CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUBSIDY ON DOMESTICALLY CONSUMED WHEAT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the CPI released today shows an annual rate of inflation of 8.8 per cent, a situation that will get worse as we get into the winter months, with prices increasing in bread, pasta and produce, a fact which will weigh heavily on fixed and low income earners who have to spend a disproportionate amount of their income on food, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the government's consumer subsidy on domestically consumed wheat be phased out over a period of three years, in order to minimize its impact on bread and pasta prices which will increase anywhere from 16 per cent to 20 per cent as of January 1.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion for debate at this time would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF AERONAUTICAL COMMUNICATIONS STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES ORDER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43.

My motion is with regard to an important air navigation order known as the Aeronautical Communications Standards and Procedures Order relating to air safety and the Official Languages Act. After attempting for six weeks to get a report on this ANO, the minister informed me in writing on December 11 that for the period November 25, 1976, to July 23, 1978, 10,228 incidents of alleged violations of the order were reported.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That the Minister of Transport, on motions, explain to the House how this apparently irregular situation developed; what, if anything, is going to be done about the 10,000 plus incidents of alleged violations of the order and explain how he reconciles the development of this type of situation with his own duties and responsibilities under section 3(a) of the Aeronautics Act.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GRAIN

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—MEETING WITH SASKATCHEWAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Four months ago the Saskatchewan government offered to help pay the cost of extending the Crow rate to agricultural products processed in Saskatchewan if the federal government would guarantee the Crow rate for grain farmers and pay compensation directly to the railways, as recommended by the Hall commission report.

In view of the fact that the federal government has not yet met to discuss this plan with the Saskatchewan government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House request the Minister of Transport to stop stalling and to meet with the Saskatchewan government to reach agreement to implement the Saskatchewan Crow rate guarantee plan.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

CLOSING OF CERTAIN AIRPORT TOWERS FROM MIDNIGHT TO 6 A.M.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity regarding the closure of certain airport towers, commencing January 1, from midnight to six o'clock a.m. This will pose serious safety questions which have not been adequately addressed by the Minister of Transport.

In view of the Cranbrook tragedy—an airport without tower service—and in light of increasing night air cargo flights and Nighthawk flights by our principal airlines, requiring full navigational aids and tower services, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the Minister of Transport cancel immediately this directive and issue another directive ordering a full review of the implications to air safety implicit in these measures.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CIVIL AVIATION INSPECTORS WITHOUT CONTRACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Canadian civil aviation inspectors have been without a contract since 1975, their income levels are now below military pilots, air traffic controllers and their equivalents in other countries, and in view of the fact that this highly skilled and important professional group is breaking up, as evidenced by the fact that they are now 15 per cent or more below strength, which has led to only 335 of more than 1,500 air regulation infractions in 1978 being processed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Transport, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Labour take an immediate interest in this deteriorating situation, and that they resolve immediately the unjust remunerative levels of this important professional group of civil servants so that Canadian aviation practices be returned to their former prestigious and safe standard.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TELEVISION

UNITED STATES OPPOSITION TO PROVISIONS OF BILL C-58—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, according to Standing Order 43.

Considering that certain United States border television stations and several vocal and self-serving of our political counterparts in the United States continue to press for retaliatory action against the effects of Bill C-58 passed by this parliament, and considering that that legislation has produced an additional $9 million in much needed revenue to improve Canadian programming for Canadians, yet these several U.S. congressmen and broadcasters propose punitive retaliation of at least ten times the amount that is rightly being returned to Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne):

That this House reaffirms our commitment to Bill C-58 and urges the responsible majority of our congressional counterparts to discourage the noisy few from using field artillery to rabbit-hunt in their best friend's backyard.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CALL FOR PRORATA PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS OF DISABLED VETERANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I move:

That this House calls on the Minister of Veterans Affairs to announce before Christmas that early in 1979 he will introduce legislation to provide prorata pensions for widows of veterans in those cases where the veteran's disability pension was below 48 per cent, thus correcting an unfairness that has existed far too long.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST CHAIRMAN OF PRAC APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Prairie Rail Action Committee has gone far beyond the parameters recommended by Chief Justice Emmett Hall, and has dealt a most destructive blow to the prairie rail transportation system by recommending that 60 per cent of the 2,400 miles of rail line now included under temporary status be abandoned, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this House request that Fred Anderson, chairman of the Prairie Rail Action Committee, appear before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INACCURACY OF FORECASTS OF REAL GROWTH

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance why it is that he forecast at the beginning of this year that the real growth in the economy would be 5.5 per cent, that six months later he forecast 5 per cent, and in the recent budget he forecast 4.4 per cent, when it turns out that real growth is going to be 3.8 per cent.

Why is it that his forecasts are, and have been, so inaccurate? They are inaccurate in comparison with other forecasts made in the economy by private forecasters, other agencies and other government officials. Why are the forecasts of the Department of Finance and the Government of Canada so inaccurate?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made a forecast of 5 per cent, not 5.5 per cent, in October, 1977. I changed it and said the growth would be about 4 per cent.

The problem of forecasting is the same all over the world. For example, in 1977—it was not a forecast—the United States administration said that growth in the first quarter was 5.2 per cent, but after three revisions they found out it was 7.7 per cent. Forecasting is a difficult business, and we are doing our best. I would point out that almost 4 per cent growth this year, is still 1.3 per cent more than last year.

Mr. Gillies: Policy-making, under the best circumstances, is always difficult. If it is done on the basis of inaccurate forecasts, it will be wrong. I do not think anyone can argue that the economic policy of this country has not been very good, and one reason it has been poor is because of the forecasts. The Minister of Finance always rationalizes them away.

I am saying that in Canada, nine months ago, forecasts were far more accurate than those made in the minister's department. Why cannot the Department of Finance forecast activities in this economy more accurately, particularly when they have all the resources to do it and when, I presume, we end up having to make economic policy based on what turns out to be inaccurate information?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think I was in very good company last year when I forecast a growth of 5 per cent for Canada. The then president of the Conference Board, who is now a member on the other side, forecast a 5 per cent rate of growth for Canada.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I go back to the Minister of Finance. We have increasing inflation, a phenomenal problem in our balance of payments, a declining dollar and rising unemployment, with one million people out of work in a very, very rich country. I do not think anybody wants that to happen, but one of the reasons it is happening, presumably, is that the government is making its policy on the basis of poor economic forecasts.

What is the minister doing about that? Will he try to improve it? Is he not concerned about it? Has he any ideas about how we can make better forecasts and how we can get better information, so that we can have policy which will eradicate or help eliminate some of these dreadful economic problems we are facing? It is no answer for the Minister of Finance to pretend it does not happen. We have poor economic forecasts. What is he doing about it?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, before the budget I had consultations with many economists of this land, the national associations, and so on. Most of the forecasts for 1979 made at that time, pre-budget, were that the growth next year would be between 3 per cent and 4 per cent. In the budget I stimulated the economy to the tune of $1.8 billion. So with that, adding to the forecasts made before, I think to predict for next year that the growth will be between 4 per cent and 4.5 per cent is not being overoptimistic; it is quite realistic.

Oral Questions

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUBSIDY ON DOMESTICALLY CONSUMED WHEAT—REQUEST WITHDRAWAL BE OVER THREE YEARS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It has to do more with facts than with the forecasts of the Minister of Finance.

I want to ask the right hon. Prime Minister—indeed, I plead with him on behalf of low income earners in this country and people on fixed incomes, because he alone has the power to turn this back—will he now bring in a measure or a policy whereby the withdrawal of the consumer subsidy on domestically consumed wheat will be phased out over a period of three years? Otherwise, the consequences are that low income earners and fixed income earners in the country, who lean heavily on bread and pasta as a very important part of their diets, will be faced with substantial increases in the order of 15 per cent to 20 per cent.

As of January 1, the price of bread will rise by seven cents a loaf, the biggest over-all increase in the history of the country. The Prime Minister has the power to change that. I ask him, I plead with him, will he?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered that very question when it was asked by the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party some weeks ago. I indicated to him that the policy of the government is not to subsidize bread to all consumers, including the very rich and medium rich people. Our policy is to help those who need help. That is why we increased family allowances and that is why we increased old age pensions at the time we were phasing down this subsidy.

If the hon. member is interested in helping the consumer, I am surprised his party did not support the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when he was trying to get support for delaying the increase of $1 a barrel in oil prices. That was a great occasion to help the consumer and to help industry in Canada—

An hon. Member: We did. You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Trudeau: —and the other side was very silent on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, certainly I would commend the Prime Minister for what is happening if only he would do for bread prices what he is doing for energy prices, that is, phase in the world price of wheat so that it will not hit heavily on low income earners. I remind him that wage increases in Canada are running at 5.95 per cent, as opposed to the 8.8 per cent annual rate of inflation. This means that wage earners are falling behind.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. McGrath: In view of the inflationary situation, produce prices will be rising. We know that the price of bread will rise by at least seven cents. Before the price of bread rises by seven cents per loaf as of January 1, will the Prime Minister bring in a measure whereby this can be phased in gradually over a period of three years, so as to minimize the impact on low income earners?

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. McGrath: If the Prime Minister has any compassion, surely he will answer that question in the affirmative.

● (1422)

Mr. Trudeau: I recognize that that is a repetition of the same question.

Mr. McGrath: Of course it is a repetition, and I make no apology for it.

Mr. Trudeau: I will repeat the same answer. The policy of the government is to help those in Canada who need help. It is not to subsidize everybody, which seems to be the Tory policy.

INQUIRY AS TO WAGE CONTROLS IN 1979

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister: it is on the consumer price index. As the Prime Minister knows, wages went up by about 5.8 per cent last year and the increase in the cost of living was about 8.8 per cent. Therefore, there is a real loss in purchasing power for the average Canadian worker.

In light of some speculation that wage controls might be brought in, and in light of the Prime Minister's words on this at the first ministers' conference, can he assure us we will not see any wage controls in 1979, so that the Canadian worker will at least have a chance to catch up to the cost of living?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this form of question really cannot be answered very simply. The hon. member recognizes, I am sure, that the real income of Canadians has gone up consistently over the past decade, including the present year. Therefore, workers, like all other Canadians, on average received more income this year than least year, in real terms, taking into account the rise in inflation. It is true that the cost of living has gone up faster than we had anticipated and, indeed, I believe faster than the labour movement anticipated.

The government has taken many occasions to congratulate the labour movement for the sense of restraint they have exercised. They realize—and I hope the hon. member realizes—that the increase in the cost of living came essentially from the lower value of the dollar and increased prices of imported food. Against this, the government cannot guarantee any class or any group of the population. Therefore, it is normal in times like this that Canadians should exercise a measure of restraint.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister could answer the direct question that I asked. There is some concern that in 1979 there will be reimplementation of the controls program that will specifically control wages. Because of the gap in the increase in wages compared to the increase in the cost of living, can the Prime Minister assure us there will be no implementation of wage controls until workers at least catch up to the increased cost of living?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in his previous question the hon. member referred to something I said at the first ministers' conference. I ask him to refer to that text where I was enjoining Canadians generally, and all governments in particular, to take certain measures to prevent inflation from again reaching a crisis state. I said if we ever reached a crisis state, there might be a need for controls.

We have not reached that state, and I do not anticipate our reaching it. I repeat, the labour movement and governments have shown a commendable measure of restraint. I am convinced, because of that, there will be no crisis situation. If there is no crisis situation, the government not only will not introduce controls, but cannot under the Supreme Court ruling.

Mr. Nystrom: The Prime Minister said he is more concerned about people on low incomes, rather than subsidizing a specific product such as bread. We in this House have increased old age pensions and family allowances for low income people, and provinces like Ontario are increasing welfare payments.

The unemployment insurance bill before the House will cut back by 10 per cent the benefits paid to some of the lowest income people in this country. Considering the statement the Prime Minister made a few minutes ago, will he have the government reconsider its position and withdraw that bill which will hurt very many low income people in this country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously participating in the debate which is now before the House. The hon. member knows the government's arguments. It was a Liberal government that was the author of the Unemployment Insurance Act. History has shown that we have placed a very high priority on that particular act. The hon. member knows it is important for governments to review and to make sure that their measures are not abused, and that is the nature of the measure put before the House.

REFERENDA

GOVERNMENT POSITION IF BILL C-9 PASSED

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question to the Prime Minister. At a fund-raising dinner held in Toronto for the party in power, the Prime Minister is supposed to have said, according to newspaper reports, with regard to Bill C-9 concerning a public referendum in Canada, that if the bill is passed it would be used to cancel a Quebec majority vote in favour of separation from the rest of Canada. Could the Prime Minister tell us what he meant when he made that statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, this is another example of a bill under consideration in the House for, I believe, only one day. If the hon. member did not take part in the debate or heard it he could read Hansard to learn what is the government's position. I stated, when I first spoke about the bill in the House a year and a half ago, that the Quebec government had decided to consult the people through a referendum and that the federal government is entitled to the same right.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. The Prime Minister said in the same speech that if Bill C-9 is passed, it would perhaps allow the federal government to hold a referendum before Quebec to see whether the majority of Canadians will take the provincial referendum into account. Could the Prime Minister tell us exactly what was the meaning of that statement?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will have to check because I am convinced that I did not say such things in Toronto, but if the member wants to send me the quotation, I will look into it.

Oral Questions

OVERCLASSIFICATION IN CERTAIN SECTORS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The public service classification study which was tabled yesterday indicated that as of April 1, 1976, the cost to the taxpayer of maladministration in this field was $43.6 million per year. Using up to date numbers of civil servants and salary information, a more accurate estimate would be $77 million a year.

What action has the minister initiated, and what action does he propose to take, to ensure that taxpayers get fair value for the millions of dollars we are spending—or wasting here—while seeing that those public servants who are the victims of this maladministration are not unduly penalized?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): To answer the first part of the question, what we are doing in this study is this: there are roughly seven groupings which were identified as experiencing a particularly severe problem in this area, and there were seven departments which were identified as having an above average rate. We are working within these groupings and departments to see what can be done to tighten up and improve the classification procedures.

In addition, we are looking closely into this question of delegation to the departments which was decided on three or four years ago to see what changes could or should be made in the procedure. I might mention, of course, that this audit was initiated within Treasury Board because we felt some concern about just how effectively these delegated powers were being used and how effectively classification was being carried out. We are inquiring into that aspect very closely to see what can be done to tighten up the procedure.

As to the second part of the question concerning the employees involved, we would expect that some of these positions would be vacant, and if that is the case we should be able to downgrade them. In other cases we will consider the possibility of moving employees to other employment within the public service which is at the proper level for their qualifications, after which we could downgrade the positions. Also, we shall check whether the classification and audit which was done is correct—there has to be some verification. All these procedures, if followed carefully, should result in a minimum number of cases having to be red-circled.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board and his predecessor have had the study on national capital area classifications on their desks since April, 1976. I have a copy here. Compiled studies on the national capital area and non-national capital areas have been on their desks for several weeks or months.

On November 22, the minister's predecessor promised in this House during question period that there would be a detailed statement by the government regarding its actions. Will the minister make a statement in the House giving details of what has been done, or table such details? The government has known about the problem for three years. It has had concrete information for over two years. What is being done?

Also, will the minister refer this report to the appropriate committee of the House of Commons so that we can look into the matter in some detail and be assured that the $77 million a year which is now being wasted will not be wasted any longer than is necessary?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I question the figure which the hon. member has used. As he has indicated, in the last couple of years he has moved the figure up from $46.3 million—which is certainly far in excess of what we consider acceptable—to $77 million.

As the hon. member is aware—I believe he was one of the questioners—there was considerable questioning in this regard in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates earlier this year when the deputy secretary for personnel policy was present. There was a fair amount of probing and discussion and, I think, a fairly forthcoming response to the concerns which were raised, and I suggest that that is probably a legitimate and sensible way to continue the process.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. I have said on a number of occasions that this government is endeavouring to downgrade the monarchy. I need only point to what the Prime Minister said. He said he had no more use for the Queen than he had for snowshoeing or skiing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Three o'clock.

Mr. Trudeau: I have never said any such thing, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The denials come late, because he said that on a couple of occasions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: When?

Mr. Dawson: You are getting old.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The truth hurts. I want to ask the minister why, across this country today, in various post offices one is unable to purchase any stamp, either the 12-cent, the 14-cent or the 16-cent stamp, with the Queen's picture thereon. Why is this?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to tell the right hon. gentleman that I have great respect for the Queen. I am a veteran. I fought for several years in England with the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lamontagne: Having said that, I can assure the right hon. member that if there is any shortage of stamps bearing a picture of the Queen, it is strictly a question of accidental shortage and I am sure there is nothing in the Post Office which prevents any post office from selling these stamps. I will see that they have them in every post office across the land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I pay tribute to the minister's wonderful record overseas. I will come a little closer to home. Why is it that on December 19, today—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, are there some loons loose? It is music to my ears to hear the suckers roar.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to ask the minister a simple question. On this very date, neither in the House of Commons post office nor in the Senate post office can one purchase any stamps with the Queen's head thereon. Why is that? I asked specifically for them and I was told there were none. Was that coincidence?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the right hon. gentleman that the post office in the House of Commons is not under the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department: it is completely independent. If stamps or postal equipment are required, they have to request them. If they request them, I will see that the House of Commons post office gets them by tomorrow morning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is fine.

NORTHERN PIPELINE

SUPPLIERS OF STEEL PIPE

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. I understand that two Canadian companies, Stelco and Ipsco, have been selected to negotiate with Foothills to supply steel pipe for the Alaska pipeline. Does this mean that those companies were the lowest bidders, and does the Deputy Prime Minister feel that they would have a good chance of bidding successfully on the Alaska section of the pipeline?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we said often in the course of the debate on the creation of the Northern Pipeline Agency that Canadian firms could compete successfully for the supply of pipe on the Canadian portion of the line. We also maintained, despite the criticisms we received from the opposition—and today, of course, our judgment has been confirmed by the opening of these negotiations with the two Canadian companies for the supply of 1.5 millions tons of pipe—that we believe the competitive edge shown by these Canadians companies will be in play in securing business on the American portion of the line.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

BROADENING OF COMMITTEE'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister in his capacity as government House leader.

In light of public concern about the growth in the number of regulations in Canada which have some adverse effect—which was admitted by the first ministers at their conference last February—and having in mind a unanimous motion passed by the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments dealing with this issue, will the Deputy Prime Minister consult with his counterparts, the other House leaders, with regard to consideration of a motion to give extended terms of reference to that committee in order to deal with this very important question?

I ask this question because of the fact that when this parliament grants delegated authority, it should retain some means of exercising supervision over the way that authority is utilized.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I read the report of the joint committee of which the hon. member is a co-chairman, and I noted the recommendations which were made and which now have been repeated by the hon. member.

I would like to undertake to raise the question of extending or widening the reference of the committee with other party representatives and with my colleagues with a view to meeting, if possible, the views of the standing committee.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTOR TO TAIWAN

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

An hon. Member: He is here. Wait for him.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I was about to explain that I understood the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be delayed and I was going to address this question to the Prime Minister, but I see that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is now here. I have no doubt that he will find no difficulty in answering my question even though he did not receive the notice.

• (1442)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member would make it easier for the minister and for all of us if he would put the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Brewin: In light of the recent recognition by the United States of the People's Republic of China, and the reaction of the government of Taiwan and the statement made by the government of Taiwan that they will work to conquer communist tyrannical rule and its aggressive policy and never give up the sacred task of recovering the mainland, and in light of the fact that Canada supplied some time ago a research reactor which could be used for the purpose of producing a nuclear weapon will the minister make a statement of the situation with Taiwan and nuclear weapons and undertake, if there is anything that Canada can do, to take steps to ensure that Canadian reactors and Canadian materials be not used by Taiwan for building up a nuclear weapon capability?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: In order to give the hon. member a full answer, because of his unfailing courtesy—he has, indeed, given written notice of this question and my officials have looked into it—let me tell him that in 1969 we did sell a 40 megawatt nuclear research reactor, a small research reactor, and it has been under IAEA supervision and control ever since the ending of diplomatic relations between Canada and Taiwan.

We have made inquiries in the last 48 hours and my information is that there is nothing to suggest that that particular reactor will not continue to be under IAEA control. We are making further inquiries and I hope to give an additional answer later.

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS TO ARGENTINA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this question also deals with nuclear reactors, but it has to do with the Argentine. The minister made a statement on December 14 to the effect that a quoted spokesman there was not a spokesman for the Argentine government on the matter, and that what they were doing in the Argentine was merely some kind of experimental arrangement.

It appears now that this gentleman, Admiral Madero, is in fact the president of the national atomic energy commission of the Argentine and that the tape, which is held by the Washington Post, indicates that he said they were going to produce a nuclear weapon and that, indeed, it will help to balance their arms race with Brazil.

Will the minister check the facts again, in view of this information, and take the necessary action to ensure that Canada will not co-operate in a venture which would be a threat to the peace and stability of South America?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since the hon. member, as well as the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, have asked me about this matter in the past, in so far as Canada is concerned I think it might be as well for me to read specifically what the situation is. It is quite short, if hon. members do not mind.

It states, first, that article V of the agreement between Canada and Argentina is specific in stating that all equipment, material, nuclear material and facilities subject to the agreement shall be used for peaceful purposes only and shall not be used for the development, manufacture or detonation of any nuclear explosive device; second, that the Argentinians may not reprocess any material subject to the agreement without seeking Canada's agreement; and third, in the event of non-compliance, Canada may suspend co-operation and may request that Argentina immediately cease to use any Canadian supplies.

In so far as the gentleman who was quoted is concerned, and the question as to whether or not he is the specific spokesman for the government, this is still a matter on which there is some difference of view, although it does appear that he is certainly working for the government in that sense of the word, but whether he is a spokesman for the government of Argentina, per se, and Argentina has endorsed his statements, we have still not determined officially.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

INDUSTRY REPRESENTATION BEFORE CLYNE COMMITTEE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications, but first I would like to welcome her back from Florida. Since we are now back from space and down to earth, may I ask her this question with regard to the Clyne committee, or commission, the establishment of which she announced on November 30.

To eliminate the increasing suspicion that the Clyne committee will just rubber-stamp the Gamma report written by one of the committee members, Mr. Alphonse Ouimet, and the report of the CRAB which was chaired by Mr. Ouimet, has the minister reconsidered her position so that at least some publicity and public ventilation be given to representatives of industry who would like to give briefs before that committee in the open, rather than behind closed doors, in view of the terms of reference of the committee which are to restructure the telecommunications industry in this country?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): The suspicions about this committee, Mr. Speaker, seem to lie mainly in the hon. member's mind. I want to reassure the hon. member that it is included in the mandate of this committee that if they feel they have the need to do so, they should be talking to the people in the industry, be they cable operators, broadcasters or even CRTC commissioners.

I understand that having reviewed all the material they had to go through and the different items which they thought they would want to study, they have already asked representatives of industry to meet with them and discuss some of the issues.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate the last part of the minister's answer because I, too, am aware of the fact that people who represent industry have been invited to come forward with briefs and, in fact, some individuals have been invited to give briefs. While I appreciate fully the practical impossibility of coming up with some substantive recommendations by February 1, does the minister not feel that there could be a better public discussion and a better stimulation of public debate—which the minister said she would like to see, in her press release of November 30—even within the limits of that timetable, if these people with briefs could come forward in public so that other representative groups could listen to what is said?

This could also help the Clyne committee make up its mind on recommendations to the minister with reference to the Gamma report and the CRAB report. Will the minister and this committee rely on other structural models for the telecommunications industry which have already been prepared by DOC officials and members of her department, and will those models be open to examination by people interested in this field?

Mrs. Sauvé: Many of the issues which will be studied by the committee have already been the object of a certain amount of public hearings mainly conducted by the CRTC, so that evidence will be used, obviously, by this committee.

I want to suggest to the hon. member that he should understand that once the committee has brought down its report—which timetable, incidentally, is the end of February—and although the hon. member thinks the deadline is impossible to meet, the committee is not saying it is impossible at this stage and they will try to meet it: it will be the basis of public debate on some of the issues which might require it.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

LIBRARY SERVICE FOR HANDICAPPED PERSONS

Mr. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State, to whom I have given notice. I am sure the Secretary of State is aware of the task force report on library service to the handicapped which was published in January, 1976, and also of the 36 recommendations contained in that report and of the branch of the National Library which was established to implement those recommendations.

● (1452)

I should like to know if the minister is aware of the work of that branch in implementing those recommendations to establish a co-ordinated service for the handicapped people of this country and, if so, does he agree with the decision to axe the program as of March 31?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the hon. member for his kindness in giving me notice of the question. The answer to the first part of his question is, yes, I am aware of the matter which he has brought to our attention.

It is not a question of axing an existing program; it is a question of not being able to go forward at the present time with the implementation—which we hope to do in the near future—of a program which does flow, as he correctly said, from recommendations of the committee. One person has been brought on the staff of the National Library to consider ways in which these recommendations might be moved forward. It is now clear that the resources necessary to do so will not be available in the immediate future. There is, therefore, in that sense, not a continuing role for this person to play.

We do hope in the near future to be able to continue with the implemendation of the recommendations which were brought forward, recommendations which affect not only the federal but the provincial and municipal levels as well.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Secretary of State is aware that this program affects 300,000 Canadians who suffer from sight disabilities. I am sure, also, the Secretary of State is aware that every social service ministry in every province of this country has made representations to him to save the existing program as it stands, as has the Canadian National Institute for the Blind.

Will the Secretary of State not consider at least maintaining the rather meagre effort that has so far been made and maintain at least the service that is now in place?

Mr. Roberts: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the representations that have been made to me. As I said earlier, it is not a question of removing an existing program. We do attach importance to this and I hope we will be able to proceed with it quickly. But at the present time there is not a program; there is one person advising how we might reach the stage of implementing those proposals. It would still be my intention to do that, but I cannot promise the hon. member to be able to do it within the present financial year.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S INTERVENTION SO GREATER IMPORTANCE GIVEN TO FRENCH NEWS SERVICE

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. In light of conversations I have had with CBC French network reporters and following a CBC program explaining that there seemed to be a lack of reporters for French information and that the air time was not sufficient to allow broadcasting of more elaborate information concerning French Canadians, could the minister tell the House whether he intends to communicate with the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in order to solve this problem?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am always willing to inform the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of the representations made to me by hon. members and I will refer this one to him as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

RAISING OF FARES ON SUBURBAN MONTREAL TRAINS—ANSWER OF CNR CONCERNING REDUCTION OF SERVICE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Two months ago I had occasion to put a question to the minister on behalf of the thousands of commuters in the Montreal area, urging him to intervene in a decision the Canadian National already seemed to have made at that time. Last week, the parliamentary secretary stated that, in view of the Gascon report, the minister had agreed to ask officially the CN president for a moratorium of one year and a drastic cut in the increases foreseen for users of commuter trains. Can the minister now tell us what the answer of the CN president was, the matter being urgent as January 1 will soon be here?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received a reply from Canadian National but, as the hon. member says, following representations from several Liberal members of parliament I did say to the CN that I thought, in view of the Gascon report, they should consider postponing their reduction of service for another period of time, recognizing that in this area which is a provincial and municipal responsibility, such further period of time would likely be the last period of grace given for decisions by the province and the municipality with regard to the commuter train arrangement.

[Mr. Roberts.]

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Can the minister at least promise to urge the CN to make a decision following the representations of the minister, as the January 1 deadline is drawing near, and can he say as well since he speaks of lower cuts—I believe the planned increases could have been as high as 50 per cent of current rates—whether he gave a figure to the CN, or can he at least assure us that the increase will not exceed the inflation rate foreseen by his own government?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I cannot do that at this time because I do not have a reply from Canadian National. I expect it very soon. Obviously, we are working against a deadline date because the changes were to have taken effect on January 1. I would like an answer almost at once.

SPORTS

POSSIBLE MERGER OF NHL WITH WHA—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, because there is a strong possibility that the National Hockey League and the World Hockey Association will merge, because three of the teams in the WHA are Canadian, and because having five Canadian teams in the new professional hockey association would certainly add to the prestige of Canada, can the Minister of State for Sports tell us whether she is in favour of Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec city entering teams in the NHL and whether she has taken steps in that regard?

[English]

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I wish it were possible for me to give a pro answer to the hon. gentleman but, as he knows, we are talking about professional hockey which, of course, is big business and they will settle the matter amongst themselves without any involvement from amateur sport.

EFFECT OF BILL C-14

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who will know that last night, in the debate on Bill C-14, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport and the Liberal member for South Western Nova both opposed important elements of Bill C-14 now before the House.

In the course of an answer to my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-Dartmouth East, the member of parliament for South Western Nova said, "I am sure he realizes the final bill is not here". I wonder if the minister can tell the House whether he is proposing or intending to bring in amendments to that bill which have not been presented to this House of Commons.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I was here last night during the course of the debate. The Leader of the Opposition did not share that opportunity. I believe what the hon. member was endeavouring to indicate was that we had not reached final reading stage of the bill, rather than the final bill.

An hon. Member: That's not what she said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL REVENUE

CONFIDENTIALITY OF INCOME TAX FILES

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. If the Minister of Finance will allow the Minister of National Revenue to be a "cutting figure", I would ask him a question.

An hon. Member: Very funny. I bet it took you an hour to dream that one up.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in view of the plans the Department of National Revenue has for closing down district taxation offices and replacing over-the-counter dealings in respect of income tax files by a Zenith line regional centre in places like Winnipeg, Shawinigan and Surrey, will the minister advise the House when this plan will be brought into effect and, specifically, what plans he is making or what he has in mind to protect the confidentiality of income tax information provided by taxpayers, with this new telephone-in system he is proposing in his department?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to commend the hon. member for his courage in asking a provocative question. It being the Christmas season, I will not even show a glint of steel.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: I should point out to him that in respect of setting up district offices as central offices, such as in Surrey, Sudbury, Shawinigan and other centres, the purpose is not to remove all the district offices, as the hon. member suggests, but to provide decentralization of government services in order to bring the government in Ottawa closer to the people. This does not diminish the service; it enhances it.

As to the use of the telephone central system, I can assure the hon. member that not only will full confidentiality be afforded taxpayers, but it will be confidentiality exceeded only by conditions in my own office.

An hon. Member: Heaven help us!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, that is the most depressing answer I have ever heard. The information I have is that over-the-counter consultation which takes place in district offices will be phased out and the files moved to these regional offices.

Will the minister tell the House whether he intends to use social insurance numbers as the identifying number for telephone use by taxpayers in protecting confidentiality? In view of the fact that in each city across Canada there is, padlocked, a very elaborate computer system belonging to Loto Select, would the minister consider using that facility in order to save the department some money in the implementation of these regional offices?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for whatever impression the hon. member may have formed about computer facilities. I would say that the service which will be set up will look after the needs of the taxpayer to a much higher degree even than they are looked after today.

Approximately 80 per cent to 85 per cent of all the inquiries to the tax department are routine and are capable of answers which are informational in character. Some of these inquiries require the more detailed answer which is fed into the computer and therefore take more time, and inquiries of higher complexity may take as long as ten days to two weeks. This will not be changed.

As to the use of social insurance numbers, I know this is a constant preoccupation of the hon. member. He should know that under the Income Tax Act there are special provisions where SIN is used by law as, for example, in the filing of the annual income tax return. The hon. member may raise an objection to that situation, but that is the law. As to the other uses of SIN, if they take place, this will be done for the purpose of aiding the taxpayer and will have nothing whatsoever to do with any breach of confidentiality of the information provided by the taxpayer.

PRIVILEGE

MR. YEWCHUK—COMMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE TO INDIAN DELEGATION

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment with regard to the alleged question of privilege raised yesterday by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk). I would like to correct some of the things he stated and the write-up in the newspapers.

I did not meet with 30 Indians, only three. I did so to listen to their complaints and be helpful, and there was no confrontation. The meeting was very amiable and it was on a voluntary basis. The words alleged were taken totally out of context and were made in a rather jocular way. There was no insult intended, as was alleged by the hon. member.

I might add that if the Indians feel sensitive about what I said, then I apologize. They did not say anything at the time. I have already spoken to Mr. Nicholas today, and he seemed to be quite understanding of what was said and the whole situation. I am quite disappointed that the hon. member did not have the courtesy to contact me before rising in the House to speak on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Robinson: He used the time of the House to make much ado about nothing and in order to pick up brownie points.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I indicated yesterday, this kind of matter has very little basis in procedure and the response of the hon. parliamentary secretary closes the matter.

MR. FORRESTALL—RESERVE RIGHT TO RAISE QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, through your good offices I would like to reserve the right to raise at the earliest possible date a question of privilege arising out of last evening's debate. I have just now had the opportunity to review the remarks of my colleague from South Western Nova (Miss Campbell). When I left the chamber last evening, I had the very distinct impression that she had indicated the number of hours in which the official opposition had contributed toward the measure presently in front of us, together with certain slurring inferences with respect to the contribution of the opposition. I do not see these remarks or comments in today's Hansard, and I would like to reserve the right to check the electronic media and raise the matter at a later date.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DELIVERY OF FIREARMS

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) would require unanimous consent for the introduction of this bill at this time. It is a bill to amend the Criminal Code. Does the hon. Solicitor General have the consent of the House to introduce the bill at this time?

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with respect to this matter, and the minister certainly has the consent of our party.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, my party has agreed to the introduction and first reading of this bill at this time. Whether we proceed further will depend upon our examination of the bill after we receive it.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOTMENT OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-14

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 75C, I wish to advise the House that the representatives of parties have been unable to reach agreement under Standing Order 75A or 75B on the allotment of time at report stage and third reading of Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Therefore, I wish to give notice that a minister will move at the next sitting of the House that one additional day be allocated to each of the said stages of the said bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am prepared to present my point of order tomorrow when this motion is made, if that is the preference of the Chair, or I would be willing to state now the reasons I raise the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister has simply given notice of a motion today. It would probably be more appropriate if the hon. member has a point of order respecting these discussions to raise it tomorrow. It is very difficult for me to decide, however, without knowing the point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to give more detail tomorrow, but because this is the first time in history—granted, the history of Section 75C is not yet a full ten years—that a motion under this standing order has been made to cover two stages in the proceedings of a bill, I suggest Your Honour look at the precedents respecting this matter.

My contention is that despite the wording of Standing Order 75C, it is hardly fair or proper to be discussing or moving curtailment of time on a stage, namely, third reading, that we have not yet reached. Who knows, Mr. Speaker, there might be some amendments to the bill at the report stage that would change the whole picture. At any rate, I am prepared to argue tomorrow, if you accept this as a caveat, that I question the right of the government to present a motion on Bill C-14 covering two stages.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I shall certainly hear that point of order at the appropriate time, which I believe is tomorrow. My impression is that, as the hon. member has said, he would have to argue his point despite the language of the standing order. Without looking at it, my recollection is that the language of the standing order is "stage or stages" of any bill. It is open for the hon. member to raise that point and argue it, however. I think the appropriate time would be upon the introduction of that debate tomorrow.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 385, 470, 472, 474, 538 and 662.

[Text]

FEDERAL PROGRAMS

Question No. 385—Mr. Herbert:

During each of the past five years, what amount of money available for use under federal programmes, was unused in the Province of Quebec?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply would entail a lengthy and costly examination of the accounts of every program of each department which cost in manpower and time would be exorbitant or prohibitive.

AGRICULTURE—POSITION DESCRIPTIONS

Question No. 470—Mr. Wise:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,793 of the Third Session of the 30th Parliament, for what reason was $2,500 given to L.-J. Personnel of Ottawa in the fiscal year 1976-77 to write up position descriptions for the small farm development programme, bearing in mind that the programme was set up four years earlier in 1972, and was only funded to run until 1979?

2. Was the Department of Agriculture's Personnel section asked to write up the position descriptions and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Program managers did not have staff resources to allocate toward writing position descriptions and arrangements were made to contract for these services with a firm with the necessary expertise for the following reasons:

(a) The program was being developed over a period of time and positions were described and classified as required.

(b) The organizational structure of the program administration was evolving at this time and, even though the program was scheduled to expire in 1979, it was necessary to prepare position descriptions that were consistent with the new organization.

2. No. It is the responsibility of program managers to write position descriptions for their organization.

ALAN WARD OF WAKEFIELD

Question No. 472—Mr. Wise:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,793 of the Third Session of the 30th Parliament, what is the layman's explanation of the purpose of the $21,792.77 contract given to Alan Ward of Wakefield "to restructure agriculture follows directly from technological progress and improved living standards to help farmers who are restructuring"?

2. What were the conclusions or recommendations of the study?

3. For what reason was this contract not given to the Agricultural Economics section of the Department of Agriculture?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Initiatives under the Small Farm Development Program (SFDP) were designed to assist small-scale low-income farmers to adjust to changing circumstances, including changing technology and demands for farm products. The primary purpose of this contract was to assess the need for changes in the program in the context of the extent and nature of the small-scale low-income farmer problem.

2. The principal conclusions and recommendations were:

(a) SFDP resources should be directed primarily towards an estimated 51,000 full-time and 14,000 part-time low-income farmers;

(b) The program should provide farm mangement services to assist low-income farmers to take a whole-farm approach to the development of their business and to take advantage of their unique objectives, capabilities and resources, within the framework of existing institutions and farm communities;

(c) SFDP farm management counsellors should concentrate on farmers earning 50 per cent or more of their income from farming with total assets not greater than $150,000;

(d) SFDP rural development counsellors should concentrate on rural residents with net family incomes below $6,000 and net worths below $50,000.

3. This study was contracted outside the Department of Agriculture because:

(a) Staff resources were unavailable at the time to carry it out;

(b) Non-governmental perspectives on policy and program alternatives were desired.

SIBBALD GROUP—AGRICULTURE

Question No. 474—Mr. Wise:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,793 of the Third Session of the 30th Parliament in which it was stated, that $20,000 was given to the Sibbald Group to "provide background information on the significance of the family farm in Canadian agriculture", what conclusions or recommendations were reached by the study?

2. Was the Agricultural Economics section of the Department of Agriculture and the Agricultural Section of Statistics Canada asked to provide such background and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. This contract did not seek specific conclusions or recommendations from the contractor with respect to the significance of the family farm in Canadian agriculture. The first objective was to draw together information on the nature and extent of different types of farm units in different parts of Canada; the second objective was to provide information on the economic and social significance of the family farm. This work involved discussions with representatives of farm organizations, provincial governments and universities and a review and analysis of research in these areas.

2. This assignment entailed field work and research within a time-frame that was beyond the staff resources available within the department. While information from Statistics Canada was utilized, the scope and nature of the project was outside the services normally provided to other departments by Statistics Canada.

BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL

Question No. 538—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Will the Commission of Inquiry into Bilingual Air Traffic Control resume its hearings and, if so, on what date?

2. What is the deadline for its final report?

3. Does the government have a policy on bilingual air traffic control and, if so, what is such policy?

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Prime Minister's and Privy Council offices and Transport Canada as follows: 1. The co-commissioners are considering holding final public hearings after the full report on the study conducted by the Department of Transport based on the use of an air traffic control electronic simulator is officially received. This is expected soon.

2. According to order in council, PC 1976-1588, giving terms of reference for the co-commissioners, they "shall submit a final report with all reasonable dispatch and within ninety days of the receipt of the final results of the study based on the use of the air traffic control electronic simulator".

3. Yes. This policy is to progressively expand the use of bilingual aeronautical communications in the province of Quebec, while respecting the existing levels of air safety.

SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVE—NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 662—Mr. Neil:

1. How many persons are on staff in the office of the Special Representative of the Prime Minister for constitutional development in the Northwest Territories and where are they located?

2. Since its inception, what are the amounts of the operating budgets for the office and what is the projected budget for the next fiscal year?

3. Is the Honourable Bud Drury, Chairman of the National Capital Commission, paid a salary as the Prime Minister's Special Representative and, if so, in what amount?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council):

1.	Resources Building, Yellowknife	6
	151 Sparks Street, Ottawa	5
2.	1 November 1977—31 March 1978	$87,000
	1 April 1978—31 March 1979 Estimate	$333,000
3.	No.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, since we have only two or three days left before the Christmas recess—I hope—I think the parliamentary secretary should do much better.

While I am on my feet, I would hope that this House would congratulate Diane Jones-Konihowski as the super woman athlete of the year. After all, Edmonton has again excelled.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly have no difficulty in understanding the relevancy of that last comment to the questions on the order paper. There must be one which relates to that achievement, I am sure.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will notice that we have today answered three questions in the name of Mr. Wise. I understand he is not wise.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

JUDGES ACT

MEASURE TO GRANT IMMEDIATE ANNUITY TO JUSTICE MORAND

Hon. Bud Cullen (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-33, to authorize the granting of an immediate annuity to the Honourable Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce Bill C-33, an act to authorize the granting of an immediate annuity to the Honourable Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand.

The purpose of introducing this piece of legislation is to allow Mr. Justice Morand to resign with an annuity from his position as a member of the high court of justice for Ontario and be appointed as ombudsman for the province of Ontario. This is done to accommodate the province and Mr. Justice Morand.

I have spoken to other House leaders and it is my understanding that there is a disposition to give unanimous consent to immediate passage of this bill through all three readings without debate. I might add that I wish to thank my colleagues opposite for their anticipated co-operation in this matter.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the first thing I should like to do in agreeing with this suggestion and giving consent is to congratulate the province of Ontario for being able to entice such a distinguished jurist to leave the bench and take over the very difficult position of ombudsman. I think the government of Ontario has chosen well and I am sure experience will prove this to be true.

The second thing I should like to say is that this bill is quite appropriate. Discussions have taken place on this matter and it is the position of our party to accommodate the appointment by having this bill go through the House today in all stages without further debate.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thought the agreement was that there would be no debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the parliamentary secretary did not want to mislead the House when he made those comments because there was unanimous consent to deal with the bill without debate. Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, since this side of the House, especially the Social Credit Party of Canada, is not empowered to enforce Standing Order 75A, B or C, I would like, as proof that we are good Canadians, to co-operate with the government of another province, even the province of Ontario, which wants to get a good ombudsman by appointing a magistrate as distinguished as Mr. Justice Morand. Under the circumstances, we will set an example for this parliament and all Canadians, because we are really seeking harmony; even if we could do some filibustering we will not do so. We will act as good Canadians and support that proposal to give Ontario the opportunity to appoint a fine ombudsman allowing its citizens through Mr. Justice Morand to obtain justice. We will thus give, Mr. Speaker, our unanimous consent.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it that the desire of the House would be to change the motion from a referral to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to a committee of the whole House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered. Mr. Cullen (for Mr. Lalonde) moves that Bill C-33, to authorize the granting of an immediate annuity to the Honourable Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand, be now read the second time and referred to a committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On Clause 1—Governor in Council may grant annuity

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in the Christmas spirit, in passing this annuity and allowing Mr. Justice Morand to become the ombudsman of Ontario, I hope that we as parliamentarians will ask him to give consideration to the lady who is out in front of this building as one of his first acts. Some consideration should obviously be given to her by parliament. She has become rather a fixture here and I as one member would like to see that fixture removed and eliminated.

[Translation]

Mr. Lavoie: Mr. Speaker, concerning what the hon. member opposite has just said, I would simply tell him that the ombudsman will not have to intervene because the lady in question is in my office right now. I will take care of this case myself.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, December 18, consideration of Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and motion No. 1 (Mr. Leggatt).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. What happened to the understanding of yesterday that at this point we would debate the procedural acceptability of certain motions?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is quite right. I did not have any other indication from any of the proponents of those motions, but if any of them are now prepared to debate the procedural regularity of their motions, I would be glad to hear them.

In order, they would begin with motion No. 11 which I understand may be the subject of an application by the government for consent at some time during the course of the proceeding. Motion No. 12?

As regards motion No. 27 standing in the name of the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie), I think it is only a matter of procedure.

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I am willing to discuss the procedure at any time the Chair will consider appropriate. However I would like to discuss it clearly because I am told that motions Nos. 11, 27 and 30 go beyond the scope of the bill. That is why hon. members will realize, when I have an opportunity to explain my amendment, that it does not go beyond the bill, but goes in the same direction and would prevent the gaps that would appear should clause 14 and part VIII of the act be adopted the way they stand now. I think they could lead to injustices against workers and unemployed people. That is why I moved that amendment. That is why I introduced this amendment.

Now, as to the procedural aspect, I shall wait until Your Honour permits me to elaborate further.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is certainly aware that motion No. 27 raises a number of procedural difficulties. The time has now come for the hon. member to support exclusively the procedural aspect of his motion.

Mr. Lavoie: Concerning this motion, Mr. Speaker, it is said that the purpose of this bill is to save money, which is understandable. The benefits are cut from 66⅔ per cent to 60 per cent. I suggest that if an unemployed person is paid, say, $100 a week and receives unemployment insurance benefits, his or her hourly wages be set at $5 over a 20-hour work week. We are all aware of the Canada Works program. The Canadian government is generous but very often the funds handed over are not adequate. That is not the fault of the government. However, the assistance those projects give the people is considerable. The amendment is intended to require of the people that they work on those projects, and work their full 20 hours a week, or where 30 hours are required, 30 hours. There might be other solutions as well; perhaps the minister could find something other than the Canada Works program. That seems logical to me. In that way, as I said in the House yesterday, instead of having unemployment insurance we would have employment insurance. That is the purpose of the amendment. I do not want to demolish the whole bill though, I realize this plays havoc with a good part of it. But I think that amendment is very logical, and if something else is wanted, if someone wants to move a subamendment, I am quite willing to discuss the matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member understands full well, I am sure, that he is suggesting the addition of a clause 141. The motion reads as follows:

The said act is further amended—

Very strict limitations apply to any bill intended to amend existing legislation. One of those is very clear and stipulates that a motion can never amend the present statute, unless the pertinent sections are already now being amended or changed by the bill before the House.

[English]

The hon. member seeks the occasion to add a clause to the bill which in its very language indicates that the said act is further amended. It further amends the parent statute, and the language is an indication that the hon. member is seeking to go beyond the scope of an amending statute.

The hon. member will understand that the scope of an amending statute, as is Bill C-14, is limited to the clauses which it seeks to amend in its text. For the hon. member, as he is doing now, to seek to add another amendment which is not contained in the clauses of Bill C-14, and in addition which seeks to introduce a new concept, that is, the concept of requiring that every beneficiary or claimant shall first accept a direction by the minister to perform some kind of work or endeavour, is an idea which is not contained in the amending statute, Bill C-14.

In the first place, the hon. member is seeking to amend the act in a way in which it is not amended by Bill C-14. In the second place, and in any event, he is introducing a totally new concept, that of having to obey a direction of the minister before becoming a claimant. Therefore, I must conclude that the hon. member has gone beyond the scope of Bill C-14, and that motion No. 27 is out of order.

Motion No. 30 is in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke). The hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan).

Mr. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, when Your Honour called motion No. 12 earlier, I did not realize I had to jump in at that point. I hope I will be allowed to speak to motion No. 12 for a second because there is a simple remedy to it.

As Mr. Speaker will no doubt have observed, the effects of motions Nos. 7 and 14 are the very same as motion No. 12. Our purpose in submitting motion No. 12 was to enable us to discuss both clauses at the same time. In the view of my party, the two clauses are so interrelated as to be inseparable in terms of discussion. We support restraint, but we disagree with the method the government is using.

Your Honour can solve the problem quite readily by combining motions Nos. 7 and 14 for the purposes of discussion, even though they will be voted on separately. We find difficulty in discussing one without discussing the other at the same time, because in our view they are all part of the same package. When Your Honour was combining motions yesterday, you did not come up with that particular combination. Since in our view they are the crux of our proposals to modify this bill, I suggest they should be combined for the purpose of discussion.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to supplement what the hon. member has said. Your Honour indeed ruled quite correctly, but as my colleague has indicated, there is a very simple solution, and that is that clause (d) of motion No. 12 be numbered separately as a separate amendment. Concomitantly, the rest of the clauses numerically change. In other words, clause (d) would become motion No. 13 and the rest of motion No. 12 would remain. Your Honour could then lump both together for purposes of debate, but they would remain separate motions in order stricly to adhere to the procedural problem which Your Honour presented when you made your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: I get a different impression from the two presentations just made. The hon. member for York-Scarborough, the proponent of motion No. 12, seeks to amend two clauses. He tells me that his amendment is contained in one way or another in motions Nos. 7 and 14. If I were to group, I have said that motions Nos. 7 and 6 should be debated together, motion No. 6 being, if I recall correctly, to delete the clause and motion No. 7 being to amend it.

Mr. McCrossan: No.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we can take a moment and examine those two motions. The hon. member for York-Scarborough has told me that motion No. 7 could be grouped with motion No. 14. The purpose of his motion No. 12 would then have been accomplished. Do I understand that correctly?

Mr. McCrossan: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I said that motion No. 14 should be debated and voted on separately. My suggestion to the House about the grouping and discussion of amendments is always a suggestion. It needs to be clarified by my understanding of the texture of the motion. If the House is agreed that motions Nos. 7 and 14 can be joined together for debate for the purpose of accomplishing all of the purposes the hon. member had in mind when he put motion No. 12 on the notice paper, that certainly is very agreeable to me.

It remains, however, that I cannot accept on procedural grounds the hon. member's motion No. 12. I am sure that does not put him in any difficulty because, if he is correct in his assessment, while he is discussing motions Nos. 7 and 14 he will have all the opportunity he wants to put forward the merits of what would have been an orderly amendment if it had been split in two pieces. Does that meet the accord of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: That being so, perhaps the House can take it as agreed that motion No. 14 can be taken together with motion No. 7, which I have already grouped with motion No. 6, so the three would be discussed together. Perhaps during the course of discussion we can determine the manner in which votes should be taken when we come to them. Motion No. 12 remains procedurally out of order.

Motion No. 30?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on point of order with regard to the lumping together of motions Nos. 7 and 14. As far as I can gather, motion No. 7 deals with the deletion of clause 4. That is the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. His motion No. 14 looks at the implementation of a two-tier system dependent on whether a beneficiary has or does not have dependants. On the one hand, motion No. 7 is separate, having a certain intent, which is to kill clause 4 of the bill. Motion No. 14 has an entirely different thrust, which is to establish a two-tier structure.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member seems to have a point that is well taken. Motions Nos. 6 and 7, in the names of two different members, seek to delete clause 4. Clearly they have to be grouped together both for debate and vote. Motion No. 14 may perhaps accomplish the same purpose as the hon. member for York-Scarborough had in mind in his motion No. 12. Obviously motion No. 14 relates to clause 5. I think the hon. member for Nickel Belt has a point that is well taken. There seems to be no orderly way in which they can be grouped. Motions Nos. 6 and 7 remain grouped.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I agree completely that they would have to be voted on separately. However, motions Nos. 6 and 7 deal with clause 4 which recommends a method of saving money. We are proposing a different method of saving money, bringing it in under clause 5. We feel it is part of the justification of our procedure, which is to eliminate the clause 4 suggestions and bring in additional suggestions under clause 5. That is why we wanted to discuss them together, because they form the kernel of our idea. We are asking that they be discussed together, not voted on together.

Mr. Speaker: If I understand correctly, the hon. member for York-Scarborough is telling me that his motion No. 12 is out of order because it seeks to amend both clause 4 and clause 5. However, he will have the opportunity to make his remarks on either the grouping of motions Nos. 6 and 7 or on motion No. 14, both of which together would have somewhat the same effect as he had intended in his own motion. Therefore his motion remains out of order. He will have the opportunity to address himself to the debate on motions Nos. 6 and 7, which have already been grouped, and in turn on motion No. 14 which remains in order.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Either Your Honour or I have missed the point the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) was making. The grouping of my motion No. 7 for discussion with motion No. 14 would achieve what the hon. member for York-Scarborough is trying to do. If Your Honour will look at motions Nos. 6 and 7, they are identical. Motions Nos. 12 and 14 are identical with the exception that motion No. 12 proposes to delete clauses 4 and 5, whereas motion No. 14 proposes to delete only clause 5 and substitute another therefor. It is true that the package we have in mind requires the discussion of motions Nos. 7 and 14 at the same time in order to make a sensible argument. The reason is that the proposals in motion No. 14 would override not only the proposals in clause 5 but those in clause 4. That is why the discussion should be held together, although the votes would obviously have to be separate.

Mr. Speaker: I think the answer to it is that discussion on motions Nos. 6 and 7, which are grouped together, will range over motion No. 14. I do not think that the rule of relevancy should be so tightly enforced in the House at any time that the hon. member would be prevented from indicating to the House, in his discussion of motion No. 7, for example, that he had certain proposals with respect to motion No. 14 that would have an effect on it. Similarly the hon. member for York-Scarborough, in participating in the discussion on motion No. 7, will, I am sure, have reference to his motion No. 12 which has now been ruled out of order, but does not prevent him from discussing or arguing the merits of the idea he had in mind. Therefore the discussion will be as I indicated yesterday. Motions Nos. 6 and 7, both of which have the intention of deleting clause 4, will be grouped together for discussion and vote. Motion No. 14 will be discussed separately. Motion No. 12 is out of order.

Motion No. 30?

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, the intention of motion No. 30 is also to tie in with my motion No. 14. I understand the problem Your Honour has raised. I also understand from committee proceedings that it was sympathetically received by the government and perhaps some action might be introduced by the government at some stage to achieve somewhat the same thing. I am not sure of the order, but if it were possible to shift the content of motion No. 30 and, instead of making it a separate clause, add it to another clause, we might seek to do that. I seek the advice of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I have indicated my reasons for holding that motion out of order. I have also indicated my reasons for holding that motion No. 11, which is a government amendment, is out of order. It may be that when the House comes to conclude discussions on the report stage of the bill, depending on the success of the order tomorrow, the House may want to extend its consent to include these provisions in the bill. If the House wishes to do that upon consent, it may do so. I can only determine that on procedural grounds, as I think the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra understands, his motion is out of order. If he is able to secure agreement to introduce his motion, or obtain consent to have it form part of the bill through report stage and third reading, so much the better; but I have to indicate to him that on procedural grounds I must set the motion aside.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of arguments to present with respect to your preliminary ruling as to the admissibility of my amendment to clause 16, which is motion No. 31 on the order paper. You were kind enough to term my approach to this amendment "imaginative". I would like to say that at this time of economic crisis in this country, with over a million people unable to find work, imaginative approaches are surely what are required.

I am not sure I can agree with your suggestion, sir, that unemployment rates are not determined in this House. This parliament, as I am sure you and all hon. members will agree, is the chief body for the formulation of economic policy which exists in this country, and the rate of unemployment is surely one of the most accurate indicators of our success in formulating economic policies. I can think of no better indication of this than the bill which is before us. If approved, it will take close to a billion dollars out of the hands of those in this country who most need income support and who would be the ones most likely to spend the money in order to live. That spending would, in turn, do much to stimulate our economy, and its loss will do much to reduce the spending power of the 250,000 people who will be denied benefits. As a corollary to that, the loss of that spending power will create even more unemployment in our industries.

I would also point out that the 4 per cent figure I have used is not a figure simply drawn out of the air. When the government, back in 1971, first brought in the bill which is now before us for amendment, one of its clauses committed the government to accepting financial responsiblity for the cost of all extended benefits when the unemployment rate in Canada rose above 4 per cent. At that time we were told that such a provision would act as an incentive to the government to keep unemployment below the 4 per cent level.

In bringing this legislation before us, the government has talked a great deal about the disincentives of the present unemployment insurance program—at least, as far as the government identifies them. All I am seeking to do here is to return some incentive to the government. Surely they would not argue that what is good for 250,000 unemployed Canadians is not also good for them. Indeed, in view of our present level of unemployment it would seem the government needs all the incentive it can get to do something about providing jobs.

Again, I return to the point that a trigger figure is not something totally foreign to our legislation.

Finally, allow me to touch on Your Honour's point about the need for a specific time for legislation to come into effect. Last year we passed another amendment in the continuing series of unemployment insurance amendments when considering Bill C-27. That bill was due to come into effect upon proclamation. Yet to this very day, more than a year later, one clause of that legislation has still to be proclaimed. I refer, of course, to section 56, and while I hope it is never proclaimed, it seems to me there is a better argument to be made for having the government commit itself to a set of preconditions than for allowing it to make legislation and proclaim it completely at their whim.

To recapitulate, Mr. Speaker, this amendment gives the government a target toward which to work. It accepts the argument that the government, through its economic policies, is responsible for the level of unemployment, and it does set a time for proclamation, that time being when the goverment's economic policies have begun to be effective. I would also like to make the point that the amendment also goes far in tying our unemployment insurance program to our over-all economic performance, surely a step which no one in this House would argue is a backward one.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a very persuasive argument about the merits of his clause setting certain conditions precedent to the coming into force of the act. The difficulty lay not with the merit of his argument nor with whether some precondition should exist before the coming into force of the act. An act has to come into force at a certain time which is understood.

The hon. member refers to the fact that sections of other statutes have not come into force even though they were scheduled to come into force upon proclamation. Perhaps he might have indicated that some conditions might be precedent to the coming into force of this act by proclamation. I am not sure about that. But the fact is that the condition which he has described here is incapable of a certain moment at which all members of the House and all of the people in the country could be certain that the act could come into force.

The reasons are twofold. First, he has prescribed that the national unemployed rate would be a fixed rate for a certain period of time. He and his colleagues have argued rather vigorously in disagreement with the national unemployment rate as described by the government. The government has described the national unemployment rate at one level while he and his hon. friends, along with other members of the House, have argued that the national unemployment rate is in fact at a different level. Therefore there is no fixed rate at which the national unemployment rate is measured for the purpose of this clause, and there would certainly have to be an understanding that some set of figures, or some rule would be accepted as describing the national unemployment rate.

The difficulty is even greater. As I said yesterday, even if that could be agreed upon—which it cannot—the period is 12 months after the national unemployment rate has been at 4 per cent or less. The time at which that 12 months begins or ends is not fixed and is not described exactly. Therefore, on two counts, the moment cannot be fixed exactly. I have already said I do not want to deprive the hon. member of an imaginative approach to the coming into force of any statute but whatever formula or approach is used, it must lead to a fixed time which is understood by all. On those two counts, therefore, I say the motion fails to do that and so on procedural grounds, I have to set it aside.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to confirm your ruling that motions nos. 11, 12, 27, 30 and 31 are out of order on procedural grounds. I did say in the debate last night on clause 11 that it was introduced because I had undertaken to do so at the committee stage and I will, as you have suggested, seek unanimous consent. I think there may be unanimous consent for that. Similarly, I understand that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) is trying to make some arrangement with motion No. 30. But we understand that motions 12, 27 and 31 have been described as out of order on procedural grounds.

Mr. Speaker: The motions that in fact have been described as being out of order are the five I set aside yesterday; I am reaffirming that decision today. They are all set aside on procedural grounds. This returns us to the discussion on motion No. 1 from yesterday. At the time of the adjournment, the floor was held by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I fully understand the minister is anxious to have Bill C-14 passed by the House so that it be implemented as early as January 1. But I am a little surprised that some arrangements have been made. That happens sometimes not more at the level of the Department of Employment and Immigration than in other areas. Indeed they presume the legislation will be passed and give public servants the responsibility of making UIC offices across Canada aware of its provisions before the House and the Senate have actually agreed before royal assent. I think that is a shortcoming in our procedure which we should correct so that we no longer give the public the impression that we are here to debate and that decisions are made even before the votes are taken in the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, last night at the time of the adjournment I was commenting on some remarks made by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) who hesitated to accept a provision in this legislation because of some disparity in the evaluation of unemployment which may exist between different areas. I fully agree with him. I was surprised to hear him mention that rather worrying figure of 42 per cent unemployed in the north shore region.

Mr. Speaker, that assertion by the hon. member for Charlevoix, and I am very pleased, knocked the bottom out of the thesis of some people who try to make the public believe, not only during election campaigns but in other circumstances, that a given region will never experience economic health if it does not elect members from the majority party. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely wrong because the Canadian parliament is a responsible institution where, I am sure, all members co-operate in a constructive manner to help as much as possible the government meet its responsibilities, which consist in assuring all regions of the country equal opportunity for development in order that all workers find jobs and earn their living honourably, which would allow us to reduce considerably unemployment insurance problems, benefit problems, and all kinds of resulting difficulties.

Mr. Speaker, I sometimes wonder if the government is really willing to fight against unemployment or if it is not in fact fighting against the unemployed. This is not precisely the same. Fighting against unemployment involves taking the proper steps to ensure that in our country all levels of industries, businesses and farms will develop, so that our labour force, our workers, can find jobs and earn their living.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, in the last few years we have faced a major inflation and unemployment problem, and one has only to read the different budget speeches to realize that the government at every session, for instance in the twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth parliaments, always tries to fight against inflation even at the risk of increasing unemployment.

In another Speech from the Throne, one can read that the government wants to put some emphasis on the fight against unemployment at the risk of increasing inflation. It was exactly the same thing in speeches following the budget statement, be it under Mr. Benson, then minister of finance, or Mr. Turner, or Mr. Macdonald or Mr. Chrétien; it was always the same. The budget is designed to fight inflation. This has lasted long enough. Of course, it will increase unemployment, but unemployment is better than inflation. At other times the budget is designed to curb unemployment. Of course, it will increase inflation, but it is better to suffer from inflation than from unemployment. Mr. Speaker, we are getting nowhere this way. We keep doing the same thing without finding really good solutions.

In my remarks, I want to tell the government how much I hope it will finally present measures designed to promote positively the love of their work among workers so as to encourage them to accept jobs and give the best performance they can to earn a living and serve the country well.

Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not the only one to find it unacceptable that after making workers take retraining and refresher courses, after making them satisfy all sorts of requirements so that they can qualify and be able to accept a job in the labour market, these people, regardless of their age or responsibilities, after following religiously the advice of counsellors on their suitability for such and such line of work, after graduating from their course, can be asked by a prospective employer: Do you have any experience? Mr. Speaker, if I were 20 years old and if I told a prospective employer that I had just completed some sort of training course and this employer asked me if I had any experience, I think I would just slap him across the face. That is an insult. Someone says: I have just completed my studies, I have my diploma, I am ready to enter the work force, can you hire me, and is being asked if he or she has any experience. Mr. Speaker, if all those people who ask if the person looking for a job has any experience, if all those business executives, those departmental officials from whatever department and at whatever level of government, be it municipal, provincial or federal, had been asked the same question, not many of them would have been given a job. Everyone deserves a chance before being refused. The person has prepared him or herself. The government has made expenditures to help him acquire the skills needed for a particular type of work, a certain role, a trade, but if all employers refuse him or her the opportunity to work because of lack of experience, then he or she will never acquire the experience. The only experience that would then be acquired is that of rejection. That person will feel incapable of doing anything worth-while in this country and will say: I am now prepared to spend the rest of my life on welfare. Being a welfare recipient is not a vocation, Mr. Speaker. There are other things you can do in life. And that is where I would like once again to strongly suggest to the government, during the hard times we are going through, when the private sector cannot use all this manpower, all this youth, that the public autorities should take up their responsibilities by systematically organizing public works to build public facilities and things which are an absolute must for the population.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I see you are about to tell me that my allotted time has expired, I am willing to accept this, however I would like to suggest once again to the Minister of Employment and Immigration that, along with his colleagues, he should review once again this formula of guaranteed annual income that was put forward and was examined by the federal government and the provinces; this should be reconsidered and established as soon as possible, giving the opportunity to ensure that everybody has a minimum annual income, and leaving to each the hope to earn more by his work and thus ensuring for himself a better standard of living.

[English]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the first amendment to this bill is unlike the first amendment to the United States constitution, which gives the people of the United States free speech. We are obviously going to be denied that because of the imposition of the provisions of Standing Order 75C. The analogy I am making is a bad one, but the first amendment of a number of amendments which have been put at the report stage of the bill gives us an opportunity to address ourselves to the bill in a general way.

I know Your Honour looks sceptical when I say that, and I am not unmindful of your intervention last night, but I think you will agree with me on reflection that if you read the provisions of the amendment now before the House, you will find that it does give us the same latitude as if we were in committee of the whole on clause 1 of the bill, which in and of itself is the same kind of free-wheeling debate as could take place at second reading or at third reading.

But this amendment at this time gives us an opportunity which is new, becuse we know as of today, as of the latest intervention by the minister, that there is to be an allocation of time, the imposition of Standing Order 75C, or closure. It is closure—a rose by any other name. We know that tomorrow the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) will stand in his place at three o'clock and he will move, under the provisions of Standing Order 75C, an allocation of time on this bill which will terminate this debate on the report stage and third reading stage as of a certain hour on a certain day.

No matter what we say or do, nothing can change that. All we can do is to voice our opposition. I think we always have to oppose the arbitrary use of closure, and we can do that within the provisions of the Standing Order for a period of two hours. We can make ten-minute interventions over a period of two hours, and I have no doubt that we will take full advantage of that two-hour debate to talk about the mismanagement of the business of the House which brought us to this unhappy impasse. So tomorrow, then, to all intents and purposes, will be lost to us as a day to discuss the report stage of this bill and some of the important amendments before us. I say "some of the amendments" because not all the amendments are important. Indeed, it can be argued that some of them are frivolous; but some of them are very important.

I think it is rather interesting that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), the government House leader, was not here and did not do what is customarily done by the one who is responsible for the management of the House, and that is stand in his place and give notice of the motion which was given today by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Indeed, the President of the Privy Council was not in the House and you could almost read between the lines. You could almost hear the minister saying: You got yourself into this mess, Bud; now get yourself out of it because I will not do your dirty work for you. I could almost read that into what happened here in the House today.

The reason the President of the Privy Council would feel that way, being the good parliamentarian that he is and knowing the way the debate has been unfolding on this bill, is that he probably examined the record of the debate yesterday and found that not one government backbencher, not two government backbenchers, but three government backbenchers participated in this debate in addition to the minister. I suggest that the government has contributed to this debate as much as any other party in the House. I have not made a head count of the NDP; perhaps they had four speakers. Certainly they had no more than four, and the government had four, but we had only one speaker until we saw what was happening. Then we said that obviously, if this is the way it is going to be, we are going to participate in this debate. If the government is going to allow its backbenchers to suck and blow at the same time, which is what they did yesterday because the three hon. members opposite who participated in the debate all spoke against the bill, then we can take part in the debate also.

The hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) did the most magnificent job of gobbling herself up whole—as my friend, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) would say, "gutted" herself up—because she voted for the bill in committee, and is on record as doing so since it was a recorded vote. Yesterday, she stood in her place and took her 20 minutes in this debate to express her opposition to this bill. I would defy any member of the House, including the minister, to read anything else into her speech except her great opposition to this bill.

If we go back a little bit, we will find the intervention by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lapointe), who also spoke in opposition to the bill. All I can say for him is that he was not in the committee. I do not believe he participated in the committee and certainly he did not vote for the bill in the committee. Nevertheless, I do not know how he can reconcile his position as a junior member of the government with standing in his place in the House and opposing a bill sponsored by the government which he has taken an oath to serve. How can he reconcile that with his speech last night? That is for the hon. member and his own conscience.

It is well for us to take a look at what he said. He spoke about some of the provisions of the bill being commendable, and then he said:

—and I think that if this bill could be fairly applied for all Canadians I would not have any objection to support it.

Then he went on to state his objections to the bill and we have heard them over and over again. They are based on the 48 UI districts across the country and the fact that the provisions of the bill will apply inequitably, unfairly and unjustly. So it is right that we should be opposed to the bill. I will be watching very closely and very carefully to see how the hon. member votes when we get to third reading of the bill, and when we vote on some of the amendments dealing with the very objections that he raised. I suggest both to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport and to the hon. member for South Western Nova, who is a former parliamentary secretary, that we will be watching them. It is too late for them to take the powder now because they are on the record as being opposed to this bill.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there was the third intervention yesterday. What can I say about the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie)?

An hon. Member: That he should take a walk.

Mr. McGrath: We have a term for it in Newfoundland. It is not parliamentary so I will not use it, but it has to do with the fish business. It is a part of the fish that has little or no value; it is useless. It could be used maybe for cat food as a protein supplement. I read the speech of the hon. member for Hochelaga and found that he also spoke against the bill. He said:

It is obvious that the government must cut expenses one way or another but, Mr. Speaker, I would not like to penalize people who are unemployed against their will and who have no other choice.

That could have been the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) speaking, it could have been me or any other member of the House, but, significantly, it was a supporter of the government. As we come to divisions on this bill and to amendments which address themselves to the very objections the hon. member raised, we will be very carefully watching the hon. member for Hochelaga vote on this bill.

I say to my good friends behind me who are making interjections that they do not have to worry about this side of the House. We have made it very clear that we intend to vote against this bill since it is now obvious that the government has no intention of dealing with our amendments. The position was put forward, and it has been a consistent one, by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), that if the government had accepted our amendments, then obviously we would have supported the bill. Now we know there is going to be closure and we may not even get to our amendments. Therefore, of course, we have no choice. I say to the hon. member for Nickel Belt and the hon. member from Toronto who is behind him, the hon. member for "Broadbent"—

● (1612)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I say to the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae)— "Broadbent" was close enough anyway—that he will have no doubt at all just exactly what our position is on this bill. We intend to make it very clear as the debate progresses. I am concerned that, as a consequence of what the minister has done, we may not get to some of the important amendments, including the amendment that stands in the name of my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, and the amendment that stands in the name of my colleague the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). Indeed, it is a fairly good bet we will not get to those amendments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We will have to vote on them.

Mr. McGrath: We will have to vote on them certainly, but we will not have the opportunity of debating them and we will not have the opportunity of dealing with the inequities of this bill which were so dramatically, honestly and sincerely presented to the House last night by the hon. member for South Western Nova, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Hochelaga.

This bill is iniquitous. It is a bad bill, an unjust bill and an unfair bill. It is a bad bill, Mr. Speaker, and it is bad legislation. This is a bill with which I find very few people agree. Okay, so the government are going to practice restraint; but are they going to practice restraint at the expense of the hon. member for Hochelaga and the hon. member for South Western Nova? I see the hon. member for Saint John Albert who is going to be most unjustly affected by this bill, yet all we ever get from him is his furious points of order. He never makes a positive contribution in this House.

Mr. Landers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to inform the House that the name of my riding changed about 15 years ago. Perhaps the hon. member's ideas about the riding are the same as they were when the riding had that name. The name of the riding is Saint John-Lancaster, not Saint John Albert.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, that is consistent with the contributions the hon. member has made in this House since he has been here. I accept the correction. It is Saint John-Lancaster, and the hon. member had better learn to enjoy it because he does not have much longer to stand in this place and interrupt as the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers); come the next election he will be back doing whatever it was he was doing before he came here.

Perhaps there is still an outside chance, a remote possibility, that the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster may screw up his courage, stand in his place in this House and follow the good example set by the hon. member for South Western Nova and the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, and speak out against this bill. He knows what it is going to do to his province. He knows what it is going to do to the unemployed people in his city. He knows that Saint John-Lancaster has one of the highest rates of urban unemployment anywhere in the country. He knows the 11.5 per cent triggering clause is going to exempt his area, and the people of Saint John are going to ask why they should be treated any different from the people on the north shore of New Brunswick. Why should the people on the north shore of New Brunswick have privileges in terms of qualifying for unemployment insurance which are denied those people in Saint John where the unemployment rate is 11 per cent? Let the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster explain that to his people.

We know the situation, and if we did not know it we heard the evidence given by the province. Indeed, we heard the proposal placed before the parliamentary committee by the province of New Brunswick. It was co-authored by the province of British Columbia and presented jointly by the provinces of New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Ontario. We know how they felt about the bill. I see the hon. member from the north shore of New Brunswick.

Mr. Breau: From Gloucester.

Mr. McGrath: We have great admiration for him and I know he is going to say the same thing in the House that he says outside the House, and that is that this bill is an unfair, unjust and inequitable bill. I am awaiting the opportunity of listening to him because he always speaks eloquently, sincerely and with great feeling and passion for the people he represents in this House, unlike his silent colleague, the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster.

We know that the province of New Brunswick has said that if this bill passes in its present form its results will be the equivalent of the biggest industry in Saint John, New Brunswick, closing down. I do not know what the total income of the forest industry is, but I suggest there are not very many industries in New Brunswick that pay out $40 million a year. I believe that is the estimate of what New Brunswick will lose. That is $40 million a year put directly into the economy of the province of New Brunswick. Is it any wonder they took the unprecedented move of asking to appear before a standing committee of this House?

I wonder what the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster would say if the Irving companies in Saint John, or in New Brunswick, were to decide they were going to close down all their operations and move to the Bahamas or the United States. The hon. member would be up the next day on a motion of urgent and pressing necessity, asking to adjourn this House. The impact of this bill will do exactly that to his province, yet he sits there mute. Shame! The hon. member does not do justice to the people who preceded him from the riding of Saint John-Lancaster.

If you look at the impact of the bill, Mr. Speaker, you will see how inequitable it is going to be. In Ontario it is going to affect 1.8 per cent of the claimants. In the province of New Brunswick it is going to affect 4.1 per cent of claimants. What is fair about that? In other words, an area where unemployment is the highest is an area that is going to be hardest hit by this bill. What could be more unfair? What could be more unjust than that kind of situation?

Surely if it is abuse the minister is after, there are abusers of the unemployment insurance scheme just as there are abusers of legal aid, just as there are abusers in the legal profession, and just as the medical profession abuses medicare. You will find abusers all over the place. This is not peculiar to unemployment insurance recipients.

I suggest that most of the abuses take place in parts of the country that will be the least hurt by this bill, namely, the most highly urbanized regions, paradoxically the regions of the country where unemployment is the lowest. All you have to do is go down the list. In the province of Alberta 1 per cent of the recipients of unemployment insurance will be affected by this bill, as opposed to 4.7 per cent of the recipients of unemployment insurance in the province of Newfoundland.

In addition, let us consider the special study which was commissioned by the minister's department into the hidden rate of unemployment. That study was put out by Statistics Canada, and we had to drag it out of them screaming. We knew it was under way and we placed questions on the order paper about it. Somebody arrived on Parliament Hill late Friday, like a thief in the night, and handed it in hoping nobody would notice it. Thank God somebody picked it up and as a result the government now knows what we have been saying for a long time, that the real rate of unemployment in this country is much more severe. Indeed, it is about 25 per cent more severe than the government pretends.

We know that the higher the rate of unemployment, the greater the rate of hidden unemployment. In my own province of Newfoundland, for that month they identified, 25,000 people were shown as unemployed when in actual fact, according to the study, there were 35,000 additional people unemployed, bringing the total to 60,000. When the government was saying that one million people nationally were unemployed, the actual fact was that there were 1,300,000 people unemployed in that month of March. These are people who do not draw unemployment insurance—I refer to the additional 25 per cent—because they have been unemployed so long they have become discouraged workers and are no longer counted. They have to sit around waiting for seasonal jobs, and these will be cut out from under them because of the terms of unemployment insurance. There are no other jobs for which they can look. Those are the people who will be hurt by this bill, the discouraged workers, amounting to 250,000 people in March.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Peters: Go ahead.

Some hon. Members: Consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, while listening to the previous speaker a while ago I was quite surprised to hear him say he is against the bill because most members of his party voted in favour of it in the House. Still I hope that all members of his party will eventually vote against this measure because in this party we are totally against it. That is why I take the opportunity of the debate on that amendment motion moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), motion No. 1, an amendment we would have liked to put forward ourselves, but we are pleased that the hon. member is doing it for us, the important thing being that the amendment is being discussed.

Mr. Speaker, maybe you will recall that we made few interventions at the second reading stage. As this legislation seemed to us so discriminatory and so ridiculous, we agreed to send it to committee to see which amendment the government or the minister would propose while it was there. We were quite disappointed when we noted that all amendments had been moved by opposition members, amendments which will die as all others, because the Liberal party has the majority. That is why today we feel obliged to deal with amendment No. 1, and we are doing now what we could have done at the second reading stage.

Mr. Speaker, the minister says the main reason for introducing this bill is to fight unemployment insurance defrauders. Imagine. If the minister were, Father—I am sorry, I meant Mr. Speaker, and I see that when one talks about SINs, one always thinks of clergymen—if the minister were, Mr. Speaker, to go after all cheaters in all areas, tax cheaters because some people cheat the tax department and run after all those who file fraudulent tax returns, or cheating doctors, cheating lawyers, cheaters everywhere, he would not have enough time to uncover thieves everywhere.

I think it would be better to check our own backyard. I say that we are now unemployment insurance premium cheaters. We require that all workers pay unemployment insurance premiums and the government pockets that money and does not pay what it should after taking that unemployment insurance premium out of the worker's pay cheque to guarantee him protection if he runs out of work. I say the government is the greatest cheater if we want to talk about cheaters because it takes even more from workers to give them back half as much as before. Mr. Speaker, if that is not cheating—and I say that the cheating starts at a high level. Let us not be surprised that at a lower level there should be a little cheating because the example is set at the top. That is what must be denounced and I think the government should be generous enough to set things in order to give back rights to the unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, in his statement on November 9, 1978, the minister said that the primary purpose of the changes he was proposing was to reduce certain disincentives in the present unemployment insurance formula. A second reason given to hide the real one. In fact, it is to discourage frequent users who use unemployment insurance several times during a year. From now on those clients will have to meet more stringent eligibility criteria, except in areas where the unemployment rate is either 11.5 per cent or 22 per cent of the labour force or over. The cyclically unemployed and people outside those areas will have to work a maximum 20 weeks to qualify instead of the ten or 14 required of casual users. Mr. Speaker, certainly not one member in this House thought for a moment unemployment insurance was a work incentive.

It has always been my belief that unemployment insurance is an insurance policy to cover the loss of employment risk, the premiums for which are paid by the employer, the employee and the government who appointed a commission to administer that insurance, because this is a labour or group insurance of sorts. For this reason, I cannot accept that unemployment insurance benefits be compared to social welfare benefits.

The second aim, according to the minister, is to promote the desire to work among people who normally get more money from unemployment insurance than a steady job. But where it is impossible to find work, and this is particularly true of seasonal workers, how can they be expected to find work anywhere? This hides the profound lack of concern of the government for poor Canadians since the average benefits provided by the Unemployment Insurance Commission rarely exceed $110 a week. The government can hardly blame unemployment insurance recipients if they want to get nearer the poverty line, even if it is at the expense of the state. This tactic suggests that this government is trying to gain political advantages at the expense of the poor and to supposedly promote employment on the backs of the unemployed. It would seem more humanitarian to increase the minimum wages or to promote the implementation of a guaranteed annual income than to force the beneficiaries to re-enter the labour market to seek badly paid jobs.

Is the government trying to hide its economic inability by passing legislation which penalizes mostly low wage earners? Can we expect anything else from a government which governs so unconcernedly and so badly that is has waited this long to introduce a bill which should have been debated several months ago? If the private sector followed the example of the government, it would be bankrupt within six months.

Does the government believe that you amend a bill simply by changing its title? The government should start by cutting back on extravagant expenses like the purchase of military airplanes at a cost of $2.5 billion and the fantastic expenses incurred for its travels around the world. This would provide the billions required to stimulate the economy.

The government wants to bolster the economy, and because of this, it is trying to find the necessary funds within the unemployment insurance program, as it did earlier with family allowances. We oppose the title of Bill C-14 because the new unemployment insurance legislation aims first of all at cutting off 250,000 people from the unemployment insurance lists. According to the figures, without seasonal adjustment, of Statistics Canada, there were 854,000 unemployed in Canada on October 20, 1978. We can therefore state that the Department of Manpower and Immigration wants to return 29 per cent of the present beneficiaries, or 250,000 unemployed, to the labour market when there are no jobs available.

Moreover, the commission wants to reduce weekly benefits by an avarage of 6⅔ per cent. It is therefore useless to think about cost of living indexing for unemployment insurance benefits. Even though the yearly inflation rate reached 8.6 per cent in September 1978, unemployment insurance benefits will be reduced from 66⅔ per cent to 60 per cent of insurable earnings. This means an effective reduction of 6⅔ per cent.

From now on, the commission will require repayment of up to 30 per cent of benefits received from anyone who makes over $20,500 a year. This is a flagrant injustice and an incomprehensible deviation from the present unemployment insurance system. Once again, the principle of universality is put aside to get back a few dollars more. The wage earner who makes $20,500 a year contributes generously to the unemployment insurance fund.

So when he claims unemployment benefits after losing his job, he must get the same guarantees as any other unemployment insurance recipient. It is unfair and discriminatory that this individual must return part of his benefits if he earns over $20,500 when he is reintegrated in the labour market.

The government evaluates at $1.5 billion its savings under the proposed changes. We should note that the savings made in unemployment insurance represent $1.5 billion or 60 per cent of total cuts. Obviously, the government justifies this accounting exercise by pointing out that the savings made in unemployment insurance will be reallocated to job creation programs, job training programs, and the reduction of the employer and employee contributions to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. However, those changes are beneficial to the employer and employee while their cost is mostly supported by unemployment insurance recipients and workers. Does this mean that Canadian workers subsidize 60 per cent of the cost of our economic recovery? We can really say that the unemployed are at their wits end.

The many changes made from time to time by this government to the unemployment insurance program are causing more and more hardships to the unemployed. For mysterious reasons, the government has declared war against the most unfortunate of our society. The family allowances bill was a good example of this. As concerns the unemployment insurance bill, it just confirms that tendency. What strikes us about this bill is the negative nature of those amendments. You can certainly support measures intended to make ineligible those who abuse the system, but when you see so many measures applied without distinction to the unemployed and the freeloaders it gives you cause for reflection.

The percentage of unemployed is much higher than the percentage of those who abuse the system. A study of the Economic Council of Canada maintains that four out of every five unemployed who draw unemployment benefits are jobless for reasons beyond their control. By reducing benefits rates from 66⅔ per cent to 60 per cent of the average weekly insurable earnings the government unfairly penalizes those who are really unemployed as well as the freeloaders.

As a corollary to the last point, let us mention that in the case of the unemployed, that is, the person who really cannot find work, the cost of living is going up every year just as it does for the rest of us. But instead of providing compensation for the loss of income stemming from inflation, the government decides to reduce the rate of benefits. Bearing in mind the inflation factor, the unemployed person is now being doubly penalized.

In a statement published on September 1, 1978, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) explained, as follows, one of the prime objectives of the new amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I want to make sure, he said, that the unemployment insurance program fully encourages Canadians to seek employment. Even if there is no work, they must find a job. With the new regulations going into force, about 240,000 recipients will therefore have to seek and find jobs. That truly is a strange goal, considering the fact that at the end of September there were 940,000 unemployed and, at the very same time, only 50,000 jobs were available in Canada.

How will the minister manage to convince 249,000 idle workers to apply for those 50,000 jobs? The proposal of the minister sounds quite like a magic trick. With this new bill the government is once again putting the plough before the oxen. Before initiating such drastic cutbacks in the unemployment insurance program, the government should try instead to stimulate the economy thereby creating employment because the creation of jobs is the surest way to lower the cost of unemployment insurance. However, I warn the government that it is not by doubling the number of bureaucrats that it is going to create new and productive jobs.

According to the government, one of the flaws of the present system has to do with the ease with which people can find a job and be again in a position to draw benefits. They see a chronic evil in that fact. Yet is it truly their fault if they cannot find a job and have to rely on unemployment insurance to survive? Unemployment insurance actually becomes a form of guaranteed annual income for a good many unemployed and the government seems to be opposed to this philosophy, yet it is showing itself rather receptive to the principle of a guaranteed annual income as such. The least that can be said is that this government is not very consistent or coherent in its way of thinking.

The government is claiming that it is more than ready to open a dialogue with the provinces. With regard to the amendments put forth with respect to the unemployment insurance bill, it has only been partly receptive to the recommendations submitted by the provinces. As a matter of fact the Minister of Employment and Immigration refused to comply with the expressed wishes of the provinces at the last federal-provincial meeting. These provinces were asking him to delay the implementation of the new changes and rather to wait for the release of a study on the impact these new changes might have on the various welfare agencies. If one decides to go ahead with the changes before learning of the content of the study, why then bother with ordering that study in the first place?

The unilateral approach was paramount in this case and the federal government keeps accepting the contributions of the workers while having the provinces pay for social welfare. These same 249,000 unemployment insurance beneficiaries who will be dropped off will not all be able to get a job as we have seen. Consequently, because we are not yet living in an era of guaranteed annual income, these same people will have to turn to the welfare program and, therefore, the provinces will have to take over responsibilities assumed up to now by the federal government. Again today, Mr. Speaker, the House has before it Bill C-14, to amend the existing act. But we are aware that in reality it is the members of the commission, together with the minister, who will write the regulations, which will not require passage in the House and which will change the entire interpretation of the bill.

I have an example from my riding concerning farm workers. The original legislation treated these workers the same as all other industrial or commercial workers. However, under regulation 57 established by technocrats and the minister, farm workers must have worked a minimum of 25 days for a minimum wage of $250 to be eligible. I always thought that this was made on a voluntary basis. But I learned today from the minister that this is mandatory and that those 25 days must be worked under the same employer, which is worse, and which is not even mentioned in section 57 of the unemployment insurance regulations.

I say to the minister that this is misleading the workers in addition to making people believe this section is in the act. And I want to tell him that some officials mislead the workers by telling them it is in the act when it is only a common regulation. However, the minister, in reply to my question, said that this regulation had been suggested to him by the farmers' federations, but I must point out to him that after contacting some provincial associations, I can prove that when one or two associations agreed, the regulation became optional. When the minister made it mandatory, they were not consulted, even though a majority of them are opposed to section 57 in its present form.

I want to be honest and I want the government to be honest with all my fellow citizens. I swear that I will not stand seeing more than 100 of my fellow citizens, who have been working in Ontario for years picking fruits and vegetables, deprived of unemployment insurance benefits. When I think that for many years—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order! I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[English]

Mr. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to rise here today to make my maiden address on one of the most serious areas of mismanagement of our economy, the unemployment insurance system. The deficit in this system will amount to almost one-fifth of the total government deficit this year. This deficit will arise from a combination of factors. By far the most important factor is the tragic mishandling of our economy over the last ten years, mishandling which has seen the aspirations of Canadians from coast to coast thwarted; mishandling which has seen our regional differences, both politically and economically, widened.

Another very important reason for the large deficit in the unemployment insurance plan is the terrible design of the plan itself. We on this side of the House have spoken often about redesigning the plan to cut abuses. We have spoken often about the need to bring deficits under control. We were speaking about restraint years before the deathbed repentance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Furthermore, by proper redesign much more money could be saved and far less hardship would be caused. However, I contend the proposed changes will not do the job, are poorly conceived, and will only serve to create hardships among many hundreds of thousands of victims of this government's mismanagement.

How did the current problems arise? There was a general feeling in the late 1960s that the benefits were too low under the plan and that some recipients of unemployment insurance benefits bordered precariously on impoverishment. After 30 years of working a little too well financially, the government introduced massive changes in the plan. It widened the scope of the benefits, increased the coverage, increased benefit amounts, increased the covered earnings, decreased the qualification period, and changed the method of financing. The 1971 changes were dramatic. They were almost breathtaking in scope. But history has proven that the 1971 changes were disastrous in design.

Recent public opinion polls show that a very high proportion of the population, usually over 80 per cent and most recently 88 per cent, believe that the unemployment insurance system is subject to widespread abuse. Just recently I joined the House after campaigning for the better part of a year, and I can confirm that this perception is very widely shared among the electorate. I made a point of asking people at coffee parties and public meetings why they believed the abuse was so widespread. The answer was shocking. Over a period of some three months, every single person I asked claimed that personally they knew someone who abused the system. They personally knew someone who had received benefits from the unemployment insurance system while having some other sort of cash income, or who had taken benefits from the unemployment insurance system while not seriously looking for work. The public's perception is that there has been and still is widespread abuse of the unemployment insurance plan.

What action has the government taken about this abuse? It has attempted to tinker several times with the concepts introduced in the 1971 bill. It has tried advertising campaigns to convince the Canadian public that the abuse is minimal. Also it tried advertising campaigns to convince the cheaters that somehow cheating is unpatriotic.

I am an actuary, and I am one of a handful of actuaries in Canada who has actually priced and designed income protection plans. This is an area which is loaded with pitfalls, an area where it has been demonstrated time and time again, in country after country, that when an income protection plan is not properly designed, widespread abuse of the plan will take place.

The evidence in Canada is overwhelming that widespread abuse has taken place. The public knows it; the statistics prove it. But let me try to put this abuse into perspective. My experience in design of private insurance reinforces the conclusions of actuarial and other economic studies of the unemployment insurance plan to suggest that about 1 per cent to 1.5 per cent of the working population is abusing the plan. This is about one out of six of the unemployed. It is the actual design itself of the plan which leads to this abuse.

My friends in the New Democratic Party probably would argue that my estimate of the amount of the abuse is too high. That is a point I could debate with them. However, whether my figures are too high or not, the basic fact remains that the vast bulk of the unemployed are legitimately unemployed. They are not cheaters. They are unemployed because of the ineptitude of this government. They are unemployed because there is not enough work available in the country.

This government is trying to conceal its own ineptitude by blaming the unemployed for its failures. In his address on August 1, the Prime Minister referred to those who chose not to work. Referring to the proposed changes in the unemployment insurance bill, federal spokesmen have used words such as, "UIC crackdown" and "weeding out the abusers". For the government to pretend that its current proposals for unemployment insurance will "weed out the abusers" is unethical and dishonest.

We on this side of the House recognize there must be changes in the unemployment insurance plan. There must be cuts, but they must be sensible and intelligent ones which curb abuse. Each of the proposed changes presented by the government does not distinguish in any way between honest and dishonest claimants. The changes proposed by the government represent no less than an attempt to ride to popularity on the backs of the unemployed whom this government is responsible for creating.

In his introductory statement to the House, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) stated that he tried to wield a scalpel instead of an axe. A scalpel is a precision instrument when wielded by a surgeon. However, a scalpel in the hands of a layman can result in cutting away the muscle rather than the tumor. A scalpel in the wrong hands can result in the victim bleeding to death through a series of painful cuts. At least the axe has the virtue of putting the victim out of his agony quickly.

The minister has stated that the prime objective of his proposals is to "reduce some of the disincentives to work which are present in the program". "Reduce the disincentives to work"—doesn't that just roll off your tongue nicely? What the minister means is that many thousands of families in desperate straits are going to have essential dollars removed from their incomes when there is no work available.

What the minister means is that in areas of high unemployment people who are unlucky enough to lose their job twice in a year can be cut off benefits. What the minister means is that people returning to the work force after a period of absence must find 20 weeks of employment to be covered, work which may not be available because of the economic mismanagement of this government.

In order to eliminate the political problem of the public's perception of abuse within the unemployment insurance system, the minister appeals to the worst in the electorate. He appeals to the electorate to cut back all of the unemployed's benefits, knowing full well that the vast majority of the unemployed, at least five out of six, are unemployed because of this government's economic failures. He has thrust that scalpel into the gut of the unfortunate and is twisting it about.

The burden of the government's proposed changes falls very unevenly in this country. Going back ten years, we had regional disparities in this country. However, the rate of unemployment in the more fortunate provinces differed only by 2.9 per cent from the rate of unemployment in the less fortunate provinces. Today, Mr. Speaker, that difference has widened terribly. The difference between the unemployment rate in the more prosperous provinces and that of the less prosperous provinces was 7.9 per cent last year, nearly the 8.1 per cent average rate of unemployment across the country.

These proposed changes will fall most heavily on that area of the country that can least afford to bear it—the Atlantic provinces and Quebec. In his initial national election campaign, the Prime Minister committed our country to a national goal, the goal of eliminating, or at least significantly reducing, regional disparity. The Prime Minister talked about the just society. Where is the justice of these proposals? Where is the justice of exacting the largest penalties from the areas least able to afford it, the areas where the government's own failure is causing the problems?

I agree with the Minister of Employment and Immigration that the government needs to wield a scalpel instead of an axe. But the scalpel has to be in the hands of a surgeon to be of use, in the hands of someone with compassion, someone with understanding, someone committed to designing a workable plan, a fair plan, an equitable plan that will provide Canadians with the protection they deserve at a price they can afford.

Let us look at the basic premise underlying the current and the proposed plans. The government has tried to design an unemployment insurance plan which provides one level of benefits, 60 per cent of earnings, for Canadians making less than $12,500 regardless of their situation in life. I think it is obvious that any benefit which is high enough to be adequate for a family consisting of a husband, a wife and children with only a single wage earner will be more than adequate for a single wage earner with no dependants, and can even provide an incentive to exploit the plan with no financial loss to certain types of secondary wage earners. Consider a family supported by one wage earner, either a single parent family or a two parent family, where the wage earner earns $200 a week. Under the current plan the wage earner could, if unemployed, collect up to $133 per week.

I submit that few heads of families would find any inducement whatsoever to quit their jobs to take that sort of income cut. In fact, I believe that the ministry's own statistics bear me out. Only about 14 per cent of the claimants of unemployment insurance are heads of families. However, consider for a moment the other extreme. Consider the case of a working mother whose husband is already at work and who has two children and makes the same $200 per week. In metropolitan Toronto that mother would probably have to pay someone about $50 per week to look after her children during the day. She would also have to pay at least $10 per week in transportation and miscellaneous expenses.

The point is that, even before taxes or fringe benefit costs are brought into consideration, the most such a person can earn is about $140 per week. Yet, Mr. Speaker, that $50 per week is probably not being paid to someone willing to give receipts for income tax purposes. I am sure you know that that is probably illegal, but it is also probably the fact of the situation. In any case, this means that such a working mother would actually pay taxes on that $200 per week and that her net take-home pay would actually be lower by working than what she could receive by quitting her job and going on unemployment insurance.

I am not suggesting for a moment that the majority of working mothers are ripping off the system or even that a large proportion are. In fact, I am suggesting just the opposite when you remember that the problem is restricted to about 1½ per cent of the working population. The point is that the current plan is designed in such a way that it makes it profitable for certain people in the country to rip off the system.

If there is one thing that governments and insurance companies have learned over the years it is that when they present these opportunities to people, some people take them up on it. Those people can say to themselves, "I've got the insurance, I've paid for it, the insurance company or the government has plenty of money and I'm entitled to it." Actuaries call it "anti-selection" or "moral hazard". The public just thinks of it as cheating. I submit that by definition there can be no single insurance amount which is adequate for a head of a family which is not so over-adequate for certain types of secondary wage earners as to cause widescale abuse of the plan. Similarly, there is no single level appropriate for people without dependants which will not cause hardship to single earner families.

What the government is doing in its proposal is to reduce the proportion of covered earnings from 67 per cent to 60 per cent for all earners. I submit this will cause considerable hardship to many sole wage earners who are unemployed and who are supporting families. That extra $13 lost a week over a period of weeks can just grind families down.

However, it is equally obvious that the $13 a week cut does not remove all the financial incentive from other categories of workers. It will still be possible for certain categories of secondary wage earners to benefit by being unemployed. When they can benefit, some will choose to benefit. The government will save some money with their cuts, but they will not significantly curb abuse.

The fundamental principle in designing income replacement plans is to ensure that benefits provided bear a proper relationship to the net income of the insured. I suggest that it is not a difficult job whatsoever to design benefits which vary by family status to provide just that sort of relationship to need.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health and Welfare—Progress in field of behavioural medicine; the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Regional Economic Expansion—Development of northern Ontario; the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis)—Public Service—Cost of booklet circulated to employees.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

Item No. 8, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker). Shall the item stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Item No. 9, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Siddon). Shall the item stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Item No. 10, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Shall the item stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEASURE TO FIX DURATION AT FOUR YEARS

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane) moved that Bill C-212, respecting the duration of every House of Commons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the essence of this bill is to have fixed dates for our general elections. When I first introduced this bill in the last session, it was together with two other bills as a sort of package. The idea was that all of these measures could be debated at one time in our discussions on changes to the constitution. Unfortunately, we have not had an opportunity to go into that matter fully.

This bill is rather related to the others in that it would help to simplify the operation of this House. One of those bills had to do with the designation of a seat on Parliament Hill to be occupied by Mr. Speaker. The second one had to do with the automatic designation of seats for the leaders of the government and opposition. The third had to do with fixed dates for elections.

There is nothing new about this principle; several other members have brought it up in the past. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) had such a bill on the order paper on a number of occasions so that we might be able to put some order and planning into our work and, more important, so that the people of Canada might know exactly how long a government would be in office and precisely when a new administration would be taking over.

As hon. members are aware, the twenty-ninth parliament was a minority parliament; we did not know from one day to the next whether parliament would continue or not. Everyone at that time was very anxious that something be done about determining when elections would be held. Arguments came from both sides to the effect that the situation would be much more stable if there were fixed election dates, whether there was a minority government or not; the people would make a decision and we would stick by that decision. The way things are now, we are supposed to second guess the people. If the people decide they want to send one party or another here, that is their privilege; we ought not to turn around and say: Unless you give us "X" number of members we shall not be able to carry on as a government or as a properly formed House of Commons. My view is that we should be obliged, as representatives of the people, to go ahead and represent them in the way they have chosen.

Surveys were made at that time. I made some surveys with respect to simplifying the work of the House. One suggestion was that members might work here for three weeks and then be off for one week so that we could do work in our own constituencies. Everyone was ready to accept suggestions of that type, in particular that there should be a fixed term for parliament. Of course, as soon as the majority government came about in 1974 most people forgot about it. In recent months, however, I have received a little publicity in connection with this bill and as a result letters have reached me from all parts of the country. I have been on open line shows even in Vancouver—over the telephone from here, of course. People called in and I do not recall any single individual who disagreed with the idea of fixed election dates. They all stated unequivocally it is time we adopted some procedure like that.

On most occasions when we discuss matters of this sort it is said we are imitating the United States or adopting a republican form of government. People like to place labels on these things. I do not believe this would lead to a republican form of government at all. If it happened to suit our purposes and it is best for the people of Canada, there is no reason why we should not go ahead with it.

The bill itself states that the next general election will be on the first Monday of June of next year and subsequent elections would be held every four years thereafter, the new administration taking hold on July 1. But this measure differs from some of the other bills in this area in that it would include a kind of ceremonial sitting of the House of Commons on July 1 at which time the new administration would take over. It would be a ceremonial sitting at which the people would be able to participate. It would take place on Parliament Hill and it would include people from all parts of Canada and from all walks of life, people of various ethnic groups.

As part of the ceremony citizenship certificates could be given out. There are any number of things we could do. We could include some of our religious leaders to show we have not forgotten about the existence of a supreme being. As I say, there are any number of things which could be included in a ceremony of that kind. In this bill I am suggesting that such a ceremony should take place every year at the beginning of the new session. There would be four sessions but, of course, the most important ceremony would be that at the beginning of the new parliament.

It is unfortunate that whenever we want to get something done around here we invariably say we must use a non-partisan approach. In other words, if we want to do anything right let us forget about partisan politics. I agree there is too much partisanship generally. The very fact that people would make that remark about approaching a subject in a non-partisan way shows there is too much partisanship around here. If there were a four-year period during which everyone knew very well there was not going to be an election, perhaps we would get down to work and do business without always taking a politically partisan approach. This, in my view, would be one of the most important things to be gained by holding an election only at fixed dates every four years.

It is also unfortunate that most of the ideas that private members bring forward, such as this one, for example, are discussed only briefly during private members' hour and then forgotten, simply because they are talked out, as it were, and there is no opportunity for them to be discussed more fully in committee. Many members before me have described this as being a very poor approach. Many of the issues brought up during the private members' hour could well be sent to a committee. I do not care what quarter of the House they come from, but it should be possible for them to go to a committee where they could be carefully considered. This does not mean they would be accepted; they could be modified, if need be, and brought into line, perhaps, with majority thinking. Then one day they could be brought back to the House for adoption in some form or other.

We do not do enough of this sort of thing and I believe it is unfortunate that most of the ideas put forward by private members are simply left to die on the order paper. Since I have been in this chamber, almost 11 years, a number of worth-while suggestions have been put forward by hon. members, including myself, but they were not adopted because of this system we use. It is a big mistake. We sometimes say the committees do not have enough work to keep them busy, that they should be sitting more often, dealing with matters in greater depth and adopting an investigative role. Despite this, we are reluctant to pass on some of these ideas which originate in the private members' hour to committes where they could be discussed more fully and perhaps improved. Undoubtedly the hour of six o'clock will come and someone will still be talking, but at least I put in my plea once again to those who look after government business that it is time to take a more serious look at this whole system and to include some of these private members' bills among the subjects discussed in committee. A number of them might then be incorporated in legislation. If not, at least the views expressed will have been aired. That is what the people of Canada sent us here to do and that is what they expect us to do.

Mr. Rob Parker (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this private members' bill I suppose I should begin by pointing out the agreement which we on this side of the House have with the author of this bill in that good ideas from all corners of the House are always acceptable. We are very interested in examining suggestions for improvements to the legislation of Canada whether emanating from private members or the government. That sentiment is obviously one which is shared not only by the author of this bill and by members on this side of the House but also, indeed, by the government. It is quite possible to say that all of the good ideas the government has had for the last ten years have come from this side of the House to begin with.

There are a number of things about this bill, however, which, once we get past the principle of being willing to examine any suggestion, occur to me. The first is that this bill purports to amend the British North America Act. I may have been labouring under some sort of delusion for the last 35 years, but it is my understanding that one of the greatest problems facing Canada today is the difficulty of amending the British North America Act.

We have been trying for close to 50 years to amend the British North America Act and we have been unable to agree on exactly how to do it. Here is a private member's bill from a distant corner of the House which purports in four or five paragraphs to do it. I find that strange. I would not suggest that it is arrogant. I do not think any private members opposite are arrogant. Arrogance is a very special kind of disease, and the carriers opposite are restricted to a certain number of seats. However, if one sits too close to the carrier of a disease, sometimes the spores may be borne on the wind and one can be infected. I would not make that accusation; I merely suggest that it is possible in this case that the author of this bill may have got the idea that with a private member's bill he could do what the government of this country has been unable to do, despite all its efforts, for the past ten years.

In the explanatory notes there is the assertion that, and I quote:

> The purpose of this bill is to fix at four years the duration of every House of Commons notwithstanding any successful "no confidence" motion. If a minority government suffered a defeat on what is traditionally accepted as a "no confidence" matter, there would be required the development of a convention of the constitution which would enable a government to carry on until the day fixed for a general election.

I remember a movie a few years ago entitled, I think, "Carry on Regardless," which it seems to me is what is being suggested here: carry on despite having lost the confidence of the House of Commons; carry on despite having been defeated.

In proposed section 50(3) of the act there is provision for a government to be defeated on a motion for the approval of its budgetary policy, a motion to concur in main estimates or a motion expressing lack of confidence, so perhaps that covers that objection; but it seems to me somewhat fundamental to our system of parliamentary democracy that one of the few protections the people of the country have is that, if the government is defeated in this chamber, it must resign and ask for a new mandate. It is verging on the outrageous to suggest that that be altered. One of the fundamental protections in our system is our ability to dismiss the government.

In another clause of the bill it is suggested that there be a ceremonial gathering, a pretty ceremony, once a year on or about July 1 at which there would be participation by representatives of the different walks of life and ethnic and religious communities in Canada. Surely it is not going too far to suggest that that is what we already have in this chamber. It is the entire purpose and foundation of this chamber that we be representative of the different walks of life and ethnic, religious, social, political and geographic communities in Canada. I would have no objection, in a ceremonial sense, to adding other representation to this body on one day of the year. I think it might be instructive, for example, to have our friends in the fourth estate come down from their special perch for a while, but I am not sure that would get directly at what the hon. member is suggesting in this bill.

The hon. member also suggested that perhaps there is too much partisanship. He suggested that the proof of that argument is that frequently people comment that there is too much partisanship. That reminds me of a duck flying through a cloud of birdshot and saying, "There is too much birdshot around here". The hunter does not object to the birdshot, just the bird, and he objects to it because it is aimed at him. That may be what has happened on the other side of this House.

Partisanship has its disadvantages from time to time. There is such a thing as being too partisan, I suppose, but it seems to me that partisan politics and the act of being partisan are fundamental protections. Partisanship is built into this chamber. This chamber is designed for partisanship. If there were no partisanship, this chamber would not function. Our benches are divided by two sword lengths, precisely because of the partisan history and development of this kind of chamber.

A reaction to too much partisanship is somewhat suspect. Over the past few months the government has received no partisanship from this side of the House, merely honest, objective criticism of its legislation and of what it is doing. We do not believe in being partisan or taking partisan advantage in this chamber. We save that for the hustings, which is its proper place. There are people in this House who on occasion take partisan advantage, and surely some of that must be allowed.

As to referring this bill to a committee, which is a possibility with any private member's bill, I agree with the general principle of referring private members' bills to committees for discussion, but I come back to my first point. At all the committees, special task forces, federal-provincial conferences and first ministers' conferences the only prime minister in recent history who has been able to get unanimity from the provinces is our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The Prime Minister has been able, after much effort this summer, to get the provinces to agree on one thing, and it is a constitutional matter. Our Prime Minister has been able to get the provinces to agree that his approach to constitutional reform is wrong. The provinces are unanimous on that point.

That is a great achievement. It is not the achievement we need, but it is a great achievement. It is unique, and if we are to consider amending the British North America Act, which I think we need to do—and we may indeed need to do it in the area this bill addresses—I suggest that we turn our attention first to getting another kind of national unanimity, one which agrees with the Prime Minister. If we cannot get unanimity which agrees with this Prime Minister, perhaps we can get unanimity which would agree with a different prime minister.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to support the bill which the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) has put before us today to regulate parliament. As the hon. member says, it is the kind of bill which should go to committee. There should be some input from quite a number of sources, and surely we can come up with a better system than the one we have at the present time. I probably would disagree with some of the measures the hon. member has proposed, but I am sure that would be true no matter what bill was before us. Someone would see something wrong, and that is really why bills should be referred to committees.

I am particularly impressed by the hon. member's argument that the government should not have such cold feet that it cannot at least refer some bills to committees so that those committees can have input and recommendations might be tried out on the hustings, in the newspapers and in a number of fora besides committees. Surely in that way some solutions could be arrived at.

There has never been a better time to discuss this bill than right now. For the first time in a long while we are in a period of a delayed election. The election was planned first for last spring and all systems were go. The main thrust came last spring—although there had been small flurries before—when it was anticipated that an election would be called and everybody was prepared for it. It was interesting to hear the Prime Minister going round the country saying that he had spoken to many people and had found that they did not want an election. He said that elections cost money and that at this time we should not be spending money but rather getting on with the business of governing the country.

I say that if we are going to have a democratic process, if we are going to operate in the British tradition, it is normal to have an election periodically. The law under which we operate today is a very loose law which says roughly two things. It says, first, that we must have an election every five years at least, that an election must be called within a five-year period; and second, that there must be a sitting of parliament every year. That means that under that definition an election should be called in early July. But because we will have a session in January of 1979, an election need not be held in 1979. I suppose it could be delayed until September, 1979, or we could go even into the next year.

Mr. Breau: Until December of 1979.

Mr. Peters: There would be a session in 1979 and a session in 1980, so an election would still be called within the five-year period. That would make sense only in specific circumstances and if you decided to fit the rules to a given set of circumstances. However, it seems to me, as it does to the hon. member for Cochrane, that a much more sensible arrangement is to have an election called within a set period of time, I suggest a four-year period, and that the election be held on a set date. The day of the week might vary, or else the day of the week could be set in such and such a month. I think that there must be safeguards in any system, and therefore a method should be devised whereby an election could be called more often than in the set period of time. Also, there should be a possibility of lengthening the set period of time under certain circumstances such as a war or a revolution.

An hon. Member: Or bad polls.

Mr. Peters: No, not bad polls. I have a bill proposing the abolition of polls. I think that would be an awful way to run a country. We have been operating on the poll structure for too long. Mr. Gallup and our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have developed a great relationship. I do not think that should be the way to set the length of a parliament.

If we go back to the King-Bing issue—probably a bad example because the right decision was made but the public supported the wrong decision—there was an opportunity for the Governor General to act by saying that, because the government was defeated, it did not necessarily mean an election should be called but that the opposition should be asked to form the government and be given the opportunity to do so. I believe there should be such a reasonable arrangement—and it would have to be a pretty formal arrangement—whereby the government could be changed in a four-year period without an election necessarily being called.

I am sure that if any member of parliament were asked now about an election being called, he would agree that we should have one and get it over with, whatever the result might be, but that some decision must be taken before long, because obviously this is a lame government and will continue to be so until an election is called.

We need another safeguard. In another bill I suggested the safeguard of a vote by 75 per cent of the members of the House on a motion put forward by 15 or 20 members stating that the House has now reached a stage at which it is desirable and beneficial to the nation to have a general election. If 75 per cent of the members supported such a motion, an election would be called, notwithstanding a set period of time in which elections are called.

The hon. member for Cochrane made mention of a ceremonial session in parliament. I have not much objection to that, but I certainly hope it would not rain on the day we decided to sit outside. In my area July 1 has been a rainy day for some time now; it has been a great time to get wet. Maybe that in itself would have an equalizing effect on the people attending the ceremonies.

I think there is something else we should do about parliament. Parliament in effect has failed in two ways. First, it has failed drastically because of some modifications we have made in our rules. We have lost control over the government's expenditure of money. We are in no position now to amend that expenditure. Quite often when the day comes that we have to pass the estimates, we pass items representing billions and billions of dollars in one motion without having scrutinized them, simply because the time has elapsed.

Therefore, we should look for a new system which would allow us some way of supervising the expenditures of the government in depth. I suggest that that be done by breaking each session of parliament into a number of sections. In one section we could discuss the expenditures of a set number of departments. We should do that in the House with all members in attendance until that scrutiny is completed. Then we would leave that for a period of time and continue with the other departments. We would be scrutinizing also the budgets for various programs within the departments to see whether or not they are still useful and whether or not they are overloaded with bureaucrats. I am sure there are departments, or branches within departments, or programs under departments, in which a number of bureaucrats are employed.

An illustration of that was given to me recently by my doctor who was treating a scientist in the civil service for a nervous breakdown. He was one of seven people who had been doing specific research in the department for a number of years. When these seven Ph.D.s first started working in that branch of the department there were three secretaries assisting them. Now, in the latest cutback which the government started implementing, four of the scientists had been relieved of their duties but the 300 support staff working with the original seven scientists still remain. Not one of them received notice that they were being laid off. I am only relating this as an example of what MPs scrutinizing the expenditures of a department would come across.

No one who has looked in depth at our committee system would fail to agree that it was a total failure. This is a great way of getting an education from senior civil servants who can tell you anything they want in their own specific fields and you pretty well have to take their word because your expertise does not extend into those fields.

The second period that should be set aside would be for investigation. We should investigate new ideas and new things that perhaps parliament should consider. One of the things we should be looking at is the use of social security numbers. Do we want to have SINs and do we want those numbers to be used for the purposes of unemployment insurance, or do we want them to be used as numbers fed into a computer for financial purposes? Those are the things we should be looking at in depth. Members of parliament represent all the people in this country and should come here as representatives to investigate these things. When a conclusion is arrived at, it will probably bear some relation to the needs of the people and to what the people feel they can support.

The third period of that session would be designated for legislation. When we discuss legislation it should be here in the House in terms of how it affects the various ridings. Each of these periods would fit into the categories mentioned by the hon. member for Cochrane, and would fit his suggestion that there should be more independence in this House and less partisanship.

When we come here we come as representatives of an area. In northern Ontario we have less partisanship than exists in many other areas. We can quite easily get together on many matters that affect northern Ontario because our problems are the same throughout the area and the members are relatively representative of the people there. I am not sure that is true of other areas, but it is true of ours. If there were less partisanship and more attention paid to the ridings and the areas we represent, we would have much better legislation in this country.

The last period would be that period when members of parliament go back home to visit their constituents. It is very easy to get out of touch with the man in the street when you stay in these buildings. It is nice to talk about reducing unemployment insurance benefits by 10 per cent, but when you talk to Bill Smith who has a 10 per cent reduction to his unemployment insurance, he will damned well tell you how it affects him. It means he is 10 per cent short on his hydro bill, 10 per cent short on his rent, and 10 per cent short on his car payments; he is 10 per cent short on everything, and he will tell you that. He is not going to suggest that over all we will save $1 billion by making these changes. He will tell you exactly how they affect him, and as his representative one should know this. There should be a period when you spend some time at home.

I do not want to go on at any great length, but I think this is a very important subject. In many ways we are not now representing our people. This government is bringing a referendum bill before the House. A lot of members here think we should have referendums on many subjects. If we have referendums we do not need parliament. Parliament is a place where we sit representing our constituents. Hopefully if hon. members have any brains of their own they can make decisions. If they do not make the right decisions they will get tossed out. If they do make the right decisions perhaps they will get re-elected. They should remember they are the representatives of the people they are representing. It is suggested that we should pass this bill on referendums and hold a referendum on this matter and on that matter.

I think it would behoove all members to send the subject matter of this motion to the committee. I am sure the committee would make changes. Every member here would likely have some worth-while proposition to suggest in respect of this bill. When we consider it over a period of time and send it back to the House, then perhaps we will have something that will help solve the problems which have developed here over the last three or four years and which have been highlighted by that crystal ball idea for calling the next general election, if there ever is to be one.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Parker) spoke a little while ago he suggested that perhaps on this side of the House we were filled with arrogance and this arrogance was transmitted around the House by spores on the wind. I can tell him that there is not only a little wind over here, there is a lot of hot air over there and it seems to me that the arrogance has spread across to that side as well. The hon. member for Eglinton made mention of birds and bird shot. Since coming to this House he made his maiden speech within two days, and has been like a bull in a china shop. I think that if the birds get bird shot it might be appropriate or fair for me to say that the bulls get bull shot.

You will be happy to note, Mr. Speaker, as will my colleague, the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), that 80 per cent of the people in Canada seem to agree there should be a federal election every four years. When they were asked whether they would approve or disapprove of the suggestion that there should be a federal election as a mandatory thing every four years unless a defeat in the House of Commons required an earlier election, 80 per cent nationally approved.

It would seem to me, as expressed by my colleague, the hon. member for Cochrane, and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), that there are many people in Canada who agree that there should be a federal election every four years. As a matter of fact just a month ago a man by the name of Harry Midgley wrote in the Edmonton Journal the following:

> It should be compulsory to have the general election on a prescribed date. And it should be illegal to call a general election before that date, with the single exception that it should be obligatory for a general election to be called if the government of the day is defeated in the House on a vote of confidence.
> Indeed, there should be a limitaion even with respect to the latter provision. It should be stipulated that there must be a dissolution and a general election following such a vote of no confidence—unless some other person or party is able to form a government that can command a vote of confidence in this House.
> Under the present (not very ancient) system the right to decide when a general election shall be called is almost totally at the personal discretion of the prime minister or premier, subject only to the requirement that he must call the election within the span set by law as the maximum length of the life of a parliament or a legislature.

I submit this puts an enormous amount of power in the hands of any premier or Prime Minister. They already have a great deal of power under the workings of our modern parliamentary systems. Some say that the power to decide when a general election shall be held gives the party in power an unfair advantage over other parties. It enables the party in power to contrive situations, by the timing of legislation and announcements, or by other things like that to work up different issues, in which the atmosphere for electioneering could be especially favourable to the government. What is wrong with that? Why should a government go out and call an election when it knows it is going to be defeated? That just does not make sense. What we would be doing is giving all the advantage to the other side. This would be like saying that any time we wanted to make a decision as the government we should say no, let us not allow that because we really do not want to govern, we want to give that opportunity to the other side. I suggest that is just not a realistic stance.

Having a predictable and fixed date for an election would allow everybody to plan and prepare properly for the election. It would help to reduce the elements of uncertainty which tend to distort the democratic system at election time. It would help to ensure that our system of elections serves the interests of democracy.

Earlier, the hon. member mentioned some of the reasons why we should have fixed terms. There are two main reasons which I would like to dwell on at this time. One reason for advocating a subterm is that it would give individual members of parliament, especially the government backbenchers, a greater say in policy formulation.

With a set term the defeat of a piece of government legislation would not necessarily result in the defeat of the government, as custom would seem to dictate at the present, although that statement must be qualified in particular instances. Thus, a government backbencher would no longer necessarily be confronted with a choice of either voting for a piece of legislation that comes up, although he probably agrees with 90 per cent of the legislation put forth by his government because he has had a chance to discuss it in caucus, in committee, and even with special groups who may present briefs. In such a situation the backbencher would be listened to and, in short, there would be no free votes. In this kind of situation the government would be compelled to pay much greater attention to the views of this caucus and to ensure that those views were reflected in the legislation, if it were to be assured of passage.

Opposition influence would also increase because, if their arguments for change in legislation were to convince a number of government backbenchers, the legislation would again be in jeopardy. They would have to have very cogent arguments to convince all members in this House that their suggestions were better than those being put forth by the government in power. The government would have to pay some attention to opposition arguments, and the opposition, with a real chance to influence the course of events, would have to take greater pains to make their arguments responsible and convincing. Debate in the House would become more meaningful and less of a ritual.

The second reason for advocating a set term in parliament is very closely related to the one I have just mentioned, the fact that there would be no more free votes, and debates in the House would become more meaningful. Such a situation would mean that a debate was once again a drama. The outcome would no longer always be known in advance. Debate would once again be genuinely worth the attention of the news media.

It was mentioned earlier in the House that the news media is the fourth estate. I believe it was the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) who mentioned that over the years the opposition of the House has not been parties on the other side of the House, but that the opposition has been the press gallery, that they are the ones who have carried the arguments to the government, and any changes which have come about were because of the pressure which they have applied. If the opposition were truly interested in not only having a say but in changing the minds of the government, then their arguments should become more meaningful. In other words, news media coverage would serve to focus public attention upon developments in the House.

Just why this change is so important to the democratic process is somewhat difficult to explain, but let me take a stab at it. Parliament serves the purpose of focusing public attention upon matters of concern and of defining and delineating the considerations and the options involved. In so doing, parliament assists the public in coming to intelligent conclusions about the actions of government and helps individual members of the public to determine their own position on questions of import. The better media coverage, the more effective is this wholly desirable process. But beyond that, improved media coverage of improved parliamentary debate would mean a more rapid and more effective focusing of public opinion attention upon an issue, with the consequence that public opinion would more readily affect government actions.

Votes in the House are no longer the important control on the actions of the executive; rather, appeals by the opposition to the electorate are the important control. Even with a set-term parliament, this would remain the case. The only real sanction, the only real control on government action now is the prospect of defeat in the next election. With a majority government and the well established pattern of voting solidly by party—a pattern which a set-term parliament would soften but not end—votes are virtually meaningless and are useless as a means of effecting parliamentary control. Thus, what is important in the functioning of parliament is the quality of the discussion conducted, and that the discussion be focused. What is important in the functioning of parliament is that its discussions be heard by the public, and the news media attention would assure that they were.

When we go out on the hustings every four years, or, as in this case, five years, we wage election campaigns. The election campaigns in Britain, for example, are quite short. If my memory serves me correctly, they are three weeks. Here in Canada election campaigns stretch out as long as ten weeks. I submit that these campaigns are too long and too costly. They cost the Canadian taxpayer because contributions to political parties, which could run as high as $25,000 to $30,000, can be claimed as a tax deduction.

It is true that politicians by and large like to go from door to door talking to the people, like the handshakes at five o'clock in the morning at the plant gates, and like assisting at the candidates' night so they can stand up and spout off in every direction about the ills of the country. I suggest that what they do most of all at that candidates' night is to underscore their own biases, rather than what people on the street really believe, as the hon. member for Timiskaming said. Most people make up their minds within two weeks after the campaign is under way. Some people will vote for party, some for the leader, and some for the individual candidate. If we only had the right combination of what this means in terms of winning elections, probably all members in this House could sit here for as long as they chose.

The people of Canada are much more intelligent than just to accept a handshake and a smile. Notwithstanding the fact that we do have long campaigns, we would better serve our constituents if we were limited to a set period of three or four weeks in which there would be extensive campaigning consolidated in that time, so that in the end the election could be made without a drawn-out theatrical production.

I mentioned earlier the power that prime ministers and premiers have in calling an election. The question of whether it is the prime minister or the cabinet collectively which makes the substantive decision upon the timing of a general election seems to me to be of peripheral importance. The real issue, as I see it, is the extent to which the power to dissolve constitutes a major advantage for the government party vis-à-vis the opposition parties. It has been my intention, not to assert that no advantages accrue from such electoral discretion, but to try to demonstrate that the case of the proponents of the thesis of prime ministerial power in this particular instance is overstated and that it takes insufficient account of the ever-present constraints and limitations, and finally that there is too much based on the precedents of the 1950s and 1960s which have not subsequently proved as typical as was originally assumed.

I do not wish to deny the obvious fact that the government has certain advantages in being able to choose the date of the election. There may be organizational benefits in terms of even the most limited advance warning given to the government party machine which could be significant in a kind of close election because they would have the advantage of having their troops organized.

The effect of the local party organization is to pull out the maximum number of potential supporters who might otherwise have abstained, not to make converts. The greater volatility of the electorate in recent years indicates that the campaign proper may be of more importance in converting voters than had previously been thought. If so, it is likely to make the capacity to determine issues upon which an electorate is fought more important than organizational factors.

Prime ministers have great difficulty in concentrating campaign attention on the issues they themselves wish to emphasize. Media coverage may in practice give the advantage to opposition parties. A point in fact occurred in the last election. When the campaign started, wage and price controls were brought out but this was not the major issue as the campaign went on. Then we saw that as it developed in the campaign it became a very major factor.

I do not want to talk this bill out, Mr. Speaker. I believe we should, in many instances, consider having a fixed election date of four years. I should like to give my support to my colleague, the hon. member for Cochrane.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should not like my colleague from Cochrane to think that I feel the House should not pass his bill or, as we say, that the House should kill his bill. But I understand that this is not the question tonight; we are here to deal with it and no one has suggested that it should be referred to the committee for well-known reasons.

Just the same, I should like to congratulate him on the fine remarks and the good points he has made. I should like to congratulate also the two previous speakers as well as the parliamentary secretary. It is quite unusual to hear a government member develop points which we have brought to the attention of the House on a number of occasions, because I remember that our former leader, Mr. Réal Caouette, had raised this matter both in the House and during past election campaigns. It is even better to find that government members share those views.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it is time that Canada, a highly mature country, amended its constitution or, even better, included in its new constitution provisions calling for elections on fixed dates.

It would prevent the prime minister, whoever he is, from playing with the date of the election, from playing with the people's nerves, and often the speculators in the stock exchange from advancing things and making undue profits. Furthermore, it would also prevent the mass media from speculating on all the activities of the prime minister, whether he walked across Wellington Street, or held a press conference or went to see the Governor General. In any event, an election has been announced every season for two years; it is like Ember days in the past when we knew in advance that it would occur four times a year.

I think it is time to rely on the maturity of the Canadian people and to stop playing with Gallup polls, whether they gallop or not, whether they trot or walk, with polls of all kinds which are sometimes without rhyme or reason but which make it possible to abuse the population. And there are people who rely on them.

I think this should be prohibited, and I am very serious about it. Provided an election is decided those polls should be left aside and the population should decide itself who will be reelected and who will form the next parliament. This is how it should work if we really want to have a strong and lasting democracy. I also think that we all agree that whatever government, provided it is honest, should never be defeated on a question or on a bill. It is the best way to leave all hon. members a very personal responsibility. Every member should be responsible for his vote and his position. If at a certain time parliament as a whole is not satisfied with the executive, then it will be possible to introduce a non-confidence motion, and if it is passed by the majority, an election will have to be held.

To my mind, the parliamentary secretary was quite right when he said that this would bring more responsibility and objectivity to our deliberations, while reducing the time spent on procedure. We would thus try to reach our goal as quickly as possible, and the Canadian people would be better served.

As an added bonus, the cost of administration of the House of Commons may also be reduced. At this point, the committee is trying to find means to improve services at lesser costs. I think that would be a good way of reducing administrative costs; there again, we would be serving the Canadian people better.

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, I feel that we are definitely right in bringing pressure to bear in order to achieve the objectives of Bill C-212. Now, if we can manage to agree, here, in the House, on this matter, we shall be happy to tell the public that we are responsible people, that we are giving our country a new constitution. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I should like this bill to be passed immediately.

[English]

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, in the short time remaining, about one minute, I should like—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Let it go to committee.

Mr. Philbrook: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour for private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and motion No. 1 (Mr. Leggatt).

Mr. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, my party feels that people with dependants for income tax purposes should continue to be covered for the two-thirds of earnings for which they are currently insured. Any lower rate will cause hardship. However, we believe that Canadians who do not have dependants have higher proportionate disposable incomes and should be insured for a lower proportion. We feel that 50 per cent of earnings is about the level both to provide adequate protection and not to provide an incentive toward anti-selection. The benefits would be related to need, and the opportunities for abuse of the plan would be dramatically reduced. This would be an intelligent restraint, the restraint of the deft hand of the surgeon.

In its current amendments the government is proposing to penalize all individuals who are unemployed and who repeat without adequate intervening work records in areas of less than 11.5 per cent unemployment. Finally, we know the current Liberal full employment definition for this country. In my opinion this change will almost exclusively affect the legitimately unemployed and may even deter unemployed persons from taking temporary employment to get off claim. Those who control their own unemployment will just work a little longer to ensure that they meet the higher requirements. Those who cannot get work, because the economy is so bad in their areas that work is not available, may be forced onto welfare. We have already heard from three Liberals opposite who also feel that this particular provision will cause hardship in their areas.

If we want to go after abusers, let us go after abusers directly. Let us go after people who quit their jobs without just cause. Let us come down on employers who do not state the real reasons for job termination, but for goodness sake, let us not ride on the backs of those who are legitimately unemployed.

In my opinion, the government should not be penalizing repeaters, it should be giving consideration to two different types of amendments with regard to quitters. It should be significantly lengthening the waiting period for people who quit their jobs, such as from six weeks to 12 weeks. Furthermore, it should consider paying a reduced level of benefits to people who quit. Alternatively, it should set some minimum period of work record before quitters are covered for benefits at all.

In summary, the parliament of this country has two obligations in designing an unemployment insurance plan. It should see that the plan is economically sound, and it should see that the plan is socially just. The government, in my opinion, is not reaching toward either of these objectives. It is trying to defuse a potentially embarrassing political situation by convincing the average voter that somehow it is cracking down on abusers, while the reality of the situation is that the crackdown is far harder on the legitimately unemployed. The crackdown, or so-called crackdown, will probably affect five or six times as many legitimately unemployed as abusers. The so-called crackdown is going to have the maximum impact in the areas of least economic advantage in our country, the Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

If my experience in private industry is any gauge, the abuses are most likely to be taking place in central and western Canada, in the middle class and upper middle class income families where the opportunities to cheat for secondary wage earners are largest.

A recent ex-deputy minister of finance has described our current unemployment insurance system as the major impediment to our economic recovery. The current system is causing a breakdown of morals because some people really are better off quitting than working, and they are taking advantage of it. It is causing a tremendous loss of productivity because of the increased rate of job turnover. It is causing large financial deficits, which are a hemorrhage upon the future health of our country. The plan is crying out for revision, crying out for intelligent revision, not the hamhanded, misguided efforts that we see in the government's proposals.

With a properly redesigned unemployment insurance system, we could use the savings to create the jobs Canadians want, to eliminate the unconscionable regional disparities this government has developed. We need to use our wits to pay people to work, rather than not to work.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) should be ashamed to present these proposals which ride on the backs of the unemployed that his government has created. His caucus colleagues should be ashamed to see him present the proposals to parliament. However, given the demonstrated level of economic incompetence of this government and the demonstrated chutzpah of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), it may be that this government has no shame. It may be this government really believes that the only thing wrong with this economy is that some people are choosing not to work.

What is not working in this country is the current government. We in the opposition cannot allow this injustice to be perpetrated on those areas of the country with the highest rates of unemployment, without a fight. We have an obligation to try to get this ill-conceived design amended before it can be inflicted upon the Canadian people. The minister said, when he moved to tighten the unemployment insurance program, he well expected criticism. He also said that informed criticism, which is sensitive to the views of Canadians, is the lifeblood of parliament, and he welcomed this sort of constructive criticism. He also asked the House to listen to the Canadian people who are angry at the abuse of the current plan. The Canadian people, Mr. Speaker, will be truly angry if we tinker with this plan again and do not cut the abuse.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the discussion on the motion now before us concerning Bill C-14 is further evidence how difficult it is to co-ordinate a consistent and efficient action when the basic problem is overlooked. So we are now discussing a piece of legislation and related amendments the purpose of which is to reduce the expenditures related to unemployment insurance benefits. If our society had developed normally, that is if legislators had been able to introduce bills designed to actually enable each citizen to earn a decent living and enjoy a minimum of well-being and even of comfort, we would not have to deal with cuts in unemployment insurance benefits. But since we have not yet managed to find means to enable every worker, every unskilled labourer, every able-bodied citizen in this country to work and thus earn a decent living proudly and with dignity, Mr. Speaker, it seems we shall always be discussing false problems. I can easily appreciate the difficulties facing the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), but I am not prepared to accept his method to curb alleged abuses with respect to unemployment insurance. Mr. Speaker, it is very important in this House that at least one member should tackle the root of the problems. What we should be discussing now is the reasons why a country as vast as Canada, endowed with so many resources, where labour should be at a premium has to contend with such a high unemployment rate, and our inability to create jobs for all willing blue and white collar workers. This is outrageous. One of these days, we shall have to deal squarely with this issue and find ways and means to put an end to the scourge of unemployment, once for all.

Mr. Speaker, as we discuss a cutback in unemployment benefits and the prevention of abuse by unemployment insurance recipients we realize that this government continues to follow a financial and economic course which is alien to the financial interests of our country and indirectly, or even directly the Canadian workers' interests. Moreover, when the government unashamedly admits to the need for massive imports of certain products and consumer goods that we could easily produce ourselves, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that unless we can solve this basic problem, we shall always go around in a vicious circle of increasing unemployment with no solution in sight. We are being unfair to the honest worker who, has to suffer not only the loss of his job, but the source of income he used to rely on in these circumstances. This is a point we should always bear in mind, and although all over the world modern society is now facing the same problems, we should not let our country and our parliament use this as an excuse to evade the problems. Instead we should invest more time searching for solutions. Among those cuts announced a few months ago, the effects of which have been experienced for some time and will continue to be felt in the days and weeks ahead, I note some rather painful examples in my constituency. For example, in the small town of Parent, a remote village in the northern part of the riding of Champlain where a meteorological station was manned by five employees, under its arbitrary reductions, the government has laid off those people. We wonder to what extent savings are made when figures prove easily that not only will there be no savings but that it is meant to ridicule the public. However, if the disastrous condition of the unemployed is worsened by the reduction of the benefits to which they are entitled, Mr. Speaker, we will soon find ourselves in a dilemma which can only increase our social problems and the economic difficulties which have literally overwhelmed us for some years. Therefore, the government should at least accept to come up with a close study and investigation of the situation so that—by basing its reflection on fundamental principles—it will be in a position to radically change the purpose of our legislation and that instead of guaranteeing a right to unemployment to the people of Canada, it guarantees them a right to work, a right to earn a minimum decent income. Mr. Speaker, we would have gone a long way toward that goal and we would be interested in collaborating very closely to develop a new formula that would be most appropriate for all workers of this country. But not only do we not study the basic principles on which to rely but on the contrary palliatives, emergency remedies, short-term solutions are being resorted to, in order to resolve major problems which will still be there next year or the year after in all their magnitude. That is what I have noticed for years, Mr. Speaker, and it is deplorable to see that as representatives having been democratically elected by the citizens of that country we are unable to find the appropriate solutions. And sometimes I wonder where that is going to lead us to, how long we are going to go on like this and let the situation deteriorate to a point where within a few generations we will be faced with a real catastrophe.

Citizens are entitled to a number of rights and certainly to that of earning an income through their work. Mr. Speaker, instead of giving unemployment insurance to individuals, we should see that they are given the possibility to produce either goods or services; and to suggest that in a country like ours it is impossible to achieve such a goal, that there is not something to be done, that there is not a need for a service however little it may be, Mr. Speaker, that is simply denying evident facts.

We do not insist enough on this basic principle, the individual's right to work and to earn a decent living. Even if there was no work available we agree that all citizens are entitled to an income. Even if we claimed to save a few millions by passing these amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, Mr. Speaker, we would miscalculate or shift the real problem because should we be asking ourselves whether the benefits should be reduced or not? The basic question we should ask ourselves is this: what are the needs of a laid-off worker who must survive just the same. There is no need to ask ourselves if he is entitled to the benefits or not. Obviously, he is since he must stay alive and meet his needs and those of his family if he has dependants. This is why to tamper with the insurance benefits, Mr. Speaker, is like tampering with the individual's needs, and that is not good enough.

How can it be that one, two or three years ago it was considered that these needs were at a specific level and that today we decide that they are no longer the same? That is ludicrous, Mr. Speaker. That is why this bill falls far short even though it may be inspired by good intentions, namely to end or at least reduce abuses, to give people incentive to work, despite the fact that this administration cannot find work. Instead of taking indirect and unproductive action to force peoples to find work, why not take the necessary action to encourage job creation? Apparently, this will be done afterwards. Why not do it beforehand? Indeed, if the government could find a way to create thousands of jobs in the country, then, Mr. Speaker, we would not have to talk of unemployment because everybody would be working. That would be a positive step. That would show respect for human pride and dignity. That would show consideration for the individual. But the government is always going backwards. It is convinced that the unemployment rate will at best remain the same in the coming year, and I am sure the minister will agree and admit that it is the government's foregone conclusion that the unemployment rate will not go down.

Therefore how can one suggest that this bill will encourage idle workers to seek employment when the minister is certain there is no possibility of creating more jobs? That is unadulterated nonsense. And that is why we are studying false problems and we have lost sight of the real ones. What we should be doing here in the House is discussing how we could possibly create jobs. And to show you how easily this could be done, I can indicate a few ways to go about it. How to create jobs? The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), the whole government simply have to decide that not a single pair of shoes will be imported into this country as long as Canadian manufacturers have not sold all their inventory and as long as they do not have enough orders to supply every Canadian with shoes. That would solve a problem. Recently the minister responsible for the Canadian Dairy Commission told the Canadian Federation of Industrial Milk Producers that before long there will be massive imports of dairy products like butter and cheese because it costs less to produce butter in New Zealand or Australia. The least I can say is that it is inconsistent, illogical and nonsensical. How can we solve our unemployment problems if we continue to have only one kind of balance in the government, namely asking if we can produce at a cheaper price what can be produced elsewhere, and if it is produced at a cheaper price elsewhere, then we shut down and import. As long as we have that policy it is clear that unemployment will always be going up. Mr. Speaker, it is unacceptable that we should import footwear, shirts, clothes or anything like that when we have workers ready to produce as much as all Canadians will ever need.

It is unacceptable that we should import butter. It is also unacceptable that we should import anything this country can produce and anything it can potentially do. And then I say Canada would be short of manpower. Our country is so big and the potential so great that I am sure 24 million Canadians would not be enough to meet the demand if we just implemented policies to produce at home what we need. Those are policies that would solve the unemployment problem but when we know that the government will continue to set quotas to import products for domestic consumption, will continue to justify, to urge farmers to produce less milk on the pretence that we will import butter because it costs less abroad, as long as there will be imbeciles telling us things which look mathematically true but which do not make any sense in practice, well, Mr. Speaker, we will always continue to be a relatively poor people amid extraordinary abundance.

This is why I denounce the harshness of those changes which cause hardships to the individual who already faces the problem of having lost his job. If anyone should be left alone it is him. He is not to blame. During the 40 hours he works every week he does not have time to think about the administrative measures that should be applied to deal with those problems.

Mr. Speaker, that is our responsibility. This is why I say that in light of the motion before us, and I conclude with these words, it is obvious that until we solve basic problems we should not penalize unemployment insurance recipients, and consequently I am entirely against this bill and in favour of the motion before us.

[English]

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I intend to present to the House the views of the official opposition as they have been outlined by speakers from this side of the House. The minister served notice today that he would be moving a time allocation motion tomorrow. It therefore becomes imperative, considering the number of amendments on the order paper, that Your Honour give us some latitude with respect to dealing with the motions which are on the order paper and not restrict our comments specifically to the first one.

As members who came here in 1972, and those who were here previously in 1971, know, no topic has created greater controversy than the unemployment insurance bill of 1971 and the amendments thereto. It seems that every year or so amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act give occasion to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration to study unemployment insurance. Those who have been regular members of that committee, as well as departmental officials, have sat through interminable hours looking at legislation, the unemployment insurance system—

Mr. Cullen: And each other.

Mr. Epp: —and each other, as the minister says, and hopefully some light has been shed on the situation which now confronts us. Despite the differing opinions which exist with regard to unemployment insurance, it must be said that on balance committee members were sincere in the views they held and expressed. I know that the committee experience was advantageous to the process, at least to the discussion of Bill C-14. I am not always sure about that when it comes to the examination of estimates, but I think that has been the case with Bill C-14.

Members generally would have to say that opinions on the unemployment insurance program fall into two categories. First, some members of parliament and some members of the public generally look upon the Unemployment Insurance Commission as having a responsibility to administer an unemployment insurance plan, and to them the emphasis is on insurance. Others look at the Unemployment Insurance Commission—especially since the 1971 act—and say that insurance principles cannot apply to the same degree as transfer payments or individual transfer payments.

Some people would even go so far as to say that unemployment insurance is a major part of a public move toward a guaranteed annual income. Whatever the case, I think what is imperative to most Candians is that unemployment insurance policy should do a number of things. First, obviously it should insure people against unemployment during periods of time between jobs. It should insure people who are legitimately unemployed and who are looking for work but cannot find it. I do not think there is too much argument about that, regardless of the views held as to what the program should do in addition.

