how much is produced in that country. There is an excise tax on every pound that is sold and in that way they arrive at the quantity of oleomargarine which is sold as oleomargarine. The United States, in order to prevent the storekeepers from selling oleomargarine as butter, which he could not very well do unless he coloured the oleomargarine, because oleomargarine when manufactured is white and its colour is very different from that of butter, imposes a tax on coloured oleomargarine. But they get over the difficulty by using colouring matter and they colour the oleomargarine so as to make it look very much like butter. You could not tell the difference from the appearance. The United States put a tax of ten cents a pound on coloured oleomargarine with a view of stopping the sale of oleomargarine as butter, and they have a tax of only one-quarter of a cent a pound on white or uncoloured oleomargarine. The storekeeper on the other side of the line, who is handling perhaps thousands of pounds of oleomargarine, provides himself with colouring matter done up in little gelatine capsules. A man who comes into buy some oleomargarine, and who is on to his job, so to speak, is going to get the white article. He knows his oleomargarine, and he gets it at a lower price. He gets several pounds of this oleomargarine and the storekeeper hands him out one of these capsules of colouring matter, because the man who is buying this article may have some visitors in to take dinner or to take tea with him and he does not want to put what appears to be oleomargarine on the table. He wants to put on the table something that looks like butter. So the customer gets a little capsule of colouring matter whereby he can convert the oleomargarine into butter and use it for his visitors.

I understand that in the United States they have a standard for oleomargarine. I believe the standard they have in the United States—the minister may probably be in a position to correct me if I am wrong—is as follows:

	Per cent.
Oleo oil	34.26
Constituents of milk	28.09
Neutral lard	16.27
Cotton seed oil	14.26
Salt	7.12

In looking over the regulations which my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) read this afternoon, I did not see anything in regard to the standard of oleomargarine in this country. Of course, we know that all imported oleomargarine coming from the United States will be of the standard adopted in the United States, because it is all manufactured there under Government inspection. But I cannot see in the regulations anything which places any restrictions upon the manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada. I think there should be restrictions. I think the manufacturer here should be strictly limited in regard to the amount of butter or cream which he is allowed to use in the manufacture of oleomargarine. In Great Britain they do place a restriction in that regard, and I think they are not allowed to use more than ten per cent of butter fat in the manufacture of oleomargarine. If more than that quantity of butter fat is used it is not called oleomargarine but must be called by another name, and I think it is called butterine. In the regulations, as I read them very hastily, there seems to be no distinction. Oleomargarine is defined as:

> Oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, or any other substitute for butter which manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that from milk and cream, which contains no foreign colouring matter and which does not contain more than 16 per cent of water.

If the people are to be permitted to use oleomargarine, they should know what the constituents of that oleomargarine are, and what percentage of butter or cream is used in the manufacture of it and what the other constituents are. I wanted particularly to call the minister's attention to that. There may be some regulation in regard to that in so far as Canada is concerned, but if so, I have not noticed it and I thought it of sufficient importance to direct his attention to it.

Before taking my seat, I would like to say that when the war is over and we get back to normal conditions, before the Government considers allowing the manufacture or importation of oleomargarine permanently, the whole question ought to engage their very serious attention. It is all right to refer to what they do in countries like the United States and England but we must take conditions as we have them in Canada where the bulk of our population is a farming population. Another feature is that in the West our farmers engage principally in the raising of grain. To some extent, especially in Alberta, they have gone into dairying, and I hope that they will go more extensively into it, but the great work of the West is in the production of grain. In the East our farmers have been obliged to depend upon dairying to a very great extent. Their future wellbeing depends upon the success of dairying, and that fact must not be overlooked. It should not be overlooked also that in this day and age of the world we do not estimate or measure our distances by miles; we estimate and measure distances in minutes, or the time it takes to go from one place to another; and the farmers in Ontario and Quebec are up against climatic conditions which place them at a very great disadvantage in producing many articles with which they have competition in the markets of the world. That is something which should be taken into consideration before we allow the permanent introduction of an article which might jeopardize the future of a great industry, built up with very great labour and care, and the exercise of great intelligence.

Mr. JOSEPH READ (Prince): I am a voice from the East. I desire to say a few words on this question. In my province, particularly my constituency, we have one of the great dairying centres of Canada. I might say that our people have not only to depend upon the dairy industry as such, but the very basic necessity for successful agriculture with us is the maintenance of the dairy industry, because of the value tied up in the herds used in that industry. The same conditions do not apply so much to the West, because the western farmer, as yet, is simply skimming the virgin soil of that great country. But, in the eastern provinces, it is absolutely necessary to maintain the dairy industry because of its manureal value. Therefore, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution (Mr. J. E. Armstrong), that the Government should be very careful about how it handles this matter. By all means, it should not create such a vested interest in the manufacture of oleomargarine and that class of goods that there would be the necessity to maintain it after the war. Let us import oleomargarine if we have to, but let us not create manufacturing industries in Canada in such a way that we cannot get clear of them after the war is over.

I want to draw attention to some fallacies in connection with this matter. For instance, one hon. gentleman stated that we were importing more butter than we were exporting. That would appear as if Canada could not make enough butter for its own needs. Butter and cheese are both made from milk, and if we produce a very large quantity of cheese we produce that much less butter; and the reason why we do not produce enough butter for ourselves is on account of the high price of cheese, due entirely to war conditions. Cheese, as we all know, is particularly the Englishman's food. It is one of the most concentrated foods that we have, and because of the difficulties of transportation it is one of the most desirable products that Canada can produce for the purpose of winning the war. In so far as the importation of oleomargarine will enable us to produce more cheese, we are helping to win the war by allowing it to enter, because cheese is what is wanted at the front. It is one of the easiest things to transport, is highly nutritious, and one of the most highly concentrated foods that they could get at the front. Therefore, while we are producing cheese for the armies of our allies, we should by all means produce as much of it as we can.

In this connection I would like to say a word with regard to the fixing of a price on cheese this season. The price of cheese this season ought to be raised considerably above that of last year, and so far as our Government has control of the matter in negotiating with the Imperial authorities, who, I presume, will be taking our cheese, they should draw the attention of those authorities to the fact that the high prices they pay are pure fallacies. The man who gets 22 cents a pound for his cheese to-day is not getting any more than if he were getting 11 cents in ante-bellum days, because it is the value of the dollar that has gone down and not the price of cheese that has gone up. I was out in British Columbia a couple of weeks ago visiting some of my friends, and I was astonished to find that nearly all the gold mining had been suspended, and I enquired why the people were not mining gold. They said: "Oh, it does not pay us to mine gold; it is far better for us to mine copper and lead, because the price of gold remains where it was before, and these other metals have gone up." Gold has gone down, as a matter of fact, for it has a fixed value or price, and as everything else has advanced, it has left the gold relatively low.

One hon. member spoke about the high prices the farmers are getting for their products. He must remember that these high prices are purely fictitious; they are based upon a gold standard that is fixed, while, as a matter of fact, the value of gold has gone down, and a dollar is worth only fifty cents intrinsically.

Now, I want to say a few words with regard to estimating distances. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Edwards) spoke about measuring distances not in miles but in time. We do not measure distances with regard to transportation either in miles or in time, but in freight rates, and one of the things hon. gentlemen should always remember when they are discussing questions in connection with transportation problems is to measure all distances by the rate of freight per ton, per bushel, or per pound as the case may be, because it makes a great deal of difference if you talk about transportation in miles or in time, when it is the freight rate which really represents distance. I am in favour of this resolution in so far as it draws the Government's attention to the fact that this matter is of very serious importance to the farming population of the Maritime Provinces, as well as of Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I do not differ from the statements made by the member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) and the member for South Perth (Mr. Steele), because their grounds are well taken in so far as they desire to protect the great dairying industry of Canada. At the same time, I agree with the member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) that many people cannot afford to pay from fifty to sixty cents per pound for butter and the vast majority of the people desire that oleomargarine, under proper regulations, be admitted into Canada.

During my two years' service at the front I used oleomargarine in place of butter. In England to-day they use oleomargarine indiscriminately, except in the high-class hotels or aristocratic homes. Almost any one in England who uses oleomargarine of a good brand could not tell the difference between it and butter. Many times I have sat at table in good hotels and in good messes when arguments arose whether we were eating oleomargarine or butter, and nobody could tell the difference. I do not believe that the soldiers from Canada, from the other dominions or from the British Isles get anything else in the front lines but oleomargarine, because it is cheaper, and the men cannot tell the difference. There may be a slight difference in the food value of the two products; in that respect I would not dispute the word of the member for East Lambton or of the member for South Perth. But after all, the amount of butter that one eats is not so very important as to its food value. As to its taste, palatability, and appearance—because they use colouring over there—there is no difference between good oleomargarine and butter. I believe that the use of colouring matter in the manufacturing of oleomargarine is not permitted in this country; probably that is a good regulation, because it prevents the sale of oleomargarine as butter. That point is very strongly insisted upon in England, with a view to protecting the dairying interests and preventing dealers from selling oleomargarine as butter. As you walk down the streets of a city in England you see in the dairy stores oleomargarine advertised for sale as such, at so much per pound.

Since the importation of oleomargarine into this country was commenced one disappointment to me has been that the price is almost equal to that of butter. Here the price is about three-quarters the price of butter, while in England it is about one-half. The member for Port Arthur (Mr. Keefer), who is on the Food Board, informs me that oleomargarine offered for sale in Canada must be distinctly marked as such, and certainly this regulation should be strictly enforced. The ordinary person who can afford butter may not wish to substitute oleomargarine for it, but the workman who is getting a low wage will use oleomargarine if he feels that he can use it economically in the place of butter. I believe that something which is good enough for the daily rations of the soldiers in the battle line should not be too bad to be imported into this Dominion. I agree that the regulations should be very strict, but I do not agree that the people do not want oleomargarine. It is my view that the importation of oleomargarine into this country should be permitted in proper quantities and under proper regulations.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (Oxford South): I have been much impressed, in listening to the addresses that have been delivered on this subject, by the words of a good judge of human nature, who once said:

> When self the wavering balance shakes
> It's rarely right adjusted.

It is quite natural that the members of the House should represent the views of their constituents as nearly as it is possible for them to do so. The Government, I suppose, has to look at matters from a different standpoint and endeavour to legislate for the benefit of the whole people. I have always been prepared to give the Government full credit for using their best judgment in all matters of legislation, and if I say some things this afternoon that are in conflict with what the Government has done, I assure the House that I do so from a feeling that proper safeguards have not been provided in this particular instance.

I was somewhat impressed by the statement of the member for Fort William (Mr. Manion), that what is good enough for the soldier ought to be good enough for the people who are at home here in Canada. His desk-mate, the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Keefer) said that one of the reasons why butter has become so expensive was that so much milk had been evaporated for the use of the soldiers. We have listened to a soldier—a man who has served a couple of years in the trenches, and knows what he is talking about—who states that oleomargarine is used by the soldiers in place of butter. I believe that instead of evaporated milk or condensed milk the soldier receives skimmed milk or klim.

Mr. MANION: He receives evaporated milk or condensed cream most of the time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I think you will find that very little cream reaches the soldiers; the product is made almost entirely from skimmed milk.

Mr. MANION: The finest evaporated cream I have ever taken was in the lines.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is not the case on this side of the water. I believe that what the soldiers receive is not the whole milk, but skimmed milk. I know factories where it is being manufactured for that purpose. I do not say that is good enough for the soldiers, for I think they are entitled to the best we can give them. Condensed milk is becoming more extensively used in this country; but I think you will find that very little, if any, of the whole milk reaches the soldier. It is doctored up in a manner that may possibly deceive, and that is the strong objection that I have to oleomargarine. It is a deceptive; it is a counterfeit; it is not sold on its merits; and that is why I voice my objection. Oleomargarine is coming into competition with and endeavouring to replace an old established article of food in this country. The injustice creeps in in the endeavour to place oleomargarine before the consumer under the guise of butter under butter trademark? That is the trouble in the United States where they have permitted the manufacture of oleomargarine for a great many years. As the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) pointed out, in the United States in 1911, when upwards of 500,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were manufactured, only 92,000,000 pounds of it were sold as that commodity. Why? Because of the fact that in that country coloured oleomargarine has to pay a tax of ten cents per pound whereas the uncoloured oleomargarine pays a tax of one quarter of a cent per pound. In order to evade the payment of that tax, the manufacturers resort to the colouring of this food article with a view to deceiving the people, and you may say what you like about the matter, if they were honest, they would not endeavour to evade the United States regulations in that way.

With regard to the regulations which have been passed by this Government, this is number 1:

> No substance intended for the colouring of oleomargarine shall be imported into Canada in packages containing oleomargarine, and no manufacturer, wholesale dealer, or retail dealer in oleomargarine shall deal in, sell, or give away any substances intended for colouring oleomargarine.

That covers what? It covers the importation into Canada of colouring to be used for that purpose, but it does not prevent the importation into Canada of coloured oleomargarine. That is quite permissible. I think in 1884 regulations were passed regarding the purity of butter and the manufacture and sale of butter. In 1914, the Dairy Act was consolidated and those safeguards were still retained, but from time to time pressure was continually being brought to bear by those interested in the manufacture of oleomargarine to permit its manufacture in this country. It is pointed out that this is a measure under the War Measures Act, owing to the abnormal demand for and consequent high prices of butter. If the importation of oleomargarine into this country was permitted in order to relieve a stringency or a condition that had become unbearable, I do not think any very serious objection would be raised to it, but the price of butter has not gone up in proportion to the advance in price of many other food products. Statistics have already been given in that regard, but when you stop to realize that the manufacture of butter is part of an industry in which upwards of $500,000,000 are invested by the people of Canada, it is a very serious matter to interfere with an industry which is so extensive and which means so much to successful agriculture in this country. You may make comparisons with some of the congested countries of Europe; you may say that oleomargarine is admitted into those countries; but we have here a vast extent of country, a country which has enormous possibilities, particularly with regard to agriculture, and at this time when food is of such vital importance to the world at large, we ought to be very careful with regard to any legislation that will affect an industry so extensive and important as this one. What does dairying mean to this country? Dairying as I have said, is the very foundation of successful agriculture in this country. Our friends from western Canada, with that rich and fertile soil which they have in the West, may exploit that soil for a number of years; they may reap enormous crops; they may mine the fertility of that soil, but the day will come as it has come in the older provinces, when they will have to resort to scientific agriculture in order to maintain and increase the production of the land. That is unquestionable. Look at the investments that have been made in the industry of agriculture, the buildings that have been erected, the factories that have been established by little bands of men who have co-operated for that purpose, and yet here, without any regard for that industry, or for the rights of those people, you drive a dagger into the industry in which they have invested their all, regardless of the effect such action will have on successful agriculture in this country. Take, for instance, the county from which I come. Reference has been made to other great dairying districts. I believe the first cheese that was manufactured in Canada was manufactured at South Oxford at a little place called Salford. I know the place very well. My hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Read) referred to the fact that by decreasing the amount of milk used for butter, you were going to increase the output of cheese. It is rather significant that at the present time, under the regulations passed by the British Government, fixing the price of cheese here last year, cheese factory after cheese factory in South Oxford is being closed up and put out of business. The butter factories, or creameries, are also being put out of business. This is an opportune time for the large manufacturers of condensed milk to step in and put up a price with which the butter or cheese maker cannot compete, and they consequently capture that trade, and those factories, after remaining closed for a number of years, will depreciate to such an extent that it is questionable whether they will be able to go on again or not when conditions again become normal. Many have already been closed or shut down as a result of fixing prices and other regulations. At the present time some of them are going on in the hope that the price of cheese will be so fixed as to enable them to manufacture profitably.

Mr. BURNHAM: If some good wholesome commodity were put upon the market for the benefit of the consumer, which commodity was considerably cheaper than butter, would my hon. friend still insist that that commodity, which was cheaper than butter, should be prohibited?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If it was a substitute that was going to be sold on its merits, I do not think any serious objections would be raised to it. As I pointed out at the outset, my strongest objection was to a deceptive counterfeit being foisted on the people of this country and not being sold on its merits. It is an article that is put up, according to the regulations under the Dairy Act, in one pound prints, wrapped in wrappers identical with those in which creamery butter is being put up, and it is being coloured also with a view to deceiving the public, and the public are not protected by the regulations which have been enacted here with regard to the matter. My hon. friend asks if I would object to a substitute being brought in to take the place of butter. No, I would not. Butter is something that can take care of itself in competition with anything else; but when you bring something of that kind in, and you add to it from fifteen to twenty-five or thirty per cent of butter, when you churn it with milk in order to take the flavour from the milk and add it to that commodity, then I say: You are not in a legitimate business, and you are not engaged in a business that this or any other government should countenance where agriculture is regarded as being of importance.

That ought to be clear to the mind of every one. Although you make regulations that oleomargarine shall not be manufactured or mixed in factories where butter is being manufactured, yet you permit milk and butter to be taken in for the flavour to be extracted from it in order to make this grease palatable with which to deceive the people and capture the market. Then I am asked if I object to a legitimate business! I say that this is not a legitimate business; it is an entirely illegitimate business, and it is a significant thing that the promulgation of these regulations was almost the very first act of the present Union Government. In that Government we have quite a number of men who have not been in this House before, and who possibly did not realize the insidious appeal that had been constantly made by those interested in the oleomargarine business. The big packing house manufacturers think this is the opportune time to get this industry established in this country, knowing full well that once it is established it will be almost impossible to uproot it after the war, because those who are engaged in legitimate dairying have individually only a small amount of capital invested in it compared with the capital of those engaged in the manufacture of oleomargarine. The farmers had absolute confidence that the Government would not do anything that would imperil the industry in which they were engaged. They expected that if the importation of oleomargarine was to be permitted under the War Measures Act, safeguards would be thrown around its importation, which I am sorry to say I cannot see in the regulations. We talk about how we are going to take care of the soldiers who return from the war, and what the Government is going to do to re-establish them in civil life. Was there a business or branch of agriculture that offers a more inviting opportunity to these men than the dairying business? Yet we have permitted an injustice to be done which may possibly imperil that industry for all time to come. The cheese industry has been crippled so seriously that it will only be a short time before something will have to be done if the British Government are going to get cheese from Canada for the soldiers during this war. I am pointing out these things for several reasons. One is the danger of interfering with and fixing prices, and I quite agree with the remarks of my hon. friend from Port Arthur (Mr. Keefer) with regard to price-fixing. Fixing a price for cheese has jeopardized the industry to such an extent that the outlook is a very serious one indeed for those engaged in the business. This fixing of prices has a bearing on other industries. Someone may say: "Why, look at the precautions that have been taken by the Food Board, with regard to feed for dairy stock. They have fixed a price for bran, shorts and mill feed and prohibited the exportation of screenings to the United States, in order to provide feed for our stock." True, all this has been done and provision has also been made for inspection of all the articles that go into the manufacture of oleomargarine in the United States and Canada. But in spite of what has been done, bran is selling between $40 and $45 per ton in Ontario, and shorts between $45 and $50, and the farmers cannot get it at those prices; they are prepared to pay almost any price. Weed seeds are being ground up and mixed with the mill feed to such an extent that stock is being poisoned and have died in many instances as a result, and protests have been lodged with the Government against this crime that has been committed against those engaged in the dairy business. There is no reason in the world why ground weed seeds should appear in mill feeds, such as bran and shorts except by fraud, yet there it is, and that is only one of the things that the man engaged in the dairying business has to contend with to-day. The intention of the Food Control Board may have been good, and they may think they have accomplished their purpose, but the fact is the farmers are being charged an exorbitant price, and the regulations are not being observed or enforced. The Government should also see that those who are willing to pay the highest price for mill feed do not get it in the face of those regulations.

I have spoken longer than I intended. I would not have said what I have were it not for the fact that the district from which I come is largely agricultural and industrial, about evenly divided in that respect, and consequently I am inclined to look at this matter from both sides. I say again that if we are going to permit oleomargarine to come into Canada let us see that it comes in in its pure state, uncoloured, and is not mixed with butter, or churned with milk, and that it be not put up in pound prints of identically the same size and shape, and in wrappers identically the same, with the exception of the name, as the creamery butter, because there is no occasion for it. I am not going to dispute with those who say that oleomargarine is as palatable as butter, because I do not think I ever tasted the stuff in my life, and I am not in a position to express an opinion as to that. But it is a significant thing that the wealthy people of this country and of the Old Country do not want to eat oleomargarine. It is good enough for the poor people, they think, and they would let them have as much as they want. " Give the poorer people all the oleomargarine," they say, " and leave the cream for us; we shall get it all the cheaper." And that is about the case with skim milk to which I have already referred, which is put up for consumption by the poor and the soldiers. There are many large factories engaged in condensing milk and manufacturing milk powder in the county from which I come. I believe the cost of the production of butter has increased more since the war began than the cost of production of any other article of food. Oats are selling to-day from $1 to $1.10 a bushel; mill feed is also at a higher price, and labour is not to be had; and at a time like this, when greater production is being urged, one of the old established industries of this country —an industry that has done more to enrich the fertility and productivity of the soil of Canada, and to establish agriculture on a sound and lasting basis than any other branch of agriculture—is being jeopardized by passing legislation of this kind without adequate safeguards. I feel that I would be recreant in my duty to my constituents if I did not record my protest on behalf of those I represent.

Mr. F. S. SCOTT (South Waterloo): I should like to add one further argument to those advanced in opposition to this Order in Council permitting the importation of oleomargarine. I approach the subject from a somewhat different standpoint from that assumed by other hon. gentlemen, and I will not go over the arguments already so well advanced this afternoon. It seems to me a very short time since the Order in Council was passed. The effect of that Order in Council was to allow the importation of an article from the United States into Canada. And yet, while this action was taken, only comparatively speaking, a short time ago, we are told at the present time one of the most important problems that confronts the people of Canada from a trade standpoint is the rectifying of the balance of trade between Canada and the United States. It seems to me this action is a mistake, because it disturbs a well-established and a great industry, when, to-day, we are told that the War Trade Board has under consideration a recommendation to the Canadian Government regarding the prohibition of the importation of certain articles into this country. I do not want to enter into a discussion of the merits or demerits of oleomargarine as against butter, but it does seem to me that the Government should consider whether it is not a mistake, to encourage the importation of an article, when the result will be the disruption of a great industry, and then to attempt to rectify the conditions, which they have deliberately brought about, by regulations prohibiting the importation of certain articles, which will mean the disruption of other industries. I do not refer to the importation of luxuries, which may be all very well, but it is proposed also to prohibit the importation of certain articles that cannot be considered as luxuries, and I believe, in addition to that, to make up for the revenue that will be lost in that way, to put a special tax upon certain articles. It seems to me that the Government might very well give that aspect of the case serious consideration.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the whole range of the business of agriculture, in all the countries where it is carried on, there is perhaps no question which has given rise to more controversy than the question of oleomargarine. Therefore, it is not surprising that we should have had a discussion such as the House has listened to this afternoon in connection with this subject. It is perfectly proper, I think, that the House should be given the considerations which led the Government, to change the policy which had been adhered to in this country for so many years with respect to this product, and to permit not only its importation into Canada but its manufacture in Canada as well.

We have had given to us this afternoon a considerable amount of statistics relative to the dairy industry of Canada and the great importance it holds in our agricultural activities. I have taken the trouble to gather some information with respect to the production of dairy products in Canada, particularly in relation to our exports and imports during the past few years. I am not going to detain the House by giving figures running back over a series of years, but I do desire to place before hon. gentlemen a few facts. I have a statement here showing the following results:

EXPORTS OF DAIRY PRODUCTS.

	Cheese lb	Butter lb.	Condensed Milk lb.
1913	155,216,000	828,232	335,849
1917	180,733,426	7,990,000	15,858,000

If we take the imports for these two years we find that, while in 1913 the total imports of butter in Canada amounted to 7,989,000 pounds, in 1917 this importation into Canada had dropped to 997,000 pounds. The reason for this rapid increase in the exportation was alluded to by my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) this afternoon. The war has made very heavy demands on America for supplies of this kind as it has for almost all kinds of agricultural supplies. Great Britain normally imported from Holland, Denmark and other continental countries the greater part of the butter and cheese that she used prior to the outbreak of war. Since then this has been very largely shut off and consequently Canada has had to make up the deficiency. The higher prices that were paid there led to a rapid rise in the exportation from Canada during the period to which I have referred. That had one effect in so far as Canada was concerned; it reduced, and reduced very considerably, the amount that was available for consumption by the people of Canada. It was also the fact that, due to the war, prices had increased very considerably and it was increasingly difficult for the poorer people in the towns and cities to get the nourishment in fats that they required. Throughout the year 1917, I find, various requests were made to the Government for the removal of the restrictions upon the importation of oleomargarine. I find, for instance, that the board of health of the city of Toronto placed a recommendation before their city council, and which was in turn placed before the Government, that the importation into Canada, and the manufacture in Canada, of oleomargarine should be permitted. We find, too, that the civic authorities in Montreal made a similar request of the Government. We have also a resolution that was presented to the Government by the Anti-tuberculosis Association of Ottawa, which is as follows:—

> Whereas the war is emphasizing more and more the need of increasing our efforts against the ravages of tuberculosis; and
>
> Whereas the statistics from France, Belgium, Germany and other European countries show an alarming increase in the number of civilians suffering from tuberculosis, due in a large measure, to the lack of nourishing food; and
>
> Whereas animal fats are essential to the healthy growth of our Canadian boys and girls; and
>
> Whereas the present price of butter is practically prohibitive;
>
> Resolved, the Ottawa Anti-tuberculosis Association hereby respectfully recommends that everything be done by our Government to make it possible for our people to purchase nourishing food at reasonable rates, and as one step toward this much-to-be-desired end, that the Government should forthwith remove the ban upon the importation, manufacture and sale of oleomargarine.
>
> It is further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent at once to the Honourable the Minister of Agriculture.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the decision to modify the regulations governing the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine had been reached before I became a member of the Government. Immediately after that the regulations were drafted, and the regulations that are to-day in effect were prepared practically by the Dairy Commissioner in the Department of Agriculture. Any person who knows the Dairy Commissioner is quite aware of this fact, that the dairy industry in Canada has a splendid champion in him. And he was very careful to draft these regulations so as to conserve and protect the dairy industry to the very greatest degree possible.

Now, I want to draw attention to the fact that the Order in Council with regard to oleomargarine sets out that it is to be regarded as a war measure. In the preamble we find these words:

> Such regulations to be in force and to have effect for the period during which the present abnormal conditions continue, the conclusion of such period to be determined by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, as provided in the said regulations, and as a war measure only.

The regulations were drafted with a great deal of care. I do not pretend for a moment that they are perfect, nevertheless, I do think that they afford a very fair measure of protection to the dairy industry in Canada. The statement was made, I believe, by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), who introduced the resolution, that the demand for the removal of these restrictions had emanated largely from people in Canada who desired to manufacture this article and offer it for sale. Well, if such is the case, they have not, so far, taken very great advantage of the opportunity that was presented to them, for up to the present time only two licenses have been issued for the manufacture of oleomargarine in Canada. I believe there are two other concerns equipping their premises to conform to the requirements of the law relating to this manufacture. But I venture to say that there will not be any great number of manufacturers in Canada engage in this business, and, I believe, for the reason that they realize that it is a war measure, and that there is no assurance of permanency in it.

Mr. NESBITT: May I ask the minister if the Government refused to allow others who conformed to the regulations to engage in manufacture?

Mr. CRERAR: No; any person in Canada who will conform to the regulations laid down is open to manufacture this article. The hon. member for East Lambton also stated that there was a possibility of fraud in the importation of this article, inasmuch as the importation was not restricted alone to oleomargarine. I am told that oleomargarine and margarine are practically interchangeable terms. In Great Britain the article is known as margarine, in the United States it is known as oleomargarine, but it is practically one and the same article. As far as nut margarine is concerned, that is not permitted to be manufactured in the United States, I am told, or to secure the certificate that their laws require, and I understand that it is not, under this condition, imported into Canada.

There is one other point which the hon. member for East Lambton referred to that I desire to deal with. He stated, and I believe the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Steele) also referred to this point, that the manufacturing establishments now permitted to manufacture oleomargarine had an advantage over the creamery industry in the country which was not permitted to manufacture and offer it for sale. To-day, oleomargarine is manufactured in two of the large packing houses in Canada. They have to sell it as oleomargarine. They do not deal in butter, and, consequently, the possibility of fraud or confusion is reduced. On the other hand, they are also subject to close inspection, absolutely close inspection, in the manufacture of this article. If we threw the manufacture wide open and permitted the creameries also to manufacture it, we would have to provide an immense staff of inspectors to supervise the work in the 1,600 creameries now producing butter in Canada. In addition to that, I, for one, would be very sorry to see this, for the reason that it would be the most severe blow, in my judgment, that could come upon our butter industry. If it had gone abroad throughout Canada and the world that our creamery butter was being produced in establishments where oleomargarine was also being manufactured it would do more than anything else to destroy the reputation of our article.

There was also a suggestion that the regulations in regard to the display of placards in restaurants and other public eating places were not lived up to. Well, the regulations are very definite and very explicit in that respect. They read:

> In all hotels, restaurants and public eating houses where oleomargine is served there shall be prominently displayed in some conspicuous place a placard containing the words: "Oleomargine Served Here," in capital block letters, not less than one and one-half inches long.

The regulations are very definite and explicit that wherever this article is consumed in a public eating house a placard shall be displayed showing that fact.

Now, in respect to the manufacture, what are the regulations that govern it? They read as follows:

> No oleomargarine shall be manufactured in Canada unless it has been manufactured under the supervision of the Minister of Agriculture of Canada and no oleomargarine shall be imported into Canada unless it has been manufactured under the Government supervision in the country of production and is accompanied by satisfactory evidence of such supervision.

The supervision over the manufacture in Canada and over the importation lies with the officials under the Veterinary Director General. As hon. members are aware, the control of packing houses, the inspection of meats therein manufactured, the supervision of the slaughter of animals—all these matters are under the jurisdiction of officials of this department, and it was simply an enlargement of their duties to charge them with the responsibility of seeing also that proper supervision and proper methods are employed in the manufacture of oleomargarine. The sale of the article in retail stores is under the direction of the Dairy Branch of the Department of Agriculture, and it is the duty of the inspectors of the Dairy Branch, who visit the various stores and places of business with a view of seeing that the standards of butter are maintained, to see that the regulations in respect to the sale of oleomargarine are fully and thoroughly lived up to.

The member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) desired to know what restrictions were placed upon the manufacture of oleomargarine to insure that only wholesome ingredients entered into the product. That is set out in the following regulation:

> All material entering into the composition of oleomargarine shall be subject to inspection, and if not approved by an inspector shall not be used. The inspector shall have power at any time to take samples of any such material for analysis. No oleo oil or neutral lard shall be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine unless it is the production of an abattoir under the inspection of the Minister of Agriculture of Canada and bears the Government inspection mark, or has been manufactured in the country of origin under inspection satisfactory to the minister, and is at the time of importation covered by the official markings and export inspection certificate of the country of origin.

That means that as far as the manufacture in Canada is concerned, no ingredient can enter into this article unless such ingredient is passed upon by the inspector who is present.

Mr. EDWARDS: Is there any definite standard as to the percentage of ingredients, such as they have in the United States?

Mr. CRERAR: There is no such standard, but there is a limitation as to the quantity of water that oleomargarine shall contain. There is also a provision that no preservative except salt shall be used in the manufacture, without the permission of the Food Controller. We rely on the inspectors in these establishments to see that only wholesome ingredients enter into its manufacture.

With regard to price, I am not apprehensive that the dairying industry in Canada will suffer by the provisions of this Order in Council designed to meet a condition that has arisen directly out of the state we are in as a result of the war. I have shown that our exportations, particularly of butter and condensed milk, have never been as high as they have been during the past year. It is true that ten or twelve years ago exportations of cheese were larger than they have been in the past year, but the exportation of cheese during the past year was considerably higher than it has been for many years past. There is no doubt that during the period of the war and for several years after our dairy industry in Canada will have a splendid market and at remunerative prices. The prices that have obtained since the promulgation of this order have not decreased, so far as butter is concerned. On October 1, the finest creamery butter was forty-five cents per pound. It ranged in this vicinity until October 29th, when it was forty-four and one-half cents per pound. On November 26th it dropped to forty-one and three-quarter cents per pound. On December 10th, when the regulations permitting the importation of oleomargarine went into effect, the price was forty cents. On January 21st it had gone up to forty-four and one-half cents per pound; on March 4th, forty-seven and one-half cents; on March 26th, forty-nine cents. At the same time oleomargarine was selling in the same market at from thirty-two to thirty-four cents per pound. I think these figures show conclusively that up to the present time the dairying industry at any rate has not suffered as a result of the introduction of these regulations.

The member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) stated that in the sale of oleomargarine improper practices were very likely to be introduced, inasmuch as oleomargarine was a counterfeit of butter. I do not see that there is any reasonable foundation for this charge. If oleomargarine is sold in a brick or a print the same as butter, it must be distinctly marked as oleomargarine —I believe that it has to be marked on all sides of the package in large, legible letters. Consequently, a person who comes to buy it sees directly and at once what he is buying. If the practice obtained of marking oleomargarine as butter and selling it as such, then the charge of counterfeiting would be quite a proper one to make. I do not think, however, that there is very much danger of that. The inspection is very rigid, and we have endeavoured in drafting these regulations, to make it perfectly clear to the person who desires to buy this article just what he is buying and to prevent the sale of an article as butter, that is not butter.

The hon. member for South Oxford also referred to the price of mill feeds. While this is not strictly relevant to the discussion, I wish to refer to it for a moment because there is some information that I think would be of interest to the House. Under an Order passed on the 17th December by the Food Controller, the price of bran and shorts was fixed on a definite basis at Fort William, bran on a basis of $24.50 per ton, and shorts on a basis of $29.50 per ton. The invoice covering a shipment of bran or shorts to an eastern Canadian point had to show the amount of freight that was paid on the shipment and the cost of the bags, if it was placed in bags. Consequently, the absolute cost to the dealer in eastern Canada could be established without any question. By a subsequent Order passed on the 19th January, the margin that the dealer could take on the sale of these articles was also fixed, and it was ordered that in the case of dealers distributing ex-warehouse or premises to consumers, not more than ten cents per bag of one hundred pounds mights be added to the cost, as set out in Order number 5, issued on 17th December, 1917, to which I have just referred. Where delivery is ex-car by the purchaser from the dealer, not more than five cents per bag of 100 pounds may be added to the cost at the dealer's railway station. Where the miller sells at the mill direct to the consumer, in quantity or quantities less than ten-ton lots, not more than five cents per bag of 100 pounds shall be added to the price at which the miller is permitted to sell under Order No. 5. Where, however, the purchaser brings bags to the mill and such bags are filled at the mill, then not more than $2 per ton shall be added to the price of bran and shorts in bulk, as directed by Order No. 5. Consequently, that fixed absolutely the margin of profit that the dealer was entitled to get. I am quite aware of this, that there may have been dealers throughout eastern Canada who have taken a larger margin of profit than that allowed. But those cases cannot be reached unless they are reported, or unless some person takes action against them under the Order in Council which provides penalties for violation of the regulations. An effort has been made to bring the cost of this feed within reasonable limits to the farmers who require it. There is no doubt whatever that a very serious situation has existed for several months past, particularly in eastern Canada, in respect to the matter of feed; feed for stock, feed for dairy cattle, and I quite sympathise with the position of the hon. member for South Oxford. That difficulty arose practically altogether on account of the difficulties in the matter of transportation which exist at the present time and which have existed for several months past. An effort has been made to bring corn from the United States to feed dairy cows, hogs and other live stock in Ontario, Quebec and the other eastern provinces. Cars could not be had to carry this corn, and we had the spectacle of tens of millions of bushels of corn out of condition in farmers' hands in Illinois, Iowa and the other corn producing states across the line, and a dearth of that article in Canada and inability to get it here on account of lack of transportation.

I am very glad that this matter came up this afternoon. I followed the discussion with a great deal of interest, and I think perhaps some suggestions have come out in the debate that may be of great value. I can assure the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. J. E. Armstrong) that his suggestions will be taken into consideration. It would be most unfortunate if, at this time, anything should be done to cripple or injure in any way our great dairying industry. I am one of those who believe that in the future we have to look, even more than we have done in the past, to the development of our agricultural resources for the well-being of the country. The dairy industry is one of the greatest of these, and it seems to me that right here in eastern Canada, in Ontario and Quebec, provinces peculiarly and splendidly adapted for the development of this industry, a great future lies before it. We know what has been done for the dairy industry in Denmark. If we go back fifty or sixty years, we find in Denmark a population of illiterate peasants, ignorant of almost the first principles of agriculture. To-day we find in Denmark, and also in Holland, the finest dairy industries in the world. There is no reason, in my judgment, why we cannot create in Ontario and Quebec just as fine a dairy industry as they have in those two countries. If we can establish and maintain the quality of our product—and there is no reason why we cannot—we can get into the best markets of the world. We have the markets of Great Britain; more than that, we have the markets right across the line that will be open to us in the future, because with the growth of population in the United States east of the city of Chicago and with the distance the people in the East are from the Western States, I am convinced that, as their industrial population increases, they must look more and more to Canada for the food that they require. Consequently, I think the hon. member for East Lambton may rest assured that this Government is not going to do anything that might harass, or disturb, or destroy the dairy industry. It is true that, to meet the shortage that has arisen in Canada, for the reasons I have already stated these regulations were promulgated and permission was given to manufacture this article and to import it into Canada. I believe that up to the present time some 400 licenses have been issued. Of these perhaps not more than one-third are actively engaged in the importation of oleomargarine, and the total imports up to the end of February were a little over 1,800,000 pounds. I do not know that there is anything more I can add to the discussion. I frankly confess that on the question of oleomargarine I am not an expert. I realise, however, that it is a very vital question in respect of the industry that has been under discussion. If the hon. member for East Lambton will let his resolution stand, or if he will be good enough to withdraw it, I can assure him that the suggestion that he has made in his address and the suggestions made in the other admirable addresses that have been delivered this afternoon will be taken into serious consideration.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: Mr. Speaker, I am sure, after listening——

Mr. SPEAKER: I must direct hon. member's attention to the fact that, if the mover of the resolution speaks now, other hon. members will be precluded from speaking to the resolution.

Mr. S. F. GLASS (East Middlesex): Before the hon. gentleman replies, I would like to ask the minister in reference to the price of feeds fixed for the farmer or consumer. He has pointed out to us very well how the interest of the consumer has been guarded in fixing the prices, the conditions on which the consumer may go to the miller and obtain feed. The one difficulty I see, and the difficulty that has been presented to me by those who are interested, is that the conditions imposed upon those millers are not honestly carried out, and the consumer does not get the advantage that it is the intention of the Government he should receive. It is said that the Order in Council leaves it open for the individual to prosecute the miller. My hon. friend no doubt knows that a small consumer, going to a mill for half a ton or a ton of bran, even if he be imposed upon to some extent in the price, is not going to prosecute the miller or to institute legal proceedings which might, in the end involve him in more expense than the little difference in price. Why cannot it be arranged that the price shall be fixed from time to time, monthly or bi-monthly as the case may be, and that it be understood and established and published so that the consumer may know exactly what he has to pay? In reference to that point, a large number of farmers who were encouraged, and who were almost persuaded to go more extensively into the hog industry, were dissuaded from following that up by reason of the very fact that I have presented—that, while they were promised cheap feed on terms that seemed reasonable if the Order in Council were properly carried out, they were deprived of that benefit simply by reason of the fact that millers evaded the law or practically paid no attention to it. Some means might be devised by which the consumer, the individual purchasing his feed from the local mill, might be protected by a monthly or bi-monthly bulletin, or by publication in the agricultural papers, of the prices to be paid.

Mr. CRERAR: It is rather a difficult matter to get out a schedule of prices week by week governing the sale price of these articles. I still believe that the regulations which have been promulgated, if enforced, will bring the relief that is desired. Of course, they will not make up the deficiency in the quantity of the feeds we have been discussing, for there has undoubtedly been a great shortage. But, so far as controlling the price is concerned, I believe the regulations will be effective. Not very long ago, in one of the counties of western Ontario—I believe the case was mentioned in a return brought down the other day—a prosecution was entered against a local miller by the president of a co-operative farmers' society, and a conviction secured, and on the word of the president of that society the prosecution succeeded in remedying the conditions in the county in which he lived.

Mr. J. A. ROBB (Chateauguay-Huntingdon): I desire very briefly to make a few observations, but not by way of criticism of the introduction of oleomargarine into this country, for the Government are in the favoured position of having all the criticism come from their followers. My hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) in introducing this resolution took very great care to clear the previous Minister of Agriculture and also the present minister from all responsibility for the Order in Council admitting oleomargarine free into this country, and he seemed to make out a case that was satisfactory to those who supported him. He put all the blame on the food controller, and the thought occurred to us on this side of the House, as it must have occurred to hon. gentlemen opposite. Who is looking after the rights of the agricultural interests of this country? If neither the previous Minister of Agriculture nor the present Minister of Agriculture is responsible, which one of the twenty-three Cabinet ministers to whom we are paying salaries is safeguarding the country's dairying interest? I leave that thought with the minister in the hope that upon some future occasion he may be able to explain it satisfactorily to the electors. My hon. friend from East Lambton then proceeded to find all manner of fault with the administration of the regulations, and he was followed during the afternoon by other supporters of the Government all condemning the administration of the regulations; so I will leave that to hon. gentlemen opposite.

My hon. friend from Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) made the statement that throughout this country cheese and butter factories were being put out of business, but he did not go to the root of the trouble and say why they were being put out of business. That story goes back as far as 1911, when, by virtue of a trade arrangement with the United States, we could have had free entry for our butter, milk and cream, and milk and cream products, to the markets of the United States. The people of Canada refused to accept that proposal, so in 1913 the United States revised their tariff along lines to suit their own people. They said, "If you don't want to trade with us on the basis of the proposed arrangement of 1911, we are going to fix the tariff to suit ourselves and ourselves only." And they proceeded to put milk and cream on the free list. The result of that legislation was that milk and cream from border towns and counties in Canada immediately began going to the United States.

Mr. EDWARDS: For how long? Not more than six months anyway.

Mr. ROBB: It is going there still. Farmers in the county of Huntingdon are shipping milk to the United States to-day because they can get $3 a hundred there as compared with $2.70 in Canada. The result has been that the butter and cheese factories of the western part of the province of Quebec, at all events, have been shut down, and there is consequently a smaller production of butter and cheese in that section.

There was one feature which, so far as I could observe, the minister dodged very cleverly this evening. He did not attempt to explain to the House why we allow oleomargarine to come into this country free of duty when we place a tax upon butter, and

I think the people of this country are entitled to an explanation of that point. Furthermore, I am told that by virtue of some arrangement oleomargarine does not come into this country as freely as people are led to believe, and that its manufacture in Canada is limited to two big companies which have a considerable pull with this Government. I am not going to name them, for I think all hon. gentlemen know who they are. That is also something about which the people of this country will require an explanation from the Minister of Agriculture.

This afternoon several hon. gentlemen opposite in turn, claimed that their part of the country was the best dairying county in Canada. I thought that a little strange, especially on the part of my hon. friends from Ontario, because I had under my hand the prize list of the Toronto Exhibition, which shows that nearly all the prizes for butter went to the province of Quebec, and a few to the province of Manitoba. I might as well put the list on Hansard, so that my hon. friends from Ontario, when they want to buy good butter, will know where to go. The Journal of Agriculture states that in the class for creamery butter, in salted solids, Joseph Dansereau, of Vercheres, carried off the first prize with a score of 97; the second, third and fourth prizes in the salted class also went to Quebec. In the unsalted class, Quebec was again first, Achille Fournier, of Gentilly, scoring 97 points. In this class a Manitoba exhibitor took the third prize. The Challenge Trophy for the highest score for creamery butter on exhibition was also won by Achille Fournier, of Gentilly.

We will leave that feature of it and refer to the closing remarks of the hon. Minister of Agriculture in reply to the hon. gentleman from East Middlesex (Mr. Glass) about the price of bran and shorts. The history of the fixing of the price of bran and shorts is perhaps not now known to all hon. gentlemen in this House. I got it first hand from a gentleman who was present at the fixing of the prices, and that gentleman is a supporter of the Conservative party, and, I believe, contributes largely to the campaign funds.

An hon. MEMBER: There is no such party.

Mr. ROBB: Well not now, but there was once. When they came together to fix the price it was proposed they should fix it at $24 a ton in bulk, but some said: Why fix this price in bulk; the trade is accustomed to buying in bags and why not fix the price, bags included, so that people will know the cost? They said: We are getting near a general election and it would look better to fix it in bulk because it would be $24 instead of $30. And they fixed it at $24, to look better. That is the history of it, and the price was not long fixed when the friends of the Minister of Agriculture on the Food Control Board who fixed the price down low, and took good care that they should keep all the bran and shorts in western Canada, and a member of the Food Control Board absolutely prohibited the mills of western Canada shipping to eastern Canada. That is the simple story, which explains why we have a shortage of bran and shorts in eastern Canada. They fixed the price low and kept it all to themselves. I have the evidence here, and will be glad to show it to the Minister of Agriculture. I think I can satisfy him that it is correct. I submit, however, to the hon. minister that that is not a fair way of treating the dairy interests. The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) complains of the lax administration of the oleomargarine regulations. As a member of a dairy constituency, I submit that the hon. minister is not dealing quite fairly with the dairymen and the stock raisers of eastern Canada in attempting to fix the price of these foodstuffs away down low, and keep them all for western Canada. We are all one country, and we know that the people of western Canada are desirous of promoting the stock industry. I know that the province of Manitoba has made progress in recent years along the line of the dairy industry, but I ask the Minister of Agriculture if it is fair to expect the people of eastern Canada to eat the flour, that tney in western Canada may have cheap bran and shorts. Let me remind him that, according to regulations fixed by himself, you only get 26 bags of bran for every 74 bags of flour. That is important. You cannot run a flour mill unless you sell your flour, and it is eastern Canada that eats that flour. Is it fair that we should be asked to pay the high price for flour and get none of the bran and shorts? I leave these thoughts for the consideration of the Minister of Agriculture, in the hope that as Minister of Agriculture for all Canada he will take a broader view of it, and not attempt to narrow things down. If western Canada expects eastern Canada to help them along in the legislation they require from time to time they must be prepared to deal fairly with eastern Canada.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: The hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Robb) seems worried about the position taken by the members for Ontario. Last year petitions with no less than 29,000 names of farmers in his own province were presented to this House in opposition to oleomargarine being allowed in this country. In addition to that, 800 members of the Farmers' Institute of his province sent in petitions along the same line. I am sure, after listening to the splendid statements made this afternoon and to the very generous remarks of the Minister of Agriculture, that we may expect that the regulations that surround the manufacture, importation and sale of oleomargarine in Canada will be dealt with effectively. As I stated at the outset, if oleomargarine is manufactured out of oleo oil and the proper oils that should go into its manufacture, and if it is brought into Canada under the War Measures Act, I am not objecting to it at the present time. Not a man to-day has suggested that he would take objection to it under such conditions. But when you take those oils and also take in to the oleomargarine factory butter, cream and milk, and manufacture any kind of preparation that the oleo men wish to make, you humbug the people. Judging by some of the statements that have been made by hon. gentlemen in this House, you would think the people of Canada were anxious to be humbugged.

9 p.m.

An hon. MEMBER: Sure, they are.

Mr. ARMSTRONG: Let the oleomargarine manufacturers stick to the manufacture of that article. Do not allow butter, milk and cream to go into their factories in order that they may prepare it so that it will not only look like butter, but taste like it. If this course is adopted you will not find very serious objection to oleomargarine being imported or manufactured in this country, as a war measure. I appreciate, along with other hon. gentlemen who have taken part in this debate, the splendid and generous remarks of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Crerar). I feel confident in leaving the matter with him, that the dairy interests of Canada will be properly protected.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. member wish to withdraw his motion?