Second, I think there is a widespread feeling that the program is being abused. There is the attitude that there is widespread abuse, and this is one reason why people feel that unemployment insurance policy must be seriously revamped. All of us hear about abuse taking place.

Third, I think it is generally agreed that the total amount of spending on the unemployment insurance program is too high. It is now running in excess of $4 billion. That is a very substantial part of Canada's total national expenditures.

I would like to add a fourth dimension which I believe unemployment insurance policy should reflect. Emphasis should be placed on using funds which are now used for unemployment insurance payments for skill creation and in positive, productive undertakings such as job creation. Those funds should not be used just for pay-outs. I know there is controversy about that, but if we are ever going to get ourselves out of the chronic unemployment we now experience, we will have to spend more time on and give more consideration to using some of the funds which are now expended on unemployment insurance benefits for job creation or employment incentives.

My comments are based primarily on those thoughts and on how we can make employment an incentive rather than looking at the disincentives which are inherent in our unemployment insurance policy.

The minister proposes to reduce the amount of insured benefits from two-thirds to 60 per cent, approximately a 10 per cent reduction. By his own calculations the minister feels that this will result in a saving of approximately $910 million. In the committee we proposed that the bill be amended.

Mr. Benjamin: Buy him a shovel.

Mr. Nystrom: Stick to the amendment.

Mr. Epp: Members of the NDP are particularly jumpy tonight. I do not know why.

Mr. Nowlan: They all get jumpy at Christmas time because they are a bunch of hypocrites.

Mr. Epp: I suggest that they listen. If they did, even I have hope that they might learn something.

Mr. Nowlan: I don't.

Mr. Epp: There are various figures dealing with heads of families who have dependants. I think a figure of 14 per cent or 15 per cent is generally accepted as the percentage of heads of families who have dependent children and who draw unemployment insurance benefits, but if we expand that definition to include not just children but also dependent spouses and dependent parents, the figure is about 25 per cent or 26 per cent. For my purposes tonight I will use the figure of approximately 25 per cent. Approximately 25 per cent of unemployment insurance benefit recipients are persons who have obligations, as family heads, for dependants. I think it stands to reason that the blame for abuse and high costs does not lie with this group and that a justifiable case can be made for a benefit structure which would allow this group to receive 66 per cent or two-thirds of insured earnings to maintain family incomes. That is the way the act now stands. This group, as well as everybody else, gets two-thirds.

Mr. Peters: I am glad you learned that.

Mr. Epp: The hon. member says he is glad I have learned that. We proposed that in committee. There were approximately 35 meetings. I do not know where the hon. member was. I know he was there some of the time, but if he thinks this is new this evening and this is new to me, he is again badly mistaken, but we take that for granted on this side.

It has been our purpose in the amendment that this group be protected. As to the other 75 per cent, those with minimum attachments to the labour force, or seasonal workers who do not have responsibilities for dependants, it has been our proposal that their insured benefits be reduced to 50 per cent. If this plan were adopted, I think we would fulfil many of the objectives that I expressed already at the beginning of my remarks, namely, first, that the savings under this proposal, along with increased penalties for those who quit voluntarily, be increased to a higher extent than proposed in Bill C-14. Second, it would maintain the income benefits to that group of people who need it most, namely, those with dependants, and third, it would bring more into line the benefits to those who either have another income to fall back on or who do not have responsibilities to dependants as does the first group.

If one analyses that proposal, one finds it follows the criteria of reducing abuse and of bringing in restraint and maintaining income for those who need it most. The minister has rejected that proposal for a number of reasons. This proposal does not originate with me and I am not trying to take credit for it. Credit for it is owed to the hon. member who preceded me, and this House is indebted to him. He is a new member, and the manner in which he has conducted himself in committee and here today shows that he has a very well founded understanding of the Unemployment Insurance Act and its administration, in fact well beyond that, I would suggest, of almost any member in the House of Commons.

The proposal was made by our party and opposed by the minister and supporters of the government. I suggest to supporters of the government that they look at the proposal very carefully, and I suggest also to members from Atlantic Canada where unemployment is highest that they look seriously at whether the proposal would not meet the objectives which, as they have already stated, they want to meet, and whether it would not preserve the income of their constituents who are faced with chronic unemployment, because the proposal in Bill C-14 will not do that to the same degree that this proposal will.

The minister also said that this proposal would be difficult administratively. This difficulty might be due simply to the fact that it is being brought in now in the last hours of this year and because the government wants to bring in this program as of January, 1979, when it simply does not have enough time to bring in the administrative follow-up as such. That could be a valid argument, but the fact is, and I had it on fairly good evidence, that the minister had this proposal from his officials, or a derivative thereof, that it was examined by the department and was considered to have validity, and then it was rejected because, for instance, it would be more unfair toward women in the labour force. That has been one argument that has been placed in opposition to this proposal.

If one would take a look at the amendment we have proposed, one would find that it is not discriminatory in that sense, that we have allowed the option either for the male or the female head of a given household to determine who will claim the dependants, and it is within the family that it can be decided. The same thing happens when one files income tax. It does not follow automatically that the male spouse claims the children as dependants for income tax purposes; it could just as well be the mother. This proposal does the same thing. So I suggest that one of the major arguments that has been used against the proposal has been reduced to some degree. I admit, and I think every member of the House would admit, that it does not reduce it totally. But the fact of the matter is that you cannot reduce the adverse affects of this program as you cut back unemployment insurance for any group because, as you cut back the program, some groups will be adversely affected in the sense of income maintenance.

This proposal was also endorsed by the provinces. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in his speech yesterday evening in Toronto as well as at other times, has argued that we are the lackeys of the provinces. I do not accept that charge. I would rather look at the provinces as being partners in Confederation than as being in confrontation with the central government. What is interesting is that when the provinces came before the committee we had provinces with a Conservative government as well as provinces with a Liberal government, an NDP government or, in the case of British Columbia, a Social Credit government, which endorsed the principles as outlined by this party. In fact, I must say that my own province was the one province that had the greatest reservations about the proposal. What it was interested in was whether our proposal would move further away from the insurance principles, a process which they did not welcome. So discussions have been undertaken in an effort to explain the proposal.

This proposal would have brought in savings of approximately $1 billion for the first full year that this program would be in effect. This would have been an increased saving in the order of $100 million more than the government has proposed, and yet it was acceptable to the provinces. The provinces were saying: yes, we are in favour of restraint, yes, we must cut back, but let us cut back in the areas of abuse. This is something the government has decided not to do but rather to go across the board and reduce the benefits for everyone. I suggest, if opponents of our proposal say that it is unfair to certain groups, that a broad approach across the whole ambit of those who receive benefits is more unfair, because in no way does it reflect the financial necessity or financial obligations these people have.

As I said, it was recommended by us, by the provinces, and by officials in the minister's own department. In fact, even in speaking to organizations which are supporting the minister's bill, we found support for our proposal. I suggest that what they are supporting are the principles outlined earlier in my remarks rather than the bill specifically. They will endorse the bill if it meets those objectives, but at no time did they say they were not willing to accept a different proposal which would be more equitable.

I will just give one example, if I might, to prove that point, that is, the Canadian Construction Association. While supporting the proposal they said very clearly that if the proposal could be worked in a more equitable way, such as we proposed, that would be favourable. In fact in some conversations members of the Canadian Construction Association even suggested that the bill was so wrong it should be withdrawn, and following the election a government with a new mandate should look at the entire program and bring unemployment insurance more in line with insurance principles.

The fact of the matter is that our proposal meets the criteria the minister has placed as the objectives of Bill C-14. While I believe the proposal has merit, we want to speak about unemployment insurance and other types of insurance, because experience rating is an established principle used by insurance companies. It involves a system whereby a higher premium is charged for equal coverage, or the same premium is charged but very frequently lower coverage is received by those people in lower categories where the possibility of receiving benefits is higher. I suggest the group we have identified, namely, those without dependants, have a higher risk. They are more likely to be receiving benefits than the 25 per cent group with dependants simply because it does not make economic sense for them to go on unemployment insurance and lose the salaries they might be able to earn. The other factor is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent that the hon. member should conclude his remarks?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), deal with one specific aspect of the bill, an aspect about which this party as well has great concern, but perhaps from a different perspective. It has been difficult to try to figure out where my colleagues to the right in the Conservative party are in respect of this bill.

An hon. Member: They are all over.

Mr. Leggatt: On the road to Damascus I suspect there has been a sudden conversion over there. We have listened to this debate quite carefully. I see my friend and colleague in the front benches, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), is delighted and happy, and I suspect that somewhere down the line he has won a minor victory. I have this feeling somehow that the hon. member for St. John's East has brought that Tory party kicking and screaming into the nineteenth century. I am absolutely delighted, as are other colleagues of my party, to see this change on the part of Tory members, particularly those who come from the British Columbia area and the Toronto area who have been until now in the eighteenth century in respect of this bill. I think it is to the great credit of that great Conservative Party of Canada that some of its hon. members still listen from time to time to their more progressive colleagues.

An hon. Member: And then there is Crosbie.

Mr. Leggatt: Yes, there are wonderful blue Tories and wonderful red Tories, and there are a lot of suppositories from time to time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: It must be a great party.

Mr. Leggatt: I am hopeful that there will not be a great rush to the medical clinics in Ottawa because there are a lot of guys who have been trying to straddle this issue, and I suspect there could be a lot of hernias in the Conservative party before this debate is over.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Leggatt: In any event, we certainly welcome them to the cause. We welcome their participation in the debate tonight because we think this has been a remarkable progression. I hate to go back into the record, but I see my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke). He has said some rather remarkable things about this bill and I will deal with some of them later.

I would like to deal first of all with the proposal set forth by the hon. member for Provencher. He finds it is unacceptable to cut back to merely 60 per cent under this bill. He says we have not cut back enough, we have to cut back to 50 per cent, particularly for women who are on unemployment insurance. I noticed he did not use the word "women", but if you look at his figures and statistics you will see there is no question but that he is referring in his speech to women. Let us not fool around and complicate this with that stuff about who is dependent and who is not. He says we have to cut that 66⅔ benefit back to 50 per cent for women, and his reason is that when there are two earners in the family that is just too much. After all, the poor often get away with so much in this country and we have to cut these benefits back. He says they have been ungrateful, and they even vote NDP or Liberal on rare occasions, when they get a little sense.

The facts are that under our system we have encouraged women to go to work, and we have encouraged people to purchase homes with high mortgage rates that cannot be supported without two incomes in a family. When you try to distinguish between the male earner and the female earner you are doing a disservice to the total society, because we have in fact said under this system "Get out and buy your house and contribute to the economy, keep the builders going, get your $50,000 mortgage and make it even higher. This is Never Never Land, fellow, and you will always be able to pay it off. Don't worry about the size of that mortgage."

I am glad I have the attention of the minister. There are rare occasions when he listens in this House, and I am pleased to see him listening this evening.

An hon. Member: That is not true and you know it.

Mr. Leggatt: We have encouraged families right across this country to commit themselves to amounts of money they can ill afford to pay without the backing of this unemployment insurance scheme. What is happening? The fact is that the lord who gaveth unemployment insurance is the lord who now taketh that unemployment insurance away.

Some suggest that there is no contribution to the economy through unemployment insurance. The effect of reducing unemployment insurance payments, particularly to women, is to restrain this economy even more than it is, now. My friend, the hon. member for Provencher, talks about the $4 billion, this terrible deficit. We could put that $4 billion back into the economy and create another $1 billion probably in tax revenue. A government that thinks you can restrain this economy into prosperity is a government with the same kind of Milton Freidman philosophy that the governments in the west are starting to buy and learn by experience is not good because conditions get worse and worse and worse.

An hon. Member: Like Sterling Lyon.

Mr. Leggatt: Sterling Lyon is a classic example of one who accepts that kind of idea; what Tommy Douglas used to call the "trickle down theory." If you put enough in at the top for the big guys there will be enough so that some will trickle down to the fellow at the bottom and he will have a tiny bit of purchasing power to keep the economy going. It just does not work that way. You have to put that purchasing power in at the bottom of the economic scale.

When you talk about this legislation you have to talk about it in terms of its impact on the economy. What is the impact this legislation before us will have on the economy? We are in a society which has chronic unemployment and it is going to get worse on the simple basis that the private sector is in the business of putting people out of work. It has to be in that business in order to compete on a world scale. The private sector has to be technologically effective, and as long as we say, as my Conservative friends certainly do, that we should leave this problem to the private sector and it will solve it, the deeper in the mire we are going to get.

The principle behind the changes in this bill relates to that kind of Freidman philosophy of getting out of transfer payments and reducing the capacity of people to buy goods that we can produce in our society.

I just toured, in my riding, one of the largest lumber mills in the world, Fraser Mills. A very progressive firm called Crown Zellerbach is rebuilding that entire mill at a cost of $56 million. I asked them how many jobs they thought they would create. They told me that they would be reducing the level of employment by 200 people, that at one time there were 3,000 people working in that mill, but now machinery is replacing some of them. We cannot continue to follow the silly logic in this House that if we let the private sector alone it will create employment. They are in the business of creating unemployment, and it is only natural. I do not blame the private sector, because it is logical.

When we abandon the public sector to create employment, as this government continues to do, and as my Conservative friends would do, it merely increases the problem. Then everybody sits here and wonders how it happened.

It is interesting to look at the reasons which brought the minister to his conclusion that there was too much abuse in the unemployment insurance program and that they had to cut back. A questionnaire was circulated. The vast majority of the people who were asked the question came to the conclusion that there was substantial abuse of the unemployment insurance program. Many people in this House have said that they have heard of some abuse. The problem is that the government has asked the wrong question. The question which should have been asked was, "Do you believe there is abuse in unemployment insurance, by income tax payers and by corporations?" For example, "Do you believe that Shell Oil pays its fair share of the taxes?" If the government had asked those questions it would have received "yes" answers to all of them, and out of all those yes answers it would have started to deal with this particular problem.

I agree with my friends in the Conservative party that we cannot continue to live with giant deficits and that there has to be an end. The only way to deal with it is to tax the people who are capable of reducing the deficit. However, the government seems to be afraid to tax those people, and my Conservative friends are all for deducting mortgage interest to give a tremendous tax boon to home-owners in Canada. But they will not tax that house when it is sold. They feel that it would be too unpopular. It would be more honest if they would talk about an interest deduction and capital gains tax. Then I would say that there is some fairness in their proposal, that somewhere down the road there will be new revenues coming in to handle this deficit. However, my colleagues in the Conservative party are straddling the fence and getting hernias trying to figure it all out.

Mr. Clarke: At least we didn't get impaled.

Mr. Leggatt: Hang on, I think that you just might. I am glad the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra said that he did not get a hernia. I would like to point out to hon. members what the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra said in his speech, as resported at page 991 of Hansard, November 9, 1978:

> Another thing which the minister did not do was attack the basic problem. In the abuses and overspending of the unemployment insurance account, the basic problem is payments made to people who quit their jobs because they would rather go on unemployment insurance—

That does not sound very much like the hon. member for St. John's East. He goes on:

> The reduction of the payment rate to 60 per cent from two-thirds has not changed. It has the same effective date of January 1. But the government seems to have overlooked in that reduction that for some people two-thirds of the wage is closer to a necessity, and 60 per cent to some at the other end of the scale is still more than adequate for an amount to be paid for not working.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the real Tory philosophy, and if they have the courage of their convictions they will vote with the government on this bill, in accordance with that well expressed, right wing, Milton Friedman, William F. Buckley philosophy.

At another point in his speech the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra says:

> Given the climate of restraint, Canadians were looking forward to the minister's statement on September 1; people were probably quite pleased to think the government was moving to cut down the unemployment insurance deficit—

> On the same day as the minister made his statement I made a response for this party in which I noted that in our view the measures proposed by the minister were a step in the right direction.

I suspect that my colleague from Vancouver Quadra did not think that they had gone far enough. I will wait and see how he votes on the bill and how the rest of the Conservative party votes on the bill. I suspect that their heart is not quite in this one. I can see a few members whom I would put in the red Tory category, who have fought and won a good fight, and they are happy and smiling tonight. I am pleased to see that.

This particular subject is treated as though it were impossible to provide full employment. Even a country as capitalistic as the United States has had the courage to propose full employment legislation. It was proposed by the late Senator Humphrey, and it still sits before Congress. Nevertheless, there is some hope and a realization there that the public sector must be used to create employment. Where is the bill before this House which suggests we need full employment? Where is the courage of the government which says we are willing to use the fiscal tools in order to guarantee employment? One thing we all know in this House is that a man who comes to pick up his unemployment cheque should not get it, instead he should get a job. However, how can this man get a job when there are 17 other people looking for the same job?

This government simply does not have the will to sit down and plan this economy for full employment. The problems in this House which spin off into our criminal justice legislation and the great social problems of this country are directly related because a significant section of the population is told, "We don't want you. We don't have a job for you. We have no use for you, so forget it. Here is a hand-out." That hand-out will take the form of welfare or unemployment insurance.

There has been so much talk about abuses of the unemployment insurance program. The way to stop that would be for the government simply to say that, "you are guaranteed a job." There is much work to do in this country. There are literally hundreds of thousands of things that need to be done and which the private sector cannot do because it is not geared up to handle the job, or it is not profitable for it. The consumer spin-off from such a program would begin to reduce the deficit everybody talks about, because it generates extra revenue, which in turn has an impact on the economy.

I can understand the government feeling that it is in a corner. I can understand it saying, "We have borrowed the last buck and we don't want to borrow any more from the moneylenders in New York." This policy, however, will only further increase that deficit. It cannot attack that deficit with the Friedman restraint policy. Revenues must be generated within society to pay that tax and, most importantly, it must be done by taxing those who are capable of paying it.

I am sure we have all received letters in the last few days from small businessmen who are upset because of that change in the budget which tells them that they no longer have the tax loophole where they could incorporate as a small company. I say that those people should pay the same rate of tax as everybody else in this country. That measure was designed for small entrepreneurial businesses, not for professional people such as doctors or lawyers. People are constantly telling us, particularly middle class people, that others do not want to work. They say, "Look at the farms. There are all kinds of jobs out there. They could pick corn in the summer. What do they mean saying there are no jobs?"

I have a solution, Mr. Speaker. We need the doctor-lawyer volunteer farm brigade. Instead of flying to Hawaii and complaining about the loafers in Canada no longer doing a job every summer, let us take those doctors and lawyers, and members of parliament, to pick the fruit one summer. It would do us all good. Those doctors and lawyers are the ones who get heart conditions and are in terrible shape. We should get them all together and say, "Do not go to Florida or Hawaii. Let us all go out and bring in the produce of this country." Then we would not blame the poor farm worker for not wanting his miserable little minimum wage or his few cents per pound on the peas, carrots and strawberries. It would make a lot of farmers happy because they would love to see doctors, lawyers, MPs and everybody else get their hands a little dirty and have some fun in the sun. Instead of having them griping we could put them to work on a volunteer basis. I think this is a suggestion that needs very serious consideration, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Check it out with CUPE.

Mr. Leggatt: My hon. friend says check it out with CUPE. I have talked to CUPE about this suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and CUPE is not happy with it in some areas. I do not care whether CUPE is happy or unhappy with it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Leggatt: I happen to think that in a full employment economy and full employment society everybody works, including CUPE.

Mr. Crosbie: Now you are in the "soupie".

An hon. Member: What about the CLC?

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I know my friends in that very effective and active union CUPE, will understand that those were somewhat facetious remarks. The members of CUPE are second to none, I think, in terms of their own working capacity in this country.

Let us go back to the position of the provinces which my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher, raised in his initial remarks, which were to the effect that there has been provincial opposition to these changes and that it is merited.

The province of British Columbia estimates that from $35 to $40 million will be spent in addition to the present welfare costs when these changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act go through. What is happening, in fact, is that we are not tightening up on unemployment insurance; we are just taking people off one form of social insurance and placing them on another form of social insurance. I see the parliamentary secretary shaking his head, and I would be very pleased if he were to rise in his place and correct me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) permit a question?

Mr. Leggatt: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It would need the unanimous consent of the House since the hon. member for New Westminster has exhausted his time. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Provencher.

Mr. Epp: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall be brief. I should like to ask the hon. member for New Westminster—

Mr. Landers: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, there was not unanimous consent.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. There was not unanimous consent. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, it is a very unfortunate time to speak in the House tonight because my brains have been scrambled—

An hon. Member: Again?

Mr. Crosbie: —by the unalterable trash we have just listened to from the member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

These gentlemen to my left are experts in dividing up what somebody else creates. If we had ever heard of them creating something, expanding our gross national product, creating some more wealth for the people of Canada to enjoy, I would be the first to congratulate them. They sit on our left and all we hear are motions under Standing Order 43, and questions, and "increase this", "expand that", "pay more here", "pay more there", but never a word about how the people of Canada are going to meet this—the taxpayers of Canada, the people out there working, the people who are creating wealth.

Mr. Nystrom: Compare Newfoundland to Saskatchewan.

Mr. Crosbie: The crowd to my left reminds me of Ernest Hemingway's book, "The Sun also Rises", only in their case the dough never rises. There is never any expansion in the gross national product with this crowd. They just want to divide up what the rest of us have created.

Mr. Nystrom: Look at Saskatchewan.

Mr. Crosbie: Did Saskatchewan originate the potash mines? No. They nationalized them and took them over from somebody else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I do not want to be too severe with them tonight, Mr. Speaker, because they are a forlorn group of gypsies. Anyone who looks at them impartially tonight will see that they are a small scattered remnant that, after the next election, will not even be a rim. They have had it. They are the party of nicely decent perceptions. They are the only ones who have those nice, decent perceptions. They are the only ones whose hearts bleed when anybody is unfortunate, that little group to my left. They are squawking and quawking and croaking and quacking away while the rest of us cruel, heartless beasts, go on running the country without them. We are going to go on without them for the next hundred years.

I want to refer to something that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) said when he opened the debate in this House on November 9. I refer to Hansard for November 9. The minister made a savage attack on the gentleman who has just been appointed as chairman of Air Canada. He made a savage attack on the government's proposals and records since 1971, because this whole trouble started in 1971, led by the Hon. Bryce Mackasey who at that time was leading the government. Amendments were made and the new Unemployment Insurance Act was brought in which contained the seeds of its own extravagance. For the last eight years the government has been backing away from that—backpeddling. All this seems years and years ago as this dying, decrepit government creeps warily on its way toward the next election.

As reported at page 983 of Hansard for November 9, the minister said:

> The government has decided, as one of the major features of its revision of priorities, to recommend changes to the unemployment insurance program—

You might think this group opposite was going to change something somebody else brought in, but no, they are recommending changes to the unemployment insurance program that they brought in themselves eight years ago.

> —coupled with a significant redirection of its employment strategy.

Surely if that is what the minister is doing, it is contrary to what he and his predecessors had been doing since 1971.

He went on to say there were twofold changes and outlined them as follows:

> First, we want to reduce some of the disincentives to work which are present in the program—

Mr. Speaker, if there are disincentives to work in the program, they must have been introduced by the government opposite in 1971.

He also said:

> Second, we want to encourage workers to establish more stable work patterns and develop longer attachments to the active work force, thereby reducing their dependency on unemployment insurance.

In other words, the government's legislation for the last seven years encouraged workers not to establish stable work patterns or long attachments to the active work force, and caused them to become dependent on unemployment insurance. That is the reason the minister gave for introducing these changes.

The government should resign, having admitted these fantastic mistakes in the unemployment insurance program which they have imposed on the people of Canada since 1971. Coming at this late date, they should have the good decency to resign and at least go to the people on these proposals. They should not shoot down to Florida as soon as they get this House closured in the next few days, or wherever they are going to go to forget their sins of the last eight years.

Is it a bird, is it a plane? No, it is Bryce Mackasey, sucking his thumb, flying across Canada as chairman of Air Canada. That is what is going on. It is not the unemployed sucking their thumbs wondering where they are going to go to look for a job in Canada, or staying in Newfoundland and Cape Breton and not wanting to move for a job. It is Bryce Mackasey. It is "Be Nice to Bryce" week. Despite this incredible record that the government is trying to correct since November 9, it is "Heave Bryce into the ranks of the safety, secure—cast the dice for Bryce—be nice to Bryce—give the crud to Bud." While Bryce is chairman of Air Canada, the minister is here trying to put this crud across. He has my sympathy, Mr. Speaker, in this task he has undertaken. I hope that some day he flies somewhere too.

An hon. Member: To hear Crosbie?

Mr. Crosbie: To hear St. Pierre.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we all realize, except for the gentlemen on our left, that there has to be some restraint. A $12 billion—

Mr. Nystrom: Do not forget the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

● (2122)

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is all heart. I mean, he is a gentleman. Every time one looks at him, one will see his heart pulsing. I am trying to adopt some of that heart of his in St. John's West.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: This cackling to my left is interrupting my train of thought. A $12 billion deficit this year would be the equivalent in the United States of $120 billion.

Mr. Nystrom: It sounds like a Tory government.

Mr. Crosbie: We realize that there has to be restraint. We realize that there has to be some restraint in the unemployment insurance program, but we do not see why the restraint has to be so bent and crooked and swizzling a restraint as the government has proposed in its amendments. That is why we are going to vote against them. I would not vote for them, anyway. I have no intention of voting for anything brought into this House by the hon. gentlemen opposite, no matter what they bring in, because the source from which it comes is polluted. Therefore, I would not support it anyway. I would not come into the House. But we have a better proposal.

We say, "All right, there is a $2 billion deficit this year in the unemployment insurance account. Don't tell us that this is self-insured, that it is an insurance program when over one half of it has to be contributed by the general taxpayers." It is not insurance. The $2 billion deficit has got to be reduced. So, we have suggested ways this could be done in line with what the provinces have suggested, to cause the least damage to people who have been led to expect so much by hon. gentlemen opposite. They do not want that. They want to step on the backs of the people of the Atlantic provinces and the people in Newfoundland, and to do it in a manner which would be most unfair to people whom they have led along the garden path for seven years now. They have given them these benefits for seven years, yet they want to turn around and snatch them away by passing this legislation; not in some more humane way as we are suggesting, but simply by saying that new entrants to the labour force are going to have to work for 20 weeks before they are entitled to unemployment insurance at all, knowing that in a place like Newfoundland, to try to get work for five months is a near impossibility for many of our people. Or, somebody who goes back into the labour force after two years has got to work for 20 weeks before he can get unemployment insurance, and so on and so forth.

Then, because of the battering they took—I presume that members in the Liberal caucus who come from Atlantic Canada spoke up for the people of Atlantic Canada—they made a little change in that so that if there is unemployment of 11.5 per cent, it would save some of the worst excesses that they propose in their original legislation. There is not a principle among the whole lot opposite. There is not even an isosceles triangle, much less a principle. They should be ashamed to ask this House and to introduce a closure motion in this House for what they are proposing here.

Mr. Nystrom: A lot of squares.

Mr. Crosbie: I just want to mention Newfoundland simply because I come from there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I do not want Mr. Speaker to get the idea, just because we have heavy unemployment, that we are finished in Newfoundland. We are starting to come up from underneath the Liberal penumbra, this burden that has been on our shoulders since 1963.

Mr. Nystrom: That is why they are voting NDP.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, every province has a number of people who want to commit hara-kiri and might vote for the NDP, but I do not think they will find too many in Newfoundland.

The changes suggested by the hon. gentlemen opposite would take $26 million out of Newfoundland next year, the provisons with respect to new entrants requiring 20 weeks of work instead of, at the present time, ten weeks of work. It would cost the people of Newfoundland $26 million. It would cost our economy. The reduction in the benefit rate from 66⅔ per cent to 60 per cent would cost another $26 million. Had the government gone ahead with its original proposal, we would have lost another $50 million in connection with the proposals which now no longer apply to us, simply because we have in excess of 11.5 per cent unemployment in Newfoundland.

Imagine suggesting that legislation be passed which will penalize a province if it manages to get its unemployment rate below 11.5 per cent. I mean, that takes genius. That takes Liberal genius to try to give us an incentive in Newfoundland for never decreasing its unemployment rate below 11.5 per cent, because if we do we are going to be cruelly crucified by the legislation passed by hon. gentlemen opposite. That is taking away the old work disincentive. We have got to examine the statistics every month now to make sure that she does not go below 11.5. This is a brilliant, audacious amendment that was brought in by hon. gentlemen opposite because they thought they were going to lose the votes of all their members from Atlantic Canada.

This is not the government. This is a bunch of survivors trying to cling together in a rough sea somehow to get beyond the shoals of the next election. This is not governing the country. This is not facing the problems of the country. This is the worst kind of mugwumpery. Even the NDP would not stoop so low.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Do not count on it.

Mr. Nystrom: A red Tory.

Mr. Crosbie: Having heard the hon. gentleman, perhaps I had better change that. Yes, they would, Mr. Speaker.

In 1977 we received in Newfoundland $216 million in unemployment insurance. This year the estimate is that it may be $250 million. We do not want to receive this. We want some job creation. The minister says that he is going to save some money with these amendments which he is going to put into job creation. I was down in my district this Saturday, Fox Harbour, and 23 men working—I am sorry, it was on Monday, not Saturday. There were 23 men working in the pelting rain in a gale of 60 miles an hour putting in the sewage system in Fox harbour because of one of the minister's Canada Works projects. Down there I call it my Canada Works projects, but today I will include the minister. These people want to work. They want work.

Anybody who is willing to go out in a 60-mile an hour wind, in a howling gale and a rain storm, to work for the lowly pittance which they are paid in Canada Works in Newfoundland, where we do not even get as much in Newfoundland as they get on the mainland, wants to work. These people want to work. They are not shirkers. But we have got to give them something to work at.

I have been here now for almost two years. I have been in this House for just over two years. For the whole two years I have been trying to get a synchrolift installed in the federally-owned drydock in St. John's, which is going to create 200 permanent jobs. You know, I cannot get it because of the pusillanimous cowardice on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) who does not run his department. He is afraid to cross the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), who himself is afraid to cross the workers in the shipyard in Marystown who are complaining that if the workers in the shipyard in St. John's get some assistance for the synchrolift, they might lose some business in the future. Therefore, he has told the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce not to do it.

Now I have got to throw myself at the feet and at the mercy of the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras), "super Andras", to see if we can get the $8 million for this synchrolift to create 200 permanent jobs. That is what makes this all inconsistent. The 200 jobs could be created with a loan of $8 million, which the government will get back. Yet I have had to go month after month purely for political reasons trying to get that employment created down in Newfoundland in a drydock which is owned by the government.

So, do not have the government believe that we are going to accept their protestations that the few dollars they save in these amendments are going to create employment. It is all politics. Unfortunately it is not the politics of creating jobs in a member's district, a member who might get some credit if a synchrolift went in the dockyard down in St. John's. That is the kind of thing we are up against with this government.

Job creation is what we want. In Newfoundland we have a population of 563,000. Our total personal income was $2,767 million in 1977. So, we can ill afford to lose $50 million. It is a major loss. We would lose something even if our own amendments are carried here. But the hon. member for St. John's East and I are prepared to support the amendments which this side of the House is putting forward because we realize this country cannot survive with the huge kind of deficits it had in recent years. We realize something has to be done.

There are some abuses in the unemployment insurance system. Therefore we are prepared to see our province get a bit less and support that, but not in the inconsistent, irrational, cruel, unfeeling way which has been put forward by the Minister of Employment and Immigration who has been given a chance now to make a much better adjustment. It is supported by all the provinces and by the official opposition, but not supported by that flotilla to my left which will not be floating in here after the next election. No, they will support nothing. They are for spending. Lash it out until kingdom come. They are not worried about deficits. They are not worried about economic development. They are not worried about creating jobs. They are just squawkers here wanting to spend more and more every day. They want to spend. They have no sense of responsibility whatsoever, not even the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

In our province we had an unemployment rate of 15.9 per cent. In 1976 it averaged 13.6 per cent, in 1977, 15.9 per cent, and this year at the moment it is 16.5 per cent adjusted. Imagine, one province in the country has 16.5 per cent unemployment. Alberta has 4.5 per cent, Saskatchewan has 4.6 per cent. Youth unemployment—

Mr. Nystrom: Socialism.

Mr. Crosbie: Potash and other forms of ash. Newfoundland, youth unemployment, 23.5 per cent; Saskatchewan, 11.3 per cent.

• (2132)

I think it was a famous American who said the nation cannot survive half slave and half free. Perhaps it was Abraham Lincoln, a tall gentleman with a beard, and not George Lincoln Rockefeller. He said a nation cannot survive half slave and half free. That is what this nation is. The half from Quebec to Newfoundland is half slave, and the other half from Ontario to British Columbia is half free. The whole set-up is half assed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You cannot be half slave, half free, and half assed. This problem must be overcome, the problem of the waste of human resources in this country from the Quebec border to Newfoundland, the four Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

What are the hon. gentlemen opposite going to do about it? Absolutely nothing. They have been in power since 1963. They do not have the tools and they cannot overcome the problem. All they can do is bring in suggestions to save money on unemployment, money that should not have been spent in the first place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us what you would do.

Mr. Crosbie: I am not going to tell you tonight what we would do. I am telling you now what we propose to do with unemployment insurance. When we take over office later in 1979—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The election has to be called in 1979. We will be introducing amendments such as those which have been proposed by the brilliant member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). The hon. gentleman will have two tears in his eyes on election night, that is the two-tier system.

We know these are not simple problems. We are not saying tonight that gentlemen opposite should have created full employment last year or full employment this year. I know they cannot do it. I know the labour force is increasing rapidly in Canada. I am not a dumb-dumb.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Withdraw.

Mr. Crosbie: I am not like the hon. gentlemen to my left, dumb-dumbs or completely irresponsible. They are one or the other. I have been in a government. I know that we have an increasing female participation rate. There is no reason why we should not have it. We should have more women in the work force if they want to work. We all know there are these causes, that the labour force is expanding so rapidly it is hard to keep up with creating enough jobs and employment.

There will be the same problem for the next government, us. That is why I am tender tonight toward the government. I realize that the problem will be ours in three to six months' time. We will make a better fist of it than members opposite. We know there are no easy answers. However, the answer is not to come in with half thought out excuses for amendments because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went to Morocco.

I do not know what happened to the Prime Minister in Morocco. Somebody got to him. He really put it to him. I do not know who it was, but it gave the Prime Minister an awful shock. When he came back to Canada, the poor old Minister of Employment and Immigration had to come up with all of these brilliant amendments. He might as well admit he has made a grave error, and adopt the suggestions made by the actuarial member from York-Scarborough. He was not supposed to be here, but he is.

I want to remind hon. members to my left of something. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) should close his mouth and take this in. His great hero Khrushchev, I said this last week but the hon. member was not here, said "Economics is a subject which does not greatly respect one's wishes." They certainly are not respecting the wishes of the hon. member for Nickel Belt. Another gentleman, Mr. McWilliams, said, and I quote myself again, "Under a planned economy, everything is included in the plan except economy." That is what has happened with the hon. gentleman there.

I have a telegram from the United Church of Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Nevertheless he may continue—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Crosbie: Nobody would say no to the United Church of Canada.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is to delete clause 1.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: If you can hold your delight for a couple of moments, I would like to speak to clause 1. I do not know when I will get to it because I have some other things I want to say. They relate to the principles, for whatever they are worth, behind this legislation which embody clause 1 and all the other clauses in this bill. We wish we could delete the whole bill.

The whole principle of taxing back under clause 1, and clause 14 that relates to it, flies in the face of any principle of taxation according to ability to pay, and avoiding double taxation. If this were done to private enterprise or a professional person, screams would come from the government benches and Tory benches which would be heard from ocean to ocean.

A construction worker in James Bay or an oil worker in the Beaufort Sea might earn during seven or eight months of the year $17,000 or $18,000 and pay the maximum premiums for unemployment insurance, and I use the word insurance advisedly. He might collect another couple of thousand dollars in benefits. That worker would pay income tax on his earned income and his unemployment insurance benefits, plus pay "tax back" of as much as 30 per cent or more of the benefits he received on which he already paid income tax. Anybody who would try to foist that kind of clause on this place should have his head examined. These are not the kind of people that the minister classifies as those who sit around sucking their thumbs.

Unemployment is costing this country $8 billion. It is costing $4 billion in unemployment insurance payments and another $4 billion in lost tax revenue, lost production, and increased welfare payments.

The government is implementing Tory policy of restraint and cutting back. My colleague, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), and all of us in this party have been saying for many months that you cannot restrain yourselves and cut back into full employment. You cannot restrain and cut back to a prosperous and full productive economy.

Surely it would make more sense to enlarge a deficit for the short term, one or two years, by spending some of that $8 billion that unemployment is costing us. It should be invested in the people of this country, in assets for our country that will create employment in areas where it is desperately needed.

I listened to my good friends from the Atlantic provinces, particularly my two colleagues from St. John's. While they said we need to have restraint regarding unemployment payouts, they did not provide any kind of alternative to take the place of that restraint which would put people to work. They cannot have it both ways.

The two-tier system which the Tories yack about is even more iniquitous than what the minister is proposing. I hope that when those two members return to Newfoundland they will explain to the people there what a Tory two-tier system will mean to the workers of that province.

The government proposes to reduce benefits from 66⅔ per cent to 60 per cent. That is bad enough. The Tories say they would leave it at two-thirds for beneficiaries with dependants, but single beneficiaries would be reduced to 50 per cent. I hope the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) will seek out the single unemployed in St. John's and explain this to those who are at a pitiful minimum wage under a Tory government in Newfoundland. They can pay their board and room with that. I am sure they will go out of their way to find the single beneficiaries in St. John's and explain the two-tier system to them.

Members to my right and members who support the government tell us they worry about the deficit and that we have to show restraint. I find it passing strange that in the provinces blessed with Tory governments—

An hon. Member: Blessed?

Mr. Benjamin: —the per capita debt is highest. I want to tell the hon. member for St. John's West that what they are going through now is what we went through in Saskatchewan. We took a kick in the head for some 50 years under Liberal and Conservative governments. We were at the bottom of the totem pole.

An hon. Member: You have a deficit.

Mr. Benjamin: We have surpluses in good times and in difficult times we have deficits. There is a reason for that. We did it in the days of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and we are doing it now under Premier Blakeney. You invest when things are at their worst, when the economy is slumping. That is the time to invest for the public good.

The per capita debt in Saskatchewa is $985. In Ontario, it is something like $2,100. Hon. members should realize that we paid as we went, and our people are working.

Manitoba has the unenviable record of experiencing the highest increase in unemployment in the past year of any province, beating Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. The increase in the last year has been 35 per cent. That is their restraint. That is their cutbacks. That is their Proposition 13 mentality. It is not public dollars but private dollars that have got their people into the mess they are in. We have had Culver Tories and we have had Lyon Tories, as well as suppositories, such as my hon. friend from New Westminster talked about. A Tory is a Tory is a Tory, and that did not come by chance.

The minister spoke about people being prepared to move to find work. Mr. Speaker, people will move to work if there is work to move to. I did it when I was 17; the only reason I was able to move though was because there had to be a war to put everybody to work in munitions production or the shipyards. I went berrypicking, I joined a threshing crew. I worked in the shipyards. I paid unemployment insurance premiums but never got to use any benefits—I could have done so, but I joined up. I wanted to work, and the whole country wants to work.

The government ought to be bringing down another budget—the last half dozen they have given us were next to worthless. We need a budget which invests billions of dollars in what the country needs to put people to work. We need a minimum of a billion dollars a year invested in the transportation system. We need another additional billion invested in housing.

We need a municipal capital development fund of $3 billion or $4 billion from which municipalities can borrow at less than the bank rate, with the nation as a whole picking up the additional interest cost. The municipalities know what has to be done in their communities, whether they are little villages or the largest metropolitan centres in the country. We can do something about unemployment and pollution at the same time. We could say to the municipalities: you have the use of a fund at less than the bank rate with which to provide, for example, tertiary sewage treatment in every city in Canada with a population of over 5,000. Imagine the number of people who would be put to work manufacturing, assembling and operating projects of that sort. As I say, something could be done about pollution and employment at the same time while improving the well-being of our society.

Then again, instead of building 200,000 housing units a year we might invest in 500,000 units a year, putting people to work and reducing the cost of housing at the same time. Some of the financing for all this could be provided by those who are not paying their fair share of taxation and should be doing so.

In addition to the $8 billion that unemployment is costing our economy this year there are another $8 billion lying on the books of the Government of Canada in the form of deferred taxes. Whatever argument might be advanced in favour of deferring taxes owed by corporations it would surely be reasonable and fair if those companies paid a modest rate of interest on those taxes, because those taxes will never be paid. A rate of interest of, say, 9 per cent, lower than anybody else in Canada can get, would provide another $700 million a year in revenue for investment in the kind of job creation I have described.

This double taxation principle in clause 1, even though it is a relatively high income earner, flies in the face of anything that is fair and reasonable. The minister could not get away with it if he tried that system on the financial institutions or on any other part of the corporate sector. Neither the Grits nor the Tories would even contemplate it. But they will do it to somebody who has to rely on wages.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lapointe) made a speech worthy of someone who is upset by this legislation, and I hope he shows his feelings with his vote. He made a good speech though I suspect it was operation SLBS—"Save Lapointe's Backside." He wants the government to take another look at this. He talks about unemployment in his riding running at between 23 per cent and 26 per cent. How he can sit over there in almost the same row as the minister who is sponsoring this legislation, is beyond me. I hope he will put his vote where his mouth is. And I hope the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) and a number of other members from that side of the House who feel the same way will do so too.

It is important, also, when you ask people to make sacrifices and exercise restraint, that it should apply to all, not just to salary and wage earners. No one section of the population should be asked to carry the load by themselves. I think of the crude and unconscionable returns which are expected and obtained by the corporate sector—one would not mind so much if this money, or a large part of it, were reinvested in job creation. I have not heard the government or the official opposition suggest to shareholders in the corporate sector that they should show some restraint, take smaller dividends or take half the dividends they expect and invest surplus revenue in their country instead of putting it into their own fat pocketbooks. I did not hear the government or the official opposition ask financial institutions to stop the unconscionable record 26 per cent increase in profits over the past year. I have not heard them say that there should be restraint or cutbacks there. There has been no requirement on the part of shareholders or executives to cut back and to invest in employment or in the people of our nation.

To try to reduce government deficits at the expense of wage and salary earners is unconscionable. That should be beyond the conscience, the decency, and the morals which are in the hearts and minds of the Liberal and Conservative parties.

They cannot ask just one part of the nation to chip in, and allow the other part of the nation to go blithely on its way, getting all it can get. We need a 180-degree turn from the traditional and conventional wisdom of so-called private enterprise governments.

I do not ask the government to copy, imitate, or even pay attention to what we socialists are saying. I ask the government to take a leaf out of the book of private enterprise governments in a number of other countries. We cannot copy exactly what governments in other countries do. We must proceed according to our climate, geography, and economic situation. Only in this country and in the country to the south of us do we still cling to nineteenth century solutions and ideas in dealing with something which is entirely new in the economic history of mankind.

Clause 1 needs to be deleted. As a consequence, clause 14 should be deleted. The whole bill needs to be withdrawn. After January 23 the government should come back to us with a rewritten bill which would do some of the things we have been talking about. We can do it. The people and the wealth are there. They need to be challenged and mobilized. They need to be asked and directed. They need leadership in doing all the things which need to be done. That would do much to reduce deficits. It would do more to reduce our debt than any of the solutions proposed by the government and the official opposition. Can they not learn lessons from the histories of their own parties and of our country, let alone of other countries?

Surely by now the lessons of the 1890s to the 1960s should have told the government and the official opposition that we must make fundamental changes in managing our economy. This cannot be done just by the government, but the government has to lead. These changes require business, the trade union movement, the farm sector, the provinces and the municipalities to mount a massive effort under the leadership of a national government which is truly national. Unless and until we are prepared to make changes, we will continue to chop away at those who not only are not causing inflation and deficits but who instead are its first victims.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to when I have one minute left.

Unless and until investments are made, even with the knowledge that in the short run there would be deficit increases, we are not going to get out of the unemployment mess we are in, and our economy will not grow at a rate that is reasonable and proper, even if things are tough, comparatively speaking, in the rest of the world. That surely has to be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his allotted time has expired.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Richard Janelle (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to bring my contribution to the discussion of the important bill before the House tonight. Having come to this House but a short time ago, I still had a few illusions: I thought that the federal Liberal party might perhaps have been touched by the hand of God. But I was sadly disappointed on nothing, since my election to this House, that it has brought in nothing but legislation that penalizes the disadvantaged.

The legislation we are discussing this evening will bring hardship upon several ridings of Canada, my own included. In my area, which depends mostly on soft sectors such as forestry and furniture, the rate of unemployment is rather high. Every week people come to my office complaining about the unemployment insurance program. The new amendments to the act will restrict access to benefits even further. And yet credits allotted to Canada Works projects by the same department were reduced to $800,000 this year.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—PROGRESS IN FIELD OF BEHAVIOURAL MEDICINE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on November 2 I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) what progress in the field of behavioural medicine, the dream child of the previous minister, she could report. The minister's answer indicated an 8 per cent reduction in hospitalization between 1971 and 1975. That was a period in which there was the promotion of good health. I want to state that I am definitely in favour of preventive medicine and the keeping of records which show that we are on the right path.

The paths of the 1920s, the 1940s and the 1950s have come to an end because in those years we were dealing with the prevention of acute disease. The period from 1971 to 1975 was a period in which, as I said, there was the promotion of good health. Since statistics were compiled in those years, I would like to know in what areas we were most successful and between which guidelines we were operating. I would like to know what diseases were prevented by the specific measures which were taken. I would like to know what those specific measures were, as well as figures relating to the decrease in morbidity as well as figures relating to mortality.

Between 1973 and 1976 there was a 24 per cent reduction in the number of motor vehicle accidents. This was before seat belt legislation was in effect in Ontario or Quebec and, I believe, before speed limits were reduced. It was also before many highways were divided by median strips. Previously highways proved to be suicide areas. There was a very high accident rate. I would like to know specifically what was the cause of the 24 per cent reduction. If we could be more specific on those points, we might further increase this drop.

Pedestrians crossing streets should wear clothing that stands out, and not dodge traffic when they should be waiting for a light change or a clear road. That goes without saying. In this particular department, prevention does not work all that well. Traffic related accidents went up 14.2 per cent in 1977, and the total number of accidents without injury went up 3 per cent. That is where you have fenders banged up, and things like that. Also, most drivers who had those accidents were young people up to 30 years of age. Something should be done to see whether prevention is practised in that area, if these young people are well equipped, if they have the knowledge and ability, the proper training and sense of responsibility to be in charge of a motor car.

This is not the whole answer. Looking again at the statistics, we find that in December of 1977, as compared with December of the previous year, there was a 24 per cent decrease. Then we find an increase in motorcycle accidents. What has been done in that respect to prevent those accidents? Also, snowmobile accidents are on the increase. We understand that this is a drinking-driving problem, a problem similar to the one we have with cars.

Now let us look at the geriatric problem. The minister said there was a decrease of 3 per cent in coronary artery disease. According to one report, this has continued since 1961. The minister has taken the figures from 1973 to 1976 and, very wisely, added that they were only indicators. Cardiovascular cerebral disease has increased because we are an aging population. That is one reason for it. Arteriosclerosis increases with age, therefore it follows that we will have more vascular accidents. Where do we start to prevent cardiovascular disease? The previous minister gave a very fine paper in Vancouver on this subject, but offered no real solutions to it at the time.

Going back over the records we find that during the Korean war autopsies were done on young fellows between the ages of 20 and 30 and that half of them showed evidence of coronary disease. Is exercise to be prescribed for the duration of our life?

Can the North American concept of the big meal at night, with a pleasant cocktail or wine, be broken? Do we really know about prevention of the development of hereditary traits, diet and exercise? This is why we need to be far more specific in our guidelines. Then we have to take steps for prevention.

We need to check people for blood pressure, for cardiovascular disease. We need regular clinical exams which should not be done by machines or computers. We need doctors who will look at those cases from a clinical point of view and prescribe for them. I ask: can a lot more be done in prevention and research, and can we cut the charge bill? As a result of that, morbidity and mortality will be cut, and that will be worthwhile. We have to sort out those things. Should we not start our geriatric plan for coronary disease and cardiovascular back at the pediatric age?

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I note that the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) has indicated his great concern, as he usually does, about the whole question of geriatrics. I would point out to him that in response to his question of December 14, 1978, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) said that the new bureau on aging, which is starting operations in the Department of National Health and Welfare, will also include geriatrics. I am quite sure the hon. member is very pleased to have that good news.

His question appears to be much more comprehensive than was previously the case when the question was first posed. However, I wish to amplify the response to the question about progress in behavioural medicine posed by the hon. member for Simcoe North on November 2, 1978.

The recent reorganization of the Department of National Health and Welfare indicates the extent to which emphasis is being placed on a positive approach to health. The new health services and promotion branch brings together a number of health promotion activities which have been developed throughout the department. This change was made in the midst of our general reduction in staff years and operating expenditures, and offers a greater concentration of effort in a more efficient manner.

Among our initiatives is "Operation Lifestyle", which uses a variety of social marketing techniques to encourage Canadians to assume greater responsibility for behaviour related to health.

"Dialogue on Drinking" is another program sponsored by federal and provincial agencies, and is aimed at establishing a social climate in which irresponsible drinking becomes less acceptable.

The fitness and amateur sports branch promotes organized athletic activities and encourages fitness programs for individuals. "Participaction", the "Fit Kit" employee fitness program, and the Canadian fitness award for deserving children have become household words.

The National Advisory Committee on Immunization suggests schedules for routine immunization of children and provides seasonal advice for influenza vaccination.

Under the leadership of the environmental health directorate many agencies, both in government and industry, are looking at the impact on the environment of our industrial society, and attempting to minimize negative consequences of future urban and industrial development.

The Department of Labour's new Canadian centre for occupational health and safety will be the federal focal point for work toward improvement of conditions relative to health and safety in the work place.

Of course, the provinces and the professional and private agencies play an essential role in health promotion. Co-operative activity is guided by a new federal-provincial advisory committee in this area. Examples of provincial approaches which parallel those at the federal level are "Action B.C." and the Saskatchewan "Feeling Good" programs. Other provinces have similar trusts. The success of provincial traffic safety programs has been widely acclaimed.

In all these activities the key to success is giving each individual a sense of responsibility for his or her health.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—DEVELOPMENT OF NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words tonight regarding a question I put to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) a few days ago concerning a rural development agreement for Northern Ontario. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, there was a forestry agreement signed between the province of Ontario and the federal government a couple of weeks ago, which is designed to bring that industry to its full potential. There has also been an indication from the minister that there would be a rural development agreement signed as well.

This is very significant because the ARDA agreement, which has been in effect for the past few years, has had very significant benefits for many areas in northern Ontario, like the Algoma-Manitoulin area. Programs such as the farm enlargement program have been carried out under this, and at least in the Manitoulin area some 70 farms were purchased and assistance has been given to young farmers to expand their operations, bringing them to more economic sizes. Some four large community pastures were established to provide more pasturing for the beef industry there, and something like 27,000 or 30,000 acres in total have been purchased in relation to the farm enlargement program and the community pasture program, and this has been combined with improved herd sires to upgrade the beef industry. As well, co-operative livestock sales have been established at Thessalon and at Little Current, with some assistance from ARDA.

There has been the development as well of two meat packing plants, one at Bruce Mines and one at Spring Bay on Manitoulin Island. There has also been an improvement under the program so that farmers cannot only market through this co-operative sales mechanism, but as well can have meat processed in these plants. It also provided assistance for farm drainage training programs such as the business of farming courses.

A fish packing plant was constructed with ARDA assistance at Mamainse Point north of Sault Ste. Marie on Lake Superior. Likewise, the tourist industry has also benefited from this program which has provided waterfront property for communities like Meldrum Bay, Gore Bay, Kagawong, Little Current and Manitowaning. Also, a number of community trailer camps have been constructed at Gore Bay, Garden River and Meldrum Bay. These camp grounds are providing tourist facilities for those communities. There are also the community parks in Johnson Township and Bridal Vail Falls which have been constructed under the ARDA program.

I am providing this information as background because I want the minister to be aware of how important this program has been in our area over the past few years. It is easy after these activities have been carried out to forget how important they are.

I would like to pay tribute to one person, Mr. Joe Brown, the rural development officer in the area from 1967 to 1974. His territory included not only the Manitoulin Algoma area, but also northern Ontario. Later on he had six counsellors working with him. He did a great deal to make this program a success, and had the ability to take a good idea and work with governments and with the people. He had some spectacular achievements with regard to ARDA projects.

What we must look at as the minister signs this new agreement with the province of Ontario are the really worthwhile projects which have been carried out under ARDA and which still have some life left in them. We should retain the best parts of that program where there is still work to be carried out. I would like to see a multimillion dollar, five-year rural development agreement with the province of Ontario. The minister has indicated that it would be signed before the end of this fiscal year.

This program should feature aspects relating to helping young people get started in agriculture, provide for more expanded and diversified production, assist in the tourist industry to provide improved facilities and develop that industry in northern Ontario, which has so much potential.

I think there should be a manufacturing component in this program to provide for diversification and processing in our manufacturing industries to process further our basic resources in northern Ontario, such as agriculture, mining, and forestry.

It seems to me that there should be consultation with the members of parliament from northern Ontario and with the people of the area to ensure that this program is all encompassing and meets our needs to develop fully our natural resources which I have mentioned. Only in this way can we reach our full potential and develop the resources which we have at this time.

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can fully understand and appreciate the concern of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) because he is certainly one of the most dedicated members in this House when it comes to the concerns and affairs of his constituency. He always speaks out when he thinks the government is neglecting his area of Ontario. That is his right and duty, and he deserves full credit for it.

As the hon. member stated, the Agricultural and Rural Development Act has done much good in many areas of Ontario. It has been one of the main tools of rural development in that province since 1962. He outlined in much detail the various programs, but when we realize that the federal government has spent almost $75 million through ARDA in the province of Ontario since 1962, that sort of speaks for itself. No matter how good programs may seem, there is always a time and a method to improve them.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has taken the view that a new approach to agricultural and rural development assistance in Ontario is needed. DREE considers that proposals of a regional character rather than direct on-farm measures would likely improve the foundation for development in all the resource areas. An example of that approach is the recently signed new forests in eastern Ontario amendment.

I would like to give the hon. member as much information as I can in the very limited time available, and first speak about the meeting which my minister had with ministers in the Ontario government who are responsible for the general development agreement. There was substantial agreement among the ministers that priority should be given to the needs of eastern Ontario where much of the ARDA effort has been concentrated, and the minister does believe there is considerable compatibility between some of the ARDA thrusts and what might be done under a more comprehensive approach in a new GDA subsidiary agreement.

I am very happy to advise the hon. member for Algoma that the work of developing a new agreement is now in progress and well under way. DREE is looking toward an integrated approach which assesses the opportunities in all resource sectors. There seems to be the possibility of joint incentive assistance to resource based industries in addition to the Regional Development Incentives Act, which applies in this part of the province.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, discussions are definitely under way between DREE officials in the province of Ontario region and the province of Ontario itself on these new initiatives which bear upon economic development in both eastern and northern Ontario. While it is quite impossible to provide the hon. member with an assurance that all past programs will be incorporated in new agreements, the planning will include a full examination of what has been done and what might and should fit into a more comprehensive framework of rural development.

Adjournment Debate

PUBLIC SERVICE—COST OF BOOKLET CIRCULATED TO EMPLOYEES

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, on December 14 of this year, as reported at page 2014 of Hansard, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan), a question concerning the distribution of a booklet entitled "Proposed Changes to the Public Service Staff Relations Act". I have a copy in my hand, and it has been distributed, I am told, through the personnel departments of the Government of Canada to as many employees as possible.

The distribution of this booklet brought a criticism from the staff associations to the effect that the employer was taking advantage of the employer's position officially, to distribute one side of the case concerning the amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that earlier this year the government introduced Bill C-28 which proposed a number of changes to the act which were, I would say, the sequel of the first ministers' conference held in February. At the conference there was a general agreement between the heads of government of all the provinces of Canada and the federal government that, as a general principle through the de-control period, wages in the public sector should not lead outside employment.

The concern that many of us have is the escalating situation where the staff associations are attacking government on one side and the government now appears to be replying. I am happy to note that the tone of the government document is moderate. The tone of a document now being distributed by staff associations is not moderate, however. The document entitled "The Truth About Bill C-22", a copy of which I also have in my hand, is being distributed. What gives many of us in the area a great deal of concern is the general tone that appears to be developing.

When Bill C-22 to amend Bill C-28 was given first reading this fall, an article appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of November 22. The vice president of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, Mr. Bill Doherty, said that it was not that bad a bill. Bill C-28 was bad, but he is reported as saying the following: —the union which waged a massive lobbying campaign against the legislation's predecessor, Bill C-28, will likely meet with the government to discuss the ramifications of the new, modified bill.

It continues:

—the union has never been against comparing public service contracts to those given by "good" employers in the private sector.

The tone seems to have become progressively worse. I should like to refer to a news release issued by the Public Service Alliance of Canada on December 14, 1978. In part it describes:

—Bill C-22 as "a tragic and stupid mistake".

It continues:

"Rather, it is political scapegoating at its worst, designed to serve certain political interests and commitments."

With reference to distribution of the document entitled "Proposed Changes to the Public Service Staff Relations Act", the news release indicated the following:

It said Treasury Board "seeks to sell Bill C-22 by inference, omission, distortion and misrepresentation".

I have many good friends in the staff associations. I should like to tell them that they are not helping by this kind of attack.

I should like to refer to the document entitled: "The Truth About Bill C-22". It reads in part as follows:

For example, comparisons would not be made with municipal and provincial public employees who do similar work, but solely with workers employed by profit-making organizations.

That is simply not true. Outside employment generally will be the standard. This will be developed by the new research bureau which now will be directed by an independent board, half of its representation coming from the employers and half from the employees.

The case which unions will be making is impaired by intemperate remarks and statements such as those attributed to the president of the Public Service Alliance, Mr. Stewart. I just cannot help but call to the attention of staff associations that Bill C-22 will have full and complete debate when it receives second reading in the House. Then it will be referred to committee. There will be every opportunity for spokesmen of employees and staff associations to appear and give their points of view. If there is reason to believe, as has been asserted, that comparisons will not be made with municipal and provincial public employees, then let us look at the clauses in the bill. If amendments have to be made, they can be made.

There have been substantial changes to Bill C-28, for example, the exclusions for over $33,500. That is out of the new bill now. This can be accomplished only when there is an atmosphere on both sides of moderation, willingness to meet, and willingness to consult.

I cannot help but observe at this stage that this session cannot have that long a life. We will adjourn shortly, after dealing with the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. In the new year we will deal with Bill C-12, the indexing of pensions. That will take a while. There is a heavy legislative agenda. I would think there is a high probability that parliament perhaps will be prorogued shortly after Easter or thereabouts. We are looking at something like 12 weeks or 13 weeks of House sittings in 1979. It will be a very tight schedule if Bill C-22 is to be enacted.

If Bill C-22 is to be considered on its merits, I trust and hope that spokesmen for the staff associations, in a spirit of very careful research and the exercise of good, considered judgment, will make preparations to appear before the committee in order to give us the benefit of their views. I am prepared to listen as are many other people in the House. Only if they follow that route will they have the kind of legislation they want to see on the books.

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) has demonstrated once again his unfailing interest in those subjects which affect his constituents greatly, and his vigilance in bringing these concerns to the attention of the government and parliament. I will not reply by debating with him the merits of Bill C-22, but rather reply to the original question he raised in the House as to the cost of the booklet which was distributed to all public servants.

He inquired first about the cost of this publication. Based on cost estimates from the Department of Supply and Services, the minister advised him on Thursday, December 14 last, that the unit cost was in the vicinity of nine cents per copy. I am pleased to note that the final cost may in fact be lower than this estimate. I am informed by the Department of Supply and Services that the actual cost will be $24,950.60, representing a unit cost of seven cents per copy. This includes printing and distribution costs, plus a service fee, that are being charged by the Department of Supply and Services. Bulk quantities were supplied directly to departments, which in turn were responsible for their distribution within their organizations.

Hon. members will recall the extensive campaign waged by public sector unions against the predecessor to Bill C-22, namely, Bill C-28. Public service unions prepared briefs on Bill C-28 and distributed them to their members. They referred to Bill C-28 in the newspapers and other publications.

My colleagues and I, as well as members of departmental management, heard many concerns from employees concerning the fact that the employer was not explaining the bill and its rationale to employees. The government decided that when a successor bill to Bill C-28 was introduced, an effort should be made to inform employees on the provisions of the bill. This booklet is the result of that effort.

The hon. member mentioned, and rightly so, that when this bill comes before the House of Commons there will be a full debate. Witnesses will be asked to appear before the committee. The Public Service Alliance and other unions in the public service will be free to come forward and answer questions and testify before the committee. I believe the government has acted rightly. I am sure those employees who read this booklet will be happy that the government has prepared it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m., without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PENITENTIARIES

REDUCTION IN CHAPLAINCY SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Taking into account the statement by the Solicitor General Mr. Blais that no written notices of employment termination have been issued by the government regarding the reduction of chaplains in Canadian penitentiaries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That the Solicitor General make a statement on motions today outlining how it is that he knows nothing about a written notice of job termination received by Reverend Neil de Haan, chaplain at the Rockwood Institute and, as well, explain to the House what is meant by the policy given to the director at Stony Mountain maximum security penitentiary that the positions of chaplain and psychiatrist must be eliminated but the people, namely, the doctor and minister, must remain.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

REQUEST CANADIAN LIBRARIES RECEIVE CONTINUING SUPPLY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move an urgent motion.

In view of the government's proposal to cut by half the number of libraries in Canada able to receive government publications free of charge, and in view of the fact that it will be citizens in the more remote parts of Canada who will pay for this measure by being deprived of access to information, at a time in the nation's history when we require greater, not less, communication, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That this House instruct Treasury Board, in keeping with the recommendation of the government green paper on public access to government documents, to ensure the continued provision of government publications to these college and public libraries free of charge.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION OF SERVICES AND HIRING OF MORE PILOTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that as of January 7 Air Canada will substantially reduce its services, especially on routes serving remote areas; in view of the fact that the same corporation says that it is compelled to make those changes as a result of the restricted number of authorized landings for pilots; considering that those reduced services added to other ones are reflected by higher transport costs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang): first, instruct that Crown corporation to maintain its present services; second, deny to Air Canada the elimination of flights expected on January 7, 1979; and, third, suggest that the Crown corporation hire more pilots with a view to enforcing the collective agreement and maintaining that public service.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, that motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

CRITICISM OF CORPORATION'S INVOLVEMENT IN HOTEL FRANCHISE OPERATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the fact that the federal government is now the proud owner of another luxury hotel, one in a series of 12 hotels funded under the National Housing Act, in this case to the tune of $13.5 million, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this House direct the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to terminate CMHC involvement in its hotel franchise operations and get on with the job of providing satisfactory housing for the over half a million Canadians who pay over 30 per cent for shelter, and to admit the serious backlog of problems associated with the AHOP program.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF SOUTHEAST ASIAN REFUGEES ADMITTED TO CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In keeping with Canada's extremely fortunate position in the world, and with the spirit of the season, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Daudlin):

That the government give favourable consideration to the admission to Canada of an appropriately higher number of those southeast Asian refugees known as the boat people.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION POLICY RESPECTING COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES OF FORMER HOLDERS OF FEDERAL PUBLIC OFFICE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, perhaps I could direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister who was the recipient of a letter from the Prime Minister dated October 18, 1976, setting out a reminder, as the Prime Minister called it, of the policy respecting commercial activities of former holders of federal public office in Canada.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that the former minister of finance, Mr. John Turner, within weeks of leaving this House solicited various corporations with a view to offering them advice and guidance in respect of many matters pertaining to Ottawa, and succeeded in getting a group of ten to 12 to pay him $15,000 per annum for the advantage of his counsel? Is the House leader aware of this and, if so, does he feel it broke any understanding or guideline that existed at the time Mr. Turner left this House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such offer on the part of the former minister of finance, not following his career with the same interest as my hon. friend has done. Knowing the former minister of finance, I would conclude that he would conduct himself after he left office with the same degree of integrity that characterized his public service in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again I would direct my supplementary question to the House leader, who I know will recall that one of the principles set out in the October 18 letter addressed to him was the following:

Current and former holders of public office must ensure by their actions that there is no reasonable ground for belief that it is possible to have privileged access to government personnel or services.

Has the House leader had an opportunity to review the various memoranda and letters that have been sent out by the former minister of finance, in one of which he states:

As a starter, the chief executive officer should be put in as good a public policy posture as a cabinet minister.

Presumably he was referring to the chief executive officers of corporations.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not received copies of the alleged memoranda or bulletins that may have been sent out by the former minister of finance. As I said earlier, the former minister of finance, when he was in the House of Commons and occupied an office in the ministry, conducted himself with integrity, and I am sure he is aware of the obligations which are voluntary in character and which may follow the career of a person who has served either as a minister or as a member of the public service.

To my knowledge, there are no sanctions and it is entirely up to the individual himself to observe the standards which have been suggested and circulated by the Prime Minister. All I can say is that I am quite confident that the former minister of finance would conduct himself with those standards in mind.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I would again address my supplementary question to the House leader, and recall for his benefit that Mr. Turner's first letter and statement of account was sent out one week after the guidelines were first communicated to the House leader back in 1976.

My final question to the House leader, who has extolled the virtues of Mr. Turner, is: in view of the letter sent to Mr. Turner, as minister of finance, on his departure in September, 1975, from the Prime Minister which stated in part, "Since you did not base your resignation on any policy disagreement, I will not hesitate in the months ahead to seek your good counsel", would the minister indicate if, in fact, that good counsel has been sought and received since Mr. Turner left this House?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no knowledge of what communications may have transpired between the Prime Minister and the former minister of finance, in either direction. However, I do not know what relevance there is at the present time in asking questions about correspondence between a member of the government and a former minister who is now a private citizen. I do not see where that comes under the administration of the Government of Canada.

ECONOMIC ANALYSIS BY FORMER MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. I guess the government cannot afford the price of these private epistles from Mr. Turner.

In the latest one, dated December 1, Mr. Turner notes that there has been a decline in the traditional strength and independence of the Department of Finance and increasingly poor economic performance by the government, and he notes that the Economic Council of Canada has contributed nothing to improve either of these worsening situations. Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with this analysis? If he does, does he intend to subscribe to these rather interesting memoranda?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, from what I have listened to, which is purported to be the content of a memorandum, I certainly do not subscribe to those views. If they are sold to clients, maybe they would find them more useful than I would.

Mr. MacKay: I am sorry to hear that, because Mr. Turner is apparently actively engaged in undermining the government with this ginger group in which he plays an advisory role. Since Mr. Turner appears to be running well ahead of the Prime Minister in polls in certain areas of the country, probably the Deputy Prime Minister will agree there is more of a basis for a problem with party unity than national unity with this government, and the purpose of Bill C-14 and the closure motion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOOD AND BEVERAGE COMPANIES RESTRAIN PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence to the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, the Prime Minister indicated in the House that the cost of living is going up faster than wages in this country. Today, the Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity reconfirmed the fact that profits in the food and beverage sector have gone up by 65 per cent in the last 18 months. They said:

> If there is any remaining doubt about the extent of the profit recovery—all other data show that the return on equity in the food and beverage industry in the first quarter of this year was the highest of any quarter in the last 15 years.

My question to the Minister of Finance is this: yesterday the Prime Minister called upon workers and unions to continue practising restraint in order to stop the possibility of controls. Will the minister call the heads of the food and beverage companies into his office and insist that they now restrain their prices, and in many cases roll them back, because of the tremendous profits made in the last year?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the proposal by the Prime Minister yesterday applied to both labour and management. Everyone must show restraint in order to ensure that the competitive position of Canada is maintained and that we can take advantage of the fact that the Canadian dollar is more competitive. It is important that management shows restraint, like everyone else.

Mr. Nystrom: With respect, Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer the question. I asked whether he or the Prime Minister would call the heads of the food and beverage companies into their offices and insist that they show some restraint, particularly in view of the fact that the Financial Post reported just a week ago that the George Weston company had a profit increase of 421 per cent this year over last. Will the minister call these companies into his office and insist that they show some restraint?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in the month of June I asked the AIB to look into the food industry. I do not know what the difference is between this report and the report we received from the AIB some months ago showing there were not excessive profits. We now have a report showing there are excessive profits. I will look into this. I hope that, for the benefit of Canada, every sector of the economy will show restraint in order to maintain the competitive position of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the fact that it appears the Minister of Finance will not be doing that, may I ask him a specific question? The price of bread will go up by seven cents a loaf on January 1, and probably by 12 cents a loaf within a few months. The Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity said it is vital, if we are going to overcome inflation in this country, that cost increases are not automatically passed on to the consumer.

In view of the fact that the actual cost of the wheat in a loaf of bread is only 3½ cents, will he call in the food company heads and insist that the price of bread should go up, not by seven or 12 cents but only by the increase in the cost of wheat?

Mr. Chrétien: In the Canadian economy we have to rely on the marketplace—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, those are the very members who were complaining because we had controls in Canada. A year ago I said controls were to be abolished. I am glad to see that the hon. member is advocating a return to controls, and I hope he will inform his labour friends accordingly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR CANADA

REASON FOR REDUCTION OF SERVICE IN CERTAIN REGIONS

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since Air Canada is about to cut back on its flights to outlying areas, for example it will cancel its non-stop Rouyn-Montréal flight on Thursday, Friday and Sunday evenings, and since it is going to do the same thing in just about all the outlying areas of the country, as of January 7, can the minister tell the House whether he has had discussions with Air Canada concerning these service cutbacks. If so, how does he explain the fact that despite the proposed 8 per cent increase at the end of December the company can still cut back on its services, especially since there are no more newspapers distributed on the planes and meals are nothing more than pre-packaged sandwiches? How does he explain that on top of that the company wants to cut back on its flights?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): This subject was raised in the House some time ago and was based on an Air Canada information statement which indicated that a shortage of pilots was going to require a cutback in service beginning early in January and continuing for several months. These cutbacks are to be spread across the country.

As a result of acquiring new aircraft, Air Canada has a lot of pilot training to do, because very often pilots from one type of aircraft are involved in training for the new aircraft. Many more pilots are involved in the training than those required to fly the new aircraft. But I will certainly bring the hon. member's concern to the attention of Air Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, indeed the minister is right when he says that Air Canada justifies its decision to cut down the number of flights, come January, by saying it has a shortage of pilots. Since 1973 pilots from various sectors, both the military and civil aviation, have been applying for jobs but Air Canada has always turned them down. At times Air Canada says applications should be made more often but, unfortunately, when people do so then they are told they should not apply too often. Can the minister explain the attitude of Air Canada toward the pilots who apply for jobs in its service?

[English]

Mr. Lang: I think I did explain the situation. Air Canada had enough pilots and was recruiting pilots according to its needs. With the acquisition of new and different types of aircraft, the need for a whole new training program arose. Whether Air Canada predicted it accurately or not, I have not investigated. But the specific problem the hon. member refers to its related to the flights which are being cut off in the early part of January, and I understand that a pilot problem is the cause.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the minister says, the ultimate reason is not a question of training new pilots but the fact that the collective agreement limits the number of landings the pilots can make on each flight, five at the most, and despite the agreement the company has not managed to increase the number of its pilots in order to respect it. Today, is the minister willing to take what steps are indicated with Air Canada so that it has more pilots and can respect the collective agreement it has signed with them?

● (1427)

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that would not solve the immediate problem because the difficulty is in the whole training process. So I have no particular advice to give the hon. member and I do not think I have any to offer Air Canada, either.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REFINANCING AND MODERNIZATION OF SYDNEY, N.S., STEEL PLANT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but in his absence, if I may, I would like to direct it to my colleague from Cape Breton, the Deputy Prime Minister. It is with regard to the proposed contract between Sysco and the Tree Island Steel corporation of British Columbia.

In light of the answer given by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion last week in which he indicated that an interim decision should be possible, is the Deputy Prime Minister now in a position to specify what form of interim agreement the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is seeking and whether we can expect an announcement before the House adjourns? Today is December 20.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe I can tell my hon. friend with some assurance that it will not be possible to make an announcement with respect to the Sydney Steel plant before the adjournment which we expect to take place at the end of the week.

That is not to imply that the question raised by the hon. member is not important and is not being considered by the government, because it is. Indeed, yesterday a number of ministers considered in some detail the problems facing the steel industry in Nova Scotia, and particularly the proposals we have received from Premier Buchanan with respect to possible federal assistance. We have maintained contact with the provincial government on this matter and will continue to do so.

INDUSTRY

LOAN TO TREE ISLAND STEEL CO., B.C.—CONTRACT WITH SYDNEY, N.S., STEEL PLANT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Deputy Prime Minister for his very encouraging reply. My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, a former seatmate of mine who is well aware of the economic problems and the unemployment situation on Cape Breton Island.

My question relates to the recently announced loan by the Enterprise Development Board of $40 million to $50 million to the Tree Island Steel company of British Columbia. Would the minister be kind enough to tell the House if the loan is conditional on Tree Island's meeting its long-term contract with Sysco regardless of whether financial arrangements for the modernization of the Sysco plant have been finalized by December 31?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to say it is conditional, but it is hoped that the loan will be used to renovate and enlarge the facilities at Sysco in conjunction with possible assistance from my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

AIR TRANSPORT

PURCHASE OF NORDAIR—RATIONALIZING OF REGIONAL AIR CARRIERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell the House what progress he has made in reprivatizing Nordair, and how is he coming along in fulfilling his commitment to rationalize regional air carriers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, those two questions are receiving my continuing attention. I have no further statement to make in that regard at this time, and I think I should refrain from trying to describe the state of any discussions or negotiations until they are close to being completed.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister can confirm or at least take as notice a recent statement by one of his predecessors, former transport minister Lionel Chevrier, now the president of Quebecair, the gist of the statement being that Quebecair is confident of purchasing Nordair to accomplish the merger of these regional airlines.

It has also been suggested that Air Canada might be permitted to take over Nordair's Baffin Island, Arctic routes. Can the minister advise whether things have progressed as far as Mr. Chevrier suggests?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will change my earlier answer. I want to refrain from commenting on speculation or rumour. In the nature of things, a good deal of commercial sensitivity exists in relation to all these matters and I think it would be unwise for me to comment in an incomplete way.

POLICY RESPECTING REGIONAL AIR CARRIERS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Transport can indicate to the House whether a new statement of government policy with respect to regional air carriers will be brought down before an announcement with respect to Nordair or before such rationalization of regional carriers takes place.

● (1432)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is distinctly possible that there will be some further elaboration on the policy which was contained in the statement at the time of the announcement of the Nordair decision. There are a number of other issues involving regional carriers which are moving before the Canadian Transport Commission. I believe it may be helpful to the commission if I elaborate somewhat on the statements contained in that announcement.

AGRICULTURE

COMPENSATION FOR CATTLE INFECTED WITH BRUCELLOSIS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Does the minister feel the recently announced increase in the compensation level for brucellosis is adequate to attain farmer co-operation, or would he consider bringing in legislation to tie that to a percentage replacement value for those cattle?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think it is adequate and the history shows it is adequate, because the brucellosis rate in Canada is now the lowest it has ever been in the history of cattle production in Canada. There are only three or four people who are really making complaints about it. It is the fairest system of any cattle producing country in the world.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, since the Holstein Association, the Ayrshire Association and the Canadian Cattle Commission have indicated that this compensation is too low, will the minister instruct his department to consult with these people and perhaps take another look at it?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we could consult with them more, but I know there was consultation with them. I do know that these people know that no Holstein breeder, no Ayrshire breeder nor any other cattle breeder in the world is treated as fairly as the ones in Canada.

CUSTOMS

RELOCATION OF OTTAWA TRAINING SCHOOL

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, two days ago I addressed a question to the Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State for Small Business concerning the move of the customs training school. Has he now consulted his colleagues, various memos, and so forth? Can he tell us precisely what will happen to that proposal?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have ascertained that the school which is being prepared at Rigaud ultimately will be occupied, and that the school which is being used now on Walkley road will be discontinued. I understand this has been a plan of some long-standing. As soon as the arrangements are made, we expect that it will be quite satisfactory.

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, has the minister consulted closely with the President of the Treasury Board regarding this question? At this time, in a period of so-called restraint by the government, can he justify additional expenditures of close to $10 million in the foreseeable future caused by the occupation of these new facilities in 1979?

Mr. Abbott: No, Mr. Speaker, and I would dispute the sum mentioned by the hon. member.

URBAN AFFAIRS

DEFAULT RATE IN AHOP

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Given the fact that from all reports the minister disagrees with our estimate that the default rate in AHOP is approaching 10 per cent, up from 8.1 per cent last March, is he now in a position to provide the House with accurate facts and figures to refute our estimates, or will he give us some more of his slipshod facts and figures?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much that the figures quoted by the hon. member are correct. I cannot understand why she says of our figures, which are official, that she cannot accept them and that they are—I did not understand too well the adjective she used in English to qualify them—but I in turn apply the same objective to her figures.

[English]

Mrs. Pigott: Mr. Speaker, the trouble with this minister—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a supplementary question?

Mrs. Pigott: As of March this year, 53,000 units under AHOP, or approximately $3 billion worth of real estate, were vacant and unsold.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mrs. Pigott: Will the minister tell us what is the matter with his department that it has not addressed this problem? One of the worst things in management is that when one does not take action—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halton.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

COMMUNICATIONS

INVITATIONS TO LAUNCHING OF ANIK B

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Communications and refers to a question raised by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley on December 14. The question implied that the minister took a group of over 100 people to Florida at government expense to attend the successful lauching of the Anik B satellite last Friday.

Would the minister say whether the figure as to the number of people attending is correct? If not, will the minister indicate what the true involvement was in the lauch by the minister and the Department of Communications?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give the exact number of people who attended the launching of the satellite in Florida because those invitations were not handled by me but by the president of Telesat. The local papers in Cocoa Beach indicated that approximately 100 people attended the launching, and I would say that is about accurate.

These people came on their own and paid their own expenses. They included broadcasters and cable operators in great numbers—which I felt was an interesting development—potential customers and actual customers for the satellite, five provincial ministers, four of whom were Tories, and myself, of course.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mrs. Sauvé: They thought it was an important event. Four officials of my department attended—

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUESTED SPECIAL ECONOMIC PROGRAM FOR NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. The consumer price index statistics released yesterday continue to indicate that the province of Newfoundland has the worst economic situation in the country. The city of St. John's showed the highest increase of all surveyed cities, with an astounding rate of inflation of 9.6 per cent over the past 12 months.

In view of the fact that the province has the highest inflation rate in the country, and that this becomes completely unacceptable when coupled with an intolerable level of unemployment, realistically, in the province, of approximately 25 per cent, will the minister accept the view that this is evidence enough to motivate him and the government to consider a special economic package for the province of Newfoundland as I have asked the minister repeatedly?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said previously in reply to a question by the hon. member, most of the programs of the federal government are geared in order to help areas where there is slow growth, and in the last budget we made special provisions in the tax area in order to assist the developing areas of Canada to have a better break. I think it has been the concern of the government that the programs of Manpower, all the programs of Regional Economic Expansion, and so on, are directed toward helping solve the problems of slow growth areas.

EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND OF PROVISIONS OF BILL C-14

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, obviously the minister is not hearing the question. I asked, in view of the latest statistics which show that the economic policies of the minister are not working in Newfoundland, would he consider this package?

My supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of these latest figures, will the minister and the government reconsider their proposals regarding Bill C-14 and exempt Newfoundland from its application, as it will only contribute to an already intolerable situation?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the new member is accentuating some of the things which he sees as negative and is not pointing out that the Stephenville linerboard factory benefits to the extent of $13.5 million. It will create permanent jobs, and that is what we want.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

CLOSING OF CERTAIN AIRPORT TOWERS FROM MIDNIGHT TO 6 A.M.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport: it arises out of his announced intention to close down between midnight and 6 a.m. the tower services at most of the principal airports in Canada.

In light of the increasing usage of those services between midnight and 6 a.m. by domestic mainline carriers for air cargo purposes, and the increasing demand respecting Nighthawk flights, in the interests of safety will the minister review his decision so that these airports do not become potential Cranbrooks?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the closing of towers during certain hours was in the form of a proposal for discussion put before the various participants in the air industry. It was designed to save significant amounts of money if it developed that those services were not required for real reasons of safety or other aspects of operation.

I have been reviewing very closely the evidence and the comments of all the participants in the discussion and very soon an announcement will be made on the final outcome. I have no doubt that some of the closings which we had indicated will take place, but others are being considered carefully in the light of possible need.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, do I understand from the minister's response that consideration is being given to extending beyond eight the number of airports that will be closed down?

There are approximately 35 to 40 departures during those night hours from Edmonton; there are virtually no departures from Calgary. Has this situation been taken into consideration? What happens when we select an NFA and have to move it to Gander so it can fly over the water for military mission purposes?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, essentially the airports selected for examination were selected after people who were knowledgeable about air travel and air safety were convinced that the service was not, in fact, required and that all the necessary airline activities and air operations could take place perfectly well with the facilities which would still be there and available, even without the on-duty control service. That exact question is one which came under some argument among the various participants in the airline industry and when I make my final decision on which points will have service and which will not, those comments will be taken into account.

DAIRYING

PAYMENT FORMULA FOR INDUSTRIAL MILK

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. The milk payment formula for industrial milk has a triggering mechanism to allow for an increase in payment, and in October allowed for a 52-cent increase. Would the minister tell the House why that payment has not been made so far, and when it will be made?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked several times by several members in the House of Commons. Taking into consideration the season which is about to come upon us, and in the true Christmas spirit, I would say very, very soon.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I understand that although the discretion lies with the Dairy Commission, some provinces felt that it should be made sooner, other provinces felt that it should be made later. Will the payment be coming, as the minister has indicated it will, in the festive season, or close to it, in one lump sum or will it be split in two parts—one part now and one part later?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to wait. I do not know if he will have to wait until Christmas morning, but he will have to wait a few hours or days longer.

SHIPPING

PILOTAGE RATES FOR SMALL VESSELS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. In connection with the present inflation rate, the Prime Minister said yesterday, "in times like these, Canadians should exercise a measure of restraint".

I assume that the minister is aware of the fact that the Atlantic Pilotage Authority, a federal Crown corporation, has just received permission from the Canadian Transport Commission to increase pilotage rates for small vessels by 62 per cent, for medium vessels by 30 per cent and for larger vessels by 18 per cent.

An hon. Member: Put the question.

Mr. Crosbie: I am coming to the question. Will the minister exercise restraint on this body and instruct them not to put these gigantic increases into effect which will drive away shipping in the Atlantic provinces, and will he assure the House that the government will provide whatever revenue is necessary, as they have been doing? This will be the fourth increase since this body was set up in 1972. What action has the minister proposed to stop this extraordinary increase?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet seen the CTC decision and my first course of action would be to look at it.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, this was reported in the press about three days ago. The minister is taking his time in looking at these decisions.

The minister said last June, in response to a question, that he was not satisfied with the present pilotage structure and that he was thinking of a new act. There have been other suggestions—that the number of ports subject to compulsory pilotage fees be reduced and that smaller foreign vessels entering Atlantic ports be allowed to do so without using pilots. If this is not done, it will have the effect of driving away foreign fishing vessels from St. John's and other ports.

Will the minister assure the House that he will consider these provisions and that he does not intend just to allow this increase to go into effect without taking some measures to alleviate the expense, particularly in view of the Prime Minister's statement?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will be very interested in analysing the CTC judgment to see whether the costs facing the Pilotage Authority were the basis for the increase in charges. The whole question of pilotage and the appropriate relationship between the minister, this House and the Pilotage Authority is something which I have been reviewing, and I do believe there is need for change. I will be looking forward to the opportunity of bringing in legislation on the subject in the future.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

VIVISECTION OF ANIMALS FOR EXPERIMENTAL PURPOSES

Mr. Marke Raines (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology, if I could have his attention. In October, 1978, the United Nations passed a universal declaration on the rights of animals. Article 14 of this document stipulates that "animals must not be used for scientific experiments which cause them suffering".

In view of that fact, will this government, and especially the Minister of State for Science and Technology, take the lead in this country and not grant money to researchers who do use live animals in their laboratories.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the particular report to which the hon. member refers. Obviously, live animals are an important technique in research, and I am certainly in no position to give any undertaking that we will make no grants to institutes which use live animals.

Mr. Paproski: Use Liberals.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SEXUAL OFFENCES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. In the last session, the government introduced two bills, C-51 and C-52. Bill C-51 was reintroduced as Bill C-21 in this session and deals with obscenity, pornography and many other items.

I would like to ask the minister, not only in his capacity as Minister of Justice but in his capacity with regard to the status of women, whether he intends to reintroduce Bill C-52 which, in effect, repealed the definition of rape and defined it as indecent assault or aggravated indecent assault. Is the minister bringing this bill back before the House, or has he changed the policy with reference to this matter which was introduced by the former minister of justice, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, since the tabling of this bill between the last session and now I have received a number of representations from women's organizations and other groups as to possible improvements in that particular bill. In addition, we have received the report from the Law Reform Commission covering all sexual offences.

I have asked my department to review that particular report and assess its various recommendations. My inclination is to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code which would cover all sexual offences, and not just the offence of rape as it does at the present time.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the minister is studying the report of the Law Reform Commission which, as I understand it, recommends that we legalize or decriminalize—whatever way you want to put it—the offences of incest and bestiality, does he intend to write this into his new bill and follow the recommendations in that regard?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I said that I had asked my officials to assess all the recommendations. At first reading, I can tell the hon. member now, I would not at the present time support an amendment of the Code regarding incest.

AIR TRANSPORT

CIVIL AVIATION INSPECTORS WITHOUT CONTRACT

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact that he has information which is circulating dealing with pilot shortages in Canada, coupled with the fact that civil aviation inspectors in Canada are now paid less than even traffic controllers, military pilots and their equivalents in other countries, will the Minister of Transport explain to us why this important group of professionals has been without a contract since 1975?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been difficulties and disputes involving the collective bargaining process: that is the reason nothing more satisfactory has been arrived at. I share the hon. member's view that this is a very important group.

Mr. Huntington: My supplementary question is directed to the same minister. History tells us this goverment will move decisively when there is a crisis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: In light of the fact that 75 per cent of the major air regulation infractions committed in Canada in 1978 have not been processed, will the minister tell us what he is waiting for, vaporization of the civil aviation inspectors, the air operations group, withdrawal of their service, or another major air crash?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLICY ON SUPERTANKERS PLYING CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Environment. In light of the announcement by the U.S. environmental protection agency that approval will be given for the building of a supertanker port at Eastport, Maine, would the minister state whether he raised with his U.S. counterparts the issue of supertankers being allowed to travel to Eastport in Canadian waters along the New Brunswick coast, where difficult navigational hazards pose the risk of oil spills? Is the Canadian government still opposed to having supertankers travel in Canadian waters to reach Eastport?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian goverment is still opposed to this project. We will wait until this particular project goes through the regulatory process of the U.S. government before we make any moves. This is a matter with which perhaps my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is more in tune with after talking with his colleagues in the United States, but we in Environment Canada remain definitely opposed to it and will continue to oppose it.

PUBLIC WORKS

GOVERNMENT REACTION TO HIGGINS REPORT

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works: it concerns the Higgins report which, according to the information which my office has obtained, has not yet been made public.

The author of the report, Professor Higgins, in a presentation to the committee of the other place recently quoted some parts of it, that is, that he would recommend to the Department of Public Works that they should forget all about British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario and channel all their spending to Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. I should like to ask the minister if we can consider that to be the policy of his department in the future.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the study made by the professor, but I can assure the hon. member that that is not government policy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It follows on the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Greenwood, in reply to which the minister said that the NRX research reactor in Taiwan has been under IAEA inspection ever since the ending of diplomatic relations between Canada and Taiwan.

Since it is my understanding that the United States took over international inspection following the break-off of diplomatic recognition between this country and Taiwan when Taiwan was no longer recognized by the UN, and since the agreement with the IAEA is no longer in force, would the minister say whether or not the Canadian government has made a new arrangement for the inspection of the nuclear research reactor in Taiwan to ensure that there is no opportunity for a recurrence of a situation such as developed in India with a similar research reactor?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member will appreciate that, once again, as with all these complex questions, it is difficult to cover all the elements in an oral answer.

Yes, we have made some inquiries since the announcement of the weekend with regard to the change of status of the U.S.-Taiwan relationship and there has, indeed, been a report that the Taiwan assistant foreign minister has, in these last days, recalled that Taiwan is a party to the Non-Proliferation Treaty and has therefore pledged not to manufacture nuclear weapons. Another piece of information is that Taiwan ratified the NPT on January 27, 1970, and this reinforces the answer which I gave yesterday.

Obviously, the situation is changing to some degree and we do not have a definitive answer at the moment as to how, for example, IAEA safeguards will be supervised under the new arrangements, but as soon as I have that information I will be glad to pass it on to the House. I might conclude by saying that I think I understood the hon. member to say that it was not under IAEA safeguards. The information I have is that the IAEA safeguards are in place and are subject to IAEA inspections.

Miss MacDonald: I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, when referring to the IAEA safeguards, he is telling the House that the IAEA agreement between that body and Taiwan is still in force. Is he giving the House that kind of information, because that is the important assurance that would have to be sought and our information is to the contrary?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, the hon. member's information might be more up to date than mine, and that is why I do not want to give an off-the-cuff answer until I am perfectly clear. As I understand it, to try to be as forthcoming as possible, the IAEA safeguards are in effect and the government of Taiwan, even since the weekend, has indicated that it is prepared to accept them.

I repeat that that is not a formal declaration on paper or anything I can show the House. If the hon. member does have it—and I say it in all sincerity—I would be glad to hear from what source she has that information, if it is as new as she suggests.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

COMMUNITY SERVICES PROGRAM—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for CMHC. In view of his recent announcement of the community services program which will provide some $400 million for vital municipal infrastructure programs such as sewer, water and community facilities, how soon will he actually be signing an agreement with the province of Ontario, and will there be an allocation of these funds to municipalities so they will be able to get on with the planning of these important municipal structures for 1979?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had preliminary discussions with the government of Ontario earlier this week. I met the minister responsible for housing and municipal affairs of Ontario. We are supposed to meet again in the early days of the new year and I hope the province of Ontario will benefit from the community services program in 1979.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON FISHING BOUNDARIES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerns the report yesterday that negotiations on boundaries and fishing zones broke off as of last Friday. The report says that these negotiations will continue in the new year.

The minister indicated to me earlier in the House that if these issues were not resolved this year, they would be taken to the ministerial level and there would be direct negotiations between the minister and his U.S. counterpart on the unresolved questions. My question is: what arrangements has the minister made for direct negotiations with his counterpart in the United States to resolve what appears to be an unresolved negotiation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the operative words here are "what appears to be". I do not know where the report came from: it certainly did not come from me and I assume it did not come from the U.S. Secretary of State. Therefore, unless it did come from one or the other of those sources, it is not formal or final that the negotiations have broken off.

However, even on the hypothesis that they have broken off, that is not inconsistent with what I said earlier. By the end of the year we will have received a report from the negotiators as to the state of the negotiations at that point. Following that, Mr. Vance and myself will discuss the second part of the hon. member's question, namely, how the negotiations will proceed from there.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PETERS—INDIVIDUAL'S GRIEVANCE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have a rather unique notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I am rather anxious to hear how he can relate this to anything to do with the procedures of the House.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I sent you notice under Section 17(2) of the standing orders of a question of privilege which, I believe, affects all members of this House. On several occasions I have raised a problem that confronts me as a member of parliament, and all other members, and have asked the House to do something about it. The problem is that one of our citizens is spending considerable time in front of the parliament buildings asking for relief from this institution.

I asked for advice, Mr. Speaker. I am given to understand that we have a privilege that goes back quite a way. It predates the Knowles parliamentary procedures and goes back to Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, nineteenth edition.

This affects all members of the House. On several occasions we have made the request that this matter be handled in the House. The nineteenth edition of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, chapter IX, page 120, under the heading "Power of Both Houses to Secure Attendance of Persons on Matters of Privilege", has the following to say:

> The House of Commons has the power to send for persons whose conduct has been brought before the House on a matter of privilege by an order for their attendance, without specifying in the order the object or the causes whereon their attendance is required (e); and in obedience to the order members attend in their places, and other persons at the Bar.

This came about a long time ago. It is indicated that the origin of a power which is judicial in nature is to be found, naturally, in the medieval conception of parliament as primarily a court of justice—the high court of parliament. We have often heard it said in this House that this is the high court of the country, that this is the last court, the court of last resort. It must, therefore, be a court of last resort for persons who wish to air a grievance or bring before parliament and the country something that they feel very strongly about when they are not in a position to petition in the normal sense.

As I am sure most other members of this House feel, I am a member of that court of last resort—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member is attempting to develop the thesis in some way that he ought to help someone redress their grievance by bringing them before the Bar of the House to air that grievance, I am sure he will understand that while he may have some substantive way to bring that about, it does not affect the privileges of the members of the House of Commons.

I have to be reasonable, and I have given the hon. member a few minutes to develop that question of privilege as we know it in the House in its classic definition. I think he will have to agree with me that while he has a very imaginative approach to try to help someone with their problem, I do not think there is any way he can fit it within the bounds of privilege as we know it.

I wish the hon. member the best of luck in trying to bring this forward under what other procedural grounds he may pursue.

MR. NYSTROM—ANSWER GIVEN BY MINISTER OF FINANCE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises from an answer given to me today by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) during question period. I am sure he did not mean to mislead the House intentionally but he said that this party was advocating the reintroduction of controls. In that he is misleading the House, although I am sure not intentionally so.

I want to point out that yesterday in the House I put the following question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as reported at page 2254 of Hansard:

In light of some speculation that wage controls might be brought in, and in light of the Prime Minister's words on this at the first ministers' conference, can he assure us we will not see any wage controls in 1979, so that the Canadian worker will at least have a chance to catch up to the cost of living?

A supplementary question I put repeated basically the same thing at page 2255 when I asked the Prime Minister, in part:

—can the Prime Minister assure us there will be no implementation of wage controls until workers at least catch up to the increased cost of living?

My question today arose from a study that was just produced by CSIP, a government agency, that complained that profits were too high. I wanted the Minister of Finance to assure us that there would be some equity and that companies would be asked to restrain their prices. In no way did we suggest the government should bring back wage and price controls.

DRUGS

MEASURE RESPECTING USE OF MARIJUANA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-449, to amend the Food and Drugs Act, the Narcotic Control Act and the Criminal Code.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to reintroduce essentially the same legislation that the government introduced several years ago dealing with the drug marijuana.

In effect, the bill would remove the drug marijuana from the Narcotic Control Act and place it under the Food and Drugs Act. It would also change the penalties very substantially, particularly in terms of importation of the drug which at the present time carries a minimum sentence of seven years for any person carrying the drug marijuana, in whatever quantity, across the Canadian border. This would simply civilize marijuana legislation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ABORTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-450, to amend the Criminal Code (abortion).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is quite simply to remove the subject of abortion from the Criminal Code and leave it as a matter to be closely regulated by the individual's conscience and by the medical profession. In a pluralistic society such as Canada it is inevitable—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: No.

Mr. Speaker: Carried.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Shall I record it as carried on division?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Carried.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-451, to amend the Public Service Employment Act (oaths and confidential information).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is that, in view of the increased demand for more open government in Canada, it would facilitate the flow of confidential and non-confidential information both within the public service and between the public service and the general public. Existing legislation places a specific responsibility on public servants at all levels to withhold any and all information that is marked "confidential". This bill makes a distinction between confidential and non-confidential information and job capacities, and implicitly requires the government to define more clearly the word "confidential" which is used liberally throughout the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order which arises from the introduction for first reading of a bill which dealt with an amendment to the Criminal Code on abortion, I was not clear on your ruling as to whether the bill was received on division for first reading or whether it was received unanimously on first reading.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion has been carried.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1978

DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Allotment of Time for Bill C-14

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED LIMITATION ON REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-14

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, one sitting day shall be allotted to the further consideration of the report stage of the said bill and one sitting day shall be allotted to the third reading stage of the said Bill; and

That, not later than fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business in each such sitting, any proceeding before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the report stage or third reading stage, as the case may be, of the said bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) yesterday gave the Chair notice of his intention to raise, by point of order, the question of whether such a motion is able to deal with both the report stage and third reading of this bill in the way it has. I indicated to him I would examine the language of the Standing Order and the precedents. It is a practice which has been followed in respect of the same or similar language in Standing Order 75A as he knows, but not in respect of Standing Order 75B.

The language of Standing Order 75C does make specific reference to the inclusion of report stage and third reading, and it describes it specifically that way. I would, therefore, have some difficulty in interpreting that language in such a way as to prevent it from being done, particularly in view of the fact that a two-hour debate is provided during which the government may be freely criticized, as I am sure it will, for the use of the Standing Order. That is a separate question, as to whether it can be criticized or not, from the procedural right of the government to put the motion in this way. However, I am now prepared to hear the hon. member on his point of order.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I raised the matter yesterday you suggested it would be better if I were to do so today rather than yesterday, as I was prepared to do.

I realize that one rule which some persons follow in debate is never to admit there is any difficulty with your argument, but to insist that your case is watertight, ironclad, and all that. I am quite prepared to admit at the start that the wording in 75C does present some difficulty in respect of the point of order that I present for your consideration. However, I suggest there are times when what the House is about to do is so repugnant to the practices, precedents and traditions of this place that it should stop and take a look at it to see whether it is in order.

I said yesterday that if this motion were to cover two stages in a closure motion under 75C it would be the first time in the nine or ten years we have had this rule that it has been done. I have done some checking in the meantime. I have not read every page of Hansard and every page of the Journals back to 1867, but I have done enough checking that I am in a position to say to Your Honour that if you do find you have to put this motion you will be the first Speaker in history to put before the House of Commons a motion for closure on a stage of debate that has not yet been reached.

We have had lots of motions for closure over the years. We have had House orders by agreements that were achieved before a debate started, but we have never had, by the use of the government's majority, a motion to set time limits on a debate before the debate at that stage had even been reached.

I point out that prior to 1913 there was no closure rule in the Standing Orders of the House Commons, but that in in 1913 we got such a rule. It was brought in by the Conservative government at that time, with the Liberals strongly opposing it. But, sir, even that rule which was brought in in 1913, about which I could say a good deal, had in it a provision that it was not to be used until there had been some debate on the stage in question.

That rule was badly abused by the Right Hon. C. D. Howe in 1956. There were times when some debate consisted only of a sentence or two. At any rate that is the tradition, the principle, and the spirit of closure in the Parliament of Canada. You do not use the government's majority to apply closure until there has been some debate. You do not anticipate the application of closure a day or two ahead, as this motion does in respect of the third reading of this bill.

As I say, we have a rule that limits debate to eight days on the throne speech before it starts, but that rule was agreed to, and we have a rule in respect of the budget debate being only six days after it starts. I have not been able to find any case where, by the use of the government's majority, a motion was passed before a debate started on a particular stage, prior to the one that is before us at this time. I feel this should be looked at very carefully before we proceed with it.

You may say to me, Mr. Speaker, that is good rhetoric, good philosophy, and so on, but then ask what we are going to do about the wording of the Standing Order. The wording that does present a problem, and I put that right on top of the table, is the phrase:

—an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages on a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 75(13).

Standing Order 75(13) is the order that says that third reading cannot be called on the same day on which the report stage was under debate. Therefore, it might be argued that in a sense there is consistency, although it seems to me there is a vagueness in Standing Order 75(13) that is not really covered by this provision.

May I point out that there are some things that are distinctive about Standing Order 75C as opposed to 75A and 75B, which tell us that about which we ought to be concerned. Neither 75A nor 75B requires any notice. They are motions that can be made by a minister without notice, because in the one case there is unanimous consent among parties, or in the other case there is majority consent. Standing Order 75B has never been used. I do not know whether we have used 75A as such, but we have conformed to the spirit of 75A a number of times.

It is quite clear that when there is unanimous agreement or majority agreement you can do certain things that you cannot do when you are acting unilaterally under 75C. Standing Order 75C is distinct from the others in that it requires notice to have been given and, of course, that notice was given yesterday.

You will also note, sir, that there is nowhere in 75A or 75B any reference to proceedings that had already started. There is no requirement under 75A or 75B that the motion be put after the debate is under way. In other words, what the minister is trying to do in respect of the third reading stage could be done under 75A or 75B, but those are motions in respect of which there is either total agreement or majority agreement.

On the other hand, 75C makes a special point of the fact that an order under it is in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration. In other words, if you are going to act under 75C, you are back to the traditions of a century of this parliament, namely, that you do not impose closure on something unless there has been some debate. That is there. I know there is the exception when we get down to it. However, there is also to be noted in all of this that it says there shall be only the one stage of a motion.

We then come to this exception. I have to admit that the words are clear. However, I submit that this rule has never been tested and that it in itself is inconsistent. On the one hand, it says there can be only one stage. It says there cannot be a motion respecting a stage on which there has yet been no debate. Then it turns around and says you can do the very things that the first part of the motion says cannot be done.

I went back to look at the origin of 75A, 75B and 75C. I have a pretty good memory of it, but I did not trust my memory. I had the feeling there was a report from the committee which brought in the rules in 1960 and that that report had some philosophizing in it that might be of help to me.

When I looked, I realized the case was that the rule changes that were debated in December, 1968, were brought before the House after reference to a committee. It was not today's standing committee but a special committee. The whole subject was referred to that special committee. It brought in a report with some philosophy and rationale in it.

The report had some nice things in it to the effect that although the government has to have certain powers to control the business of the House, there has to be co-operation. That was the philosophy behind what was rule 16A in the report that we debated in December, 1968. Rule 16A was withdrawn. That was part of the price for getting that report through.

Mr. MacEachen: We did not bring in closure then.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Closure came in July, 1969. The minister is aware of what I am talking about, I trust. In June, 1969, when 75A, B and C were brought in, they were not brought in as a result of a reference to a committee, or committee study of any kind. They appeared on the order paper as a government notice of motion under the name of Mr. McIlraith who was government House leader at that time.

Standing Orders 75A, B and C did not come out of a committee initially. They were not referred to a committee. The whole question of their integrity, their holding together, is really at stake. The reason I think it is fair to ask Your Honour to look at this today is because this is the first time this provision has been tested.

I suppose it was an oversight or a mistake, but in the requirement for a 75B, there must be agreement among the majority of the House representatives. It does not say a majority including the government House leader. We have had two or three occasions when we on the opposition side of the House have said that the three of us were prepared to agree to something but the government House leader was not prepared to do so. The result was, of course, that the government would not use 75B and then could not use 75C. I cite that merely to point out there is that technical error in 75B which is part of the package we dealt with in June and July, 1969.

I submit that the provision in 75C that says you shall apply closure only to a matter that has been under consideration and you shall not apply closure to two stages at a time is contradicted by the later phrase. That contradiction makes the whole order invalid on that point.

I repeat what I said at the beginning. This is the first time it has been tested or tried. Never before has there been an attempt to move two stages under 75C. Although we have had the rule since July, 1969, although we have had closure around this place since 1913 and problems since 1867, surely it is a serious matter if today we have a motion allowed and put to this House which permits the government, by the use of its majority, to decide before there has been any debate whatsoever that closure is to be applied.

As I say, my late friend C. D. Howe abused this very badly in 1956. The rule required that closure could not be used unless there had been debate. I remember very well when we got into committee and Mr. Howe stood up on the clauses of the bill. Clause 1 was called, he read out the marginal note and asked us to move on to clause 2. He read the marginal note on clause 2 and asked us to move on to clause 3. He did that right through the bill. Then the government argued there had been debate at the committee stage of that pipeline bill and therefore it was able to apply the closure rule. I argued that that was a ghastly abuse. However, it at least demonstrated that the principle, philosophy, and whole idea behind the practice of closure are that in our parliament you only do it after there has been a debate.

I emphasize that rule 75C did not have any committee consideration. It was a very contentious debate. The Liberals, much to their annoyance, were kept here all the month of July and finally had it put through under closure. Instead of the use of this being allowed today, which established a very serious precedent, and there is no telling what will go on from here on in, the government should be allowed to put only the one stage, and the question of the inconsistency and invalidity of Standing Order 75C ought to be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

That, Mr. Speaker, is my case. I know from the way you spoke yesterday, and the way you spoke just now, you think that the words are such that there is no argument. I have great respect for words and what they say. However, 75C is in such a mess that I believe it is improper and out of order for the government to use it in this way. It has never been done before.

We have never had a motion put from the Chair for closure on a debate that has not yet started. For that to happen today would be a retrograde step. I hope Your Honour will ask the minister to amend the motion to let it apply only to the report stage, and deal with the other later.

I am not at this point arguing about the use of closure, the length of time allotted and all of that. We can deal with that in the other debate. However, in terms of 111 years of history in this place, what is being proposed today is not only repugnant but is essentially out of order.

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated to the hon. member before, I examined carefully the language of the Standing Order. I would have more sympathy for his argument if he were addressing himself to an application of this order in respect to two stages of a bill if they were not specifically mentioned. The language of the rule is specific. It does not simply say in a sentence that more than one stage may be covered by this kind of order. It states in very specific terms, that I simply cannot get around, and I quote:

—provided that for the purposes of this Standing Order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages of a bill—

That language is so clear and so specific that I have to believe that the drafters of that Standing Order, and of course the hon. member and I were both members of that committee—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, no. That was brought in by the government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is correct. But he and I were both members of the committee which examined the Standing Order. The committee did not necessarily put the Standing Order before the House, but we were both members of that committee. I was not attempting to associate him with the draftsmanship of the paragraph. I did not mean to do that. However, the origin of the Standing Order is not at the moment material to the argument. The fact is that that language is in the Standing Order. I again refer to the language:

—provided that for the purposes of this Standing Order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and third reading stages on a bill if that motion is consistant with the provisions of Standing Order 75(13).

Standing Order 75(13) protects the right of the House to insist that report stage and third reading not be taken on the same day. This motion is not repugnant to that clause and therefore I have to say that the motion is clearly within the terms of the Standing Order.

I wish to add just one other note. The hon. member spent a great deal of time on the subject of closure which, as he well knows, is covered by Standing Order 33 and which is, in fact, a motion to terminate debate at a stage on which the House must have launched itself. The fundamental difference between that Standing Order, which has been on the books much longer than this Order, is that this order is for time allocation which, in its fundamental terms, is a different exercise. Closure, of course, is an exercise terminating a debate which has already begun.

Time allocation has the fundamental difference of attempting to prescribe time for debate in advance, and obviously, in its very nature, has as part of it the ability of the House to program its time in advance, and in Standing Order 75A this is done by agreement. In Standing Order 75B it is done after a majority of the House leaders have agreed. In Standing Order 75C it can be done in a different way if these agreements have broken down. Now, whether the hon. member agrees with that or not, he can address himself to that subject in a few moments when the debate begins. But the language of the Standing Order has as its intention the advance programming of time, which is fundamentally different from closure as dealt with in Standing Order 33, and I certainly have to take this into account in examining whether the order is doing what it is intended to do.

The second thing is that the clear language of the order leaves me with no other choice but to rule that as the order stands at the present time, which is all I can deal with, the motion is perfectly in order. Therefore, the question is now—

An hon. Member: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is on the motion (Mr. Cullen).

Mr. Rodriguez: On a point of order Mr. Speaker, in the light of the draconian nature of the measure which is being introduced, I move that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will realize that he has to have the floor in order to move such a motion. The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I find it somewhat incongruous that while the opposition parties regard the filibuster as a legitimate parliamentary tactic, there is a tendency to heap scorn on the fact that there is a party with a majority in parliament which, having been unable to negotiate time allocation with the other parties after trying to do so, then sees fit to try to use a rule of parliament—Standing Order 75C—to bring about time allocation for the passage of a bill or for different stages of that bill.

[Mr. Speaker.]

In committee the New Democratic Party predicted that the government would bring in time allocation. The New Democratic Party indicated they fully expected this would be done. But just to be sure, and knowing the practicality of the situation, knowing that it was our intention to adjourn the House to enable us to be home for Christmas and to see our constituents during the month of January, just to assure that the government would bring in time allocation under 75C, the New Democratic Party brought forward a whole series of amendments which it knew full well could not be dealt with in the ordinary course of debate. Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party did everything they could to guarantee that the government would be forced to use 75C in the interest of getting this bill passed.

Last night the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) spoke somewhat longingly of his hope that his party would form the government after the next election. Mr. Speaker, that is not going to happen because I am satisfied the people of Canada will not give a mandate to any party which suggests it will negotiate sovereignty association.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Nevertheless, in the very improbable case that this might happen, I wonder if members of the official opposition are prepared to get up in their places today and say that should they form the government they would remove Standing Order 75C from the rules of the House. I suspect they will not agree to do that.

I had, frankly, hoped for a full and open debate on the ideas to be presented by the parties opposite. To the credit of the official opposition they recognized the limited time which was available to us prior to the recess. The government had indicated that this was a priority bill and that we were going to seek to have it passed before the recess. Given that position they got together, despite all the amendments they might have liked to have moved, and came forward with two or three amendments. There would have been time to debate those amendments, and I believe we could have had a good debate.

I think we could have benefited from some of the ideas I heard in committee and which I feel should have been brought forward either at the report or third reading stage. But the New Democratic Party made this impossible, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to hear some of the views expressed. I did hear some of them expressed by the New Democratic Party at the committee stage—hour after hour after hour of the same argument on different amendments. The argument was the same, running through some 35 meetings of that committee. There were 11 meetings a week, and over and over again we heard the same shallow and not very convincing arguments.

In an earlier session of this parliament it was my privilege to pilot through two pieces of legislation—Bill C-24 and Bill C-27. We had good debate on those bills and made many changes. Some of them were suggested by the New Democratic Party, some by the official opposition, and some by our own members. Some of them were suggested by the government in cases where we wished to make some correction or smooth out some of the rough edges of the bills. But we had a good debate because people took their responsibilities seriously and recognized we were trying to make improvements. That is the kind of debate which makes parliament great. But bringing in 25 or 27 amendments at the last minute is really not a sincere attempt at holding honest debate on a tough piece of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I looked for something at the report stage which might be new. Or I looked for some evidence that the New Democratic Party might have said, "Well, we're not going to change this bill. The government has decided it will put the bill through so we are going to concentrate on a couple of areas to make our point." But they haven't done that. These are exactly the same amendments as were argued at the committee stage. They have already been debated, and members of the official opposition will confirm what I say, as will my own hon. friends. We have had long debate on every one of the amendments put forward by the New Democratic Party—nothing at all is new in these amendments. Those amendments were voted down, sometimes by government members, and sometimes by opposition members joining with government members. Surely there could have been a focus.

I think members of the New Democratic Party have done the people of Canada a disservice by taking this stubborn, stupid attitude and by bringing in so many amendments. They knew we could not have a good debate in the House at report stage or at third reading stage.

I make no apologies whatsoever for using Standing Order 75C. That is a rule which parliament has adopted. It is meant to be used when arrangements or agreements cannot be made with opposition parties. I recognize that there is a filibuster. I saw it at the committee stage, and I have seen it here in the House. That is a parliamentary tactic. I do not like it, but it is a tactic all three opposition parties use very effectively. However, if that is a legitimate tactic when nothing is written about it in the rules, surely it is legitimate to use Standing Order 75C when a party in power has a majority and says it wants to put a bill forward. The rules make provision for that.

Mr. Symes: Where are your Atlantic Canada members?

Mr. Cullen: I hear rumbles. "Where are your Atlantic Canada members?" I made my announcement in September. Atlantic members of my party were quick off the mark to say that the way we intended to bring in the repeater section and the new entrant and re-entrant sections was too tough and that it would have an undue impact in the areas of the country for which they were responsible. They came to me with reasonable arguments, and changes were made. We moved back on the repeater section. We brought in the 11.5 per cent rule so that it does not apply in areas of high unemployment.

Atlantic members of this party, to their credit, worked diligently, despite the fact that the House was in recess. They did not wait until we came back here. They were quick to get to me, even though the House was not in session, and they were successful in having changes made. I am still hearing representations from my colleagues, and I am having second thoughts in certain areas. I am doing what I can to accommodate members who make legitimate representations. However, members of the New Democratic Party have filled up the order with amendment after amendment, all of which have been debated. I think members of the New Democratic Party have done their own party, and certainly the people of Canada, a disservice.

If members of the New Democratic Party wanted to get into a legitimate debate, we would have been prepared to debate the strengths or weaknesses of this legislation, but they have taken away that opportunity by using the senseless approach of proposing so many amendments to the bill. Standing Order 75C was meant to be used in situations like this, and I make no apology.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I certainly can advise the House that we are going to oppose this closure motion. There is a place for closure. We all know that. But I want to quote from Beauchesne, page 140 in the fourth edition.

The ending of protracted debate, not its abolishment, was the main reason why closure was established.

Where is the protracted debate in this House on this piece of legislation? On November 9 we debated for three hours and 50 minutes on the second reading, and on November 10—both days the total was three hours and 50 minutes on second reading. That is all, Mr. Speaker. Then we came back to this House on December 18—

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was at the insistence of the official opposition that we moved to have a voice vote in the House on that particular occasion. The official opposition was quite satisfied to have that limited debate. The official opposition put time allocation on second reading.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the minister's ramblings. He was half right in his remarks when he spoke with reference to the NDP, and now he is completely wrong. There were three hours and 50 minutes on the 9th and 10th. And on December 18 and 19, this week, we had six hours and 46 minutes altogether on the report stage; ten hours and 36 minutes to date on this legislation affecting one million unemployed and all of the people of Canada who are subsidizing unemployment insurance to the tune of $2 billion a year. We take off 30 minutes for procedural arguments on December 18, and we have had ten hours of debate in this House so far, and we have had speeches so far in the debate, 28 speakers, seven Liberals, nine PC, eight NDP, and four Social Credit or independent speakers, out of 265. This has not been a protracted debate.

This bill went to a committee which did a marvellous job. It had 30 sittings, met 30 times, and there we put forward serious amendments to be considered, which were voted down. In that committee the government attempted closure. They brought in a closure motion, and their own members voted against it in the committee. This government has gone berserk with fear. They bring in closure in the committee, not only in the House but in the committee.

Since I came to the House in the second session we have had closure on several other occasions, but nothing like this. On the income tax, C-11, last year at least we debated for ten days on second reading, four days at the committee stage. The income tax bill in connection with the sales tax, before closure was brought in, was 22 days in the committee stage. The income tax bill the previous year was 4½ days in the committee stage, nine days on third reading in this House. We have had four days, and the government is putting the clamps on. Why? Because of its ineptness, because it did not organize its business to bring this in earlier, because it does not know what it is doing, because it does not care about the rights of parliament, because it does not care about the rights of the unemployed. Just total ineptness, and we are not going to vote for closure even though Christmas is coming and the sleigh bells are ringing. We are not going to go along with this closure motion.

Mr. Speaker, the minister was right on the members to my left, the NDP. They have helped destroy this debate with 24 amendments they have moved, most of them stupid amendments, remove this clause, remove that clause, remove all the clauses. This is only for the purpose of holding up the House. It was not for serious debate. It was for cheap political gain that they think they are going to make. That is why the NDP moved 24 motions. We are still discussing their first motion, so don't set themselves up in this House as the apostles of purity. They are going to get up and argue that "You cannot have 75C, you cannot do this and that because we purists in the NDP say it is all anti-democratic". It is anti-democratic how they have abused this House in the last few days with the 24 amendments that they have moved, knowing that they would never be debated, knowing that the government would bring in closure, knowing that Christmas was coming. It is the biggest example of insincerity since somebody invented Santa Claus.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nystrom: Withdraw that.

Mr. Crosbie: In fact, these are the Santa Claus members. In committee we brought forward—and by the way, the members of the NDP are suffering from a disease which has been described as Pope's Law. I will give you what Pope's Law is: All looks yellow to the jaundiced eye. They have a jaundiced eye on this unemployment insurance, and therefore they cannot look at the thing without their colouring being yellow.

I have a quotation for the government. "A free society is one where it is safe to be unpopular," said Adlai Stevenson, and the government is darned lucky this is a free society because they are certainly unpopular, and they are going to go in 1979.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) did splendid work in the committee, and they moved several serious amendments, one so that the people who would bear some onus for having their unemployment insurance receipts cut would be those who quit their employment without any justification. That has been ruled out for consideration in this House. The second was that we adopt a two-tier system so that we not punish everybody on unemployment insurance by reducing everyone from 66⅔ per cent of their pay when they were working to 60 per cent as the government proposes, or that we cripple re-entrants into the force so that they can no longer be eligible for unemployment insurance, or new entrants into the labour force in places like Newfoundland so that they will never get unemployment insurance.

No, we say that is unfair and arbitrary, and therefore we suggested that, to save more money than the government is going to save, we have a two-tier system, accepted by most of the provinces, where people with dependants would receive the same amount of unemployment insurance in the future, but those with no dependants would be cut back to 50 per cent because of the need to cut back on this huge $2 billion deficit. We are responsible. Even if we come from areas of high unemployment, we are responsible enough to know that this government is leading us to doom if the $12 billion deficits in the budget continue, and the huge deficits in unemployment insurance continue. But the government would not consider that in committee. The government is not going to give us a chance to debate now through its closure, and if the government does not accept that amendment, we are voting against the government on third reading and these arbitrary and cruel amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

This government is in the stage now that we had in 79 A.D., two thousand years ago. That was the last days of Pompeii when Mount Vesuvius exploded and Pompeii was done away with. We are waiting for the eruption now, and the eruption is going to come when they get their courage up and call the election in 1979.

The government is acting somewhat like Marie Antoinette, but does not give them either cake or bread. Nobody here now can afford bread because of the offence of the "true dough", and Trudeau is going to go so that the unemployed of this country can afford to have some cake, not the ruinous policies that this government has bumbled along with until now. Where is the originator of the unemployment insurance change in 1971? As I said last night, flying across Canada sucking his thumb. He is not down like the unemployed, sucking their thumbs and wondering where they will have to go next to look for work. Now the minister has to take the odium for bringing in these changes and cutbacks. The public never likes cutbacks. He has to come here today with the "poor people" remarks he has made.

We will not accept closure. We believe that this has been a poor performance by the government, and an exceptionally poor perfomance by the NDP. Those people have such lofty virtues. The only ones who have the decency to perceive how unfortunate some people are and to do something about it, the only people with any goodness in the House are members of the NDP, they like to think. I can tell them that their lack of principles makes them the newly debauched party. That is what they are, the NDP.

I suggest that we proceed to our motion which is the only serious amendment before the House. Our motion is No. 14 moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. And I suggest that we debate the two-tier system. Perhaps the government will tell us that they will put it into effect. We recognize the need for restraint and we recognize the need for some changes, but we think the government's changes are not the right ones. We have our own expert here, he is an expert actuary who came to the House only a few weeks ago and he has added a lot to it. We are standing with him. We are voting against closure. If the minister does not get some sense and accept the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, we will vote against third reading of the bill. We are not afraid of the scattered remnants of the NDP because they will not be here after the next election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The people of Canada will force the floorflushers right down the drain when the next election comes. I am proud to be one to vote against this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of Christmas I should like to extend my sympathy and sense of understanding to the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He seems to be suffering from a severe case of paranoia. I have seldom seen anyone in the House so worried about the New Democratic Party. It has been my view for a long time that Newfoundland is a natural place for us to gain strength, and we had some evidence of that this fall in the election of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour). But every time my friend, the hon. member for St. John's West, speaks and makes these attacks on us, I feel we must be gaining more strength down in Newfoundland than even we had dared to hope. In any case, when anyone is suffering such a severe case of paranoia, he deserves our sympathy and understanding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Every time we have a debate on a motion under Standing Order 75C, which is closure no matter what other name you might try to put on it, we have the argument from the other side that it is there in the books and it is there to be used.

I have to make the point again that although the rules of 1968 were dealt with by a committee, and although in that committee we did consider rule 16A which was dropped, 75A, 75B and 75C were never before the committee; they were an invention of the Liberal government. As for closure, in whatever form you put it, I should like to quote the words of a person who, I think everyone in the House will agree, was one of the outstanding members of the Liberal Party of Canada throughout its history.

An hon. Member: Jack Horner.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I refer to none other than Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In 1913, when the Conservatives of that day were putting through the closure rule that has been a black mark on our books all these years, he fought it bitterly, and if I were not limited to ten minutes I should have liked to give a number of quotations of the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier given to the House in that day. He must have been a tremendous orator with a tremendous capacity for the use of words. Let me give just one quotation, and I am sure that members can hear that great orator on that occasion. It was in 1913 when he was attacking the closure rule which has been brought in, and this is what he said:

> Heaven is my witness that I would rather stand here today defeated and in opposition by that appeal to the people than stand over there in office by the power of the gag.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Sir, that is what we have today, liberals who believe that with the government's majority they can use the power of the gag. We are completely opposed to what is being done in this instance with respect to Bill C-14.

All of this talk that we have had from the other side and from my paranoiac friend, the hon. member for St. John's West, about our having put forward quite a number of report stage amendments seems to miss the point, and I suspect it is deliberate. There are two or three things in this bill which to us are essentially wrong. They spread through the whole bill and that is why we have to make so many amendments. I say to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) today that this motion would not have been necessary and a debate this long would not have been necessary if he had met us on three important points. Those points are, first, the unjustified reduction in the benefits payable under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

This is a day when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has managed to increase family allowances and old age pensions, pensions of various people will be escalated in January, the pay and allowances of members of parliament and cabinet ministers will go up in January, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says that the government is not prepared to subsidize the price of bread or other such things, but it wants to help those who are having a difficult time because they do not have enough income. Yet they bring in a measure to reduce the benefits under employment insurance by 10 per cent. That is wrong. We make no apology for trying in any way we can to defeat it because of that reason, but if the minister had the decency and had the sense of liberalism that the government House leader used to have, he would stand up today and say "We will meet you on that point, we will be prepared to negotiate a quick end to this debate."

There are two other points, in addition to the one I have just mentioned, the reduction by 10 per cent in the amount of the benefit. The second one is the inclusion in this legislation of measures that are of particular disadvantage to young people and to women. The reference, of course, is to new entrants and re-entrants, and so on. The reference is also to the minimum number of hours a week that have to be worked to qualify for unemployment insurance, but the people hit hardest by this are women, the same people who were hit by the cutback in the Outreach program, the same members of our community who are still on the short end of the stick. If the government would meet us on that point, we would be prepared to negotiate some end to this debate.

The third point has to do with the disadvantaged areas in Canada. The minister can stand up and try to tell us that the Atlantic Liberal members are satisfied with what has been done in Atlantic Canada so far as this legislation is concerned. That is not the way I hear it, either on the floor of the House or from members who talk to us behind the curtains.

Mr. Speaker, I make to you the point today on behalf of my party that if these three areas could be met, this bill could be brought to a vote fairly soon. We might still not like the bill as a whole, but the reason the debate has been dragged out in committee and the reason we have put down so many report stage amendments is that we regard these three points as crucial and they make this bill one that is thoroughly bad.

It is sometimes made out that the whole purpose of this bill is to do something about the abusers and cheaters of unemployment insurance. It does not do very much about them, but supposedly that is what it is all about. That is what my friend, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) thinks, and for that reason he is prepared to support the bill, although he does not like some of the other phases of it. According to some members of the House we are supposed to be supporting those abusers and cheaters. That is not so, Mr. Speaker. We are prepared to support measures to do away with the abuse and cheating of this program. But the three provisions I have identified are bad, unliberal, indecent and un-Canadian, and we are against them.

We think that for the government to use its majority power, to use the power of the gag—because that is what rule 75C is—to bring to an end a debate like this, is something completely out of touch with the spirit of Christmas. Mr. Speaker, we are opposed to this motion with everything we have.

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, when the government introduces a bill in the House but does not want to hear the opposition's opinion about it and wishes to impose its dictature or to impose a particular bill to the people of the country, we can see that the government is prepared to accuse the opposition of filibustering and taking every means to uphold democracy. However, the government, which does not want to respect the democratic process of parliament, uses that argument to accuse the opposition of complicating that democratic process.

Indeed, all three opposition parties have proposed amendments to Bill C-14, a bill which obviously represents a direct accusation against the unemployed, because the bill accuses them of being swindlers, bandits or crooks, and the opposition does not accept such an attitude from the government. That is why each of the opposition parties moved motions proposing amendments which are likely to represent worthwhile solutions to the problem of unemployment in Canada.

When the minister blames the unemployed and the opposition tries to put the minister back on the right track, namely showing respect for the people, the minister replies: No, the opposition is filibustering. As an hon. member pointed out, after barely ten hours of debate on a subject as important as unemployment, the manpower available in Canada, unavailable jobs, the lack of jobs, the government says: No, we are committed to have the law passed by January 1. The government is not overly concerned about the essence of the law or respect for individuals. No. For them what counts is the date of January 1, the date for the implementation of a law clubbing employers. To show the extent to which the government is acting in a dictatorial and undemocratic way, I will say that already in regional unemployment insurance centres, even before the act is passed, even before opposition parties introduced amendments, already directives are being sent to regional offices, computer systems are being set and programmed so as to reflect this legislation which has not yet been voted in the House of Commons. But when opposition members rise to make changes, because the government does not want in a democratic way to recognize that changes can be made, the government introduces this motion 75C to end the debate. The minister says: We did not get agreement between the parties. Our House leaders did not agree on a time limit for the debate. The minister adds: Furthermore, we did not get a majority to decide if we should limit the debate.

We in the opposition cannot accept a time limit on the debate when the government does not want to debate anything, when it sticks, like a good old horse with its blinkers, to its basic idea in spite of and against all, charging, as I suggested at the beginning of my remarks, that the unemployed are cheaters and people who refuse to work, and saying just as plainly that the bill is intended to get 250,000 workers off unemployment insurance. But they do not wonder where those workers will go from there. The government is not indicating in any way that they will create 250,000 jobs. No. But on the other hand, once again, I say that in a dictatorial way they are ready to put the gag to opposition members to prevent them from revealing to the whole population what the government is going to do to Canadian workers.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot as a group and I cannot as a member accept the imposition of a bludgeon measure such as the use of Standing Order 75C in a debate which is thwarted from the start by the government in power.

[English]

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, a number of issues have been raised already in the short debate which has taken place. A number of things should be answered or at least brought to the attention of some hon. members in the House who seem to have a slender grasp of some of the rules of this particular place.

I do not claim to be as expert as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but a casual reading of the rules and a casual listening to the rules would suffice. Perhaps the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is so bombastic that he has hurt his ears. Perhaps he did not understand what Mr. Speaker said because the hon. member says so much and listens so little. Perhaps he did not hear Mr. Speaker, who went to great pains attempting to dispose of the issue as to whether the motion was proper in terms of both report stage and third reading. Mr. Speaker went to great pains to point out that there were rules of closure, Standing Order 33, and rules respecting time allocations in advance of debate, the 75 series. Yet notwithstanding that, the first member of the official opposition rose and referred to what he considered to be a terrible thing, closure. I have never seen such a disgusting example of people who want to have their cake and eat it at the same time.

The official opposition could have exercised Standing Order 75B. They could have indicated that they were prepared to see this matter disposed of, that they did not want to see two hours of the time of the House wasted debating whether there should be time allocation. They could have agreed that this matter was too important to waste time on procedure. They could have indicated that they wanted to discuss the issue and their two motions. Did they do that? No.

Instead they said, "Let the government be forced into the position of using Standing Order 75C so that we can claim gag and closure", knowing full well that it was not. They wanted both to have their cake and to eat it as well. It is disgusting, and it is time someone stood up and said so. That is what I am saying now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Daudlin: The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) referred to the lack of opportunity for debate. There were 35 committee meetings dealing with Bill C-14 and an additional ten meetings dealing with supplementary estimates, the majority of which time was spent considering Bill C-14. I do not know on how many occasions in the last nine months members of the official opposition have risen to suggest amendments to the rules to make committees more meaningful and more important, and that committee debates should be recognized, heard, understood, and felt within the House. Then they have the gall to rise and suggest that a total of 45 meetings is no discussion at all, and that there has been no opportunity to discuss.

● (1612)

It is my understanding, and the minutes of the hearings will bear me out, that the Social Credit party was not represented at any of those meetings at all and in fact made their first submissions with respect to this bill in the House yesterday. Now they have the gall to suggest that they have not had the time to speak on the bill or to put forward their objections to the legislation.

I have spent some time examining this bill. Hon. members should have spent more time discussing it with their constituents, as I have.

Mr. Rodriguez: You have just seen the bill for the first time.

Mr. Daudlin: The hon. member suggests that I have just seen the bill for the first time. I have read the bill probably as frequently as the hon member, who is making all the noise over there. Rather than trying to prevent the bill from being passed, I took it back to my riding and discussed it with the people there who have for the last number of years been suggesting that the government must take action, bite the bullet, and realize that there are imperfections in the act.

These people told me something which I heard and heard well, that this was one of the most important items in their eyes. In fact I have been behind the minister saying, "Get it changed now, and if I have to stay until Christmas I will do it because it is that important to my riding". It is not just the people whom members opposite describe as cheaters and misusers who have spoken to me, it is farmers who recognize that if we tighten up too much it may make it more difficult to acquire farm labour. It is the workers themselves with whom I met this weekend. For example, I met with hospital employees who have suffered substantially in Ontario because of cutbacks which have taken place in the hospitals at the provincial level. These people were concerned about what was happening with this bill. I went through it with them and they said that they could not understand why the government was so fearful of it because they felt that they could live with the bill.

I suggest that what has happened is that these representatives of labour who have supposedly been speaking to members opposite have forgotten to speak to the labourers themselves, because the labourers seem to be able to understand.

We have heard a lot of debate in the House over the last four years on how we should control debate in the House, not in terms of imposing hours but in terms of sitting down and rationally deciding how the debate should take place. We have heard that "reasonable men should be able to sit down and determine how many hours should be necessary to discuss any particular bill." As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has indicated, in 1969 when this particular section of the rule was brought in, it was in an attempt to verbalize that kind of debate, to provide us with a tool that would allow hon. members somehow to determine in advance the time that should be spent on any particular issue. I get a little bit upset with those who now say that because we have not used the tool since 1969 maybe we should not use it at all; in other words, this House should not have the perception to be able to determine what is a reasonable length of time for debate on an issue.

I compliment the minister for having imposed closure. I think it was absolutely essential, given the number of amendments introduced by the NDP and the time already spent on the bill in committee. To fail to do so by Christmas would have meant expenditures by the government of $50 million to $100 million in the new year that it can ill afford to have at this particular time.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the comments of the hon. member who just preceded me. I found it interesting that he would get involved in this debate and that he would quote from committee hearings when those of us who sat through many of those hearings did not see the hon. gentleman.

As the opposition critic to the minister on immigration matters, I have discussed certain issues with him, and I find that in most cases he has attempted to be fair. But today when he tried to defend the motion with regard to the portion on which he would get a mandate, it was a total red herring, and he has shown more brilliance in other situations. I suggest to him that the electorate will decide who will get the mandate.

There are two things which have happened with regard to the bill. Part of this bill was, in fact, gazetted before this House had opportunity to debate it. On October 20 the cabinet discussed clause 2 of Bill C-14 and at that time the cabinet made a decision to use the Unemployment Insurance Act, by order in council, to pass clause 2. On November 2 this House gave first reading to Bill C-14. On November 8 the government passed or gazetted in the Canada Gazette clause 2 of Bill C-14. Up until that time this House had not debated any portion of that bill. On November 9 and 10—members will recall that the tenth was a Friday—this bill was debated and passed out of this House to committee.

It is preposterous to think that this government, or any government, would present a bill to the House for debate when part of it had already been enacted into law by the Canada Gazette, but this government did it. We then had an interminable number of committee meetings in which there was an exercise by the NDP, and I guess they can use whatever tactics they wish, the repeat of a performance which I had seen in discussions on Bills C-24 and C-27 previously. Basically their argument is that they want to spend more money on unemployment insurance.

My party does not want to spend more on unemployment insurance; we want to spend more on employment and the creation of jobs.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, there is a record currently on the market which many young children are buying called "Disco Duck", and I suggest that the hon. member purchase it himself.

Part of this bill was already gazetted. We sat through 35 meetings with the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who tried everything, including an attempt to rotate members speaking within the committee, to use more time. It is fine for hon. members to speak, but what he was trying to do was to get his point across at the expense and the right of other members to speak in the committee.

In committee it is the object to present proposals which are better than those under discussion. Many of the minister's officials agreed that our proposals were better than his. The minister said that he wanted to go to committee in order to look at proposals. However, did he accept any? He did not accept ours but kept on saying that his proposal was better. This party proposed responsible amendments to improve the bill but the minister just wanted to get the bill through committee, through report stage, and into third reading. He was not interested in the final analysis for change. On other bills relating to unemployment insurance and immigration, a number of amendments were introduced which the minister considered seriously and ultimately those amendments or modifications of them were approved. That did not happen with the bill before us, however.

I want to return to the question of gazetting, Mr. Speaker. On the morning of one committee meeting we received a telephone call from a gentleman in Toronto who wanted to know if the bill was already in effect. It was not, of course, because we were still debating it in committee. This gentleman began to read some very interesting and strange words to us which he said appeared in the Canada Gazette. It was only after the minister was caught with his hand in the cookie jar that he admitted that clause 2 of the bill had already been gazetted. This must go on the record, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cullen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have respect for the hon. member and I know he would not wish to mislead the House. At no time, however, did I ever indicate that we had gazetted clause 2 of the bill. I indicated that we have moved a regulation under a bill that was presently in existence.

Mr. Epp: I appreciate the minister's intervention. He knows, and I know, however, that the gazetting had the same effect as the provisions in clause 2. He also knows that because of the action the government took on October 20, and afterwards, they did not need clause 2 in Bill C-14. He was asking parliament to pass something that had already been enacted. That is the kind of thing that was going on.

There were some very specific amendments that we wanted to bring forward, but actions of this kind put in doubt the sincerity of the government and of its members on the committee.

It is true there are a large number of amendments as report stage which the NDP have brought in and that this prevents the official opposition from bringing forward its amendments because we will not have time to debate them. I appreciate the latitude that you extended to me and other members on this side last night, Mr. Speaker, when you did not restrict us to discussing motion No. 1. We were able to discuss almost all the motions on the order paper. The fact is, however, that the NDP did not bring in positive amendments.

There are two reasons why the official opposition is deeply disturbed about action by the government. First is the fact that the government gazetted part of the bill. It was not necessary. It was a violation of parliamentary procedure and an insult to every member of this House. For 35 committee meetings we discussed something that was already law. What a shame that is!

The other reason is that a proposal was presented in good faith, but the minister wanted to get his bill through without a serious examination of it. That proposal would have met the objectives of the minister. It would have brought in restraint but would also have preserved the income of those groups in society receiving unemployment insurance benefits who are not abusing the system. The minister cannot deny that. Now, when his back is against the wall, a motion for closure is introduced in order to stifle debate. We cannot debate the amendments that we wanted.

This is a very sad day for this House and this parliament, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I should like to contribute a few words to the debate this afternoon. One of the underlying principles of this bill is to provide additional funding to the government for constructive job creation and training programs. This bill and other government funding would provide some $710 million for this purpose in the coming fiscal year, part of which would derive from the savings realized by the operation of the unemployment insurance program.

The opposition has explored this bill in great detail in committee. There were some 35 committee meetings, and all the amendments presented for consideration at report stage were dealt with in considerable detail at those meetings.

The opposition obviously has responsibility to oppose a bill and to make positive and constructive amendments to it, but there must come a time when members from all sides can vote. We can either have continued blockage or obstruction of a bill, or else it comes to a vote.

A motion under Standing Order 75C allows the government to set a time limit on debate, and provides that report stage and third reading can be dealt with in the same motion. In this case two sitting days have been proposed to deal with report stage and third reading. That would bring us up to two days before Christmas when I think many members will be getting away for the recess and all members will want to get back to their constituencies.

As I recall, when changes were made to the rules in 1969, the idea was that the policy of a bill would be explored on second reading, it would be sent to committee for clause by clause study, then be dealt with at report stage and proceed for expeditious third reading. In the case before the House it is clear that the opposition, or at least the NDP, did not want to bring the bill to a vote but rather wanted to prolong discussion indefinitely. This bill would provide additional funding for direct employment programs and direct skill training programs and, surely, that is what most people in this country want. I receive many letters and communications, as I am sure other members do, asking why we spend so much money on welfare and unemployment insurance benefits and why we do not put people to work, and provide more training that would equip them for jobs.

This bill would make expanded job creation and training programs available to the government, Mr. Speaker. The program outlined by the minister at a cost of some $710 million for 1979-80 would do what many people want. It would provide 113,000 job-years of employment and activities, through such things as part-time jobs for students or on the job training in which 368,000 people could participate. This is a 70 per cent increase in work-years over previous figures.

I am especially interested in the fact that a lot of the emphasis is on youth employment, because often young persons coming out of high schools or post-secondary institutions cannot get jobs as they do not have experience on the job. They have not held jobs and have no letters of reference from previous employers. This program has a strong emphasis on youth with some $225 million for youth employment, some of which will come from savings through the UIC bill.

As a matter of fact, the job experience training program will be expanded from some 20,000 jobs to 63,000 jobs. This is for young people just coming directly out of school, and some $40 million will come from UIC benefits, creating a positive force for job training and job experience for young people, rather than being used as a direct pay-out from which we do not in the long term get any advantage for young people, such as experience on the job and becoming accustomed to being in the labour force. That does not occur when they are just drawing UIC benefits.

I was also impressed by this job-creation program and the local economic development assistance program. We have in certain areas of the country local economic development corporations designed to seek out economic opportunities to create new businesses, but up until now there have been no equity funds available for this purpose. Often the banks are too tight-fisted, so there is no equity in the hands of the local entrepreneur who has a good idea and cannot put it together.

We have an economic development corporation in my constituency, and this program for local economic development assistance will provide some $10 million during the next fiscal year for the creation of about 1,000 permanent jobs.

It seems to me that by implementing these programs designed to assist, stimulate, and provide an incentive to the private sector, we are looking at a much more positive way of utilizing the unemployment insurance funds that would be used in direct pay-outs if these positive and constructive programs were not available.

I am pleased to see that the minister is expanding by some 70 per cent these direct job creation and training programs. That is the real positive aspect of the move by the department to provide assistance to the private sector in order to fund direct employment programs.

In my constituency $1.5 million will be spent this year on direct job programs, providing jobs that will ultimately, at least some, move into the private realm. We have one project on an Indian reserve for the development of a new operation, a dolomite mine, an open-pit quarry that will create permanent jobs. This is being carried out through a Canada Works program.

It seems to me the question we have to ask ourselves is, do we want to continue pouring billions of dollars into UIC benefits, or do we want to use those funds to create employment for the native people and other unemployed? I think that is the direction in which the minister wants to move, and I would support him in that objective.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, of course this gives us an opportunity to comment on the proposal of the minister to apply what we usually call a muzzle on the debate concerning this legislation which will cause serious deceptions throughout the country. As I was listening to the previous speaker, I was wondering how anyone can try to justify the proposal made by the minister under the terms of Standing Order 75C. Others have underlined the speed with which we went through the second reading stage. We believed that by passing the bill quickly on second reading, it would be possible to amend this legislation, which is completely unacceptable in my opinion, as thousands of Canadians now realize. Since not enough amendments were made at the committee stage, the same legislation has now come back to us even though we have seen the reaction of thousands of Canadians to this measure during the committee stage. Even before we can begin third reading of the bill, the government has decided that we would take too long, and it now wants to restrict the debate to a few hours even though it concerns a bill which contains many weaknesses and inequities.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that these types of discussions are useless when we study legislation which is acceptable to Canadians as a whole. Indeed the opposition has quite often co-operated with the government on legislation which could meet the needs of Canadians, but it is also clear that this legislation is quite unacceptable in the present situation. I come from a province which will experience great difficulties because of this bill. Indeed this was pointed out by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) who noted that he would oppose the bill if it were not amended. I hope that my colleagues from Quebec will not let the minister push through this legislation as fast as he can. I hope that they will respond to the interests of Quebeckers. Other members will be able to speak on behalf of their constituents. There is only one thing I can say, and that is that I pity those members who will not oppose first of all this motion of closure because it muzzles the House and shows a callous attitude on the part of the government. In view of the objections that have been made and the consequences of this legislation, we know that more than 200,000 Canadians will be cut off from their unemployment insurance benefits.

This is the Christmas gift the government will offer them on Christmas Eve, Mr. Speaker, and I must say that it takes a heartless government to do this. I think that this government—I hear the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) who will probably not take this opportunity to inform the minister that in his riding, as in many others in Quebec, that kind of legislation is going to cause problems. We heard about the $700 million to be used for job creation, Mr. Speaker, but how would you explain that the minister did not understand the situation earlier? How is it that this government has failed to give more priority to job creation in the last ten years? How would you explain, for instance, that the minister did not implement those job-creation programs? Why is it necessary to make those savings at the expense of the unemployed? Twelve months ago the government launched a $700 million job-creation program and the minister told us in committee that he was sure to achieve the objective of those job-creation programs. If it is true that the government will succeed in giving employment to 368,000 people through job-creation programs, if it is true, Mr. Speaker, that the government will achieve its objectives, then this legislation is not needed since 33 per cent of the unemployed will find work and at the same time the government will save 33 per cent of the money paid to unemployment insurance recipients. Why did the minister come up with this kind of legislation?

Earlier I heard a government member tell us that the public prefers that these funds be used for job creation rather than for unemployment insurance benefits. Of course people prefer to work. We do know, Mr. Speaker, that they wish to find a steady job but because of a lack of appropriate measures and foresight on the part of the government, we now have 1.5 million unemployed and to reward them the government proposes this draconian, tough, inconceivable and callous legislation. This is why, Mr. Speaker, we object to this muzzling, to this motion of closure and I think that no member who takes really at heart the interest of his constituents or his responsibilities as member of parliament has the right to support such a measure which prevents members of this House from speaking on behalf of the people.

By introducing this motion for closure today the government is exceeding its powers in a shameless manner, Mr. Speaker, and this type of abuse on its part is not new and I hope that Canadians will remember it. In less than two years, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues from Quebec will have to crawl and support such an outrageous measure. I would say that in less than one year, Mr. Speaker, this is the second time that I have witnessed such outright betrayal. Indeed last summer it happened regarding the sales tax and in this case we are being confronted by a situation where inhuman conditions will be inflicted upon thousands of Canadians. It will become a growing concern among Canadians.

The only solution the government has to offer is cutbacks in much needed welfare. The evidence is that the provinces have not been sufficiently consulted. It has also been demonstrated before the committee that the provinces will have to pay very dearly for this decision on the part of the federal government. This leads us to believe that the federal government is showing a desire to put the provinces in a straightjacket position in order to compel them to come to the negotiation table afterwards and kneel down before its authority.

Here is a kind of attitude which even exceeds the arrogance that we had become accustomed to. Earlier the minister even accused the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) of talking about negotiating with the other provinces and not only with the province of Quebec. I would like to remind the minister that a member of the Pepin-Robarts Commission, Mrs. Solange Chaput-Rolland, recently made public a letter warning the Prime Minister that he was the one who told Canadians that negotiations are not synonymous with unconditional surrender. And I suggest that the letter which Mrs. Chaput-Rolland has made public is not only a warning for the Prime Minister, but also a piece of necessary information for all hon. members on the government side.

Should I beg—and I do so—my Quebec colleagues and all hon. members on the government side to seriously consider, in the spirit of the season, the possibility of asking the minister to withdraw this bill? And we oppose this bill because we have introduced amendments to this bill. My colleagues have suggested very good ideas aimed also at saving money. The government, which has turned down all the proposals the opposition has made, is now asking us to agree to one which is unacceptable. I think that I am fulfilling my responsibilities as a Quebecker and as a member of this House when I beg hon. members to demonstrate courage and to refuse to support slavishly such diabolical legislation. That is the message I wanted to convey before Christmas. Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Maiden speech.

Mr. Campbell: Not exactly. I am forced to participate in this debate after listening to the comments and buffoonery of the last member who spoke. After assisting at many of the committee meetings on Bill C-14, it is unbelievable that a member who represents a Quebec constituency would get up in this House and present the kind of speech he has just presented and have any respect for those he represents and, in fact, for all Canadians. He made some totally false statements.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Campbell: There was very little participation at the committee hearings by the hon. member. The Unemployment Insurance Act was amended several years ago, apparently because of its harshness. The Liberal government said it would be more sensitive and that it would relax the regulations, which was done for the benefit of all Canadians. Typically, the government was criticized, as it has been for many years.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They deserved every bit of it.

Mr. Campbell: The employers and the employees began to criticize the act for being too lax, saying there should be more restraint, that the majority of Canadians, I believe 92 per cent, were the working force, in the vicinity of 700,000 or 800,000 had been unemployed and that we could probably eliminate 400,000 or 500,000 of those who are continually abusing the system.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a stupid statement.

Mr. Campbell: Under this bill, $150 million will be saved at the outset. This will be taken away from those abusing the system. I say there are abusers of the system. I am sure all members receive telephone calls about abuses of the unemployment insurance system.

The minister had enough guts to stand up and say for the benefit of all employers and employees that we should exercise a little more restraint and surveillance over UIC benefits, something Canadians had been asking for over a number of years. The minister stood up and said this would be done for the benefit of Canadians, which is what this government stands for, Mr. Speaker.

The $150 million that will be poured back into the economy to create jobs for those who are unemployed may not seem very much. However, next year it will be $655 million, not a small figure, to create jobs for the unemployed. In the next six months after that it will be $935 million, nearly $2 billion within two years. No one can say that will not create permanent employment for those who want to work, not for those who abuse the system, and God knows there are enough of them. Employers constantly tell me they cannot get people to work for them at any cost.

An hon. Member: Because of the minimum wage.

Mr. Campbell: The minimum wage was established by this government, supported by all sides. Whether it is the minimum wage or double the minimum wage, the employers say they cannot get people because the UIC benefits plus the under-table money they are paid is more than a person would get at a steady job. That is what this minister is trying to prevent.

There was some mention about clause 2 appearing in the Gazette. I guess it did not receive much publicity because the committee hearings are not televised. However, the minister and his officials explained over and over again that that was done legally. There was nothing to hinder this government from publicizing this regulation through the Gazette. Clause 2 was put in to complement the bill. To make political gain out of that is to say to the Canadian public that they are all stupid. However, they are not. They are intelligent people. They know what the hell is going on and who is trying to block this bill for no reason.

If you go down to 75 you are telling the hotel owners why you close at three o'clock when the movie theatres close at 11, because if you did not do that those people would abuse the system as the opposition is trying to abuse the system at this very moment and trying to put the blame somewhere else. Well, the people are not going to believe that for one damn minute.

Mr. Benjamin: Hogwash!

Mr. Campbell: Are you inside or outside the curtains?

An hon. Member: Half and half.

Mr. Campbell: Those who are employed, the majority, are paying less and the employers are paying less, and they are happy and they are the large majority. So we are talking about 400,000 people who are probably legitimately unemployed. This government has never let them down. Regulations can be implemented to make sure that no one suffers, and no one will suffer. All we are saying is that those who are abusing the system while others are paying for it, I do not think the latter like it one damn bit. It was high time for the minister to take that in hand and say no more abuse, the funds which are spent because of abuse will be directed to those people who really want to work and create the jobs.

Mr. Benjamin: There is nothing in the bill about abuse. Have you read the bill?

Mr. Campbell: The hon. member asks whether I have read the bill. I would not want to do anything different from what the opposition has been doing for the last number of years. You don't have to read the bill. You just listen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Campbell: For instance, today in committee the opposition criticized this bill. On all the occasions on which I attended the committee and sat there, the only name brought forward by the chairman was that of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Campbell: One of the members of the official opposition said he had absorbed all the time available to the committee and used it to say nothing. Can you imagine the waste of public funds involved when one man occupies all the time of the committee to say nothing? The opposition today came forth out of their clouds and said "What a lousy bill," when they know damn well it is an excellent bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Campbell: Every bill needs minor changes. That is done through regulation. But the crux of this measure is a response to what the people want, and they will come forward very shortly and tell us that what we have done has been done right for them. We will not protect those who abuse the system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have to interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I did not want to contribute, but for the record I must correct the remarks made by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Daudlin). I will come back later to closure. The hon. member accused us, members of the Social Credit Party of Canada, of not being in committee. If the hon. member himself had been in comittee, he would have spoken differently. He would not have launched into such cowardly charges. Mr. Speaker, every member in this House knows that my colleague, the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne), who sits on the committee, is now in hospital and cannot therefore attend committee meetings. Nor can the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard), who also is in hospital. The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) had open heart surgery. This leaves six of us to deal with 25 committees. How can the six of us be expected to do the work of 140 Liberal members, especially when there are committee meetings while we sit here? As I said recently, when this House sits while committee meetings are in progress nobody will see me in committee, because my first duty is to this House. Committees come second. All we need is that committees meet when the House is not in session. So much for the first correction. I am sorry for the young member who accused us earlier. He should check his facts first, his comments would make more sense.

Coming to closure, I have always been most strongly opposed to silencing this House. This is what is happening once more. I have always felt this indicates a lack of planning on the part of the government. If they had come up two months ago with this bill of prime importance to themselves, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, we would not now be discussing this motion. They brought in closure because they want to leave for Christmas. The bill is introduced in the last moment of the session, and we are expected to go through all stages in one or two days, when 90 per cent of Canadians are opposed to the bill. They want to force this down our throats. Some moments ago I heard another Liberal member say: "Finally, we can collect $710 million at the expense of the unemployed." In order to create what? Only 113 man-years. And to get this, we are going to deprive 250,000 unemployed of something they are entitled to, unemployment insurance benefits for which they paid premiums. I suggest this is outright robbery. I said so yesterday and I say it again today. The people are cheated and are led to believe that it is in the interests of the country. It is as if to pay off municipal expenditures, Mr. Speaker, the mayor would decide to ask his fellow citizens to eat only one meal a day so as to make both ends meet. That is exactly what is suggested today, Mr. Speaker.

We need $117 million, one or two million within two years, so let us discontinue the payments. Premiums are collected, but let us drop the benefits. Let us keep that money for something else. However, the government knows quite well how to get the money to buy military toys worth $2.5 billion which have just been purchased as replacements for our planes. It is also ready to buy warships worth $1.5 billion while it is devoting $4 billion to save the party and try to give a new impetus to the economy. Some low income families living on the threshold of poverty will be deprived of their unemployment insurance. I say no. It is a shame. This government does not deserve to remain more than one day in power. How can they impose such nonsense on the people, Mr. Speaker?

How are the amounts collected? How has the number of inspectors been almost doubled now? Why? To make inquiries? Inquiries after one, two or three years to see if someone was eligible for unemployment insurance benefits four years ago? But, Mr. Speaker, it shows precisely how incompetent their civil servants are. If an employee was unable to determine whether someone was eligible for unemployment insurance benefits for some reason or another four years ago, and agreed to pay them, and civil servants say four years later: You are not eligible. You must refund the overpayment. Well, I say that it is nonsense, Mr. Speaker, and that the civil servants should be forced to refund those amounts because they made the mistake. The unemployed now have to pay for the mistakes of the civil servants. At the present time we have one civil servant for every ten Canadians, Mr. Speaker; but at that rate, in five years from now there will be one for every five. That is a lot of inspectors. That is a lot of people digging into our pockets. Skyscrapers are being built to accommodate those civil servants who collect taxes. Centres for fiscal data, those are being built; but manufactures, very seldom.

Fiscal data centres, Mr. Speaker, will not spur the economy; they make the country poorer, not richer. But, for instance, if those same millions of dollars were taken to build industries, to help the secondary and tertiary industries, the people would realize that we are becoming serious about the situation. But you cannot try to get even more from those who have nothing left. The bill will do no harm to the big shots, Mr. Speaker, those who earn $15,000, $20,000 or $25,000 a year.

These are the career unemployed. After a few months they quit work. When asked why they do not work, they answer that they do not want to give everything to the tax man. So they apply for unemployment benefits and they disrupt the whole system. Yet the bill attacks the seasonal worker, not the big shot who will not be hurt by it at all, but the seasonal worker. When we say that over 250,000 seasonal workers will not be able to claim unemployment, that is serious, Mr. Speaker. I think the government should be concerned more about people, the human capital, than about money.

[English]

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in the six years I have been in this House I have never been as saddened as I have been by the action of this government in imposing closure on Bill C-14, amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I am sad because of what the government and the minister, in particular, have done. The minister talks of the government's majority in this House. We are all well aware that the government has a majority, but surely we should move from the concept that might is right and use might for right. That would be a much better aspiration for this government when dealing with changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Right from the start of the bill I was closely associated with it on behalf of my party, and I saw not one iota or one scintilla of effort on the part of the minister or his government to be flexible, or even to entertain reasonable argument or propositions. The first thing we discovered when this bill was brought down—and through questioning witnesses who subsequently came before the committee—was that there was very little consultation with those who will be affected most, the workers of this country and the unions which represent them. There was very little consultation with the interested groups which will be affected by this bill, such as students and women. Even the government's own advisory group on the status of women was not consulted. We had the spectacle of the parliamentary secretary jamming the bill through committee. He limited the number of witnesses coming before the committee.

I come from an area where in October of 1977 the largest employers there, Inco and Falconbridge, announced a 3,000 person lay-off in the Sudbury basin. We fought like hell to get this government to keep people working, but this government was totally helpless. It could not provide jobs for people who wanted to work. The government rejected the stockpiling idea. It rejected an import duty on nickel coming from Argentina, the Philippines, and Australia. The government rejected those concepts, which would have kept 3,000 people working. Now we are witnessing the jamming through of a bill, clause 5 of which would reduce the benefits of those people who today are unemployed through no fault of their own. It would reduce their incomes from 66⅔ per cent of average insurable weekly earnings to 60 per cent. The phonies to my right would have reduced those incomes to 50 per cent for those without dependants.

Just today I presented the minister with a list of about seven or eight people who found jobs in Thompson. They were laid off by Inco in Sudbury and found jobs in Thompson, but they have been unemployed, and they do not have the wherewithal to transport themselves to Thompson. Officials at the regional office of the minister's department in Sudbury said that they could not transport those workers to Thompson because there are unemployed people in Manitoba, particularly in Thompson, who must be hired first. I do not understand, and this is all so saddening to me.

I am a new Canadian, relatively speaking and it is sad to me that the government would propagate the concept that Canadian young people are lazy and that Canadian workers are lazy. I am sad that the government would legislate based on its perception of laziness. All reputable studies show that the puritan work ethic is alive and well in this country.

The party which forms the government has a long history of concern for society, but it has dragged itself to such a level that it must curry favour with the corporate sector so that it can get funds when the bagman goes around collecting for an election next spring. I am sad because the government has dragged itself to that level of expediency and concern about power. I am very sad about the performance of the government.

I have sat in committees of this House which have dealt with legislation dealing with corporations. It takes ten years to get a change in the Bank Act. That has been put off for the last couple of years. First we get a yellow paper, then a white paper, then a green paper, and then the subject matter, not a bill, is referred to a committee.

I sat in the committee which dealt with Bill C-16, the borrowers and depositors protection legislation. I saw every single financial institution and group come to the committee. Did the government jam that legislation through? Does it jam through legislation which affects the corporations of this country through? Oh, no, sir, it does not. But when it comes to workers' legislation such as changes to the unemployment insurance fund, they jam it through. I think that is sad because they have a double standard.

I cannot leave these phonies to my right alone because I recall the parliamentary secretary limiting the number of witnesses to nine, and pushing closure through the steering committee a week and a half ago. He was going to limit the debate to last Tuesday at eight o'clock. The Conservative member on the steering committee, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), agreed with the closure then, which subsequently resulted in the parliamentary secretary presenting a three point report from the steering committee. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra turned around in the committee and, like the boa constrictor that this party has showed itself to be, he swallowed himself completely, twisting here and twisting there until he got to the eyeballs, then he regurgitated all over the committee. I thought it was a shameful display.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

The Tories have an awful gall to come here and say they are opposed to closure when their representative was all for closure in the committee. The party to my right twisted here and twisted there. They have gutted themselves head on, as the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) would say. On the one hand they want to curry favour and curry votes in eastern Canada, and on the other hand they have the corporate sector and the John Bullocks of this society pushing them in the other direction. So they have had members speaking out of one side of their mouths and other members speaking out of the other side of their mouths. That is a totally shameful display.

The hon. member for LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul (Mr. Campbell) said that this bill is all about abuse, that its purpose is to cut down abuse, when in reality the only provision in the bill which tends to punish abuse is the one dealing with employers, the provision which raises the fines on employers when they have broken the regulations by giving false information to the commission.

We have opposed the bill, and I make no apology for the role we play, because when it was fairly obvious that the minister was intransigent and the government's mind was made up, that the parliamentary secretary was the juggernaut in the committee trying to ram the bill through, it was at that point we decided that obviously the only thing to do was to try to stop the bill in its tracks. I say that, given the same circumstances, we would do that again.

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been debating Bill C-14 for almost two months and I have been present at every single meeting. I am the only member in the House who can say that with any degree of honesty.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are there degrees of honesty?

Mr. Maine: I have learned an awful lot in those two months, and I have seen an awful lot in the four and a half years since I have been here. I thank the opposition members for contributing so much to my education. One of the biggest things I have seen demonstrated here is hypocrisy. I have really been shocked by the degree of hypocrisy I have seen demonstrated in the last two months here.

I will speak first of all about the Social Credit party. They complained today that we were gagging them on second reading but, when it came their turn to speak, their member walked out of the House moments before because he did not wish to participate.

After second reading there were 34 meetings in committee stage on Bill C-14, seven meetings on supplementary estimates, which were largely devoted to debating the contents of Bill C-14, and not one time was there a Social Credit member present. We heard today that the two members of that party were sick. If this bill was so important to them, they would have substituted another member for them, as the rest of us do. Since they had not done so, it means that the bill was not that important to them, and they have no right to complain they have been gagged. It is sheer hypocrisy.

Now let us come to my favourite party, the NDP. I have learned more than ever about the imaginative interpretation of rules in the last few months. The word "filibuster" has taken on more fancy variations than I have ever seen before. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has visibly demonstrated the meaning of the words rhetoric, bombast, demagoguery and histrionics, words about which I did not even know before. I have seen beautiful demonstrations of them. Today he has added a new element to his efforts as an actor. He has shown us the "more in sorrow than in anger" phase. One thing that I remember in committee is that he admonished members to read his speeches. I took him up on this. I found the smallest room in my house and I took his speeches there and held them before me, and after I read them I put them behind me and then disposed of them. I venture to say that that is the best use to which his speeches were put.

Mr. Rodriguez: You don't have a sense of humour.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are you proud of that?

Mr. Maine: Now let us go on to the Conservatives. I have never seen a party that has been so split in all my life. On the one hand we hear the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) say that this bill is a kick in the guts, and on the other hand we hear the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) say it is about time but the bill does not go far enough. They are split all over the place, and we have seen it demonstrated time and time again at every phase of the bill.

My learning has further been increased by seeing the Progressive Conservative's version of the hon. member for Nickel Belt, namely, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I call him the hon. member for Nickel Belt phase two, very similar but a little more sophisticated. My education was increased further when I watched them wanting their cake and eating it too, as was demonstrated by the hon. member for Nickel Belt last Tuesday. If we had sat for two more hours on Tuesday night, we could have completed the debate on the bill, but the NDP made it very clear they wanted to stall the bill. So the bill was stalled until Monday. The Progressive Conservatives agreed they wanted to see the bill go through the committee stage, and they agreed that with extra hours we could get it out of the committee on Tuesday night. Either they have no stamina or no guts, because when it came to the crunch they could not follow through on their promise and they reversed themselves completely. When it came to this stage, again we saw them trying to have their cake and eat it too.

Under the rules we have provision 75B where, with the agreement of the majority of the House, we can achieve a time allocation agreement. Here was an opportunity for the first time for the PC party to show its true colours. They said they would agree—although they did not quite agree with the bill as it was—to rule 75B and they would not force the government to use rule 75C. Here again they tried to have their cake and eat it too. We could bring in a new rule for the Tories, rule 75BC for those who want their cake and want to eat it too.

But we Liberals are not afraid. We have guts, we can take it. We will not let 17 members out of the 264, a mere 6.4 per cent of the elected members of parliament, stall and thwart parliament and stand in the way of the progress of this government. No, sir; we will take the action in a responsible way and use rule 75C because it will stop the filibuster attempted by the NDP. We have guts enough to do it, and we are doing it.

Mr. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the two speakers preceding me with interest. Perhaps I could deal with the last speaker first. I do not think I have heard such a bunch of crap since the speaker before him. Here he is accusing my party of being split on this bill. That is incredible. He tried to suggest that because the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is concerned about the rather unfair measures in the act, and because the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is concerned the provisions of the bill do not save enough money, that that indicates a split in our party. Not at all. What the heck! That is the essence of our proposal. We are all for restraint. We feel that the government is not saving money intelligently.

The manner in which the government is saving money will create tremendous hardship in the area east of the Ottawa river. The hon. member talked about a split. If he listened to any member of my party, surely it would be evident that two themes have been running through the contributions of every speaker. We are in favour of restraint.

Mr. Breau: You have two teams, one on each side.

Mr. McCrossan: I was referring to themes, not teams. All of my colleagues have spoken in favour of our position. We have a united position.

Hon. members opposite, with the exception of the minister, who have spoken on the bill report stage, have spoken against it. When one talks about splits, surely there must be one opposite when all Liberal members do is attack the bill. In his opening remarks, the minister indicated that he wanted a constructive debate and that he wanted to listen to our position. He should listen to our position as other members of his party have done. They have become convinced by it.

This attempt to limit debate is not an attempt to limit my party so much, although we resent it. It is an attempt on the part of the minister to limit the members of his own party who are speaking out continuously against the bill. The minister indicated that he wanted to hear our positions brought out because he thought there would be some merit in debating them. The minister, several of his officials, and I, have had discussions. Some of our amendments were put forward after discussion with the minister. In a headlong rush to bring in the bill by January 1, the minister is going forward with a bill which he knows is inferior and which he knows will cause severe economic damage.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member is misleading the House.

Mr. McCrossan: The minister is going forward with a bill which does not contain provisions that his officials feel are necessary in term of curbing abuse. If the minister has any courage at all, the measure will be back in the House in a matter of months. The effects of this bill will create heardships in the area east of the Ottawa river. The government will be forced to alleviate them.

We have proposed two basic types of amendments which we wanted to discuss rationally. The first area of saving money should be an area where most Canadians feel abuse is centred. I am referring to people who quit their jobs for unjust cause. That should be the cornerstone. If one is looking to save money in a program, one must look at the areas of abuse. One cannot cut off people because they cannot find work when there is no work available. One goes after the people who are choosing not to work and choosing to collect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCrossan: The minister recognized this in discussions with his officials and myself. Our approach is a constructive one. It will save more money than the minister's approach. It will cause less hardship. It is interesting that not just members of the opposition support our approach and condemn the government's approach. It is not just the officials who feel we are on the right track. We have the Economic Council of Canada on our side as well.

Prior to the publication of the bill, the Economic Council of Canada conducted a review of the unemployment insurance situation. It warned against measures such as the repeater and new entrants ones which the government introduced. I should like to refer to the Economic Council of Canada discussion paper, which reads in part as follows:

A recent opinion poll showed that 60 per cent of Canadians felt that the minimum of eight qualifying weeks is too short and that eligibility based on 20 to 27 weeks would be more appropriate . . . A policy decision with respect to the minimum number of qualifying weeks should take into account the economic impact and abuses of the program. However, on equity and hardship grounds, the above popular belief cannot be supported . . . it cannot be concluded that employees with less weeks of work have a higher expected relative cost ratio. The results of this paper . . . indicate that employees with fewer weeks of work would, in the absence of unemployment insurance—

That is what the minister is talking about, cutting them off completely. It continues:

—be subjected to higher financial hardship. This finding should be taken into account when a political decision is made with respect to the minimum number of qualifying weeks.

This is a situation where a government-funded organization warned in advance of the bill against introducing the types of measures which the government introduced. The bill is a headlong rush to bring in anything which will reduce the deficit next year.

I understand why hon. members opposite are concerned about the size of the deficit next year. I understand why they feel that this is an area in which to save money. But it is evident to everyone who has attended the meetings and listened to the evidence that the government brought in ill-conceived and hastily conceived measures which will not do the job. These measures will do a tremendous amount of harm around the country, which is why we feel we cannot support the bill.

Members of the government and committee members who attended the hearings looked at the impact of the bill. Many, many times the terrible effects of this bill have been brought forward, but I should like to bring them out once more. At the present time there is an unemployment rate of 8.3 per cent seasonally adjusted as of last month. There are only four provinces below the average rate of unemployment, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The government's proposed measures will affect the provinces with low unemployment proportionately less severely than the provinces with high unemployment.

If one looks at the repeater and new entrants provisions, the proposed measures will affect 10 per cent of the unemployed in Newfoundland, 20 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 11 per cent in Nova Scotia, 12 per cent in New Brunswick, and 10 per cent in Quebec. In other words, the amendments will have maximum effect on areas with the highest rates of unemployment.

As several hon. members have pointed out, the 11.5 per cent relief rate for the repeater provision is a temporary salve. As the hon. member for St. John's East pointed out, Newfoundland and some of the other less-advantaged areas will be in terrible straits if they ever manage to bring down their unemployment rates below 11.5 per cent. As a result of the government's legislation and the new entrants and repeater provisions, if these areas manage to bring their unemployment rates below 11.5 per cent, the effects are just fantastic. Approximately 18 per cent of the unemployed in Newfoundland would be disqualified, 20 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 14 per cent in Nova Scotia, 19 per cent in New Brunswick, and 12 per cent in Quebec. The effect on the more prosperous areas is minimal, 6 per cent in Alberta and 8 per cent in Saskatchewan. Nearly one out of five to one out of six of the unemployed in less prosperous areas of the country will be affected by these provisions, and that is why we object to them.

We are proposing provisions which will eliminate abuse, spread the load fairly across the economy, and get at the abuse where it is likely to be concentrated, in the middle and upper middle class income families in central and western Canada. The government is going after money in any manner. Its proposals will affect one out of five to one out of six people in the Atlantic regions and in Quebec.

I see why the government wants to cut off debate. It is because the bill cannot stand up to scrutiny. Even hon. members opposite recognize that it is a bad piece of legislation. Repeatedly members across the way have spoken against it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

• (1732)

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I think we should all be clear as to what the fuss is all about. It is all very well for the minister, his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and everybody else to say that we are here simply in the spirit of negativism, that we do not have any constructive proposals to put forward, that this bill attacks abusers and has the effect of getting rid of all the cheaters in the unemployment insurance system, and that we are in favour of the abuse, the cheaters and the ripoffs, but it is not true.

It is very easy for people to say these things, especially considering the current mood the country is in, people like the hon. member for LaSalle-Émard-Côte-Saint-Paul (Mr. Campbell), who does not even know what the subject of the bill is and has not read it. These are the people who are speaking on behalf of the government and who represent the combined intelligence of the Liberal party, and who tell us that half the unemployment recipients in Canada are cheaters and abusers. That statement by the hon. member was a very revealing one, and, just as sometimes in the course of a slip of the tongue one gives the whole game away, the hon. member gave the government's game away. It has, in a haphazard and slipshod manner, brought forward legislation which has not been seriously examined in committee. In fact neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary considered any of our amendments. They never considered any of the savings which would result from the amendments.

Mr. Maine: That is not so.

Mr. Rae: There was certainly no indication to me, and I was at many of the meetings arguing for the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) when he could not be there, and I was there when he was there arguing just as vigorously as he was about certain of these measures. I indicated the philosophy of the bill. We had just as many statistics as the Tories to show what the effects were. I can rattle off statistics which will illustrate the fact that the government has not put a trigger in the bill for the new entrants which will cost $300 million and in the Atlantic provinces alone, $70 million will be saved because it will not go to those provinces. I can cite the fact that the 10 per cent cut in benefits will have a dramatic effect on income maintenance in this country, that according to the Metropolitan-Toronto Social Planning Council if an individual is on unemployment insurance for 16 weeks the child tax credit—which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is so proud of—will not have any effect.

We have to recognize the fact that this government is walking on two legs, one leg is going in one direction and one leg is going in another direction, and the split has been inevitable.

This bill is doing three things. First, it is cutting back benefits by 10 per cent. What possible relationship could that have to the concept of abuse? That measure does not attack the abusers or cheaters but everybody, whether or not they are legitimately on unemployment. It is not a strict reading of the law, but a cut in the level of incomes of people who are unemployed. Canadians should understand that and it should be driven home to them.

The press has been saying that the NDP is opposed to tightening. We are not opposed to tightening or cutting back on benefits to people who are cheating. What we are opposed to, however, is an indiscriminate attack on working people. This bill does not discriminate between people who are deserving and people who are not deserving. It says that everybody regardless of where they come from, will receive a 10 per cent cut in benefits.

The second thing which this bill does is that it makes it difficult for those entrants, regardless of where they are from, whether it be a high employment area or a high unemployment area who will be cut from the program. Their requirements—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 5.36 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion before the House under Standing Order 75C have expired.

Consequently, pursuant to this Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the debate and forthwith put all questions necessary to dispose of the motion.

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cullen), which was agreed to on the following division.

THE PARLIAMENT OF CANADA

SUGGESTED FIXED DATES FOR CHRISTMAS RECESS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the present government has repeatedly demonstrated its inability to plan House business in an orderly fashion, with the result that its belief in Santa Claus has been put into serious doubt and the family plans for all those connected with the Parliament of Canada have been disrupted, giving evidence to the government's lack of concern with women, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott):

That this House urge the government House leader, regardless of what party he may belong to at the pertinent moment, to adopt a fixed range of dates for the Christmas recess, with such recesses commencing on a day no later than two weeks before Christmas and ending on a day not later than two weeks after Christmas.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Paproski: Allan MacEachen said "No". Ebenezer!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CALL FOR REVIEW OF DISABILITY PENSIONS TO MAINTAIN LEVEL DESIGNATED IN PENSION ACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), I move:

That this House notes that the amount of the 100 per cent war disability pension, even with the indexation now applied thereto, has already slipped below the composite level of public service salaries to which it was attached by legislation passed in June of this year, and this House calls on the Minister of Veterans Affairs to review this situation, and that he bring in legislation, early in 1979, to tie the rate of the 100 per cent disability pension to the composite level designated in the Pension Act so that this level will be maintained on a continuing basis.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY REGIONAL AIRPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a very important matter of pressing necessity.

For some areas in Canada air transport is essential, especially when several regional airports such as that of Val-d'Or are not given the necessary investments by the Department of Transport to ensure adequate services to passengers, since there is no real development policy for air transport in Canada and that the lack of such policy especially affects regional airports, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Janelle):

That the House set up a special committee made up of two representatives from each party to launch an inquiry on the present condition of regional airports in Canada, to hear all necessary evidence and to report to the House which will consider the recommendations and means to develop a comprehensive policy of regional air transport.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROPOSED CLOSING OF CONTROL TOWER AT ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, AT CERTAIN HOURS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) threatens to close the control tower at St. John's airport from 12 midnight to 8 a.m., despite many thousands of landings and departures during those hours in the course of the year and despite the danger of fog and deteriorating visibility at St. John's airport at certain periods of the year, in order to save the department two man-years, or about $40,000 to $50,000 each year, and in view of the fact that this will mean loss of the only landing aid on an east runway, the GCA unit, plus the downgrading of the ILS on the main runway from category 2 to category 1, plus a decrease of the safety standards of the airport, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this decision be reversed, with a saving of $40,000 to $50,000 per year by the department to be achieved by the involuntary retirement of the two most senior of the advisers of the Minister of Transport who made this cost-cutting suggestion, and that the minister treat this decision in the same manner as he treated the planned lay-off of 30 security personnel at Gander, recently cancelled even though the security personnel are described as non-essential, while essential air traffic controllers are to be removed from service at St. John's.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be introduced only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

ALLEGED PERSECUTION OF RADIO-CANADA PERSONNEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity pertaining to the international service of the CBC and, in particular, Mr. M. Mogilansky, formerly head of the Russian section of Radio-Canada International who was ignominiously and unwarrantedly demoted, along with certain others, following revelations I made in this House a year or so ago that there was political interference by external affairs in programs broadcast to the Soviet Union.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Secretary of State responsible for the CBC make a full statement as soon as possible on the release from service to be effective April 1, 1979, of Mr. Mogilansky and of 30 members of Radio-Canada International's research branch; that he specifically guarantee an end to internal persecution of Radio-Canada personnel by the government because of refusal to tolerate political manipulation of the broadcast media.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FUTURE OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY RESEARCH LABORATORIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing importance.

In view of the uncertain future faced by several hundred government employees at the federal fisheries and forestry research laboratories across Canada arising from prolonged indecision on the part of the Liberal cabinet, and recognizing the numerous multimillion dollar boondoggles which have resulted from past cases of on-again, off-again decisions by this government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Minister of the Environment, in an overwhelming sense of Christmas compassion, make a definitive statement concerning the future of these important laboratories, thus letting the employees at these institutions make career choices of importance to themselves and their families, so that they, too, might enjoy a happy new year.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

"THE ROAD AHEAD" CIRCULATED BY FORMER MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): In the absence of the Prime Minister, I will address my question to the Minister of Finance. My questioning centres on a newly-disclosed missile from our friend, John Turner, entitled "The Road Ahead".

In his September 22 epistle, Mr. Turner describes his attitude with regard to what transpired following the Bonn conference. In the letter, Mr. Turner points out that he feels that upon the Prime Minister's return to Canada, his insistence is going ahead unilaterally with his August 1 statement undermined cabinet ministers and got rumours running about who is in charge. Does the Minister of Finance feel he has been undermined due to the Prime Minister's unilateral action since his return from meeting Helmut Schmidt in Bonn?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel like a man who has been undermined. The way in which the budget was received by the business community is proof that the management of the economy is all right. These documents written by Bill McDonald and subscribed to by Mr. Turner, are just a gossip column that you can get from any newsstand in Toronto for 15 cents.

Mr. Stevens: Granted, the dollar is falling quickly, but the price is actually $15,000, Canadian, not 15 cents. The Minister of Finance says he has not been undermined, although he appears to be undermined. In view of the fact that when questioned by Global TV today, the Minister of Finance said he was expecting a second apology from Mr. Turner, will the minister indicate whether he has received that second apology with regard to yesterday's revelations and, if not, when does he expect it?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member is so anxious to ask questions about it. I can understand his frustration, though, if he paid $15,000 to get the information.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Again to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I have not had to pay the $15,000, and if he would like to share in my good fortune I will pass the various letters across to him as I receive them.

My final supplementary question to the minister is: when does he intend to take concrete steps to renew the morale of the public service which has been somehow affected, according to Mr. Turner, as a result of recent actions taken on the economic scene? What, specifically, will the minister do to start shoring up the dollar which is now literally at an historical low? If you go back to 1858, you will find the dollar has never been as low, on average, as it is this year.

Mr. Chrétien: It took a long time for the hon. gentleman to get around to asking a question which is pertinent to my area of responsibility. Our policy of allowing the Canadian dollar to float is well known. This morning the dollar was strengthening. When you have a currency which is free-floating, you have to rely on the market to determine its level.

FORECAST OF RATE OF GROWTH

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): My question also is directed to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the hon. gentleman knows that historically Canada has always enjoyed a strong position and reputation in international circles for the role it plays in the development of economic policy, particularly Bretton Woods and the International Monetary Fund.

Would the minister tell us if it was his department which advised the Prime Minister of Canada to make the commitment, not only for the government but for all Canadians, at Bonn for a 5 per cent rate of growth in Canada during the course of the next year to help the Third World countries, when it was clearly evident to almost everyone in Canada that we had no opportunity whatsoever of fulfilling that commitment?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when we were at Bonn it was in the context of a decision by many countries to try to stimulate western world economies. Of course we wanted to do our part and we wanted to stimulate our own economy as much as we could. That is why we have proposed measures to place the Canadian economy on a good footing. In fact, we are doing well in comparison with others. This year we will have a record trade surplus. There is a big increase in our consumer spending and our job creation program. If all the other countries could contribute as much as we are at this time, I am sure we would all be better off.

Mr. Gillies: I think the hon. gentleman misunderstood the import of my question. Very simply, it is that at Bonn—and the Prime Minister made this statement—we were not observers; we made commitments. The commitment which was given to the nations of the world was that we would benefit by a 5 per cent rate of real growth during the course of the next year. We now know that it will be around 3.3 per cent.

I ask the minister two questions. First, why would the Prime Minister of Canada, on the advice of his ministers, put Canada in the invidious position of making a commitment which could not, and cannot, be fulfilled and which it was known at the time could not be fulfilled, thereby lowering the credibility of Canada in the eyes of all the other economic ministers in the world?

Second, what does the Minister of Finance intend to tell the Prime Minister to say to Mr. Schmidt at the conference after Christmas? How will he explain why, having made a commitment in August, we have to renege on it in December because the growth rate has been only 3.3 per cent?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, last July, when we were in Bonn, we merely told our colleagues who attended that meeting that we expected the rate of growth to be 5 per cent at the time when I brought down my budget barely two months before. Since then, the world economy has suffered many setbacks, such as the fall of the American dollar, the increase in interest rates as a result of the devaluation of the American dollar, and other factors such as those which have slowed down our own economy. I feel that we cannot isolate Canada from current world problems.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INSPECTIONS RESPECTING HEALTH AND SAFETY STANDARDS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, if I can get his attention. I would like to ask the minister if it is a fact that his department is ending the contract arrangements which it had with the provincial departments of labour under which those departments inspected premises of companies such as railway companies, airline companies and grain elevator companies whose employees come under federal jurisdiction with regard to health and safety standards.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe that is the case, but I would like to take the question as notice and brief myself further on it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, when the minister is looking into the question, would he look into what we have been told by reliable sources, that is, that under the contract arrangements which have been in effect with the provinces, funds were provided for the payment of salaries to about 40 people, a number which many workers and their unions felt was inadequate to do a proper job of inspection and supervision; and would the minister inquire whether the proposal now being discussed—and, I presume, implemented in his department—will mean that those 40 people will be replaced by only about six or seven people, a number which, if one thinks of the hundreds of thousands of workers and the number of work places involved, is clearly inadequate?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, would the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ALLEGED USE BY MINISTER OF OTHER MINISTERS' STATEMENTS

Mr. Richard Janelle (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Following the statement made by the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers announcing the participation of the federal government in the reactivating of a backing board plant in Newfoundland and its conversion to newsprint production, and because the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion used to select the programs allotting credits to industries in the so-called designated areas and also announced publicly what they would consist of, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers is trying to steal the limelight for his department by making the announcements that used to be made by the ministers who now work with him?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): My God, that question is not really very serious, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member should know that the government acts as a government: all the ministers contribute to its decisions.

ROLE OF ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT MINISTERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In appointing the new President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers, is it the Prime Minister's objective that the new president shall direct the operations of those economic development ministers in a way which will overcome their clearly demonstrated lack of knowledge and experience in manufacturing, processing, merchandising and distribution, and in that way require those economic development ministers in future to give to the Canadian business community the kind of service they are entitled to expect but are not receiving today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not realize that the lack of performance on the part of these economic development ministers is the principal cause for the Prime Minister's recent slippery slide down the Gallup "pole"?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, again the answer is no. I point out that the premise is even more inaccurate than the question, because if the hon. member watches statistics he will see that in November, over November of last year, the Canadian economy created some 384,000 jobs, an all-time record.

USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS FOR LIBERAL ADVERTISING IN ETHNIC PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is it government policy to use public funds or to make promises that public funds would be made available for advertising in ethnic publications if editors of those publications bought tickets for the Liberal fund-raising dinner which was held in Toronto on Monday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is entirely hypothetical and has no foundation in fact.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Your credibility is shot even more.

Mr. Epp: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to direct to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. It concerns a letter to publishers and editors of ethnic newspapers and magazines in Ontario, written by Stan Martyn, president of New Canadian Publications, an advertising agency which has been used by the government to place ads in the ethnic press, an agency which takes approximately 30 per cent as its fee for the service.

I should like to ask the minister whether he knew of the procedure which was being used for the fund-raising dinner, whereby editors of the ethnic press were contacted by Mr. Martyn, and asked to attend the fund-raising dinner and, if they could not pay the $150, New Canadian Publications would deduct $50 a month per ticket from pending government advertising to be placed in that publication.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the premise of that question is equally false. New Canadian Publications is not an agency of the Government of Canada for any advertisements whatsoever. The directorate of multiculturalism places about half a million dollars worth of advertising in the ethnic press in Canada, but does not use the services of New Canadian Publications in any way, shape or form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: We have an agency ourselves, which is not that agency. They themselves happen to be media representatives on behalf of the ethnic press, not the Government of Canada. I would have thought that the hon. member and his party would have supported the free enterprise function which he happens to represent. The second point that I would make—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Epp: Supplementary, to the same minister. I should like to ask the minister the following question. In view of the fact that this action did take place through New Canadian Publications and that a letter from Maurice Strong was attached to the memorandum from Mr. Martyn to the ethnic press, would the minister now review his policy on how ads are placed in the ethnic press by his department—he has already identified how much—and say whether that review will take place; and, further, will those editors who chose not to attend that dinner receive the same consideration in the placing of ads in their papers as editors who did attend?

Mr. Cafik: I have already pointed out that there is no relationship whatsoever between the Government of Canada and Mr. Stan Martyn of New Canadian Publications. Our advertisements are placed, without discrimination, on the basis of criteria which all press have to meet to qualify as ethnic press and they will continue to receive advertisements so long as they meet those criteria. It is true that I am reviewing the criteria—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cafik: I announced a year ago that we were reviewing the criteria. In fact, I invited the Ethnic Press Association to advise me as to the recommendations they thought we should accept in terms of determining the advertisements and the criteria for them. You can be assured, Mr. Speaker, as can all members of the House, that there is no relationship between that agency and this government, and that we will advertise in the ethnic media, provided they are legitimate advertisers, to the people of this country.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER INFORMED OF CANCELLATION OF CERTAIN PROGRAMS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Last week, in response to a question by the leader of the New Democratic Party, the right hon. Prime Minister declared that the federal government had simply reduced some program budgets but that no program had been entirely abolished. In view of the fact that the minister is supposed to represent here in Ottawa the low income earners, has she informed the right hon. Prime Minister that the block funding programs for social services, national health resources funds, many housing programs and wheat subsidies, all things which affect mainly low wage earners, have been cancelled? Has she informed the Prime Minister of the present situation?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I wish to give the hon. member the following information, which he could transmit to several provinces, approximately eight if not more, that all welfare ministers in the country have worked shoulder to shoulder and have fought for their budgets. The provincial ministers told me that they failed to get support from the finance ministers of their own governments and that those finance ministers had identified the social services bill as a target for budget restrictions.

INQUIRY AS TO WHEN MEASURES WILL BE TAKEN TO CONTROL EXPENDITURES AND WASTE

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Considering that last week, the Prime Minister stated that no program had been completely cancelled and since the federal government has unilaterally cancelled the home construction program and the subsidies for block funding, when is the Prime Minister going to take seriously the various recommendations of the Auditor General pertaining to the control of federal spending and wasting of money and quit implementing this restriction policy which hurts primarily low income people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is asking a question which is a contradiction in itself because that program has not been abolished. It has been discussed, but it has not been adopted as yet.

BILINGUALISM

INQUIRY WHETHER INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN BY GOVERNMENT TO ENCOURAGE FRANCOPHONES TO USE FRENCH AT WORK

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board.

The information media have reported that following inquiries in various federal departments, it could be concluded cynically that French-speaking civil servants hinder the progress of bilingualism in the public service, because they are rather reluctant to use French at work. Considering that newspaper headings and other media imply that Francophones are responsible for the difficulty experienced by English-speaking employees in learning the second language, can the minister tell the House whether his department issued guidelines to encourage French-speaking employees to use French at work, or whether this matter stems from the reports which the various departments now have to submit to the President of the Treasury Board, as far as bilingualism is concerned?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, obviously it is not the responsibility of Francophones in the public service to teach French to their English-speaking colleagues. Furthermore, I should say that in the ten years I spent here in Ottawa, the use of French has increased considerably in government circles. Finally, I must say that even if it is government policy in the province of Quebec, with Bill 101, to direct their civil servants and their residents to use a particular language, it is not our policy here. Both languages are accepted in the public service.

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF INSTITUTION IN SUDBURY BASIN, ONT.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General in his roles as Solicitor General and as minister responsible for northern Ontario.

In view of the promise made approximately a year ago that the federal government was to construct or renovate the Camp Bison site in Ontario as a federal penitentiary, at the time when the Inco lay-offs were announced, that that was announced in the local media and through political sources as something the government would do in the Sudbury basin, and that now rumours are circulating that suddenly the project has been shelved, put off or whatever, will the minister inform the House exactly what is the status of this project at the moment?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite accurate. At the time I made the announcement relating to the cutbacks last Tuesday, I announced the revised construction program. Also, I advised the Canadian public, as a result of budgetary restraints and because of readjustments in terms of the prognostication of the prison population, that there was a drastic cutback in the number of institutions. Unfortunately, one of the programs which has been suspended is the Burwash program.

Mr. Speaker, you can rest assured that the decision was taken by me with a great deal of regret and hesitation. However, under the circumstances there was no alternative for me but to cancel that particular institution. I hope that as we proceed there may be some chance we might be able to reconsider the construction of that institution. Because it was a specialized institution dealing with protective custody inmates, unfortunately it was one of the casualties of the cutbacks.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the renovating of the Camp Bison site as a federal penitentiary institution is in line and in concert with the recommendations of the subcommittee on penitentiary services, and that last Thursday or Friday when the Minister of Public Works was in Sudbury to unveil a plaque at the taxation data centre he said, "What the member for Sudbury wants, Sudbury gets", can the Solicitor General live up to that commitment made by the Minister of Public Works and ensure the project is not put off but receives high priority?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that representations have been received from a large number of members in northern Ontario who would like to have a facility of that nature in the area. As the hon. member well recognizes, this is an area very close to my own riding. I would have appreciated having that institution in my area as well, in terms of employment prospects for people within my area. Unfortunately, I have an obligation to administer not only a system, a penitentiary service, but also the budget allocated to me by the Government of Canada. I am doing this in accordance with that responsibility and, although the decision was regrettable, it was impossible to avoid.

URBAN AFFAIRS

DEFAULT RATE IN AHOP

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Will he give us the number of AHOP units in a default position in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly answer this question. It can take quite some time. With your permission, however, I shall table the document in question.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question itself seeks an answer which probably should be sought in another way, but that is not primarily for the Chair to decide. There are cases in which a minister may have the answer ready, notice may have been given, but in fact the answer is of such a nature that probably it should be sought in writing.

Mrs. Pigott: Mr. Speaker, one of the problems with this minister is that he does not give anything.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Pigott: Before foreclosure notices are sent out by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, will the minister confirm that it will involve 8,000 units in Ontario alone?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I shall start reading and I hope you will let me know when you feel I have replied enough.

As of September 1978, the files of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and those of the lenders of the private sector indicated 144,000 loans have been granted since the inception of the program. There have been 1,287 foreclosures over the same period, which represents a rate of failure of less than 1 per cent. Since 1978, some 1,000 claims have been submitted. Even if we had to discharge all these claims, the number of foreclosures would then increase from 1,287 to 2,287, which represents a proportion far below the 10 per cent figures indicated by the hon. member. In this case, the rate of foreclosures would amount to 2 per cent approximately.

An hon. Member: Mr. Speaker, we know he can read.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I could go on and give a much longer explanation.

An hon. Member: Just answer the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. minister would be glad to supply that information in another way.

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs. As you know, Mr. Speaker, over the last several weeks we have been raising questions regarding the AHOP program in Canada. Could the minister at least confirm to the House that it is the opinion of CMHC that there is a serious trend in AHOP housing to walk-aways in default, and could he confirm to the House that CMHC's new predictions are in excess of 20,000 defaults or walk-aways in the first couple of months of next year?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, these figures are projections of the hon. member but are surely not projections of the government. Indeed, what I want to say is that whatever may be the number of defaults, it is regrettable to see any defaults at all. The intent of the program is to give a break, in the first place, to people of modest and low income, in providing them with a chance to become owners of homes. In the vast majority of cases—I submit, 98 per cent—this turns out well and these people take advantage of the program and become, and remain for a long period of time, owners of homes in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: Unfortunately, there are a few cases where there are defaults. We regret this, but we think this is a good program which benefits 98 per cent of those who take advantage of it and we intend to continue it.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, will the minister assure the House that he will allow CMHC to give us its figures, rather than the minister giving us his? If AHOP is so good, or as good as the minister claims it to be, why is he ending AHOP and going into a credit payment mortgage program?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am not ending the program. The advantages of the program are to continue. We are adding another tool, or another option, for people who want to buy homes but do not want to take advantage of the normal mortgage programs. They will be able to benefit from the graduate payment mortgages, a technique that allows someone with a modest income and a bright future to build on that future by paying less interest in the first few years while enjoying the home and paying a greater amount in latter years. This is a good way of giving the opportunity to people of modest income to buy homes earlier in their lives rather than having to wait five, six or ten years until their income increases.

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND—FAULTY CONSTRUCTION AND INSPECTION OF AHOP HOMES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs. He talks about giving low income earners a break. I want to ask him if he is prepared to give a break to the 106 AHOP home owners in St. John's, Newfoundland, whose homes have deteriorated as a result of faulty materials and inadequate inspections, in respect of which serious allegations have arisen regarding pay-offs? Will he undertake to have CMHC underwrite the cost of repairing these homes which have deteriorated as a consequence?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in response to this question, the responsibility of CMHC under the National Housing Act is to inspect the housing projects to ensure that the construction work is carried out in reasonable conformity with approved plans and specifications. The question of liability for repairing the houses about which the hon. member is talking, specifically with reference to the failure of exterior bricks, is an important one indeed, and I appreciate that.

I want to say to the hon. member that there are contractual obligations between the prime contractor, the subcontractors and the suppliers and, of course, between the prime contractor and the suppliers themselves. Therefore, I think that the responsibility in law lies more directly between the purchaser and the contractor, and not with CMHC.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, these people will find precious little satisfaction in what the minister has said, because the contractor was in fact set up as a dummy company and it no longer exists. In view of the serious allegations that have been raised on national television in respect of pay-offs by the contractor to CMHC inspectors, has any disciplinary action been taken against the inspectors to whom the allegations have been directed? In view of the allegations, will the minister review the position vis-à-vis the liability of CMHC? Is he prepared, in light of these charges, to make restitution to those low income earners whose homes are deteriorating and whose dreams are being destroyed by his callous attitude toward them?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I know there have been some allegations made against two inspectors. Since these allegations have been made, the two inspectors have been reassigned to non-inspection duties.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see the official opposition denying the fundamental right in Canada of everyone to be considered innocent until proven guilty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: These two inspectors have been assigned to non-inspection duties pending the completion of investigations. We have asked the RCMP to help the corporation in these investigations. When the investigations are completed, we will know exactly whether the type of allegation which has been made can be sustained or not.

[Mr. McGrath.]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

FIRA REVIEW OF TAKEOVER OF SIMPSONS-SEARS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. One result of the collapse of the proposed merger of Simpsons and Simpsons-Sears appears to be that Sears-Roebuck of the United States now has effective control of Simpsons-Sears and there has been what amounts, in my view, to a takeover of Simpsons-Sears by Sears-Roebuck.

Will the minister have this development reviewed by the Foreign Investment Review Agency, if it has not started a review already, and if it turns out that the particular circumstances of the matter do not come within the present provisions of the act, will the government present an appropriate amendment so that this kind of situation can be fully reviewed by the government in future?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this whole question regarding Simpsons-Sears and whether or not it is going to be the final owner of Robert Simpsons, or whether or not the Bay is going to be the final owner of Robert Simpsons, still has to sort itself out in the marketplace. At that time, if there is a question that needs to be looked at either by the Foreign Investment Review Agency or under the Combines Investigation Act, we will do so.

LOTTERIES

PROMOTION OF LOTO SELECT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) in her capacity as the minister responsible for lotteries.

I have learned from reliable sources that some $17,000 was spent for a large supply of foil-wrapped chocolate coins specially made by Laura Secord to promote the ill-fated Loto Select scheme, and that those chocolates have now been absorbed by the staff, so to speak.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: Will the minister confirm that some $17,000 was spent to purchase a supply of foil-wrapped chocolate coins and that these surplus candies have now been given to Loto Canada staff?

• (1452)

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to look into the matter, in the interests of Christmas good cheer. I am sure, however, that the staff could not absorb all those chocolates even if they tried, because there are too few of them.

Mr. Siddon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the minister responsible for Loto Canada. An American college professor has stated that he has been commissioned by Loto Canada to write a promotional book about Canadian lottery winners which would describe the changes wrought in the lives of Canadians who were big winners.

Is it true that Mr. H. Roy Kaplan of Buffalo, New York, has been commissioned to write such a book? If so, what are the financial arrangements with Mr. Kaplan, and why has the job not gone to one of our many thousand talented Canadian writers?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, the Kaplan report was covered in very large measure in the last issue of Maclean's magazine. I would suggest that the hon. member read it. It has some very interesting statistics, such as that the average winner in French Canada—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mrs. Campagnolo: —makes $17,000 per year, and the average winner in English Canada makes $22,000 per year—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mrs. Campagnolo: —and Canadian winners are extremely intelligent in their investment in Loto Canada because they are able to maintain most of the dollars in their bank accounts.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST ECUADOR PARAPLEGIC BE ALLOWED TO REMAIN IN CANADA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I intended to address to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but because of its urgency I will address it to his parliamentary secretary.

One, Arviles, a paraplegic from Ecuador, has just been given a departure notice requiring him to leave Canada, despite an offer of employment and the fact that he can get treatment in Canada that is not available to him in Ecuador. Would the minister exercise the discretion he has under the act to grant a permit on compassionate grounds to allow this man to stay in Canada?

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a very important case which the hon. member for Niagara Falls has already brought to our attention. We have been working on it at some length. The father of Herman Arviles has an auto parts business in Ecuador and has requested his son's return so that he could be assisted in finding a job in Ecuador.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Despite what his father may say, this man needs treatment in Canada. I should like to ask whether the parliamentary secretary believes that this refusal of a permit is consistent with the humanitarian purposes pronounced in our Immigration Act and frequently boasted of by the minister?

Mr. Maine: Mr. Speaker, we have looked into this case in some detail and with great concern because it is such an important one. We feel that the Government of Canada is doing what it should be doing, taking into account the interests of all parties concerned.

URBAN AFFAIRS

REIMBURSEMENT FOR AHOP HOMES DAMAGED THROUGH FAULTY WORKMANSHIP

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I have made a number of representations to him about the people who have been taken for a ride in Bear Creek Estates.

Now that the minister has introduced compulsory insurance for those home owners going into the AHOP program, he is admitting that some of these low income people have been ripped off by unscrupulous contractors. Will the minister now admit that some of these low income home owners who trusted the government and government programs deserve to have the funds they expended reimbursed because their AHOP homes have lost their value since they invested in them? These homes have now depreciated in value.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a fundamental mistake in the hon. member's question which must be clarified.

Of course the government has subvention programs to help individuals buy their own house. This is one of the most important aspects of the roles of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Its other role, which is its first and most important one, is to guarantee or grant loans for the construction of houses in Canada. As far as that role of banker is concerned, the responsibility of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation cannot be greater than that of a regular bank. So, it is the responsibility of anyone who borrows money to buy a house to make sure that he is buying a good quality product. If he gets a bad quality product, it becomes his responsibility to take action against those who sold him such bad product.

[English]

Mr. Friesen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister missed the point, which is that it is not only the responsibility of the home buyer to look at the bank loan, but it is the responsibility of the government to honour the trust that citizens put in it. When the government sends inspectors who do not do a proper job of inspection, the home owners again become the victims. Will the minister honour that commitment and honour the trust which people put in this government when they buy a home under a government-sponsored program?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated, the inspection duties of CMHC officers is to ensure that the loan, or the security of the loan is given for the reasons it was granted. That has nothing to do with municipal building standards, according to a certain zoning or according to certain plans and specifications approved by municipal authorities.

Consequently, when the hon. member says that the inspections made by CMHC officers were supposed to ensure building quality, he is giving these officers a responsibility which they never had in the first place.

AIRPORTS

UPGRADING OF FIRE-FIGHTING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport may I address my question to the parliamentary secretary?

In the light of a report carried in the Calgary Herald that victims of the plane crash at Cranbrook may well have survived—indeed, did survive—the crash but died subsequently of toxic fumes, and the fact that they would have survived if there had been adequate fire-fighting measures at the Cranbrook airport, is it the intention of the ministry to upgrade fire-fighting facilities at Cranbrook, Castlegar, Kelowna and similar airports?

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not have all the details which would allow me to reply adequately to the member's question. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if you and the hon. member will allow me, I would like to come back to it and discuss this personally with him by tomorrow.

TRADE

TRADE AND CONVENTION CENTRE IN VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In one of his visits to the House last week, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre called the attention of the minister to Canada's status as a Pacific rim country and to Vancouver as Canada's gateway to the Orient.

[Mr. Friesen.]

In view of the minister's avowed intention to promote foreign trade for Canada, can he tell the House whether the government has accepted the case put by the British Columbia trade delegation and whether his department will co-operate with the provincial and civic governments to ensure the creation of the proposed trade and convention centre in downtown Vancouver?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have met on two different occasions with the mayor of Vancouver and representatives of the British Columbia government to discuss their proposal to build a trade centre in Vancouver. It is a very interesting proposal, and when we can work out all the details we will consider it again.

Mr. Clarke: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of the urgency of the situation, in view of the plan that Seattle has for a similar centre which would detract from the benefits of the Vancouver centre to Canada?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think the problem was that neither the city of Vancouver nor the government of British Columbia wanted to assume the operating costs, whether there would be a profit or a deficit and, if there was a deficit, who would be picking up the operating costs. I think once the city or the province agreed on something like that, certainly the project might go ahead.

OFFICIAL REPORT

DELETION OF CERTAIN REMARKS OF HON. MEMBER FOR SOUTH WESTERN NOVA

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A few days ago the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) raised a problem which related to the faithful recording of the remarks of another hon. member in Hansard. This was in connection with a debate I believe on a previous evening. That has caused us, as one would expect, to verify the circumstances and determine the cause. I wish to inform the House that we have been able to identify the cause, which lies not with any intervention by any member of the House of Commons but rather one within the Hansard reporting staff itself. We are examining the matter to determine the reason for the alteration, and after further investigation we will be glad to bring the details to the attention of both members involved and to the House if necessary.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my apologies to the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) for any inference to the effect that she may have doctored Hansard; and I just remind her, through you, Mr. Speaker, that while this problem is removed, her dilemma with the bill later this day is not, and we are expecting her support.

STATISTICS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PROVISION OF INFORMATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-452, to amend the Statistics Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to remove from the Statistics Act the penalty provisions contained in section 29 which are directed against those individuals who refuse to answer questions on Statistics Canada surveys. The two exceptions to that bill would be questions contained in any census of population or agriculture. This bill is especially relevant at this time in view of a court case in British Columbia in which a citizen was charged with refusing to provide census information about what she considered personal matters. The decision in that case is pending.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BANK ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING STANDARDIZATION OF BANKING FORMS

Mr. Stewart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-453, to amend the Bank Act (standard forms).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that the forms used by banks in their dealings with the public are standardized as far as possible and kept up to date with provincial law. The basic problem is that under search and seizure legislation in the provinces the banks have failed to amend their own forms to comply with provincial law, and the public, in dealing with the banks, are being misled by the forms. As a result they have to pay for deficiencies after seizures. This bill would correct that.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING PROGRAMS DISCLOSURE ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING PROVISION OF ECONOMIC IMPACT STATEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-454, to provide for an economic impact statement to accompany certain Bills and regulations.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that when any bill or statutory instrument is introduced dealing with the appropriation of public funds, it shall be accompanied by an economic impact statement giving the initial and ongoing cost, a cost-benefit analysis, and other related information.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ANNUAL REPORTS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING PROVISION OF FINANCIAL STATEMENT AND RELATED INFORMATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-455, to provide for the inclusion of certain information in the annual reports of government departments and agencies.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that when by law any government minister or agency is compelled to file an annual report, in addition to the usual exculpatory, self-serving and glossy material which finds its way into the report, there shall be as well a proper financial statement with any comments made by the Auditor General or any committee, along with other related information, so the public will know what is going on in that department or agency.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Before we leave this part of the proceedings, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the government House leader would let me know whether he is in a position to indicate to us what business, its priority and the order if he can, the House will be dealing with when it returns on January 23. We have discussed that subject and the government House leader indicated that he would do his best to comply. If it is impossible to do so today, I will be very pleased to stand down and ask the question tomorrow.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think I can provide much of the answer today. When we return in January I propose to call Bill C-9, the referendum bill; Bill C-13, the Electricity Inspection Act and the Gas Inspection Act; Bill C-2, the Health Resources Fund Act; Bill C-24 a bill relating to the Two-Price Wheat Act; Bill C-29, a bill relating to the National Housing Act; and Bill C-27, respecting the Post Office Act. Certainly I would call Bill C-9, the referendum bill, first and the order of the others might be varied. However, that is the block of bills I would want to deal with when we get back.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this is a business question but it is not directed to the leader of the government. My question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. During the question period the minister was reading from a document in answer to a question. This answer became rather lengthy during the course of his dissertation to us, and he indicated that he would be prepared to table the document from which he was speaking, or alternatively the information that was contained therein. Is the minister in a position to do so now and, if not, will he arrange to do that tomorrow?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member could put a written question on the subject. I will make sure a reply is given very quickly under the normal procedure.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the statement made by the government House leader that we would take up Bill C-9 on January 23, can he say whether that is just for that day or is it intended to stay with that bill until second reading has been completed?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would expect to stay with that bill. I would hope that it would clear the House rather quickly, but it is my intention to get second reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the government House leader tell us, after having just enumerated all the bills, whether he forgot Bill C-12? Did he shelve Bill C-12, which has to do with pensions?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not forgotten about that bill. I will be discussing it later with the President of the Treasury Board who is urging me to bring it forward as quickly as possible. I have not yet finally decided when to bring it forward, but that decision will be made very shortly.

● (1512)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, since the government House leader has not forgotten about that particular bill, may I ask whether he would be good enough to forget about Bill C-24?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the House leader whether a reference will be given to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works of the Hare report concerning the management of Canada's nuclear waste. A great number of public hearings were held last year and a great deal of work has been done by the staff. In view of the importance of this question and the work that has already been carried out, it is very important that this reference be given to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works in the new sitting. I am interested in knowing if the minister will do that.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I discussed that with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I understand he proposes to place a motion on the order paper providing for a reference to that committee.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 76, 196, 200, 260, 267, 372, 476, 543, 595, 609, 616, 699 and 724.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

P.O.—CANADIAN COAT OF ARMS—SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 76—Mr. Jones:

1. Why was the Canadian Coat of Arms which was originally adorning the Post Office in Springhill, Nova Scotia replaced? Upon whose instructions and by what authority? At what cost?

2. How many other Post Offices in Canada will have the same type of bilingual sign placed in front? Give total costs across Canada. Is this an example of service or restraint?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): In so far as Public Works Canada is concerned: 1. The Canadian Coat of Arms originally adorning the post office in Springhill, N.S. was removed in error by the contractor engaged to instal the bilingual sign. It was replaced by him at no cost to the Government of Canada.

2. Bilingual signs have been ordered for the 2,718 post offices administered by Public Works Canada. It is impossible to say exactly what the total cost of all bilingual signage in front of post offices across Canada will be as there is no single cost. The expenditures will all be different as all projects must take into account such variables as the size of the sign, the cost of construction, the cost of installation and shipping charges. However, a ballpark manufacturing cost has been estimated at $1,685,160 exclusive of installation and shipping charges. The bilingual signage program is carried out as required by the Official Languages Act and the Federal Identity Program.

U.I.C. OFFICE—OROMOCTO, N.B.

Question No. 196—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1977, were studies made regarding the possible establishment of a UIC office at Oromocto, New Brunswick and, if so, has such an office been established and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, as part of a review of the locations of all manpower and unemployment insurance offices in New Brunswick. No action has yet been taken due to budgetary constraints.

Question No. 197—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1977, were studies made regarding the possible establishment of an employment office at Oromocto, New Brunswick and, if so, has such an office been established and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): See reply to written question 196 answered this day.

FARM LABOUR OFFICES—FRASER VALLEY, B.C.

Question No. 200—Mr. Friesen:

1. How many farm labour offices were set up in the Fraser Valley in British Columbia in 1978?

2. Approximately how many requests did the offices fill for farm labour?

3. How many farm labour contractors used farm labour offices to supply their requests or as contacts?

4. How many farmers used farm labour contractors, using farm labour offices and referral agencies?

5. How many of the farmers using the facilities of the farm labour offices indicated that they would pay in excess of the minimum wage?

6. How many farmers using the facilities of the farm labour offices indicated that they would pay the minimum wage?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Three seasonal offices were established in 1978 at Chilliwack, Cloverdale and Richmond. In addition, farm labour services are provided on a year-round continuing basis by the Canada farm labour pool at Abbotsford and the Canada Employment Centre at Surrey.

2. This year, to October 31, the offices made a total of about 10,042 placements.

3. Approximately ten contractors used them to recruit workers and another ten, as contracts for labour market information.

4. Some 75-100 farmers.

5. and 6. There are no minimum wage requirements for agricultural employment in British Columbia.

POST OFFICE—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 260—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Post Office Department and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—LAWYERS IN PROVENCHER

Question No. 267—Mr. Epp:

From June 1, 1974 to date, what lawyers in the Constituency of Provencher were given work by the Department of Employment and Immigration and what amount was each paid per year?

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): In so far as the legal agents of the Minister of Justice are concerned: None.

"OJIBWAY LANGUAGE COURSE OUTLINE"

Question No. 372—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What was the total cost of the booklet Ojibway Language Course Outline published by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. How many were (a) printed (b) distributed?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

1. Design $ 831
   Typesetting 2,608
   Printing 6,911

2. (a) 5,000 copies were printed.

(b) The booklet was prepared for distribution to federal schools in regions where the Ojibway language is spoken. A small number of copies are being distributed to IAND classroom consultants across the country, and copies will be provided on request to provincial schools or other interested organizations. As the booklet was published only three weeks ago, distribution is only now underway.

FARM LABOUR OFFICES—SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 476—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Were farm labour offices set up in Saskatchewan in 1978 and, if so, how many?

2. How many farm labour contractors used the offices to contact or supply farm personnel?

3. How many requests for farm labour were filled from the offices?

4. How many farmers using the facilities paid (a) the minimum wage (b) more than the minimum wage?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. Six Canada farm labour pools, established prior to 1978, continued operations this year on a full-time, year-round basis. These offices are situated at Moose Jaw, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Saskatoon, Weyburn and Yorkton. No additional offices were opened.

2. None.

3. This year, to October 31, they filled 1,509 requests.

4. There are no minimum wage requirements for agricultural workers in Saskatchewan.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—BUDGET

Question No. 543—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Minister of National Defence make a speech to the Men's Canadian Club of Winnipeg on October 5, 1978 in which he stated that DND's budget for next year was $4.5 billion and, if so (a) is this an accurate figure (b) what part of this increase of $372 million over the 1978-79 budget is accounted for by (i) inflation (ii) real increase in the capital budget (iii) real increase in the overall budget in accordance with NATO commitments?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b)(i), (ii), (iii) Yes. The Minister of National Defence did refer to a $4.5 billion budget for next year. However, the 1979-80 Estimates-Budget is currently the subject of discussion-negotiation with Treasury Board, and neither the precise total nor details of content have been finalized.

DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEES

Question No. 595—Mr. Holmes:

1. How many inter-departmental and intra-departmental committees are there in the various departments, agencies and Crown corporations and, in each case (a) how frequent does it meet within a fiscal year (b) what is the name of the committee and for what purpose was it constituted (c) how many man-days are used at each meeting?

2. In the case of each committee, were any meetings held outside the City of Ottawa and, if so (a) in what locations (b) at what cost (c) how many persons attended the meeting from (i) Ottawa (ii) other areas of the country?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): No registry of inter-departmental or intra-departmental committees is maintained, either centrally or within each department. The information requested, therefore, could only be provided by a major expenditure of resources, which is not warranted in relation to the subject matter in question.

CUSTOMS OFFICE—EDMONTON

Question No. 609—Mr. Malone:

1. Does a client have to pay storage charges on items (a) that are being cleared (b) prior to their being cleared by Canada Customs and, if so, for what reason?

2. What was the largest payment made for storage at the Edmonton Customs and Excise Office for the period January 1 to November 1, 1978?

3. Is there a maximum length of time an item can be stored and, if so, what is the time period?

4. Is there a shortage of staff to clear items through customs and, if so, for what reason?

5. Do customs officers in Ottawa refuse to answer their telephones when called by brokers in Edmonton in an attempt to obtain clearance on items and, if so, for what reason?

6. Are some shipments cleared in two days and at a later time clearance may require more than a month for a similar shipment and, if so, for what reason is there a variation?

7. Does a client have any recourse to a customs office that unduly holds items and then, in turn, unduly charges the costs to the client and, if so, what is it?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Goods imported into Canada, other than parcel post shipments, must be stored before entry is made in a sufferance warehouse for safe-keeping. Sufferance warehouses are not operated by the department and any storage charges assessed are payable to the warehousekeeper in accordance with his scheduled warehouse storage rates.

2. For the period of January 1 to November 1, 1978, the Edmonton Customs and Excise office has not assessed or received any payment for storage charges.

3. Goods may be stored in a sufferance warehouse for 30 days, and in a bonded warehouse for a period of two years. Parcel post shipments may remain in customs custody for 30 days.

4. Staff allocated to goods clearance is considered adequate to facilitate processing and release of shipments directed to Edmonton.

5. Officers in Ottawa are always at the disposal of importers or brokers to discuss customs matters. The clearance of items at local customs is contingent upon the presentation of quality entry documents and the payment of duty and taxes. The clearance function is the responsibility of local customs staff and not of Ottawa personnel.

6. Customs is responsible for the protection of Canadians and the Canadian economy with respect to certain imported goods, and release may be declined until the requirements of other departments or agencies are fulfilled. Unless precluded from granting release by external requirements such as mentioned in the previous sentence, customs shipments are generally cleared within hours of presentation of properly completed entry documents.

7. Subject to the requirements mentioned in part 6 above, goods are not held by customs after formal entry has been made. Once clearance has been granted, the goods are released to the post office, to the importer or to the carrier for delivery to the consignee.

FORESTRY POLICY

Question No. 616—Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

Does the Canadian Council of Resource and Environmental Ministers have committees meeting to examine national forestry policy and, if so, will the government suspend implementation of cutbacks in the operating programme of the Canadian Forestry Service until their report is received in June?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): The Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers is sponsoring a study of some aspects of national forest policy, specifically the current status of the forest resource and measures dealing with its protection and enhancement. Several working groups involved in the study have met, but no report is expected until June 1979. This report will not constitute a national forest policy. The government is not planning to suspend implementation of cutbacks in the Canadian Forestry Service until the report is received.

FISHERIES AND MARITIME PROGRAM

Question No. 699—Mr. Forrestall:

Will any activities or projects be curtailed or terminated as a result of the $7,500,000 general reduction to the Fisheries and Marine Programme and, if so, which ones?

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): The $7,500,000 general reduction to the Fisheries and Marine Program will result in some curtailment and termination of certain activities and projects. Specific programs to be curtailed or terminated will be identified by early January and are currently under review in order to minimize any negative impact.

WAR VETERANS

Question No. 724—Mr. Howie:

How many war veterans in Canada have been waiting for more than six months for a decision to determine their (a) entitlement to a disability pension (b) right to an increase in their disability pension?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs):

(a) As of November 30, 1978, 888 applications for pension entitlement at the first decision level were awaiting decision for seven months or more. (Statistics are not available for the six month period).

(b) At any given time fewer than 100 pensioners are waiting more than six months from the time of requesting a medical examination until a decision is reached with respect to a possible increase in the assessment of their pensionable disabilities.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved:

That a ways and means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act, of which notice has been tabled in the House on Thursday, November 16, 1978, be agreed to.

Motion agreed to.

Unemployment Insurance Act

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 19, consideration of Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and motion No. 1 (Mr. Leggatt).

Mr. Richard Janelle (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I must say that many things have happened since I began my speech on Tuesday evening. The government has introduced closure on Bill C-14 and has then decided to restrict the time allowed to us and perhaps even to prevent some members from making representations on behalf of their constituency.

First I would like to recall a statement which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) made on September 1, 1978. At that time, the minister explained one of the major objectives of the new amendments to the unemployment insurance legislation. He said: I want to make sure that the unemployment insurance system fully encourages Canadians to look for a job and accept one. I must admit that I agree with those fine ideas but I must also point out that in practice, the minister seems to have forgotten his statement.

It has been said that the money the government will save through these cuts in unemployment insurance benefits will be used for job creation. In my riding the budget for Canada Works has been cut in half this year. Is that job creation? Is that using the money you save to create jobs? Over two years, the reduction will be about $1.5 billion, I think. That reduction represents about 60 per cent of the budget for the so-called economic boost of Canada.

The minister had announced a budget reduction of some $2.5 billion, but because of that federal budget cut, because of that 60 per cent reduction in unemployment benefits, a reduction which is detrimental to low income earners, to those who have less than all others, the federal government passes its responsibility over to the provincial governments which will have to pay these sums through their own social welfare or social assistance programs. People do not live without money, like apples in the trees. The minister says he wants to encourage people to find jobs. I agree with him on that, but at the present time there are about 900,000 people unemployment and only 50,000 jobs available. What can people do? Are they going to divide the jobs by 20 so that everybody can work? Are they going to create enough jobs to find work for everybody on the labour market? I do not think so, especially with a government such as this. The government will say that the provinces are responsible for the present situation. The provinces will have to increase further their taxes to cover the increase in their social assistance and social welfare expenses. These measures will again pit the provinces against the federal government.

Moreover, they have decided to reduce unemployment insurance benefits from 66⅔ per cent to 60 per cent. Once again the people who have the smaller incomes will have to pay more. They will get 6⅔ less in benefits and have to cope with an 8.6 per cent rate of inflation, so that their purchasing power will be reduced by 15 per cent. Are they going to keep on penalizing the meek who need help most?

Ever since I was elected to the House, most of the bills which have been introduced have been detrimental to the poor. This bill is a fine example of this. The unions have denounced this bill. I feel the CSD has clearly expressed my point of view when it said that through this bill and specifically clause 1, the government was penalizing everybody. It was assumed that Quebec workers would rather work than be unemployed and I do believe so too. Second, the federal government must create conditions that will help to create jobs. That is not what it is doing today. Third, the federal government ought to make an all-out attempt to see that workers do not suffer from the closing down of businesses. I think an effort has to be done in that area too. Fourth, the federal government must stop making cuts in its social programs.

That is the opinion of the CSD, a union from where I come from. But the CSD is not the only one that made representations. People in my riding, in cities like Saint-Flavien, Dosquet, Victoriaville and Warwick did send me letters, did make representations so I would rise against this bill which penalizes people. We certainly are not against the fact that cheaters ought to be penalized, we are not against turning down those who abuse the system. But like the Economic Council of Canada, we recognize that four out of five persons who draw unemployment insurance do so because they have no choice. Only a minority of people abuse the system and not the majority of them.

And now they have decided to penalize the majority because of a particular small group. In the administration of all our social legislation, if not all our legislation, we see people who try to cheat. But are we going to change all this legislation? Are we going to make it still more restrictive and penalize the good? I say this on the basis that the good should not pay for the bad inside the system. We should have guidelines, we should have all kinds of possibilities to make our legislation applicable, to prevent cheating as much as possible, but to give all those who are really eligible the social advantages we have.

Furthermore, we are going to penalize our seasonal workers because it will be necessary to have 20 weeks of insurable employment to be able to receive unemployment insurance benefits. In my area there are construction workers who are going to find it difficult to accumulate 20 weeks of employment because of bad weather in winter and of a decline in the construction industry. There are also in my area clothing industries, a very disturbed, and even menaced sector, which does not give employment 12 months a year, unfortunately. The majority of the workers in that industry are women. It will be difficult for those women to meet the requirement of 20 weeks of insurable employment.

We are told that exceptions will be made in areas which will show an unemployment rate lower than 11.5 per cent according to Statistics Canada. There, one will be eligible for unemployment benefits after having worked a lesser number of weeks. But because of these new provisions, a lot of these unemployed people who collect benefits will be dropped off the rolls. There will be no more areas where the unemployment rate will be 11.5 per cent; it will be impossible. They will disappear from the statistics. We know that as of now the statistics are misleading. They say: in your area you have approximately a 12 per cent to 13 per cent rate of unemployment. But that does not mean 12 per cent to 13 per cent unemployed. It does not take into account people on welfare people who have basic needs. Are we just going to say: As for you, you may starve to death. Our social laws no longer apply to you. You are no longer entitled to unemployment benefits. They will have to turn to welfare where there will be hassles, where one will have to kneel in order to try and get something. We have now reached that stage.

Here we are faced with a callous government which does not remember what it is to have a heart, to think of the underprivileged, to think of all the people of Canada who have to be able to live. To me these cuts are not the answer. Women are penalized and we know that in every piece of social legislation they are always the ones hardest hit. Women are penalized as well as young people who are out of school and looking for a job without finding one. Why? Because there are none. The labour market seems to have reached the saturation point, and no new jobs are being created.

In my own riding of Lotbinière in the last year alone it would be easy to count on the fingers of one hand how many new industries did settle in the area. This is not due to a lack of manpower but to a lack of purchasing power on the part of the people. And now a little more of their purchasing power is being whittled down. The sale of our products will be made a little more difficult.

An hon. Member: Go and see them!

Mr. Janelle: An hon. member from the other side tells me to go and see them. I do not think that the Montreal area is in a much better position, not that there is no unemployment there. I think that unemployment is now a national problem. I think that when we are close to the million mark, when there are almost one million unemployed, a responsible government must of necessity confront the problem and take some action in order to help the people.

This piece of legislation seeks to eliminate swindlers. I agree with that and, as I said a moment ago, I am prepared to help the government get rid of swindlers, but some people in my riding come to see me every week because they have problems with the unemployment insurance, because of the deliberate attempt of some officers to get them out of the system and blame it on the computer, telling them their file has been "set aside" and their cheque might come in four weeks.

People are sick of the present system. Therefore, what will it be like with the new legislation? I regularly defend people with job problems before the arbitration board. Very often, we have to go before the board while the people are perfectly right and the officials could give them their benefits immediately. But they would rather say: Go and see your member of parliament, he will take care of it. In your case, you are lucky, your member of parliament is a Social Crediter. Those people like cases of unemployment. They can deal with them.

In the constituency of Lotbinière, I replaced a man who had done a great job for the entire population and who was thoroughly devoted to the interests of his constituents. I represent the same people and I want to do the same job and always defend the weak, those who need it, the clothing or furniture plant employees, the unemployed, the welfare recipients, those who most need someone humane from their own constituency to serve them and to defend them from this type of bureaucracy.

As for the legislation under consideration, that we shall be forced to pass because of closure, and I am thinking about the bill on unemployment, certain members could have stood up and said something. Last Tuesday, certain government members rose in the House and said that the bill was not very good and would cause problems in their area because of the unemployment figures. I cannot wait to see what these people will do when it is time to vote. Will they truly represent their constituents or will they decide that they must first support their government? I believe that since we are elected by the people, whatever the legislation before us, we should vote according to our conscience and according to what the people whom we represent want us to do.

I know that we do not have much time and I would like as many members as possible to speak about the amendments. There are about 16 amendments to be discussed from now until 9.45, and we certainly do not have enough time to make the necessary representations.

I believe that each member should have the opportunity to say at least a few words about this bill. I shall therefore close my comments by saying that it is essential to change our present systems concerning unemployment and all other social legislation and to implement a universal guaranteed annual income, which would avoid the need for the ministers to rise in the House to say that we must put an end to abuse.

No abuse would be possible as everybody would get it. We would just have to get it back in some other way from those who already have an adequate income. I think we should give everyone a minimum income, an adequate income, so that they will not have to go down on their hands and knees before some civil servant that will crush them a little further down and say: I have a good job, I am paid every week, I do not need you and you will get your cheque when I please.

So I hope, Mr. Speaker, that my remarks will be heard by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and that he will at least make up his mind to withdraw this bill and to improve the unemployment insurance legislation for the sake of all Canadian citizens.

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate; I only regret that I am taking part in it in the circumstances in which parliament is forced to deal with this bill, one which has very serious faults in it. What is worse, we are forced to deal with it in a way which prevents improvements, which prevents the House of Commons doing the very work it is here to do.

We know we are in a situation of closure and we are in this situation for unusual reasons. For one thing, there are very deep divisions among supporters of the Liberal party with regard to this measure.

[Translation]

There is a good deal of disagreement, probably more than on any other issue now before this House.

[English]

That is the reason we are facing closure. Usually when closure is introduced, it is to prevent the opposition from talking. In this case closure has been introduced by this government to stop its own backbenchers.

• (1532)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maine: How can you be so stupid? Hypocrite.

Mr. Clark: The proof of that came on Monday night when four Liberals took part in the debate. One was the minister, who was obliged to defend what he introduced, but the other three, the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie), l'honorable député de Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) and the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell), all Liberal members, got up one after another, criticized this bill and indicated—and we will be able to test their word later tonight or tomorrow—that they were not able to support the bill which was before the House in the form it was in. The minister knew that if he gave more latitude to more Liberal members so that they could get up and make more speeches, there would be more criticism of his own bill from his own party.

Mr. Maine: Untrue.

Mr. Clark: The reason we have closure is not to silence the opposition, which is usually the case. The reason we have closure is to silence the unquiet, divided and decaying Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This bill comes to us at this late stage in what really has been a parade of incompetence by this government. First, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced last August that he had suddenly discovered restraint. A month after that this minister got up—

[Translation]

Someone asked why I was not here for the vote yesterday evening. I had a good reason. I was away in the interest of national unity, since I was taking part in a program recorded in French designed to inform Quebeckers of the policies of the Conservative party, as it is obvious that only our party is able to keep our country united. We need the support of French Canadians. This is what I was doing yesterday evening. That is why I was not here to vote, but I will be here often for votes and I doubt very much that the members opposite will often be in the House after the next election.

[English]

We have had a veritable parade of incompetence. First, the Prime Minister discovered restraint in August. Then the minister discovered the need for this bill in September, but he was not able to bring it before this House for two full months. What is clear about that delay is that although the government should have been preparing this legislation and putting it together carefully over the summer, it was not because members of the government did not know that they had discovered restraint until they heard the announcement on August 1. That came as a total surprise to them. Consequently, they did not undertake the preparation they should have if they were going to put last summer to good use. If they had put last summer to good use and if they had been serious about introducing amendments which would have saved money and reduced inequity, they would have brought in a very different bill from the bill with which we are dealing in the House now.

This bill is designed to pretend restraint. It is not at all designed to achieve restraint. The bill is badly drafted. The Economic Council of Canada warned against this approach to this problem before the bill was introduced.

The ten provinces of Canada, including the one Liberal province—by one seat—the province of Prince Edward Island, and all the other provinces unanimously warned against this approach. Even the one NDP province warned against this approach during committee stage.

Mr. La Salle: Quebec too.

Mr. Clark: And the province of Quebec—

[Translation]

—the province of Quebec where they have reservations with respect to this bill along with all other provinces because this is not an effective bill which can meet the objectives contemplated by the ministers, on the one part, or by other Liberal members, on the other part.

[English]

I must give particular credit to my colleagues the new member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), and others who have proposed very serious improvements and reforms with which unfortunately the House of Commons will not be able to deal because this government is so concerned about support among its own members that it has introduced closure to cut off debate and stop parliament from carrying out the work of reform which parliament is here to carry out.

What is worse than this parade of incompetence is that the minister refuses to accept improvements, and for one reason: He did not propose those improvements. He would rather take credit for a bad bill than share credit for a good bill.

Mr. Maine: Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Clark: That contempt for parliament which is evident in the minister's rejection of amendments which would improve this legislation was also made absolutely clear when he deliberately and knowingly went ahead with the publication in the Canada Gazette of provisions in this legislation before this parliament had an opportunity to pass upon those provisions.

Mr. McGrath: The minister will be hearing more about that.

Mr. Clark: As my colleague the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) says, the minister will be hearing more about that, as will his colleagues, particularly from Atlantic Canada and les régions de l'Est du Québec. They will also be hearing a great deal more about the minister's comment when he deliberately went out of his way to attack a generation of people in Canada, to attack a region of this country and to attack those who live in areas of high unemployment and who are not able to move. He attributed to them the basest of motives for being in a situation which is largely the creation of this government because of its failure in economic policy.

There is no question at all that the unemployment insurance program of this country very much needs reform. It costs much more that it should. It builds in a disincentive to work. It encourages too many Canadians in this land not to seek to develop their own potential. It includes serious invitations to abuse. The question I have to raise—and indeed the question will be raised across this country whenever an election comes—is why will the Government of Canada not take the time which parliament is here to give to improve this bill? Why does the government force this matter through, simply to save itself from embarrassment because its own members disagree? Why does the government force this bill through and not allow us an opportunity to consider and debate specific, positive reforms which would save more money and which would have other beneficial effects? Why does the government not want to consider the reforms proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and others in this House.

We know that this is the sixth or seventh bill in eight years dealing with the unemployment insurance question. It will not be the last one because the bill will create new injustices and it will require further changes later on. What is absolutely unacceptable to us on this side of the House is that the Government of Canada is forcing a bad bill through parliament. The bill is not bad by accident or because the government does not know better. The government is proceeding deliberately, and it is refusing to consider reforms which, first, would save the people of Canada more money; second, would be much more just to Canadians across the country; third, would create much more incentive to work among Canadians; and finally, would be much less complicated than this bill.

There are two essential differences between the two serious parties in this House on questions relating to unemployment insurance legislation. The first is that the government pretends that every unemployed Canadian is the same. By contrast, we recognize that hardship is much greater for those unemployed Canadians who have dependants for whom they have to care, and we recognize also that abuse has been much greater among those Canadians who do not have dependants for whom they have to care. The other difference is that the government's proposal is very complicated. It establishes different standards based upon different regions of the country.

[Translation]

We heard the other night the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) who referred to the problems caused in his own riding by an artificial line drawn by this government. There are now in the riding of Charlevoix and many other ridings in the province of Quebec small villages on one side of the Saguenay river with a standard and other small villages on the other side of the river with a different standard. So this is a double-standard government.

● (1542)

It is absolutely unacceptable to us to have this kind of situation brought in by this government, creating confusion and complexity where none needs to be. We would base the distinction which must be brought into this bill on whether or not an unemployed Canadian has to support other persons. The government, in contrast, bases its distinction on whether the unemployed live in Canada, on what side of the Saguenay they are. If they are on one side of the Saguenay river, they are treated one way; if, by sheer chance, they happen to be on the other side, they are treated another way.

That is absolutely absurd. It is bureaucratic nonsense imposed in a way that is guaranteed to create injustice in this country, and yet that is precisely what this government is proposing. They are proposing it despite the fact there is a better way, because they know there is before the House of Commons right now amendment No. 14 proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, which is a much better approach which will not create the problems which are being created by the government's own proposal.

The government's stubbornness is costing hundreds and probably thousands of Canadians simple equality and justice of treatment. It does not care about the people who suffer from the double standard, the people who, because they happen to live on one side of the Saguenay and not on the other, will be treated differently from their cousins or neighbours. It prefers to persist in its stubbornness and push through a bad bill rather than accept amendments which would make it better.

Our proposal, which has been outlined effectively by other members of the House, establishes that persons with dependants would continue to be covered for two-thirds of earnings for which they are now insured. We do that for a reason—because these are the Canadians who most need help in our system. It stands to reason that they need help most because they have more other Canadians to care for. Also, they are the Canadians who are least mobile. If you have dependants, it is not as easy to move to other places where you might find work as it is if you do not have dependants. These are people who have special cause for the attention and concern of their government, but their special requirements are absolutely ignored by this government.

Instead of dealing with people who have particular problems, this government has set up a little artificial group of districts in the country. It imposes a geographical complexity which ensures vested injustice being dealt to a large number of Canadians. We are proposing in the amendment introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, a two-tier system. It would introduce a second category of benefits based upon the principle that those Canadians who do not have dependants under the Income Tax Act will be covered for only 50 per cent of their earnings.

It has been made very clear by members on this side that we are also proposing, as part of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, that we will vest in a married couple the right to decide and establish themselves which one of the couple will be the one to whom dependants are attached. Because the law as it now stands involves a serious discrimination against women, and we propose a means by which that can be mitigated. That too this government have turned down. They would prefer to live with discrimination against women than to remove it as it exists in this bill.

The proposal for the two-tier system which we introduced would save, by the government's own reckoning, in the neighbourhood of $850 million. Their proposal, by their reckoning, would save in the neighbourhood of $935 million. But—and the buts are pretty important—it would add at least $43 million to the welfare costs of the provinces and Lord knows how much to the welfare costs of the municipalities across this country. It is unfortunately far too typical of the restraint that pretends to be practised by this government. They are not reducing over-all expenditure; they are simply making some paper cuts and passing the real burden on to other levels of government which cannot afford to bear them as well as the Government of Canada can.

I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Maine), who represents an Ontario constituency, shaking his head negatively.

Mr. Maine: Your facts are all wrong.

Mr. Clark: Unfortunately, he reflects the same kind of attitude of indifference toward Atlantic Canada that was reflected by his colleague who is here in the House, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who, when he heard about the most recent election result in Nova Scotia, the collapse of the Liberal regime, said: "What does it matter; it is only another municipality down there".

[Translation]

And I must add that I am really surprised by what the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) had to say—

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) would not want to mislead the House. I said I considered it as another municipal election. He has in his caucus now the mayor of the city of Toronto. I am sure he would not want to downgrade him as just another municipal official. As one who has spent many years in municipal politics, I have the highest respect for municipal elections.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I am not only delighted to have the minister confirm what he said but also delighted to hear him draw attention to the fact that the former mayor of Toronto was one of the five new Conservative members of parliament who won seats from former colleagues of his in the Liberal cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I was also delighted to have heard the interjection from his colleague behind, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), who referred to me as the temporary Leader of the Opposition. That is right, I am.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, this is a real surprise for me that we should have here the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), a minister coming from eastern Quebec, a minister coming from an area with a really excessive rate of unemployment, who is prepared because I believe he did not speak in this debate—his colleagues in the corner did; they spoke against the bill—but he might be prepared to accept the bill that might force on the unemployed in eastern Quebec and underprivileged areas a greater prejudice, another impediment that might cause them problems in their development as a people and as an area.

[English]

It is a real surprise to me that a minister responsible for economic expansion would allow this government to impose these kinds of obstacles upon the development of underdeveloped regions in this country, particularly when they have before them the opportunity to adopt an amendment which would do away with the kinds of problems they are imposing on Atlantic Canada, on the east of Quebec and on lower income Canadians right across the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) on a point of order.

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) that indeed I support this bill because I believe it is an excellent way of helping, by using those funds for other purposes, to create permanent jobs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. minister will be able to make his contribution later on if he wishes to but at this time the Leader of Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the minister probably anticipated something I want to say later on about the yet unspecified costs to Canada of this bill introduced by the government.

[English]

Because I am sure that one of the uncalculated costs to the people of Canada is that there will be a need for this government to pour more money into regions which have been treated by this bill. When we look at the over-all cost of this bill, when we try to calculate the effective restraint in this legislation, it will be important for us to look at the new expenditures of departments other than that of the minister who is proposing this bill which will be necessary to deal with the problems that have been caused by this bill. I am pleased to see the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) nodding his head in agreement with my proposition that there will be extra new expenditure, expenditure not in the budget and not anticipated before the bill was brought in, to take account of the very serious problems of poverty which will be caused and aggravated by this piece of legislation.

• (1552)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The two-tier proposal we have put forward is a much better way of approaching the problem we face for a number of reasons. First, there will be a direct saving which is significantly more than the aggregate saving of the measures being forced down the throat of parliament by the government. Second, the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra will not create the number of problems which will have to be dealt with later, the problems that the government is ensuring will occur by the nature of its legislation. Those problems will turn out to be very expensive to the country, expensive not only in terms of the obstacles to hope and development which will be put in the path of individual Canadians, but also expensive in terms of new programs. Perhaps there will be additions to winter works, LIP and a number of programs which will come forward to deal with the problems the government is creating deliberately today in the House of Commons.

Our proposal has the advantage of being acceptable to all of the provinces and, I would judge, the municipalities of this country. The mere fact that a matter is acceptable to the provinces is cause enough for the government to oppose it.

That has been well established. That is why we have not achieved such a healthy state of unity during the ten years in which the government has been responsible for the direction of national affairs. The government goes out of its way to disagree with the provinces. The amendment we are putting forward is an amendment supported in its general thrust by the provinces, and would be far preferable to the provinces of Canada than the matter forced by closure down the throats of members of the House of Commons by the government today.

The proposal we are making would not create the bureaucratic nightmare which will be imposed upon the citizens of this country by the establishment of districts based upon geography where average levels of unemployment happen to be different. It would not create this nonsense where citizens, as a Liberal member said the other night, on one side of the Saguenay have a different set of standards from citizens on the other side of the Saguenay. It would not write in the law the kind of absurdity which is central to the bill before us now.

One of the very, very important reasons the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra is superior to the bill before the House is that it builds in a clear incentive for Canadians to go to work. It would reduce the percentage of benefits available to people in the second tier, people without dependants under the Income Tax Act. As I have indicated, these are the people who are more mobile. Perhaps the minister is disagreeing with his own statistics, but before doing so he had better see if he has published them in the Canada Gazette. Statistically these people have been indicated as being more likely to abuse the system.

Mr. Muir: The minister is sucking his finger.

Mr. Clark: Yes, I notice the minister is sucking his finger. That fact is pointed out by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) who has suffered a double insult from the government. First of all, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) went to Cape Breton with his rather eccentric views on unemployment and the attitudes toward work of the citizens of Cape Breton. Now those people are maligned as simple thumbsuckers instead of working Canadians by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In the proposal we are putting forward there is a very real incentive to Canadians who do not have dependants to go out and work, those people who make up the mobile part of the Canadian work force.

Mr. Cullen: What about married women?

Mr. Clark: The minister is talking about married women. Will the minister go so far, in his rush to closure and his rush to silence his own members, as to accept even that portion of our amendment that allows a family unit to determine which of their number will be categorized as the one to whom dependants attach? Or will he persist in the bill he introduced which continues discrimination against women?

The proposal of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra is a much better manner in which to deal with the problems posed for Canada by the present unemployment insurance scheme. The government refuses to let parliament consider that better way. It wants to force through the House of Commons a bad, bad bill. It is a terrible abuse of parliament. We are here not just to talk; we are here to improve pieces of legislation. I admit that there have been occasions in the House when opposition has been sometimes negative and there have not been things to propose. This is not one of those times. This is a time when party has come forward with a very acceptable, clearly preferable means of solving this problem.

I cannot speak for members of the New Democratic Party. They speak often for themselves. They have not been proposing anything positive. Their amendments are consistently destructive ones.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Our amendments point out a much better way in which Canada can deal with the problems posed by the unemployment insurance system. It is a much better way, but the government refuses to allow the Parliament of Canada to consider amendments which would improve the bill. The government refuses to allow the Parliament of Canada to consider amendments which would save Canadians more money, which would build in more incentive to work, and which would have a number of other advantages to the people of the country.

The legislation before us is a terrible abuse of the unemployed, a terrible disservice to Canadians out of work. The particular bitterness of that is so many Canadians who are out of work are out of work because we have had a government which for a decade has failed to give priority to economic growth in the country. Consequently, we have a government that created the problem of unemployment, which is at the base of the costs of the unemployment insurance program.

This proposal which is being forced down the throat of parliament and the throats of Liberal backbenchers involves a terrible waste of taxpayers' money. The government is forgoing savings which would be available. Our proposals would save more money than the proposals the Government of Canada is putting forward now.

Mr. Rodriguez: How many will go on welfare?

Mr. Clark: I hear the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). It is not a surprise in this House for us to hear from the hon. member for Nickel Belt. What he has just said confirms the suspicion many of us have had, that he talks so often and so loudly that he never listens to anyone else.

Frequently it has been made clear, and most recently by the hon. member for St. John's East, that my party intends to vote against the bill because we have a much better bill. In the national interest, we would like the government to accept—

Mr. Rodriguez: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clark: Is there another point of order, Mr. Speaker? Surely not.

Mr. Rodriguez: I wonder if the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) would entertain a question either now or at the end of his remarks?

Mr. Clark: If the hon. member for Nickel Belt thinks he can keep his question under ten minutes and allow me to finish my speech before my time has expired, I would be interested in entertaining it.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. Leader of the Opposition said that the proposals of his party would save more money than the proposals of the government. Should they lose their amendments, are they prepared to vote against a bill which will save, as the hon. leader said, the government some money but not as much as their amendments would save?

Some hon. Members: Listen, listen!

An hon. Member: Obviously the hon. member has been asleep.

Mr. Clark: The mere fact the hon. member for Nickel Belt has made a career of repeating himself in the House does not mean I have to.

Mr. Clark: This proposal wastes money for the Canadian taxpayers, not simply because it forgoes the savings, but because, as I mentioned earlier, it creates significant new likelihoods of spending by this government. We know the government has problems with the hon. member for Charlevoix; and we have heard hon. members over there talk about this. We know the government has problems with the hon. member for South Western Nova, and we have heard members speak about that. We know that the government is having problems with the hon. member for Hochelaga, and we can sympathize in that regard.

The fact is that even if members over there are able to cause those people to be absent from the votes, or even if they are able to cause them to put party before principle, which, of course, is part of the reason that presumably they joined that party, they are still going to have to face the demands of those members and of countless other members whose interests in their constituents and in their provinces are being very seriously damaged by this bill.

What we are going to see—and no doubt this will be smuggled through in the estimates—are millions of dollars pumped into those areas where problems are being caused by this government with this bill. That money will be pumped in in an attempt to rescue the Liberal party, and pumped in perhaps ultimately to deal with new real problems that are being created by this bill; but which should have been dealt with in anticipation, and never have been caused by this government. No doubt we will see this government try to smuggle through this House in a new session millions of dollars—I cannot say hundreds of millions as I do not know how much, but certainly it will be millions of dollars—in new expenditures to deal with the new problems that are being created. These are problems that do not now exist but which will come into being when this bill comes into law. That is the other way in which this bill is a terrible waste of the taxpayers' money in this country.

What we are seeing here today in this closure and in the reason for its introduction amounts to terrible treatment of the government's own principle. Because it is part of the tradition of this place, part of the history of parliament and part of what makes it work, that members of parliament, at least within their own parties, and preferably within this House of Commons, have the right to defend the interest of their constituents and their regions against legislation that is going to be harmful to those constituents and regions. They should at least have the right to put on record their defence. They should at least be given the right to get up and speak and to say: "Look what you are doing to the people of northern New Brunswick; look what you are doing to the people of Newfoundland; look what you are doing to the people of Prince Edward Island; look what you are doing to the people of Nova Scotia; look what you are doing to the people of eastern Quebec".

They should at least be given that right, but they are not being given that right. This government is denying the right of dozens of members to represent the interests of those who in their constituencies will be damaged by the imposition of closure. This imposition of closure is not to stop the opposition from speaking, but to stop the government's own members from talking.

Mr. Clark: The government can stop them from talking, but presumably some of them will want to vote. Let me give them a warning now. If by some accident they do not happen to be here, we will make it a point on the hustings to go into their constituencies and make clear that they were absent and did not stand up and be counted in the interests of their constituents when this government forced through a bad bill. We will be very interested in seeing how the hon. member for Charlevoix votes, how the hon. member for South Western Nova votes, how the hon. member for Hochelaga votes, how members from the north shore of New Brunswick vote, and how members from Newfoundland vote. We will be very interested in seeing whether they are going to put their party ahead of the interests of their regions, whether they are going to support this attempt to ram a bill down the throat of parliament when a better bill exists and when acceptable proposals for reform have been put forward by members on this side of the House. We will be interested to see how they vote, sir.

There is no question as to how we will vote. We will vote against this bill, and we will look forward to the earliest possible opportunity as a new government to bring in a better bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is very hard to take the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) seriously after the speech the hon. member has just made, and let me explain why I say that. I say that on the basis of the record of Hansard itself, which evidently he failed to read when he prepared his speech.

The Leader of the Opposition opened his speech this afternoon, and I made notes just for the fun of it—for the very fun of it, yes, indeed. He said that the bill had very serious faults and that the reason for introducing closure is deep division on this side of the House. Let me remind the Leader of the Opposition of what he can find for himself on page 2222 of Hansard for December 18, just Monday of this week. The official critic for the Tory party, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), quotes himself from second reading and again at the report stage. He stated:

—I said that this bill was a step in the right direction—

Having said that he goes on to say—

An hon. Member: Which Clarke is that?

Mr. Caccia: This is the Vancouver Quadra Clarke, the official critic of the Tory party. That member only three days ago went on to say:

Restraint and reform are sorely needed. We will see what happens to the amendments we put forth.

Then he concluded with this great statement of Tory policy:

We will see what happens to the amendments we put forth. Then we will make up our minds on the bill itself.

After 34 meetings of the committee, having heard all the witnesses and the amendments they have put forward, and there being, contrary to what the Leader of the Opposition said, ample opportunity in committee for this bill to be discussed, that hon. member on Monday in this House said:

Then we will make up our minds on the bill itself.

How can we take them seriously? At least there is one honest member in the Conservative benches who was straightforward when speaking after the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, that hon. member who said they will make up their minds on the bill itself.

On Tuesday the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) was straightforward and explicit when he said:

This bill is iniquitous. It is a bad bill, an unjust bill and an unfair bill. It is a bad bill, Mr. Speaker, and it is bad legislation.

This conclusion he arrived at after having urged the government to amend the bill. I have certainly never heard of people wanting to amend a bill that was so bad and iniquitous.

An hon. Member: To make it a better bill.

Mr. Caccia: To make it a better bill, exactly. Let us see some cohesion and consistency over there. Until the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra changes his job he is the official spokesman for the official opposition on unemployment insurance, and he is the one who said that the bill is a step in the right direction. That is what he said on Monday of this week.

Mr. Clarke: A small step, you fool.

An hon. Member: Capice?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: The Leader of the Opposition went on to ask why we are forcing this bill through, as if there had not been ample opportunity for discussion in the committee. We did have ample opportunity. Members of the official opposition had ample opportunity to express their views in committee. Some, such as the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), made a distinct effort to put forward an alternative view. We did not agree with it but we looked at it. To claim that the bill is being forced through after 34 committee meetings is stretching things too far. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would benefit from staying around here a little bit longer to find out what his colleagues are doing in committee. In making statements like that he is saying, in essence, that his colleagues have done nothing. That is not true. We have seen them work as hard as we did every day for five weeks.

● (1612)

The Leader of the Opposition also was very sarcastic about the geographic districts. Several times in his speech he made reference to one side of the Saguenay or the other side. I realize that he does not want to hear a critique of his speech because that is no fun and it is easier to criticize others. I do not blame him for engaging in conversations with another member at the present moment.

Let me remind the all-knowing Leader of the Opposition that it was the Tory party that introduced the idea of geographic districts in the discussion on Bill C-27. I believe the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) proposed it, but apparently it is no longer convenient so it is being attacked.

The Leader of the Opposition also put forward the grand scheme of the Tory party for a two-tier system, namely, that the unemployment insurance payments should differentiate between the head of a family and the secondary wage earner. There were extensive debates on this proposal in committee which are reported in the proceedings. The Tory party seems to ignore a number of facts. One is that heads of families or people alone without dependants have certain basic costs such as rent and heat which are virtually the same in both cases. Further, differentiating between the two groups would adversely affect women and young people.

Extensive studies carried out by the Unemployment Insurance Commission explained to members of the opposition—perhaps this was not reported to the Leader of the Opposition—that women without dependants make up 95 per cent of all women claimants of UIC benefits. Not only does the Tory party seem to ignore that fact, but they have engaged in a rather unusual policy approach whereby in one committee room certain members of their party defend women's rights and oppose anything that seems to be discrimination, while in another room other members of their party propose a differential in the benefits which would affect the very same women.

Another weakness of the two-tier proposal and a strong reason why we rejected it is that it introduced the idea of welfare or income transfer payments—in effect, an assessment of need. That is a poor basis on which to assess need since it would not take family income into consideration.

Mr. McCrossan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just want to point out to the hon. member that it was not this party that introduced the concept of differentiating benefits on the basis of need. The government introduced it in amendments to this bill with respect to the charge back to high income families.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, we should not mix one with the other. The two-tier system proposed by the Conservative party has exactly this effect. Let us not mix this with the effect on high income groups because we are talking about what the net effect of the two-tier system would be.

The Leader of the Opposition refused to answer what I thought was a legitimate question by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). He wanted to know if the Leader of the Opposition would support the government if his amendment were defeated, which would still mean at least supporting a measure which would cut costs considerably. Of course, it was beneath the dignity of the Leader of the Opposition to reply, yet it went to the very heart of this bill.

As to the final, grandiose, theatrical challenge by the Leader of the Opposition to members on our side regarding whether they will show up for the vote on this bill, I should remind him of the dismal record of his party regarding other bills in this parliament when some members of the Tory party did not show up for the vote.

Mr. Paproski: That is not true.

Mr. Caccia: I remember occasions very clearly when members of the Progressive Conservative party—who may no longer be members—did not show up to vote on a bill similar to this. Instead of sounding so pure and righteous the Leader of the Opposition should perhaps examine the record of his party.

In the debate on Bill C-14 it seems to me that something has to be said about its impact and what will be done in 1979 to offset the changes it will bring about. It is important to record that in 1979, $710 million will be invested in our economy in different ways in order to create jobs. Of this, a cash expenditure of $570 million will go to direct job creation. Forgone tax revenue will account for $100 million and $40 million in unemployment insurance funds will be used for job creation. This strategy is supposed to create some 113,000 jobs for one year which will mean, as I understand it, a 70 per cent increase in job-creation funds over the current year.

Some elements of this program that will be put in place are, first, the employment tax credit program to assist businessmen in expanding employment and job seekers in getting work which will be improved. There will be $70 million provided exclusively for skill training. Twenty million dollars will be used for the development of measures to help industry overcome critical shortages of skilled people. This will be done in conjunction with the provinces, industry and labour. Twenty million dollars will be added to skill training in and by industry. Thirty million dollars will be used to cover the institutional costs of increased skill training for industry.

A portable wage subsidy will be introduced to spur the re-employment of people laid off as a result of economic shifts and support. The youth employment program will be carried out at a cost of $225 million in the next year. Its major component is job experience training, commonly known as the JET program. This will provide employment and work experience for over 63,000 young Canadians. We will be utilizing unemployment insurance benefits, in the case of those who are eligible for them, to cover the $1.50 an hour wage subsidy involved in this program. In the case of those who are not eligible for unemployment insurance, the government will provide the subsidy in total.

The summer youth employment program funds and the year-round youth employment and the employability program funds will be increased from $14.5 million in fiscal 1978-79 to nearly $110 million in fiscal 1979-80.

It will also be desirable to have a look at what areas the government might wish to monitor as possible areas where amendments to this bill might be required to see that certain distortions might not take place in our general social and economic pattern. For instance, I would be interested in seeing the effect of the bill monitored and the effect it will have on entry and re-entry qualification for benefits. If this should cause a movement of people from rural to urban areas because people would be better able to re-enter the labour force when running out of benefits, then, of course, we would want to monitor this movement very closely. Trends of this kind which could lead to further centralization, urbanization or abandonment of rural areas are not desirable in any nation and we do not want to see that develop under any circumstance.

I would also be interested, as would many members of this House, in monitoring the effect of the reduction of the allowance for manpower training from the $45 which is being paid to the proposed $10 a week per person payable to the person who is not the primary wage earner. If it were to be established that this would have an adverse effect, then we should see to it that the allowance is brought back to the original level.

I would also like to say a few words about a widespread practice in urban Canada where more and more employers are requesting their employees to put in overtime. In the city where I come from we see this pattern, and I suspect this is not an isolated occurrence. The practice of demanding more and more time in my opinion is a bad one. It is a bad practice for health and safety reasons. This has been proven on a number of occasions by studies carried out by various jurisdictions. It is bad practice because it keeps unemployed people waiting for jobs for longer periods of time. It is a bad practice because it affects the job growth rate negatively. I would urge the Unemployment Insurance Commission to do whatever it can to discourage this practice of overtime work and to exert every possible pressure on employers to see that it comes to an end. However, I realize that there are difficulties associated with that.

In his closing remarks the Leader of the Opposition made reference to the fact that the government has failed to give priority to economic growth in its policy. Let me remind the Leader of the Opposition that this government has been able to produce 250,000 to 380,000 jobs every year over the past seven or eight years because of its economic policies. This surely demonstrates that the government has done whatever it could to stimulate economic growth according to very sound principles.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will leave the Leader of the Opposition to meditate on his own statements.

● (1632)

Mr. Yuri Shymko (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, in my first speech in the House, I had referred to the political and economic crisis in our country, the solution of which will have a deep influence on the future of Canada. That is why the members of this House are dealing at this time in our history with a bill which will have a major impact for all Canadians.

For this reason, I am quite pleased, Mr. Speaker, to take part in this debate which the government has tried to restrict. A motion for closure was introduced in the House of Commons as well as in committee. The members of our committee, the representatives of the people, were not even allowed to take part in the debate on the bill in committee. There are very few instances, Mr. Speaker, of such tactics being used by a party whose leader has advocated the popular policy of participatory democracy. It is a real human comedy, a plot which is still better than those of Molière, a real masterpiece contrived by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Any bill, Mr. Speaker, and any amendment is designed for a political purpose, that is to win the support of the majority of Canadians. They are all designed to make a good impression on Canadians in all regions, people of all social or economic classes, no matter what arguments, for or against, are presented during the debate, and that is done more particularly because we are getting closer every day to a general election. Mr. Speaker, there is no question about the fact that it is a controversial bill, not only so because members on both sides of the House do not agree on it, but also because members of the Liberal party do not agree among themselves, even though this does not show that much has or has not been said officially in the speeches we have heard in the House. But we all know very well that even the party in power is divided. It is quite natural, Mr. Speaker, that the actions taken by the Liberal party in this bill are political in nature and come as a reaction to pressures from Canadians who ask for cuts in spending and that they are in the line of a philosophy of economic restrictions which prevails not only in Canada, but in the whole world.

But, Mr. Speaker, since the government is said to have the responsibility of answering the needs of the majority of the population, this bill should be devised in a humanitarian way and from the point of view of social morality and we do not see that in the bill. Yes, we are in favour of economic restrictions because of ten years of wastage under this government led by a "Trudeaucratic" party which is ill advised, as far as priorities are concerned, by an army of bureaucrats trying to overcome the economic crisis by increasing the army of unemployed and there was 1.308 billion unemployed, Mr. Speaker, according to the statistics for March of this year, including official and unofficial figures, thus a struggle which increases the army of people on welfare by adding 250 million unemployed deprived of benefits. That is a struggle of justice, a struggle called responsible in the restraint philosophy.

If you are looking for logic, Mr. Speaker, you will have much difficulty finding it. That is called a responsible restraint policy, as I indicated, which will reduce by 10 per cent the rate of benefits for all the unemployed who will remain qualified. That is called responsible measures. Their effect will be to make people tighten their belt, Mr. Speaker, those who are least able to compress their budget in times of inflation which will reach a level of 9 per cent, something which is admitted even by the right hon. Prime Minister.

The official opposition party, with the amendment put forward by my colleague from Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), is suggesting a responsible economic restraints policy. Whatever the views of the New Democratic Party, our proposal would mean a policy of responsible restrictions, more equitable and more efficient which would make it possible to save an additional $150 million with less suffering for those who are going to be hurt by that measure. Our proposal, which was described as a two-tier system, is supported by most provinces, and I want to emphasize for the benefit of members of the New Democratic Party that even the governments of Saskatchewan and British Columbia are supporting it. Mr. Speaker, it becomes obvious that there will be a judgment in a few months, a public judgment through general elections. That judgment will come, it is unavoidable. Next week and in the weeks and months to come, we will see the reactions to that legislation if it is passed as it is now.

And I would like all hon. members from the government side to listen to this carefully. I am going to quote the newspaper Le Droit of Ottawa, December 14, 1978, in order to show how that reaction has started already. Well, members from the other side are asked to explain their position by answering ten questions on that bill. I will only give an idea of the Ottawa area response by listing the protesting organizations. They are the following, and I quote:

The four urban CLSC of the region, le Bureau régional de l'aide sociale, la Ligue des droits et libertés, l'Association coopérative d'économie familiale, le Conseil diocésain de pastorale, CNTU, QFL, le Centre des services sociaux, le Centre de défense des consommateurs, la Clinique juridique populaire de Hull, le Mouvement des travailleurs chrétiens and Développement et paix.

And, Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on enumerating the agencies which have already made their views known, even before the adoption of the bill. Imagine what the reaction will be in a few weeks. I say it once again with all the sincere compassion that I feel for you. Hear! It is beginning, people are responding, their judgment is before you. I do not want to speak like a prophet, but the facts are there. And you will suffer the consequences, that is for sure. I sympathize with the Minister of Unemployment, sorry, I mean the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen). That was a freudian slip. He is the first victim, the sacrificial lamb of Christmas, because I am sure he did all he could, but as you know, he did not have a choice, he was told he had to cut back $1.5 billion, he did all he could, but he was frustrated, and he reacted rather sensationally and his explanations were picked up by the media and caused quite a turmoil on this side of the House.

So I pity and sympathize with the minister, Mr. Speaker. This government is putting all the burden of change on the backs of working men and women. These problems are related to the economic crisis we are going through in Canada. First of all, we do not know what social and economic effects these measures will have, which are called the Cullen measures in Quebec, if we do not know, Mr. Speaker, how this money, taken and I would even say stolen from the unemployed, will be used for new job-creation programs.

We know nothing about that, Mr. Speaker. Here we are, being asked to pass a bill, without knowing in which industrial sectors the government intends to invest the $1.5 billion it will save. I say it again, this is being done on the backs of the workers, men and women, Mr. Speaker. A month ago, the minister indicated that he would meet his provincial counterparts to put proposals to them on 12 topics.

Mr. Speaker, may I continue my remarks. I am having problems even with the microphone. Do I have the permission of the hon. members opposite to continue?

Some hon. Members: You do not need it!

Mr. Shymko: Mr. Speaker, the minister indicated a month ago that he would present 12 questions on one—

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Longueuil on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but, though I recognize the eloquence of the hon. member opposite, he might as well be quoting excerpts from Stendhal's "Le Rouge et le Noir," and though it is true he has just recently come to the House, I should like to remind him that he should always address the Chair and not an hon. member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Shymko: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his remarks, but I should like to know why there was no public statement. If indeed the minister spoke with the representatives of the provinces, if indeed he consulted the provinces before introducing Bill C-14—

[English]

Or is this just another promise which I would qualify as much ado about nothing? The irony is that this is a few days before Christmas when we hear the words of peace to all men re-echoed in a myriad of languages throughout the world. We understand peace as peace with justice, at a time when the family becomes the centre of that spirit of Christmas. At this very time, ironically, Mr. Speaker, the government is bearing its Christmas gift with this bill, paying for its own mismanagement since 1971 when it made the first change which eliminated the two-tier system, which the Liberals had themselves introduced, I believe, in the 1940s and eliminated in 1971.

● (1642)

The logic would be that it is now time to reintroduce a two-tier system which was more just, more egalitarian and more humane. I urge hon. members opposite to read the speeches in Hansard of that time when the two-tier system was introduced. I think they would be interested if they re-read those speeches. The minister is victimizing the disadvantaged. They are the sacrificial lambs on the altar of Liberal mismanagement. The bill before us is one which I would describe as the first existentialist bill in the history of this country.

An hon. Member: Oh, I like that.

Mr. Shymko: I say existentialist because the only sense it is making is its nonsense. That is the philosophy of absurdity in existentialism. The only "sense" we find in these changes is that they do not make any sense whatsoever. It is a bill of total absurdity. It is contrary to all the announcements, all the clichés about the just society, that the Prime Minister has talked about all these years. Let us repeat those clichés of a just society to the working mothers, to the youth of our country, to our seasonal workers, to the single parents.

I would like at this time to present a few figures, not in Ukrainian, not in French, but in one of the official languages. Perhaps I will restrain myself and use one of the unofficial languages to the minister responsible for multiculturalism, but at some other time. I would like the members of the NDP in particular to listen to this because the NDP members in committee supported many of our amendments—

Some hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Shymko: —at least in spirit.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member, on a point of order.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I have just heard the hon. member say that he is not speaking either Ukrainian or French, but the English official language. Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the hon. member that French is an official language too.

Mr. Shymko: Mr. Speaker, I always try to speak French and I made, let us say, a blunder in one of the official languages.

[English]

In 1976 there were 559,335 lone parents in Canada of which 94,990 were male and 464,340 were female. We are talking about working mothers, females with dependants. The statistics I quote were for the year 1976 and I am sure that in the two years since then, with the changes in the social fabric in Canada, that figure is now much higher.

In November, 1978, there were 230,000 unemployed married women in Canada. As we know, there have been great declarations in defence of women by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) and I would like that hon. member to pay attention to the figure I put forward. There are 230,000 unemployed married women in Canada representing 8.7 per cent of the married women in the work force. Also in November, 1978 there were 155,000 families with one or more children in which the head of the family was unemployed. In addition there were 360,000 families with one or more children in which one person other than the family head was unemployed. The source of my information is Statistics Canada—"The Labour Force, November, 1978". In other words there are today 515,000 families with one or more dependants where at least one person, including the head of the family, is unemployed.

This is why our amendment calling for a two-tier system makes sense. It is why a judgment will be passed in the spring of 1979 by those who are not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I hold the hon. member, Mr. Shymko, in high esteem, but when he tells some falsehood, I must set the record straight.

The Acting Speaker (M. Ethier): Order. A member must address another member by his riding rather than by his name.

Mr. Savard: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I must remind the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Shymko) that while he was at a committee meeting, we passed in his absence Standing Order 65(9) which reads as follows:

Any member of the House who is not a member of a standing or special committee, may, unless the House or the committee concerned otherwise orders, take part in the public proceedings of the committee, but he may not vote or move any motion, nor shall he be part of any quorum.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the hon. member Leonard Jones, who was not a member of that committee, also had unanimous consent to speak. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, but there was also Arnold Peters, the member for—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member will please address members by their riding, not by their name.

• (1652)

Mr. Savard: He too had asked for unanimous consent in committee, Mr. Speaker, and unfortunately he did not obtain it. The same applies to my colleague the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie) to whom the committee refused consent. I sincerely believe, Mr. Speaker, that as chairman of the committee I had to be neutral to maintain democracy in committee and that is what I did. And I think opposition members can vouch for that.

Mr. Speaker, during these meetings, the committee had the opportunity to hear several briefs presented by various corporations, associations and unions. After several debates, members of the committee agreed that the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act contained in Bill C-14 were ready to be introduced in the House. After spending all this time studying, listening and discussing these amendments to this act, I have difficulty understanding why some hom. members are now challenging these changes.

Mr. Speaker, I was not here yesterday. I had to see my doctor because I was upset and the doctor told me after the examination that my problem was that I had listened to the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) in his flights of oratory and his fine words which did not propose anything positive. I chaired that committee for 55 hours, and we had 29 meetings where we heard a good number of witnesses. Almost all of them stated that Bill C-14 was a step towards progress. When the Auditor General of Canada tabled his annual report, we saw that it contained many remarks concerning the unemployment insurance system.

I read with interest the offensive remarks of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae) about my colleague the hon. member for LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul (Mr. Campbell). He said the latter was not very bright because he ventured to say that those who receive benefits abused the unemployment insurance system. I would like to advise the same hon. member to inquire further because I represent the constituency next to his, and we see quite a lot of people and receive many complaints. I would like to advise the hon. member not to consider simply what he wants to see and hear, but rather to explain to me why the auditor informs us that in 1977 the overpayments which were not noticed by the commission could total $142 million, to be added to the overpayments of $67 million which were found out by the commission during the same year.

Even if they say that one is proven and the other is a statistic, the fact still remains that the estimate of $142 million for 1977 is higher than the estimate of $96 million announced in 1976.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand those people who take pleasure in misleading the people of this country by always suggesting figures but who I think do not understand or do not want to understand—I think I should tell them the exact meaning of the French initials NPD which mean those 'defeated politicians'.

Mr. Speaker, we received several letters—I have one here from the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, and I quote:

The Edmonton Chamber of Commerce read with interest the press release concerning the proposed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

We support them and note with interest the explanation and the reasons given in the background papers we received where it appears that those amendments

'would reduce the disincentives to work'

'are designed to reduce the effects—'

exclude 'people who return to the labour market for short periods only to be entitled to unemployment insurance'

An hon. Member: Does that come from the west?

Mr. Savard: Edmonton. The chamber of commerce. I will go further. That is why I quoted that because all those people raised those questions in committee.

Mr. Nystrom: You are a real Tory!

Mr. Savard: It goes on to say:

—some members of the labour force who "have to a certain extent taken the habit of depending on unemployment insurance benefits"—

I believe all hon. members in this House should join and congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the hon. Bud Cullen, for recognizing those problems. That is what I call a real minister who takes his responsibilities.

The Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association also examined the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act contained in Bill C-14, and those people tell us: Go ahead, Mr. Minister, we of the association are happy to support the amendments contained in Bill C-14. Half a million Canadians are employed in this kind of industry. They are not all crazy and they are sure those amendments will give good results because they will allow to reduce employer and employee costs and the rate of unemployment. I sincerely believe that all should get together. Tonight we should vote and I hope all will vote in block—the Liberals, the Progressive Conservatives and the Social Crediters—they have a duty to do so because they will all have to account for it during the election.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member who just resumed his seat if he would be kind enough to answer a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. If the hon. member for Broadview wants to be recognized he needs the unanimous consent of the House because he had the floor earlier. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): As there is no unanimous consent, I recognize the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette).

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, this being private members' hour I would ask the Chair to call it five o'clock. I will begin my speech at eight o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock the House will now proceed with private members' business in the following order according to today's order paper: private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

J.H. POITRAS & SON LTD.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) moved that Bill S-8, to revive J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd., as reported (without amendments) by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall this bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now!

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) moved that Bill S-8, to revive J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd., be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because the bill went through second reading, committee stage and is now back before us with the support of all parties.

Hon. members will recall the legislation aims at reviving a company which, due to an error for which they were not responsible, lost their incorporation. This bill was put forward quite simply to revive J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not take any more time except to thank my colleagues from the official opposition, the New Democratic Party and the Social Credit party for supporting so wholeheartedly in this pre-Christmas period a bill that will cause much pleasure to Mr. and Mrs. St. James, who by the way came from the eastern townships?

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Notice of motion No. 10, standing in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert).

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if it might be the unanimous disposition of the House to deal with Bill C-34, which is legislation to amend the Criminal Code with relation to gun control. I think we could deal with it very expeditiously. I wonder if the House would grant its unanimous consent. We might be able to deal with second reading and third reading of the bill very expeditiously at this time.

● (1702)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): We are now in the private members' hour and we would need unanimous consent of the House to revert to government business. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Unanimous consent is given.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DELIVERY OF FIREARMS

On the Order: Government Orders.

December 19, 1978—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-34, an act to amend the Criminal Code—The Solicitor General of Canada.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. When parliament passed the Criminal Law Amendment Act in 1977 it intended that the acquisition of guns would be controlled by the firearms acquisition certificate system. Clearly parliament intended at that time that people should not need certificates in order to keep the guns they already own, but only when they undertake to acquire a gun. Indeed, paragraph 95(2)(b) of the Criminal Code exempts an individual from the requirement to produce a certificate when his gun is being returned to him by an individual to whom it has been lent. Unfortunately, the law does not specifically exempt an individual from the requirement to produce a certificate—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but perhaps it would be more in order that he put his motion forward before we hear him.

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one point clear. I hope there is unanimous consent to dealing with all stages of this matter prior to six o'clock; that is, second reading, committee stage and third reading. Since we have had some prior discussions, I think that is agreeable to most hon. members here.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the consent asked by my colleague is given, of course, provided all stages of the bill concerned are disposed of before six o'clock this evening at the latest. If so, there is unanimous consent, needless to say, at least on this side of the House.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I should like to know what will happen to the private member's bill if we are going to revert to government orders. Will the member sponsoring the bill agree to having it stood?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that we will proceed with motion No. 10 in whatever time is left.

Mr. Paproski: I do not agree to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pinard: Have you changed your mind?

Mr. Paproski: We should call it six o'clock after the government order has been dealt with.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. If consent is required to stand motion No. 10 until another time, that is okay by me.

Mr. Paproski: Then I do agree, sir.

Mr. Nystrom: I just wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, that there have been proper consultations and there has been unanimous agreement.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, if that agreement is to be effective, we will have to include in the motion words to the effect that, instead of sending the bill to a standing committee, we will consider it in committee of the whole House. Otherwise we could not deal with the bill today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): That was the point the Chair was going to make. Is it agreed by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Criminal Code

Hon. Bud Cullen (for the Solicitor General) moved that Bill C-34, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Ethier in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on this clause. There were many of us on all sides of the House who supported the bill when it came in and who pointed out that there was a number of factors which were going to work a hardship on those who are interested in having gun collections, those who are bona fide hunters, sportsmen interested in target ranges, and so on. Two difficulties that have developed are of interest here. One involves the major change that has taken place through this amendment which will allow those who have something wrong with their gun to take it down to the gun shop to get it fixed. It is logical that if you do not need a licence to have the gun in the first place and you take it down to the gun shop to have it fixed, you should not need a licence to get it back again because nothing has changed except the fact that a bona fide gunsmith has repaired it.

I suppose that the mover of these amendments has taken into consideration the fact, and it is a fact, that most guns in this country which were used in the Vietnam war—I think they are M-1 rifles, or whatever they are—had in them a part which turned them into fully automatic weapons. They did not require an additional part or the modification of any part of the gun. It was a simple operation whereby one or two pieces were reversed, pieces which were already part of the gun, to make it into an automatic weapon. This means, of course, that we will have to pay attention to those whom we classify as bona fide gunsmiths.

We now have some difficulty in northern Ontario which has resulted from some hysteria in the department, and that department has a tendency to hysteria with regard to gun-running. To them all these guns can become dangerous weapons. As everyone knows, there are thousands of pseudo-machine guns around the country which were not considered to be fully automatic weapons because they were not used in that way, but some parts in most of them would allow them, with some modification, or in one case just the turning of one piece, to become fully automatic guns, and if you had a 30 to 60-shell clip, you had a viable machine gun.

Those guns were not necessarily imported for the purpose of creating the gun-running scandal about which we hear. Some of the people who were involved—and there are certainly lots of other people in the country who have other kinds of weapons and are collectors—who ran machine guns and the like were within the law, but since changes were made to the act, those weapons became prohibited. Now, with a simple modification, some of the weapons which were not considered to be prohibited are prohibited.

For that reason I wonder if we have given enough consideration to the definition of those whom we consider bona fide gunsmiths. Because we will have to depend more and more on them to enforce the law by not accepting unregistered handguns and other guns. That is where the difficulty may arise. It is similar to the difficulty which arises when the gunsmiths of one or two towns also are safesmiths. These people could open safes in banks if they put their minds to it. It was necessary to keep them bona fide citizens. When it was necesary to open a bank vault or safe, the officials required someone who was capable of doing so. If that person was not available, in some cases he was flown in, but in most areas someone was qualified to open them. Such people were required to learn the latest combinations, codes and methods of operating bank vaults. They had to be highly trained, skilled and updated on various methods. Also, they had to be people who were well respected in the community. The officials were required to give them some consideration and leeway because of the difference between opening bank vaults with the authority of the bank and doing it on Saturday night for themselves. There are gunsmiths who handle only illegal guns. Also there are the bona fide citizens in communities who are afforded some leeway and not harassed all the time.

I was surprised by the department providing an amnesty for only one month. The amnesty involved two matters. First, people were able to carry their guns to the police station, and second, the guns could be registered if there was no reason preventing it. Guns could be registered even if their sources were fairly dubious. It was a good idea, but the amnesty was not long enough.

My son informed me that at one time he went to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in order to register a gun. They gave him a hard time. He said, "If you give me a hard time, keep the gun. I do not know where it came from. I do not know its history. I do not know much about it. I am a collector, I have it, and I am willing to register it. If you do not want it registered, then you keep it; but that is the last one you will ever see". Also he pointed out that the Saturday Night Special is worth $200 more if it is unregistered than if it is registered. Thus, it is to the advantage of the police and law enforcement agencies to have as many guns registered as possible. The amnesty and the permit should be stretched in order to achieve the maximum possible registration of guns.

The officials concerned with this piece of legislation were surprised by the number of guns which turned up in various communities. They did not realize the guns existed because they were unregistered. If they were surprised about the number of guns turned in, one can imagine their surprise if they were able to find out the number of guns not turned in. The amnesty should be continued in order to provide more people with opportunities to register their guns at various police stations. Any restrictions hindering that process are somewhat silly.

There is a necessity to carry on investigations, but sometimes the police become carried away with their investigations. They will have a great time with the trials which are to take place in the town of Haileybury and Timiskaming. It will be difficult to prove that these people were running an international gun ring and that they were closely connected in subversive activities. Perhaps the officials will find out that the people involved were entrepreneurs who were out to make a few bucks, that they operated individually as pseudo-collectors in areas as distant as New Brunswick and northern Ontario. Whether some of those guns went out of the country or not, I do not know. If the officials are really concerned with that aspect, they would be wise to go to Bleury Street in order to check some companies such as International Firearms. I think they would find that boatloads of guns are traded: automatics, machine guns, bazookas, the whole works. Boatloads of guns which do not even land in the country are traded.

We must not overdo it. The change being recommended is an excellent one. The department should give consideration to supervising and establishing bona fide repair gunshops throughout the country to which people may take their guns for repair, and gunshops should be allowed some leeway in collecting and assisting in the registration of guns.

The gun legislation has not imposed a great hardship on the average gun collector or on the bona fide hunter. For this reason, I believe the legislation has been reasonable. The proposed amendment is a sensible one. If a collector with a broken gun requires repair, he should be able to obtain repairs whether the gun is registered or not. He should not be placed in a different position than he was before seeking the repair. I agree with the minister. This is a sensible amendment.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I will make the remarks now which I attempted to make at second reading stage. The explanatory note states the following:

> These amendments would ensure that the delivery of a firearm by the operator of a business that includes the manufacturing, buying or selling at wholesale or retail, importing, repairing, altering or modifying or taking in pawn of firearms to a person from whom he received it in the course of such business, and the receipt of the firearm by that person from the operator of the business, does not constitute an offence.

To summarize very briefly, when parliament passed the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977, it intended that the acquisition of guns would be controled by the firearms acquisition certificate system. Parliament clearly intended that people do not need certificates in order to keep the guns they already own, but only when they undertake to acquire a gun. Indeed, paragraph 95(2)(b) of the Criminal Code exempts an individual from the requirement to produdce a certificate when his gun is being returned to him by an individual to whom it has been lent. Unfortunately, the law does not specifically exempt an individual from the requirement to produce a certificate when his gun is being returned to him by a licensed business dealer who has taken the gun into his possession for the purpose of repairing or storing it. An amendment to the legislation is urgently required before January 1, 1979, to provide such an exemption for several reasons.

Those reasons are brief, and they are three in number. Provinces have adopted different interpretations of the present law with the result that some jurisdictions will enforce the law and others will not. That is to say, at the present time I understand that some provinces under the present legislation will require the owner of a gun to have a firearms acquisition certificate before his gun can be returned to him, while other provinces will not enforce it.

There is a certain degree of business anxiety because even in jurisdictions where the law may not be enforced, businesses are concerned either that they may be prosecuted or that they will lose their business permits. Remington Ltd. is currently recalling more than 2,000 guns across the country for repair. In view of the inconsistent application of the law which might occur, Remington very probably will insist that individuals produce a certificate before the guns are returned to them.

Thirdly, having to do with safety considerations, some individuals, particularly in the case of the Remington recall, may not bother to have their guns repaired if they must produce a certificate in order to have them back. This could undermine their own or others safety, which is entirely in conflict with the intent of gun control.

In short, what I am saying is that there is a possibility of having different interpretations of the present law in different areas of the country, something we do not want to see occur. There is a certain amount of anxiety on the part of present owners of guns, including businessmen who may be in the business of repairing those guns, not knowing whether to request a firearms acquisition certificate for the return of a gun. As I say, for simple safety considerations we would not want to have any inconsistency or any doubt in anyone's mind; it should be clear that they are able to turn guns over to a manufacturer for restoration or repair and have them returned. We would not want them to feel that they should not put guns in for repair simply because they may be hassled, if you like, for a firearms acquisition certificate.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): May I say at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that I have never heard an explanatory note for a bill presented with such eloquence as that just exhibited by the parliamentary secretary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If I may say so, I would like to indicate that we are grateful for the consultation we had with the parliamentary secretary and the Solicitor General, within whose jurisdiction this bill falls. It is an extremely sensitive and sensible amendment to the law which clears up an anomaly. We support it, and I want to say for our party that it is important to everyone in the House that we clear up these anomalies in the law. I thank the hon. member for Vaudreuil for permitting this to happen during his period of time in the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill S-9, an act respecting fugitive offenders in Canada to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and motion No. 1 (Mr. Leggatt).

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure at this stage of the debate to speak on Bill C-14 which for me and for the Canadian people in general is very important, first because it is a very good piece of legislation for some people and especially for the government, since they are trying to crack down on abusers. This bill will cause hardship to people who have the right to ensure temporarily their security, either because of the scarcity of jobs or for any other reason. It is a very important measure for this government and that is why I am saying that it is a very positive legislation. For years the Canadian people have decided to participate in this insurance scheme through a law that we have given to these people. We gave Canadians a guarantee they would be able to live decently if for some reason they had to leave their job or if they had been laid off by their employers.

Mr. Speaker, according to the speech made this afternoon by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Savard), by presenting this bill the government wanted to eliminate the cases of abuse by unemployment insurance recipients. Like the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Janelle), I agree with the government that we should put a stop to these abuses, which are very few compared with the number of people who need these benefits to survive.