Mr. ARMSTRONG: Yes.

Motion withdrawn.

[Mr. Robb.]

PRIVILEGE.

MR. DUFF CONTRADICTS STATEMENTS MADE IN CERTAIN NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. W. DUFF (Lunenburg): I rise to speak to a question of privilege. I regret that it is necessary for me to do so, but the matter to which I desire to refer is a very important one and affects my honour as a gentleman, my standing with my fellow members of the House of Commons, and my loyalty as a subject of His Majesty the King. If I were not a new member, it might not be necessary to take this step, but I wish to retain the good opinion of hon. gentlemen in this House with whom I am acquainted, and also to attain the respect of a great many hon. gentlemen with whom I am not acquainted.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is not taking the proper course. I assume that he purposes submitting his case by a document which he has in his hand. If he desires to make an explanation, he may do so, but he cannot make an extended speech.

Mr. DUFF: The procedure of the House is new to me. I do not intend to make any extended remarks. I shall make my statement as brief as possible, and endeavour to keep within the rules of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Upon what ground does the hon. member rise to a question of privilege?

Mr. DUFF: On the ground that false statements are being made against me in the press of the country.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member will read the statements and make his denial, he may proceed.

Mr. DUFF: I wish to finish the sentence I had commenced. I feel it incumbent upon me to make explanation of certain statements published in a newspaper in the city of Ottawa. These statements are contained in issues of the Journal-Press of March 21st, March 26th and April 3rd. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, in order to make this matter as short as possible, I will not read the articles, unless you, Sir, or the House wishes me to do so. I have made a short summary of the contents of the articles, and with your permission I ask to have the statements contained in the newspaper placed on Hansard, and then I shall deal with these statements.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not in order to have any printed matter that is not read included in Hansard. If the hon. member will summarize it, he is quite in order in doing so. It would not be in order to read any extended articles from newspapers.

Mr. DUFF: I did not intend to read any more than this summary and I was trying to save the time of the House by not reading these articles. But, in my defence it is necessary for me to say something about them. Consequently I think I should be allowed to read a citation from these articles.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member purposes to enter into a defence, he will not be in order. If there is any statement that he wishes to deny, he can do so, but he must not enter, or attempt to enter, into an argument or to make an ex parte defence.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Might I suggest that he cannot defend himself unless he reads the matter of which he complains?

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member has a specific article which he wishes to read and in regard to which he wishes to make denial, he will be quite in order but if he should read every paper in Canada which published that article, he will not be in order.

Mr. DUFF: The article in the Journal of March 21 says:

> Mr. Duff was surety on a mail contract which it is claimed disqualifies him from taking his seat. As there is a fine of $100 a day penalty for a disqualified member sitting in the House, Mr. Duff has evidently decided not to take chances. Mr. E. N. Lewis, now Judge Lewis, was similarly disqualified in 1904, when he was elected for West Huron.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. If the hon. member purposes to deny that he was surety on a mail contract I do not see how it can be regarded as a question of privilege. It may be a question of law as to whether the hon. member is entitled to take his seat but it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. DUFF: This article continues:

> Unionist members claim that he not only never gave any assistance to recruiting, but that he discouraged enlistment and that his utterances were responsible for many young men trying to evade the Military Service Law. Some, it is claimed, have since been put in jail as a result of the encouragement given them by Mr. Duff.

A correspondent writing in the Journal March 21 says:

> Mr. Duff is not clear in connection with the Military Service Act and no Government, particularly a Union Government, should pass an Act permitting such a man to sit in this war Parliament until the charges made against him are disproved.
>
> It is a known fact, admitted by Mr. Duff, that he refused, when Mayor of the town of Lunenburg, to allow Rev. Mr. Campbell to speak on recruiting at a fisherman's picnic.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: To what is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Duff) speaking?

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the hon. member wished to make a personal explanation. Had he followed the course which he proposed when he consulted me this afternoon, and made it a brief statement, it would have been quite sufficient. I have been endeavouring to assist the hon. member in doing that. If he does not see fit to pursue that course I shall have to ask him to resume his seat.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Speaker——

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I submit that the proper time for any explanation is on the Orders of the Day and that the rules of the House ought to be observed in that respect. This is the first time within my experience in which a question of this kind has been interposed in the midst of an order for motions.

Mr. SPEAKER: A question of privilege is always in order provided another hon. member is not upon his feet. But the hon. member for Lunenburg is not taking the proper course in rising to a question of privilege. If he did so he would ask that the article about which he complains should be read at the Table by the Clerk of the House and there should be a motion founded upon that. But there has arisen in this House in recent years the indulgent custom of permitting hon. members to make personal explanations which have been treated as matters of privilege. As long as they confine themselves within reasonable bounds, in view of that custom, I am disposed to give hon. members every latitude, but the hon. member must not proceed in the course he is at present pursuing.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN; As far as my recollection goes, such personal explanations as those to which you allude, Sir, are always made in the ordinary course before the Orders of the Day are called. I have never known any deviation from that practice and I would think it undesirable that we should begin a deviation now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I might observe that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister was not in the House when the matter arose, and when Mr. Speaker permitted the hon. member (Mr. Duff) who complains to make a statement and explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER: I should explain to the House that the hon. member for Lunenburg consulted me this afternoon and I advised him that he could not take the course which he has been endeavouring to take. I told him that if he would read a paragraph in the newspaper which contained the substance of the matter about which he complained, and make a denial, he would be in order. If the hon. member does that, he will be permitted to proceed; otherwise I shall have to ask him to resume his seat.

Mr. DUFF: I regret that I have not been able to keep within the rules of the House, but my apology is that I am not sufficiently acquainted with them. Perhaps I can put it in this short form and it will enable me to conclude in just about a minute. These articles say that I discouraged enlistment; that I was hindering recruiting; that I was opposing the enforcement of the Conscription Act in my public speeches; that I was interfering with the chief of police in the town of which I am mayor; that I was advising young men not to register; that my utterances were responsible for men evading the Military Service Act; that some men were placed in jail as a result of the encouragement given them by me; that I refused to allow Mr. Campbell to speak at a fisherman's picnic; that I was opposed to sending soldiers overseas; that I advised the bringing back of our boys fighting overseas, and that I was involved in unpatriotic acts. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order; I must ask the hon. member to resume his seat. The hon. member is exceeding his right.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The hon. gentleman wants to qualify these statements, and I think he should be allowed to quote them.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member had proceeded to read the article and to make his denial, I would have permitted him to proceed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: He has just done it.

Mr. DUFF: I wish to give an absolute and unqualified denial to these statements. There is absolutely no truth in them at all. I also wish to say that my loyalty and my attitude in regard to the war are called in question. I am as loyal as any man in Canada. With regard to the war, I wish to say that I believe in the principles for which the Allied Governments, and especially the Governments of Great Britain and the United States are fighting. I believe the cause is a noble one, and is in the interests of democracy, liberty, truth and righteousness, and that every effort should be put forth by the people of Canada to back up the stand which the British Government has taken in this war. As far as I am personally concerned, whether as a private citizen or as a member of the House of Commons, I will do everything in my power, either by my vote or by my personal influence, to bring this war to a successful conclusion in favour of the cause of the Allied Governments.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Noble sentiments.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order; the hon. member is going beyond reasonable bounds.

PREVENTION OF FUEL SHORTAGE.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Maisonneuve) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the present inadequate coal supply in Canada makes it imperative on the part of the Government to take immediate action with a view to prevent the possibility of any fuel shortage during next winter season.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on many occasions during the twenty-two years that I have had the honour to sit in this Parliament, stock has been taken of our natural resources, but I must say that the speeches which were delivered on those occasions were more of an academic than of a practical nature. Last year my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) moved a resolution on the very subject which I intend to discuss this evening. His speech on that resolution was supported by statistics and by most valuable information. This year, I do not wish to steal a march on that hon. gentleman, although he has a motion on the Order Paper in regard to the question of coal. But as I do regard the present situation as most serious, I would like to test the views of the Government on the present fuel shortage in Canada.

We have just passed through a very severe winter, and we know now what troubles are ahead of us if we do not at the present moment take stock of our situation as regards coal and if we do not foresee the consequences attendant upon a further shortage. I must say first, Mr. Speaker, that I was pleased to learn of the appointment of Mr. C. A. Magrath as fuel controller for Canada. Every body regards Mr. Magrath as a most deserving and conscientious official, and I believe that during the few months he has held that office he has made good. I noticed the other day a press despatch from Washington, dated March 23rd, stating that Mr. Magrath had obtained some very valuable concessions from the American Government. By arrangement with the United States Fuel Administration, he has been granted for Canada a considerable tonnage, and he has the privilege, for the period mentioned in the order, of calling upon the Fuel Administration in the United States to issue permits to any shippers who apply to him; and it is stated further in the despatch that allotments of coal to Canada during the past season were made upon the same basis as if Canada had been one of the states of the Union. This expresses a splendid sentiment towards Canada on the part of the United States Government, and we are all pleased that Mr. Magrath has been able to obtain such excellent results. But, Mr. Speaker, we had very, very trying times last winter in our country. We had heatless days, a condition unknown in Canada before last winter. I happened to be in New York on the 31st December last, and when I saw so many large skyscrapers absolutely closed, and when, reading the New York Post on my way home, I learned that during that day in twelve hours eleven persons in that large and enterprising city had died of exposure because of the coal shortage, the shortage being caused partly by railway congestion and partly by scarcity of labour, it dawned upon me that we in Canada were exposed to hours of great anxiety in the near future. As we are in a large degree dependent upon the United States for coal, especially we of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, it seems to me that it is the paramount duty of the Dominion Government to provide for future emergencies. Now that the winter is over is the time for the Government to really govern, because to govern means to foresee. My resolution, I am pleased to say, is not presented in any carping or hostile spirit; I simply want some information from the Government.

Two days ago I noticed in the press that the United States Government had taken very stringent measures for the coming season. And we must remember that it is from the United States that we import such large quantities of bituminous and anthracite coal yet necessary. The coal business in the United States is now under the exclusive control of the Federal Government, so that there will be no more price pirating; the selling agent is to be forced out; licenses are to be issued, and coal zones are being created within which the distribution of coal will be localized. This is a very drastic measure. As regards our dependence on the United States with regard to fuel generally, let me say what, after all, is a truism, that we are practically at the mercy of any strike in the American coal mining districts or any industrial disorganization in the United States over which we have absolutely no control. A coal or railway strike in that country would seriously, if not fatally, affect the Dominion of Canada. But leaving aside the matter of labour conditions in the United States, there is another eventuality which we must face. The coal fields of that country are far from being inexhaustible, and the time may come when the American Government will put an embargo on the export of coal. In 1908, when President Roosevelt convened at Washington a meeting of the Governors of the various States and some of the leading officials and industrial experts of the Union, he used the following language:

> This nation—

His words apply to Canada as well.

> This nation began with the belief that its landed possessions were illimitable and capable of supporting all the people who might care to make our country their home; but already the limit of unsettled land is in sight, and, indeed, but little land fitted for agriculture now remains unoccupied save what can be reclaimed by irrigation and drainage. We began with an unapproachable heritage of forests; more than half of the timber is gone.

And, Mr. Speaker, he added the following ominous words:

> We began with coal fields more extensive than those of any other nation and with iron ores regarded as inexhaustible, and many experts now declare that the end of both iron and coal is in sight. The enormous stores of minerals, oils and gas are largely gone.

This warning of the ex-President to the Governors of the various states of the Union brought into existence the Conservation Commission of the United States, and, indirectly, by reaction, the Conservation Commission of Canada. I need not dilate on the beneficial effects of the conservation of natural resources or the splendid work done by our Conservation Commission. But we are nevertheless facing a very serious problem—that of coal shortage. Apart from food, raiment and shelter, nothing is so necessary or so essential as fuel for the maintenance of life and for the carrying on of commerce and transportation. Though we are not dependent on the United States for our entire fuel supply, we must obtain from them fifty-five per cent of our coal requirements. This is a matter of grave import, as artificial heat must be supplied in this country during seven or eight months of the year, if only for the purpose of maintaining life.

Let us see in just a few sentences what are the present fuel requirements of Canada. I borrow my figures from a very interesting paper read before the Mining Engineers' Association in Montreal a few weeks ago by Dr. Haanel, one of our officials here. In 1916, nearly 30,000,000 tons of coal, 299,426,121 imperial gallons of crude and refined oil products, and firewood valued at about $60,000,000 were required in Canada. During that year the railways burned 9,000,000,000 tons of bituminous coal; 7,000,000 tons were required for generating power and a large quantity was used for town gas, heating large buildings, and manufacturing coke. Anthracite coal to the amount of 4,000,000 tons was burned in domestic and other heating plants and for industrial purposes. In normal times, however, anthracite is largely used for heating purposes. Compared with these fuel requirements of Canada, what was the production of fuel in this country during the same year? In 1916, 14,483,395 tons of bituminous coal were produced in Canada, of which we exported 2,135,359 tons. Canada produced 6,934,288 imperial gallons of crude oil, and wood fuel was burned to the value of approximately $60,000,000. So that to meet our requirements it was necessary to import 17,580,603 tons of coal and 292,426,100 imperial gallons of crude and refined oil product. This indicates the extent of our dependence on the United States for these essential commodities.

I said a moment ago that the coal fields in the United States are not inexhaustible, and I quoted the words of President Roosevelt in 1908, at the time of the creation of the American Conservation Commission. I have, in the report of our Commission of Conservation of 1917, the opinion of a gentleman well known in Canada, Mr. W. J. Dick, mining engineer, which confirms the assertion made by President Roosevelt. Mr Dick, in a paper on problems relating to the mining industry of Canada says:

> The supply of anthracite coal in the United States is limited and there is no assurance that its export to Canada will be long continued. In 1913, it was estimated that there were 16,153,000,000 tons of anthracite coal in the United States. In 1913, 91,524,922 tons were mined and, as it has been estimated that for every ton of coal lost, a ton and a half of coal is sold or used, the exhaustion is proceeding at the rate of over 152,000,000 tons per annum. If production continued at the same rate, it would exhaust the anthracite of the United States in little over 100 years. We must, therefore, expect that the price will gradually increase. Coincidentally with the rise in price, production will decrease, thus prolonging the life of the mines.

We have here confirmation of the words uttered in 1908 by President Roosevelt. Mr. Dick predicts that within a century there will be no more anthracite coal mined or exported from the United States. Canada has seventeen per cent of the world's coal reserve. Yet our production is relatively small. We import more than we produce. Are such conditions to remain as they are, or must they not be changed? I do not wish to weary the House with any statistics because they can be found in any blue-book. Suffice it to say that the fuel resources of Canada exist in the vast coal-fields of the extreme eastern and western portions of Canada, in the lignite fields of the western provinces, in the natural gas fields of western Canada and Ontario, in the petroleum oil fields of Ontario, in the oil shales of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, in the standing forests, and, finally, in the peat bogs in great areas, chiefly in central Canada. As to the distribution of our fuel resources, there are four classical districts, if I may so speak, each of which has an abundance of fuel peculiar to its own area. The first district is that portion of western Canada which can be economically supplied with bituminous and anthracite coal. The second district is that portion that can be supplied with lignite. The fourth district is that portion which is richly served by Nova Scotia coal. But the third district cannot be supplied with the above coals; it must thus be dependent upon the United States, or must develop and utilize its excellent peat bogs, and this is the case of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. What shall we do? Here are, in my humble judgment, some of the remedies that suggest themselves. First, we can proceed—and I am speaking by the book, because I have read some literature on the subject in the Commission of Conservation report and in some of the papers which have been read lately before the Institute of Mining Engineers—with the intensive exploitation of our peat bogs. In yesterday's Globe, I find that a special committee was appointed by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to study that phase of the subject of fuel supply. I find here, summed up, the estimated peat resources of Canada:

> The engineers of the Department of Mines entertain no doubt as to the enormous extent of our peat deposits.

Seven bogs within convenient shipping distances of Toronto are estimated to be capable of producing approximately 26,500,000 tons of fuel; and seven bogs in the vicinity of Montreal could supply that city with 23,500,000 tons of fuel.

Five bogs along the lower St. Lawrence, conveniently situated as regards water transportation to the city of Quebec, can, it is estimated, supply 16,250,000 tons of fuel and 5,700,000 tons of peat litter.

The bogs examined in Nova Scotia can produce 6,200,000 tons of fuel and 500,000 tons of peat litter, and those of Prince Edward Island can produce, 1,250,000 tons of fuel and over 1,000,000 tons of peat litter.

In Manitoba the aggregate fuel contents of the bogs is estimated at less than 2,000,000 tons. One bog alone, however, it has been estimated, is capable of furnishing 2,500,000 tons of peat litter.

Dr. Haanel, who is our great expert, speaking on the economical operation and utilization of our peat bogs—I do not wish to inflict on the House the reading of all his suggestions, but I may be pardoned if I just give a few lines—says:

The only economic process in existence to-day—

That is, in order to utilize economically the peat bogs.

—is that which employs the forces of nature—the sun and the wind—for the removal of the moisture. The process employing these forces is called the "wet process," and the product obtained is termed "machine peat." This is the process which the Mines Branch, Department of Mines, demonstrated at the Government peat plant at Alfred, Ontario. We not only have the process for manufacturing peat fuel, but also sufficient detailed information concerning peat bogs of immediate importance, to make a good start in the formation of a peat industry. During the period covering the past ten years, the Mines Branch has completely investigated and mapped 58 Canadian bogs, all of which are situated conveniently with respect to inhabited and industrial communities, and also well situated with respect to railway and other transportation facilities.

He concludes by saying:

Excellent bogs are likewise conveniently situated with respect to thickly inhabited communities in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and other parts of Canada.

After describing the rich peat bogs of Central Canada he advises that the Government should take the matter in hand at the earliest opportunity in order that this fuel may be utilized.

He says:

Not until the utilization of a natural substance is forced by absolute necessity will the most sincere and earnest efforts be put forth to successfully and economically convert it into a usable product. It appears to me the time is at hand when necessity will decide that we Canadians utilize our peat resources, and in the most efficient manner.

There the alarm bell is sounded, and the Government should pay heed to the advice given by this well-known expert and start in at once to utilize our peat bogs. Another course which suggests itself for the utilization of our resources against the eventuality of an embargo on coal from the United States is the treatment of lignite, which is found in such large beds all over the province of Saskatchewan. Mr. Haanel deals with this question also in his pamphlet. He says:

The utilization of certain of the lignites for some purposes is possible without any subsequent treatment. With others, notably those of Saskatchewan, the lignites as mined are not suitable for use. This is due to the physical and chemical properties peculiar to this type of fuel. The characteristics of lignites must be altered before they can be converted into a satisfactory fuel. Experiments on a commercial scale have demonstrated beyond a doubt that our lignites cannot be briquetted in the raw state without the addition of a binder. Briquettes made in this manner appear on casual examination to be entirely satisfactory, but when submitted to a water test or when burnt they will invariably disintegrate. The establishment of briquetting plants at strategic points throughout the lignite provinces of the west would very greatly help in reducing our dependency for fuels upon other sources. While the domestic fuel is of course of first importance, lignite briquetting industries would prove also of great value to the railways traversing the lignite belts. It would even be within the realm of possibility to economically supply at least a portion of the province of Ontario with this class of fuel.

Another remedy which suggests itself in the way of more intense production is the development of our oil resources. Professor Haanel in this paper says:

Our domestic production of oil cannot be increased without great effort and the expenditure of considerable money, but provision must be made, and immediately to provide against the time not far distant, when the United States will be compelled to cease exporting her crude and refined oil products.

I have already said that Mr. Roosevelt, backed by Mr. Dick, has stated that within a hundred years there will be no more anthracite coal mined in the United States, and therefore no more anthracite coal to export, and Mr. Haanel now states that within 30 or 35 years no more oil will be exported from the United States; which means we must tap our own resources and develop them as economically as possible. Mr. Haanel says:

The United States up to the year 1915 had exhausted 32 per cent of her possible petroleum resources. If the present annual production is maintained, but not increased, her total crude oil supplies will be exhausted in less than thirty years. But if the present rate of increase of production is maintained, total exhaustion will occur in a much shorter time.

With regard to oil possibilities in Canada he says:

We can scarcely hope for some time to come to produce oil on a scale comparable with our demands, but we can appreciably reduce the quantity which must be imported. Our total oil production from all sources might probably be increased to 120,000,000 gallons, by erecting oil shale distillation plants in New Brunswick, with a combined capacity of 100,000,000 gallons and by increasing the quantity of coal coked in by-product ovens or by carbonizing large quantities of bituminous coal at low temperature, and briquetting the carbonized residue. The low temperature carbonization and briquetting of Nova Scotia coal either in Nova Scotia or at some centre of distribution favourably situated with respect to water transportation, as Montreal, for example, would not only appreciably increase our production of oils but would also be the means of supplying for domestic purposes a coal equal in many respects to anthracite. The fuel situation of some parts at least of Ontario might in this manner be much improved. If this idea were carried out our oil production would be: From oil shales 100,000,000 gallons; from coke ovens and low temperature carbonization 14,000,000 gallons, and from Ontario petroleum fields 6,000,000 gallons, making a total of 120,000,000 gallons.

We could also help to alleviate the present fuel shortage by developing our water-powers and our hydro-electric energy. I do not wish to bore the House with this question, as we shall hear about hydro-electric energy in the course of this session, but perhaps I might be permitted to remind my hon. friends that Mr. Roosevelt has sounded the alarm not only with regard to the coal fields of the United States, but also with regard to the water-powers, and his words apply equally to the water-powers of Canada.

Mr. Roosevelt said:

The people of this country are threatened by a monopoly far more powerful, because in far closer touch with their domestic and industrial life, than anything known to our experience. A single generation will see the exhaustion of our natural resources of oil and gas, and such a rise in the price of coal as will make the price of electrically transmitted water-power a controlling factor in transportation, in manufacturing, and in household lighting and heating. Our water-power alone, if fully developed and wisely used, is probably sufficient for our present transportation, industrial, municipal and domestic needs. Most of it is undeveloped, and is still in National or State control. To give away without conditions this, one of the greatest of our resources, would be an act of folly.

The question of state ownership, as regards hydro-electric energy, is one which might engage the attention of Parliament. I wish only to call to the attention of the members of the House the importance for Canada, as a quid pro quo, in case of a coal embargo, of public ownership of our water-power system. The total possible horse power of Canada is estimated to be 18,203,000, and the developed horse power of Canada is only 1,813,200. I think the greatest national wealth of Canada to-day, bar none, is the water-powers of the country. We have in Ontario and Quebec, and partially in the West, if properly harnessed and if controlled by the Government, an asset of inestimable value.

Now, another remedy which suggests itself for this fuel shortage is not only the exploitation of our peat bogs, the treatment of our lignites, the treatment and development of the shale rocks of Canada, and the development of our hydro-electric system, but also the elimination of customs duties, war tax, etc., upon material and machinery needed for the exploitation and development of those different resources. Some time later in the session I will make a motion, just to test the views of the Government with regard to this question of tariff on material and machinery used for the development of our natural resources. It is a tentative motion; I placed it on the Order Paper last year, but it came to grief.

During the present session I intend to make the following motion:

That it is the opinion of the House that His Majesty's Government should make provision to prevent any recurrence of the late threatened scarcity of fuel.

That the present import duties and war tax, levied upon the material and machinery required for the construction of new hydro-electric power development, and for the desired electrical equipment of certain of Canada's steam railroads, also for the construction and equipment of works to produce peat fuel, fuel from lignite and to recover the oil contents of certain Canadian deposits of shale carrying oil, prevents the construction of such much to be desired plants and works.

That it is desirable that such power plants and fuel producing works should be developed and constructed, without further loss of time, and that to secure and encourage such development and construction, it is hereby resolved that during the continuance of the present war in Europe the import duties and war tax, now levied upon such material and machinery as are required for the development and construction of said power plants and fuel producing works shall no longer be so levied.

Here are, in a few words, the suggestions I have to offer the Government on this question of fuel shortage. It is a very serious question for Canada and we shall have to face it very soon as the spring and summer will pass away in less time than we imagine. We shall be confronted next winter with a situation which might well appal the people of Canada. We know how certain homes suffered last winter. In the city of Ottawa, the capital of the Dominion, there was misery, and if it had not been for the City Council of Ottawa and its worthy Mayor we would have had people actually freezing in many a home. The winter will soon be upon us, because we have practically no spring in Canada. We are actually at the opening of summer, but we know it is of short duration. Winter will come and I beseech the Government that this is a proper time to study this question and to solve it, if it is possible of solution. The Government have appointed a Scientific Research Commission composed of some of the most distinguished scientists of Canada. I know Professor Macallum, a man who is imbued with the idea of service to his country. I hope that the Government will give Professor Macallum and his colleagues of the Scientific Research Commission the widest scope possible, in order to experiment and find a solution to the very serious problem I have placed before the House this evening.

10 p.m.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Minister of the Interior): The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), in whose department this subject falls, is not able to be in the House to-night. It is a matter of regret that, under those circumstances, the hon. gentleman should not have thought convenient to postpone the moving of the resolution.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I was asked by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Reid) if I would not postpone it. At first I did not yield, but a few minutes afterwards I told him that, if he wished me to postpone it, I was quite ready to do so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is unfortunate, from the point of view of the members of the House, in that the response of the Government will not be so efficiently made. The subject is one that only in a very remote way comes within the purview of the department with which I am connected. The hon. gentleman's resolution, as it appears on the Order Paper, would be a resolution demanding the attention of Parliament if the steps taken by the Government up to the present time had not been adequate to meet the exigencies of the day, but I fear the speech which the hon. gentleman delivered has very little relation to the terms of the resolution. The resolution reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the present inadequate coal supply in Canada makes it imperative on the part of the Government to take immediate action with a view to prevent the possibility of any fuel shortage during next winter season.

In these highly critical days it is still of importance, and of great importance, that everything be done that can be done to provide fuel during our cold winters in Canada. But the speech which the hon. gentleman delivered had more to do with the requirements of the country in the way of coal seventy-five or one hundred years from now, and in the way of oil thirty-five years from now, than with the immediate needs of the coming winter. But so far as the question as set out in the resolution is concerned, this is a subject that has engaged the attention of the Government, and that long before the resolution appeared on the Order Paper. I am not certain of the date, but, from memory, it was some time in the month of June, or early in July, 1917, that, as a result of deliberation, an Order in Council was passed appointing a Fuel Controller. Mr. Charles A. Magrath, a former member of this House, and now chairman of the international waterways commission, was asked to undertake this duty and accepted the task. The problem that confronted him was mainly to secure from whatever source it could be secured from and, of course, mainly from the United States operators, a supply of coal for the homes, factories and other uses of this country for the winter which has just gone by, to provide in advance that such shipment should be directed to this country as, supplemented by our own production, would ensure us against hardship so far as that could be ensured against, and at the same time to take whatever steps might be in his power to advance production within this country. It was realized at the time that while, of course, the maximum of coal production in Canada was a matter of primary consideration, it was inevitable that for the purposes of the winter that followed, and the one that was to follow that again, we should have to look for a large portion of our supply to the anthracite and bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Magrath set about the work, and I believe I only speak to the judgment of the people of Canada when I say that, having regard to the conditions that obtained throughout the coal using areas of the United States as compared with the conditions that obtained in Canada, he did not fail at his task. True, there was a coal shortage in this country, true there was hardship, or something approaching hardship as a result, but much the same was the condition of the coal using states to the south. Keeping in mind the delicacy of the task that was entrusted to the commissioner, I believe it will be the common judgment that we were fairly treated as between the United States and ourselves, and that Mr. Magrath succeeded and succeeded well.

The coal operating year ends on the 31st day of March. Mr. Magrath has undertaken this duty; at all events he still occupies the post and I sincerely hope that it is his purpose to continue to undertake the duty for the year that is now upon us. In this connection we have not been idle in the way of endeavouring to enhance the coal production within our own borders, and the use of substitutes for coal as well. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) has referred to our great peat deposits. Careful attention has been given to that subject. It has come under the review of the international scientific resources commission to which it has been referred. I cannot speak in detail as to what has resulted. I do not think there is anything in the way of immediate relief to be looked for in that direction.

Attention has also been given to the subject of lignite. It has been under review at repeated meetings of the Council and at repeated meetings of the chairman of the Council and the Reconstruction and Development Committee of the Government. I will mention one result that has already been reached. An arrangement has been arrived at as between the Government of Canada and the governments of two of the western provinces—at all events it has been formally agreed to on behalf of this Government and, I understand, informally on the part of the other governments,—whereby a sum of money is appropriated on the part of each for the establishment at a suitable point in the lignite coal fields of Saskatchewan of a plant for the briquetting of lignite, the purpose being to demonstrate its commercial feasibility and to make available for the anthracite coal users of the West, this substitute which it is said will take the place of anthracite.

I intimated a moment ago that the same commissioner has in charge the same task in relation to the coming winter. In this connection I would call attention to the more thorough organization which he has already effected looking to the immediate control of the coal importations into this country. By an Order in Council which appeared in the Canada Gazette of the 21st of last month, there was confirmed a set of regulations wherein is worked out in the most thorough manner a scheme of organization for the control of the coal and fuel industry of Canada. That scheme was arrived at after a conference with the provincial governments concerned. The whole plan, as I understand, is approved by these governments, and they intend to co-operate in order to see it to its successful utilization. It provides for the appointment of a fuel administrator on the part of each of the provinces and of the provinces as a whole. The duties of the fuel administrator are clearly set out. They are, in brief, to undertake responsibility for the distribution of such coal as may be imported or produced or made available within the limits of both provinces, and to assist the fuel controller and all others concerned in the greater production of coal and fuel, and the greater utilization of wood and substitutes for coal within the limits of the province. The regulations also provide for the appointment of a fuel commissioner, or a board of fuel commissioners, by municipalities. The powers of these commissioners are also set out. They are within the limits of the municipality concerned, parallel with the powers of the fuel administrator within the limits of the province. Provision is made for the removal of fuel administrators so appointed whenever it appears necessary to do so. The Order in Council further provides for the issue of licenses to importers of coal, operators of coal mines, to brokers in the coal business and to retail dealers as well. In that way the entire coal industry is brought under the supervision of the fuel controller, and the regulations set out the scheme of profits within which all operators, as well as all brokers and all dealers, wholesale and retail, must limit themselves if they are to continue to enjoy their license and do business in this country. The margin of profit is fixed, or rather the maximum margin of profit is fixed, in each case, and each operator is compelled to enter into an agreement with the fuel controller which binds him in this matter of profits and also in the matter of distribution; the whole question of distribution is brought within the control of the administrators or controller and of the board of fuel commissioners. That in brief, is the general scheme of regulations, which, at the recommendation of the fuel controller, have been embodied in an Order in Council under the War Measures Act and are now in the shape of statutory law. So that not only has the question of production, so far as production can be pushed with a view to the requirements during war time and the immediate future at all events, been given attention to. Not only has the question of importation been given attention to so as to secure what is a fair allotment for this country from the coal fields to the south, but also the question of distribution and of coal production in this country is now well in hand and should work out fairly under the regulations that are set out. In this connection I might further say that a conference has been arranged for between the coal operators of this country in all the provinces and a member of the Government which is to take place, I understand, some two weeks from now; at all events it is very shortly to be held. The purpose of that conference is to consider ways and means to increase coal production within this country. The question of coal production is, like many other matters of production in Canada, one in which the controlling factor is, in the main, the question of labour. It would be an easy matter to multiply coal production in Canada if labour could be found to do the work, but labour is scare for coal production just as it is scarce for farm production and almost every other kind of production; and one of the chief problems in coal production that will confront this continent will be that of labour.

We have, undoubtedly, as the hon. member well points out, very large coal resources in our country. We are the possessors of about 17 per cent—I think that was the figure he gave—of the remaining coal resources of the world. The United States, even in the face of the tremendous depletion that has taken place during the last half century in that country, are far in advance of us still. I do not know the exact percentage of coal the possession of which they enjoy, but from memory it is not far from the neighbourhood of 50 per cent of the remaining coal resources of the world. So, on the North American continent we are favourably situated, compared with the other nations of the world in the matter of coal resources and in the matter of fuel resources generally; and it will be one of the problems of the future, one of the problems of the present in proper subordination, to see that the development of our coal resources is proceeded with. That problem the Government has attacked, and, I think, successfully, in so far as it was our duty to attack it. The problem of coal and fuel for thirty-five years, or two generations from now, will also receive attention, but it will be subordinated for the present to the more important questions that are in front of us and to the far greater question of the conduct of this war.

I am sorry that I cannot in greater detail follow point by point the very excellent speech of the hon. member who has just sat down. I have attempted to indicate broadly, and with some reserve—because I cannot pretend to any great familiarity with the question—the efforts the Government has made not to neglect the problem which is the heart of his resolution, and the efforts the Government is making now to continue successfully to cope with it for the immediate future at all events.

Mr. S. E. ELKIN (St. John City): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything on this motion, reserving any remarks that I intended to make for the motion on the Order Paper standing in the name of the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong). But there is a possibility that his motion may not be reached for some time, and I think, in justice to the people of Canada, especially those in the lower provinces, for whom I speak at the present moment, it is time that the Government take upon themselves seriously the matter of the fuel controller. The fuel controller is a joke, and we might as well face it. Last fall we had a visit from the fuel controller in our section. I may say frankly that owing to his visit to the Maritime Provinces, in the city of St. John alone we started in the month of November and continued throughout the very severe winter 15,000 tons of coal short. Why? Because the fuel controller said that he was going to reduce prices, and he scared the people from buying coal. The result was that the coal remained in the bins of the coal merchants. They did not have room to put any more in; they could not import any, and we found ourselves this spring without the coal that normally would have been in the bins of the householders. Now, in January I took the trouble to take this matter up in Washington with Mr. Magrath. I pointed out to him the difficulties that we were going to face in the Maritime Provinces for coal in the coming winter of 1918-19. He informed me that we would have to burn soft coal in the lower provinces this coming winter, and that it would be just as well to go home and tell our people to change their grates so that they could burn soft coal. I thought that was rather strange, so next morning I took the trouble to go down and see Dr. Nasmith, the Chief of Staff of the United States Fuel Administration, and I was informed that on and after the first day of April coal would be permitted to be exported from the United States, particularly anthracite coal, in the same proportion that it had moved for an average of three years previous to the war. I immediately acquainted our coal authorities in the lower provinces with that fact, and they got busy to secure their coal supply. What did we find not later than last Friday? That the fuel controller in this country has made absolutely no arrangements for Canadian schooners in the port of New York, waiting for coal, to get their cargo. He should have made that arrangement with the United States Shipping Board, and now is not the time to consider it. He had fair warning two months ago. The result is that at present we have no coal in St. John, and there is very little in the province. This is the time of year when, as a rule, we begin to put in our anthracite coal for the following winter. For some reason or another, the fuel controller is playing into the hands of the big interests in Nova Scotia who produce coal. If we are to have a fuel controller, let him be a fuel controller. I listened with much interest to what the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Meighen) said about the wonderful machinery that has been laid out for the fuel controller. That machinery was in operation last June.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no.

Mr. ELKIN: Absolutely, that machinery was in operation last June. I could point to two or three men who were appointed by the fuel controller in the different provinces to act as his deputies. It is the same machinery exactly. I repeat that the fuel controller should be a fuel controller. Why was it that last year we in the lower provinces had to wait for bituminous coal while the Canadian Government railways imported the coal in their own steamers and handed it over to the Canadian Pacific rather than put the Canadian Pacific to the expense of taking it out of their bunkers? Why was it that last winter, when we needed coal that was consigned to our dealers in the lower provinces, simply because the Canadian Government railways did not have bunkers to put it in, they took the coal from the cars, and our people went without it? That is not fuel control; I think we ought to have a real fuel controller. It was reported some time ago that our Mr. Magrath was to resign, and the view was expressed that he should stay on. We should have a fuel controller, and if Mr. Magrath is not the man to do this work, the appointment of another man to take his place should be seriously considered.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: Union Government.

Mr. ELKIN: I have in my possession a statement over the signature of as reliable a man in the Maritime Provinces as you would want to know, that instructions have been issued by the fuel controller that coal may be moved to Ontario points, but not to lower province points.

I have not at hand a good deal of what I had intended to say this evening, and it will be necessary for me to curtail my remarks. I did not feel, however, that I could allow this motion to go by without calling the attention of the Government and of the House to the seriousness of this situation. It will not do to say that this matter will be taken up in April, in May, or in June; it will be too late then. Our production of bituminous coal must be looked after. If we cannot get the labour in this country to get the coal out, we will have to import the labour. I understand that the matter has been before Council; certainly it has not come before the House since I have been here. But we have to face the situation; unless we get bituminous coal, and get it quickly; unless we get production under way, half our industries will be closed next year. It is a well known fact that the fuel controller is a member of the War Trade Board; it would be interesting for Council to know how often he has attended the meetings of that body, with which he is supposed to co-operate. I have it on good authority that he has hardly attended a meeting of the War Trade Board, under the jurisdiction of which all these matters are supposed to come. I hope that the Government will not consider these remarks of mine as a criticism of the Administration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ELKIN: Mr. Magrath was appointed before the formation of Union Government; nevertheless, a certain amount of responsibility rests on this Government to see that if Mr. Magrath's department is not administered as it should be, a remedy is applied very quickly.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, to one from Nova Scotia, where the coal is, this discussion is very interesting. It is rather disappointing and embarrassing to me to observe the course that has been adopted by the Government. They seem to have a great knack for the multiplication of intricate machinery, and if they are asked to do anything further about it, they just put another wheel here and another set of strings and belts there, making the machinery more intricate than ever, so that you do not know where it begins or where it is going to end. That sort of machinery, however, gives the Minister of Interior (Mr. Meighen) splendid play for his talent in the use of words and the representation of conditions according to the style and standard to which we have been so well accustomed in this House now for a good many years. He gave a great display of that ingenuity to-night in speaking of this wonderful machinery about the coal. I have often heard an old story about some peculiar tricks of a cat—and I am not, of course, extending this analogy to the minister. When this cat is going to catch a mouse at the front door, she will go upstairs, then down the back stairs, then outside, then in again, and finally land in the porch where she wanted to get the mouse. It would have been much better if that cat had taken the manly and straightforward course of going right to work and starting at the beginning of the performance. That is the sort of difficulty we experience when we want this Government to do anything. They take every step in connection with the coal except that of dealing with the men who have it, the men who produce it, the men who own it, the men under whose direction it exists in abundance. There are probably more than one hundred men in this House who have very little conception of the extent of the splendid coal fields that we have in Nova Scotia. Beginning in the western part of the province, in the county of Cumberland, close to the old home of the Speaker of this House, near the Spring Hill mines, the coal beds run down through Cumberland, Colchester, Pictou, Antigonish, Inverness, Cape Breton and Victoria counties, a distance, following the sinuosities of the coal beds and the course of the formation, of something like two hundred miles. The belt is at least three miles in width, there being three or four seams in some places, one underlying the other, and some of them thirty-six feet high. Imagine a coal seam thirty-six feet from top to bottom—higher, I suppose, than from the floor to the ceiling of this Chamber. This splendid face of coal can be converted into any kind of fuel that you want. If you do not like to burn bituminous coal as it comes fresh out of the mines, you can convert it into coke. The most aristocratic man in the country would be pleased to sit before a coke fire—it is a beautiful fire. But if he does not like the coal in that shape, he can make it into briquettes. If he is not satisfied with that and wants to be a little more aristocratic, he can convert it into gas—it is a splendid gas coal. If he is not satisfied with that, he can use it in the shape of electricity—and any of these things can be secured from Nova Scotia coal, which we have in inexhaustible quantities, inexhaustible measuring it according to the lifetime of a babe that is born to-night. I would point out to the minister that the people to go to about this coal are those who own it. If the Government want to make some arrangement for the purchase of coal, they should go to these persons and make contracts with them to deliver the coal at certain places throughout the Dominion where it may be available to the people. Mr. Magrath is a very estimable gentleman in every sense of the term and is possibly fitted for almost any walk of life except that of fuel controller. I remember well the night that he was appointed. The Minister of Labour was in his seat; I think the anouncement was made by him. I pointed out to him then that the proper thing to do was to make close contracts with those people who owned the coal, that the Government will buy from them at a fixed price every ton they can produce. In that way you have the coal miners and the coal managers and everybody going full swing to work, knowing they have fixed contracts and sale for every pound of coal they can produce.

If the Minister of Railways wants a number of cars from any car manufacturing concern in this country, he makes a contract with them for a certain number of cars at a fixed price, and they go to work and manufacture them. If the people of this country, as represented by the Government, want to get coal in large quantities, they will go to the people who produce coal and make a bargain with them that they will produce as much coal as possible for a fixed price. That is the way in which to handle the matter, and not by multiplying machinery without effecting any real good. Those men who own coal are willing to sell it. They will produce it as rapidly as it can be produced, if they know it is going to be sold and if they are certain of their prices. I pointed out then, and I point out now that, as has been stated by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Elkin) the proper time for the moving of coal is now or as soon as navigation is open. I would suggest to the Government to use barges for the moving of coal. It is hard to get steamers now, but in the summer time it is quite easy to use barges coming up the river St. Lawrence to the head of navigation, where the coal can be stored in large quantities, and from the storing places it can be distributed throughout the country when the proper time for distribution comes. If the Government take advantage of the navigation season they can collect this coal from Nova Scotia and from the West and other places and put it in a proper position so that the Government will control it. They will get their money for it. There is no trouble about that. The people will buy the coal, and it will pay them to give good prices for is now because you know, Sir, when the winter comes, when transportation is difficult and the roads are blocked, people have to pay extraordinary prices for their coal; whereas, if provision is made at the proper time and coal is stored at a place from which it can easily be distributed, exorbitant prices need not be extracted from the people. They will then be in a position to pay the Government a fair profit on its investment, and the country will be secure from distress caused by lack of fuel. I wish to point out that we have in this Dominion any quantity of coal. The mining of coal of course, requires many men, but the mining is not carried on to-day as it was twenty or twenty-five years ago; to-day we mine coal largely by machinery, and it does not require so many men now to produce coal as it did in former days.

Let me conclude by assuring the Minister of the Interior and every member of the Government of that concerning which I really need not assure them—because they know it now—that we have in the province of Nova Scotia in this magnificent belt of which I have spoken abundance of coal. From the plants and mines established there, we can produce splendid fuel; and while we have adundance of it, there need not be any suffering in this country, so far as warmth from fuel is concerned. As we have that fuel and the means of producing it, I hope the Government will go direct to the point, and, avoiding this multiplicity of wheels and schemes and Orders in Councils, that they will get the coal, put themselves in possession of it and be in position to distribute it to the people when they really require it.

Mr. T. M. TWEEDIE (Calgary West): I have listened with interest to the discussion on this question and in particular to the excellent address delivered by the mover of the resolution. While I agree with many matters that have been brought up, I cannot agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Elkin) when he said that the fuel controller of this Government was a joke, because I believe, if this Government has in its employ or under its jurisdiction a man who is worthy of the confidence of the Government and of the people of the Dominion of Canada, and a man who is held in high respect and esteem by all classes of the people apart from their political affiliations, it is Mr. C. A. Magrath, fuel controller of the Dominion. I have known Mr. Magrath for many years, and it is very unfair that any hon. member should make an attack on him personally when he has not the privilege of occupying a seat on the floor of this House, and is, therefore, unable to defend himself. For Mr. Magrath I hold no brief, but I speak of him only as I have personally found him, from my knowledge of his long connection with western life in Canada and the great service which he has rendered in the development of that country. He is a gentleman who has been successful in his own private life and in the public positions which he has occupied in this country, and he has rendered valuable services to this Dominion in connection with the international waterways and as fuel controller, the position he now occupies. The criticisms are not fair, because, if you examine them, you will find they are based on the simple fact that the Dominion Government has not had schooners in New York in order to take anthracite coal to St. John so that the people of that city may store it this spring, and then sit down and enjoy the heat next winter. The advice given by Mr. Magrath to my hon. friend was good, sound advice. Mr. Magrath told him: You had better go home and tell your people to fit their grates up for bituminous coal. Is that not sound advice? Are they not in the centre of a district which produces more bituminous coal than any other district in the Dominion? Have they not the coal fields of Pictou, Inverness, Victoria, Cape Breton and Cumberland to draw upon? Can they not go there at any time during the summer and can they not go to some of those ports, even in the winter and load their schooners with bituminous coal and take it to St. John, to keep the people in that city warm? If he was told by the director of fuel in the United States that there would be 2,500,000 tons of anthracite coal coming to this country, and if he was told by Mr. Magrath that none of that would be distributed in the Maritime Provinces, I feel that Mr. Magrath would be doing his duty, and this Government would be doing their duty if they restricted the importation of that coal to the province of Ontario and that portion of the Dominion which lies west, including Manitoba and part of Saskatchewan. My hon. friend must realize that in Ontario we have no watercourses except some lakes, that in Manitoba and Saskatchewan we have no watercourses by which we can bring this anthracite coal from Pennsylvania. He must realize that one of the most serious problems we have had in the West in connection with the coal situation has been railway transportation, coupled with the labour problems which have been referred to by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen). Does my hon. friend think that Mr. Magrath is going to give the people of the Maritime Provinces all that portion of the anthracite coal which they would like to have, because they have base-burners and because anthracite coal is cleaner to handle, and, perhaps, gives out more heat? He must realize that we have passed through a very strenuous period during the past winter when hundreds of ocean-going boats were held up in Atlantic ports because of fuel shortage. He must realize that difficulty arose in regard to transportation over which the fuel controller of this country had no jurisdiction or control. He must realize that every part of this country has suffered from want of coal. He must realize that manufacturing industries have doubled their output during the past year; that they have been working night and day, and that it is more essential to this country that those factories be kept working than that people in New Brunswick and the Maritime Provinces be allowed to get in their usual supply of anthracite coal in order that they may live a little more luxuriously.

Mr. W. A. BUCHANAN (Lethbridge): I do not represent a part of the country that is suffering from fuel shortage; in our part of the country we have all we require and are able to supply a good portion of western Canada. But I would like to offer a suggestion to the Government, and it relates somewhat to the question of anthracite coal mentioned by my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Tweedie). The mines of western Canada unquestionably could supply the demands of western Canada, if the transportation facilities were available, and if we could always be sure of the conditions of the labour market. Given those conditions, all the anthracite coal at present going into Manitoba and parts of Saskatchewan could go to Ontario, for instance, where the shortage is the greatest. But it is necessary first of all to make sure of the transportation facilities in order to get coal from the mines of Alberta east to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. It is also important that the labour market should be assured all the year round. The chief difficulty with the mines of western Canada at present is that they are not sure of an all-the-year-round market, month in and month out, and until that is remedied it will be impossible to have a steady supply of labour, because miners are dissatisfied if they can secure only four or five months' work with one mine owner, and during the rest of the year have to look around for employment at other occupations. If we could arrange to provide the mines of western Canada with the entire western Canada market, it would assist to a great extent in meeting the labour situation. Of course, there has been the difficulty that western Canada coal has lost some of its fuel value when in storage, and dealers have not been anxious to store it for that reason, but discoveries have been made that seem to promise success, and I would suggest to the Government that they inquire into these proposed storage remedies either through the Conservation Commission or through the Fuel Controller's Department. Once the storage difficulty is overcome it will be possible for the dealers throughout the prairie provinces to acquire coal during the summer months for use in the fall and winter, and when we can do that, we can keep the mines in operation the year round, and that will solve the labour difficulty. We have only tapped the coal resources of western Canada. The mines of western Canada at the present time have a greater capacity than the demand of that country, and there are unlimited areas of coal as yet untouched. If the difficulties I have mentioned could be overcome, western Canada could supply the demands of all Ontario, I believe. Of course, Ontario is accustomed to using a hard coal, and we are accustomed to using a coal that is called soft, but it suits our purpose in every respect, and I am sure Ontario would find it quite useful, especially to meet shortages of the kind that occurred during last winter.