I also recall that a few days ago, more specifically last Tuesday, the government made a gift to someone by introducing Bill C-33, I believe, which we agreed to and which offered a salary ranging from $50,000 to $100,000 a year to a certain person. This person was given a Christmas gift because the government did not want him to be penalized by having to change his occupation. The House of Commons made this gift to Mr. Justice Morand so as not to penalize him by reducing his pension since he was accepting the position of ombudsman for the province of Ontario. Moreover, with its usual generosity, the government offered something very specific to the Canadian people who have been paying premiums for years so that they would be insured.

It will soon be Christmas. The unemployed also want to have a good Christmas and to make their family happy thanks to this insurance, thanks to the small amount that we provide them through unemployment insurance.

What is the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) now doing with Bill C-14? These people will have a happy Christmas because of the pressures made by members of this House, both on the government side and on the side of the opposition. But what will happen to them on January 2, 1979? They will find themselves, as the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) said so eloquently last Tuesday, in regions like mine or like his as well as in regions like those of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Janelle), they will find themselves not penalized by the legislation we will have passed, but by the rules we will allow civil servants to apply.

Mr. Speaker, since I was first elected to the House of Commons I had a chance in my constituency to represent certain people who, with the laws we are passing here in this House and given the privilege they have to come and see us, can tell us: Your laws disregard our rights.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that it is quite true. We have worked hard to try to solten up this act which is very restrictive toward those who for many years as I mentioned earlier have been entitled to unemployment insurance precisely because they contributed to it.

We are also giving to civil servants the power to do whatever they see fit, to look for all possible means to disqualify people who are still entitled to collect unemployment insurance benefits. Because of the laws enacted by this government, these very people are today coming to see us in our regional offices to seek explanations or obtain some assistance before the arbitration boards originally instituted a few years ago by the Department of Employment and Immigration to defend these same people. Today, because of an act which is unjust for these people, not only the members of the opposition but the members on the government side, now have to undertake to take up the cause of these same persons to make them eligible again precisely because of the difference which exists between each region, especially in regions such as ours and mine in particular. It is very difficult to tell these people that they have to go out and look for work.

Some years ago looking for a job was a fairly easy thing to do. There were great possibilities for persons collecting unemployment insurance to get themselves a job. However, today in 1978, these possibilities no longer exist. Why so? Precisely because of laws which are supposed to provide a certain degree of help to businesses so they will hire the unemployed. With the laws which we are now passing it is becoming a very difficult endeavour. Mr. Speaker, I could provide you with typical cases in my area of businesses or persons who want to help our people to make themselves available for work and sell the production of the companies to this very population which is simply asking to be given the means to buy the manufactured goods of these same companies.

Because the government with its legislation refuses to help those people, we now have close to one million unemployed in Canada; I shall not say like the New Democratic Party that there are more than one million unemployed. We deny to those same people the right to go into business or we refuse to try to make them work.

A few days ago I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say that 341,000 jobs were created in the year 1978 or in the budget for 1977-1978. Congratulations! I lift my hat to the Prime Minister when he says that. But where I think the minister misleads the population is when he omits to say how many people or how many companies had to close down because of our policies.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Ask Mr. Lévesque!

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) says: Ask Mr. Lévesque. It is not true. He is like all the others, and I should go further, and say that he and the Prime Minister always make the premier of Quebec responsible for those numerous lay-offs.

● (2022)

My belief is we should give that premier an opportunity to prove himself, but right now let us ask this government why they are denying investments that are needed. If someone knows the reason, it is the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Right now civil servants pretending they know every area in the country but are based in Montreal, Quebec city or Ottawa suggest they know my area, northwest Quebec, while they refuse that those companies locate an industry that could create jobs.

This government however put forward a very important piece of legislation, expecting that we rush it through today. I would be most anxious to go home to my family rather than being here tonight, and I am certain other members also would be most happy to go home. The government, however, put forward a bill at the last moment in order, not that we give the present we gave Mr. Justice—

An hon. Member: Are we not comfortable here?

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Of course we are comfortable, but we are comfortable because we have the courage to try and defend the people. And concerning the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) who feels so comfortable, I am sure he would be just as happy as we would if he could go home to his family and celebrate Christmas.

However, Mr. Speaker, we should not stop at that thought, and the proof is here tonight, on both sides of this House, we are responsible. We are here tonight to try and defend the people that need us to have the same opportunity to celebrate Christmas and New Year's. A few days ago we hurried to give Mr. Justice Morand an opportunity to celebrate Christmas without penalizing others. Unfortunately, I feel that with Bill C-14 the government does not extend the same opportunity to the unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, my contribution shall not be completely negative, because I want to make concrete proposals to the government, and take a positive stand as well. When introducing his bill the minister stated that he wanted to prevent abuse, as I said earlier, in connection with unemployment insurance benefits. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out one thing to hon. members and particularly to government members about the problems we want to solve and which the minister would try to solve with his bill. Members of my party can say that this bill will never solve the problem we now have.

There are reasons which explain the present economic recession, and there are also reasons which explain the present unemployment rate. The government knows them, but it lacks courage to attack them head on. This bill will do nothing but perpetuate the vicious circle of the economic crisis we see now. I understand the government would like to do away with all the unemployment insurance cheaters. The Minister of Employment and Immigration stated last November 9 that the costs for the program were more than $4 billion in the last financial year.

The minister says he wants to correct that trend. That is all very nice, Mr. Speaker, but on whose back? First by reducing the benefits by 6⅔ per cent. If you take into account the present rate of inflation those future claimants will have to look elsewhere, and if they do not find anything, it means they will have to go on social welfare. How sad it can be for those same people to kneel once again before Unemployment Insurance Commission officials who, as the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Janelle) said this afternoon, get their pay cheques every week and say: Trust us, do what we ask and you will get your pay cheques every two weeks. In other words, Mr. Speaker, they will have to depend on social welfare with the new legislation introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, considering the federal government pays 50 per cent of social welfare programs.

Mr. Speaker, I think we are justified in asking how the Canadian economy will definitively be cured with measures like those the Minister of Employment and Immigration introduced today. The minister talked about $4 billion for the unemployment insurance program. Of course, that is a substantial amount. And there were abuses by some individuals which cost society a lot of money.

In that respect, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-14 will correct certain injustices. The insurable remuneration will make the system fairer for workers with part-time jobs. As it stands now, the program introduced in 1971 excludes from insurable jobs any job of a duration of 20 hours or more a week for which the remuneration is less than the insurable minimum salary. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, the bill is fair and reasonable. We should not forget either that the essence of this bill is to make cuts. The minister talks about reallocating funds but, as I suggested recently, when John Q. Public sees his unemployment insurance benefits reduced by 6⅔ per cent there will be no reallocation for him.

The conditions set by the minister are not helping much our fellow Canadians who must, for whatever reason, apply for the unemployment insurance benefits for which they have been contributing for several months and sometimes years and collect what they are entitled to.

This is in line with the $2 billion cuts which the right hon. Prime Minister announced in August, and it is again the small earner who will lose. As members of the Social Credit Party of Canada, we want to bring about an economic and monetary reform, so that the small earners, the have-nots, may find their places in the sun. I say that the government is trying to demonstrate restraint on the backs of small earners, and the cuts in the unemployment insurance program are evidence of this. The government wants to save $2.5 billion within the next two years. Over this same period, the government intends to cut its unemployment insurance program by $1.5 billion. These cuts will therefore account for 60 per cent of all the cuts the government intends to make. I suggest therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the poor will foot the bill for this restraint program.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must regretfully advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has now expired.

[English]

Mr. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make some remarks with regard to the bill before the House. This is one bill I have had the opportunity to follow through in my brief time here. I have been able to observe the procedures in the House and in committee, and indeed how parliament functions in relation to the presentation by the government of a bill it chooses to call its own.

This is a very significant bill. It is possible it will have an impact on some 2.5 million people in this country. The essence of the bill is to cut $580 million from the unemployment insurance allocation. If the bill passes in its present form, it will chop away the opportunities for unemployment insurance for 264,000 Canadians. Whether you say it fast or slow, it is still 264,000, a lot of people.

For those who remain on the rolls, if you take inflation into account, over the next three years they will have 17 per cent to 18 per cent less money to spend than they had this year. Therefore this is an important bill. This bill had the opportunity to engage the interests of this House and perhaps to engage some teaching and learning, not only for those in this House but for those in the country who will be affected.

It is fair to say that in the last four or five years, certainly the last three or four, public confidence in the operation and administration of the unemployment insurance program has suffered badly, for a variety of reasons. People have been upset by those who abuse the program. There are some who feel that no one is abusing the program. If that is what they think, I welcome them to come and ride with me on a Queen Street car in Toronto. We will go from one end to the other. Just about everyone you see will know a cousin, uncle, neighbour or somebody who is beating the system. People by and large have been hurt by the proposition that there are abusers and slackers who are ripping off the unemployment insurance scheme. As well, public confidence has been offended by the maladministration of the program by those who are responsible for its administration, whether it comes from computer programming mistakes or millions of dollars in overpayments. By and large there is a perception in the public mind that it is not well administered.

Third, since 1971 it has been very difficult for people to understand the fundamental philosophy behind the program, what it is supposed to do and whether it should, in fact, be insurance or whether it should be social assistance. If it is one, it has a certain path to tread and, if it is the other, then perhaps it should be travelling a different path. It is in this context, I think, that a number of people in this House, and others who are affected, were looking forward to a process in committee and in the House to see what could be done with the bill which was presented.

It was an interesting process in committee—one which I might say I was not used to—and one which clearly showed that the longer it went on the worse it got. I believe I am being fair in saying that. It began with an understanding that clause 2 of the bill would not affect a great number of people. But it really did not matter whether we agreed to it or not. It had already been passed by regulation and published in the Canada Gazette. This meant to the people I know and whom I represent that this was the way their life would be dealt with. To these people it meant that whatever the House decided did not matter, that whatever the people who administer the fund decided, that was the way it would be. It was, in my opinion, one of the most interesting comments on the responsibility and power of the people who are elected to government as opposed to those who serve in opposition.

Parenthetically I would say, of course, that the minister was personally embarrassed about the matter and did apologize. I might add also, in particular relationship to the longshoremen in Toronto, that he saw fit gracefully to allow his staff to assist in that regard when I raised the matter in the House.

During the committee hearings one thing became clear, especially to those who wished to observe it, that is, that the bill as presented is a bad bill because it has three specific effects which should not be countenanced either by the government or by any member of this House. First, the effect of the bill is to hurt those people who can least afford to be hurt. That is not a very good principle for a government to follow. It hurts, first of all, those who are most likely to be jobless. They are caught in a Catch 22 situation and have no choice. Second, it hurts those who have dependants—that's another word for children; they get less and their responsibility is greater. That, too, is also a bad principle for a government to defend. Third, it affects women, particularly working women with dependants.

Fourth, it affects seasonal workers. Fifth, it affects young people.

To do all these things in one bill might be considered quite an accomplishment, and one might ask how it can be done. Well, the way you do it, the way you chop 10 per cent out of benefits that may have been depended upon, the way in which you hurt 264,000 people is not by saying, "You are not going to get it because you abused the system;" it is by saying, "Here is 10 per cent by categories."

For us to accept that—because most of us are sensitive human beings—you would have to relate it to perhaps the oldest political move in the world. You would have to set up a scapegoat. You would need to paint people with a label in order that you can do things to them you would not otherwise do. That is called "scapegoating". So, you have to say that those people are going to get hurt because they are abusers and slackers. There is no other justification. After all, there is no one in this country who wishes to hurt those who are not abusers or those who are not slackers. Nobody would want to do that. So you would have to adopt the assumption that all of those people who will be hurt are abusers and slackers. Of course that is not true. In short, to justify hurting 264,000 Canadians the government had to combine an affliction on the guilty and on the innocent. They had, to borrow a word used by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae), to be indiscriminate. Not to lose because you have abused—that is fair—but, rather, to lose because you fit into a statistical category. And that is not fair. That is the first reason why the bill ought not to be supported. It hurts all those categories of people who can least afford it and, more important, it does so by fixing a statistical category and determining that they ought not to receive the benefits they have so far enjoyed.

The second reason why the bill ought not to be supported is that it affects those regions of Canada which are already suffering. I need not remind the government or other hon. members of that because we have already heard very good speeches from the member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and, of course, we heard the most excellent speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) today. What is interesting about this is that one has the feeling that six or eight months from now, or two years down the road if they were still the government, as they are sucking money out of the Atlantic provinces and Quebec now, what ministers over there will be doing is putting the money back and claiming to be helping out. It is not only hurting those regions which are already suffering, but, indeed, it is cynical—

An hon. Member: What about the two-tier system?

Mr. Crombie: The hon. member asks me about the two-tier system. Don't worry, I will get to that.

Mr. Speaker, the third reason, and one which I find to be closest to my heart since I know well the effect it will have, is that not only will it hurt people who can least afford it, not only will it hurt those regions and bear most heavily on those regions which are already hurting in this country, but that it will hurt provincial and municipal governments. With respect to this aspect I would like to make a couple of points.

Much has been said in respect of many bills about the importance of consultation between the central federal government and the provincial and hence the municipal governments. We often excoriate one another because we do not do it well enough. But usually such proposals are those which will be coming forward some time in the future. The effect of the bill before us will hurt them the day it goes into force in terms of money which has not been budgeted for, and I think we have to bear in mind what that means.

If you consider the statistics in terms of three categories—welfare, social services, and loss of revenue—you will find that British Columbia sees the impact of the measure as likely to cost $35 million. Ontario sees the impact in welfare costs alone, not social services and loss of revenue, as $15 million. New Brunswick sees it in terms of $27 million. Amounts borne by municipalities—and these account for 20 per cent of the bill—go on property taxes, the already burdened property tax. The people you think you may be pleasing are going to find out that at the end of the line there is another cash register you didn't tell them about. They will have to pay it with their property tax.

Let me deal with Toronto since this is the place on which I have the statistics. In that city it will mean 2,500 more per month—hon. members may laugh about it but I am going to tell them what it means. In Toronto 2,500 more people per month will be on welfare rolls. That will cost $6.6 million plus $900,000 for two new offices and re-administration. I did not think those figures up. They are from the report to the commissioner of social services of metro Toronto. That report was also dealt with by the minister of social services of the province of Ontario. Throughout any recitation of these kinds of statistics the government simply says, "Not true, not true, not true." Well, the fact is that every province is saying the same thing. Every municipality is saying the same thing. They cannot all be wrong and only the federal government right.

The government cannot deny—and this bill shows it—that it is placing a burden in terms of welfare costs, social services and loss of income on every region, province, city and municipality in this country. The government might look good when its ministers talk about cost savings, but people are not that stupid, and the people will find the government out very shortly.

Behind much of this is the sense that there is no direction. What is the philosophy of the government with respect to unemployment insurance? Is it insurance? Is it social assistance? The government says it is both. Should there be a two-tier system which would allow people in the greatest need to get what they require in terms of the fund as it was, which is the essence of a two-tier system? People who have dependants will be asking Liberal candidates in the next election campaign why they did not adopt a two-tier system.

Mr. Anderson: Do you agree with it?

Mr. Crombie: People will be asking why people with dependants must get less. They will not understand. When it comes to a two-tier system the government says it cannot go along with that because it is a needs based program. It is a program which is related to need, and therefore the government cannot go along because it is an insurance program. The government will say it would love to go along but that it cannot because unemployment insurance is insurance and cannot be related to need. But then we look at clause 14, and in clause 14 it says "tax back". Son of a gun!

Why is the government doing that? People do not need that. Talk about working both sides of the street; this is unbelievable! However, it is not just sleight of hand. This reflects something which goes far deeper and is far more worrisome. This continues to contribute to the cynicism of people who will be affected by this bill because if you are one of the 264,000, or someone who does not have a job and is looking for one, what happens is that after a while you do not care what line-up you get into. You just want to know which is the insurance line-up or which is the welfare line-up. You want to know where to go. Hon. members can ask anyone who has been in municipal government—and I know some hon. members opposite have been—and anyone who has will say that that is the truth. After a while people simply want to know how to maintain their incomes, particularly if they have dependants.

The government had a real opportunity to do a really good job. Public confidence in this program has been waning for four years. The governement had an opportunity to come forward and engage in public discussion. The consequence would have been public education about such things as whether and to what extent there is induced unemployment as a consequence of the unemployment insurance program itself.

The Fraser Institute produced a very good study about which some hon. members know and which some have read. That study would have been useful because there may be induced unemployment, and if there is, we ought to know. There was a terrific opportunity to look at what happens in other parts of the world. Sitting in the committee one might have got the feeling that the only way to go is the government's way, but we should look at what happens in other countries.

I would not advocate the system of any one country, but it is worth looking at the variations which exist in the world. Let us consider, for example, benefits as a per centage of gross earnings. This bill would make them 60 per cent. In West Germany they are 60 per cent. In Spain they are 75 per cent. In Japan they are 80 per cent. In Sweden they are 51 per cent.

The number of weeks' work required to get unemployment insurance in Canada is 40 out of 104. It is interesting that the number is 13 out of 52 in the United States. The number is 52 out of 104 in Italy. In West Germany the maximum number of weeks of benefit is 52. The number here will be 50. In Denmark it is two and a half years. The variation is immense.

I can assure hon. members that people in Toronto would have appreciated an understanding that there is to be a new direction. We have high unemployment, and as a consequence people need money. How can we relate the program to the various income maintenance programs which allow people to carry out their obligations as husbands, mothers, fathers, and so forth? We did not have that kind of discussion, and I wonder why not. I think it is because the government was blinded by a new word, "restraint". This government has not known this word for very long. It was discovered sometime in the late spring or early summer. It is a word which hon. members opposite do not understand as being the exercise of government. They understand it as being the exercise of politics, not government, and that is why they did not deal with unemployment insurance in relation to the needs of people in Canada and, indeed, in relation to the needs of the various regions, provinces and municipalities of Canada. They dealt with it in panic. They felt it was necessary to show that they were responding to a new scapegoat and that that would somehow take the heat off. They were going to be a government of restraint. I do not think that will happen because this bill reflects the government, and what this bill will say to the people on the streets of this city—

Mr. Lamontagne: This city?

Mr. Crombie: I was thinking of Quebec city, actually. People will say that this bill and this government are unjust and unfair to people because they hit both the guilty and the innocent. This bill is unfair and unjust to the regions because it hurts those which are already hurting. It is unjust and unfair to two levels of government which will be overcome by millions of dollars of welfare costs, social service costs and lost income for which they could not and did not budget because there was no consultation. People will say that the government is confused and incompetent, and that it has kept them in the same muddle they were in before the government brought in this bill. Finally, they will say that this government has become so old in office that it has become cynical, even though it does not know it is cynical. That is why, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Let him continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He hurt you, did he?

Mr. Cullen: No. I was trying to be a gentleman here tonight. We have been dealing with motion No. 1, and many hon. members have spoken. There has been wide latitude allowed by the Chair. I appreciate that, and I think all members of the House do. However, the fact is that members on both sides have spoken once on this motion and, of course, do not have the opportunity to speak again. I wonder if we could move to the second motion and perhaps give other hon. members an opportunity to speak.

Mr. McGrath: You brought in closure, Bud, not us.

Mr. Cullen: From our standpoint, we have not heard anything new today except the con in Conservative has been proven once again. Members opposite have something to say about the two-tier system and voluntary quits, but the Conservative party does not seem to want to give them the opportunity.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) will carry the message to the government House leader, so that he will not be so free with allocating time the next time around. I just want to say to my friend, if he cannot stand there and take the heat, he should not stand up and make excuses.

Mr. Rob Parker (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on clause 1 of this bill, once again we have before the House a band-aid bill, another set of amendments on amendments on amendments. Over the days the bill has been debated in the House there has been considerable discussions concerning the closure motion which the government brought in and passed. We have had some detailed discussions on some areas of the proposed amendments but not all. That will not be possible because of the short time.

It would be worth while to examine exactly what the government purports to do with the bill, exactly what our responsibilities are as legislators in reviewing it and voting on it. The first thing which seems irrefutably clear is that Canadians want reform in the area of unemployment insurance. That has been demonstrated by the government's opinion polls. The government has released papers on it, and has been taking polls for over a year. It has been demonstrated by polls published in the popular press, by media reports, and by the reaction which every member of the House receives from his constituents.

When Canadians say they want reform, I do not think they are necessarily saying that they want the House or the government to penalize the needy. They are not saying they want government to begin to be cruel or heartless. They are not saying that they want to put the wounded in the front lines. But, they want cutbacks in the outrageous costs of this program. The neediest people in Canada among working Canadians are those wage earners who have dependants. They may be single parent families or families where the wife does not work and is at home with the children. Those are the neediest families in terms of deserving protection. While Canadians want reform, there is no sign at all that they want the government to stop protecting people against misfortune.

Over the past few years there has been a clear pattern of encouragement to abuse within the rules and regulations of unemployment insurance. My colleague and seatmate, the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), spoke about it. Other members have spoken on it. There has been a pattern of that kind of encouragement. That would be bad enough, but the encouragement has gone beyond that. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this country has gone on record on numerous occasions saying that he will not tell anyone they must work; if people want to collect unemployment insurance and not work, that is their perfect right. When the highest political officer in the land tells Canadians that, particularly young Canadians, surely they take him seriously. Surely they get the idea that it is all right to rip off the system.

We have not had government leaders, cabinet ministers and politicians on the government side talking about the value of working for a living, about the virtue of hard work, and I doubt we will. They have made their record and they have made their bed on giveaways. Now they must lie on it.

We are a legislative body gathered together to consider the bill. In considering it, we should start with the needs of our constituents. Our constituents, as a house, as opposed to individuals, are clearly working Canadians, the working people of this country. They are the traditional office worker with one wife, two mortgages, and three children. They are farm labourers, oil field roughnecks, working mothers, single parents, newly graduated stenographers, bank clerks and laboratory technicians. The range in geography and profession is enormous. It stretches from high technology workers in the highrise towers of urban Canada to the fishermen of eastern Canada. To quote a former colleague of some members of the House in the legislature of Newfoundland, "from those high technology workers to the last forgotten fishermen in the rill of Cape St. George in Newfoundland."

Most of the people in the country are working Canadians who come under the provisions of the bill. The question is: what do they want from us when we consider this bill? I think they want four things. The first one is leadership. The second one is some clear thinking and common sense. The third one is that they want some economy measures. They want an end to the outrageous drunken sailor spending which has been ongoing in Canada for most of the last ten years. The fourth one is that they want the country put back to work. Of those four points, two are not appropriate to this debate.

Leadership, by definition, is a mandate of the government. It is not appropriate to a debate on this bill. Hopefully that is something which will be decided by the people of Canada in the spring of next year. The electorate will make its decision as to whether that mandate has been exercised responsibly. The fourth point concerning job creation has nothing to do with this bill. That is not appropriate to this debate. But the middle two points, clear thinking and common sense, as well as economy measures, are appropriate for debate at this time.

When Canadians talk about clear thinking they do not mean merely that the government will take one plus two and arrive at three. They do not mean merely that the government will protect everyone in need, and that it will say, "No one in Canada should ever lose their job for any circumstances, or ever lose any wages or salary because they lost their job." Neither do they mean that no one should ever be protected in any way. They mean that those who are in need should be protected. We should protect those whose needs are the greatest. We should not design disincentives to work, or incentives to cheat in the plan. In effect, they mean exactly what the Auditor General said in his report this year, that Canadians deserve and should receive value for their money. When Canadians demand economy measures, they mean we should cut back outrageous over-spending, and eliminate waste, but they do not mean we should stop spending money entirely.

Given those definitions, as we approach this bill, we should attempt to save as much as we humanely can, and protect working Canadians as much as we economically can. That brings me to the specific proposals in the bill before the House, because it does both poorly. It does not save as much as it should or could, and it does not protect as much as it should or could.

Our party has proposed a two-tier plan which would, on the one hand, protect those who need it most and, on the other hand, would economize most with those who can most easily bear the effects of those economies. All our amendments taken together would save more money than the government's proposals. They would have less adverse effects on the broad range of working Canadians, less adverse effects on the provinces, and less adverse effects on city governments.

The amendments that we have proposed have been supported most. They have been supported by the provinces, they have been supported by independent groups outside government in Canada, and they have been supported by the party sector. They are supported by actuarial studies, and they are supported by actuarial experience in other countries. Germany, to name only one country, has a two-tier system. Canada, in fact, had a two-tier system for some 30 years which, ironically, came to an end with the introduction in 1971 of precisely the amendments that marked the beginning of outrageous over-spending into which this measure has led the country since that time.

We are proposing a two-tier system. There is nothing unusual about that. We have suggested specific figures, but unlike the government we are not insisting that our proposals be accepted and that nothing else should be considered. We think it is important for this government to save money. We pointed it out long before they admitted the necessity of it. We think it is important at the same time to provide reasonable protection to Canadians who need it, and unemployment insurance is vitally important to Canadians, not only in the rich provinces like Ontario, not only in ridings like my own in urban Toronto, but in ridings in poor areas of eastern Canada or Quebec, in disadvantaged areas in the west, and the west is not entirely a fabric of wealth, swimming pools and cadillacs, there are poor areas there and the people who live there need protection.

We propose a two-tier plan. We proposed it in committee and we propose it here now. But the government consistently refuses to consider it. The only defence which they seem to be able to offer is that the minister would lose face. We know of amendments that had been suggested which do not seem to get acceptance at the cabinet level or within the Liberal party. My leader spoke today of the difficulties they are having in controlling their own members. I do not know whether the reason so few of them are speaking in the debate today indicates that they have to get their speeches cleared and that not many have managed it, but that is a likely supposition. Surely members on that side are interested in this bill, surely they are as interested as we are in protecting Canadians on the one hand and in saving money for the government on the other, but why are they not speaking?

Why do we have member after member on this side speaking, but no one on the other side? I can only assume that they have not managed to clear the hurdles and get their speeches approved. Yes, there were one or two over there who did manage to slip through, which only means that they have had their opinions vetted.

An hon. Member: That is only done on the Tory side.

Mr. Parker: No, it does not happen here—we have caucus meetings.

The amendments which our party has proposed—and I do not mean in detail but in broad outline—include the idea of extra penalties for those who bring their own misfortunes on themselves, those who quit. Surely there is something wrong with an insurance plan which pays someone to burn down his own house, and that is what we have with someone who quits his job and collects benefits on the same basis as someone who loses it for some other reason. Surely there is something wrong with a system which provides that kind of protection. Our proposal is to remove it.

There are other ways of penalizing those who quit, and we do not insist on our plan; we simply suggest that that idea should be included in the bill and that the idea of a two-tier system should be included. But the government consistently refuses to consider it. There is no logic to that. They do not want to be confused with the facts, they do not want to examine, not only what this party says, but what every province of Canada says, what the experience of the private sector says, what economic studies say, what the Economic Council of Canada has suggested, what, in private conversations, members in their own department will say. The weight of opinion is clearly against them. They are going madly into the sunset saying, "our way or no way at all."

If I were to take purely partisan advantage of that, I suppose I should stand here and be delighted because six months from now when we have an election campaign and we are on the hustings talking about what this government has done over the last session of parliament and we say that here was a chance not only to save more money than the government plan proposed but also to protect Canadians in a better and more effective way, and that we proposed that way, we would be elected on that basis. We are not insisting on the details and that it must be done in our way. If the government wishes to change the benefit periods or change the per centages in benefits, that is fine. We are merely saying to it that our amendments, taken as a whole, save more money and protect more humanely. Yet ministers refuse to consider them. On a purely partisan basis, I think that will be an advantage to members on this side six months from now because it shows this government to be pigheaded, obstinate, cruel, and incompetent in terms of management.

I can stand here tonight—and of course I am not a partisan man, Mr. Speaker—and suggest that I do not want them to give us that opportunity. I would like them to take this opportunity away from us and admit that they are not the only ones who have ideas, that there may be a better way of doing it, and that we have done everything short of ramming it down their throats to demonstrate that there are better ideas in this case.

Our amendments are on paper. The government has an opportunity to add amendments of its own and to withdraw the closure motion. If it does not do so in the next couple of days, we will do it after the next election. The government's obstinacy on this bill is leading this party and, more important than that, is showing the entire country a much clearer picture of what this government stands for, Mr. Speaker. For the last six months the government has been floundering around for ways in which it can skip its way through the obstacles and manage to cling on to power in the next election. If ministers want to do it, I think the best way to do it is to indicate that there is some responsiveness over there to fulfil the real needs of Canadians, and if, on the other hand, they are interested in sitting on this House, then they are taking exactly the right course, and while I cannot applaud on behalf of the people of Canada, if I were a partisan individual I would certainly applaud on behalf of the Conservative party.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on this motion in response to some of the arguments that have been made. I was very interested in hearing the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) talk earlier about the fact that this bill is going to put a lot of extra burden on the municipalities and the provinces. Of course he is absolutely right because of the fact that we are cutting back in this legislation on unemployment insurance by 10 per cent, which means that a lot of people will have to go on welfare and draw social security who have not drawn it before.

The only thing that puzzles me is that, even though he made a tremendous speech, other people in his party for the last couple of years have been advocating to the government across the way more restraints and cutbacks. Even the hon. member who is the critic and spokesman for the Conservative party, and I assume he would be sitting as a minister if they happened to win, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), said, if I remember correctly, that the bill does not go far enough in terms of cutbacks, but was a step in the right direction. I have to assume that member is a credible member and was speaking for his party. I think the hon. member for Rosedale ought to take him out behind the barn and teach him a lesson or two about what a bill like this does to the municipalities and provinces in our country.

The other thing I find passing strange when I look to my right and see the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), the so-called progressives of that party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: I say "so-called" because the more I see them the more I am convinced that they stand there with the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt), the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and others. I recall, when the family allowance measure was debated, the many arguments that we should not consider family income whatsoever. I wonder how they can now sit in their seats and hear other Conservative members talking about the two-tier system under which families have to be considered. I wonder how they can do that without getting up and objecting. I saw the hon. member for Egmont trying to get the floor so I assume that he is going to get up and argue in favour of the two-tier system, in order to continue being the hypocrite he has been in this House for the last few years.

I should like to take a look at the Tory party's plan for the two-tier system because they say they are going to help the ordinary people of this country. I am very fond of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), partly because I am very fond of Newfoundland and consider these two as members of an endangered species. I saw what happened to the Tory support in Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe where the Tory party dropped from winning a seat just a few years ago to running a dismal third.

Let me take a look at what that two-tier system really means, and there is no better place to see what will happen than in the province of Newfoundland, because in Newfoundland we have high unemployment and the highest cost of living in the country. We have more poor people in that province than in any other part of our country, and we should look at what would happen there under the Tory plan.

When we talk about that Tory two-tier system what really is it going to mean? We all know presently that unemployment insurance payments are 66⅔ per cent of average insurable weekly earnings. The government proposes to reduce that to 60 per cent. What the Tory party wants to do is leave this at 66⅔ per cent, but only for those people with dependants, not for the poor person who is single and does not have dependants. Let me remind the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands that 90 per cent of women who draw unemployment insurance do not have dependants. She wants to make sure that they draw only 50 per cent of the average insurable weekly earnings.

Let us look at an example of the Conservative party plan in order to see what that party really wants in Canada. Today a fish plant worker in the province of Newfoundland who is working for the minimum wage in that province of $2.50 an hour, works an average of 40 hours a week, earning $100. What does the Conservative party propose for Christmas? What does that Santa Claus clown Crosbie and the other people in the Conservative party propose? A fish plant worker receiving $2.50 an hour works for some 40 hours a week and receives $100. If that worker is laid off, under the Conservative plan she or he will receive $50 a week. I do not know who in the devil in this country could buy their food, pay for their shelter, and pay their taxes, on $50 a week. I do not know how the devil they could do it.

The Conservative party is suggesting that someone in this country can live on $2,600 a year. That is what $50 a week times 52 weeks works out to, and that is what the Conservative party is suggesting, those so-called friends of the ordinary man. I suggest that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is the $50 Santa Claus of the poor people of this country.

We should call their plan what it is, and that is precisely what the Conservative party is advocating, 50 bucks a week for the people of this country who are drawing unemployment insurance benefits. The so-called red Tories, like the hon. member for Egmont and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, get up and chastise the government, and so they should, for cutting back on unemployment insurance benefits, yet the plan they are advocating for their constituents is a hell of a lot worse than the plan of hon. members across the way.

Let us consider the part-time worker, the waitress in Newfoundland. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands pretends to defend the women in the work force of this country. The waitress who is working 20 hours a week for the minimum $2.50 an hour receives some $50 a week. Her unemployment insurance under the Conservative plan would be $25 a week. That is what the Conservative plan is for the part-time workers of this country. That is what is offered by that Santa Claus from Rocky Mountain. That Santa Claus must be stopped dead in his tracks, as I am sure he would be if the people of this country were aware of what he really stands for.

I got a real education in what the Conservative party meant during our campaign in Saskatchewan just a few months ago when I saw a guy named Dick Collver trying to get elected. When we told the people of Saskatchewan the facts, the Conservative party in that province was smashed and turned back decisively for the first time in the last number of years.

It is about time we told the people of this country the facts about those people who sit to our right. They suggest that the people of this country can live on $2,600 a year. That is what they are saying: 50 bucks a week. That's what the Leader of the Opposition is saying, that great big Santa Claus, that hypocrite who comes into this House and says 50 bucks a week is what the people of this country can live on. I sure as hell can't do it and I am damned sure the Leader of the Opposition can't do it either. If he thinks otherwise, I would like to see him get up in this House and tell us how the ordinary person in this country can live on some 50 bucks a week.

Let us look at the two-tier system.

An hon. Member: Let's debate the motion.

Mr. Nystrom: Let us debate the Tory motion. We are not getting to that motion because they are afraid to get to it. This motion hits women, and 95 per cent of the women drawing unemployment insurance do not have dependants. They will be getting only 50 per cent of the weekly insurance earnings. The Tories want to hit women, and they want to hit them hard. As I said, they are hitting the waitress in Newfoundland who is getting some 50 bucks a week. That is what is proposed by this Santa Clause from Rocky Mountain. That is what the Conservative party is offering the people of this country. We know that the women in this country are the last people to be hired and the first to be fired. They are one of the targets of the Conservative party when its members talk about a two-tier system.

Hon. members in that party get up and talk about the great contribution the young people of this country could make if they had the opportunity. Of course they could make a contribution. The government deserves a lot of criticism and, for God's sake, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has criticized the government day in and day out in the committee, but what is the Conservative party doing for the young people? First of all, most young people do not have jobs, and most of the ones who are working are at the lower end of the wage scale in this country. When these young people are laid off they too will be receiving some 50 per cent of insurable weekly earnings, so the motion of that Santa Clause from Rocky Mountain is going to hit the young people and the women of this country, and that is not right.

● (2122)

The other people that the Santa Clause from Rocky Mountain wants to hit are those who live in the Atlantic provinces. We know that is where the unemployment is. We also know that in a place like Newfoundland the cost of living is higher than in Alberta, Saskatchewan or Ontario. I should like to know where some of the members from the Atlantic provinces are tonight. The members of our caucus from that area spoke out in committee and in this House about why people in the Atlantic provinces are unhappy with Premier Moores and the proposals of the Conservative party—and the Liberals, of course. That is obvous. Those are the people that the Conservatives want to hit under the two-tier system—the women, the young, and the people from the Atlantic provinces and poor parts of the country. That is not fair at all, Mr. Speaker.

I just wanted to make those non-partisan remarks about the Tory motion—that we will not reach—about the two-tier system. The Tories have been holding us up on clause 1 because they are embarrassed to get to their motion regarding the two-tier system.

I am not going on longer, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: —because I want to hear what the so-called red Tory, the great leftist, the Tory we always see out at all the progressive movements, the hon. member for Egmont, is going to say about that two-tier system. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra and other members have been talking about more cutbacks and more restraint. I know the hon. member for Egmont very well, and I know how concerned he is about the cutbacks hurting the ordinary people who cannot defend themselves, but his party has been advocating restraint for the last two years. Of course when things are restrained, as they have been in Manitoba, the people who suffer most are those least able to fight back—the unemployed, the women, the young, and in Manitoba, the Indians and Metis have been affected. Those people could tell lots of stories about what has happened in Manitoba.

We have all seen the statistics for Manitoba, Mr. Speaker. In the last year unemployment has shown the greatest increase in Manitoba of any province—it has increased by over 30 per cent. Did someone call out that that was a lie? If so, I should like him to state that publicly. The facts show that unemployment has increased in Manitoba by about 30 per cent in the last year. That is a higher rate of increase than in any other province and it has happened because of the meat-axe that Premier Lyon has taken to that province. There are many stories about the programs that are being chopped.

Let me return to discuss what is happening in this House, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative party is advocating that when a worker in Newfoundland, for instance is laid off, he should receive $50 per week. The Leader of the Opposition is the $50 Santa Claus. That is what the Conservative party is advocating, and that is what the people of this country must understand about the party to my right. The leader is the $50 Santa Claus from Rocky Mountain. Part-time workers would receive as little as $25 per week, and if anyone can live on that, I will be very surprised.

This is an insurance plan, Mr. Speaker, and everybody should contribute equally according to the same formula. The workers of the country are supposed to contribute equally, but under the Conservative two-tier system they would receive benefits in a different way. The single worker would make the same contribution as the worker with dependants, but if the worker with dependants were laid off, he would receive more than the single worker without dependants. Is that equity? I again direct my remarks to the so-called red Tories, the two MacDonalds, and ask them if it is?

A member of the Conservative party interjects to say that universality is tearing the country apart. Are old age pensions tearing this country apart? Is medicare tearing this country apart? Is hospitalization tearing this country apart? Is that where the Leader of the Opposition stands—that medicare and hospitalization are tearing this country apart? Is that the position of the Conservative party? I want to know, Mr. Speaker, because I have seen Tories in this House speak out of both sides of their mouths.

If I want a Tory to support a progressive cause, I know where to go. I can get the hon. member for Egmont, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, or one or two other members of that party. They will shed their crocodile tears, and weep and moan. That is why I have immense respect for the hon. member for York-Simcoe; that is why I have immense respect for the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), and for the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, who are the true Conservatives, the people who control the Conservative party and who defend Conservative principles in this House.

The hon. member for Egmont is waiting to speak. He will moan and groan that this plan hurts the ordinary people, but I should like him to address some of the matters I have addressed. What about equity in paying for the unemployment insurance plan? If the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), for example, was an ordinary worker with a family, he would be making the same contribution to this plan as the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour) who is single and has no family, but if they were laid off, he would only get 50 per cent while the hon. member for Vegreville would get 66⅔ per cent, yet both would pay the same price for a gallon of gas and the same taxes to the Newfoundland government.

I do not see how the so-called progressive Tories on the front bench can claim that this is equity. I wanted to hear them defend the Santa Claus leader of the opposition. In summary, what he is saying to the Canadian people is that someone who makes the minimum wage can live on $50 a week, or $2,600 a year. This has been said loud and clear, Mr. Speaker. He is the $50 Santa Claus. That is damned pathetic in a country as wealthy as Canada, Mr. Speaker. It is damned, damned pathetic, indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that I always enjoy speaking in this place or listening to hon. members speak, but I did enjoy the performance of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I do not think I have ever seen him speak with such vehemence. But vehemence relates to many things and I can understand his frustration. I suppose anyone would be frustrated who was playing second banana to the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

An hon. Member: That is an interesting comment in the House of Commons.

Mr. Paproski: Will you tell those Liberals to be quiet?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I know the government is embarrassed and exercised with this, but if hon. members could suppress their frustrations a little longer we will get to the unpleasant aspect of facing the guillotine in all these report stage amendments.

• (2132)

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville was obviously performing as a double duty man tonight, speaking in part for his party, although one felt he was speaking primarily for the government side. I do not think the government enjoyed any speech as much as the one made by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. Quite frankly, I kept pinching myself to find out if I had fallen asleep and then awakened in a new parliament where we were the government, and the member for Yorkton-Melville was assuming his normal role in the opposition. He is intelligent enough to know he will never carry the responsibility of being on the government side in this House. Therefore, he must ventilate his frustrations from time to time, and this he has done very well, so much so that the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), who has just interrupted, had to remind him at one point to include also the Liberals in his criticism as he fired off salvo after salvo in our direction.

I find it passing strange that the party this member represents which was so anxious to move and to discuss two dozen of the report stage amendments spent no time at all dealing with any of these supposedly important amendments but focused entirely on one of ours—

Mr. Benjamin: Sit down. Let's go to one of yours.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I will, if you give me time. If my hon. friends to the left could restrain themselves, I simply say that the one amendment the member talked about is not perfect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is not perfect, but it is a darn sight better than what the minister is trying to ram through this parliament tonight.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I suppose, in the nature of the speech that was given, the member wanted to ignore altogether that this particular amendment happened to be supported by his premier, Mr. Blakeney of Saskatchewan, as well as all the other premiers. The government members are great for heckling from the benches but they sort of laid off having their own speakers and are deputizing some of my friends to the left in the NDP.

My time is limited, Mr. Speaker, and I want to deal with the more serious aspects of the speech—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): —having passed off from the fun and games and the kind of light diversion supplied by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

The minister knows, and I see some of my Atlantic friends, at least one or two of them on the other side, who know as well that there is no particular item or government initiative which has greater potential for damage at the present time for the economy of the Atlantic region than the measure we are considering tonight.

An hon. Member: Ah!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) or wherever it is, says "ah!" But he better do his homework and look at the figures. I have been expecting for some time to hear the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) speak up in this debate. We know only too well that the economic impact of unemployment insurance in the Atlantic provinces is of major importance.

I am glad to see the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) is here in the House tonight because he occupied, for a period of time, the important responsibility of being Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. If the minister had an opportunity to speak in this debate, I am sure he would confirm that the ratio in the 1970s between the amount of money that was put into the establishment of new industry and the amount of money expended on an annual basis through unemployment insurance is simply astronomical in its difference. In fact, the amount of money that will be claimed as savings this year by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) will be greater than the total amount of money spent over the last ten years on regional development incentives in the Atlantic provinces. The Secretary of State for External Affairs seems to doubt that statement, so I think it would be useful to put the figures on record.

These figures are not coming from any mysterious source, at least no more mysterious than the minister's own figures supplied to the committee. However, it will be useful to have them on the record so that in days to come people will be able to look back and see what kind of action was being taken by this government and the resulting harm it will have on the Atlantic economy. No one should be unaware of the significant measures that are being taken by this government that will cause considerable damage.

I cannot think of an action that is being taken by this government that will do greater economic damage to the Atlantic provinces, indeed to parts of Quebec and to other parts of the country, than this particular measure. The minister has told us, and these are figures which have been supplied from his own records, that in Prince Edward Island, my own province, this bill will eliminate on an annual basis something like 3,500 claimants at a cost of some $13.1 million, which is approximately 28 per cent of the current payments annually to that province. If that is not considered a large amount of money to the over-all economy of Prince Edward Island, then an examination of the situation has simply not been made.

In New Brunswick, and I see some hon. members from New Brunswick here tonight, some 11,600 claimants will be removed, costing the province $62.7 million, or 23 per cent of the annual payments made under unemployment insurance. In Newfoundland there will be some 8,800 claimants eliminated at a cost of $52.2 million, which is 20 per cent of the payments. In Nova Scotia there are 11,000 claimants eliminated, at a cost of $43.8 million or 19 per cent of present payments. In the Gaspé, Quebec, there will be a reduction of some 4,000 claims costing that area $25 million.

The four Atlantic provinces this year will receive in unemployment insurance payments something like $805 million. There will be a loss next year of $175 million, or 21.7 per cent of the total. That is about double what has been spent in the region under RDIA in the more than ten years since its inception, or just under the amount of the DREE budget for Atlantic Canada last year. This is the kind of figure we are dealing with in global terms. I think it has to be kept in that kind of perspective.

Many people have spoken on why the government has taken this action, and the kind of perceptions they have had of what people thought should be done with a program that has rapidly got out of hand. And, as the minister said in his opening press conference around the end of August or the beginning of September, these changes were being made in order to reduce the incentive to draw unemployment insurance benefits and to encourage people to find employment. But, in the area of Atlantic Canada—and indeed this is a sorry statistic that all of us unhappily recognize—in the ten-year period that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been in existence the gap in unemployment between our region and the rest of the country—has grown substantially in Atlantic Canada to the point now where it is increasingly difficult if not impossible to find employment.

For instance in my province the major industries are seasonal in nature. They are agriculture, fisheries, and tourism. These industries can offer employment only for limited periods of time. In particular, two of the major industries, fisheries and tourism, offer employment opportunties for men and women for not much longer than a dozen weeks. If people are lucky, they may get as much as 14 weeks employment, but in many other instances that is not possible. What does that do to an economy? That means in many instances that families who have been able to get by with a period of employment during the year and then some form of insurance payments for the rest of the year, will now not be able to count on what made the difference between living below the poverty level and living just a bit above it. For the government to say that it is bringing in these measures with a view to creating other forms of work employment opportunity will simply mislead everyone.

I was quite surprised when the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion was here this afternoon and agreed with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in saying that obviously something would have to be done to make up that short-fall income both on a personal and general basis in the Atlantic provinces. He seemed to imply, at least from his seat, that some program and some kind of expenditure would take place under his responsibility and through his department. However, Mr. Speaker, you and I both know there is no plan, policy or program that would even begin to touch the kind of hardship and needs that are rapidly going to be created as this program is implemented.

I know the government has taken this action being chiefly concerned with trying to recover its own reputation. It has done so under what I consider to be a cynical approach. What is perhaps most cynical is that most of the measures being implemented under this legislation will not begin to have any significant impact until some time just after the next election, six to nine months from now.

The minister, and presumably the government, are seeking to have the best of both worlds. He is hoping to convince the Canadian public that he has acted responsibly in restraint, when we know that not to be the case. This becomes clearer day by day. The minister hopes this will not have a negative impact on thousands and thousands of people in the Atlantic area until after the election takes place. That is the height of political cynicism. For this government, that is operating at a very high level indeed.

One of my colleagues who spoke before me suggested in terms of this approach with regard to the Atlantic provinces that we are seeing a "scorched earth" policy in which the government is quite prepared to sacrifice the situation, the future, the hopes and the dreams of the people in the Atlantic provinces. Whether that is true or not, there is one thing that is very clear. The great commitment made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a decade ago, as one of his two top priorities, to alleviate regional disparity has now been thrown to the wind.

If ever there was a commitment for the alleviation of regional disparity, it has died a total and dramatic death in the introduction of Bill C-14. If any member from the Atlantic provinces, on the other side, or this side of the House, were to support this bill, it would defy the imagination in terms of the obvious impact it will have on the people he or she represents.

I am not surprised that those government members from the Atlantic area who spoke in the debate this week have criticized the government and can in no way join in the support of this measure. I only hope they follow through on that either by their votes this evening on these amendments or when we come to the final and third reading debate tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being 9.45, pursuant to order made yesterday, Wednesday, December 20, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

I might perhaps indicate my intended method of dealing with these questions. I propose to call all of the motions and take a voice vote. I will, of course, indicate the result that I have from the voice vote. Upon each result, the House ought to indicate whether it desires a recorded division in the usual way by the appropriate number of members standing in their places. We can then either record the result or defer the motion for a recorded division and, at the end of all of the motions, call in the members and take all of the recorded divisions.

The question is on motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Speaker: We will record that motion No. 1 will be dealt with by a recorded division.

The question is upon motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae):

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by deleting clause 2.

Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Rae) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on motion No. 3 in the name of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae):

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 19 to 28 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"end of paragraph (f) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

'(h) any employment with an employer in which persons are employed for less than twenty hours in a week or in which the earnings of persons are less than thirty per cent of the maximum weekly insurable earnings; and

(i) unless otherwise prescribed, paragraph (h) does not apply to an employee where the national unemployment rate that applies to him is greater than four per cent.' "

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Motion No. 3 will be decided by a recorded division.

The question is upon motion No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae):

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended in clause 2 by striking out lines 24 to 28 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"in which the earnings of persons are less than the lesser of 20 times the provincial hourly minimum wage or one-fith of the maximum insurable earnings."

I earlier ruled that on procedural grounds motion No. 11—the minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, when I introduced motion No. 11 I knew it was not in order on procedural grounds and that I would need the unanimous consent of the House in order that it be adopted. I gave that undertaking at the committee stage. I believe there is a general disposition to give unanimous consent so that motion No. 11 can be carried.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is correct, Mr. Speaker. Consent is given as far as this party is concerned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Beaudoin: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The minister would require the consent of the House to present this motion at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved:

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be amended by adding immediately after line 5 at page 4 the following new clause:

"4.1 Paragraph 18(2)(a) of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'(a) incapable of work by reason of any prescribed illness, injury, quarantine or pregnancy.' "

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 11 (Mr. Cullen) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare motion No. 29 lost.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Some hon. Members: At the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Speaker: It being after ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 11.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 22, 1978

The House met at 11 a.m.

FINANCE

ACCOUNTING METHOD FOR FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that this administration has consistently refused to be specific about the serious long-range expenditure and revenue implications of the family allowance and refundable child tax credit program, and noting that the Department of Finance has criticized the very method the government used to implement the program, both calling the accounting of it "somewhat artificial" and suggesting that refundable tax credits should be presented as explicit expenditures, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. de Cotret):

That this House refer the method of accounting for the family allowance and refundable child tax credit program to the Auditor General, so that he may determine whether the revenue and expenditure implications of the program are being presented properly in the accounts, so that he may discover whether the government is aware of the long-range financial implications of the program.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRADE

SALE OF SURPLUS GRAIN ON EXPORT MARKET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Because a larger than normal crop usually produces a surplus above that the Canadian market can absorb and drives prices down, and in order to maintain farm prices at a level which will give our farmers a satisfactory return for the capital and labour they put into their year's operations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That this House direct the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to, in future, sell such surpluses in the export market for the best price obtainable, thus removing the downward pressure from the Canadian market and enabling Canadian farmers to receive a fair return for their year's work.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion for debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO IMPROVE DRYDOCK AT ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the fact that the drydock in Saint John, New Brunswick, has been pledged $10 million toward expansion to allow that dock to undergo ship repairs—and we welcome that news because it will provide badly needed jobs in Saint John—I move, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce act immediately on the application made nine months ago to provide the $8 million for the Government of Canada drydock in St. John's, Newfoundland, to instal a synchrolift, thus increasing employment by some 200 and giving the drydock the facilities to enter into major contracts already arranged for the repair of foreign fishing vessels as well as handling all work offered.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES

MEASURE TO READJUST ELECTORAL DISTRICTS IN ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I seek unanimous consent, under Standing Order 43, in the spirit of Christmas, there having been discussion for some time among the parties.

S.O. 43

The motion is to reintroduce a bill to redress an anomaly in the redistribution of northern Ontario ridings. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That Bill C-60 of the second session of this parliament, an act to readjust the representation of Ontario in the House of Commons and to readjust the electoral districts in Ontario, be reintroduced this day at introduction of bills and proceeded with at all stages and disposed of without further debate.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion at this time for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

DREE PROGRAM FOR MARITIMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the meeting earlier this week of the Council of Maritime Premiers which decided unanimously to appeal directly to the Prime Minister over the unilateral withdrawal of support for the land information and registration service, with the subsequent loss of a new, high technology industry for the maritime provinces, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. Crosby):

That the Prime Minister immediately make arrangements to meet with the three maritime premiers and ask for a joint review of the original announcement by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the minister of economic development.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUESTED AMENDING OF AERONAUTICAL COMMUNICATIONS STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES ORDER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the position taken by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) regarding an important air navigation order known as the Aeronautical Communications Standards and Procedures Order regulating some aspects of the use of the French language in the air, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the Minister of Transport take the requisite steps to modify or remove provisions of this high-profile air navigation order affecting the options for the use of the French language, since he has ignored his responsibilities as minister for over two years in this matter, with the result that the whole system of air regulations is being undermined and the practical considerations for the use of the French language in the air, in light of present-day technical realities, has been set back by his failure to recognize the obvious need for change as thousands of violations have piled up.

[Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).]

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate only upon unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENITENTIARIES

COMMITTEE STUDY OF REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to seek unanimous consent to move a motion.

Having regard to the frustration and disappointment felt by all members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs as a result of their being prevented from taking part in the implementation of their subcommittee's report on penitentiaries, and in view of the fact that the report, made and accepted unanimously, recommended a continuing reference of the subject to the standing committee, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That the Solicitor General initiate proceedings to cause a reference to be made to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs concerning the implementation of the report on penitentiaries.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. Before it can be presented for debate the unanimous consent of the House is required. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

URBAN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE STUDY OF AHOP MORTGAGE DEFAULTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has indicated that the default rate under the AHOP program is probably around 5 per cent, involving approximately 5,000 households, a figure which includes all AHOP purchasers, and since the candidates most likely to be in a default position are the initial purchasers in 1973 and 1974, the figure of 5,000 householders more accurately represents a default rate of 20 per cent, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this House direct the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and his senior officials from CMHC to appear before a special meeting of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, a motion such as has been proposed requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be presented. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF POULTRY MARKETING AGENCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is still waiting to set up a poultry and broiler marketing agency in Canada which is unfair and not too encouraging for Quebec farmers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Janelle):

That the Minister of Agriculture and the government deal as soon as possible with the establishment of that marketing board and the national program for poultry and broiler producers in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such motion can only be introduced for debate with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FORECAST OF REAL GROWTH FOR 1979

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Last November, a little more than a year ago, the hon. gentleman predicted we were on the threshold of tremendous growth. We are still on that threshold.

Yesterday, his department issued a report, "Year-End Review and Outlook", in which it was stated that a sharp slow-down in the United States economy next year would hurt Canadian exports. We know there is going to be a sharp downturn in the U.S. economy next year: predictions are for an increase in gross national product of 2 per cent only. The report says exports have fuelled Canadian growth in the past two years but that we are, unfortunately, not going to be able to rely on a repeat performance in 1979.

An aide to the minister has suggested that the views of the department and of the minister do not necessarily coincide. My question is this: do the minister's views coincide with the views and opinions expressed in the report of his department? If they do not, will the hon. gentleman explain where they do not coincide, and would he tell us upon whose views the government is proceeding—his views, or the department's if there is a difference?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of the department's views versus my views. The department is making an estimate based upon what they think could happen next year if there is a slowdown in the American economy. I believe the American economy will not slowdown as much as some experts have suggested it will, and I certainly believe we will experience another good year in exports next year because it takes a while for the lower dollar to really take effect.

So I think the department is really being somewhat ultra-conservative in the economic predictions in their paper. I do not take that view: I look forward with a very buoyant attitude toward the future of the Canadian economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: In other words, the hon. minister is saying he is very bullish. What the minister has said is that he does not agree with the estimates made by his department with respect to the growth, or lack of growth, in the U.S. economy for next year.

● (1117)

If that is the case, why is he permitting his department to put out a report that says our export performance is going to be down next year as compared to this year? If the minister believes that his department's forecasts are not accurate, and if he believes that the Americans have now got their economics right—that is what he was implying a few weeks ago when he said that they had not got them right—will he explain to us why he permits the department to put out assessments that he does not agree with?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I did not say I did not agree with the assessment the department made, but I think it is customary for civil servants to tend to put their projections a little on the safe side. The hon. member refers to me as being bullish. That is fine. But I am not a civil servant; I am the leader of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: I think it would be natural for me to be slightly more optimistic than the ultra-conservative attitude which sometimes is found within civil servants. I do not disagree with them; I am just up ahead of them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know they have a leader in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, because we thought that the Minister of State (Small Business) was usurping that position. The press has said, "There is Tweedledum and Tweedledummer; sitting by Jack is really a bummer".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The minister's National Design Council has received a report on commercial innovation of secondary industry which states that Canadian firms will have great difficulty competing against imports, despite the decline in the dollar, because they do not have technical ability to match the imported products, and they say that much of Canadian manufacturing in newer products with the fastest growth rates are the areas where we have the heaviest imports.

In view of that, what steps has the minister taken to act on that report and to try to overcome these serious problems? If the minister is not going to overcome them, we will have to call on his deskmate to overcome these problems.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I made a lengthy speech in the House the other night outlining clearly the financial responsibility which my department is taking to encourage rationalization in some industries and to encourage investment in some industries. I am pleased to be able to say that in manufacturing alone we have produced, November over November of last year, over 130,000 more jobs in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I am also pleased to say our imports of manufactured goods, if termed on a volume basis rather than on a dollar basis, are practically nil. There has been very little increase at all in the import of manufactured goods, if one rates it on a volume basis. If imports are rated on a dollar basis, because they are priced on the international market they are priced 15 per cent higher, or thereabouts, in relation to our dollar. So the dollar figures make it look like the import of manufactured goods has increased, but in fact that is not really the case.

If the hon. member can understand figures nearly as well as the hon. member for St. John's East, he should be able to comprehend what I am saying. However, I have very great difficulty believing that the hon. member can really understand figures, because he is a jokester around this House; he seems to understand poetry and humour, but nothing else.

CURRENT ACCOUNT DEFICIT IN 1979

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, following on my colleague's questioning of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

It is obvious that various members of the staff of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce now feel that our trade balance will worsen next year, which will mean that the current account deficit will be even worse in 1979 than it has been in 1978. In a review last month, McLeod, Young, Weir pointed out that in Canada's case, interest rate increases to stabilize currency simply reflects an unwillingness to come to grips with and deal with our four major current account problems.

Does the Minister of Finance intend to follow the policy of increasing interest rates domestically, with the hope that he will attract sufficient foreign funds to overcome the current account deficit, which seems to be increasing steadily, or will he agree that fiscal measures are needed, and not this monetary approach he is taking, to stabilize our dollar?

• (1122)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): If I understand the hon. member—and I hope he will put it in his program—we should not raise taxes, because he speaks about stabilization of the fiscal side of our policies. But that is not what his party speaks about when they go to the country trying to buy votes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member has taken the study and tried to make a lot of it. I was expecting him to get up this morning and congratulate me because OECD, in its report yesterday, made exactly the same prediction as I did for next year. We will do much better than the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I notice the Minister of Finance forgot to mention who supplied OECD with the figures.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: However, let me follow-up further on the question of the mounting current account deficit, which I notice the minister does not deny. Does he propose to continue to spend as much as $500 million a month—that is the amount that has gone out so far this month and that is the amount that went out last month—and does he intend to spend that amount in U.S. dollar reserves in defending the Canadian dollar which he claims is floating?

Mr. Chrétien: First, Mr. Speaker, the current account for the first three-quarters of this year was $200 million less than last year. So when the hon. member speaks about the fact that it is ever-increasing, he should read the latest statistics.

Perhaps the hon. member would like to repeat the second part of his question; then I will be able to reply to it.

An hon. Member: You need a holiday.

Mr. Stevens: I would point out to the Minister of Finance that Canada has run a current account deficit of $3.8 billion to $4.8 billion since 1975, as compared to the current account which was basically in balance between 1971 and 1973.

My question which the minister forgot was this: in view of the chronic current account deficit which is putting our dollar under pressure, does the minister intend to maintain his program of spending as much as $500 million a month on U.S. dollar reserve losses, rather than to correct the basic problem that is causing the current account deficit?

Mr. Chrétien: I should like to hear the hon. member repeat that his answer to the problem is to raise taxes, and I hope he will say that during the campaign. If I were to add up all the promises made by his leader while campaigning around the country, I would have to come to the conclusion that we would have to reduce taxes by a further $5 billion. I want to say that in terms of the floating currency we have to spend some of the reserves. But this is not spending money, as the hon. member would like to think. When we have to use some reserves, we gain Canadian dollars and the cost to the government is the difference between the price we pay for the borrowed money abroad and the price we get for that money which we lend back.

The floating dollar policy is one that has been followed for a long time. We were the first to start it in the early 1970s and we have maintained that policy. At this moment, the value of the Canadian dollar is very good for our business performance. We will have a record year in trade this year, amounting o close to $4 billion, and we will still have a large surplus next year. So we are not in a bad trade position; in fact, we are in a very good position because of the dollar.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: You will have to live with those words.

Mr. Chrétien: Get up and speak now.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Rae: It is only 11.30 in the morning.

COMBINES

OFFER BY DOMTAR TO ACQUIRE MacMILLAN BLOEDEL

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It was announced yesterday that Domtar Incorporated has made an offer of some $587 million for all outstanding shares of MacMillan Bloedel Limited of Vancouver.

In view of the dramatic increase in profits in the pulp and paper industry and increased merger activity in that industry, of which this is only the most recent example, can the minister tell us how he feels the interests of Canadian workers and consumers are being protected by this kind of merger and acquisition activity?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the proposed merger is presently under review by the director of investigations under the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Rae: As the minister may be aware, between January 1 and September 30 of this year the competition policy branch of his department revealed that there were 336 proposals for mergers, of which 199 were from foreign companies and 137 from Canadian firms. These range all the way from the energy business to real estate and from the liquor trade to the pulp and paper industry.

What guarantees can the minister give that this kind of concentration activity, with its skyrocketing prices and profits, will result in new jobs and investment in Canada and also reasonable prices for consumers?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment further on the investigation carried on by the director, because that is contrary to the general policy: it is not considered a proper thing to do while an investigation is under way.

Respecting the second part of the hon. member's question, the result of mergers in general on the economy is a difficult question to answer during the oral question period. It requires a much more detailed response.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that the minister was a paper tiger: perhaps I should say that he is a pulp and paper tiger in this case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: The minister's question simply reveals that free competition among industrial giants leads to a concentration where one company is devouring another. Can the minister not see a distinction between investment which creates jobs and lower prices, and merger and acquisition activity which simply leads to guaranteed markets and guaranteed high prices?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that hon. member is entering into a very general debate.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF POULTRY MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Could he tell the House whether he intends to establish a national poultry marketing board in Canada and, if so, when?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and very soon.

SUBSIDY PAYMENT TO INDUSTRIAL MILK PRODUCERS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): In that case, I am very optimistic, considering the minister's answer. I am going to go to another subject. Can the minister say whether he is considering giving industrial milk producers the 52 cents they are asking for, and if not, why not?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yes.

HEALTH CARE OF NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister say whether he has received a communication from representatives of the Indian people in the prairie provinces asking him to remove or replace the Minister of National Health and Welfare because of her unsatisfactory handling of the Indian health services? If he has considered this good advice, when can we expect him to take some action on it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received such a communication but I do not agree with the hon. member that it is good advice.

MINISTER'S MEETING WITH MARITIME INDIAN CHIEFS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not in the House, so I will direct my supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact he apparently wants to keep the minister on the job, will he ask her to live up to the commitments she made in the House last Monday and Friday that she would meet with the maritime chiefs in the maritimes?

An hon. Member: Here she comes.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Yewchuk: Today, she sent a telex suggesting that she wants them to come back to Ottawa to meet with her. In view of the charges made by the president of the Alberta Indian Association, that the new health policy she enunciated for Indians will result in unnecessary deaths among Indian people, will the minister give a commitment to review this policy to prevent these unnecessary deaths?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. If I appear to be emotional about that question, it is because I am deeply shocked—and I mean every word I am using this morning—at the accusation of the hon. member that the guidelines regarding eyeglasses, dental expenditures and transportation costs will cause the death of anybody in the country. I do not accept that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: I should like the hon. member to withdraw what he said, because it is an accusation unacceptable to any Canadian.

• (1132)

An hon. Member: That's nonsense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What a cry baby.

Miss Bégin: I find that shocking and absolutely unacceptable. We are faced with a problem which I think is taking on proportions that are dangerous for those who care about the health of Indians, starting with the Indians themselves living on reserves. They do not know what goes on in this city in a political way, at times at an irresponsible level.

I have received representations from some chiefs. I did not hear from the National Indian Brotherhood with whom I met a few weeks ago, including representatives from every province and territory. I have since received, quite suddenly, representations from chiefs of four groups of provincial federations. I addressed the problem immediately and told the people who suddenly wanted to come to Ottawa, after I had already agreed to meet other groups' representatives in my department, for whom I work, that I would not see them immediately because that was impossible, but I would very soon and I asked if our technical people could meet with them right away.

The CBC had a program which was—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious why the minister has imposed this policy, because one of the things she has cut out is ambulance rides to take sick people to hospital. If she does not think that is a threat to their lives, then she is a lost cause in this regard.

I would like her to explain why she sent a telex to the maritime chiefs this morning telling them she will not meet with them there, but wants them to come to Ottawa, when only this last Monday and last Friday she said she would go to the maritimes to meet with them to discuss this very serious problem.

Miss Bégin: Because in between, Mr. Speaker, the CBC made a statement that is completely incorrect and incompetent and I have asked for a retraction, and I am speaking English to make sure it is understood directly by all those who are representing English-speaking Indians in this country.

This subject is a most important one. The health of Indians and the health of anybody is sacrosanct. I will never accept that a member has the guts to stand up, without checking any facts, and accuse anybody of causing death. There is no fooling around on that question, and I will not accept it.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POST OFFICE

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION USING PRIVATE POSTAL CARRIER

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Postmaster General. Is he aware that the Scarborough Public Utilities Commission is using a private postal carrier to deliver its bills, at a cost of eight cents a bill instead of the 14 cents, soon to rise to 17 cents, charged by his department?

Has A. J. L. Whitton, marketing director for the Post Office in Ontario, advised the commission that it may be in contravention of the Post Office Act which gives the Postmaster General the sole and exclusive privilege of delivering and collecting letters in Canada? If this is so, is this government policy? Furthermore, can the Postmaster General explain how a private carrier can deliver and make a profit at eight cents a letter when the post office is losing millions of dollars at what will soon be twice the rate, namely, 17 cents?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should tell the hon. member that I am well aware of the incident. However, I have not yet had a full report on the incident in order to see who is right or wrong. I have asked for legal advice on this and I will take the proper steps depending upon the result of that legal advice. However, nothing has been proven, either—that a private carrier can deliver for six cents, seven cents or eight cents and make a profit. He might do that just for annoyance or in an attempt to do business with this commission.

I think it will be very interesting to see the legal advice we receive, because depending on whether we can apply the law or not we may want to ask for an amendment to the bill implementing the Crown corporation in order to make sure this is well clarified.

I am surprised that a public commission or municipality is not ready to abide by the Post Office Act, if they are aware of it—and I am sure they are. As an ex-mayor of Quebec, I can say that I abided by the law of governments and by any law as it was submitted to me. I am surprised that a municipality does not want to abide by the law within the terms of the Post Office Act.

EMPLOYEES NOT RECEIVING FULL PAY IN CERTAIN AREAS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could direct another question to the Postmaster General. Reports indicate that there has been a great mix-up in Calgary and in some other offices in respect of pay cheques, resulting from deductions due to the recent strike. Many employees wll not be receiving their full pay before Christmas.

Can the Postmaster General inform the House what the problems are and what action he is taking to remedy this situation, so that everyone can go home with a full pay cheque and have a happy Christmas?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member not to believe everything he hears from people who call him—probably the same people who call me. Mr. Hall, president of CUPW in Calgary, probably has called the hon. member in the same way he called my office.

The truth is that they are being paid. The cheques are in the right amounts, but the coding on the cheques is wrong. That does not prevent them from cashing their cheques. I should like to mention to the hon. member, as well, that at the moment I do not think there is any justification for hon. members to ask questions which create confusion in the Post Office. We have had the best Christmas season yet. Morale is good, and we have delivered mail better than ever before during a Christmas season, particularly in the last seven years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF SOUTHEAST ASIAN REFUGEES ADMITTED TO CANADA

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration: it is a follow-up to the motion under Standing Order 43 which I proposed two days ago and which, unfortunately, did not receive unanimous consent.

Could the minister advise the House whether the government has taken into consideration the consequences of the motion I moved, which would allow into Canada, one of the most fortunate countries in the world, an appropriately higher number of refugees known as boat people?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, somewhat prior to, during and after the hon. member's motion under Standing Order 43 the government was looking into this matter. We have had representations at the Geneva conference and I am pleased to say that in co-operation with my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, we will triple the number from 70 families per month to just about 200 families per month. For 1979 we will take 5,000 refugees from Indo-China.

In addition to that, we will double the amount of our contribution to the budget of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees from $1 million to $2 million. That, of course, will be in addition to the moneys we are already contributing to many refugee camps around the world.

HEALTH CARE OF NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the shouting from the Liberal side: they have to shout since closure has been introduced to stop them from speaking on a bill they oppose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I can wait, sir, until they stop their shouting and their moaning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: My question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is supplementary to those posed by my colleague, the hon. member for Athabasca, which the minister did not answer, preferring instead to put up a fog of emotion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: What kind of emotion?

Mr. Clark: A fog of emotion. The minister is having difficulty hearing me because of her colleagues' shouting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

● (1142)

Mr. Clark: I am trying to create a situation for the minister where her colleagues will let her hear me.

My question is: why did the minister break her word today to the maritime chiefs, that she would meet them in the maritimes, by sending them a telex changing the venue of the meeting to Ottawa?

[Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi).]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition in trying to develop his credibility by talking only about what he thinks is serious—cuts, constraints, restraints and economic problems. He is not interested in the social sector at all.

He becomes nervous when I use emotion when talking about undue accusations with regard to the lives of people in this country. I will continue to use emotion, and if the hon. gentleman does not know what to do with his emotions, he is not ready to be the leader of a country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the politicking which is taking place this morning does not help to solve a very serious issue, which is the apparent misunderstanding in Indian communities of the guidelines that are merely intended for my staff to make sense of and control expenditures relating to four items regarding uninsured health expenditures. I name them often, and everybody knows they have nothing to do with the lives of people.

I would like to inform the House that I never committed myself to go to the maritime provinces on a specific date but, rather, that I would try to go there because it is less expensive than to have huge delegations come to Ottawa. Since that day, new developments have taken place. I mentioned the CBC report but the Leader of the Opposition, of course, was not listening. I mentioned an interview which took place in front of millions of Canadians and gave dangerously wrong facts. Therefore, the situation has changed.

I cannot go to the ten provinces on the same day in the month of January. Therefore, I had to ask for the co-operation of the chiefs and I invited them to meet me in Ottawa immediately after the opening of parliament, on January 24. I hope that I will have the co-operation of the Leader of the Opposition on this matter and that he will ask the opposition critic, the hon. member for Athabasca, to stop this unacceptable form of politicking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it escapes the understanding of most of us why a broadcast on the CBC makes it impossible for the minister to move about in the country, but I suppose if she feels incapable of defending her policy the CBC is as good an organization to blame it on as any other organization.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The firm commitment which the minister gave to the native people of the maritime provinces is on the record of Hansard and she will have to live with it.

My question relates to a statement made in May by the president of the Indian Association of Alberta whose claim is, as president of an organization directly responsible for people whose lives he feels will be in danger, that actions being proposed by this government, in regard particularly to ambulance services, will jeopardize the lives of native people in western Canada. My question to the minister is a repetition of one she refused to answer earlier.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I see her refusal is being supported by the NDP.

An hon. Member: Put the question.

Mr. Benjamin: You are sounding like a green backbencher. Ask the question.

Mr. Clark: Will the minister consider with an open mind the argument put by the president of the Indian Association of Alberta, to the effect that the changes introduced will, or may, endanger the lives of native people in western Canada; and if she so finds, after an open examination of that allegation, will she change the policy?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, at least the NDP are capable of showing emotion. The questioning by the Leader of the Opposition is becoming more and more ridiculous every minute. I am surprised that he does not have the courage to withdraw the type of stupid allegations which are being made on a very important issue dealing with the lives of people. I would like to repeat that the hon. gentleman does not seem to understand that this is not a matter for politicking.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Time for a new minister.

Miss Bégin: I am convinced that we need guidelines regarding the control of reasonable expenditures for all Indian people in need of health services, but eyeglasses have nothing to do with the lives of people.

I would like to repeat that the hon. gentleman does not seem to understand that the usual health services will continue exactly as they have in the past. The Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Athabasca seem to have forgotten that I have said the last paragraph of my telex was probably the most important: that is obvious, because I asked the chiefs to send to me, immediately, information on any cases of hardship which they have witnessed across the country because I would like to look into such matters personally.

Nine days ago, when I met briefly with the maritime delegation, they spoke to me of abuse and the death of some people. Immediately I asked for a dossier on the situation, and I have not received one single name. I have had an assistant deputy minister travel across the country to obtain the names of people and to look for hardships caused by my department, guidelines or no guidelines, and he has received no information. That is what I would like to look into right away.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

In view of the fact that thus far in this session there has been no legislation respecting veterans, will the minister do his best between now and the time we meet again to persuade his colleagues in the cabinet to permit him to bring in legislation respecting the pensions of widows of disabled pensioners, and also respecting the tying of the rate of the 100 per cent disability pension to the composite level designated in the Pension Act? Would the minister also be ready to report to us in January on the review of the War Veterans Allowance Act?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the references which were made by the hon. member are under consideration in my department and we will have something to say about them at a later date.

With regard to the review of the War Veterans Allowance Act, it is coming along quite well and I hope to have something presented to me some time in February.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister deals with war veterans allowance recipients.

Would the minister tell the House whether he now has clearance from Treasury Board that such recipients who also receive either the increased GIS due in January or increases in their child benefits will not have these increases cut off their war veterans allowance?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I am able to be quite positive on that matter this morning. The recipients of the war veterans allowance who receive the GIS increase and the children's benefits will also receive the benefits previously passed under the national health and welfare act and they will apply to the recipients of the veterans allowance and the civilian war allowance.

POST OFFICE

POSTAL SERVICE IN FORT HOPE, ONT.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Is the minister aware of the extremely serious deterioration in postal service in the Indian Community of Fort Hope in northern Ontario? This deterioration has been brought about because of an alleged misappropriation of funds by a postal employee whom the Post Office apparently neglected to bond in the usual way?

Will the minister explain to the House why the entire community is being punished for an alleged wrongdoing by a postal employee? What action is being taken to restore postal service to the Indian community of Fort Hope?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that there has been no abandonment of postal service in that community. There has been no punishment of this community.

● (1152)

As the hon. member knows, we have had some problems before with the Fort Hope post office and this time there was misappropriation of funds and we had to discontinue the operations of the post office. However, we did not discontinue the delivery of the mail. It has been flown there as usual. My people are supposed to meet with the band council of the Indians at Fort Hope to try to see if they could take care of the security of the mail and take on the operation of the post office themselves. So there is no abandonment of the mail. Deliveries are being made normally, and within the next ten days someone will be there to see what we can do in conjunction with the band council of Indians of this community.

INDUSTRY

INCREASES IN PRICE OF ALUMINUM—MAINTENANCE OF ADEQUATE SUPPLY

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce: it has to do with the domestically charged, Canadian-produced aluminum.

In light of the fact that some Canadian businesses involved in secondary manufacturing industry have had price increases of upwards of 26 per cent in the past year and yet cannot secure guarantees of continued adequate supply, will the minister investigate the situation to ensure that Canadian companies are not being treated unfairly and that jobs will not be lost to Canadians?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the difficulties in securing aluminum for Canadian companies, nor am I aware of the price increase. I will take the hon. member's question as notice and try to reply to him before the House reconvenes in the new year.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. During recent weeks the demand for aluminum has increased dramatically due to a shortage on the American market.

Would the minister look into this possibility of price fixing and collusion among the major producers in this country, to guarantee that favouritism is not being shown to those manufacturing companies in which the primary producer has a vested interest?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether the accusation in the question was accurate. I can say to the House and to you, Mr. Speaker, that Alcan has just announced a major expansion in their capacity for putting out aluminum and that might have some good effects on Canadian procurements. However, I will look into the whole matter and give the hon. member a reply.

TRANSPORT

MEETING WITH PRAIRIE PROVINCES TO DISCUSS RAIL TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and the Acting Minister of Transport? I direct my first question to the Acting Minister of Transport, who will be aware of intense and grave concern on the prairies with respect to rail transportation.

At the time of the first ministers' conference a request was made by Premier Sterling Lyons to meet on January 5 and 6 with all transport representatives of the three prairie provinces. I ask the Acting Minister of Transport whether he is accepting that invitation; will he be meeting with them on those dates?

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the minister has not yet given a formal answer to that invitation, and he is very seriously considering doing so as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE

CARRIAGE OF PRAIRIES' AGRICULTURAL PRODUCE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, in light of the very grave and important situation of prairie rail transportation, could I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has accepted the invitation? Does he intend to be at that meeting with the prairie transport ministers with relation to the concerns that were expressed to him at the time of the first ministers' conference?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows the dates were just sent to us and, in addition, that this date was the date the meeting was to be called. We immediately responded and said that we had other commitments at that time. We suggested that any time after January 12 I believe, we would be ready and willing to meet, because I had a long-standing commitment.

We had cancelled the government trip to Israel in November, I believe it was, and that was the third time that trip had been cancelled. We had rearranged that I would leave on New Year's Day for Israel and return here on January 12. That trip is in conflict with the meeting, and I talked to the minister of agriculture in Manitoba about that. He told me at that time he did not see any difficulty in changing the date. I have not heard back from him yet. I believe we sent a telex to him about four days ago in that regard. We realize the importance of the meeting, but I am sure that the Premier of Manitoba also realizes the importance of the exchange of agriculture, trade, etc., in Canada and, as well, the agricultural exchange of research which is a long-standing commitment that we have with that country.

POST OFFICE

MAIL DELIVERY TO NEW TOWNS IN OTTAWA AREA

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General, about which I gave him notice, with respect to postal service in my constituency.

I would appreciate being advised what plans the Post Office may have with respect to postal addresses within the new cities of Nepean and Kanata, because there has been a considerable amount of confusion. Also, could he advise what proposals there are for informing the residents of the new cities about changes of address and the time when these changes should be made?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton for giving me notice of this question: it is in the right Christmas and New Year spirit.

I would like to make the answer as clear as possible. With the establishment of municipal authorities such as those in the cities of Kanata and Nepean, the main factor for postal operations is notification of our facilities across the country as to where these new addresses are located. We are in a process of doing that.

Secondly, our delivery system will remain basically unchanged. Since the postal code does not change, there does not seem to be any problem in that area. As for uncoded mail, it may take a little while before people across the country are completely familiar with the names of the new cities. However, we do not anticipate any major difficulty, and much information will be given about that.

Rural routes should not change at the moment and they will still come from the same post office station. Residents may address their mail as they wish, for example, "Nepean", "Kanata" or "Ottawa". We will deliver it. We have been in consultation with municipal authorities regarding their new boundaries and we are expecting to notify residents of this. I can reassure the hon. gentleman that we will carry on the usual efficient and rapid delivery of mail in this area.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

ALLEGED IMPROPER DESIGNATION OF "BILINGUAL"

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the statement made by the Commissioner of Official Languages that there are many bilingual phonies in the civil service, does the minister intend to ask Mr. Yalden to identify these people so they may defend themselves from the charge that they are not what they are supposed to be?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I assume that in his comment the point that Mr. Yalden was making was there are many people who have not yet achieved the level of bilingual capacity that they like to achieve. I really do not accept the word "phony", though.

URBAN AFFAIRS

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE, QUEBEC—COMPENSATION FOR PERSONS AFFECTED BY EXPROPRIATION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

Last November 6 we had here in Ottawa a demonstration by more than 600 residents of Ste-Scholastique during which the predecessor of the present minister promised an answer to their claims within two weeks. I think the minister is aware of their claims. Two weeks later the minister reported his decision to a later date, namely before the end of the year. Considering that we are at the very end of the year, is the minister today in a position to give us answers to the claims of those thousands of people who were expropriated?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, I would like to to say that the expropriated had, thanks to the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes, a series of meetings with officials of my department to examine what new compensations could be given to them, which would meet their hopes, and which could put them on the same level as those who were expropriated in Pickering.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

As the minister is aware, I believe, of the representations already made by hon. members on both sides of the House asking that the expropriated be given at least a glimmer of hope at the end of the year, can the minister assure us that by the end of January, 1979, at the very latest those regulations will finally be accepted by the department as well as the expropriated? In addition, after all this time, will an effort be made to give those people a definite answer?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, a meeting was held a few days ago. I asked my officials for a report which I am to receive in early January. There are a few technical points I want to check. Moreover, I am waiting for additional representations from the expropriated which are to be sent to me through their MP; as soon as the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes has handed them over I hope to be able to reach a decision in the first few weeks of January. In any event, I am sure the expropriated can spend a very happy Christmas.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PARKER—REPLY OF MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: On December 18 the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Parker) raised by way of a question of privilege that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Abbott) had used language which offended him, and he asked for a determination as to whether the language was unparliamentary. I indicated at the time that my recollection of the language was that it was not.

I examined the record, as I indicated I would; and I also examined two precedents which may be of assistance to the hon. member, one under date of July 19, 1960, at page 6553 of Hansard and the other on November 16, 1977, at page 941 of Hansard. In light of both of those precedents it seems to me that the language lacks specificity. Therefore, there would be no grounds upon which I could intervene.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHRISTMAS RECESS

On the order: Motions:

December 18, 1978—The Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council:

That, when the House adjourns following the disposal of the third reading stage of Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, it shall stand adjourned until a time to be fixed by Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, when the House may meet for the purpose of dealing with any subsequent proceeding on the said bill or the giving of royal assent to the said bill and any other bills then ready for royal assent;

That after the disposal of such proceedings or in the event the House does not meet for those purposes, the House shall be adjourned or stand adjourned, as the case may be, until January 23, 1979, provided that at any time prior to that date if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order on the motion providing for the adjournment of the House. It is not my intention to call the adjournment motion at this stage because it may be more expeditious to postpone dealing with it until after the vote on the third reading of the unemployment insurance bill. I propose not to call this motion at the present time but following the vote on the third reading of the bill we are dealing with today, when I will ask for consent of the House to go back to motions and have the adjournment motion dealt with. What I am really asking now is consent to do that at that particular time and, if possible, to have an order of the House made providing for the ability to revert to motions at that point to deal with the adjournment motion.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There have been discussions carried on through the usual channels, and the government House leader's proposal is agreeable to us, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions and we agree.

Mr. Beaudoin: That is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered that, after the taking of the vote upon the third reading of Bill C-14, the House will revert to motions for consideration at that time of the adjournment motion standing in the name of the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions about another matter as well. I think you will find there is agreement to provide that a 20 minute rule apply to all speeches today on third reading. This agreement has come about because, after all, there is a limited amount of time. If we had 40 minute speeches or speeches of unlimited time, not many members would be able to speak. I believe such agreement has been discussed among all four parties.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Beaudoin: That is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered that speeches about to be made on the third reading of Bill C-14 shall not be more than 20 minutes in duration.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, probably few bills have been more controversial than the one which we are presently discussing. It touches the heart strings of the members of this House who have consideration for their fellow man while at the same time having respect for the capability of our society to do all those things we might want to do.

It is because of the restrictions which have been placed upon the capability of government to fulfil its promises of 1971 that it has found itself in a very penurious position and has been compelled therefore to bring in amendments which would offer another opportunity to practise constraint.

This is laudable, I agree; the purpose is long since past due. However, it is the method of application of the objective which is objectionable. It has been introduced in a fashion and in an environment which is unacceptable. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has set himself up as the great unifier of this country. He has suggested that the federal and provincial governments should form a co-operative confederation type of structure. Yet this bill has been brought in without consultation with the provinces regarding the impact it might have on provincial treasuries. It is evident, therefore, that the Prime Minister and the government are devoid of sincerity in their advocacy of a federal-provincial co-operation structure. Their actions denounce and contradict their own ideology.

There is a multitude of hidden factors which I believe we should consider at this time. First of all, objection was raised to this bill by many supporters of the government both on the front benches and on the back benches. I wonder what has been done to silence those objections? For instance, what happened to the objection of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell)? She made a speech indicating that she in no way supported the bill as introduced. Her speech was a condemnation of the government and its approach to the subject. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour) made statements outside the House condemning the government without qualification for the lack of consideration which this policy extends to his province of Newfoundland. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) was equally disappointed by the behaviour of the government, and as we sat in this chamber last night and watched those dissenters brought back to the fold we could not help wondering what price was paid, what promises were made and what pot will be opened to fulfil the demands of these people in their own constituencies.

Who should be the spokesman, Mr. Speaker, for Nova Scotia? Who should best understand its needs? Who should be the spokesman for Newfoundland and for Atlantic Canada in general? There are two groups which are obviously best qualified; they are the members elected to the House of Commons along with the premiers and elected members in the provincial legislatures. It is not the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) acting in a unilateral way.

In view of the objection expressed by the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), who is the chairman of the Atlantic caucus, we cannot help wondering on this side what plums were passed along to satisfy the objectors. I say this because last night it was very obvious they had been whipped into line and were voting against the best interests of their constituents. Is it a continuation of the discrimination which has been exercised in the allocation of funds for the Canada Works program? The last time that program was examined—and it has been examined several times—it was found that Liberal members of the House of Commons were receiving $600,000 to $900,000 per constituency more than opposition members were receiving, regardless of party affiliation. This is a deplorable and despicable practice because people all across Canada where unemployment is high are entitled to equal consideration. The government has ignored the needs of Canada but has recognized the needs of Liberal members and their constituencies.

To what extent will this pork barrelling be permitted to go? There is certainly evidence from the past behaviour of the government that the DREE program in its various aspects has been used for political purposes. Assistance under this program can be granted to the provinces to aid their economic expansion, but under the dictates of the minister in charge of the program or of the minister representing a particular province.

I have complained about this situation for a long time. One would imagine that moneys granted to a province to assist its economic expansion would be administered by the provincial government as being closest to the scene and knowing more about the need. But this is not to be the case. Before the moneys are released by Ottawa the planning and the location of the expenditure is arranged between the Government of Canada and the individual provinces concerned, without too much consideration being given to the specific needs of the province. Is this use of DREE money to be expanded into a political pork barrel to the detriment of the country as a whole but to the benefit of individual members and individual constituencies? This, we must consider, is what is going to happen. The Canada Works program, as I mentioned, has been loaded in favour of Liberal members. Liberal members of this House are very often inclined to contradict remarks made from this side but I notice there is complete silence on this occasion in recognition of a statement of truth as delivered to them.

Mr. Maine: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) has made an incorrect statement. I am sure he does not want to mislead the House by saying that the Canada Works program is loaded in favour of certain constituencies. Grants are made under a formula of which I am sure he is aware, and that formula is geared to unemployment rate. His statement is misleading the House completely.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. What the parliamentary secretary is trying to say could be said when he contributes to the debate. This is a matter of opinion. If we were to allow points of order with regard to different interpretations of, or opinion on, what is said, there would be little time left to members who had the floor. The hon. member did not make a specific attack; he was speaking in generalities, he has his own opinion and he is entitled to it.

Mr. McCain: In reply to that intervention, let me tell the hon. member something. They have a formula in place which no member of this House can figure out. Can the parliamentary secretary figure it out? Has he ever sat down with that formula in mind and tried to determine whether his constituency is getting its fair share of the funds available?

Mr. Maine: Yes, I have.

Mr. McCain: Well, in that case the hon. gentleman may be able to sit down and give us a lesson. The government has changed the regulations but the basis of the formulation cannot be substantiated.

Mr. Maine: Untrue!

Mr. McCain: What price is going to be paid, what plums are going to be passed out to Liberal constituencies through the distribution of wealth and various government programs? I see an example in the designation of districts. I want to start with one district in the province of Quebec. I want to congratulate the government because to the extent that I understand Quebec—I cannot claim to understand it all—a perfect example of a suitable district was carved out when the city of Quebec was regarded as one district because it lies in an area of seasonal unemployment, agriculture, seaway transportation and so on.

But let us turn to New Brunswick. Are we going to change the boundaries of the regions and thus grant a few favours? There are chances for changes in those regions. Let me explain why I say that. If we look at the Carleton-Charlotte constituency, we find that the southern half of that constituency is included in the city of Saint John. That is an area of high employment. Saint John is grouped with a seasonal, rural, small village and town area of the province of New Brunswick. When the unemployment rate in Saint John is averaged with the rate in the surrounding district, the level is brought up to the point where this bill would apply in full.

Why do I complain about that? Part of the city of Saint John is in my constituency, but so is the island of Grand Manan, and so are all the fishing communities on the shore of Charlotte county and on the other islands. If we were to count heads on Grand Manan today, we would probably find that unemployment in that area is somewhere between 20 per cent and as high as 40 per cent. However, that island is included in the same region as the city of Saint John. The government did not use the discretion in New Brunswick which it used in Quebec, and I wish the minister was here to hear this.

Mr. Maine: He will be back.

Mr. McCain: Let us carry this a little further and go to the city of Fredericton and the region in which it is included. Included with the city of Fredericton are rural areas of York county and other areas nearby. What happens when this is done in a highhanded way without consideration for the nature of the region? The city of Fredericton again is an area which is blessed with a high employment rate, but the surrounding area is forest, agriculture, seasonal. If a person lived, for instance, in the community of Stanley in the county of York in the province of New Brunswick, that person would find himself without any of the privileges which special circumstances grant under this bill to seasonal employees. However, if he moved a few miles into Northumberland county or to the constituency of Northumberland-Miramichi, he would find another little community which has a source of employment common with the village of Stanley but, because they are ten miles apart and a district boundary comes between them, this person will get no unemployment insurance in Stanley while people in Boiestown will be as eligible as they ever were. This is unfair, and there is no way it can be supported.

On the boundary between York county and Carleton county there is a little village called Meductic. If a person lives north of the river in Meductic he is eligible, but if he walks or moves across the bridge, he is then in an area of high employment and seasonal employment and is not eligible for unemployment insurance. There is no way this type of bureaucratic division of a country without any consideration or knowledge of employment opportunities can be made by regulation.

That reminds me of a responsible individual in this House, the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I think I have identified him. He spoke in support of this bill, and this is what he said:

Regulations can be implemented to make sure that no one suffers, and no one will suffer.

It was emphasized earlier that regulations have already been gazetted. I will not touch on that, but backbench and responsible members are relying upon regulations to be sure that their constituents are not hurt. The hon. member also said:

Every bill needs minor changes. That is done through regulations.

Every Canadian is entitled to know exactly where he stands and to equal treatment in this nation. This bill would discriminate among equals, and some will be much more "equal" than others. If this bill can be defended in the village of Meductic, in the village of Stanley or in a multitude of other places, in view of the way the province of Quebec has been handled, I would love hon. members opposite to campaign on that basis in the next election because they are going to have some explaining to do.

This bill is inequitable and unjust. It ignores all the democratic principles which I thought this House of Commons should espouse. This is pure and utter contempt for parliament. This House is asked to consider a bill. The bill goes to committee. It is considered by very hard working people who are dedicated to the welfare of the people who are involved with unemployment insurance, and they learn that the bill is already in effect because by regulation the major aspects of the bill will be in place and effective on January 1. This bill is a multi-billion dollar item, and it will be passed in this House today through closure.

Then it will be passed on to the Senate in a very degrading form. Senators will hardly be proud of themselves if they yield to the pressure of this government and pass the bill in an hour or two. This contempt for parliament and the parliamentary process is unacceptable. The Senate as well as the House of Commons should have an opportunity to give this measure adequate consideration, but no one extended us that opportunity.

Let us consider again what the Prime Minister is supposed to have espoused early in his political life. I am referring to issue No. 11 of November 30, 1978, of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration at page 11.10. On that page we find the following:

> In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, if my recollection of our Prime Minister's message in his earlier political life is accurate, he has taught us that to negotiate is not to capitulate, but to set democracy in motion.

That was an early political statement by the Prime Minister of Canada. What negotiations with the provinces took place in this instance? None. There was a meeting in Toronto. The minister gave the participants an hour and a half.

Mr. McGrath: After the fact.

Mr. McCain: The provinces came before the committee to present their cases, but no amendment has accrued from that.

This bill would transfer the cost to the taxpayers of Canada from the federal realm to the provincial realm. I ask those hon. members far to my left who have so assiduously supported everything they thought was right, including the transfer of this expense to the provinces, to refer to the election of 1974 and the processes they followed. One gentleman who took a hard stand against all amendments proposed by the official opposition failed to get himself elected. Hon. members should take the trouble to read the presentations by the provinces and remarks made in this House yesterday about the transfer of cost to municipalities by virtue of the passing of this bill. I wonder if the people of Oshawa-Whitby will embrace the leader of the New Democratic Party when their taxes go up as as result of the transfer costs to the welfare system in that area.

Mr. Peters: We are opposed to every clause in this bill, not just some.

Mr. McCain: Members of the New Democratic Party have thrown their forces more with the government than with us. There is a virtual coalition.

Mr. Peters: Nonsense.

Mr. McCain: I think there ought to be a new definition of the word "nonsense". The minister and the New Democractic Party should cause a revision to be made in dictionaries, because "nonsense" seems to be anything but ideas which originate with the NDP or the government. Any idea which comes from anywhere else is nonsense.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is fading away. There is a problem in this field. The opposition recognizes that. The man on the street recognizes it. The provincial governments recognize it. But the federal government does not know how to solve it. This bill cures little. Passing this bill is like calling on a witch doctor to treat multiple sclerosis.

• (1232)

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will excuse me if I am not my normal shape today. It is because I am under medication for the flu. I might not be able to deal, for example, with the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) as I normally do; but I am sure that in the substance of my arguments, even if the form is not there, I will do the same.

I would just like to comment briefly on some of the things the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) said in his speech. One wonders why the hon. member would refer to Quebec having been treated differently in the designation of economic zones. I have never seen Statistics Canada setting up a particular system for the province of Quebec, and I wonder why a member from New Brunswick would refer to small towns in some parts of New Brunswick and say it is too bad that the government has not treated them in the same way as small towns in Quebec. When I hear members talk in this fashion, I wonder why they do not stick to the facts and explain to their constituents and to the Canadian public when they speak in the House exactly what they mean by that sort of thing.

First of all, the hon. member does not know what he is talking about when he suggests that economic zones have been set by this bill. It is not this bill that sets up economic zones. All it does is to refer to some of the effects of unemployment insurance benefits on some zones. If hon. members were honest, they would state the facts correctly and say that it is not this bill which sets down economic zones and boundaries. They have always been set down by order in council. In this case the minister has changed them by order in council, and he can change them again by order in council whenever he gets a good argument to do so. So when members start saying that it is this bill which sets up inequities in the designation of economic zones, they are just making political arguments which are completely outside the realm of this bill.

The minister has said to me personally—I believe he has said it publicly and also to other members who have asked him—that he realizes there are inequities in the designation of these boundaries, and he has said he would look at this. I am sure that if he speaks in this debate he will tell us that he is prepared to look objectively at criteria other than a clear and straight statistical arithmetical formula to make sure that these inequities are corrected.

I know that this minister has always been fair and objective with this sort of thing. When I hear the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte suggest that the appropriation of funds under Canada Works has been politically manipulated by this government, all I can say is that this is complete nonsense. I will make sure that I use parliamentary terms when I speak of him, but let me say that for a Tory member like the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte to suggest this sort of thing, when he knows that the appropriation of funds is based on an arithmetical formula, is not to have the courage to speak out. That is what the hon. member is doing, to use parliamentary terms; he does not have the courage to speak the truth. For a Tory member from New Brunswick to talk to me—I am also from New Brunswick and I know how the Tory government operates in that province—and suggest that people would manipulate funds strictly on an electoral or political basis is sheer hypocrisy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: When this government appropriates funds on programs which affect people, it does not ever manipulate them politically, and the hon. member knows that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Come on.

Mr. Breau: Hon. members might say "oh, oh!", but I challenge the hon. member to rise and prove what he said, to prove that any program administered by this government which affects people directly has been manipulated politically. I challenge any member to do that.

Mr. McGrath: I am worried about your throat.

Mr. Breau: My throat is good enough to deal with the hon. member for St. John's East; he does not have to worry about it. Whenever I hear this kind of hypocrisy in the House, I can always find enough strength to speak.

Mr. Peters: What about your medication?

Mr. Breau: To suggest this sort of thing is not to have the courage to speak the truth. I do not like this bill particularly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: It is not my invention. I did not ask for the bill. But I will support it because—

Miss MacDonald: Because you are a Grit.

Mr. Breau: I heard the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) utter something. If he likes to put it on the record I will answer him, but I will not force him to do so. He knows I do not support anything.

Mr. Peters: Conflict of interest.

Mr. Breau: This bill has to be seen in the context of an exercise by the government to moderate the rate of growth of deficits in Canada. It must be seen as an exercise by the government to make sure we do not spend the GNP at too high a rate at any particular time. The deficits in Canada are not out of proportion in comparison with deficits in other industrialized countries, but the rate of growth of these deficits has been too rapid in too short a time.

The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae) should not get too excited because I understand his party's position. It is very clear. They say one should not worry too much about the rate of growth of deficits, and they need not be responsible for whatever they ask for. I would love to be in that position, I would love to be able to ask for anything and to propose anything that sounds good, that is good and just. I happen to be responsible and I happen to be a member of a party which wants to do things for people, which wants to set up good programs for people. But we must answer to the House of Commons and to the public for the amount of money that is spent in Canada.

Also we must answer to the public for the amount of money that must be borrowed abroad or elsewhere for the country. That is why in the months of August and September the government has looked at some programs to see if they could not be changed so that some funds could be liberated to increase child benefits through a tax credit scheme; to increase old age security supplements and to change the spouse's allowance program to provide for a benefit of six months when the spouse dies; and, most important of all, to provide funds for manpower training, job creation and economic development. That is the objective of the so-called August and September exercise.

It is in the context that I support this bill. When the minister first spoke about putting forward this bill, there were some things in it that I could not support and I told him about them. Many of us here do not need a filibuster in the House. We do not need to spend four or five debates discussing two or three amendments and making political speeches to make a point. We sat down with the minister and we discussed these matters with him. He has been very forthcoming and very flexible and he drastically changed his proposals from when they were first announced in September when he presented the bill in the House. I want to thank the minister publicly for having done that because, first of all, the most drastic proposals in September were those with regard to repeaters. He has changed those provisions so that the maximum penalty for repeaters would be six weeks.

The minister went even further and used the best information available, the economic zones provided by Statistics Canada. These zones were not drawn up by the bill; they were drawn up prior to the bill by order in council. Perhaps they are not the best zones, but the minister went further. He looked at the 48 economic regions and indicated that they happen to be in areas where people work and are subjected to living in seasonal economies, such as fisheries, peat moss, tourism and other seasonal industries. The people of those areas are subjected to seasonally affected economies. The minister indicated that this was the best measure in order to deal with the problem.

He excluded all economic zones with unemployment rates of 11.5 per cent or higher, which is a very good thing. Of course there are problems, and the minister will continue to look at them. The regions were drawn up by order in council, and therefore they can be changed by order in council. The minister does not want to put himself in the position of making a decision alone. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) and other Conservative members do not have to worry. Whenever the government passes an order in council, it does not apply only to Quebec; it applies across the country.

Dealing with the question of allocation of time, hon. members of the Tory party said allocation of time was brought in to gag or muzzle us on this side of the House. I am speaking today despite a very difficult situation. We have never been gagged by the government. We have been gagged and muzzled by the filibustering of the Progressive Conservative party. Sometimes we are gagged and muzzled by the New Democratic Party, but not very often because the NDP is a little more reasonable than the Conservative party. We on this side of the House are gagged when Conservative members filibuster legislation. Allocation of time is brought about in order to balance the debate. In any event, we on this side do not need an army of members rising to make a point. We are not interested in just making political points and playing politics. We are interested in discussing the effects of programs on Canadians. We do not require a lot of time to do that. I wish allocation of time was applied to every piece of legislation presented in order to ensure a rational use of the time of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is new Liberalism.

Mr. Breau: I should like to deal briefly with the outlet that the Tories thought they had. I sympathize with the hon. member for St. John's East because he is used continuously by his party. He is a very sincere man. He sounds sincere and speaks well. He represents a constituency which requires government attention. His province also requires the government to do more regarding its economy. He is from an area which needs government attention. The province of Newfoundland cannot be left with the effects of a laissez-faire attitude and with the private sector looking after it.

We have heard a few good speeches in the last two months by some of the new members of the Conservative party, yet they talk about doing more for Canadians. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and other members talked about doing more. I cannot refer to the contituencies of the other members because as yet I am not familiar with them. But we did not hear very much from the people who set the fiscal and economic policies of that party. We all know the Conservative proposals regarding the unemployment insurance scheme. When they talk about reducing deficits, and the intervention of government into the economy, they want to slash the expenditures of government. I would not want to trust them to present a bill dealing with unemployment insurance because I suspect what they would want to do. The poor member for St. John's East is being used as an outlet for the Tory party. They think they have an outlet by proposing a two-tier system of benefits: one for people who have or claim dependants, and one for people do not have dependants.

Approximately seven or eight weeks ago, the Conservative party criticized us from a human rights standpoint. They used the valid arguments of the human rights commissioner to criticize the government because it thought of bringing in programs which the Conservatives thought were discriminatory to women. The economy of the province of Newfoundland is similar to the economy of my province. In some areas the only employment women obtain is unstable. In a lot of cases, these women are married to men with reasonable salaries because their husbands work in certain industries. Because the husbands have higher incomes, it is normal that they would claim the dependants for income tax purposes.

The Tories have not defined the term "dependant". They have not indicated how they would deal with this area. If a husband works in a good industry and earns $18,000 to $20,000 a year, of course he claims dependants in order to save income tax. If his wife works in a fish plant or a restaurant for a few months of the year, her salary will be lower; but they are very lucky to have more than the minimum wage. The hon. member for St. John's East suggested that such a husband would never go on UIC or, if he does, it would be for a very short time at the high rate. They are willing to give the husband 66⅔ per cent by way of unemployment insurance, but the wife who works at the minimum wage will be given 50 per cent.

Miss MacDonald: But the government is going to cut her off.

Mr. Breau: We exclude working women unless they are new entrants or re-entrants into the labour force.

Miss MacDonald: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) is becoming nervous because she is supporting a measure which will penalize people with low incomes, particularly women and single people. We know that single people and women work in the worst conditions.

Miss MacDonald: What about your proposal?

Mr. Breau: If the hon. member looks at any definition of employment or any study on employment, she will find that young people without dependants and women do the worst jobs. They are the people the Tories want to punish. They have said that people with dependants will receive 66⅔ per cent, but the single people and working women, because they cannot claim the benefit of dependants as a result of their lower salaries, will be penalized. The Conservative outlet did not work this time. The Tory party showed that either it cannot take a position, or that when it takes one it does not care about working women or single people. They do not care enough to look at the effects of their proposals.

I am ashamed to see the sincere member for St. John's East being sucked into that kind of position just because some new member from Toronto in the Conservative party, who was accustomed to working in theory, sat down at a desk in order to write down a few things. The new member wanted to find an outlet for the Tory party and said, "This is a very just position". They have a half-hour meeting, they have a caucus and they have a few arguments, and that is the position of the Tory party. That is why the Tory party will never make it to government. They cannot make up their minds properly.

I must say that the Conservatives have helped me quite a bit. As I have said, I would prefer not to have this kind of bill but I will support it because I agree that for a few years until the economy of this country has picked up again we have to reduce the rate of growth of deficits in Canada. We have to bring the economy into order again. I will support this bill at this time because it will liberate some funds for manpower training and job creation. In this kind of situation I would rather do that than not do anything, and not have these funds available, because our rate of growth of deficits is too high in Canada at this time.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by confessing that our party is in fact seriously split on a major political issue facing the country. I think we should confess to that split. There is a very serious division between us as to which of the other two parties is worse, the Tories or the Liberals.

An hon. Member: Both.

Mr. Rae: I must say that after listening to the two speeches today I would say it is a draw and the Canadian people will soon have a chance to express their own views on the matter.

The conflict that took place in the committee and that is taking place in this House in respect of this measure—and I say this not in the sense that we have a monopoly on virtue in this party, or that any party has a monopoly on virtue—

An hon. Member: You are kidding. That's the first time I have heard that.

Mr. Peters: He is speaking for himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: I think the conflict within a modern industrial economy such as Canada's is among those people who want to allow the labour market to dictate, to the maximum extent possible, the fate and the well-being of its citizens and the extent to which that society recognizes that labour is not a commodity. That conflict is a very old one in society. It is not something that started with the introduction of this bill, and it is not something that will go away with the passage, the defeat or the delay of this bill. It is something that will stay with us for quite a long time.

I want to remind the minister that over 140 years ago in England the Poor Law Commissioners were told to come up with a system that would deal with the great problem of vagrancy that existed in that society at that time as well as the problem of unemployment that then existed as a result of the industrial revolution. The Poor Law Commissioners came back with a report that said that the one principle that has to be maintained is that, whatever maintenance is provided for people who are not working, it must be less eligible than the lowest form of labour in that society. That was known as the "less eligibility" principle. We have advanced not one single jot beyond the less eligibility principle that was set forth over 140 years ago.

I want to read just briefly from the report of those commissioners. They stated:

> The assumption behind this principle of less eligibility, as it came to be called, was that the indolent, disspirited, and feckless, when faced with a choice between working harder and living in what amounted to a prison, would become industrious, alert, and responsible. The law was expected to achieve miracles. "New life, new energy is infused into the constitution of the pauper," one of the commission's investigators insisted. "He is aroused like one from sleep . . . he surveys his former employers with new eyes. He begs a job—he will not take a denial—he discovers that every one wants something to be done . . . He is ready to turn his hand to anything."

That was the view of the Poor Law Commissioners in 1834. I do not think we have advanced very far beyond the views of the Poor Law Commissioners.

An hon. Member: That is a lot of crap.

Mr. Rae: No, it is not crap. I would point to the principles which have been put forward, and they have been put forward by the minister, by his parliamentary secretary, by civil servants, and by such other distinguished contributors to the debate as the hon. member for LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul (Mr. Campbell), who said that more than half the people who are on unemployment insurance were abusers and cheaters. He is the brains trust, I suppose, of the Liberal party in this regard. That is the view of the government, and I dare say it is also the view that is being taken at the current time by the majority of the Conservative party.

For political reasons the Conservative party has been able to play both sides of the fence, and for those of us who were in the committee there was never any question as to where the Conservatives really stood. They wanted more restraint, not less. They wanted more cutbacks, not less. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) put it very well in the debate the other day in this House when he said there were more inequities in this bill than the Conservative party was prepared to put up with. He wanted something that would have some inequities but not as many inequities, as, or different inequities from, the inequities presented by the government. I would suggest that is the choice which the Canadian people have been presented with in this bill and in the amendments proposed by the Conservative party.

Our party has simply taken the position that working people are entitled to decent maintenance, that there is not widespread, systematic abuse and cheating of the system. Our party has taken the position that the real problem in Canada—and you can cover it up, throw it away, try to reduce the participation rate, cosmeticize the unemployment figures—is the fact that we have an economy which historically has produced a great deal of unemployment and a great deal of seasonal work, with large areas in the country where unemployment is in the 15 per cent, 20 per cent, 25 per cent position.

May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

● (1402)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, there are features of this bill which we object to in particular, and I would like to go through them in the time remaining. The first feature which we object to is that the minimum insurability has been increased. This means that 42,000 part-time people, according to the minister's own calculations, will be cut off the rolls at a saving to the department of $60,000. This proposal affects women and youth more than anybody else, and we think that that is a mistake. In fact, the minister himself admitted it during his speech on second reading when he said that these features would affect women.

The second feature is clause 4. It is part of the guts of the bill and it increases the requirements for new entrants and repeaters up to 20 weeks. While the minister has allowed a trigger clause for areas of underdevelopment in Canada for repeaters, he has not allowed a similar clause for new entrants. This cannot be done by regulation. This feature is expected to save $300 million, and the majority of that saving will come from the area of heaviest unemployment in the country, the area east of the Ottawa river.

The third feature which we object to is the fact that benefits right across Canada will be reduced by 10 per cent. The thing about restraint which is important to remember is that one man's restraint is another man's income cut, and that is a point which we should bear in mind, especially at this time of year. It is all very well for those of us who are making a fair chunk of money to talk about pulling in our belts, but it is another thing to talk about pulling in somebody else's belt when that person is making at the very most $160 a week from unemployment insurance. I think that the 10 per cent cut is the most vicious feature of this bill, the one clause which will be the most unpopular and the undoing of this government.

The Tory party has put forward their two-tier proposal as the answer to the situation. I look upon this two-tier proposal as shedding one tear for youth and women and another tear for Atlantic Canada.

Mr. McGrath: That is very good.

Mr. Rae: That is what it amounts to. I would contrast the approach of the Conservatives on this matter to the approach which the hon. members for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) took in the debate on the child tax credit, and I was present right through passage of that bill, as I have been here right through debate on this bill. It is two completely different songs, and I cannot believe that it is the same party. That group was saying that the concept of a family income was discriminatory. In fact, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands gave several speeches, and they are all on the record, with respect to the fact that if you have joint filing in the matter of a child tax credit, it is discriminatory against women. How is this bill any different? How can that party justify saying to women who, for income tax purposes, do not have dependants, but who do have dependants for family benefit reasons, that they should not get the same benefits as men?

I have written a little song about the Conservatives which goes like this:

Cutbacks, cutbacks we like best,
But that won't wash in St. John's West,
So you mothers and singles give two Christmas cheers,
For the Clarks, Joe and Bill,
And their mighty two tiers.
Yes it's 50 bucks, 50 bucks, ringing in your ears,
And even less as part-time nears,
So you mothers and singles give two Christmas cheers,
For the Clarks, Joe and Bill,
And their mighty two tiers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: The Liberals remind me of a game I used to play when I was a child, not too long ago.

An hon. Member: Yesterday.

Mr. Rae: Yes, it seems like just yesterday.

Mr. Cullen: How can you say that, sitting behind Stanley?

Mr. Rae: I feel like I have been here for years. It was a game called "Simon says". But the game which the Liberals are playing is called "Gallup says". When Gallup says stand on your head, the Liberals stand on their heads; when Gallup says take it out on the unemployed, because there is a popular feeling going around that there are abusers and cheaters, the Liberals follow Gallup. He who lives by Gallup dies by Gallup. There is nothing easier, and I think that the Canadian people can see right through it. In doing the thing which may be temporarily popular, because of misapprehension and the misconceptions there are about unemployment insurance, those people who follow Gallup and follow what they think are the vagaries of public opinion in this regard will be undone by that very same public opinion.

Granted, it may be unpopular to defend unemployment insurance in a time of restraint. But that is the price we in this party are quite prepared to pay. We have paid it before through other measures and we will do it again. The fact remains that the vast majority of people who are in receipt of unemployment insurance are deserving, both in terms of the law and in terms of need. The fact is that the overwhelming effect of this bill will complicate matters considerably for everybody. I cannot understand some of the provisions, and I have sat through committee meetings. I challenge the parliamentary secretary to explain to me once again the difference between repeaters, re-entrants and new entrants. It took two or three nights going through the bill for the civil servants to explain that to us.

An hon. Member: The Globe and Mail said you were bright!

Mr. Rae: For once the Globe and Mail was right. But when I think of the Liberals I always think of what that great Canadian philosopher, Larry Zolf, once said—"The Liberals firmly believe that you should never kick a man when he is up". I think that is the philosophy that the Liberals have taken on. They are not prepared to take on the powerful people in this community who have taken advantage of the tax system to acquire companies rather than to invest in Canada. The people they would rather take on at the present time are the unemployed. There is no easier road to follow than that road.

Just to show you how far industry has gone in this respect, I have a letter from the Pulp and Paper Association to the committee praising the proposals that have been put forward by the government. It says:

> It is well known that the employment rate is not strictly a demographic function of a growing working age population trying to fill too few jobs.
> The industry feels that the proposed amendment to the benefit rate reducing it from 66⅔ per cent to 60 per cent of average weekly insurable earnings will help break the linkage between the participation rate and the benefit rate.
> If the total labour force had expanded at the same rate of growth (1.9 per cent) as the working age population the number of job seekers would have risen by 203,000 over the past twelve months. Given the 362,000 new jobs created in the same period, the seasonally adjusted employment rate would have come down to 6.8 per cent instead of staying at 8.2 per cent.
> The participation rates are very volatile and are reflective of many tendencies, among these being young people staying out of school, and women seeking a second family income because of rapid inflation. Also among these must be included the high participation rates induced by the level of unemployment benefits itself. An interesting statistical analysis on this phenomenon was presented last December in Executive Magazine by Mr. John Kettle. Reducing the benefit rate to 60 per cent of insurable earnings should, in our view, help to reduce participation rates and thereby the unemployment rate by adjusting the number of job seekers more closely to the job-creation rate.

We know where to go now. We do not go to the Economic Council of Canada who have not called for any changes in the unemployment insurance—they have called for a change in the administration but not for a change in the regulations—we go to Executive Magazine. It is Executive Magazine that is dictating the course of this government.

We can see precisely what this government is trying to do in this regard. The government is trying to get a lower unemployment rate by cutting down on the participation rate in the economy. So if we get people back in the homes and back in the schools where, in the government's view, they belong, we will not have to put them on the unemployment statistics and worry about them any more. That is precisely the point that I made to the minister when we discussed the Outreach program in committee. That is precisely the point that is made by the Pulp and Paper Association, and that is precisely why the Pulp and Paper Association and Executive Magazine and the business corporations of this world are 100 per cent behind the government. They want to see that participation rate go down. They do not want to see women and young people in the employment market; they want to see them out of the employment market. I think it is a sad day for those people when it has been proved statistically that the vast majority of women working in the work force need to work because of the economics of the situation.

In Toronto, the metropolitan social planning council found that a family of four needed $14,500 per annum just to live above the poverty line, that the average income of families was $19,000 and that 80 per cent of families needed to have two incomes just to be living at the level of a $19,000 per annum salary. So I say to the government, and I say to the Conservatives—you cannot tell the difference any more—to the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) who keeps talking about secondary wage earners—and he was talking about secondary wage earners in his speech the other day—that in my opinion there is no such thing as a secondary wage earner in Canada today. There are primary wage earners only, because every single wage earner is necessary in order for those families to keep up with inflation. The theory going around that there are secondary people in the labour market who are causing all sorts of problems, that women do not really need to work and that children do not need to work until they reach the age of 24 or thereabouts, is a dangerous and reactionary theory. If that is what the government is trying to put forward, I think they are making a major mistake.

We have opposed this bill tooth and nail right down the line. I know that our opposition has caused a great deal of concern on both sides. We have been attacked almost equally by the government and the Conservatives because we have put up such strong opposition. In view of this opposition, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That all the words after the word "that" be deleted, and that the following words be substituted therefore:
> "Bill C-14 be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today, as the debate draws to a close on Bill C-14, which to my mind is of considerable importance to the Canadian people, to make a few comments on third reading. This bill was parachuted and passed full steam ahead, to say the least.

Mr. Speaker, I say the bill was parachuted because the government is imposing its passage through a closure motion; for my part, I certainly do not accept that willingly. The Canadian people surely deserve better than a government that legislates too hastily on matters as important as family allowances and unemployment insurance.

I do not want to limit myself to criticizing the government; I also wish to explain my line of thought and my attitude towards this bill we have all been discussing in the last few days. The present unemployment insurance system is a necessary evil, some claim, necessary for sure, but also evil in that it is an insult to the dignity of man. What people want is work and not unemployment insurance benefits. That is probably what the minister had in mind when he introduced this bill, but the means suggested to do it are absolutely contrary to the basic principles of good public administration.

At a time when the country faces the highest rate of unemployment it has known in many a year, cuts in the unemployment insurance benefits are certainly not indicated. Let us not forget that the majority of those who will be deprived of unemployment benefits will fall back on welfare, the social cost of which is extremely high. The unemployed is looked upon as a worker without work, whereas people on welfare are relegated to the lowest rank of society.

It would be pointless for me, at this stage of the debate, to go into each and every detail of every proposal contained in this bill. Besides, my colleagues have already explained to the House the views of the Social Credit Party of Canada on this bill. However, I wish to make a few comments on the essential features of the bill which makes it entirely unacceptable. First, those proposals are extremely arbitrary. Second, they will have nefarious effects on many disadvantaged unemployed and will deprive them of the benefits which some members of the working force especially the most vulnerable ones, should enjoy. They all deal with, the unemployed. Third, those proposals do not solve nor remove the hindrances referred to in connection with dishonest unemployed. Fourth, those proposals are very difficult to understand and still more difficult to enforce.

Incidentally, the parliamentary secretary, the member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) said yesterday that the Social Crediters were not interested in the bill. I would like to point out that if he wants to be charibable, as he believes he is, he should go and administer an unemployment insurance office after the bill is implemented and he will then realize that he is no longer in the constituency of Wellington protected by the popularity of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He will realize that facing the unemployed is much more difficult than enjoying the popularity of the Prime Minister.

This bill comes on the heels of a costly publicity campaign aimed at portraying the unemployed as a bunch of crooks and parasites. That campaign has been conducted in spite of objective statistics which proved that there is a real lack of jobs available. The number of jobs available is ridiculously small when compared to the number of unemployed looking for a job. Still, I am giving the benefit of a reasonable doubt to those we call swindlers of the unemployment insurance system because those we believe are swindlers are actually people who need to earn money to eat. I do not think we should call these people swindlers just because they need unemployment insurance benefits to buy their groceries; it is as simple as that. Some measures affect the unemployed who are members of a category which we want to despise and which we call repeaters.

The government seems anxious to avoid mentioning the real facts at the root of the unemployment problem. It constantly refers to steps aimed at encouraging our people who are out of work to seek employment, but without ever mentioning the real lack of job vacancies available, with some 60,000 job openings for a million unemployed. We should not put too much of the blame on unstable working habits. We may wonder if last spring advertising campaign which tended to assimilate the unemployed with cheaters and the introduction of this government bill are just a coincidence or a scheme by the federal government to hide its ineptitude at creating new jobs without depriving the most unfortunate members of our society of the money it needs to set up employment programs.

We believe that this government really wants to create a Canadian bank of cheap labour. The worker who holds an insurable job and who has already received benefits will not dare leave his job no matter what, even though painful working conditions may endanger his health, his security and what have you. A job on any terms, that is what is meant in the legislation. The minister himself indicated that when he said the new scheme would make low paying jobs more attractive. Those are key notes in this legislation. As the minister suggests, the purpose of the measures proposed is to reinject more money in job creation. Why has it not occurred to him that he could take that money from the rich, from the multinationals for example, instead of taking it from those who do not have money at all or are expecting a mere pittance from unemployment insurance to eat and give their family something to eat?

With this bill the government wants to save $2.5 billion in the long term, and in the short term $1.5 billion within two years. That is how they will get that amount of $1.5 billion because, again it does not hurt too much those who have more money. Mr. Speaker, that is unacceptable in my opinion. Yesterday all members witnessed how little courage the majority party has shown in favour of the poor when they used their majority in the House to defeat by vote 29 amendments which could have affected the bill. I hope the poor, and here I mean the unemployed, will remember that at the next general election.

The most striking thing about this piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, is the nice words used by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen). He claims that this bill will make the unemployed more reasonable and more responsible. I wonder when an unemployed worker becomes reasonable and responsible. I think it is when he can eat three meals a day with what he can earn by working. If we want to strike off the unemployment rolls people who may rightfully deserve to be there, why do we not simply repeal the act, and rather than moving this measure in the House, propose legislation which would give these people a guaranteed annual income. If we had legislation to ensure a guaranteed annual income to these poor people, all members of the Social Credit Party of Canada would support the minister. We think of the poor and I believe there are many well meaning Liberal members who share our view—

Mr. La Salle: Yes, but they cannot say so!

Mr. Beaudoin: I have spoken to a number of them and they sigh in reply. It is like when Mr. Caouette occupied a seat next to me—I had the honour of sitting next to him for many years—history is repeating itself. Times change but history keeps repeating itself. If the Prime Minister lifts his little finger, everybody on the government side lift their little fingers, but that does not show much intelligence. There are far more unemployment than people who abuse of the system.

A study of the Economic Council of Canada stated that:

Four out of five unemployed in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits are jobless through no fault of their own.

I think this single sentence should make the minister realize that the bill which is brought forward on third reading is completely wrong and will do nothing to make us better understand the unemployed or to improve their lives.

As a corollary to this last point, let me add that for the legitimate unemployed, that is the worker who cannot find a job, the ever rising cost of living is just the same as for the rest of the people. But instead of compensating for the loss of revenue caused by inflation the government decides to lower the benefit rate from 66 per cent to 60 per cent. In view of the inflation factor the unemployed is therefore doubly penalized. In an announcement which has been published on September 1, 1978 the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) was explaining one of the main objectives of the new amendments of the Unemployment Insurance Act:

I want to make sure that the unemployment insurance system fully encourages Canadians to seek and to accept jobs.

What kind of story is this, Mr. Speaker? The minister knows full well that there are no jobs! There are 60,000 jobs for some 200,000 unemployed. For the 249,000 unemployed who are offered 50,000 jobs, that will represent three or four workers for the same job, if I get my figures right, and for long periods, five for the same job. What are they going to do? They are going to knock at the door of factories until the personnel officer is tired of them and they are going to go home frustrated with nothing to live on, nothing to eat, they will have to live on welfare with the help of the province to be able to eat three meals a day.

With the application of the standards which are contained in the bill which we are dealing with today, we end up with a complete nonsense. Once again, if we could give a sort of guaranteed maintenance so that those who have undergone a loss would be able to live decently, we would agree to adopt this bill. But we see with this new bill that the government once again gets its priorities all wrong. Instead of cracking down on the unemployment insurance system and making cuts they should crack down on the economy, and give it the necessary stimulants which would create more jobs.

The government says that one of the shortcomings of the present unemployment insurance plan is that people can too easily get benefits over and over again. That is a chronic disease. But who must be blamed if the unemployed cannot find a job or if they have to draw unemployment insurance to meet their basic needs? They cannot do otherwise. So, they cannot do anything but try to get unemployment insurance. Unemployment insurance is a form of guaranteed annual income for a number of unemployed and the government seems to reject a that philosophy, yet it is not against the guaranteed annual income concept. To say the least, the government is not very consistent nor logical in its line of thinking.

The government declares to anyone who wants to hear it that it is prepared to dialogue with the provinces. As regards the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, it did listen but for a while only. For instance, at a recent federal-provincial meeting the Minister of Employment and Immigration refused to concur with the views of provinces. They were seeking a delay in the implementation of the new amendments until the publication of a study on the impact of those amendments on various welfare agencies. If we try to implement those changes without taking that study into account, what is the use of such studies? Why should the government request studies on regulations for the poor or for those who are out of work will lose their unemployment insurance benefits after this bill has been adopted? But the government does not care about that nor does it agree with the provinces. It says: We are still going to adopt this legislation. Mr. Speaker, I think the minister is not very consistent with that bill.

The government unfairly accuses the unemployed of having caused an increase in the cost of unemployment insurance, but is the government forgetting its own role in this cost increase? The report of the Auditor General for 1977 mentions that $142 million was paid out to people who were not entitled to benefits. What about that? I really wonder who will be able to solve the mystery of these expenditures without knowing who is responsible. I think I have explained the main aspects of my opinions on Bill C-14. However, I would like to remind the House of the efforts and the wish of some ministers to help the most underprivileged members of our society. I would also like to note, Mr. Speaker, that on the side of the majority, there are now ministers who work very hard to at least show that they want to redistribute the wealth of the country to those who need it most.

In his last budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) took a step forward by bringing up the possibility of a guaranteed annual income. He gave us a book and asked us to read it and study it to determine what could be suggested in the House on this subject. This book concerns essentially the possibility of a guaranteed annual income for the future. I congratulate the Minister of Finance for having thought of this. However, this should not be an excuse for the minister who now sponsors the bill on unemployment insurance to wash his hands of the whole matter and say: We shall wait for the guaranteed annual income. It should have been implemented at the same time as this bill was introduced.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) talked about optional retirement at 60 for those who want it. I hope that this is not only an idle promise, as the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has just said, and that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is truly concerned about the fate of the poor. Because of her association with her department, she is well aware that a great many people are below the poverty line. There is quite a contradiction. The Minister of National Health and Welfare tries to help the poor while the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) creates poverty. And that in the same government. Does that mean that one has much more compassion than the other, or the latter forgot that to please the majority? I do not believe so, Mr. Speaker. I feel, however, the minister was in error when he brought this legislation in. For this reason we feel in this party we cannot support it.

We proved last night we have no other choice. We are sorry because we feel no sympathy for those who abuse unemployment insurance. We cannot stand those UIC "pensioners". We cannot approve that. A few of them I would not be sure about, but a fraction can and do abuse it. Some 30 unemployed at least come to see me every week, 99.9 per cent of whom are certainly honest, but some of them have lost track of the system because the program has been amended four times in five years. The unemployed would have to be lawyers to understand this legislation. Unfortunately they have no choice.

Let me come back to another minister, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I like the way he operates. He is very dedicated. He does all he can for those who want to get out of farming because of the impact imports have. They stay on. He looks after the poor and I commend him for that.

As the hon. member for Richmond, and I would conclude on this, as Social Credit member I would like to make a comment, but I want to be well understood. This comment is made in the spirit of Christmas. The parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Wellington stated yesterday he wanted to deal mainly with Social Crediters because we had not attended committee meetings and so forth. Mr. Speaker, I would like to remark that we are nine members from the Social Credit Party of Canada elected in the House, and I do not think we have stolen our seats because we won them in an honest and democratic election.

We are nine, and three are ill, so they are not here which leaves only six to attend the meetings of all the committees of the House, to sit in the House and to fulfill the other duties. I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to withdraw the words he said yesterday. I think he said this: I am the only one here who can say that with any degree of honesty. I would tell my hon. colleague that if he has the degree of honesty he thinks he has, he should withdraw his words.

● (1432)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see the minister is seeking the floor.

Mr. Cullen: There is a new motion before the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is correct. There is an amendment. With the amendment before us the minister has the right to speak.

Mr. Benjamin: The minister does not need to speak again; he has won.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The hon. member to my right, who is really on the left but is not sitting in his proper place, says we have already won. The reason we have won, I suggest, is because we have been fighting for this bill with might and main.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: That shows how poor your case is.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) has done a phenomenal job. He has attended every meeting of the committee and every steering committee meeting. No minister has been better served by a parliamentary secretary. He had a difficult job to do and he did it extremely well; I am greatly indebted to him.

I have listened carefully to what has been said during the debate. I shall not attempt to deal with all the comments which have been made but I see present in the chamber an hon. member who has been described as the "perfect little mayor."

● (1442)

When I heard him make his speech I felt that some imperfections were beginning to show and that perhaps the perfection was somewhat overblown when he was mayor. I was reminded of a grammatical expression. Perhaps the hon. member's past was "plus perfect." I feel it has been somewhat overstated.

The hon. member spoke of the Seafarers' International Union. I dealt with that union. It expressed a concern. The hon. member also expressed that concern. We were able to solve the problem with about three telephone calls. I was subsequently visited by a representative of the Seafarers' International Union who was concerned about those members of his union who work in the far Arctic and on dredging contracts. We were able to satisfy that union representative that there was no need for concern. The explanation given to the union by members of the New Democratic Party was wrong, and the union representative left the meeting at which my officials were present satisfied that the union had nothing to be concerned about as far as northern points and dredging are concerned.

At second reading I stated that these changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act are being made with two purposes in mind. The first is that we want to reduce some of the disincentives to work which are present in the program. Second, we want to encourage workers to establish a more stable work pattern, to develop longer attachments to the active work force and thereby reduce their dependency on unemployment insurance. I think those are good goals. Cutbacks are necessary, and they will result in a better and more balanced program than before. There will be new emphasis put on encouraging all Canadian workers who look for, accept and remain at work.

Some misinformation has been spread through this House and across this land by hon. members opposite regarding job vacancies. We are told that there are few vacancies. We are told that 900,000 people are unemployed and that there are only 44,000 vacancies. I believe the Creditistes said there are 66,000 jobs available. Hon. members based their allegations on the job vacancy survey. All the job vacancy survey indicates is the number of job vacancies in a particular region for a limited number of sectors on the particular day of the month that the survey is conducted. In no sense, therefore, can the figure be used to indicate the number of jobs which become vacant during the course of a week, a month or a year.

Let me put that in simple terms so that hon. members opposite who are not using the job vacancy survey the way it was meant to be used can understand it. In 1977 the job vacancy survey showed 44,000 job vacancies on average, whereas total hirings which took place was more than 11 times that number. There were 495,000 at that time, when the job vacancy survey was indicating 44,000 vacancies. In my view that is a dramatic demonstration of the dynamic quality of the Canadian labour market and, in particular, the number of jobs which are filled on a continuing basis. Thus, despite high rates of unemployment there are many opportunities for unemployment insurance claimants to find and accept suitable employment.

We have been criticized in the House for not being amenable to change and for being hard-nosed. We are accused of saying: "Here are the changes; take them or leave them." Hon. members opposite know that when I piloted through this House Bill C-24 and Bill C-27 a significant number of changes were made. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) mentioned that in his speech. He indicated that we had not agreed to any changes to this bill.

The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) clearly demonstrated that we have made many changes since the first announcement on September 1 of this year. We made changes in the repeater section which were necessary in order to prevent repeaters from having too detrimental an impact in areas where people are concerned. I will not repeat what the hon. member for Gloucester said. He handled this aspect very well.

In all their haste to be critical hon. members in the official opposition did not listen to their own members. The hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) came forward with a concern that he felt. He made a solid representation. He said there is something wrong when Indians on reserves are not counted in statistics. We listened to what he had to say. My department checked with Statistics Canada. We made an amendment at the committee stage, but not one member of the opposition saw fit to give credit to the hon. member for Churchill for a change he worked on and which we implemented on his behalf.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Breau: He did his homework.

Mr. Railton: Great man, Churchill.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said we would not have had to impose time allocation if we had accepted the change the New Democratic Party wanted to make. The NDP wanted to reduce the benefit rates. The hon. member said that if we had done that, this bill would have gone through very easily. The hon. member misses the point. We studied the impact of reducing the benefit rate. Some people thought we should have dropped it to 50 per cent. With their two-tier approach the Conservatives would drop it to 50 per cent for those individuals who have no dependants and who draw unemployment insurance.

We moved the rate from 66⅔ per cent to 60 per cent, but I think it is important to realize that the level of benefits is one of the most important factors giving rise to disincentives to work. The study commissioned for the comprehensive review indicated that the benefit level is the single most important factor in this respect. We received representations from right across Canada. We received representations from the Atlantic development board, chambers of commerce and from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the people who create jobs in this country. The vast majority of jobs are created in the private sector, and it is the private sector which was telling us that at 66⅔ per cent the benefit rate was a disincentive to work and that it resulted in an unstable work pattern. We listened to the private sector because, after all, it is not just the government and employees who pay into the program. Employers pay into it as well, and they have some rights.

We were being given some solid representations, and we accepted them. We did not go all the way with the Chamber of commerce, which wanted to see the entrance requirement increased much more than I wanted to increase it. We did not listen to those who would have had us reduce the benefit rate to 50 per cent. However, we accepted what we thought was an appropriate compromise. That is the way a bill should be drawn. We could not accept the main amendment of the New Democratic Party. We were told that if we accepted it, the bill would have gone through quite easily.

Then we looked at the two approaches taken by the Conservative party. The hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) said he spoke to my officials. We examined the two-tier approach and the voluntary quits approach to see if they had any merit. We looked at the approach the Conservative party was presenting. We did not feel that approach had any merit.

The Conservative party did a flip-flop with its own representations. Conservative members kept changing. They would tell us what they would like. When we pointed to a flaw, they flipped-flopped on this two-tier approach. It is roundly and soundly condemned by members of this party and by the NDP.

The two-tier approach is not equitable. We pointed out during committee hearings that, if this proposal were adopted, it would have a serious discriminatory effect on women. If one were to use the definition of "dependants" as contained in the Unemployment Insurance Act before 1976, total savings would be about $850 million, which is comparable to the package contained in Bill C-14. But if one were restrictive and adopted the provincial definition of dependants—that is, dependent children only—savings would be increased and discrimination toward women even more profound. Using the former unemployment insurance definition of dependants, the two-tier proposal could result in a situation whereby only 5 per cent of women would receive the higher benefit rate and 42 per cent of men would be entitled to that rate. I could not accept the two-tier approach as proposed by the provinces and by the official oppositions.

Miss MacDonald: Because you do not understand choice.

Mr. Cullen: We pointed out this discrimination, and they drew in their horns somewhat. Perhaps the provinces were not totally right. Hon. members opposite did not bother to refer to the province of British Columbia, which said that our approach is a step in the right direction. Admittedly, the government of British Columbia is a Social Credit government and might have wanted us to go a little further, but that government said our approach is a step in the right direction. So all the provinces were not in favour of the two-tier approach.

In order to overcome the discriminatory aspect the Conservatives then proposed that either spouse could claim children as dependants. In other words, it was no longer a differential benefit rate for those with or without dependants but for those with or without children, whether or not they were really dependants. If they were trying to save money, this would have reduced savings by another $200 million. That is somewhat surprising because they were trying to come out with something which would get them off this hook.

When I introduced my package, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said it was like a kick in the gut. The hon. member for York-Simcoe said that it was a great move and that it was too bad it was not taken long ago. Hon. members opposite are trying to skate off this thin ice on to which they have got themselves, and they have come up with a two-tier system which is total discrimination against women. They say it is not discrimination and that it is just that more women are affected than men. They say that that is not discrimination. I challenge them to tell that to the National Action Committee and the National Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

Then yesterday they were trying to bail out the party. They had about six critics over there, but finally the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) rose to speak. I thought we were going to hear something other than a political speech. To his credit he got in a couple of good political jabs—one at me because I did not keep my mouth shut as I should have, but I appreciate it; that is what this place is all about. But then the Leader of the Opposition, speaking on the report stage of the bill, introduced the notion that the Conservative's two-tier proposal would use the same definition of dependants as that contained in the Income Tax Act.

Now we have heard a third definition of dependants. This definition is very similar to that formerly used in the unemployment insurance program; that is, it includes dependants' spouses as well as children. What effect would it have? The Income Tax Act allows either spouse to claim the children as dependants. If this course were followed in such a way that whichever spouse was claiming unemployment insurance could claim the children as dependants, it would have the effect of reducing discrimination against women; but it could reduce the savings to $635 million, when they were touting their program would save more money, closer to $1 billion.

If, as at present, the spouse with the highest marginal tax rate continues to claim the children as dependants, then the savings would be in the order of $850 million but the discrimination against women would continue to be profound. In other words, the Conservatives cannot have it both ways. In order to maintain the high level of savings, the two-tier approach must discriminate against women. The removal of that discrimination implies a considerable loss of over $200 million in the savings to the unemployment insurance program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Another suggestion from hon. members opposite dealt with voluntary quits. We were condemned because when we looked at it some of my officials said that if we studied it long enough, maybe we could make it work, but we could not consider the approach of opposition members. We recognize that voluntary quitters should have greater penalties imposed on them than individuals who are laid off work.

When we brought in our last bill, we put in an amendment with a double disqualification from three to six weeks. Experience since that time has shown that some further action may well be called for. I doubt, however, that the Conservative approach, particularly the doubling of the penalty from six to 12 weeks, is the preferred approach. It is not that we did not look at it, but that we did not think it would do what they and we wanted it to do. It certainly needs more study than the half hour about which the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) spoke today when apparently the Conservatives were considering their two-tier approach, whatever that approach may be—because although it is a two-tier approach, it has about 16 different applications depending on how you define dependants, and so on.

I listened to the Leader of the Opposition yesterday and I wondered if he really knows how parliament works. Certainly he showed no indication that he had any idea whatsoever. There was a time when you went out and did carolling at Christmas because you enjoyed it and it entertained your neighbours. We find the Conservatives going out carolling, but they always make certain they have a cameraman along to make sure they capture this effort. Even at Christmas they made sure of that.

I mention that primarily to show that the approach on this side is different. Legitimate and honest concerns have been expressed to me by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell), the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier), and the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron). They raised their concerns personally with me, they raised them in caucus, they raised them with my colleague and they raised them in the House. If we had made any changes or suggested that we could accommodate them, the opposition parties would have taken all the credit. Not one of the opposition members raised this as a particular issue. All of the complaints about the benefit rates and how these particular lines work against the benefits of people in their ridings were raised on this side. So we looked at the issue.

The first suggestion made to me by the hon. member for South Western Nova was to the effect that the minister should have the discretion to draw the lines so that they would be equal. One can imagine what kind of response that would have had from the opposition. We found the possibility of doing that in the legislation under a provision which would authorize a group—it will be a competent group composed of the representatives of the commission and of the department, Statistics Canada and outside consultants—to investigate complaints about the drawing of boundary lines for the specific areas where complaints are being put forward and to make recommendations on options for improving the situation. I could have done that in caucus. I could have let them make their complaints, I could have made that change and announced it. There is no gagging on this side. I could have said: "Okay, we will deal with that in caucus and I will make an announcement". Nobody was gagged. Everybody who had a comment to make, critical or not, got up and made his pitch. I listened and we made changes to accommodate their concerns. That is the way we make changes in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: To my surprise—perhaps I should not say that I am surprised because I have never been one of those who thought that the Senate was ahead of this chamber, although it is certainly ahead of the opposition; but in this case they have been—the Senators recognized that we were coming up against the Christmas deadline, so they discussed this bill simultaneously with us. They have had our officials going over this bill clause by clause and over the philosophy of the legislation. Now they are prepared to deal with this piece of legislation. They have given it a tremendous amount of study. I have appeared before them myself in committee and, as I said, my officials have also done so.

The government's proposals in Bill C-14 are designed to deal with abuse and will not come to grips with this problem. That is the charge made by the opposition. The objectives of the amendments, as I have said during second reading, are to reduce work disincentives and to encourage workers to establish a more suitable work pattern. I continue to believe the amendments with respect to new entrants, re-entrants and repeaters in particular will contribute to the achievement of these objectives.

One of the submissions made at the first ministers' conference—I said this, or a discussion paper said this and I repeated it—stated:

> In the longer run, a conceptual review of the UI program, in the context of an evolving social security system is imperative, so that the aspect of "meeting needs" as distinct from the purer "insurance" aspect can be clarified.

I indicated to my provincial colleagues that we would prepare a paper on this subject and enter into full and comprehensive discussion with representatives of provinces and the private sector so that collectively we can help ensure that we have the best UI program to meet the challenges of the 1980s. That is a commitment I made to my provincial colleagues, and most assuredly that is a commitment I make to the House at this time.

I do not think I have to belabour the changes that were made. We did not use blunt instruments. Probably we could have found some simple way of doing this. We decided we should tax back, for example. Some people feel that if individuals receive $30,000 or $35,000 a year, they do not need unemployment insurance. We moved away from the insurance principle, and we are being criticized for doing that. The two-tier approach appears neither to adhere to insurance principles nor to income transfers. It does not take into account the income of individuals. If it is to be an income transfer, surely we should deal with the amount of money being earned by that individual. The two-tier system would be a disaster; it is not that I was being obstinate and could not accept it. It does not make good sense to bring in legislation at this time which does not adhere to insurance principles or income transfers.

This is a good bill. I appreciate the solid support I have had from my colleagues. We have made the changes that needed to be made. We listened to the hon. member for Churchill when he had a significant point to make, and we have made that change. We considered recommendations made not only by the NDP but also by the official opposition; we found them significantly wanting. We will still carry on a study and make this an even better bill, but heaven help us if we had accepted some of the suggestions made by members opposite.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Heaven will not help you now.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with real interest to the minister's defence of this bill, a bill which does not improve with the retelling and restating of it as the minister has tried to do in the last few minutes. I have also listened with some real interest to his defence of his flexibility, and I wonder where that flexibility was when he had the representations of the ten provinces before him on how this bill should be improved. I wonder where that vaunted flexibility was when he had representations from women's groups across this country as to how the penalty provisions could be improved. I wonder where that vaunted flexibility was when he listened to his colleagues, the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell), the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Lapointe) and the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie). Where was the flexibility of which he spoke? His flexibility seemed to be limited to a few of the business groups which appeared before him, presumably during private sessions. That was the flexibility he showed. Then he came before us in final reading and asked us to take for granted the fact that the bill is a good one. Some of us did not think it was a good bill in the first place, and we do not believe it is a good bill at third reading.

I have listened to the rationalizations of the minister and other members of the government in defence of the bill, but surely there is very little which can be said in defence of the bill because of two major glaring weaknesses in it. The weaknesses will have an impact long beyond the initial blow to concerned individuals, and long beyond the adverse effect it will have on individual constituencies and even the people who represent them at the present time.

The minister did not deal with the two major weaknesses in any of his remarks, or when he went off on different tangents. Indeed, they are more than weaknesses. They seem to be deliberate moves by the government against two of the most vulnerable groups in Canadian society. The moves seem to be designed to weaken their tenuous position and to undermine the fragile base on which they exist in Canada. Despite what the minister said, and despite all his protestations, these two moves are against the have-not regions of Canada and against women.

In the first of these, the shellfire of the government is levelled against Atlantic Canada and eastern Quebec, in large measure. The provisions in the bill addressed to seasonal workers, entrants and re-entrants, will be much much onerous on the Atlantic and eastern Quebec regions than on any other parts of the country. The minister did not mention that when he put up his defence of the bill. I single out the Atlantic region because I know it well. I know what the costs will be, not just in dollar terms as applied to the bill, but also what it will mean in limited opportunities being further reduced, in entrenched difficulties being further aggravated, in the hopes and dreams of individuals already restricted being denied totally. The bill goes further than severing the lifeline which is often needed by individuals in Atlantic Canada. It has very negative implications in terms of the unity of the country. The minister did not address that because he and the Liberal party do not understand how the bill can impact on the unity of the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: Hon. members opposite laugh, but there are more dimensions to unity than those to which the government will ever address itself.

Mr. Breau: Did you listen to the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain)?

Miss MacDonald: How often have hon. members opposite extolled their self-professed ability to hold the country together? How often have they paraded their pious virtue in this regard? As has been shown in this bill, their actions speak louder than their words. The bill is a perfect example of their lack of understanding of a region of the country continually is being set back by the social and economic policies of the government. It has a sorry record of reducing regional disparity in the country, but the bill will do much to worsen it. That affects not only the region concerned, but threatens the fabric of the entire country. The government does not seem to understand and realize that is being created, as it moves more and more against Atlantic Canada. It does not seem to realize, in making its moves, that the balance among the regions is further aggravated.

This measure has tremendous implication for the delicate equilibrium which must keep all regions of the country in proper balance. It is not original or new to say that eastern Quebec and the Atlantic region are the most disadvantaged regions in the country in terms of personal incomes and resource revenues. It is not new, and it is sad that one has to repeat it. The bill will mean a further loss of income in Atlantic Canada at a time when the provincial economies of that part of the country can ill afford it.

Mr. Breau: Not true.

Miss MacDonald: The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) said that is not true. To his province it will mean a loss of revenue of $62.7 million. That is what it will mean to the provincial economy of New Brunswick. It will mean a loss of $13.1 million to Prince Edward Island; a loss of $52.2 million to Newfoundland; and a loss of $43.8 million to Nova Scotia.

That will amount to a total loss of approximately $171.8 million to that region of Canada. That is bad enough, but when it is added to the other steps the government is in the process of taking, the viciousness and vindictiveness of the situation become even more apparent. At the same time as this measure is going through, there are cutbacks in the equalization program, the very linchpin of confederation.

Mr. Breau: Another untruth.

Miss MacDonald: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) will not say how much those cutbacks will be. He indicated that there will be cutbacks. He did not deny that in the House. The hon. member for Gloucester can look at the record. How much will the cutbacks amount to? Will they amount to $100 million or $150 million? Perhaps the hon. member for Gloucester can tell us. He knows they will come about. On top of that, there were cutbacks in the social services program. If the program had been carried out and put onto effect, the impact would have been most beneficial to Atlantic Canada. But it was abolished, it was cancelled unilaterally by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). As well, the minister cancelled the health resources fund where the Atlantic region had more difficulty than the prosperous regions in gearing up the machinery to bring to fruition certain programs on a 50-50 cost-sharing basis. Just as those programs were about to come into effect, the Minister of National Health and Welfare unilaterally cut them.

These four programs represent a cutback to Atlantic Canada of $500 million which provincial governments had been led to believe would be forthcoming. One can say, "What about the other parts of the country? Why are they not facing the same problem?" The reality of the situation is that the other parts of the country can absorb such a body blow more readily. When Atlantic Canada is hit with a body blow of this nature, it can become a death blow. That is what hon. members from Atlantic Canada should be aware of when they support a bill of this nature.

What the government seems to be saying in a callous, cruel, and calculated manner, is that one can take the most vulnerable part of the country and kick it while it is down. But in doing so, one makes it more difficult for that part of the country to bounce back. That is why the long-term effect will have an adverse impact on Canada as a whole. Holding the country together is no easy task; no one ever professed it would be. Certainly Joe Howe 110 years ago did not think it would be. But not even he, in his angriest denunciations of what Ottawa might do to Atlantic Canada, would have forecast a deliberate move by a federal government to undermine the economy of that region, to cripple it, to make it more dependent, to increase its dependency rather than its self-sufficiency, and to make it a continuing cause for concern to all of the other parts of the country.

Ontario, not the federal government, expressed that concern very well when it spoke on behalf of all the provinces against the measures in this bill, because its ministers could see what it would do to the country. Only Ottawa seems blind to the fact that its moves are undermining the very unique union in which we live.

I would say to you, sir, that the unity of this country has many dimensions. The government is attacking one of them in this bill, and that is one of the very weaknesses of the bill. The other, sir, is that the legislation we are addressing today will have its heaviest brunt against working women, women in the labour force.

I am delighted to welcome the new recruits in this House in the last couple of days to the cause of women's rights, including the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the hon. member for Gloucester. I welcome their belated concern for the rights of women. I would say to them their expressions of concern on behalf of women in this House, while belated, are nevertheless welcome, and I trust we will hear from them on this subject on many occasions. I hope their conversion to this cause will continue. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, to my left, has undergone a conversion, but I must say, sir, that in sticking with the provisions of this bill the government has undergone no similar conversion with regard to women's rights in this country and no similar conversion with regard to the lot of working women.

In fact, sir, the government has a long history of policy and attitudes which discriminate against women, and this bill is one more of them, and the minister cannot dump his responsibilities. He ignored completely the representations made to him by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women and by the National Action Committee. What we hear instead is a continuing group of ministers going about this country blaming high unemployment on the entrance of women into the work force.

Who was the latest to do that? It was none other than the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), speaking the other night in Toronto to a Liberal fund-raising dinner. Mind you, he was speaking to a Liberal fund-raising dinner, and when he put this proposition forward he knew only Liberals would accept it. That is why he gave this kind of message to the Liberal fund raising dinner, under the heading of unemployment.

Who was to blame for unemployment? The Prime Minister said "there has been a social revolution" in this country. "Women and young people are entering the labour force at a rate at which they've never entered it before." Why did he single out women and young people? Why does he have to be focusing continually upon women? Then he went on to say in a wonderfully patronizing manner, "I'm not knocking it, particularly the women." How long do women have to take that kind of patronizing comment from the Prime Minister of this country? How long does he intend to go on making such comments that it is women entering the labour force who are causing unemployment in this country? That is the kind of thing we hear, and that is the kind of intent that is embodied in this bill.

The fact that the government makes this kind of comment, and that the Prime Minister goes out and makes this kind of derogatory statement, completely ignores that if it were not for the fact that so many women are working and so many women are in the working force, not only would the work force lose some of its most vital workers, but the ranks of the poor in this country would swell. But, sir, such facts as that do not intrude upon the government's attitudes, which remain, in spite of their fine words to the contrary, ambivalent or, even worse, squarely against the attainment of equal opportunity for women in this country.

The clauses in this bill pertaining to part-time workers, and to entrants and re-entrants to the labour force, contain exactly the intent the Prime Minister put forth when he spoke in derogatory terms of women entering the work force, equating that fact with increasing unemployment in this country.

If the minister has forgotten, perhaps I can remind him of what the National Action Committee said when it appeared before the committee. When Carole Swan presented the brief she said:

> —various policy and program changes that are being acted upon or enacted by the government are having the effect of driving out of the labour force those workers that they consider marginal and secondary, particularly women—

That is what the National Action Committee said to the minister, but did he take that advice or listen to those words when he was considering this bill?

We now find that when the government runs out of arguments that put the blame for unemployment on women who have jobs or who want jobs, it often acts as though women who lose their jobs are intent on abusing the unemployment insurance system. That is what the intent of this bill is all about.

Let me say to the minister that independent research has shown that the unemployment insurance scheme has not had a significant impact on women's participation in the labour force, either to encourage it or to discourage it.

An hon. Member: Name your source.

Miss MacDonald: I will name my source. It is a C. D. Howe Research Institute report entitled "Opportunity for Choice", and I would recommend it to the hon. member as it will give him some insight into what women in the work force do for this country. This institute studied unemployment insurance, it studies women workers, and it concluded by stating:

> When we removed the effect of trend factors and the influences of business cycle, the recent changes in our Unemployment Insurance Act have not had a different effect on female than on male unemployment rates. Recent high female unemployment relative to males can be attributed more to trend and cyclical factors than to unemployment insurance.

That is what the report said, yet the government persists in the mistaken belief that women do not need—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but her allotted time has expired.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member would answer a question?

[Miss MacDonald.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Her time has expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. This would require unanimous consent, and I take it there is not unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to participate in this debate a few days before Christmas, and it is certainly a great pleasure to me to see that the spirit of Christmas has pervaded the House. I suppose the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) can no longer be referred to as a "red Tory", but as a "green Tory".

An hon. Member: Ho, ho, ho!

Mr. Anderson: What we have heard from the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is a proposition I never thought would be put forward in this House, that the unity of Canada depends on a greater amount of unemployment benefits to Canadians. If one followed that argument to its logical conclusion, if we spent $8 billion rather than $4 billion, we would have twice the unity in Canada that we have today. Mr. Speaker, that is patent nonsense.

● (1522)

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): All of her speech was.

Mr. Anderson: The second assertion made by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands was that Bill C-14 hits hardest those individuals in high unemployment areas who are least able to find employment. The reduction in UI benefit expenditures for Canada as a whole in the fiscal year 1979-80 is 14 per cent. If we look at the Atlantic provinces, we see that in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia the percentage reduction is less than for Canada as a whole. For example, the rate is 13.1 per cent in Newfoundland, and 12.5 per cent in Nova Scotia. In the case of New Brunswick it is equal to the national average, and in Prince Edward Island it is slightly over 15.2 per cent.

The point which has been missed by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and, with all deference, by the New Democratic Party as well, is that the distribution of funds to the employment strategy will more than compensate all provinces for the loss of funds attributable to the amendments in Bill C-14. For example, in 1979-1980, the $710 million employment strategy, together with the $300 million employment development fund, yields expenditures substantially in excess of the total Bill C-14 programmed savings for 1979-1980. In that period the funds which will be decreased in unemployment insurance amount to $655 million. If the same employment strategy figures are applied to 1980-1981, they are still estimated to be greater than the estimated Bill C-14 programmed savings which are estimated to be $935 million.

What I am saying, and what should be clear to all members, is that the savings are not being put into the general revenue of Canada to reduce debt and to reduce our spending, but are being redirected into job-creation programs and skill-training programs which will reduce unemployment.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Don't expect the Tories to understand anything.

Mr. Anderson: In all sincerity, I expected the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands to look at the program and at least grant that jobs will be created as a result of funding from this program. I do not expect the New Democratic Party to understand it, because economics is not their strong forte, but I did expect some hon. members opposite would congratulate the government on its attempt not to maintain people on unemployment insurance, but to have these funds go into training people so they will be able to find permanent jobs. I also expected congratulations from that side for the fact that this money will go into direct job creation as opposed to having people draw benefits.

I consider it degrading for persons to have to stay at home and draw benefits. Instead of that, hopefully, we will have them out working. I would have hoped that the official opposition would have been at least honest enough to say that that is a more desirable stance than having an individual sit at home drawing benefits, which is a demoralizing process. After 35 meetings in committee, and after several days of debate in the House, it appears that there is no way that this reached the minds of the opposition. The only people who will probably realize this will be the people of Canada, and I suppose they are the ultimate judge. I am more than prepared, as a Liberal member of parliament, to go before the people of Canada next year and say that the Liberal party has a positive approach to unemployment, and that it is not putting out more money for unemployment insurance—

An hon. Member: You created it.

Mr. Anderson: —but putting out more money for the creation of jobs and the upgrading of skills.

In 1979-1980 the government employment strategy program will create employment for 638,000 individuals. This is far in excess of the 249,000 claimants who may be potentially prevented from establishing claims as a result of Bill C-14. That is a net gain, and surely it is a desirable gain when more Canadians will be working next year than are working this year. We hear in this House, day after day, about problems besetting this country, but what is not very often said is that, for example, in 1968 there were 7,514,000 Canadians working, and in May, 1978, we had 10,025,000 people working, which means an average number of jobs created per year under this government of 250,900, this during the toughest ten years in world history with regard to economics.

We have heard about the women and we have heard about the young, but what has not been said is that the percentage of population over 15 years of age has reached the highest employment level ever in our history. For example, in May, 1968, the percentage was 54.6, and in May, 1978, it was 57.1 per cent. The participation rate in 1958 was 57.1 per cent, and in May of 1978 it was 62.5 per cent. These are not unpleasant facts to bring up because they show that Canada has had a sustained growth over the years.

In the same period of time it is interesting to note that the Federal Republic of Germany, which is looked upon by many Canadians as a modern miracle and an example of hard work, growth and dedication, over the last eight years has had a negative growth. There are less people working in West Germany today than there were in 1970, but in Canada at the same time we have had an average growth of 250,000 people per year, in a population of less than 20 million, a very large growth ratio. However, do we ever hear anybody saying that this has been an era of sustained growth?

Instead, what we hear today from the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands is that in order to promote Canadian unity we should pay more money out in unemployment insurance benefits. If that is the Tory party's platform going into the next election, what will probably happen is what has happened over the last three elections.

I had the good fortune to receive a letter from the Conservative party today, and I would like to include some of it in my remarks. It is addressed to Hugh Anderson, member of parliament, House of Commons, Ottawa. It says, "I am sure that you are deeply concerned about the future of our country and recognize the need for a better government, a stronger economy and a new hope for our future. This is why I am writing to you today, to enlist your support for the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada."

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is probably signed by Keith Davey.

Mr. Anderson: Obviously the Conservative party has been putting up a brave façade if they are enlisting the support of the Liberal Party of Canada in the upcoming federal election. Incidentally, this letter is signed by Robert L. Stanfield, and he concludes his letter by saying that, "as party leader in the past three elections I personally know that a party can come close and yet lose by a mere handful of votes. Let us not let this happen next time. Help close the gap with your personal contribution to the PC Canada Fund today."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anderson: We are all aware that the Conservative party has been an error-prone party, but if they are counting on my help in the next election I am afraid they are going to lose it by another few votes again.

● (1532)

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We count on you as one of our greatest assets.

Mr. Anderson: I felt very important today to the Conservatives.

An hon. Member: You are doing great!

Mr. Anderson: There has been some debate by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) regarding allocation of time and I think that all of us, no matter to which party we belong, would hope that the debate would go forward in a sane and intelligent manner so there would not have to be any allocation of time.

Let me quote from Hansard to show you the tenor of argument, and the psychology under which we have been operating and which has made it almost impossible to have a rational debate. As reported at page 2295 of Hansard for December 19, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said:

> We realize there has to be restraint. We realize there has to be some restraint in the unemployment insurance program.

That obviously contradicts statements made by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. We know they straddle both sides of the fence, as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) so beautifully pointed out the other night, but let me continue.

The hon. member for St. John's West went on to say:

> That is why we are going to vote against them. I would not vote for them, anyway. I have no intention of voting for anything brought into this House by the hon. gentlemen opposite, no matter what they bring in, because the source from which it comes is polluted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: That is right.

Mr. Anderson: Obviously, by the applause from the other side, the pitty-pat handclappers are in agreement with what was said by the hon. member for St. John's West. In other words, he said, and I will paraphrase him, that regardless of what was brought in on Bill C-14, he was not going to vote it; he would not vote for anything. By the way, he also made one other interesting statement: "I would not come into the House". How can one enter a debate, a serious debate on Bill C-14, when a future cabinet minister, if they get in—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Now, you are talking.

An hon. Member: That is as close as he will ever get.

Mr. Anderson: A future cabinet minister among those who would aspire to be king.

Some hon. Members: Ah!

Mr. Anderson: Their aspirations have been the same for the last 15 years. The people of Canada have always put a banana peel under the rungs on the road to the climb for power. I suspect these same people will put another banana peel under their ascent to power—

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

An hon. Member: Put it under his foot.

Mr. Anderson: I suppose it would be fair to say that we are entering a debate on a subject that affects hundreds of thousands of people across Canada. We have some idea of the mentality of that party when it says, "It doesn't matter what you say, we are going to vote against it." It must be frustrating to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) to have listened to 34 committee hearings and to have listened to the debate in this House, and then to have the hon. member for St. John's West stand up and say—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And then have to listen to you.

Mr. Anderson: —regardless of what is said in this House, or what proposals are put forward, he is going to vote against them, and he will even walk out of the House.

An hon. Member: Especially after he supported it at second reading.

Mr. Anderson: There are very important clauses in Bill C-14. I believe that this House has studied this legislation in committee for a long period of time. But I, as a member of parliament from Vancouver Island, would rather see, if I had my druthers, the sort of development that I was able to announce on Monday in Nanaimo, where the federal government will be investing $12 million in the Duke Point project in conjunction with the province of British Columbia and with the Nanaimo Harbour Commission.

During the time of restraint the federal government has looked upon the creation of jobs in a positive manner. This particular project will draw approximately $150 million of private investment, with a contribution of $12 million from the federal government; $7 million from the provincial government, and $7 million from the Nanaimo Harbour Commission. This contribution of $150 million from the private sector will create 2,000 direct and indirect jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anderson: In my opinion this is the kind of rational progress and rational industrial development for which this government is noted. I would hope that with the moneys made available through savings through the unemployment insurance program, that more jobs are created all across Canada, not only in the maritimes or in Quebec, but right across Canada from coast to coast. Surely that is what a federal government is all about, a government with concern for all the country, not for one particular region or one particular province.

An hon. Member: Not if the Tory premiers have their way.

Mr. Anderson: I am very gratified that the federal government in its wisdom is able, during a time of restraint, to make available $12 million in order to help create 2,000 direct and indirect jobs. I congratulate the government on that strategy. I believe that by assisting the provinces, the municipalities or other parties in this country, if we can stimulate private investment—and in this particular case it will be up to $150 million—then surely this is the way to go. The government of Canada in recent meetings have said, "It is the private sector that must create jobs, it is not the government." This is an example of where the private sector along with assistance from the federal and provincial governments, will have a tremendous impact that will directly affect the city of Nanaimo to the tune of 2,000 jobs.

There are several other things that perhaps do not get said, because when one talks about Bill C-14 or amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, one must take it in the context of what is happening throughout the entire economic sector of Canada. One cannot take it only in the context that this bill will be a reduction of funds to people who are unemployed in Canada. Instead one must ask the question, to what better use can we put those funds? I would suggest that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has taken the right step in attempting to break the unemployment cycle. Instead of putting more and more money into the program, as you put it into a beast with an unending appetite, you tend to break that cycle by having money go into more important areas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

● (1542)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I can well understand why hon. members opposite would try to deprive me of the few minutes that are remaining. Having just listened to the speech of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), I can understand why closure has been introduced. A few more speeches like that and not even the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Maine) would vote for this bill. I am sure, when the hon. member speaks of his druthers, if the people of Comox-Alberni had their druthers, they would not send the hon. member here to make speeches like that.

There are only a few minutes remaining. Throughout this debate one important fact has been forgotten, that we are talking about the lives of people. This cruel bill will deprive 250,000 Canadians of the right to draw unemployment insurance. It will force a quarter million Canadians on to the welfare rolls of this country. There is nothing more can be said about this bad bill which was brought in by closure and forced through this House by closure. The final word on this iniquitous, unjust legislation will be left to the people of Canada when they vote this government out of office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being 3.45 p.m., pursuant to order made Wednesday, December 20, 1978, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of Bill C-14, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

The question is on the amendment (Mr. Rae). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Rae) which was negatived on the following division:

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the order made earlier this date, the House will now revert to motions for the consideration of the motion standing in the name of the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council) moved:

That, when the House adjourns following the disposal of the third reading stage of Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, it shall stand adjourned until a time to be fixed by Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, when the House may meet for the purpose of dealing with any subsequent proceeding on the said bill or the giving of Royal Assent to the said bill and any other bills then ready for royal assent:

That after the disposal of such proceedings or in the event the House does not meet for those purposes, the House shall be adjourned or stand adjourned, as the case may be, until January 23, 1979, provided that at any time prior to that date if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or Deputy Chairman of committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: May I indicate therefore that the House will stand adjourned, the ordinary course under the provisions of this order, and presumably will await the consideration of the bill by the other place, following which it will be recalled by the Chair later this day or at some other time, depending on Their Honours in the other place, if the House moves to adjourn today, pending the call of the Chair for the purposes outlined in this adjournment order.

The first thing I wish to say to the House now is that it would give me great honour and pleasure to be able to receive members and their usual guests in Room 16.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: That is the situation at the moment, subject only to a very important intervention by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth).

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of one of my favourite constituents who happens to live at the North Pole and goes by the name of Santa Claus, I wish everyone in the House here today, and all people in the land, a very happy Christmas, good health, and happiness in the new year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Ho, ho!

Mr. Speaker: The House stands recessed until the call of the Chair.

At 4.22 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 10.05 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, without amendment.

ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa

December 22, 1978

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Louis-Philippe Pigeon, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 22nd day of December, at 10.05 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

[English]

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Honourable Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-14, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.—Chapter No. 7.

Bill C-33, an act to authorize the granting of an immediate annuity to the Honourable Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand.—Chapter No. 8.

Royal Assent

Bill S-5, an act to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act—Chapter No. 9.

Bill C-34, an act to amend the Criminal Code—Chapter No. 10.

Bill S-8, an act to revive J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd.

Pursuant to order made earlier this day, this House stands adjourned until Tuesday, January 23, 1979, at two o'clock p.m.

At 10.24 p.m. the House adjourned until 2 p.m., January 23, 1979, pursuant to special order made this day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 23, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

LOCATION OF TV CAMERAS IN CHAMBER

Mr. Speaker: As part of the ongoing development of the television installations in the chamber, two camera positions, one on each side of the House, have now been changed to remote control operation. Members will notice the cameras are in different positions relative to the curtains and the sides of the House.

Perhaps hon. members will direct their attention to these installations over the next few days so that we can determine which of the two positions is better for the general conduct of business and decorum in the chamber. We hope, of course, to go on and in time to move the other two cameras into remote control from the mezzanine in accordance with the original plan.

REQUEST RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT BE DEFERRED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, concerning the abandonment of various railway lines in the prairie provinces, an example of which is the unseemly and unjustifiable haste regarding the shutting down of the line from Shellbrook to Spiritwood.

I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu):

That this House request all abandonments to be held up until the first of September so that further consideration may be given to the argument of the residents in the areas who are so directly and unfairly affected.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the unanimous consent of the House is required before a motion can be introduced for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN HANDLING—RECOMMENDATIONS OF HALL COMMISSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In light of the fact that the Minister of Transport has now embraced the report of the Prairie Rail Action Committee which repudiates the Hall commission report, and has endorsed the decision of the Canadian Wheat Board to purchase hopper cars at the expense of the western grain producers, I would move, seconded by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton):

That this House register its dismay and opposition to the policies of this government undermining the recommendations of the Hall Commission Report on Grain Handling and Transportation and the saddling of the western grain producer with the cost of grain transportation under questionable use of the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF PRAC ON RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter as urgent and pressing as my two colleagues have raised concerning the Prairie Rail Action Committee report which recommends the abandonment of 1,416 miles of railway line in western Canada.

In view of the fact that in the 1974 election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) promised not to abandon rail service on branch lines as long as elevator companies considered that continued rail service was warranted, and since the PRAC report recommends the abandonment of 38 sections of rail line which the prairie wheat pools want maintained in the basic network, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister live up to their promise and reject the Prairie Rail Action Committee's abandonment recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

REQUEST GOVERNMENT NOT AMEND LEGISLATION WITHOUT CONSULTING PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering the impending federal-provincial conference to be held next month in Ottawa and considering the great importance given to the constitutional debate, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That, should the federal-provincial conference of first ministers on the constitution fail, the House of Commons demand that the government give its firm assurance that it will not act unilaterally to amend certain sections of the British North America Act.

REMARKS OF HON. MEMBER FOR LABELLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) has stated that the government is not doing enough for business in this country, and that government policies and programs are confusing businessmen. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the government refer the subject matter of the hon. member's remarks to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

URBAN AFFAIRS

UNIVERSALITY OF RRAP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

The government has proclaimed the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program to be universal but in a memorandum to the minister of housing and urban affairs the president of CMHC stated in part:

—neither the industry nor the municipal delivery system nor the present and projected RRAP budget permit the operation of a universal system.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House direct the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to make a statement on motions in order to clarify his so-called universal program, so that cynical observers will not interpret his inadvertent misrepresentation as crass pre-electioneering.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

REMARKS OF OPPOSITION MEMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43.

Given the fact that there is a provincial government in Quebec engaged in a semantic campaign to persuade Quebeckers to vote to break away from Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

That the Leader of the Opposition and his colleague from Rosedale be asked to refrain from further comment on sovereignty association or any other similar semantic gimmick—

PUBLIC HEARINGS ON RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisons of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the serious effect that the recommendations of the Prairie Rail Action Committee will have on many producers and communities on the prairies, and in view of the fact that there is no requirement that the Railway Transport Committee hold public hearings when the railways apply to abandon lines, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton):

That the Minister of Transport direct the Railway Transport Committee to give notice of and hold public hearings in all cases where requests are made by affected municipalities, towns and villages.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN BORROWINGS TO SUPPORT CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. The government has announced that it is going to Japan for its sixth foreign borrowing in 14 months to support the Canadian dollar.

I wonder if the Prime Minister can tell the House why, since this device has now failed five times, the government is convinced it is going to work this time.

● (1415)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have announced that we will borrow in the foreign market. I think this has been well received by Canadians. There are enough savings in Canada to meet some of our financial requirements and in order to supplement the flow of capital we have borrowed abroad, as has been the case for many years. We are just following that pattern. We are not the first ones to borrow from Japan; the Americans were there a few months ago.

Mr. Clark: I regret we cannot bring the Prime Minister's attention to economic questions, but perhaps he will attempt to answer this one.

Will the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons why the government in this case is going to Japan with this offer? Will he tell the House whether offers were made in any other country and were turned down; and if his answer to the question has to do with rates of interest, will he tell us whether an offer was made in Switzerland?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have had opportunities to borrow throughout the world and we have decided to borrow on the Japanese market at this time because we believe it is the most favourable market for the conditions we wanted to obtain. And I also want to report to the House and to the Leader of the Opposition that we did have offers from several other banking countries and that Canada's credit is excellent throughout the world.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I will direct my next question to the Prime Minister or to his delegate on economic questions.

During the period of these borrowings abroad, designed to prop up the Canadian dollar, the value of the Canadian dollar has dropped by at least six cents. I wonder if the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the minister responsible for economic policy, or anybody else over there, can tell the House of Commons what projections they have in the government as to what the value of the Canadian dollar would be now had those borrowings not been resorted to?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition would be well advised to delegate somebody else on external affairs policies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I think the question put by the Leader of the Opposition is purely hypothetical. The Canadian dollar is floating in the marketplace. The level of our dollar is established by the marketplace. I think that Canadians have benefited much from the fact that the Canadian dollar is now more competitive, because in 1978 we had a record year in trade and we hope we will keep having the benefits of the devalued dollar in the next few months.

INTEREST RATE POLICY OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance.

Given the fact that our unemployment rate is over 8 per cent, our inflation rate is over 8 per cent, and now very reputable forecasters say that the real growth in the economy will be less than 3 per cent, will the government change its high interest rate policy, which everyone says is taking us into a serious recession, reverse itself and move to a low interest rate policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the monetary policy is established by the governor of the Bank of Canada. When he raised interest rates, he stated his reasons for doing so in a press release, and I approved his decision. Mr. Speaker, we have taken these measures because Canada is a new country which imports capital from foreign countries, because we have a trade balance problem and we have to import capital. So we must have competitive interest rates.

[English]

Mr. Gillies: Perhaps the Prime Minister would like to delegate responsibility for finance as well.

Is the Minister of Finance seriously suggesting that the governor of the Bank of Canada does not have to consult, and that the Minister of Finance does not have responsibility for the monetary policy of this nation? Is this what he is trying to tell the House? The act is very clear: the Minister of Finance has full responsibility.

I ask him again, given the fact that between 1971 and 1973 the short-term interest rate differential between Canada and the United States was in favour of Canada, and the dollar appreciated, does he know if there are some studies which suggest that the Canadian dollar would have floated substantially differently than it is if we had a low interest policy, which is what this country needs at this time?

Mr. Chrétien: I think the hon. member forgot to say to the House that in the summer inflation dropped from 9.8 per cent to 8.4 per cent last month, that a year ago unemployment stood at 8.5 per cent and now it is down to 8.1 per cent, and that despite the highest increase in the participation rate last year in the labour market, we have created 429,000 new jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I think that the performance of the Canadian economy in 1978 has been a good one, if you take into account the difficulties which all countries in the world are facing at this time.

• (1420)

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance likes to forget that compared to Germany, Japan and Switzerland we have rotten economic performance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillies: I should like to ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a supplementary question?

An hon. Member: Yes, he does.

Mr. Gillies: My question to the minister is this: given the fact there is great controversy in this country among the economics profession and among the advisers of all governments, will the Minister of Finance arrange for a reference to be made to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, which reference was requested during the Christmas recess?

It is fundamental to the economic prosperity of this nation during the next few years to solve the question of whether we should be following the interest rate policy followed by the govenrnment at the present time and whether it is an appropriate policy. A request was made of the committee chairman and he said that he did not have the terms of reference for it. The terms of reference should be given, so that we can call on the governor of the Bank of Canada and other experts to find out what the policy should be in the country at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I asked the governor of the Bank of Canada to appear before the committee many times last year. When I read the report, I was very impressed by his answers and much less impressed by the quality of the questioning by the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RAILWAYS

POLICY ON RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister: it is of great concern to western farmers.

In 1974, in the context of an election campaign then ongoing—more precisely, on June 14—the Prime Minister promised western farmers the Government of Canada would not abandon rail service branch lines as long as elevator companies considered that continued rail service was warranted. That was the promise of the Prime Minister.

Considering that last week the Prairie Rail Action Committee report recommended abandonment of 38 sections of rail line, among others—this fits precisely within the framework promised by the Prime Minister in June of 1974—will the Prime Minister assure the House that these lines he committed himself to in 1974 will be preserved in 1979?

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the measures this government has been taking since 1974 to improve the grain transportation system in the west are very important. Just think of the $700 million which will be spent in the next six years to improve the rail system in the west.

As for the PRAC recommendations, Mr. Speaker, a report was published about ten days ago asking in fact for the abandonment of some lines, but it is only a recommendation and it is the responsibility of the Canadian Transport Commission to decide whether those railway lines will be abandoned or not.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister: I hope he will answer it. It is not a question which requires detailed knowledge; it simply requires the Prime Minister to reiterate today the commitment he made in 1974.

In 1974, the Prime Minister promised western farmers the government would maintain the 38 lines which were not all concerned with the PRAC recommendation but which fit into his criteria. Will the Prime Minister now reassert that commitment, to ensure that western farmers receive today what was promised then?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party had listened to the answer, he would know and he would not have to repeat the question. The commitment made has been honoured and respected until now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nonsense.

An hon. Member: It certainly has.

Mr. Trudeau: The right hon. member speaks for himself, but I am talking to the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know, and I speak to you.

Mr. Trudeau: I think we have the great expert on nonsense talking nonsense at this point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a complete deception.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I realize you might want to recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I understand this morning he had a tough time with the hon. member for Rosedale, but that is no reason to take it out on me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: We have honoured that commitment. Now we have a respectable body which is making a contrary recommendation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1425)

Mr. Trudeau: The parliamentary secretary is perfectly correct in saying they will be looked at by the CTC and acted upon by it.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the parliamentary secretary with almost as much attention as I listen to the Prime Minister's answers.

The Minister of Transport cannot be here today because of other commitments—and I understand that—but last week he said in Saskatchewan that the PRAC recommendations as a whole would be referred to the CTC for consideration. I ask the Prime Minister whether he would not distinguish between those lines which he said should be preserved and those which are still contentious, and simply refer the seven or eight lines that are outside his commitment to the CTC for consideration. Will the Prime Minister not now commit himself, in 1979, to the western farmers as he did in the context of an election promise in 1974?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are not changing any policy. I am just saying that the CTC has the right and the duty to pronounce itself upon these recommendations and we will see what its answer is.

WELFARE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT AGREED WITH PROVINCES CONCERNING AMENDMENTS TO FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Sometime in December, the Canadian parliament passed a bill amending the Family Allowances Act. At the time, the Minister of National Health and Welfare told us that Quebec families would, on the whole, derive greater benefits from family allowances.

I have here a press release issued by the Quebec health minister in which he states that family allowances paid by the federal government will decrease by 22.1 per cent. Here is my question: Before the bill was passed by the Canadian parliament, did the minister have talks with the health minister of Quebec, and the other provinces, naturally, and did they agree with the amendments proposed to the law? Furthermore, is it true that Quebec will receive 22.1 per cent fewer benefits from federal family allowances?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the provinces were advised of the changes in the family allowances which are of federal jurisdiction by myself as soon as the government took its decision at the end of August. I met Dr. Lazure at the federal-provincial conference held in Toronto, but on the night when I called him on the phone to advise him of the change, he told me that he envied the fact that I was able to get my government to accept the change which he was unable to do with his own government. The January cheque mothers have just received is accompanied by a particularly nasty note saying they are losing money. He forgot to say that a new cheque will be added to the monthly family allowances cheque which does, I admit, give $12 to $15 less for the first child, for instance. However, the new cheque will give an extra $60 million net to Quebec mothers in 1979.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for that information.

Could I ask her to issue a release to give more specific details to family allowances recipients since in many cases referred to me people wonder if they have to file a tax return to take advantage of the tax credit even though they do not pay any income tax. It is urgent, in my opinion, that the situation be cleared up so that there be no useless controversy and that Canadian and Quebec families are not made to believe that they will sustain such a large decrease.

Miss Bégin: That is a very good question, Mr. Speaker. I would now like to inform all hon. members in this House that an announcement is being aired over the radio across Canada as well as published in the country's weeklies and ethnic papers, and which will be presented under a different form on television next week, telling mothers: That piece of paper you received with your January cheque, read it, do not throw it away, for that thirteenth cheque is not automatically issued, you have to ask for it and of course it will be paid to most mothers. I will indeed keep on informing hon. members on the program. We also have information kits available to hon. members.

• (1430)

[English]

I would also like to add something which I think is pretty important. All local service groups—women resource centres, citizens' groups, poverty groups, native mothers' groups, women's groups—are welcome to apply to the ministry of health and welfare for small amounts of money in the form of contacts for services in order to help canvass neighbourhoods and to help women fill out these forms, if they have never before filled them out.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I would like to ask a supplementary question. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if it would be possible to add the following to the information already supplied: that it is essential, according to the law, to file an income tax return in order to be eligible for the tax credit, because people are all mixed up about that. At the same time, they could be told about the date when they can expect their tax credit. Would it be in the middle of the year, at the end of the year, at the beginning of the year or immediately after they have made their request? Of course, if that amount is to be added to their family allowances, they must receive their cheque; but are they going to receive it?

Miss Bégin: Next week, every Canadian mother will receive an income tax return form. All of them, even those who do not usually fill an income tax return, will have to do the following: supply all information relating to their identification and the amount they request, write N/A on every other blank, sign the form and send it to Revenue Canada. Beginning the third week of March, cheques will be sent to families on a first come first served basis at the time of income tax returns.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

POLICY RESPECTING EX GRATIA PAYMENTS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board regarding the government's policy on ex gratia payments which, as he well knows, implies no liability or receipt of value for services but these payments are made on the basis of benevolence or some other consideration.

In view of some very large payments set out in this year's public accounts, has there been a change in policy to justify, for example, a payment of $40,000 to McGregor Travel in Montreal, which was the catalyst in the Estey inquiry into Air Canada, or some $2,300,000 for land expropriation at Mirabel in apparent circumvention of the expropriations act? Could the minister give us the reason, if there is a difference in policy?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the policy still remains as stated by the hon. member, and each individual case is reviewed by the full Treasury Board before a decision is taken.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer. Perhaps he would look into two other incidents at his convenience. One is the payment of $87,000 to Olympia and York Developments for guard services at a building here in Ottawa, and the other is the payment of $500,000 to Ste. Marie Air Services for alleged loss of earnings resulting from the opening of Mirabel airport.

It seems to me that the minister should be interested in checking into these matters which contrast strangely with the definition of ex gratia payments and the usual amounts paid under the circumstances.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to consider the representations of the hon. member and look into these two particular cases.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MINISTER'S MEETING WITH MARITIME INDIAN CHIEFS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The minister has reneged on her promise to meet with the maritime chiefs and has decided to meet with the National Indian Brotherhood and one representative from each province. The fact remains that the very particular problems which the maritimes have still remain unresolved.

Can the minister tell the House if she will meet with the maritime chiefs, who have come to Ottawa again, in the hope that she will not insult them again and that this time she will sit down with them—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Yewchuk: —to discuss the very serious concerns they have with regard to health care for their people in the maritime provinces?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the quality of assistance given to Indians in our country, as I am sure all members are.

I do not think that I have ever insulted the maritime chiefs. I told them at the end of the parliamentary meeting before Christmas here in Ottawa that the next time I had occasion to go to the maritimes I would meet with them. I made this suggestion in order to save them the cost of transportation. I will be holding conferences in Moncton, Sydney and Charlottetown only on February 8 and 9.

I was very concerned when I heard the report by the CBC and also the questions by the hon. gentleman to the effect that there were deaths caused by the policy of my department. I immediately sent a telex inviting the people concerned from across the country, because it is a problem throughout Canada and not just in the maritimes. The meeting will be tomorrow afternoon. I think it is more important to have this meeting and avert any misunderstanding now, rather than waiting two more weeks when I will be visiting the maritimes. I am sure the hon. member will understand this.

Of course the maritime chiefs will be invited. The National Indian Brotherhood is the body which is organizing the meeting. I do not know exactly who will be present, but the door is open.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, in view of the widespread opposition to the minister's new policy of cutbacks in Indian health services which was imposed without prior consultation with the people involved, would the minister agree to postpone this policy for six months in order that she may consult with the Indian people fully before she makes a final decision on the implementation of this inhuman policy?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member should swallow the words "inhuman policy", because as far as I am concerned he is in the potatoes.

We are talking about guidelines, which means the rules of the game, to determine what can be spent, for what reason, and for whom. We will be using public funds and we would like the money from these expenditures to go to Indians who need it. The hon. member should know very well what we are talking about.

Further to my telex, no cases of abuse have been reported to me. At the meeting tomorrow I will ask the various leaders if they know of any cases of abuse, because I would like to look into each matter personally.

NATIONAL REVENUE

MINISTER'S REMARKS ON CANADIAN TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the importance of the textile industry for all of Canada and specifically for the province of Quebec, I would like to know why he stated, while he was abroad, that all textile plants here in Canada should be closed and the production of textiles left to countries where labour is cheaper?

[English]

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member's information came from a distorted press résumé.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: I simply stated at the press conference that we had over 200,000 people employed in the textile industry and that there was no way in which we could have over 65 per cent of our imports coming from abroad, and increase that amount, without jeopardizing the industry.

Having made that point, I said that academically it could be conceived that perhaps other people could produce textiles for the Canadian consumer cheaper than we could. I went on to say that this was unacceptable to us, but unfortunately the only part of my comments which was reported, that I saw, in this context was that I had suggested that perhaps our textile business should be shut down.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, the minister is correctly quoted as saying "and we should leave the field to others who can produce the commodity more cheaply". Does the minister feel that if other countries can produce the product more cheaply than Canada, we should shut down all our industries?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, that is not my position at all. I tried to explain in the first answer that I proposed it as hypothetically possible that people could argue that those nations producing such products more cheaply, should do so and let us produce something else. I went on to emphasize that this was not our policy and that it would not be our policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Since the minister has repeatedly stated in the House that the textile industry was doing well in Canada, and since he agrees with the Minister of National Revenue's statement abroad that the production of textiles should be left to other countries where labour is cheaper and that Canadian plants should be closed, what does this all mean?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the Minister of National Revenue made a statement to that effect. What he said, rather, and which is also extremely important, was that developed countries must allow developing countries, whenever possible, to expand in such areas. Our policy in Canada is to allow the import of certain quantities of commodities made in developing countries, while keeping a share of the market for our own producers. To my mind, this is not an overly restrictive policy, as it protects Canadian producers while keeping a good share of the market for products made in developing countries.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

OVERPAYMENTS OF BENEFITS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the overpayments made to 6,000 unemployed in the province of Quebec because of an administrative error and a false interpretation of section 37 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Is the minister willing to cancel the claim he sent to at least 15,000 Canadians, including 6,000 Quebeckers?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker. We had indicated that there was an overpayment as a result of an error. We are contacting each individual person who received the overpayment. We are looking at each case sympathetically to ascertain those that we can write off or abandon.

We are also indicating in other areas that the collection procedure will be dealt with as sympathetically as possible. I do not think we have authority under the legislation simply to write off an overpayment of that size.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MONITORING OF SALES TAX CUT TO ENSURE CONSUMERS BENEFIT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? An hour or so ago the Consumers Association of Canada sent a letter to the Minister of Finance and to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs saying that the 3 per cent manufacturing sales tax cut announced in the last budget had not been passed on to consumers. Indeed, some consumer prices went up by 1.9 per cent in December, compared with November.

Can the minister tell the House why the cut in sales tax was not properly monitored by the government? What steps is the government now planning to take to make sure that the $1 billion cut is not being kept by the corporations as a gift, but is passed on to the consumers where it belongs?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the many offices of my department across the country have been monitoring the sales tax cut, and I must say that since its introduction we have received very few complaints that it was not being passed on, although this would only begin to show up in recent weeks. We have been monitoring, however. I have not yet received the letter referred to by the hon. member, but I shall be glad to pursue the matter.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This morning, the Consumers Association of Canada said that in their phone calls to the agencies referred to, they found that no one was really charged with monitoring the sales tax cut and no one seemed to know what they were doing.

Will the minister make a commitment to assign a single agency to monitor the 3 per cent cut so that consumers will get the $1 billion, and not the corporations?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, that is difficult to understand. Before Christmas, I met with the entire executive of the Consumers Association of Canada and told them exactly what the government had in mind. That was the announcement by the Minister of Finance on budget night to the effect that until the end of the year the AIB, my department and CSIP would be involved in the monitoring process. I told them exactly what the role of my department would be; that is, with our many offices across the country, to keep a close watch on consumer products in the field to determine whether tax cuts were being passed on. Up until this time there have not been many complaints.

It is difficult to determine, especially with small products where the price is low—although we know that with automobiles it was passed on—with things such as appliances whether this is so. But the monitoring is continuing.

FINANCE

CHANGES TO SMALL BUSINESS TAX RATE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance? On December 13, in response to my questions regarding proposed changes to the small business tax rate, the minister said that he would be introducing a bill on the matter "within the next few days."

My question is simply this: why has the minister reneged on that promise, and when can we expect this bill to be tabled in order that, as his colleague, the hon. member for Labelle, stated earlier the confusion and uncertainty which the Minister has created can be somewhat resolved?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a Ways and Means motion which includes everything that is in the bill. That is what I meant when I referred to the introduction of the bill, so that it would be possible for me to receive comments from people who have an interest in it. Most of the people who have an interest have looked into it and we have received some letters from them. If some changes are to be proposed, they will be in the bill when I introduce it soon.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Neither the minister's ways and means motion nor his press release on the matter, issued in December, assure the thousands and thousands of legitimate one-man operations, as well as independent insurance and real estate brokers, that they will be exempt from the proposed amendments.

In order to clarify the obvious uncertainty and confusion within this widespread sector of our economy, can the minister today give these legitimate small business operations, including real estate brokers and insurance brokers, the assurance that they will continue to qualify for the preferential small business tax?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would read the ways and means motion and the press release that went with it, he would see it is clear that the people referred to will be exempt as long as they meet the requirements. It was all spelled out very clearly in the ways and means motion. I think either the hon. member did not read it or that he is acting in bad faith.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister: it relates to the recent meeting of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, a body appointed by the government.

In view of the remarks made at that meeting by the president, who stated that she had come to the "tragic conclusion that not only were Canadian women being excluded from the employment strategy of the Canadian government," but that in "official statements" women are considered either "responsible for the high rate of unemployment" or are being "used as scapegoats and as a screen for a chronic inability to redress the economy", and in view of this level of criticism directed toward the government and its over-all economic policy of using women as scapegoats, has the Prime Minister asked for an immediate report from either the minister responsible for the status of women or from the Minister of Employment and Immigration about steps being taken to reverse this very serious situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had a report and I can state unequivocally that either the president was not directing her remarks at the government or else she was unequivocally wrong.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that these remarks were released officially by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, and that there has been no public statement since suggesting that the remarks, which are very clearly an indication of criticism of the government, were not meant or intended, when the Prime Minister is inquiring about this, could he perhaps also find out why it has taken so long for the commitment to be honoured—made by the President of the Treasury Board and by the minister responsible for the status of women—to produce the annual reports on the achievement of equal opportunities for women in the various departments of government, as well as publishing the reports on the plan of action to which the government has committed itself?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not have to make the inquiries: I can assure the hon. member that neither he nor the honourable lady can find any incidents in which any minister of this government will have taken the position stated by the president of the Voice of Women.

GAMBLING

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON OFF-TRACK BETTING

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

On December 19 last, unequivocally, without condition and without restriction, the minister stated very clearly that before January 22 he would indicate whether the government was going to continue its policy on off-track betting, or change that policy. It is now January 23. I would ask the minister why he has reneged on that public promise.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, just before coming into the House today I made a statement concerning off-track betting. I thought there were many unanswered questions on both sides of this problem. The great municipal body of the city of Toronto passed a resolution condemning off-track betting, and I thought even that great body would like to come before some committee. I therefore suggested to the leader of the Senate that a committee be formed, and he has assured me he will consider that suggestion. Such a committee could hear all the pros and cons and all the facts. Even the provinces which have been very quiet on this question could come forward and let their thoughts be known.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. On December 19, the minister was surely aware that his cabinet colleagues were divided on this matter—surely the minister was aware that the Liberal caucus was divided—yet he blundered on and made a very forthright statement.

My question is: why did the minister make that statement on December 19, knowing that he would not live up to it?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I feel I did live up to it. Furthermore, the hon. member surely knows that in his own caucus there are pros and cons. He has not stated whether he is for it or against it, and I should like to know that. It would even help the committee, if it is formed, to have his learned opinion on whether off-track betting should become law. I have not received a letter from him either for or against it.

THE CONSTITUTION

POSITION OF OPPOSITION ON CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received official representations from the opposition regarding the negotiating position it would recommend for the conference on constitutional reform next week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no recollection of having received any such representations from the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Provencher.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I did not mean to interrupt the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I had finished, but hearing the laughter on the other side I can understand why there is no position of the opposition on this question. There are three: there is one from Rosedale, one from Prince Albert, and one from the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

IMMIGRATION

POLICY RESPECTING IMMIGRANTS FROM SOUTHEAST ASIA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister will recall that in recent days he has made statements that he would be willing to accept additional refugees from the Philippines and Hong Kong if those two countries would allow the boat people to land there.

Is the minister now willing to increase the number of refugees, the roughly 5,000 he is contemplating landing in 1979 out of a total commitment of landings of 100,000? Is he willing to increase the number at least to the exemplary proportion of the State of Israel which has remembered the plight of their citizens after World War II? Many of us in this country remember the plight of our forefathers. Is the minister willing to increase the number of total landings for 1979 above the 5,000 he has recommended?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to the credit of Canada, we were able to announce—I think with the approval of Canadian citizens generally—that we have moved from 75 families a month to 200. That raised the figure to 5,000. The announcement was made in December.

In addition, I have sent a telex to my provincial colleagues who have special responsibilities for immigration, recommending that we have a meeting to discuss this matter and come up with a figure that would be an annual target, so to speak, of the number of people we might anticipate receiving under the refugee program. As a result of the action taken by this government, people on the ship in Hong Kong were able to get off and we are taking people from that particular camp. We have not yet had a response from the Philippines. We indicated we are prepared to take from the camp 300, 400 or 500 from that group in order to help alleviate the situation.

I say again that this is really a world problem. We must have some direction from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees so that we do not have to act on an ad hoc basis and so that we do not act in a counterproductive way in respect of those countries which are countries of first haven and have a problem on their doorstep which they face on an almost daily basis.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate to the minister that at no time have spokesmen who have spoken on this issue ever suggested that the number of refugees that Canada would be willing or able to take would in any way solve the tragic situation in Southeast Asia. The United Nations has clearly indicated that there could be as many as half a million refugees there by the end of this year.

Is the minister willing to now move forward under a section of the Immigration Act and allow churches and similar sponsoring institutions which have indicated their willingness to sponsor Southeast Asian refugees to sponsor these refugees in addition to the number of refugees to which Canada is committed?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, not only are we prepared to move ahead, but we have already moved ahead. We are contacting church groups and service clubs. Within two days of an address I made in Ottawa, we were contacted by the Kinsmen Club of Canada which indicated they were having a meeting of their top executives from across the country and that they were very interested in this sponsorship approach. They know that it will not be in lieu of, but in addition to, the government's commitment.

I expect that from the churches, service clubs and other groups we may very well get a significant number of refugees into this country in addition to the governments' commitment, both provincial and federal.

TRANSPORT

RESUMPTION OF AIR CONTROLLER TRAINING COURSES IN CORNWALL—INQUIRY WHETHER SIX-MONTH DEADLINE WILL BE OBSERVED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the report on an inquiry which had been ordered and justified concerning the students of the Cornwall institute studying to be air controllers, the minister having recognized that there had been some involuntary discrimination, and following the recommendation of the Commissioner of Official Languages to the effect that within six months those courses will be given in French, could the parliamentary secretary assure us now that the deadline recommended by the Commissioner of Official Languages will be respected?

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Transport will do everything possible to respect the deadline recommended by the Commissioner of Official Languages. It has been recognized that involuntary discrimination had taken place. There are now French-speaking teachers at the institute. The students, at least those who have been interviewed during a CBC program two weeks ago, have said they were satisfied with the changes in the situation. We hope to be able to offer all courses in both official languages before the end of 1980, which is, I think, one of the deadlines established by the Commissioner of Official Languages.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ACTION ON COMPLAINTS OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I listened carefully to the Prime Minister's reply to the hon. member for Egmont, but the press report clearly states that the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, through its president, Yvette Rousseau, took the stand that the government has been callously ignoring its recommendations in a number of particulars that are set out in the report.

May I ask the Prime Minister what the government intends to do about two, in particular, of the complaints made by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women? One is that only 20 of 51 federal departments have full-time co-ordinators concerned with equal opportunities for women. The other is that the number of women participants in high status career assignment programs has dropped from 30 per cent in 1975 to 14 per cent at the present time. Will the government take steps to meet these two specific complaints of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister responsible for the status of women has taken account of this report. We will discuss it in cabinet and take whatever action is needed. In my answer to the hon. member for Egmont, I was singling out a particular point quoted by him to the effect that in some way the government was blaming women for the increase in the size of the unemployment figures. I said that is categorically false.

Oral Questions

URBAN AFFAIRS

COMPENSATION TO AHOP RESIDENTS IN VIRGINIA PARK, ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works responsible for housing. I wish to ask the minister if CMHC is prepared to offer to the homeowners in the Virginia Park, AHOP subdivision in St. John's a settlement in order that they may be able to effect repairs to their homes arising out of inadequate inspection, faulty building materials and substandard materials, which has seriously depreciated the value of their houses.

Is the minister prepared to make an offer on behalf of CMHC to these unfortunate people, other than the offer made to them on January 8 in writing by CMHC offering to give them a loan which would be added to their mortgage?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member has asked that question. Indeed, the offer made by CMHC to the lawyer representing some of the people affected in the Virginia Park project in St. John's, Newfoundland, has not, I understand, been fully communicated to the people concerned.

● (1500)

The offer does not only include an increase in the loan, but the possibility of subsidies attached to this offer of an extra loan in order to allow people to make urgent repairs to their homes. Discussions are going on at the present time between the CMHC regional director and the lawyer representing some of the owners, but I should like the people concerned to look fully at the advantages which are offered, because CMHC is going beyond normal practice in trying to accommodate them and help them solve their problems.

Mr. McGrath: The offer of CMHC has, of course, the advantage of increasing the value of a house which has, in fact, depreciated. I would ask the minister whether the investigations of the RCMP into alleged wrongdoing, alleged pay-offs to inspectors by the contractors, have been concluded and whether charges will be laid.

Mr. Ouellet: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. When the investigations are completed, it will be up to officers of the RCMP to convey their conclusions to the appropriate authority; but I have no indication that their inquiries have been concluded. In the meantime, the people concerned have been deflected to other tasks and we are awaiting the results of the investigations.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

STATUS OF WOMEN

REFERENCE OF REPORTS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to direct a question to the government House leader following the extraordinary statement made by the Prime Minister with regard to the president of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. I should like to ask him whether he would arrange with his cabinet colleagues that the recent reports of the advisory council be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration so that we can hear Madame Rousseau's side of the question and her statements which the Prime Minister dismissed so cavalierly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was looking in the hon. member's direction in anticipation of a question supplementary to that put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but she did not get up then and I do not think I can allow her to put her question now.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, since we are answering more than a hundred questions today, I seek permission to table the list of numbers in order to spare the House a long and useless enumeration.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Paproski: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

DAIRY PROGRAM

Question No. 2—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the Department of Agriculture's Dairy Programme announcement made on April 4, 1977, did the announcement include a statement that the government would spend $4,000,000 this year for market promotion and research and, if so, what has been spent to date, in what manner and if a balance remains, how will it be spent and on what date?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, the announcement of the dairy program on April 4, 1977, included a statement that the government would spend $4 million for market promotion and research in 1977-78.

As at March 31st, 1978, a total of $2,956,228.54 was spent in the following manner and the balance of the unexpended moneys lapsed at the end of the fiscal year 1977-78:

Product promotion	$ 2,379,000.00
Market Research	316,502.41
Product Research	260,726.13

For the fiscal year 1978-79 a total of $4 million has been allocated for market promotion and research.

As of November 20, 1978, a total of $692,720.00 has been spent in the following manner:

Product promotion	$ 371,114.00
Product Research	321,606.00
Market Research	0

The balance of funds are committed to the full amount and are expected to be spent within the fiscal year.

"CODE BLUE"

Question No. 22—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did Mr. Robin Bourne, Director of the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group, Department of the Solicitor General, appear on the program "Code Blue" telecast by CTV a few months ago and did he state that a terrorist incident was inevitable in Quebec and, if so, does this statement reflect the opinion of the government?

2. Did Mr. Bourne appear on the program with permission of any superior and, if so, what is the name and job designation of the superior?

3. Is the government aware that the program "Code Blue" carried in places items similar to those included in a column in the Toronto Sun by Mr. Peter Worthington on the subject of national security?

4. For what reason was the Publisher of the Toronto Sun, Mr. David Creighton, and the Editor, Mr. Peter Worthington charged under the Official Secrets Act?

5. Does the government intend to lay charges under the Official Secrets Act in respect of the program "Code Blue" and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of the Solicitor General and the Department of Justice as follows:

Order Paper Questions

1. Mr. Bourne had the Solicitor General's permission to grant an interview to CTV about crisis management. CTV decided to include film clips from this interview on the program "Code Blue". Mr. Bourne did not state that a terrorist incident was inevitable in Quebec.

2. See part 1.

3. Yes.

4 and 5. It would be improper for the Minister of Justice to comment on the case that is now before the courts with regard to the Toronto Sun.

MR. TOM RUSEKSKI

Question No. 157—Mr. Cossitt:

1. To the knowledge of the government, did Mr. Tom Rusekski of Ottawa appear before the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission on or about Tuesday, October 10, 1978 and, if so (a) was one of the subjects dealt with the alleged censorship of Radio Canada International by the government (b) is Mr. Rusekski a former employee of the CBC and, if so, what position did he hold and during what time and did he allege that he was illegally dismissed a few days after filing a brief of complaints with the CRTC (c) did Mr. Rusekski charge that a "cover-up" operation was conducted after the honourable member for Leeds asked questions in the House of Commons about alleged censorship of Radio Canada International broadcasts beamed to the Soviet Union?

2. Did Mr. Rusekski state that Mr. Alan Brown, Director of Radio Canada International, said that questions by the honourable member for Leeds in the House of Commons lead to high level meetings with the Minister of External Affairs, the Secretary of State, the President of the CBC and other officials and further, did he quote Mr. Brown to the effect that they were "all talking about these bloody questions and what should be done about them"?

3. On what date, in what places, by what means and at what times did any conference or communications of any kind take place on the subject of the questions by the honourable member for Leeds by any of the following (a) the Minister of External Affairs (b) the Secretary of State (c) CBC President Mr. Al Johnson (d) any other officials and the names and job designations of such other officials?

4. Did the CBC legal staff try to stop Mr. Rusekski from giving testimony before the CRTC on alleged censorship of Radio Canada International and, if so (a) was such an attempt made by CBC lawyer Mr. David Chatia and what are all the reasons that the CBC attempted to stop such testimony (b) is it part of any CBC or government policy to institute additional censorship or does either have a policy to silence former and present employees?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

Mr. Tom Rusekski appeared before the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission on Tuesday, October 10, 1978. The proceedings of the CRTC of that date are a matter of public records. Mr. Rusekski is also suing the CBC in connection with his dismissal by the corporation. Until such time as the CRTC has concluded its deliberations on the representations made to it by him, and the legal action has been concluded, it would be improper for the CBC to comment on or discuss these matters.

Order Paper Questions

AIR SERVICE

Question No. 161—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is the government committed to allowing (a) Canadian Pacific Airlines (b) any other airline except Air Canada rights to servicing Saskatoon and Regina for domestic and/or international flights?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): (a) The government agreed in 1977 that CP Air be allowed to serve points in Saskatchewan on domestic flights, subject to licence authority being granted by the Canadian Transport Commission.

(b) Transair was granted licence authority to serve Saskatoon and Regina by the Canadian Transport Commission in April 1978. Norcanair has authority to serve Saskatoon-Regina-Minot, North Dakota. (Air Canada is designated to serve Regina/Winnipeg-Chicago.)

MR. LESLIE JAMES BENNETT

Question No. 177—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 772 of the Third Session of the 30th Parliament, on the subject of Leslie James Bennett, formerly Assistant Officer in Charge of Counter Espionage for the RCMP, which stated in part: "Prior to his retirement to medical pension, Mr. Bennett was questioned by the RCMP in line with the normal concerns by all Western Intelligence Services in accepting the possibility of high level penetration by Soviet Intelligence Services", what are all the reasons in the case of Mr. Bennett that the government considered such a thing a "possibility"?

2. What are the names of all other senior RCMP personnel in the past five years who have retired from the RCMP and have been similarly questioned or debriefed and what is the total number of such persons?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1 and 2. The original reply is self explanatory and no explanation is to be made.

MALARIA

Question No. 218—Mr. Jones:

1. How many cases of malaria have been recorded in Canada each year since 1972? Have any deaths occurred from these cases?

2. In how many cases where malaria was diagnosed was the party a recent immigrant (within two years) to Canada?

3. Does diagnosis of this disease require notification of public health officials? Is the patient quarantined? What efforts are made to restrict the disease to the first diagnosed individual?

4. Are individuals such as hospital workers, laboratory technicians and transportation employees immunized against malaria? Is this immunization done on a regular schedule?

5. Are there any environmental factors which have an influence on the spread of malaria? What efforts are being made to correct these environmental factors in order to limit the outbreaks of malaria? Is there any research currently being conducted on malaria and its causes?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned:

1. The number of cases of malaria reported in Canada since 1972 has been as follows:

1972, 7
1973, 25
1974, 24
1975, 52
1976, 91
1977, 96
1978, 143 (to October 7).

One death was reported in Ontario due to malaria in 1971.

2. The exact number of malaria cases occurring among recent immigrants is not known. Recent information provided by the Quebec ministry of social affairs indicates that 7 of the 13 cases reported in 1977 in Quebec were immigrants. The remainder were Canadians who acquired the infection while travelling in tropical countries.

3. Notification of selected communicable diseases is a requirement under provincial health regulations and malaria is included. No quarantine measures are necessary since the disease is not spread directly from person to person. Species of mosquito necessary for transmission do not naturally occur in Canada.

4. No vaccine exists for protection against malaria although current research gives hope that one may be developed in the near future. However, effective drugs are available for both prevention and treatment. Travellers proceeding to malarious areas of the world should start prophylactic drugs two weeks before departure and continue until six weeks have elapsed after returning to Canada.

5. Malaria is found mainly in tropical and sub-tropical countries and environmental factors are extremely important in the maintenance of this disease. Malaria is transmitted by certain species of mosquito hence moist, warm, climates are necessary for propagation of the insect vectors.

Efforts to maintain residual pesticide spraying to kill adult and larval stages of the mosquito are supported by the World Health Organization. A new program by WHO has recently been launched which will direct additional resources toward research on all aspects of control.

HUMAN QUARANTINE INSPECTION

Question No. 219—Mr. Jones:

1. Is human quarantine inspection a federal or provincial responsibility? Under whose departmental jurisdiction does quarantine fall?

2. What are the diseases which are subject to quarantine? How long are quarantine periods for each disease?

3. Are all travellers to Canada, regardless of their country of origin, subject to health standards and if not, what countries are exempt? What provisions have been made to insure that travellers from countries not subject to health inspections do not import contagious and/or communicable diseases into Canada?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned:

1. Human quarantine inspection, when applied at a port of entry, is a federal responsibility.

The Quarantine Act R.S., c. 33 (1st Supp.) empowers a federal quarantine officer to board and inspect any conveyance arriving in Canada from a place outside Canada.

The collector of customs at any harbour, airport or port of entry into Canada at which a quarantine station has not been established may exercise the detention powers of a quarantine officer until opportunity has been afforded to arrange for examination of a person or persons by a quarantine officer.

The federal quarantine activity is administered by medical services branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

2. Diseases subject to federal quarantine control are: i. Those named in the schedule to the Quarantine Act, viz. cholera; plague; smallpox; yellow fever; ii. Unspecified contagious diseases of epidemic propensity, the introduction of which into Canada would, in the opinion of the quarantine officer, constitute a grave danger to public health in Canada.

The quarantine (incubation) periods established for the purposes of the International Health Regulations for each disease are: cholera, five days; plague, six days; smallpox, 14 days; yellow fever, six days.

Incubation periods formerly established under the International Sanitary Regulations (the forerunner of the International Health Regulations) for the following pestilential diseases are: louse-borne typhus, 14 days; louse-borne relapsing fever; eight days.

For administrative purposes, the following incubation period for certain viral haemorrhagic fevers appears to find international acceptance: Lassa fever, 21 days; Marburg virus disease, 21 days.

3. All persons arriving in Canada from a place outside Canada, irrespective of origination or diplomatic status, are subject to quarantine health standards.

A requirement by Canada for health inspection of all prospective travellers at foreign departure points would be unenforceable. Any such requirement would be in contravention of article 88 of the International Health Regulations which provide that no health certificate may be required from persons on an international voyage. Provision of health documentation in the case of immigrants or those intending to reside in Canada for a protracted period (such as students) is to be viewed as a condition of the granting of a visa, rather than permissible as a required travel document on arrival.

Article 31 of the International Health Regulations stipulates that the health authority for a port or an airport or for the area in which a frontier post is situated shall take all practicable measures to prevent the departure of any infected person or suspect. The regulatory vehicle for this international co-operation in health protection dates back to 1851 and since 1969 has appeared in the form of International Health Regulations, developed and amended from time to time in response to changing circumstances by the World Health Assembly of the World Health Organization.

Almost all countries of the world are signatories to the International Health Regulations; those few that are not bound, e.g. Australia, South Africa, Singapore, in practice have consistently acted in the spirit of international co-operation set out in article 31.

Order Paper Questions

BANK OF CANADA

Question No. 233—Mr. Howie:

For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1978, what amount was spent on interior landscaping by the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): In so far as the Minister of Finance is concerned: I am informed by the Bank of Canada as follows: $7,637.00.

MR. ROBERT REMPEL

Question No. 244—Mr. Epp:

Was Mr. Robert Rempel appointed to a government position and, if so, what is (a) his annual salary (b) the job description of his position?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): In so far as the Public Service is concerned: no.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SECURITY SERVICE

Question No. 287—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has it become the policy of the government or is it under consideration by the government, to establish a security service to be operated completely separate from the RCMP and, if so, what are all the reasons for such a decision or possible consideration?

2. Does the government plan to expand the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group and, if so, for what reason?

3. Is it government policy that a security service separate from the RCMP would be under stronger political control than the present security service and, if so, what are all the reasons that the government is thinking in such a direction?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): 1 and 3. The McDonald commission of inquiry has been asked to look into these questions.

2. The capability to formulate police and security policy will be increased by three person years. These person years are being found within the secretariat of the Ministry of the Solicitor General.

BROCKVILLE AQUATIC CLUB

Question No. 296—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Prime Minister or the government aware that the Brockville Aquatic Club is seeking federal funds for the purpose of constructing a swimming pool?

2. Is the government aware that the Brockville Aquatic Club has presently no such facility and must travel to the nearest pool which is located in Ogdensburg, U.S.A?

3. Will the Prime Minister and the government adopt a policy of releasing the names and addresses of all donors to the swimming pool at the Prime Minister's official residence, 24 Sussex Drive, Ottawa and, if so, specifically will a copy of such a list be sent to the Brockville Aquatic Club for possible solicitations?

4. Is the Prime Minister and the government presently considering a policy of making the swimming pool at the Prime Minister's official residence, 24 Sussex Drive, Ottawa, available for use by such groups as the Brockville Aquatic Club when not otherwise occupied?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and the Prime Minister's office as follows:

Order Paper Questions

1. The Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch has no record of any request for financial assistance from the Brockville Aquatic Club.

2. There is no provision in the branch program for the construction of local sport facilities of this nature. Municipal and regional levels of government are normally responsible for determining and meeting local facility requirements.

3 and 4. See reply to question No. 1,233 of the first session of the thirtieth parliament, Hansard No. 193, page 8611, dated October 28, 1975.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 344—Mr. Bawden:

1. What is the average number of credit notes that the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation (a) issues (b) refuses to issue, in a year?

2. What has happened to files established by the Marketing and Sales Group of the Corporation identifying the number of complaints from customers?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. (a) and (b) Our records are not kept in such a manner as to provide this information.

2. As per Public Archives' recommendations in their study of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation's filing system, central registry is responsible for opening and retaining files. All head office divisions including the marketing and sales group forward all files and documentation to the central registry for retention and eventual disposal according to the disposal schedule of the Government of Canada.

Question No. 349—Mr. Bawden:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,331 of the Third Session of the 30th Parliament, for what reason was the merchandise sold to Sedburgh School on March 17, 1977 not inspected by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation prior to the sale, since the Corporation's manual requires such inspection?

2. On what date was a refund made to Sedburgh School for the missing diesel engine?

3. If the Corporation was not advised by the purchaser, that upon collection the diesel engine was missing, for what reason was the refund made?

4. Was the refund made in April 1977 when it was authorized in writing by the Corporation in that month and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. According to a Crown Assets Disposal Corporation procedure, inspection of surplus materials prior to offering for sales is not mandatory.

2. Refund approved and cheque issued on February 28, 1978.

3. Material was left with custodian department for pick up by Sedburgh school; however, they refused to accept material due to its condition. A written complaint was received by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, from Sedburgh school, in October 1977.

4. Preliminary verbal discussions had taken place between Sedburgh school and our sale's division and upon official receipt of the complaint in October, 1977, an investigation was conducted by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation with the custodian department, and as a result the refund was approved.

METHYLMERCURY

Question No. 384—Mr. Epp:

1. Were persons from the Pauingassi Indian Reserve tested for methylmercury and, if so, how many and on what dates?

2. Was testing done on persons living on the Reserve prior to 1977 and, if so, what were the results in (a) 1970 (b) 1971 (c) 1972 (d) 1973 (e) 1974 (f) 1975 (g) 1976?

3. Has action been taken on behalf of the persons who have been living with unacceptable levels and, if so, in what way?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned:

1. Yes.

Thirteen individuals have been tested on more than one occasion.

2. (a) No testing.
(b) No testing.
(c) No testing.
(d) No testing.
(e) A total of 19 tests were performed in 1974, the results are as follows:

1— 6 ppb Mercury in blood	3— 40 ppb Mercury in blood
1—10 ppb Mercury in blood	1— 42 ppb Mercury in blood
1—14 ppb Mercury in blood	1— 45 ppb Mercury in blood
1—22 ppb Mercury in blood	1— 48 ppb Mercury in blood
1—24 ppb Mercury in blood	2— 50 ppb Mercury in blood
1—35 ppb Mercury in blood	1— 57 ppb Mercury in blood
1—36 ppb Mercury in blood	1—123 ppb Mercury in blood
1—37 ppb Mercury in blood	1—151 ppb Mercury in blood

(f) No testing.
(g) A total of 27 tests were performed in 1976, the results are as follows:

2— 5 ppb Mercury in blood	1— 31 ppb Mercury in blood

1—29 ppb Mercury in blood	2—132 ppb Mercury in blood
1—30 ppb Mercury in blood	1—161 ppb Mercury in blood

(* ppb—parts per billion)

3. In accordance with the standard policy of medical services branch of National Health and Welfare, discussions have been held with individuals having levels in the 20-99 parts per billion (ppb) range and those with "at risk" levels (see below) in order that advice might be given regarding modification of intake of the food source containing mercury (in this case, fish).

The two individuals found to be in the "at risk" group (i.e. blood mercury levels greater than 100 ppb) have been advised to undergo a complete clinical examination. One person has been examined on two occasions. The other individual has refused to be examined.

Order Paper Questions

Follow-up tests for mercury levels have been performed on individuals who have had high levels.

GOVERNMENT EXPENSES

Question No. 393—Mr. Herbert:

What was the total of all government expenses as a percentage of the gross national product for the years 1975-76, 1976-77, 1977-78 and, what are the estimated percentages for 1978-79 and 1979-80?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance):

	Actual			Forecast[1]
	1975-76	1976-77	1977-78	1978-79	1979-80
	(per cent of GNP)[2]
Public Accounts Basis
Federal Government Total Outlays[3]	21.7	21.0	20.5	20.3	19.9

[1] Consistent with the Minister of Finance's budget speech dated November 16, 1978.

[2] Calculations are based on the corresponding fiscal year gross national product figures.

[3] The federal government sets its spending ceiling in terms of total outlays. Total outlays is the sum of budgetary expenditures and loans, investment and advances. Savings of approximately $700 million in 1977-78 budgetary expenditure resulted from the partial replacement of cash transfers to provinces by the transfer of additional tax points under the established programs financing arrangement. Adjustment for this change would increase the 1977-78 total outlays/GNP ratios to 20.8 per cent.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 398—Mr. Bawden:

1. How many persons were employed by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation since January 1, 1978?

2. How many have left the employ of the Corporation since January 1, 1978?

3. What is considered to be an acceptable level of employee turnover?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1 and 2. Since January 1, 1978, 32 employees have left the corporation and 32 were hired.

3. An acceptable level of employee turn-over is whatever is considered to be necessary for the most efficient operation of the corporation.

Question No. 399—Mr. Bawden:

1. Does the Surplus Crown Assets Act state that revenue from sales of surplus Crown assets should be deposited to the credit of the Receiver General?

2. Were funds received for the reissue of furniture refinished by the Refinishing Branch of the Department of Supply and Services, amounting to $286,800 in 1966-67, remitted to the Supply Revolving Fund rather than deposited to the credit of the Receiver General and, if so, under what authority?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. No.

2. Funds received for the reissue of refinished furniture are credited to the supply revolving fund to offset related expenses, such as the cost of collecting, receiving, documenting and warehousing surplus furniture, as well as the cost of refinishing, reissuing and delivering furniture, which meets an acceptable standard.

The Crown Assets Disposal Corporation "sells" acceptable furniture to the supply revolving fund at zero value. After absorbing the costs referred to above, any profits exceeding the limitation on the supply revolving fund retained earnings are remitted to the Receiver General, Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Question No. 400—Mr. Bawden:

1. Does the Procedure Manual of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation state that all merchandise must be inspected and valued prior to sale?

2. Is all merchandise sold by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation inspected and valued prior to sale and, if not, what is the percentage per annum of goods sold and not handled in this manner?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. No.

2. (a) No.

(b) Approximately 50 per cent.

UIC BENEFITS—LAVAL

Question No. 407—Mr. Roy (Laval):

During the past five years, did the City of Laval's Manpower Centre pay unemployment insurance benefits and, if so (a) to how many persons (b) in what amount annually?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The city of Laval's Canada Employment Centre which consists of the old Unemployment Insurance Centre and the Canada Manpower Centre, paid the following unemployment insurance benefits:

	Claims	Benefits Paid ($ Millions)
1973	18,360	13.9
1974	20,147	16.8
1975	22,845	23.4
1976	25,067	29.6
1977	27,102	39.8

The response provided was calculated on a calendar year basis.

WEATHER SHIPS

Question No. 425—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Is it the government's intention to retire the two weather ships collectively known as Ocean Station Papa and, if so, on what date?

2. What is the undepreciated and depreciated value of the ships, and what will the government do with them once they have been retired?

3. (a) How old are the ships (b) what is their scrap value (c) what is the estimated price that they could be sold "as is" (d) will they be put up for public auction?

4. What is the annual operating cost of the two ships on the west coast?

5. (a) What is the value of the research that has been conducted in order to develop the satellite sounding systems which are to be substituted for the weather ships (b) what is the cost of the research to be done?

6. What will be the capital cost of the satellite sounding system once it is completely installed and operational?

7. What will be the annual operating cost of the satellite sounding system?

8. On what date will the satellite sounding system become completely operational?

9. (a) Is the satellite sounding system a proto-type system (b) are there systems of similar function elsewhere in North America and, if so (i) where are they located (ii) how do they vary from the system to be installed on the west coast?

10. On what date was the satellite sounding system project originally undertaken and what was the anticipated cost of the research and of the actual system at that time?

11. (a) How many persons are employed in the operation of the weather ships and ancillary functions (b) how many will be employed in the operation of the satellite sounding system once it is in place and fully operational?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Environment Canada and Transport Canada as follows:

1. Yes. Present plans call for complete termination of the Papa weather ship program in the summer of 1981. That date is contingent on the availability of data from other sources to assure the adequacy of weather services to the citizens of British Columbia.

2. Undepreciated value for the two vessels: $17,122,461 (book value as of March 31, 1978).

Depreciated value for the two vessels: $10,477,822 (depreciation to March 31, 1978).

There has been no decision made regarding the role of the vessels after withdrawal from the ocean weather station Papa. Possible roles in the fields of ocean research and mapping, training, offshore surveillance and search and rescue will be considered.

3. (a) 9 years old.

(b) Scrap value, estimated for the two vessels: $350,000.

(c) The price at which the vessels could be sold "as is" would be based on market demand for vessels of the weather ships type at that time. This price would only be known when bids for the vessels are received. The price should vary directly with the market demand and may be equal to scrap value if there are no roles for the vessels.

(d) If the vessels are to be disposed of, they would be turned over to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation which would offer them for public sale in compliance with the Surplus Crown Assets Act.

4. Fiscal year 1977-78—$3,974,001.

5. For part 5, it is assumed that "satellite sounding systems" is not restricted to "sounding". A number of satellite-borne systems will function as some of the alternate sources of weather data; visible and infra-red imagery, imagery from microwave sensors, and a variety of other systems including one for atmospheric sounding will make significant contributions to the data that will be available. United States figures are quoted since Canada benefits directly from U.S. work.

(a) Since 1967, it is estimated that the United States has funded the meteorological satellite program to approximately 1.25 billion dollars, over 40 per cent through civilian channels (National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration). Almost 60 per cent of the total was devoted to operations, and the balance to research and development.

In Canada since 1963, 5 million dollars have been spent by the AES on meteorological satellite programs, about 40 per cent on research and development, and 60 per cent on operations.

On the sounding program specifically, it is estimated that about 20 per cent of the total U.S. expenditure is directly related, while in Canada, less than $90,000 can be so identified.

(b) Canadian research remaining will be small since we benefit directly from the U.S. work. Once the Tiros Operational Vertical Sounder (TOVS) now carried on the TIROS-N Satellite has been proven, Canadian research should total about $500,000 spread over several years.

6. Capital spending within Canada to utilize the sounding data will not exceed $500,000. This amount will provide the readout capability at three locations to assure adequate coverage for all of Canada.

7. The annual operating cost of the satellite sounding system will be about $250,000, including continuing research and development, after implementation. This will provide coverage for all of Canada.

8. The sounding system will be operational by 1981, with its potential increasing through the 1980s with follow-on systems on new satellites.

9. (a) No.

(b) Yes.

(i) In Washington, D.C. and Madison, Wisconsin (also in Sydney, Australia); research systems are in operation at a number of NASA sites in the U.S. as well as in the United Kingdom, France and other European countries.

(ii) The systems noted above are used to support large-scale global or hemispheric forecasts. The Canadian system will support such activities in this country to supplement similar data received from the U.S., but will also support regional forecasts.

10. Work in the United States began in the late 1960s. In Canada, no work has been undertaken to date other than keeping informed of developments in the U.S. Present plans call for a research, acquisition and operational program totalling $1.25 million for the TIROS-N satellite system over the life of that satellite. Further projections cannot be made until the nature of follow-on systems becomes known.

11. (a) One hundred sixty-four officers and unlicensed personnel.

(b) Across Canada, a small portion of the time of each of 15 persons (five at each of three locations) will be devoted to the reception and processing of the data, plus a few for equipment maintenance. The data will be used, along with other forms of data, by many meteorologists and support staff across the country.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 433—Mr. Bawden:

1. Was a study conducted on behalf of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation by an outside consultant in November or December 1977?

2. Was the purpose of employing an outside consultant to conduct an in-depth attitude survey of employees of the Corporation and, if so, for what reason was such a survey considered necessary?

3. What was the cost of the survey?

4. Were employees promised that, in the interests of improved communications, they would be advised of the results of such a survey?

5. Were the Corporation's employees subsequently advised of the results and, if not, for what reason?

6. Was the report of the consultant in any way critical of the Corporation and, if so, what were the criticisms?

7. Will the report of the survey be made public and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, on what date?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. To serve as the basis for the preparation by the president and consultants of a well defined action plan, in order to better satisfy the needs of the employees and the corporation.

3. $15,000.

4. No.

5. No. See No. 7.

6. See No. 7.

7. No. (a) The confidentiality of the report dictates that it not be produced or disclosed, in accordance with the general principle dated February 16, 1973, enunciated in appendix "B" to the House of Commons debates, March 15, 1973, at page 2288. But the minister has extended an invitation to the hon. member to meet with the president of the corporation to discuss the internal management questions.

NATIVE EDUCATION

Question No. 444—Mr. Firth:

What are the current departmental policy guidelines with regard to native education with special reference to E-12?

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Departmental policy guidelines cover the statutory requirements to provide elementary and secondary level education services to Indian children whose parents are residents on reserves or Crown lands, and the provision of a discretionary program of assistance to students in continuing education programs, including those at post-secondary institutions.

The E-12 program specifically covers the provision of post-secondary student assistance. It contains the following provisions:

(a) registered Indian and Inuit students who are accepted by accredited universities, colleges, etc., are covered by the program;

(b) students may be assisted to a limit of 96 student months, covering Bachelors, Masters and Doctoral studies;

(c) allowances given under the program may cover cost of fees, books, lodgings for self and dependents, additional "shelter allowance" under special circumstances, training (personal) allowances which follow the Manpower rate structures, clothing allowance where need is established, special clothing allowance if nature of course demands this, allowance for special tutorial assistance, and allowances to cover special services (e.g. child-care) or contingencies;

(d) additional incentive benefits are provided to students in masters or doctoral programs;

(e) students must be resident in Canada at time of application for assistance, and should have gained admittance to a Canadian university or college, unless the desired program is not being offered in this country. If programs are to be taken in the U.S., qualifications received should be acceptable within the Canadian professional context;

(f) students must demonstrate a willingness to meet the academic and financial management responsibilities of the program in order to continue to receive such assistance;

(g) the program can be administered either by departmental counselling staff or, where this is requested, by band counsellors working under the direction of band administrative officers or a band school committee;

(h) if a student feels that the program is not being properly applied to his/her case, there shall be access to an appeal board, consisting of an educational representative from the student's band (or a native student body representative, if away from home), a designate of the regional director-general, and a representative from the educational institution involved. Decisions of the appeal board shall be consistent with the program policy, and shall be final and binding.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 465—Mr. Bawden:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,336, Part 4, and the answer to Question No. 1,861, Part 5, of the Third Session of the 30th Parliament, do the answers conflict and, if so, how many employees have been promoted from within the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation during the period 1973-1977?

2. Were 62 employees from outside the Public Service hired in the head office of the Corporation during the period 1973-1977?

3. If only three employees were promoted from within the Corporation during the period 1973-1977 and 62 were hired from outside the Public Service during the same period, for what reason have the policies and practices of the Corporation's administration not produced a better result in the degree of internal promotion?

4. Is there an on-the-job improvement training scheme in operation for employees of the Corporation and, if so, how many employees have used such a scheme?

5. Would not a higher percentage of internal promotion in relation to the number of employees hired from outside the Public Service make a contribution to employee attitudes and morale within the Corporation?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. No.

2. Yes.

3. The corporation has followed its policy on internal promotion as set out in its collective agreement.

4. No.

5. The corporation could only speculate on the suggestion contained in the questions as no studies of this nature are available.

QUEBEC SMALL FARM DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 473—Mr. Wise:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,793 of the Third Session of the 30th Parliament in which it was stated, that $15,890.79 was given by the Department of Agriculture to Laval University to "study the impact of the small farm development program in the province of Quebec", what were the results of the study?

2. Was the impact of the small farm development program studied in other provinces and (a) if so (i) who conducted them (ii) on what date did they occur (iii) what was their cost (b) if not, for what reason?

3. Does the Department have to go outside to study the impact of its programs and, if so (a) for what reason (b) is its personnel not capable of doing their own impact studies?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. This study surveyed 97 farmers who had received amalgamations vendor assistance grants and 113 purchasers of farms from vendors who had received assistance. It was found that both vendors and purchasers were generally well satisfied with the transactions and adjustments which the program facilitated. The study also found that while medium-to-large scale farmers who purchased small farms were able to integrate and develop the acreage acquired very quickly, smaller farmers needed proper counselling to ensure effective management of the additional land and the associated investment. Special credit for purchasers was found to be of marginal usefulness in Quebec, but the option for vendors to keep their houses was found to be a useful and advantageous feature.

2. A report is currently being written on an interim impact assessment of the Small Farm Development Program in the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

(a) (i) This assessment is being carried out by Dr. R. St. Louis of Quebec City. (ii) Field surveys were carried out during March and April of 1977. (iii) Estimated cost of the study is $110,000.

3. (a) and (b) Agriculture Canada personnel are capable of carrying impact studies, but circumstances warranted the use of outside expertise for the following reasons:

(i) The staff time required to carry out this study was not available within the department, and

(ii) An outside assessment was desired to bring fresh insights and to ensure that the assessment was detached and free from any vested interest.

Order Paper Questions

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 475—Mr. Bawden:

1. Does the Surplus Crown Assets Act state that all surplus items in departments must be reported to the Minister of Supply and Services and, if so, do the departments comply with this and, if not, for what reason?

2. Was Mr. Clair Adams hired by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation as Vice-President Procurement and, if so, what are his duties?

3. Is Mr. Adams a retired public servant?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. No. Section 3(2) of the act identifies the property which need not be included in a report to the minister.

2. Clair Adams is the vice-president of supply. The officer has as key responsibility the development of mechanisms and channels of communication which will permit the introduction of responsive and effective operational strategies. In addition, the officer will act as an adviser for the president on matters of policy, development, performance measurement and evaluation.

3. Yes.

RESEARCH—YORK UNIVERSITY

Question No. 477—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Did the government provide funds to the Institute of Behavioural Research, Survey Research Centre, York University, Toronto, to conduct a survey across Canada which concerns problems of Canadians living in and around urban centres and, if so (a) in what amount (b) for what purpose is the research to be used (c) on what dates will the data from the survey be provided to the government?

2. Are persons interviewed being advised that such research is being funded by the government and will the results of the survey be made public upon completion?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. (a) The ministry contracted with the Institute for Behavioural Research, York University, Toronto, to conduct a survey of urban priorities of Canadians living in the major metropolitan centres. The contract is not to exceed the amount of $576,588.

(b) The survey will provide a systematic profile of public priorities and an up-to-date picture of variations within Canadian cities which will allow the ministry and other federal agencies to direct federal government urban-related program and policy efforts to areas of greatest need, thus allowing for more effective and efficient use of federal resources.

(c) The date is expected to be available in April, 1979.

2. (a) Interviewers were instructed that if persons to be interviewed ask who is sponsoring the research, they be told that the study is funded by the federal government.

(b) The results of the survey will be made public. The ministry intends to make the results available to provinces and officials in those municipalities in which interviews were conducted. By means of a published report, the results of the survey will be available to a wide range of professionals and interested members of the public.

NATIONAL FISH AND SEAFOOD MONTH

Question No. 515—Mr. Wenman:

1. What amount was set aside for the research, development and promotion of National Fish and Seafood Month, sponsored by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans?

2. (a) How many recipe pamphlets will the government sponsor (b) to whom are these pamphlets to be distributed and what is the method of distribution (c) what other promotional materials are involved and what is the method of distribution, if different from that for the recipe pamphlets (d) what is the cost breakdown for the production and distribution of the promotional materials?

3. (a) Were all of the research, development and promotion aspects of this programme carried out within the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans or were consultants used (b) if consultants were used, what responsibilities were assigned to them and what was the remuneration and their name?

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1. Approximately $400,000 was the cost estimate for the November Fish and Seafood promotion campaign.

2. (a) It is estimated that about 150,000 recipe booklets will be requested during the year as a result of the promotion.

(b) To consumers, food editors and dieticians by mail and handouts.

(c) Other promotional material includes: 30 second TV commercials, magazine and newspaper ads and in-store promotion material for the food retail trade, produced and distributed by an advertising agency.

(d) The production and distribution cost breakdown is estimated as follows: TV $57,600; magazines $25,200; newspapers $21,600; printed material $15,600.

[Mr. Ouellet.]

3. (a) The promotion aspects of the programme were carried out partly by Fisheries and Oceans and partly by an advertising agency.

(b) The following responsibilities were assigned to the Wilshar Advertising Agency Limited of Halifax, Nova Scotia: to create, produce and execute a national bilingual electronic and printed media programme to promote the designation of November as National Fish and Seafood Month.

About three-quarters of the total advertising budget of $320,000 is spent for purchasing advertising space and time. Wilshar's remuneration is the balance of this budget for developing the campaign, production costs and implementation plus a standard 15 per cent commission from the news media for the placement of the advertisement.

AIR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Question No. 518—Mr. Mazankowski:

Does the Department of Transport have a policy regarding the level of service provided to handicapped travellers at Canadian airport terminal buildings and (a) if so, what is the policy (b) if not, on what date will such a policy be developed?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Yes. Transport Canada has had a policy in effect since late 1974 entitled "Facilities For The Handicapped At Air Terminal Complexes."

(a) The policy states, in general, that provision shall be made at air terminal complexes during design for new or modified facilities to ensure that appropriate access to and use of normal public facilities are provided for the handicapped.

(b) Not applicable.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 519—Mr. Bawden:

In (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975 (d) 1976 (e) 1977, what was the percentage relation between amounts recovered by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation from the sale of surplus assets and the Corporation's administration costs?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services):

(a) 7.7 per cent;

(b) 7.7 per cent;

(c) 10.3 per cent;

(d) 15 per cent;

(e) 11.4 per cent.

Note: For the years 1973, 1974 and 1975 the sale of lands was included, thus affecting the percentage required for the administration.

MR. W. O. MORRISON

Question No. 524—Mr. Malone:

Was any person named W. O. Morrison hired in any capacity to work for the government or as a personal staff member to any Cabinet Minister and, if so (a) with what agency, department or Cabinet Minister (b) what is his job description (c) where is his office located (d) on what date did he commence employment (e) what is his annual salary (f) what are the criteria which determine his allowable travel expenses (g) what is to be the length of his employment (h) under which vote in the Estimates (i) is his salary drawn (ii) are his travel and operational expenses drawn?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: Yes.

(a) The hon. Jack Horner;

(b) Special assistant to the minister;

(c) Office of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce;

(d) March 20, 1978;

(e) Up to $24,850;

(f) Treasury Board travel directive;

(g) At direction of minister;

(h) (i) and (ii) Vote 1A, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

Question No. 541—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence issue a press release on December 3, 1976, saying inter alia "... the measures to improve Search and Rescue facilities will cost approximately $8 million initially; and, with full implementation in two to three years, could cost as much as $40 million" and, if so, what amount of the $40 million has been spent and for what major items?

2. How much was spent on each coast?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. The total program for both coasts will cost $36.94 million, which includes $1.58 million for construction at Gander, Newfoundland.

The program is divided into two phases.

Phase I will provide improved navigation and radio aids and the addition of Night Sun Searchlight to helicopters at a cost of $8.63 million.

Phase II will provide extended range, an improved rescue hoist and an improved night/adverse weather capability at a cost of $26.73 million.

Phase I will be completed in January, 1979 and Phase II will then commence with completion targeted for late 1982.

2. Due to the interrelationship of phase I and phase II and the requirement to rotate helicopters through each phase, actual funds spent at each coast are difficult to delineate. However, when the program is completed funds spent will total as follows:

East coast (including $1.58 million for construction at Gander)	$20.86 million
West coast	$12.86 million

In addition $3.22 million will be spent on improved helicopter capabilities which will be shared by both coasts.

(a) and (b) Not applicable.

AVGP EQUIPMENT

Question No. 546—Mr. McKinnon:

Are any (a) regular (b) militia units going to receive the new AVGP and, if so (i) which units (ii) in each case, on what date and how many of each AVGP variant?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b) Yes.

(a) (i) and (ii) For planned distribution to regular units see table below.

(b) (i) and (ii) For planned distribution to the militia on the basis of region, see table below.

In addition a number of AVGPs are being distributed to training and test establishments. See table below.

Note: The three variants of AVGPs are as follows:
Wheeled armoured personnel carrier (WAPC)—Grizzly
Wheeled fire support vehicle (WFSV)—Cougar Wheeled maintenance and recovery vehicle (WMRV)—Husky

CANADA COUNCIL GRANTS

Question No. 551—Mr. Jones:

1. What was the purpose of the special $50,000 grant of "unity money" administered by the Touring Office of the Canada Council to twenty modern dance companies? What groups received this money and what were the respective portion for each?

2. What was the basis used to determine the eligibility for this "unity money" by various groups?

3. Will these grants be given again in 1979? From what governmental department was this money made available? Will the same department put up this amount or more for 1979?

4. Will grants of this type be available to other artistic groups so that they might find sponsors?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows:

1. Grants towards travel and per diem costs, in support of participation in the Toronto Dance Festival (September 19-October 22, 1978) and in the Montreal 'Octobre en Danse' festival (October 11-21, 1978), were awared to the companies and individuals listed below. The Council originally envisaged grants to about 20 applicants at a cost not exceeding $50,000; in the event, 18 grants totalling $48,556 were made.

Company	Grant $	Festival
Ballets Jazz, Montreal	4,183	Toronto
Contemporary Dancers, Winnipeg	9,009	Toronto and Montreal
Entre-Six, Montreal	1,640	Toronto
Fulcrum, Vancouver	1,560	Toronto

Royal Winnipeg Ballet, Winnipeg	5,272	Toronto and Montreal
Theatre Beyond Words, Niagara-on-the-Lake	1,230	Montreal
Toronto Dance Theatre, Toronto	3,278	Montreal

2. Canadian professional companies or individuals are considered eligible for travel funding for this purpose if they:

(a) apply, proposing realistic travel plans;

(b) are invited by the organizers of the festival;

(c) meet high standards in their particular dance form;

(d) come from another province, or from more than 250 miles from the festival;

(e) are not already receiving subsidy for a tour which includes the locale of the festival.

3. The funds were part of a government grant to the Canada Council approved by parliament. It is not yet known whether funds will be available to permit similar support in 1979.

4. Yes in principle, subject to the availability of funds and the eligibility requirements summarized in 2. above.

GRAIN HOPPER CARS

Question No. 555—Mr. Hare:

1. How many grain hopper cars were manufactured for the government and at what manufacturing locations?

2. What is the usage rate of the cars in comparison to the rate of usage of regular box cars?

3. On the basis of volume of cars and turnaround rate, what is the efficiency comparison of the hopper cars versus the box cars?

4. What are the future plans for construction of grain hopper cars?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows:

1. A total of 8000 hopper cars as follows:

	Hawker Siddeley	Marine Industries	National Steel
1972/73	700	500	800
1976/77	1400	1000	1600
1977/78	688	488	824
Total	2788	1988	3224

2. Government hopper car unloadings relative to the total car unloads has climbed from 8.6 per cent in 1974 to 30.1 per cent in 1977.

3. An average of 45.7 per cent more tonnage per car mile was carried in government hopper cars in 1977 than in railway-owned boxcars.

4. This matter is under active consideration.

NATIONAL ANTI-POVERTY ASSOCIATION

Question No. 558—Mr. Neil:

Does the Department of National Health and Welfare or any other department fund the National Anti-Poverty Association or any of its provincial branches and, if so, what was the extent of the funding since the formation of the organization?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: yes. The National Anti-Poverty Organization, since its incorporation in 1973, has received to date $577,273 in contributions and grants from the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Fiscal Year	Contributions	Sustaining Grant	Total

WATER REQUIREMENTS

Question No. 559—Mr. Laprise:

Did the government estimate hydraulic resources and water requirements with regard to consumption, irrigation, industrial uses and hydro-electric production for the next few years and was a report published and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by Environment Canada and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows:

Environment Canada conducts research and data collection programs on the quantity and quality of inland waters and publishes regular reports. Surveys of current water use in municipalities and large industries are also conducted and the results published. In conjunction with provincial government, forecasts of water use have been prepared for specific regions and the results used to develop water management plans. These planning studies have been published and can be obtained from the Editorial and Publications Division, Inland Waters Directorate, Environment Canada, 6 Floor, Place Vincent Massey, Hull, Quebec".

In so far as the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned:

Yes.

Power survey of the Kazan, Dubawnt, Thelon and Hanbury River Basins, N.W.T.—March, 1970.

Southern Great Slave Lake Region Power Potential—August, 1974.

EXPENDITURE ON FREIGHT

Question No. 562—Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

1. During the past year, what was the total expenditure of freight including the movement of personal effects from Canada to other countries by the Department of External Affairs and other departments and agencies processed through the Central Freight Service and Central Removal Service of the Department of Supply and Services, excluding shipments which were made from Canada to the United States?

2. What amount of this traffic was moved by air and how much was moved by Canadian carriers?

3. How much of the total traffic was handled by (a) Panalpina World Transport Ltd. (b) Elmac World Transport Ltd.?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Central Freight Service

The total value of the invoices processed by central freight service covering the movement of freight to other countries, excluding the United States, during the 12 month period ending September 30, 1978 was:

(a) External Affairs	$229,801.63
(b) Other Departments, agencies	416,360.71
	$646,162.34

Central Removal Service

The total expenditure by central removal service covering the movement of personal effects to other countries, excluding the United States, during the 12-month period ending September 30,1978, was:

(a) In the Department of External Affairs, nil.

(b) For other Departments and agencies, $9,182.66.

2. Central Freight Service

By air	$472,320.97
By Canadian carriers	$237,710.88

Central Removal Service

Of the $9,182.66 referred to in "1" covering central removal service, $7,080.78 was moved by air and $5,291.68 of this amount was moved by Canadian carriers.

3. Central Freight Service

The portion of the total traffic shown in "1" covering central freight service handled by (a) Panalpina was—$402,756.19 and (b) Elmac was—$30,625.73. The control of the routing of this traffic and consequently the choice of the supplier of this service rests with the customer departments.

Central Removal Service

None of the household goods traffic was handled by either (a) Panalpina World Transport Ltd. or (b) Elmac World Transport Ltd.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 577—Mr. McKinnon:

By rank, how many Canadian Armed Forces (a) officers (b) enlisted personnel are involved in (i) naval (ii) land (iii) air operations?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b)

(i) Naval operations cover the classification as listed in table below. The breakout by rank is as follows:

Officers		Other Ranks
Colonel	46	Chief Warrant Officer	148
Lieutenant-Colonel	125	Master Warrant Officer	422
Major	346	Warrant Officer	638
Captain	442	Sergeant	978

Second Lieutenant	69	Corporal/Private	4,389
Officer Cadet	292	Total	7,368
Total	1,656

(ii) Land operations cover only infantry, artillery and armour. Land operations combat support elements such as engineers, signals etc. are all part of unifield elements and to identify those portions which are in immediate support of land operations would entail a long and detailed analysis for which the department does not have the necessary resources. The following figures are for infantry artillery and armour personnel:

Officers		Other Ranks
Colonel	50	Chief Warrant Officer	81
Lieutenant-Colonel	135	Master Warrant Officer	208

HEALTH AND WELFARE—CIGARETTE ADVERTISEMENTS IN QUEBEC

Question No. 584—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Department of National Health and Welfare place warnings on cigarette advertisements in transportation systems in Quebec, specifically in the metro or in buses in Montreal and, if so (a) at what cost (b) were the warnings printed in the French language only and, if so, for what reason (c) does the government who advocates two official languages, consider itself bound by any Quebec legislation in regard to unilingual advertisements and, if so, for what reasons and on what grounds?

2. If such cigarette advertisements were placed by tobacco companies and not the government, what are all the reasons that the government does not insist that the warning regarding health and cigarettes be printed in the two official languages?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned:—

1. No. The Department of National Health and Welfare did not place warnings on cigarette advertisements in transportation systems in Quebec. (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable; (c) Not applicable.

2. Cigarette advertisements are placed by the tobacco companies in accordance with the requirements of province of Quebec language legislation.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—ADVERTISEMENT IN QUEBEC

Question No. 585—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the Department of Finance place advertisements for Canada Savings Bonds in transportation systems in Quebec, specifically in the metro or in buses in Montreal and, if so (a) at what cost (b) were the advertisements printed in the French language only and, if so, for what reason (c) does the government who advocates two official languages, consider itself bound by any Quebec legislation in regard to unilingual advertisements and, if so, for what reasons and on what grounds?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance):

(a) Yes, the Department of Finance did authorize Canada Savings Bond advertisements in transportation systems in Quebec and these advertisements were placed only in the metro and buses in Montreal. The total cost of these advertisements was $18,189.

(b) The advertisements were printed in the French language only, as has been the practice since this form of advertising was first used for CSBs in 1973. Each year the CSB advertising has incorporated a separate French and English campaign theme so as to better serve Canada's two major cultural groups. This has meant that some posters have to be designed in unilingual form but in most cases both French and English posters are displayed together. In the case of the metro and bus advertising in Montreal, the government's French advertising agency for CSBs recommended the use of French only posters to create greater awareness of CSBs in the very large Montreal French market so as to supplement advertising in daily newspapers. Advertisements in newspapers and in most financial institutions were in both French and English.

(c) The government in its Canada Savings Bonds advertising program does not consider itself bound by any Quebec legislation in regard to unilingual advertisements.

SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 624—Mr. Francis:

What would be the amount of money to the credit of the Superannuation Account in the years (a) 1990 (b) 2025, if no changes were made to the Public Service Superannuation Plan and using the same assumptions that the Tomenson-Alexander study used in making its projections, namely, an average retirement age of 61.5 years, an average rate of inflation of 6 per cent per year compounded, an average rate of salary increase of 8½ per cent per year compounded and an average rate of interest earnings of 8¼ per cent per year compounded?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): (a) $39,872,700,000; (b) $1,197,387,800,000.

WARHEADS—SPACE RESEARCH CORPORATION, QUEBEC

Question No. 635—Mr. McKinnon:

For what type of guided missile did the Department of National Defence order $86,061 worth of warheads from Space Research Corporation, Quebec and, how many warheads does this cover?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): The contract was for unfilled developmental warheads for the Canadian C-14 (CRV-7) 2.75 inch unguided rocket. The contract covers 300 warheads.

RESEARCH—ACOUSTIC ANALYSIS OF HUMAN SPEECH

Question No. 636—Mr. McKinnon:

Has a contract for $56,723 been awarded on behalf of DND to Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, for research on the development of acoustic analysis of human speech and, if so (a) what is the purpose of the research (b) will the results be made available to members of parliament?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) Yes. To carry out new investigations in the field of automatic speech recognition in order to fill gaps in our knowledge relating to the use of speech control systems by the Canadian Armed Forces. (b) Yes. Results will be available to members of parliament on request.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

DND—CONTRACT FOR TERRAIN EVALUATION

Question No. 637—Mr. McKinnon:

Was a contract for $63,396 awarded on behalf of DND to McGill University, Montreal, Quebec for terrain evaluation related to Canadian Forces vehicle mobility — phase II and, if so (a) what is the purpose of the study (b) which types of terrain are being evaluated (c) which vehicles are being evaluated?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) Yes. To analyse surface characteristics of representative northern Canadian terrains as a basis for trafficability maps, vehicle design specifications, mobility index and a data source for a computer model. (b) The Caribou Hills area of the MacKenzie River, North West Territories and Churchill, Manitoba. (c) The study does not include evaluation of vehicles.

FUNDING FOR NEW FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Question No. 640—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the NFA's request for proposals indicate to the competitors that funds available in 1977 dollars amounted to $5 million in 1978-79, $25 million in 1979-80, $80 million in 1981 and to no more than 15% of total contract value for each following year to 1986-87 and, if so, have there been any changes to this funding schedule and what are they?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. There have been no changes to the funding schedule provided to the competitors.

CONTRACT—AIRWEST AIRLINES LTD., RICHMOND, B.C.

Question No. 641—Mr. McKinnon:

Was Airwest Airlines Ltd., Richmond, British Columbia, awarded a contract of (a) $132,000 (b) $24,039 for air services class 7 (drop testing of sonobuoys) at Nanoose, B.C. and, if so, for what reason was this work contracted out?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. The reason this work was contracted out was that for such sonobuoy drop tests it is more economical to use a commercial aircraft than a complex, sophisticated and more costly to operate military aircraft.

AIRCRAFT—CF-101 VOODOO

Question No. 643—Mr. McKinnon:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 326, on what date will the technical publications be available?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): The first section will be available in August, 1979 and all sections will be available by March, 1980.

LOCKHEED AIRCRAFT CORPORATION

Question No. 644—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was Lockheed Aircraft Corporation paid the progress payment on the LRPA contract of (a) $9,959,000 due on October 31, 1977 (b) $10,518,000 due on November 30, 1977 (c) $11,408,000 due on December 31, 1977 (d) $13,596,000 due on January 31, 1978 (e) $14,587,000 due on February 28, 1978 (f) $7,034,000 due on March 31, 1978 (g) $21,340,000 due on April 30, 1978 (h) $10,899,000 due on May 31, 1978 (i) $11,121,000 due on June 30, 1978 (j) $11,189,000 due on July 31, 1978 (k) $11,620,000 due on August 31, 1978 (l)

$12,634,000 due on September 30, 1978 (m) $13,464,000 due on October 31, 1978?

2. Was Lockheed paid under the contract the (a) fifth Accomplishment Milestone Payment of $3,545,000 (b) sixth Accomplishment Milestone Payment of $7,076,000 (c) seventh Accomplishment Milestone Payment of $898,000 (d) eighth Accomplishment Milestone Payment of $915,000 (e) ninth Accomplishment Milestone Payment of $2,918,000?

3. Were any adjustments made to the LRPA contract price at the end of the third and fourth quarters of 1977 and the first, second and third quarters of 1978 in accordance with the formula and conditions set out in Articles 8.1, 8.2, 8.3 and 8.4 of the contract and, if so, what were they?

4. What is the estimated cost of the Comox Data Interpretation and Analysis Centre (a) in dollars (b) as a percentage of the cost of the Greenwood DIAC?

5. Have any modifications been made to the contract, including Progress and Accomplishment Milestone Payments Schedules, to accommodate the purchase of the Comox DIAC and, if so, what are they?

6. Is the purchase of the Comox DIAC being handled separately and, if so, in what manner?

7. With reference to the Greenwood DIAC, for what reason and in what way has it been re-configured?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services):

1. (a) Yes, but in the amount of $10,645,434

(b) Yes, but in the amount of $11,917,000

(c) Yes, but in the amount of $13,374,000

(d) Yes, but in the amount of $15,794,200

(e) Yes, but in the amount of $16,358,800

(f) Yes, but in the amount of $ 8,414,000

(g) Yes, but in the amount of $19,784,592

(h) Yes, but in the amount of $10,155,114

(i) Yes, but in the amount of $12,177,488

(j) Yes, but in the amount of $10,457,926

(k) Yes, but in the amount of $11,909,000

(l) Yes, but in the amount of $12,741,000

(m) Yes, but in the amount of $12,755,113

The reason for the difference between the amounts paid and the amounts specified in the contract is that the contract has been amended to add the Comox DIAC, to advance delivery of certain contract work including advance procurement of production assets to support the flight test program, to introduce some holdbacks in payments due to strike related delays and to reflect credits related to the economic price adjustment provisions of the contract.

2. (a) to (e) Yes.

3. Economic Price Adjustments as follows:

(a) 3rd quarter 1977—$429,498 U.S. reduction

(b) 4th quarter 1977—$1,284,886 U.S. reduction

(c) 1st quarter 1978—$1,200,074 U.S. reduction

(d) 2nd quarter 1978—$875,887 U.S. reduction

(e) 3rd quarter 1978—to be determined.

4. (a) $5.0M (U.S.)

(b) approx. 20 per cent; however the Comox DIAC possesses a reduced capability to the Greenwood DIAC.

5. Yes.—Revised Progress Payment Table as per Amendment No. 8, March 9, 1978.

6. The Comox DIAC was procured by amendment to the prime contract.

7. The configuration of the Greenwood DIAC was changed to reduce the requirement to rewrite computer software programs obtained from the U.S. Navy and apply the cost savings thus achieved to enable the procurement of a second DIAC with sufficient capability to meet the more limited operational needs for Comox. The changes incorporated in the Treenwood DIAC consisted primarily of substitution of certain sub-system equipment without any degradation in the over-all operational capability of the complete system.

Order Paper Questions

CAST COMBAT GROUP

Question No. 645—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Is the CAST combat group role assigned at the present time to the 5e Groupe-Brigade du Canada and, if so, what (a) manpower (b) equipment can the group contribute to AMF(L)?

2. Did the Minister of National Defence announce on October 31, 1978, that he wanted to base the CAST combat group role as much as possible on one formation, and did he also announce that effective September 1980, this role would be assigned to the Special Service Force and, if so, will the CAST combat group role rest solely with the SSF and, if not, which other units will also contribute to it?

3. When the role is assigned to the SSF, what (a) manpower (b) equipment will the group be able to contribute to AMF(L)?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) and (b) Yes. However, manpower and equipment for the AMF(L) battalion group is provided by the special service force.

2. Yes. The special service force will only be augmented by one battalion group from one Canadian brigade group.

3. All.

DND BUDGET

Question No. 646—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Of the $150 million cut in DND's budget announced on September 8, 1978, what amount will be cut in the fiscal year (a) 1978-79 (b) 1979-80?

2. What amount will come from the (a) operations and maintenance budget (b) capital budget?

3. What effect will the $150 million have on the base figures in Votes 1 and 10 which are used in calculating budget increases in accordance with the 1975 formula for increases?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) and (b) The $150 million reduction in the defence services budget will be made in fiscal year 1979-80.

2. (a) $102 million.

(b) $48 million—mostly in the capital construction program.

3. The reduction will be a one year decrease in spending authority and will not affect the base figures of vote 1 and vote 5 which will be used to calculate the next year's requirements in accordance with the 1975 formula. Vote 10 will not be affected by the reduction.

PROJECT SAMSON

Question No. 647—Mr. McKinnon:

Is Project SAMSON, originally scheduled for completion in mid-1976, now in (a) full (b) partial operation and if the latter, on what date will it be in full operation?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) No. (b) Yes. Early 1980.

[Mr. De Bané.]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): On November 1, 1978, there was a total of 8,777 persons who were registered for work at the Fredericton, New Brunswick Canada Employment Centre.

ON THE JOB TRAINING—FREDERICTON, N.B.

Question No. 727—Mr. Howie:

Since January 1, 1978, how many persons have benefited from on the job training under the manpower training programmes in Fredericton, New Brunswick?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): During the period January 1, 1978 to December 11, 1978, 815 persons commenced training under the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program in Fredericton, New Brunswick. All of this training involved on-the-job instruction.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 733—Mr. Bawden:

1. What is the present distribution of government publications to full depository libraries in Canada?

2. Does the Department of Supply and Services propose to reduce the number of full depository libraries in 1979 and, if so (a) by what number (b) what cities or areas will be affected?

3. What is the present distribution of government publications to selective depository libraries in Canada?

4. Does the Department propose to reduce the number of selective depository libraries in 1979 and, if so (a) by what number (b) what cities or areas will be affected?

5. Is it considered that such a reduction is justified in view of the fact that the public is student, consumer, business person, scientist, academic, etc.?

6. In what way is it contemplated that the public will be kept informed if drastic reductions are contemplated in the present service?

7. Is it considered that the above plans conform with the expressed intention of the government to introduce freedom of information legislation in this parliamentary session?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. There are currently 47 full depository libraries in Canada.

2. No. (a) and (b) Alternatives are being explored to achieve the reduction of $2 millions in the subsidy for free and subsidized distribution of government publications.

3. There are presently 1,453 institutions, groups or individuals designated as selective depository libraries in Canada.

4. No. (a) and (b) Alternatives are being explored to achieve the reduction of $2 millions in the subsidy for free and subsidized distribution of government publications.

5. The reduction in expenditures is justified as are all reductions in expenditures which affect many programs. However, we will assure that the alternative selected minimizes the impact this reduction may have on the public.

6. The depositories in Canada will continue to provide the service of disseminating information.

7. There is no intention to restrict availability of published material to the public. Publications emanating from federal departments and agencies will continue to be both distributed free of charge to depositories and will be made available for purchase across Canada.

*LAW REFORM COMMISSION—PROFESSIONAL AND SPECIAL SERVICES

Question No. 236—Mr. Woolliams

With reference to the item Professional and Special Services at page 13-32 of the 1978-79 Estimates for the Law Reform Commission of Canada (a) what specifically are the (i) Professional services (ii) Special services (b) to whom would the expenditure of $1,035,000 be paid (c) what necessitates an increase of $85,000 over the previous year for this purpose?

[English]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): (a) (i) Professional services covers the work in legal research and related disciplines and management expertise in operations and communications supplied to the commission. (ii) Special services includes translation, computer services, temporary office assistance, editorial service and service fees charged by Supply and Services Canada.

(b) The major part of the $1,035,000, about nine tenths, would be paid to consultants, most having qualifications in law with a few having special competence in medicine, ethics, sociology and psychology, and other expertise necessary to the research program. Of the remaining one tenth, about half would be paid for the services of professional translators and the rest to suppliers of miscellaneous services such as computing and temporary office assistance and to Supply and Services Canada.

(c) The increase of $85,000 (i.e., 9 per cent) over the previous year is made necessary because of cost increases.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BEATTY—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have taken the opportunity to look at the list of answers to questions on the order paper which was tabled today. On a number of occasions I have brought to the attention of the parliamentary secretary the fact that a number of questions of mine have been sitting on the order paper, some of them in one incarnation or another, since January 26, 1978. We are just coming up to a year now for two of them.

If the parliamentary secretary has any justification for his ineptitude in delaying his response to these questions, if he feels that to do so is too costly or if he feels it is too time consuming to do so, or if it is simply that he feels incapable of doing his job and getting the officials in the various departments to supply him with the information, or if he can otherwise justify my doing so, I will withdraw those questions that I have on the order paper. I would like his guidance on this matter.

I would point out to the parliamentary secretary that the House has now waited a further month since Christmas yet not a single response has been made to these questions, many of which have been on the order paper for many months and some for almost a year. Unless there is some indication from him that he is prepared to give the House an adequate explanation of his refusal to do his job, or that he intends to advance reasonable arguments to persuade me that I should withdraw the questions, I intend on a regular basis to bring this matter to the parliamentary secretary's attention at this time in our proceedings until some progress is made.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to please everybody. Today Canadians will realize that we have made an exceptional effort. We have answered some hundred questions and I do not appreciate the hon. member's complaints about the work we, on this side of the House, accomplish. Mr. Speaker, on many occasions I have had the opportunity to express my opinion on the hon. member's reactions. I strongly invite him to read not only the list of the numbers tabled today, but also the answers to the numerous questions asked. It will add to his culture. As for the rest, I urge him to be patient.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

RAILWAYS

PRAIRIE RAIL ACTION COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the serious threat to western rural communities and the farmer-owned elevator system as a result of recommendations contained in the Prairie Rail Action Committee report which go far beyond the committee's terms of reference in at least two instances; and also because the committee recommends the abandonment of 1,416 miles of rail lines based on conclusions arising out of inadequate, inappropriate and insufficient evidence, and fails to give sufficient weight to the evidence for the retention of these rail lines; all of which makes it urgent that the Prairie Rail Action Committee report be discussed in parliament forthwith so that the government can indicate its intentions and members can express their views with respect to the committee's recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member gave the Chair notice of his intention to make this application pursuant to Standing Order 26 for permission, in accordance with that Standing Order, to move the adjournment of the House for consideration of a matter of great urgency as defined in the language of that Standing Order.

It was evident from the tenor of the question period today and the motions put forward pursuant to Standing Order 43 that the hon. member's position enjoys rather widespread interest in the House. It is clear from the supporting documentation which the hon. member put forward that the matter has been of concern to several members of the House for quite some time.

That may come to his assistance and provide moral support for his cause in this particular instance but, unfortunately, it does not help him much in attempting to proceed pursuant to Standing Order 26 because the language of the Standing Order indicates that the Chair must take into account other opportunities to discuss the matter. The hon. member will recognize that that may mean future opportunities. I think it also means past opportunities. The House has not debated the matter extensively, but there certainly have been a number of opportunities in the past to disagree with the deliberations or the findings of the Prairie Rail Action Committee. Whether those have been adequate enough is something for the hon. member to discuss.

Whether the hon. member, or other hon. members, agrees or disagrees with the terms of reference of the committee, its deliberations or its fundings remains essentially a matter of disagreement and not, in my opinion, an ideal subject for an application pursuant to Standing Order 26. I should turn to the language of Standing Order 26 (16) which is at page 22 of the Standing Orders:

> The right to move the adjournment of the House for the above purposes is subject to the following conditions:
> (a) The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;

I do not want to be too precise in the application of the term "genuine emergency", but it does seem to me that a genuine emergency ought not to be the subject of a difference of opinion. It seems to me that in using Standing Order 26 we ought pretty well—I do not want to limit this entirely for the future—to be dealing with situations the emergent nature of which is not a matter of opinion or disagreement.

The hon. member takes issue, as do other hon. members, with the conclusions of the Prairie Rail Action Committee. However, whether the deliberations and conclusions of that committee, as an open body performing in public, could ever be constituted as an emergency within the terms of the Standing Order leaves me greatly in doubt.

Finally, it was indicated today in answers to questions put on this subject that the Prairie Rail Action Committee does not in itself have authority to implement its decisions but, rather, is an advisory board of some sort. All of its recommendations will have to go to another body, the Canadian Transport Commission, before any final decisions can be taken because that is the body which has the authority. Whether parliament will have to support that with other measures in the House I do not know at this time. If so, that would certainly give the hon. member and other hon. members an opportunity, in the first place, to appear before the commission and, in the second place, to debate the measures which would have to be taken if the commission does in fact go on to decide that these lines should be closed. In any case, it seems to me that the hon. member will have ample opportunity to make the representations which he makes known now before that commission and, in turn, before parliament if parliament does have to take action.

I simply say, therefore, that as long as the matter remains one of ongoing public activities, while the hon. member may disagree violently with the deliberations and the conclusions of the committee, it seems to me that disagreements of that sort ought not to be the subjects of Standing Order 26 applications. Such applications should be reserved for factual emergencies. The question of whether there is a difference of opinion about what ought to be done in an emergency might remain, but at least the emergency should not be something which is subject to judgment or difference of opinion.

Therefore, on the face of it I would indicate that in my opinion Standing Order 26 does not apply to this situation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1978

DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today provides for a number of improvements in the organization of the Government of Canada which have been recommended and supported by those in the sectors concerned.

Part I provides for the establishment of a separate department of fisheries and oceans, fulfilling a commitment made by this government and underlining the priority we attach to enhancing the Canadian fishery. The priority has been demonstrated in decisive government action to extend fishery jurisdiction to 200 miles, coupled with carefully planned management and conservation measures which have opened up a new era of fishery stability and prosperity.

By way of example, the over-all sea fish catch in 1978 of approximately 1.3 million metric tons is worth an estimated $624 million, an increase in value of 37 per cent over the previous year.

On the Atlantic coast, despite necessary conservation measures and catch restrictions, fishermen's incomes have increased 50 per cent in recent years. There is every reason to believe that this improving trend will continue well into the 1980s.

The future of the fishing industry also augurs well on the Pacific coast, where the federal government, in co-operation with the government of British Columbia, has embarked on a massive salmon enhancement program which eventually will double the amount of salmon produced in that province. There is also the prospect of a fourfold increase in groundfish catches off the Pacific coast by the 1990s. The new organization proposed in this bill will provide a strengthened basis on which to continue and extend these efforts.

The minister of fisheries and oceans is to have responsibility for seacoast and inland fisheries, fishing and recreational harbours, hydrography and marine sciences and the co-ordination of the policies and programs of the Government of Canada respecting oceans. These responsibilities provide for a comprehensive approach to fisheries and oceans issues, recognize the need for a sound scientific base both for the development of a modern fishery and to underpin our other ocean responsibilities, and establish a focal point to co-ordinate our marine policies and programs which are taking on increasing importance.

Part II of the bill provides for the amendment or repeal of certain sections of the Fisheries Research Board Act to allow that board to be replaced by a new fisheries and oceans research advisory council. The function of the council will be to advise the minister of fisheries and oceans on all matters the minister may refer to it relating to fisheries research and the marine sciences, including technological developments in those fields; the scope and adequacy of the science policies and programs of the department of fisheries and oceans, having regard to the duties and functions of that department and the science policies and international obligations of the Government of Canada; and the co-ordination of research and development programs in the fields of fishery research and the marine sciences.

The council will provide an outside source of advice to the minister on the scientific activities of the department of fisheries and oceans, and for that purpose its membership will be broadened to include representatives from other industries and departments which have a specialized interest in the marine sciences as well as representatives of educational institutions and the general public.

Fishermen across the country have indicated their strong support for these measures to establish a separate department and revitalized council, and I am pleased to recommend these proposals to the House.

The intent of Part III is to clarify and update the mandate of the Department of the Environment, which remains following the separation of fisheries, and to the underline that its first responsibility is the preservation and enhancement of environmental quality. The bill strengthens the ability of the minister responsible for the environment, to ensure that other federal departments and agencies, which have environmental protection powers as necessary parts of their specific responsibilities use those powers in a way that is consistent and meets certain basic environmental standards.

• (1520)

This part also empowers the minister to enter into agreements with the provinces for the administration of environmental programs. This underlines the intention of the government to minimize federal-provincial duplication and to rely to the maximum extent possible on the provinces for the administration of environmental programs. This concept, together with the strengthened responsibility for co-ordination and setting standards for the environmental activities of other federal departments and agencies, is fundamental to the new mandate of the Department of the Environment.

The government remains firmly committed to act effectively, in concert with the provinces, to preserve and enhance the quality of our environment for the benefit of all Canadians. The provisions now before the House strengthen the ability of the minister of the environment to lead this process.

Part IV of this bill is a technical amendment which allows the staff of Canadian Patents and Developments Limited to continue to receive coverage under the Public Service Superannuation Act and the flying accident compensation regulations made pursuant to the Aeronautics Act.

The purpose of Part V is to transfer the responsibilities of the representation commissioner to the chief electoral officer. The only person to occupy the post of representation commissioner, Mr. Nelson J. Castonguay, retired at the end of 1978 after a long and distinguished career in the Government of Canada, including 17 years as chief electoral officer and 15 years as representation commissioner. Mr. Castonguay has played the leading role in the success of our present system of the readjustment of electoral boudaries by independent commissions, and on behalf of the government I congratulate him for his achievement.

I have had the opportunity, as have other members of the House of Commons, to work with Mr. Castonguay, and we know the integrity, competence and skill with which he discharged his responsibilities, first as chief electoral officer and later as representation commissioner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Castonguay has in the past recommended to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections that the responsibilities of the representation commissioner be transferred to the chief electoral officer, another servant of parliament who also has the independence and experience required. Many of the significant responsibilities once accruing to the representation commissioner have now been carried out, and the major remaining duties of the office arise only in approximately two years in every ten when electoral boundaries are readjusted. It thus seems timely and appropriate to rationalize the responsibilities of the two independent offices responsible for matters so crucial to democratic elections in Canada.

Parts VI to IX of the bill contain essentially technical amendments to the constitutive acts of the Medical Research Council, National Research Council, Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. The amendments remove the requirement in each of these acts that all staff appointments carry the specific approval of the minister. The heads of the councils agree that this requirement is an unnecessary involvement of the minister in the day to day administration of the councils.

Part X amends the Parliamentary Secretaries Act to correct the current wording in that act which ties the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries that may hold office to the number of ministers holding office at any given time. This means that if the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries are holding office when a minister resigns, one of those parliamentary secretaries must resign, potentially creating a situation where the House would lose access not only to a minister but also to his parliamentary secretary at the same time. The amendment would provide that the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries is set at the time of appointment and so would not be affected by a subsequent resignation of a minister. This involves no increase in the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries that may be appointed.

Finally, Part XI of the bill contains a number of technical and general amendments consequential on the division of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, these are the basic principles and intent underlying each of the parts of this bill. The measures contained in this legislation carry the support of Canadians in the areas affected. These measures sharpen the tools we have to provide better government for all Canadians. While I welcome and will give careful consideration to any improvements in the present bill that hon. members may wish to propose, I would hope that members on both sides would agree that the bill should proceed without delay. It is in this spirit that I have outlined the substance of the bill for the House with a minimum of argumentation. I hope that all hon. members will join in this spirit as the debate proceeds.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to follow the government House leader, particularly after having heard his last statement that it is his wish, desire and hope that this bill proceed with dispatch. Let me point out that he has conveniently forgotten that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a promise back in 1974 about the need to separate fisheries in the department and create a full, complete and worth-while department of fisheries. Therefore, what the government House leader has done at this time is to touch a very sore point with members on this side of the House, not only in our party but in all opposition parties.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

I was very pleased to note that there is a new thrust by the government in terms of fisheries and environment and that the government intends to proceed in a spirit of consultation and co-operation rather than confrontation which seems to have been the path of pursuit for which this government is so famous.

I join the government House leader in congratulating Mr. Nelson Castonguay for the job he has done in the past. I am pleased to say that every commendation should go his way for his sincerity and the assistance he has given to members from all sides of the House, as well as for his dedication to duty.

Regarding what Mr. Speaker has indicated, namely that this bill after second reading should be sent to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, may I say that that seems fair, but I have a better suggestion to make to the minister in light of the fact that this bill deals primarily with fisheries and the environment. Therefore, I think it would be more in keeping with that thrust, and after such an unwarranted and undue delay, that the government House leader ensure that the bill is directed to the proper place. It is my view that all the other points which the minister made in his introductory remarks regarding the 11 parts of the bill are not that significant in terms of urgency. Therefore, I hope that those of us who come from the Atlantic provinces and from the west coast and who, over the years, have been hammering home the fact that the government has shown several shortcomings with regard to its fisheries policy—no derogatory connotation is to be attached to the present minister—will receive an explanation and elaboration.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: I know that the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo), who should be directing her attention to Loto Canada, wishes to intervene. I hope the minister takes that advice and direction, which she seldom ever takes. I notice the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) is nodding his head in the affirmative, from which I conclude that the government House leader has received the necessary direction from the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment that when this bill receives second reading it be sent to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

• (1530)

We are back after the Christmas break, and I think we are all rested. I sincerely wish everyone the best of health. I have not had that myself. Perhaps many hon. members missed me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: But I was absent for a reason. Now I am back waiting to shake hands with my colleagues.

I would like to wish hon. members opposite success in the forthcoming election, but I cannot go that far because many Canadians, and I, wonder what devious schemes the Prime Minister is planning in order to become the darling of Canadians once again. In my view, that is an impossible task. Hon.

members opposite hope that he will come up with the required miracles, but it is an impossible task.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Alexander: Because of the alienation, frustration, disgust, despair, fear, hopelessness, insincerity, and lack of confidence in the present administration. I am looking at the government House leader. He knows that I speak sincerely. The lack of confidence in the administration under which Canadians are living is too deeply rooted, because incompetence and mismanagement are the hallmarks of the present administration.

Bill C-35 is entitled as follows:

An act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

It is misleading, but it could have been laudable and commendable if the portion reading "and matters related or incidental thereto" could have been interpreted as dealing with the reorganization of the government's attitude, thinking and initiative. In my view, such a reorganization would reduce and minimize the suffering and hardship which stem from high unemployment, high inflation and no growth. Reorganization by itself is not earth-shaking and it is not a panacea. The end result is what is important. In other words, what does the government intend to accomplish by reorganization? More important, in what direction must the government go in order to bring about a policy or principle for the benefit of Canadians?

Other than the sections dealing with fisheries and the environment, the bill is relatively silent. We want to see it go before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry in order to find out what is going on in the reorganization sector of the government. In the past the government's view regarding reorganization has been the solution rather than a first step toward the solution and/or solutions. I should like to put on record a few examples respecting reorganization which perhaps have been stated before. I should like to present five examples for the edification of the House.

First, in 1971 the department of fisheries and forestry was submerged in a new department of the environment. In 1974 the minister of state was given fisheries responsibilities within the department of the environment. In 1976 the department attempted reintegration under the name of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment and only one minister. The current minister intends to create a separate department of fisheries and oceans, with the department of the environment going its own way. By going through no less than four reorganizations, the federal management of these policy areas has returned to an organizational status remarkably similar to that prevailing prior to 1971. It is a sort of turnabout.

The second example deals with the ministry of state for urban affairs. The Ministry of State for Urban Affairs was created in 1971 to respond to accelerating urbanization and its resulting problems. Although no one could claim these problems have been solved, the ministry will be disbanded within approximately six months. Both urbanization and its resulting problems remain; it is the organization which changed.

The third example involves the Ministry of State for Science and Technology, also created in 1971. In addition to the development of federal policies on science and technology, the ministry was directed to co-ordinate existing federal science policies. While such policy development and co-ordination is no less urgent today, in its seven-year history the ministry has had six ministers, three of whom have had other ministerial responsibilities. When we think of the word "reorganization", we must determine the aims and the direction the government intends to pursue in order to bring about a policy and principle for the benefit of Canadians.

The fourth example deals with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It was reorganized in 1977 to create the enterprise development program, which was designed to co-ordinate distribution of all the department's industrial support funds. The enterprise development program now distributes a lesser amount of money than the sum distributed by its predecessors.

The fifth example involves the office of the comptroller of the treasury which was disbanded in 1969. The comptroller's duties included management of disbursements from consolidated revenue, provision of accounting services and the preparation of cash forecasts. In 1978 the government created the office of Comptroller General allied with the Treasury Board. His duties include the development of expenditure control systems and related administrative practices. The two comptrollers' job descriptions are sufficiently similar to raise a question as to whether the government has once again reorganized itself back to where it started.

Last but not least, we have the big "super minister". I think of him as being the former minister responsible for the Treasury Board. I had occasion to shadow him with some success when he was involved with immigration, labour, manpower and unemployment insurance. Now we have a big super minister who will somehow or other rescue the government from the perils which it faces every day. I wonder what the priorities of the government are.

Mrs. Sauvé: We do not have any.

Mr. Alexander: I hear an hon. member opposite indicating that they do not have any. I am the first one to agree with that.

Mr. Paproski: That was said by the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé).

Mr. Alexander: Was that the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé)?

Mr. Beatty: Yes.

Mr. Alexander: It should be documented and recorded that they have no priorities. I will pretend I did not hear that and let it go by the board.

Mr. MacEachen: The minister withdraws that remark.

Mr. Alexander: It is too late to withdraw a statement which was heard by all hon. members on this side of the House. The government House leader is amazing. When he rose, I looked at him with a great deal of respect. I was hoping for words of wisdom, which I did not hear. I did not interrupt him because I knew he respected me. He knows my job, as well as the jobs of all hon. members. All of a sudden he has become childish. The Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) does not want me to carry on with my speech. How shameful. What kind of conduct is this?

I was asking where the priorities of the government were. Hon. members on this side of the House thought that Bill C-9 was the big bill, the one respecting public referanda in Canada. Probably it is being delayed now for some sinister political motive. Perhaps the government is waiting for some convenient time. That is what I call posturing. We saw the Prime Minister posturing yesterday. I will not dwell on that, except to say that hon. members on this side of the House wish Their Excellencies good health and every good wish for the very onerous job which they have taken upon themselves for the benefit of Canadians.

I should like to know what has happened to Bill C-27. The government House leader knows what it is all about, namely, setting up a Crown corporation in respect of the Post Office Department. Are we not concerned about the problems of which we have been reading of late in terms of post office management and CUPW? Is this government afraid of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) who is our critic in respect of the post office? He has done an excellent job of trying to rap this government over the head in order to bring about some sense in terms of needless foot dragging, misunderstandings and statements that were uncalled for and unwarranted by the present Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne).

What has happened regarding Bill C-29? I arrived late, Mr. Speaker, but I understand hon. members were talking about housing and CMHC. There is a big problem in existence in this regard. Has the government given us its priorities in respect of that particular matter, or is this government again afraid of the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) who has been doing an excellent job as our housing critic, and who in turn would relish an opportunity to rake this government over the coals because of its insensitivity regarding the needs of Canadians for housing? In any event, we have this list, but we do not know where the government's priorities lie. The Minister of Communications says they do not have any. That is a very revealing statement. Not only is it revealing, it is alarming.

The government House leader went through the various parts of this bill and I think it would be a good idea for me to go through it again. I think he said there were 11 different parts. I am afraid I do not know if that is accurate, but one cannot be expected to know everything that happens around here. We should at least be able to expect leadership from this government, but even that is lacking 99 times out of 100.

The first part deals with the new proposed department of fisheries and oceans. The second part deals with the proposed fisheries and oceans research advisory council. The third part relates to the Department of the Environment. The fourth part relates to Canadian Patents and Development Limited. The fifth part deals with the representation commissioner to whom we just paid tribute, Mr. Castonguay. There is then reference to the Medical Research Council, and surely the minister must realize that we will have something to say in that regard, particularly in view of the government's tunnel vision in the past and for the future in respect of research.

Those same remarks could be applied to the next part regarding the National Research Council, the seventh item in this omnibus bill. The eighth item is the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, followed by the ninth item, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. The government can expect to hear from us on this side regarding that. There are several members who want to know what is taking place in respect of social services in this country, and particularly what role this government feels women should be playing. We are interested in knowing the role the government sees for women not only in the House of Commons, where we are gradually moving towards more fair and meaningful representation, but specifically outside this place.

The second last part deals with parliamentary secretaries. I know my House leader will have something to say in this regard because this relates again to reform of the rules and guidelines within which this august body operates.

The last part in this bill brings about some direction regarding the Department of Fisheries and the Environment.

What bothers me and makes me question the government's sincerity with respect to this bill is clause 35 relating to the coming into force. I always look to see what a bill states in respect of when the law shall come into force because that gives some indication of its importance and the need for immediate action. However, in this case let me read what is said by this coming into force clause, and this will indicate why I question the sincerity of the government in terms of moving this bill forward expeditiously. Clause 35 states:

This act on any part thereof, except part IV, shall come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation.

Part IV is that part in relation to Canadian Patents and Development Limited about which I will have something to say a little later.

What bothers me is the suggestion that this bill will come into force at some date in the future to be selected by the government. It can use this measure for its own political advantage. For example, it can proclaim the measure during an election campaign giving the Minister of Fisheries, and perhaps the Minister of the Environment, the opportunity of putting out a press release announcing the establishment of a separate department of fisheries. This press release will be sent to the Atlantic provinces and the west coast pointing out what the government has done for the people in those areas. It will no doubt suggest that a separate department is required and the government has now established it. It will invite the people to trust the government because it is with the government that their future hopes lie.

I indicated earlier that in 1974 there was a promise regarding the establishment of a separate ministry. If I am wrong I am sure the government House leader will be the first to stand and challenge me. The Prime Minister promised then to establish such a separate ministry. I am now asking why there has been this dragging of the feet, this hanky panky, hesitation and indecision relating to the introduction of this bill.

This omnibus bill is like "Catch 22" and gives members of the opposition the opportunity to register their concerns about these areas with which this proposed legislation deals. We are thankful for that opportunity, but I should like to ask this simple question. If it is so important that we bring about this separate ministry, why do we now have an omnibus bill covering a number of items that are not of immediate concern?

A separate bill should have been brought forward to deal with this one item relating to the separation of fisheries as a separate department. That measure should have been divorced from this omnibus bill. Had that been the case the minister might well have received the expeditious passage he requested earlier. Members on this side of the House have taken an interest in this idea for some time. The major purpose indicated by the government House leader is to create a separate and distinct department of fisheries and oceans. Fisheries has been combined with environment since 1970. As I said in 1970, the present Prime Minister needlessly ended the existence of a separate department of fisheries. During the 1974 election campaign he promised to recreate a separate department, but like too many other promises this government makes it was not kept.

It has taken this government nearly five years to act on this promise. The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) and the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) have had private members' bills on the order paper for years begging this government to bring about what we are attempting by this bill.