Mr. R. H. BUTTS (South Cape Breton): It would be inadvisable for a Cape Breton man to hold his tongue when the coal question comes up in such a manner as it has to-night. I wish to review the observations made by the mover of the resolution (Mr.

Lemieux) and by my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), and the very first suggestion I would like to make to them would be that, as far as the coal areas of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia are concerned, they might bring a little bit of influence to bear upon their friend the Premier of Nova Scotia to see if he would not really do something tangible to right the wrongs perpetrated by the local legislature of that province during the past twenty years. In Cape Breton County alone there are areas containing hundreds of millions of tons of coal that cannot be touched, belonging to the Dominion Coal Company, held under long leases and unworked. There are also other vast areas that cannot be operated because the Dominion Coal Company properties are interlocked with those of the Nova Scotia Steel Company, and vice versa. Would it not be better for my two hon. friends, instead of making suggestions to the Government, to go to their friends in the Nova Scotia government and see if something could not be done to break the deadlock between those two companies? Not only are the towns suffering for coal, but the annual production of coal is actually decreasing year by year at the rate of some half a million tons yearly, and this notwithstanding the fact that great improvements have been made in mining machinery and production methods. The mover of the resolution came out with scare headlines about the shortage of coal.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In Central Canada.

Mr. BUTTS: I am afraid he got his information from an unreliable source. If he will look at the pamphlet that was issued by the coal barons of Nova Scotia at the time the hon. member for Shelburne and Queens (Mr. Fielding) and the late lamented Mr. Paterson, went to Washington to make a reciprocity pact, he will find that in the previous year the production of bituminous coal in the United States amounted to about 416,000,000 tons, and that coal from Newport News could be laid down over the side in Boston for $1.11 per ton. Those were the conditions; that was the price; do those figures indicate any scarcity of coal? There is a real difficulty in Nova Scotia regarding coal, and that difficulty is the lack of transportation facilities. One year before the war broke out, you could put Nova Scotia lumber over the side in Liverpool, England, at approximately 36 shillings a standard, but before the war had been on two years the rate advanced to 380 shillings a standard.

[Mr. Butts.]

You must remember at the same time that shipping has been depleted at such a rate that it is to-day one of the most alarming problems of the British Empire and the Allies. The question of transportation, even before the war, was one of the big questions, and we only began to solve it when the Norwegian ships came to this country with Chinese crews. We then became able to carry coal from Sydney harbour to the city of Montreal at prices around fifty cents per ton. That low rate was the only thing that made it possible for Nova Scotia coal to meet in St. Lawrence ports the importation of American coal. And speaking of water transportation I would remind the House that we have in Sydney harbour one of the four or five finest harbours in the world, where almost the combined navies of the world might float at easy anchor—all kinds of water. On both sides of the harbour we have large steel plants. We have the magnificent plant of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and the somewhat smaller plant on the other side of the Nova Scotia Steel Company, but with very great potentialities. We have mines in the county of Cape Breton alone that are producing over four and a half million tons of coal annually. We have in the same county limestone,—unlimited. We have within the borders of our own county every constituent, and a big output of many lines of finished steel. We have produced and shipped to the seaboard of British Columbia cargoes of steel rails at prices lower than rival companies obtained, and have landed them there in competition with the steel plants of North America. We sent these rails round the Horn before the Panama canal was opened. All this goes to show the enormous possibilities of the steel and coal of Cape Breton county. The Government might very well look into the possibilities of Sydney harbour as a location for the building of steel ships. We have in Sydney harbour all these advantages together with the new steel-plate mill and the day is near when we shall be able to compete with any part of the world in steel ships. By undertaking there construction at once we will go far towards solving the difficulty of transportation which has been the bane of our coal and steel industry.

Speaking of the production of coal, let me again ask the hon. mover of the resolution (Mr. Lemieux) and my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) did it ever occur to them, between the time they conceived the idea of bringing in this motion and the time they made their speeches, that coal mine after coal mine has been closed down in Nova Scotia, and all on account of the evil and ill-conceived legislation of their friends of the Liberal Government in Nova Scotia? Did it ever occur to them that my hon. colleague and I had been down in that local House for years, fighting with all our strength these ill-advised mining laws of the Murray Government?

An hon. MEMBER: Since Union Government?

Mr. BUTTS: I am speaking of Murray's Anti-Union Government of the last six years. Did it ever occur to them that the Port Hood mine was closed down, and that for about a week in that local House we fought for an investigation of the conditions prevailing at Port Hood? Did it ever occur to them that we had in Nova Scotia this last year two of the most terrible mining disasters that ever occurred in this country, which were only lost sight of on account of the overshadowing magnitude of the Halifax disaster? Did it ever occur to them to ask this House why it was that those disasters occurred? My hon. colleague and I can tell them that the accidents were due to the terrible mining laws and poor mining inspection existing in Nova Scotia. There was no more inspection of mines there than there is in the city of Quebec. Did it ever occur to those gentlemen that it would be well to look to their own household before they began to criticize others? A mine was closed down in the county of Pictou, at Thorburn, not long ago, and no one has been told why. Another mine in Westville was closed down and nobody has been told why. This very high vein of coal that my hon. friend from Cape Breton speaks of was not only 36 feet high, but it was 48, 50 and 60 feet, and it was closed down on account of bad mining laws and ineffective government inspection in Nova Scotia, and between 400 and 500 miners left the district. These are some of the matters that I suggest hon. gentlemen should think of before they begin to talk of the necessity of this Federal Government looking after the increased production of coal, which is primarily a provincial government matter. The increased production of coal in the eastern part of Canada is dependent upon the local government, and it is very greatly hampered by the local government, and I would say to these gentlemen that, at least for the sake of propriety, they had better withdraw this resolution and look to their own household. They had better go to Mr. Murray and Mr. Armstrong, and the worthy Attorney General, Mr. Daniels, in Nova Scotia, and ask them if they cannot do their share to relieve the coal situation.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crothers the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Reid, the House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

Thursday, April 4, 1918.

DEPUTY SERJEANT-AT-ARMS.

APPOINTMENT OF LOUIS CHARLES PANET.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that the Serjeant-at-Arms, with my approval, has appointed Louis Charles Panet, Esquire, to be his deputy during the present session of Parliament.

EMPLOYEES OF HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That the recommendation of the Honourable the Speaker, laid on the table of the House on the 2nd April instant, relative to the yearly increase in salary to certain Officers and Clerks and Employees of the House, and also a clerk in the Joint Distribution Office of the House of Commons and Senate, pursuant to Section 8 of Chapter 9, of the Statutes of 1917, be approved.

Motion agreed to.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House has approved the recommendation of the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons for the payment to a clerk of the Joint Distribution Office of the House of Commons and Senate, of the yearly increase in salary, pursuant to Section 8 of Chapter 9, of the Statutes of 1917.

Motion agreed to.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That the names of the following members be added to the following Select Standing Committees viz:

Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines—Messrs. Bolton, Harold, Long, Mewburn, Reid, (Grenville), and Ross.

Miscellaneous Private Bills—Messrs. Kennedy and Pedlow.

Standing Orders—Mr. Duff.

Public Accounts—Messrs. Duff, Mewburn and Ross.

Banking and Commerce—Messrs. Cowan, Johnston, Kennedy, Pedlow and Ross.
Agriculture and Colonization—Messrs. Bolton, Cowan, Harold, Johnston, Long and Sinclair, (Queens, P. E. I.)
Marine and Fisheries—Messrs. Duff and Sinclair, (Queens, P. E. I.)
Mines and Minerals—Messrs. Bolton, Johnston and Long.
Forests, Waterways and Waterpowers—Mr. Cowan.
Library—Mr. Harold.

I understand these additions have been assented to by the whips on each side, and the motion is due principally to members having been gazetted since the last motion was made.

Motion agreed to.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN moved:

That the name of Mr. Mowat be substituted for that of Mr. McLeod on the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, and that the name of Mr. McLeod be substituted for that of Mr. Mowat on the Select Standing Committee to supervise the official reports of the House.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 31, to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. MURPHY: Explain.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: This Bill is similar to the Bill I introduced in 1915. The legislation is along the same line as that which I have asked the Parliament of Canada, during the last five years, to bring into force. It is for the purpose of bringing the boats engaged on our inland waters and our coastwise trade under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. The railways in Canada are compelled to file their tolls, rates and tariff agreements with the Railway Board, and they are also compelled to do this with regard to boats connected with the railways.

I firmly believe it would be in the public interest not only to compel the boats on our inland waters and along the coast to file their tariff rates with the Board, but to bring them under the Board's absolute control. There are on the Canadian register 8,500 boats, with some 45,000 employees. In view of the fact that these boats are allowed to make use of our rivers, harbours, docks and canals free of charge, in which improvements the people of this country have invested over $350,000,000, I think hon. gentlemen will readily agree that it would be in the public interest for the Parliament of Canada to have control over these vessels. The Government of the United States, within the last two years, has passed most stringent laws and regulations governing the traffic on their inland waters and their coastwise trade. Practically every civilized country in the world, except the Dominion of Canada, has control of its shipping, and I hope when the Bill comes before the House that hon. members will assist in passing it, so that it may become law during this session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by asterisks).

CHIEF JUSTICE SIR CHARLES FITZPATRICK.

Mr. MORPHY:

1. How much salary was paid last year to Sir Charles Fitzpatrick as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada?
2. How much was paid last year to Sir Charles Fitzpatrick as Deputy Governor General; (a) what are his duties in this office; and (b) how much was paid to his predecessor in office?
3. How much was allowed last year to Sir Charles Fitzpatrick by way of expenses for duties overseas?
4. Was Sir Charles Fitzpatrick paid such last-named allowance or any part thereof?
5. Is Sir Charles Fitzpatrick mentioned in the preceding four questions one and the same person?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. $10,000.
2. $5,000; (a) to act for or in absence of His Excellency the Governor General; (b) No predecessor.
3. Parliament voted $2,500.
4. No.
5. Yes.

FISHING TRAPS: ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

*Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Is the Government aware that some farmers along the shore of the St. Lawrence river, are prohibited from fishing, or establishing and using encircling fishing traps, in front of their property, by reason of the heirs of Seigneur Fraser exacting from them an exorbitant rent amounting in certain cases to as much as forty dollars for each fishing season?
2. Is it the intention of the Government to give instruction to the Food Controller in Canada to cause an earnest inquiry in the matter with a view to determine a reasonable price for the establishment of said encircling fishing traps in that portion of the County of Temiscouata comprising Notre Dame du Portage, River du Loup, Cacouna and Notre Dame des Sept Douleurs?

Hon. Mr. BALLANTYNE:

1. No.

2. Not at present advised. The fisheries in the district mentioned are being administered by the provincial government.

EXEMPTION TRIBUNAL EXPENSES.

Mr. PACAUD:

1. Have all the local Judges attending to the exemption claims been paid?

2. If not, what is the number of those who have not been so paid, and for what reason?

3. Have all the court clerks and other employees of such tribunals been paid?

4. If not, how many claims are outstanding, and for what reason?

5. What is the total amount paid to Judges and clerks of the exemption tribunals to date, and what is the total expenditure to date of such tribunals?

6. What is the number of officials and employees connected with the Central Appeal Tribunal, and what is the salary paid to each of them?

7. What is the total amount of disbursements to date in connection with the putting into operation of the Military Service Act, 1917?

Hon. Mr. DOHERTY:

1. No.

2. 342 not paid; accounts in process of checking or not yet sent in.

3. No.

4. It is impossible to state how many claims are outstanding as the accounts of the tribunals have not all been sent in.

5. $268,749.63.

6. 96, as per statement attached.

7. $1,424,785.15.

STAFF OF THE OFFICE OF THE CENTRAL APPEAL JUDGE.

J. Lorne McDougall, Clerk to the Central Appeal Judge, $250 per month.

P. M. Roy, Secretary to Central Appeal Judge, transferred from Supreme Court. No special remuneration.

Five barristers, engaged as counsel, $70.00 per week salary and expenses.

Eight barristers, engaged as counsel, $84.00 per week salary and expenses.

One agricultural examiner, $105.00 per week salary and expenses.

One barrister, Office of Central Public Representative, $84.00 per week salarly and expenses.

One comptroller, $180.00 per month.
One stenographer, $150.00 per month.
Five stenographers, $110.00 per month.
Eleven stenographers, $100.00 per month.
One stenographer, $95.00 per month.
One stenographer, $90.00 per month.
Six stenographers, $85.00 per month.
Eight stenographers, $80.00 per month.
Three stenographers, $75.00 per month.
One stenographer, $70.00 per month.
One stenographer, $65.00 per month.
Two clerks, Filing Department, $125.00 per month.
One clerk, Filing Department, $70.00 per month.
Three clerks, Filing Department, $65.00 per month.
Ten clerks, Filing Department, $60.00 per month.
One clerk, Filing Department, $50.00 per month.
One index clerk, $90.00 per month.
Two index clerks, $60.00 per month.
One clerk, Record Branch, $90.00 per month.
One clerk, Record Branch, $85.00 per month.
One clerk, Record Branch, $50.00 per month.
Three copyists, $65.00 per month.
Six copyists, $60.00 per month.
Two copyists, $55.00 per month.
One messenger, $75.00 per month.
One messenger, $70.00 per month.
Two messengers, $60.00 per month.
Three messengers, $40.00 per month

IMPERIAL WAR GRAVES COMMISSION

Sir SAM HUGHES:

A report from Montreal says: "Imperial War Graves Commission has been informed that Canadian authorities have decided on a one-pattern headstone for all Canadian graves with the option of a special crest or motto for each battalion or a service design." Will the Government be good enough to give the particulars, if any, in this matter?

Major-General MEWBURN: The following cablegram has just been received from the High Commissioner in reference to this matter:

Imperial War Graves Commission decided there should be equality of treatment for graves of all officers and men abroad and that this principle should be carried out by Commission by erection over all graves in war cemeteries abroad of headstones of uniform dimensions though with some variety of pattern. English regiments may decide have distinctive pattern for each regiment but after full consultation with Canadian corps and military authorities here Kemp and I found general consensus opinion that we should have uniform headstone and inscription for all Canadians with right to have separate crest or motto for each battalion or service. Decision was therefore made accordingly through Imperial War Graves Commission but no design for Canadian headstone has yet been selected. Writing more fully.

PERLEY.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. TUCKER.

Mr. PORTER:

1. When was Mr. Tucker appointed as Agricultural Representative on the Leave of Absence Board, Military District No. 3, Kingston, under the Military Service Act, 1917?

2. Upon whose recommendation, or at whose request was he so appointed?

3. Has he any known special qualifications for such position?

4. What pay does he receive for his services?

Hon. Mr. CRERAR:

1. February 6, 1918.

2. He was appointed by the Minister of Agriculture, not upon recommendation or at request, but after satisfying himself by inquiry that he possessed the necessary qualifications for the position.

3. Yes.

4. $5 per diem and expenses.

RETURNED SOLDIERS.

Mr. TRAHAN:

Of the 105,250 wounded men mentioned in the speech of the right hon. the Prime Minister on the 19th of March last, how many have returned to the Front?

Major-General MEWBURN: The information asked is not available, and if it were, it would not be in the public interest to give it.

OFFICERS OF MONTREAL BASE DEPOT BATTALIONS.

Mr. POWER:

1. Who are the commissioned officers employed at Montreal at the Base Depot Battalion, No. 1?

2. How long have they been in this battalion?

3. What is their rank?

4. Who are those amongst them who have performed service overseas?

5. How long were they actually at the Front?

6. To which battalion did they belong when in the trenches?

Major-General MEWBURN: The answers are tabulated as follows:

1st Depot Battalion. 1st Quebec Regiment.

(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)
M. A. Piche	24-9-17	Lt,-Col	No.	Information not available.		O. C.
C. M. McKergow	24-9-17	Major	"			2nd in Comm'd
C. W. Hewson, M.C	8-10-17	"	Yes.		5th C. M. R.
N. Loring	28-9-17	"	No
J. J. Walker	1-2-18	Captain	Yes.		73rd Batt.
L. S. Yuill	6-11-17	"	"		18th Batt.
L. A. Sewell	6-11-17	"	"		24th Batt.
R. J. Campbell	6 11-17	"	"		25th Batt.
J. T. L. Shum	13-11-17	"	"		42nd Batt.
A. M. Gammell	18-10-17	"	"		P. P. C. L. I.
H. Armstrong	6-11-17	"	"		14th Batt.
J. H. Findlay	1-10-17	"	"		55th Batt.
*W. H. Butters	26-12-17	Lieut.	No.
J. Renahan	6-11-17	"	Yes.		13th Batt.
F. W. G. Hale	18-2-18	"	"		42nd Batt.
*G. B. Dorey	2-10-17	"	No.
*W. K. Nelles	5-10-17	"	"
*F. W. F. Whitehead	5-10-17	"	"
*H. N. J. Dandurand	6-10-17	"	"
*W. A. Ramsay	1-10-17	"	"
*W. H. Harrison	15-10-17	"	"
*H. K. Gorham	10-10-17	"	"
*W. B. Clark	8-11-17	"	"
*G. F. Macnaughton	8-11-17	"	"
*L. St. G. Wilkins	8-11-17	"	"
*T. B. Heney	2-1-18	"	"
*R. Hampson	26-12-17	"	"
*H. C. Howard	18-2-18	"	"
*L. G. Bell	18-2-18	"	"
*W. L. Darling	18-2-18	"	Yes.	(Conducting duty)
*F. L. West	26-12-17	"	No.
*G. O. A. Brown	31-12-17	"	Yes.	(Conducting duty)
C. W. Rigby	1-9-17	Pay-Mr. & Hon. Capt.	"		218th Batt.	Attached.
A. E. Vipond	11-1-18	Med. Off. Captain.	"		A. M. C.	Attached.

*Temporary appointment, to be replaced by returned officers when available.

OFFICERS OF MONTREAL BASE DEPOT BATTALIONS.

Mr. POWER:

1. Who are the commissioned officers employed at Montreal at the Base Depot Battalion, No. 2?
2. How long have they been in this battalion?
3. What is their rank?
4. Who are those amongst them who have performed service overseas?
5. How long were they actually at the Front?
6. To which battalion did they belong when in the trenches?

Major-General MEWBURN: The answers are tabulated as follows:

2nd Depot Battalion. 2nd Quebec Regiment.

(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)
O. J. L. Daly Gingras	26-9-17	Lt.-Col.	Yes.	Information not available.	22nd Batt.	O. C.
E. Mackay-Papineau	1-12-17	Major	"		"	2nd in comm'd
M. Dubrule	12-10-17	Captain	"		"	Adjutant.
A. P. Grothe	5-11-17	Major	"		178th Batt.
L. Gavreau	19-1-18	"	"		22nd Batt.
L. N. Plante	1-1-18	Captain	"		163rd Batt.
H. Dansereau	7-1-18	"	"		69th Batt.
P. E. Leclerc	16-11-17	"	"		22nd Batt.
L. Plante	15-2-18	"	"		"
*T. A. A. Reeb	25-10-17	"	No.
*G. Guimond	1-11-17	"	"
H. J. Jolicœur	1-1-18	Lieut.	Yes.		22nd Batt.
E. Dubuc	1-10-17	"	"		A. M. C.
*H. Marquette	9-11-17	"	No.
*L. E. Ranger	12-11-17	"	"
*J. N. Provost	2-1-18	"	"
*F. Dansereau	2-1-18	"	Yes.	(Conducting duty)
*M. McKay	7-12-17	"	"		221st Batt
*L. Beaudry	7-1-18	"	No.
*M. C. Lalonde	7-1-18	"	"
*A. M. LaRose	24-1-18	"	"
*N. B. Cohen	7-2-18	"	"
*J. M. Query	7-1-18	"	Yes.	(Conducting duty)
E. J. Lalime	23-10-17	Qr. Mr. & Hon. Capt.	No.			Attached.
J. A. Archambault	20-10-17	Pay-Mr. & Hon. Capt.	No.			"
J. M. E. Prevost	5-11-17	Med. Off. Captain.	Yes.		A. M. C.	"

*Temporary appointment, to be replaced by returned officers when available.

EMPLOYMENT OF RETURNED OFFICERS.

Mr. POWER:

1. Has the Minister of Militia and Defence received any request or resolution from the Great War Veterans' Association or any other body with regard to the employment of returned officers and promoted non-commissioned officers in the Base Depot Battalion raised under the Military Service Act?
2. If so, what action has been taken to comply with these resolutions?

Major-General MEWBURN:

1 and 2. Representations dealing generally with employment of returned officers and other ranks have been made by the Great War Veterans' Association through its officials. Apart from such representations, it has for a long time been the policy of the department, having regard to efficiency, to give preference in military employment to officers and soldiers who have served at the front.

With special reference to depot battalions, instructions to the above effect were issued in September, 1917, to all districts, and these instructions have been complied with.

THE VICTORY LOAN.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. Has the Government appointed a special committee known as the Victory Loan Committee?
2. If so, when was it appointed?
3. What members constitute said committee?
4. What powers have been conferred upon them, and what are their duties?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. With the approval of the Minister of Finance, a committee known as the "Victory Loan Special Committee" was appointed by the Dominion Executive Committee of Canada's Victory Loan.

2. The membership of the committee was approved by the Minister of Finance on January 3, 1918.

3. G. H. Wood, Esq., Toronto; H. R. Tudhope, Esq., Toronto; J. W. Mitchell, Esq., Toronto; W. A. Mackenzie, Esq., Toronto; Sir Augustus Nanton, Winnipeg; P. McDougall, Esq., Montreal; R. A. Stephenson, Esq., Montreal; J. M. Mackie, Esq., Montreal.

4. The committee was formed for the purpose of assisting in organizing and stabilizing the market for Canada's Victory Loan, 1917. With that end in view, and in co-operation with the Bank of Montreal, financial agents of the Dominion, it lays down such rules and regulations to be followed by co-operating bond and stock dealers in connection with trading in Victory Loan bonds, and takes such other action as from time to time may be authorized by the Bank of Montreal with the consent of the Minister of Finance.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. Do all the subscribers to the Victory Loan regularly pay their instalments?
2. If not, how many of these subscribers have failed to pay their instalments?
3. What is the amount of the arrears?
4. Of the total number of subscribers, what proportion are in arrears in each of the provinces, and in the whole country?
5. What is the proportion between the instalments in abeyance and the instalments due?
6. Has the Government exercised its right to forfeit past payments in the case of those persons who have been unable to meet their obligations when payments became due?
7. If so, in how many cases, for each of the provinces of Canada?
8. What is the amount, for each province, so forfeited?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:

1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. The subscribers in addition to the 10 per cent paid on application were allowed five instalments in which to complete their payments. The last of these instalments is due on the 1st May. The department is not in a position to answer the questions categorically except to say that a very large proportion of the subscribers paid their subscriptions in full on the first three instalment dates. Including the 1st March instalment the amount of the loan payable was 60 per cent. On that date 77 per cent of the allotments had been paid in full.

6, 7 and 8. The answer is no.

[Mr. A. K. Maclean.]

SILVER MONEY IN CIRCULATION.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. What was the total amount of Canadian silver money in circulation when war was declared in August, 1914?
2. What was the total amount of silver money in circulation on the 1st March, 1918?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:

1 and 2. Silver in circulation cannot be stated exactly. Is a matter of estimate.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. What was the total amount of gold in reserve in charge of the Receiver-General when war was declared in 1914?
2. What was the amount of said gold in reserve on the 1st March, 1918?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. $97,136,426.88.
2. $120,005,662.45.

DOMINION NOTES IN CIRCULATION IN 1914 AND 1918.

Mr. TRAHAN.

1. What was the total amount of paper money in circulation in Dominion Notes when war was declared in August, 1914?
2. What was the total amount of said Dominion Notes in circulation on the 1st March, 1918?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. July 31, 1914, $112,793,833.28.
2. February 28, 1918, $255,316,652.92.

FOREIGN LOANS.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. How many foreign loans obtained by the Government will become due during the fiscal year, 1918-1919?
2. What date will each of such loans become due?
3. What is the rate of interest upon each of said loans?
4. What amount of sinking fund has been provided by the Government for the payment of each of the said loans?
5. What course does the Government propose taking to meet such payments when said loans become due?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN: No foreign loans maturing in 1918-19.

DOMESTIC LOANS.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. Has the Government made use of any of the various loans obtained since August, 1914, to this date, to meet the accruing interest payments upon War Loans?
2. If so, what was the gross amount for each of the years 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917, so paid?
3. Does the Government propose to make use of future war loan funds for the purpose of meeting the accruing interest payments referred to in question No. 1?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:
1, 2 and 3. The answer is no.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. In connection with the money loans obtained previously to the commencement of hostilities, has the Government decided to suspend, during the continuance of the war, the discretion it exercised in respect to the sinking funds of said loans?
2. If not, for what reason?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. No.
2. It is not deemed necessary at present.

WAR EXPENDITURE.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. What amount has been paid in connection with war expenditure by means of: (a) War taxes; (b) Treasury bonds; (c) Short term loans; and (d) Long term loans?
2. Were sinking fund provisions made in respect to the Government war loans issued since August, 1914?
3. If so, what is the amount of the sinking fund for each of the said loans and the rate thereof?
4. If not, for what reason have no sinking fund provisions been made?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. Under the Audit Act all public moneys and revenues form one consolidated revenue fund and expenditures are not ear-marked against any source of revenue.
2. Yes, one half of one per cent.
3 and 4. $1,000,000; one half of one per cent, applicable to the 1925 Loan.

SALARIES OF CANADA FOOD BOARD.

Mr. J. F. REID:

What are the salaries now being paid to each of the members of the Canada Food Board?

Hon. Mr. CRERAR: Henry B. Thomson, chairman, $7,000 per annum; Hon. C. A. Dunning, Director of Agricultural Production, no salary; J. D. McGregor, Director of Agricultural Labour, no salary.

OBSERVATION AND PRIVATE CARS.

Mr. MacNUTT:

1. Has an order been issued to discontinue observation and private cars on transcontinental and other trains?
2. If so, was this done in the interests of conservation?
3. Is the Government aware that recently a heavy private car was attached to the rear end of the Imperial Limited Train No. 2, at Vancouver, and hauled across the Continent to some point in Ontario?

Hon. J. D. REID:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. No.

THE MONEY MARKET.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. Has the Government adopted any measure or measures with a view to preventing a depreciation of value in the money market, in respect to the bonds issued for the various war loans?
2. If so, what measures were adopted?
3. If not, what does the Government propose doing to provide against such contingency?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN: The answer to this question will be found in answer to the hon. gentleman's question headed "The Victory Loan."

PROHIBITION—DOMINION REVENUE.

*Mr. TRAHAN:

1. To what extent will the revenue be affected by reason of the Prohibition measure in Canada?
2. In what manner does the Government propose to offset the receipts thus affected?

Hon. A. K. MACLEAN: The subject of this question will be dealt with in the Budget Speech of the acting Minister of Finance.

RECONSTRUCTION OF PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS COMMITTEE.

Mr. COPP:

1. Who were named on the Original Building Committee for the rebuilding of the new Parliament buildings?
2. Who are at present acting on the said Building Committee?

Hon. Mr. CARVELL:

1. Hon. Robt. Rogers, M.P., Hon. Charles Murphy, M.P., Hon. Rodolph Lemieux, M.P., Hon. Dr. J. D. Reid, M.P., Hon. J. D. Hazen, M.P., Hon. William Pugsley, M.P., Hon. P. E. Blondin, M.P., Hon. Senator Robert Watson, Hon. Sir James Lougheed, K.C.

2. Hon. F. B. Carvell, M.P., Hon. Dr. J. D. Reid, M.P., Hon. P. E. Blondin, Hon. C. C. Ballantyne, M.P., Hon. Senator Robert Watson, Hon. Senator G. D. Robertson, Hon. Sir James Lougheed, K.C., Hon. J. A. Calder, M.P.

REGIMENT AT AMHERST DURING ELECTION.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Which regiment or part of a regiment landed or arrived at Amherst, N. S., shortly before the last general election?
2. Did the members or soldiers of that regiment vote at the last general elections?
3. Who was their commanding officer, what was his name, rank and the date of his appointment?
4. Where was the above regiment recruited, and where drilled?
5. When did this regiment arrive at Amherst and from whence was it brought?
6. How long did this regiment remain at Amherst, and where did it go from there?

7. Were all the soldiers of said regiment British subjects? If so, how many were British subjects by birth, and how many by naturalization?

8. How many men composed the said regiment, and how many of them voted at Amherst at the last general election?

Major-General MEWBURN:

1. Reinforcing drafts from the 1st and 2nd Depot Battalions, B. C. Regiment.

2. No available information.

3. Lieut. J. Douglas Beatson, appointed to 1st Depot Battalion, B. C. Regiment. (1st September, 1917, as lieutenant.)

4. British Columbia. Recruited and trained at Victoria and Vancouver.

5. Arrived Amherst, N.S., November 29th, from Military District No. 11, British Columbia.

6. Stationed at Amherst from November 29th to December 16th; proceeded to St. John, N.B., en route for Overseas.

7. Information not directly available, but could be obtained with considerable difficulty, necessitating a very careful perusal of documents, and which would take some time to accomplish.

8. Draft 1st Depot Battalion, B. C. Regiment: Strength, 2 officers and 200 other ranks. Draft 2nd Depot Battalion, B. C. ranks. No information available as to how many of these troops voted at Amherst at the last general election.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS.

Mr. POWER:

1. What properties, if any, have been purchased by the Militia Department or the Military Hospital Commission in Quebec City, since the first of January, 1917?

2. From whom were these purchases made, and on whose recommendation?

3. What was the purchase price?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. How many persons of all ranks are employed by the Military Hospitals Commission in British Columbia, and what are their names, rank and salaries?

2. Why were they appointed, and where are they stationed?

3. How many of these men have seen service at the front?

4. Who is the senior official of the Military Hospitals Commission in British Columbia?

5. What is the total monthly cost of carrying on the work of the Commission in British Columbia, and how many men are being looked after at present?

6. How many buildings are operated by the Military Hospitals Commission in British Columbia, and where are they situated?

7. How many officials from headquarters in Ottawa found it necessary to visit the Pacific Coast during the past year, and for what purpose?

[Mr. Sinclair.]

8. Has the Military Hospitals Commission a regularly appointed publicity agent? If so, what is his name, and what are his duties?

9. Has he seen overseas service, and what is his salary?

10. What was the total cost of the publicity department during 1917?

THE QUEBEC DISTURBANCES.

MOTION OF MR. J. A. CURRIE FOR LEAVE TO ADJOURN THE HOUSE WITHDRAWN FOR THE TIME BEING AT REQUEST OF PRIME MINISTER.

On the Orders of the Day.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe) asked for leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the recent rioting in the city of Quebec, together with all the attendant circumstances in connection therewith.

Right Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Before any action is taken on the proposal of the hon. gentleman, I would suggest to him the advisability of postponing it until to-morrow at least, as any discussion upon it should be accompanied by information which the Government will then be prepared to lay on the table of the House, but which it is not prepared to lay upon the Table to-day. These proposals have been and are now under consideration, and can be announced to-morrow. In the meantime, it seems to me undesirable that any debate should proceed to-day, in the absence of the information which I have referred to. I, therefore, ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his proposal for to-day.

Mr. CURRIE: According to the custom and usages of the House, when any new information is to be brought down on a question of this kind, no other course is open to a member but to accede to such a request as that made by the Prime Minister, and I do so graciously, because I think perhaps it will be in the interest of the House that all the facts in connection with this matter should be laid upon the Table, in order that we should have a free and full discussion to-morrow of the whole matter.

Motion withdrawn.

DOMINION FOREST RESERVES AND PARKS ACT.

Bill No. 17, to amend the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act—Hon. Mr. Meighen—read third time and passed.

MONTREAL HARBOUR ADVANCES ACT 1914.

Bill No. 15, to amend the Montreal Harbour Advances Act, 1914—Hon. Mr. Ballantyne—read third time and passed.

DAYLIGHT SAVING BILL.

On motion of Right Hon. Sir George Foster for the third reading of Bill No. 4, to provide for the time in Canada being in advance of the solar mean time during the summer months.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think a correction has to be made in the Order Paper with respect to the title of this Bill.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It should read:

In advance of the Standard Mean Time.

Mr. McCOIG: I wish to announce to the House, and to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, that I have received a great number of petitions, protesting against this Bill becoming law, and, if it is in order, I would move that the Bill be referred back to the Committee for further consideration.

Motion of Sir George Foster agreed to, and Bill read the third time.

DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS.

On motion of Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce, the House went into Committee on the following proposed resolutions, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide for a Bureau under the Minister of Trade and Commerce to be called the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, to collect, abstract, compile and publish statistical information relative to the commercial, industrial, social, economic and general activities and condition of the people, to collaborate with all other departments of the Government in the compilation and publication of statistical records of administration, according to the regulations, and to take the census of the Dominion; and that the Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be called the Dominion Statistician to supervise and control the said Bureau; and that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, pay out of the moneys to be provided by Parliament for such purposes, such sums as are required for the taking of the census, collection of statistics, the remuneration of the officers and clerks, and the payment of all expenses incurred in carrying into effect an Act for such purposes.

Mr. NESBITT: We cannot hear a word of what is being said.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Come back and take your old seat, and you can hear.

Mr. BUREAU: Before the resolution is adopted, I should like to know from the minister what the purpose of the establishment of this Bureau is. A lot of enumerations are contained in the resolution. There is one item which states that in this Bureau the statistics for the census will be taken. I thought there was a branch in the Department of Agriculture charged with the duty of collecting statistics regarding the census of Canada. Every now and then we receive a leaflet purporting to be statistics covered by this particular branch of the Department of Agriculture. This resolution also provides for the compilation and publication of statistical information relative to the commercial, industrial, social, economic and general activities and condition of the people. With reference to the first item, I thought the minister had a bureau or branch in his department, the special purpose of which was to collect statistics of commercial data. I know that we receive from time to time very interesting reports from the Department of Trade and Commerce, explaining the conditions of trade in various countries where the minister has representatives, who seem to report assiduously, and this information is conveyed to the people of Canada through those leaflets which were received monthly or bimonthly, I could not tell you which. I was under the impression, as far as the industrial statistics are concerned, that the Department of Labour had statisticians, whose duty it was to collect all these statistics relating to the industrial condition of the country, to the condition of the labouring classes, to the amount of work that is being performed, and the prices of various commodities, etc. Is the object of the minister to have in his department, and under his control, a Bureau of Statistics wherein all statistics which are now being gathered by the other departments, or by the various branches which are under the control of the other departments, would be collected, and is it the intention to have the whole thing merged into this department, and have a Bureau of Statistics wherein statistics of all kinds, whether relating to our foreign trade, or to our industrial, social, or general activities, would be collected? Perhaps it will not be necessary to deal with our social conditions, because the social columns of our newspapers will supply anybody who wants information along that line.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: It might be a little different.

Mr. BUREAU: It might be, but I do not know that I would support the Minister of Trade and Commerce with reference to that particular branch of the statistical bureau.

I want to know whether all the other statistical branches in the various departments will be abolished or merged into this one great statistical department where information can be had as to any branch of the service, or any statistics with reference to the condition of the country.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The thing is not as formidable as it appears at first blush and on reading it on the Order Paper. It was a matter of doubt really as to whether it would be necessary to put a resolution on the Order Paper or not as a foundation for the Bill, but as that was the course that was pursued when the present Act was introduced, it was thought better to follow the rule on this occasion. Consequently, the resolution was placed on the Order Paper to form the foundation for the introduction of a Bill. My hon. friend (Mr. Bureau) was right in most of the impressions he had with reference to what is being done, but he was a little bit out in the allocation of the services which he enumerated to the different departments. What it is meant to do is to consolidate, and make some few amendments to, the law as it is at present upon the statute book and as it is administered in the Department of Trade and Commerce. The object of the consolidation and ratification of the legislation which is at present on the statute books to make the law more effective. It is designed, as it is provided now under the law, that there shall be a central statistical board or office. It is proposed to call that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics as being a somewhat more apposite name for the work which is being carried on and as being in line with the nomenclature in other countries. The idea underlying the present law, and which will underlie these amendments, is that general economic statistics shall be under the supervision of, and be issued by, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The different departments will, of course, retain their administrative, or record, statistics, or such statistics as are necessary for the administration of the department. There will be no change in that respect. Then, again, during the last three years—not to make the story long, because I propose to go a little more fully into it when I introduce the Bill,—a great deal has been done to co-ordinate the work in connection with the Dominion statistics both in the gathering, compilation and distribution, with the different provincial statistical departments. By conference and good will, an understanding has been reached with all of these along certain lines, the idea being to do away with overlapping and to have a uniform basis upon which the information is gathered so that the statistics will have a comparative value and so that there will be no contradiction between them. We have suffered a great deal with respect to the prestige of our statistics by having different computations put forward by different provinces and by the Dominion almost always arising from the fact that there has never been a uniform basis upon which the questions have been issued, on the answers to which the information is compiled. On the introduction of the Bill I shall ask the House to listen a little more at length to an exposition of the measure.

Mr. BUREAU: I would assume that in preparing the Bill and talking the matter over with the officials the details had been very carefully considered. Will this relieve any of the other departments from any work now undertaken by their statistical branches, or will it leave the other departments, and their statistical branches, in the same position as they now occupy and with the same work as they now do?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: My hon. friend will see that the resolution provides for the co-operation of the central statistical bureau with the departments and if it is found, as it has already been found—and in some cases it is in operation—that the two can work in co-operation with each other and reach a better result, that co-operation will take place. Provision is made for co-working between the different departments and the central statistical Bureau. The object is to confine the departments to record or administrative statistics and leave the field of general economic statistics to the central bureau.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is there any provision for collecting data on labour?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, to a certain extent. Any central system of statistics must take in capital and wages, labour employed and so on; but the special statistics of labour are under the Labour Department and will remain untouched.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Why not under the same head?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The two can collaborate and it might result in the amalgamation of certain lines of statistical information.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 32, respecting the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I thought I heard my right hon. friend a moment ago, when we were in committee, declare that it was his intention to explain the Bill at some length.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: When I move for the second reading.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

THE VAN BUREN BRIDGE COMPANY.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid (Minister of Railways), the House again went into committee on Bill No. 14, to confirm an agreement between His Majesty the King and the Van Buren Bridge Company, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On the schedule.

Mr. MICHAUD: Mr. Chairman, I had an interview with the Minister of Railways yesterday afternoon with reference to this Bill. He informed me that he was going to see the Bill through, and that I could put before the House all the objections possible; but he was bound to see it through. From his remarks when this Bill was last before the committee I noticed that the minister did not understand everything in reference to this matter. He stated to me that we would have an interview and that, no doubt, the matter would come out all right. As a minister of the Crown, the hon. gentleman seems to me to be fair-minded, but I am sorry to say that he is a stubborn gentleman, and I am afraid that he feels himself obliged to see this Bill through the House. I am very sorry for the public that the Minister of Railways has taken this step, for, after all, we are here to protect the public interest, and the Minister of Railways should be the first man to set a good example.

I know the locality where it is proposed to change the site of the union station. The proposed station is altogether outside the town of St. Leonards, a distance of between a quarter and half a mile. We have had petitions and telegrams of protest read to the House. I have also received letters from business men, and notwithstanding all these protests coming from the whole corporation of the town of St. Leonards, my hon. friend is still under the impression that this union station should be built on the Transcontinental railway. I had from the Minister of Railways yesterday afternoon promises that the welfare of the public will be looked after.

At the present time, the Transcontinental railway has one train going east and one train going west daily. The train going east passes through the town of St. Leonards at twelve o'clock midnight. The train going west passes through at three o'clock in the morning. The Intercolonial railway train arrives at St. Leonards at three o'clock in the afternoon. The Canadian Pacific railway runs an express reaching St. Leonards at five o'clock in the afternoon, accommodating the public by running a train during the day. Now, if the location of the station is changed, I am sorry to say that the public will be forced to travel from the union station on the Transcontinental railway about half a mile to take the train at the Canadian Pacific railway station. You will not stop the public from travelling over the Canadian Pacific railway.

The day before yesterday I read a telegram in the House in reference to the protest of the people of St. Leonards regarding this Bill. I also stated in the House that the people of St. Leonards were strongly against the proposal contained in this Bill unless the terminus of the Intercolonial railway should remain where it is at present. The ex-Minister of Railways, Hon. Mr. Cochrane, promised the people of St. Leonards that no change should be made, and I am sorry to see that the present Minister of Railways does not see eye to eye with his predecessor. I, therefore, Mr. Chairman, protest most energetically against the passing of this Bill, and I want to request the Minister of Railways, if he will be kind enough to listen to me, that before he commences to move that station from the International railway to the National Transcontinental railway, he come himself to the town of St. Leonards and visit the site where he proposes to build the new station. I am sure of one thing from the good judgment of my hon. friend, that after seeing the proposed site, he will in common with the residents of St. Leonards, be opposed to the site of the new station.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MICHAUD: There is a great deal of territory that my hon. friend has not yet covered as Minister of Railways, and this is a part of the country where he has not the least idea of local conditions. Before passing this Act, or before moving the present station from the International railway to the Transcontinental railway, I would ask the minister to come when the session is over and see for himself and thereby convince himself that he is wrong and that I am right.

Hon. J. D. REID: Mr. Chairman, when this Bill was before the committee a few evenings ago, my hon. friend stated that he understood that the charter given by this House for this piece of railway had a clause in it that the station would not be moved from where it is at the present time. The hon. member (Mr. Michaud) and I have discussed that point, and we have found the objection was not well founded. The situation as it has been laid before us by the officials of the Government railway system is this: the Government operates the Transcontinental railway between Lévis and Moncton, which runs through the town of St. Leonards and has a station there. After the Transcontinental railway had been completed the Government purchased what is known as the International railway, running from a point on the Intercolonial line to St. Leonards, a distance of one hundred and twelve miles. The International railway had been in operation for some years and had its own terminal station. Since the purchase of that line the Government has had to maintain two stations in the town of St. Leonards, although it is the owner of both railways. But there was no connection between the International and the Transcontinental railway systems. Therefore, the traffic going over the International line, intended for the Transcontinental, has to be taken over this two miles of railway that we are leasing, and for which we have to pay the owners of the stretch in question, namely, the Bangor and Aroostook Company. The management of the Government railways discussed the matter with me, and we came to the conclusion that a connection should be made between the two railway systems. Negotiations were entered into, with the result that we are leasing the stretch of two miles, as has been shown in the agreement attached to the Bill. The objection raised by the hon. member (Mr. Michaud) is that if we carry out this agreement the Government, as the owner of both railways, will only use one station, that of St. Leonards, and the International railway will run its trains into the station maintained for the Transcontinental. It must either do that, or else continue running to the station of the International railway. It would be impossible to use the latter station because the Transcontinental could not go around and over to it. Therefore, as a matter of business, and in the interest of the country, it does not seem reasonable to my mind that we should continue to run the International trains over the two miles in question to that station, and at the same time maintain the station that has been used by the International railway. The hon. member states that if we do away with the station, as proposed, people wishing to travel on the Canadian Pacific railway will have to go from the Transcontinental Railway station to that of the Canadian Pacific railway. If I understand the situation, and my facts have been gathered from our officials, the International station as it now exists and the Canadian Pacific Railway station are very close together, and there is very little distance between them. The Transcontinental Railway station, from the information I have, is not far away, and at most passengers will have to travel but a few hundred feet. Why should the Government operate the International railway and keep up that station in order that people may have to walk a few hundred feet less to travel on the Canadian Pacific railway? On the other hand, people travelling by the International railway who wish to take the Transcontinental railway have to walk a longer distance to reach the latter railway. The object in leasing this small piece of line is, as I have stated: First, it is, in my opinion, an absolute necessity that we have a connection between the two railways in order to permit of the carriage of freight on our railways over the Transcontinental. Either we had to build two miles of line or else lease the needed section as we have done. Furthermore, in order to effect economy and save useless expenditure it is intended to only have one station for the two railways. The hon. member (Mr. Michaud) states that if I were to visit that portion of the country I would see the necessity of continuing the station which it is proposed to close. All I can say to my hon. friend is that I have gone into this matter very carefully. I believe it is in the interest of the public, and of the great railway systems concerned, that this connection should be made between the International and the Transcontinental railway. In my opinion, the connection proposed here is the cheapest and best that could be made. Even if we were to build the two miles stretch instead of leasing it, it would still, in my opinion, only be necessary to have the one station. If this Bill passes we will secure the needed connection and it will be of great advantage for freight traffic, at all events. As far as making the one station serve for the two railway systems, that policy is correct, from the information in my possession, and I cannot hold out to the hon. gentleman any prospect of letting the two stations remain. When the opportunity of passing through that district is afforded me, if any evidence should be presented that would justify the retention of the two stations, it will be taken into consideration. In the meantime, we are exceedingly anxious to have this connection at the earliest possible moment, even for freight traffic, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not further object to assisting us in facilitating the passage of the Bill for the reasons that I have mentioned.

4 p.m.

Mr. MICHAUD: I am sorry to say that I cannot assist the hon. gentleman in passing this Bill. Local public sentiment is opposed to it, as evidenced by the long adverse petition presented by the citizens of St. Leonards. I know the conditions in that locality, and in view of all the circumstances, I cannot concur in the minister's decision to close up the station in question. The minister has stated that the question involved is one of business for the Transcontinental railway. In my opinion, it is a matter of business for the people of that part of New Brunswick. When he states that there are only a few hundred feet to be covered between the two stations, I would like to say it is a distance of a quarter or half a mile.

Mr. REID: About thirteen hundred feet.

Mr. MICHAUD: At all events, we will let the question of the distance stand for the moment. I would ask the minister if he will be kind enough not to make any change with respect to the proposed union station until he makes his trip through that part of the country.

Mr. REID: I could not make that promise. The sittings of the House may detain me here too long.

Mr. COPP: I am not sufficiently acquainted with the local conditions to be able to say whether the minister is consulting the public convenience in locating the union station at the place referred to. I would ask, however, if the making of this agreement involves the dismantling and tearing up of two miles of the International railway?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. COPP: And is he also closing the station on the International railway.

Mr. REID: That is the intention.

Mr. COPP: I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that he is doing away with a section of railway which was purchased not very long ago. I do not recollect the price per mile paid for this railway, but at all events he is dismantling and doing away with a section of two miles. From a business standpoint he is simply throwing away two miles of this railway, tearing up the rails and dismantling this portion of the road. While doing this, he is leasing from the Bangor and Aroostook railway two miles of railway at the annual rental of $1,200. So far as the business life of a railway company is concerned, it is only a short time between now and 1934, and at the end of that period, during which you have thrown away these two miles of railway which you have bought and paid for, and have inconvenienced the people of that locality, taking away from them the railway privileges which they have had for years, and during which period you have paid an annual rental of $1,200. Whoever happens to be occupying the position of Minister of Railways at that time will be up against the proposition that he has to retrace his steps and rebuild the two miles of railway, or purchase these two miles of railway that the Government had under lease, or else enter into a new lease. I am speaking only from a business standpoint; I am not speaking from the standpoint of convenience to the citizens of that locality, because I do not know the circumstances, and I am taking my information only from what my hon. friend (Mr. Michaud) has told this committee. I would like to ask the minister what it costs per year to keep the International Railway station open, what help is employed there, and what it would cost per year to keep the station in existence.

Mr. MICHAUD: There is only one employee.