Except for some clarification in respect of the duties of the Minister of the Environment, Bill C-35 is virtually a carbon copy of Bill C-65 which was introduced in a hurry on the second last sitting day before the recess last summer. This would indicate that the government only wanted to bring attention to the matter for the purposes of an upcoming election. However, when the election did not materialize the government did not reintroduce the bill at the first opportunity. Consequently there is some doubt as to whether the Liberal government is sincere in wanting this bill passed. I notice the minister of fisheries shaking his head in a negative fashion, but the facts speak for themselves. We have consistently argued the need for a separate department of fisheries. The Canadian fisheries is a far too important economic resource to be buried in a combined department. There will be a number of members on this side of the House more efficient and with more expertise than I who will put forth their concerns on this matter.

What about the environment? The duties of the Minister of the Environment are clarified and enlarged. The bill requires that the minister undertake impact assessments of federal projects. While recognizing that this is the first occasion that the government has sought to put the requirement for impact assessment into law, this section, 6(1)(a)(i), falls far short of our objective on this side of the House. For instance, under this section impact assessment of activities in the federal jurisdiction is not required except if they are federal projects. This would mean that an impact assessment of drilling in the eastern Arctic, for instance, would not have been required had this bill superseded the environmental assessment and review process earlier this year.

Also, there is no requirement for the assessment procedure to have hearings, nor for the assessment to follow any of the other rules of natural justice. This is extremely important, and there will be many questions asked even though this is the part with which we are particularly concerned, and with which we are pleased the government will be following through on once the bill gets to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Once again, there will be questions from members who are concerned with the environment and who must, of necessity, become concerned with this bill.

The next matter is Canadian Patents and Development Limited. This bill also brings employees of the Canadian Patents and Development Limited under the Public Service Superannuation Act. It is very interesting that this provision should appear in this bill—it was also in Bill C-65 in the last session—rather than in Bill C-12 which deals specifically with public service pensions. I wonder why the government made this move to bring this particular company into this omnibus bill. The Treasury Board claims, as I understand it, that it is coincidental and that there is nothing sinister about the matter. I need proof, and that is why it is necessary to get bills into committee where we can find out the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. In bringing this particular company into the bill, it gives the appearance once again of sloppy management on the part of the government.

While Treasury Board is busy drafting amendments to the various public service pension plans in order to deal with criticisms about their actuarial soundness, the Prime Minister's office is working independently on amendments to expand the number of persons covered by public service pension plans.

I hope that the government House leader or whoever carries this bill into committee will be able to answer a number of questions, because I have some and I would like to place them on paper for the benefit of the government. One such question is whether they are serious about this provision, and therefore, wanting to make sure it is contained in a bill that will be passed, they did not put it in Bill C-12 because they did not take that bill seriously. Or alternatively, did they put this provision in Bill C-35 because they are not serious about it and wanted to put it in a bill which they do not intend to proceed with, whereas they did intend to proceed with Bill C-12?

The only reason Bill C-12 is not before the House now is because I took it upon myself to act as the opposition House leader and ask the government House leader a couple of questions. I suppose the House leader was surprised to hear me say that before we proceeded with this very contentious bill directed toward all the people of Canada, we would want to hear witnesses, particularly PIPS, the Professional Institute of the Public Service, the Tomenson-Alexander management firm, representatives of the mounted police and all those directly affected by what the government was proposing. This was within the trade union movement. Over and above that, we also wanted to hear from the private sector in order to determine whether or not the government was moving in the right direction with regard to Bill C-12.

Another question we have with regard to this particular provision is: What effect will this provision have on the actuarial soundness of the public service superannuation account? Was this potential change taken into consideration when the chief actuary was making his actuarial calculations with regard to the public service superannuation account and the supplementary retirement benefits account for purposes of the changes proposed in Bill C-12, which is the indexation bill? In fact, was the Treasury Board even consulted on this matter?

I note that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan) is not here at this particular time, and I will make no derogatory remarks in that regard. But surely this is a matter in which he should have some input. Why are new employees being incorporated at a time when the funding of public service pensions has been so seriously questioned?

No doubt the government House leader through his staff will have taken notice of all the questions I have asked so that he may have all the answers in committee and will say that the hon. member was wrong, that he does not understand the bill, but that he does have some legitimate questions and here are the answers which he is attempting to seek.

Another question I have is: Why is it thought to be appropriate to incorporate Canadian Patents and Development Limited employees into the Public Service Superannuation Act and not the employees of certain other Crown corporations, such as CNR or Air Canada? What is the justification for this?

I would like to deal now with the representation commissioner aspect of this bill, and we have heard the explanation by the minister in this regard. I believe there was a big debate in 1963 by a member I did not know named Mr. Pickersgill. I believe he carried that thing through by way of resolution. The government House leader wants to take credit for it, but the portion I read did not refer to him. The most important contribution to that debate was by Mr. Pickersgill and the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

As was stated, the bill abolishes the representation commissioner and brings his duties, such as defining electoral boundaries, under the chief electoral officer. In 1963 the job was split into two positions, with the chief electoral officer at the time becoming the representation commissioner and a new chief electoral officer being appointed. Rumour has it that this was done to ease the chief electoral officer out of his job. However, since the representation commissioner has, as was pointed out by the government House leader, little if anything to do between each census, it does not make sense to have two positions. Therefore, in order to save money the jobs are being combined again under the chief electoral officer.

Again, once this sort of thing is put into focus, there will be members who will have questions with respect to the whole issue of representation and the duties, obligations and rights which come under the chief electoral officer. Whatever the true motives might have been for establishing an independent representation commissioner in 1963, it was a proposal that we supported, and in fact we had been arguing for an independent commissioner for some time. That is why I can recall reading the very significant questions and statements made by the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert and the replies. I regret that I was not around during Mr. Pickergill's representations and his approach to answering these questions. I am sorry that I did not see anything there by the minister. Maybe he was a backbencher in those days and was not recognized except for some meaningless intervention.

● (1600)

Mr. MacEachen: I did the negotiation with your leader of the day on that subject.

Mr. Alexander: I was going to ask why the government no longer believes it necessary to have a full time independent representation commissioner. Can the job be handled adequately on a part-time basis? These are some of the question we will have to ask.

Another thing we are concerned about is research. I do not want to get involved in this particularly because other members of this party are eager to jump in and condemn the government for its tunnel vision approach to research and science. This has resulted in many talented young people and people with expertise fleeing the country. This is one of the least understandable and at the same time one of the most important of the government's measures and I condemn them for it. We all know what will happen as a result of this tunnel vision.

The bill allows the Medical Research Council, the National Research Council, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and the Social Science and Humanities Research Council to appoint and classify staff without ministerial approval. That is a very significant step and a very significant statement and the government House leader says it is what he wants. I must ask, however, what mechanisms are being put in place to ensure that this appointment and classification authority will not be abused. We have already seen how classification has been handled in the public service when it has been delegated. I am talking about waste, Mr. Speaker. Misclassification and particularly overclassification which this government has allowed to proceed year after year through neglect, costs $75 million per year today.

I would just say, Mr. Speaker, that during my absence the President of the Treasury Board laid on the table the findings of the classification study. He did not have the courtesy to follow the practice of his predecessor who indicated that he would not only table this report but would also give us the solutions which the government found it necessary to implement in order to bring about the savings which are sorely needed to reduce government waste.

We know that there are incentives in the present system which lead to consistent overclassification, and we will get into that area as soon as we get the minister's estimates. I do not think that we are going to get any answers from the government on how they propose to save some $75 million on overclassifications. Can the government assure us that this will not also happen in the appointment and classification of positions in the research councils? Once again they have delegated the authority.

We are now looking into the whole question of Crown corporations, their conduct, their thrust and initiatives. I hope that the omnibus bill dealing with Crown corporations will soon come before the House. I know it will not come before the election, of course, because the government does not care about this. They would let the Crown corporations carry on as they are doing even though some of them have a history of throwing the taxpayers' money down the drain and of pursuing questionable practices to the disadvantage of the public.

I return to my concern about the government's tunnel vision regarding these councils and its lack of understanding of them. Mr. Speaker, there are priorities and priorities. When it comes to the research and development that affects in particular the Medical Research Council and the National Research Council, we wonder whether government is on the right track in delegating its authority.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the bill makes an interesting change with regard to parliamentary secretaries. Subsection 2(2) of the Parliamentary Secretaries Act at present reads as follows:

(2) There shall not be at any one time more parliamentary secretaries than the number of ministers who hold offices for which salaries are provided in section 4 of the Salaries Act.

Clause 31 of the bill provides that this section shall now read as follows:

(2) There shall not be appointed more parliamentary secretaries than the number of ministers who hold offices for which salaries are provided in section 4 of the Salaries Act.

The purpose of the amendment is to clean up an anomaly in the act. At present the act requires that if a minister resigns then a parliamentary secretary must also resign. There cannot at any time be more parliamentary secretaries than there are ministers. The amendment does not allow for an increase in the number of parliamentary secretaries but rather fixes the number at the time of appointment.

An important point which I think goes to the root of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that the resignation of a minister would no longer require the resignation of a parliamentary secretary and therefore, as a result of this amendment, there could be more parliamentary secretaries than ministers.

I think I have put the position of my party on several matters of concern before the House. I do not intend to speak longer because I know there are other members on this side of the House, including members of the New Democratic Party, who wish to speak on matters that they find either satisfactory or objectionable in the bill.

I cannot give the government House leader the assurance of quick passage that he is seeking for the bill, however. We do not intend to filibuster the bill, but I feel that if he were sincere about this whole matter he would have included the questions of the fisheries and the environment. It is my view that the government is not sincere and has thrown a lot of other things into the bill. We have no alternative in this party but to take a stand, having been given this opportunity to register our concerns on behalf of constituents in all regions of the country.

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, as has already been stated eloquently by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) this bill deals with the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto. I do not presume to be able to comment on every aspect of this bill and there are others in my party who will comment on parts of the bill of particular concern to them.

I was interested in the approach of the hon. member for Hamilton West to the bill in that he totally looked to the past and did not present any forward looking ideas on behalf of his party. It rather frightens me that he represents a party that hopes to form the government eventually. From my point of view, representing the part of the country that I do, a party which looks to the past—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege and reluctantly, because I chastised the government House leader for intervening when I was speaking. I wish the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour) would not misquote me or take my remarks out of context. On a number of occasions I emphasized that other speakers for this party who had special expertise would deal with their areas of interest. The hon. member himself indicated that he did not have all the expertise required to deal with this bill and I accepted that. I also indicated to the House, with no shame whatsoever, that speakers to follow me would place the position of this party on the record with respect to this omnibus bill.

● (1610)

That may be a simple question of privilege. However, I just want to let some of the new members know that they should pay more attention when a lead-off speaker speaks, so that they will get some idea of what is going on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I accept the point of clarification. It is not really a question of privilege.

Mr. Faour: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that as lead speaker for his party and as lead speaker for my party, the comments should be fairly general. I understood his comments should point to his party's proposals and ideas as to how this bill should be written. That is what my comments were about.

I was saying that in the area of fishery development, if the Conservative party takes power after the next election, with their backward looking views in this area we may be back to the fishing admiral days. If anyone knows Newfoundland history, they will know that was one of the most repressive types of arrangements in our history. It went out with the end of the eighteenth century.

I am going to deal with Parts I and II of this bill. Part I sets up a separate department of fisheries and oceans. Part II establishes a fisheries and oceans research advisory council. As I mentioned, other members of my party will deal with other sections of the bill.

We in this party support the setting up of a separate department of fisheries and oceans. As has been pointed out, it reflects a campaign promise on the part of the government made in 1974 to set up a separate department of fisheries. It is interesting the government is getting around to it just before the coming election. The government has belatedly recognized the proper emphasis that should be placed on the fishery and the importance of the fishery to the economy of this country.

In Newfoundland there are some 27,000 fishermen prosecuting the fishery. In Newfoundland, fishery processing involves some 8,000 man-years of work. To give a further indication of the size of the fishery in Newfoundland, in 1978 some 430,000 tonnes were harvested with a value of $106 million. Nationally some 66,000 fishermen are involved in the fishery. The value to Canada nationally was close to half a billion dollars, representing a catch of 1¼ million tonnes of fish. This indicates that the fishery is of extreme importance to this country. By setting up this separate department the government is only now recognizing this fact by its actions and not just by its words.

This new department must be concerned with fisheries development. In fisheries development, the department has a very powerful tool to shape not only the fishing industry but the communities and the social structure of the areas where the fishing process takes place. Our contention is that the department must move toward three basic areas. First, there has to be local or Canadian control of the industry. Second, there has to be maximum benefit established on the east coast to coastal communities. Third, we have to manage the stocks and issue licences in light of the social requirements and social problems that must be solved in the communities where the fishing industry is located.

I will begin by dealing with foreign investment in the fishery. This is becoming a serious problem on the west coast of this country. Foreign interest now control over 10 per cent of the industry's assets on the west coast. The bulk of these foreign interests are in Japan. The frightening thing is not so much that 10 per cent is foreign-controlled, but that this 10 per cent has been acquired almost overnight.

The cause of this has been the lack of proper planning of the industry on the west coast. The west coast fishing industry, as with the industry on the east coast, should be an integral part of an industrial strategy or plan based on Canada's resources. Our leader said this when he was on the west coast last week. He pointed out that the cause of the problem of foreign investment is the lack of an industrial strategy.

The reason for the influx of Japanese capital with its resultant control is the fact that it has not been available locally. Canadian banks and lending institutions have been reluctant to make loans to canneries, fish processors and fishermen for years. We feel the government should, within the framework of an over-all industrial strategy, make sure that capital is available so that fish companies and individual fishermen do not have to go to foreign sources in order to obtain capital to develop their industry.

On the east coast, the government's record is a little better in this area. At least in one case the government used its licensing powers to ensure that valuable fish resources did not fall into the hands of foreigners. I refer specifically to the proposed takeover of the Ocean Harvesters processing plant in Harbour Grace, Newfoundland, by the Nord See group of West Germany. I applaud this approach on the part of the government and I hope this trend continues.

In their approach to the fisheries, the Tories would seem to give us investment at any cost. Certainly they pressured the federal government and the provincial government of Newfoundland for this type of investment. They supported the takeover by the West German company and generally have supported this sort of foreign intrusion into this Canadian resource which, in the long term, would not do anything for us. I applaud the government's approach to this question and hope the new department continues on this route. I am sure the present minister will ensure that it does.

Another area of concern is how development of the industry takes place. In the sixties, proposals for development were very capital intensive. There were plans and proposals for large freezer trawlers plying the Grand Banks and the east coast fishery. That, of course, was before the advent of the 200-mile limit. It was at a time when foreign countries had their massive capital intensive fleets on our offshore and were reaping great benefits.

Fisheries development must be considered with social development as well. The midshore and offshore fishery, which is a sort of capital intensive fishery that was recommended ten years ago and beyond, requires a centralized development. It requires the establishment of large cities and towns, large centres from where the fishery can be serviced and prosecuted. This tends to reinforce the deterioration of the small coastal rural communities, especially on the east coast of this country.

On the west coast, the fishery is fairly well developed. It has set patterns. However, a change must take place on the east coast. If not done in a careful manner, this change could destroy existing living patterns which have gone on for centuries and create much disruption in lifestyles.

The trend has changed in Newfoundland over the past few years. I submit the fishermen's union was a major influence. The federal Department of Fisheries recognized that development of the fisheries has to take place while considering the communities from which the fishery takes place. The Tories do not seem to be sensitive to these needs. They would prefer development to follow the needs of the big fish companies, not those of the fishermen in the rural communities.

It is important to develop the fishery in a way compatible with traditional patterns of life. It is important that change should not come about too fast. We should recognize that most of the fishermen on the east coast are part-time fishermen. Part of their income, perhaps the major part, comes from fishing during the summer, but during the winter they cut wood or engage in some other part-time job. There are few full-time fishermen in the Newfoundland context and due regard must be paid to this situation.

If the department concentrates on full-time fishermen, the social impact will be profound, particularly on young people about to enter the industry. Traditionally, sons begin work in the fishery with the help of their fathers. Many part-time fishermen in my riding have found it difficult to introduce their sons to the fishery. I trust the department will recognize the problem and come forward with proposals for suitable compensation during periods of dislocation.

In recent years licensing arrangements have begun to change traditional patterns in the fishing industry. We recognize the need for a forward-looking, coherent policy for the development of the fishery, but while restricted entry to the industry might be desirable in the long term, such a move toward an elite corps of fishermen would cause tremendous dislocation in the short term and could give rise to a great deal of unemployment and hardship affecting individual fishermen in coastal communities. It is most important to consider the realities which exist in these communities when making overall fisheries policy, and I am confident the new department will do this.

The licence freezes of the past few years have caused hardship. I recognize there is bound to be dislocation, but we must surely minimize the extent of that dislocation. Certain licences have been frozen for some time; I have in mind, especially, those required for lobster and certain species of groundfish. The part-time fishermen, who constitute a majority in the Atlantic region, have been hit hard, new entrants into the fishery have been hit hard, and the future of young people has become uncertain. Should they stay in their communities with the expectation that they can enter the fishery, or should they go to Alberta or Toronto, for instance, to seek jobs there?

These are serious questions and they must be dealt with; I trust the minister will consider them very carefully.

The new department, through its licensing policy, could have a tremendous impact on local conditions along the east coast. It could also have an important impact on the size of fish stocks. It is necessary to balance the social cost to communities against the benefits of conservation. By varying the number of fishermen engaged in the industry we could change the recovery rate among fish stocks. If fishing were completely cut out for one year, fish stocks would probably recover in one year, but what would be the effect upon thousands of fishermen? It seems to me that if we allowed unlimited entry to the fisheries, stocks would continue to decline; so the need for some sort of balance must be recognized, always bearing in mind the needs of the rural communities.

I should like to turn my attention for a few moments to the seal fishery and its relationship to the fishing industry in general. What impact do the seal herds have on fish stocks? It is estimated there are about 1.3 million seals in the herd along the east coast. Each seal eats about 15 pounds of fish a day on the average. I have done the arithmetic and this works out to approximately 3.2 million metric tons of fish a year consumed by the seal herd off the east coast. Looking at the total fish landings on the east coast last year we see they amounted to less than a million metric tons, so seals are right now consuming three times as much fish as Canadian fishermen are catching off the east coast.

The figures I have given are, of course, approximate because it is impossible to ascertain just how much fish seals eat. Nevertheless, the information is very valuable in terms of the annual irrational debate and also because of the fact that the minister seems in part to have given in to the protesters. This year the quota for the seal hunt has been set at a level which would see a small increase in the seal population, thereby endangering fish stocks even more. So another thing the department should seriously consider is whether in the light of the continuing controversy over the seal hunt it is the fishermen or the seals which will get the fish off the east coast. If the seal stocks increase, as the protesters would wish, many fishermen will be unable to make a living because the fish just won't be there. This is a decision which the new department will have to approach with some care. I trust the minister will give this matter his consideration. His record thus far has been good and I trust it will continue.

I turn, now, to part II of the bill. Under these provisions there is a proposal to change the name of the Fisheries Research Board to the Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council. I will not comment on the board itself or the work it has done, but in my view the new reorganizing bill has one substantial flaw. In setting up the council the proposal totally neglects representation by fishermen themselves or by their organizations. Clause 4 of part II of Bill C-35 provides:

4. (1) The Council shall consist of a chairman and not more than 24 other members.

(2) A majority of the members of the Council shall be scientists.

Now we come to subclause (3), the subclause I am most concerned about:

(3) The members of the Council shall include persons from

(a) departments, boards and agencies of the Government of Canada that have a specialized interest in the marine sciences;

(b) universities and other educational institutions;

(c) the fisheries industries and industries that have a specialized interest in the marine sciences; and

(d) the general public.

Mr. Speaker, it could be said that the reference in subsection (d) to the general public having representation on the council might include fishermen and their organizations. But I suggest this is much too important a council to warrant the omission from its constitution of a specific reference to fishermen or their organizations. Let us face it, Mr. Speaker, the fishermen are the ones who will be directly affected by the recommendations this council will make. The council will be making recommendations in the area of quotas, fish stocks and so on, and it would appear to me to be essential that fishermen, fishermen's unions and fishermen's organizations should have a voice on this council, not just the industry or company representatives.

● (1630)

Over-all, Mr. Speaker, we support this move of the government to place the proper emphasis on the fishery by setting up this separate department of fisheries and oceans. There is much promise for the future of the fishery in this country, especially off the east coast, since the declaration of the 200-mile limit. Through this department the federal government in Ottawa has to provide leadership to the industry in two main areas, management and foreign relations. By properly managing and controlling fish stocks, quotas and the issuing of licences which permit entry into the fishery, the department can shape the whole face of the industry. It can have a big impact on the social fabric of coastal communities where the fishery takes place. This is something which I know the minister has approached before, and I think he is moving in the right direction on it.

However, the government has failed in the past with regard to the foreign relations aspect of its responsibilities involving fisheries. It took many years for the government in this country to match the efforts of small countries such as Iceland and Norway in extending our offshore jurisdiction. Iceland is a very tiny country with a population of probably not half that of the city of Ottawa, and it relies on fish perhaps even more than the city of Ottawa relies on government.

Mr. Hogan: Impossible.

Mr. Faour: It took many years for this government to match the efforts of Iceland in extending jurisdiction over offshore fishery resources, and now that that has been done, I applaud it. But it came many years too late. Now, because of inaction in foreign markets, the Canadian fishing industry has been placed in a back seat position regarding a place in world markets. The problem is fairly simple: 85 per cent of our fish exports go to the United States, but Americans eat only about nine pounds of fish per person per year. Europe and Japan, which are big fish-eating areas of the world, consume much larger amounts of fish, but we have a very small place in their markets. Part of the problem is tariffs. Part of the problem is that we cannot enter or find it difficult to enter markets because of tariff arrangements against processed fish. At this point in time we should be actively and aggressively pursuing new markets.

Right now we have an export advantage. As much as hon. members from time to time decry the devaluation of the dollar, with regard to export industries it is fairly evident that it is an advantage. The devaluation of the dollar of some 15 per cent in recent months is about the same as the tariff on processed fish entering the European Common Market, so at the present time we have an advantage. The devaluation of the dollar balances the tariff, so now is the time for us to be actively pursuing European markets. Because it is only by pursuing those markets and gaining a foothold in those markets for processed fish that we can have maximum benefit for the economies of the east and west coasts. In order to get maximum benefit for these economies there has to be the maximum amount of processing of fish at the local level.

I would like to quote from the report of the People's Commission on Unemployment. I have done this before. I want to quote from this report because I think it is a very good report. It contains a very good analysis of the Newfoundland economy in particular, but with regard to fisheries it applies to the industry nationally. One of the recommendations of the commission is found at page 103 of the report and reads as follows:

That a policy of total processing and packaging of our fish be implemented to provide more jobs here in Newfoundland, tariff restrictions notwithstanding.

Tariff restrictions are the main problem right now, but we can get around that by aggressive marketing policies, especially now when we have an advantage on the international market because of our devalued dollar.

I trust that this new department will look to the future of the fishery and will foster the future development of the industry in a way which will benefit people on the east coast—fishermen, processors, plant workers—and also fishermen on inland waters as well as on the west coast. Our party supports this move as a good reflection that the government recognizes the importance of the fishery to this country now.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-35. As the present minister is well aware, I think it is in the area of Marseilles, France, where people make a special dish. I believe they call it bouillabaisse. The minister will have to correct me on my pronunciation, but I think that is a rich fish stew which contains just about every type of fish which comes out of the sea. Bill C-35 could well be called bouillabaisse because it contains many words which apply to the Department of Fisheries and the Environment as well as many other items.

Nevertheless, I am pleased to note that the government has finally decided to re-establish a separate department of fisheries called the department of fisheries and oceans. The peril, however, in bringing forward this measure in an omnibus bill is that it could needlessly be delayed because of problems associated with other parts of it. In our view the part of Bill C-35 dealing with the establishment of a department of fisheries and oceans should have been brought forward separately and divorced from the other parts of the bill.

Actually, we should not be discussing the re-establishment of a separate department of fisheries at all. The fact that we are discussing this matter is a direct result of the Liberal government's having needlessly ended the existence of the department of fisheries in 1970. Having made that change, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) soon suffered some political remorse over what he had done because in the 1974 election campaign he promised to establish a separate department of fisheries. Five long years later it appears that this promise is finally coming to fruition. I add that this is somewhat typical of Liberal promises, especially campaign promises; they are long on words and short on action.

It should also be noted that this bill is very similar to Bill C-65, which was very hurriedly introduced on the second last sitting day before last summer's recess. Obviously, the Prime Minister wanted to place that bill on the record in case he decided to call a fall election. However, things then started to happen. We had a Gallup poll, we had a Goldfarb poll, we had the North Pole, the South Pole and the "roly-pol". All these polls seemed to frighten the Prime Minister out of his wits, and when he could not find the courage to call an election, what did he do? Did his government introduce his bill at the first opportunity? It did not. It delayed action for another five months.

In fact, further delays could result from the government's seeing fit to introduce an omnibus bill dealing not only with the re-establishment of a separate department of fisheries, but also with the employees of Canada Patents and Development Limited, the representation commissioner, the Medical Research Council, the National Research Council, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, parliamentary secretaries and the Department of the Environment. I submit that these measures could well have been dealt with in a separate bill.

It should also be recognized that the establishment of the new department will not in itself be a cure-all for all the problems which presently plague Canada's fishing industry. The proposal by our lead speaker that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry is one that I endorse. I think various proposals in the bill would be more acceptable if the debate were carried out in that particular committee, since those members of the Commons who have expertise in fisheries and the environment generally are present at the meetings of that committee. So I think it would help bring forth a better bill. This is a proposal I endorse and throw out for consideration by the government.

The measure of success of any government policy cannot be based upon the government's view of things, but rather upon the view of others, especially those directly involved in the industry. This leads us to ask how the government's fisheries policy is faring. In the letter to the Prime Minister of September 22, 1978, the Fisheries Council of Canada stated:

> We are deeply concerned that the potential of our industry will not be realized because your approach to the country's economic problems is not being followed in respect to fisheries. In fact in fisheries the government's approach is one of increasing intervention and opposition to the private sector.
> To realize the opportunities, it is necessary to establish a continuity of investment. As Mr. Chrétien has put it, encourage risk taking and willingness to spend in the private sector that is essential to get the economy growing faster.

But the council points out that this depends in turn to a large extent on the creation and maintenance by government of a favourable climate for future investment.

The letter goes on to say that the council regrets the government's approach to fisheries is not creating a favourable climate for long-term investment, and they itemize some of the main problems as follows. First is the refusal of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) to issue to Canadians licences for freezer factory vessels. This is particularly difficult to understand when such Canadian vessels would replace only foreign effort and would not reduce by a single pound the existing catch of any Canadian fisherman. Second are the unclear and unwise policies in such areas as ownership of vessels; and third, the ad hoc manipulation of the fisheries resource instead of forward planning for development.

It is my understanding that this letter was almost completely ignored by our Prime Minister. He sent only a pro forma reply thanking the fisheries council for its views. I submit that the time is long past for nice words of gratitude. I submit that what is needed now is action, or otherwise the Canadian fishing industry will lose the optimum benefits of the 200-mile limit which we on this side have originally proposed.

The fisheries council points out that the federal government has the complete responsibility for the management of the fisheries resource and that lack of jurisdiction over the stocks in the past has handicapped the ability of Canadian scientists and resource managers to carry out their mandate. However, the council makes the point that the scientists are now in a position to manage properly, but they have much to do in gathering knowledge of stock size and population dynamics. This is the area where the federal government has the responsibility and the expertise, and it is here that it should be directing its efforts rather than in commercial activities which must be the responsibility of the private sector.

I endorse those views of the council on behalf of the fishermen. What was the government's response to this important recommendation? Almost at the same time that it was being made, the government announced its decision to close down the Halifax fisheries laboratory, effective April 1, 1979, and its plan to discontinue all programs involved in research oriented toward the secondary fishing sector; that is, fish processing. The stupidity of this move became evident finally even to this government, and on December 21, 1978, the minister, in a press release containing the kind of double talk to which we have become accustomed from this government, stated that he had completed his review of cutbacks in fisheries technological development programs and said he had no intention of reducing essential fisheries research. I ask the minister, when he replies in this debate, as I am sure he will, to define to the fishermen of Canada and to the people of Canada his interpretation of the meaning of the word "essential".

He has stated that the fisheries technological laboratories at Halifax and Vancouver would not be closed down, which I submit is comparable to telling the crew of a ship: "Have no fear, your ship will sail, the only difference being that there will be a few changes; there will be no captain, mate, cook, bosun or engineer." At Halifax, where there was a total staff of only 79, some 23 scientists will be laid off. On the west coast, where there is a staff of only 31, some 11 scientists will be dismissed. The only place where no changes are contemplated is in Newfoundland where, as I understand it, only seven scientists are employed.

At the Halifax laboratory, for example, there are at least four divisions. In the resource utilization division, 11 scientists, including the division chief, will be dismissed. This minister and this government have destroyed the division, which leaves us to ask: Just what were these scientists doing? They were studying and developing processes for utilizing fish for human consumption which would otherwise be turned into fishmeal or thrown overboard, completely discarded. They were developing new processes for mincing and flossing saltfish, new storage techniques, such as hypobarric or reduced pressure storage so that fish could be stored for longer periods. All of this important work now goes by the board.

In the chemistry division where studies were carried out on the nutritional value of fish, among other things, ten scientists will be displaced. Perhaps their most important work was on the value of marine oils to mankind. But this work is considered unimportant by this government and by the minister so three research scientists, three chemists, a biologist and three technicians will be dismissed.

The industrial development division remains untouched, but in program management two out of four of the key men presently employed will be laid off. So much for the minister's announcement.

The minister in his statement of December 21, 1978, said:

> With the resurgence of the fishing industry in the past year or so, companies should now be in a position to meet these development costs themselves.

The minister seems to forget, for example, that lobster fishermen are individuals, that they generally do not own large companies and they are therefore not in a position to continue the studies of the fisheries laboratory on wet storage for lobsters, or the studies on the relationship of offshore and inshore lobster stocks, or the studies on an acceptable substitute for artificial baits for lobsters so that valuable mackerel and herring presently used for lobster bait could be sold for human consumption, thereby increasing the fishermen's income.

The actions taken by this government will seriously affect our fishermen and our secondary industry. They are in direct contradiction to the advice given to the government by the industry. I submit that this policy, which the minister stands by so firmly, should be changed. In fact, when making these changes in our scientific staff, no mechanism whatsoever has been established for the transferral of the 54 years of basic research expertise either to the provincial governments or to private industry. Some of these scientists have ten to 15 years or more of experience, and this type of know-how once lost cannot easily be regained. Some of these scientists already are planning to go to the United States out of necessity and the need to obtain employment. Their knowledge will soon be aiding our competition. These scientists were showing our individual fishermen and our secondary industry how to upgrade their product.

Therefore, we view this section of the minister's fisheries policy as a retrograde step which should be reconsidered. Following the next election, when we on this side form the federal government—

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): God help us.

Mr. Crouse: The minister did not finish his statement.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): God help the fishermen.

Mr. Crouse: What he meant was: God help him and hon. members opposite. Because after the next election they will be sitting on this side of the House. When we form the next government—and believe me, we will do that—

Mrs. Sauvé: When will that be?

Mr. Crouse: The hon. minister will be able to grunt and groan when she is on this side of the House after the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest the hon. member should talk about Bill C-35, not the next election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: When we form the next government, we intend to place not less but greater emphasis on fisheries research. We believe the people on the east and west coasts, as well as the industry, deserve this type of consideration since capital expended in this manner is a form of pump priming which generates industrial expansion.

The provincial governments also have been critical of the present government's fishing policies. They have called for action as well. In November, 1977, the Atlantic premiers prepared a policy paper urging the federal government to implement a fishing vessel replacement and upgrading program in concert with the provincial governments. At that time they said the following:

Unless our fishing industry is rapidly developed, a large part of the potential economic benefits from our 200-mile zone will be unnecessarily deferred and possibly lost to Canada and foreign nations will continue to reap significantly benefits from our fisheries resources.

Only inaction was forthcoming from the federal government regarding this provincial initiative. Consequently the provinces have been forced to do it alone. This is apparent from the Newfoundland government announcement in November, 1978 that it would implement a $500 million fisheries development program providing 4,500 new jobs.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Who pays for it?

Mr. Crouse: I ask the minister, who is paying for Mirabel which is going in the hole in the amount of $1 million a week?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Stick to the issue.

Mr. Crouse: The issue is the reallocation of federal tax funds in order to generate the expansion of industry in areas where expansion is required. Now the federal government faces the prospect of possible conflicting provincial fishery programs because it has refused to take positive action in fishery development.

In the spring of 1978 issue of "Canadian Public Policy", C. L. Mitchell of the economic analysis division of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment stated the following:

There is still no clearcut management strategy for the 200-mile economic zone by Canada.

Government policies have been formulated in a piecemeal fashion without any concept of an over-all management strategy. He added that the economic difficulties now facing the coast fishing industry indicate that it is not a leading sector but a lagging one, one requiring massive inputs of federal financial assistance to survive. However, the magnitude of this assistance can be justified on the premise that although the industry has its problems, it has the potential to become a leading sector. It is essential for this potential to be realized since the Canadian economy is experiencing severe economic difficulties due to inflationary pressures, high wage rates and balance of payments problems.

There are numerous policy issues which the government has to face. Groundfish stocks are increasing so that it is now becoming possible to consider more efforts by both inshore and offshore fishermen. The year 1979 will mark the third year since the declaration of our 200-mile limit. Consequently, the industry believes that a policy should be established now for controlled expansion of inshore and offshore fleets, and providing for the selection of licences to be unfrozen in a fair, equitable and orderly manner. By establishing such a policy now, some unnecessary uncertainty would be removed as vessel licence owners would know the order in which licences would be unfrozen, and along with shipyard operators they could plan for the sizeable investments which will be required.

Instead of following this course, on December 4, 1978, the minister announced a six-month freeze on new entries to the inshore fishery in most Atlantic coast areas. Canada cannot reap the potential benefits of the 200-mile limit if its fleet does not have the capacity to harvest the fish stocks available during the next decade. Many of the vessels in the present fleet are technologically obsolete.

Much of the fish allocated by Canada to foreign countries is of non-traditional species, such as squid and silver hake. These species cannot be landed in good market condition by present Canadian trawlers. Rather, they are caught by foreign freezer trawlers. Using our own or leased freezer trawlers, these fish, plus other more traditional species in distant waters, could be caught by Canadians. Additional work would be provided for Canadian fishermen and plant workers. New products would be available for sale in overseas markets. Therefore, until Canada is prepared to license Canadian-owned freezer trawlers fishing for both traditional and non-traditional species, many of the benefits of the 200-mile limit will be missed by Canadian fishermen.

In response to this problem, when my party is elected to power we would implement a licensing policy which would permit Canadian-owned freezer trawlers to catch some of the large quantities of fish the present government is now giving away to foreign countries. The minister claimed that freezer trawlers are not economically sound. This is not a decision which must be made by the minister, unless we are to go from a private enterprise system to a totally socialistic system. The opportunity should be provided by the minister and his government. Then he should let the individual fishermen and the companies with whom they are involved make the decision as to whether it is economically sound.

As well, we would set up a fisheries development fund from which grants and loans would be made available for ship refits and new ship construction. On shore this fund could provide assistance for the construction of freezers or holding depots for fish. By being able to freeze more fish, processing plants would operate year-round, thereby providing needed employment in the maritime regions.

If we do not move quickly to catch Canadian surpluses of existing quotas, probably we will be pressured under the terms of the bilateral fishing agreements with the international community to give up our right to catch these resources. This is a genuine threat. In this field the minister adopted a go-slow approach. Sometimes I think he has gone in reverse. It is amazing. So far the minister has not developed a long-term plan to Canadianize the offshore fishery. There has been no apparent recognition of the long lead times required to accomplish this end. In addition, to date bilateral discussions with foreign countries related to these surplus quotas have been conducted with insufficient input from or consultation with the industry.

Marketing uncertainty has been caused by the government's closed-mouth approach to tariff negotiations. Since 1974 the industry has submitted three briefs to the Canadian Trade and Tariffs Committee. However, little feedback has been forthcoming about the progress of negotiations. Prior to Britain joining the common market, Canada had free entry of canned salmon, shrimp and lobster into the British market. Now the tariffs on these products range from 17 per cent to 18 per cent, despite the fact that these tariffs are not protecting a domestic European product.

Also Canadian industry faces unfair discrimination in some instances. For example, in groundfish exports the Canadian industry faces tariffs from 15 per cent to 18 per cent into the Common Market, whereas the Common Market tariff against Norwegian groundfish exports is 3 per cent and against Icelandic exports it is duty free. Canadian industry only wants equal treatment with these two major competitors.

There are other trade concerns.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Raines)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Salary paid to newsreader Knowlton Nash; the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Hare)—Social Insurance—Use of SIN; the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher)—External Affairs—Francophone summit meeting—Discussions with France.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

● (1700)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that we proceed with Bill C-218, and that other private members' bills be allowed to stand and retain their precedence with the unanimous consent of the house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Agreed and so ordered.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

INCREASED PENALTIES FOR POLLUTION OF WATERS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria) moved that Bill C-218, to amend the Canada Shipping Act (pollution), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

[Mr. Crouse.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to ask this House to pass Bill C-218, to amend the Canada Shipping Act. Perhaps the easiest way to explain this measure would be to read from the explanatory notes in the Bill itself:

> This bill recognizes that modern bulk carriers can carry millions of dollars worth of oil or other potential pollutants and that the damage from a massive oil spill can run into the tens of millions of dollars. Its purpose is to make the penalties for operating a vessel in such a way that it poses a threat to the environment commensurate with the damage such action can cause. It is hoped that the significant deterrent provided in this bill will more fully ensure that Canadian regulations designed to prevent pollution are obeyed completely.

All too often Canada has neglected her maritime heritage and minimized the importance of the seas to the nation. "From sea unto sea" is not motto which restricts us; the seas do not hedge us in; rather they are our highways to the world. While we can all mouth such bold phrases as "the world's longest coastline", "coasts on three oceans", these have been homilies often repeated but seldom acted upon.

Perhaps we need to look at these situations in new ways if we are to realize again the importance of our maritime commerce. Consider the fact that eight of the provinces have ports which handle international cargo. Moreover, and somewhat paradoxically, the two land-locked provinces, Saskatchewan and Alberta, are heavily dependent upon ocean transport for shipping grain, one of Canada's most important exports.

Just as too many of us have failed to realize the vital importance to Canada of maritime commerce and of our ocean resources, this government has allowed the Canada Shipping Act to become outdated. It is, sadly, an act which was written for earlier times. It is an act which needs to be amended so that its provisions will be relevant to today's shipping. It is for this reason that I propose these amendments to the Canada Shipping Act.

I should make it clear at once that I do not expect that the specific element of this bill—an increase in the fines which can be assessed under the act—will solve the problems created by this government's lack of concern with maritime affairs. Similarly, I am familiar enough with the ways of this house to know that extensive modifications of an act as complex as the Canada Shipping Act cannot be expected to be realized through the mechanism of the private member's bill. Rather, I have introduced this bill to point out one of the particularly simple ways in which the government has allowed the act to become outdated. It is my hope that this will prompt the government to amend the act to bring it into reasonable accord with today's situation in shipping.

Of particular concern to the residents of coastal communities is the potential for disastrous pollution posed by today's supertankers. Twenty years ago, when tankers of 40,000 tons were the largest to be seen and oil was cheap, fines of $100,000 may well have seemed Draconian; now with tankers of 400,000 tons and cargoes of oil worth tens of millions of dollars, those fines pale into insignificance. Supertankers have indeed forced a complete rethinking and re-evaluation of the seas and shipping and the relation that these bear to society as a whole. Ships which may take half an hour and four miles to stop, which have a turning radius measured in miles, and which have the colossal momentum required to do significant damage while barely moving, are not the ships which the shipping act was designed to cover.

What we must admit is that these ships force us to re-think the nature of freedom of the seas: that is, the relation between littoral states themselves. These changes have been made necessary by the changed nature of the ships; they have been made urgent by the scale of damage which a mishap can now cause. The changes being wrought in these areas fall into two major categories: changes to ships, the way they are built, maintained and manned; and, secondly, changes to the ways in which ships may be operated.

Let us begin with the first category. In some ways this is the easier group to deal with as the problems are largely technical—matters of design and reporting procedures. Even these changes are not straightforward, however.

The 1973 conventions of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, known as IMCO, were not ratified largely because of difficulties with the drafting of the technical articles. Now that the errors of the 1973 conventions have largely been rectified by the 1978 conventions, it is time for the Canadian government to ratify these protocols. That these protocols require amendments to the Canada Shipping Act is all the more reason for the government to sign the protocols, as they could use the opportunity to bring about other improvements to the act.

In looking over these protocols it is apparent that much of the concern of the convention has been with the pollution caused by current habits of dumping the oily residue left after flushing tanks which have been unloaded. While such pollution is certainly not as spectacular as that created by tanker founderings, the cumulative effects of such minor incidents are far more severe, and it is with the consequences that we must be concerned. If stopping two hundred gallon spills or one hundred flushes lack the high profile politically of swinging into action after a disaster, that is too bad. We must concentrate on what does the most good, no matter how mundane the continual inspection of radar, steering systems and clear segregated ballast may seem to be.

The tendency of this government to go in for big, splashy programs, often at the expense of effectiveness, is of particular concern to me. I should like to relate to the House a particularly frustrating example, one which was the result of oil leakage or tank flushing, the major source of oil pollution.

Some five years ago the municipality of Oak Bay, which is in my constituency, suffered a small oil spill offshore. The municipality was made aware of this before the oil came to shore and they set about with an emergency crew to mop up the damage before it became worse by drifting on to the sand and rocks of the foreshore. They were able to complete the work within hours at a cost of $430.

They started very quickly trying to recover this money from the government, which has assumed the responsibility of paying the claims of people who are not covered or not able to claim against the ships involved. This is accomplished by application to an unusual little organization which looks after the maritime pollution disaster fund. This may have started off being a small organization, but with claims of 15 cents per ton for every ton of oil that is shipped into Canada, or from one point in Canada to another, over several years this has amounted to some $48 million or $49 million.

From time to time I have put questions on the order paper concerning this maritime pollution disaster fund. The last question was answered on December 15 just over a month ago. At page 2178 of Hansard for that date we find the following question:

> What is the total amount accumulated in the maritime pollution claims fund?

The answer was $48,997,810.93. The second part of the question, which might be even more interesting, was:

> How many payments have been made from the fund in each case (a) in what amount (b) to whom (c) on what date?

● (1710)

The answer to the question what had been paid out of this $48 million was that there had been two claims, one for $345.90 to a Mr. William Guimond, a fisherman at Pointe au Père, Quebec, on October 23, 1975; and a second payment of $300 to a Mr. Eudore Boudreau, fisherman, Carleton, Quebec, on January 5, 1977. So we have managed to pay out $645.90 of that $48,997,810.93 in the fund. I would also point out that they quit contributing to that fund according to last year's report of this organization. The report reads:

> The payment into the fund of 15 cents in respect of each ton of oil—was cancelled as of September 1, 1976—

I suppose it is of interest only to people in this House that there seems to be a slight difference in the balance of the fund at the present time. The current report which was tabled today shows a balance of $46,936,174, whereas according to the order paper answer which I received in December it was $48,997,000, an extra $2 million which must have come from somewhere. It may be interest accrued on the $46 million which they had last spring.

I took the occasion to get in touch with these people regarding the Oak Bay problem. I eventually found that the government has a set of reasons as to why one cannot qualify for these funds. One qualification which Oak Bay did not meet was that they did not have previous Privy Council approval for cleaning up the oil spill. How ridiculous can an act get, when it expects a municipality with a three-hour time difference and faced with an incoming small oil spill at midnight to wake up the Privy Council?

We cannot wake them up during question period, so how on earth is Oak Bay going to wake them up at three o'clock in the morning to get approval to clean up the oil spill before it drifts ashore? I would hope that some minister of transport some day will be able to find out just what the reasons are as to why no money ever comes out of the maritime pollution disaster fund and why the fund does not satisfy the ordinary means of the small communities which run the most danger from such disasters.

I think that this example demonstrates, Mr. Speaker, that legislation in this area must be flexible, but, above all, responsive to the immediate problems, not just the spectacular problems. Similarly, the technical changes which need to be made to Canadian shipping regulations—such as back-up radar, twin screws, segregated ballast, properly trained crew and careful inspection—are vital, though perhaps not overwhelmingly exciting. We must ensure that in these areas the appropriate authority, in most cases the coastguard, has the resources required to do a thorough job as well as sufficient authority to ensure full compliance with the regulations and sanctions such as those proposed here.

Earlier I referred to another type of change which will have to be made if maritime shipping is to be made safer—changes to the human side and the way the ships are operated. I realize that these questions are often harder to deal with than the seeming complexity of technical changes, and I certainly approach this end of the problem with some reticence. The fact remains, however, that the best designed ships will not of themselves prevent accidents; much also depends upon the maintenance of the ship and the diligence and training of the crew. Unfortunately, time after time when spills are investigated it is found that the crews were overworked, undertrained, and that basic equipment was not up to par. In this regard I would like to refer to the findings of Dr. McTaggart-Cowan's inquiry into the Arrow disaster. He found that the radar had ceased to function an hour before the ship struck, the echo sounder had not been in working condition for two months, and the gyrocompass had a permanent error of three degrees. I read now from the conclusions of that committee of enquiry:

> We are well aware of the fact that no form of transportation can be 100 per cent safe but from the record available to us, the standard of operation of the world's tanker fleets, particularly those under flags of convenience is so appalling and so far from the kind of safety which science, engineering and technology can bring to those who care, that the people of the world should demand immediate action.

As Dr. McTaggart-Cowan points out, one of the primary obstacles to realizing significant change is the refuge offered by flags of convenience. It is impossible to believe that Liberia makes even the most perfunctory effort to ensure that ships registered there are competently manned or in proper running order. In this regard I would like to quote from a report tabled today by the administrator of the maritime pollution claims fund where he speaks of an incident when the Island Spruce broke adrift from her tow, resulting in a suit to recover the cost of an action to prevent oil pollution:

> The ship-owner, the Cayman Islands corporation, does not appear to have been insured, nor, at the moment, to have any apparent assets upon which to realize.

Of course not, it is a one ship company. The world is plagued with these one ship companies which have as their sole asset one single ship, and if it runs aground they simply abandon it. This effectively shields the actual owners from any responsibility. While the Canadian authorities have had to try to deal with this problem by inspections after the ships have docked, this is clearly an after-the-fact approach, as the ships have already made their oil-laden journey. What seems to me to be needed is tighter international licensing regulations of both men and machines, as well as more uniform international inspection. This may seem impractical for some. However, I am drawn to compare the situation in international maritime trade with that of international civil aviation. In that field, the International Civil Aviation Organization, ICAO, has been highly successful in imposing technical and personal standards and in facilitating the adoption of uniform standards in guidance systems.

Let us consider ICAO's success to see whether we can learn from it any lessons which could be used to strengthen bodies like the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization, IMCO. The universality of ICAO regulations seems to stem in part from the fact that countries use them as basic regulations for all planes landing there. The locus of enforcement or initiative is shifted to the nation of registration. As well, many countries, particularly among the advanced industrial states, have registered supplemental accord raising their standards above the basic ICAO levels.

The conclusion should be clear, that even in the absence of sufficiently stringent IMCO regulations, the oil consuming nations could band together to enact stricter rules for ships using their ports. As these ports represent an overwhelming percentage of the trade for oil tankers, market forces would soon make these the effective minimum standards. By enacting such standards jointly, Canada, Japan, the United States, the EEC and Scandinavia could effectively set the standards for world oil shipping.

There is another aspect of this subject, Mr. Speaker; I would like to compare our approach to shipping with that of aviation. This facet of the question concerns the control of ship movements and knowledge of those movements. While in aviation there is a ground control which knows of the movements of all commercial aircraft in its area, no such mechanism exists in even heavily-used, major waterways such as the English Channel. Similarly, while an airplane pilot must keep ground control closely informed of any problem, no such imperative exists for ocean commerce.

One of the particularly upsetting features of the Amoco Cadiz foundering was that the French coastguard was not informed until after several hours of negotiation and then an attempted rescue by a German tug. This neglect of the public interest, despite the fact that the damage to the shipping cargo may be dwarfed by the damage to the coastline, is a relic of older times and must be changed.

I see that my time has just about expired. I would simply say that we must open up the shipping act one way or another. I am not foolish enough to be optimistic about the passage of this bill, Mr. Speaker. I have proposed these amendments to the Canada Shipping Act because I fear that the act has failed to keep pace with the rapid changes in world shipping, particularly with respect to the transportation of oil and products such as liquid natural gas. Canada should be pressing strongly for better ships to transport these commodities, and for tighter controls over the manning of these vessels.

● (1720)

To these ends we should ratify the IMCO accords of 1973 and 1978 and continue to press for tighter regulation of crew training. Unilaterally, Canada should continue to inspect ships closely and demand high standards of ships using Canadian waters. We must make sure that the coastguard has sufficient resources to do this as well as perform the increased duties brought on by the 200-mile limit. In addition, there must be sanctions sufficient to deter those who would ignore Canada's attempts to protect her maritime environment.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, apparently the intention of Bill C-218 is to set the maximum fine for certain offences under the Canada Shipping Act at three times the combined value of the ship and its cargo, thus acting as a much greater deterrent in case of massive oil and other pollution spills. The present maximum fine is $100,000.

As a member of parliament from British Columbia representing a constituency on Vancouver Island, I must say there is a great deal of basic sympathy for the remarks made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). I think many of his statements are fitting and correct, but regarding the proposed provisions for three times the combined value of the ship and its cargo, while I think the basic idea is both commendable and interesting, upon closer scrutiny the proposal begins to show some serious weaknesses, not the least of which is a scatter-gun philosophy which fails to take into consideration other forms of penalties. The end result could be harshly punitive and far out of proportion to the offence committed. What the proposed bill does not do, Mr. Speaker, is take into account the differing nature of offences specified in the Canada Shipping Act and its regulations.

The bill would, in effect, result in a maximum fine of three times the combined value of the ship and its cargo applicable to: failure to comply with a pollution prevention officer's orders or directions; sections dealing with evidence of financial responsibility by the owner of the ship or its cargo for civil liability purposes; regulations dealing with fitting, maintenance, testing and use of electronic and other navigational equipment; infractions and maximum quantities of pollutants; loading procedures; navigation practices; records to be kept on ships and certificates showing compliance with the act and regulations, and on and on. The proposed bill, containing one single nucleus of a deterrent, would presumably hope to cover this wide variety of possible offences. It would encompass everything.

There have been a number of major pollution incidents over the past decade which have focused international attention on marine spills, such as the one involving the Arrow, the Argo Merchant, and in 1978, the incident where the Amoco Cadiz oil spill drenched the holiday coastal areas of France. These events were accidental in nature and mainly the result of human error or abnormal or unusual conditions.

Unless evidence is produced showing that these types of disasters were due to criminal negligence or acts on the part of the master of the ship or other persons, action to obtain compensation for pollution damage must be taken through procedures other than the act, or other regulations and provisions, since the latter exclude accidental spills due to stranding, collision and foundering, or discharges to save lives or the ship itself.

When one considers the scope and nature of the Canada Shipping Act and the regulatory provisions which relate to oil pollution or other types of spillage, plus the types and variety of vessels subject to these provisions, it becomes quite obvious that a maximum penalty of three times the value of the ship and its cargo is not only inappropriate but excessive. As an example, this bill could mean that a ship's master who failed to keep proper records on pollutants could forfeit a $1 million cargo and a $5 million ship upon conviction for a comparatively minor offence.

The penalty could obviously be disproportionate as well where the master, owner or member of a crew has committed a minor offence, or in instances involving offences by small ships, tugs, fishing boats or pleasure craft.

There is yet another consideration, Mr. Speaker, and that refers to the possible escalation of fines implied in the proposed bill. In 1957, when the first regulations to prevent oil pollution from ships were promulgated, the penalty was a maximum $500 fine or six months' imprisonment, or both. This was raised to $5,000 in 1965 and to the present $100,000 maximum level in 1971. It is interesting to note that over this period the actual fines imposed have risen from a few dollars in 1957 to the average level today of $4,000, with the highest individual fine being $20,000. This bill would alter the current maximum $100,000 fine and introduce new levels of monetary punishment inconsistent with what is generally accepted as an effective deterrent.

With respect to the maximum fine being set as the combined value of the ship and its cargo, it is felt that problems would be encountered by the court and Crown counsel. It would devolve on the Crown to submit evidence of the combined value of the ship and cargo in order that the court know the limit of the fine that could be assessed. While this may not be an onerous process in the case of a minor infraction involving a large ship, it could be so in the case of a major infraction involving a small ship against which the court desires to impose a more severe penalty.

While it cannot be denied that, in the case of massive oil spills, the coastal state affected is not only highly concerned in protecting its resources but will of necessity seek adequate compensation for clean-up costs, nevertheless a reasonable degree of objectivity which takes into account the magnitude and nature of the offence, the circumstances surrounding it and the persons or ships involved, must be maintained.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that a key point that must be borne in mind is that the penalties to which this bill addresses itself are specifically for cases where deliberate and wilful contravention of regulations and directions of a pollution prevention officer occur. The penalties are not intended to provide any form of compensation against pollution damage to property, resources or costs of clean-up.

Another interesting point, Mr. Speaker, is that part XX of the act provides that the owner of a ship carrying a pollutant in bulk is liable for the costs and expenses of any action authorized by the governor in council to repair or remedy any condition resulting from pollutant discharge by the ship.

Such liability as referred to in this clause is not dependent upon proof of fault or negligence; but no person is liable for costs and expenses where he can establish that the discharge was caused by another person or where the cause was through an act of war, hostilities, or was of an exceptional, inevitable and irresistible character.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, this serves as a reminder that the maritime pollution claims fund, established under provisions of section 737 of the act, operates as an unsatisfied judgment fund, similar to that established in most provinces covering damages incurred as a result of automobile accidents where the driver at fault is not insured.

The proposals in this bill are, in my opinion, too general in nature to cover the national and international requirements for pollution control. If the bill should become law, it would be unfair. The bill as proposed fails to take into consideration the present diversity of legislation which has so far demonstrated its effectiveness in Canada as a deterrent. While I said I have a general sympathy for the direction in which the hon. member is going, the proposals contained in the bill are neither practical nor desirable amendments to the Canada Shipping Act at this time.

In British Columbia there is a great concern about oil spillage on the Pacific coast. One issue which has united most members from the province of British Columbia in this House is the opposition to the creation of an oil port at Kitimat. I think it is fair to say that the people of British Columbia do not want to be involved in the possibility of an oil spill in the transshipment of American or other foreign oil that would be transshipped through Kitimat to the northern tier states. This government has taken the position that it opposes the development of Kitimat on that basis.

It is interesting to note that a consortium of companies has apparently started a further drive to have Kitimat opened as an ocean-going port for transshipment of Indonesian, perhaps Arab and certainly Alaskan oil. I also understand the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) has supported the policy of the development of Kitimat as a port of transshipment of oil. He has stated he is in favour of this proposal and that if the Conservative party is elected as the government in the next election, it will proceed with this port.

[Mr. Anderson.]

I raise this because the hon. member for Victoria, for the very best of reasons, is concerned about oil spillage, while another member of the same party would support the transshipment of oil, realizing the dangers of a spill in that area.

It is all very well to talk about changing legislation and increasing fines. However, I hope the hon. member for Victoria will agree that in this situation the way to solve the problem of pollution, especially on the west coast of British Columbia, is not to increase the fines, but to not allow the port of Kitimat to go into operation in any sense, regardless of who supports it in the United States.

The reason Kitimat is being proposed at this time is the fact that by going from Alaska to Kitimat you go from an American port to a foreign port. The shipper therefore is not bound under the Jones act to use American carriers. By going from Alaska to Kitimat he can, as the hon. member mentioned, use flags of convenience. For that reason alone I have great fear about Kitimat being opened as an oil port, as well as the dangers because of the topography, because the entrance is too narrow for huge oil tankers.

Increasing fines is not the answer for the port of Kitimat. Members on all sides of this House should state that we will not develop Kitimat for the use of the United States which would have all of the benefits but none of the ecological or environmental problems. I hope the hon. member will agree that the solution to problems such as Kitimat is not increasing the fines for oil spills but by not allowing it to happen in the first place, and ensuring that the United States and the consortium interested in developing Kitimat are clearly told that members on all sides of this House will not tolerate development of the port of Kitimat.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) for his proposal to increase fines in the case of water pollution caused by oil spills, and since I am aware of the love of the hon. member for his region and the natural beauty of Vancouver Island, I understand that he must be very concerned about the possibility of pollution.

At the present time, section 752 of the Canada Shipping Act provides a maximum fine of $100,000 for any person or any ship discharging a pollutant in contravention of any regulation made pursuant to section 728. The suggestion of the hon. member to set the amount of the fine so as not to exceed three times the combined value of the ship and its cargo is certainly interesting, but its application could present many problems, and I shall try to explain some of the difficulties that could result from such an amendment.

The present legislation aims at producing a deterrent effect in the cases of massive discharge of oil or other pollutants. Such cases result in extremely high cleaning costs as well as possible and often major damage to the maritime environment and the coastal regions. In this regard, I would refer to the accident of the Amoco Cadiz on the coast of Britanny which discharged 200,000 metric tons of oil which then spread over more than 100 kilometres along the Britanny coast. As everyone will recall, this catastrophe not only destroyed marine life forms, but also chased away summer vacationers. This is one of the many such cases which greatly concern us, and such an accident could well occur along the Canadian coastline despite the action that has already been taken.

Maritime pollution is therefore a major problem and a risk that we must recognize. In this regard, these amendments would extend the penalties not only to the sections of the legislation which provide for the interdiction and control of oil spills, to the directives given to pollution prevention officers, to the proof of financial responsibility that ship owners must provide, but also to the violations of the regulations provided under the sections of part XX of the act, which concern such things as the good condition, the maintenance and the use of electronic navigation equipment, the maximum quantity of pollutants which can be shipped and the means and facilities provided for storage.

Those regulations apply also to the supplies and equipment the vessels should have for the treatment of pollutants, the storage of oil residues, to the supply, keeping and use of maps and nautical publications, to the number and qualifications of officers and crew members, to navigation practices and procedure, to the records, the process for loading and unloading the pollutants and the possession of certificates required by the law and related regulations.

I wish to say that if we apply more severe sanctions for contravening the provisions of the law and related regulations we would not take into account the different nature of offences described in this legislation. In most cases of oil spills, be it the Amoco Cadiz I mentioned earlier or the Arrow or the Argo Merchant which have been the most important oil spills in recent years, those are accidental disasters resulting most of the time from human error or abnormal or unusual conditions. Unless we have proof that such disasters are due to criminal negligence or imputable to the captain of the ship or other people, to claim a compensation we must follow procedures other than that of the law or the regulations mentioned earlier. In fact, those provisions exclude accidental spills due to leakage, collision and so on.

Compensation for damages caused by oil spills is provided by the legislation through provisions other than those I mentioned earlier. Section 734 holds responsible the owners of a polluter vessel and they have to pay all cleaning costs and expenses as established by the governor in council and the losses or damages incurred by the Crown or other individuals. In no case must there be proof of human error or negligence to establish the responsibility of the owner of a ship or cargo.

In addition to the preceding considerations, the Maritime Pollution Claims Fund, established under section 737 of the act, provides for unsatisfactory findings. This fund can be drawn upon where shipowner claims for cleaning expenditures and other pollution damages are not fully satisfactory.

In this connection, I followed with great interest the remarks by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) concerning the fund's inefficiency—or operating difficulties. I also regret that Oak Bay could not get the $300 or $400 compensation due because of regulations that are somewhat too stringent in my view, or too narrowly interpreted.

I am certain the comments made by hon. member and the bringing of this matter to the attention of the House can bring improvements and those charged with the administration of the fund will have a more open mind and somewhat less literal in their interpretation of the regulations.

As stated by my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Anderson), the act and the regulations apply to a wide variety of ships, either supertankers, tankers, bulk carriers, dry good carriers, general cargo or bulk carriers, containerships, passenger ships and what not, private yachts, tugs and other small boats registered either in Canada or abroad. It might then make for heavy administration if the penalties were extended to all such classes of ships that do not always fall into the same category, as supertankers or tankers.

When the type and variety of ships subject to the act and regulations are considered, and also the nature and scope of the regulations section, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that a fine three times the value of the ship and its cargo are considered highly excessive in a number of cases by many people in the maritime field.

Although it cannot be denied that in the case of major oil spills, the province affected is deeply concerned for the protection of its resources and claims adequate compensation for cleaning costs, a reasonable degree of objectivity that takes into account the nature and the extent of the fault as well as the related circumstances and the persons involved must nevertheless be maintained.

When minor offences are committed by small vessels, or by the captain or the crew, in such a case, Mr. Speaker, the fine would definitely be out of proportion. Although the ruling concerning the amount of the fine ultimately remains the responsibility of the court, a higher maximum penalty could indeed result in raising the fines now imposed.

I think that my colleague from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) also raised that point when he said that in 1957, when the first regulations for the prevention of sea pollution were established, the maximum penalty then was $500 or six months in jail or both. And yet at that time the maximum fines imposed by the court ranged from a few dollars up to about half of the maximum amount. In 1965 the maximum penalty was raised to $5,000 and fines up to this maximum were imposed until 1971. During this period, the average fine was approximately $1,000. Since 1971, with the enforcement of Part XX of the act, while the maximum fine is now $100,000, the biggest fine that was imposed was only $20,000 and the average has been only $4,000.

The number of investigations and the number of court actions finalized each year have not increased. While the ideal situation would be of course a total lack of violation of the law, it can be considered, Mr. Speaker, that the present level of fines is a major dissuasive factor. However, Canadian courts clearly have wide latitude to impose higher fines, should the need arise, since they use only one quarter of the maximum available.

As regards the proposal to establish a fine representing three times the value of the ship and its cargo, one must consider the problems that the court and the Crown would be facing in any action. According to the size of the ship as well as to the type and nature of its cargo, the Crown has to prove the combined value so that the court can know the limit of the fine to be imposed. If such a calculation can be approximate, it is nonetheless a complex process, particularly where the cargo is composed of different commodities.

Although the investigation should not be too costly in the case of minor offences involving large ships, it could however be expensive where smaller ships are involved in major offences for which the court could wish to impose a higher fine. Furthermore, in the case of actions against people, some of them having possibly no relation with the accused ship, as in the case of longshoremen for example, the proposed penalty seems altogether disproportionate.

According to the considerations mentioned earlier, it does not seem that the proposal in Bill C-218 is at the present time a desirable amendment to the Canada Shipping Act.

● (1750)

Again, the bill would increase the limit of the fines, which is presently $100,000, applicable for failure to comply with the act and its regulations in all areas. What does it mean exactly? It means for example that if there is discharge of one or several pollutants such as specified in the regulations, except for two which are authorized under part XX of the Canada Shipping Act, in all waters covered by the said part and regulations, that penalty could also apply to any person falling under the provisions who fails to give some evidence of financial responsibility such as insurance, salvage bond or any other kind of evidence of financial responsibility which satisfies the Minister of Transport, in the case of civil liability resulting from oil spills. In case of failure to comply with any reasonable requirement of a pollution prevention officer or to provide some information concerning the condition of the ship, its machinery and equipment, the nature, quantity and location of its cargo; as well as failure for a ship that is within waters described in part XX of the legislation to comply with any order or instruction of a pollution prevention officer about its route, the manner it should proceed to anchor and moor, if the pollution prevention officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the ship fails to comply with any regulation or that such an order is warranted to avoid pollutant spills.

Penalties are also levied in case of failure of a ship to comply with any order or instruction of a pollution prevention officer to report its position.

Mr. Speaker, in addition the higher penalties would apply for failure to comply with the regulations established under section 730(1)(c) to (1)(o) of the legislation and then it would become a little more difficult to levy such penalties respecting the fitting, maintenance, testing and use of electronic and other navigational gear.

Penalties could also be levied under section 730 for other classes of ships and the maximum quantity of pollutants that may be carried aboard such ships whether as cargo or otherwise, as well as the method of stowage of the cargo or fuel in such holds and tanks; respecting the supplies and equipment and the fitting and installations required for the handling of pollutants and dealing with any discharge thereof; respecting the method of retention of oily and other wastes by ships carrying pollutants; respecting regulations applicable to the maintenance and use of appropriate charts, tide tables and other nautical publications; respecting the number and qualifications of navigation and engine room personnel, including pilots and lookouts required to be on duty aboard; respecting procedures to be followed when pollutants are loaded or unloaded from a ship; respecting procedures and practices to be followed by persons on board ships in order to ensure safe navigation; for the supplies and equipment to be maintained by the operators of loading and unloading facilities for ships for use in the event of any discharge of a pollutant; and finally for records to be kept on board of any activities which result in or may result in the discharge of a pollutant as well as for the persons by whom such records shall be kept.

There are still other cases, Mr. Speaker, such as the prevention of the pollution of the air by ships, the establishment of compulsory traffic routes and of other shipping traffic controls considered necessary for safe navigation in waters to which part XX applies, the issue to the owner or master of any ship of a certificate that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, is proof of the compliance of such ship with the requirements of the act. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, because of all these considerations, as I was saying, I do not think it would be wise at the present time to amend the Canada Shipping Act by passing Bill C-218 proposed by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, in 1979, it is an unquestionable fact that pollution of all kinds, be it air, water or even sight pollution, is increasingly worrying the people of all countries and more particularly the people of Canada. Bill C-218, proposed to the House by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) reflects all the concerns expressed by the Canadian public, concerns which the hon. member wishes to still—and I can understand that—by means of his amendment to the Canada Shipping Act.

The hon. member for Victoria should be commended for his initiative although I, like the previous speakers, have some doubts about the possibility of implementing the propositions he made to the House.

Mr. Speaker, water is much too vital an element in the life of a nation to let anybody use and abuse it with impunity and inconsiderately. Water serves not only to generate electricity, which is indispensable for the economic development of our country and creates a great many jobs for our labour force, but it facilitates the transport of goods or makes sailing and canoeing possible; it contains resources which are a source of food and make it possible for thousands of Canadians to earn a living.

When one thinks of the enormous problems the fishing industry has been faced with over the past few years, one can easily appreciate that water pollution resulting from the discharge of oil, gas and other pollutants from ships in our waters is a very important cause of the deterioration of our marine resources.

Mr. Speaker, I can remember at least two instances of the consequences of oil spills by ships in my riding. Naturally, those accidents could perhaps have been avoided; I really do not know. Perhaps, from the technological angle, the ships involved might have been built to ensure more security, but in one case there was an accident: the ship struck a rock and unfortunately spilled gallons of oil which polluted not only the water but the beaches of the Magdalene Islands among others. In 1974 or 1975, there was a case similar to the one mentioned a while ago by the hon. member for Victoria, along Chaleur Bay, in my own parish of Carleton, and over roughly a 30-mile stretch. There was a cleaning operation, but even now traces of residue can still be found of the pollution caused by the Golden Robin. That was the name of the ship involved in the accident.

Since it is almost six o'clock, I should like to make a few remarks on the speech of the sponsor of the bill to the effect that what he is suggesting is intended to remedy the neglect of the present government. Mr. Speaker, to my mind, no federal government has ever done as much as this one to help prevent water pollution. I could name all the bills introduced by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment: the Clean Air Act which states, the legislation which indicates what to do with wastes spilled in the water. I think one can say there was no negligence. True, one could go to extremes, but in a society where private enterprise is expected to participate to such a great extent, restrictions must not be too numerous. I am surprised that the hon. member for Victoria, whose party supports private enterprise, should come and suggest such a fine, though I can understand that, in some cases, it might be reasonable where there was gross negligence. But when, by sheer accident, a ship spills oil or other pollutants without any fault on its part, I think it would be imposing a little too much constraint on this ship's owner. If we impose payment of up to three times the value, we will not see many ships navigating in our waters.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1978

DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen (for the Prime Minister) that Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned for private members' hour at five o'clock I was debating Bill C-35 which deals primarily with establishing a separate department of fisheries and oceans. I pointed out at that time that there are many grave concerns within the fishing industry at present, and now I suggest that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) should become acquainted with them.

The Canadian fishing industry can compete in world markets, but I submit it should not be handicapped by unfair competition and by a federal government reluctant to show leadership in attaining fair competition for our fishing industry. An integral part of any successful fisheries policy, I submit, must be consultation. In this matter, the road which the federal government has travelled has been paved with failure.

In 1975, for example, changes were made in the Atlantic lobster industry. Only after the recommendations were drawn up were the fishermen involved and concerned invited to participate; and then they were invited to the Citadel Inn in Halifax for one day and asked to digest some 160 pages of regulations drawn up by the minister and his bureaucrats here in Ottawa. No wonder that the fishermen claimed there has not been a real chance to participate in the decision-making process.

The lobster fishing policy of the present government is frightening—that is the only word I can use. It is frightening to read some of the letters that I receive from my constituents, men who have been fishing since they were 12 years old, and because they decided they could not make a living as lobster fishermen they had to participate in some other form of fishing. The minister and his bureaucrats have stated that the fishermen's lobster fishing licences will not be renewed, that they cannot follow two forms of fishing. The minister is saying in effect that they must starve as lobster fishermen. Let me point out that the same edict does not apply to defeated politicians. For example, we have one in Nova Scotia who was defeated, namely, the premier of that province, and they made him a Senator. He now draws senatorial pay, which is sufficient. He is also serving as president of Dalhousie university. It seems there are no restrictions on moonlighting for defeated Liberal politicians, but let a fisherman decide that he is starving as a lobster fisherman, and when he asks the minister to please renew his licence even though he must do some other form of fishing, the minister says, "No way, you cannot hold down two jobs. You must make up your mind." Those are the words he used when the scallop fishermen came here from Digby, Nova Scotia. When they came before the committee, what did the minister say? He would not even appear to meet with them right here in Ottawa, and yet he talks about consultation. The minister should hide his head in shame—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: —because he refused to consult with the people who were being legislated against by him and his department, when they came here to the capital at their own expense to meet with him and his associates. They were refused any right to discuss their problems.

We submit there was no consultation. This was evident during the committee's hearings last session on the bill to amend the Fisheries Act. At that time province after province came forward to testify they had not been consulted despite the fact that the bill dealt in part with pollution and environmental control, areas of shared provincial responsibility. Consequently, a Progressive Conservative government, which we hope to have soon in Canada, would do its utmost to maintain a close and continuing liaison with the fishermen, the industry and the provinces so that their viewpoints would be taken into account in the drafting and implementing of present and future fishery policies. No more do we want to hear the following complaint, as expressed by the Halifax Chronicle-Herald:

● (2010)

The federal officials appear disposed these days to think only in terms of handouts when it comes to maritime needs.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Thus, it is with some regret that one measures the success of this Liberal government's fisheries policies. The potential brought forth by the declaration of the 200-mile limit is enormous, but federal government inaction in fishery development could negate the achievement of optimum benefit from this limit.

Canada now has the opportunity to become the world's largest exporter of seafood products during the next decade. Because of changing factors in the industry, it should be able to increase substantially the degree of processing of fisheries products. However, without a planned and positive approach to the major policy issues facing this industry, which issues I outlined in my remarks earlier today, and the elimination of present uncertainty, many of the available opportunities may not be realized. A realization of these opportunities is critical to the creation of additional jobs and the establishment of a solid economic base for the fishing industry so that it can compete in all world markets in the years ahead.

We need a policy which would encourage investment in the fisheries by any and all Canadians. The minister has made public statements to the effect that only practising fishermen could and should invest in fishing vessels. He is on record as stating this. I cannot understand where the minister obtained such a policy. For example, does the minister believe that only bankers should own shares in banks, that only miners should own shares in mines, that only architects should own shares in buildings? The minister's proposal is ridiculous and just does not make any sense. While we on this side agree that fishermen should be encouraged to invest to a greater degree in their own ships, the fact remains that the present fleet will require a great deal of capital for replacement and expansion when appropriate. Rather than restricting the classes of investors, the government should be encouraging a broadening of the investor base. This is the concept on which private industry is based. It is the only concept which assures the greatest participation of Canadians in the growth of this important primary industry.

The minister cannot continue on his present course without bringing disaster to our area. It does not take an economic genius to realize that one cannot substantially inflate prices and costs, ban production, as the minister has done by freezing licences for the inshore fleet, the lobster fishermen and the scallop fishermen, increase taxes, and expect vigorous, healthy production. They are just not compatible. Only intellectual basket cases in the realm of economic reasoning would follow the course the minister is pursuing at present. For example, in the United States, with a population of 235 million people, the deficit this year is predicted as being $29 billion. In Canada, with a population of only 23 million people, we are facing a declared $13 billion deficit which may end up at $15 billion. This course can lead only to the total disruption of our productive capacity.

In conclusion, when the minister is free of his joint responsibilities as Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and is able to devote all his energies to our fisheries problems, I hope he will give some thought along the lines I have mentioned toward its greater progressive development.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the party to which I have the honour and good fortune to belong has long been urging the establishment of a separate department of fisheries. To that extent we welcome this bill. We would welcome it with more open arms if it were confined to the division of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment into its two component parts, environment and fisheries. But this bill is a grab bag. It has many other components with which I do not propose to deal at any great length.

The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) has spoken with experience as a background, with knowledge gained from that experience, and from close study of the problems. He spoke about the fishing problem on the east coast. I propose to deal only briefly with some of the fishing problems on the west coast. In due course some of my colleagues from the west coast will wish to make their contributions to that particular area.

In beginning my comments, I hope—and this is something of a more general nature—the minister will be able to provide the House and Canadians with some account of where we stand in our bilateral talks with the United States on the matter of fisheries and boundaries. One hears conflicting rumours as to what state the boundary talks are in, and it may very well have been decided that they should go to arbitration on the east coast. According to an announcement made approximately two weeks ago, it was decided by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), I hope in conjunction and collaboration with the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc), to leave the west coast problems aside for the time being and deal with the east coast. They are both difficult problems, and no one will deny that.

An hon. Member: What about the north coast?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Of course there is the north coast as well and the Gulf of Alaska. I do not really think the government is capable of handling these complex problems. It cannot handle our economy. It has run us into the ground on that. What sort of results will we receive out of these discussions, even with the best negotiators in the world? With the political direction they have, I doubt very much we will receive what we ought to receive out of these talks. Before the debate on second reading terminates in the House, I hope we will have some indication from the minister as to where the talks on the boundaries, fisheries and other resources stand.

On the subject of fisheries on the west coast, I will deal primarily with the environmental aspect. I feel I have an obligation to mention some of the problems on the west coast. They are current because within the next six weeks there will be a large fishery opening on the west coast, and there is utter confusion among the trollers and the gillnetters. Only today I received a telegram from the gillnetters concerning the new regulations which were issued after the gillnetters had re-equipped their vessels to go out and fish. They spent thousands of dollars to bring their gillnet equipment up to date in order to go out and fish, and now the new regulations have been issued. The same situation is hanging over the heads of the troller men.

I have a feeling that both troller men and gillnetters are small business men. Sometimes they are pretty big business men, but they are independent. These are the people this government should be encouraging rather than discouraging, and that is what is happening as a result of these regulations. Our troller men are being regulated out of business. Our gillnetters are being driven out, so that all we will have left will be employees or hands working for the companies owning the ships. They will be hands on board the ships, recruited in the recruiting halls. This is only part of the fishing industry, but an important part, made up of independent fishermen who operate trollers, and the gillnetters. They must not be regulated out of existence, but they fear for the extermination of their kind. I hope there will be a re-examination of the regulations which have been drawn up and which are condemning them to extinction.

I have in the past made a number of comments about the forestry aspects of this bill and I should like to do so again this evening. I will leave the better part of that to my colleague, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). I am sure he will draw on his experience to bring to the attention of the House and the Canadian public some of the disasters brought on by this government through its neglect of the forestry industry, and particularly by its attack on forest research programs of the current department and the department that will be taken over by the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand).

I am sure the government will be bound to reply in the usual way by stating it has done wonders for the forestry industry, yet it cuts back on a number of important forestry research programs in the interest of so called economies, short run economies, I might add.

The same can be said, of course, about cutbacks in fisheries research programs run by the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. Again, these are short-term economies. It defeats me how this government can rationalize cutbacks in research programs aimed at increasing productivity in a particular sector. I just do not and cannot understand that. I am sure the Canadian public, particularly those who have devoted their lives to these programs, will ask themselves similar questions.

If these cutbacks were related to research projects in areas where they may or may not contribute in the long run to the economy, I could understand the government taking no risks at a time of restraint. Anyone can understand that attitude. However, there are many programs at this time of restraint which could have been cut as they are not productive and do not contribute in the long term to growth and development in our economy. Yet this government chose to cut back on productive research programs. What I am saying is that when research is virtually certain to add to the GNP we should not have cutbacks, as has been the case in respect of fisheries research programs on both coasts.

Let me make one final comment on the fisheries side now that I have found out, according to this bill, that "whales is fish." They ain't, Mr. Speaker, but according to this bill "whales is fish."

An hon. Member: They are mammals.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I know they are mammals, but for the purposes of this bill and this minister a whale is a fish. This minister is going to be responsible for the Canadian attitude in respect of the whaling community of the world. For the time being, and only for the time being, he will be speaking for Canada at the International Whaling Commission. I wondered for a time whether whales would fall on the environmental side or on the fisheries side, but I discovered after looking at the small print that they fall within the purview of the Minister of Fisheries. That being so, it is no wonder, at the International Whaling Conference in London recently, Canada's attitude caused a certain amount of dismay.

Although we are no longer a whaling nation—we have not been for years but at one time we did have a great whaling fleet—Canada regularly argues in support of and votes with Japan, which is a whaling nation. Canada supports the taking of whales, that largest of the earth's mammals, although it is a fish as far as this minister is concerned. It is the largest of the earth's mammals and is on the verge of extinction. There has been practically a universal call for the cessation of whaling on the high seas. I see the minister shaking his head. Obviously he just has not been listening. He has plugs in both ears. The fact remains that Canada, although not a whaling nation, is supporting and contributing to the taking of whales on the high seas in a manner which is completely inexplicable. I will now leave the minister with his whales which he does not know are mammals, and will turn to the purely environmental aspects of this bill.

It seems to me that the department of the environment created by this bill will not really have the responsibility commensurate with the name. What the bill says is one thing, and what it does not say is another. I would draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the throne speech of October 8, 1970, in which the Governor General, in outlining the programs of the government of the day, said:

> There will be proposed the establishment of a department to be concerned with the environment and the husbanding of those renewable resources that are a part and dependent upon it, with a mandate for the protection of the biosphere.

I would draw your attention to that final phrase, "with a mandate for the protection of the biosphere."

That legislation was brought forward that year also in an omnibus bill. The bill eventually became Chapter 42, 1970 Elizabeth II. Like the present bill it was cited as the Government Organization Act of 1970. It did set up on that occasion, as it appears at page 847 of the Consolidated Statutes of 1970, 1971 and 1972, the Department of the Environment. Among the things that department was intended to do, and in conformity with the undertaking given in the Speech from the Throne, and included in its duties and powers, was the protection and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment. At that time the department covered fisheries off our sea coasts and inland fisheries.

Let me draw your attention again to that phrase "protection and enhancement", because that will come up again as we continue our consideration. First let me deal with this mandate for the protection of the biosphere. I must ask myself where the mandate is for the protection of the biosphere when the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is responsible for the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act and the Northern Inland Waters Act? Where is that mandate to protect the biosphere when the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is responsible for the Atomic Energy Control Act and, I believe, nuclear waste, a matter which we considered in the standing committee on national resources, not in the committee on the environment? The disposal of nuclear waste is an environmental concern. Is that the mandate which this minister will exercise?

I would ask also where that mandate is when the Department of Transport is responsible for the Canada Shipping Act and, more important, the oil pollution prevention regulations stemming therefrom? The Department of Transport also names a delegate to the International Maritime Co-operation Organization where pollution, among other things, is not very high on the agenda. Is this the mandate that the Department of the Environment is going to exercise?

The Department of Agriculture is responsible for the Pest Control Products Act. Is there no pollution there, and is it not an environmental concern? The Department of National Health and Welfare is, ironically, responsible for the Environmental Contaminants Act. What is the Department of Environment doing? All its responsibilities have been farmed out or have been assumed in the past by other departments. Where then is this mandate to protect, as indicated in the Speech from the Throne and as the original bill says—"the protection and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment"?

If the word is protect in accordance with the terminology in the Speech from the Throne, why was the word "protection" deleted in this particular bill and another word presented in its place? The word here is "preservation". The original bill which was passed in 1970 provided that the minister shall be responsible for "the protection and enhancement of the environment." Now we find that among the duties, powers and functions of the Minister of the Environment is the "preservation and enhancement of the environment."

I wonder if the minister understands the difference between these two words, or is there a difference in his mind? Is this just a drafting error? To my way of thinking the preservation of something as distinct from the protection of something means that we are pretty well satisfied with the way it is and we are going to preserve it as such. That is the role of the Minister of the Environment, to preserve it the way it is and, on occasion, to ensure its enhancement.

I find that particular change in terminology unusual. It occurs in both the English and the French portions of the bill. In the earlier bill on the French side it reads:

[Translation]

—the protection and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment—

[English]

In the new bill it reads:

[Translation]

—the preservation and enhancement—

[English]

This occurs not just once, but twice. It occurs not only under clause 14 which is a rewriting of section 5 of the original act, but also in clause 6, the revised version of section 6 in the original act. The Minister of the Environment in exercising his powers shall, "promote and encourage the institution of practices and conduct leading to the better preservation"—not protection, but preservation—"and enhancement of environmental quality". This may appear insignificant, but I hope the minister will be able to explain why the wording has been changed, because preservation has a static ring about it whereas protection is a more aggressive activity, to my way of thinking. I am sure that some of us will be watching very carefully to see whether he does in fact explain the distinction which must be there, or will this be another case of 74 amendments as occurred in the Bank Act?

How many amendments to the bill is the government going to bring down before we get through the committee? On many occasions we have had bills drafted and brought down hurriedly. I do not know why that is the case with this bill, but I will bet you—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hurriedly? Five years?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): How many?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five years.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): And still there will be amendments brought down by the government, and it may even change that word "preservation" back to "protection".

Mr. Alexander: You can't trust them.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No, you cannot.

Another matter I would like to draw to the minister's attention deals with pollution control. I notice among the responsibilities of the minister the responsibility for drawing up objectives and standards relating to environmental quality and to control pollution. That is in the revision of section 5. If one sets that against the mandate stipulated in the Speech from the Throne in 1970, to protect the biosphere, is the establishment of objectives and standards going to be the only role of the Minister of the Environment?

Will the minister be able to enforce the standards or will he get other departments to enforce them? How will the minister be sure that other departments will follow the objectives and standards set down by his department unless he has the whip hand in this particular bill? I understand from his little gesture that he is not too sure. If the role is simply to establish objectives and standards, I wonder where in this bill or in the original act the minister finds the power to enforce conformity to those objectives and standards.

● (2040)

In almost every bill that we consider we have a "shall" or a "may". Here we have a "may". Clause 6(2) of the bill reads as follows:

For the purposes of carrying out his duties and functions related to environmental quality, the Minister of the Environment may, by order, with the approval of the governor in council, establish guidelines for use by departments, boards and agencies of the Government of Canada—

This is a "may" proposition. Will the minister introduce an amendment to change that "may" to "shall", or is he content with the "may"? Is this to be a wishy-washy department that only has the power to exhort the other departments, and will it produce guidelines only if it feels so inclined? It may—it is not mandatory that they should do so.

In 1970 we learned that a ministry of the environment would be established with a mandate for the protection of the biosphere. That cannot be done with a "may"; the only way it can be done is with a "shall".

I must therefore ask how effective these guidelines are likely to be even if they are produced? Was this "may" intended or was it a slip of the drafter's pen? In French it is "peut". There is no obligation involved to draw up these guidelines. I do not know whether we have created a department without teeth, or have taken the teeth out of a department that was already there. It would take a longer comparison than is permitted to us of the original bill of 1970 with the bill before us today to find out whether those components of it which relate to the environment are stronger or whether they are the same and have merely been transferred. Are there any "shalls" in the 1970 bill?

I see, Mr. Speaker, that the Department of Transport is responsible for marine pollution. In committee I asked the minister if he could produce for me a list of locations of all the pollution-fighting equipment on the west coast. He was good enough to do that, and the result was a thick print-out from a computer under the name NEELS, I think it was, giving an indication of the placement of clean-up material for oil spills. The equipment listed, however, was in the hands of Esso, to clear up their particular oil spills around their off-loading docks, or of Shell or of Texaco. Despite the size of the document it was apparent to me that the extent of the government's foresight to deal with any pollution that happened on the east coast or the west coast was practically nil.

This government will not even assist those people doing research into clean-up procedures. There are two of these in my area, one related to woodchips. It is a very good system if the woodchips are dry and, of course, woodchips go up and down the coast all the time. It would require a command structure to divert those woodchips over to the spilled area. They would absorb, they would agglomerate, and they could be set on fire. Of course it will require research to prove that—I do not know whether it would be the Department of Transport or the Department of Fisheries and the Environment—and to permit some authority to divert some of the woodchips coming down the coast to the oil spill area and to see that they are spilled.

The problem of spilling them, getting them out over the oil spill, has not been solved. I do not know whether you would pull up the sides. It has been suggested that a helicopter could probably blow a lot of them off, and that is probably right. One system that is being worked on is a grab bucket which would be lowered from the helicopter. These things do not grow on apple trees, Mr. Speaker; they have to be developed, but no assistance is being given to the man who is working on this. The Department of National Defence is prepared to take him out and allow a small research project to be carried on within a boom in a contained area. He has appealed to the Department of Fisheries and the Environment and to the Department of Transport, but he does not really know where to go.

These are real problems, Mr. Speaker. Petroleum products are being shipped up and down our coast every day of the year, and one day there is going to be a disaster. There is no question in my mind about that, and we are not ready for it despite the NEELS.

Another type of experiment is being carried out. Someone has developed a form of sponge—polyurethane I think it is—which is specially treated to absorb oil and resist water. I have seen the experiment on a small scale. It is called "grab oil", which is self-explanatory. The product looks like sponge rubber. Within a matter of seconds of being dropped into a substance with oil floating on top, it sucks up the oil, leaves the water, and then the oil can be recovered. It can absorb 17 to 20 times its weight in oil, depending on the specific gravity of the oil. There is, of course, the question of storage of this sop-up equipment and the developer has put his mind to this question. It should probably be stored in Comox where it could readily be picked up and then dropped on site. The material is fairly bulky, so a system of compacting it would have to be developed to ensure easy storage.

These experiments are worthwhile, Mr. Speaker. The two people who have developed them to this point are anxious for assistance in research but they are not getting any, except from the Department of National Defence. If the cost of such research is compared to the cost of cleaning up of the Amoco Cadiz, the Torry Canyon, the Arrow and Van Lean spills, obviously it would be money well spent.

The minister may be charged with drawing up guidelines or establishing norms and procedures, but he is not charged with implementing any of this. This is the great defect that I see in the creation of the Department of the Environment as set out in the bill. I do not even see that it would be charged with responsibility of ensuring that research takes place in the areas to which I have referred. There is no indication in the bill that it is reponsible for research into the standards it sets, and for making sure that the standards are reasonable.

Another question is the standards in respect to domestic storage of nuclear waste, and I stress that, Mr. Speaker—domestic storage of nuclear waste. Are they to be developed in the Department of the Environment and submitted to the Atomic Energy Control Board for application? Does the Department of the Environment supervise the implementation of these criteria for the disposal of nuclear waste, or is that left entirely in the hands of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources? Does the Department of the Environment have any responsibility for the environmental aspects of the external sales of CANDU reactors and the disposal of the nuclear waste generated from those sales? I suspect not. Therefore I feel that the Department of the Environment as developed here, set up and put in charge of this particular minister, is not really a very effective department.

● (2050)

We also heard criticisms of the application by Norlands Petroleum for exploration drilling in Lancaster Sound. The hearings were held in October and November of last year. These criticisms were legitimately made by those who participated in hearings at Pond Inlet. Is the minister going to put to rest the misgivings of those concerned interveners? Why must financial limitations be placed on those who wish to intervene? Why were not some of the hearings held here in Ottawa? Must all interveners go into the area of Pond Inlet for their interventions?

The short notice and failure to disclose full information within the time limits are another criticism. Is the minister going to satisfy those who have levelled these criticisms? I am sure the minister has had letters from a variety of sources outlining, specifying, and setting forth these various criticisms.

There was also the pervasive feeling, and this is a strange one, among those who intervened that the applicant was going to be allowed to drill in any event unless the interveners could prove that the application would endanger the environment. Surely this is a reversal of the process of natural justice. Is it not? Surely the applicant should have to prove that his activities are not going to damage the environment. These are answers the Minister of the Environment will have to give. If not, he will certainly be asked these questions in committee.

The whole principle needs to be restated that the applicant must be required to prove that his activity will not offend any of the laws of Canada or any of the criteria, standards, or objectives set up by the ministry of the environment, and not the other way around. The interveners should not have to prove that the applicant may or might. Damage is always possible. Both sides recognize this. The burden of proof lies with the applicant.

There is another criticism. It became apparent during those hearings that some government agencies wished to appear during the second hearings. However, they could do so only if invited by the Department of the Environment. Why should they not be permitted to appear as other interveners? Possibly it is because it would destroy some of the mystique, the powers of the government, if a government department had the effrontery to interfere.

I would also like to speak about the Oceanographic Institute at Pat Bay and Bedford. I think this also falls within the Ministry of Fisheries. It could create problems. I am sorry to come back to fisheries. I thought I might have dealt with this at the beginning. I will deal with it very briefly, because my time is fast running out.

Is there not a danger that these institutes might be focused exclusively on fisheries because they come under the Minister of Fisheries, or be neglected because they fall between stools and serve a great number of departments? I hope the minister realizes they serve a great number of functions of government. They deal with ocean currents, food chains, ocean temperatures, seismic and geological work. They are also involved in international programs on atmospheric conditions. These are important. The fisheries aspects of them are also important. There is no question about that. However, there must be some way of making sure that these two important institutes, and I am glad they were not touched by the recent cuts, are given every opportunity to fulfil the functions for which they have been equipped in staff and material, and to make their full contribution to the Canadian economy.

In closing I would like to deal briefly with clause 33 of the bill because it is a weirdie.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. To do so the hon. member will have to seek unanimous consent, because his time has expired. Is there consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The wording in clause 33 of this bill may be a drafting obscurity or an intentional obscurity. Once again I ask where the mandate is to protect the biosphere? It will take some very careful comparisons to sort out those acts for which the Minister of Fisheries is responsible as Minister of Fisheries and the Environment under the old act and the Minister of the Environment is responsible for under the new act. I wonder if there are any acts for which the Minister of the Environment is responsible. Perhaps we might discover that in committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of State for the Environment.

Mr. Paproski: A little late for the news, but its okay.

Mr. Marchand: It's all right Steve, don't worry about the TV. We are doing okay.

An hon. Member: Order.

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate tonight on Bill C-35. As far as the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) and I are concerned, this is a very important step forward.

I tried to listen very carefully to the points made by the various speakers in the debate today. I will note them very carefully. Undoubtedly I will not be able to answer all the questions raised by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). As he knows, we will deal with those in committee in the greatest of detail. If I were to deal in detail with the questions he and other members raised tonight, there would be no time left.

Eight years ago the government affirmed its concern for Canada's physical environment when it proposed to parliament the creation of the Department of the Environment. That department brought together for the first time concern with the quality of the environment and concern with the sound management of our renewable resources. Today, in the light of eight years' experience, and looking ahead to the problems and the opportunities of the 1980s, the government is seeking the creation of separate departments for the environment and fisheries and oceans. This change is, first and foremost, a recognition that each of these areas is of such importance to the present and future well-being of Canadians as to require the full-time dedication of a minister of the Crown and of a distinct department.

My colleague responsible for fisheries will tell the House what has been done and what awaits to be done in the exciting areas of fisheries and the oceans. Therefore, despite a temptation as a British Columbian to speak of the great prospects for the salmon fishery, I will not speak about fisheries other than to assure hon. members that my colleague and I, and our respective departments, will continue to work in closest collaboration because of the inseparability of the fisheries resource and the health of the physical environment at large.

The past year since the decision in principle was taken to separate fisheries and environment has been an opportunity for us to think afresh about the mandate, the orientation, and the responsibility of an environment department at the federal level. We have done so in recognition of the changing environmental problems which face this nation, of the greatly enhanced capacity of the provinces to deal with the environmental concerns within their jurisdictions, of the changing nature of federal-provincial relations, of the finite nature of so many of our resources, and of the growing recognition of the need to have our economic development take place in a manner consistent with a sound physical environment. Thus, what this bill proposes is not just the division of a department but the creation of a new department of the environment to provide leadership which will enable this country to meet the environmental challenges of tomorrow.

The bill before the House would charge the minister of the environment with the formidable and positive task of preserving and enhancing the quality of the Canadian environment for the benefit of present and future generations. Three goals spring from this task. First, through his knowledge of the physical environment, and his authorities, the minister has an important responsibility for contributing to the quality of life of all Canadians, based on a society in harmony with its environment; second, he is expected to safeguard man's health and property from harmful substances and environmental changes, whether natural or man-made; third, the minister must encourage resource productivity through the conservation and wise use of renewable resources—our forests, our water, our wildlife.

There is often a perception of dichotomy, of opposition between protection of the environment and development, Canada is a growing and developing country. We need jobs for our people and we need many—though not all—of the things which jobs create. But development is not indiscriminate growth. Development must, by definition, respect the base on which it is built, since otherwise it cannot be sustained.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I see it as my responsibility to contribute to the environmentally sound development of this country; the three objectives I have stated come together in harmony around that theme. Without sustained productivity and use of our natural resources there is no development possible for this country. I am thus concerned with the use of our resources, now and in the future.

My responsibility is to help make the difficult choices, which can only be done on the basis of sound knowledge of the present and longer-term effects of man's activities on his physical environment. That knowledge lies to a considerable extent within Environment Canada, and the good judgment which comes from such knowledge will be brought to bear on all the decisions of government. The Department of the Environment will thus contribute to the economic development objectives of this government and of this country. It is the repository of data and knowledge which others fail to take into account at their peril.

An environment department with a strong environmental policy is an essential element in the whole social and economic well-being of Canada and Canadians, and it is to be strengthened by this bill.

How is this to come about? Mr. Speaker, you will see in the bill that the Minister of the Environment, in addition to his existing responsibilities, will be empowered to co-ordinate "the policies and programs of the Government of Canada respecting the preservation and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment." More specifically, we are setting forth in legislation, rather than cabinet decision, that an early assessment must be made of all new federal projects, programs and activities for their potential adverse effects on the quality of the environment. The federal environmental assessment review office, whose executive chairman reports directly to me, now has panels set up on some 20 federal projects to scrutinize their environmental acceptability. With the passage of this legislation, I propose to re-examine the environmental assessment and review process to ensure that it continues to play an ever more effective role in screening federal activities.

Earlier in this debate the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) said, in effect, that proposed drilling in Arctic waters would not be subject to environmental assessment under this bill.

Mr. Alexander: Are you sure that was what I said?

Mr. Marchand: I listened to what the hon. gentleman said. I can assure the House that this is not the case. Federal projects are considered to be those which are initiated by federal departments and agencies, those for which federal funds are solicited, and those involving federal lands or waters. Since the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would bear responsibility for seabed drilling in Arctic waters, any such proposals are subject to the review process.

It is evident that actions and regulatory activities undertaken by other departments and agencies can have a profound effect, for better or for worse, on the environment. Emissions from motor vehicles, for example, which account for half our urban air pollution, are controlled by means of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, administered by the Department of Transport. The Canada Shipping Act governs discharges from vessels. I do not propose to take that over; perhaps that is what the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich was suggesting. The Atomic Energy Control Board regulates the nuclear industry.

A section of the proposed act empowers the Minister of the Environment, on the basis of his knowledge of the physical environment, to establish, with the approval of the governor in council, environmental guidelines for use by other departments, boards and agencies of the government. This constitutes a second important lever for ensuring that the actions of the federal government itself, and of those whose activities it regulates, are taken in an environmentally responsible way.

Not all our forward-looking activity, by any means, is dependent on the new bill, but because it is relevant to a new department looking ahead to the eighties I would like to tell the House that we are re-examining in a very fundamental way our whole pollution control strategy. This examination involves a rethinking of the federal role and responsibility in environmental protection, taking into account provincial capabilities, the strong desire expressed by all jurisdictions to avoid unnecessary and costly duplication of work at the federal and provincial levels, and the requirement to look to the socioeconomic impact of all pollution control proposals. My officials will begin to discuss the new strategy with their provincial counterparts in the next few months. Depending on the outcome of those discussions, which I am confident will be welcomed by the provinces, I expect to propose to my cabinet colleagues a number of significant amendments to the legislation on which our environmental protection activity depends.

Let me say a word about federal-provincial relations in the environmental field. While the federal power is clear in respect of certain of our environmental and resource activities, such as the management of fisheries, and uncontested in others on the ground of common sense, such as the provision of weather services, a large part of the work in which we are engaged falls into that difficult area of shared or even unclear jurisdiction.

The government is determined to work out with the provinces the appropriate goals for the two levels of government in the environmental field. This re-examination should be unfettered by past positions and differences or by narrow interpretations of jurisdictional rights. We are prepared to examine what is the best division of responsibilities for today's needs, based on the criteria of common sense and economy. The basic question should be who can best do the job needed to ensure the health of the Canadian environment for the present and future enjoyment of all Canadians, and if the answer is that both the federal and provincial governments must do a particular job in shared fashion, as is often the case, we shall work out an equitable sharing of that work. I am confident that my provincial counterparts welcome this approach and will make it work.

Were time to permit, I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to many other activities of my department. I think particularly of the work of the Canadian Forestry Service, on which I had occasion to comment at some length last November 24 during the budget debate. The Canadian Forestry Service is one of the oldest and most renowned components of the Canadian government. Because of the importance I attach to the federal role in forestry I have set out new directions for the service so that it can make a direct and essential contribution to the economic development and sound environmental management of the forest resource. It is therefore very much a part of the new approach which the new department of the environment will be taking as it faces the challenges of the decade ahead.

The bill before us reaffirms the government's commitment to the preservation and enhancement of environmental quality in its broadest sense. It gives the minister of the environment a clear mandate to provide leadership and direction on environmental matters within the federal structure. I am happy to accept this challenge, and I hope this bill will receive speedy passage.

Early in his remarks the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich talked about forestry disasters. I would like him to spell out those disasters. He talked about research in forestry. I am very committed to research in forestry. If the hon. member were to examine the record he would find that not one of the research establishments across the country has been touched. We have six regional laboratories across the country. There is one very near Victoria, as the hon. member knows. There is one in Edmonton and another in Sault Ste Marie. There is one in Quebec city, one in Fredericton and another in St. John's, Research has not been touched.

Mr. Paproski: What about Petawawa?

Mr. Marchand: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) asks about Petawawa. Petawawa was enhanced. We increased the number of people at Petawawa. We accepted some of the suggestions of the Conservative party with regard to cutting government spending. We cut government spending by $2.5 billion. My department had to cut $40 million from a budget of $275 million. We listened to the suggestions of the Conservative party, and when we made cuts in my department we cut across the board. There was no area in which we could not cut, but one area which was sacred was forestry research, about which the hon. member talked. We did not cut one research lab across the country. In the case of Petawawa, we were going to close it at the beginning, but after representations from a number of people in the valley and others from across the country, we decided to keep Petawawa and to enlarge it. We are moving the Forestry Management Research Institute to Petawawa. We are moving the Forest Fire Research Institute to Petawawa.

Petawawa will become one of the foremost forest research establishments in the country. However, because of the cuts we have made, we have heard some comments from the Conservative party. They would cut 60,000 civil servants, over the next three years.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Marchand: I can check the record, and it is very clear.

An hon. Member: "Attrition" is the word.

Mr. Marchand: The record shows very clearly that the Conservative party would cut 60,000 civil servants.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No.

Mr. Marchand: I have read that brown envelopes are being sent by some civil servants to some hon. members. I would like to say to those civil servants who are passing those brown envelopes around that they had better think again. If they think they are going to get a deal from the party opposite should, God forbid, it form a government, they had better think again because 60,000 is much more than the few hundred who would perhaps eventually be let go by us, because we have said that we are going to have a very human policy in terms of the people whose positions will be declared surplus.

We will take a human position because I think this country has a very good and competent civil service. We have a good group of foresters and environmentalists, and a very good group in the atmospheric environment service. My department and this country are blessed with a competent civil service, and I was very concerned when I was informed that there had to be cuts in my department. I was concerned not only about programs but also about individuals, many of whom have given many years of their lives in dedicated service to the government. I wanted to make sure that those people in my department were treated fairly and had every opportunity to find other jobs, either within my department or elsewhere within the government. I think that is a very humane and just policy. It recognizes the great talents which exist in the civil service of our country.

The hon. member also talked about oil spills and about how we might handle oil spill disasters. He talked about NEELS, the information system we have. I think we have a very good system. We know where every piece of equipment in this country is. We know where every piece of equipment in the United States is. There is no country in the world which really has the wherewithal to handle a major disaster.

The hon. member talked about the Amoco Cadiz and the disaster involving that 153,000 ton tanker. There is no country in the world which singularly has the capability to handle that kind of oil spill. We do not—I say that very clearly—but in conjunction with the United States and with other agencies I think we could do pretty well. With the system we have in place we know where the equipment is and how we can get that equipment together.

• (2120)

With the talent and equipment that we have in Canada we are in as good a position as any country in the world to handle major disasters, things with which I have been concerned since I have taken the job of Minister of State for the Environment. My job is to prevent these disasters from occurring. I know the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) will be speaking a little later in the debate, but I understand—he can correct me if I am wrong—that he is in favour of the Kitimat oil pipeline as proposed. I understand he is on record as having said he is in favour of the Kitimat pipeline project, but if I am wrong, let him tell me so. As Minister of State for the Environment I have stated that I am not in favour of the Kitimat oil pipeline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand: I went to cabinet and got a very strong decision from cabinet in support of the presentation I made in which I stated that, on environmental grounds, we should not permit the Kitimat oil pipeline to be built. That decision still stands. I think that on environmental grounds it would be courting absolute disaster for us to suggest we can go ahead with the Kitimat oil pipeline.

The decision that I made was later vindicated by the National Energy Board when they held their hearings on whether an oil pipeline would serve Canadian needs. They said that it would not. That made me very happy because, in my view, for as long ahead as we can see, the Kitimat oil pipeline will not be built. The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River is in favour, or if he has some connection to that business which favours the building of that pipeline, that is for him to say, but if he said anything different, I would be happy to hear it, because I would be happy to have his support for the decision that I and my colleagues have made against the building of the Kitimat pipeline.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich spoke also about drilling in the south Davis Strait and Lancaster Sound, and how we handled the hearings. I suppose that he will probably be weak-kneed with respect to the letters and representations that were made to him. I receive many representations from all sides as Minister of State for the Environment. I have industry telling me, "Look at those crazy environmentalists, get them out of the way, they are standing in the way of development." On the other hand I get environmentalists telling me, "Look, you are in the hands of industry and you are doing everything industry tells you." That is a lot of bull.

An hon. Member: Careful.

Mr. Marchand: I told you that before. It is a parliamentary word, as was ruled by Mr. Speaker. Your question of privilege did not stand up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand: As Minister of State for the Environment I have said earlier that the environmental aspect review process should be my direct responsibility. We held ten days of hearings at Lancaster Sound. I think that is pretty fair. We went literally to every community. Members of the panel lived in some of the communities before the hearings were held so as to acquaint themselves with the feelings of the community and with their problems, and so that in their assessment later in their report to me they would be able to give me a fair and honest opinion of what were the concerns in those communities. That is of major importance to me. Incidentally, I will be receiving the report within the next couple of weeks and I will be reporting on it to my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner). Believe me, I will go over it with utmost care, and I will make my recommendations to the minister with utmost concern for the environment and for those people who are living in those communities and who might be affected by major oil spills.

The panel said it would be okay to go ahead with the work at south Davis Strait if certain conditions were met. That work can go ahead because, if there were to be a major oil spill, the flow of the water there could cope with it. We have set down very strict conditions under which drilling can go ahead in the south Davis Strait. They must first submit their proposal to the regulating agency, which is the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, a plan of the clean-up and how they propose to drill, in other words, an environmental plan, before they are allowed the right to drill.

An hon. Member: What about NEELS?

Mr. Marchand: What are you talking about? I told you about that before. NEELS is all right.

Mr. Alexander: Why are you so angry?

Mr. Marchand: I am not angry. I am just getting going here, Mr. Speaker.

I have covered the waterfront on environmental issues. This is a department of which I enjoy being minister. I think it is a great department. In this new legislation we have a new mandate and powers that will be given to us to reach into areas that we have not reached before in a formal way. I am looking forward to the administration of this new department and to having the new powers. I am sure that my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, is also looking forward to the new definition of powers he will have under the new act on behalf of a vigorous fisheries department which he has put together. I hope this bill will receive speedy passage and that it will go to committee shortly where we will be able to answer any questions that any member of parliament might have.

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-35 may be called in short the Government Organization Act, 1978. As we all know, no doubt, from listening to a good deal of the debate today, it has ten parts. I wish to make some remarks on the first three parts which deal with the new department of fisheries and oceans. I am really glad that finally the minister got around to doing this, something for which we have been asking for a long time and something which, as I recall, the government had promised in 1974, namely, the establishment of a separate department of fisheries.

The second part of the bill deals with the establishment of the fisheries and oceans research advisory council. I should like to say, as did my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour), that there is nothing wrong with changing the title to read the establishment of the fisheries and oceans research advisory council. It is a good thing. It is a realignment of what has been done in the past in this field. Perhaps I am naive in this because fishermen are a small minority of the total population in my riding, nevertheless they constitute one-industry communities, that is, fishing communities. Fine and decent people have to live off this hazardous occupation. Naturally such a body should be primarily dominated by scientific people.

Obviously the minister has agreed to become involved in more consultation with the fishermen to some degree. But I find it difficult to understand that the fishermen's unions or co-operatives on either coast are not represented in the 24 people who will comprise this advisory council. Also it is difficult to understand that clause 2 of the bill contains no room for fishermen from these organizations, or independent fishermen as such.

The two coasts of Canada are as different as night and day. The only common elements are the word "fishery" and the species or genus of fish. The minister should give more consideration to this fact and consult again with the fishermen. There must be some way of establishing a revolving membership as far as west coast and east coast fishermen are concerned, so that they can see the process scientists must go through when making terribly important decisions.

One does not have to know very much about any industry to realize that a basic principle of management is administration. A basic principle in the management of the fishing industry, of course, is scientific administration. The input of biologists and others is terribly important in order for us to realize the potential of certain areas, and to ensure the conservation practices of the department are carried out based upon the best available scientific evidence. It is not sufficient to have intermediaries or to send out pamphlets to fishermen and their organizations. They should be part and parcel of the research advisory council, even though they are a minority and do not have any scientific expertise. Certainly they are the best people to become involved, rather than just the officials of the department.

The Minister of State for the Environment (Mr. Marchand) referred heatedly to the division which is taking place. He feels that he will have a new mandate. Perhaps I am an amateur, but I recognize how terribly important this division is. The minister alluded to the fact that there must be close co-operation between him and the proposed minister of fisheries and oceans. As I understand it, from a pollution point of view, inland waters and fisheries will remain under the control of the Minister of State for the Environment. The minister should use his power directly, in so far as he can, and indirectly on the international joint commission between Canada and the United States, in order to clean up the inland waters of Canada as quickly as possible, particularly the Great Lakes.

We must remember how the pollution of the Great Lakes affects fishermen on the east coast. Recently these fishermen have told me that pollution from the Great Lakes is flowing into the Northumberland Strait. This is a very serious handicap to the quantity and quality of fish they are able to catch. I do not know if this is true respecting the Gulf of St. Lawrence, but I imagine that its waters would be affected by pollution in the St. Lawrence. Certainly our inland waters should be watched very closely. Not only should these waters be monitored, but they should receive the attention of the Minister of State for the Environment so that the fisheries industry can develop to its fullest potential.

As far as the proposed department of fisheries and oceans is concerned, I mention in passing that my party was in favour of its creation. I do not know if the Tories were in favour of it in 1974, but I presume they were. It has been a little over two years since the 200-mile limit was set up. The establishment of this department is better late than never. The minister is being given a mandate to zero in more radically on the existent potential of the east and west coasts.

I have had difficulty with the minister concerning some matters, and I still have qualms about vessel insurance for fishermen and so on. He has assured me that in the final analysis I will be satisfied. I hope he is correct. The fishermen in my area are concerned about the change in the vessel insurance scheme, that perhaps its effectiveness will be somewhat diminished by putting it into private hands. I realize the minister has other options available to him. I hope he deals with this subject when he participates in this debate.

There are other areas which will be disputed concerning the management of fish stock and the licensing procedure. These matters were referred to by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). The fishermen in Cape Breton realize that perhaps one cause of the depletion of the lobster fishery in Richmond is the existence of the causeway on the Canso Strait. Those who are more active on a regular lifetime basis in the lobster industry are being approached in an attempt to protect the depletion of their resource. The government is tightening up or freezing licences in order to restrict the occasional or casual fisherman. Many fishermen feel the department has a moral obligation to buy back these licences at a fair price, since they were purchased in the past by independent fishermen, with the consent of the department. One must remember the money these independent fishermen invested.

I realize the questions I have raised this evening are not easy ones. I sympathize with those people who have become involved in the fishing industry on a part-time basis along with holding down other jobs. Now they find themselves faced with a change in circumstance. I am not saying that the policy is a bad one. Perhaps it will be a good one in the long run and will protect the lobster industry. But I feel everything possible should be done to buy back these licences and to make an arrangement to reimburse to some degree the fishermen who have invested in equipment and licences.

I am not saying that the minister and the department have not attempted to do somehing. I am just saying I have the feeling, from talking to the fishermen, that they have not gone far enough in this regard. I realize the minister has to operate within a budget, like the minister of every other department, but it is only in recent years that his budget has been growing fast enough, especially with the establishment of the 200-mile limit and with everyone beginning to see the great potential.

Having made that kind of constructive criticism, I want to pay the minister a compliment. It is not usual for members of the opposition to pay compliments to the people in power or to those in the official opposition when they do good things. By and large I think we are pretty fiery about some things, particularly about the way the Atlantic region has been treated by successive governments of this country. I have in mind particularly my own area, Cape Breton.

Let me say to the minister that, generally, I do not hesitate to say that I think he has begun to take on the large corporations in the Atlantic region, although I disagree with him in certain aspects.

Some of my fishermen at times get really bitchy about the whole licensing procedure. I hope that word is parliamentary, and I assume it is as it is in the dictionary. They also get upset about other policies, and I will be talking about the snow-crab licensing policy in a little while. Having talked to the offshore fisherman it is my opinion that this minister has attempted to take on the large corporations. Even a minister of fisheries in Nova Scotia, a very likeable and personable man, wrote a pretty strong and severe letter to me intimating that I was too much on the side of the federal government in this issue. This is a social and philosophical issue and I compliment the minister for his efforts, even though I disagree with him as to detail of policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hogan: As a member of a socialist party who believes, like every other member of any socialist party in the western world, that we must have a strong private sector, I realize we are living in a mechanized economy in which large corporations concentrate control in an effort to maximize profits. Let us take for example National Sea Products and the Nickerson Company. Their operations are carried on by very fine human beings, but the policies they advocate in the long run do not benefit 80 per cent of the fisherman in the inshore fisheries in the Atlantic region. I think the minister has grasped this situation. The policies they advocate benefit the large corporation. What is involved is not just private enterprise but, in addition, government controls. These fellows want to grow big and fast, and I refer to National Sea Products and Nickerson. They want a heck of a lot, and I almost used an unclerical word. They want government money before we are even sure that the fish stocks are being conserved and built up. Probably this is the nature of human beings. Certainly it seems to be the nature of private enterprise, which is concerned primarily with maximum profits.

These people do not take into consideration the social consequences which are so crucial in the Atlantic region, as pointed out by the hon. member for Humber-St George's-St. Barbe. There are about 2,000 part-time, full-time and occasional fishermen in Cape Breton. Most of them are part-time fisherman, just as the hon. member from Newfoundland suggested in respect of Newfoundlanders this afternoon.

The federal government has a primary responsibility in fisheries under the BNA Act, but there is room for diversity of views and for greater consultation with the provinces. I suggest there is perhaps room for a greater provincial share of responsibility in some aspects of fisheries. Nevertheless, it seems to me that in the long run, if not in the short run, the best economic policy would be for the federal government to pursue basic principles of management of fisheries in the Atlantic region.

The basic social principle is one of protecting inshore fisheries. This is particularly true when you remember that it is the inshore fisheries in the maritime provinces that support 80 per cent of our fisheries, helping to keep these communities together. I am not suggesting all these communities can be kept together.

There is a very strong economic argument or point of view that we should centralize in order to facilitate the large factory ships. To some extent they are taking species not ordinarily caught by our Canadian fleet. You can get too much of what appears to be a good thing from the point of view of the large corporations in that they are increasing production and making the industry more capital intensive, yet in the long run this creates all kinds of severe economic and social problems.

I have been observing the situation and have written to the Combines Investigation Branch to determine whether the Nickerson takeover of National Sea Products was within the law. I know the minister could not do much about this, but it is disheartening to know how long it takes before getting an answer from that branch. They keep telling me this is of high priority, and something about which they are concerned. They use a lot of technical language which does not give me any idea how the matter is progressing. It seems to me that the dominant policy and concern has to be in respect of inshore fisheries, without suggesting that the offshore fisheries are not important to the Atlantic region and to the nation. There is a question of emphasis and a question of philosophy and social principle involved. In the long run I would say the matter of economics is important. I commend the minister for keeping these fellows at bay. I have in mind those "too big, too fast" people, as I am wont to call them.

Recently we held a seminar of fishermen on Cape Breton Island. About 120 fishermen attended. As I said earlier, we have about 2,000 fishermen on Cape Breton Island, in about 110 communities. I thought I should mention that during this debate because the fishing industry has been very vital in the past and I expect will continue to play a vital role in the future, even though coal is the most important resource in Cape Breton, with the steel industry also being a vital entity.

I have pleaded the case of the inshore fisheries rather successfully with Devco, and they are beginning to see the great potential for fishing in that area. Last year, for example, they had landing figures of 56,000 metric tons which had a total value of $18 million. That may not seem like a lot to some, but when one looks at the figures for the province of Quebec, which had a total landed value last year of $29 million, it is quite significant for a small island like Cape Breton. It reinforces the idea that there might be potential development which could be tapped in a very serious way, with the co-operation of the federal and provincial governments, Devco and, of course, the fishermen.

One of the comments at our seminar made by the maritime director for the federal fisheries department, Mr. Doug Johnston, was to tell the fishermen that they will not get participation in the industry unless they come together. It has become fashionable, for many reasons, to be anti-union, mostly because people are leaning more to the right and because some unions have abused their powers.

There were two priests in Nova Scotia some 50 years ago who had a philosophy, which I inherited, because I was brought up in the tradition of the St. Francis Xavier Antigonish movement, respecting co-operatives. They were considered to be communists, just as we in the New Democratic Party are considered by the extreme right-wingers as being proponents of the communist line. These men went about organizing the fishermen and, as a result, many co-operatives were formed.

I personally lean strongly toward that philosophy, but after 50 years there are still many fishermen who are not organized into co-operatives and who do not want to be. I think that this is primarily the jurisdiction of the provincial government, the whole question of unions and the civil aspects of the BNA Act, and the minister should use every occasion in this regard. I know that he has said this publicly, and that he does not want to come out for unions because a province such as Nova Scotia may set up such an association and pour $40,000 or $50,000 into it. To my mind this is the old situation of company unionism. It is very difficult to unionize independent fishermen, but if they are not going to form co-operatives, I believe this is their best alternative. It will give them a united voice in dealing with the ministry of fisheries at the federal level and having some control over the future management and development of the fishing industry.

Having made that point, I am not saying there should be compulsory unionism, but that there is something wrong with the philosophy of the provincial governments of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. It does not mean that they have to join a union, but at least give them the right. After all, this is a democratic society, and if the fishermen decide to follow this course of action, then surely the provincial governments have the moral responsibility at least to say, "Look, we can no longer bar these people from the right to organize." Perhaps I am overdoing the point, but I believe it is important because there is no other way whereby we will get development in the fishing industry in the Atlantic region, both inshore and offshore, unless there is some kind of organization.

The snowcrab landing industry on the gulf side of Cape Breton has the potential of becoming the third fishery delicacy category in Nova Scotia after the scallop industry, which I believe has a value of approximately $58 million, and the lobster industry which has a value of $26 million. In Cape Breton last year there were 66 so-called exploratory licences given out for the snowcrab fishery. The figure for landing which was given to me at the seminar was $1.7 million.

This year there are 200 fishermen looking for a licence. We cannot have everybody rushing in, and there must be some form of restricted entry. It seems to me that the most equitable way of giving out these licences would be either through individual quotas or changing seasons. There could even be a modification of the size limit. There is here a potential source of discord between the fishermen and the federal Department of Fisheries if this is not handled well.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I think all elements of the industry should co-operate. It is not a contradiction to say that I want unionization or that I do not want the big corporations to take over. One cannot talk out of both sides of his mouth and say that he wants monopoly or semi-monopoly conditions, and at the same time argue for free enterprise, but that is what some are doing when they say that they want these large corporations to concentrate to such a degree that they will be able to control the pricing, marketing, and production of the fisheries in the Atlantic regions. Mr. Speaker, I call it ten o'clock.

Adjournment Debate

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—SALARY PAID TO NEWSREADER KNOWLTON NASH

Mr. Marke Raines (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, on December 8, 1978, during question period in the House I put a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) on the reported salary of Knowlton Nash, the reader of the 11 p.m. National News on the CBC. First of all I asked how much the salary paid to Mr. Nash was, and I did not get an answer. I hope to get an answer tonight, Mr. Speaker.

I asked how the salary, rumoured to be $85,000 to $90,000 per year, could be justified. Even if we were not in a time of austerity—even if we were not trying to fight inflation at this time when workers everywhere are being asked to hold back on salary demands—such a salary for reading a 15 or 20-minute newscast five times a week, would be incredible. The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) does not make $85,000 or $90,000 per year. That is more than just about anybody in Canada makes. That the management, the hierarchy of the CBC, should be so far removed from reality, is cause for great concern.

This is only the latest incident in the long history of the CBC's overspending and mismanagement that has strained the patience of the Canadian public, and of members of this parliament. I am calling for a complete public inquiry, financial and otherwise, into the operations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I am very curious about what they do with the half billion dollars they are gifted with each year by the Canadian taxpayer.

The CBC have made much of the fact that they are going to get $71 million less than they asked for, as a result of the latest budgetary cutbacks. The CBC asked for $593 million and are only going to get $522 million. Why, when they get so much of the taxpayers' money, are they virtually indistinguishable from the other Canadian network, that is, CTV?

I believe that when corporations, or people, get money from the public purse they should be accountable for that money. To me, what appears to be government policy of handing out taxpayers' money to any person or corporation, without accountability, is preposterous. It leads to bad management, inefficient operation, and a waste of money that is intolerable.

I think it would be worthwhile, Mr. Speaker, to read into the record portions of the Broadcasting Act of 1968, which was agreed to by all parties in the House of Commons.

Section 3(b) reads as follows:

the Canadian broadcasting system should be effectively owned and controlled by Canadians so as to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada;

That broadcasting policy continues, as set out in section 3(d) as follows:

the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should be varied and comprehensive and should provide reasonable, balanced opportunity for the expression of differing views on matters of public concern, and the programming provided by each broadcaster should be of high standard, using predominantly Canadian creative and other resources;

The act goes on to say in section 3(g):

the national broadcasting service should

[Mr. Hogan.]

(i) be a balanced service of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and tastes covering the whole range of programming in fair proportion,

I am sure that every Canadian would agree with the aims of the act, Mr. Speaker, but I also know that the CBC has been found wanting. As the member of parliament for the constituency of Burnaby-Seymour, I want the very best in broadcasting, Canadian and foreign. I believe that Canadians want their own national broadcasting service—as the CBC was set up to be—but Canadians are no longer willing to support a nationwide system of self-styled executives in broadloomed offices, safe in their lifetime jobs.

What we need in Canada is a quantum leap in communications. Quebec had its "quiet revolution." We need a quiet revolution in Canadian broadcasting. I am not talking about some timorous half-hour cooking show or some boring situation series. I mean a renaissance of information, of participation, of bringing out the best of the many cultures that make up Canada—a climate for interest in things other than the purely commercial.

I have had much communication, as we all have, with Canadians on this subject. They want programs that the entire family can watch at any hour of the day or night, without obscenity, and without the kind of senseless violence that has come to permeate the television screen.

So important is broadcasting, I believe, that we could change for the better the future of Canada, through better communication. I do not exaggerate when I say the future of Canada may depend on this.

Besides an inquiry and a complete reorganization of the CBC, I believe there should be a major inquiry into the entire broadcasting system in Canada. How far have broadcasting stations been allowed to stray from the promises they made when they were granted their licences? Why has broadcasting, which could be such a powerful medium for service, for understanding, for entertainment, deteriorated to the point where a broadcasting licence is now regarded simply as a licence to make money, in many cases?

The technology of the satellite age will have a widening impact in the next ten years, in television and in education. Broadcasting in Canada needs a whole new long look. In spite of the Canadian content regulations, broadcasters have not succeeded in giving talented Canadians an outlet. The attitude seems to be to throw on any old thing that is remotely Canadian, just to fulfill the requirement.

I must say in a number of instances the quality and integrity of the budgets of Crown corporations are insufficient to provide to the government and parliament information by which Crown corporations may be controlled and their performance assessed. As a member of the broadcasting committee since 1974, I can say that I and other members have received insufficient information on the budget of the CBC.

May I ask again tonight the question and now be told the exact salary of Knowlton Nash? I trust we will also learn of the fringe benefits as well. Will the Department of the Secretary of State now take steps to ensure that the CBC uses its money more judiciously? Will that department use moral suasion and ensure that funds granted to the CBC, to wit, more than $500 million a year, will be used for furthering the broadcasting policy agreed to by all members of the House in 1967 and 1968?

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): As hon. members know, Mr. Speaker, parliament established the mandate of the CBC and annually votes the amount of money within which the corporation must operate in seeking to fulfil this mandate. It is the responsibility of the corporation and its board of directors to manage its operations in such a way as to maximize the carrying out of this parliamentary mandate. In its day to day operations the CBC must compete in the industry in which it operates, and therefore must pay competitive rates in order to get the people it requires.

In the specific case of those matters relating to the appointment of Knowlton Nash to his new position, they are the subject of arbitration arising out of a grievance filed by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, and it would be improper for the CBC to comment on any aspect of Mr. Nash's appointment. This position is reinforced by the fact that the parties agreed that the arbitration proceedings would be held in camera, and the CBC has not received a copy of the arbitration report to this date.

SOCIAL INSURANCE—USE OF SIN

Mr. Jack Hare (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the hope of obtaining a more satisfactory answer to a question I posed to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Abbott) on December 11 regarding the use of social insurance numbers as identification devices in the processing of Canada Savings Bonds.

The question was based on a letter written by the previous minister of national revenue to a constituent in St. Boniface in which he stated that persons who did not wish to disclose their SIN when purchasing bonds could "invent a number themselves, or a number would be assigned to them by the bank." The then minister of national revenue cited a press report of an interview with a Bank of Canada information officer named Ralph Hager, now retired, as the source of this policy statement. I am tabling this press report along with the letter in which the former minister makes reference to it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) has already acknowledged the confusion of the above suggestion regarding SIN.

I believe this haphazard from bottom to top type of decision making, particularly when it is concerned with an area as sensitive as the use and possible misuse of social insurance numbers, to be scandalous in the extreme. It reflects this government's total lack of interest, and ambivalence toward the question of social insurance numbers, and the government's lack of concern for the privacy of our citizens.

The government and its agencies have claimed in defence of the use of the SIN that it has not been requested for any reason other than to promote administrative efficiency. This is a dangerous misunderstanding of the situation, in my view, because it begs the question of just how far the use of SIN as identification devices can be justified by the need for bureaucratic efficiency.

The Bank of Canada needs an identification device to identify holders of Canada Savings Bonds. Many other government departments and agencies, as well as countless private organizations, are making use of numbers or identification devices in order to carry out their responsibilities. Efficiency demands that some form of numerical device be used in many areas, but while recognizing the importance of efficiency we must not forget the basic right of every citizen to personal privacy. I am not at all convinced that the social insurance number is the only method of identification available, but I am convinced that it must not become so.

My alarm about the future use of social insurance numbers is well founded. Already we have seen the use of these numbers extend far beyond the social security application specified in the 1964 legislation. Five government departments are using the SIN as the prime identifier or registration number in their information banks. The Public Service Commission uses the social insurance number for all its files. Confidential information on every employee is theoretically at the fingertips of everyone knowing the relevant social insurance number. Moreover, this knowledge is progressively easier to obtain, given the widespread use of the number.

Use of the SIN by numerous government agencies and Crown corporations has also been documented. The Canadian Transport Commission uses it to identify domestic charter passengers; the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation uses these numbers for employee identification; they are required for access to all files of the Canadian Penitentiary Service and the National Parole Service. Provincial governments are also using the social insurance number with apparent impunity. School children are being registered under the SIN in Ontario and Saskatchewan—even newborn babies in Prince Edward Island. If this were not enough, the private use of social insurance numbers by corporations and other organizations has been expanding at an alarming rate.

All of this is being done in the name of efficiency, and in a very arbitrary fashion, I suspect. I suggest that the SIN is not the only identification device available to the governments and private organizations presently using it. In my view it is irresponsible to resort to using the number when no other method of identification has been tried.

The SIN was not intended to become a multi-purpose ID number, and it should not become one. Widespread use of it threatens the individual privacy of Canadians. Yet, judging from the evidence I have submitted, as well as that put forward by several of my hon. friends on this side, the question of personal privacy in the face of the pervasive use of social insurance numbers has not even been considered by this government. Efficiency seems to be its only concern. This attitude is alarming because it can be applied to any of the various departments. We have reason to speculate that whenever objections to the disclosure of one's social insurance number are raised, the government will dredge up the efficiency argument. Individual privacy will thus be reduced, chip by chip, in favour of efficiency, so-called.

Recently, on November 2 of last year, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) said the government was drawing up guidelines to prevent misuse of SIN as universal identification cards. However, he stated that there is no deadline for doing this, and he gave no undertaking that the government would stop the use of the numbers outside the social service and taxation areas for which they were originally designed.

● (2215)

Most federal cabinet ministers foresee greater use of social insurance numbers. The Minister of Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has stated on several occasions that there will be more and more use of the SIN. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan) has encouraged the use of the SIN. Going back to October 25, 1972, the Toronto Globe and Mail reported that our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated his personal belief that at some point in the future, compulsory—I repeat, compulsory—identity cards will be required of all Canadians.

Thus, the policy of the present government is more numerical control over the private citizen. This is absolutely contrary to the policy of a Progressive Conservative government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Hare) does not seem to understand certain aspects of this matter. I shall try to explain them to him.

First of all, he should realize that the sales of Canada Savings Bonds does not come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Revenue. These savings bonds are sold through the Bank of Canada. The bank has records containing the names of millions of purchasers of these bonds and is now in the process of computerizing these records. Since it is necessary to use an identification number to distinguish among the various bondholders and since this number will be needed for the computerized records, the officials of my department have been informed that the bank will use the social insurance number of the purchaser if the purchaser provides it. Otherwise, it will have to program the computer so that it will produce a unique number which will be used for this purpose.

[Mr. Hare.]

The letter mentioned by the hon. member perhaps gave the impression that the purchaser would be able to provide the identification number of his choice. Of course, this procedure cannot be used since it would be quite possible for two or more purchasers to choose the same number, which would cause bookkeeping problems.

Recently, when the hon. member asked a question of the Acting Prime Minister in the House, he seemed to be confusing the cashing of the bonds with the charging of interest on these bonds. This may explain how he could confuse the matter of choosing a unique identification number for bookkeeping purposes by the Bank of Canada and the requirement to provide a valid social insurance number when cashing in the coupons.

The interest on Canada Savings Bonds is taxable under the Income Tax Act. This law also provides that social insurance numbers should be used to identify income tax forms and records. Moreover, it stipulates that when the interest coupons on the bonds are cashed in, a social insurance number must be recorded in the report on the interest paid by the cashing agent, generally a chartered bank in that case. This bank must prepare and send to the department some particular forms called T-3 or TP-3, depending on which level of government is involved, either federal or provincial.

If the taxpayer does not provide his social insurance number, the cashing agent must, under the law, withhold 25 per cent of the interest due. This sum is credited to the taxpayer's account, and if it is not used to pay an outstanding balance in taxes, he will get a refund when he fills his income tax return form for the current year.

I admit that all this may be somewhat technical and difficult to understand, but I can assure the hon. member that the whole operation does not violate in any way the citizens' rights.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—FRANCOPHONE SUMMIT MEETING—DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) last December 18 arose as a result of reports that France refuses to attend any meeting of Francophone nations that excludes Quebec as a participating state. Apparently France, with its customary realism, does not accept or recognize Canada as a Francophone state.

All I can say is that it is too bad that our government and our major political leaders are not as realistic. We have had more than a decade of effort on the part of the Liberal government to turn Canada into a Francophone country. The results, to my mind, are frightening, in terms of national unity at least.

Apart from the Official Languages Act, we have seen the labelling legislation and the broadcasting policy designed to spread two languages across the land, whether or not they are wanted or needed. I would suggest the metric system is also being forced on this country at great cost and dislocation to many parts of the economy, for the same reason. We have even heard of French being used in answering consular telephones in Australia.

Of course the Liberal party is not the only party striving to give Canada a French accent. We have the efforts of the Progressive Conservative party to change our ways in this very chamber to correspond to the ways of France. I refer, of course, to the practice of clapping which was introduced by the Progressive Conservatives in this chamber last fall. It is interesting to note where this practice originated, and in this connection I should like to refer to the Montreal Gazette issue of Wednesday, December 15, 1976, in which appeared the story about the new national assembly which was elected there on November 15 of that year.

Apparently the new government in the province of Quebec introduced the idea that members should clap in the chamber of the national assembly, instead of thumping their desks as had been the custom previously. The article states:

> The applause itself marked another change in style introduced by the Parti Québécois, complementing a slow conversion from British to French parliamentary tradition.
> Government MNAs clapped their hands to exhibit approval instead of thumping their desk tops, a practice adopted from France's national assembly whose name was appropriated by the Quebec legislature under the Union Nationale government of Daniel Johnson.

My concern is that the efforts of the Government of Canada to turn our nation into a country which would entitle it to attend a Francophone summit or Commonwealth conference would be akin to the old saw about the great surgeon who was asked about the results of one of his heroic procedures, to which he replied that of course the operation was a great success but unfortunately the patient died.

I therefore call upon the government to cease its efforts to change the ways of our country by trying to force feed its misconceived ideas about language and culture on an unwilling population.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of a Francophone summit meeting has indeed been shortly discussed during the conversations which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had in Paris with the President of the French Republic on December 8. As a matter of fact, this is an idea which was put forward over ten years ago by various African heads of states, including President Senghor of Senegal, an idea in which Canada and our Prime Minister have shown a great deal of interest. We feel that periodical meetings of heads of states or of leaders of fully or partly Francophone countries could foster better understanding among nations and make a real contribution in the search for solutions to international problems.

For that matter, Mr. Speaker, such an organization could in a way establish itself on the model of what was formerly known as the British Commonwealth and which has become simply the Commonwealth, which has served for many years as an international forum for the exchange of ideas among representatives of nations from the four corners of the world.

As for participation in a future Francophone summit, most countries share the position of Canada that each individual country should decide its mode of participation. Since important international issues would be raised at these meetings, Canada feels that the head of the Canadian government should take part in them.

On the other hand, France has clearly indicated that it could hardly participate in a summit from which Quebec would be excluded. France's position is not to exclude Canada, but it concerns our form of participation. On that point, it is obvious that our stands are incompatible. As for the form and content of a possible Francophone summit, it would seem essential that there be a wide consensus among the countries which might be interested before this project gets off the ground.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we believe that this idea should be well thought out until the conditions that would allow for a successful Francophone summit are met. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) took this opportunity to voice to the House his antipathy and his hostility towards the French fact, but he is at least honest enough to say clearly and out loud what unfortunately several, not all but several, of his former colleagues think to themselves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

APPENDIX

THE PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS AT THE INSTALLATION OF EDWARD SCHREYER AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA OTTAWA, JANUARY 22, 1979

Your Excellency,

It is a great pleasure to extend to you, as you assume the office of Governor General, an assurance of the warmest good will of the Government, Parliament and people of Canada. In their name, may I ask that your first official act be to convey to Her Majesty, the Queen of Canada, a message expressing our loyalty and affection.

[Translation]

You are taking on the responsibilities of your high office at a challenging time for Canada, and a no less challenging time for its Governor General.

The scope of that challenge is the true measure of both the trust which the citizens of this country place in your hands, and of their lively confidence that you will be a wise and helpful steward of that trust.

At first glance, the prerogatives of the Sovereign and of Her representative in our parliamentary democracy seem startlingly simple: the right to be consulted, to encourage and to warn.

But on closer examination, what a wealth of potential for furthering the common good lies hidden in those simple words. What great opportunities for helping to create and define the evolving spirit of a dynamic nation can be discovered in that simple description of your office.

Canadians look to their Governor General as a person of stature, broad experience, and commitment to Canada, a person whose insight and breadth of vision can lead us all to a deeper appreciation of the values we share, the greatness of character we have inherited, and the destiny which can be ours if together we will it into reality.

Above all, we look to you to help lead us toward a keener awareness of the strength and value of our country, its people, its system of government, and its rich history of achievement. Upon that awareness can be built an even stronger Canada, with a renewed commitment to individual liberty, and shared opportunity.

[English]

You and your office are therefore a potent symbol of our unity and united purpose, and a symbol as well of the many streams of humanity which flow together into a uniquely Canadian experience.

Your commitment to public service, demonstrated as a Member of Parliament and as Premier of Manitoba, together with your thoughtful perspective on this country's problems and opportunities, eminently suit you for the role you are about to play.

Canadians have two special reasons to look to your term of office with more than the usual sense of anticipation. For the first time, the meaning of Canada will be expressed in a vice-regal voice tinged with a truly western accent.

We will hear about ourselves and our potential from the vantage point of one who identifies strongly with the open spaces and open people of the west—with their history of pioneering struggle to set down new roots in a new land. We will be hearing from a man who shares the pride of the Canadian west in its achievements, and the enthusiasm of western Canadians to tackle the problems of further development.

The second reason why we look upon your appointment as an event of historic importance is that, again for the first time, our first family will represent those millions of Canadians who trace their ancestry to countries other than Great Britain or France.

I share with countless others the well-founded hope that you will help lead all Canadians toward a deeper understanding of the richness and variety of our cultural heritage.

Personally, I look forward to my weekly meetings with you, because I know that a man who has known the joys and anguish of elective office will offer unusually well-informed advice.

On behalf of Canadians everywhere, I thank you for accepting the responsibilities which are now yours.

I wish to acknowledge as well the great debt of gratitude which we owe to Her Excellency, Mrs. Schreyer. We are all mindful of the fact that, in supporting your decision, she has herself willingly assumed an equal share of your official responsibilities, and an equal share of the resulting personal sacrifices.

To both of you, and to your children, we extend our best wishes for many happy years in Ottawa.

May all your days in your new home be filled with joy and peace. May duty be a pleasure. May God grant you satisfaction and fulfilment in the service of Canada.

REPLY OF HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL TO THE ADDRESS OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Prime Minister,

I shall be honoured to carry to our Gracious Sovereign Queen Elizabeth II the tidings of loyalty and affection which you have entrusted to me on behalf of the Canadian people. In accepting this task, I convey to you my determination to carry out those responsibilities which she has entrusted to me on Her behalf.

My wife, Lily, and I are grateful for the welcome and for the kind words you have expressed to us. We shall always cherish them.

[Translation]

I realize I am accepting a responsibility and honour that has been accorded to only four other Canadians. I am following in distinguished steps, and not only theirs. My lifetime has spanned the decades from Lord Tweedsmuir to the Right Honourable Jules Léger. Those who served Her Majesty as Governor General in those years brought great and varied distinction to the office. I pray I am equal to this task, to this office and to this time.

All previous Governors General of Canada have symbolized for Canadians that stability and continuity of national life and institutions so necessary to any cohesive civilization. This need is all the greater in a society whose very essence is the diversity of its culture and the vastness of its geography, in the society that is our Canada. The task is clear: the task is real.

[English]

As I undertake it, I have already received thousands of messages of good will and support. My wife and I are encouraged by them. In the coming days and weeks we shall seek continued support from all who care about Canada—and they are legion, whether Canada for them is the land of their ancestors or the land of their choice. All these Canadians, this blessedly overwhelming majority in every province of Canada, will provide, with the help of providence, a yearning for the preservation of one Canada that will not be frustrated, a wisdom that will not be denied. Canada remains our transcending objective. The reasons, both in our spiritual and in our material well-being, are self-evident.

[Translation]

It is with profound sadness that I note a minority view that does not acknowledge that in an enlightened federal Canada there is scope for the fullest expression of cultural and linguistic heritage. The preservation of our country's economic capacities and its weight in the councils of the world surely need not be sacrificed in order to achieve a greater measure of freedom. The freedoms we now share and cherish are equal to the best of countries on this planet. They are surpassed by none. They can be greater still. It is not necessary to break the bonds of our common history to do so.

For, whatever our origins, wherever we live in Canada, we have all contributed to the building of this country. Each Canadian, though unable truly to realize the greatness of the collective achievement that is unfolding, is playing his part. I would recall the eloquence of my predecessor, the Right Honourable Jules Léger, in this regard:

> This might be said of generations of honest and unassuming people of Quebec, who have always been faithful to their homeland, having no other and seeking no other. Men of the land, men of the sea, of the church and of business, I pay them warm tribute for without their courage and tenacity the Canada we know today would not exist. They lived their lives along the shores of the mighty river that bore their ancestors and shaped their destiny.

The faith of our history is borne in these, the words of a man of wisdom and patriotism and exemplary courage, who well understands the importance of French-speaking Canadians to our broadening mosaic. I can only concur with these words. They capture the pride we share in our diverse origins and the recognition we share that in those origins lies the source of our striving toward the larger horizons of spiritual tolerance and material progress that come with a larger unity.

[English]

To this, I must add the bringing to this new land, first to the Atlantic and then the central provinces, much more than a century ago, of British parliamentary institutions and English common law and jurisprudence. The stability and magnanimity of the English-speaking peoples who came to these shores is another great stream of our history.

But in the confluence of these two great streams that have shaped our Canadian character must surely be seen the force of two additional tributaries adding to the majestic flow of our culture and civilization. One is, of course, our brothers and sisters, Inuit and Indian. They constitute a group of Canadians who are caught between their traditional ways and contemporary opportunities. Whichever course they choose will bring grave difficulties for those involved, for those working with them.

The other stream is that multiplicity of groups that chose Canada or whose ancestors chose Canada. I know their contribution to Canada. The ethnic mosaic has made for a more colourful and interesting Canadian way of life. Those who make up this mosaic share the goal of retaining the clarity of that mosaic, for in the clarity of their cultural distinctiveness lies its beauty.

There is also shared experience—the shared experience of adversity. Whether we think of the earliest habitants, or the coureurs des bois; of the United Empire Loyalists of Upper Canada or the Maritimes; whether we think of the Scottish fur traders of the northwest, or that incredibly small pocket of English and French-speaking settlers known as the Red River Colony at the Fort Garry and the St. Boniface Missions; whether it be the Icelandic-speaking settlers after 1870 or German-speaking Mennonites and Hutterites at the same time—one the victim of nature, the other of human persecution; whether it be central European immigrants pulling their belongings across the untilled Prairies by sheer physical exertion or the frustration of the Indian and Metis fearing the loss of hunting grounds, and the coming of malnutrition, pestilence and disease, in all this history one word stands out—adversity. Our problems of today are as nothing. To succumb to pessimism, to allow fragmentation, to accept the shattering of the Canadian mosaic is to break faith with all who endured so much to build so well what we have today.

What we have today can be secured if we remind ourselves of some self-evident truths spoken by a Canadian of venerable years but still active among us. He said, the truth is that Confederation was conceived of by men of two different but equally rich communities. Bilingualism and multiculturalism are facts of Canadian life, they cannot be avoided nor should they, for they are assets, not liabilities; positive factors, not negative ones.

But there is also a need to speak for all of Canada. It is what we share that allows us the richness of our diversity and we need to remind ourselves of this whenever we become preoccupied with our differences. As we shape present policies we preserve the necessary options for future generations of all Canadians.

What I believe many people earnestly hope for is not merely the toleration of our differences, but the realization that to be a good Canadian each of us must be true to his or her heritage. This noble sentiment was eloquently expressed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he said:

> Three years ago when in England, I visited one of those models of Gothic architecture, which the hand of genius, guided by an unerring faith, had moulded into an harmonious whole. This cathedral was made of granite, oak and marble. It is the image of the nation I wish to see Canada become. For here, I want the granite to remain the granite, the oak to remain the oak, the marble to remain the marble. Out of these elements I would build a nation great among the nations of the world.

[Editor's Note: The Governor General repeated the previous paragraph in German and Ukrainian as follows:

Dieser Dom besteht aus Granit, Eiche und Marmor. In derselben Weise sehe ich auch Kanada. Denn hier soll der Granit Granit bleiben, Eiche bleibt Eiche und Marmor bleibt Marmor. Aus diesen Elementen schaffe ich eine Nation, die gross ist unter den Nationen der Erde.

Це відбиток той нації, якою я хотів би щоб Канада стала. Я хочу, щоб тут граніт залишався гранітом, дуб дубом, мармур мармуром. З цих елементів я би збудував одну із могутніх націй світу.]

[Translation]

What Sir Wilfrid Laurier clearly believed, what he shared with others, with Sir John A. Macdonald, with Brown, with Blake, with Sir George-Étienne Cartier, what they share with my predecessors and with me, is that a diverse society in a vast land can experience a broadening of the mind and spirit—a magnanimity of the soul. Their idealistic dream has become almost the full reality. We need but work together to avoid slipping backward toward the fragmentation of intolerance.

[English]

Today I say with the deepest conviction that we can do this. Within 50 years, a moment in the sweep of history, our Canada has gone from aloofness to tolerance, and beyond tolerance to respect for, indeed a deep desire for, the retention of the differentiations of our heritage and culture.

[Translation]

But the need for this vigilance, for this effort, is incumbent upon us all and particularly on whoever holds this office.

[English]

It is said that Sir Wilfrid Laurier testified to Lord Grey's work as Governor General, that he gave his whole heart and his whole soul to Canada. If those words could ever in truth be applied to me, as a third generation Canadian from the wheatfields of the west, by my contemporary Prime Minister—only then could I feel that I have kept faith with all who love our country. One Canada, whole, undivided, the benefits of our pluralism intact.

[Editor's Note: The Governor General said the following in Polish:

Oby pamięć naszej pracy i naszego kraju byla blogoslowiona na wieki. Niech żyje kanadyjski kraj i naród na wieki wieków!]

[Translation]

May the memory of our work and of our country be blessed forever.

INVITATIONS TO UNVEILING OF PLAQUE COMMEMORATING CANADA GAMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering statements made recently at the Can-Am Bowl in Florida by the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo) to the effect that the Liberal government had announced its own form of California's Proposition 13 with its recent cutbacks in fiscal spending, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the minister be compelled to explain to this House and the people of Canada why her department issued an extravagant 10 × 14 inch glossy invitation requiring a 50-cent stamp to the unveiling of a commemorative plaque in Winnipeg on February 2 in connection with the Canada Games, when a standard size invitation requiring only 14 cents postage would have been equally appropriate and considerably less expensive.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

HEALTH SERVICES FOR CANADIAN INDIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Department of National Health and Welfare has entered into agreements with numerous band councils for the delivery of health services—for example, the Mohawks at the Bay of Quinte and the Kettle Point Reserves—and in view of the fact that the minister's recent health guidelines are in violation of the agreements and will adversely affect the delivery of health care, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the minister immediately place a moratorium on the guidelines to permit adequate consultation as defined in the agreements.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AVAILABILITY OF HEALTH SERVICES FOR CANADIAN INDIANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, although the preceding motion was on a similar subject, its rejection does not preclude the motion I am about to move.

Considering that Canada's Indian population has the highest infant mortality rate, the highest rate of infectious diseases, the highest respiratory disease rate and the lowest level of income in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the Minister of National Health and Welfare to restore immediately health services to Canadian Indians to the level they enjoyed prior to the cutbacks recently announced so that health care is available without qualification.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR EFFECTIVE SHIPBUILDING PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a very important issue which must be dealt with most urgently.

In view of the fact that unemployment seriously affects the economy of the south shore area, that the government must urgently take the necessary steps to help the private sector become more active in the building industry, and also that the Lauzon shipyards which once provided jobs to some 3,000 workers are about to become extinct with only 400 workers left in June 1979, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House urge the government to implement an effective shipbuilding program for Canada and create a new merchant marine like the one it once had, thereby creating more jobs for workers within this industry.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TOURISM

UNITED STATES CAMPAIGN AGAINST TRAVEL IN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Since certain publicity-seeking societies in the United States have commenced a campaign to persuade Americans not to travel to Canada until such time as Canada outlaws the seal hunt carried on off Newfoundland and in the Gulf since time immemorial, and in view of the fact that this campaign can have no worse effects on the tourism industry in Canada than the general incompetence of the government with respect to tourism, as exemplified by the increase in the air transportation tax recently announced, and in view of the fact that while the American animal protection groups campaign against the Newfoundland seal hunt, the seal hunt for adult seals killed by gunfire continues in the Alaskan islands so that furriers can be supplied with Alaskan seal furs to make into fashionable coats exported to Canada, among other countries, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies):

That the government forbid the importation of Alaskan seal furs or any article of clothing made from Alaskan seal furs until such time as the Americans cease their hypocrisy and cease their attempts to harm the livelihood of hundreds of Canadian fishermen.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that government members have fewer opportunities than members of the opposition during the oral question period as a result of the practices of this House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier):

That the Chair grant a minimum of—

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CALL FOR PRORATA PENSIONS FOR WIDOWS OF DISABLED VETERANS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), to move the following motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43:

That this House calls on the Minister of Veterans Affairs to introduce legislation to provide prorata pensions for widows of disabled veterans in all cases where the pension of the veteran was below 48 per cent, and this House urges that this legislation be introduced forthwith so that it can be passed and put into effect before the present parliament is dissolved.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion at this time requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

STATUS OF WOMEN

EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY OF GOVERNMENT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's replies yesterday that the president of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women was either unequivocally not addressing her remarks to the government in her speech of January 10, or that she was unequivocally wrong, and since an examination of her speech makes it obvious that her remarks were directed to the government and its policies regarding the employment of women in the labour force, can the Prime Minister tell the House just what statements of Madame Rousseau were, indeed, unequivocally wrong?

● (1415)

Was she wrong when she said that the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the government's own body to advise it on women's issues, had not been consulted before women were excluded from its employment strategy, or was she wrong in her presentation of the figures?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member has had ample opportunity to put her question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. lady would have the answer to her question if she read the question asked by her seatmate, the hon. member for Egmont, yesterday. He made some allegations purportedly based on the statement of the hon. lady, the president of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, which I inadvertently called the Voice of Women yesterday. He made these quotes and I said that they were quite wrong. I still maintain that they are wrong, and I challenged Madame Rousseau or the hon. lady from Kingston to quote any evidence to the contrary.

The allegation refers to "official statements"—presumably government statements, if that is the context—and reads as follows:

—in "official statements" women are considered either "responsible for the high rate of unemployment" or are being "used as scapegoats and as a screen for a chronic inability to redress the economy"—

This is not true. No one on that side or on Mrs. Rousseau's side can quote any evidence indicating that the ministers have said that. I know the opposition has attempted to deform the truth by alleging that, but they have never brought forward any evidence of that.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. He might consult his own record, the record of the Minister of Finance or the record of the Minister of Employment and Immigration to find out where they have, indeed, used those statements.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Miss MacDonald: In view of the fact the Prime Minister has referred to the comments of the head of the government's Advisory Council on the Status of Women as being "unequivocally wrong", I should like to ask him what her status is, in the face of this public disavowal of her advice.

When the Prime Minister gets information which he does not like, is he going to term both the bearer and the bad news as being unequivocally wrong? Is this the kind of treatment public servants will get in the future?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is a clear lack of logic in the hon. lady's question. First of all, she said that we have made the statements and that we have to consult the record.

Miss MacDonald: That is correct.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. lady has a shred of evidence, she should stand up and quote what part of the record bears that out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mrs. Rousseau has not quoted the record, nor has the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. If they have some evidence, let us hear it. That is my first point. My second point is that I did not allude to all statements. I made it clear in my answer—

Miss MacDonald: Now we are being selective.

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, yes, selective. I was answering a question. I made it quite clear that I have not read the report and that it would be studied by the minister responsible for the status of women, the Minister of Justice, who is attending a federal-provincial conference in Vancouver now. He will be back in the House tomorrow and no doubt he will have taken cognizance of the report and will be prepared to discuss it. I made it quite clear that I had not read it. What I answered were the allegations of the hon. member for Egmont. I said that those statements were wrong. That does not mean I reject all advice coming from outside sources: on the contrary, we set up this advisory council because we think it has a very important role to play.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: But surely no logic would compel me to say that in accusations we have said some things which we never said; I must accept this as fact. I do not accept it as fact. I challenge the hon. lady to prove the contrary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Now that the Prime Minister is being selective in the statements which he accepts and does not accept, would he take a look at the Unemployment Insurance Act and what it has done to women throughout the country? There are a good many others of that nature.

● (1420)

In order that this matter and the allegations the Prime Minister made can be properly dealt with, I should like to ask the government House leader whether he will arrange that the recent reports and statements of the advisory committee be refered to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration so that members of parliament will have the right and the opportunity to question Madame Rousseau on the statements she has put forward, including the one that her committee was not called into consultation or asked for advice in formulating employment strategy as it applies to the women of this country.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands makes the suggestion that my allegations be dealt with. Let them be dealt with now, Mr. Speaker. I have told the hon. lady that I answered certain questions asked by the hon. member for Egmont. I dealt with them. If the hon. member wants to deal with them by bringing contrary proof, iet her do so. She has not done so, she has just made wild allegations.

In so far as her suggestion that I am being selective is concerned, this is the most ridiculous thing I have ever heard. Every time opposition members stand in the House they are being selective. They always quote things out of context; they always quote things which seem to be detrimental to the government. I am asked a question which is selective in its very terms. The hon. member chooses certain phrases from what Mrs. Rousseau said and I attempt to answer those phrases, yet rather than him being the selective one, it turns out that I am the selective one. I am sure nothing could be more ridiculous, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that the Prime Minister has not had a chance yet to read the document from the chairperson of the commission. If he looks at pages 1 and 3, references 1 and 4, he will see the specific reference to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I am sorry he seems to be more anxious to win some debating points than to deal with the substance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): He seems more interested in that than dealing with the substance of a very important statement.

I refer to what the chairperson said at page 6, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the Prime Minister whether her statement referring to the fact that the "government does not know its own objectives, or does not make them known" relates directly to the other report that was published, namely, the Summary of Women in the Public Service, which indicated that the "government has failed to address the fundamental barriers preventing the equality of women in the public service such as the use of women as a reserve labour pool and their segregation into female ghettos." Is that also, as the Prime Minister said yesterday, unequivocally wrong, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday, and I repeat it today, that I have not read the report.

An hon. Member: Well, read it.

Mr. Trudeau: You have not read it, either. Nor have you, and nor have you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Miss MacDonald.]

Mr. Trudeau: You have not read it, and they have not read it up there—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I bet you that the Clerk of the House and even the young lady sitting at your feet have not read it. A lot of us have not read it.

I told you, Mr. Speaker, that we have a minister who is responsible for this area who has or who will read it and who will deal with the substance. I do object when members of the opposition, with selective questions, try to pinpoint some area and try to nail the government with it. If they are quoting some areas which are inaccurate, I will say they are inaccurate, but I will not deal with the whole substance until the minister has returned.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I find it passing strange that the Prime Minister can say something is unequivocally wrong when he has not, in fact, read the report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I would like to know whether the Prime Minister thinks that the chairperson was correct when she suggested in her question that the Advisory Council on the Status of Women is being used by the government for advice only when it is faced with emergency situations.

In view of the kind of performance the Prime Minister gave yesterday and today in respect of a very serious allegation by the chairperson of the advisory council, is that the view the Prime Minister takes, only to use the council in cases of political necessity?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member draws weak applause from his side by asking how I can say a thing is unequivocally wrong if I have not read it. Surely that is a sign of either stupidity or bad faith. I answered the specific question by the hon. member. Let me read from page 2437 of Hansard where the hon. member for Egmont is quoted as saying:

● (1425)

—in "official statements" women are considered either "responsible for the high rate of unemployment"—

Apparently in our statements we have said that. We have not, and I make that clear again on page 2439 of Hansard. I was singling out a particular point quoted by the hon. member for Egmont to the effect that in some way the government was blaming women for the increase in the size of unemployment figures. This I say is unequivocally wrong; I did not say the whole report was wrong. On the contrary, and I repeat, we set up this advisory committee in order that it could give the government its good advice, and it has given good advice in the past.

This was not the report of the committee; this was a private opinion expressed by the president at some point in the proceedings, and she happens to be wrong in some of her facts. Surely, to say—

Mr. Clark: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the Opposition says "Oh, oh!". He has found something, "Oh, oh!".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: You are the one who has found something.

Mr. Trudeau: We now know that the Leader of the Opposition can find something sometimes, "Oh, oh!".

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Boy, are you ever testy today.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASES IN INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CHARTERED BANKS—EFFECT ON COST OF LIVING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I want to assure him in advance that it is direct and to the point, and I just hope that his answer will be the same.

The Toronto-Dominion Bank has announced an increase in its Chargex lending rate to a scandalously high level of 21 per cent. The other chartered banks have already indicated that they will follow suit. In light of this situation, and in terms of the Prime Minister's responsibility for over-all government policy, I would like to ask him if he will call in the heads of the banks and obtain a commitment from them immediately that they will take steps to roll back these totally unwarranted increases which will force up the already high cost of living for Canadians.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am meeting with some business leaders, and I believe there are some bankers included, tomorrow and I will certainly consider raising the point which the hon. member has raised to me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I wonder if he would also want me to raise with them the fact that they have made some settlements with wage earners in the banks that in my opinion are rather high and may be inflationary. Would the hon. member like me to raise that point as well?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, since bank employees are among the lowest paid in the country, I would like the Prime Minister to tell me which one he has in mind, and would he do that today and not put it off to a later time? I hope that the Prime Minister will follow up and that he is not playing rhetorical games, because I will ask him about the matter again after he has had his meeting.

As the Prime Minister knows, there is already legislation which stops other lending institutions, such as Household Finance, from charging the kind of rates that the protected Canadian banks are now charging consumers. Will he take immediate steps to bring forward an amendment to existing bank laws which will stop the banks from gouging Canadian consumers?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the standing committee on finance, of this House, has been dealing with the problem of the Bank Act revision for several weeks. Indeed, it has been working very hard and meeting several times a day. I hope the members of his party who have any representations to make along these lines or any other will be there to make those representations. There is a committee meeting on this very subject. If the hon. member wishes to propose amendments to the Bank Act, surely he should do it in an effective way, rather than trying to make waves.

In so far as high wage settlements are concerned, I am not making any particular accusation.

Mr. Broadbent: You did.

Mr. Trudeau: I am saying that there have been some settlements which seem intolerably high.

An hon. Member: Which ones?

Mr. Trudeau: There have been some bank settlements with some of their employees—

An hon. Member: Which ones?

Mr. Trudeau: I see some of the members in the back row want more specifics. I just had a question from their leader, if they would listen, who was suggesting that indeed there must have been because they are the lowest paid and there must be some form of catch-up. I take it that is the point—

An hon. Member: You raised it.

Mr. Trudeau: —raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Some of them shake their head no, and this one remains silent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Prime Minister cannot have it both ways. He cannot say to members of the Conservative party, as he did just a minute ago, that they are not being specific enough, and then make gratuitous accusations about bank employees without documenting his own case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: In this context, I would like to ask the Prime Minister, since he has referred to the bill being before committee and since, in fact, we have already requested in that committee that steps be taken to stop the banks from overcharging for consumer loans, to commit his government to taking the same action so that Canadian consumers will not be gouged by the banks.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we have legislation before this House which attempts to protect consumers and we are prepared to discuss it if the various House leaders can make time for it. I was making an accusation which the opposition wants me to make specific. I do not remember the particular bank which made the settlement, but there has been a collective agreement signed.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not remember the name of the particular bank.

Mr. Paproski: Ask O'Hagan about the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. Trudeau: It may be the Bank of Montreal, as the hon. member for Edmonton Centre suggests, but I do not remember. I am just saying that we are disturbed by some high settlements in banks and in other industrial areas in the country. We are concerned that there be a new spurt of inflationary push in some of these sectors. I intend talking to some business leaders about this when I meet them on Friday of this week.

● (1430)

If the Leader of the New Democratic Party is concerned that some areas have been badly paid in the past, I think there can be a provision for catch-up, but it is important that there be no high settlements in the two-digit figures, particularly if we in this country are to keep the inflationary spiral from being born again.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR SPEEDING UP SHIPBUILDING PROGRAM IN QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. A few moments ago I proposed a motion concerning unemployment on the south shore specifically, as well as the lack of work at the Lauzon shipyards. My question is therefore as follows. Would the minister be prepared to recommend to his cabinet colleagues that the Canadian frigate construction program which he announced during the last session be advanced so as to create jobs for hundreds of workers who normally work in the shipyards, especially in Lauzon, in order to ease the burden of unemployment insurance and eventually of social welfare?

[Mr. Broadbent.]

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I was engaged and did not realize the question was for me, so I would ask the hon. member to repeat it. I was dealing with something of great national importance.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat my question to the Minister of National Defence. I think he is defending us more than we might think.

My question was as follows: I said that a while ago I presented a motion to this House with a view to asking parliament to urge the government to speed up the shipbuilding program so as to improve the employment situation which is a big problem in my region. My question to the minister is as follows: Would he be prepared to recommend to his cabinet colleagues to advance the Canadian frigate construction program he announced during the last session in order to give jobs to those workers of shipyards who are at present unemployed and who will soon have to resort to welfare assistance if they are not given work?

[English]

Mr. Danson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That, too, is a matter of great national importance and one to which my colleagues in cabinet in total are giving special attention.

There is a plan to work more ships from our fleet into that schedule for refit and repair. I cannot give precise details at this time, but I would be very happy to get the details of scheduling, because I would not want to mislead in any way, so that my hon. friend from Bellechasse will have precise information on the time that work will be going to the shipyards. We want to keep them occupied, not only with ships from my department but other ships as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Since the minister seems to be positive in his answer, can he tell more precisely if this is going to happen in the near future and if the necessary submissions have been presented to the Treasury Board to carry out this program to keep these shipyards workers out of a still worse unemployment situation?

[English]

Mr. Danson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are giving it the highest priority, as I said to the hon. gentleman. Indeed, in answer to some personal representations I have had from my colleague from Levis, I am getting the precise information of the dates which we are trying to speed up as much as possible so that there will not be a gap in employment in those very important shipyards.

POST OFFICE

POSTMASTER GENERAL'S COMMENTS ON FIRING INSIDE WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Postmaster General.

I should like to ask whether consideration has been given to the statement made by the Postmaster General, that Canada's postal problems could be solved by firing 500 inside workers who were causing all the trouble. Did the Postmaster General give the Prime Minister a list of these 500 recreant individuals, and what consideration has the government given to carrying out this policy which is a body blow at the whole question of bargaining? It is a very serious statement. I have been waiting a couple of days for the minister, and he is not here.

An hon. Member: He was here yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister, being all admission, I know will be able to give a full and complete answer on a problem as serious as this.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General is in Moncton, New Brunswick, on official business. I understand he was in the House yesterday, but I think the right hon. gentleman was too busy with his own members yesterday to notice that he was here.

I will have further discussions with the Postmaster General. I do know that he made this statement and I do know he is attempting to bring the matter to cabinet to discuss it further with us. I cannot vouch for the particular figure of 500, but I think even the right hon. gentleman would know that in any group there are some troublemakers and you can do without those.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Where is Jack?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is very important that the leaders, I presume—the leaders in any group—straighten out those troublemakers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, normally I admire the Prime Minister when he is witty, but not when he is half-witty in his transcendingly happy mood today. It is obvious that across this country there are in the Liberal party thousands and thousands who are very discontented and are bringing it to his notice that the government is not doing anything. Is that the reason he is in such a truculent state today?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am not as good a witness as the right hon. member, but it seems to me it was on that side of the House that there was some discontent with their leader in the past couple of days.

● (1440)

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

HIGH INTEREST RATES—EFFECT ON REAL RATE OF GROWTH

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Given the fact that yesterday the Minister of Finance committed the government to following a high interest rate policy and said that it had no intention of changing it, and given the fact that there have been three increases in the interest rate since the last report on Canada's economic prospects made by the government, is the government in the process of preparing new economic forecasts, or is it the position of the government that high interest rates will have no effect on investment next year and, therefore, the real rate of growth?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be precise in saying whether or not the government is preparing new economic forecasts. I do know that the Department of Finance is constantly updating its forecasts and I would not be surprised if it is in the process of doing that now.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, my question is again for the Prime Minister. Given the fact that there is a considerable debate going on across the nation now among well informed people about whether or not the change in domestic interest rate policy is necessary in relation to the dollar, which presumably was the reason given, and given the absolutely fundamental importance of this for the growth of the economy and decline in unemployment, I ask the Prime Minister whether he will give a reference to the standing committee so that we can open a debate and have witnesses from all over the country, together with the governor of the Bank of Canada and various other people, in order to examine whether it is essential at this time to have a high interest rate policy, when traditional economic analysts suggest that we do not need it, and when there have been times that it has not been necessary to have high interest rates to keep protection of the dollar, such as was the case between 1971 and 1973. Nothing could be more fundamental to the future of the economy of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the bewilderment of the hon. member. As a member of the economic profession, I am sure that he is very concerned with these matters and he knows better than I do the fact that the economists themselves are very much divided in this debate. I am sure if we had the hearings that he refers to, we would hear conflicting views: we would have a lot of economists saying one thing on one hand, and reference to Trudeau's one-armed economists on the other hand. I am sure we would have two views on just about everything.

The interesting point is that we would also have two views from the opposition party. For instance, the hon. member's leader is talking about a deficit, a very large one, and the financial critic for the opposition as late as a few months ago was suggesting that we must hold the budgetary deficits steady—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REIMBURSEMENT FOR CLEAN-UP COSTS OF CRASHED SOVIET SATELLITE

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary State for External Affairs. Yesterday, the Minister issued a press release announcing the government has submitted a claim for some $6 million to the Soviet Union for the expenses of cleaning up after the crash of Cosmos 954. It made this claim under the Convention of International Liability for damage caused by space objects, otherwise known as Treaty 7.

Could the minister explain to the House why the government failed to claim under Treaty 6 where, under article 5, paragraph 5, the Soviets would have been required to pay all expenses incurred in the recovery of returning space objects?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will as soon as I get a chance to look at Treaty 6.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: I have to tell the hon. member that I have relied upon the advice of our legal experts on this matter. It was their judgment that this was the proper and appropriate way to proceed. I must confess that, not being a legal person myself, I do not know what the answer is to the hon. member's question.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the main bone of contention in the debate that took place in this House last January over this matter was whether it should be under Treaty 7 or Treaty 6, and I am amazed that it appears the minister has not read either of them.

My supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I understand he was in charge in the final stages of this operation. Could he tell us what the total cost of the operation to all departments is, so we will know what fraction the Russians have been asked to pay for?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, there were a number of questions raised on this matter before the standing committee at that time. We gave the information that was then available to us. I think some of the information was provided by the Department of National Defence and some was provided by the Atomic Energy Control Board which comes under my jurisdiction and to which the hon. member has referred. I am not sure what other departments have submitted estimates of out-of-pocket costs which they have incurred.

I would be very pleased to see if that information could be brought together and submitted to the hon. member, if it has not already been put on the record before the standing committee.

COMMUNICATIONS

PLANS TO EXTEND TV COVERAGE OF HOUSE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. In view of the fact that a consortium of cable operators and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation have shown a willingness to proceed with plans to transmit via satellite, live, proceedings of the House of Commons to all parts of the country, would the minister use her good offices to ensure that this goal is reached with the least possible delay?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is obviously desirable that the TV broadcasting of parliamentary debates be given the widest distribution possible. I can only be delighted that the CBC is contemplating offering its services to the public.

As for the Rogers TV Cable Limited project, we will recall that the CRTC indicated its preference for the establishment of a consortium for the distribution of the debates of the House. Whatever the case may be, both projects imply the use of the satellite, which is a good thing, and I can only encourage both initiatives.

There is, of course, another alternative, namely direct broadcasting by the CBC of at least the oral question period. That way 99 per cent of the population would be able to follow the debates of the House.

LOTO CANADA

EXPENDITURES ON LOTO SELECT PROGRAM

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport relating to the aborted Loto Select program.

A month and a half ago the minister indicated to the House that she would be prepared to make available to the House and to the Canadian public a full accounting of money that was committed to date and which was wasted under the Loto Select program. Would the minister now keep the commitment that she made and will she give the House an indication of how much money has been confirmed as wasted in the Loto Select program and what the face value is of all accounts which still remain to be settled?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman will be delighted to hear that he should have asked his question yesterday, because I do have some news for him.

An agreement in principle has been reached between General Instruments and Loto Canada. However, all the lawyers involved are presently fine-tuning the final results and I expect to report the final details to the House of Commons in three weeks.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I hope they will have more success in getting out of the contract than the government had in getting into it.

Could the minister now confirm to the House that her officials signed a $5 million contract with Addressograph-Multigraph of Canada Ltd. in September of last year at the same time the minister was negotiating an end to the Loto Select program, and could she tell the House what it will cost the Canadian public for this particular mistake?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I deny that there is any mistake involved. Anyone involved in business knows that if you have a large business such as the corporation of Loto Canada, the corporation of Ontario and the corporation of Quebec, involved in a business undertaking, in order to rationalize the market between the two there is a cost involved. That cost will be considerably less than has been suggested by the media and by the hon. member.

I think the hon. member should also keep in mind that in order to secure a mass market of some $200 million annually, gross, to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and $200 million annually to the people of Canada in Loto Canada, there is a price to be paid. It will be paid and the amount will be made known.

With regard to the specific question of Addressograph-Multigraph of Canada Ltd., the matter is in the hands of counsel.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ANNOUNCEMENTS ON DEFENCE SPENDING

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. The Chief of the Defence Staff, who occupies a position similar to that of a deputy minister, is reported recently, at a conference of defence associations, to have urged that military supporters should campaign to put pressure on members of parliament and cabinet ministers on the question of the maintenance of defence spending.

Does this represent new government policy, replacing the concept accepted hitherto that such political pronouncements should be made not by deputy ministers but by responsible ministers of the Crown?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I certainly accept the statement of policy as it should be, made by the hon. member for Greenwood. I cannot comment on the particular quote about which he asks me. I do not know when and where that was said and in what context, but I will gladly find out and discuss it with the deputy or with one of my generals—and I do not listen to all my generals all the time, either. I will gladly look into the matter. I think the position is as the hon. gentleman stated it, that policy is enunciated by ministers, by the government, and not by members of the armed forces.

Mr. Brewin: I might point out to the Prime Minister that this statement was made on January 18 in the Chateau Laurier by Admiral Falls who is Chief of the Defence Staff. What action will the Prime Minister take, or what action has been taken, to convey to Admiral Falls and others in similar positions that on political matters the political authorities speak for the Government of Canada, and not public servants?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have met and had discussions with Admiral Falls on many occasions, and I can assure the hon. member that he is a very distinguished officer of the armed forces and I have high regard for him.

An hon. Member: Having it both ways again.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, this is always the way: the truth is not always as simple and clearcut as the socialists would have it. I do not think even the leader of the New Democratic Party can fault me for saying I have high regard for Admiral Falls—and that is not having it both ways. If, indeed, he made any mistake, which I said I did not know of but with regard to which I would inquire, I will draw it to his attention and see that this mistake is not repeated. Surely this is the proper way of doing things.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO REFERENDUM ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General of Canada.

In view of the fact that ever since the death penalty has been abolished the number of crimes has continually risen throughout the country, and in view of the fact that in the last two weeks there has been a number of sordid murders in the Montreal area, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to eventually bring back before the House the question of capital punishment? If so, would he consider instead holding a referendum throughout the country so as to leave the decision on that matter to the citizens of Canada rather than to the 264 members of parliament?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to indicate to the hon. member that contrary to his allegations there has been a decline in the commission of violent crimes since 1976. Let me quote some figures. Thus, in 1975 there were 603 violent acts per 100,000 of population, and in 1977 there were 581.7 violent crimes per 100,000. This means there was a very significant decline. So I do not think the recommendations of the hon. member should be followed up. Hence the government has no intention of reconsidering the question of the death penalty.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TERMS OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON FISHING BOUNDARIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the fact that Canadian and United States negotiators have reached a tentative agreement on east coast fishing rights which calls for reciprocal fishing to resume in the disputed area while the question of settling the boundary line goes to international arbitration, will the minister indicate the terms of the tentative agreement and tell us whether there are any bilateral agreements with foreign fleets fishing in this area which have to be altered or reviewed, and will he assure us that the need to refer this matter to an international tribunal does not in any way indicate a breakdown in relations between Canada and the United States?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I welcome this opportunity to tell the House that I was advised this morning by our negotiator, Mr. Cadieux, that an arrangement or agreement along the lines roughly outlined by the hon. member has been reached. I shall be meeting with Mr. Cadieux at three o'clock this afternoon for a full and detailed briefing, and subsequent to that, in an appropriate way, I shall be making the details known to the House, the country and the parties concerned.

As to the specific questions the hon. member has raised, I can tell the House even in advance of my meeting with Mr. Cadieux that if by "foreign" he means non-Canadian or non-American, then to the best of my knowledge that situation has not been altered by any kind of arrangement. However, I will look into that aspect.

On the question of our relationship with the United States, I can say that the arrangements which have now apparently been made have been arrived at in a most amicable manner and there has certainly been no difficulty whatever other than the obvious difficulties which arise when dealing with a complex matter of this kind. May I take this opportunity to offer the highest congratulations to Mr. Cadieux, a distinguished servant of Canada, who has done a superb job in this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSED CHANGE OF AIR CANADA OPERATIONS FROM HEATHROW TO GATWICK

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises out of the determination of the United Kingdom government to move Air Canada's London operations from Heathrow to Gatwick.

It is my understanding that the High Commissioner called upon a British cabinet minister to state Canada's position very clearly. Can the hon. gentleman tell the House what response has been received following that meeting? Perhaps he could also outline what further steps Canada intends to take to support the position of Air Canada, bearing in mind that the move would have a major disruptive effect upon our national airline.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member is correct: at my request our High Commissioner has delivered a personal note to the British Foreign Office and Commonwealth Office indicating our disagreement with the apparent decision to have Air Canada moved to Gatwick. We have made it clear that we totally support Air Canada in its efforts to resist this proposal.

No formal response has as yet been received to the note which was delivered on the 18th, I believe, or if not on the 18th then certainly on the 19th. In these circumstances, I believe it would be wiser to refrain from answering the second part of the question because I might be anticipating what the British government is going to say.

Mr. Mazankowski: Since bilateral air talks are currently going on, or will soon be going on, can the minister tell us whether Canada is participating in these bilateral negotiations or whether there is any intention of suspending those talks until this matter has been resolved?

Mr. Jamieson: I want to be extremely careful in answering that question. Normally, we do not associate bilateral negotiations with the assignment of airport space or anything of that nature. I do not believe, however, that I am going beyond the bounds of logic here if I say that should there be significant losses for Air Canada as a result of its transfer from Heathrow to Gatwick, then clearly, in terms of our bilateral negotiations with the U.K., we would have to take those losses into account in any kind of consideration we might otherwise be disposed to give them in relation to access to other cities in Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PRIVATIZATION OF FORESTRY SERVICES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Environment, who before the Christmas recess committed himself to report to the House as to the result of the privatization scheme affecting the forestry services and, more particularly, the forest products laboratories in Vancouver and Ottawa.

● (1500)

Can the minister tell the House what agreement has been reached with the private sector, and can he tell us if the agreement which has or has not been reached is commensurate with the action which has been taken by his department to send lay-off notices to the scientists involved?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to indicate to the House that an interim board of directors has been set up under the chairmanship of Mr. Bob Rogers who is the chairman and chief executive officer of Crown Zellerbach, who has brought together a very impressive group of people to work with him on this interim board. This indicates to me, and should indicate to the hon. member, that this vindicates the decision which has been made by the government to privatize these two labs. There is a great deal of support in the private sector for this move toward privatization.

Lay-off notices are a technical requirement. Lay-off notices went out from my department on January 12, but offers of employment were sent out at the same time. Mr. Rogers offered employment to all of the employees in these labs and it is my wish that the employees accept this employment so that they can carry on essentially in the fashion to which they have been accustomed. I feel they have done very good work. Their work is known worldwide and I hope they carry on this good work.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the name the minister has given is indeed impressive, and I agree that the employees involved have made a contribution to the forest industry. The question is how this name is backed up with cash, because my information is that there has been no commitment from the private sector up to this point to assume the responsibility of maintaining the budgets of these labs.

Why did the minister find it necessary to send out lay-off notices before guarantees were secured from industry?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, the lay-off notice was really a technical requirement. Perhaps the hon. member could address that question to the President of the Treasury Board.

The interim president who has been appointed is now passing the hat around, so to speak. He is contacting various potential contributors, including industry and provincial governments, regarding what money can be found. As I said before, there is confidence that support can be found in order to make up the $3.3 million which will be required to keep the labs operating at the same level as before.

COMPARABILITY OF BENEFITS FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS FORCED TO MOVE BECAUSE OF PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In the course of the privatization of these labs, the 122 people who have received notices are in effect moving to the private sector from the public sector. Are there any negotiations being undertaken by the government with respect to these people in order to ensure comparability of the level of benefits of public servants for those who are being forced to move as a result of this action?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that these people have certain protection under their agreements and arrangements with the Government of Canada. Those will be honoured. The notices were required because of the time-frame involved in order to accomplish our end of March objective. However, the public servants involved will in fact receive the protection to which they are entitled.

GOVERNOR GENERAL

DELAY IN PRINTING OF SPEECHES AT INSTALLATION OF EDWARD SCHREYER

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the House agreed to print as an appendix to Hansard the speeches of His Excellency the Governor General and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the ceremonies held in the Senate Chamber on Monday, January 22.

Technical difficulties have arisen in that the Printing Bureau is in a position to print a translation of certain portions of the speech of the Governor General rather than the actual words spoken by His Excellency in the course of his presentation. Rather than print the translations and in order to be more faithful to the words which were spoken, we are equipping ourselves to print that language later in the week, and when the bound version of Hansard is produced in due course, it will appear as an appendix to Hansard for the date which was ordered by the House—Tuesday—and it will be printed as an appendix on the date on which we are able to produce it, which should be later this week.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAVOIE—MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43—REQUEST FOR RECOGNITION

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank you for having recognized me today. My question of privilege concerns the motion on the same subject that I moved earlier under the terms of Standing Order 43. It is the second time in less than a year that I move a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 and that the Chair does not allow me to move it. I would at least like the Chair to provide us with some explanation in such cases since I went to the trouble of moving this kind of motion so that government members be allowed to speak. I noticed that two members on this side of the House were recognized yesterday and two others today. This is not a very high average. Indeed before the Christmas adjournment I suggested to the Chair, as you will recall, that we should try to get some agreement on this matter. In any case, I shall not repeat myself because I would not want to take up too much of the time of the House. However, there are other means, other standing orders, and I shall follow our rules and bring up the matter again in this House unless the Chair decides otherwise and tries to obtain some agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even if the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lavoie) has a grievance as concerns the procedure of the House, he must certainly understand that the subject of a motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 must always be of an urgent and important nature. In general, I do not accept that matters concerning the procedure of this House be brought by means of an urgent motion proposed under the specific provisions of Standing Order 43. This is why I simply refused to accept this afternoon a motion on the subject of the procedures of the House which had been moved under Standing Order 43. Later this week or perhaps next week, I shall discuss in more detail points of order raised previously on the subject of motions proposed under Standing Order 43.

For the moment, the House must understand that certain matters can properly be the subject of motions under Standing Order 43 since they may be of an important and urgent nature and require our immediate attention. However, the procedures of this House are certainly always important, and in my opinion such matters should simply never be raised by means of a motion proposed under Standing Order 43.

MRS. CAMPAGNOLO—CANADA GAMES COMMEMORATIVE BOOK—ALLEGED WASTEFULNESS

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, during the preliminary proceedings of this House today the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) raised the subject of the Canada Games Council commemorative book which renders the tenth anniversary of the Canada Games into a commemorative volume. In his remarks the hon. gentleman made a wrongful charge of wastefulness against me which I would like to have erased from the record of this House.

Because the invitation to which the hon. member referred was rather large, he felt that I had been wasteful in commissioning it. I would like this House and the people of Canada to know that there was an overrun of the covers of the books of the commemorative volume, and that overrun was used, in a very thrifty manner, to print the invitations to which the hon. member took exception. I therefore feel that he should commend the Canada Games Council for its thoughtfulness in saving money rather than condemn it.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have a question here of conflicts between different ministers. We have been receiving letters from the Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Abbott) to the effect that the government is starting a program to cut down on the paper burden. I show you an example, Mr. Speaker, of what I received in my office telling me about cutting down the paper burden. Also, they sent out this document I am holding up to advise all of us to cut down on paper. Surely there is no need for anything of that size to be sent out. That will not even slip into a mail slot.

• (1510)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: I wish the government would get its act together and cut down the paper burden.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think hon. members will recognize that this is more in the nature of a disagreement than a question of privilege.

"ENTERPRISE 77"

Question No. 354—Mr. Bawden:

1. Was the Enterprise Project '77 reported in the 1976-77 annual report of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and, if not, for what reason?

2. What was the original budget for the Project?

3. What was the actual cost of the Project including (a) employment of temporary staff in the absence of departmental officers (b) travel expense accounts of departmental officers (c) publications (d) rental of premises for meetings, etc?

4. What benefits to industry and small business, in particular, were accomplished by the Project?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

1. "Enterprise 77" is a program which commenced in fiscal year 1977-78.

2. $1,510,900.

3. Total cost for 1977-78 $1,441,182 which includes:

(a) $204,320;

(b) $401,056;

(c) $195,448;

(d) $ 5,195.

4. The benefits to industry and small business, in particular, accomplished by the Enterprise Canada '77 Project were:

1. A series of detailed reports on subjects, indicating businessmen's views regarding existing government programs and services useful as the basis of making changes.

2. Out of the findings, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has:

(a) developed a business service centre and direct dial system for businessmen to get service regarding any problem they might have with the federal government maze.

(b) developed a business opportunities sourcing system which, when completed, will be a significant tool for the firm to identify potential sources of supply in Canada, as well as promote their own products to other firms;

(c) developed the office of the paper burden controller, with the comments of Canadian businessmen as the basis of action;

(d) provided a useful input for many of the recent policy formulations in support of small/medium business including some tax changes;

(e) caused a closer review of overlap in federal and provincial programs and services, still ongoing;

(f) affirmed the need to regionalize operations of the department to get closer to its clientele.

3. Other shorter term benefits to industry and small business, were:

(a) practical seminars to industry, where requested, on a variety of topics with significant business involvement, including: how to get through U.S. Customs; and select export market seminars;

(b) a better knowledge of federal and provincial programs and services including promulgation of some 35,000 copies of a book entitled "Canadian Federal Government Services to Business".

Order Paper Questions

OMBUDSMAN FOR TRANSPORT CANADA

Question No. 432—Mr. MacKay:

1. Was the recently appointed Ombudsman for Transport Canada granted a security clearance by the RCMP as required for the position and, if not, was such clearance denied on more than one occasion?

2. Did the RCMP object to her appointment and, if so, were such objections (a) disregarded (b) related to her contacts with foreign nations such as Poland or China?

3. What was the nature of her contacts, if any?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows:

1. A person successful in a competition for the function of complaints and privacy co-ordinator for Transport Canada was granted the necessary security clearance for the position by the Deputy Minister of Transport, as prescribed under established security procedures, following consideration of information submitted by the RCMP.

2. Under the established security procedure, the RCMP is expected to provide factual information, not to state opinions or objections nor make recommendations.

(a) Not applicable;

(b) Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

DVA—CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Question No. 721—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Is a communications network to be built linking the Department of Veterans Affairs in Ottawa to its new offices in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island and, if so, what is the estimated cost?

2. Is there possibility that new underwater telephone cable will have to be laid between P.E.I. and the mainland to handle communications between DVA in Ottawa and Charlottetown and, if so, at what cost?

3. What is the projected administrative cost increase as a result of the decentralization of the Department from Ottawa to Charlottetown?

4. Will veterans' personal files remain in Ottawa?

5. What is the expected staff requirements for the Ottawa Office following decentralization in the (a) first (b) second (c) third year?

6. What is the expected cost of rental of the communications system on an annual basis once the Charlottetown Office is fully operational?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. No. A communications network exists at present, and Veterans Affairs will avail themselves of it.

2. No. The Prince Edward Island Telephone Company has advised us that all telephone traffic between the island and the mainland is carried by microwave transmission facilities which they forecast will be adequate for the foreseeable future.

3. No administrative cost increase has been forecast as a result of the decentralization of Veterans Affairs from Ottawa to Charlottetown.

4. No. The veterans' files will be transferred to Prince Edward Island upon relocation.

5. The projected size of the small group of employees that will remain in Ottawa after relocation is as follows:

Order Paper Questions

First year	25
Second year	25
Third year	25

6. The expected cost of rental of the required number of telephone sets is forecast to be approximately the same as at present.

NFA-F-18L

Question No. 728—Mr. McKinnon:

In their final submission for the NFA contract, on what date did the manufacturers of the F-18L indicate that deliveries could begin?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): In so far as the Department of Supply and Services is concerned: In March, 1982.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—N.B.

Question No. 803—Mr. Howie:

Have negotiations between the Department of Veterans Affairs and authorities in the Province of New Brunswick concluded in regards to the provision of nursing home beds for veterans in Northeast New Brunswick and, if so, what was the outcome of the negotiations?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): On October 16, 1978, the hon. Brenda Robertson, minister of health for the province of New Brunswick, and I, announced an agreement to provide approximately 60 nursing home beds for veterans in northern and eastern New Brunswick. Under the agreement these beds will be located in the Moncton and Campbellton regions. These facilities are expected to be available for use by veterans by April of 1979 or earlier. The Department of Veterans Affairs will continue to monitor nursing home needs for veterans throughout New Brunswick.

TRANSFER OF DVA HOSPITALS

Question No. 808—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many beds were guaranteed to veterans under the agreement covering the transfer of the (a) Ste. Foy Hospital, Quebec City (b) Lancaster Hospital, St. John (c) Shaughnessy Hospital, Vancouver (d) Westminster Hospital, London (e) Camp Hill Hospital, Halifax (f) Queen Mary Hospital, Montreal to the provincial government?

2. In each case, how many of the beds were occupied by veterans on (a) January 1, 1977 (b) July 1, 1977 (c) January 1, 1978 (d) July 1, 1978 (e) October 1, 1978 and, how many were for (i) extended (ii) intermediate (iii) acute care?

3. (a) How many beds in reserve are retained under federal-provincial agreement to serve unexpected needs of veterans requiring acute care (b) have the required number of beds for acute care been available at all times or has the quota been breached in each case?

4. In each case, how many veterans were on the waiting lists for extended care space on the dates mentioned in Part 2?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Beds guaranteed to veterans under the transfer agreements specified are:

(a) Ste. Foy Hospital, Québec	150 beds
(b) Lancaster Hospital, St. John	200 beds
(c) Shaughnessy Hospital, Vancouver	870 beds
(d) Westminster Hospital, London	882 beds
(e) Camp Hill Hospital, Halifax	285 beds
(f) Queen Mary Hospital, Montreal	55 beds

2.

* Prior to transfer

3. (a) Beds are not held "in reserve" under the federal-provincial transfer agreements to serve unexpected needs of veterans requiring acute care. The stipulation contained in the agreements with respect to acute care is that a veteran requiring treatment for his pensionable condition shall be admitted. If DVA were to insist on the beds being held in reserve, we would also have to pay the hospital for doing so. Instead, the province guarantees that the beds will be available on a priority use basis. Any of the beds not in use by veterans are available for use by the hospital for non-veterans. However, if all of the priority use beds are occupied and no appropriate bed is available for a veteran seeking treatment for his pensionable condition, then the first appropriate bed that becomes available shall be allocated for use by that veteran. Actual admission to acute care beds is at the discretion of the hospital medical staff, however, the hospital may not refuse admission without first referring the case to a designated official of the department.

(b) To our knowledge the quota of acute care beds has not been breached in any transferred facility. Our experience has consistently been that the agreements provide more acute care beds than are required by veterans seeking treatment for their pensionable condition.

4. Waiting list numbers for the dates mentioned in (2) are not available. The following outlines the number of veterans awaiting admission for extended care as of December 1, 1978:

Ste. Foy Hospital, Quebec	10
Lancaster Hospital, St. John	None
Shaughnessy Hospital, Vancouver	13
Westminster Hospital, London	10
Camp Hill Hospital, Halifax	65 **
Queen Mary Hospital, Montreal	None

 One additional ward was recently opened, and as admissions occur the waiting list will be reduced considerably. As of December 21 the waiting list had been reduced to 25.

RESEARCH—STRATEGIC GRANTS PROGRAM

Question No. 863—Mr. Howie:

1. What areas of research now qualify for grants under the Natural Sciences and Engineering Councils Strategic Grants Programme?

2. Is consideration being given to expanding the scope of the programme in terms of subject areas of research and are any areas related to Forestry Research being considered?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council Canada is concerned:

1. Energy, environmental toxicology, oceans.

2. In 1979-80, the following subject areas will be added: communications, food/agriculture.

Forestry research was considered for inclusion in the strategic grants program but was not retained. NSERC offers already a special program of assistance to forestry research.

SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL INFORMATION PROGRAM

Question No. 869—Mr. Howie:

From June 1, 1978 to date, what amount was granted to businesses under the Scientific and Technical Information Programme to employ senior students in research and development programmes and what amount was granted to students in (a) New Brunswick (b) Nova Scotia (c) Prince Edward Island?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the reply is as follows: The amount from June 1 to December 22, 1978 in Canada is $219,750. Amount granted to (a) New Brunswick—$11,700; (b) Nova Scotia—$15,100; (c) P.E.I.—none.

Order Paper Questions

PERSONNEL AT NSERC

Question No. 870—Mr. Howie:

How many persons are employed by the Natural Science and Engineering Council?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council Canada is concerned: 60.

INDUSTRIAL MATERIALS RESEARCH INSTITUTE—LOCATION

Question No. 872—Mr. Howie:

Where is the Industrial Materials Research Institute located and from whom does it rent space and what is the annual rental?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned the reply is as follows: The Industrial Materials Research Institute is located at 1000 de Sérigny Street, Complexe Bienville, 6th Floor, Suite 640, Longueuil, Quebec. This space is rented by the Department of Public Works on NRC's behalf from "Coopération Première Québec". Annual rental is $10,547.16.

PERSONS EMPLOYED AT INDUSTRIAL MATERIALS RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Question No. 873—Mr. Howie:

How many persons are employed by the Industrial Materials Research Institute and what is the projected employment when it is to be in full operation?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the reply is as follows: As of December 31, 1978, three persons are employed by the institute. When the institute is in full operation, it is planned to have 200 persons working at the institute, of which approximately 120 would be NRC employees.

OPERATIONAL DATE—INDUSTRIAL MATERIALS RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Question No. 874—Mr. Howie:

On what date is the Industrial Materials Research Institute expected to be fully operational?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the reply is as follows: The building is expected to be completed by 1981 with full operation of the institute expected during fiscal year 1983-84.

INDUSTRY LABORATORY PROJECT

Question No. 877—Mr. Howie:

From April 1 to December 1, 1978, what amount was spent on the programme for industry laboratory projects?

Point of Order—Mr. Beatty

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the reply is as follows: $2,983,815.

Question No. 878—Mr. Howie:

For the fiscal year 1977-78, what amount was spent on the programme for industry laboratory projects?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the reply is as follows: $4,438,093.

Question No. 879—Mr. Howie:

How many extra mural contracts were let for professional and special services under the programme for industry laboratory projects in the period April 1 to December 1, 1978?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the answer is as follows: One extra mural contract was let for professional and special services in the period 1 April 1978 to 1 December 1978.

CO-OPERATIVE PROJECTS WITH INDUSTRY PROGRAM

Question No. 880—Mr. Howie:

From June 1, 1978 to date, what amount was spent under the Cooperative Projects with Industry Programme?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the reply is as follows: Nil.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BEATTY—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary that yet for another day he has not answered a number of questions which I put on the order paper. I intend to remind him on a continuing basis of the fact that many of these questions require very simple information which could be very easily available if the parliamentary secretary would do his job. I should like to encourage him to get to work in providing answers to those questions.

Mr. Paproski: This is intentional neglect.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Howie.]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 12 and 13.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE RELATED TO STUDY ON CLASSIFICATION OF CERTAIN JOBS

Motion No. 12—Mr. Herbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of approximately 1600 job studies in the construction trades across Canada prepared in order to update the Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupants and contracted to Southam Business Publications, Don Mills, Ontario.

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Unfortunately I cannot comply with that motion since the information on jobs we have asked the contractors to gather for those studies may, in many instances, be regarded as confidential by the businesses concerned. So that is why the businesses which provided the contractors with that information received from the former department of manpower and immigration the guarantee that the data provided would be confidential. Under those circumstances, it follows that we cannot table those studies in the House and I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

[English]

Shall notice of motion No. 12 in the name of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

CANADIAN COUNCIL OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS

Motion No. 13—Mr. Cossitt:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all minutes of meetings, telegrams and letters having to do with any negotiations between the Department of the Secretary of State and the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews for the years 1976, 1977 and 1978.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the correspondence and documents requested are voluminous and would be inordinately time consuming and costly to prepare. In view of the above information, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) I would ask that the motion be transferred for debate, because I think there is a difference of opinion on this.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1978

DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

The House resumed from Tuesday, January 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Trudeau) that Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it is rather regrettable that this bill has taken the form in which it has been presented to the House. I think it would have been quite easy for the opposition to have assured the government that had this been presented as a simple bill to establish a minister of fisheries, such a bill could have received speedy consideration in the House and would have been subject to very little debate.

This House has been waiting some time for the opportunity to give serious consideration to some of the problems pertaining to the fishing industry, and while the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry has met on occasions when it had to, it has also had to deal with other business pertaining to the multitude of facets of this government which the committee considered. It has therefore been virtually impossible to get an extended opportunity to question the minister in respect of the fishing industry per se. Therefore, it could have been a very welcome opportunity, had a bill establishing a minister of fisheries been presented to the committee, to have considered such a bill.

In view of the fact that we have a pot-pourri of legislation tucked into one cover which covers many facets of government reorganization and does not relate solely to fisheries, it has become, so far as I am concerned, a subject of debate both as it relates to fisheries and to forestry. It could have been much more conveniently and expeditiously handled had this bill not been a handful of bills under one cover. But this seems to be the path which the government has chosen to follow during the past ten years. It has defied the House of Commons and defied us in this bill, in the banking legislation and in a number of other instances, with the enumeration of which I will not bore this House.

In view of the fact that this bill is a whole package wrapped up in one cover, it makes it necessary that certain facets of the government and its policies related to both fisheries and forestry become a matter of debate in the House when they might very well have been debated in the committee very quickly without detriment to normal procedure in the House.

The government has been told repeatedly that this is the wrong method to obtain quick passage of both what they and we consider to be important and pertinent legislation, but it is indicative of the government's tendency and that of the Liberal party as a whole to be so sure of itself in power that it shall dictate to all those who participate in the House just how they want things to be done, without any consideration for other interested parties.

For that reason the bill has become an issue which will be debated to some extent. I should like to say to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour), who has not been in the House very long, that when he referred to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) in his introductory speech on this bill as having nothing constructive to offer, he should have been aware of the fact that this party has shown historically that it has been constructive, that it has provided leadership, initiative and suggestions for improvement in policies both in the field of fisheries and forestry year after year. In fact, it was a Conservative government which established a department of forestry and a Liberal government which removed that department by amalgamating it with two others.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Even though you, sir, have sat in this House longer than most of us, you show a greater misunderstanding on a daily basis of the responsibilities of this nation and its integral parts. Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) becomes so interested in his constituency and the salmon that swim there that he will speak in the House in a positive way, beseeching his government to bring in a proper surveillance system so that we may possibly have some salmon both for commercial and sports fishing, only then perhaps will he have the right to throw barbs at others. In view of the complaints I received, he received and the minister received respecting the surveillance procedures of the government, the hon. member should contain himself and his minor explosions until he can relate to the positive.

● (1520)

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): That has nothing to do with forestry.

Mr. McCain: If the hon. member was concerned about the responsibilities of the province in a real and honest way, he would have long since spoken in the House against a taxation structure which was imposed upon resources, the property of the provinces. But like all other hon. members who can be whipped into subservience by the Liberal party, every Liberal member from New Brunswick supported a tax structure which made it very difficult for development to continue in natural resource industries. It was only at the urging of provincial governments and members of the opposition that forestry happened to be excluded as a resource for tax purposes from that legislation.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Since the learned member is interested in these matters, no doubt we can anticipate a very strong speech on behalf of the protection of salmon, cost sharing for budworm spraying in New Brunswick, and a better developmental program for the resource industry in general in Atlantic Canada. When he makes such a speech, I will be very happy to hear his constructive interjections.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Which government pays 80 per cent of forestry development?

Mr. McCain: Which government withdrew the cost-sharing program whereby the Government of Canada cost-shared with the industry and the government of New Brunswick in the budworm spraying program? The Liberal government withdrew from that program.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Which government pays 80 per cent of forestry development?

Mr. McCain: The hon. member's question is born of ignorance. It depends on how much of the expenditure spent on behalf of forestry in New Brunswick he wishes to include in the total package. On individual agreements certain amounts are paid by the Government of Canada. In the total expenditures the Government of Canada does not pay 80 per cent of the money which is spent on behalf of forestry in the province of New Brunswick. I am sure the hon. member well knows that fact. Why has it been more difficult for New Brunswick to conclude certain arrangements with the government in developmental agreements?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Of course, the answer is that the minister concerned insisted that the method of expenditures should pass over his desk, and he happened to be a minister from New Brunswick.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: I do not really object to interjections; I enjoy debate and argument. Perhaps Mr. Speaker can extend my time to compensate for the interjections of the hon. member, and then the hon. member can have all the time he requires. I enjoy debating with the hon. member.

To come back to the comments of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's -St. Barbe, it was a Conservative government which established the department of forestry. It was a Liberal government which made a conglomeration of environment, forestry and fisheries which did not work. It was a Conservative opposition which pleaded with the government to re-establish the department of forestry ever since it was abandoned, and to re-establish ever since it was abandoned the department of fisheries as a separate department. That is the prestige which the industry and management needs, and that is a constructive suggestion. It has been primarily through the committee work of the opposition that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) was led to establish the various programs presently in place. We are still out in front.

As was mentioned by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), by fisheries ministers in the Atlantic provinces and by fishermen in their presentations to government, we need a fleet renewal program and do not have one. There is no means by which we can find the money to expand that fleet, even on a loan basis. We are out in front of the Grits and the Socialists in this regard; we have led them all the way.

The Minister of Fisheries and the Environment proposed to establish something similar to the Central Mortgage and Housing proposition. This was recommended by the hon. member for South Shore. So far it has not been established. The Minister of Fisheries and the Environment assured us that there would be plenty of money for subsidies, boat replacements and renewals. So far fishermen are not permitted to buy certain boats and the Central Mortgage and Housing type structure has not been established. Fishermen are sailing dangerous boats. They cannot afford to replace their boats under the present structure, particularly with 14 per cent, 15 per cent, 16 per cent and 17 per cent rates of interest they would be required to pay if they borrowed money through normal channels.

I suggest the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe should take a careful look at the record to see what his predecessor did and said on behalf of the fishing industry and the seal hunt. He should take a look at what the present minister of fisheries of Newfoundland said on behalf of the fishermen and what he proposed when he was a member of the House. Instead of criticizing what has not been put forward, perhaps the hon. member should criticize the government for what has not been adopted. That would be much more in line.

Because a former member of this House, the present minister of fisheries in Newfoundland, proposed a developmental program for Newfoundland, Atlantic Canada and fisheries, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have scoffed and scorned at those suggestions. They even suggested that they knew nothing about the suggestions long after they had hit the press. Perhaps the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe would do a little reading of history and get his facts straight.

Another matter which continues to concern me is the fact that young people in Atlantic Canada cannot obtain fishing licences. There is no flexibility in the quotas allowed by the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, and there is no opportunity for young people to become involved other than the hard way—by buying out someone else. The industry has survived ever since the earliest explorers arrived on the shores of this continent. It was based upon the belief that today a man could fish and retire so that tomorrow or the next day his son may take over; or that if a man worked in a crew on a fishing vessel and decided to purchase his own boat and become his own boss, a licence would be available.

I am aware that things have not always been as they are today. We were not always as conscious as we are today about fish supply. Also I am aware that some of the requests for licences being made by inshore fishermen would be an inconsequential addition to the present catch. For the sake of providing young and interested people with opportunities to participate in the fishing industry, we require more leniency, flexibility and adjustability in the issuance of licences for fishing on the Atlantic coast. That is a must.

I have cited an example of a man who could become involved in the fishing industry only by purchasing a very old boat which perhaps was not quite safe to sail, yet certainly very expensive to maintain. Because of a regulatory stricture that a man must own a boat for five or six years before he can replace it, with or without assistance, subsidy or loan from the Government of Canada, that man cannot replace his boat even though he owns both the boat and has a licence. This is where we get into the problem of regulations and why we should not be governed by regulations in fisheries or in any other aspect of our society.

I am very much in sympathy with families who have historically fished and who, by virtue of circumstances beyond their control, have been compelled to leave the fishing industry for one, two, three, four, five or six years on some occasions. This may have been for reasons of health, for financial reasons or for family reasons. But whatever those reasons may have been, having left that industry that family can no longer make a re-entry even though the personal circumstances may have changed. Further consideration should be given to these things and I trust that the minister will soften his program.

Once again I make a public appeal to the minister to undertake a surveillance program in the lobster and salmon fisheries that will be effective, particularly in the Atlantic area. We cannot and never will have a commercial fishing industry in Atlantic Canada with the importance it once had as long as poaching goes on at the rate reported today. This is something upon which Statistics Canada does not give us figures. It is rather unfortunate that it does not, but this is something that goes under the table rather than above the table. This does not come under regulation and cannot seem to be regulated or controlled by the government in any way.

The consequences of our lack of surveillance was made perfectly clear to an interparliamentary committee which went to Europe. While we have complained in Canada about the overfishing of salmon on the high seas, the members of that interparliamentary committee which went from this place to visit with members of parliament in Europe were assured by those members of parliament that in no way were they even going to consider negotiation on the fishing of salmon on the high seas until Canada introduced an effective surveillance program of its immediate offshore and freshwater streams.

These are items which I think are of major importance and which the committee should have had an opportunity to discuss. Instead of this bill going to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, the original suggestion was that it should go to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. That would not give a fisherman much chance to present his point of view or to promote the best interests of the fishing industry. Where it may end up now I am not sure.

The hon. member for South Shore has handled matters pertaining to the fishing industry much better than I am capable of doing because he has fished, and that gives him an expertise which none of the rest of us could possibly posses. However, there are a few things about the bill I wish to mention. The first I should like to refer to is this wrap-up clause 33 which provides for certain possibilities in respect of the transition of duties, responsibilities and functions.

What disturbs me is that this bill has not properly defined all of the fields in which the minister may function. By virtue of the fact that this has not been done, there appears a phrase at the end of the bill in clause 33 which states what shall be done by the deputy minister of fisheries and oceans. Let me quote from line 19 as follows:

> —or the appropriate officer of the department of fisheries and oceans, as the case may be, unless the governor in council by order designates another minister, deputy minister or officer of a department or a portion of the Public Service of Canada to exercise such power, duty or function.

I deplore that clause in this bill as it introduces the usual uncertainty which applies to any piece of legislation this government introduces. While it is not the regulatory basket clause that is usually there, it does leave a degree of flexibility for government movement after the establishment of a ministry of fisheries, a degree of flexibility which I fear. I do not know what authority they may give or take from him because of the flexibility there.

One of the great weaknesses of the Department of Fisheries being with the Department of the Environment was that there was no such thing as a deputy minister of fisheries per se throughout most of the period of this combination of responsibilities. Too often the result was that, since there was a deputy minister of the Department of the Environment, that deputy minister was environmentally oriented. I have no quarrel with any man choosing his profession or choosing his items and the order of priorities which those items are given in his own mind. What I do quarrel with, and what I did quarrel with under the old structure, is that there being no equal of a deputy minister on behalf of fisheries the Department of the Environment imposed regulations upon fisheries which were unnecessary and burdensome to that industry.

We now find that the department of forestry is to be put in exactly the same position. That department will find itself combined with environment. I see in this bill no assurance that there will be a deputy minister of forests who will in fact be responsible for forests, who will be able to speak with equal weight with anybody in his department on behalf of forests. I wonder whether this department will now become subject to the selections of attention it may get when the minister appoints a deputy minister of environment. I fear this and I suggest to the government that there should be within the department an equal spokesman for forests as well as for the environment. Those two voices could then be heard in balance, at least, and would not be too far down the line to be listened to by the minister. They would have direct access to the minister on an equal footing.

There are times of conflict between the environment and the forests, and I suppose New Brunswick is a prime example of that conflict when we talk about budworm spraying. Environmentalists speak with one voice and those who favour protection of the forests speak with another. Unless those two voices are heard on an equal basis by a single minister of a department here in Ottawa, the interests of the environmentalists may prevail rather than the interests of the forests.

As we listened to the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand) yesterday we were concerned by the suggestion in his remarks that we have increased the number of people at Petawawa. This statement on its own suggests to those who may have heard the news or read the speech, without full knowledge of what is going on, that the research station at Petawawa will in fact be doing more research in the same field it has historically done that research than before.

The minister went on to say the government had accepted some of the suggestions of the Conservative party with regard to cutting government spending. He did not go on to say that the Conservative party had suggested, and has done so since I have been associated with this party, that research was a foundation and an investment in a better future. At no time and in no way has any Conservative in this House suggested that we make savings in respect of research unless such research can be proven to be wasteful. Certainly there is no proof that any research done at Petawawa, or any other research establishment, has been wasteful. We, therefore, never recommended cuts in respect of research.

It is for that reason that I wish to draw to the attention of the minister the suggestion that Petawawa will become one of the foremost research establishments in the country. It has long been recognized as the research establishment of Canada, but now it is to be downgraded, regardless of what the minister has said.

There have been many representations made to the minister in this regard. I for one have consistently suggested there should be more research in respect of the budworm situation. I wish to quote from the report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry proceedings at page 2:15, November 28, 1978. I asked this question of the witnesses of the day and the minister:

—I would like to ask the minister if the department has undertaken an assessment of what would have happened to the forests of New Brunswick if there had been no budworm sprayings since 1952?

The minister's reply was as follows:

I read some reports, Mr. Chairman, and as I recall the conclusion was that if the province of New Brunswick did not spray, they probably would have lost all their forest.

I would qualify that by saying that we were talking at that time of the coniferous forests and not the deciduous forests of New Brunswick. I quoted that to show my support for research in depth in respect of forests. This problem has existed for approximately 30 years. It was first attended to by spraying in 1952, some 27 years ago as of this year. Research has not been adequate enough to find any way or means of controlling that problem other than by spraying. I do not quarrel with the research effort that has taken place with respect to this subject. I do quarrel with the idea that any forest research be reduced in view of the need for that particular item.

● (1540)

I would like to draw to hon. members' attention the statement made by the hon. member for South Shore which is in the same report of the fisheries and forestry committee dated November 28, 1978. At page 2:24 the hon. member said:

The forest industry in Canada already generates one million jobs, $6 billion in foreign trade and $2 billion in federal and provincial taxes annually. Trade figures indicate that Canada's more favourable balance of payments situation in recent months is due largely to our forestry sector—

I might add to that that the minister who was present at that time corrected the hon. member on page 2:25 of the same report, and said:

It is higher than that, it is about $7.5 billion.

He was referring to the balance of trade which was generated by the forest industry. When we become penny wise and pound foolish with the reduction of research in an industry which is generating $7.5 billion in favourable trade balance, I think we are taking the wrong direction.

We have had conflicting reports from different sources as to its impact. A news release, which does not seem to have a date on it but is headed up "The Minister of Environment Canada", reads:

The goal of achieving more for less will, in this case, be accomplished by consolidateding the work of the Forest Fire Research Institute and the Forest Management Institute, both now located in Ottawa.

I quote again from page 2 of that release, which reads:

After consolidation, the staff of Petawawa will be increased from 78 to over 100. The station will have a budget of $3.5 million. As many as 60 employees of the Ottawa institutes will move to Petawawa. About 50-70 employees both Ottawa and Petawawa will, however, still have to be laid off to achieve the required budget reductions.

If one talks to researchers in the forest industry and asks them when we are going to get results or when they will know what they have accomplished, those researchers will probably say that it may be up to 100 years before the work which they started today will have a known result, in a positive or negative way, for the forest industry. The work which was done at Petawawa, however, and which has been done there for over 60 years, is to be cut back. This means that many of the projects which were started ten to 50 years ago have not yet been brought to a conclusion. The results are not known. Therefore, any cutback in the staff of that research station will result in the frustration of up to 60 years of work on certain projects.

That is not the worst of it. We in our society today are making use of our forests in a way which has never been done before. We are now demanding of our forest soil that it produce a crop on a regular, annual basis. The soil has never had to do that before. If the budworms were to remove an area of coniferous forest from the land, it was of no particular consequence at one time; but if the budworm was to remove an area of forest today, then there would be no jobs tomorrow.

We then come to the problem of how to control our forest industry and its regeneration, what research do we have to direct us as to what trees should be planted and where, according to our reforestation program, which is so necessary to the continuing crop structure required for employment in Canada north and east of the St. Lawrence. Most of that forest is being cropped to the limit of its productive capacity. We must have that research. Therefore, any cutback in that area is detrimental to the long-term, best interests of the industry. It is necessary to know what will grow best on what soil, for example, in New Brunswick, in eastern Quebec and in Nova Scotia.

The government of Nova Scotia undertook a study in a certain area of that province whereby they analysed the soil required for the trees. That study recommended what trees should be grown in what particular region of the province, outlined the number of cords or cubic feet of wood that could be grown per acre in each region, and which regions were not worthy of reforestation or even of consideration in a remunerative way to the forest industry.

This is the kind of work which was being done in Petawawa. This cutback, however, is taking place in spite of the fact that a news release has come out from the Department of the Environment headed, "Lost in the Woods, a Circular Dilemma". It asks why it is that Canada's share of world export markets for forest products has decreased form 31 per cent to 19 per cent in the last 20 years, while the U.S. share has increased from less than 9 per cent to more than 12 per cent. It seems we are going in the opposite direction with a smaller population and with more wood. The news release also asks why the general productivity in the wood products industry in Canada is 15 per cent less than in the U.S., and why it is that Canada with a forest industry that provides direct and indirect employment for nearly one million people, and that contributes almost one-fifth of the nation's exports, finds itself with serious problems emerging with regard to economic supplies of timber. Another pertinent question it asks is why it is that competing products are making inroads into traditional wood markets despite the relatively low energy requirement to process trees into products and despite the potential for industrial self-sufficiency in energy through residue utilization.

The news release goes on to ask why it is that Denmark, a country nearly devoid of timber, uses more wood in public and industrial buildings than we do in Canada. Why is it that building code developments for wood systems lag behind those for alternative materials? It further asks why it is that federally funded research and development at forest product laboratories is about $14 million in the United States and only $7 million in Canada.

All these questions are being asked in light of the fact that we are now cutting back on research in forestry and putting forestry into a secondary position in a department coupled with environment. These questions are coming from Environment Canada, Mr. Speaker. I could go on to cite a multitude of such questions but I should like to skip ahead to the end of this news release which states:

> All of this in spite of the fact that . . . Hon. Judd Buchanan, Minister of State for Science and Technology announced in parliament in June an ambitious program leading to a national goal to increase R&D in Canada from its present 0.92 per cent (less than half that of Germany, Netherlands, France or U.S.) of gross domestic product to 1.5 per cent by 1983.
> Hon. Len Marchand, Minister of State for the Environment, and minister responsible for the Canadian Forestry Service, pledged in a Vancouver speech before the Canadian Institute of Forestry last December:
> > "I want to assure you now that I have no intention of downplaying the role of the Canadian Forestry Service. If economic restraints make further cuts in my department necessary, I intend to make sure that the Canadian Forestry Service does not suffer. I want to see its role enhanced, in recognition of the high priority I place on the Canadian forest resources."

I should now like to read a portion of a letter written to me by the Public Service Alliance of Canada relating to Petawawa. The relevant portion is as follows:

> However, the government still insists on the same $1.5 million cut and the same 70 to 80 people lay-off. With our friends in the Canadian Forestry Service, we now continue our fight to save the government forest research. We hope all our political friends will take up this fight in the House of Commons.

Perhaps that is one of the presentations which were made to the minister and to which he referred.

One of the reasons why an element of the Petawawa operation was saved may have been a telex sent to the Prime Minister by Dean V. J. Nordin, president of the Association of University Forestry Schools of Canada, on September 18, 1978, which reads as follows:

> On behalf of all schools of forestry in Canada at the universities of B.C., Alberta, Lakehead, Toronto, Laval, and New Brunswick, I view with deep concern the catastrophic implications for Canadian forestry that will result from reductions announced recently by the federal government. The heads of forestry schools met with the honourable Len Marchand last June 21 and the minister said that he would resist any further damaging reductions to an already depleted and demoralized Canadian forestry service. Unless these new reductions are reviewed and changed there will be enormous and irreparable injury to Canadian forestry. Supporting details follow by letter.

The letter at great length lays clearly on the line to the Prime Minister what the consequences of the reduction will be. Each of the three departments of research which are now located in Petawawa has been effectively emasculated; each of the three research departments has had reductions in personnel and is no longer as effective or as productive as it would otherwise have been. Valuable research personnel have been irretrievably lost.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take a few minutes to participate in this bill on government organization. I should like to comment on some statements made yesterday, first of all by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) who spoke rather in motherhood terms of his support for the gillnetters and trollers of British Columbia. He pointed to a problem brought up recently when the regional office of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment announced that the 150 fathom fishing by the gillnetters in the herring season would be reduced to 50 fathom one net, rather than two nets. The hon. member did not say whether he was in favour of one net or two nets but merely said this was proof that the government was attacking small businessmen. This is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. The only reason I bring it up is to show the difference between responsible representation and non-responsible representation. Motherhood phrases do very little to assist fishermen faced with a problem.

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo), who is from Skeena, the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. Pearsall) and I met with the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) when this matter was brought to our attention. We pointed out that changes in regulations regarding the herring catch several weeks before the season was to start was very unfair regardless of whether the 50 fathom net is more desirable from a conservation point of view. Before the season begins the gillnetters have purchased their equipment and nets on the basis of existing regulations.

We also pointed out that by reducing the number of nets from two to one, approximately 1,000 people in the fishing industry in British Columbia would be laid off and that, of course, is not desirable. We asked the minister to have discussions on this subject with the fishermen concerned before the regulations were brought in.

I am pleased to report, Mr. Speaker, that today the minister informed us that the director general of the regional office in Vancouver will call a press conference at two o'clock this afternoon regarding the gillnetters. I am sure the recommendations made by the members from British Columbia on this side of the House to the effect that there should be a one-year period for discussion will be taken into account. Certainly not enough time is being allowed to make decisions just before the herring season begins. I understand the minister has accepted the recommendation and I trust a solution to the problem will be found.

Approximately one year ago there was a debate in this House on the question of forming a separate ministry of fisheries. Shortly after that the minister was able to announce that a ministry of fisheries and the oceans would be established. That has a nice ring to it, Mr. Speaker. This finally takes into account the fact that we in Canada have expanded our coastline and that the amount of territory we govern is literally hundreds of thousands of miles with the introduction of the 200-mile limit which was brought in by a Liberal government and the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment.

It gives me some concern, Mr. Speaker, after having established the 200-mile economic zone, which we all agree will benefit the people of Canada, especially in the maritimes and along the west coast—

Mr. McGrath: And Newfoundland.

[Mr. Anderson.]

Mr. Anderson: —to hear that the official opposition is now apparently attempting to balkanize the fishing industry in Canada by turning over jurisdiction which they have supported and increasing the role of the Ministry of Fisheries. They now say that if elected they would take power away from the Ministry of Fisheries and distribute it among the provinces concerned. Instead of talking platitudes about what we have done right or wrong, I would like someone from the opposition to state in this House whether they wish to balkanize the fishing industry in Canada and establish the same sort of regime as that established in the United States of America which has experienced disastrous results. Those of you who have followed the course of fishery policy in the United States I am sure are aware that states have jurisdiction out to 12 miles, the federal government has jurisdiction from the 12-mile limit to 200 miles. But there is a third area of legislation, that of regional councils.

● (1600)

We talk about a fishing war with the United States. There is no doubt in my mind that we got into the situation because the United States, through its three arms of jurisdiction, could not make up its mind as to what it wanted. Signing an agreement with the United States at the present time is very chancy business due to the fact that we are dealing basically with three separate levels of government.

Having said that, I am amazed to learn that apparently a plank of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, if they are put into power, is to turn over the duties of the Minister of Fisheries to the premiers of the provinces in the Atlantic Region so they could have their own fish war. As I said, they would balkanize the fishing industry and I am sure we would have exactly the same results as those that have occurred in the United States, namely a lack of central power to make decisions on behalf of fishermen in general rather than having the proposal which has come forward, and that we would have our own wars among the provinces. I hope that someone from the official opposition will bring up that subject today because I think it is very important. There is no point establishing a fisheries portfolio giving the minister broad powers if at the same time the Conservative party wishes to disband it as soon as they are elected.

There is no question in mind, Mr. Speaker, that since 1974 a revolution has occurred regarding the fisheries industry of Canada. Many of us will recall that prior to the 1974 election a meeting was held in Caracas, Venezuela, which was really the forerunner of the Law of the Sea process that has allowed us to go forward to 1978, when many of the coastal states have achieved sovereignty over the waters adjacent to them through the 200-mile economic zone.

Fishermen from British Columbia have asked me why we had not gone into massive hatchery programs prior to the proclamation of the 200-mile economic zone. They have asked why the government has been slow to meet the needs of fishermen in British Columbia. Let us make it very clear in the House that it would have been very foolish, before we had obtained sovereignty over our coastal waters, to have spent hundreds of millions of dollars for the benefit of distant water fishing fleets to harvest a resource that is costing Canada literally millions of dollars. It would have been utter foolishness to have money spent by the people of Canada for the benefit of distant water fishing fleets.

I believe very strongly that the policy that has been carried out by this minister has been correct, first of all establishing sovereignty over coastal waters and ensuring that money spent by the people of Canada for the enhancement of fish stocks will benefit the people of Canada rather than other nations with distant water fishing fleets. In that regard I totally agree with the minister.

Yesterday the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) made reference to a statement apparently originating from the Fisheries Council of Canada to the effect that the minister should resign his portfolio. However, the hon. member for South Shore did not mention that while some leaders of the fishing industry demanded the removal of the minister last fall, Richard Cashin, president of the Newfoundland Fishermen's Union, sent a protest to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). If I may quote from that protest, it reads:

> Roméo LeBlanc has established himself in the eyes of fishermen of Newfoundland and I believe all over eastern Canada as no other fishery minister has probably since confederation.
> There are many important policy areas where LeBlanc is moving in the right direction and this is a critical period for fishermen. Sincerely hope you will see fit to keep him in fishery.

I would like to pose a question. When was the last time, Mr. Speaker, that you heard of a labour leader springing to the defence of a Liberal cabinet leader? It does not happen very often. As I said, a revolution has occurred in Canada since the 1974 meeting of the Law of the Sea in Caracas, Venezuela.

I believe we have done a very poor job of giving credit for that revolution to the members of the Canadian delegation who so ably represented us in Geneva, New York and Caracas. I am referring to people such as Allan Beesley, head of the Canadian delegation, Len Legault, Dr. Crosby and Dr. Needler, who recently retired. I say this because we as politicians like to take credit for things that are done on behalf of the Government of Canada, but sometimes we do not realize the importance of people like Allan Beesley and Dr. Needler. Anyone who has paid close attention to the Law of the Sea Conference realizes that Canada has played a role in that conference disproportionate to our population and to the power we have as an international force. It goes without saying that Canada has been the glue that has held the Law of the Sea Conference together and many of the proposals that are coming forward regarding the oceans and deep seabed mining are proposals which have been brought forward by the Government of Canada through its very able representatives.

I would like to use these few minutes to state publicly that the Canadian people owe a great deal to these negotiators. In addition to that I would like to say that the Law of the Sea Conference owes a great deal to Canada. It is my sincere opinion that this particular conference would have disbanded years ago if there had not been someone who could have talked to all parties involved and attempted to find a common ground to continue negotiations.

We talk about the structure of setting up a department of fisheries and the oceans. In a similar debate a year ago I said that we should have a separate department recognizing the fact that the Department of Fisheries, along with its minister, is an area with great potential growth. I am sure that the Minister of Fisheries is on occasion frustrated because he knows that there is probably greater potential growth in his department than in any other area. He has one of the lowest budgets. I am sure that if some of us had our way we would have greater input of money into the Department of Fisheries, perhaps coming from some of the non-productive departments to what is a growth department.

I do not believe there is any doubt either in the minister's mind or in my mind that, as we use land masses to their full potential in providing food for an ever increasing world population, at some point in the future the world will have to turn to the oceans as a source of nourishment. If one is mercenary, one would have to say that those engaged in the fishing industry and related aquaculture industries in Canada have the greatest potential for growth, if only because distant foreign fishing fleets can no longer supply their people with fish they normally catch off the coasts of Canada, the United States and South America.

We in western Canada are seeing the results of the 200-mile economic zone. Take, for example, the herring industry, one in which few people wanted to participate until a few years ago because they could not earn enough money to make it worth while. Most of the catch was ground up for fertilizer or made into cat and dog food. It was used for every purpose except feeding people. There was no other market for it. Today, because of the 200-mile zone, the situation has changed. This year the herring roe fishery in British Columbia will be a $100 million industry. This sum will go into the pockets of fishermen, processors and others in the Pacific region, though a few years ago the commercial returns from this product were so negligible that no one talked about them. Where is the herring going? It is going to the Japanese who are no longer able to harvest this species in Canadian waters or other waters they have traditionally fished.

I certainly bear no malice toward Japan or any other country, but for the first time in the history of the fishing industry we have been able to establish sovereignty over waters which are adjacent to Canada, and as a result we are now seeing a breakthrough of tremendous importance. We shall be able not only to harvest but to manage these resources on a sustained yield basis. This will prove to be better for the countries purchasing fish from us because hitherto there had been a rape of the ocean's resources. It was like a piece of agricultural land that nobody owned and everyone could try to profit from. We now have under our control resource management programs which will benefit not only the people of Canada, fishermen in particular, but countries all over the world which cannot grow sufficient food on their own land and which have to rely on the fisheries for sustenance. They will now have a constant supply available to them.

The breakthrough I am talking about extends not only to herring roe and salmon. For the first time we are seeing the development of new possibilities. In British Columbia, dogfish are the bane of commercial fishermen because they tear up the nets and are, in general, of no use to our fleet. Today, though, a market has been found for them in Europe and catching them is a profitable undertaking. This new market will provide our fishermen with additional income while ridding the sea of a species which is damaging to salmon stocks as well as to the nets of commercial operators.

Account should also be taken of the fact that, as a result of the negotiations now taking place with the United States, we are able to exploit groundfish for the benefit of our own fishermen whereas formerly the greatest benefit was allowed to go to the American groundfish producers in return for benefits received by our halibut fishermen. There are problems, of course, as there are in any organization, whether it be the Department of Fisheries or any other department of government, federal or provincial. For instance, we all know that the number of personnel engaged in fisheries patrol should be increased. I believe the minister would agree with this assertion and if further funds were available to him I am sure this could be one of his priorities.

The minister is also aware that the hatcheries being constructed in British Columbia at the present time and those which are yet to be constructed under our salmon enhancement program require a reservoir of experienced staff. These people will have to be engaged full time. Under our present system it is likely that only the hatchery manager and his assistant are full-time employees; the rest of the staff is engaged as casual labour. If we are to train future hatchery workers to replace those who retire as time goes on, we must ensure there is a pool of experienced staff to make sure that the program is utilized to best advantage. I hope the funds will be forthcoming to enable the minister to do some of these things which both he and I recognize as needing attention.

I suppose I should mention that under the present Minister of Fisheries we on the west coast are undertaking the most ambitious fisheries program since confederation. I would be remiss if I failed to congratulate the minister on his ability, in a time of restraint, to secure approval of his cabinet colleagues to a salmon enhancement program which over a five-year period will spend $150 million on increasing salmon stocks in British Columbia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anderson: Perhaps what is not as well known is the fact that we are not embarking upon a five-year program per se, so that at the end of five years the Government of Canada will say: having now spent $150 million we are going out of the enhancement program. The minister has made it very clear that after an initial five-year period, which has already been extended to seven years, an evaluation will be carried out to ascertain the value obtained for the money spent and to determine what enhancement had taken place during that period.

He has further undertaken that if this party continues to form the Government of Canada we would embark on a further ten-year program in addition to the original five extended to seven. If I am not mistaken, the minister said we would be spending in the neighbourhood of $30 million to $60 million over a ten-year period. This would make the salmon program in British Columbia the largest federal program initiated since confederation. That is a program of the present federal government and is certainly a credit to the Minister of Fisheries who, in our opinion, has done more for the province of British Columbia than any other minister since confederation.

It may seem an odd thing for a member from British Columbia to compliment a minister from New Brunswick; I suppose there is always a tendency for a minister representing a region which is adjacent to the Atlantic to give preference to his own area, especially when our west coast fishermen have, generally speaking, a higher income than fishermen on the east coast. The fact that the minister seized an opportunity to put his money where his mouth is and supported members from British Columbia in a huge program which could cost $500 million or $600 million over a 15-year program says a great deal about the impartiality of that minister.

When the eastern fishery gets its act together, I hope that the same minister will be able to announce an enhancement program for Atlantic salmon. That would benefit the people of the maritimes in the same way the enhancement program in British Columbia will benefit the fishermen and the people of British Columbia and ultimately the people of Canada. There is a tremendous challenge facing the new minister of fisheries and oceans. What has not been said enough is that there are very difficult days ahead.

Mr. Alexander: Not when we take over.

Mr. Anderson: I think we on the west coast are aware of that. I see that the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), who led off the debate on behalf of the official opposition, is here.

Mrs. Campagnolo: A noted fisherman.

Mr. Anderson: I understand that he is very interested in the Hamilton Harbour Commission and derives his fishery experience from that particular harbour. I think the hon. member was fishing yesterday for things other than what we are discussing. I am very sorry to hear that his health has not improved, and on behalf of hon. members on this side of the House I extend best wishes and trust that his health will improve in time for the next election. I think the hon. member will need the best health possible if he is to remain in this House.

Mr. Alexander: Your days are numbered, sir.

Mr. Anderson: I have tried to outline the importance of the proposed ministry of fisheries and oceans, the fact that the fishing industry will be one of the great growth areas in Canada over the next decade and the fact that we require a strong minister with strong powers in order to deal with many matters, including relations with the United States. I hope those hon. members opposite who have stated that, if elected, they would have these powers shorn of the minister and given to the provinces will reconsider, in light of the decision of the United States. I would be very pleased to hear comments from hon. members opposite on this subject because apparently only in the maritimes and very seldom here in Ottawa do we hear what they would do with respect to the powers of a federal minister of fisheries if the people of Canada were to elect them.

I must say that that prospect chokes my throat. However, if a catastrophe of that kind should occur, I should certainly have liked to have heard their proposals stated in the House of Commons prior to the election. They should not be stated on friendly maritime ground, but here. We should be told whether the Conservative party would decentralize fisheries authority to the extent indicated by press reports from the maritimes. I think it is very important, when we are talking about the unity of the country, to hear whether the official opposition intends to speak for the people of Canada or for the provinces of Canada.

The leader of our party—

Mr. Alexander: Who has destroyed the country.

Mr. Anderson: —has made it abundantly clear that he would not be disposed to speaking for the provinces because he represents the people of Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The man is a menace.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) would not intentionally mislead this House.

Mr. Anderson: Of course not.

Mr. Crouse: He might well do that due to lack of knowledge or stupidity, but I would not accuse him of doing it intentionally. He has charged that members of the official opposition would balkanize the Department of Fisheries—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I fail to recognize a point of order in the hon. member's remarks. Perhaps the hon. member wants to refuse some remarks made by a previous speaker, and perhaps that opportunity should be given to him when he is recognized or has the floor, but I fail to recognize a point of order.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I am rising under Standing Order 37, which gives me the right, if I am misquoted or misunderstood, to explain my position. Having been asked by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni to define our position, I would like to do that now under the provisions of Standing Order 37.

The hon. member stated that we would balkanize the fishing industry and put the responsibilities of the department into the hands of the provinces. At no time did I as my party's spokesman on fisheries matters ever make that statement, nor did any members of my party put that position on the record.

So that the hon. member will know and not misquote us, we firmly believe that responsibility for the regulation of fisheries is vested in the federal minister of fisheries. We have never said otherwise, and I hope that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni will apologize to the House or correct his statement so that he is not on record as misleading the House.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I certainly would not want to mislead this House. I was referring to comments made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) when he was in the maritimes recently. He indicated that he believed very strongly that the resources of the provinces should be managed by the provinces. If, as the hon. member says, I have misled the House, it was an unintentional mistake. My information is that the provincial governments—and if the hon. member wants me to, I can quote the provincial governments—have indicated very strongly that they consider the fisheries to be provincial resources and that the Leader of the Opposition has said that those resources should be in provincial hands. If I am mistaken, I apologize to the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Then sit down.

Mr. Alexander: We accept your apology.

Mr. Anderson: I am not quoting from a text used by the Leader of the Opposition; I am merely referring to comments he made. If I am taking them out of context, I certainly apologize to the official opposition.

Mr. Alexander: You are a gentleman, and we accept your apology.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, after being present at the adjournment of this session for the Christmas holidays when everything was so urgent that the government had threatened to make us sit day and night and, having failed, had to impose closure to have the House pass quickly some bills which should have been introduced at the beginning of the session but which for lack of planification are always deferred to the last days before an adjournment or a prorogation, I wish to draw the attention of the House on that unfair procedure, but this government is not alone because all other previous governments have done the same thing, a proof that the status quo is always acceptable in this parliament.

I do not know whether the government considers a session as a political race to be won and feels that it has to hide its cards, keeping some surprises till the end, or whether it is so devoid of imagination at the beginning of a session that it is unable to introduce any specific basic issue which would enable the House to launch serious and productive debates, but it is always the same thing. The first bill with which we are dealing today is an indisputable proof of that never-ceasing repetition of the procedure used in previous years.

Whoever reads Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, gets the impression that the officials responsible for drafting this bill have not yet recovered from the lethargy of the festive season. In fact, for the past few years and especially last summer, when there were strong rumours of election, the present government intended to establish a department of fisheries separate from the department of environment. Finally, today, although it is a bit late since it is about to go to the people, the government introduces this bill as the first and main subject for debate. Some would say that we are nearing election time. Such a legislation is certainly a sign that we shall have an election within the next few months, as surely as a cloudy sky announces a rainfall.

Which serves to confirm what we the members of the Social Credit Party of Canada have always claimed, namely that the old parties always administer the country with an eye on the electorate, to gain votes so to speak, without giving much consideration to the nation's welfare. To make a long story short, why did the government not keep the name of the fisheries department and simply add the name of oceans, since this is particularly the same bill amended by the same minister, perhaps with a new dressing? For the public servants, of course, it is a question of doing something new, of hiring more people and of getting a larger budget.

Mr. Speaker, even though the present government would have us believe that the numerous subjects dealt with in Bill C-35 amount only to a bunch of administrative details, because that is its intention in introducing that package deal, I would like to try to clarify some very important points which are covered in that bill concerning areas such as fisheries, environment, research and development, and changes in electoral constituencies. So, for the benefit of the public, I will try to make clear what the civil servants have taken so much time to make obscure.

First of all, I would like to remind hon. members that the establishment of the department of fisheries and oceans as a separate entity from the Department of Environment is an electoral promise which goes back more than four years. If we consider the whole question of the development of our underwater natural resources as well as the question of the extension of our territorial limit to 200 miles from our coasts, I think that the new department of fisheries and oceans will have a very important role to play in the future, so much so that its establishment, its duties and responsibilities should have come under a separate bill instead of being just a part of a pre-election omnibus package which is introduced and passed with great pressure to the prejudice of all Canadians. From the point of view of the procedure, Mr. Speaker, this bill is abominable if we consider that part I deals with the establishment of the new department of fisheries and oceans and that it is only at the very end of the bill, more precisely in part IX, after having heard about the public service, the electoral legislation, research councils and parliamentary secretaries, that at last we can learn how that new department is going to be financed. There are two important changes in part II of the bill. First the fisheries and oceans research advisory council is substituted for the fisheries research board.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that in addition to changing the name of this agency to make it fit with the department's new name, the government took pains to include the word "advisory" which was not there before. The second significant change is the increase in the number of members of the council from 18 to 24. The members are recruited in the public service, in universities and teaching establishments, in industries and among the general public. All this is very nice, but what good will it do to pay civil servants to draft bills and to hire more members for a council which the government pointedly calls "advisory", meaning that its only function will be to advise the minister?

For almost two years now agencies like the Canadian Association of University Teachers and the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies have been constantly trying to explain to this government that such advisory bodies should become executive agencies with their own powers and that they should not depend only on inefficient ministers or general administrators of the same type. The public also requested larger representation of the Canadian scientific community on those advisory bodies, and what is the government bringing us today? It announces an increase in the membership of the new advisory body.

But what will be the proportion of members coming from universities, industry and the public service? We still do not know. I refer hon. members on the government side to the debates of March 7, April 17 and December 1, 1978, when hon. members of our party made a clear description of the lamentable condition of research and development in Canada. What solution is proposed? More members coming from we do not know where to sit on a board which has no executive power.

In the third part, it is a good thing the government has at long last recognized that the question of the environment calls for a separate department and established such a department as an autonomous body in Part III of Bill C-35. However, we of the Social Credit Party of Canada believe the powers and functions attributed to the Department of the Environment in the bill before the House are very limited and in fact too limited. In fact, in subclause 6(c) the minister is depicted as an adviser to the heads of various departments and other agencies. Would it not have been better to establish a code for the evaluation of negative goods based on abundant data relating to the pollution of the environment which we have in hand and to give the Minister of the Environment the responsibility to apply this code? When will this government stop talking and start acting?

It is high time our country adopts such a code and applies it to all commercial and industrial development rather than hoping that toothless tigers will protect our environment. Among the duties attributed to the Minister of the Environment is that of providing to Canadians environmental information in the public interest. In this manner I think it would be beneficial to innovate and provide such information to the people in order to encourage creative discussions which will lead to the adoption of serious policies by the government. At present, the government is passing environmental laws and informing the public post facto. Once all laws are passed, the public is informed, rather than being consulted beforehand. That is a negative way of doing things, Mr. Speaker. It would be much more profitable, I think, to use this power of public information to initiate a public debate and thus achieve a greater input from citizens regarding this crucial question of preservation and the environment.

Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on part IV as I prefer to concentrate on part V. This part of the bill abolishes the office of the representation commissioner and transfers its responsibilities to the Chief Electoral Officer. This is a very important proposal, Mr. Speaker. It is a first step toward solving the problems we had to face and the injustice some of us have suffered concerning electoral boundaries readjustments. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the House that the citizens of the Abitibi riding will have to suffer the consequences of the irresponsible action of that famous commissioner of whom we will soon be rid if this bill is passed.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that because of his special responsibilities the Chief Electoral Officer is closer than anyone to reality and the most able to identify problems concerning boundaries readjustments as he receives direct representations from many different sources. They are made by representatives of political parties in Ottawa as well as by returning officers and the candidates of political parties in various ridings. Then he is the most able to have an over-all view of the situation.

However we do not like much the famous provincial commissions whose members are appointed in a very subjective and partisan way by the Secretary of State who ha' now the title of minister. So, Mr. Speaker, if the government really wishes to deal with those problems it is urgent to review the appointment procedure of provincial commissioners and then to present a complete and serious bill on that subject alone and not an omnibus bill like this one.

Mr. Speaker, I found advisable to put together parts VI and IX of the legislation, under which the Medical Research Council, the National Research Council, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council no longer need the minister's approval for the appointing, the classifying and the salary determination of their staff.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely wonder what useful purpose the Department of Science and Technology will serve once the bill is enacted. Because how can the minister, a duly elected representative, answer for and explain before this House the acts and decisions of those four bodies, if those bodies can do whatever they like with public funds without the minister being informed? I perfectly realize the delays in getting the minister's approval for each and every decision taken by those councils, but I feel it is the latter's responsibility to ensure proper operation and some way or other to answer before parliament for the actions of such bodies as are normally his responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely feel this government are experts at paradox. On the one hand they recently slashed the budgets of various research bodies in Canada, and on the other hand they now give them wider decision autonomy under the legislation before us. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what is the purpose of all this? If funding is cut, if they are deprived of any possibility of monetary improvement, even this new freedom of decision will not lead very far and we will not solve our research centres' problems.

Mr. Speaker, I am not making this up. You have only to read the reports on research published recently in the newspaper La Presse. I believe it was on January 22, 23 and 24, 1979.

Then you will know clearly what I am talking about.

I close my remarks by dealing with part X. To my mind, that part of the bill which deals with parliamentary secretaries is just like them: quite confused. Indeed, in the French version the main difference between the act as it stands now and the bill is that the word "occupant" is being replaced by the word "exerçant"; on the other hand, the English version gives the change another twist that does not reflect the substitution of "exerçant" for "occupant" by giving corresponding words, that is "hold office". We note that the words "at any one time" now in the act no longer appear in the bill. What does it all mean, Mr. Speaker?

I believe we will have time in any case to think it over and come up with an answer before the next election. And in just a few seconds—I see you are about to rise—I would like to say that I am very anxious to see the different interpretations that will come out of the standing committee of the House. So we will be looking forward to that famous report of the committee to re-examine the problem and pass a final judgment on this Bill C-35.

[English]

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, before I get into the substance of my remarks, it seems I should put to rest a canard which is receiving some credit in speeches to the effect that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised a separate department of fisheries. I have a short excerpt from the Digby Courier of July 4, 1974 from which I should like to quote. It states:

● (1650)

—the Rt. Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau said in Digby that "he now prefers a full-time Minister of Fisheries".

A little over a month later in fact there was assigned a full-time minister responsible for fisheries, so that promise was fulfilled.

Some hon. members have attributed to me qualities which I do not have. I must say I really am not in competition to see who is the best minister of fisheries. I think Canada has been fortunate in having a long tradition of good ministers of fisheries. I say this without even choosing between sides in this House because I know some of the things that were done by representatives of the other party. I might say that my immediate predecessor, the hon. Jack Davis, made some extremely difficult and courageous decisions affecting Atlantic fisheries, and I take away nothing at all from what he has done.

One of the most pleasant compliments I have ever been paid was in being told that I was somewhat akin to the hon. James Sinclair, who I think was considered to be one of the great ministers of fisheries in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in support of Bill C-35, particularly that part of the bill dealing with the reorganization of the legislative arm of the government by creating a separate department of fisheries and oceans. I think the legislative paper is both clear and straightforward. Based on comments made by members of all parties in this House over a year, it is a progressive measure that seems satisfactory to everyone. Bill C-35 proposes to create a department to be called the department of fisheries and oceans. The duties, powers and functions of the department will include all matters over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, or agency of the Government of Canada, relating to (1) sea coast and inland fisheries, (2) fishing and recreational harbours, (3) hydrography and marine sciences.

[English]

—and:

(b) such other matters over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction relating to oceans as are by law assigned to the minister.

Part II of the bill provides for amendment or repeal of certain sections of the Fisheries Research Board Act to allow the replacement of the old Fisheries Research Board with a new fisheries and oceans research advisory council. This council will advise and report directly to the minister. The majority of its members would normally be scientists, but to answer right away hon. members of the New Democratic Party mainly, that fishermen should be represented, I can assure them they will be. In fact, the word "industry" in my understanding would include both fishermen and, of course, processors.

The council will then advise the minister in matters relating to fisheries research and the marine sciences, including technological developments in those fields, the scope and adequacy of science policies and programs of the department of fisheries and oceans, having regard to the duties and functions of that department, the science policy and international obligations of the Government of Canada, and the co-ordination of research and development programs in the field of fisheries research and the marine sciences.

In a nutshell, the establishment by this bill of the new department and council will provide a clearcut administrative and policy framework for carrying out the federal government's constitutional mandate for "seacoast and inland fisheries", including our fisheries management and ocean science responsibilities, and administration of the legislation listed in schedule I of the bill.

There are other related, consequential amendments which are included in schedule II to ensure that the mandate of the minister of fisheries and oceans is appropriately recognized in other legislation.

I feel it would be worth while at this time to cast a backward glance at events of the past decade to examine why this government took the step it did in creating a federal department of the environment in 1971, and decided to include in it the then department of fisheries and forestry. The overriding reason at that time for the creation of an environment department was the absence of a national focal point for environmental concerns and the lack of a strong federal organization to co-ordinate and lead the fight against encroaching pollution of the environment.

One of the events that occurred at that time was the discovery of mercury contamination in the Great Lakes and elsewhere which provided a dramatic example of the need for swift and effective action by the senior government. It should be borne in mind that at that time no provincial government has an environmental department to cope adequately with the situations which were, to many people's surprise, arising. Even worse, there was very little environmental legislation on the books that could be used to stop or roll back pollution except for the Fisheries Act. The Fathers of Confederation in their wisdom had included anti-pollution provisions in the Fisheries Act when it was passed into law more than a century ago, and those provisions, beefed up by stiffening the penalties for polluting any water where there was fish life, were used very effectively in the war against pollution in the early 1970s.

Among our renewable natural resources the fisheries, of course, stood to lose the most from the effects of pollution of our lakes, rivers and oceans. The Fisheries Act served as an invaluable stop-gap until other environmental protection legislation could be put into place, and until provincial governments were able to organize their own environmental departments and join the attack at the provincial level.

In the mid-1970s came the realization that bold and decisive action was needed to avert disaster in fisheries, particularly the Atlantic groundfish industry which was verging on bankruptcy. This situation had arisen largely as a result of excessive foreign fishing.

The federal government rose to the challenge and made fisheries rehabilitation a number one priority. Millions of dollars by way of temporary assistance programs were made available to the industry. Looking beyond these emergency short-term measures, an over-all management policy was formulated for Canada's commercial fisheries, a document published in May, 1976, which I understand was never tabled in this House. With the permission of the House, I would like to table it in both official languages at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the minister consent to table the document to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): The key to rational management of the offshore fisheries resource was, of course, extended jurisdiction. Canada unilaterally introduced a 200-mile fishing zone on its east and west coasts on January 1, 1977. Here I should like to pay homage to my own colleages in cabinet, particularly the former secretary of state for external affairs, the present government House leader, and his successor, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) and distinguished representative of Newfoundland. This declaration of the 200-mile zone was without doubt a milestone in Canada's fishing history, and I believe marked the turning point in the furtunes of the industry.

Now, with effective management control over most of the offshore fishing grounds, backed by successfully negotiated bilateral agreements with countries that traditionally fished off our coasts, a new era of prosperity looms on the horizon for Canada's hard-pressed fishing communities. Significantly, in the year 1977 the total market value of Canada's fisheries topped the $1 billion mark. Fisheries is getting to be big business, and it is also abundantly clear that the fisheries department with its many added responsibilities should re-emerge as a separate entity.

● (1700)

Thus it was that in the fall of 1977 the Prime Minister announced the government's intention to set up a new department to look after Canada's fisheries. Wheels were set in motion to accomplish this and the necessary legislation was placed before the House last June. Unfortunately, time ran out on us and the bill died on the order paper. In any case, if anyone should be wondering, I might add at this point that we have not been sitting around twiddling our thumbs waiting for the passage of the bill. Anticipating the split in the department, my officials have been busily occupied with sorting out the administrative arrangements and the transfer of responsibilities which such an action would involve.

Government Organization

Much of the machinery necessary for fisheries to function as a separate department is now in place. With the approval of this House and the Senate, the new department will be known as the department of fisheries and oceans. An associate deputy minister has already been appointed—he is now well settled in his job—and a senior management structure in the new department has been developed. Of course, the associate deputy minister would become the new deputy minister with the passage of the legislation.

There are now four assistant deputy ministers: one responsible for the central, inland and western fisheries, one for the eastern fishery, one for the ocean and aquatic sciences, and a new assistant deputy minister concentrating on marketing and developmental aspects. I might add that the officials of both sectors, the Department of the Environment and the Department of Fisheries, worked well together, and I am sure are ready to continue doing so because there will always be a close relationship between those who are involved in the protection of the environment and those who are working in fisheries.

The name "fisheries and oceans" was chosen deliberately to indicate that the new department's make-up includes a marine science component. This is not something that has been tacked on as an afterthought. The fisheries are part of the ocean's eco-system, and in order to manage them effectively the input of many disciplines of marine science is absolutely essential.

Perhaps I could best define this department by pointing out the objectives of the ocean and aquatic sciences sector. Firstly, it is to conduct on a national basis research into physical, chemical and biological oceanography to gain a better understanding of the marine and fresh water environments.

Secondly, it is to support through this program the management of marine and fresh water resources, the enhancement and protection of marine and fresh water environmental quality, and the safe, orderly and efficient conduct of shipping in Canadian waters and those areas of the ocean of direct interest to Canada.

A third objective of OAS is to contribute to national capability in fisheries and marine science through the development and transfer of ocean technology. It has also been given the provision of direct financial aid to qualified university research projects through the subvention program, and the implementation of a national fisheries and marine scientific information and publications policy.

Last but by no means the least of the OAS functions is to ensure that adequate hydrographic data, charts and publications are available as and when needed to meet the needs of navigation in all Canadian waters. This is of direct benefit to commercial fishermen as well as to marine fishing in general, and to the ever increasing population of pleasure boaters in this country.

It is perhaps worth mentioning that the ocean and aquatic sciences sector had its origin back in 1959 as part of the past fisheries research board of Canada, when it was known as the division of oceanographic research. At that time it used the administrative and ship support arm of the Canadian hydro-graphic service. Subsequently the group was attached to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and more recently became part of the fisheries and marine service within the environment department. Thus it may be claimed that OAS has turned full circle and is back where it started from.

The shaping of a new department has provided the government with an opportunity to take a good, hard look at fisheries needs as they currently exist throughout Canada and at what may be needed for the future. Efficient and economically sound management of the fisheries—whether salt water or fresh water—is obviously the basic concern of any fisheries department.

Fisheries management, however, entails a lot more than merely setting catch quotas and licensing fishermen. It requires science and research, a knowledge of what, where and when to fish, an understanding of the very complex factors which affect stock, health and abundance. It involves not only controlling how much fish is harvested, but also attempting to spread that fish throughout the year to keep processing plants fully occupied. It means devising methods to increase the natural or artificial production of fish, such as the multi-million dollar salmonid enhancement program now in top gear in British Columbia. It involves measures to protect and, where necessary, rehabilitate fisheries habitats—the streams, estuaries and other places where fish spawn and spend their early life. It means coming up with programs to protect the fisheries resource, and that includes combating the poaching of valuable species such as salmon and lobster.

Incidentally, with the help of this parliament, two amendments were put into the Fisheries Act which have been very helpful in the area of habitat protection and stricter or stronger measures against illegal fishing. The fishermen themselves are now discovering that the resource is also theirs to protect. In Prince Edward Island a very positive experiment was tried by the fishermen during the last season and on their own estimate the amount of poaching dropped substantially in the lobster fishery. Other fishermen groups, with this example in mind, are suggesting that they too should have a role in the protection of their own resource. I know that this problem is less serious in certain provinces, especially Newfoundland where the sacredness of the fishery is recognized very broadly.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I might spend a few minutes speaking about the current fate of Canada's fisheries. Occasionally there are cries of outraged protest from the media or from politicians that Canada is not taking full advantage of our opportunities under the 200-mile limit. Sometimes these protests are accompanied by calls to cash in on this wonderful new bonanza by vastly expanding the fishing fleet. In both cases these protests are from people who have not taken the trouble to study the situation, or have chosen to ignore the facts for whatever reason.

Let us look at some of the facts. On the fishing grounds of British Columbia full-time fishermen earn stable, responsible and respectable incomes. Pacific salmon already are the most valuable fish in Canada. Our federal salmonid enchancement program with British Columbia's excellent co-operation will double the number of salmon by the 1990s. In Pacific groundfish we can eventually increase our catches four times. I have not mentioned it but the hon. member for Commox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) has mentioned the very lucrative herring roe fishery.

On the prairies the federal Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation continues to provide marketing stability. In the interior and on the coasts federal-provincial co-operation in the recreational fishing industry has increased markedly. On the Atlantic coast, despite strong conservation measures, fishermen's incomes have increased 50 per cent in recent years. From 1974 through to 1977 landings rose some 20 per cent and landed value rose over 50 per cent. Provisional figures for 1978 show landings are up another 13 per cent and value is up a healthy 37 per cent over 1977.

Besides the new dollars there is a new feeling of stability about the fishery. Those of us who read the economic review of the different provinces in the Globe and Mail business supplement were, I am sure, impressed of find that in most provinces fisheries was singled out as an area of development and an area of quite dramatic progress. Catches are more reliable and plant work is steadier and is stretching over more of the year. There is growth in fishermen's organizations. Fishermen have gained status in the community. No longer is the fishery the employer of last resort. The potential for job increases on the Atlantic coast is higher in processing than in fishing—20,000 or more new jobs is not unlikely.

● (1710)

By 1985 we could double our catch of Atlantic groundfish. But this is not only a function of more boats. Partly, bigger landings will come from bigger catch rates per boat. The estimated doubling of our groundfish catch depends also on our making use of species such as grenadier and hake that we now ignore.

Except in northern cod, it is hard to foresee fleet expansion for our traditional fisheries, either from growth in fish stocks or from displacement of foreign effort. As fish stocks increase, a fleet the size of our existing one can take much larger catches—and, in fact, our fleet was doing so ten years ago.

In 1977 we took 76 per cent of traditional groundfish and herring on the Atlantic coast, including waters both inside and outside the 200-mile limit. Of all finfish last year, including both the species our fishermen seek and those they ignore, and including fish both inside and outside the limit, and taking into account the rights of France in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, we caught about 60 per cent. The percentage is even higher off Nova Scotia.

Atlantic fish prices have never been so high. Atlantic landed value has risen from $224 million in 1976 to $280 million in 1977. The idea of massive fleet expansion for traditional species—and I want to be very clear on this—is a pipe dream. In the northern cod fishery and in underutilized species there could be expansion. But using underutilized species to expand our fleet and catch to their full potential depends on being able to sell what we catch. Until there is some dramatic breakthrough in product or market development—and these are largely areas of responsibility of industry and the provinces—it is difficult to look quickly at the day when the foreign fishing fleet will have left Canadian shores.

To those who advocate a policy of removing all foreign fishing from the Canadian zone, I point out that this is a very short-term and short-sighted policy because it does not take into account two very important protections which we require, and these are the interest of Canada outside the 200-mile zone on the east coast—and Newfoundland is aware of this problem—and, of course, the fate of the Atlantic and Pacific salmon on the high seas. We need some negotiating power to protect our vital interest in this species.

I might also say that access to the Canadian zone can be discussed and negotiated with the full knowledge of all the segments of the industry. That access can be granted in exchange for other benefits such as markets which, of course, Canada should diversify because of our overdependency on the United States market.

Some hon. members have made comments to which I should like to refer briefly, with your permission, Mr. Speaker. On the matter of fleet expansion and freezer trawlers the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) forgot to underline that our existing fleet on the east coast could take at least 50 per cent more fish than it is taking. A factory freezer trawler could probably triple what our best trawlers now catch and some 90 times what the inshore longliner can catch. The implications respecting the over-all structure of the industry, and in particular the potential hazard posed to the livelihood of inshore and offshore fishermen, are obvious to me.

In the matter of freezer trawlers, of the six applications received in 1979, all are contingent upon access to traditional species which our present fleet is not only able to catch but where the catch rate could mean more fish for our fishermen. Those applications are contingent upon access to those traditional species and in many cases they require financial investment and involvement by foreign countries.

The hon. member has taken as his text a letter from the Fisheries Council of Canada. I think he and I separate clearly on this issue. I have made it clear that in the disposal of this common property resource, which is held in trust by the Government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada, the first interest that has to be considered—and as long as I am the minister the first interest that is considered—is the interest of fishermen, starting with those who live in the communities that are the most isolated and whose mobility is the most limited. It was in the name of the small coastal communities and the small fishermen who could not compete with the foreign fishing fleets that we argued successfully with the rest of the world that Canada should manage the 200-mile zone.

If the hon. member wants to take the letter of the Fisheries Council as his text, I will take as my text a letter from the Fishermen's Union of Newfoundland dated April 5, 1978, which stated that their "basic principles are . . . a go slow approach in the acquisition of factory ships." On this position our difference of views is quite clear.

The hon. member also talked about a long-term policy. I have tabled a document published in 1976 which, barring some adjustment required because of scientific readjustment, is, I think, perfectly valid today. This document established objectives and strategies for the development of Canada's fisheries. In resource management it covered important issues such as the extension of jurisdiction and effective management of the resource to ensure not only a sustainable yield but also the best social and economic use.

Regarding harvesting, the document advocates the need for systems of balanced access to ensure stability of the resource and improved incomes for fishermen. It also advocates improving fishing gear and practices and ensuring the viability of appropriate fleets depending on the nature of the fishery.

In processing, the document advocates quality, full utilization of the resource and arranging for the distribution of catches, particularly during glut periods, to plants in areas where catches are low in order to extend the working time of the plant.

In marketing, the document asked that we ensure competence to take advantage of dramatically changing international market patterns and that we improve our international competitive position through an improved co-ordination and consolidation of exporters.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the Fisheries Council has created a voluntary organization in the area of market co-ordination, but we are a far distance from our best competitors—and these are not socialist states but free enterprise types of government—who have consolidated their marketing efforts and do not see companies competing among themselves to the advantage of the buyers in markets as strategic as that of the United States.

The hon. member and I also separate on a number of other issues, Mr. Speaker. In the area of technological labs he made an impassioned plea for me to reconsider, but he also established his plea on some rather weak information. The actual number involved in the cutbacks is 30, of which 20 are in the scientific and technical categories, 14 in Halifax, six in Vancouver, the remainder being support staff. The programs affected are those related to packaging, storage of fisheries products, work on utilization of marine oils, and some study on paralytic shellfish poisoning and reproductive biochemistry. We have, however, retained a nucleus of expertise in all these areas. The reduced programs largely benefit the processing industry.

● (1720)

I am looking for the figures which would indicate that during 1978, for instance, the National Sea Company shares increased fivefold in value, from $4.33 to $21. The industry can now afford to do some of its own research and development work in this area, especially with some of the tax benefits that they can receive from the policies of this government. For proof of this, if we check the financial pages, as I have indicated, we will see that those companies which are accounting publicly are showing a fairly healthy picture. The department is still giving high priority to exploratory fishing, gear and vessel design demonstrations. There are also no cutbacks in projects relating to harvesting and processing of underutilized species and studies on preservation of fish quality and fish spoilage.

Our fisheries research program generally has been greatly expanded. There has been some misleading commentary made by many observers, including some of the media. Since the 200-mile limit came into force we have hired an additional 125 researchers. Research spending during the current year has gone up by $14 million. We expect to increase this further during the next fiscal year.

The hon. member for South Shore was wrong in his statement about the effects on an individual lobster fisherman. Studies on wet storage of lobster are continuing, as are studies on substitute baits for lobster traps. Studies on the relationship of offshore and inshore lobster which are not part of the technological labs are also unaffected by these reductions. But I must say, Mr. Speaker, that in that area as in other areas ministers have to try and stretch out every available man-year, or person-year as the expression now is, to cover the most urgent and pressing of his or her responsibilities.

I see that the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand) has returned and he may want to deal with the forestry aspect. An hon. member indicates that he has already spoken, but I am sure the minister will want to put on the record the tangible way in which he has shown his interest in the forestry industry.

An hon. Member: He has already done enough damage.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I would like to hear from hon. members concerning this area. I remember clearly a meeting of resource ministers in Saskatoon when I was minister responsible for forestry. For a whole morning the federal government was berated for even thinking of a national forestry policy. During the afternoon ministers of forestry from different provinces claimed that the federal government should do more and more to discharge some of their own management responsibilities because they had not been allocated sufficient money in their own budgets to manage their own resource, which was the forestry.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni mentioned the problems of staff and problems of limitations on staff. I might say to him that I recognize the problem fully, especially as urban encroachment makes the protection of the fishery in areas like the Fraser Valley as well as in other areas of northern British Columbia more and more difficult as access to what were traditionally almost virgin areas of a province has become increasingly possible. There is no doubt that the protection of the resource has become more complex. I recognize the problem of hatcheries which the hon. member has indicated, and I do not like to see putting in under contract certain functions which I think should be rightly discharged by the department. On that point we have no disagreement.

The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Faour) made what I thought was a very sensitive speech, and I do not disagree with him when he recognized the social implications of fishery management. I might say that whenever I see a document describing rationalizing the fishery, I usually reach for my big black pen. However, I have a slight disagreement with the hon. member in his approach to licensing. I will not prejudge the issue because there is a study being undertaken now by an experienced and well known former employee of my department, Mr. Cliff Levelton, in the whole area of licensing. If there is any commonsense solution which can be found I am sure that Mr. Levelton and his working group will find it.

My disagreement with the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe comes from the point that we must accept the idea that there should be a group of fishermen who invest their lives in the fishery, not as a last resort and not as a means of desperate employment, but as a career, as something they want to do for themselves, for their children and for generations to come. That is why we will have to find a way, while recognizing that in some cases, especially where there is a short season of fishing, this can be a secondary source of income, to protect the basic interests of fishermen who have invested their lives and want their children to find a very rewarding future in that area.

I might say I was astonished to hear a few months ago a school principal in Prince Rupert, British Columbia, telling me that one of the problems in his high school was that of students dropping out to go into the fishery because it was so good. There are some positive aspects to this, but I am sure parents feel that there may also be some negative ones.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) talked about the vessel insurance program. I repeat what I have said, that no fishermen will be left unprotected. I have written to all fishermen's organizations and to provincial governments to ask them to join with us in looking at the possibility of fishermen's mutuals as an approach. I might also say that the fishermen's organization of Newfoundland have studied and are working on a project which might become a model for the rest of Canada or for those areas of Canada that might want to adopt that model. But I repeat what I have said, that no fishermen will be left unprotected by the closing out of the vessel insurance program.

The need for man-years and personnel in areas of urgency has forced me to look at the management of an insurance program as being of somewhat less a priority if we can find a way to protect the fishermen's interests and have an organization which they would direct.

The last point I want to make is one for which the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond expressed his support. I would like to hear where members of the official opposition stand on a fishermen's organization. If they are for it I hope they speak to their soul brothers in my province of New Brunswick where by law fishermen have obstacles in their way in being able to choose freely to which kind of organization they want to belong. I am not advocating a fishermen's union over a fishermen's co-operative or other fishermen's organization; I am advocating the right of fishermen to choose the organization to which they want to belong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I would hope that we may have either some movement on the provincial side, or if we can overcome some of the difficulties—I am not a lawyer so I will walk most carefully when I say this—have signalled to us by the Supreme Court in the federal legislation, it might be possible to open the way for fishermen. One province has opened the way and the sky has not fallen. I believe fishermen have a right, like any other segment of the population, to protect their interest and negotiate their future.

I have indicated very clearly from the time when I made my first public speech in Halifax that the time when fishermen arrive at the wharf and are told that the price has dropped during the trip must come to an end. I can only say that I rejoice that it is increasingly coming to an end.

● (1730)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for not taking up all the time available to him; he has left some time in which to deal with his remarks and, hopefully, to make a positive contribution to this debate.

There are a few things I should like to get out of the way immediately. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) made a serious charge, in my opinion, and was responsible for a gross misrepresentation which has been referred to by my hon. friend from South Shore (Mr. Crouse) by means of a point of order. The only reason I am dignifying the hon. member's words by giving them repeated reference is that he was speaking not only as the member for Comox-Alberni but as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries.

An hon. Member: No, consumer affairs.

Mr. McGrath: Well, he was speaking as a parliamentary secretary and presumably he was reflecting the views held by the government and by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc). Very often parliamentary secretaries are used by ministers to do their dirty work in this House and I suspect the parliamentary secretary, inadvertently, was being used by that old shrewdie, the Minister of Fisheries, to do a little bit of dirty work in the House that he did not want to do himself because it would jeopardize or affect his ongoing relationship with his provincial colleagues.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. minister on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the last member with whom I would want to get into a hassle is the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), for whom I not only have a great deal of respect but personal affection. I really do not think he would want to impute any motives to me. There is an obvious issue and I am glad to hear that the hon. member for South Shore took a clear position about federal jurisdiction. I hope he will speak to some of his soul brothers in at least two of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. McGrath: I certainly would not wish to impute motives or put words in the minister's mouth. He has been known to express an opinion similar to that put forward by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. But I want to make our position very clear—not that it has not already been made clear by my hon. friend from South Shore. The minister refers to some of our provincial colleagues. Presumably the reference is to the minister of fisheries for Newfoundland, a very distinguished member of the Newfoundland government and a former member of this House, who is doing a constructive job on behalf of the Newfoundland fisheries. I should like to tell the minister what the minister of fisheries for Newfoundland, the hon. Walter Carter, had to say on the question of jurisdiction in a speech he made on November 13, 1978. I put it on the record not because it represents the position of the minister of fisheries in Newfoundland, but because it accurately represents the position taken by this party. He said:

> We believe that in terms of our respective fiscal responsibility for the provision of fishery and marine related facilities the provincial and federal roles are clearly defined under the BNA Act and while we do not intend to look for anything more than is ours by right we will expect to receive nothing else. We trust federal authorities will fulfil their responsibilities to the letter, and by so doing they will be joining us in the great revolution for the Newfoundland fishery.

That is a clear statement of the position of the province of Newfoundland and it happens to represent in the plainest terms the unambiguous position taken by this party. We are not suggesting, to use the term employed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, that we should balkanize the fisheries and take away the jurisdiction of the federal government. What we are saying is that the federal government has a role to play as defined in the constitution, that the provinces have a role to play as defined in the constitution, and that the Fathers of Confederation, in their wisdom, intended that both authorities work together—that they should consult and co-operate, that they should not confront each other or compete with each other as seems to be the case today. Because when that happens it is the fishermen who suffer.

I am reminded of an old Newfoundland folk song which goes something like this:

> I'se the boy that builds the boat,
> And I'se the boy that sails her;
> And I'se the boy that catches the fish
> And takes them home to Liza.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Sing it!

Mr. McGrath: I would be glad to sing it except that I would probably be out of order. The Minister of Fisheries for Canada claims to be the boy that builds the boat. The minister of fisheries for Newfoundland claims to be the boy that sails her. But the poor old fellow who takes the fish home to Liza doesn't know who the hell is responsible for the fisheries. He is confused, and Liza is confused, too. I hope, for the sake of Liza and whoever has to bring the fish home, that both the federal Minister of Fisheries and his provincial colleagues, whether in Newfoundland or New Brunswick or Quebec or British Columbia, will realize we have an industry with fantastic potential and that co-operation will be required if this potential is to be maximized. I know the minister is capable of such co-operation. I know the minister of fisheries for Newfoundland is anxious to pursue a co-operative approach.

We are talking about an industry which is, today, a $1 billion industry. In my own province of Newfoundland, to which the fishery is of vital importance, the industry has a value of more than $100 million—430,957 metric tons of fish landed with a value of more than $100 million.

In these circumstances I have to confess I was somewhat disappointed at the speech given by the Minister of Fisheries. I had hoped to hear the minister give us an outline of his aspirations, of his plans for the future designed to ensure the orderly growth of the industry, realizing, of course, that the achievement of maximum growth along lines which would produce most benefit for our fishermen would require co-operation among all those concerned. I had hoped the minister would have told us how he intended to pursue these commendable and necessary objectives. He failed to do so. I trust that on another occasion he will make up for this serious shortcoming.

Perhaps the reason he did not do so had to do with the nature of the debate in which we are engaged. After all, we are not dealing with a fisheries bill. We are not dealing with a bill calling for the establishment of a new department of fisheries. We are dealing with an omnibus bill. I would be in order if I were to make a speech on a whole range of subjects. The bill deals not only with oceans and fisheries and with the new advisory board; it also deals with the Department of the Environment, Canadian Patents and Development Limited, the representation commissioner, the Medical Research Council, the National Research Council, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, and parliamentary secretaries.

I make reference to the omnibus nature of the bill because we are as anxious as the minister to get the new department of fisheries and oceans on the road. We are anxious to get her launched, christened and out to sea; but then the government puts obstacles like this in our way. Forestry, environmental matters, the representation commissioner, elections, the Medical Research Council, research and development and all these things open up areas of very important debate. I am just concerned that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), who I am sorry to say has never placed the question of fisheries in a very high priority, will perhaps take note of the fact that debate is not going quickly enough, is not going to his satisfaction and not fitting into his timetable, and say to his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment: "I am sorry, Romeo, but I have to withdraw that bill; we have to get on to something else". That would be very regrettable.

[Mr. McGrath.]

The government could have brought in a bill prior to the recess to set up a department of fisheries and oceans, and we would have passed it in a few days. We would have given it second reading in a few days because we would have wanted to use that opportunity to have a full-scale debate in this House on the very important subject of the fishing industry and the future of the fishery in Canada.

The fishing industry is vitally important to many of us, and such a debate would have given the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment an opportunity to make a clearcut policy statement and to open the debate with that kind of statement. We would have a chance to respond constructively, but instead the Deputy Prime Minister introduces a bill to amend the Government Organization Act to reorganize the Government of Canada, we have a response from my learned colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), who in our party has responsibility for matters relating to the organization of the Government of Canada, we get a response from the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand), and all kinds of other responses. The result is that we have a very disjointed debate on the fishing industry, and that is regrettable. The bill might even be withdrawn, and the poor old Department of Fisheries would have to struggle on without having legal sanction for its very existence.

We do not question the right of the minister to proceed. Indeed, we want him to. But I know that the fact that the new department has not been given sanction by law has resulted in a morale problem. People in the Department of Fisheries are not exactly happy that the new department has not been officially established.

I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the very capable and dedicated men and women in the fisheries service of Canada, which is what we have at the present time, who will make up the nucleus and form the organization of the new department of fisheries and oceans. They have demonstrated their dedication time and time again, and they have certainly demonstrated their capabilities time and time again. I can speak of no better example than the people who work in the fishery service in my own province of Newfoundland, right from the director, Mr. Cowley, who was a school mate of mine and is one of the outstanding young public servants in Canada and certainly one of the most capable, to his entire staff. The minister nods his agreement that they are a tremendous organization. They are certainly a credit to the Government of Canada and a credit to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, who recognizes their capabilities and their dedication.

However, it is regrettable that their full potential has not really been harnessed by the government. That is because of something I referred to a few moments ago, the propensity of this government to downgrade the whole fishing industry. We are paying the price, and we have paid the price. I think of what has been done with the fisheries department since 1968 when this government came to power and, indeed, since 1963 when the government of the right honourable, late and great Lester Pearson came to power. The Department of Fisheries was disestablished and became the department of fisheries and forestry, humourously called the "department of fish and chips".

Then we had the new Department of the Environment established under the direction of a former member of this House from British Columbia. The result of the establishment of the new Department of Fisheries and the Environment was a downgrading of the role of the fishery component at a time when we should have been planning for the day when we would be able to realize jurisdiction over the 200-mile limit. It was not a far-off dream in those days. We had been talking about it since 1958. We came close to getting an international agreement at the first Law of the Sea Conference I recall in 1958. We did extend our jurisdiction, to the credit of the government. One could say that the government practically had to be dragged into it by the scruff of its neck. We had to present petitions. We had to push. We did so because we knew that the minister was secretly supporting us, so we pushed his colleagues day after day in the House. We literally had to drag the government by the scruff of the neck into making that unilateral declaration, but it did, to its credit.

However, when we finally made the unilateral declaration of the 200-mile economic zone, we were caught short. We had not put in place the planning which would anticipate the realization of the 200-mile economic zone.

Let us consider the experience of our cousins to the south in the United States. They saw what was coming and prepared for it by increasing the surveillance and rescue capability of the U.S. coastguard. They ordered new ships, new aircraft and new facilities for their coastguard in preparation for the day when they would have jurisdiction over a 200-mile economic zone.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Look at the document I tabled.

Mr. McGrath: I want to refer to that in a minute. The Americans embarked on a shipbuilding program to prepare for the 200-mile economic zone and for the day when there would be no foreign fishing activity whatsoever within their 200-mile economic zone. They even came to an agreement with Cuba, at a time when relations with Cuba were bad, with respect to the Gulf of Mexico. They did all these things, but what do we do? We are still haggling over the Georges Bank. The Cubans and the Americans got together over the Gulf of Mexico, but we couldn't come to an agreement on Georges Bank with our cousins and best friends. We finally came to it today, but at what price? At a serious cost in terms of our relationship with the Americans and in terms of our fishermen.

We have made no preparations for increased search and rescue capability and no preparations for renewing or increasing the size and operational scope of our coastguard service. We have made no preparation for a shipbuilding program to renew our trawler fleet, which does need renewal. I agree with my friend, the hon. member for South Shore, that we have to think in terms of renewing our trawler fleet.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): He was talking about freezer trawlers.

Mr. McGrath: Our trawler fleet is 25 years old. We need to renew our trawler fleet, which would provide badly needed jobs for our east coast, Great Lakes and west coast shipyards. American shipyards are going full tilt. Our shipyards have been going through some very difficult times. We could have a program, and we could have in place the suggestion of my colleague, the hon. member for South Shore, regarding federal financing of this fleet replacement program based on the model of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That is an excellent suggestion. I suspect that if the government is given a new lease on life, which is doubtful, then even perhaps in the final days of the life of this government they might get around to implementing it. It is a good program, one whose time has come.

● (1750)

I can talk about new species development, the development of new markets, our relationship with the common market and the tariff protection of the common market against our fish, which speaks to the dependence of our industry on the east coast on the U.S. market. I can talk about new marketing techniques, taking full advantage of the Asian market. The Japanese are in a position to buy fish from us if we can get it to them frozen or chilled. They are prepared to pay the price for it. We are not actively pursuing that, or at least I am not aware of it if we are.

The People's Republic of China together with Japan will take all of the squid we can produce. The lowly squid holds great promise as a new species for bringing in new returns to our fishermen. I remember the time in Newfoundland when squid was used as a fertilizer; it was a nuisance. Now it is a much sought after food by Oriental people and by some European people. It is a matter of great regret to me to see year after year thousands and thousands of pounds of squid rotting on beaches for lack of holding facilities, for lack of marketing capability and for lack of marketing initiative to get that squid on to the market where there is a great demand for it.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McGrath: It is excellent, by the way. I would commend squid to my colleague, the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin). Not only is it delicious but it is highly nutritious if properly prepared.

I found myself in agreement, much to the chagrin of my colleagues, with the deal that was made by the Newfoundland fishermen's union to sell squid and mackerel to the east Europeans. It is a market that we had not developed. Not a pound of mackerel had been sold in Newfoundland until that deal was made. So far as squid is concerned, if that deal has the effect of stimulating new marketing initiatives and getting the trade out of its complacency with respect to traditional markets and getting after these markets, then it was an even better deal than I suggested it was. I give the minister full credit for giving them the licence to do so and I give the Newfoundland fish union and the allied workers' union and their president full credit for taking advantage of it.

What are we doing when we talk about selling squid? We are talking about unprocessed fish; there is no processing involved. They are merely selling their products to some foreigner who is buying them directly, and we are just eliminating the broker who usually acts on behalf of the foreign purchaser. However, I would not like to see that as a built-in part of our system because I suspect that ultimately it would destroy the union. After all, the major responsibility of the union is to act as a bargaining agent collectively for the fishermen it represents in dealing with the fish trade, and it could hardly do that if it found itself in that kind of conflict of interest position whereby the very people it had to bargain with collectively on behalf of the fishermen were competing with them for certain markets. So I know it will not become a permanent situation in this country.

The minister spoke about this plan of his which he released today for the first time.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): It is a public document.

Mr. McGrath: If it is a public document, then perhaps he can explain to us why he found it necessary to table it today. If the document is in the public domain, and I take his word for it, then why did he table it today as part of his speech? I suspect he did so in order to get at his colleagues in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland who had been pressing the minister and the government with respect to a plan for the development of the fisheries in the Atlantic provinces.

He knows, for example, that the government of Newfoundland has an excellent program, which it announced a short time ago, which it brought to the attention of the minister over a year ago and which was formulated in co-operation with the officials of the minister's department. It is a program which entails half a billion dollars in expenditures, a program that cannot possibly succeed without the good will and co-operation of the federal government. I can say to you now, Mr. Speaker, that that good will and co-operation will be forthcoming, because come the next election, when we form the government, we will be only too glad to co-operate with them. I look forward to seeing the present minister over here as the fisheries critic. He will make an excellent fisheries critic. I say to you, sir, that the program will succeed because it will receive the co-operation of the federal government.

It is the constitutional responsibility of the Government of Canada to provide services to the industry, and that speaks again to the low priority of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment in terms of government expenditures. Where do they cut when they have an austerity program? They cut the budget of the small craft harbours division of the fisheries service so that we cannot have our wharves repaired or our breakwaters extended and the facilities looked after. That happens year after year. The result is that the onshore infrastructure of the industry in terms of wharves, breakwaters, slipways and so on is in a sad state of repair. Again its speaks to the lack of planning and lack of foresight in preparing for the day when the industry will come into its own as a result of the 200-mile limit.

One of the reasons I believe it is so essential, vital and crucial for the industry to have the department re-established on its own once again is its budgetary problems. After all, when the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) speaks in terms of his budget with respect to the Treasury Board, he has to go under the umbrella of the Department of the Environment and compete with the various services that make up that department. The result is that the subservices within the fisheries service, such as small craft harbours, usually are short-changed. The result is, of course, that we as an industry suffer the consequence. I hope that all of these things can come together.

I wanted today, Mr. Speaker, to pay tribute to the Premier of Newfoundland who has announced his retirement, and perhaps I can do so in the few moments I have left. He was a former distinguished member of the House. If there is one thing that can be said and will be said that distinguishes the administration of Frank Moores from any other administration in Newfoundland, it is its emphasis on the fishing industry and its importance to the future of Newfoundland. He turned it around when he became premier and took a positive approach as the government to the industry. The result is that our people now have a confidence in the industry which they have never had before. They approach it in a positive way. The whole population of the province feels positive about the industry and the potential it has to provide jobs for our people and careers for our young people.

I would have liked to have had an opportunity to talk about new species development, our relationship with the common market and what this means in terms of reducing our dependence on the U.S. market. I would like to talk about the saltfish sector and about the criminal situation which prevails with respect to salmon and the fact that the poachers are having a field day. The dynamiters are at work year after year, destroying ton after ton of salmon as they go up the rivers to spawn, because of the lack of funds on the part of the department to provide guardian protection on these rivers. I think that is criminal. If any other country had the potential we had in terms of Atlantic salmon, both as a commercial and sports fishery, it would not hesitate to put the dollars in there to protect this magnificent fish from poachers who are destroying it.

Unfortunately the clock has intervened, but in my final words I should like to say that I hope this bill will be referred, not to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, but to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, where it will receive the examination and attention which the fisheries part of the bill so justly deserves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.00 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

RAILWAYS

CRITICISM OF PRAC REPORT ON RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a question of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the harsh, crass and insensitive recommendations made by the Prairie Rail Action Committee which suggest 2,280 kilometres of prairie rail lines be abandoned permanently, and since these decisions were made irrespective of any social impact on the communities to be affected and without any consideration of an alternative method of transportation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this parliament censor the Minister of Transport for his needless and damaging support of the report by the Prairie Rail Action Committee, a report which contains false and inaccurate comments, and who did so prior to the full and usually impartial consideration of the document by the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion for debate can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED LACK OF GOVERNMENT FORESIGHT RESPECTING ADOPTION OF BILL C-14—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Richard Janelle (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a very important question of pressing necessity.