Hon. J. D. REID: Perhaps I can answer the two questions at once. The hon. member states that this Government are going to be out $1,200 per annum from now until 1934, that being the rental mentioned in the lease, and that we shall have nothing to offset that. The hon. member knows that, when we take up two miles of rails, those rails are worth at the present time probably $17,000 or $18,000, and if that money were invested in Dominion Government bonds, it would bring in interest sufficient to pay the $1,200 per annum, so that there is really no pecuniary loss. I cannot say offhand how many officials are at that station, but I know there is an agent, and he probably receives $600 or $700 a year, so that we are saving at least that amount. The hon. member also states that the people of that locality are being deprived of their railway facilities.

Mr. COPP: The minister misunderstands me. I do not know about that. All I say is that they have been deprived of a convenience they have had. I do not know the location.

Mr. REID: I do not know it either, but the plan that has been submitted to the House will show it. People coming in to or leaving St. Leonard on the International leave at a certain station of the International that has been there for a number of years. The Transcontinental is a few hundred feet to the south of the International, which means that if you want to take a train on the International, you go a few hundred feet further from whatever part of the town you live in. There is no inconvenience further than that, and so far as the Government are concerned, we shall have this advantage, that if we were to take up the rails and dispose of them, the interest on the amount received for the rails would cover the amount we have to pay as rental, and we shall save the amount which we have been paying for our cars going over that road during the whole of the year, cars being transferred from the International to the Transcontinental, and which must amount to a considerable sum of money. We shall also save the salaries of the employees who are kept at the station and of those who are engaged in maintaining the two miles of railway. I cannot understand where there would be much inconvenience, except that any passengers coming in on the International, who wanted to go on the Canadian Pacific might, so far as I can judge from the map, have to walk probably two or three hundred feet from the International to the Canadian Pacific, whereas, if they wanted to go on the Transcontinental, they might have to walk ten or twelve hundred feet.

Mr. MICHAUD: The passengers would not have to walk any distance at all because the International train runs into the Canadian Pacific station.

Mr. COPP: In answering my question the minister opened up a new phase of the matter, pointing out that the Government would not lose anything; that, as a matter of fact, there would be a financial gain to the Government to take up and dismantle these two miles of railway because, as the minister says, the rails could be sold at a high price owing to the present demand, and the interest on the money received, if invested in Victory Bonds, would more than pay the annual rent provided for in the lease between the Government and the Bangor and Aroostook railway. If one were to follow the minister's argument along that line, one could take up the rails on any piece of railway and make money on the transaction. That, however, is not what, as I understand it, the Government intend doing. I understood from the minister that it was in the interest of the Transcontinental railway to enter into this agreement for the leasing of this road; that it was to do away with the keeping up of two stations. Now, he says, from a business standpoint, it is to the benefit of the Government to take up these rails and invest the money received for them, because the interest on that investment will more than cover the annual rental of $1,200. I want to draw the minister's attention to the fact that at the end of 1934, when this lease expires, the Government will be called upon to enter into a new lease, or to buy the road, or to rebuild the two miles of railway that has been torn up, and if, during that period, the cost of rails increases, then the Government will be out a very large amount to rebuild, re-establish and re-equip the two miles of railway which they have in their possession and which they are throwing away rather than keep that road in operation. One of the reasons the minister gives for his action is that it will do away with the expense of keeping up the International Railway station. He says himself there was only one official there whose salary would be about $600 or $700. Yet he is paying to the Bangor and Aroostook railway $1,200 per annum for the purpose of doing away with a station on the International railway. From a business standpoint, my hon. friend from Restigouche (Mr. Michaud), in opposing this proposition, is making only a reasonable argument, and the minister has not made out a proper case so far as the financial advantage of the Government and the interest of the railway are concerned. The minister says that he knows nothing about the location and, of course, we accept his word in regard to the matter. If we did not accept his word from a Parliamentary standpoint, we would know, from the agreement he is making in regard to the matter, that he does not know anything about it, and that he is depending entirely upon some railway official in regard to it. The minister will not be Minister of Railways very long before he will come to realize fully that frequently young engineers from some school who are taken into the service, will, during the summer months when they have nothing else to do, go over the Intercolonial and make faddy recommendations without regard to the interests of communities which have had railway accommodation for years.

My hon. friend must not forget that the usual thing is for a town or village to build up around a station, and the station become the very heart of the community. I think the minister, before taking away the station which these people have had for so many years, should give some better reason to the House, or he might let the matter stand for further consideration.

Mr. J. READ: I should like to hear from the minister as to the policy of the Government in such a case as this. Around the station at Cape Traverse, for instance, there is a large vested interest, and before the Government do away with that station I think we should have a statement from the minister whether it is right and proper to deprive these people of their rights. I have no doubt that the officials who have recommended this union station at St. Leonard's are acting in the interests of the Government system, but is it honest or just to do away with the other station regardless of the rights of individuals? I think one of the principles embodied in British justice is that the individual stands above the community, and where an individual has to suffer rather than a corporation the individual's interest should at least be recognized.

Schedule agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. MICHAUD: If the minister carries out his idea of a Union station, he will not effect the economy he anticipates, because two clerks will be needed, one as operator and the other as freight agent. At present the clerk at the International station gets a salary of $400 a year, but it would be necessary to have two clerks at the Union station.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

The House again in committee on Bill No. 5, to amend the Dominion Lands Act, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. MEIGHEN: I beg to move:

That the following clause be inserted in the Bill immediately after clause 13 on page 6 of the Bill:—

13 A.—Section forty-one of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "five" in the fourth line thereof and substituting therefor the word "six", and by adding the following proviso thereto:—

Provided that all instalments or any portion of any instalment in arrear, whether of principal or interest, shall bear interest at the rate of seven per centum per annum; provided however that as to sales of School lands made prior to the first day of April, 1918, the minister may with the consent of the purchaser or registered assignee increase the rate of interest in arrear to seven per centum per annum.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, amendments read the first and second time, and concurred in.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Department of Trade and Commerce, salaries, $157,737.50; contingencies, $15,000.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The number of employees is the same as before. The amount voted is about a thousand dollars less than last year, and there are no changes of any moment.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the explanation of the item "Commissioner of Commerce, $6,000?"

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: The explanation I made last year will be exactly the same this year. I am retaining that vote, but the office has not yet been filled. As we come nearer to the period of re-adjustment, I should like to have that office at the disposal of the Government. The work must necessarily be done by a pretty high class official.

Census and Statistics Branch, $91,600.

Mr. BUREAU: Does this include part of the salaries to be paid to the new statistical bureau, the resolution in regard to which we discussed this afternoon?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: I see an increase of some two thousand dollars in the total.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: I wanted to know whether this increase was caused by the new officers who will be employed in gathering these statistics after the Bill, the resolution in regard to which was debated this afternoon, comes into force.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: This vote will carry on the work of the Dominion Bureau of Statitics, which is here called the census and statistics branch. It will be the same kind of work, except that the betterments to which I alluded in my remarks upon the resolution, will be carried out under the new Act.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand that the amounts mentioned here are to cover the expenditure of the Census Department, or the branch of my hon. friend's department, as carried on now?

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Yes, with the improvements that are to be made under the new Act which will be presented.

Naval Service—To provide for the maintenance and upkeep of ships, Naval College, dockyards at Halifax and Esquimalt, and Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve, $600,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: This, I think is an appropriate time for my hon. friend to give to the country and the committee the programme, which has been announced in the press, in regard to naval construction in Canada. I may say at once that I have applauded the idea, or rather the programme of my hon. friend, namely to promote naval construction in Canada. I understand that a large amount of money will be spent for the construction of ships, and that rolling mills will be erected in Canada in connection with that naval construction. I know that my hon. friend, obtained during recess, from the United States Government very valuable concessions in regard to rolled plates needed for the construction of these ships. I am somewhat interested in this question, as I represent the county of Maisonneuve where, as the committee is well aware, we have the magnificent plant of the Canadian Vickers Limited, in which thousands of skilled labourers are employed, and actually very busily engaged night and day, building ships.

The Canadian Vickers have secured contracts from the Imperial Government, and, I understand, from the Dominion Government. They also had contracts from some of the neutral countries. But my hon. friend will explain, I believe, to the committee that it has been deemed wise and proper during the war to cancel all contracts for the building of ships for neutral countries in order to concentrate all naval construction on Imperial, Canadian and allied Governments' orders. I hope that the Government will not depart from that policy and that at the same time in the operation of the Military Service Act regard will be had to the urgency of the men engaged upon naval construction remaining in the employ of naval firms.

I do not wish to discuss the operation of the Military Service Act, but I may say to my hon. friend that the Vickers, to take one instance, is a firm which employs 3,000, or perhaps more men—3,000 at all events—working day and night, of whom 300 or 400 were conscripted. The local tribunals granted exemption to the men as long as they were employed by the Canadian Vickers Limited, but subject to being called as soon as they should leave the employ of the company. Appeals have been filed in almost all of these cases, but the appeal courts have confirmed in every case the decisions given by the local tribunals. The Government, and my hon. friend, will understand—and I wish the hon. the Minister of Justice were in his seat—that men are absolutely needed in that industry. It is essential that companies, such as the Vickers and other big plants of like nature, should not be disturbed in their day and night work by those appeals.

Once more, I do not wish to discuss the operation of the Military Service Act, but I just want to point out to my hon. friend that naval construction at the present time in Canada is in progress and I give my hon. friend all the credit which is due him in carving out the programme which he has placed before the public of late. My hon. friend remains, after all, faithful to himself and to the policy which has been advocated by his former associates for years. I am glad that through the infusion of new blood into the Government the policy which was defeated in 1911, because it was misrepresented, is being kept on the statute book and is being acted upon. It was acted upon quietly and grudgingly by my hon. friend's immediate predecessor, but it is being acted upon openly, faithfully and liberally by my hon. friend, the present incumbent. I do not wish to be critical at all. I congratulate my hon. friend, and I hope he will stimulate naval construction in Canada. By doing so he will prove himself to be a staunch friend of the British Empire and of his own country. Lloyd George, the present Prime Minister of England, Mr. Bonar Law, the President of the United States and M. Tardieu, who represents the French Government at Washington during the war, have united in the statement that what the Allies need most in the present emergency is food, munitions and ships. Now, by giving ships for the transportation of food, and not only of food but of men and munitions, my hon. friend is doing yeoman work in the cause which is dear to every one of us.

I would like my hon. friend, however, to give us the official programme which he has prepared and which he intends to carry out. He may be assured that he will receive from this side of the House a unanimous support, because we stand for the construction of ships in Canada. We have the skilled labour, we have the ores, we have the material; all it requires is a little goodwill and some courage. I have been speaking on behalf of the Canadian Vickers because that firm happens to be in my own division, the county of Maisonneuve, but there are other firms on the great lakes, at Toronto and in the Maritime Provinces. There was a time, in the olden days, when the Canadian clippers sailed the seven seas, and when Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island were carrying far and wide the British ensign. When the wooden ships passed away and when the steel frame ships took their places, there came a lull.

But, with the natural resources which we possess, and the technical knowledge which has been acquired, and with the strong Canadian feeling which exists in this country, there is no reason why we should not at the present moment set out to capture once more the blue ribbon of the Atlantic. I might remind the House of one of my surprises when for the first time I was a candidate for this House, some twenty-two years ago. I remember paying a visit to my good friend the hon. member for Queens and Shelburne (Mr. Fielding), who was then Prime Minister of Nova Scotia. Passing along one of the busy commercial streets of Halifax of that day, he said: "Mr. Lemieux, it is generally believed that the great Cunard firm started in New York or in Liverpool; but look at this little sign; it is nearly a hundred years old; Halifax is the place where the Cunards started their business." Well, Sir, all this is to show that we have the necessary ability, courage, and resources, and above all we have the naval policy laid down in the statute-book. I am pleased to see that my hon. friend is living up to the policy of his revered leader, and hope that he will quietly bring his new associates—I will not say compeers—in line with the real, progressive Canadian policy of the right hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MURPHY: If it be the intention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to accede to the request of the hon. member for Maisonneuve and inform the committee regarding the shipbuilding industry, may I request that the minister be good enough to explain what field is covered by the shipbuilding branch of the Imperial Munitions Board as distinct from the shipbuilding industry carried out under the operation and direction of his departmeent?

Hon. Mr. BALLLANTYNE: Mr. Chairman, it was my intention to wait until the Marine estimates were under discussion to give to the House to-day the details in regard to the Government shipbuilding plan as it pertains to the mercantile marine. Possibly, however, this might be just as good an opportunity as any, and I shall be only too pleased to give to the hon. member (Mr. Lemieux), and to the House, the information they have every right to have in regard to this large national undertaking that the Government has so recently entered upon.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve has stated that the Government has undertaken a large programme of naval construction. I wish to correct him on that point. The programme of the present Government is not for naval ships, but for mercantile marine ships. It is true that, during the past year, there has been a certain type of naval ship built at various yards in Montreal and throughout the Dominion for the Imperial Government and also for the Canadian Government. I do not think it would be right for me to enter into details as regards the type of naval ships that have been so built during the past few years, or as regards those that are under construction at the present time. I am sure the members of the committee will agree with me that it would be unwise at this juncture to enter into too many details in that respect. Suffice it to say that I am very glad to make known that all the vessels of war which have been built in the various yards of Canada, and of course in the one to which the hon. member for Maisonneuve has alluded, have been constructed equally as well as they could have been in the Old Country or in any other land. I am sure that that fact will be very gratifying to honourable members.

To come to the Government's programme for ships for the mercantile marine, I wish to explain that there are at the present time fourteen shipyards for building steel ships in Canada. If all of these yards were unoccupied at the present time, and were all engaged building for the Canadian Government the standard type of steel ships, the annual tonnage output would amount to 250,000 tons.

The hon. member for Russell has asked me to explain what the programme of the Imperial Munitions Board has been, and how it affects the present programme of the Canadian Government. I reply by stating that when I had the honour of being called to the portfolio of Marine and Fisheries and Naval Service, I found that the Dominion Government was advancing money through the Imperial Munitions Board, under the direct management of Sir Joseph Flavelle, to keep all of the steel shipyards in Canada fully occupied in building ships for the Mother Country. It seemed to me, and also to the Government when I brought the matter to their attention, that the time was opportune for Canada to embark upon the building of steel ships as a national, permanent policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: And, after giving the matter very careful consideration for some months, and working out a comprehensive programme on good, sound, business lines, I brought the proposal before my colleagues in the Government, and I am very pleased to state that it was unanimously decided that after the Imperial Munitions Board contracts were completed all the berths in all the shipyards of Canada which are building steel ships would be utilized to the full in building steel vessels for the Canadian Government.

Mr. MURPHY: When will that date likely arrive?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Our programme is this: as these berths become vacant and the Imperial Government ships are completed, they are taken up by the Canadian Government. At the present time we are having two ships built by the Vickers Co. of Montreal, one of 8,100 tons dead weight capacity, an 11-knot ship, and another of 4,350 tons. I am pleased to state that I have every hope that this fall both of these vessels will be put in commission for the Canadian Government. It will be the first time in the history of Canada that sea-going vessels as large as the two I have referred to have been built in Canada by Canadian money and owned by the Canadian Government; and I am very glad to know that hon. members opposite join with hon. members on this side in favouring the policy that the Canadian Government are undertaking in the building, permanently as I have stated, of steel vessels to keep the present yards going. I hope a little later on, as the finances of the country become less strained, that the appropriation which is allotted to my department for building steel ships will be very much greater than it is at present.

In addition to the two ships that are being built by the Canadian Vickers Company for the Canadian Government, another ship of about five thousand tons is being built by the Wallace Shipbuilding Company at Vancouver. Another vessel of 3,550 tons is being built by the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, of Collingwood. Hon. gentlemen will understand that vessels that are being built in the yards on the great lakes are necessarily limited, as to size and tonnage, so as to conform to the depth of water in the canals. Ships that are being built in any of the yards on the great lakes cannot draw more than fourteen feet of water, which necessarily needs a limitation as to size in the case of these vessels. At the present time the Dominion Government have these four vessels under construction.

Mr. McMASTER: Are you building the vessels in question under contract, or on the cost and percentage plan?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The ships are ordered at so much per ton. I, for one, do not believe, and neither does the Government, in having ships built on a percentage basis. Furthermore, I would not like the House to think that I accept the first price that is given to me by any of these shipbuilders at so much per ton for a completed ship, according to the design, blue prints and specifications of the Government, for I certainly do not. I am pleased to say that in the department we have some very able men. Mr. Duguid, the naval architect, is a man who has had a splendid training, extending over many years in some of the largest shipyards in England. We also have expert men possessing a thorough knowledge of marine boilers and marine engines, as well as many expert draughtsmen. There are, as I stated a moment ago, three different types of Canadian ships under construction: The eight thousand tonner, the five thousand tonner, and the smaller sized ship of three thousand five hundred and fifty tons. The technical officers of my department estimate what the cost of a ship will be. We also ascertain what a similar ship —a vessel of the same design, class and tonnage—is being built for in the United States and in Britain. With this information from both the countries referred to, and our own estimated cost, we have a very excellent check on the Canadian shipbuilders, which prevents them charging us an unfair or unreasonable price for the vessel to be constructed. Hon. gentlemen will, therefore, gather from what I have stated that these vessels are built at so much per completed ton according to the blue prints and the detailed specifications of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

As the berths to which I have alluded become vacant from time to time they will be immediately taken up by the Canadian Government, and the existing steel shipbuilding plants throughout Canada will be occupied to their full capacity. I cannot state how many ships are being built by the Imperial Munitions Board at the present time, but the Prime Minister gave that information to the House on the opening day of Parliament. One of the difficulties that confronted me in taking up this important matter——

Mr. MURPHY: I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but was there any co-operation betweeen the Government and the Imperial Munitions Board, or were the respective programmes carried out entirely separately.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: They are entirely separate. The Canadian Government or the Department of Marine and Fisheries have absolutely nothing at all to do with the Imperial Munitions Board, so far as relates to our shipbuilding programme, and any ships that the latter has ordered are for Imperial account. The duty of the Imperial Munitions Board is to see that they are finished and paid for; and the Canadian Government assumes no responsibility for any of the ships that are under construction at the present time for the Imperial Munitions Board.

5 p.m.

I was about to say that one of the first difficulties that confronted me when considering the adoption of a permanent shipbuilding policy, was that of steel ship's plates. I think hon. gentlemen are aware that there is no duty on ship's plates coming into Canada. They are doubtless also aware that there has not been, and there is not at the present time, a rolling mill in Canada for the manufacture of these plates. If Canada is to become a shipbuilding nation, as I see no reason why she should not——

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: —it is necessary for her to be self-contained insofar as concerns all the material that is required for building these mercantile ships; and one of the first things that I set about to try and obtain for Canada was a large plate mill, so that all the plates required for the ships that we are now building, and I hope also for a very much larger programme later on, would be made in our own country. I took the matter up with the large steel manufacturers. I did not confine myself to the manufacturers in this country, but also went to the United States steel companies, and asked them what kind of proposition they could place before the Canadian Government in order that we would secure what steel plates we required here. After several months of negotiations with the several steel companies in Canada and in the United States, I am happy to say that the best and most favourable proposition I could get, and the one that was accepted by my colleagues, was the one submitted to us by the Dominion Iron and Steel Company of Sydney.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There being no duty on ship's plates, we could not expect any large industry, either in Canada or in the United States, to come to this country and undertake the erection of a plant for rolling ship's plates, that would involve at least $5,000,000 capital expenditure without any protection whatever. These are not days when the policy of protection needs be discussed, and as we are more concerned with the prosecution of the war than with tariff matters, I did not raise the tariff question with my colleagues at all, nor do I intend to do so with hon. members of this House. We went about the task in another manner, which I hope will receive the unanimous approval of the House. In brief, the contract that I have concluded with the Dominion Iron and Steel Company of Sydney was made on the following basis: The Dominion Government have guaranteed to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company of Sydney that they will have a minimum tonnage of fifty thousand tons of ship plates a year, extending over a period of five years, making in all a total tonnage of two hundred and fifty thousand tons. The price per hundred pounds for the moment is $4.15. The safeguarding of the public interest, in so far as the price is concerned, from time to time, has been arranged on the following basis: Hon. gentlemen are no doubt aware that ship plates are made from steel ingots, which in turn are made from pig iron, the pig iron being produced from iron ore. I am happy to state that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company own and operate within British territory facilities to produce all the raw materials that I have just mentioned as being required for the rolling of ship's plates.

We have taken, as a basis to adjust this price every six months, the price per ton of steel ingots. The price at the time the contract was entered into for steel ingots was $25.50 per ton. The price of plates to start with is $4.15, based on an ingot price of $25.50 per ton. These prices were agreed upon after long weeks of negotiation, and I was accused in a friendly way perhaps, by Mr. Mark Workman, of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, of driving too hard a bargain with them on behalf of the people of Canada. I do not think that is exactly so, because I consider the contract we have entered into is eminently fair to the Dominion Iron and Steel Company as it is also fair to the Dominion of Canada and the Government. The mill will take about fifteen months to be erected, and Mr. Workman estimates that it will cost about $5,000,000. The Government does not put up one cent of money for the erection of this mill. The Government was pressed to advance this money, but I declined to make such a recommendation to my colleagues, because I considered that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company is strong enough to put up the $5,000,000 required for the plant, and I, therefore, recommended to my colleagues that we do not advance the money. Accordingly, the Dominion Iron and Steel Company are going to erect this plant at their own cost.

Mr. McMASTER: What is that $4.15? The minister did not give us the unit. Is it $4.15 per plate?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The price of steel ingots is $25.50 per ton, and the price of plates is $4.15 per one hundred pounds. The Dominion Iron and Steel Company claim that within twelve to fifteen months they will be turning out all the ship plates the Dominion wants.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has a contract been signed?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Not yet, but it will be in a few days.

Mr. LEMIEUX: As soon as it is, will the minister lay it on the table of the House?

[Mr. Ballantyne.]

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Certainly, with pleasure. The Order in Council has been passed, approving the terms agreed upon, and when the contract is signed, I shall lay it upon the table of the House.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If the minister can lay the Order in Council on the Table this week that will be satisfactory.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I shall be very glad to do so. The Dominion Iron and Steel Company are financing this mill, and the capacity of the mill, they estimate, will be 150,000 tons of plate per year. I wish to point out that, in addition to ship plate, it is estimated that there are about 50,000 tons of other plate, such as boiler plate, used in Canada. There is no duty on boiler plate, nor on ship plate. This mill will be a new national industry for Canada, and not only will it turn out the ship plates which we shall require here, and which, I think, even with the existing yards we have, will run something like 75,000 tons a year, but there is no reason why the Dominion Iron and Steel Company should not be able to get orders for, if not the whole, at least a part of the 50,000 tons of plate used for other purposes than for ships.

To follow along the policy of safeguarding the public interest and the interest of the Government, so that we shall not be paying too much for ship plate, I may say that after the mill has run for six months turning out the plate, the price of the plate will be determined on the fluctuating price for steel ingots based on a price of $25.50 per ton. We were also able to arrange with the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, also with a great deal of reluctance on their part, that no matter how high the price of steel ingots goes, in no event will the price of steel plate cost the Government any higher price than $4.25 per hundred pounds. If the price of steel ingot drops over a period of six months the price of plate will be lowered accordingly. We are not going to take the Dominion Iron and Steel Company's say-so as to what their cost will be, so we have a clause in the contract that the Dominion Government shall send out expert accountants, whom we shall name, to go over the books and costs of the company, and if the price of steel ingots has fallen during the period of six months they will see to it that the Government gets a proportionate reduction in the price of steel plates. Those are the essential points in the contract into which we are about to enter. The further particulars will be known to hon. members when the Order in Council is laid upon the Table.

There is another clause in that contract into which we are about to enter, and it is: that on all the plant and machinery that the Dominion Iron and Steel Company will require to import into Canada for the shipplate mill they will pay duty, and that duty will afterwards be refunded.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Dominion Government are making only two concessions: first, we are guaranteeing 250,000 tonnage for a period of five years, and secondly, we are remitting the duty on the machinery and material they will require to bring in for their mill. In order that the ships which the Government are ordering shall not cost too much money, I am happy to be able to say that through the splendid support of the British and Canadian War Missions at Washington, and through the generosity of the American Government, we have been able to buy 80,000 tons of steel plate in the United States on very favourable terms, at a price as low as the United States shipbuilders are paying. This amount will keep our plants operating during the balance of 1918 and during the whole of 1919, so that our supply of steel plate is assured until such a time as Canada is able to roll her own plate.

I was glad to hear my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) commend the Government for embarking on this policy at the present time. I will not weary the House by emphasizing the necessity for ships, for we all know to our sorrow the great loss of tonnage that occurs daily not only to the British Empire, but to all the Allies and to neutral countries as well, through the operations of German submarines. It follows that those countries that are well supplied with ships after the war will progress more rapidly than those countries which are short of ships. Hon. gentlemen will understand that the ships which are being built by the Imperial Munitions Board, and are being financed by Canada, will not be under the control of the Dominion Government, but are being built for the Imperial authorities, to be owned and operated by them as they see fit. But the ships that Canada is building now, and the ships she will build in the future, will be absolutely owned and controlled by Canada and will be used in the most effective way for the prosecution of the war. We hope also to use these ships for carrying the products of our fields, mines and forests across the seas to the various countries with which I hope Canada will later be doing a large export trade. Without the ships, Canada would be in a very unfortunate position.

Almost daily I am receiving requests from various interests in this country for ships; the people are almost begging for them. We require ships for our coal trade, we require ships to carry the products of the farm, and we shall require ships to work in conjunction with the Government-owned transcontinental railways. No definite railway policy has been worked out, and I merely mention the railways in connection with the steamship services. Canada already owns the Intercolonial railway and the Canadian Northern railway, and there may come a time when she will want ships on the Great Lakes and on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, to act as feeders for the National Transcontinental Railway system.

I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion this policy that Canada has embarked on with regard to the building of ships is a wise and safe policy. Not only will the ships be under the Government's control, to be operated by them as they see fit, but if necessary they can be rented or sold, and there are many other things that we could do with them, so I consider our policy is a very safe one in the national interest.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve said something about neutral ships. The Canadian Government, of course, are confining their efforts entirely to ships of Canadian registry. We intend to keep our yards busy with Canadian registered ships only—ships for the Canadian Government.

A large number of wooden ships have been built by the Imperial Munitions Board for the Imperial authorities, but it is not the intention of the Canadian Government to have any wooden ships built. I am not prepared to express any opinion for or against wooden ships, except that with the money available for ship building in Canada at the present time, it seemed to the Government the wisest policy to invest that money in steel ships only. The wooden shipbuilding yards in different parts of Canada have many opportunities at the present time for building wooden ships. While they cannot build wooden ships under Canadian registry, they have every opportunity of building wooden ships for our Allies and for neutral countries, and some of these yards are now working on very large orders for wooden ships for Allied and neutral countries.

My hon. friend from Maisonneuve spoke, also, of the necessity of retaining the skilled and technical workers required for building ships in Canada. Everybody is agreed—this House, the people of Canada and of the British Empire, and all our Allies—as to the necessity for ships, ships, and more ships, and although the operation of the Military Service Act does not come under my jurisdiction, I can say to my hon. friend that the representations that have been made and which will be made in the future to the proper tribunals for the exemption of these men will be given every consideration, and care will be taken to safeguard the interests of this country and of the Empire by seeing that the necessary number of men are retained in the ship yards to carry out the programme of the Dominion Government.

Mr. McMASTER: Did I understand the minister to say that Canada advanced money to the Imperial Munitions Board for the building of ships by that Board?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That is correct.

Mr. McMASTER: What control have the Canadian people over the money which the Imperial Munitions Board use for the building of ships, or is the money merely lent to the Board?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The money is merely lent to the Board, as a bank would lend money to a private individual or business concern.

Mr. POWER: I represent a constituency which at one time was the centre of the wooden shipbuilding industry in Canada, and before giving my cordial approval to the Government's plan of steel shipbuilding I should like to be informed whether the minister has made a full investigation into the possibilities of reviving the wooden shipbuilding industry, and whether or not experts have given it as their considered opinion that wooden ships could not be used to increase the world's tonnage with the same good effect as steel ships.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Government, and I, as the minister charged with the responsibility of seeing that the Government's shipbuilding programme is carried out, looked very carefully into that question, but, as I stated in my remarks a few minutes ago, the Government's policy being only to keep the steel shipbuilding yards in Canada busy, our financial ability will not permit us to go beyond that. My hon. friend from South Quebec (Mr. Power) will agree that, as a business proposition and as a national proposition, bearing in mind that these ships are being built not for today only, but for the future, it is a wiser policy for Canada to put her money into steel shipbuilding than to put it into wooden ships. I am not saying anything derogatory to the wooden ships, but the speed of a wooden ship is very much less than that of a steel ship, her carrying capacity is less, and the wooden ship is debarred from the submarine zone because her speed being so slow, she presents a very much better target for submarine torpedoes. But the latter argument is not the one that causes the Government to go in for steel shipbuilding. The other arguments which I have just presented carried more weight.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: I suppose, in a matter of such importance, with so many details, we should all feel disposed to reserve our judgment on matters of detail, so that if any question arises later on we may be free to inquire into it. Subject to that I want to offer my congratulations to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the exceedingly interesting and most admirably clear statement he has made on an undertaking of so much importance to the country. I think the House has received the announcement very favourably, and we shall all desire, when the details come to be considered, that there may be nothing found in them which will lead us to withdraw our good opinion of the minister's programme.

I think the Government should be congratulated upon giving their attention just now to steel shipbuilding which of course does not necessarily imply that they lack appreciation of the importance of wooden shipbuilding. My own judgment is that we do not need any particular stimulus for wooden shipbuilding in our country. It is an art with which many of our people are quite familiar. I do not know whether there is a revival in the ancient city of Quebec of the great art of wooden shipbuilding, but in the Maritime Provinces there is a very large measure of activity all along our coast. In my own constituency several wooden ships are being built. I am afraid the conflict between iron and wood and steel was settled some years ago when, in the age of progress through which we were passing, the fact had to be recognized that the wooden ship must give way to the iron ship, and the iron ship in turn must give way to the steel ship. By and by we will return to those conditions when the large wooden ships will hardly have much chance in competition with the large steel ships. There has been in the past, and I believe there will be in the future, quite a demand for wooden ships of the smaller class. I believe the conditions that will exist at the close of the war, and for some years after the war, will be such that there will be large opportunity for the wooden shipbuilders of the country to engage in their enterprise. So that I feel that, in giving the preference to steel shipbuilding, as the hon. minister is doing, there is no danger of any injustice being done to the wooden shipbuilding industry. I believe that industry will flourish for some years to come without any particular aid from the Government.

Steel shipbuilding is, in a measure, a new industry here. It has been carried on in a small way, but owing to the very fact that the hon. gentleman has stated: that we had no plate mill in the country, we could not expect to engage in the enterprise in a very large way. As I happen to know something of the formation of the Dominion Steel Company, and as I was, in some measure, identified in a modest degree some years ago with the creation of this splendid industry in Cape Breton, I take a particular pleasure to-day in hearing the minister make the announcement that he is arranging to have a contract with the Dominion Steel Company, whereby the steel plates will be made in the works at Sydney. Altogether, I am sure the House has been deeply interested in the statement of my hon. friend, and I offer him my hearty congratulations on it.

Mr. McMASTER: Before the item is further considered, I may be allowed to make some observations upon it. First of all, the minister may never need to apologize for addressing this House, because he is possessed of one great outstanding virtue, namely, that when he rises in his place and speaks, we can all hear him with ease. In harmony with this acclaim of congratulations this afternoon, I wish to congratulate the minister, but on somewhat different grounds. The minister said he was able to induce people to start a valuable industry in this country by allowing their machinery to come in free, or rather allowing the machinery to come in on payment of the duty and afterwards refunding the duty to these people.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That was done in a moment of weakness.

Mr. McMASTER: The point I wish to make is that, if it is a good thing in Canada to permit manufacturers to bring in free of duty machinery for making ships, it might be a good thing in Canada to allow machinery for other purposes to be brought in free. I would not like this occasion to pass without saying that I hope that the minister's attitude that no large industry can be started or perpetuated in Canada without artificial encouragement by means of a bonus or tariff will not be endorsed. I would not like that statement to pass unchallenged, because I trust he is wrong. I trust there are industries in this country which do not need any encouragement by bounty or tariff. The building of ships is a war measure. If artificial stimulation is required it should be given, but it should not be given, I take it, as a matter of principle. My recollection, of course, does not go so far back as the recollection of the hon. member (Mr. Fielding) but I am old enough to know that the industrial history of this country is emphasized here and there by large companies who enjoyed bounty encouragement and tariff encouragement, and who, when they were making too much profit, capitalized that profit against the people of Canada by watering their stock in most lavish fashion. I make these remarks not in any way to detract from the congratulations that have been showered on the minister—because he deserves these congratulations for the way he has placed this matter before the House—but in order to put myself, and, I believe, some of my friends on both sides of the House, on record that we are not absolutely wedded to the principle of protection.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Before proceeding with the estimates, I want to thank the hon. member for Queens-Shelburne for his kind words of commendation on the Government's policy of shipbuilding, and I am pleased that he thought we picked on the right firm and the right province in Canada in which to have the ship plates rolled. In addition to that, I want to give a little further word of encouragement to my hon. friend, Mr. Fielding, to whom this country is indebted in a very large measure for his patriotic services, that while at the present time I regret that there are no steel shipbuilding yards in the Maritime Provinces, and while our programme is limited, as I stated, to the amount of the expenditure we can afford to allocate for shipbuilding, at the same time I have been giving a lot of attention during the last few weeks, and so have my colleagues, to the question of having a large steel shipbuilding industry located somewhere in the Maritime Provinces, so that steel ships may be made there, as well as in other parts of our Dominion. Probably the attractions of Nova Scotia, when we finally come to decide upon a site, will prove as great as they did when we were thinking of where the ships' plate mill should be established.

While the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) and myself can see eye to eye in a great many things it is not my intention to enter into any tariff discussion this afternoon, but I am glad to hear what the hon. gentleman has said. I do not want him to think that this shipbuilding programme is a war emergency programme. We have not launched it with that view at all. We believe that shipbuilding will be one of the large permanent industries of Canada and I hope the hon. member will be here with me when the present contract for ships' plates expires and that I will have his support in granting the necessary prtection to the vast industry which will have been built up by that time.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will there not be rolling mills also at Montreal?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There is no reason why rolling mills should be confined to any one particular province but it is not an attractive business proposition at the present time. There are not many financiers or industrial men in this country who want to put $5,000,000, or even $3,000,000, into a plant that has absolutely no protection whatever. If any other group of financiers wish to enter into the rolling of ships' plates, either in Montreal or in any other part of Canada, I will not say that the Government will give them the same assistance that we have found it necessary to give the Dominion Iron and Steel Company—I think hon. members will agree that it was necessary to do that to get the first mill started—but if any other group of financiers wish to start into the rolling of ships' plates without any duty, the Government will be very pleased indeed to see them do it.

Mr. MICHAUD: I have a clipping from the Graphic newspaper published in Campbellton, N.B., which reads as follows:

> The Graphic in conversation with a gentleman who is interested was informed yesterday that if the town of Campbellton would provide a free site and exemption for a term of years, his firm would seriously consider the establishment of a ship-building plant here.
>
> That such an industry would be of immense benefit to Campbellton goes without saying, and nothing we can do should be left undone to induce the firm to establish a plant here.
>
> We would suggest that the town council place itself on record as willing to assist such an industry.

The town of Campbellton is an important harbour in the northern part of the province. I would ask the minister if he knows anything about the transaction that is referred to here or if it is about to take place. Has he heard anything about a shipbuilding plant being established at Campbellton, and, if so, what?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have not received any proposition from Campbellton or from any financier who contemplates the establishment of a shipbuilding plant there. I have already, I hope, clearly explained to hon. members that we hope to see more ship yards in Canada than exist at the present time but we are limited as to the creation and expansion of ship yards owing to the financial condition of the country. If the finances of the Dominion exchequer will permit an extension of our programme, we certainly will not forget Campbellton if its citizens should put a proper proposal before us.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: I want to join with other hon. members, especially on this side of the House, in congratulations to the hon. the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne). But I wish to advise him also that he gets a good deal of sympathy, particularly from this side of the House, and to point out to him the reason why that is so. I hold in my hand a paper called the Halifax Herald. I understand this is the personal organ of the right hon. the Prime Minister, but notwithstanding that, it contains one of the most vicious attacks upon my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that I have ever known to be made upon a public servant.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Shame.

Mr. READ: It is a shame, coming from a senator and a man who obtained his position, I think, through the good graces of the present Dominion Government. This attack of the Prime Minister's organ on my hon. friend is a disgraceful thing altogether. Did my hon. friend see it?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

Mr. READ: I am almost ashamed to read it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. READ: It is as follows:

> Halifax, March 12.—Further investigation by The Halifax Herald in shipping and pilotage circles yesterday has brought additional and conclusive evidence that there must be a shake-up of no meagre dimensions at Ottawa. The pilots' story that a steamer laden with high explosives was allowed to lay in the fairway of the harbour one day last week for seven hours, was fully confirmed, and in getting the confirmation other details of a most startling nature were disclosed.

The Halifax Herald is scrupulously careful to abide by the rules of the censorship and anything calculated to furnish information to the enemy is gladly withheld from publication. There is not a man familiar with marine affairs at this port, not a Nova Scotia captain who has gladly given his services to the work of naval patrol, not a master mariner who regularly brings in and takes out his steamer, but what has a story to tell of stupidity, of pigheadedness, of bungling in connection with the affairs of the port and, following up these stories, the trail leads directly to Ottawa and reveals a heterogeneous bunch of incompetents who may know the ways of society, who may be able to judge aright the merits of various blends of wine, but who certainly do not know the ways of ships and are not able to judge the competence of those whom they place in charge.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. READ: (reading)

In times of peace we should not have such men at the head of affairs of a maritime nature. To have them in such position in these awful days of war is evidence of a laxity on the part of our people, a laxity which has already led to fatal consequences and which should, perchance a break be made through the British fleet, lead to awful disaster. God forbid that a change at Ottawa be withheld until such a time comes.

It took one of the greatest disasters the world has ever known, to partially arouse those in authority, but those who were in supreme authority then are still in authority. Britain, France, Italy, the United States—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I have been waiting very patiently to see what reference the article that the hon. member was reading might have to the vote under consideration. But I find that instead of coming nearer to the vote it is going farther and farther away from it, and I must therefore ask the hon. gentleman to desist from reading the article.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: The item reads: "To provide for the maintenance and upkeep of ships, Naval College, dockyards at Halifax and Esquimalt, and Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve." The whole question that is involved in this article is the very vote under consideration. Now, I will just finish reading——

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I rule that the hon. gentleman must desist. He can either submit to the ruling or appeal to the House.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: I accept your ruling Mr. Chairman. As I said before, I want to congratulate the hon. minister upon the ability that he has displayed in his office. I am perfectly satisfied in my own mind that he is one of the best men we ever had at the head of the Marine Department.

Some hon MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: I do not endorse that article, I want it distinctly understood. And I would like hon. gentlemen, and the present Government, to understand that they are going to get my unqualified support in everything they do that I think is right. I am not a partisan, and I am not going to be one.

I was going to remark, however, with regard to the great shipbuilding problem before this country at present, that I had the pleasure of visiting British Columbia recently, and while there went through one of the shipyards that the hon. minister stated he has given a contract to, the Wallace Shipbuilding Company at Vancouver. I am rather surprised that none of the members from British Columbia have spoken on this question, because I saw there the most marvellous development of shipbuilding that can possibly be found in the world. I stood in that shipyard and saw the workmen moulding the plates for the building of the ships. One of the most intricate pieces of work in connection with shipbuilding is the making of the bilge plates of a beautiful steel ship. Four men were handling that plate. Not a blow was being struck, not a bit of human muscle was being exercised, no brawn was being used except in simply moving the plate along to receive the pressure that was coming from the mountain that stood within view of the very men that were handling the plate. There they were, drawing energy from "white coal" which was generated from a mountain lake, and they were moulding that plate into that intricate shape, ready to put on the ship's bottom, without using a mallet, a chisel, or a maul. It was a marvellous thing, and it showed that the people of British Columbia, at any rate, have all the necessary elements to compete with anything in the world in the building of ships. I found that not only were they moulding plates by means of electrical energy, but they were cutting off their great beams with an instrument just like a pencil following a line, cutting off great beams, six inches square, with a jet of electric flame, and the celebrated acetylene gas that is used in connection with it. All the riveting and that sort of thing is being done by the same power. There is no doubt in the world but that we can build ships in Canada. We built them before. There was a time in our history, in the early sixties, I think, when Canada—little undeveloped Canada—stood second, or, at any rate, third, in the whole coterie of the nations of the earth in point of tonnage. And, during those years the men who went down to the sea in ships from the Maritime Provinces and the province of Quebec were second to no men in the world. They were first. Very few sailors amongst them, because they were not very long at the business, but they developed to such a marvellous extent into officers that one would think they were all precocious boys. I have seen young men, taken out of the green woods in the province of Prince Edward Island, in two years' time become masters of square rigged ships in the foreign service; they were the greatest successes that any country ever produced. Anything that the hon. minister can do to build up a mercantile navy I am sure will be to the interest of Canada as a whole, as well as to the interest of those centres which have the good fortune to have the industry established amongst them.

I want it to be distinctly understood that I do not endorse any of that stuff that I read from the Halifax Herald.

Mr. J. F. JOHNSTON: Might I ask the minister if his department is experiencing any difficulty in getting shipbuilders in Canada to accept contracts at the present time? The reason I ask is, that it has been brought to my attention by a gentleman of prominence in marine circles that shipbuilders are not accepting contracts from the Government as readily as they might on account of the exacting terms of the contracts. I would like to have the answer of the minister.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: In answer to the hon. gentleman, it has not come to my notice that we have had any difficulty at all in placing orders for steel ships in Canada. Whenever the berths become vacant we find the shipbuilders eager and anxious for business. It has not been brought to my notice that there is any condition such as my hon. friend has mentioned.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Will the hon. minister inform the committee why there is such a large decrease in the item compared with last year?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Hon. gentlemen will notice that the vote for this same item in 1917-18 amounted to $1,000,000. We are asking the House to vote now $600,000, which is $400,000 less than last year. I will give the reason for the reduction very briefly. This is a reduction of $400,000 on the estimates passed for the fiscal year 1917-18. Last year the vote was partly nominal, as stores purchased and distributed to Canadian, British and Allied vessels in connection with the prosecution of the war were charged to this vote, and refunds were then credited thereto. For the present year the system of bookkeeping for store expenditures has been changed and such expenditures will be charged directly to the war vote, any refunds being credited to that vote. The item for the coming year is to cover the cost of maintaining the Royal Naval College, the expenditure on headquarters permanent naval staff and some of the expenditures of the dockyards at Halifax and Esquimalt. I might explain that it is the policy now for Canada to be called upon by the Imperial Government to furnish provisions for a great many of the Imperial ships at Halifax and at Esquimalt. Canada supplies the provisions necessary for these British ships and we charge the amount to the Imperial Government, and it is refunded later. Charging a certain sum this year to the war appropriation is the reason the amount is $400,000 less than last year.

Fisheries Protection Service—to provide for the repairs and maintenance of Fisheries Protection Steamers, $300,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I suppose this applies to the Government Fisheries Protection Steamer "Princess," and also to the lightships?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No. We have on the Fisheries Protection Service on the East Coast: "The Canada," "The Curlew," "The Constance," "The Gulnare," and "The Petrel." On the West Coast there are three ships, and on the great lakes, I think, one. These comprise our Fisheries Protection vessels.

At six o'clock the Committee took recess.

After Recess.

The Committee resumed at eight o''clock.

The Naval Service—Radiotelegraph service—To provide for the building and maintenance of wireless stations, $225,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would like to get from the minister some information as to this vote. How many wireless stations are under the control of the department? How many men are employed? Is the department encouraging the study of radiotelegraphy?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have at the present time 184 coast, land and ship stations in Canada, of which 66 are Government land and ship stations. The total personnel employed in the Dominion is 506, 230 of whom are in the Government employ, and 276 are employed by commercial companies. We have a school in Ottawa with about sixty attending.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What are the arrangements for the students? Do they get scholarships? Is the Government paying them directly or indirectly to study radiotelegraphy? The minister will, of course, understand this is a very important item. Wireless telegraphy has rendered great service to the navy and to the merchant marine, and its use has become universal. I am quite sure that when peace is restored wireless telegraphy will be of immense service for our ships at sea. In normal times, we know, the S.O.S. call in the midst of the ocean has saved many ships. It will be interesting to know that the Department of Marine and Fisheries of Canada is encouraging the study of radiotelegraphy. I am pleased to be able to say that Canada was the first country to encourage Signor Marconi to establish the system, the first official station being bonused by the Canadian Government. It is quite a credit to Canada, and I would be glad to know that, under the direction of the minister, similar encouragement will be given in the future. I understand that the department was represented some few years ago at a congress of radiotelegraphy held in Europe, I think at London, at which rules and regulations were drafted and accepted by a number of the governments of the world. Perhaps the minister is not familiar with the sittings of that congress, but he might, at some later date, give the House information on that subject. At all events, I wish to state that it would be a most interesting development for Canada and for the future of our merchant marine that wireless stations on board ships be made compulsory.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am pleased to advise the hon. member that they are compulsory at the present time. Every vessel of over 1,600 tons is compelled to have a qualified operator on board. The radiotelegraph school was formerly, as hon. members will no doubt know, at Halifax, but owing to the terrible catastrophe that happened there on December 6 last, the headquarters were removed to Ottawa. All those operators are sworn in for the duration of the war as belonging to the Royal Canadian Navy. They are engaged first as learners, and then, if they pass all the examinations to become operators, they are sent to the various stations throughout Canada. As regards the conference that took place at London, while I was present at the time in London, I am not familiar with all the details, but I shall be glad to give the details later on.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Some six years ago my successor in the Post Office Department, Hon. Mr. Pelletier, introduced a Bill in this House with a view to getting cheaper rates for the transmission of messages across the ocean. A contract was signed with a company having its own system of radiotelegraphy—I forget the name of the company and the system. The contract was a most favourable one. Last year, at the end of the session, my hon. friend's predecessor, Hon. Mr. Hazen, introduced a Bill, giving to the Marconi Company the benefit of that contract, the contract being transferred to that company. Mr. Allan, of Montreal, as the minister knows very well, is the president of that company. Does the minister know whether the company has done anything?—whether the contract has been adhered to? I was very pleased to see last year that the board of directors was under the chairmanship of my friend Mr. Allan of Montreal, a well-known and highly respected citizen. I understand that this matter is under the direction of either the Marine Department or the Post Office Department, I am not sure which. Has anything been done in connection with that Marconi Company?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I understand that my predecessor, Hon. Mr. Hazen, introduced a Bill to enable that company to operate, but they were not able to do so, and I understand the company has gone into liquidation.

Mr. MORPHY: I notice there is a decrease in this item of $70,000 from the appropriation of last year, which decrease seems to be commendable. This item is to provide for the building and maintenance of wireless stations. How many stations does the minister contemplate building and where are they to be located?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Government have not under consideration the erection of any stations at all. The estimates for 1918 are reduced by the amount of $70,000 through the omission of an item providing for the construction of a station on Hudson Strait. I understand the station was not gone on with.

Mr. MORPHY: That does not quite answer the question. This item is to provide for the building and maintenance of wireless stations. My question was, how many stations, if any, is it proposed to build and where?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I thought I made myself clear to the hon. member that we were not going to build any stations.

Mr. MORPHY: Then what is the money for?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: For the maintenance and carrying on of the stations.

Mr. CAHILL: Why was the station referred to not built?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There was no necessity for providing that service until such time as the Hudson Bay railway should be completed.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Later on, when the war is over, I would like the hon. minister to look into the matter of wireless telegraphy from the point of view of state ownership. Actually, we are paying very high rates for cablegrams. It is true that there has been a reduction in the rates of some cable companies, due to a long agitation, although that reduction has been withdrawn during the war, except at certain times. I think that every Saturday evening cablegrams can be sent at reduced rates if addressed to some one in the army or connected with the military service. But after the war is over, the hon, minister, as head of the department supervising this service, should concentrate his attention on that phase of the question, namely a reduction in the tolls for transmitting telegrams across the ocean.

There has been in the British Empire during the last twenty-five years a constant agitation, first to reduce the postal rates and the cable rates. It has been found, after practical experiment, that the lower the rates the more money came into the treasury. The apostles of that postal reduction were, first, Rowland Hill, and later Mr. Henniker Heaton, the member for Canterbury, England. He was an Australian, by the way, but he sat in the British House of Commons for twenty-five years. He died at Geneva at the beginning of the war. But he agitated until finally he was the chief promoter of the postal conference which, under the Duke of Norfolk, brought about the two-cent rate throughout the British Empire; and it is well to remember that this reduction was proposed by the then Postmaster General of Canada, Sir William Mulock. But the agitation did not stop there. Mr. Heaton was engaged even up to the time of his death in an endeavour to secure a reduction in the cable rates; and, as the cable companies were strongly opposed to any such reduction, Mr. Henniker Heaton, in league with Signor Marconi, was about to obtain cheaper rates for the transmission of wireless communications.

It seems to me that Canada, being the largest and oldest Dominion in the Empire, is very much interested in this matter of cheaper communication by wireless with the Mother Country. We are interested because we have such a large flow of immigration from the British Isles, and these immigrants, largely settlers in the West, are at times, because of their family connections on the other side, obliged to have rapid transmission of messages to their folks at home. We know that a letter takes too long to travel, although before the war we were blessed with a relatively fast steamer service across the Atlantic. Not only are we interested from the point of view of communications which may pass privately between our immigrants in the West and their families in the British Isles, but we are also largely interested in getting a cheap news service for our newspapers. The news which comes from Europe in ordinary times is more or less tainted—and I do not use that word in any offensive sense—with the American touch.

Mr. JACOBS: How about the Northcliffian touch?

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am not referring to individuals. But it seems to me of the utmost importance that we should get a cheap news service direct to Canada without relying on the service to New York, Boston or other points in the United States. I am speaking of conditions that would obtain in normal times if we can establish a wireless system which will compete with the cable companies, and it is only by competition that we shall have cheaper rates.

Now, this is a very important point, in my judgment. Some years ago, when I had the honour to be Postmaster General of Canada, I obtained from the Postmaster General of England cheap postal rates for British newspapers and magazines, and as a result these were to be seen in every railway station and bookstore in Canada. I made a calculation at the time, and by comparing the dead weight of the number of bags and baskets at Rimouski and Halifax filled with magazines and newspapers, found that in less than six months after having obtained that cheap postal rate we had nearly doubled the circulation of these periodicals, and after a year or so there was no more comparison, because the country was flooded with them. I thought it was a good service to Canada that we should, at all events, give the preference to that literature. I am sorry to say that for the last three or four years the arrangement between the two post offices has not been renewed; and, whilst I do not wish to discuss postal matters on this item, I desire to impress upon my hon. friend that he should not lose sight of the fact that for cheap news from Britain to Canada he must rely on the wireless system, because that system will give the necessary competition to the private-owned cable companies, and competition will bring down the rate. That is the reason I asked this evening if there was a school attached to the department in order to promote the system of radiotelegraphy. I believe in the future of radiotelegraphy, and I think it will be a blessing for Canada when we have stations dotting our shores from the 45th parallel as far north as possible, and when we have direct communication by wireless, not only with the British Isles, but from our western coast, with Japan. I hope I have not transgressed the rules too much, and I hope my hon. friend will accept my views in a good spirit, and will give heed to some of the advice which I have given him free of charge.

Mr. JACOBS: The hon. gentleman from Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) stated that he hoped the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries would do certain things to ameliorate conditions after the war is over. I hope my hon. friend from Maisonneuve is not raising any false delusions or forlorn hopes in the breast of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, because it is quite possible the present minister may not occupy that position when the war is over. It is quite possible that the former Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the member for Maisonneuve, may hold that position, and may have to swallow the advice he has given to the present minister.

Patrol of the northern waters of Canada—$40,000.

Mr. MORPHY. Will the hon. Minister kindly explain what that item is for?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I think the hon. gentleman is aware of the various expeditions which have started out, not only in the past few years, but in previous years, both to the Arctic regions, and to the frozen regions of the South. The latest one is known as the Stefansson expedition. Stefansson is still in the North. I think the hon. gentleman is aware that they had rather a difficult time, lost their ship, and were stranded in the Far North nigh on to two years, and Stefansson is still there.

Life Saving Stations—including rewards for saving life, $100,000.

Mr. JACOBS: Are we going to provide now for the saving of life, without knowing how many lives are going to be saved?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. gentleman has certainly given me a poser, because if I knew how many lives were going to be lost, and where the loss would occur, we would have our life-saving apparatus ready, and no lives would be lost. But in regard to the life-saving stations, while I am asking hon. members to give their assent to this estimate of $100,000, I wish to explain that I am going thoroughly into all the life-saving stations from one end of Canada to the other. I want to be satisfied that they are giving the service that the Government would expect them to give and I also want to get a more complete record of the dates when those stations were erected, whether they have saved any lives, how many, and at what dates. While I will use the utmost care and discretion, if I find I can close any of those stations and save some money to the country, hon. gentlemen may be quite sure that I will do so. I am at the moment giving this matter my very careful attention.

Royal Naval College of Canada—Restoration, $25,000.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I wish to explain that I consider the vote here of $25,000 far too small and inadequate for what we may be called upon to do. The Naval College which was situate in Halifax, and which turned out so many cadets with such a high standard of efficiency, was almost blown to pieces when the catastrophe occurred in that city. The cadets were then temporarily transferred, through the kind courtesy of the Militia Department, to the Kingston Military College quarters. We do not know for the moment where they will be sent this fall, as we have not time to get a new Naval College erected at Halifax, and possibly will not have time to make adequate provisions for quarters there. If we are not able to provide accommodation there, we will probably send the cadets temporarily out to Esquimalt, and in the supplementary estimates, which are yet to come down, I may ask the support of hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as those on this side of the House, for a larger appropriation. I think hon. gentlemen will understand that you could not build a college, or even a barn hardly for $25,000. I will ask them to be good enough to pass this item now, but I will probably put something more in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. CANNON: When was the college established?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: In 1910.

Mr. CANNON: Was it after the Naval Act was passed by the late Government, and was it in accordance with the law then passed?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The late Government, or rather, the Liberal Government, under Sir Wilfrid Laurier, was in power when the Naval College was established at Halifax. That college was erected at the time as part of the policy of the Liberal Government of 1910.

Mr. CANNON: Are there any training ships in Canada?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Oh, yes. I think most hon. members know that Canada has the Niobe and the Rainbow, and we have a large number of cadets constantly training on those vessels.

Mr. CANNON: Are those ships solely employed for training purposes, or have they taken any part in actual warfare?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: They are more largely devoted to training purposes than anything else, although the much maligned Niobe performed efficient service, which it would not be wise for me to explain to hon. members of this House, in connection with the war. I may say our small navy, although it is very much larger than it used to be, is co-operating and has been co-operating with the naval authorities ever since the war broke out.

While the Niobe is not a fighting ship, she is performing very effective and valuable service at the port of Halifax, and the Rainbow also on the Pacific coast.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is the ship of Commander Ross still in commission?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: The minister mentioned that the naval forces of Canada had been considerably increased of late. Will it be possible for the minister to give us some information as to the number of ships that have been either built or obtained or taken over by the Government and which are actually controlled by my hon. friend's department?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry that, owing to war conditions, as the hon. member will understand, I am unable to give publicly to the House the information that he has asked. If he would care to come to my office I would be very glad to give him the details in strictest confidence. Suffice it to say that the Canadian navy, small as it is, has played a very important part since the war broke out, but it would not be wise or prudent for me to give the details.

Mr. CANNON: Will the minister tell me if whatever has been done as regards the naval force has been in accordance with the Naval Act passed by the Laurier Administration?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I should say no to that. The additions that have been made to the Canadian navy, and the duties that various ships are performing, are in conformity with the wishes of the Imperial naval authorities.

Mr. CANNON: Under what law is that done? Is it in accordance with an Order in Council or the existing law?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is not at all necessary to have an Order in Council. The hon. gentleman knows that the Naval Act is on the statute books of Canada.

Mr. CANNON: It is the Naval Act actually in the statutes that my hon. friend is using?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: As I said a moment ago, the Canadian Government are not following out the Liberal naval policy, but whatever we are doing we are doing under proper authority and working in harmony with and on the advice of the Imperial naval authorities.

Mr. CANNON: And under the existing law.

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers and ice breakers, $1,500,000.

Mr. Du TREMBLAY: There is an increase of $320,000. Would the minister explain why?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The amount that we are asking for is larger than last year. The expenditure for nine months of 1917-18 ended the 31st December, 1917, has been increased 18·2 per cent over the expenditure of the corresponding period of the previous year.

This is required for boilers for the Montcalm and for repairs to quite a number of the Government steamers.

Mr. CASGRAIN: There is a special item for boilers, No. 206.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The amount of this vote has been increased by $320,000. The increase is required to meet the rapidly increasing cost of coal, material and labour for steamers whose operating expenses and repairs are paid out of this vote—the Aberdeen, Aranmore, Champlain, Estevan, Lady Grey, Lady Laurier, Montcalm, Nelson, Rouville and Stanley. This amount is necessary for repairs to these vessels and also because of greatly increased cost of coal, wages, oil, etc.

Mr. FIELDING: Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the minister's attention to a matter concerning the ports on the south shore of Nova Scotia. Several of these ports, owing to the severe winter which we have passed through, have been closed or obstructed by ice. If I am not mistaken, and the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) will correct me if I am, the port of Lunenburg was thus obstructed. Lunenburg is the most important fishing port in the Dominion. The port of Shelburne was obstructed. It is one of the finest harbours we have in the country. The port of Yarmouth, the gateway of western Nova Scotia, with its important traffic, also suffered some obstruction. In all these cases application had to be made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries for relief, and I am glad to be able to say that in every case the minister and his staff did the best they could in the matter, and that some relief was granted The object of my present remarks is to suggest to my hon. friend that it would be very desirable, in view of difficulties of that character, if a vessel suitable for the purpose were assigned to that class of service for a short period during the winter, probably about a couple of months. It would not need a powerful icebreaker of the class needed in the St. Lawrence region. A vessel or boat ordinarily employed for other purposes, but perhaps equipped with some little extra sheathing or something of the sort, located, perhaps, at Halifax, to be ready for service of that character, would be able to render very necessary and valuable service. The ice which forms in these ports is not very thick and if attended to promptly it could be disposed of easily if the proper appliances were available, whereas, if it is allowed to become solid, difficulty may arise. The people in that part of the country appreciate the efforts of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to give them relief and are grateful for what has been done, but I would suggest to the hon. gentleman for his consideration whether it would not be well to assign a special vessel to spend a couple of months at Halifax and be ready for an emergency of that character.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will be very glad to see if that cannot be done for another season. I am glad that my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) has brought the matter to my attention.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I wish to make the same request for the harbour of Gaspé. Gaspé is the greatest port of Canada. That is where the fleet assembled after the boys left Valcartier camp for England. You have probably seen the picture of the fleet that anchored in the harbour of Gaspé when the boys left for the front. Every year after the ice is clear in the gulf and after navigation has opened, the interesting population of Gaspé is bottled up. The farthest point of the bay is very narrow, the ice is very thick and the people are bottled up. There is no communication. After several S.O.S. calls, during many years, the Marine Department decided to send, generally in April, one of the ice breakers or one of the other big steamers of the department to facilitate the opening of the harbour. The minister will probably hear from the people of Gaspé on the opening of navigation, and in making this request now I am simply giving him an advance notice.

Mr. POWER: What are the names of the ice breakers that ply between Quebec and the north shore of the St. Lawrence in winter time, or are there any?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The steamer Montcalm.

Mr. POWER: Did the Montcalm make a trip this year?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Not since the early part of January. She is at present engaged with the Lady Grey in breaking the ice between Quebec and Montreal, and when she gets through there, if she is not damaged, the department hope to send her on one of her usual trips along the north shore as far as Seven islands.

Mr. POWER: I would suggest that it would perhaps be a good thing to send the Montcalm down to Seven islands and along the north shore right now, because from newspaper reports the inhabitants there seem to be in a semi-starving condition. I am quite aware of the importance of having the ice cleared to open the port of Montreal early in the spring, but at the same time, with all due deference to the claims of the city of Montreal, I would urge the minister, in the cause of common humanity, to endeavour to succour the people along the north shore rather than help the financial interests of the great commercial port of Montreal.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Montcalm and the Lady Grey are not breaking ice for the port of Montreal, but for the port of Quebec, which my hon. friend represents so well in this House. As soon as they get through breaking the ice for the port of Quebec, the Government will be very glad to send the Montcalm to the north shore. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman's impression that the inhabitants of the North shore are in a starving condition. As far as I can make out, they are short of certain emergency supplies, and these will be sent down on the Montcalm in a very short time.

Mr. POWER: I understand that the Montcalm is breaking ice above Quebec, and as in the ordinary course of nature rivers flow down it would seem to me that the ice is being broken for the port of Montreal which lies above Quebec. Certainly the ice is not being broken to give access from the sea to the port of Quebec.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I quite understand that water flows down and that if the steamer breaks ice anywhere west of the port of Quebec that must naturally help the ports between Quebec and the city of Montreal, but the chief place where the ice breaking is being done is very close to the city of Quebec, as my hon. friend will admit.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Why did the Champlain suspend its regular trips between Rivière Ouelle and Murray Bay and the ports on the North shore from some time after the middle of November last up until the end of December?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Champlain was in such an unseaworthy condition that she was withdrawn for repairs to her machinery.

Mr. CASGRAIN: If I remember correctly the minister stated some time ago that another Government steamer called the Bellechasse replaced the Champlain for a while, but not for the whole time during which the Champlain was undergoing repairs. Why did not the Bellechasse continue until the Champlain was ready?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. gentleman is aware what a severe winter we had; it set in much earlier this year than last, and the Bellechasse was unable to cope with the conditions, so the department had to withdraw her.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I would like to direct the attention of the minister to a state of affairs which certainly exists in the part of the country which I have the honour to represent. Perhaps all the hon. members of this House do not know the conditions of the people along the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, especially in the county of Charlevoix and down below. As soon as the fall comes the people there are absolutely cut off from the civilized world, and I am surprised that the Government is not taking steps to have the ships put in proper shape, always ready to cope with the situation, particularly at a time like last December, when a general election was on. At that time the boat service was absolutely discontinued, and it was very inconvenient to the electors, and to the candidate himself who had to travel all the way from Quebec to Murray Bay and other points on the north shore. I know that lots of electors were not able to record their votes because the service was discontinued.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: What was your majority?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I got in anyway, by five thousand and over.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: I suppose there is no intention on the part of the Government to discontinue the service of the Champlain between Rivière Ouelle and Murray Bay?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: None at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I do not object to the Champlain being withdrawn for a while for proper repairs. She is an excellent boat and was built in England, but she received so many bumps at the different wharves at Cap à l'Aigle, St. Irenée, St. Denis, Murray Bay and elsewhere that at the end of last season she was in very poor shape. The captain himself told me that an accident might happen at any time. But certainly when the boat is withdrawn from the service it should be replaced, because, as my hon. friend has pointed out, the people on the North shore depend entirely on this service. When the railway is built conditions will be improved, but the boat will still be necessary. A large population is absolutely dependent at the present time on the regular service of the Champlain.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Champlain runs from Rivière Ouelle to Murray Bay and St. Irenée, and it is the intention of the Government that she shall continue on that route. With regard to the North shore service, that does not pertain to my department, but to the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I am sure my colleague will provide, if he possibly can, for regular trips to the North shore and the south as well.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is unfortunate that these repairs cannot be made at a season when there are other boats to communicate with these ports, rather than in the fall, when the Richelieu and Ontario navigation boats do not go to the north shore. The repairs should be made in the summer or early fall, when other boats are available for this service.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend from Charlevoix-Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has said something which seems to me very sensible, and I will add this for the information of the minister. Most probably the Champlain would have been fit to continue on the service if she had not been used by a member of the Cabinet who travelled up and down the river on her as if she were his own, with no regard whatsoever for the public interest. Whenever this gentleman wanted the use of the boat he would take it and the rest of the community had to wait. What I say is a fact and it constituted a scandal. Those farmers who needed the boat to get their produce to Quebec were prevented from doing so. The gentleman to whom I refer, who was a member of the Ottawa Government, would step on to the vessel and off she would go. He did that, I may say, quite often. Now, who paid for these journeys? Has the Government received any money from this gentleman for the use of the vessel, or for the coal which was consumed in making these journeys? I understand also that concerts were given on this boat.

An hon. MEMBER: They had Victrolas.

Mr. CANNON: I understand all these trips were most harmonious, but at the present time, when the Government is urging, and rightly so, that the people should practise strict economy, all such things as I have described should be stopped immediately. I have no doubt that now my hon. friend (Mr. Ballantyne) is at the head of the department there will be no repetition of them.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am certainly not aware of any such acts as the hon. gentleman has just described, but I will be very glad to make the most rigid investigation into his allegations. The charges he makes are not very specific, however, and investigation therefore will be difficult.

Mr. CANNON: I can make no more specific charges.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am not aware that any member of the late Government did as he alleges, and I am quite sure that no member of the present Government has ever used the steamer Champlain for excursions or picnics.

Mr. CANNON: I am sorry to tell the minister that he is not well informed. The gentleman who did use the Champlain in the manner I have described was a member of the Government at the same time as my hon. friend. He used this vessel quite often, and as the minister knows, these trips are very expensive. The gentleman to whom I refer is no longer a member of the present Administration; he is now no more, but it is not his fault.

Mr. JOS. READ: The minister is new to his department, and therefore, probably does not know very much about conditions obtaining in the Straits of Northumberland prior to his taking office. In the winter service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, one of the steamers belonging to the Marine Department was formerly employed, but this vessel may have been transferred to the Railway Department. The inauguration of the car ferry system on the Straits of Northumberland has done away with the necessity of maintaining the winter boats, I hope for all time to come, thanks in large measure to the Prime Minister. Let me say that the car ferry is an unqualified success, and has performed a service that nobody expected to be so successful. The car ferry is a tremendous ice-breaker, probably one of the best in the world, and its operation has changed the conditions down there. During the very severe weather of the past winter the car ferry has made a trip between the mainland and the island every day she was required to do so; in fact, the vessel sometimes made the trip two or three times. Notwithstanding that fact, however, the congestion of freight in Prince Edward Island was never so abnormal as it is to-day. Everything in the way of freight was held up very largely all the winter, mainly because of difficulties arising in connection with the railroads. I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that a large portion of our produce still awaits shipment to the mainland, and a great deal of it is of a perishable nature. When the spring comes this produce must be got across to the mainland or it will be lost altogether. At a time like the present we do not want such a loss of produce to the Dominion if it is at all possible to avoid it. The two ports of Summerside and Charlottetown have always been opened by the winter steamers in the spring. This year I presume the Stanley will not be in juxtaposition to these ports, and, therefore, will not be able to open them up. I would, therefore, ask the head of the department that has always opened these ports in the spring to use his influence with the Minister of Railways, and have a vessel detailed for this purpose when the time is opportune.

9 p.m.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Department of Marine and Fisheries will only be too glad to go to the rescue of the Railway Department again when the necessity arises, and detail either the steamer Stanley or the Aranmore for the required purpose.

Mr. CAHILL: This increase of $320,000 seems to be a large one in these times when the curtailment of expenditures is called for. Is the increase principally due to extraordinary repairs, or maintenance charges.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is due to repairs, wages, fuel, oil, and all that sort of thing. The outlay for these purposes is very much higher than in normal times, and that is what makes up the $320,000.

Mr. CAHILL: It is an increase of something over twenty per cent.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Quite so.

Mr. CAHILL: There is an item for repairing the Montcalm amounting to $60,000. I was anxious to know whether the bulk of this increase is due to repairs or to increased cost in maintenance. Would it be possible to get an idea as to how much the increase has been for repairs as compared with maintenance?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We found it absolutely necessary to put in new boilers into the Montcalm.

Mr. CAHILL: Are the items for repairs greater than usual?

[Mr. Read.]

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I can give you all the details. We have twenty-three steamers, and the repairs of the hulls and engines amount to $257,340. That embraces nearly the whole amount.

Mr. CANNON: A few years ago the steamer Montmagny was wrecked. Has any attempt been made to float her, and if so, by whom?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: All attempts made to raise the vessel have been quite unsuccessful. A tender was awarded to a Quebec firm for that purpose, but, I am sorry to say, without any success.

Mr. CANNON: What firm was given the task of floating the ship?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am not quite certain; I think it was a company called the St. Charles Navigation Company, a Quebec company.

Mr. CANNON: What were the conditions of the contract which was awarded to the company in question?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: If the company raised the steamer they were to pay the department $25,000, but they were unable to do so.

Mr. CANNON: Then, as I understand, the Government practically sold the ship for $25,000?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That would have been correct had the company accomplished the task it set out to perform.

Mr. CANNON: What time had they in which to float the ship?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There was not any specific time, they were given a reasonable opportunity to see if they could accomplish their task, and they were unable to do so. We now consider the contract null and void.

Mr. CANNON: Has any other contract been given?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No other contract has been awarded.

Mr. CANNON: Has the department any intention of making further attempts to float the ship?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We will be very glad to favourably consider any offer that is made to the department. At the moment we have not received any.

Mr. CANNON: I understand that in the Quebec papers a few days ago it was reported that a gentleman offered to float the Montmagny provided he received financial aid either from the citizens or from the Government. It would be a good thing for the minister to help that man if his proposition is really a serious one. The Montmagny was a beautiful ship, and it is really too bad that she should be left in the river without any attempt being made to float her, which, I understand, it would be rather easy to do.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I think it is more difficult than the hon. member appreciates, but if he will have his friends come and see me, we are open to receive offers to raise the steamer.

Mr. CANNON: I have no friends.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry to hear that.

Examiners of masters and mates, $16,500.

Mr. J. READ: Will the minister tell us how that $16,500 is to be expended? Do the examiners get a fixed salary, or do they receive fees from the masters and mates?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The examiners get a fixed salary for the duties they perform.

Expenses of schools of navigation, $8,000.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Where are those schools located?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: At St. John, N.B., Halifax, North Sydney, Yarmouth, and in the winter months they are at Quebec and Kingston.

Mr. CANNON: Who looks after those schools?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have no superintendent over all the schools, but we have an instructor at each one of those stations. For the city of Quebec, it is Captain P. L. Lachance.

Mr. CANNON: What is his salary?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Fifty dollars a month.

Mr. CANNON: Does he work all the year round?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, only during the winter months.

Removal of obstructions in navigable waters, $5,000.

Mr. JACOBS: I notice there is a distinct decrease in this item from the appropriation of 1917. Does the minister expect fewer obstructions in 1918 than in 1917?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I do not know that I do, but the department considers the amount we are asking here will be sufficient for our needs, and we are trying to keep all the items of expenditure down to the minimum.

Mr. PARENT. Are there any particular rivers affected by this item?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, there is not any particular river or spot. The item covers work wherever navigation may be obstructed in any way. This vote is to remove the obstruction.

Mr. Du TREMBLAY: Was the amount of $20,000 for 1917-1918 all spent?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

Inspection of live stock shipments, $3,000.

Mr. CANNON: What is this item for?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is for live stock inspectors at the port of Montreal, Mr. Delorme, and Mr. O'Grady. Their business is to see that any live stock going aboard the steamers are properly taken care of and the necessary provision made for them.

Mr. CANNON: What are their salaries?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Mr. Delorme, $1,200; Mr. O'Grady, $1,050; miscellaneous, $750; making a total of $3,000.

Mr. POWER: Where does the live stock go to?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: To England—hundreds and thousands of horses.

Mr. CANNON: Is there a station of this kind at Quebec?

Mr. BALLANTYNE. That is not in my department; that belongs to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. POWER: Surely the hundreds and thousands of horses would be inspected by the British Remount Department, or the Imperial Munitions Board, or whatever department it may be which purchases these horses.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We do not inspect the horses. I would not want to convey to the hon. member the impression that we do. The business of these inspectors is to see that there are proper stalls or accommodation for horses or any other live stock that may be put on board the steamers.

Mr. CANNON: The item reads, "Inspection of livestock shipments."

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It might have been worded a little differently.

To continue subsidy for wrecking plants—Quebec, Maritime Provinces and British Columbia, $35,000.

Mr. POWER: How much is given to Quebec and to whom?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The vote is to pay the following subsidies: British Columbia Salvage Company, Victoria, $10,000; Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company, Levis, $25,000; in all, $35,000.

Mr. POWER: What service does the department get for the subsidy of $25,000?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That is one of the matters of emergency for which the department has to provide. While I am happy to state that the St. Lawrence route below the port of Quebec, and, in fact, the whole St. Lawrence route has, practically speaking, been free from accidents, at the same time it would be unwise in the interest of navigation for the department not to have a powerful and efficient plant ready in case an expensive steamer might come to grief.

Mr. POWER: I understand that at one time the steamer Lord Strathcona was kept constantly under steam and the Davie Company received a subsidy for this service. Is there now a boat kept under steam ready to sail at any moment?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Lord Strathcona is always kept under steam.

Mr. CANNON: Is the Government taking over the plant that used to belong to the Davie Company?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, the Government have not taken over the steamer; we are merely granting the subsidy.

Mr. CANNON: I mean the wrecking plant.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Government have not taken over the wrecking plant. The name of the company that operates it is the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company.

Mr. LEMIEUX: While I do not object to the maintenance of the wrecking plant at Levis, and while I see the necessity of it for the river St. Lawrence proper, I think it would be wise, at no distant date, for the department to establish a wrecking plant lower down the river St. Lawrence. If a wreck takes place in the gulf of St. Lawrence between Newfoundland and, say, Anticosti, or between Anticosti and Magdalen island and the bay of Gaspé, I do not wish to be parochial, but it seems to me it is too far away to send to Levis for a wrecking plant in order to meet such a contingency.

[Mr. Ballantyne.]

I know the department has had under consideration the erection of a wrecking plant lower down the river St. Lawrence. If the minister contemplates the erection of a plant there I might, perhaps, give him some of my own ideas about that. I consider the bay of Gaspé would be the proper point at which to have that wrecking plant.

Mr. JACOBS: I suppose the hon. member is speaking now as the member for Gaspé.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The department have not under consideration at the present time the establishment of a wrecking plant below the port of Quebec, but I shall be glad to give the matter consideration.

Mr. TOLMIE: Has any reduction been made in the subsidy to the British Columbia company?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The British Columbia appropriation remains the same.

Mr. FIELDING: Many serious wrecks occur, I believe, on the Newfoundland coast. To have ready access to these, even my hon. friend's port of Gaspé would hardly be suitable. I do not want to suggest any port in my own constituency, because that would look like parochialism, but I would suggest in all seriousness that a plant established at Sydney or at North Sydney would be a better location for the class of wreck with which the department has to deal. It is worth considering at all events, in the future planning of these arrangements.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I shall be very glad to take into consideration the suggestions made by my hon. friends.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I beg to move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to; progress reported.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The House again in Committee on Bill No. 3, to confer the electoral franchise upon women, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

On section 1—Women to be entitled to vote.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I have given consideration to some of the suggestions which were made with regard to the terms of this Bill, and I now propose the following amendment:

That subclauses (c) and (d) of the first subsection of section 1 be struck out and the following be substituted therefor as subclause (c):

Possesses the qualifications which would entitle a male person to vote at a Dominion Election in the province in which said female person seeks to vote. Provided that a married woman or an unmarried daughter living with her father or mother shall be deemed to have any necessary qualification as to property or income if the husband or either of the parents is so qualified.

The reason for that amendment is that it brings the qualification for a woman for the electoral franchise more nearly in line with that which is necessary for a man. As the clause was originally drafted, it gave women a somewhat wider franchise than men.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has the Bill been reprinted?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: No, that is the reason I am moving these amendments now. The object of the subsection in the first place, is to provide that the qualification of women shall be the same as that which would entitle a male person to vote at a Dominion election in the province in which the woman seeks to vote, but inasmuch as that provision, if unaccompanied by any qualification, would cut out a very large number of women from the right to vote, where that right is based upon property or income, therefore the clause goes on to provide:

That a married woman or an unmarried daughter living with her father or mother shall be deemed to have any necessary qualification as to property or income if the husband or either of the parents is so qualified.

That amendment removes the difficulty which was suggested as to the term of residence in the Bill as originally drafted. It is proper that hon. members should have time to consider the amendment, so I will ask that it stand. I also beg to move:

That subclause (c) of the second subsection of section 1 be amended by striking out the words "being a married woman and previously an alien," in first line thereof, and by substituting the word "parent" for the word "father," in the third line thereof, and by inserting after the word "constituency," in the ninth line thereof, the words "while he is so engaged in such preparation or revision."

The clause will then read:

If she has become a British subject by marriage or by the naturalization as a British subject of her parent while she was a minor and in either case has done nothing (other than in the second case by marriage) to forfeit or lose her status as a British subject, and obtains and presents to the official in charge of the preparation or revision of the voters' lists of the said constituency, while he is so engaged in such preparation or revision, a certificate under the signature of a judge,—

And so on. I also give notice that I will move that the second section be amended by adding thereto the following at the end thereof:

And in each of the said Acts the expression "person" or "male person" or any similar expression, shall include a female person, unless a different meaning is required by the context, or by the terms of this Act.

As far as I can judge, these amendments will cover such of the objections as were urged on a previous occasion, in so far as seems desirable to give effect to any suggestion so made.

Mr. LEMIEUX: When will these amendments come up for consideration?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Just as soon as we can take them up.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the Bill be reprinted for to-morrow?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I hope so.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand the principle of the Bill will be discussed in Committee of the Whole, when it is taken up again?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The principle of a Bill is always discussed on the second reading.

Mr. BUREAU: I understood that we passed over the Bill rather lightly on the second reading, because an understanding had been reached between the leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister that there might be fuller discussion either in Committee of the Whole or on the third reading. The object was to give members more time to go into details of the Bill, and study it more closely.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The principle of a Bill is one thing and the details another. I do not recall any understanding that the principle was to be discussed in committee. It is not usual to discuss the principle of a Bill in committee. The principle is discussed on the second reading and the details are discussed in committee, but if my hon. friend desires to relieve his mind of any view as to the principle of the Bill, perhaps we might waive the rules for the time being and let him have the opportunity.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not want any favour in that regard, but I understood at the time that we suspended the discussion on the second reading with the distinct understanding that there would be a general discussion in Committee of the Whole.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not recall it; it may be so.

Mr. BUREAU: On page 98 of Hansard I find:

> Sir Robert Borden: In order to make the matter perfectly clear, permit me to say that we are merely carrying out in this respect, the same principles with regard to women which now prevail in regard to men.
>
> Sir Wilfrid Laurier: I do not intend to discuss the principle of the Bill on the present occasion, but will reserve any remarks I may have to make on that subject.

I told some hon. gentlemen who were inquiring about the matter that my understanding was that those who had any remarks to make on the principle of the Bill would be given an opportunity to make them when the Bill came up in Committee of the Whole, the same as on a second reading.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I would not understand that the observation to which my hon. friend has called attention would constitute any such understanding as he suggests, but, as I said before, I have no desire to be strict in the enforcement of the rules. It would be undesirable, I think, to have a protracted discussion in committee on the principle of the Bill, when the principle should be discussed on the second reading, if at all.

Mr. LEMIEUX: On page 97 of Hansard I find:

> Sir Wilfrid Laurier: The House is very thin at the moment, and I do not purpose to discuss the principle of the Bill at this stage, as I understand several members wish to speak on it. I suggest that we give the Bill its second reading and go into Committee upon it, when the information I desire can better be given than across the floor of the House.

Of course I understand the hon. minister would not prevent any one discussing the principle of the Bill, because he tacitly agreed that the principle of the Bill would be discussed in committee.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I will not admit that I tacitly agreed to anything. However, I do not think we will have any trouble.

Mr. FORTIER: I understood the other day that this Bill would come before the committee again and be examined on its merits. If the minister is ready to hear discussion on the subject at once I am prepared to go on. Otherwise, I would have to wait until a future time, when the matter will come up for discussion. I may say I am opposed to the Bill.

[Mr. Bureau.]

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I think we had better go out of committee now, without prejudice to any rights my hon. friend had.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Boivin in the Chair.

Ocean and River Service—Unforeseen expenses, $5,000.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: While we are asking for a vote of $5,000, I wish to inform hon. gentlemen that the expenditure up to February 28, 1918, only amounted to $64.05, but we thought it wise to ask for a vote of $5,000, although I do not think we will spend any more next year than we did last year.

Amount required for two boilers for Canadian Government Steamer Montcalm, $60,000.

Mr. CANNON: Is it the minister's intention to call for tenders?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is the intention of the department to put in a similar make of boilers, Babcock & Wilcox, if we can get it at a reasonable sum. If we are unable to do so we will call for public tender.

Mr. CANNON: I understand the intention of the department at present is not to call for tenders.

Amount required for two steamers for buoy service in Maritime provinces, $300,000.

Mr. WIGMORE: Is it the intention of the department to purchase two new steamers to replace two that are at the present time in use or is it intended to add two new steamers to the fleet?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The intention is to add two new steamers. Unfortunately the department lost several boats; the Montmagny was one and there was also the unfortunate foundering of the steamer Simcoe. The intention is to build two new steamers especially designed for carrying buoys and for the service which they may be called upon to perform.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend has referred to the Simcoe. That was a very sad accident. Has an investigation disclosed anything as to the cause of that accident?

Mr. PEDLOW: Was the steamer Simcoe insured, and if so, for how much? I would like also to ask if the department has investigated the possibility of salvaging that boat?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Government carry their own insurance. This steamer was not covered by insurance in any outside company. We have not been able to salvage the steamer although we have endeavoured to do so.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the minister give me the information about the Simcoe?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There was no formal investigation held, but a very thorough inquiry was made by the department. I regret to inform the committee that we have no information that would enable us to tell what was the cause of the loss.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many people perished?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry I have not the exact number, but I think it was 42.

Mr. CANNON: Are the ships going to be built in Canada?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Certainly; it is the policy of the Canadian Government to have everything built in Canada.

Mr. CANNON: Has the construction of these ships started?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, not yet; we would not care to do that without the approval of hon. members and the House generally.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: Is there any vote for new buoys?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: This particular vote we are asking for is not for buoys. It is for two new steamers to be used in placing buoys.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where are the steamers going to be built?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I could not answer the hon. member because we will have to call for tenders according to the specifications of the department and whoever gives us the lowest bid and can turn out the best steamer will be awarded the contract.

Mr. CANNON: Is it the intention of the Government to have shipbuilding plants of their own?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The matter has not been considered by the Government, but if they ask the advice of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I may say that I will certainly be against it.

Public Works—Chargeable to capital (Marine Department)—River St. Lawrence ship channel, $478,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Would my hon. friend give an outline of the work to be done this summer on the ship channel in the river St. Lawrence, and state what depth of channel they have attained and what remains to be done.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The river St. Lawrence ship channel extends from the city of Montreal to what is known as the "Traverse," 60 miles below Quebec. The entire length of the channel is 220 miles. With the exception of 1.74 miles at cap à la Roche and St. Augustine bar, there is a 30-foot channel from Montreal to the sea. At cap à la Roche and St. Augustine bar advantage is taken of the rise in tide. At cap à la Roche there is a rise in tide of from 4 to 6 feet and at St. Augustin bar of approximately 13 feet. The narrowest point in the channel is at St. Croix bar. At this point the width is 250 feet. The width of the channel to the rock cut at cap à la Roche is 300 feet, which is being widened to 550 feet. The channel through lake St. Peter is 450 feet wide at the straight parts and from 600 to 800 feet on the curve. Work on the 35-foot channel has been completed over a distance of 39.90 miles. There remains yet to be dredged to a depth of 35 feet, 50.48 miles.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many dredges are there under the control of the department engaged on the work in connection with this ship channel?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Owing to the financial situation we are curtailing very much the expenditure on the work to be done on the St. Lawrence ship channel this coming year. We only have four elevator dredges with tugs and two self-propelling steel elevator dredges with tugs, six in all. Hon. gentlemen will notice that there is a decrease, as compared with last year, of $194,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Have there been any accidents in the channel during the last fiscal year?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am happy to say there have been only minor accidents—nothing of a grave character.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will my hon. friend induce the insurance people to reduce their rates now that the ship channel in the river St. Lawrence is in such good order and as there are only minor accidents? Unfortunately, a few bad accidents some years ago gave Lloyds a pretext to raise their rates abnormally. I think my hon. friend, who is au fait with the navigation of the St. Lawrence, who has been vice president of the harbour commission and was consequently in touch with all the oceanic interests, might endeavour to make his influence felt with that famous insurance concern and see that the rates between Great Britain and Canada under ordinary conditions are lowered. There is no reason why the river St. Lawrence should not be navigated as well as the ocean itself, with the remarkable improvement which we have witnessed in the ship channel in the last twenty years. I know that I am voicing the sentiments not only of the business community in Montreal, but of all Canada. It is a big question which affects not only the merchants and shippers in Montreal, but the farmers in the West. I hope that my hon. friend, business man as he is, will see to it that we get from Lloyds proper rates for our ocean tonnage.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I can sympathize with the hon. member's views regarding the high rates of insurance on the St. Lawrence route. It is a matter that I gave a great deal of thought and attention to in the six years that I was one of the harbour commissioners of the port of Montreal. It is a very difficult problem, as the hon. member has stated. At the first opportune time, I certainly will take it up with the Lloyds people, because I do not know of any route that is safer, either by night or day, than the St. Lawrence ship channel from Montreal to the sea. It is thoroughly well buoyed and splendidly lighted, and the depth of the channel is now 30 feet to the sea, and in some parts 35 feet.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And the curves have been reduced?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes. I quite agree with the hon. member that we should have lower rates of insurance, and I shall look into the matter. I do not say that I shall accomplish it, but I will make the attempt to do so.

Mr. CANNON: Is the dredging work done by tender?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, the dredging of the St. Lawrence ship channel for many years has been done by the department's own dredges and its own staff, and that is still the policy.

Mr. PARENT: Where will the dredging be done next summer, at Montreal or Quebec?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The principal dredging will be done at cap à la Roche, and at St. Augustin bar, also in the north channel.

[Mr. Lemieux.]

Mr. CANNON: Does this item cover the dredging work in the St. Charles river?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am very happy to say that it does not. That work comes under the Public Works Department.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall this item carry? Carried.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does this item also cover the lighting of the ship canal?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Simply the dredging.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: What was the amount expended last year for dredging?

The CHAIRMAN: I beg to call the hon. member's attention to the fact that the item on dredging has been carried. If hon. gentlemen wish to ask questions, they must not wait until after the item has been declared carried.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I believe I rose before the item was carried.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: If the Chairman will allow me, I will give my hon. friend the information. Last year the amount expended was $672,000.

To provide for construction and completion of dredging plant for St. Lawrence River from Montreal to Father Point, $163,900.

Mr. CANNON: Would the minister explain the difference between the item we have just voted for the St. Lawrence River ship channel and the present item for dredging plant?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I will be very glad to give the hon. member the information he seeks. The item we have just passed is for dredging the St. Lawrence ship channel. The vote we are now asking is for the maintenance of the Sorel shipyard.

Mr. CANNON: What is included in the item we voted for dredging the St. Lawrence? Does it include salaries paid to the employees, coal burned, and the expenses of the work itself?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, quite so.

Mr. CANNON: Where is the dredging plant to be built? Will it be purchased in England, or built in Canada, and if so, where?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The vote that the Committee is considering at the present time is for the maintenance of the shipyard at Sorel. The amount appropriated for maintenance is $53,900, for improvement of the shipyard, $10,000; and there is also an amount to complete a dredge that the Canadian Vickers Company are building that will amount to $100,000, making a grand total of $163,900.

Mr. CANNON: I notice that the item reads "for construction and completion."

Mr. BALLANTYNE: "Of dredging plant."

Mr. CANNON: Yes. Completion implies that the work is already started.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The word "completion" refers to the dredge that the Canadian Vickers Company have under construction at the present time for the department, and which is not finished.

Mr. CANNON: Was any money voted last year for the construction of this dredge?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: And the amount was not sufficient?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

Mr. CANNON. How much was spent?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It appears that there was $150,000 voted for this dredge last year, but the work was suspended on account of the war, owing to the yard being fully occupied in building vessels more urgently required. Therefore, we are asking now for a revote of $100,000.

Mr. CANNON: A revote? I understand that Parliament has already voted $150,000 for the construction of this dredge. Tenders were called for, I suppose?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: And the contract awarded to the Canadian Vickers?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: And the work was suspended. If I understood the minister rightly, this is not new money that we are voting. We are voting an old item for the second time?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: According to the rules of Parliament, when money is voted and is not expended for the purpose it was voted for, it is necessary to come before Parliament again for a vote.

Mr. CANNON: What I want to know is whether that $150,000 has been spent?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No, it has not.

Mr. PEDLOW: How much of that money has been spent on the dredge? Was a contract executed when the dredge was ordered, and has the price been changed since that time?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Tenders were called for by my predecessor, and the contract was awarded on the 27th October, 1914. The total amount of the contract price was $833,300. There was voted in 1915-16 $500,000; in 1916-17, $325,000; in 1917-18, $150,000, and we are asking this year for $100,000.

Mr. CANNON: The minister explained at first that the contract had been awarded but that the work had been suspended on account of the war?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: In view of the information which the minister has just given us, how can the work have been suspended when nearly $600,000 of public money has been expended on this dredge? What was the money expended for?

Mr. BUTTS: Perhaps the hon. gentleman is afraid that this money is not going to be spent in his province.

Mr. BALANTYNE: There has been a certain amount of work done on this dredge, otherwise the votes would not have been passed at each session of Parliament. It is a fact, however, that the work has been suspended. I am told this was in the summer of 1915.

Mr. EULER: Is the amount asked for intended for permanent work?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The vote we are now asking hon. gentlemen to pass is for permanent work. If it is continued until it is finally completed we will require this vote of $100,000, but it is for permanent work on a new dredge.

Mr. EULER: The Department of Public Works has decided not to make any expenditures in a capital way unless they are absolutely necessary, because of war conditions. Is not the same policy to be adopted by the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. member will understand that this contract was awarded to the Vickers Company in 1914. It is a valid contract, and it is obligatory on the part of the Government to carry it out. By agreement between the Vickers Company and the Government, the work has been temporarily set aside since the summer of 1915, but it is quite probable that during the coming summer, and probably before then, the Vickers Company may be in a position to complete the dredge.

They cannot do so unless we secure this vote of $100,000.

Mr. EULER: Then this is a case of a contract awarded before the war began?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: The contract was awarded in October, 1914, which was after the war had broken out.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cannon) is quite correct. The war broke out, as we all unfortunately know, in August, 1914, and the contract was made in October of that year.

Mr. PEDLOW: Including the vote asked for in these estimates, the total amount required to pay for this contract is over $1,000,000. Is that on account of the enhanced value of material entering into construction, or do you intend to pay more than the contract price for the dredge, or does any part of the sum form a revote?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have endeavoured to make it clear that my predecessor, in October, 1914, after calling for public tenders, awarded the contract for the building of this new dredge to the Vickers Company of Montreal. There have been sums of money spent on the erection of this dredge from time to time since then, but the work has been set aside, and I am now asking for a vote of $100,000 to complete the dredge.

Mr. JOS. READ: Then the dredge has been partly built and you are going on with the work?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. PEDLOW: Then, including the amount asked for in this estimate, Parliament will have voted for this work over one million dollars?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes, but that amount has not been spent.

Mr. CANNON: As regards the balance of the item, where is the money to be spent, and in what manner?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The maintenance of the shipyard at Sorel will amount to $53,900, and improvements on the shipyard at Sorel $10,000.

Mr. VERVILLE: It has been rumoured for some time that the shipyard at Sorel was to be closed. Is there any foundation for this rumour?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: As far as I know it is the intention of the Government to continue the Sorel shipyards, but not on as large a scale as in the past.

[Mr. Ballantyne.]

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am very glad that my hon. friend has declared himself in favour of awarding all contracts by tender as far as possible, and as much as possible, to private firms. I want to call 10 p.m. my hon. friend's attention to a case which will possibly come under his notice. I understand that the department has been using for possibly twenty-five or thirty years the McCarthy estate at Sorel, which would now like to either sell the property to the department or have it retroceded to the estate. I would like to know from my hon. friend what he intends to do in the matter. I understand that a petition of right has issued in the case.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Government has expropriated the McCarthy property and the matter is now in the hands of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What offer has been made by the department to the McCarthy estate?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am not personally aware that any offer has been made. Possibly my predecessor may have made one, but if so, I have no record of it here, I am sorry to say.

Mr. McCREA: We do not yet appear to have obtained all the information that we are entitled to on this item as yet. If I understand the matter aright, a contract was let in 1914 for the building of a dredge, the contract price being $833,000. We are told that in one year $500,000 was voted, the next year $325,000, last year $150,000, and this year we are asked to vote $150,000. Were all those amounts actually paid, or was any part of them paid? In other words, when the dredge is completed and paid for, is it going to cost the country $833,000 or more than that?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: When the dredge is finally completed, the contract price will be $833,700. All of the moneys that have been voted in the various years have not been spent.

Amount required for converting six ship channel tugs for salt water service, $50,000.

Mr. CANNON: Where are those tugs at the present time?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: At the present time they are at Sorel, and as there is a great demand for tugs to be converted into seagoing ships, and as the British Government are liable to ask for them at any time, the department is asking for this appropriation to convert those six channel tugs for salt water service. At the present time, they are equipped only for fresh water service.

Mr. CANNON: Are those tugs to be replaced after they are sent down for salt water service ?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: It is not the intention of the department to replace those tugs providing they are used for salt water service.

Mr. CANNON: If those tugs are not to be replaced, their usefulness must surely not be very great.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I assure the hon. member their usefulness is just as great as it has ever been, but owing to the curtailment of the expenditure on the St. Lawrence ship channel, as the hon. member will have noted by the appropriation, we are not requiring for dredging work on the St. Lawrence ship channel as many dredges as we formerly did. We have, therefore, those six tugs that are idle, and we think it is good policy to have them converted for service on salt water.

Mr. J. READ: The object of the minister is to put condensers in them?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Lighthouse and coast service—agencies, rents and contingencies, $178,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the minister explain the increase?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The increase is due principally to salaries. As hon. gentlemen know, the cost of living has advanced so very much, and we find it necessary to increase the salaries.

Mr. CANNON: Who is the agent at Quebec at the present time?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Mr. Béland.

Mr. CANNON: Is his salary to be increased, and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Mr. Béland's salary is to be increased $100. At the present time he is receiving $3,100. If he gets this increase of $100, he will reach the maximum salary of $3,200.

Salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $485,000.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Will the lightkeepers come under the provisions of the new Civil Service Act with regard to the Outside Service?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: I hope the minister will extend to the lightkeepers the policy which he has just enunciated with regard to marine agents and employees in the marine agencies. I believe there is no class of public servants who are so much underpaid as the lightkeepers. They are faithful servants, their duties are very important, they are subject to many hardships, and I believe that since 1870 they have not received an increase of salary. In fact many of them have to-day a smaller salary than their predecessors had previous to 1870. The cost of living has increased, especially during the last few years. Their work is harder than it was. The season of work has been extended; in fact, I believe this winter they had to work until the 23rd of January. Many of them have to employ help. I know the case of one lightkeeper who has a salary of $1,400. That seems to be a good salary, but the regulations of the department compel him to employ two servants whom he has to pay and feed, and in the end those men are much better off than he is. I consider that the salaries of the lightkeepers ought to be increased before the provisions of the new Act come into force.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON: I wish to support what the hon. gentleman has just said with regard to the salaries of lighthouse keepers, and I would urge the minister to apply the increase also to the lighthouse keepers on the upper lakes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am glad to hear the minister say that the lighthouse keepers will come under the Civil Service Commission in future. I would suggest, however, that there are cases where the Civil Service Commission might take into consideration special circumstances. I would like to cite one or two cases. In the gulf of the St. Lawrence there is a place called Bird's Rock, one of the Magdalen islands, a celebrated place, and a very interesting spot to visit. There is another place called Bryon island, which was the first land sighted by Jacques Cartier when he came to Canada. There are lighthouses on both these islands. Bird's rock is but a rock, but Bryon island is an island. The lighthouse keeper who is appointed at any of these places goes into exile practically for life, except that after a certain number of years he applies for superannuation, which is granted to him; but speaking generally, they take their families with them and settle there for life. I know the lighthouse keeper at Bird's rock. He took his family with him to the Rock, and there is a sad story connected with that lighthouse, as the minister knows. In a case of that kind, where the lighthouse keeper's son has grown up to the business, has learnt telegraphy and flag signalling and all the other work connected with keeping the lighthouse, it seems to me the department should recommend to the Civil Service Commission, other things being equal, that the eldest son should succeed his father. I also know the lighthouse keeper on Bryon island. He has been exiled there now for fifteen years. There was a new lighthouse built at that time at the request of the navigators and of the steamship companies, and this man was appointed at my suggestion. His name is Procul Chevrier. He is an excellent and faithful servant of His Majesty, and has kept the lighthouse admirably. Now that he is full of years he resigns, and it is his desire that his eldest son should succeed him. The son has been brought up to the work of the lighthouse in that isolated spot in the gulf of the St. Lawrence, and I would urge the minister to recommend the Civil Service Commission, other things being equal, to give this man's son the preference in appointing a new lighthouse keeper there. It seems to me that in special circumstances such as these the department might well intervene and make a recommendation to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GAUVREAU: I have much pleasure in joining my voice with that of my hon. friend from Kamouraska on behalf of the lighthouse keepers. The minister perhaps may answer that the lighthouse keepers are in a certain classification. Quite so, but we are asking him for a revision of that classification. The cost of living has gone up so high in the last few years that I think the time has come when the classification should certainly be revised. I know it might be a hard thing for some of the officials of the department to start on the job, but I think the minister for his own satisfaction should put the men who have worked so hard in the interests of navigation on a proper salary basis in order that justice may be done. I would also speak on behalf of the light ship keepers, who, I think, are not classified. I think the minister has before him at the present time a petition for an increase in the amount granted the lightship keeper for his season's work. I have heard—and I should like the minister to tell me frankly whether it is so or not—that instead of an increase this season the crew is going to be reduced. I sincerely trust that the minister will not entertain that idea. As my hon. friend from Kamouraska has said, the season of navigation in the gulf of St. Lawrence below Quebec has been extended, and if the minister knows the hardships the crews have to undergo I do not think he will reduce their number. The records of the department show, to the surprise of many people, that after the captain has paid his engineer and the crew and supplied the food for the six or seven months of navigation, there is only about $400 left for him and his family. I certainly do not consider that sufficient, and I trust the minister will take my suggestion for an increase to the lightship keepers into consideration, as well as revising the classification of the lighthouse keepers. I should also like to know whether it is the intention of the department to provide a bonus fund for retiring lighthouse keepers.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The suggestions of my hon. friends for a suitable increase in salary for the lighthouse keepers and the keepers of light ships fall on very sympathetic ears. I have under consideration at the present time, subject to the approval of this House, an increase of salary for the lighthouse keepers and for the keepers of lightships. I am sorry that the main estimates do not provide for this increase, but I intend to put in the supplementary estimates an item of $50,000 for this purpose, and I am very glad, indeed, to know that hon. gentlemen will approve the item when it comes up. There is no question but that the salaries of the lighthouse keepers are inadequate when we take into consideration the high cost of living. This came under my notice some little time ago, and I intended to express myself in this way even if hon. gentlemen had not brought the matter to my attention. In regard to a pension or superannuation for the lighthouse keepers, I would be very glad to give the matter consideration.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the hon. minister consider the suggestion I made?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I am sorry I overlooked that. Hon. gentlemen will understand that ministers have no longer any authority to make appointments, or even to make suggestions, but the deputy ministers have, and I am sure my deputy, who is present to-night, will see that the name of this man is placed before the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GAUVREAU. Is it well understood that there will be no reduction of the crews of ships?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I have no intention of reducing the crews of ships.

Administration of pilotage, and maintenance and repairs to Steamer Eureka, $56,300.

Mr. CANNON: I wish to call attention of the hon. minister to the rather exceptional situation of the apprenticed pilots in Montreal. I do not know if my information is accurate, and if it is not I wish the minister would correct me, but I understand that in Montreal no examinations have been held for the last nine years. Young men have been apprenticed for years. They are fully competent, but, on account of these examinations not being held, they cannot become pilots and cannot receive the salary of pilots, and these young men are in the position of either ceasing to study or work as pilots, or else practically starve. The number of full-fledged pilots in Montreal, I understand, varies between sixty and seventy. Some of them are very old and ought to be replaced, and I think it would be in the public interest if the minister would give orders for the holding of examinations immediately, so that the young men who would be successful in examinations could perform their duties as pilots during the course of the coming summer. I understand that last year the ships were so numerous on the St. Lawrence river between Montreal and the lower St. Lawrence that the number of pilots was not sufficient to take the ships from Montreal to Quebec, and that men who were not competent, who had not the proper knowledge of the channel or of the river, were put in charge. All this information, as I say, has been given to me from reliable sources, and if my information is not accurate, I wish to be corrected by the minister. I would be very glad if the minister would give us a declaration as to whether or not examinations will be held this year, so as to improve the lot of these young apprentices in Montreal.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The examinations of apprenticed pilots do not take place unless there is a vacancy on the permanent staff of pilots, commonly known as branch pilots, and while it may be regrettable, as far as the young and enthusiastic apprentices are concerned, that the branch pilots live to too old an age, or live to an age that appears old and are still able to perform their duties in an efficient way, I can quite appreciate their position. I will admit there are a number of apprenticed pilots in Montreal waiting to be examined, and to pass their examinations for promotion to branch pilots. The remainder of the statement of the hon. gentleman in regard to inexperienced pilots being put on the route, is, I am sorry to say, inaccurate. No one but thoroughly experienced branch pilots are allowed to take charge of any ships, and there was certainly a sufficient number of qualified licensed pilots to take charge of all the ships that navigated the St. Lawrence from Montreal to Quebec last year.

Mr. Du TREMBLAY: Is there a sufficient number now?

Mr. CANNON: What is the number of branch pilots operating between Montreal and Quebec??

Mr. BALLANTYNE: About 50. I can give you the names.

Mr. CANNON: I do not want the names. Is there any regulation as to the number of pilots that should be on the list? Is there a maximum fixed?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Fifty licensed branch pilots are considered a sufficient number to take care of the pilotage system.

Mr. CANNON: According to the law, would the minister have authority to increase the number, if he wished to do so?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Oh, yes, I have the necessary authority.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: I want to draw the attention of the minister to a fact connected with some of these old men who are in positions similar to the position of the pilots of Montreal. A number of men who have been doing this work do not want the young men to come up at all, and absolutely refuse to teach them the trade, and if there are young men in connection with the Montreal pilotage who are old enough and competent enough to obtain a license, I do not see why there should be any limitation. How are they limited? Is it by regulation of the pilot commission or by the pilots themselves, or is there a statutory limit?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Montreal pilotage system is under the direct control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and there is a departmental regulation limiting the number of pilots to fifty, but if I found that more pilots were required than that number I certainly would see that the examination of the apprenticed pilots took place, and any vacancies that occurred would be promptly filled. The hon. member who has asked the question being a sea-faring man will understand that there is a very rigid five-year course for the apprenticed pilots, and the apprenticed pilots are taking that course right along. A few of them have completed the term of their apprenticeship, and are simply waiting to be examined. There is no use holding the examination of the apprentice pilots unless vacancies occur.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: There is a sufficient number?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Quite sufficient.

Mr. PARENT: Following the investigation that took place at Halifax after the disaster that happened there, I remember seeing in the papers that the scope of the investigation would be extended, so that it would cover the pilotage authority in Quebec and the pilotage authority in Montreal. I am not sure if this investigation has been held in the different places. I would like to find out whether it is the intention of the department to have a change in the administration of the pilotage authority in Quebec?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The pilotage systems at Montreal and Quebec are already under the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. A commission was appointed by my predecessor some years ago and an investigation was held into the pilotage systems of both Montreal and Quebec. All the recommendations, except in a few minor cases, were put into effect by my predecessor, Hon. Mr. Hazen. Since I have been appointed minister a commission has been appointed, composed of Mr. Robb, secretary of the shipping federation of Montreal, Captain Bales, who was port warden, and Captain Harrison, of the Furness-Withy Company, Halifax; and they held a most thorough and rigid investigation into the pilotage system of the port of Halifax. The report has been completed and I hope to lay it on the table of the House shortly. The recommendation that this commission made was that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should abolish the pilotage commission of the port of Halifax, and should take the pilotage system under his control in the same way that the pilotage systems of Montreal and Quebec have been taken under the control of the minister. The necessary authority has been taken, the pilotage system of the port of Halifax is now under my control as minister, and Captain Lindsay has been appointed superintendent of pilots. Captain Lindsay is a sea-faring man holding a master mariner's certificate and has been connected with the Department of Marine and Fisheries for some years. The commission have also visited and looked into the pilotage systems of Sydney, Louisburg, St. John, and the Miramichi. They have not as yet rendered their report, but no doubt they will do so in due course. They will then proceed to the Pacific coast and investigate the pilotage systems of Victoria, Vancouver, New Westminster and Nanaimo. I hope that when the commission have finished their investigation of these important sea ports the department will be able to put the pilotage system on a much more satisfactory basis than prevails at the present time under various local pilotage commissions.

[Mr. Ballantyne.]

Mr. CANNON: Were the Halifax pilots under the authority or supervision of the minister?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: In an indirect way, but the local pilotage commission exercised very great authority. Now that the local pilotage system has been abolished, as minister I am assuming the responsibility and control of the pilotage system there.

Mr. CANNON: Since the minister has taken control, have any measures been taken against the pilots who were held responsible for the terrible disaster which occurred in the harbour at Halifax?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Since the terrible Halifax catastrophe a court of inquiry was instituted by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. That court rendered its judgment, and I understand that all those who were held by this court of inquiry to be in any way blameable for the catastrophe are being dealt with at the present time before the court.

Mr. CANNON: I read in the papers at the time the investigation was held that some people thought that the calamity might have been avoided if the pilot on the Mont Blanc had been able to speak with the crew on board the ship. I understand that the ship is a French ship, that the crew was French, that the pilot was English, that he could not speak any other language than English, and that there was therefore absolutely no possibility of communication between the captain and pilot of the ship as to the direction of the ship. I do not know if these are the facts, but if they are I might suggest that the minister send down to Halifax some French-speaking pilots who would take charge of French ships, in the hope that catastrophies like that might be avoided in the future.

Mr. BUTTS: I come from a sea-faring country, and I know a little bit about it. If you send down from the St. Lawrence river French-speaking pilots to navigate the waters of Nova Scotia or the gulf of St. Lawrence, or any other place along the Nova Scotia coast, it would be suicidal—it would be out of the question altogether. You men from the St. Lawrence do not know anything about Atlantic navigation; you do not know anything about the game of seamanship. I am not saying this in a carping or critical spirit, but simply by way of suggestion, but I wish that you would withhold your hand from anything affecting Sydney or its pilotage system until you can get men accustomed to conditions in Sydney harbour to investigate the system that has prevailed there. Perhaps I am wrong in criticising. You may have used your very best judgment, but you have never steered a boat against a sou' west wind in Halifax harbour like I have done. I know some little thing about navigation in Sydney harbour and the Cape Breton coast, and I am giving it to you now in the very best spirit and asking you to take the advice of some of the Cape Breton mariners as to how they would navigate that coast before you lay sacriligious hands upon the pilotage system there.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I can assure the hon. member (Mr. Butts) that every consideration will be given to the suggestion which he has made. One who has had the experience that he has informed us he has had, is at all times worth listening to, and everything that he has stated will be given very careful consideration. In answer to the suggestion of the hon. member (Mr. Cannon) about French pilots at Halifax, I am not in a position to know whether there are any there or not. But we all know, especially we of the English-speaking race, that the French people speak one language equally as well as the other, and if there are any qualified French Canadian pilots down there, and I can find them, I certainly shall see that they are sent.

Maintenance and repairs to wharves, $10,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where are these repairs to be made to wharves, because I see on another page of the estimates, under the heading of "Public Works Chargeable to Income," a great many appropriations made for different wharves and breakwaters, and repairs to wharves and breakwaters, in the different provinces.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The vote that we are asking hon. members to approve of is for small repairs that are required from time to time for the maintenance of public wharves that are under the control of the Department of Marine. These small repairs are generally around $50 or so.

To provide for breaking ice in Thunder Bay and Lake Superior and other points deemed advisable for the good of navigation, $40,000.

Mr. POWER: Does this item cover the breaking of ice in the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: No.

Mr. POWER: What are the "other points deemed advisable for the good of navigation?"

Mr. BALLANTYNE: This vote is asked particularly for Thunder bay. There is an area of 27 miles of ice which has to be broken up every spring and that will explain why the vote is as large as $40,000. If there are any other nearby points that require the services of an icebreaker this vote will apply to them. That is what we mean by "other points"—points adjacent or close to Thunder bay.

Mr. CAHILL: Who does the ice breaking?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The Canadian Towing and Wrecking Company.

To provide for telephones at different points throughout the Dominion in connection with aids to navigation, $500.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is that in connection with the ship channel? I understand there was a telephone system between Montreal, Quebec, and, perhaps, points lower down the St. Lawrence.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: This vote is asked in case there may be some isolated station where we would need to install a telephone. As a matter of fact, we have never spent any money during the last three years under this vote, but it is just by way of precaution that we are asking that the amount be voted.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If, without any additional cost, the department could at isolated points like the Magdalen islands, allow the public to connect with the main line, would the department object to that? I have received many letters of late from the islanders, and as they have not telegraphic communication, and as they have to travel quite a distance, sometimes at considerable loss of time and sometimes at considerable danger crossing the lagoons on the islands, they say that if they had the privilege of a telephone line it would give them more comfort in carrying on their business, and would be of more convenience for the community at large.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: The operation of telephone lines belongs to the Department of Public Works, and when the estimates of that department are up I am sure that the minister (Mr. Carvell) will give the matter consideration if the hon. member will bring it to his attention.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is this particular telephone system for?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: For isolated lighthouses.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That fits in exactly with the condition of things on the Magdalen islands. The Marine Department has a station on each of these islands, and it is true that there is a telephone line on the Magdalen islands. I am not sure whether it is controlled by the Public Works or the Marine Department.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: By the Public Works.

Meteorological Service, including Magnetic Observatory, grants of $500 each to Kingston and Montreal Observatories; also allowance to L. F. Gorman, Observer at Ottawa.

Mr. POWER: Is the Quebec Observatory included in this item?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Yes.

Mr. POWER: What is the amount expended on the Quebec observatory in a year, including the salary of the keeper?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: Mr. Arthur Smith is the man employed there. He gets a salary of $1,200, and we propose to advance his salary to $1,300.

Mr. CANNON: How many observatories are there in Canada?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: There are 69 stations.

Mr. CANNON: What is the nature of the work done by these officers?—because $200,000 is a rather considerable amount to be spent for this branch of the service?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I do not find any details in my dossier, but the duties of these officers are to find out the weather conditions and to communicate them to the prominent centres throughout the country.

Mr. CANNON: I suppose this information is given without any guarantee?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: That is quite true.

Amount required to pay compassionate allowances to the widows, or fathers, or mothers, or dependents of the Captain and members of the crew of the C. G. S. Simcoe who lost their lives when that vessel foundered in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, 7th December, 1917, $61,500.

Mr. POWER: Will the minister explain upon what basis these allowances are made up? I do not want the minister to say $100 to so-and-so and so-and-so, but on what principle are these allowances based?

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We will deal with the officers first. There were 11 officers who lost their lives, and their dependents are awarded $2,000 each, making a total of $22,000. Then we come to the chief petty officers, 13 in number. We are allowing their dependents $1,500 each, making a total of $19,500. We are allowing the dependents of the balance of the crew, 20 in number, the sum of $1,000 each, making a total of $20,000, or a grand total of $61,500.

Mr. POWER: The reason I asked this question was that I would like to be informed whether there is in the department any fixed rule with regard to compensation for injuries, or compensation to the relatives of those who have lost their lives while in the service of the department.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: We have no such provision in the department, and that is the reason we are asking the committee to vote this amount now.

Mr. COPP: I notice that this item is a provision made for "compassionate allowances to the widows, or fathers, or mothers, or dependents of the Captain and members of the crew of the C.G.S. Simcoe." I understood the hon. minister to say that this matter has been adjusted by allowing $2,000 to the dependents of the first officers, $1,500 to those of the second officers, and smaller amounts to the dependents of the seamen. I do not know what the policy of the department is, but I cannot see any particular reason why the dependents of an officer who has been drowned in a catastrophe such as this should be entitled to any more compensation than the dependents of an ordinary seaman in the same vessel who suffers the same fate. It does seem to me that is an absolutely arbritary system of making compassionate allowances. Here is an officer who may be better off financially, and may not have as many dependents to care for, and yet because he happens to occupy a little higher position than one of his men, who has worked as hard, and suffered the same fate, he receives much greater consideration. It does seem to me that the principle is wrong whereby larger compassionate allowances are given to the dependents of officers than to the dependents of the petty officers or men.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I admit that it is an arbitrary way of fixing the amount of compassionate allowance to the dependents of these unfortunate officers and men, but the only explanation I can give is that it is the usual one, and based doubtless on the difference in the standard of living. We all know that when a person receives a greater salary they usually maintain a higher standard of living, and hon. gentlemen will quite understand that we could not make the same grant to dependents of the crew as to the dependents of the officers. We are simply following the same policy that is followed in the army, where the dependents of a colonel who is killed receive a greater pension than is awarded to the dependents of officers of lower rank, or private soldiers. There is a great deal of merit in what the hon. member has stated, but it is simply a question of what rank was occupied. I cannot offer the hon. gentleman any other reason for the difference than that.

Mr. COPP: Perhaps nothing I can say will deter the minister from carrying out what I might term the "aristocratic" policy that has been followed by other governments as well as this, but I desire to place myself on record in a most emphatic way against such a policy as being absolutely wrong in principle. I am democratic enough to realize that a man who is out in a storm and suffers death has done just as noble and creditable service for his country as the officers or person of higher rank who were victims on the same occasion.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. COPP: There is one other matter to which I wish to draw the attention of the minister.

The CHAIRMAN: There can be no further debate at this stage unless the minister withdraws his motion.

Mr. LEMIEUX: There is no object in railroading matters. The gentlemen on this side have shown no disposition to obstruct.

Mr. BALLANTYNE: I appreciate very much the kind assistance of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I will withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. COPP: The matter to which I wish to draw the minister's attention has reference to an item of $10,000, which was passed the other night, for the repairing and carrying of fishways into rivers. I have received a letter from one of my constituents stating that on the Petitcodiac river a fishway is required near river Glade, and the writer expresses his sentiments very strongly. He states that the fishway has gone down and it should be repaired in the interest of fishing operations there. I would ask the minister if he would make inquiries from whatever officer he has in that locality, with a view to having the fishway in question restored.

11 p.m.

Progress reported.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Sifton the House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

Friday, April 5, 1918.

The House met at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 33, respecting Brazeau Collieries, Limited.—Mr. Buchanan.

Bill No. 34, respecting The Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Morphy.

Bill No. 35, respecting The Ottawa Gas Company.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 36, respecting Ottawa and Montreal Transmission Company, Limited.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 37, respecting The Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Morphy.

THE WAR.

REGULATIONS FOR UTILIZING THE HUMAN ENERGY OF CANADA TO BEST ADVANTAGE—ORDER IN COUNCIL.

On Motions being called:

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): I desire to bring to the attention of hon. members two Orders in Council which received the assent of His Excellency the Governor General yesterday, and both of which are of so important a character that they should be communicated directly to the House. The first is:

At the Government House at Ottawa,
Thursday the 4th day of April, 1918.
Present:

His Excellency

The Governor General in Council:

Whereas it is necessary to enact such regulations as will utilize to the best advantage the human energy of Canada for purposes essential to the prosecution of the present war;

And whereas the need of men of military age to provide reinforcements for the Canadian Expeditionary Force, and the equally urgent need for labour to assist in the production of food and of other articles essential for war purposes, necessitate special provisions to the end that all persons domiciled in Canada shall, in the absence of reasonable cause to the contrary, engage in useful occupations under the regulations hereinafter set forth;

And whereas the Minister of Agriculture is impressed with the necessity of enacting forthwith the regulations hereinafter set forth, which in his opinion will greatly assist in rendering available for the purpose of production labour which otherwise might not be secured;

And whereas the Minister of Militia and Defence also fully concurs in the enactment of such regulations;

And whereas these regulations are not intended to affect any right of members of organized labour associations to discontinue their work in the employment in whch they have been engaged when such discontinuance is occasioned by differences actually arising between the employer and the employed. The purpose is to prevent persons capable of useful work from remaining in idleness at a time when the country most urgently requires the service of all human energy available.

His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Right Honourable the Prime Minister and under the powers vested in His Excellency in Council under the War Measures Act, 1914, and under all other powers His Excellency in Council thereunto enabling, is pleased to make the following regulations and the same are hereby made and enacted accordingly:

REGULATIONS.

1. Every male person residing in the Dominion of Canada shall be regularly engaged in some useful occupation.

2. In any proceeding hereunder it shall be a defence that the person is,

(a) Under sixteen years or over sixty years of age.

(b) A bona fide student proceeding with his training for some useful occupation.

(c) A bona fide student in actual attendance at some recognized educational institution.

(d) Usually employed in some useful occupation and temporarily unemployed owing to differences with his employer common to similar employees with the same employer.

(e) Physically unable to comply with the provisions of the law as herein enacted.

(f) Unable to obtain within reasonable distance any kind of employment which he is physically able to perform at current wages for similar employment.

3. Any person violating the provisions hereof shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable on summary conviction before a Magistrate to a penalty not exceeding One Hundred dollars and costs, and, in default of payment, to imprisonment with hard labour for a period not exceeding six months in any common jail, or in any institution or on any farm owned by a municipality or province and declared by by-law or Order in Council respectively to be a public institution or farm for the purposes of this law, which said institution or farm for the purpose of this law shall be a common jail.

4. Where the proceedings in any case in which a fine is imposed under the authority hereof are instituted at the instance of any muinicipality or by any officer of a municipality, the fine shall be paid to the treasurer of such municipality; and where such proceedings are instituted at the instance of or by any provincial officer, such fines shall be paid to the provincial treasurer; and where such proceedings are instituted within a municipality by any other person, the fine shall be paid in equal portions to the treasurer of the municipality and the treasurer of the province; and where the place in which such proceedings are instituted is not within the boundaries of any municipality, the fine shall be paid to the provincial treasurer; and where the proceedings are outside the boundaries of any province, the fine shall be paid to the Receiver General of Canada.

5. Useful occupation and reasonable distance shall be questions of fact to be decided by the magistrate.

6. The magistrate may hear and consider other defences than those mentioned in section two.

7. "Magistrate", shall include Justice of the Peace, and Police Magistrate appointed by Provincial or Dominion authority.

[Sir Robert Borden.]

MILITARY SERVICE ACT, 1917.

ORDER IN COUNCIL PROVIDING FOR ITS ENFORCEMENT CONSEQUENT ON DISTURBANCES IN QUEBEC CITY.

Rt. Hon. Sir ROBERT L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): The other Order in Council which I desire to communicate to the House has relation to the recent unfortunate disturbances in the city of Quebec. It reads:

At the Government House at Ottawa.

Thursday the 4th day of April, 1918.

Present:

His Excellency

The Governor General in Council.

Whereas on the 28th day of March last the opposition of a large number of the population of the City of Quebec to the enforcement of the Military Service Act, 1917, and the regulations thereunder, broke out in open violence and serious riots ensued on that day and on subsequent days in which the rioters destroyed the office of the deputy registrar appointed for the District of Quebec under the said Act, and moreover caused great damage to other property, and threatened further damage, and it became necessary for the restoration of order, the protection of property and the preservation of the King's peace that these riots should be suppressed by military authority;

And whereas at common law it is the duty of a military officer with the troops under his command to interefere, when such interference is necessary, to put down riot, insurrection or civil disturbance;

And whereas it is provided by the Militia Act that the active militia of Canada may be called out on active service in aid of the civil power upon requisition of the civil authorities, and the King's regulations and Orders for the Militia contain certain directions for regulating the exercise of command and disposition of the troops upon such occasions;

And whereas notwithstanding that it was necessary as aforesaid for the preservation of the peace and to repress rioting that resort should be had to military force the civil authorities of Quebec made no requisition for the calling out of the Militia and the Officer Commanding therefore, acting manifestly in the general interest and for the protection of the public, and by direction of the Minister of Militia and Defence assumed the responsibility to command and direct the operations of the troops for the protection of life and property and the restoration of the peace;

And whereas it is expedient that the legality of such intervention, and of the proceedings of the military authorities consequent thereon, should be declared and affirmed, as it is hereby intended to be, and that provision should be made for such further action by military force as may be necessary for the preservation of law and order in the existing circumstances, or in similar cases in the future if they should unfortunately occur;

And whereas for the reasons aforesaid it is expedient for the peace, order and good government of Canada that the effect and operation of law should be given to the provisions herein contained;

Now therefore His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, by and with the advice of the King's Privy Council for Canada, in the execution of the powers conferred upon him by the War Measures Act, 1914, is pleased to provide, order and enact, and it is hereby provided, ordered and enacted as follows:—

1. If, in the opinion of the General Officer or the Officer Commanding the Military District in which any riot, insurrection or civil disturbance takes place, the circumstances be such as to demand or justify the intervention of the military power, it shall be competent to and within the authority of the General Officer or the Officer Commanding the said military district to issue orders for such intervention to the troops on service or on active service under his command, and with such troops to use such force as he may determine to be reasonably necessary to quell and suppress such riot, insurrection or civil disturbance and to restore the peace, whether or not any requisition be made upon or order given to such Officer or to any military authority by any civil magistrate or civil authority; and the provisions of this section shall extend to and authorize and make lawful the intervention operations and proceedings of the Officer Commanding the troops in Quebec and the officers and troops under his command in the circumstances herein recited to quell and suppress the riots and disturbances at the City of Quebec on and subsequent to the 28th day of March last and to restore peace and order there.

2. In the case of any riot, insurrection or civil disturbance which takes place while the Military Service Act, 1917, is in operation, if the General Officer or the Officer Commanding any military district of Canada, order any troops on service, or on active service under his command, to be called out for the maintenance of public order, or for preventing obstruction to the due enforcement of the Military Service Act, 1917, and the regulations thereunder, the Governor in Council, may, within the affected area which he shall by order designate, supersede, or supersede to such extent as he may specify, until his further order, the jurisdiction and powers of the civil courts, and declare that within the said area the orders of the General Officer or of the Officer Commanding the troops shall in all respects be obeyed by the civil population, and that offenders against the law, or persons disobedient to such military orders, shall be tried and punished by courts-martial constituted in the manner hereinafter provided; and consequent upon any such order of the Governor in Council the provisions of the two next following paragraphs shall, until his further order, have effect:—

(a) All persons within the said area shall be subject to military law, and the civil tribunals shall continue to exercise within or in respect of the aforesaid area only such powers and jurisdiction as shall not have been superseded or suspended by the Governor in Council; and the General Officer or the Officer Commanding the troops may constitute courts-martial for the purpose of trying any person who is charged with any offense against the law, or with disobedience to any military order, within the said area;

(b) The constitution, powers and procedure of any court-martial so constituted as aforesaid shall be the same as the constitution, powers and procedure of either a general or of a field general court-martial; and any such court-martial shall have the power, in addition to the ordinary powers possessed by a court so constituted, to impose any sentence which might be imposed in a like case by any civil court of the Province; provided that a sentence imposed by any such court-martial shall not be executed until affirmed by the Governor in Council.

3. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Habeas Corpus Act, or in any other law or statute, and notwithstanding any right or remedy of habeas corpus or proceeding by way of habeas corpus, all persons in military custody within any area which shall have been designated as aforesaid, and all persons who may be captured, arrested or taken into military custody whether within or not within any such area during or in consequence of any riot or insurrection, shall be held, detained and remain in such custody without bail, inquiry or mainprise until released by direction of the Minister of Militia and Defence or delivered by his order to the civil authorities.

4. Any male person who takes part in any riot, insurrection or civil disturbance, incited, instigated or caused by way of opposition to the enforcement of the Military Service Act, 1917, or the regulations thereunder, shall if declared or found guilty of so doing by sentence of a court-martial or of a competent civil court, be deemed to have been called out for military service under the said Act, whether or not he be within any class of persons which has been called out for military service by proclamation, or within any class of persons to which the said Act or regulations apply, or within any of the exceptions of the schedule to the said Act; and he shall by reason of such offence forfeit any exemption or claim to exemption to which he would otherwise be entitled, and be liable forthwith to military service in all respects as if finally selected therefor and required to report for duty under the provisions of the said Act and regulations; provided that if any male person be captured, arrested or taken by military authority during the continuance of any such riot, insurrection or civil disturbance, while taking part or having taken part therein or while being present thereat to encourage, or assist the rioters, he shall be liable forthwith to such military service as aforesaid without any further or other warrant or proceeding than the certificate of an officer in command of the body of militia effecting the capture, arrest or taking that he was so captured, arrested or taken in the circumstances aforesaid.

5. Any male person who

(a) Wilfully prevents, impedes or obstructs, or attempts to prevent, impede or obstruct, or engages or takes any part in any riot, insurrection or civil disturbance, or breach of the King's peace against the enforcement or carrying out of the Military Service Act, 1917, or any of the provisions of the said Act, or any regulation thereunder; or

(b) Wilfully with violence, or attempted violence or otherwise obstructs, assaults, intimidates or interferes with, or attempts to obstruct, assault, intimidate or interfere with any officer or person, or the property or premises occupied by any officer or person charged with the execution of any duty under the Military Service Act, 1917, or any regulation thereunder; or

(c) Incites, counsels, encourages, or assists any person to disobey or to refrain from executing any lawful order or direction made under or in pursuance of the said Act or any regulation thereunder; shall upon conviction of any such offence, in addition to any other penalty therefor by law provided, thereby ipso facto become liable to military service under the said Military Service Act to the extent and in the manner provided in the fourth section of these regulations and as if finally selected for military service and required to report for duty under the provisions of the Military Service Act, 1917, and the regulations thereunder.

THE QUEBEC DISTURBANCES.

MOTION OF MR. J. A. CURRIE FOR LEAVE TO ADJOURN THE HOUSE TO DISCUSS.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to ask leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the rioting, agitation, disturbances and non-observance of the law in Quebec together with all the circumstances, conditions and causes near and remote having any bearing on or connection therewith.

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion is made under Rule 39, and I shall take the liberty of adding that fact to the motion. Under Rule 39, subsection 4, it is my duty to determine as to whether, in the first instance, a motion so proposed is in order. It does seem to me that in view of all the circumstances the motion of the hon. member is peculiarly within the meaning and scope of this rule and, in my judgment, it is in order. Having so ruled, my responsibility ends. There is a further question as to the propriety, or perhaps I had better say the desirability, of discussing a matter of such grave importance. That is for the House, and I shall submit the question to the House as to whether it is their wish that the hon. gentleman should proceed. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. gentleman have leave to move this motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: The rule says: those in support of the request of the hon. member will please rise.

And twenty-one members having risen, in their places.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member may proceed. Before the hon. member does so I had better state that under a motion of this character, which is submitted without notice, the rules are very clear that the discussion must be strictly relevant to the subject. The authorities are all agreed that discussion must be much more strictly confined to the subject than is the case with an ordinary substantive motion. The wording of the motion, as submitted by the hon. member, appears to indicate a desire on his part to widen the scope of the discussion. The rule is clear that only one matter can be discussed upon a motion of this character. That matter is the recent unfortunate disturbances in the city of Quebec, and the wording of the hon. member's resolution does not help to enable him to widen the field of discussion. I deem it my duty to direct the attention of hon. members to the rule in this respect, and I ask their assistance to see that the field of discussion is not unduly widened.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE: Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of diffidence that I have brought this motion forward. Every one is conscious—no one in this House more than I—that we have had serious disturbances in the city of Quebec, and in the province of Quebec generally. I have not brought the motion forward, as has been suggested, for the purpose of self advertisement in any manner, shape or form. I have not raised it for the purpose of stirring up any political trouble or faction; and as far as I am personally concerned, my treatment of this subject will be as mild as the tone of any discussion that has ever taken place in this House. But it must be noticeable to every person, it must be common knowledge to everyone, that if there is anything that this House should discuss, it is this very matter which I have brought before you to-day.

For nearly a year this question has been before the public. In undertaking to raise it here, great pressure was brought to bear upon me not to proceed with it to-day. I could have rightly brought this question before the House in two ways. I could have brought it up, as I am now doing, in the old-fashioned method of having a discussion on a public question without bringing on a vote. No vote of want of confidence is asked under this motion; all that is sought is a simple discussion. It is very important, indeed, that the House should discuss matters of this character relating to documents laid upon the Table by ministers of the Crown. Under the rules of the House, when a minister answers a question or makes a statement to the House, no discussion is allowed, and the only way in which a discussion can be obtained on this subject is under the present rule by moving the adjournment of the House to discuss a matter of grave urgency. There is another way by which discussion could be caused, and that is by moving a motion on going into Committee of Supply. Now we all know that the House has had very little opportunity since it has met this session to bring up any question on going into Committee of Supply. If this question were brought up on the motion to go into Committee of Supply, it would have had to be brought up as a want of confidence motion in the Government of the day. Now as I am one of the supporters of the Government of the day, and wholly in sympathy with the ideas and objects that the Union Government has placed before the people, and it would not look very well for me to raise this question through the medium of a motion of want of confidence. For that reason, I have had recourse to the present procedure, and there will be a free and open discussion of the whole question, and for such free and open discussion the whole country is waiting.

These are my reasons for having brought the matter forward in this manner. I hope to lay my statement of the case clearly before the House, and then the ministers of the Crown, as well as other members of the House, will have the opportunity of discussing it fully and freely. Now under other circumstances this question would not have been of very great importance, because every member who sits in this House, certainly all the old members, know that during the last session of the House there were frequent outbursts of rioting of this character in the province of Quebec. The matter was suppressed by the newspapers and nothing was said about it in this House, because during the last session every member felt under a great deal of restraint. We could not criticise anything openly and above board, for the simple reason that voluntary service was the method then in operation of securing men for the war, and if a man spoke out his mind here on any of the public questions at that time, it would have been said that he was injuring recruiting. In fact, on more than one occasion at that time matters were raised in the House which the public press declared were injurious to that cause. As a soldier, as one who has taken part in the war, as one whose whole heart is in this war—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh! Oh!

Mr. CURRIE: I have taken a little part in the war.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh! Oh!

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CURRIE: As one who has taken a little part in the war, and whose whole heart is in the successful prosecution of the war, I desire to see that our brave troops at the front are supported in every possible way. As I sat in the House last session there often occurred to me the words of Robert Louis Stevenson in one of his famous essays, where he said that the greatest lies are told in silence. I heard things said in this House, which, had they been uttered outside, and I had been free from any responsibility in connection with voluntary service, I would have denounced as untruths. But now the Military Service Act is in operation and we are taking men for the war under the form of conscription, and the lips of men in this House and in the country need no longer be still for fear of injuring voluntary recruiting. I have made it my rule of conduct, and I am going to continue to do so from now on to the end of the war, that in any action or matter that comes before this House, or is raised outside, to first ask myself the question whether I should take a certain course which might be pleasing to the enemy, or adopt another course which would be the opposite of that, and which would be in the interests of my country. So that I say in what I am going to do I am adopting the motto of Saint Gregory, " Better a scandal than a lie."

Now this question might not have come before the House at all. A little bit of rioting might not have mattered very much, but what do we find? The condition of affairs as far as this war is concerned—because this country is at war and at war very seriously, although a great many people do not realize it—the condition of affairs at the front at the present moment is critical. We have been asked by the leader of the Government in England to send reinforcements to our brave troops at the front. I have his language here, but it is not necessary for me to quote it, and I was very much ashamed to see in our public press, Mr. Lloyd George's cable for more men set away in the back of the newspapers whilst the feature under great headlines on the front page was made of "Riots in Quebec." That order should have been reversed, because after all the rioting that has taken place in Quebec has only, in a measure, stimulated public opinion in this matter of recruiting. From the Orders in Council that have been brought down to-day we are going to see more "pep" in the recruiting campaign carried on in that province, and there is going to be a stronger hand maintained there from now on. But there is nothing contained in those Orders in Council which is not to be found set forth in the laws of the country, the military laws, to-day, except one thing. In the first place, under the common law the military authorities of the country have a perfect right to do exactly what these Orders in Council say they shall do. They are given measures to subdue riots, and, if necessary, to shoot, but the military authorities are at liberty to do all that also under the King's regulations and orders. They shall resist riot and they shall shoot, and they are at liberty to do all that under the King's Regulations and Orders. In the second place, it is the old English law and rule, and it exists in all British countries. If men are killed in the fight, then the officers must all be tried in a civil court unless there is a Bill of Indemnity brought into Parliament which relieves them from the responsibility of killing their fellow men in their own country. And for these acts that have taken place in Quebec, there is no doubt that the officers will be charged in the civil courts of that province with manslaughter or murder, and this House will have to bring in a Bill indemnifying these officers. It did not matter even if the Riot Act were read and all the regulations of the civil law carried out, the procedure would be just the same, and the Bill would have to be brought in to indemnify the soldiers in the same way.

Now, the proclamation of martial law in all British countries has always rested with the Governor in Council. In only one case in modern times has martial law been proclaimed in a British country. In reading up this law—I had to read military law in order to get a commission from the Militia Department—I found there was only one case, a case in the West Indies, where the Governor had to proclaim martial law. The officer commanding the district under this Order in Council has the right virtually to proclaim martial law and carry on just the same as if the Governor General in Council proclaimed it.

The regulations as to the taking of men are all excellent in themselves. These regulations are splendid regulations. But that is not the question. The whole question we have to discuss here is a question which dates remotely back in this House to the time that the idea of bringing on a new form of recruiting was decided upon. It is now a year ago last Christmas since the right hon. Prime Minister announced to the public that Canada was going to send 500,000 men to the war. I note, after adding all the figures that are available, that a year and three months have since elapsed and Canada has not implemented that promise. As a matter of fact within three or four months of the period when he made his statement we had over 400,000 men at the war. We all know the great trouble taken and the efforts put forth by everybody to get men to join the army. And I must say that the Canadians responded splendidly to the voluntary call to arms; no other country in the world has done any better regardless of what anybody says. But that idea, that scheme, became exhausted. Instead of continuing as at first, when the civilians in the cities, towns and villages, the best farmers and the best business men joined together to form groups and committees to recruit men, and did recruit men, and would have kept on recruiting men, what do we find? We find that that system was diverted, and it fell into the hands of professionals, men who were professional speakers and professional recruiters, and I must say that I foresaw right then the beginning of the end. Because in any kind of sport in this country we do not approve very much of the professional. Take lacrosse or any other of our sports, we do not want to be recruited under any system of that kind. But when we are asked by our brothers, our friends and neighbours, those whom we know, to do our duty, we are prepared to do our duty.

In the last session of Parliament the Prime Minister adjourned the House, and went over to England to consult with the authorities there, and he came back and informed this House that it was necessary for us to raise a hundred thousand more men to reinforce the men we had at the front. Now, there is a process of attrition constantly going on at the front. It is said that the term of service of an infantryman at the front, his period of service until he is wounded, or ill, or is killed, is only seven or eight months. He may be able to return after treatment and serve another seven or eight months. In order to carry on over there it is necessary, since we have four divisions, roughly speaking, 75,000 men, there, and it will be necessary for us to have virtually 75,000 or 100,000 men annually to make up for inevitable losses. Not a single person on the Government side of the House that we noticed at the time demurred. We all said " amen " to the 100,000 men. Then the question was, how are we to get these 100,000 men. National service was supposed to bring in the men. Instead of the national service which they have in France, whereby every man, woman and child in the country serves the nation when called upon, and is compulsorily called upon, what kind of national service did we have? I do not wish to cast any reflections on that system. I have only this to say, Mr. Speaker, that you cannot carry on war in this or any country in this age by a card index system, nor can you carry on war by boards. You must have men, that is the only way that you can carry on war. And that is the way this country wants the war carried on, if I know anything about what the people voted for at the last election. National service passed along, and that accomplished nothing. Then we had the Canadian Defence Force, which was supposed to bring 100,000 or 200,000 young men into khaki, and, by feeding them up well, they were expected in due time to volunteer for service abroad. I think there were something like 38 or 40 who volunteered in this force in the city of Toronto. You cannot get men to volunteer in a defence force to stay at home. That is not an idea that appeals to anybody who wants to serve in this war, even if he wants to dodge it for the time being. Instead of men, we got an expensive staff. Nothing was accomplished.

Then Parliament had to decide to do something. I want to speak a word on behalf of the men who sat in this House in the last Parliament—many of them have left this House never to come back again—but I will say this, that no Parliament ever held in a British country contained so many brave, resolute, courageous and patriotic men. The work that Parliament accomplished will speak for itself regardless of politics. Men forsook their politics to see that a law was enacted in order that we might reinforce our sorely tried men at the front. The men who took part in those struggles in the last Parliament have received nothing, as far as the press of this country is concerned, unless it be some mild form of condemnation.

What occurred at that time? The Cabinet of the last Government—I can speak quite freely of that because it is not supposed to have any connection with the present Government—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not see what connection the remarks of the hon. member have with the subject under discussion. I do not wish to restrict the hon. member unduly, but I must ask him to adhere more closely to the subject. It is inevitable, perhaps, that the question of national service must be touched upon or referred to, but I would ask him to confine himself as closely as possible to the present subject.

Mr. CURRIE: I am very thankful to you, Mr. Speaker, for calling my attention to this matter. Perhaps I was getting a little too lengthy in my remarks. However, I will try to come to the point quickly and say that the late Government introduced into this House the Military Service Act, and the Military Service Act that came before this House was not such a Military Service Act as that Government would have produced had there not been certain elements in the Government which were opposed to compulsion of any kind in order to send men to the front. We all know of the trouble that occurred. Ministers resigned and left the Government. Finally we had this law brought down by which a hundred thousand men were going to be secured by means of what is called the draft. Everybody in the corridors knew that it was a joke, that that law which was brought down was not the law that was really required, but it was the law, and as such it was shot full of holes. The enforcement of the Act was virtually left to the lawyers and judges and officials; if they did not wish to enforce it vigourously, every man in the country could avoid coming under its provisions. Why was the law formed in that way? I will tell you. There was intense opposition to the law on the part of our friends from Quebec and of members from that province within the ranks of the Conservative party. There was a constant agitation and struggle so to keep down the Act that it might be delayed or that the war might end or something else happen before it could be really enforced. But the measure was brought down; we passed it, and we passed also the War-time Elections Act. I say without hesitation that had the Military Service Act been adopted by this House after the passage of the War-time Elections Act, the provisions of the former would have been much more stringent. As it is, the law is not as strong as the first law they had in England—and in England that law was subsequently amended so as to be stronger. We shall likely have to do the same thing here before the session is over.

So, when the War-time Elections Act was passed, the Government had to face the possibility of hostility in the West as well as hostility east of the Ottawa river. I have nothing to say against my good friends in the province of Quebec. Men from that province fought with me in the trenches in the greatest battle of the war, and I can testify to their courage,

4 p.m. devotion and bravery, because no braver men ever lived. Had they been properly managed by their leaders; had they not been misled and misrepresented, I firmly believe in my heart that no part of Canada would have taken part in the war more joyfully or more gladly than the province of Quebec. If Quebec has not done its duty, it is not on account of the people of that province; it is on account of their so-called political leaders.

As I say, we had to face an adverse vote in Quebec and in the West, and men like myself realized that if the Government had gone to the country without first adopting the War-time Elections Act the control of the country would have been lost to anti-British——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CURRIE: The control of this country would have been lost by the British element and handed over to the anti-British element for the next twenty-five years.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I wish the hon. member would adhere more strictly to the subject under consideration.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Let him blow off.

Mr. CURRIE: What did we have to do? We had to deprive men of the vote, because we wished this to be a British country. We know very well that if the Opposition party had won the election contest, the men from the provinces who voted on the referendum in favour of conscription would be conscripted, and those who voted against conscription would not be conscripted. That was the question that was up at the last election. Well, we went before the electors, and the electors endorsed the Military Service Act and everything that we did. The men of other parts of the country have been conscripted; they have carried on under the law, with very few complaints. But in the province of Quebec every effort has been put forth to prevent the law from going into effect and to keep the men from going to the war.

I would not have brought this question forward to-day did I not feel that unless some drastic steps are taken—more drastic even than have been mentioned in the House to-day—Quebec will not be conscripted until after the war. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, why I say that. Up to the present time the province of Quebec has given only 5,000 men under the Military Service Act, and of that number fully 3,500 are English-speaking. So that our French-speaking friends, who should be the first to stand loyally by us, have given only——

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentlemen would, perhaps, be in order in referring incidentally to conscription or the Military Service Act so far as it bears upon the question of the riots at Quebec. Under this motion, however, he is certainly not in order in entering into a discussion of conscription or the Military Service Act, as he apparently purposes to do by giving figures and going into details.

Mr. CURRIE: I will try, Mr. Speaker, to keep out of difficulty as much as possible. In order, however, to make my point clear and to carry on the discussion of all matters connected with the rioting in the province of Quebec, it is nceessary that I should take into consideration the number of men enlisted under the Military Service law in the province of Quebec. You will note, Sir, that my resolution says "Quebec," not "the city of Quebec." In saying that this law has so far taken only 5,000 men in the province of Quebec, I think that I am not infringing on the rules. However, I will try to keep as straight as possible, because I want all these facts to go before the public; it is not in the public interest that any of these matters should be stifled. I do not wish to cause any trouble or raise any disturbance; nor do I wish, to quote the language of the papeis, to "blow off the roof." We are not blowing off any roofs. I believe that the time has not yet come when a member of this House should sit up like a stuffed manikin at a puppet show and say or do nothing in regard to any question of the day. Every member has a perfect right to speak out here.

In the province of Quebec 60,000 appeals under the Military Service Act are pending, and only about 600 of them have reached the Central Appeal Judge. If six months after the passing of the law, 1,500 men can be secured in the province of Quebec, I leave it to members of the House to figure how many years it will take to obtain the balance.

I now wish to discuss the matter of who is to blame for this state of affairs.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. CURRIE: I will take my friends first. I believe—I have the evidence right here—that the Government, in trying to enforce this Act with caution and moderation in the province of Quebec, have given aid and comfort to those men who are doing everything in their power to create a disturbance in that province. We all know that the man who is the prominent figure in all this anti-British trouble in Quebec is the editor of the newspaper called Le Devoir, Henri Bourassa. When the war broke out Mr. Bourassa was in Belgium or Strassburg, or some place over there, and he managed to sneak out under the protection of the British flag and escape to this country. No sooner had he reached this side than by some strange process he started to carry out the very policy which Bolo Pasha pursued from his headquarters in the United States as well as in France—that of creating trouble, causing dissatisfaction, doing everything in his power to prevent the people from sustaining our part in this war.

I say without reservation that he has constantly preached sedition in the columns of Le Devoir. During the troubles in this House over the passage of the Military Service Act, he was very silent because the public mind was inflamed then, but at other times he has constantly preached sedition in his newspaper. Now, I can understand a patriot of the old school who fought for "liberty, equality and fraternity" preaching sedition against autocracy; I would do it myself, but that is not the case with this man. He does not want liberty, equality or fraternity; he wants reaction; his gospel is the gospel of reaction. I say further that he has commercialized sedition to sell his paper to the poor dupes who will read it; I repeat that that is his chief aim and object, and also to get a little popularity for himself. He is the leader of the Nationalist party. We on this side of the House had our trouble with the Nationalists when we were framing the Military Service Act; we know all about that trouble, but we are rid of them now, we hope. Why was not Le Devoir suppressed, and why was not Bourassa interned? At Sault Ste. Marie, Charles Smith, the editor of a paper there, a man whom I have known since he was a boy, the son of a respectable methodist clergyman and a very respectable man himself, said something in his paper with reference to the manner in which voluntary recruiting was being carried on. At once his paper was suppressed, and he found himself penniless, and threatened with imprisonment. To my mind he was a much better man than Henri Bourassa. It is sometimes said that Bourassa may be more dangerous locked up than at large. The men who are the fathers or the sons or the brothers of the boys who went over Vimy Ridge are not afraid of any cheap agitator in Quebec or anywhere else, whether locked up or free. In the United States men greater than Bourassa are being locked up and have disappeared from ken and will remain out of sight and unheard of until the war is over. But what do we find in the case of Bourassa? In this same paper with the heavy type about "Emeutes"—which I understand is the French for riots at all events it meant that when I was in France—are columns of Government advertising, whole pages of it. There is a three-column advertisement, for instance, on April 1st, signed by Charles J. Doherty, Minister of Justice; the minister no doubt will be able to explain that. On another page are three or four advertisements from the Public Works Department, and I am told that advertisements in connection with rural routes up in my riding have been inserted in Le Devoir. This is a serious matter. How can any French Canadian who reads the views of the editor of this paper escape the conclusion that as far as French Canadians are concerned, they are outside the war altogether, that De Levoir has the Government approval and the Government does not intend to do anything towards conscripting them?

Now, I come to somebody else—Mr. Lavergne.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Colonel Lavergne.

Mr. CURRIE: I do not intend to call him colonel. Why has he been allowed to travel around Quebec with the stars and crown of a colonel on his shoulders, when right from the beginning he has been opposed to the war, and stated so publicly while I was at Valcartier. This man, who has been virtually accepted as the leader of the Nationalist party in the province of Quebec, should have been interned. The country could very well afford to do without him; there is nothing he is needed for; he is not making munitions, or farming—helping to do something that would assist Canada or the Allies in this war—nor is he soldiering, though he is called a colonel. Why, in Toronto recently, a man got up on a public platform and said that the soldiers at the front had taken a little too much rum on Christmas day. He was locked up and his badges and uniform stripped from him, and he was thrown out of the army. While that was happening in Toronto, Lavergne has been allowed to roam at large in Quebec, preaching seditious doctrines, and generally doing as he pleased. What is more, when the Government decided to end these riots in Quebec, the representative of the Department of Justice, if we are to believe the newspapers, went to Quebec and sent for Lavergne and his partner to find out what could be done. Lavergne laid down his terms. First he wanted the troops withdrawn. Then he wanted the police withdrawn, and what in the world else was there for us to do but leave the country to him and his friends. I understand that the officer of the Government refused to entertain such a proposal, and I am very glad that this Government had a man with backbone enough for that; but I am sorry he called on Mr. Lavergne at all. Lavergne should have been utterly ignored; in fact he should have been the first man placed under arrest in Quebec when the riots broke out.

What effect did the agitation and the disturbances have on the right hon. leader of the Opposition. I have recollections of the day when, though opposed to him politically, I greatly admired him. He was a stout, strong Britisher, and we all loved him for that. He had the courage to speak up against the Nationalists at the beginning. I have his speeches here, and I sometimes enjoy an hour or so reading them over; those on British topics are well worth reading; if we forget what has occurred during the past year. I used to think he was of the old type of French Jacobite, the beausabre, who would occasionally take an old rusty tricolour cockade out of his pocket, brush it lovingly and then put it back and come up the steps whistling Marlbrook and the Sambre and the Meuse. I used to think he drew his inspiration from brave France, that fountain from which fresh drafts of Liberty come daily to a struggling world. Here is what he said at a speech delivered in the province of Quebec on June 24, 1889 at the national festival of the French Canadians and I wish we had a few more speeches from him now like this:

> But Quebec possesses another charm which can be enjoyed in all its plenitude only by us French Canadians, it is the charm of memories. Men of Quebec, you are privileged beings. Antiquity has preserved for us the memory of a famous epitaph, calling on the passer-by to stop, as he was treading on the ashes of a hero, but you, men of Quebec, you breathe, live, and have your being among the dust of heroes.
>
> At each step you make in your city, a momument, a building, a stone, a glimpse of the sky at the end of a narrow street calls to mind a whole world of heroic events. To-day you have raised another monument which will forever perpetuate the memory of the cross planted by the envoy of the King of France when he took possession of this country in the name of his royal master.
>
> This country, however, has not remained French soil. Still we have remained true to the memory of our old mother country.
>
> Although separated from France for over a century and differing from her at present in several ways, we have always worshiped her in our hearts, watching from afar, but with ceaseless interest all the vicissitudes of her agitated career, and sharing in her joys and triumphs, as well as in her disasters and sorrows, still more, indeed, in her sorrows than in her joys.
>
> Adversity is the test of affection, and I appeal to you all if it is not true that we never realized how dear France was to us as we realized it during the period of her reverses, during the fatal years of 1870 and 1871, when the telegraph brought us the news of defeat instead of the victories which we had looked for. And when there was no longer room for doubt, when, having hoped against hope, we had, in order to convince ourselves, to read over and over again the text of the harsh law imposed by the conqueror and when Alsace and Lorraine were violently severed from French territory, I ask you if we had been deprived of one of our own limbs could we have suffered keener anguish.

What nobler words could any man utter than these? Does the hon. gentleman still believe in these sentiments, and is he prepared to implement the sentiments that have brought him into power—for that speech was delivered just previous to that great movement in the history of Canada that sent him into office in 1896? No, the shadow of Bourassa and the haunting stars of Lavergne have dimmed his eyes to the troubles of France. He sat silent in this House day after day and night after night, when men were being shot, rioting was taking place in the city of Montreal, and when dynamite was used to intimidate people who spoke in favour of the Military Service Act and compulsion. I pointed that out to him shortly before the session closed, and I told him the people of this country would take dire vengeance on him for that, and I think they have. Now we are confronted again with the same topic. This law is not as complete as it should be. It should be made more complete. We have no desire to do any injury to those who are tilling the soil honestly. The farmer has just as high a duty to perform as the man in the trenches, and the man who is making munitions is the same as the man in the trenches.

Sir SAM HUGHES: A little bit easier.

Mr. CURRIE: Yes, easier, and he is making more money. Still it is necessary work. I say that those men who are not doing that class of work, unless they are the sons of widows, with large families to look after—and there are cases of that kind—should be in khaki. I make, too, this statement, and I feel it in my heart that when those 60,000 men in Quebec are in khaki they will be the happiest men in Canada. Every one of these men from Quebec that I have seen is a brave soldier. I have never seen one of them turn his back to the foe. I do not think any one of the 60,000 will do that when in action. How can we go on trifling as we are doing? If you trifle with fire, it will burn you out of house and home, and that is what is occurring here.

I have one word to say to the people of Canada. It with regret that I have brought this matter up, but we must have this question threshed out here, because the Empire at the present moment is at one of the most critical periods of its history, and no one knows that better than I and my companions in the war. The newspapers are not giving the whole facts of the critical situation. This country has not yet realized the seriousness of it, and has not yet conscripted itself. We have not taken the matter into consideration at all. Under this Military Service Act the first thing that should be done would be to put every man in uniform, in class A, unless he can show immediate cause why he should not be taken. He should be drilled, at all events, and we should have had men under arms constantly. I differ from the Government on that point, but I think I am right, and I say at this very minute that every man who is not fulfilling his duty to his country in carrying on should be conscripted at once. I say the farmer's son who is playing pool in the villages, instead of doing something on the farm, should be taken at once and put in khaki, and there should be less nonsense about this process of law. You will never get men there by process of law. Every lawyer in Quebec is loaded up with work. They tell me it has already cost the draftees in that province over two million dollars to fight their cases for exemption so far. We cannot carry on war with writs, or with exemption boards. We must have men and munitions, and that is the only way we can carry on. I say, without reservation, that the people of this country, in no uncertain tone, gave this Government a mandate to carry out the conscription law, not merely to carry on before exemption boards, but they said to us that we should see that men are got to go to the front. That is the objective point—not the central appeal judge, or anything of that kind. And I ask every hon. member in this House who has been elected as a supporter of that measure, was that not the only issue? How can you go home and look in the face the men and women who sent you here, unless you carry out their mandate? There are no party ties to tie you down; there is no patronage here any more. You have no party ties. What excuse can you give to the people who elected you members of this House, elected you on that one issue alone, to see that men are sent to the front; to win the war? What excuse can you give to the people if you allow this matter to drag on as it has been dragging? I very much regret to have to say this, and I appeal to you, hon. members, and to the Government to carry on the work that you are doing and to hasten with it. The people are not satisfied with 1,500 men in seven months from Quebec, or any other part of the country. The people realized, during the last election, that unless a law was placed on the statute books which would compel every province to do its duty, every province which did its duty would have to send three men instead of one, and Quebec would send none. That is what they thought, and that is why they supported this Government, and sent us here.

There is something that appeals to me in higher tones than that. When I pick up the paper daily and read of the struggle that is taking place at the front every hour and every minute, it calls to my mind the combat of the flight of the star-lights, making day out of night, the guns with their red muzzles flashing night and day, the tremendous detonations of the high explosive shells; all around the geysers of earth sent into the air hundreds of feet by the explosions and falling around you, the tatoo of the machine guns, the rattle of the muskets, the shouts of the men in close, mortal combat, the groans of the wounded and the dying. All these things come to my mind, and I can see before me the pallid faces of the dead, who have perished for you and for me, and the mangled forms of the wounded who are being carried off the field. To you, my comrades in this House, who have served in this war—there are a few of us here, thank God—I say, "Keep faith with the living and the dead, as you promised, in Flanders Fields."

Mr. H. H. STEVENS (Centre Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, I noted the words of caution which fell from your lips when this resolution was introduced, and I am conscious at this time that one perhaps lays himself open to a measure of criticism in bringing up this question or discussing it on the floor of this House. There are those in the House and out of it who think perhaps it should not have been done. On the other hand, Sir, if we are not to be permitted to discuss a matter of this kind, or kindred matters, on the floor of the House where, within the confines of Canada, will we find a more appropriate or fitting place? As I conceive my duty as the representative of a constituency in this country, it is to endeavour to properly present to my colleagues in the House the views of those whom I represent.

We are told by some who think that perhaps this question should not have been brought up that we should have more consideration for our fellow citizens in the province of Quebec, because they have a unique character, because they are distinct from the rest of Canada, and because they have traditions and customs which we must observe and respect. To a large degree I frankly acknowledge that that is the case, and it is not my intention to-day to violate in any way the opinions or feelings of my fellow citizens in the province of Quebec, but I desire to remind you, Sir, and this House that the citizens of the rest of Canada have rights just as well as the citizens of Canada in the province of Quebec. Throughout the length and breadth of this country we have families who have sent two, three, four or five sons to the front. My attention was brought to one in my own city—the fifth son gone to the front, three dead and one lying in a hospital in England. Families such as that have some claim to the attention of the administrators of the law in this country.

It has been rumoured that the second class was about to be called up. I wish to say with the utmost frankness, and with all respect and consideration for what the words may mean, that I think the Government would be exceedingly ill-advised in calling up the second class until adequate and definite efforts had been made, and successfully made, to exhaust those who come under the first class.

British law, Mr. Speaker, is fundamentally rooted in the principles of impartiality, firmness of application, and persistence. I am reminded of the long trip of several thousand miles made into the Arctic regions a couple of years ago by two or three Mounted Police officers to apprehend two murderers. After sixteen months they brought these two murderers from the Arctic circle to Edmonton and they were there tried. That is simply an illustration of the administration of British law wherever the British flag flies. I am reminded of the famous Cameron case in Abyssinia, and there are many others that might be called to mind. But we have this condition in Canada to-day, that with the same law and with the same constitution of courts we have entirely diverse interpretations of this Act of Parliament. In one province it is viewed from one standpoint and you have a certain application of it. In eight provinces we find a directly opposite interpretation and application. It must be apparent to every man of commonsense that one of two things is wrong, and perhaps the two things are wrong—either that the law itself is faulty and needs amendment or correction or strengthening, or else that there is a tendency on the part of one section of the community to disregard the law. It must be one of these two things, or perhaps in a measure it may be the two, and what I wish to draw to the attention of the House is that it cannot and must not be allowed to continue. The law must be impartially administered in all sections of the country. We had the assurance of the right hon. the Prime Minister the other day that it would be so, and I must say that I am willing to admit, and to frankly and cheerfully admit, that I trust in the good faith of the Prime Minister. But, Sir, in my province, in the Western Provinces and in Ontario, you find tribunals constituted under this Act——

Mr. SPEAKER: I am reluctant to interrupt the hon. member but in so far as I have been able to follow the discussion he has been confining himself entirely to the Military Service Act. The resolution deals with rioting in Quebec.

Mr. STEVENS: May I have a word of explanation? I have pursued this course with the purpose of asking a question and I will ask the question now: Why these riots and why the failure of the administration of the Act in the city and province of Quebec? In asking that question and in dealing with it——

Mr. SPEAKER: Perhaps it is inevitable that reference must be made to the Military Service Act in connection with the riots in Quebec. At the same time it is not competent for any hon. member to confine his discussion to the Military Service Act.

Mr. STEVENS: I was not intending to do so, but I was asking the question: Why did these riots occur in the province of Quebec? By the evidence laid on the Table officially by the Prime Minister we find that these riots were directly the result of the effort to administer the Military Service Act. In the administration of the Military Service Act in the province of Quebec and in the rest of Canada we see a distinct difference. I am willing, Mr. Speaker, to submit to your ruling, but I was going on to say when you stopped me, in explanation of the point I am making, that in all sections of the country outside of the province of Quebec the tribunals administered the Act without the assistance or appearance of lawyers or anybody representing those who appeared or appealed. There was a summary administration of the Act. Generally speaking, the public accepted the Act in that spirit and from that standpoint. In the province of Quebec we find that the administration of the same law and with substantially the same machinery, endless technical appeals did occur so that there are practically no results from the Act in that province.

Now then, we are brought face to face with the question: Why this failure in that one province when apparently there was success in the other provinces? That brings me to this point and I wish to make it the chief point in my remarks. I do not think that we will evade trouble in the province of Quebec such as unfortunately occurred last week, I do not think that the Military Service Act will be successfully administered so long as it is placed under the Justice Department of this Government. I say that advisedly, and with no desire to cast reflections personally upon the Minister of Justice. He is placed in a most awkward position, a minister of the Crown charged with certain duties, but a citizen of a province whose practically unanimous opinion was against this law, and in which province there exists a large section of the community bitterly opposed even to the administration of the law now that it is enacted. Let me make myself clear on that point by disclaiming any charge of a wholesale character against the province of Quebec, because in the last week I have met many citizens from Quebec, representing a large section of that province, who say that they wish the law to be enforced; and still we are bound to admit, if we are frank at all, that a large section of the province is determined to oppose the administration of the law to the limit of their ability.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No.

Mr. STEVENS: The right hon. gentleman says "No." I would be very glad when he comes to speak, if he should give the House some assurance that he speaks with authority as representing a section of his own constituency which acted as they did in the most unfortunate manner the other day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: And I might also suggest to the right hon. gentleman, and I do it with all respect, that perhaps his own presence in the city of Quebec might have had a better effect than leaving intervenvention to Armand Lavergne, or other members of that particular class and kind.

I say that I do not think the Act can be properly administered in that province by the Minister of Justice, or the Justice Department, so as to avoid a recurrence of these troubles, and I think it is desirable that these gentlemen should take into consideration the possibility of such recurrence. The Justice Department has been known, I think, to all the former members of this House as a sort of embalming emporium to which is committed all knotty and embarrassing questions by the Government. If it is desired to bury a question so that it will not see the light of day again for any considerable period it is usually handed to the Justice Department. I might say that in a sense perhaps that is a useful function, because very often the Government is confronted with embarrassing questions; but, Mr. Speaker, this was an Act that demanded the utmost expedition in its application. We were told last summer, and told repeatedly in this House, that it was absolutely necessary to pass this Act in order to keep faith with the boys at the front. We went before the people of Canada with that cry, and they sent us back here almost solid from every province of the country, except one province, with the mandate that this Act should be enforced, and enforced impartially and swiftly; and yet, we cannot say for one moment, by the widest stretch of imagination that the Minister of Justice, or his department, has enforced it with any degree of expedition.

There is one other phase of this question to which I wish to refer, and to add my voice to that of the mover of the resolution, and it is to make a definite protest against any further toleration of the doctrines preached by Bourassa and Lavergne in Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: In my city, Mr. Speaker, a man simply refused to report—he was guilty of no violation of the law, but simply refused to report. He was seized, and he is now serving a term of two years in a penitentiary, and he was not even allowed to see his friends. I made no complaint, and I make no complaint, but I cannot see why an English-speaking man in one section of the country should get two years in a penitentiary for simply passive objection, and the conduct of others should be winked at, year in and year out, who are guilty of the utmost sedition and most violent opposition to the law of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: The Order in Council brought down by the Prime Minister is, without question, a decided advance beyond what we have seen in the past in an effort to administer this law; but there is one weakness in it. Before that Order in Council will become effective in the application of military authority there must have been a violation of the law in the form of an outbreak. What we are up against, Mr. Speaker, and the underlying cause of these riots, is the passive resistance to this Act, through the technical medium of the courts, the pettifogging legal technicalities against its enforcement. That is a point the Government must remedy. Until the Government remedies that point, until it so amends this Act that it can be enforced in the province of Quebec, as in other sections of the country, impartially and firmly and without any hesitation or delay —until that is done I say there will be a great deal of dissatisfaction in other parts of Canada as well. I was told by an ex-member of this House the day before yesterday, something of a surprising character. He represented in this House for some years a constituency, one-half English-speaking and the other half French-speaking. He said the members of the tribunals in the constituency were French-speaking, and that if an English-speaking applicant came before the tribunal he was promptly enrolled and not allowed exemption.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh! Oh!

Mr. STEVENS: When a French speaking applicant came before the tribunal he was allowed exemption.

Mr. P. R. DuTREMBLAY: The hon. gentleman should give us the name of the tribunal in question.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend will have to accept my word that the information came from an ex-member of this House, and I do not want to expose him to possible indignities by giving his name.

The point, Mr. Speaker, is this: That there seems to be a passive, shall I say defiance of this law in one province, while there is a rigid enforcement of it in the other provinces. The causes to my mind are those that I have pointed out, first, and before all, the agitation and sedition preached for years by Bourassa, Lavergne and those associated with them, and, secondly, the slow, cumbersome, involved administration of this law by the Justice Department.

Right hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The mover of this motion was kind enough in his remarks to say that at one time he had some regard for me but that I have sadly fallen from grace in his eyes. May I say to him that on the present occasion the hon. gentleman has sadly disappointed me. I thought he moved his motion in order to discuss the riots and disturbances which took place recently in the city of Quebec, but he discussed altogether another question. He discussed the enforcement of the Act and the action of the exemption tribunals, but as to the riots in the city of Quebec he hardly said a word.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I think it my duty, Sir, to speak of the riots that have taken place in Quebec. I have the honour to be the member of the constituency in which these riots took place and that honour I have enjoyed for now upwards of forty years. I know the people well, and I repeat what I said on a former occasion: that there is not to be found in any part of Canada a more peacable or law-abiding population. I think I may also add that they are a sensitive population, sensitive to resent injustice, and perhaps more sensitive yet to resent a harsh act and an unkind word.

It was my duty, upon learning of the disturbances that had taken place in Quebec, to try to inform myself as to the facts, the reports being so little in accord with what I know of the constituency of Quebec East. I wished to inform myself as to what were the causes which could have brought about a condition of affairs so utterly at variance with the character of the constituency, as long as I have known it. Sir, I think now that I pretty well know the genesis of the disturbances which took place.

I said on a former occasion to the Prime Minister that if there have been disturbances, the fault was largely with the men who were entrusted with the duty of enforcing the Act. I do not complain at all of the higher officers in the district. So far as I know them, they are men of honour and have tried to do their duty. But, Sir, as to the men who were entrusted with the duty of putting into force Section 15 of the Military Service Act, a more unfortunate selection could not have been made. Section 15 of the Act cited by the Prime Minister empowers any officer of the law to ask any man whom he meets for his papers. This is an inquisitorial power, and everybody knows—and in saying this I am sure that I place myself in the judgment of every member of this House—that this inquisitorial power, to be effective, and not to be resented, must be executed with proper regard to the dignity and honour of the man who is subjected to it. My right hon. friend said that the origin of the riots was the arrest of a young man named Mercier by the officers of the law. I had better quote the words of the right hon. gentleman:

> It appears that a young man named Mercier had been asked by the Dominion police engaged in the enforcement of the Military Service Act for his exemption certificate, which he did not have with him. He was taken into custody until the certificate could be produced. As a matter of fact, under the provisions of section 15 of the Military Service Act, it was his duty to produce it when called upon to do so. The certificate was sent for and produced, whereupon he was immediately discharged.

These words are true, but that is not the whole story, and I will now endeavour—and I am sure that what I say will not be gainsaid by subsequent information received by the Government—to give the facts. Mercier is a young man who resides on Notre Dame street in the city of Quebec. There is on that street a bowling alley and billiard room called Salle Frontenac. On Thursday of last week, about half-past eight in the evening, he went to the bowling alley. He was in company with a man named Deslauriers. I have his affidavit here, but it is in French, and perhaps I may summarize it. He says that he saw as he came in two of the constables who had been entrusted with the enforcement of the Act in the city of Quebec. One is known as Major Evanturel, because at one time it is said he was connected with the militia. The name of the other constable was Belanger. When Mercier saw Evanturel, and was told that Belanger was in the room, he said to his friend: "We had better go out." Why did he say that? Having seen with his own eyes this man Evanturel, and having heard that this man Belanger was there, he said: "Let us go out." The fact is that this man Belanger is as well known in the city of Quebec as was Barabbas at Jerusalem. He is known to be a boxer, a pugilist, a bully and a disturber of the peace, always fond of showing off his strong muscles. His career is this: He has been most of his life a bartender. Some two or three years ago he obtained a license as a tavern keeper, and his license was subsequently taken away from him for cause. This is the character of the man who in the city of Quebec is entrusted with the enforcement of such a delicate law as the Military Service Act. Evanturel belongs to an old and respectable family, but unfortunately he is one of those degenerates who have gone down and down and down in the scale of life until to-day—for the sake of his family—I would not say what I think of him. At all events, he is not acceptable as a respectable citizen. He also is one of the officers entrusted by the Government with the enforcing of the Act. If such be the character of the officers of the law it is no wonder that this young man Mercier said to his friend: "Let us go out." As they were nearing the door they were met by two spotters, evidently under the control of Belanger and Evanturel, and were asked for their papers. Deslauriers produced his papers at once. Mercier fumbled in his pockets, but it so happened that he had not his papers with him. He had left them in the pocket of another coat. Thereupon he said to the officers: "I have not my papers with me; they are at home; will you come with me to the telephone; I will telephone to my parents at once to bring the papers." The officers would not grant this very reasonable request. Now, Sir, would it not strike everybody that the duty of those officers should have been to wait until he had telephoned to get his papers? But they insisted on bringing the man to the station. A squabble ensued, and this was the origin of the trouble. Now, Sir, I do not at all intend to excuse the squabble which ensued in which there was a free fight between the Dominion police, the men I have just mentioned, and the crowd. Violence is always to be deprecated and must be condemned whenever it occurs. But, after all, there is some excuse to be given for a man who is provoked into violence. I believe that if nothing else had followed in the succeeding days there would have been peace in Quebec. This was the first act of the drama; this was the origin of the squabble on the 28th of March.

The following day the disturbance continued and on a far greater scale. I must say that upon this, my conclusion is—after having investigated the matter for my own sake, and having been in communication with my friends and my constituents in the city of Quebec, that the trouble which took place on Friday the 29th of March was caused by a secret association of some kind. What it is, I do not know. I am sure of one thing. The origin of that association is not in the city of Quebec. The instigators of the trouble are not Quebec men.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: They are not Quebec men. I asked my friends and constituents to tell me who were the leaders of these riots, and one and all tell me that they did not know them. It is known as a fact, that on that Friday evening there was a motor car in which there were four persons who appeared to be the leaders of the movement, and so far as my information goes at the present time, those four persons do not belong to the city of Quebec. Who are those men? That the movement was organized is undoubted. Who were behind it? My impression is—I have no information upon this, but I will give my reasons for believing what I am going to say—that it is the same gang which attempted to terrorize the city of Montreal last summer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This gang was composed of the scum of the city of Montreal such scum as is to be found in every large city and is ready to create disturbance in every civil commotion. The leaders of it were penitentiary birds, convicts, who had been released by the Department of Justice some months previously. In saying that I do not desire to impugn the good faith of the Minister of Justice, but I do say this:

if he had exerted the least caution before releasing these men; if he had taken the trouble to secure information from the police officials of Montreal, he would have been told that these convicts were habitual criminals, penitentiary birds. They were arrested a short time afterwards. One of them committed suicide before arrest; he belonged to a very respectable family, and I shall not bring the name of that family into this House. Everybody in Montreal knows to whom I refer. The other man, an ex-convict, was a man of the most pronounced criminal tendencies—tendencies which he had inherited; he was a degenerate. The third man, Lalumière, is now in jail in Montreal awaiting trial. He was tried once before, but the jury could not agree. The other man was Desjardins, a detective employed by the Department of Justice; and it has been proved that he was one of the instigators of all the acts of violence which occurred in Montreal. This man is of such a character that he could not get bail in Montreal, and the Department of Justice accordingly deposited a cheque for $10,000 to guarantee his appearance in court. I may add that he too was tried, the jury could not agree, and again he has been freed on bail furnished by the Department of Justice.

5 p.m.

What makes me say that these men are the instigators of all this trouble in the city of Quebec? This fact is certain; the leaders of the movement were not men from the city; they were strangers, wherever they came from. I speak positively with regard to this; I am quite satisfied that the statements which I now make cannot be contradicted. My reasons for believing that this is the same gang which operated in Montreal are as follows: on Friday or Saturday of last week placards were posted in the city of Quebec around the Canadian Pacific Railway station and in most of the principal streets in the division of St. Roch. These are the same placards which were posted in Montreal during last summer at the time of the agitation which then took place. They are the same print, on the same paper, showing the same cartoons and containing the same words. The friend from whom I have this information is in a position to know that these placards are the same as those posted in Montreal, and must be some which had not then been used. If this be the case, you have a clue to the circumstances which have brought about that riot.

Is the city of Quebec the only place in the Dominion where disturbances have occurred? Have there not been disturbances in Toronto, in Calgary, in many other places? Perhaps these disturbances were not of the magnitude of those which took place at Quebec, but they were almost as bad. Is it not a fact that the Premier of Ontario had to take refuge against a hostile crowd not more than a month ago? All these things have happened. I do not say that by way of excusing what has taken place in Quebec; I say it simply by way of explanation. An hon. gentleman—I think it was the member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens)—seemed to be astonished when I said that there was no inclination on the part of the province of Quebec to disobey the law. I say that there is no inclination on the part of the people there to disobey the law. The law is not popular; that I admit, but every man of official standing in the province, from the Attorney General down, has stated to the people that the law must be obeyed, unpopular though it be. And we want to obey it.

Sir, the trouble is not all on one side. There seems to be an inclination somewhere to put the blame on the civil authorities of Quebec city; to establish that on the part of the French Canadian population there is a disposition to evade or to break the law. I see in the Montreal Gazette of to-day—a very respectable paper usually—a despatch from Quebec with the following striking heading:

Civil Powers Make Trouble for Military.

It is a very serious indictment, to say that the civil powers are making trouble for the military. I received, a few hours ago from the office of the Attorney General of Quebec, this statement with regard to this very despatch:

Article in Montreal Gazette, page 1, column 8, entitled "Civil Powers Make Trouble for Military," is untrue and misleading. Both the civil and military authorities are working in perfect harmony and this statement can be confirmed by General Lessard himself.

The Government have availed themselves of the services of General Lessard, whom they have brought to Quebec to quell this disturbance. I congratulate the Government upon this step which they at last have taken. General Lessard should have been used long ago. If he had been called to service in the early months of the war, perhaps there would be no trouble to quell to-day in the city of Quebec. If recruiting in Quebec has not been as for my part I would wish, it must be remembered that after all the trouble is not on one side only. The Government is not free from blame in respect to their method of dealing with this matter in the province of Quebec. I do not wish to create any more bad blood than exists; I simply say in good faith to my friends on the other side of the House, that it would be unfortunate if the Government attempted to pass the city over to the military authorities and not to use the civil authorities. Let the military and the civil authorities work together, and I make bold to say that there will be no further trouble in the city of Quebec.

Speaking with what authority I may have as representative of Quebec city and as holding the position which I now occupy, I can say that in Quebec the people are prepared to accept these three principles: first, that the law must be obeyed; second, that property must be respected; third, that peace must be preserved.

That is the spirit in which I intend to discuss this matter. Heaven is my witness that on this occasion I have no intention of endeavouring to create further difficulty or further trouble. What I want is what I have always wanted in this war—to help so far as I can to win the war. The member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) was kind enough to refer to some ideas which I expressed in the city of Quebec many years ago. These ideas, Sir, I have never departed from, not even in the position which I took in this House against the Conscription Bill. As my hon. friend was good enough to quote from a remark which I made in Quebec, he might have quoted also from my last speech which I delivered in that city, when I opened the campaign in the last election. Did I there say anything at all to which he can take exception? Did I encourage the people of Quebec not to respect the law? On the contrary I said that the law must be respected, must be obeyed. My hon. friend asked me why I did not continue the course which I previously adopted; why I opposed the policy of conscription, and he linked my name with that of Mr. Bourassa. I see he is a close reader of Mr. Bourassa's paper. That being so, he must know that Bourassa is no longer a friend of mine; we parted company long ago, and we have never resumed it again. Let him read Le Devoir and he will see that ever since the beginning of the session Bourassa has been very severe on me. But I am not responsible for that. I follow my own course, whoever finds fault with it, or whoever approves; I am what I have always been.

As to Mr. Lavergne. He was at one time a very close friend of mine, but we parted company also. Mr. Lavergne was a candidate in Montmagny in the last election, but the young man who was elected in that county with my support, sits in this House to-day behind me. The views of Bourassa and Lavergne are not my views. The separation is not of to-day only; it goes back to the years 1910 and 1911, when I was opposed by Bourassa and his friends. And upon what ground? I took the stand that it was within the power of the Parliament of Canada to decree whether or not we should take part in the wars of Great Britain. Bourassa and Lavergne held that under no circumstances should we take part in the wars of Great Britain. For this difference of opinion I incurred their enmity, and they fought for the Conservative party; and my hon. friend (Mr. Currie) sitting there amongst the large majority in this House, owes a deep debt of gratitude to Mr. Bourassa.

He may ask me, why did I oppose the policy of conscription? I will answer him. I opposed the policy of conscription because I am a man of common sense; because I know human nature; because I know the conditions in this country. I knew that compulsory service would not bring the same results as the voluntary system. My hon. friend has alluded to the fact that the province of Quebec has not done as much as it should have done. I agree; I wish it had done more. But there is one way and one way only to deal with my fellow-countrymen. If you attempt to coerce them, they have too much of the Celtic blood not to resent it; but appeal to their heart and their imagination, and you will find them responsive. If that had been done, there would have been very different results.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE: Then why did not the hon. gentleman, as the representative of the French Canadian race, speak to his French Canadians in that way?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I did speak in that way to my French Canadian countrymen. Let the hon. gentleman read my speech in the city of Quebec in the month of November last, and he will see if I did not speak in that way. My hon. friend may say that I have not succeeded as well as I might have done; I agree, but I have had to fight extremists at both ends, the jingoists at one end and the Nationalists at the other. The stand I always took on conscription—and I think I can appeal to the memory of those of my old friends who are now sitting on the opposite side of the House—was that under existing circumstances it would not produce the results that were expected of it. It is said that the voluntary system failed. Sir, if we compare what has been done under the voluntary system with what has been done under the compulsory system, I think it will be admitted that we could have obtained better results if we had persevered with the voluntary system. But I did not come prepared to discuss that question to-day; we may have another opportunity later on. I thought that to-day we were going to discuss the riots in Quebec.

My hon. friend has attacked the attitude of French Canadians toward the war, and my own in particular, and I have this to say to him: On this question he and I are at the very antipodes; he is in favour of a policy that I am not in favour of. Sir, is this the first time that in a British Parliament a man has been branded as a traitor as I have been in the press during the last election and since? Is this the first time that a man standing in a British Parliament has taken a stand on his country's war which was not in accordance with the passions of the moment? I remember that during the South African War a young man of great promise in the British House of Commons took the position that England was in the wrong, and demanded that the war should be abandoned. He arraigned the Government for their policy, and was insulted in the House of Commons and in the streets and mobbed. On one occasion he escaped violence only by escaping from a meeting in the disguise of a policeman. That man to-day, Sir, is the Prime Minister of England, Lloyd George himself. Sir, the shame is not on Lloyd George for having followed the dictates of his conscience. But, his judgment was wrong. I believe—nay, I am sure—that England was right in that war. I stated so at the time, and I state so now; England perhaps was not free from fault, but, Sir, it was Kruger himself who drew up the insolent ultimatum that brought on the war. There was another occasion upon which one of the greatest men of the last century opposed the Government of the day in carrying on a war, and that man was John Bright. With all the splendour of his majestic eloquence he arraigned the Government for entering on a war that he said was senseless and causeless, and the judgment of the historian will be that John Bright was right, and that Lloyd George, on a later occasion, was wrong.

There is still another occasion which I might recall to the memory of my hon.

friend. When the American colonies were goaded into insurrection by the British Government of that day, the great Earl of Chatham, who had done more for the glory and prosperity of England than any other man in many generations, came before the House with a resolution to the effect that the troops which the British Government had sent to fight the Americans should be recalled from America, and endeavours be made to satisfy their grievances. What is the language of the historian upon this proposal?

> It was in fact a proposal as startling and unexpected as that other very different one for an immediate war with Spain which he had submitted to a trembling Council, and it was the more courageous of the two. The man of decisive action was seen in both, and the wisdom of both proposals was justified by the event. It was the moment of crisis, and though the voices of the street and market place—

Mark the words—

> —would have derided the withdrawal of troops, as an act of cowardice, of weakness inexcusable in a mighty people, yet this was the one solution, and it was offered at the last available hour.

Sir, it is unfortunate, that at that time there was in the British Government men of the stamp of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) who were inclined to talk loudly and bully and brag. That is not my method. If the British Government had followed the advice of Lord Chatham probably they would have been able to obtain by conciliation what they failed to obtain by coercion.

Why do I bring this up? For this reason: Standing here in the closing years of my life, but still able to defend myself, I say that the policy that alone can unite this country is a policy of conciliation, and an appeal to all the best elements in us. That has been my policy for the fifty years that I have been in Parliament, and it shall remain my policy so long as God gives me health, and I hold a seat in this House.

It is true that to-day there are disturbances in Quebec, and I regret them as much as any man in the House, but if we are to accomplish what we desire in the province of Quebec—that is to say, the enforcement of the law, obedience to the law, preservation of property, and the maintenance of peace—for Heaven's sake let us drop once for all those fatal divisions and endeavour to create unity among our people. To-day, instead of this policy of conciliation, what have we? We have this last Order in Council presented by the Government, and this Order is not calculated to effect any good purpose towards winning the war. I desire as much as my hon. friend that England and France should be victorious, but I deprecate the methods which are adopted by this Order in Council. What do we find here? The first paragraph of this Order reads:

> Whereas on the 28th day of March last the opposition of a large number of the population of the city of Quebec to the enforcement of the Military Service Act, 1917, and the regulations thereunder, broke out in open violence and serious riots ensued on that day and on subsequent days, in which the rioters destroyed the office of the Deputy Registrar appointed for the district of Quebec under the said Act, and moreover caused great damage to other property, and threatened further damage, and it became necessary for the restoration of order, the protection of property and the preservation of the King's peace that these riots should be suppressed by military authority;
>
> And whereas at common law it is the duty of a military officer with the troops under his command to interfere when such interference is necessary to put down riot, insurrection or civil disturbance.

With this statement of the law I have no fault to find. It is in fact the common law of England, as I have always understood it. The military authorities are not bound to wait until the civil authorities call for help, if, in their own judgment and conscience, they believe the civil authorities are not doing enough, and that the peace should be preserved by military authority. In such case, they have a right to interfere. I do not dispute that, and, so far as that goes, I agree with it entirely, but what I am not prepared to agree to is that the common law can be amended by Order in Council. It can be amended only by the power of Parliament, and Sir, what a falling down of the Government within the last three days. The Prime Minister referred to this very question three days ago, and he said:

> Further than that, if in any part of this country it appears that, by reason of the enforcement of this Act, the municipal or local authorities are unable or are not disposed to preserve public order, it will devolve upon the Government of this country to see that public order is preserved, and we intend to perform that duty.

The military authorities can step in, if they think the civil authorities are not performing their duty. The question then remains that if the military authorities proceed without reference to the civil authorities, it is for a jury to determine whether they are within their rights. If the military authorities are endeavouring to perform their duty, they may be amenable to a civil jury to say whether they have performed their whole duty. The statement of the Prime Minister proceeds:

> The incidents which have taken place have made it apparent to the Government that some amendments will be necessary to the Military Service Act. One of those which is now in preparation is this: That persons who engage in active or forcible resistance to the enforcement of the Act shall be forthwith enrolled in the military forces of Canada, without regard to whether their class has been called out.

Three days ago the Prime Minister, speaking in his place, stated that, in order to put in uniform a man who is not to-day called upon to go on service by the law, it was necessary to have an amendment to the Military Act. To-day this is done by Order in Council. Where is the authority of the Governor in Council to amend the statute? My hon. friend will tell me he has that power under the War Measures Act. If he tells me that, I will tell him if he has that power under the War Measures Act, he has the same power to conscript everybody, without the authority of Parliament, simply by Order in Council. But he has not that authority, and he knows it well. He had to pass a statute last session in order to enforce conscription. That law has been passed, and now when he tells me that this law which was placed on the statute last year can be amended by Order in Council, I say it is simply an abuse of the powers which are vested in the Governor in Council, and it is assuming a power which the Governor in Council does not possess.

We are here to-day, proud to say that we are British subjects. At all events I am proud to say so. I have always proclaimed myself a British subject. No man is a greater admirer of British institutions than I am. And why? Because if there is one authority in the British Empire which is the supreme authority, it is not the power of the King, but it is the majesty of the law; and a law can be destroyed only by another law. But let me call attention of my hon. friend to this precedent: In 1798, when Ireland was in a state of rebellion, the French had sent an expedition to Ireland under the command of General Hoche, and Wolfe Tone, a member of that expedition, was captured by the military authorities, court-martialled and sentenced to death. But habeas corpus proceedings were taken, and Wolfe Tone was taken out of the custody of the military authorities, and declared a free subject—free from the military authorities altogether. My last word is this: We must have peace, we must have order, we must have protection for our property and the law must be observed. I say this with the greater authority in that I am not a believer in the law. I thought it was a mistake, but it has been adopted by the Canadian people, and the will of the people is the law.

Right hon. Sir ROBERT BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what has been put forward in this debate. I shall not pretend, in making the few observations that I shall offer, to follow precisely everything that has been alleged by all the speakers. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) has gone into these matters with a good deal of detail as to which it is perhaps not necessary that I should follow him. I should not care to commit myself absolutely to his conception of the events that occurred during the last session of Parliament. He, and the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) as well, seemed to be impressed with the idea that the Military Service Act has been enforced with too great moderation in the province of Quebec, and my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is impressed with a contrary appreciation of the situation in that province.

There were some observations made in regard to the newspaper press of the country and particularly the newspaper press in the province of Quebec. The general principle of British parliamentary government—and that principle has received no stronger illustration than in the United Kingdom itself—has been not to interfere with the right of free speech unless it is absolutely necessary by reason of a great emergency. Any one who has seen men, even during this war, airing their opinions and criticisms in Hyde Park will realize the truth of what I am saying. I do not know anything about the advertisement which is alleged to have been inserted in Le Devoir. I presume the hon. gentleman who brought it to the attention of the House is right in his conception that these matters have been left to some business agency apart altogether from any consideration of patronage and that the advertisement has found its way into the columns of Le Devoir in that way. I do not know of any other explanation.

Reference was also made by the hon. member for Simcoe to Col. Machin's interview with Col. Lavergne. I have documents under my hand to show that the interview which took place, I think at the suggestion of Mr. Taschereau, was not an interview by Col. Machin in any official capacity as he so explained to Col. Lavergne at the time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Alleyn Taschereau?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Alleyn Taschereau. I have Mr. Taschereau's statement and Col. Machin's statement in regard to it. It is not necessary for me to stop to read these to the House. I shall give them to the press afterwards if necessary. At all events I believe that the statements of these gentlemen give a correct version of what occurred.

The hon. member for Simcoe seemed to think that very drastic amendments should be made to the Military Service Act. He suggests that every man in Canada should have been taken from his occupation and put under drill at once.

Mr. CURRIE: I did not say that; I said those in class "A".

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: He suggests that every one in class "A" should be taken from his ordinary and usual avocation and put under drill at once. My hon. friend and the members of the House generally will realize that such was not the principle upon which the Military Service Act was passed. The Military Service Act received the approval of a very large majority in the last Parliament and it also received very strong support from the people of Canada in the last election. It was based upon the principle that we should endeavour to find out, as to every man in Canada, whether or not he would give better service at the front or better service in the avocation in which he is engaged. That was the principle which commended itself to us and that was the principle which was affirmed by the people at the last election. I do not deny that it may be necessary, and I have so stated in the House, to make amendments to the Military Service Act, and as my right hon. friend has observed, we have made one already. I shall come to his criticism of the action of the Government in that regard in a very few moments.

The hon. member for Vancouver, if I gathered his meaning correctly, seemed to be under the impression that there had been one application of this law in eight provinces of Canada and an entirely different application of it in the province of Quebec. So far as the efforts of the Government are concerned I must take the strongest possible objection to such a statement. There has been nothing of the kind. The effort of the Government has been to enforce this law impartially, considerately, firmly and without any distinction whatever in every province of Canada. That has been the purpose and it has been carried out to the best of our ability. I want to say, in justice to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), that no man could have worked more indefatigably to give that Act effect in the province of Quebec than he has done during all the time that he has had it under his administration. Hon. gentlemen who are suggesting that the Government have been lax in the enforcement of this law in Quebec should recollect that it has been enforced with sufficient firmness in that province to bring about the unfortunate conditions which have prevailed in the city of Quebec during the past week. On the one hand we are told that the disturbances in the city of Quebec are due to the fact that we have enforced this law too rigorously and too sternly——

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: And on the other hand we are told that the law has been enforced in a very lax manner in that province.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not what I said. What I said was that the way in which the Act was being administered in the province of Quebec was entirely different from the way it was being administered in the other eight provinces.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I accept the correction of my hon. friend and I shall come to that in a moment. What step did the Government take when this Act was first proclaimed? The Minister of Justice brought a recommendation to Council that a Military Service Council should be formed. The Deputy Minister of Justice was a member of that Council of which the Minister of Justice was chairman. The gentlemen who were selected were very able and capable men. They were Colonel Biggar from Edmonton, Colonel Moss from Toronto, Colonel Machin from the western part of the province of Ontario and Mr. Loranger from Quebec. They have been active and indefatigable, giving their whole time to the work and there has been no step taken and no act done or left undone in so far as I am aware, without their absolute approval and concurrence.

I realize perfectly that the conditions in the province of Quebec have made it difficult, not to enforce the Act, but to enforce it with the expedition which the Government, and the country for that matter, would have desired. I entirely understand and appreciate that, but I should like the House and the country to understand that there are some misapprehensions abroad as to what the total result of that Act has been up to the present time. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) told us a moment ago the we would have had better results in procuring reinforcements for the overseas service if we had adhered to the voluntary system. He did not give us any evidence in support of that statement, and I venture to say that his view on that subject cannot be supported by any evidence.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: In the month of August last we recruited 3,117 men. In the month of September last we recruited 3,588 men, and there is not the slightest doubt that a good many of these men came to the colours for the reason that they knew compulsory service was about to be enforced.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Without that Bill before the House there is no question that the number who came forward in that way would have been very much smaller. What have we done during the last seven weeks? I have given the figures for August and September, which comprise nearly nine weeks, but in the last seven weeks, by means of the Military Service Act, we have brought to the colours 16,000 men. I venture to say, with the utmost possible confidence, that no such results, no results even approaching them, could have been attained if we had continued the system of voluntary service.

I should like to say further that since the first day of October last, which is about the date on which this Act was proclaimed, 50,000 men have joined the Canadian colours; 18,000 of these have been recruited in the United States, and 32,000 have been recruited under the Military Service Act. From the first day of October, 1917, to the thirtieth day of this present month of April, if the anticipated sailings for the present month are such, as I have no doubt they will be, we shall have sent overseas to the support of the gallant men who are fighting our battles there, about 47,000 Canadian soldiers.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Now, with regard to conditions in the province of Quebec, I have stated publicly, and I state it here again, that in many parts of that province exemptions were granted almost wholesale by the tribunals of first instance. There is no doubt about that. What was the result? The Government had given its pledge to the people of Canada that it would see to it that that Act was enforced fairly, and impartially, and firmly in every province. What, then, was our duty? Our duty was to see to it that by appeals we brought these cases up to the Central Appeal Judge, so that in the end there would be a fair, a just, a uniform and an impartial administration of that Act for all the provinces and all the people of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: We have done that. A great many appeals have already come up from the province of Quebec to the Central Appeal Judge—appeals lodged by the Government of this country, and necessarily so, in order that there might be a just and fair enforcement of the Act. I believe that there are at the present time above twenty thousand appeals which have been disposed of by the appelate tribunals in the province of Quebec, and which are being brought up to the Central Appeal Judge as rapidly as possible.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE: Is it true that only six hundred of these appeals have reached the Central Appeal Judge?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I am not prepared to state how many have reached him. I say that that number I have mentioned are ready to come forward. In order that they may be brought forward they have to be classified, information has to be procured, a case has to be stated for the Central Appeal Judge, and eventually, when the appeals begin to come forward in rapidly increasing numbers in the immediate future, it will probably be necessary that the Central Appeal Judge, in order that they may be expeditiously disposed of, shall have further assistance, which he can obtain under the terms of the Military Service Act. But besides that, as I understand, there are more than twenty thousand other cases in the province of Quebec, nearly all, if not all, of which have been passed upon by the tribunals of first instance, but which have not yet been passed upon by the appelate tribunals. Of course, it was the duty of the Government, with such a mass of appeals in that province, to expedite by every possible means in its power the hearing of those appeals, and that the Government has done. The Minister of Justice, since he returned to Ottawa, about the middle of January, made a personal visit to the city of Montreal, saw the Chief Justice and the other judges of the courts there, and urged upon them, in the national interest, the absolute necessity that they should lay everything else to one side and expedite these appeals. He had an interview also with Sir François Lemieux, Chief Justice of the Court in the Quebec district, and urged the same consideration upon him. The Minister of Justice found on the part of those judges an absolute disposition to lend themselves to the enforcement of the Act in this way. They have been disposing of these appeals very rapidly indeed in the city of Montreal, and I believe also in the city of Quebec. The appeals have been disposed of at the rate of about two thousand a week in Montreal; indeed, I am informed that all the civil business of the province has been put to one side by the provincial courts, and that those courts at the present time are occupying themselves absolutely and solely with the enforcement of the Military Service Act.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Under these circumstances, I venture to question whether under the terms of the Act as it stands to-day it would have been possible for the Government to have taken any measure which has not been taken. I also venture to believe that within the present month results will come from the enforcement of the Act by the disposal of these appeals which will be reasonably satisfactory to the Government, to the Parliament, and to the people of this country.

My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has spoken upon this question, sometimes with a good deal of warmth, and I desire to devote a few moments to certain of his observations. He stated in the early part of his remarks that the people of the district which he represents in Parliament, and in which these riots occurred, are highly sensitive to injustice. I do not know that the people there differ in that respect from the people of any other part of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: All the people of Canada are sensitive to injustice, and all the people of Canada, I hope are law-abiding to as great an extent as those whom he represents. The right hon. gentleman states that on the occasion to which he alludes one of the young men produced his papers and the other did not; and, to the action of the officers on that occasion, he attributes the riots and disturbances which afterwards occurred. He attaches great importance to the fact that the young man was not permitted to telephone to his parents from the bowling alley, but was taken to the police station, and a telephone message, or some message, was there sent to his parents. That does not seem to be an incident which would reasonably account for the disturbance that subsequently took place. I assure my right hon. friend that incidents of the same character by the hundred have occurred in other parts of the country, and there has been no riot. I entirely admit that the enforcement of a law like this, without any previous system of registration, occasions a great deal of difficulty to the Government, and, very often, a great deal of inconvenience to the people among whom it is enforced. But we are in a time of war, and is there to be a riot in Quebec, or any where else, because, instead of permitting a young man to telephone to his home and bring his parents to him, he was taken to the police station and a message was sent from there? That was my right hon. friend's point, nothing more and nothing less. Upon that, and certain other considerations to which I shall call attention, he bases his argument. He says that the men who have been selected to enforce this Act in the province of Quebec are not of a proper type. But he also says that the higher officers who have been selected in that province are of the right type, and he found no fault with them. These constables were selected, I have not the slightest doubt, by the very men whom he commends, and he, and every hon. gentleman, must understand that when you seek for men to enforce an Act of this nature amongst an unsympathetic population you cannot always get men of the most polite and refined type.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The Minister of Justice, and those who have been advising him in these matters, have undoubtedly done the best they could in that regard, and I find in the statements of my right hon. friend no justification whatever for his suggestion that these riots are due to some act of the Government

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: And I feel that that observation, and cerain others, to which my right hon friend gave utterance, are particularly unfortunate in view of the conditions which prevail in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My right hon. friend says that the leaders in these disturbances were not Quebec men.

Sir SAM HUGHES: He said that they were not from Quebec city.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: That they were not residents of Quebec city. I hope that is so. I do not know. But I do regret that, if they were not citizens of Quebec, the appeals which they made produced so great an effect upon the population of Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My right hon. friend finds fault also with the Government because he thinks Gen. Lessard should have been employed sooner. My right hon. friend would not desire to mislead the House in any way, and therefore I presume that he has forgotten what I stated in the late Parliament. I personally sent for Gen. Lessard nearly two years ago and asked him to take charge of recruiting in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I not only asked him, but I very strongly urged him to do it; and after mature reflection and consideration he declined to undertake that duty. We sent him to the city of Quebec some months ago, and he remained there during the early part of the enforcement of this Act; and then, owing to requirements in the Maritime Provinces, he had to be sent there to deal with certain important matters. When this riot broke out we ordered him to proceed to Quebec and take command there, and he has done so. He has discharged his duty well and adequately and I do not doubt that he will continue so to do.

My right hon. friend then went on to criticise the Order in Council that we have brought down, and, in what sense I do not know, he said there has been a great falling down by the Government. He quoted some words which I uttered in this House a few days ago, and he intimated that in some way the Government had departed from that promise. I said that the Military Service Act was to be amended in a certain respect, and the Military Service Act has been amended in that respect.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: My right hon. friend says that we should have come to Parliament. I say that, under the conditions that confront this country at the present time, we would have been derelict in our duty if we had waited to come to Parliament. I felt, and I still feel, that we should act at once, and we did act at once. It will be open to my right hon. friend, if he desires to do so, to challenge our action by a vote in this House.

He says that we should have the spirit of conciliation; that this is not the spirit of conciliation; that the Order in Council contains authority to give to the military control in any proclaimed district. That law is of general application throughout Canada, just as the Military Service Act is of general application. Whenever conditions arise in the province of Quebec, or in any part of that province, or in any other province in Canada, which bring it within the terms of that Order in Council, the powers which it confers will be exercised.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: I do not for a moment agree that upon the considerations which my right hon. friend has put forward we could shrink from discharging a duty which we owe to the whole country at a time of riot and insurrection in Quebec city. My right hon. friend refers to the civil authorities. Why did not the civil authorities in the city of Quebec act when the riot first broke out?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: The civil authorities did not act. Were we then to hold our hand? No, we are not to hold our hand. In this I think my right hon. friend agrees: that it was our duty to use such force as was found necessary to prevent disorder, to preserve public peace, and to ensure the enforcement of the Military Service Act. I would further suggest to my right hon. friend that expressions such as he has used are not helpful to that very conciliation for which he so strongly appeals. I concur in that appeal, but he tells us in a very eloquent period: "Now is the time to put aside all our differences, to stand together and unite as one people in the carrying on of this war;" then, in the same breath he attacks the Government in violent language and characterizes the passing of this necessary Order in Council as an abuse of power.

Some hon. MEMBERS: So it is.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Do my hon. friends on the other side think that observations of that character are desirable under the conditions which prevail at present in this province?

Mr. McMASTER: We think that when Parliament is sitting the Government might trust the representatives of the Canadian people to legislate in accordance with the necessities of the situation.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: And we think also that the representatives of the people in Parliament assembled will trust the Government in an emergency to act so that riot and insurrection shall not be repeated. Whether my hon. friend agrees with me or not, that is the policy by which this Government will stand or fall.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Has not the Government of Canada the authority of the people, conferred under the War Measures Act, to act in such cases?

Sir ROBERT BORDEN: Of course it has. The War Measures Act of 1914 speaks for itself; it confers on the Government the most absolute authority in that regard. I entirely agree that under ordinary conditions it is proper for the Government to come to Parliament, and as a general rule we have observed that policy. But when there is emergency; when there is riot and insurrection, I venture to think that we would not be fit to sit on these benches unless we were prepared to act instantly. We have shown that we are prepared so to act, and, in the province of Quebec as elsewhere, we shall see to it that there is no obstruction to the enforcement of the Military Service Act, and that the King's peace is kept there as in every part of Canada.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 28, respecting The Belleville, Prince Edward Bridge Company.—Mr. Porter.

Bill No. 29, respecting a patent of O. G. C. L. J. Overbeck.—Mr. Fripp.

THE QUEBEC DISTURBANCES.

MOTION BY MR. J. A. CURRIE TO ADJOURN THE HOUSE TO DISCUSS.

Consideration of the motion of Mr. J. A. Currie to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the rioting, agitation, disturbances, and non-observance of law in Quebec, together with all the circumstances, conditions and causes, near and remote, having any bearing on or connection therewith, resumed.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to say that I regret very much the disorderly scenes of which the city of Quebec has recently been the theatre. These disturbances should not have occurred, and those who are responsible for them have certainly incurred a very great responsibility. Whatever provocation there may have been, whatever abuses may have occurred, whatever resentment may have been caused by certain events which are still recent, there was no justification for rioting or unlawful resort to violence. The majesty of the law is supreme, and the law must be respected. I sincerely trust that in future better counsels will prevail and that the demand of my right hon. leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will be effectively responded to. But certainly the desired goal will not be reached as a result of the speeches we have been compelled to listen to this afternoon from the other side of the House. Order is frequently broken by passion, inadvertency, or blunder, but it can hardly be restored by monitors like the mover of this motion. He cannot even govern his own passion while condemning the impetuosity of others. Knowing the hon. gentleman as I do, I fully expected that he would use the unfortunate occurrences in the city of Quebec to gain what he thought would be a paltry advantage over political opponents—opponents, I might say, in the ranks of the Government, as well as on this side of the House. It has been suggested that we should let the vituperations of the hon. member pass unnoticed. I think every one will admit that since the opening of the session we on this side of the House have scrupulously refrained from doing or saying anything calculated to arouse passion or even excitement in the country. We have offered no criticism or comment on the disturbances that took place in the city of Quebec, being desirous that those whose obvious duty it was to restore peace and order should be untrammelled in every respect; but when hon. gentlemen have what I would call the insolence to come upon the floor of this House and throw mud at us—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I think the hon. gentleman is using language that is hardly parliamentary.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and withdraw the word. I will say when hon. gentlemen insult us——

Mr. SPEAKER: I think that is unparliamentary also.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Again I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I certainly do not wish to clash with you, Sir, at the outset of my remarks. I will say when hon. gentlemen use language of a nature not calculated to please us—we can, of course, treat it with silent contempt. There is a limit, however, beyond which silence only invites further humiliation, and that is my excuse for answering the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Currie). Perhaps some hon. gentleman on the other side of the House may be excused for attempting to divert attention from what has gone on in this House since the opening of the session. Quite a few of them have been daily shooting at the ministerial citadel, forgetful of the fact that it was garrisoned by themselves. It may be good tactics now to introduce a diversion and direct the shooting at the province of Quebec. The abusing of Quebec seems to be the only solid ground of this patriotic Union Government. If striking at the province of Quebec, if insulting us—I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker—if displeasing us is the only material that can cement the amalgamation, hon. gentlemen opposite are quite welcome to do it; we are able to withstand the onslaught. The history of the past and the lessons which have been bequeathed to us by our ancestors teach us that those who make the onslaught do not always come off victors in the fight. Certain supporters of the Government have been elected on the cry: "Quebec shall not rule Canada," and it is doubtless to be expected that the illegitimate products of such a narrow and brutal appeal will need the same food and fuel to maintain their spirit and effectiveness; and this must be the reason why the campaign against Quebec is still going on in so many quarters, while at the same time strong appeals are being made for unity and concord. The people of Quebec read and heard of both the abuse and the appeals. They read the sane articles of hon. members of this House when they are published in respectable newspapers and reviews, like the Canadian Magazine, for instance, and some of us even go to the extent of putting on a gas mask and reading the views expressed in the Orange Sentinel. Only a few days ago we were told by a certain minister of the Crown of the Ontario Government that we deserved to be classed with the Germans and Austrians. Now, everybody in the province of Quebec reads those utterances. That good Tory newspaper, the Quebec Chronicle, said of this particular minister that his statesmanship must be of the asinine kind; but that, I think, was most unfair to the ass, because even if the ass is as stupid as that gentleman, he is very much less of a mischief-maker. What is the purpose of all these attacks? Surely they are not made with the intention of converting us or changing our way of thinking. The campaign is not intended for circulation in our midst, and it is not conducted in a way calculated to have any good effect on our fellow-countrymen. Again, I ask, what is the purpose of that campaign? The only purpose I can see in it is to arouse passion and prejudice, and to create an ill feeling against two million fellow-Canadians for the sake of gaining a miserable political advantage. Especially is it to be regretted at this time when national unity is desired, not only for the successful prosecution of the war, but for the solution of the great national problems, and even the Imperial problems which will have to be solved during the after-war period. True it is that this eminent pork-seller and conserver of dead chickens, Sir Joseph Flavelle, notified us last year in his speech before the Canadian Club of Ottawa that we should have no voice in the solution of these problems, but he may have been mistaken, and the democratic people in all parts of the country may have just as much to say as the noble class of lords, barons, knights and others, of whom Sir Joseph Flavelle is so distinguished a representative. Sir, a better union is needed for Canada. Everybody admits that, except those who live out of hatred and discord and who nurse their wrath to keep it warm. But, Sir, the first condition of a possible union is mutual respect, to say nothing of common courtesy and politeness. Our partnership must be based on absolute equality and respect for pledges. We do not want to bury our Canadian aspirations, our customs, our higher traditions, ideals, and principles, even for the purpose of being friends. We believe that in this land which our forefathers discovered, and which they have built up and developed we have the right to live in the full enjoyment of liberty, and that nothing has ever happened to deprive us of that right. The sooner everybody realizes that it is impossible in this country for one of the great partners in the Canadian association to compel others to think as he does, or speak as he does, the better it will be for the country and for all concerned. The Germans have forced the sons of Alsace and Lorraine to learn their ridiculous goose-step, but they have never won their hearts, and surely nobody in this country would like to copy Prussian methods. There is no disguising the fact that there is in Quebec province a disquieting feeling and a feeling of unrest, and it is, indeed, a tragedy to apply the fine word "union" to the work of disruption which the right hon. Prime Minister has been so unfortunate as to achieve. Conscription and the circumstances under which it was enacted and carried out are only amongst the causes of that feeling. The constant and permanent flow of insults and misrepresentations which our people have to suffer is a more direct cause. I was strongly opposed to conscription—yes, and I am still opposed to it, although I always told my electors and fellow-countrymen that they must obey and observe the law. I need not repeat the grounds of my opposition to conscription. But, Sir, those reasons have been deliberately and criminally misrepresented throughout Canada, and even in the British Empire, in order to secure the success of the Government. We opposed conscription because we believed the voluntary system was the only one suited for this country and the best system to obtain the end every one of us desired of winning the war. We fought against this measure because we believed the pledges of the Prime Minister and the other public men of this country ought to be respected and ought not to be treated as so many "scraps of paper." I opposed conscription because I thought it was a constitutional change and a radical departure from the principles which were agreed to by all those who were party to the building of Confederation. We have been accused of being indifferent or even hostile to the great cause of the Allies. It has been said everywhere that we were against further participation in the war, and that we wanted to desert the Canadian boys who are fighting on the glorious battlefields of France. No more infamous or diabolical lies have ever forced their way through human lips. Some people profess to be more generous and more patronizing. They say our attitude is due to our lack of understanding of the real conditions, and to our ignorance as to what is going on in the world. I have read that statement made by patriotic old ladies, kind clergymen and other supporters of the Government, and I am sure some of the members of this House must be of their opinion. I would like to know how many of those who thus believe that we are provincialist, sectional and living in gross ignorance of everything that is going on in the world, read more newspapers and other literature than I do, or than most of the gentlemen do who represent my province here. We are reading their newspapers and we are reading our own, which, as a rule, they cannot do. Most of us are reading British newspapers, and we read also the newspapers of old France, which, again, many cannot do. Do you not think, Mr. Speaker, that we can stand a fair comparison, as to our knowledge of what goes on in the world, with the exclusive readers of the Toronto News, the Ottawa Journal, the Free Press of Winnipeg, and even that radiant beacon light, the Orange Sentinel. As to the material effect of conscription, in regard to the help that Great Britain and her Allies shall receive by virtue of its enforcement, the facts, in spite of what the right hon. gentleman said this afternoon, already prove that we are right. All impartial authorities admit to-day that conscription has been a failure. A larger number of men would have been secured by voluntary enlistment, even at the rate enlistment was going on when conscription was introduced. Even newspapers friendly to the Government admit that a blunder was committed, and even the good old Tory organ, the Quebec Chronicle, in the edition of February 26, published an editorial, with which I will not weary the House, under the heading of "The Great Refusal," and the Chronicle was not excusing the other provinces any more than Quebec. Very naturally in Ontario the blame is placed at the door of Quebec.

The statistics show that the accusation is unfounded. What were the registrations in Ontario and Quebec respectively? I find that 125,750 men registered in Ontario and 117,104 registered in Quebec. There were 8,646 more men in Ontario than in Quebec in class one. According to a statement issued from Ottawa—

Mr. SPEAKER: I have not been unduly strict in applying the rules in this debate but I have tried to prevent hon. members from entering into a discussion of the Military Service Act. It is quite germane to the discussion at various points, but the hon. member in proceeding to discuss the Military Service Act is not in order.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to call your attention to the fact that I am called upon to answer statements made on the other side of the House this afternoon even by the Prime Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: As I understood the remarks of the Prime Minister, he drew no distinction as between provinces.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He said that in Quebec there were wholesale exemptions. The hon. member for North Simcoe said that also. I am going to prove that the comparison between Quebec and Ontario is a very fair one to make. According to a statement issued from Ottawa, up to the 10th January there were 94,197 exemptions in Ontario and 89,575 in Quebec. These figures are very illustrative but quite naturally our good friends from Ontario loudly protested and clamoured that these miserable people from Quebec were getting too many exemptions. They were seeing the mote in the eye of Quebec. Quite naturally also the Government instituted a large number of appeals against the Quebec exemptions and a small number of appeals against the Ontario exemptions, namely, at that date, January 10, 10,638 appeals in Ontario as against 25,115 in Quebec. A considerable number of appeals have been instituted in Quebec. I believe the hon. member for North Simcoe said that actually there were 60,000 appeals from exemptions in Quebec. That shows that appeals are made against exemptions in the province of Quebec and they do not seem to be made to such a large extent in the province of Ontario.

Mr. EDWARDS: The hon. gentleman says that his figures are very illuminating. Would it not be even more illuminating if he would just give us, in conjunction with these figures, the number of enlistments since the war started in Ontario and the number in Quebec?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I believe I would not be observing the ruling of Mr. Speaker if I were to do that. In spite of the pleasure that I would have in obliging my hon. friend, I prefer to remain parliamentary. Now, Sir, as to the delays which have been referred to in dealing with the appeals from the province of Quebec, I wish you to recollect the fact that according to the law, as made by this Parliament, there are only thirty-six judges in Quebec who are empowered to hear these appeals, while there are ninty-one judges to hear the smaller number of appeals instituted in Ontario. If there is a congestion in the Quebec courts, is that province, or anybody in Quebec, to be made responsible for it? Is it not again a clear case of the province of Quebec being made the scapegoat?

Apart from these regrettable troubles in Quebec, the young men of the province, have observed, and are observing, the law, notwithstanding, and in spite of all the provocations, insults, abuse and arbitrary deeds which would have had serious consequences among any other people. Why, this Government, as was said by my right hon. leader this afternoon, or rather its predecessor—because I hope no Liberals would have consented to do that—employed detectives, especially the notorious Tit-Noir Desjardins, who is well known in that province, for the purpose of giving money to ex-convicts liberated on ticket-of-leave by the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) to induce these men to commit criminal acts, to dynamite Lord Atholstan's property and to do other things of that nature. This man was actually indicted before the criminal courts, and when no respectable citizen undertook to give a bond on his behalf, the Department of Justice of Canada sent a cheque for $10,000 to get Tit-Noir Desjardins out of jail.

In the meantime the farmers are appealed to for greater production. Our province is a purely agricultural province and the farmers, while willing to do their utmost to help production, do not know whether they can undertake the work and rely upon the labour of their sons who are needed in the field. Lord Rhondda said lately that food power was co-equal with man power under the present circumstances and that relief must come from America. Mr. Lloyd George said that the food producer is a more needed soldier than the one who bears a rifle. I represent a county in which there are no cities or towns. It is a purely agricultural county, one of the best agricultural districts in eastern Canada. The population is entirely composed of farmers and there are, Mr. Speaker, actually 600 appeals pending before the tribunals from exemptions granted to these farmers' sons in Kamouraska county. If, according to Lord Rhondda, food power is co-equal with manpower, and if, according to Mr. Lloyd George, the man who cultivates the land is more needed than the one who carries a rifle, I claim that no man has the right to call these young men shirkers or slackers. They are acting for the best interests not only for Canada but for the British Empire. The most regrettable fact is, perhaps, the breaking of solemn pledges which has destroyed for a good many years the faith and confidence of an important part of the people in the honour and truthfulness of Canadian public men. But, Sir, we are being told: You have your opinion regarding the Military Service Act and you are entitled to that opinion; we have a different opinion, we fought it out and the majority went against you.

What we have to do is to bow and gracefully acquiesce in the finding of the majority. I agree that the law must be observed, but I do not admit that the verdict at the last election was a fair verdict. That verdict was not given by all the people who were entitled to pronounce upon the issue, and the battle was fought on ground quite different from that involved in a reference to the people of the question of conscription. The late Government, before going to the country, ran away from the judgment of those who had elected them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member might explain to the House how he connects such statements with the subject at issue.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: I will bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but if you will permit me I will explain how I came to take up this subject. It has been stated this afternoon by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie), and repeated afterwards by the right hon. the Prime Minister, that the issue of conscription had been overwhelmingly approved by the people of Canada, and that everybody now should also approve it, and accept the verdict.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member himself has said that the law is on the statute book and must be obeyed.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Certainly.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member must deal with the subject more closely.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: I am trying to explain what the feeling is in the province of Quebec at the present time, which I think is within the purview of the discussion before the House. Related to that feeling, in my humble opinion, is the fact that the verdict of the people, which is claimed by the gentlemen opposite as being an endorsation of their policy, cannot carry the influence and the consideration which a verdict obtained under ordinary, fair and natural circumstances, would naturally carry. But if you do not permit me to proceed, how am I to explain that everybody in the province of Quebec, as I think everywhere else in Canada, resents the tampering with the electoral law of the country on the part of the Government before appealing to the people?

Mr. SPEAKER: The door has already been opened too wide in this debate in permitting discussion of the Military Service Act. I certainly do not intend to permit the War-time Elections Act also to be discussed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I only want to explain the feeling of the people, but I will bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, except to the extent of saying, if you will permit me, that we have no friends, or practically no friends in the press of the country outside of my own province. Except in the province of Quebec the press is under the control of the present Government. We have been misrepresented for months and months. We have nobody to defend us, and the voice of my province has no other forum for expression than the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. No one disputes that this is a forum for the ventilation of grievances, but that has nothing to do with the subject before the House at the moment. The hon. member has ample opportunity, in various ways under the rules of discussing almost any subject, but not on the motion before the House at the moment.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well, I will not refer to the War-time Elections Act.

Mr. BUREAU: That is a sore spot.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will not refer to the fact that only a portion of the women of the country were permitted to vote, but I think I can fairly argue that the last election was not decided upon the issue of conscription. I think that is a fair answer to what has been said on the other side of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: I wish again to direct the hon. member's attention to the fact that we are considering a motion made under Rule 39 for the purpose of discussing the disturbances, and the agitations and non-observance of the law in Quebec.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but the member for Simcoe (Mr. Currie) who moved the resolution did not refer to the Quebec riots. Surely if I cannot follow his example I am sitting on the wrong side of the House.

Mr. CURRIE: On two occasions it has been said that I did not refer to the Quebec riots. In my address I dealt with the riots in the province of Quebec generally.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: In deference to the Speaker's ruling I will not deal further with the issues upon which the election was fought.

Now, Sir, when speaking about the disturbances in Quebec, the Prime Minister made use of the following language, foreshadowing the Orders in Council which have been brought down this afternoon. As will be found at page 251 of Hansard, the right hon. gentleman said on April 2nd last:

> The incidents which have taken place have made it apparent to the Government that some amendments will be necessary to the Military Service Act. One of those which is now in preparation is this: That persons who engage in active or forcible resistance to the enforcement of the Act shall be forthwith enrolled in the military forces of Canada, without regard to whether their class has been called out; without regard to any exemption that they may have procured, and subject only to the consideration that they are within military age. I believe that is a proper principle to adopt. If any persons in this country are disposed to wage war upon the civil authorities of Canada engaged in the enforcement of this Act, then it seems to me they may well be given the authority to exercise their warlike spirit upon the enemies of this country.

Mr. MURPHY: Was that said before or after the disturbances in Quebec?

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: That was said after the disturbances in Quebec. The Prime Minister stated this afternoon that he would have been derelict in his duty had he proposed the legislation before passing the Orders in Council. When he announced that legislation the disturbances had taken place in Quebec. At that time he stated in Parliament that we would have legislation upon the subject and not an Order in Council, and the Prime Minister was certainly not more derelict in his duty three days ago than he is to-day. Something must have happened to change his mind, and it was not because he was afraid of being derelict to his duty. Let me say further, with all deference to the Prime Minister, that I wish he did not try to be either witty or dignified in that remark of his, for the joke was as cheap as the statesmanship was doubtful. Those words are quite in line with the remarks he uttered when introducing the Conscription Bill in this House, referring to what might happen when the soldiers returned from overseas. I fully understand that the right hon. gentleman has to cope with many difficulties. He has to please all elements in his party, and his following; but he should not forget that history will record his words and statements; and nothing will show as an excuse for such words, not even the smiles and other expressions of exuberant satisfaction of the hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Best).

As to the Orders in Council in question, apart from being a violation of the rights of Parliament, and an unconstitutional subjection of civil power to military power, there is not any very great difference from what has been going on already on a large scale. Young men who are exempted, or who are under military age, have been violently arrested and sent to the barracks. This Order in Council will only make lawful what has heretofore been done illegally. As was once said in the Roman senate during a period of disorder: "It is the same thing to live in a country where all things are lawful than where nothing is lawful."

In that respect, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the case of one young man. I have just received a letter from one of my law partners, enclosing a copy of a letter he has sent to Col. J. L. McAvity, Officer Commanding, First Depot Battalion, New Brunswick Regiment, St. John, N.B., which reads as follows:

> Re—Alfred Bérubé, Son of Elisee of Ste. Heléne, Kamouraska County, P. Q.—
>
> This is a young man whom I know very well and who, while on a trip to Edmundston, N. B., with his brother Ernest, aged 18, was arrested, together with his brother, and they were both brought to your depot, it appears, under military custody as being recruits subject to the Military Service Act.
>
> I understand, from the certificate given to Ernest, that he has been authorized to return to his home, but that you are still keeping under custody the other one, Alfred, although evidence has been brought by himself and his family, by means of an authentic copy of his certificate of baptism, that he reached his 20th year on the 7th March, 1918, only.
>
> I have in my possession an authentic copy of this certificate, but I understand it is useless to send it to you as I am told by the mother that her son Alfred has one with him, which can be exhibited to you at any time.
>
> This man, belonging to the Province of Quebec and not being presently subject to the Military Service Act on account of his age, I do not see why he should be kept any longer in that way.
>
> His father being very ill, his mother has come to me asking me to write to my partner, Mr. Lapointe, M.P. for the County of Kamouraska, which I myself represent in the Local House, in order to have Mr. Lapointe bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Militia, but I thought advisable to write you directly and ask you to kindly yourself grant this request at once if you are in a position to do so. If not, will you kindly let me hear from you by the return of mail?
>
> Thanking you in anticipation, I remain,
>
> Yours truly,
>
> ADOLPHE STEIN.

Now, Sir, I am informed that recruits are being sent overseas every week from the city of St. John. From my seat in Parliament, I demand the release of that young man who is detained illegally under military custody in St. John, N.B., and if that gentleman, Col. McAvity, is a Prussian, I hope the Minister of Militia will call him to his senses.

Sir, it is the imperative duty of the Government, and I appeal to them in that respect, to use discretion, tact and common sense. They should not forget that Quebec is not represented in this Administration, and I say that with all deference to my hon. friends the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne). Measures promulgated by the Government cannot carry the weight and influence with us which is carried by other measures in the enacting of which, or in the execution of which, the people had a voice and were effectively represented. That is one of the reasons why I protest against the amendments to the Military Service Act being made by means of Orders in Council. In the framing of these, nobody represents the feelings, sentiments and views of an important section of the people of this country. If they were enacted by Parliament, even if we have no representative on the Treasury benches, we have at least somebody to express our point of view. There is nobody at the council table who can express the feelings and represent the views and the mentality of our section of the people. I do not complain about it. I really do not wish to be represented in the Government under the present circumstances, and constituted as it now is. What I wish to argue is, that the Government should be more cautious and use more tact and prudence in this matter by reason of the fact that so large a portion of the people of this country are not represented in the Administration, and especially when dealing with that section of the people which is unrepresented. In courts of law, judges always take greater precautions when they have to decide cases of litigants who are not represented by counsel, and the same rule should govern in the dealings of the Government with the people of Quebec. Many respectable, law-abiding citizens tell me: We are not represented in the Government; we have nobody there to speak for us, but we wish to obey the law, and even the numerous Orders in Council; all we ask is to be treated in a fair and decent way. We do not want our young men who have lived up to the requirements of the law to be insulted, reviled, and illegally put in jail like criminals by blackguards and drunkards, like those who were in my own town last week. There, young men, duly exempted were arrested by drunken brutes—I cannot call them otherwise—and taken to jail handcuffed. I know that the task of the Government is a hard one, but surely they should use greater discrimination in the selection of their officers and agents.

I wish, in conclusion, to join with my right hon. leader in appealing to my fellow-countrymen of Quebec and elsewhere not to allow any resentment to get the better of their moderation, and not hurry themselves into actions contrary to the law, which, in their cooler moments, they would regard with horror. They have always been law-abiding citizens and they must remain so. The present crisis will come to an end. I sincerely hope and trust that better times are coming, when all conscientious public men will join hands for the purpose of putting an end to racial and sectional strife and eliminating from the public life of our country all men who want to sweep away the landmarks of right and justice and break down the traditional policies of Canada.

Hon. Sir SAM HUGHES (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the address of the hon. member for the beautiful county of Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe)—and I join heartily with him in every word he has said about that splendid county, in which I have spent many a day—merely illustrates how things are going. I sat here this afternoon—and while there is not as much French blood in my veins, maybe, as in those of my good friend who has just spoken—I said to myself while the hon. member for North Simcoe was speaking: what an example of moderation, of fair and logical conclusion, what an example of sound argument. I did not hear any "brutality," or "insult," or any of the "nasty spirit" which seemed to impress itself upon the right hon. leader of the Opposition and upon my good friend from Kamouraska. Perhaps it is just the point of view that one takes of it. At all events, it illustrates the necessity of having measures, such as the one before us to-night, brought up and discussed fairly and squarely on the floor of this House instead of in the back hustings of the various constituencies in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

When I was a barefooted boy, I well remember my father taking me to a political meeting. He was a good old Orange Tory, thank God. What did we hear? That the Tory party was hand-in-glove with the Pope of Rome in the province of Quebec; that the Tory party was hand-in-glove with a lot of Frenchmen that could not speak a word of English; that the Tory party was hand-in-glove with all the worst elements in the public life of the country.

Mr. JOSEPH READ: And the best.

Sir SAM HUGHES: We are not discussing best and worst; that is a matter of viewpoint. I said to my father: Is that the sort of outfit you are in alliance with? He said: pay no attention to that fellow, he is only a Grit spouter. The member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux)—charming, delightful, pleasant in manner—will remember that in the elections of 1896 he did not take particular pains to soothe the feeling of the people of the province of Quebec against the people of other provinces. Their cry was: "What? Are you going to vote for Tupper and the Tories who are spending $3,000,000 in the purchase of rifles to shoot down your sons and to drag them off to foreign wars?" The member for Maisonneuve will recall that the late Mr. Mackintosh, fine old member for the Eastern Townships, rose in his seat, pointed his finger at the member for Maisonneuve and told him that if he were in his proper place he would be standing not in the House of Commons,
9 p.m. but behind the bars, serving a sentence for treason. I recall these things only because it shows——

Mr. LEMIEUX: In friendship.

Sir SAM HUGHES: Yes. Let me say that I was proud of the member for Maisonneuve when, while Minister of Militia, I asked him to assist in recruiting; he gave me his hand and did everything in his power to help on recruiting in Montreal. Moreover, his relatives went to the war, and, I believe, are there yet.

Time rolled on, and an election occurred in a place called Drummond and Arthabasca. The Nationalist party of Quebec are to-day charged, paraded, slated, by our good friends of the present Opposition for raising the standard of appeals to prejudice in Quebec. What did they do? They took the identical speeches, word for word, delivered by members of the Liberal party in the elections of 1896, and they used them throughout the counties of Drummond and Arthabasca. In other words, they simply turned the guns on themselves.

In my first election a young fellow called on me one day and said: I have the stuff that is going to elect you, sure. Good boy; I said; what is it? What is the denomination? He said: Come out here and I will show you a sample of some circulars I am sending out. He then showed me two circulars, one printed on a brilliant green paper, for circulation among the holy Romans, and the other printed on orange, for circulation among the Orangemen. The orange circular was to show what the Tory party had done for the Orange cause and what the other fellows had done against it; the green circular was to show the Romans what the Tory party had done for the holy Roman cause, and what the other fellows had done against it. I said: this is a fine specimen of literature; I will take these two. I remember that in the office there was an old stove with a sliding lid. I went out, put the lid to one side and dumped the whole outfit, orange and green together, into the fire—and that ended it. I found that the fellow had been to half a dozen other constituencies, Grit and Tory alike, peddling similar wares. This sort of thing may be all right for innocents abroad, but the time has arrived in Canada when this kind of stuff should be wiped out and these appeals to the public put an end to forever.

My good friend the member for Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe) has a grievance because some young fellow from his county was bagged the other day. Why, I myself was bagged the other day.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: I am ready to protest against that, too.

Mr. POWER: The officer who did the arrestation was discharged, I understand.

Sir SAM HUGHES: The greatest compliment ever paid to me was that on this occasion I was taken to be only thirty-two years of age and that I had the most sprightly step of any young fellow in the building at that time. What did I do? I did swear a little, possibly; we might as well be frank, because when we let the truth into these matters we know just where we stand. Soon thereafter I communicated with the Minister of Justice intimating that this thing was not working out properly; that injustices were being done.

My friend points to an instance in the county of Kamouraska; why, I know of a dozen cases in my own county. One chap went to Toronto to meet his sweetheart, who was to arrive on a train from the West. Being about eighteen years of age, he was bagged at the station by one of these energetic policemen, and by the time they got through with him, six or eight hours later, his sweetheart's train had arrived. I do not know whether some other fellow ran off with the girl in the meantime; anyway, he experienced a good deal of trouble in trying to find out where she had gone. What was necessary was not a riot or a fight, but a wink to my friend the Minister of Justice to indicate that in place of pursuing men who were within the age limit and should have gone to the front without compulsion, these officers were interfering with men who had no right to be interfered with in any shape, form or manner. I do not see any reason for asking men who are not within military age or who cannot possibly be supposed to go to the front, to carry birth certificates and that sort of thing in order to identify them when accosted by a policeman, big or little, sensible or otherwise. As I have said, I communicated my views personally to the Minister of Justice; I think what I have suggested is only common sense.

This occurrence is not pecular to Kamouraska or any other particular county; it is general throughout Canada, and in this respect the way the Act is administered, is the cause of dissatisfaction. I have known the member for Kamouraska for many years; he is a fair-minded man. Let us talk frankly and squarely; I do not wish to turn a solitary corner to-night for anything. In my home county in Ontario, what is the condition of affairs? We see boys obeying the law, marching off like gentlemen and true Canadians. They are within the age; they are not exempted; they go. We see others, their neighbours, dodging, hiking for the lumber camps, hiding themselves here and there. Do you mean to tell me that there is not resentment on the part of others whose sons have gone over when they see cases of this kind? Of course there is. They say to me: Why is Jones not taken? My son goes; this fellow on the next farm is exempted. With all due regard to the Minister of Justice, I suggest to him that if he will put these Dominion policemen or these gentlemen whom he has enrolled for the purpose in each of the ridings throughout the country, I for my part will tell him the name of every man in my riding who should go. I know them all, I can tell him the names, and I shall be glad to give them to him. Let him send the police after these delinquents, not after innocent men, bagging them and taking them off trains here and there throughout the country. There will then be better results and less grievances throughout the country. These things are not peculiar to the province of Quebec or to the county of Kamouraska, but in other parts of the country we do not raise riots or break heads over these matters. I shall not follow my hon. friend further than to point out that I enjoy a good, free fight, and when we get a good square open discussion right here in Parliament, let the members come out from under the tables and chairs. I was ashamed of the Unionist party this afternoon when only twenty-one members stood up in favour of having a discussion of this subject. They are all over twenty-one years of age and have heads on their shoulders; why then should they not stand up like men and frankly and fairly discuss this question, instead of crawling under the chairs and tables for fear of exciting somebody's feelings? Let us face the issue, let us wipe out the trouble once for all, and then these mountebank politicians going around raising trouble between Quebec and other parts of Canada, will have no one to listen to them.

Next to the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir George Foster), and the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Reid), I think I am the oldest member in this House. I have had a great many fights and I never yet made an address to an Orange gathering that I could not make to a Roman Catholic gathering. One of our prize tricks used to be to get a Liberal to go to an Orange centre and make an address under the impression that he was addressing Roman Catholics. I remember very well dear old John McMillan, of Huron. The fellow who drove him out to the meeting was a good Tory, and on the drive he pointed out who lived here and who lived there,—all good solid Roman Catholics, bound to vote the other way, as was their perfect right. McMillan, when he got to the hall, did not notice a big Orange drum and a big Orange flag hanging over the platform, but went on talking, thinking he had come to a Roman Catholic centre, about the rights of Irish Home Rulers and the tyranny of these Englishmen. He did not understand what was wrong until at the close of the meeting one of the fellows went up and told him he had turned thirty votes. That is the way it goes. Let us leave the side issues alone, and get in and fight the enemy to the finish. I remember once in South Africa I came to a big camp where I saw the Inniskillen Fusiliers, every man of them an Orangeman, and the Dublin Fusiliers, every man of them a Roman Catholic, with their arms around each other's necks. I said, " Hello, I thought you beggars were always fighting each other," and the man replied, "We are never fighting each other, except when there is nobody else to fight." We have somebody else to fight just now, so let us put off fighting each other until after the war, and then we can go at it hammer and tongs, if you like. But in the meantime, let us stand shoulder to shoulder before the world to fight the Germans to a finish. What we want is to strengthen our boys in the trenches and give them backbone and confidence.

That brings me to another point, and I trust the House will excuse me if I give a few facts as to the cause of the falling off in recruiting in the province of Quebec. I did not purpose saying anything on this head, but for the remarks that fell from the right hon. leader of the Opposition. We may as well get at the facts. I will narrate the facts, and we can look for the causes afterwards, and in narrating the facts I do not want to hurt anybody's feelings, but if it be a question of hurting somebody's feelings or telling the truth I am going to tell the truth. When war broke out the first thing I did was to appoint a Roman Catholic chaplain, a dear old fellow, Jolicœur. He was a fine old fellow, and I venture to say he is as true a friend of the Allies to-day as can be found in the Dominion of Canada. I sent for him and said: "We are going to have our troops here at Valcartier to-morrow; that will be Sunday, and I want you to look after your boys; we have no place here, but will nail a few planks together and you can put a show on here." We had lots of old boards, and we fixed the old gentleman up. We wanted to meet the wishes of the French Canadian boys, and we tried to meet them every time. I communicated with the best French Canadian boys in the province of Quebec immediately. General Lessard—I made him a general, I promoted him, I made him what he is to-day, as far as titles go. When I sent for him and spoke about raising a French Canadian brigade he said that he would be the worst man in the province of Quebec, or in the Dominion of Canada, to take that in hand, because he did not like them, and they did not like him. The Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence is a splendid fellow —and, incidentally, I hope the Minister of Militia will bring his salary up to what the other deputy ministers are getting. He is a French Canadian and did valiant service in the South African war as a medical officer; every man in the forces, if they had the choice, would go to General Fiset. He is one of the finest officers a man could have the privilege of serving with. I said to him:

[Sir Sam Hughes.]

"How the mischief can we get these fellows into line? Lessard does not want to go and Landry holds back." We did everything human beings could possibly do to get these lads, and let me say that during the early part of the campaign the recruiting of the French Canadian boys was magnificent, and further, their work at the front at Courcelette, on the Somme, and at every other place where they had an opportunity, as the hon. member for North Simcoe has said this afternoon, was everything that could be desired. I am sure that if the leader of the Opposition could only have seen the spirit of these men, old as he is, and weak as his nerves may be, I think he would have risen to the occasion, and instead of bowing to the less noble element would have taken up the flag of liberty in the great struggle and gone through the province of Quebec calling on the boys to stand behind the guns of their lads who were at the front. On more than one occasion I consulted the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux). The hon. member for Maisonneuve, I think, did everything he possibly could; he did good service, I am free to say that, no matter what he did in the 1896 election, and I forgive him for all that. He did good service in this recruiting campaign, but the leader of the Opposition did not come out as I felt he should; but maybe I am wrong. He made three speeches so far as I could observe on recruiting, one at Napanee, the United Empire Loyalist centre, a splendid place to go and speak on recruiting. He got sick afterwards, I do not know from what cause, but he was laid up for a long time. Then he made a speech in Montreal and another in Quebec, I think. I read those speeches in both the French and English papers, and found three references to bilingualism and only two to recruiting. Those were all the recruiting meetings he spoke at, so far as I know.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the meetings in Sherbrooke?

Sir SAM HUGHES: I did not hear about those. I am glad to hear about them. What was the next step in recruiting? As I said, we offered a corps to every leading French Canadian officer. When an officer came to me, I would say, "Delighted; here is your commission—go ahead and raise a battalion," and a great many of them tried it, and succeeded for a time, but gradually the boys melted away. We observed this with sorrow. At Valcartier I offered General Landry the command of a brigade,

I offered him any French officers he should choose to command his battalions, but he did not materialize more than enough for two-thirds of one battalion from the province of Quebec. I spoke to General Lessard and General Landry; and General Fiset did his level best to get these men to raise battalions. As time wore on I secured not one or two, but twenty or thirty or forty or fifty of the best boys from the front trenches, and these lads distinguished themselves at St. Julien. Let me say here, that I was sorry to-day to hear some hon. gentlemen sneer at Colonel Currie when he remarked that he had been in the fight. It is the easiest thing in the world for a coward to sneer at the men who risked their lives, but Colonel Dansereau told me that he stood within six feet of Colonel Currie every hour of the first three days of that fight, until two o'clock Saturday, and my own son has a copy of the ord r which he gave Colonel Currie about two o'clock on Saturday afternoon, ordering him to withdraw from the fighting line, there to be replaced by two British battalions, and less than 200 men out of 1,000 marched out. We brought back these veterans.

I thought the name DeSalaberry would thrill the people of Quebec, but let us be frank and tell the story. I must say that I was proud of Colonel DeSalaberry. He went down to Rockland; he was practically assaulted by the parish priest, who threatened him with all sorts of penalties, practically drove him from the village, and ordered the boys not to enlist. The same thing holds true up and down the Ottawa valley. Colonel DeSalaberry came to me and told me there was no use his trying to raise a French Canadian battalion, that a great many of the clergymen were fired by the teaching of the Old Country clergymen who were expatriated from France years ago. Colonel DeSalaberry gave it up, and went over in command of an English battalion. I saw that he got his battalion. I thought the grandson of the hero of Chateauguay was entitled to some recognition, and he got it. But everywhere there was a hidden hand.

Take the case of the 41st Battalion. We had to enlist nearly 5,000 men to get 1,100. I think that is about the number. We enlisted nearly 5,000 men and they gradually melted away and finally we got about 1,100 to go over. I do not know the cause. I am telling facts as they occurred, and hon. gentlemen can look for the cause themselves. I suspected at once a German agency. I communicated that thought to some of my colleagues but we had no proof of it at the time.

I want to make another statement here of a fact which will not be denied. Some of these clergymen were expatriated from France for violation of the French laws I suppose. I am not going to discuss that because I do not know. But they were in the city of Quebec and eight of these clergymen were found with a collection of German propaganda circulated from the United States, coming into this country. I did not have them arrested. I simply refer you to the fact, but if you doubt it ask Inspector Green, a good Irishman, who was post office inspector, and I left it for him to settle with them. One of these gentlemen went to the United States and has since died. I think the others followed across the lines, but they were all busily engaged in circulating German propaganda through Quebec. It is not much wonder that these splendid boys, who would be only too glad to have upheld the honour of France, of Canada, of the Empire, and human liberty in this great war were influenced, many of them by teachings such as that. Some one said to me: "there is an officer at the front, Colonel J. B. White, of the Hawkesbury Lumber Company, who employed upwards of 200,000 men in his day in the Ottawa Valley, and he will raise a battalion inside of a week." We cabled for him and brought him home. He came to me and told me he would guarantee to raise me a French Canadian battalion inside of two weeks. I said "God bless you my boy, go ahead, I will give you every help I can." But I never dreamt he would get them. The French lads who had gone to the front did well, they were enthusiastic in the cause and did their level best. Dozens of men besides Colonel DeSalaberry tried to get the boys to enlist, but some influence was at work with them and they disappeared a few days after they came in. There was nothing of this kind in Ontario and there was no question of a Military Service Act. Everybody was loyal, and all were looking at the front line trenches. Colonel White came home and called a large number of his foremen together and said: "I want each of you to get me a few boys, and in a few days we will have a battalion." Inside of two weeks Colonel White came to me and said: "The jig is up; we cannot raise the men."

I am not going to turn a corner; we may as well face the facts and thresh it out and know where we stand. Colonel White said: "These foremen come to me and say the men will not enlist; the clergy, these old country clergymen have disseminated the teachings that this is a just judgment on France for having expatriated the Church," and he could not get enough to form a corporal's guard in the whole of the Ottawa Valley. I gave Colonel White command of an English-speaking battalion. In the meantime Colonel White said: "They say that the advice of the clergy to them is to let the English-speaking people go to the front; you can go up into Ontario and get their jobs; stay at home and earn good money, and if they get killed you will retain their places."

Let me inform the right hon. leader of the Opposition that we held our counsel and worked on and on. I tried to get his assistance not only from my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux), but from another gentleman, I forget his name.

An hon. MEMBER: Lavergne?

Sir SAM HUGHES: Oh, no. It was the officer who commanded the battalion afterwards, Oliver Asselin. He is now at the front doing yeoman duty. He was Bourassa's editorial writer, I believe. We captured him, and a magnificent little fellow he is too, and this is where our good friend (Mr. Lemieux) came in largely. He raised a battalion and is commanding it at the front to-day, or is second in command of it. At all events he is with the forces at the front doing splendid service. Yet he is the man who so strongly espoused the Nationalist cause in Quebec in 1911. However, I take no particular stock in that phase of it. The leader of the Opposition brought in the name of Lloyd George as having been pro-Boer in 1900, and to-day leading the British Government. We had a similar instance of that in this country where a man held the British flag in his hand at St. Eustache in 1911 and said that if he had been with the boys in 1837 he would have shot holes through the British flag. Yet, Mr. Blondin is to-day leading a Canadian battalion at the front and doing his duty as a loyal British subject. I have every faith that if we only come out and discuss this thing on a high plane the result will be what we all desire it to be. I do not believe that there is one of 10,000 in Quebec who does not in his heart and conscience feel the desirability of winning this war to as great a degree as the most ultra Orangeman.

Something has been said about Armand Lavergne. I shall not speak of Armand Lavergne at any length but I merely wish to say that he was offered a battalion if he would raise one and go to the front. There was no stone left unturned in the effort, kindly, lovingly and affectionately, to prevail upon the French Canadian people to go and fight in the great cause. As far as I am concerned and as far as the Canadian Government is concerned, I challenge any man in the Dominion of Canada to stand up and say to the contrary.