Considering that the staff of the unemployment insurance offices are unable to provide adequate information to the recipients concerning the new unemployment insurance legislation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House regret the lack of foresight of the government following the passage of Bill C-14, since the officials who are supposed to enforce that new legislation have not yet received any specific instruction.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT

CALL FOR MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE SITUATION IN EASTERN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact the latest quarterly provincial forecasts published by the Conference Board in Canada predict 10.4 per cent unemployment for Prince Edward Island in 1979, 12.9 per cent for New Brunswick, 10.6 per cent for Nova Scotia and 11 per cent for Quebec, and that the Conference Board forecasts show no other provinces in Canada will even approach these high unemployment rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae):

That the new so-called ministry of development come up with some special projects to alleviate the unconscionable unemployment in Canada's eastern provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED ROLLBACK OF BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Bell Canada has just announced a very inflationary 37 per cent increase in its profits for 1978, which is the highest return on common shares for this corporation in its history. This has occurred in a year when a rate increase was allowed by the federal government. Because of this terribly inflationary, double-digit increase in profits, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin):

That this government take the necessary steps to roll back the recent rate increases granted to Bell Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED UNAUTHORIZED SPENDING OF PUBLIC MONEYS BY CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Despite the protracted, strenuous protests of British Columbia members of parliament and thousands of citizens to the construction and development of a second, redundant CBC station within 20 miles of Vancouver, the CBC has gone ahead, constructed the building, ignored a recent cabinet veto of a 1979 broadcast schedule and is preparing right now to begin broadcasting March 31 from Victoria. In view of this situation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Raines):

That the government act immediately to halt this unauthorized spending of public moneys against the will of the people and of the executive body of the Government of Canada itself and to halt this repetitive waste of time of MPs and citizens and of taxpayers' dollars in fighting this CRTC-CBC battle over and over again.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OUTBREAK OF TUBERCULOSIS ON RESERVES IN NEW BRUNSWICK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the outbreak of tuberculosis on two Indian reserves in New Brunswick—14 known cases and 40 suspected cases—a situation verging on epidemic proportions, and since the Indian Act regulations of 1953 specifically deal with t.b., instructing the federal government to be responsible for prevention and treatment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to immediately order the regional director of his department in Amherst, Nova Scotia, to take the necessary steps to stop this outbreak and provide adequate care for those already affected.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

DEVALUATION OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—EFFECT ON INFLATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, who is the first minister of finance in this country for literally some 110 years to have permitted the Canadian dollar to plunge to its lowest average level which occurred in 1978.

Would the Minister of Finance indicate, now that the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey, has indicated that a further decline in the dollar would be still more inflationary to the country's economy, whether or not he still believes a floating dollar is a floating dollar?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): The answer is yes.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in line with the minister's little quip, is he aware that international analysts are now saying the Canadian dollar may touch 79 cents this year? Their quip is "79 for 79" in Canada for our dollar. If the minister is aware of this, will he indicate to the House what constructive steps he intends to take to ensure that such a humiliated dollar will not be permitted to occur in this country?

● (1415)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have stated many times the policy of the government on the exchange rate. I think that what governor Bouey stated yesterday is something with which I am in accord. He is a very competent governor of the bank. I think the hon. member should get busy making sure that on his next trip he does not lose his luggage as he is losing his mind today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the minister that at least I have not lost my credibility, or the value of the Canadian dollar.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: If the minister intends to continue his reckless program of borrowing, having expended $5 billion of our reserves in defending what he calls the floating dollar, would he indicate exactly what he means when he states we are now back to a clean float? What is a clean float, bearing in mind that this month alone, especially in the last two days, he has lost another $40 million to $50 million of our reserves defending what he calls the floating dollar?

Mr. Chrétien: As long ago as a year and a half I said that the floating dollar is the dollar established by the market. The Bank of Canada has always intervened to make sure there is an orderly market. I hope that some day members of the opposition who like to make a lot of points on this will get up and say if they want us to peg the dollar, and where. They have never had the guts to have any policy on that.

An hon. Member: Why don't you call on the Governor General?

REASON FOR INCREASING RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. Robert de Cotret (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Finance and it is on the subject of the Canadian dollar.

Given that it is quite obvious to anybody who follows exchange markets that the value of the currency is highly dependent on price stability in the domestic economy, and considering that the minister has predicted a lessening of inflationary pressures in 1979, can he explain why the advance price indicators—I mention here the industry selling price index and the wholesale price index—continue to show an increased rate of inflation? Where is the underlying trend to lower inflation rates which both he and his predecessor have talked about?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): If the hon. member would look at the CPI figures released a few weeks ago, he would realize that inflation, which was 9.8 per cent, is now down to 8.4 per cent.

Mr. de Cotret: As the minister is well aware, the CPI trails both the indices to which I have referred: both of those show dramatic increases for the latest 12 months' period.

On the question of the dollar, I should like to ask the minister, who has spoken repeatedly—along with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—about our magnificent trade surplus, the following question. The current account is the determinant of our exchange rate, not the trade position. Does the minister concede that the dollar cannot achieve stability while the current account position continues to increase as it has over the last 12 months?

Mr. Chrétien: We are working very hard to make sure that the current account is as much in balance as possible. Trade is a very important component, and in fact I am quite sure this year will be a record year for us in trade. However, I should like the hon. member to explain to the House, since he is so preoccupied with balancing the ledger, why his own leader is proposing an even bigger deficit than we have at this time.

Mr. de Cotret: As the minister knows, a substantial portion of the current account deficit arises from interest payments. The interest payments on the funds that the minister has borrowed and intends to borrow from foreigners will add to that deficit by a considerable amount. Why does the minister think such extensive borrowing is justified now, when it will only lead to a more intractable current account deficit in the future?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are borrowing abroad at this time because the provinces and the institutions are doing so to a lesser extent than they used to, and thus we are just substituting our borrowing for theirs. Formerly, money was borrowed through intermediaries such as the provinces and companies. However, the level of savings is now such in Canada that most institutional and provincial financing is done within Canada; we are therefore only substituting our loans for theirs on foreign markets. The hon. member should know that Canada always has to import foreign capital because it needs it to develop.

NATIONAL SECURITY

LISTING OF SUBVERSIVES IN PUBLICATIONS CIRCULATED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. Could the minister confirm or deny the existence of publications called "The Special" and "The Whizzer" which are circulated to ministers and deputy ministers, and which allegedly list dozens of groups and individuals in Canada that his department feels are subversive?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, over approximately the last four years we have had a weekly internal security service summary that has been circulated among people involved in security in various departments. This has been reflected in my annual report. The matter is not surprising; it has been in place for that length of time and is most helpful.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, in view of the 1971 blacklist of 26 individuals which was also circulated by his department, and in view of Mr. Bourne's statement this month that a group would be labelled subversive, and I quote, "if we felt their intentions were contrary to our interests", what guarantees can the minister give that the civil liberties of all Canadians are being protected at this time?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the major preoccupation of my department and this government is, indeed, the protection of civil rights of Canadians. The statement made by Mr. Bourne is one that falls directly within the responsibility afforded us by section 16(2) of the Official Secrets Act. I would call upon the hon. gentleman to review that act and to see the definition of "subversive activity" therein.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Canadians sleep a little easier knowing the Solicitor General is protecting their civil liberties. Mr. Bourne also said, in the same statement:

> I think you'll find most peace organizations, if they are labelled as such, are manipulated by the Soviets.

I wonder if that is the view of the minister in this matter.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I would indicate to the hon. gentlemen that the comments made by Mr. Bourne in that particular context were reflections of Mr. Bourne himself. I would like to review the context within which the comments were made.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT STEPS TO REDUCE OUTFLOW OF CAPITAL

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, barely a few moments ago, in reply to the question of an hon. member of the official opposition, the Minister of Finance said that we needed foreign capital to develop our country. I totally disagree with that statement. Mr. Speaker, recent reports show that the payment of dividends and interest, which represented a net capital outflow of $4.3 billion in 1977, and $5.5 billion last year will reach, according to various estimates, from $6.6 to $7 billion this year. Can the Minister of Finance confirm those figures? In addition, in view of the disastrous effects that outflow of capital has on the Canadian dollar, does the minister intend to take specific, efficient and short-term steps to stem that tide?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give the hon. member a specific answer on the figures he gave, but if he wants to put his question on the order paper, I can see to it that he gets one. As for government policy, we have no intention at this time of imposing controls on foreign exchanges in Canada. We want the flow of money between Canada and other countries to be very free, both into and out of the country, and we feel that it would be untimely at this point, if I fully understand the question of the hon. member, to consider the imposition of foreign exchange controls.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING BORROWING FROM ABROAD

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Everybody is aware that the present economic situation in Canada is really bad, and the minister is apparently unwilling to do anything about it. In view of the fact that the government has always favoured borrowing on foreign markets to support the Canadian dollar and that this approach has been unsuccessful and served only to postpone facing the problem of our growing indebtedness, does the minister not feel that this policy ought to be changed because of our extraordinary high level of indebtedness and he should consider a monetary reform as soon as possible?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I feel that if the hon. member would only examine the statistical data closely, he would realize, for instance, that the rate of indebtedness of the Canadian government compared with our gross national product was lower in 1978 than it had been in 1960. Although I am quoting these figures from memory, I think that Canada's debt in 1960 represented 30 per cent of our gross national product, while it represented only 18 or 19 per cent in 1978.

RAILWAYS

MINISTER'S VIEWS ON PRAC REPORT ON RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. In view of the concern being expressed in the prairies regarding the report of the Prairie Rail Action Committee, can the minister advise if he endorses the report and its recommendations?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the action we followed on receiving the report was to examine it to determine whether the positive recommendations seemed supportable, and to act upon those. We have done that. As a result, some further miles of branch lines have been transferred to the basic rail network and now we will be putting in a program for rebuilding.

Some of the recommendations which suggest abandonment are being treated in the same way as the recommendations of the Hall commission were treated in that regard. That means a standover for the Canadian Transport Commission to look at and to be disposed of by that commission.

Mr. Neil: In view of the fact that it is not mandatory for the Canadian Transport Commission to hold public hearings with respect to the abandonment of rail lines, will the minister direct the Canadian Transport Commission to hold public hearings in all cases where requests are made by concerned municipalities, towns and organizations?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I have the power to so direct. However, I am happy to tell the hon. member that the Canadian Transport Commission has already made that kind of decision in an area where certain lines were recommended for abandonment, particularly by the Hall commission and partly by the Prairie Rail Action Committee. Probably what the Canadian Transport Commission has been doing is treating the materials which were fully submitted to the Hall commission as being rather self-supporting for their work, with support from this House because, after all, members on both sides said "Bravo" to the Hall report, "Let it go forward."

Now, as more time has elapsed since the work of the Hall commission, I think the case is made for further examination, with more attention to public viewpoints. I am happy to join the hon. member in drawing this fact to the attention of the Canadian Transport Commission through this forum.

SUGGESTION PRAC WENT BEYOND TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the same minister, on the same subject. In view of the very close relationship the minister has had with the hon. member for Assiniboia, particularly with regard to presenting goverment positions to this House, and in view of the fact the hon. member for Assiniboia stated last Friday that the Prairie Rail Action Committee report went beyond its terms of reference, will the minister advise whether the hon. member for Assiniboia was speaking for the government when he made that statement?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen that statement. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has just claimed across the House that he made that statement. I want to determine whether they were both saying the same thing before making any further comment on that matter.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Just to refresh the minister's mind on this matter, 11 months ago, on February 28, speaking for the government on that occasion, the hon. member for Assiniboia said the Prairie Rail Action Committee had three urgent tasks: the first was to recommend additional, immediate transfers of lines from the suggested prairie rail authority category to the permanent network in order to facilitate the building of grain companies, and so on. That was honestly a government statement. He has now come out a year later and said that this report by the Prairie Rail Action Committee repudiates the Hall commission report and recommends the abandonment of an additional 1,400 miles of line which Hall recommended belongs to the authority of the Prairie Rail Action Committee.

Obviously, my question is whether the minister is now repudiating the statement made by the hon. member for Assiniboia a year ago when he was speaking for the government and laying down to the House the policy and the purpose of the Prairie Rail Action Committee.

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, I certainly am not. I rebut the argument by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain that the Prairie Rail Action Committee was in any way in conflict with the Hall commission. It is true that the Hall commission left a great number of lines in doubt. That is a point which hon. members opposite like to gloss over. The Hall commission did not say how long those lines were going to remain.

All the elevator companies, including the pools, came to us immediately and said that that continued period of doubt was going to be very serious, because they would not know whether to construct facilities on the lines in doubt or larger facilities on the neighbouring lines which were certain, and they wanted these issues resolved. Accordingly, we appointed the Prairie Rail Action Committee to continue the work of determining which lines should remain and which lines should be referred to the Canadian Transport Commission for further examination by that commission.

This is precisely the approach which the Hall commission used in regard to the lines before it and it left in doubt a certain category having resolved the issues in regard to the other categories. This work, therefore, was continuing to provide certainty. Of course, where the real certainty comes is in the rebuilding program, because not only are we declaring certain lines to be there and permanent, but we are rebuilding them with many millions of dollars and that is what is really going to make for a good transportation system on the prairies.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON USE OF INFORMATION CONCERNING SUBVERSIVE ELEMENTS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General and it relates to the documents known as "The Whizzer" and "The Special", and the publicity attaching to them recently.

Acknowledging that most, if not all, democratic countries make use of documents of this nature in terms of identification of individuals or groups presumed to be engaged in subversive activity, but acknowledging also that that use is restrained by the need for accuracy of information within a document, by the extent of circulation of the document and by the use to which the information is put by its recipients, will the Solicitor General take this opportunity, or undertake to give a statement at an early date as to the use to which the information contained in these two documents is put by its recipients?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. gentleman that all countries have systems whereby information is exchanged. That is essential if we are to protect ourselves internally, as we do in Canada, from subversive activities.

As the hon. gentleman knows, the Weekly Internal Security Service Report which has been referred to is prepared by a branch within my department, the police and security branch, in order to permit various security heads within departments to be mindful of activities which chould be interpreted as being dangerous and threatening to our internal security. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the distribution of "The Whizzer", the Weekly Internal Security Service Report, is very limited and is only for the purposes envisaged under section 16(2) of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, relating to the Official Secrets Act and its application to this particular document, the Solicitor General will recall another document to which the act applied, not too many weeks ago. It is now the subject of a prosecution. Literally dozens of copies were distributed all across Ottawa and some even came into the hands of representatives of other governments.

Will the Solicitor General be more definite in terms of circulation? Without wanting to know the names of the individuals on the circulation list, I ask the minister whether he can tell us, or undertake to make a statement at least in general terms as to the number circulated and the general nature of the recipients who are on the circulation list.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I would not wish to comment on the original statement made by the hon. gentleman in terms of the distribution of the document he has identified, because that matter, as the hon. member recognizes, is sub judice.

In terms of the distribution list for the weekly document, I will take that matter under advisement in order to see if that information can be provided to the hon. gentleman. If I cannot make that information public, undoubtedly I can make it known to the hon. member privately.

SHIPBUILDING

INQUIRY WHETHER DECISION REACHED ON 20 PER CENT SUBSIDY

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the uncertainty which prevails regarding the future of Canada's shipbuilding industry and in view of the many representations I have received from union spokesmen and shipyard officials, I would like to know if the government has made a decision concerning the 20 per cent subsidy to help shipbuilding in Canada and make us more competitive on the international market? If so, how long will it be maintained?

[English]

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have done a considerable amount of work on the drafting of a new shipbuilding policy. The Board of Economic Development Ministers and the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers want to make a comprehensive statement on the whole subject, possibly next Thursday.

SHIPPING

INCENTIVES FOR CREATION OF MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. My understanding is that the Minister of Transport made a statement about a Canadian merchant fleet and the refusal of this government to have anything to do with a Canadian merchant fleet.

In making that announcement, I wonder whether the minister took into account or discussed with his colleagues, particularly the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the feasibility of offering meaningful tax concessions to those who might be interested in putting together the capital necessary for the creation of such a fleet.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the exact nature of our shipping policy was fully discussed within the government and it was decided not to move with major tax incentives or other forms of support at this particular point in time. However, I think it should be pointed out that a good deal else was done with regard to our shipping policy and we remain convinced that it is best for our shippers and our major exporters and importers to have available world shipping at the lowest possible rates.

We are taking steps to protect ourselves against various world arrangements which might tend to work to our disadvantage, and we are also arranging to protect the Arctic for Canadian shipping in a way which should assist entrepreneurs in Canada to move ahead into the field of shipping and to be in a position to move forward with even more effort in the future.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, aside altogether from the apparent contradiction between what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce just said and what the Minister of Transport is now saying, that a shipping policy is in place, I wonder whether the Minister of Transport is aware that in failing to consider this course of tax concessions, he not only fails to evaluate the gains for Canada in terms of employment, not only in construction and in manning but also in the fact that he and this government are condemning Canada to adding at least several hundred million dollars to the already unfavourable balance of payments.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, obviously this was precisely the kind of issue which we did address. The hon. member is quite wrong in sensing any contradiction between the approach of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and mine. My colleague was addressing himself to the shipbuilding question, which is quite distinct from a line of flagships which might or might not be Canadian built. That is quite a distinct and different question.

The fact of the matter is that we looked at the question of a Canadian fleet and what it would mean in terms of jobs inside Canada. That is a thing one can look at every time one proposes any form of protective or special policy to try to move jobs here. We know that we are, in effect, employing a certain number of foreign persons aboard foreign ships in moving goods to and from Canada, but it is precisely because that is the lowest cost way of moving our goods and because that is good for our exporters and importers and, therefore, very good for providing many other jobs in Canada that we are retaining the policy which has stood us in such good stead as a major exporter and importer for many years.

SHIPPING SERVICE ON EAST COAST

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Canadian National operates a coastal marine shipping service out of several centres along the coast of Newfoundland, including the city of Corner Brook, serving the northwest coast of Newfoundland and the southern coast of Labrador.

Can the minister advise this House of the status of this service for the coming shipping season? This service provides jobs in Corner Brook as well as a necessary service to coastal Newfoundland and Labrador. Its continuation has been brought into some question as of late.

● (1440)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been questions over a period of time about the particular service out of Corner Brook, and various discussions with the Newfoundland government. The question is always whether or not a particular service can be supported in view of the cost of that service, whether it is indeed essential. When services are essential, even when the cost is considerable, this government goes out of its way to ensure that they are continued. On the other hand, when alternatives are available and the cost of the service is extreme, we have some concern for the taxpayers as well.

Mr. Faour: My supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. Can he assure the House that, whatever the decision on this particular service, it will be made forthwith, thereby relieving the uncertainty which surrounds the situation?

Further, can he again assure us that no jobs will be affected in Corner Brook and that postal communities will continue to receive adequate and efficient shipping services?

Mr. Lang: I will certainly see how far I can go to answer some of those questions as soon as possible. Obviously, the degree of service, the amount of alternative service, is one of the very important considerations we will look at before taking a final decision.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER RESULT OF MUC STUDY CORRESPONDS WITH EFFECTS NOTED IN REPORT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. Last January 17, the chairman of the Montreal Urban Community, Mr. Pierre Desmarais II, made public a study on the effects of transferring the Dorval operations to Mirabel. Given the conclusions of that study, I would like to ask the minister if he is aware of this study which gives evidence of negative effects of such a transfer on the labour force of the cities concerned and if, in light of this document, he can tell us if the explanations contained in the study do in fact relate to the negative effects mentioned in the report?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Let me say, first of all, that the report in question is completely false in suggesting that any decision has been taken in regard to this matter. A variety of issues in relation to service in the Montreal area are being considered, and reports are to be made to me in the very near future.

So far as the question of Dorval is concerned, even in advance of receiving those reports I can assure the hon. member that, while we foresee growth of traffic tending to be concentrated in the area of Mirabel as it develops and accommodates that additional traffic, we do not see a significant decrease or downplay of the role of Dorval. Therefore, anyone who creates the fear that there will be a serious economic impact in that area I think is doing a serious disservice. At the very least they should await the report. The press statements made after the statement to which the hon. member referred were correct in that I had not yet received the report. That is still the situation.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, the minister is surely aware of the concerns of the municipalities involved as well as that of the community over this report, and I trust that the minister can give us today the assurance that he will soon table a report on Dorval's future. I think that the mayors of the municipalities involved would like to know how work is progressing and when the transfer of operations will take place, and that they are counting on the government's co-operation and understanding in this major project.

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the fact that we were going to undertake these studies specifically at this time was made known many months ago. Obviously, as soon as there is something to be said about the studies and reports, that will be done.

Because of the concern which has been created by some false statements in the press, colleagues of mine, especially from the city of Montreal as well as from the ministry, a good number of them, will be meeting to look at this question to try to put to rest the fears which have been aroused.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

LEGALITY OF TAKEOVERS OF CERTAIN CORPORATIONS—CREATION OF MONOPOLY IN CONSUMER GOODS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs a question. It could have been put to the Minister of Justice.

Has the minister had legal officers of the Department of Justice or of his own department check the Combines Investigation Act to determine whether the amalgamation of or takeover of some large corporations has violated the spirit of the act by unduly affecting competition—here I use the words in the act—thereby creating a monopoly in consumer goods and increasing the price to consumers across the country?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The hon. member has not mentioned any specific companies, but under the act, the director of investigations is obliged to examine any takeover or merger which is likely to come into conflict with the legislation or which is in conflict with the legislation. He is continually doing that, and he obtains legal opinions from the Department of Justice and from his own officials on these matters. But we are not able to confirm or deny any specific investigation while it is still going on, because it might impede it.

Mr. Woolliams: Was the takeover or the amalgamation of the Bay and Simpsons-Sears looked into from the viewpoint of a monopoly being created in consumer goods? The minister did not come to grips with my question. Did he seek the advice of his legal officers on that matter, and does he take the position that the act also applies to the takeover of Crown corporations such as Petro-Canada?

Mr. Allmand: I can say that very close and serious attention was given to the proposed takeover of Simpsons by Hudson's Bay. As a matter of fact, the director of investigations received an undertaking from Hudson's Bay with respect to that particular takeover. As I mentioned in answer to the previous question, we do get very detailed legal opinions on the serious mergers and takeover bids and we pay very close attention to them.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

UNAUTHORIZED FILMING OF CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is one of which I have given notice to the Secretary of State.

In view of the fact that Robert Cooper, host of the CBC program "Ombudsman", admitted on January 16, 1979, that he filmed and recorded the chief of police of Saint John, New Brunswick, without the chief's knowledge, and allegedly used similar tactics with the fire chief and at least one other individual, what does the Secretary of State intend to do about this clandestine method of conducting interviews?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, these are, indeed, very serious allegations which I will bring to the attention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and report to the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRADE

ANNUAL TRADE DEFICITS—GOVERNMENT POLICY TO RECTIFY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

As railway freight loadings, which are a very accurate barometer of industrial activity in this country, dropped by 3.5 per cent during the past 12 months, and as our already huge annual trade deficits in fully manufactured products have increased by 3.7 per cent during the same 12 months' period, would the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House just what he and his department plan to do to restore our industrial activity in this country to a healthy level and lift it out of the present morass in which it has been for quite some time?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that when the figures for 1978 and the final fourth quarter are in, they will clearly point out the tremendous growth in the export of fully manufactured goods, a tremendous trade surplus—in fact, the largest ever in the history of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: But if the hon. member would like a detailed explanation on what the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is doing to assist the trade of Canadian goods, fully manufactured and others, I will take the first opportunity to make a speech in the House on the subject matter, and if the hon. member is not here I will make certain that the details of that speech are made known to him.

Mr. Hees: I will certainly be here, Mr. Speaker. Do the figures which the minister said will be used to justify the things he has told us come from the same source that inspired him to tell the businessmen of China that Canada had a truck to sell them that is capable of carrying, in one load, three million tons? Under great pressure, he was forced to revise that figure down to 300,000 tons. There was still very great and loud pressure from the audience and finally he reduced the figure to 300 tons?

● (1450)

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, in order to make the entire statement accurate, the capability of the truck being manufactured by General Motors Diesel in London, Ontario, is 370 tons.

Mr. Hees: You could not even get the last figure right.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. Hees: Three times up, and three times you struck out, Jack.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE IN REGULATING AIRLINES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport: it has to do with government regulation of the airline business.

In light of the fact that deregulation of the industry has been very successful in the United States, showing larger profits for the companies and lower rates for consumers, will the minister indicate what action his department will take to cut back the amount of government interference and regulations in this vital segment of our economy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have made clear our policy in encouraging the Canadian Transport Commission to look at flexible approaches in relation to charter fares. We have seen the airlines and charter companies respond to this. Also, we have seen the Canadian Transport Commission respond by relaxing a good number of rules.

Of course, the commission is concerned about the maintenance of adequate scheduled services, particularly between smaller cities, which is not absolutely assured under a completely deregulated situation. It is these interests which have to be balanced. They are seen as needing to be balanced in various jurisdictions under provincial control, such as the trucking field where provinces from one end of the country to the other have tended to retain regulation of licences and the like and have not chosen to follow the example of the United States and move in the other direction.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REASON AIRCRAFT OPERATIONS PERSONNEL WITHOUT CONTRACT

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour: it concerns the aircraft operations group which is responsible for civil aviation, and public employees.

Can the minister tell the House why this group has been without a contract since 1975? Also, can he tell us whether any recent offer was made by the government based on the principle with which the minister agrees, comparability with the private sector?

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into that matter and report back.

Mr. Fraser: In the absence of the President of the Treasury Board, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Given the fact a senior official has stated that civil aviation inspectors are the backbone of the organization, in conjunction with other related officials, and the guardians of aviation safety in the country, will the Minister of Labour keep in mind his commitment to comparability, personally investigate this matter and report back to the House at the earliest possible moment?

Mr. O'Connell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to do that.

On the question of comparability, it is the government, or all of us on this side who are seeking to convince public service unions that they ought to accept the principle of comparability. We brought forward a bill which stated the policy of the government in legislative form to implement the principle of comparability. It is not us who are dragging our feet; it is the unions which do not want to enter into comparability. It sits strange with me that the hon. member would suggest that that is the principle which is at stake.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Fraser: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUESTED EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR SOLAR EQUIPMENT MANUFACTURING GRANTS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Because of recently changed formats in the 70-page application form, and in order that small business as well as large business can take advantage of solar equipment manufacturing grants, would the minister be prepared to extend the deadline for these grants beyond tomorrow?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question, which enables me to say that those who used the old form for this project will not be penalized. They just have to use that old form and give the required information.

SUBSIDY PROGRAM FOR COMMUNITY SERVICES—ACCEPTANCE BY PROVINCES

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In 1978, the minister proposed to the provinces a subsidy program for community services for the years 1979 and 1980. A budget of $150 million was to be provided for 1979 and a budget of $250 million for 1980. It was to be the responsibility of the provinces to accept that program and to establish what community services are eligible, and the province of Quebec was to have $47.1 million for 1979 and $78.5 million for 1980. Can the minister tell the House whether all provinces have accepted that proposal and did the province of Quebec make its proposals for the distribution of the budget among the municipalities of the province?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can say that all provinces have accepted that program in principle. As a matter of fact, agreements were signed with some of them and discussions are proceeding with the others, and we hope to be able to sign at last the agreements with all the provinces in the near future.

POST OFFICE

INCREASED COST OF POSTAL PLANT IN MONTREAL—REASON THEREFOR

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General: it refers to the information indicating that the cost of the major postal plant in Montreal now has increased fron $141 million to $179 million and will likely go to $200 million.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the large sum of money involved, and the minister's explanation that they were caught with their pants down a little on the technical points of the construction, will the hon. minister be a little more specific as to how this squandering of public funds took place?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think there is nothing exceptional in this project. If the hon. member for Brandon-Souris would read the article, he would see that I was well quoted and not misinterpreted. I explained exactly what happened in major construction projects. For example, this project happened between 1975 and 1979, and the same happened when I was mayor of Quebec city. It also happened in private enterprise. In those four years there was the Olympics project, the James Bay project, and there was inflation. The spread between the estimations and the actual cost at completion of the job was perhaps 20 per cent, 25 per cent or even more during that period. Such increases are nothing extraordinary, even in private enterprise.

Mr. Dinsdale: Arising from that explanation, would it be fair to conclude that this is just another example of the Canadian public being taken to the cleaners by the government?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT PRAC RECOMMENDATION FOR RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT IN SASKATCHEWAN BE REJECTED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, further to the questions asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

On June 15, 1974, the Prime Minister said that as long as elevator companies considered continued rail service was warranted, the government would not abandon a single rail line, and the minister made similar comments on June 8 and June 11.

Since the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool requested that 22 of the 25 subdivisions in Saskatchewan be retained as a means of removing uncertainty, and since the Prairie Rail Action Committee's version of uncertainty is to remove lines, in line with the commitments of the Prime Minister will the minister reject the recommendation of PRAC dealing with the 22 subdivisions in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a good deal of the examination has gone into the question of service to particular elevators since the time of the statement by the Prime Minister.

In looking at the question, the Hall commission knew, on one hand, that elevator companies would not willingly indicate that they would give up service on any particular line but, on the other hand, many times they made it clear that they were required to significantly give up service in particular areas and cut back in the number of remaining elevators.

● (1500)

Obviously, at that point the Hall commission recognized that they could not let one elevator company keep a couple of elevators on one line and the other company keep a couple on the other line, when comparable service to farmers could be provided by those elevators being rearranged in a different way. Hence, the Hall commission reached certain conclusions about lines to be abandoned and lines to be retained.

The Prairie Rail Action Committee has been continuing this work with an eye on the over-all cost of rebuilding the lines. The point is that unless the lines are rebuilt, they will die and it is not just a matter of keeping the lines but a matter of rebuilding them. This is very expensive and it has to be looked at seriously, and I think that that is the process we have engaged upon.

I say again to the hon. member and the elevator companies that if they have a particular case to make, they can be assured of the opportunity still to make that case to the Canadian Transport Commission. That is where the next decision point lies.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the case has been made two or three times on every line. The president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool calls the PRAC report an insult to farmers, not to mention the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

In the area of removing uncertainty, will the Minister of Transport reject the recommendations of PRAC which go beyond its terms of reference and put those lines in the basic network or leave them there and, secondly, will the minister tell the House whether or not it is true that even after a line is designated to be kept by his department or the CTC, it still requires examination by the CTC every five years thereafter which, in effect, perpetuates the uncertainty?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the lines which we have transferred to the basic rail network do not require any further examination until the year 2000.

I am glad the hon. member almost referred to me as the "minister of transfer" because one of the things my department has been doing is transferring line after line to the basic rail network, to the point where today 80 per cent of the prairie rail system receiving grain is firm, permanent and transferred to that basic network; and that is after years of nothing having been done about the issue.

In addition, we have a program for rebuilding those lines so that at the end of the seven-year or eight-year period, those lines will not just be lines on a map—which is all the hon. member has been talking about, years gone by—but they will be substantially rebuilt, with the ballast and the rail necessary to carry fully loaded hopper cars, and we will have a rail service fit for the twentieth century and the twenty-first century, not for the eighteenth century to which the hon. member belongs.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder at this point if I might ask the deputy government House leader for the legislative intentions for the balance of today, tomorrow and into next week?

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, today we will deal with Bill C-35, the government reorganization bill, followed by Bill C-2, the health resources fund amendments, and then Bill C-13, the Electricity Inspection Act and Gas Inspection Act amendments. On Friday we will move to Bill C-9, the public referendums bill.

NATIONAL UNITY

TABLING OF TASK FORCE REPORT "A FUTURE TOGETHER"

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table in both official languages the report of the task force on Canadian unity entitled "A Future Together", along with its observations and recommendations.

This report is a landmark contribution to the collective search by Canadians for a more harmonious and secure relationship between our linguistic, regional and cultural communities. I am confident the report will take its place as a document of the first importance, and it is a source of great satisfaction to me that the report should be the product of an initiative taken by this government.

[Translation]

Our creation of the task force took its place alongside our other initiatives to advance Canadian unity and the renewal of our federation. The report comes after intensive negotiations between the federal and provincial governments, and at a time when we are about to hold a second first ministers' conference on the constitution. It can only reinforce the urgency which our government and several of the provincial governments have attached to constitutional reform. While the commissioners recognize the profound and urgent character of the crisis of Canadian unity, they have written a report marked by the optimism and even serenity arising from their faith in the immense value of Canada for all its people. The wisdom of the commissioners is evident in their ability, arising from a strong will and a spirit of compromise, to submit a unanimous report. This is all the more remarkable given the comprehensive scope of the task force's analysis and the short period which it had to complete its work.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we in this country and in this House should express deepest appreciation to the co-chairmen, Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin and Mr. John Robarts, to the other commissioners, to the staff of the task force, and to all those Canadians who contributed to the report.

[English]

I am sure that all members of the House, all members of the provincial legislatures, and many thousands of Canadians will want to read and reflect carefully on this report. Given the nature and urgency of our present crisis, I believe we should try to use this report to improve our understanding of the nature of our problems and to seek as much agreement as possible on the principles and methods of their solution. Individual passages or recommendations in the report will give rise to some disagreement, but I believe it is incumbent on us to try first to understand the over-all analysis and principles of the report before we take issue with this or that specific point. We will find a solution to our national crisis only through a wise spirit of accommodation. My plea is all the more important because the report is so remarkably well integrated, with its different elements depending closely on one another.

Although the government for its part will want to study the specific recommendations carefully and take issue with some of them, I can tell the House now that the government accepts the broad lines of the task force's analysis of the problem and endorses the basic principles which it believes should underlie the renewal of the Canadian federation.

[Translation]

First, the report is clearly federalist in its orientation and it advocates the entrenchment of basic rights in our constitution. Thus it is consistent with the two essential pre-conditions which this government has advanced for renewal. The commissioners' commitment to federalism in the Canadian context comes as a conclusion to its analysis of the nature of Canada and of the principles which should govern our relationships.

The commissioners deeply believe that federalism, better than any alternative, is sufficiently consistent with the realities of Canada and the aspirations of Canadians. What is more, they state their conviction that any proposal to create a new arrangement with an independent Quebec joined in some sort of association with the rest of Canada would be inconsistent with the realities of the country and therefore unacceptable and unworkable.

Second, the report bases its analysis on the intricate structure of Canada: a structure which combines both a multifaceted dualism, and a complex regionalism.

● (1510)

[English]

Third, the commissioners set forth three objectives for Canadians which I am sure will receive wide support and which recall the government's own position set out in "A Time for Action." These objectives are, and I quote:

—to treat diversity as a national resource rather than a social problem;

—to encourage greater sensitivity to the Canadian dimension of our lives; and —to seek to understand as well as possible the major forces operating on Canadian society and to develop public policies and institutions on the basis of that understanding.

Finally, I must admit to taking special satisfaction from the way in which the commissioners have largely supported the official language policies of the government and their recognition of the great gains these have produced. I am quick to acknowledge that this policy was largely supported on both sides of this House, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the report of the task force will ensure that the Official Languages Act continues to receive broad, non-partisan support.

I will stop here. This day belongs to the members of the task force and the thousands of Canadians who contributed to their report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the official opposition I want to express our appreciation of the work that has been done by members of the task force and to express the view that we have before us a document that is exceptionally helpful, not just in the detail it proposes but also for the sense of direction it brings to the discussion about the future of this united nation and about the change in tone that is going to be necessary if we are to accomplish the goal of ensuring that the nation continues strong and united.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I think that one of the signal accomplishments of the members of the task force in this report is not simply that they have made another contribution to the debate, but that they have, rather, enlarged the focus of the discussion and of the serious questions on the agenda of Canada at the present time.

I must say that I regretted the initial preoccupation, in some preliminary reporting, with the response of the commissioners to the hypothesis relating to the possible development of a majority will in the province of Quebec to separate. I know that many of us have learned the danger of dealing with hypotheses. I am sure the task force would not want, nor would any of us in this House want, the very important substance of their recommendations to be detracted from by that particular observation.

Certainly there is no question about the position of this party nor, I think, about the position in this parliament regarding the determination of Canadians to achieve reforms in our federal arrangements that will accommodate and reflect the lively determination of various regions to find their own amusement within the context of a strong and united nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Someone across the way interjects that I did not say "federal", Mr. Speaker. In this party, and I hope in this chamber, it is not necessary for us to underline the reality that what we are looking at is a federal arrangement, a federal arrangement that will work, that can be strong and can accommodate the aspirations of all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This task force is important in what it is and it is important in what it has done. It is a group of authoritative Canadians who do not have vested interest to protect, except a vested interest in the continuation of this country, and who are reporting to us today after extensive and direct consultations with the people of Canada.

What the task force has done is to propose several specific changes, some of which will be highly controversial here and certainly some of which will be highly controversial in the other place. The great service is that in this debate it has moved us above specifics to reflect the widespread belief that exists in Canada that some significant and fundamental changes are necessary if we are to maintain and preserve this nation.

[Translation]

As is known, Mr. Speaker, as leader of a national party I have had many opportunities to travel across the province of Quebec and to discuss with Quebeckers about possible changes in the nature of the society of a federalist country. I often noticed that for most Quebeckers it was not enough to speak only about specific changes, about detailed changes as in the case of culture and communications. What people seek in Quebec as well as in Alberta is an indication of a will to consider somewhat more deeply such changes that can help keep together the federal system and at the same time contribute to the well-being of Quebeckers and other citizens across Canada.

[English]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important that we move from a stage where we have been perhaps too occupied with details and recognize that there is, not simply among elected officials, among commissioners and task force members, but among the Canadians this task force has been consulting, a very real determination to contemplate some significant changes in the form of our federal nation in Canada.

One thing that it is very important for us all to recognize as we look at this report is that there are a number of matters which will require detailed discussion and which will ignite some significant disagreement in this chamber and in the country. I do not think it is appropriate to enter into that detailed discussion at this time, but I think it is worth drawing attention to some aspects of the report which are particularly important.

I am struck by the fact that for virtually the first time in a decade we have an extensive work done by an authoritative group on the serious and fundamental problem of the division of power in this country. Indeed, I think it is fair to say that this document reflects the first major study of the direction that a new distribution of power might take.

I think a very valuable contribution of the task force is the emphasis that has been placed, properly and importantly, on the need for improved co-operation among governments at federal and provincial levels to ensure that our economic policies are integrated and are moving forward together.

Again, I think it very valuable for the debate that is in progress in this nation that we have from the task force their recognition and description of the provinces of Canada as the principal vehicles of regional expression, including, and perhaps particularly including, the province of Quebec.

I think it is very important for us in this House to consider very seriously the changes that have been proposed in some of the national institutions, including to consider with an open mind some of the changes that have been proposed for the means of composition of this particular parliament. Those specific proposals put forward by the task force have been very helpful. Other proposals will lead to very serious concern in some parts of the country, particularly those relating to the rights and status of minority language groups in various provinces, and will require further discussion here and elsewhere.

It is important that we acknowledge that the road toward a strong and united nation requires a recognition that we are engaged here in a process. It requires, as the task force members pointed out, a much greater understanding of our country by Canadians. Each of us comes simply from one corner of it; we need to give much more attention than we have to means of getting Canadians to travel across the country, to make them more informed about regions other than their own. It clearly requires a high investment in tolerance and understanding in this country. It means that we have to build upon the successes we have had—and we have had some successes. But it means that we have to be prepared to put aside preconceptions that have not worked.

I would like to say at this time, Mr. Speaker, that I think we have followed for too long the pretence that a language policy or an amending formula or any other single act would unite this country, or indeed that a referendum or any other single act would destroy this country. So life is not as simple as theory is.

The task force report confirms the view that for some time now the constitutional policy of the central government has been dramatically out of step with reality in this country. Of course, some of the government's initiatives have been valuable, and the task force quite properly applauds, for example, the progress that has been made in easing and encouraging the access of Francophone Canadians to the services of, and to significant roles within, the national government.

But if individual programs have seen some success the general pattern of the decade since our centennial has been for the people and the parts of this country to move in one direction and the central government to move in the opposite direction. The stark conclusion of the work of the task force is devastating. I quote from page 35 of the English version:

> One of the principal sources of the crisis is the erosion of the belief that the current arrangements of the country promote the common good.

Sir, what is important for parliament to recognize is that it is not simply a case of some of the current arrangements becoming out-moded, although that has happened; it is also that some of the new arrangements imposed by this government go against the grain of the country. This government has resisted regional aspirations when they should have embraced those aspirations. They have concentrated political power when some of that power should have been dispersed. They have been so preoccupied by their intellectual view of what Canada should be that they have ignored what this nation is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: All of us who have the opportunity to travel the country know that we have every reason for confidence. Indeed, all of us who have the opportunity to travel the world—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —and if I may in passing, I suggest to hon. members opposite that if they want to know the world better, it would be best for them to travel themselves and not rely upon journalistic reports.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Certainly anyone who has the opportunity to compare the resource potential and the cultural potential of this nation with the potential of other nations knows that we have every reason for confidence in the future of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We are very much a country to grow in.

[Translation]

And I think that there is a statement in this report which must be emphasized. It is to the effect that Quebeckers are now less concerned about their survival and more about their development. That is a very significant change in attitude. They have moved from a negative to a positive approach. More than ever Quebeckers feel proud and sure of themselves. And I am convinced that most Quebeckers are aware that a new Canada would facilitate their development which I feel is of paramount importance to all Canadians.

Reforms are necessary, but the best spring board to achieve this development of the Quebec people is a country filled with opportunities, and Canada is such a country.

[English]

The first ministers are meeting again in constitutional conference in a few days. I would certainly hope that if it fits their agenda it will be possible for them to consider the report that has been put down by the Task Force on Canadian Unity. But I also hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will indicate his willingness today to refer this report to the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada that has been established by this House and by the other place so that it will be possible for the House of Commons, which is the central legislative agency of this country, and the Senate to carry on discussion of some of the very important new dimensions that have been given to this debate by the report which we have been honoured to receive in this parliament today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that in my view and that of my colleagues all Canadians should thank the commissioners for the very fine work that they have done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: As has already been indicated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark), the commissioners have taken a serious and comprehensive look at the problem of national unity, recognizing it has very complex economic, social and political dimensions. The commission has ably explained our heritage and our difficulty in language that Canadians can clearly understand. But importantly Mr. Speaker, they have provided Canadians with an opportunity to look at our complex situation in a very positive context.

[Translation]

The report of the task force certainly contains precise recommendations, but it is mostly with a wide open approach that it indicates the way to build a new Canada and ensure national unity. The task force strongly affirms its commitment to federalism. It also emphasizes that the uniqueness of Quebec's culture may be preserved and fully developed within a united Canada. We agree with that statement.

[English]

The report shows that Canadians throughout our various regions, and not simply in Quebec, have legitimate grievances with both the present structure of federalism and with the ongoing nature of government policies. It has proposed a number of workable solutions to these grievances. I find it refreshing that the task force recognizes the problem of national unity is not simply a constitutional matter and that the development of the national economy for the benefit of all Canadians in all parts of the country is a crucial element in keeping us united.

● (1530)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The commission recognizes the necessity for an industrial strategy, and makes it clear, contrary to some of the reports that have appeared in the press, that to achieve this there can be no substitute for the federal government having the major economic power in this country. This is a point which I have been stressing for many months and I welcome the report's clarity in this regard.

As for some of the specific proposals and recommendations contained in their report, I want simply to say that there are a great many which are positive and beneficial as well as some, as should be expected, which ultimately a number of us will have to disagree with. In terms of the positive ones, I think particularly of the highly imaginative and constructive approach it has taken in recommending a list of several categories of powers to be distributed between the federal and provincial governments. I repeat, this is one of the most imaginative and constructive parts of the report and requires the most serious consideration by members on both sides of this House as well as the provincial governments.

I think also of the acceptance of the proposal I made on behalf of my party to strengthen regional input in Ottawa by adding additional members to the House of Commons on a proportional representation basis from the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In the days between now and the first ministers' conference, my colleagues and I will be studying the report very carefully indeed. I will therefore refrain at this point from making any further comments on specific recommendations of the commission. I want, however, this afternoon to draw particular attention to the framework for constitutional reform suggested by the commission because I think it is singularly appropriate.

At one point in its report the commission lays out three objectives of constitutional change. They are as follows. First, to ensure that our central institutions can effectively serve our common interests as a nation. Second, to provide means of greater institutional responsiveness to regional and provincial desires for more effective local control and for a more effective influence on decisions that are to be made and ought to be made in Ottawa. Third, to provide for the majority of Québécois an effective federal means of ensuring that their distinctive cultural and social ideals can not only be maintained, but can flourish.

I speak on behalf of my colleagues, and I suspect in this context on behalf of all members of the House, when I say that those of us who have the heavy responsibility—and it is heavy—for acting and voting on these matters could not work from within a better framework in dealing with the constitutional aspects of national unity than that provided for us by this commission. I repeat my thanks.

I want to conclude my remarks this afternoon by stressing that constitutions can provide a nation only with a framework. No constitution, however good, ever held a nation together. A country as complex and as rich as ours, in particular, can work only if its politicians make the right policy decisions and convey the right set of attitudes over a period of time.

The question of continuing political leadership in the broadest sense is therefore crucial to any federal state. In our own day, I cannot overemphasize the relevance of economic policy on the one hand, and an honest, Canadian nationalism recognizing what the commission has called our duality on the other. As I said in a debate on this subject which took place in parliament a year ago, we as politicians should be noting with pride the remarkable creative accomplishments by French and English speaking Canadians, particularly, but by no means exclusively, during the past two decades.

Simultaneously, we should at long last be charting a course in which Canadians would gain economic control of our country. In short, given the proper constitution, we politicians must convince Canadians in Atlantic Canada, Quebec and the west that we as a people, can create a country that is both just and exciting. Ultimately, it is that which holds a nation together.

● (1540)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the commission on canadian harmony, as I would call it, has tabled its report. Since I have just skimmed through it, I cannot voice an enlightening opinion on its substance. Even the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) expressed reservations in his statement because he had not had time to read it entirely and ponder over it. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all my colleagues will realize that I am entirely justified in making this point clear.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this report comes in just at the right time because a federal-provincial conference likely to determine the future of our country will be held in February. This is why I urge all members to study this report carefully because it was prepared following investigations and hearings held across the entire country. As the right hon. Prime Minister put it eloquently, the commissioners have succeeded in presenting a unanimous report even if they were of different views. Some of them had reservations about certain points but they overcame this in their desire to present a unanimous front to help the federal and provincial governments work out a new constitution.

Mr. Speaker, in the name of my party, I also wish to thank the members of the task force who have done a very commendable job and who had to work many evenings to table a report that will serve as a guide to the federal government, the Canadian parliament, as well as the provincial governments of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I would like that a copy of this document be made available to all Canadians so that they could realize the seriousness of the situation and be sufficiently informed when the time comes to take a final decision to accept or reject a new constitution which would guide our country in a future of harmony and progress.

Mr. Speaker, when I was a schoolboy and saw a large colour painting of the fathers of confederation, I was impressed by the solemnity of their faces and the magnificence of their clothes. I could feel these Canadians had worked to give our country a constitution we could be proud of and which would enable us to live in harmony on our land, and that both English and French-speaking Canadians would share this land, secure from the quarrels that divide us and make us unhappy. Today, in the statements that have just been made by the spokesmen for the various parties, I heard the word "Quebec" which kept cropping up in their vocabulary. Well, Mr. Speaker, I for one would not like you to be concerned about Quebec owing to the possibility of a government who wants to hold a referendum to decide whether Quebec will remain in the confederation or not.

Mr. Speaker, our nation is a more serious reality than that. We must, and that is our responsibility, give our country a new constitution. It has been long enough since we started discussing whether or not we are going to repatriate the 1867 constitution. And I believe, and I already said so in the House at the time of the debate on the right hon. Prime Minister's motion in July 1978, that it is important for us to give our country a new constitution. I made proposals at that time concerning the way the new constitution should be prepared, either by the public, or by our civic groups, by all serious organizations in our country, as long as they are not political groups, which would be able to submit consistent views in order to help our politicians in their efforts to draft a new constitution which would give any Canadian equal chances, regardless of his language, religion or province of origin.

And I am convinced of one thing, Mr. Speaker, that is every province in our country wants self-determination. I can see here in the task force's report a passage which roused my curiosity earlier today, a very meaningful passage, at page 74 of the English version, in the chapter entitled "The Quebec economy and federation." What did the commissioners say?

Quebec's dissatisfaction with Confederation goes beyond economic considerations. It is rooted in the Canadian federal system which in the eyes of Québécois has somehow failed to give Quebec the desired degree of political autonomy in several important policy areas. While the issues are exceedingly complex they largely revolve around political matters such as the distribution of powers.

In that respect all governments in Canada, whatever their political colours, must plead guilty. We have to admit that openly because the constitution of 1867 was not applied to the letter and the central power in many cases took away from the provinces the areas of jurisdiction that presented provincial governments from fully exercising their responsibilities with respect to their subjects. I am not blaming anyone here, I am merely stating a fact, and the commissioners continue to want that. And yet, in the debate surrounding the possibility of seeing Quebec separate from the rest of Canada, economic questions play a large role.

Mr. Speaker, if economic questions play a large role, we must include financial questions. I am sorry, I read again in yesterday's La Presse that the government of Quebec was going to borrow another $150 million in the United States. Mr. Speaker, as long—and here I urge the right hon. Prime Minister to think seriously about this—as the Parliament of Canada and the government do not take the responsibilities so that the matter of the creation of the money supply in this country is not the responsibility of chartered banks but the responsibility of the government through the Bank of Canada, we are going to have problems of that nature. Canadian harmony will not be possible because the various governments go beg abroad the permission to develop our natural resources for the benefit of Canadians. I am sorry that the commissioners—at least I did not see it—did not deal with that aspect of the problem that divides Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by commenting on what the Prime Minister said in his statement earlier. He insisted on the objectives set out by the task force on page 4 of considering that diversity as a national resource and not a social problem. On that I agree, we cannot all be the same. There are as many diversities as there are individuals. There are as many diversities as there are cultures. And in spite of that, it could be possible to live in harmony if we used the means to make us more mutually harmonious, to understand one another better and have equal opportunity to live decently right across this country, whether it be in Newfoundland or Vancouver, Quebec city or New Brunswick. That must be provided in a new constitution, and I for one, as a Canadian, am prepared to make the necessary efforts and to encourage greater sensitivity to the Canadian dimension of our lives as it is said at page 4 in the Prime Minister's statement. I agree with that but it should not be only empty words.

We will have to act, we must show courage, and our policies should not be dictated by financiers who are growing ever richer at the expense of the government, at the expense of the poor. That situation must come to an end and this is the only way to have harmony in Canada. I am prepared to co-operate with the Prime Minister and with parliament. We should stop praising each other, we should tell the truth. We must now suggest means and solutions. Many times people have laughed at Social Credit members and their financial options. That was called "funny money", but considering what our dollar is worth today it is no longer funny.

Everyone bows before international finance. This has gone on long enough. It is time to stand up straight. Let us show that we are proud people who can take our responsibilities, that this parliament, its 264 members, its Prime Minister and ministers are able to take their responsibilities, and we shall see that there will be harmony in our country whatever our age, our religion, and our linguistic policy may be.

The Prime Minister has made enormous efforts. There have been resignations in his cabinet. However, these efforts must continue because it is essential that, from the east to the west and the north to the south of our country, each Canadian who wishes to speak English or French can do so with dignity without being embarrassed and that each Canadian can communicate with the Canadian government institutions in the language of his choice. I am not ashamed to say so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In order that we might be assured that the very valuable report by the task force not be lost to this parliament, I wonder if the Prime Minister would give us an undertaking now that it would be his intention either to reconstitute the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada and refer the document to that reconstituted committee, or refer it to a standing committee of the House.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the government, in the Speech from the Throne at the beginning of the session, indicated that it was anxious to bring the constitution and the whole unity problem before parliament for debate. The Leader of the Opposition is suggesting one way, to which I will give consideration; but I suggest we should wait for the first ministers' conference, which will be held in about ten days, and see the results of it, following which perhaps we will find it more profitable to introduce the debate in some other form in the House.

Hon. James Richardson (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). As the Prime Minister knows, the Task Force on Canadian Unity travelled extensively in Canada and heard many views. I know something about those views because I participated at the meeting in Winnipeg and made a presentation to the task force, but the report that we have before us today in many respects does not reflect the view of the Canadian people which I heard expressed not only in Winnipeg but in other places. On the other hand, it seems to follow very closely the pattern of the old Bill C-60 which was before the House and "A Time for Action" to which the Prime Minister himself referred a few moments ago.

My question to the Prime Minister is whether he believes that this report which we have before us today is a reflection of the will of the people of Canada, or is it just a reflection of a few hand-picked members of the task force?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Richardson: I ask the Prime Minister in all sincerity, through you, Mr. Speaker, is he hearing from the people or is he hearing from a few members of the task force who are echoing his own words?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will point out to the hon. member that the task force was not just composed of a few members but was made up of a large group of Canadians from all walks of life and all parts of Canada, and they spoke with one unanimous voice. I think it is demeaning to them to suggest that they are merely echoing the government's policies. If the hon. member were to address himself to some of the recommendations, he would see that there are some divergencies, some honest ones.

As to whether or not they speak for the people of Canada, I think they did their best to reflect remedies which would be good for Canada. That is not to say that all Canadians are aware of what those remedies are. I think the hon. member is an illustrious example of one member who does not seem to be aware of what is necessary to keep Canada united now.

As to who speaks for Canada, I imagine no one speaks for Canada more than the parties in the House, and the four leaders of the parties have said that generally they support the task force report. So it would seem to me that the hon. member is rather in a minority in suggesting that this report is not important and does not correspond to the needs of Canada at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, both in the context of what the report recommends and of the forthcoming first ministers' conference, if it is still the government's plan, if it does not get very substantial agreement at the first ministers' conference, to go ahead and propose during the life of this parliament a form of legislation to the House, amendments to the constitution as they pertain to areas that are exclusively within federal jurisdiction?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if a consensus developed at the first ministers' conference, I think the House would want to look at it and decide in what way it could appropriately move forward with this consensus. I cannot predict what will happen at the first ministers' conference, but the leader of the NDP asks if we would move on some things. It would really depend.

I do not think that just a partial agreement on some items but profound disagreement on others would necessarily lead us to present a reformed Bill C-60 in the House or some other resolution. In other words, in some areas the federal government is making very sizeable suggestions to the provinces for transfer of powers to the provinces. In return, we expect the provinces to accommodate, as the task force itself suggests, to the need for greater federal powers in other areas. I cannot predict what the position of the provinces will be, and therefore I cannot attempt to answer the question.

Mr. Broadbent: I am not sure if the question was put with great precision but I certainly think it was not precisely understood. I am asking the Prime Minister, in those areas constitutionally within federal jurisdiction but which are of interest to the provinces, if the Government of Canada does not obtain agreement at this conference on a change within those areas, the government intends to provide legislation during the life of this parliament?

Mr. Trudeau: I understand the question. As a matter of theory, of law, of the constitution, the government still holds that section 91(1) of the constitution would permit us to move in areas of federal jurisdiction even if the provinces do not agree. That is still the position of the government.

An hon. Member: Do you plan to do it?

Mr. Trudeau: Whether or not I plan to do it would depend on what emerges from the conference. If the provinces are reasonable in suggesting modifications to the proposed Bill C-60, we will be reasonable in accepting those proposals.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference has been prepared and submitted to the governments of the various provinces. If not, does the Prime Minister plan to include—with the agreement of the other governments, of course—consideration of the report of the Pepin-Robarts Commission on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the last time I wrote the provincial premiers, which was several weeks ago, we were not aware that this report would be submitted before the conference, and consequently, I could not foresee the situation mentioned by the hon. member. The Minister of Transport, who was in Vancouver yesterday, has informed me that the provincial delegations have in fact begun to discuss this report. One way or another the contents of this report will probably come into play during our discussions in early February. I cannot give any guarantees to the hon. member that the premiers will want to make this a special item on the agenda, but I shall consider the question of the hon. member when finalizing the agenda.

• (1600)

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the right hon. Prime Minister. I noticed during the next before last federal-provincial conference one fact in particular, which is that the right hon. gentleman submitted to the provinces a number of considerations to try and come to an understanding and draft a new constitution. If I am wrong, I hope the right hon. gentleman will correct me. In the spirit of the October conference, were the Canadian government and the provinces in agreement to try and evolve a new constitution to correct the current shortcomings and sources of disagreement, and if so will it be possible, even though the Prime Minister suggests provincial governments are aware of it, to try and include this in the agenda, so that they will be a good start, because I feel this is the key conference?

Mr. Trudeau: I share the hon. member's view that this indeed is a key conference. I can assure him that at the end of the October and early November conference there was no universal agreement. But on the issue of particular interest to the hon. member, I can assure him that all first ministers were in agreement to suggest that the need for constitutional reform is real and urgent.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, although I did not have time to read the report in detail, I find in it an eloquent reference to the need for entrenching basic rights in our constitution, in our constitutional system. Could the Prime Minister state whether he feels the government's policy in this area is strengthened by the report, and whether it is still government policy to entrench basic rights and language rights? In the absence of agreement among all provinces, entrenchment should at least proceed on federal rights, language rights and basic rights, so that provinces wishing to do so can do so for federal rights and others in those provinces, which would give language rights to Acadians because it is the New Brunswick government's position to look for entrenchment of those rights.

Mr. Trudeau: To the hon. member's first two questions the answer is yes. We consider that those aims are indeed essential. But as for the procedure mentioned by the hon. member, I would refer him to last session's Bill C-60. There he will find that was precisely the procedure suggested by the government, namely to ensure protection of linguistic rights at the federal level as well as in the provinces which would accept to be committed by that protection, that basic charter of human, citizen rights. But I must add that at the upcoming conference we will have to keep an open mind to see whether there are other techniques to achieve the results the hon. member and I are hoping for.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: We will conclude the questioning with the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the report contains a number of pages which deal with native and Indian rights. I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what his thinking is on that important question. There is a lot of concern about treaty rights and land entitlements, and now there is a dispute between the federal and provincial governments over such matters as health care and education. Some interesting recommendations were made in the report concerning Indian language and culture, as well as the constitutional position of first Canadians. What is the Prime Minister's reaction to these recommendations? Of course, this is something the Indian peoples are very interested in.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I support entirely the position of the commission when it indicated that native peoples have a special place in Canada. The commission went on to point out that apart from the linguistic duality, the heritage from the British Isles and France, we have to add the so-called third group of new Canadians; but we must take into account the rights and obligations of the oldest Canadians, the native peoples. In principle, the report is very concerned and very correct in pointing that out. As I have indicated, some of its recommendations will bear further discussion not only by the government but by all members of the House before we can give an answer.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 421, 596, 632 and 830.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

CBC—COST OF VEHICLES

Question No. 421—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many trucks, vans, mobile units, passenger cars, etc., are owned by CBC throughout Canada and what is their total value?

2. How many vehicles are leased by CBC and what is the total annual cost?

3. What is the total annual cost to CBC to operate such vehicles?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. As of March 31, 1978, CBC owned 540 vehicles (trucks, vans, mobile units, automobiles, etc.) with a net book value of $1.3 million.

2. As of March 31, 1978, CBC had under lease 259 vehicles. During the fiscal year April 1, 1977 to March 31, 1978, the corporation's leasing expenditures, including vehicles leased on a per occasion basis, amounted to $1.4 million.

3. Total operating and maintenance costs for both owned and leased vehicles during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978 amounted to $1.2 million.

METRIC COMMISSION—EXPENDITURES

Question No. 596—Mr. Neil:

1. What has been the annual cost of the Metric Commission since its inception?

2. In each year since its inception, how many sector committee meetings have been held and what sums have been paid for travel and living expenses for such meetings?

3. What has been the cost to date of (a) printing (b) publishing (c) distributing the publication Metric Monitor?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: The Metric Commission Canada expenditures have been:

1.	1971-72	$ 44,541
	1972-73	$ 530,943
	1973-74	$1,590,792
	1974-75	$2,634,101
	1975-76	$3,316,100
	1976-77	$4,380,300
	1977-78	$5,753,000
	1978-79	$5,974,300 (estimated costs)

2. The annual number of sector committee meetings held by Metric Commission Canada is:

1971	nil
1972	2
1973	113
1974	248
1975	292
1976	371
1977	487
1978	488

Travel expenditures, by fiscal year, for attendance at sector committee meetings are estimated at:

1971-72	nil
1972-73	$ 16,686
1973-74	$ 46,136
1974-75	$ 140,103
1975-76	$ 161,600
1976-77	$ 232,900
1977-78	$ 290,900
1978-79	$ 418,300

3. (a) and (b)

The contracts since the inception of the Metric Monitor for printing and publishing decided by Supply and Services on a competitive bid system are as follows:

	Printing	Publishing
1974	$ 26,250	$ 8,750
1975	$ 45,000	$ 15,000
1976	$ 56,000	$ 16,000
1977	$ 67,344	$ 21,000
1978	$ 67,344	$ 20,000

3. (c)

The distributing expenses for the Metric Monitor are estimated at:

1974	$ 18,012.00
1975	$ 91,205.00
1976	$109,446.00
1977	$115,743.26
1978	$ 89,330.00

MR. DOUGLAS ROWLAND

Question No. 632—Mr. Epp:

1. Is Mr. Douglas Rowland joining the staff of the Federal-Provincial Office and, if so (a) what will be his classification (b) are any renumerations other than salary to be paid to him?

2. What will be his specific duties and responsibilities?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1. Yes. (a) SX-2. (b) No.

2. Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet (Studies and Research Group).

(Under the general direction of the Secretary and the Deputy Secretary (Federal-Provincial Relations) and in collaboration with the Assistant Secretary (Federal-Provincial Relations), the Assistant Secretary (Policy and Program Review) (Federal-Provincial Relations) and the Director of the Constitutional Review Section, directs the planning, co-ordination, development and presentation to cabinet committee and to cabinet, of studies across the whole spectrum of government activities with a view to developing concepts (and alternatives), for the consideration of ministers, of the ideal role for the federal government and for the provincial governments in each field of activity; assessments of federal-provincial relations by province or by region; evaluations of the impact of the broad mix of federal policies and programs on provinces, regions and on national unity.)

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY PROJECT—RICHMOND

Question No. 830—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Since 1968, did the Ministry of State for Science and Technology finance projects in the Constituency of Richmond and, if so (a) what were the projects (b) what was the (i) total amount (ii) amount in each case (c) what were the areas?

2. Is the Ministry planning to do so in the near future and, if so (a) what will be the amount (b) in which areas?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Ministry of State for Science and Technology is concerned: None.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1978

DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

The House resumed from Wednesday, January 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Trudeau) that Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to spend a few moments participating in this debate in two capacities: first, as the very proud representative of the largest fishing constituency in all of North America, not merely in Canada, on the south coast of Newfoundland; and also as Secretary of State for External Affairs, where the impact of the 200-mile limit, in which I am very pleased to have played a part, is a major matter of concern and indeed already some satisfaction for me.

In the amount of time available obviously it will not be possible to touch on all matters I would like to deal with in this particular debate. However, with the indulgence of the House, I will attempt to answer a number of questions which were raised from time to time, and also to give my views reflecting conversations which I have had with fishing interests in eastern Canada over many years.

Hon. members will understand and appreciate that I will be speaking principally about Newfoundland fishery matters, but that much of what I have to say applies with equal weight to all of the Atlantic fishing area. In the first place, this debate, as well as other discussions which have taken place over the years and in recent months in the House, have been extremely productive and have revealed that on fundamental questions there is a high level of agreement about fishery prospects. Now we can look to the future of the fishing industry with much more confidence and optimism than at any time in the past.

It would be a mistake to argue that there are no longer differences of view, but such differences as there are, some of which are substantial, have been revealed in discussions between members on this side of the House and members opposite, and even in discussions between members opposite themselves. The differences have more to do with methods and timing of expansion, but, most importantly, with where the economic control will lie in terms of the future expanded fishery to which we have referred.

One of the most useful results of the intensive talks was the demolition of a number of hardy and persistent myths about the fishery and the revelation that much conventional wisdom needs to be challenged vigorously. Today I hope to be able to challenge some of that conventional wisdom, not only as it is uttered from time to time here, but, perhaps more importantly, as it is uttered by pseudo experts on the outside who would probably not know a dory from a prairie schooner if they were hit on the heads with the two of them at the same time.

There are two basic questions which are central to the current discussions: first, what is the nature and potential of the fisheries resource; and second, what is the best manner to exploit it to achieve maximum benefits for Newfoundland, Newfoundlanders and, by implication, all Canadians?

It is evident from the statistics and the detailed discussions in many fora that while the 200-mile limit and various conservation measures have been of great help, as well as various things which the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) introduced, the fishery stock situation has now turned around. To use a familiar expression, we have bottomed out. I think the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment would be the first one to agree with me.

There will not be a dramatic overnight recovery. Even with good management practices, it will take from five to ten years to rebuild the stocks of most species that are or are likely to be important to eastern Canada. This gradual, orderly build-up is, in my view, a good thing. It will permit the expansion of the fishery to proceed in a well organized, coherent way on the three important and integrated fronts of catching, processing and marketing. Clearly, all three must be kept in phase, and there is recognition on all sides now, I believe, that our markets are not sufficiently diversified and are in a more precarious state than is generally realized.

I could spend a great deal of time deflating some of the myths that I have referred to which seem to suggest that the market situation is now one of being essentially a seller situation and that we can do virtually whatever we wish. My day to day experiences as Secretary of State for External Affairs make it perfectly clear to me that the road to better markets in the future is by no means wide open to us as yet, and that we must take a number of very careful steps if we are not to set back another decade or more the very useful, forward motion that has been introduced in the last couple of years.

We must therefore avoid being carried away by grandiose schemes and over-optimistic, exotic solutions, even though these may be appealing and on first utterance may seem to provide many of the answers. I believe it is essential that we examine all proposals for fishery development carefully and with the greatest degree of hard-nosed realism.

We must recognize, for example, that by itself the fishery cannot answer all of the economic problems of Atlantic Canada, but particularly of Newfoundland, and cannot be everywhere the employer of last resort, even if our best expectations for the industry are realized. Nevertheless, fishery development along modern lines is the best economic generator Newfoundland can have.

I have a few reasons for saying that which I would like to explain to hon. members. First, the fishery is a resource-based industry, and a renewable resource at that. Second, many aspects of the fishery are labour-intensive and therefore tremendously important in an area of high unemployment. Third, the fishery is a widely dispersed industry geographically; and fourth, a fishery-generated dollar stays in Newfoundland longer, and thus circulates more frequently among many more Newfoundlanders. I would venture to bet that it could be demonstrated by economists that a fishery dollar in the Atlantic provinces is infinitely more valuable—perhaps by three, four or five times—than any other dollar generated, let us say, from secondary industry or from some other source.

There is another overriding reason for the special place and importance of the fishery in Newfoundland. It is part of the social fabric of the province and the main supporter of a distinctive lifestyle. Whatever other elements are added, the Newfoundland fishery must be the key and foundation for any development strategy. Having reached this inescapable conclusion, we must then address ourselves to the basic question of how fisheries development should proceed.

I would like at this moment, Mr. Speaker, to express my congratulations to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and my admiration for him for the very thorough and solid approach which he has taken to fisheries development in eastern Canada and in the country at large. I do not believe that even the most vehement partisan in the country could possibly argue against the very clear and concise manner in which he has proceeded. Certainly, there are very few fishermen in Newfoundland who are likely to be in any way contradictory in their assessments and their views. By the same token, I think it is also to the minister's credit that he has resisted some of the grandiose plans to which I have referred and that he has been so patient in seeking to examine all of the ramifications of various proposals that are put forward. It is eminently sensible for us now, for the first time in Newfoundland's 450 years of history, to say that we are going to take this revived resource and use it properly, something which we probably have not done since John Cabot made his first report in 1497 "that you could catch fish in a basket weighted with stones". From that day on, there has never been a coherent fisheries policy in eastern Canada, and the minister is starting now to put one together.

One of the myths which I consider has been laid to rest is that there are essentially two fisheries. All of my life, growing up in fishing villages on the coast of Newfoundland, I have heard people talk about the two fisheries as if they were indeed water-tight compartments, if you could have water-tight compartments in the fisheries context. They are described as the inshore and the offshore or deep sea fisheries.

This is a long-standing and widely-held misconception. The fact is that how the offshore fishery is managed determines the fate of the inshore fishery, and thus the fate of thousands of inshore fishermen. If too many fish are caught offshore, then there will not be enough for the inshore fishermen; if you limit the offshore catches to revive the stocks, then the inshore fisheries flourish. It is a simple, straightforward equation, and it puzzles me why it is so difficult to get the fundamentals of that statement through the heads of many people involved in the fishing industry in Canada.

It must be emphasized, of course, that the inshore and the offshore fisheries are not mutually exclusive. It is not just a question of saying that if you have the inshore you can have the offshore, and it is not a matter of having one or the other. It is very much a question of balance, and in considering what that balance should be, I believe there is now unanimous agreement—certainly there is agreement between myself and the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, and perhaps in fisheries terms that has some relevance and importance—that the inshore fishery comes first. The primary objective and the first task is to build up the opportunities and the livelihoods of Newfoundland's existing inshore fishermen and to make it attractive for many others to enter this fishery around the province, but particularly for those who are familiar with the geography along the northeast coast.

Since this is the goal without which no fishery strategy can be successful, it therefore follows that policies on fleet development—our over-all catching capability—are of crucial importance, far too important for us to allow the development to take place helter-skelter or for us to encourage some individual enterprise, no matter how well meaning, that might very well be out of phase with the comprehensive plan which must have as its central goal the protection of that huge number of inshore fishermen in our province and throughout eastern Canada.

There is no serious shortage of catching capability at present in the Newfoundland fishery. This is another of the myths which I wish I could explode, and I hope that I will have the opportunity of doing so today, at least for those who are particularly interested.

I would emphasize once again that my constituency, ranges along close to 900 miles of coastline and it has approximately 20 of the largest fish plants in North America and some of the most skilled fishermen to be found anywhere, whose livelihood is studied by people from all over the world seeking to improve the lot of their fishermen. Therefore, I believe that my sources are impeccable, and I would take them by a long shot over theories of those people who, in good will and with all manner of initiative, would undertake separate enterprises.

When I talk to my constituents, these fishermen, who, by the way, are among the few in eastern Canada or Newfoundland who are on the grounds now in mid-winter, who have a most difficult lifestyle and deserve my respect and my attention, their message to me up and down the coast is that there really is not a serious shortage of catching capability at the present time, inshore or offshore.

There are some special problems, Mr. Speaker, and these are areas that require attention. As decent-minded and fair-minded people anywhere will acknowledge, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment has not been rigid and we have moved to take care of some of these special problems. In the case of the deep sea fishery, there are areas where particular plants have not been well served, and through the minister we have made accommodations to them.

In the case of the deep sea fishery generally, however, all the stern trawlers—now the majority of the offshore fleet—are still operating at catch rates considerably below capacity. I believe that this is an important consideration for us, but not merely in the context of the offshore. If I can translate this into the larger issue of an industrial strategy for Canada, this is a classic example, in minuscule, of what we mean when we talk about optimizing our productive capability.

This fleet of vessels by and large is underutilized, and therefore we must ensure that instead of bringing in half loads or three-quarters on a trip over ten or twelve days, these vessels are maximized to bring in full loads, perhaps in a shorter time. Faster turnarounds would make sure that the vessels are maximized in terms of their capability of contributing to the general well-being of the industry. That is what the minister and governments, both federal and provincial, must look at. This is not because in some particular or other an entrepreneur may wish to add to the fleet in a specific way; rather the question is whether the totality of the catch capability is being utilized to the maximum extent.

As for the inshore fishery, Mr. Speaker, many fishermen are turning away from the more expensive boats. This is a fascinating phenomenon and the wise, experienced fishermen in Newfoundland for years have been telling me it was going to happen.

If I may be critical of the theorists and indeed of some of the minister's bureaucrats—I am sure he will not be offended by this—there was a period when big was considered beautiful in fisheries terms.

Mr. Alexander: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) may not be referring to my physique when he talks about big being beautiful. He is beautiful, whether big or little, I can assure him.

In this context let me say that here is a prime example of the failure over many years to understand that the fishermen knew best. In many cases we were telling them: "You are not really as well off as you think you are because you ought to have a bigger boat, you ought to have a more complex operation." The result was that much policy—federal, provincial and private—was aimed in that particular direction. I repeat, these larger, more expensive boats are being questioned now and the fishermen are preferring smaller fishing units with smaller crews, less overhead and carrying charges, for the simple reason that they wind up with more money in their pockets at the end of the day.

When we talk in developmental terms about expansion, growth and things of this nature, I think we must always bear in mind the very germane lesson of the fishermen. You can have a fisherman as industrious as any get out with a 300-foot boat capable of being used for a variety of purposes, which costs a minimum amount of money but has modern gear, is equipped with radar and safety features. With one assistant he is going to do very well. If instead of a 30-foot boat he gets a 60-foot boat, then he has a crew of four or five people, he is paying off a mortgage no matter how generous the terms, he has added fuel costs and a whole range of other things. Although it looks great, the harbour is "cheeched" from one end to the other with large vessels. His profit is actually smaller than when he was dealing, as we say, cross-handed or with one or two people aboard with him.

In these talks about fisheries, Mr. Speaker, I have always a tendency to lapse into the vernacular. If some of the words do not convey themselves in either official language to the interpreter, I apologize.

There is much more I could say on the subject but I want to move on. Based on the fundamental assumption that the inshore fishery must be put in a healthy condition, it can be concluded—I have already concluded and am prepared to defend my conclusion anywhere before any audience at any time—that the provision of an adequate mix of inshore fishing vessels able to meet all anticipated needs is not an insurmountable or even serious problem provided all parties work together to devise practical programs of financing, orderly expansion and, of great importance, catch disposal. What I am seeking to convey is the idea that it is wrong to look through the small end of the telescope and see the problem as being of such proportions that it is simply not capable of being managed.

Just taking a figure out of the air, if you have 5,000 inshore fishermen at a cost per boat of $40,000 or $50,000, you say that is a massive challenge. If you turn the telescope around, however, and realize it is a whole series of small, individual, personal enterprises and deal with it in that fashion, and if the minister continues his humane and personal kinds of policies of sitting down with individual fishermen and groups of fishermen, then you do not have to talk in multi-million dollar terms.

Indeed, people in Newfoundland and in my riding would be perfectly happy if they were able to go to somebody and say, "I need $30,000 or $40,000. How do I go about getting it and what is the best arrangement?" If I have a criticism—which I have—of the bureaucratic structures that this government and every other government tends to create, it is that there is too little disposition to be attentive to the small entrepreneur who is not interested in becoming, and does not need a massive bureaucratic machine in order to become, self-supporting and perfectly content to be able to get off unemployment insurance or anything else that might be offered to him as an alternative.

I think it is important to recall again the linkage between the inshore and offshore fisheries. The greater the percentage of stocks assigned to inshore, the less complex the task of determining the size and make-up of necessary offshore fleets.

I want to make it clear, as anyone who has any association with fisheries will understand and agree, that what I have said about the inshore fishery does not mean that we cannot and must not have a most effective, most efficient, most modern offshore catching capability. What I am getting at and what I emphasize once again is that this mix and the emphasis put on the inshore fishery is going to determine the kind of fleet needed for offshore development. It is only possible to get this mix properly when you see the two in the same context. I realize I am getting into too much detail here for this particular audience.

This leads to another basic developmental proposition. The offshore vessel acquisition program must place the emphasis on the gradual replacement of the present fleet. The need is not for large numbers of additional vessels now; indeed, if there was a cornucopia of funds available, whether in the private sector or through governmental largesse, the answer for us on the east coast today is not suddenly to double the size of the offshore fishing fleet. What we need now is a sound, rational program which puts into place a clear picture of what the fishing fleet consists of at the present time—how old the vessels are, what is the point at which they start to become obsolete and less efficient—and then to put mechanisms in place, both public and private, so that new and modern vessels are phased in and therefore we increase our catching capability to synchronize with an increase in the stocks available. That is something which is terribly important and which will require the intricate co-operation of federal and provincial governments, fisheries representatives, the unions and everybody concerned.

By the way, I should add here that we also need to have a much better awareness than is universally held at this time about how we get at presently unexploited species. We have had a rather narrow range in terms of all of the various species of fish in the Atlantic that have been attracted to Canadian processors or even to Canadian fishermen. I think we are on the road to this, but obviously there will be disageements; I have no difficulty with that. It is a question, however, of taking all of the parties concerned and discussing the matters in detail. With good will, I think we can work it out.

I want to emphasize this gradualness of the replacement program for the same reason that I talked about the inshore, and that is to counteract the erroneous impression—and it is very, very erroneous—that there is a massive and immediate need for a huge fleet of new, sophisticated offshore vessels. Perhaps those who are landlocked Canadians may welcome an explanation, if altogether too brief a one, of the costs involved. If we go to a new catching capability which will engage 10 or 12 fishermen at sea, the cost is in the many millions of dollars. That same expenditure, if it were put into inshore facilities, would engage many hundreds of persons. The relevant economics are very complex and have to be worked out so as to ensure that one does not get too large an increase in production capacity inshore.

At the same time one does not put all of the money into what is, in the absence of the proper balance, very much a high expenditure item in terms of fish fleet, capital cost in the first instance, and maintenance beyond that.

Whatever disagreements exist on this issue of fisheries—and I believe down underneath there are very few, but I repeat what I said at the beginning—there are differences of emphasis and differences of approaches, and for something as complex as the fisheries one could not really expect that not to be the case. But on the question of catching capacity there is no dispute whatever, so far as I have been able to see. I hope hon. members will understand that what I am seeking to do here is to demystify some of the frequent and repeated comments that one hears that are really not grounded in fact.

This basic conclusion which is so fundamental to what we are talking about is that in terms of conventional fish plants Newfoundland, and probably all of Atlantic Canada, have more than enough facilities, far more than enough facilities right now. So that once again when we speak of exploiting the 200-mile limit, it is not then a question of saying we are going to bring a large number of fish ashore—I have already demonstrated this is in itself a complex question—but also of saying that we must build a whole new massive infrastructure in order to look after it.

That is simply not the case. Virtually all of the plants that we have now are underutilized and their productivity is affected adversely. Some of them in seasonal areas are operating at 20 per cent, 30 per cent, or 35 per cent capacity, maybe a few even less, yet we continue to hear many reports of fishermen having to dump their catches at certain peak seasons and of some plants being unable to obtain extra ships to process additional supplies. This is a real dichotomy, a tremendous contradiction, and yet one that has so far defied some of the most intense planning that people have put into it. What we must do is to in a sense marry the supplies side to the production side, and many good steps have been taken in that direction.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

I want to emphasize here that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment has been very forthcoming in terms of the amount of federal assistance provided through his department, through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and in a variety of other ways in co-operative undertakings with the provinces, in this case Newfoundland. I believe we have been moving at an accelerated rate toward this rationalization which is essentially what is so important for the future.

There is one point I want to make again, and I realize in talking about this subject that there are not many more than the Minister of Fisheries, myself and perhaps our friend from the Magdalen Islands who will really understand what I am speaking about, and I hope they will forgive me for not going into more detail in the interest of saving time. One of the valuable things to emerge from the recent discussions has been to remove the curse, as it were, from that much maligned historical fishery which we refer to in Newfoundland and in Atlantic Canada as the trap fishery. For years claims have been heard that the trap fishery was a nuisance; too much small fish, the annual "glut" problem of catches too big in too short a time, and the wastefulness of dumped, unsaleable catches.

The tendency has been to "think around" the trap fishery, to contemplate its phase down or even its abandonment, and to consider it a nuisance to orderly planning. I do not know that there is an analogy in farming that I might use, but it is as though one had a crop that was 50 per cent of the value of the year's yield, but it was a bit of a nuisance and you kept saying to yourself: "How can I get rid of this particular crop?". It took us in our case maybe 450 years to realize that it is fundamental to what we are doing in fisheries on the east coast.

The fact is that without the trap fishery there simply cannot be a viable inshore fishery. The trap remains the most efficient catching method yet devised in inshore terms, and well over 50 per cent of the cod landings come from traps during the relatively short season. In brief, an effective inshore strategy must be built around the trap fishery. It must be the centrepiece and not, as it has been for centuries, an undesirable fringe.

I want to conclude with one or two important comments about the 200-mile limit and its ramifications. This is more in the context of my responsibilities as Secretary of State for External Affairs, although clearly there is an interface between that and my responsibilities as the member for the riding of Burin-Burgeo, soon to be Burin-St. George's. All of this new activity and new opportunities offered have been a result of the acquisition of the 200-mile limit. Few subjects can generate more enthusiasm these days. But let me caution the House that the misconceptions are legion also. These centre on all aspects of foreign participation, from quotas to joint ventures and non-Canadian ownership of processing facilities in Canada.

It is becoming increasingly apparent that with only a lapse of two years this month since the declaration of the zone it is still too early for a consensus to emerge or for sound, long-term judgments to be made on some very fundamental questions. There are some known facts and others are now emerging after a period of just 24 months. The over-all picture is starting to clarify and we are learning what the choices are before us.

I think that it is of the utmost importance that we recognize that one cannot correct the abuses of literally centuries in two years. Nor is it possible in two years to get a total perspective on what new circumstances are to the point where one can put in place regulations or policies which are inscribed on tablets of stone and are incapable of being changed.

To start with the fundamentals, Canada now has exclusive fisheries jurisdiction out to a distance of 200 miles. The legal status of this jurisdiction in international terms is complex, but for practical purposes it can be said—and I want to say it this way—that Canada has first claim on all fish stocks in the designated region. Strictly speaking, Canada is not obliged to consult any other country on how it will manage the zone or on what disposition it makes of any of the living resources the zone contains. It is a very simple and straight forward proposition. Nevertheless, one question that has been raised repeatedly is, why not bar all foreign activity from the Canadian zone, in effect establish "a fence" 200 miles around the Newfoundland coast and keep all but Canadians out?

I want to deal with this point. It is I believe one of the misunderstandings that must be disposed of if we are to have effective future planning for fisheries. In time it could come to this point, that for policy reasons or otherwise we might be able to build this kind of fence. However, as things stand at the moment, there are a number of reasons why it is not wise to do so at the present time. Among these is the fact that there are some species within the zone that Canada does not take at present or where we cannot take all that is available. I believe this is an important consideration. The objective is to gain concessions for Canada from other countries by assigning the quota surplus, and I emphasize the word surplus, to Canada's needs on an interim basis. Such concessions include easier and wider access for our Newfoundland fish products for the countries in question, particularly Europe. Also, as I was able to demonstrate over the Christmas holiday, some of the concessions that we can obtain are, for instance, the ability to have some 60 odd Soviet fishing trawlers repaired and overhauled in our Newfoundland dockyards as a result of this 200-mile arrangement. All of these are matters which certainly argue for some degree of flexibility on the 200-mile zone.

I could spend a lot of time talking on many other aspects of the fence question, but I want to emphasize one in particular, and that is, as has often been said, that the fish will not know where the fence is. That is probably the most important consideration of all when it comes to answering the question why we do not bar everybody from 200 miles inward.

There are large quantities of fish—I believe the figure has been estimated in the order of 25 to 30 per cent of some species, certainly 20 per cent—that are actually outside the 200-mile area. These, of course, could be ravished. This would have a very detrimental effect if we did not have international agreement and understanding as to how those stocks were going to be dealt with.

We have the makings of that in the new organization which came into place on the first of this year, the successor organization to ICNAF, the International Commission for the North Atlantic Fisheries. I believe we are taking wise steps under the guidance of the Minister of Fisheries.

There was much more I wanted to say, but I think I have taken too much of the time of the House already.

I do want to make one final point. In all of the talk now going on about joint ventures and the like, rapid expansion and special new kinds of arrangements for fisheries, there is a real danger that both Canadians and foreigners may overestimate the degree of co-operation possible in the foreseeable future. The hard reality, not yet fully recognized, is that for most of the species in which foreigners are interested there is no surplus. This is something which has escaped a lot of people who talk in a rather airy-fairy fashion about fast expansion or rapid growth. It is quite the contrary. We are still short for our own immediate needs and the requirements of conservation and replenishment.

Put very starkly, the present opportunities for foreign co-operation are decidedly limited and, in this sense, the issue of joint ventures of various kinds is being grossly exaggerated in some quarters. This does not mean that opportunities are non-existent. It simply means we must look at them very carefully in each individual case where they arise. If we do that, we will form a pattern or rationale which will turn out in the end to be most beneficial as far as we in Canada are concerned.

These are the sum of the reservations expressed to me by many people, including, most importantly, all of the people for whom I have the greatest respect, namely the fishermen. They are not asking us to move into massive, astronomical kinds of expansion. They are not saying to us we are going too slowly. They are not saying we should be having big deals here, there and the other place, and all sorts of consortia and the like.

Many people in Newfoundland remember at least three major companies, all of them by coincidence in my constituency, which moved in the last time there appeared to be marvellous opportunities but which were not at all hesitant to turn the key as soon as things turned down. I can assure hon. members that memories are long about those kinds of experiences.

There are many more specific issues relating to fishery development on which at some point there should be the opportunity for detailed discussion in this House and elsewhere. In my mind, the union in Newfoundland is properly—and I have been supportive of this—stressing the key role of the fishery as the foundation of the Newfoundland social structure. In other words, we are not talking here—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but his allotted time has expired. He can continue only with unanimous consent. Does the minister have consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jamieson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was down to the last paragraph. I was about to say, and I am grateful for your indulgence for permitting me to say it, that one of the most important things the union, more than any other group in Newfoundland, has been emphasizing has been that the key role of the fishery is the very basis and foundation of the social structure. The fisheries are to Newfoundland what the farm is to the prairies. It is a lot more than a secondary manufacturing industry, an automotive plant or something one finds in a large city. It is the industry. It is the activity around which the whole way of life is concentrated and centred.

In addition to the industrialization policies that the Minister of Fisheries has been pursuing, we must at the same time do everything we possibly can to reinforce and enhance that kind of lifestyle. By the way, it is not only rewarding to those who are concerned, but makes an enormous contribution to the fascinating mosaic of Canada. This is a lifestyle, a kind of vigour. This population can make a very sizeable contribution to Canadian unity and Canadian development as we were talking about it in a different context earlier this day.

I want to end on that note. This subject of the social impact of the fishery is sufficiently important to require a special and detailed discussion on an urgent basis. I urge my colleague the Minister of Fisheries to try to find the kind of fora in which this kind of thing can parallel what is now being done. If this can be done, there is no doubt that to Newfoundland the fishery is more than just another industry. It is important, even essential, that fishermen, the fish trades, governments and Newfoundlanders generally work together co-operatively to make the most of this new chance—and that is what the 200-miie limit is. The odds are that if we fail this time, that chance is not going to come again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to pay tribute to the eloquence of the previous speaker, who spoke about the romance of the fishery. I have never experienced that romance. I want to speak about the romance of another industry which is connected to this reorganization which we are speaking about today.

It has been said that there are nutritional qualities in fish that help the brain. I assume that must be true. I am, however, compelled to think that other things that are said about Newfoundlanders must be true as well, because I have been reading the speeches made in defence of the fishing industry in 1971 when fisheries became a minor department under the new Department of the Environment. It has often been said that Newfoundlanders put the cart before the horse. I really wonder about the mess the fishing industry has been in all these years when those members have been in power and have had the direction over that important industry.

● (1650)

The latest attempts at government reorganization remind me of something a recognized member of the forestry industry said recently. He said that he does not get any great feeling of optimism that we are really making progress; that while things are being changed, he is not sure they are being improved. This bill is not an attempt to make government more efficient but an admission that previous attempts to reorganize, particularly in this area, have failed. This is nothing new.

Since the emergence into this arena in 1968 of the intellectual giant and social engineer there have been attempts to reorganize all kinds of things. My colleague the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) enumerated the government programs which have been the subject of attempts at change, but there has been recognition that some changes were wrong, and we have had to go back to where we started from.

I want to say just a little bit about one department which was changed about the same time that fisheries and forestry came under the Department of the Environment in 1971, namely, the department dealing with the Unemployment Insurance Commission and manpower. There was a separation there, and it took eight years before hon. members opposite recognized that mistake and that the problem of manpower management in our country is much better handled under one department. Now we are undergoing the painful process of reamalgamating those two departments at great cost to the taxpayer and at great human cost to the public servants we have asked to undertake these reforms.

Fisheries was an autonomous department of government until 1971, when the Department of the Environment was formed. What we see today is a return to an original policy, namely, a fisheries department like the department which was formed by a Conservative government and which had a high profile until the new administration came along.

My submission, however, does not concern the new ministry of fisheries as much as it does the remaining Department of the Environment, such as it is, and the component in that department which is known as forestry. In general terms I support the objectives of the bill and my colleagues on this side of the House support those objectives; but for the life of me I cannot understand why the equally crucial problems relating to forestry are once again ignored.

As hon. members know, there are three major areas of jurisdiction under the Ministry of Fisheries and the Environment. The third major area is forestry. I would like to review how the former department of forestry, like fisheries, has been reformed to death. Before 1968 the forestry department was a separate and autonomous department of the federal government. In 1960 it was known as the department of forestry and from 1966 to 1967 as the department of forestry and rural development. In 1969 forestry became a branch within the department of fisheries and forestry. It became a service known as the Canadian Forestry Service within the newly created Department of the Environment in 1971. The reorganization of the Department of the Environment in 1974 downgraded the Canadian Forestry Service to a relatively minor role in a massive department which by its nature is oriented more toward environmental protection than toward the enhancement of the economic values of our forest resources.

At the moment the federal government is in a poor position to co-ordinate provincial forestry programs because there is not even a deputy minister who is able to advise the environment minister on matters relating to forestry. Dr. Place, director of the program development branch of forestry, appeared before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry where he made the following statement:

> —owing to divided jurisdiction, Canada does not have a clearly enunciated national forest policy. This is an area in which our Department would like to take some initiative in trying to promote more of a consensus in the future but it is a typical area because, not only is there divided federal and provincial jurisdiction, there are some 20 agencies within the federal government having their finger in the forestry pie and no single department has a clear mandate to see that federal activities are co-ordinated.

This is the present state of affairs as it relates to the once proud Canadian Forestry Service and, indeed, as it relates to this very important component of the industrial capacity of this country. It should be added that just in the last few weeks the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has driven the final nail into the coffin by his decision to deprive the Canadian Forestry Service of what little was left to it to sustain some very important, vital and crucial research efforts. We have heard much in the House in the last few days and weeks about the reorganization of the Petawawa forestry research labs. As hon. members know, it was decided to phase that service out. Then after we brought the concerns of the industry and the professions into the House, the minister and the government decided that instead of phasing out the station it should be reorganized and that the Forest Management Institute, the Forest Fire Institute and the services connected with them should be transferred to Petawawa. The minister is probably quite right when he says that there will be more bureaucrats at Petawawa than there were before, but the services have been drastically reduced.

I wish to take this opportunity to provide a profile of the forest industry. I want to speak in defence of that industry, which has been the backbone of our economy for longer than any of us can remember. It has been the backdrop to a social environment which is indispensable to many Canadians. The Canadian Institute of Foresters had this to say in its policy statement:

> The forest lands of Canada, including associated wildlands, provide an environment basic to the economic, social and spiritual well-being of Canadians. They are vital in providing raw materials for the wood-converting industries, in maintaining a quality fishery and wildlife habitat, in purifying air and water, in regulating water supplies and in making available to Canadians and to their visitors a vast outdoors in which a multitude of recreational, educational and scientific activities can be carried out.

I want to give the House some comparisons with respect to the importance of forest industries not only to the economy but also to the government in terms of revenues. To do that, I wish to quote some statistics.

Since we have heard so much about fisheries in the last couple of days, the statistics I have assembled and compiled are a comparison between the forest service, or the economic contribution of the forest industry section—Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis)—Forestry—Research—Funding of Forest Management Institute; the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta)—Canadian Wheat Board—Co-ordinator to ensure maximum use of rail cars to move grain; the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington)—Air Transport—Civil aviation inspectors without contract.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

• (1700)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Shall notice of motion No. 3 in the name of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

TRANSFER OF QUEEN MARY VETERANS HOSPITAL

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

> That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings, agreements and other communications between the government and the province of Quebec concerning the transfer of the Queen Mary Veterans hospital in Montreal.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have risen in the House many times to speak about the transfer of this hospital, the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital in Montreal, and the transfer of other hospitals, as well as on the subject generally of veterans and veterans' care. I spoke specifically on the subject of this transfer some five years ago. I have expressed my concern and received assurances from the minister that the veterans would be properly looked after.

I have no doubt, and certainly I have no evidence to the contrary at present, that the veterans who were sick in the hospital have not been well treated. What does concern me is that, in my opinion, there is not free access to documents. By dint of placing many questions on the order paper I have received answers, but the answers are not necessarily consistent.

In October of 1977 the minister issued a news release in which he stated the following:

Under the terms of the transfer agreement—

That is an agreement to transfer the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital to the government of the province of Quebec.

—entitled veterans will have priority access to 55 acute care beds in Montreal hospitals. Further, the staff of the hospital will become employees of the new hospital corporation under terms and conditions of employment similar to those they enjoy in the federal public service . . . The effective date of the transfer is December 26, 1977, when the Department of Veterans Affairs will transfer for one dollar the grounds, buildings and equipment of Queen Mary Hospital to the Quebec government. The province will also receive from the Government of Canada an indexed capital grant of $9 million for reconstruction purposes.

That is basically it. It is just about all we know about the transfer. We are advised that whenever a veteran requires admission for examination, treatment or care, that veteran, when beds are not fully occupied by veterans, will be admitted without delay.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) stated the following yesterday in answer to a question:

Beds guaranteed to veterans under the transfer agreements specified are: . . .

(f) Queen Mary Hospital, Montreal—55 beds.

In the same answer he recounts that on January 1, 1978, at the same Queen Mary Hospital there were 260 patients who were receiving acute care treatment. Six months later, on July 1, 1978, that number of veterans had dropped to seven. They are all listed as acute care cases. Thus it would appear that we have a signed agreement giving veterans access to 55 beds, and from the reply of the minister given as late as yesterday a much smaller number of veterans occupying those beds. He does not give a more up to date figure than that of October, 1978 when the previous figure of seven to which I have referred dropped to five.

What concerns me, of course, is that in my constituency of Vaudreuil we have another veterans' hospital, the Ste. Anne de Bellevue Military Hospital, with something in the order of 1,000 patients and a long waiting list. Since for some time there has been a long waiting list, and since the number of veterans who are likely to be requesting admission in the next few years is likely to increase because of their age, there would appear to be a need for even more beds for veterans than are presently available. Nevertheless, from the figures which are presented to us, having passed the Queen Mary Hospital over to the province, we have not only reduced the number of veterans receiving a federal level of treatment from some 260 to something in the order of about five, but we are not using anything like the total number of beds, that is 55 beds, that we have reserved for veterans at the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital.

I am also told—and this maybe will be worth recording for the benefit of those who, like myself, until a few days ago were not aware—that the agreement signed with the province provides that Canada will retain at no rental charge no less than 66,249 square feet of usable space. I was interested in what we were to do with the space and was told that the departmental treatment services are going to use 21,000 square feet of space. This is all for the Department of Veterans Affairs. The departmental dental services will use 1,508 square feet and the prosthetic workshop of the Department of National Health and Welfare, 5,000 square feet. Then I also see that we have retained space for chapels and chaplains' offices amounting to 2,172 square feet. This is fairly decent accommodation for the personnel and for the chapel for the five remaining veterans in the Queen Mary Hospital. We also retained some 14,620 square feet for departmental veterans' services, for veterans' land administration 6,641, for the Canadian Pension Commission 4,879 square feet, for the bureau of pensions advocates 4,100 square feet, and for the departmental central registry 6,329 square feet. The total is 66,249 square feet, as I mentioned before.

In other words, all these federal facilities are still continuing at the Queen Mary Hospital, formerly the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital. I sometimes wonder whether the veterans who formerly used these facilities are still aware of their continuing use.

I am also advised—here I am somewhat concerned and I should refer back to an answer I received from the Minister of Veterans Affairs on December 7, 1977—that when Queen Mary Veterans Hospital was transferred, some of the medical records of the veterans were maintained in the hospital and others were transferred to the Public Archives record centre in Montreal. Also the minister indicated that in the future those medical records which no longer need to be maintained in the hospital will be transferred to the record centre. He indicated in his reply that the medical records to be maintained in the hospital would be the records of those veterans who were continuing to receive treatment at the hospital. That would be quite logical. However, it appears the agreement provided that Canada shall transfer to the province all medical records in connection with each veteran. Of course, that raises some questions. Some of the veterans in my area have asked me if they will have the same access to their records as previously.

I have asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs questions in connection with veterans' records. I am pleased by the manner in which these records are kept, and the fact that veterans can go back to their wartime service and find records were kept by the department of which they were not even aware. Also I compliment the department in that it freely discloses what is on the records, thus enabling veterans, in many instances, successfully to claim various pension benefits which, without the department's records, they may not have been able to obtain. It underlines my fears that a department which has done such an excellent job of maintaining medical records of veterans apparently is prepared to turn over these records to the province of Quebec. I am concerned because of the attitude of the present government of that province, its general attitude toward anything which could be termed federal. Also I am concerned that veterans will not continue to have the same access to medical records as previously.

I am interested in what the terms of this transfer are, as well as the discussions which have some bearing on the transfer of this particular hospital. In March, 1977 I suggested that there was a problem at the Ste. Anne de Bellevue Veterans Hospital because we were unaware whether the hospital was going to be transferred, when it would be transferred, or what the conditions of the transfer would be. I realize the problems of disposing of the Ste. Anne de Bellevue Veterans Hospital.

On April 7, 1975 the minister indicated that less than 20 per cent of the patients in Ste. Anne de Bellevue Veterans Hospital were considered to be a federal responsibility. Also he indicated that the province was only paying for part of the costs of some 524 patients out of a total 804 patients who were considered to be a provincial responsibility. In the balance of his answer, he indicated that in other words the provincial government was paying 28 per cent of the total operating cost of the hospital, while more than four out of five veterans occupying beds in the hospital were considered to be a provincial responsibility.

That is one reason why I doubted the transfer would ever be effected. Obviously it would cost the province of Quebec a considerable sum of money, and the province would have to accept the responsibility for patients who were not directly a cost to the federal government. I expressed my opinion that some of the fears of the patients and the staff at the Ste. Anne de Bellevue Veterans Hospital could be allayed if they were made aware of the precise conditions under which any transfer would be made.

One way in which we can be assured that the federal government will look after veterans is to look at its past history. In order to do that, we wanted to look at all of the records in connection with the transfer of Queen Mary Veterans Hospital. Also we noted the sum of $9 million which was handed over to the provincial government for renovations at the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital. It was interesting to note that the subject came up in connection with the Senneville Lodge which is part of the total facility at Ste. Anne de Bellevue Veterans Hospital.

In a letter dated October 16, 1974, the Minister of Veterans Affairs said the following:

—discussions are proceeding between our department and the Quebec provincial authorities regarding the transfer of Ste. Anne's hospital. At the present moment it is not intended that the Senneville Lodge property which comprises the main acreage of the Ste. Anne's complex will be included in the transfer although the patients at Senneville Lodge will be looked after by the hospital authorities after transfer until such time as a replacement unit of the nursing home type is built at federal expense, probably in close proximity to the main hospital.

That was fairly reassuring for the patients at Senneville Lodge. On November 10, 1976 the minister indicated that planning for the replacement of the Senneville Lodge in Quebec was deferred while discussion was continuing with the province of Quebec respecting the transfer of Queen Mary Veterans Hospital. Also he said that when these discussions were completed, the department would undertake definitive planning for the replacement of the Senneville Lodge. I was somewhat puzzled that these two matters would be tied together, but I accepted it at that time.

On January 24, 1977 the minister said the following:

The decision on the construction of a replacement of Senneville Lodge, Senneville, Quebec, is not dependent upon the transfer of Queen Mary Veterans Hospital in Montreal.

This is where the confusion started. On April 21, 1977, the minister wrote a letter which reads in part as follows:

—a plan is being considered for the replacement of Senneville Lodge facility and there is approval in principle to proceed. However, the site has not yet been determined and the plans for the replacement are not finalized. As soon as the transfer of Queen Mary Veterans Hospital is completed, the department plans to proceed very quickly with the replacement facility for Senneville Lodge.

It is evident that there are connections between Senneville Lodge and the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital for reasons unknown. Subsequent letters indicated that when the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital transfer was completed, they would proceed with the rebuilding of the Senneville Lodge. According to the minister, the transfer was completed more than a year ago, and we have yet to hear about the plans for Senneville Lodge. One should be able to reassure persons by openness to rid veterans of most of their fears. I do not feel there is very much that could not be openly disclosed regarding the transfer of the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital. It would automatically alleviate the fears of those who worry about what will happen ultimately at Ste. Anne de Bellevue.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this motion concerning the transfer of the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital in Montreal. I think this private members' hour could better be described as the futility hour because we are actually wasting our time. The only real benefit obtained from the private members' hours is that it gives us an opportunity to enlighten the Canadian people through television and Hansard as to what an undemocratic and secretive government they have.

In this situation we have a member of the government trying to obtain information for his constituents. He is not only a Liberal member but a parliamentary secretary, and this is the extent to which he must go to obtain information for the veterans and other people in his riding. It is unbelievable that this government would refuse to give information such as that which he seeks to a member of parliament. It has nothing to do with partisan politics. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) merely needs to phone his department, where there are thousands of civil servants, and direct one of them to obtain the necessary information for him; or if the files are too bulky they could make arrangements for the hon. member to go over and view whatever he wishes.

The purpose of the government is to help people, not to put up roadblocks to make it awkward and difficult for a member of parliament to carry out his duties. That is why I believe this hour should be described as the futility hour. The liberal members are prepared because their civil servants have prepared statements for them to read out in order to talk out this particular motion.

The answer given to the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) by the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) reads:

—I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion since there is a rather large number of papers requested and a substantial amount would have to be earmarked as well as much time would have to be devoted to their preparation.

With the number of civil servants available, I would certainly question that.

The hon. member has also pointed out that many veterans may not be aware of the use of transferred hospitals. This is an issue I have raised before. Lately we have had some serious problems with regard to veterans gaining admittance to veterans' hospitals. There have been two deaths. One of the deaths occurred because the individual was refused at the Sunnybrook Hospital in Toronto. This particular veteran had difficulty gaining admittance to the hospital which had no available beds, and he was therefore refused. He was left on a stretcher in the emergency ward for more than three hours and then sent back to the Centenary Hospital. Shortly after he was sent to St. Michael's Hospital for surgery where he died there the next day.

There is a similar case which occurred in Victoria recently. The minister has stated, in referring to the veteran's wife, that she did not properly apply to get into the hospital. This was a concern expressed by the hon. member for Vaudreuil, that he was not sure whether or not veterans or their families knew how to apply for admittance to these hospitals.

When I raised this matter in the adjournment debate, the parliamentary secretary gave me the general assurance that everything was all right. He made no specific reference to the recent veterans who died because they were shuffled from hospital to hospital. I will pursue this matter at a later date, because we are just not satisfied on this side of the House.

The hon. member for Vaudreuil has stated that the veterans have not been made aware of the system. Veterans would be very concerned about gaining admittance to hospitals if they were to read the news story in the Toronto Star which is headed, "Shoot me, begged dying man—". This man was being shuffled from hospital to hospital before he died.

The motion of the hon. member for Vaudreuil to get some information about the transfer of these hospitals is certainly a very good one. The answers provided thus far by the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council are certainly not acceptable because we are talking about people's lives.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

I hope that the Liberal backbenchers who have been sent here to talk this motion out will have a change of heart and realize that this motion has nothing to do with partisan politics. There may be people in their ridings who will have such a difficulty. Hopefully, they will throw away those prepared statements which have been handed to them by a civil servant.

I was very glad that the answers to my questions on the order paper with regard to beds available in the transferred hospitals, which were in Hansard yesterday, were of assistance to the hon. member. I would also like to congratulate him for his contributions to veterans affairs matters on other dates. He has made reference to his speech of March 30, 1977 where he first raised the problems associated with the transfer of veterans' hospitals. At the time he was speaking in support of a motion by a former colleague of mine who was the then veterans affairs critic for the Conservative party and who is now in the other place. I believe the hon. member for Vaudreuil has a genuine concern for veterans and matters affecting them.

I do not want to be on record, Mr. Speaker, as being long-winded in speaking on this issue. I just hope that the two Liberals who have been delegated to talk this motion out will come up with something constructive or allow the motion to pass. As I stated earlier, it would take but a phone call from the minister to have these papers prepared for the hon. member for Vaudreuil to view. If such a thing were to be arranged, as veterans affairs critic for my party I would very much like to join him because I am very much interested in the problems of veterans' hospitals.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to address myself to the motion put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). He has asked that the minister table all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings and other communications between the Government of Canada and the province of Quebec having to do with the transfer of the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) has asked that there not be any partisan politics. At least the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs over the past years have been above partisan politics. I would therefore hope that the critic for the opposition will continue in that vein and not simply point out some of the shortcomings of the Liberal party. He knows full well that we on this side of the House have the well-being of veterans at heart, as I am sure all members do in this House.

● (1730)

As I understand it, the reason that the hon. member for Vaudreuil wants the information about the minutes and the contracts is so that the people in his riding and in St. Anne de Bellevue hospital may know the terms of the agreement and the contract being transferred. I suggest that in all cases where we have transferred these hospitals there has been an equitable agreement or arrangement made and that the people working in them have not suffered financially, any loss of position, or in any other way.

As Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) I have visited the hospitals which have been transferred from the Government of Canada to the provinces. I was in Victoria where there was some problem in the beginning, which has been cleared up. In talking to the people concerned, I found all of them quite happy with the way things have been handled and how they now stand. In Edmonton we have been in negotiation for the transfer of the veterans hospital there. I have visited Edmonton and I am sure that matter will turn out as well as the transfer of the Queen Mary hospital in Quebec.

It has been suggested that we would talk out the motion, Mr. Speaker. I do not know about other members, but I am here because I have a few points to make about the transfer of the Queen Mary hospital and other transfers, and so that I may share with my colleagues and the people of Canada what the Department of Veterans Affairs has been doing, is doing, and will continue to do for the betterment and good care of the veterans who are our responsibility.

I think the most important statement I can make is that the government recognizes and accepts its moral responsibility to provide the best possible medical care for our veterans. That is where we began, and I am sure that no one in this House and no one in Canada would disagree with the concept. There are sometimes misconceptions about the way the government provides this medical care. I am always glad to have a chance to correct those misconceptions.

It is now more than 30 years since the end of World War II and in that period the most dramatic changes have taken place in the field of medical and hospital services, hospital care and administration. Most significant to the question at hand in the medical and hospital field is veterans population. To appreciate what is happening now to the hospital care and treatment of veterans we need to look at what has happened in the past and in the intervening years.

When World War II ended and the injured troops were returned to Canada, the existing hospital facilities were totally inadequate for their accommodation. To provide the needed beds and treatment, the government had to build hospitals specifically for veterans. At one time there were 40 veterans' hospitals in Canada. The war injured were most in need of acute care. The vast majority needed it only for a limited period of time, and most were discharged within a period of months.

My colleague, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), served as a surgeon in World War II. He has worked in veterans' hospitals, and I was talking to him about this prior to today's debate. This private members' hour, incidentally, should not be called the period of futility, in my view. It is a time when members get a chance to bring up subjects that are important to them and their constituents. My colleague assured me that the care given to the returning veterans from World War II in those hospitals where he served was second to none anywhere on the North American continent.

As the damages of war were repaired and the patients recovered, some of these hospitals were closed down within a relatively short period of time. They had been built in response to a special and abnormal health care requirement, and as that requirement was met, progressively the hospitals closed and we were left with a few hospitals where veterans received medical care for pensionable disabilities. Over the years the number of veterans requiring acute and active care steadily decreased, and as beds became empty they were made available to DVA recipients.

Slowly but surely the profile of the veteran patient changed. In the beginning there were young men severely wounded and needing the most immediate, sophisticated medical treatment possible. That immediate need was taken care of. The veteran patient's need became one of periodic hospitalization and treatment later on for pensionable disability.

With the passage of time the veteran population aged and its needs changed again. Most of the beds in veterans hospitals were filled with people in need of care for chronic conditions and frequently these were of a geriatric nature. In terms of our ability to staff these hospitals, this meant we began to have serious problems. Highly skilled young doctors and nurses trained in the most modern medical procedures are not prepared to work in hospitals where they get little or no opportunity to use their skills or perfect their skills and become better at their chosen profession. It is understandable that they want to work in hospitals where they can gain experience in the widest possible range of medical practice.

The practice of medicine today is incredibly specialized and every day it is becoming more so. The modern hospital has specialists available for virtually all the ills to which mankind is heir. Veterans' hospitals do not have the volume of patients to justify equipping and staffing them to meet the full range of medical treatments. This gap between what we can provide and what is needed will increase in the future as the health facilities of communities continue to improve. I am talking now about the medical complexes which are in place across this land where these men and women, who are veterans of World Wars I and II and the Korean war, can receive the specialized care they not only need but deserve. We could see this situation on the horizon. We knew the care of veterans had to be integrated into the total community medical hospital complex. To do anything less would be to deny our moral responsibility to continue providing veterans with the best medical care possible.

When negotiating contracts with provincial governments to transfer hospitals to provincial jurisdictions, the policy of the government is to provide only the best in medical care. This is what we have done and what we are doing and will continue to do in the months and years ahead. This is why we negotiated the transfer of the Queen Mary hospital with the province of Quebec. This is why I do not doubt that in the foreseeable future we will begin negotiations with other hospitals in other parts of Canada—so that these people can come under the jurisdiction of the provinces and have access near their homes, to the care they deserve.

Very specific conditions and guarantees were written into these contracts. I can assure the hon. member for Vaudreuil that the same conditions will surely be written into the transfer of the hospital in his constituency about which he has the right to question us and which, I can assure him, will be carried out. While details may vary a little from province to province, the broad overriding principles remain the same. There must be assurances for adequate hospital treatment and accommodations for departmental patients.

● (1740)

The hon. member for Vaudreuil quoted a news release on October 21 last which had to do with the transfer of Queen Mary hospital. From that news release I would like to quote two paragraphs:

> Queen Mary Veterans Hospital opened in 1945 to provide high level acute care to injured service men and women returning from the war. Throughout its history, the primary mission has been the care of the war-related conditions of disability pensioners who reside in the Montreal area.

Then I come to a very important paragraph.

> From its inception, under the guidance of eminent Montreal physicians, and later in association with McGill University and the University of Montreal, the Hospital has enjoyed an enviable continent-wide reputation for its pioneer reconstructive work with the seriously injured.

We have every assurance that this type of care that has been given to our veterans, and which they have coming to them, will continue in the months and the years ahead.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Parent: Yes, gladly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for offering to answer the question. I raise it now before his time runs out. I wonder if, during the course of his remarks, he will address himself to the issue raised in the motion. The motion does not raise questions about the administration of veterans hospitals but rather it asks for the tabling of certain correspondence. If the parliamentary secretary on behalf of the government is going to oppose the motion, will he tell us why the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) cannot have copies of the correspondence referred to in the motion?

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, it is Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Parent: Excuse me, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I guess he has his colleague right across from me from Winnipeg South Centre.

I take the question one step further. He wants the information, according to my understanding, because he wants to see what the conditions are so that he can respond to his constituents who work at Ste. Anne de Bellevue Veterans Hospital and inform them about the conditions under which they are going to have their hospital transferred. In answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I assure the hon. member for Vaudreuil that the transfer will be made in the normal fashion and that those people who are to be involved will be treated as well as any of the other people involved in transfers right across Canada. I submit to you that this is an answer to his specific question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He wants to see the correspondence.

Mr. Parent: If I might continue, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you can see from the things that I have talked about that the government takes its moral responsibility for hospital and medical treatment of veterans very seriously. We know that our disability pensioners are getting older and that they need, primarily, facilities for treatment of a chronic care nature. At the same time it is important that they should have available to them the full range of modern medical and hospital care the instant that the need is evident.

We know that we cannot attract the staff to give them this modern, specialized care in existing veterans' hospitals. It is unthinkable that we should allow these hospitals to deteriorate into second class institutions, suitable only for the care of the aged; and inadequate care at that. All of the factors that went into the equations of establishing special hospitals for veterans have changed. Therefore, new equations must be worked out. We feel that the policy of transferring veteran patients into the total community medical care complex with built-in safeguards for the veterans who are our responsibility, and for hospital staff also, is not only the best possible solution to the problem but it gives the veteran patients highly desirable options that they did not have before. Let me elaborate a little bit on that point.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, under current programs veterans can choose their physician. They can also choose the hospital where they want to be treated. This means that from now on veterans will no longer have to travel from 50 to 200 miles to go to a hospital and see a doctor with whom they may not be acquainted. They will now be in a position to choose their own physician and receive the necessary care so that they will get everything they need to lead a normal life. They will now have the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, of being hospitalized near the towns where they live. If they do not like the physician they have chosen, they may see another one.

[English]

In most cases it is only a short car ride away from the home of the dischargee. Anyone who has ever been in a hospital would agree that these are significant advantages. I am sure that you can see, Mr. Speaker, that the hospital transfer policy is anything but an abrogation of responsibility on the part of the government. Quite the reverse is true. The right of the veterans to the best possible medical and hospital care available is the principle upon which all agreements are negotiated. I assure the member from Vaudreuil that the same care, the same consistency, the same research that goes into the transfer of all hospitals that we have had, will go into the transfer of the hospital in his riding. I understand that this is primarily why he wants this information and why he is asking the question.

Every agreement makes provision—

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, before the parliamentary secretary finishes his remarks, would he permit a very short question from me?

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, if I might answer the question at the end of my time, I will be finished in about two minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do not talk yourself out of time.

Mr. Parent: I will not do that. I have no intention of doing that.

Every agreement ensures that the priority beds are provided only in hospitals approved by the Department of Veterans Affairs. Veterans associations are consulted in every hospital transfer. Senior treatment medical officers are maintained locally. Their function is to safeguard the rights of entitled veterans. The rights of employees at the time of transfer are also safeguarded.

I suggest to hon. members that the policy—and this is what we are talking about—of transferring veterans hospitals to provincial jurisdiction, integrating the veterans health care into the total community health care complex is a responsible and a progressive step forward.

I will gladly answer any questions the member has.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, I would compliment the parliamentary secretary on the few remarks that he made in the French language. But because the parliamentary secretary has brought up the subject of choice and of rights, among the many questions I have is this one. Is the choice of language and the right to choose language written in the agreement? Is that part of the discussions and part of the agreements between the federal government and the province of Quebec?

[Translation]

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I do not have that information at hand. However, with respect to transfer, there will surely be many opportunities to speak of all options available to hospital workers during their negotiations with the federal and provincial governments.

[English]

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I will enter this debate just briefly. I have always felt that veterans in our country received the finest of care in our veterans' hospitals. I always felt that was the case until just tonight. Tonight I begin to doubt it. If it is so, why can we not see some of the facts? What is there about this superb, excellent service, that makes it so secretive? Why do we need to hide it?

● (1750)

We are talking about a basic freedom. What bothered me was the speech by the parliamentary secretary and all those nice phrases in which you could see the fine hand of the civil servants. I wrote a few of them down; "highly desirable," "equitable arrangements," "moral responsibility" and so on. I began to be suspicious. I began to wonder when these finely tuned phrases kept coming at me.

The parliamentary secretary made one mistake when he quoted the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie). He said the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre had the veterans affairs well-being at heart. I know the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre does not have that more than I have. He has the well-being of the veterans at heart.

Veterans Affairs sounds like a department overridden with bureaucracy. Anyone who has recently tried to get something out of the Department of Veterans Affairs knows how true that is. I suggest the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is as interested as the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and myself are interested in the veterans, but not veterans affairs.

What we heard this afternoon was about Veterans Affairs. It did not have anything to do with the good of the veterans. I thought our veterans were being well taken care of in our special hospitals. Until the hon. member for Vaudreuil brought up the point, I had not questioned the shift from veterans hospitals to regular hospitals. It seemed like a reasonably good idea.

I do not have a veterans' hospital in my constituency, as the hon. member for Vaudreuil obviously does. I wish I had had the question in my mind. I might have looked into it. It is amazing how trying to hide something makes it suspicious. We heard all those fine phrases telling us that everything is good. If that is so, why can we not see the papers, agreements, documents, telegrams and messages? It would not take much time to do that. This government fights a paper war that is absolutely incomprehensible most of the time. Producing those documents would be a piece of cake.

We have a department telling us that everything is all right. This is from the same government that gave us Mirabel and a few other things. I am not at all sure that everything is okay with the veterans.

We are talking here about a basic freedom. The hon. member for Vaudreuil raised a good point. Do the veterans have to take a language other than that they wish? I do not know. It is a question that would not have occurred to me. It is a question that could be answered simply by looking at the documents. However, we cannot look at them. Why are they secret? It is a shame.

It is now five minutes to six. I am going to resume my seat and watch to see which member of the government will have the shame to talk out this simple request for documents. It will be a shame if a basic decency, principle and freedom are hidden in this matter.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is a very sad day for this House of Commons when once again we have to witness the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis), trying to make a political football out of the veterans, at a time when we are discussing transferring the operation of veterans' hospitals from the federal government to the provincial governments. It is despicable. However, it is not new. He has been doing that since I have been here. It is all that member is capable of doing. I will not say any more about it. There is a lot more I could say. However, I do not want to waste the time of the House with the type of innuendo to which he has lowered himself. He is following in the footsteps of his weak leader. This is demonstrated by the flip-flops his leader has been making.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that he get to the question under discussion.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), and the parliamentary secretary for telling this House of the benefits these transfers are bringing to citizens in the northern part of New Brunswick, where my constituency is located, and the great benefits being brought to veterans and their dependants.

With the recent announcement as a result of negotiations with the various provinces, we now see the minister of health for the province of New Brunswick entering into an agreement with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) to transfer a hospital and domiciliary care facility in the city of Campbellton in the county of Restigouche in New Brunswick. It will mean the average veteran will not have to travel 350 miles to receive medical attention. That is very important. This is appreciated by all those who live in Gloucester, Miramichi, the Madawaska area, and in particular Restigouche.

It has also been announced that a sub-office will be located in that city. Ten or 12 people will be transferred there to give day to day service to veterans who have questions of an administrative nature.

I am delighted to be able to express my congratulations to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, his staff, his executive assistant, Bob Mill, and others for the excellent work they are doing. It is a great privilege to stand in this House of Commons and say that.

I also wish to express my appreciation to members opposite who act like gentlemen. I speak of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who is respected by all Canadians for his great contribution to veterans. I applaud him. I think too of Senator Jack Marshall, a maritimer, who distinguished himself as a great defender of veterans. I have a lot of respect for these gentlemen. They do not get into the murk, getting on the backs of those who fought for us, in order to make some cheap political gain. I have no time for people like that. However, I have a lot of time for men like Senator Marshall and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who, over the years, have dedicated themselves to those who have fought in wars. We have a responsibility to look after these people. That is exactly what this government is doing.

With regard to services for veterans, it is not only members of parliament who work with these people. I think of Wendell Firlotte of the provincial command in New Brunswick. He is among those who have worked hard for their comrades through the various Legions in order to convince the Minister of Veterans Affairs that it was necessary to bring the type of care and attention that is needed closer to the veterans.

I also think of the president of the Hong Kong association, Robert Boudreau. That association has been very successful in parts of Quebec and New Brunswick working together with the various Legions and the Department of Veterans Affairs. They do not do that in opposition. They are not against positive moves such as bringing better care to our deserving veterans, pensioners, and their dependants.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2000)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, 1978

DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Trudeau) that Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): At five o'clock the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) had the floor, and he has 29 minutes remaining.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, before you interrupted me at five o'clock to accommodate private members' hour and the supper hour, I was paying tribute to a number of speakers who had preceded me and who had made a very eloquent case on behalf of the Canadian fisheries, which are now to be restored to their proper place within the organizational structure of government.

I feel it my duty to add to the one and a half to two lines the environment minister devoted to Canadian forestry in his contribution to the debate. After he was finished with the notes which had been prepared for him by his department, he did try to defend the indefensible, namely, the latest government action to phase out a number of very important components of the Canadian Forestry Service. The minister is attempting to pass on to the provinces and to the private sector a number of very important research and development responsibilities.

In his remarks the minister became a little excited. He also attributed certain comments to me, and I think I had better take this opportunity to correct his misconception. For instance, he told the House that he had heard me say, in the House and in other places, that I am in favour of the Kitimat pipeline. Well, I do not know where the minister heard that. Let me say that I am not opposed to the Kitimat pipeline. Obviously the minister knows best what is good for the oil industry and what is good for Kitimat, Prince Rupert, and the area which is the responsibility of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mrs. Campagnolo). She too is opposed to the pipeline.

I do not know on what grounds these two ministers have made their assessments, because, after all, as the House knows, it was the government which phased out what we consider to have been a very important inquiry, namely, the Thompson inquiry, which was studying that particular project and also the alternatives that are available to us for accommodating our neighbours to the south in getting their oil to midwest refineries. The oil has to get down somehow, and some of the alternatives which the government chose not to consider are much less attractive than the Kitimat pipeline would be. I would advise my friends on the other side of the House to consult with their own constituents, with their mayors, municipalities and chambers of commerce, all of whom have probably paid much more attention to the proposals relating to the Kitimat pipeline and who have, as well, made their own assessment of the immediate, lasting, significant, and positive side effects that such a project would have.

I am getting away from the topic of tonight's debate, Mr. Speaker. I said before the dinner hour that I would want to state the case for the forest industry which remains under the jurisdiction of the Minister of State for the Environment (Mr. Marchand) and which has undergone reorganization in 1973, and is now buried even further after the latest attempt in the basements and in the hindmost thoughts of Ottawa bureaucracy to reorganize it. The debate on fisheries was so eloquent that I thought that to demonstrate the force of the forest industry in our country I should quote some statistics, making some interesting comparisons between the forest industry and the contribution it makes to our economy, and fisheries. Statistics are, of course, always outdated. These were compiled in 1974 and some in 1976, but they are very interesting, to say the least.

Fish products manufacturing—this does not include landing—was $10,100,000 in 1974. Wood products manufacturing, not including logging, which gives you an adequate assessment, was $77,800,000, whereas pulp and paper manufacturing in 1974 was $92 million. When you add that to the primary products you find that fisheries was $291 million, forestry was $1,220,000, manufacturing, fish processing was $225 million, wood manufacturing and processing was $1,708,-000, pulp and paper combined was $3,033.7 million. In sales, fish produced in 1974 was $55.4 million, forestry was $530.3 million, ten times the amount for fisheries. Manufacturing, fish processing was $818.5 million, wood manufacturing and pulp and paper combined were roughly $13 million. The value of exports—this is a really interesting statistic—was the following in 1976: fish and fish products were $579.4 million, and all forest products were $6,501.8 million. In corporate income taxes—again these figures are from Statistics Canada—forestry, including logging, was $14.5 million, fishing and trapping was $.4 million, fish processing was $7 million, wood manufacturing was $59.1 million, and pulp and paper was $306.8 million.

To put the picture into real focus one would also have to provide statistics that would show the kind of subsidy and support that has been given to these two industries by the taxpayers. One would see then that the fishing industry has been heavily subsidized throughout the years, whereas the forestry sector receives no subsidy from either the federal or provincial taxpayer.

It is not my intention, of course, to belittle the importance of the crucial component, the fisheries industry, in our total economic picture. However, the fact is that forestry has been the backbone and the mainstay of the economic well-being of this country for a long, long time. Indeed, the $6 billion favourable trade balance owing to forest related industries creates a vivid contrast with the $5 billion which we receive for all the fuel and minerals which we export, and is also in contrast with the figures of $1 billion for agriculture and $.3 billion for fisheries.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) told us today in the House that the governor of the Bank of Canada had certain suggestions to make regarding the minimum requirements to get our economy back into shape, and one of these requirements was that Canada be much more aggressive in seeking new export markets for our primary manufactured goods. Forestry is one sector that is probably best situated and best equipped to increase immediately our exports to foreign countries.

Let me quote a few additional statistics which place the forest sector in our economy in a proper perspective. The forest resource supports 300,000 jobs directly, and up to 700,000 jobs indirectly in secondary manufacturing and in the service industries. The forest products industry in Canada is the leading commodity sector in terms of sales, employment, exports, earnings, and regional dispersion. We speak about fisheries every day in this House, but do we ever hear someone speak about forestry? Certainly the minister responsible for that important sector of our economy spends very little time on it, unless he is prompted during the question period to give us some answers on that subject.

Mr. Marchand: I will send you my speech.

Mr. Oberle: Canadian forests are an important factor in our $3 billion outdoor recreation industry. The federal government receives $1 billion from forestry activities in revenue, while the provincial governments collect roughly $650 million in forest related taxes.

I expect that the House will, some day in the very near future, give recognition to that important sector and, I hope, restore it to its rightful position. I do not assume that that will happen because of the staggering statistics I have just mentioned, but I do believe that the time is foreseeable when our forest industry will face the same kind of crisis which finally prompted the government to take drastic and positive action with regard to fisheries. My friend and colleague, the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), has quoted some statistics supporting this statement.

● (2020)

With the indulgence of the House, I should like to make the following comments: Canada's share of world export markets for forest products has decreased from 31 per cent to 19 per cent in the last 20 years, while the United States' share has increased from less than 9 per cent to more than 12 per cent. Canada, with 13 per cent of the world's softwood timber resources, produces only 11 per cent of the world's harvest of softwoods, whereas the United States, with 11 per cent of the same resource, harvests 22 per cent of the world's total. The general productivity in the wood industry in Canada is 15 per cent less than that in the United States. Canada, with a forest industry which provides direct and indirect employment for nearly one million people and contributes almost one fifth of the nation's exports, finds itself with serious problems emerging with regard to economic supplies of timber. Federally funded research and development at forest products laboratories is approximately $14 million in the United States, compared with $7 million in Canada. After the latest cutbacks and slashes which the minister undertook on behalf of the government, the contrast will be more dramatic. Referring to the United States, the following comments appear in an Environment Canada news release:

State expenditure on forest products research provides large scale facilities in Oregon, California, Michigan and Mississippi, but no provincial counterparts exist in Canada—

University expenditure on forest products research is about $6 million in the United States, but only $200,000 in Canada—

A single United States company, Weyerhaeuser, spends almost twice as much annually on research and development as the entire Canadian forestry service—

The man-years available to the Canadian forestry service have decreased by 50 per cent over the last decade, during which significant manpower growth has occurred in nearly every other facet of the federal public service—

The lumber and solid wood products industry in Canada spends .08 per cent of sales on R and D compared with .84 per cent for all other industries. The wood processing industry thereby ranks last in R and D expenditures among the 20 leading industrial sectors in Canada.

The budget of the Canadian forestry service will be slashed a further $5.3 million—15 per cent—in 1979.

There are pages and pages of similar statistics and horror stories, yet the minister attempts to defend what he has done recently.

As we all know, the government is capable only of reacting to crises. The forest industry of this country is the mainstay of our industrial capacity, and indeed it will face a very serious crisis in short order. There is not yet a crisis in the forest industry. But the Minister of Finance, who is present in the House tonight, has managed to bring about a decline in our dollar. This has provided a cushion and some breathing space for the industry. However, in the meantime we continue the old art of hewing wood and drawing water. Our efforts to generate new growth and to reforest or replant logged-off areas are hopelessly inadequate in every Canadian province.

There are literally millions of acres of prime forest land which have not been replanted. There is no leadership or direction from any source, either provincial or federal, to encourage provincial or federal agencies or the industry itself to undertake the task of replanting and renewing our forests.

At the present time there are serious shortages of supplies. Companies in timber producing provinces are now discovering that much of the timber allocated to them by the provincial governments cannot be harvested with conventional methods, because the timber is located in remote areas and present techniques are not adequate enough to move into these areas. Of course the economic constraints facing these companies do not allow them to expand their operations in these areas.

We are discovering that estimates of wood inventory are badly distorted, and that our timber supply position is in a most precarious state. This is one area in which the industry and the provinces have repeatedly asked the federal government for assistance to establish an inventory throughout the country. This would provide us with a much better assessment of our timber supply position in the foreseeable future.

In his speech last night the minister was quite sensitive. He responded to criticism from this side of the House respecting the latest reform which was necessary as a result of the government's action to cut programs. The minister attempted to defend phasing out the Forest Management Institute in Ottawa and moving it to Petawawa. Also he attempted to defend the move of the fire institute to Petawawa. Of course it increased the manpower at that particular station, but it decreased the services and programs which were carried on before. The minister is inclined to lay blame for all difficulties in the forest sector on the shoulders of industry and the provinces.

The concept of privatization has been bandied around in the House. The minister decided that the forest products laboratories should be privatized. The industry relies heavily upon the laboratories to arrive at new techniques, produce new products, and to help it become as efficient as its counterpart in the United States. The federal government made the decision to phase out these facilities in Vancouver and Ottawa. It has requested that private industry assume the responsibility of carrying on these efforts. I have nothing to say against such a concept. Private industry always has been very co-operative when it came to protecting, preserving, and enhancing harvesting opportunities and the conversion of a natural resource. In this particular case, I speak as a person who has some experience in the industry.

I would be reluctant to have larger corporations providing manpower to travel around the country, passing the hat in order to pick up the required $3.2 million to sustain the efforts of forest laboratories. For example, I would be reluctant if MacMillan-Bloedel or some other forest giant in the country were put in charge of providing all the research required by industry. Private industry of that corporate quality always has had its own research facilities and has accepted the responsibility of doing the required research to pursue its own selfish interests. It is not necessarily so that such research is geared to the legitimate and selfish interests of smaller wood converting companies, truck loggers, people who harvest trees, and the small sawmills which are not as integrated as the forest giants. As a result of the travels of the minister's cronies, I presume large companies will phase out their own research facilities and pay the money which becomes available as a result of their travels into a fund, and under their direction, the federal government will continue research. Whether that will be entirely in the interests of industry and resources is very questionable, as far as I am concerned.

For the benefit of the House I should like to give a short assessment of why the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces are directly responsible to carry on the research which was carried out by the forest laboratories in Vancouver and Ottawa, as well as the other research institutions through the country. After all, it is the federal government which benefits most from forest activity. As I have stated, the federal government pockets roughly $1 billion annually in taxes from forest related industries. The provinces collect an additional $650 million from royalty and stumpage assessments from the industry. The industry throughout this country has been taxed, stumpaged and regulated to death.

Let me give you a profile of what happens to the forest industry in British Columbia, for instance, where the provincial government walks into a plant, makes an assessment of its efficiency and capacity, and then tells the manager and owners that they should be able to produce a thousand board feet of lumber at a certain price. Let us take a figure out of the air, and it probably will not be far out. Let us say you can produce a thousand board feet of lumber at a cost of $150. The provincial forest service then turns around and says that a weekly publication which gives the world price for a thousand board feet of lumber shows the weekly price as $200. It is then apparent that there is a spread of $50 with which the company has to work.

In an attempt to cream off much of this revenue, and to keep the federal tax collector within certain limits, the province simply says that since it costs $150 to produce that commodity it will allow the operator a 15 per cent margin and the rest will be royalty or stumpage. The plant operates on a 15 per cent margin which, of course, is taxable by a federal agency which imposes a levy or a log tax, which is unique also to British Columbia. From this margin the company has to pay all the other licensing fees, satisfy pollution control and, of course, pay a number of other bookkeeping costs which are required monthly by both the federal and provincial governments. There is no end to the influence these silent partners in Ottawa and in the provinces assert on the industry.

As we debate the concept of privatization of research and development activities we should put the problem in its proper perspective. Governments get the lion's share of profits from forest related activities and, of course, it has to be a government of some sort, provincial or federal, that should return some of the revenues to that sector. I find little comfort in the fact that a few corporate managers are representatives and also, I assume, supporters of the Liberal cause, who make the offer to the minister to travel around the country passing the hat to collect the few dollars which will be necessary in the foreseeable future to sustain the efforts of research laboratories.

I would like you to consider, sir, how you would feel, having worked for the government or for a company for 15 or more years, giving the best years of your life, to be told without proper notice that your job has been phased out, but someone has been travelling around the country to take up a collection to see if you can be kept on. If that is the way this government treats its public servants I sincerely hope the public servants and others throughout this country will have a chance soon to reciprocate by treating this government in the same way.

I have never been one to stand in this House to criticize without offering, or at least making some suggestions that could help the situation we are debating. For instance, sir, I fully believe it should be the onus of industry to pay for the research and development that needs to be done to upgrade this important industry, making it more efficient and making it more competitive with our trading partners offshore.

There is a simple solution, one that has been suggested not just by myself. I have discussed it with the minister personally, who seemed at the time to be in agreement. It is a suggestion that has been made by both the industry and the provinces, as well as by professionals. It is simply to enter into an agreement with the provinces to raise, as part of their royalty or stumpage assessment, a certain sum of money. A levy of 50 cents per thousand board feet, something that would not hurt anybody, would generate $6 million annually in British Columbia alone. I have not had time to work out what that would generate throughout the country. Clearly when one considers that companies pay up to $35 per thousand board feet of lumber in stumpage, another 50 cents would not hurt. It certainly would not hurt the provinces either if we took that 50 cents from the revenue they are already getting from the industry. In this way the taxpayer would not carry this burden, and the industry, having paid for the research and for the development of new species, and whatever other things the institutes were into, would then be in a position to give some direction to these institutes and professionals doing the work on their behalf.

The minister and spokesmen for the government have repeatedly said there was no need and, indeed, that it is almost impossible to have a national forest policy because forests, after all, along with lands, fall under the jurisdiction of provincial governments, and the federal government cannot meddle in their affairs. That is just so much nonsense. Again and again the forestry advisory council, forestry ministers of provinces and the foresters' institute, have begged the federal government to co-ordinate the activities of a number of federal agencies, which meddle in the forestry pie, and to re-establish a truly Canadian forestry service within the federal bureaucracy, and reappoint a deputy minister, at least, to advise the minister on—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Oberle: I appreciate that very much, and I will conclude as quickly as I can.

I should like to make the point that if the minister feels he would not have the support of the provincial governments or the industry, he just has not been talking to them lately. Indeed, the Forest Management Institute, an arm of the federal government, commissioned a report which is today referred to and read with almost biblical reverence throughout the country. F.L.C. Reed Associates Ltd. published a report last year which was commissioned by the Forest Management Institute. That report has been made available to the minister. The Reed group dealt with all these statistics I have put on the record today, and in clear terms outlined the crucial importance of the industry, first of all, and the crisis situation in which the industry finds itself today. Let me just quote a short paragraph in relation to some of the recommendations included in the report, as follows:

● (2040)

A single agency should act as spokesman on forest policy and as co-ordinator of related programs. This would help to restore forestry to its deserved status. A strengthened Canadian forestry service is the logical agency for this function. Its duties should include allocation of federal money to forestry projects on a continuing basis and subsequent monitoring of progress.

I would like to put on record another short quotation which comes directly from the minister's office. I do not recall this report being tabled in the House. It is the third report which was made by the Canadian Forestry Advisory Council, to the Minister of the Environment and it is dated September, 1975. Like the recommendations that have been made on behalf of the fishing industry, this report says under the heading "Recommendations and National Forest Policy":

The need for a national forest policy statement is all the more urgent because most provinces are now giving priority to provincial forest policy development. Divided jurisdictions will, however, make the formulation of a meaningful national policy difficult. Once agreement is reached on objectives, mutually compatible federal, provincial and industrial guidelines must be developed to give co-ordinated direction to industry and management . . .

In order to redress the status of forestry at the national level, and to give leadership in developing a national forest policy, it is strongly recommended that a minister of state for forestry be appointed whose powers, duties and functions with respect to forestry legislation, and whose mandate to assist the Minister of Environment in forestry affairs, should be comparable to those of the minister of state for fisheries.

These recommendations by qualified bodies of researchers and consultants have been ignored. They will go on being ignored until such time as this most important industry finds itself in the same kind of crisis the fishing industry has been in for some time, and as I have said, that crisis is within the foreseeable future.

We are losing our competitive position in world markets. The only thing which keeps the industry floating at this point is the devalued Canadian dollar. We in this House must appreciate the valuable contribution this industry has made to our history and our way of life. Forestry is not simply an economic component of our way of life. It has much to do with our social behaviour as well.

The forests in our country are a vital part of our eco-system. Forests generate our water, clean air, and a healthy and prosperous Canadian life. Let us not continue to disobey the requirements and rules regarding our responsibilities to our forests.

Miss Coline Campbell (South Western Nova): I will not speak long, Mr. Speaker, on this bill as it is a housekeeping bill. The proposal to create a department of fisheries and oceans is one which I think is vital to the fishing industry. The change is a recognition of the importance to the present and the future well-being of the fishing industry, which in the last few years has grown beyond the expectations of the 1960s into a billion dollar industry. It gives the minister of fisheries a clear mandate to provide the leadership and direction to oversee the federal government's activities within the industry, to develop policies relating to fisheries activities, and to consult with all segments of the fishing industry.

This bill also proposes to create a separate department for the environment, which shows the concern of this government and the recognition by it that both these departments will play an increased role in Canadian life in the future.

I am also pleased with Part II of this bill which deals with the fisheries and oceans research advisory council. In reading over this part, the amendment will provide for an expanded council. Although the section states who will be eligible to sit on the council, I suggest that the section be made clearer and state that there be an even distribution of fishermen from all parts of the country represented on it. I am sure that their contribution will be invaluable.

This bill also allows me to speak about fishing on the east coast, particularly as it relates to southwestern Nova Scotia. The fishermen on the east coast have been fortunate to have this present minister of fisheries. He has been a full-time minister and has fulfilled a promise which was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the constituency of South

Western Nova in June, 1974. The minister has urged the fishermen to organize in order to best relate their needs to both the provincial and federal departments. He has decentralized the federal department so as to better reach those directly concerned with the fishery.

A good example of the decentralization is the Yarmouth federal fisheries building. In the last two years we have had an area manager who deals with matters at the local level. This building provides all the facilities fishermen need with regard to their work. I would also like to take this opportunity to express my good wishes to the retiring area manager for Yarmouth, Mr. Glen Smith, who has worked in the fishery department for many years. His excellent knowledge in that area will be missed by all. I welcome the new area manager and wish him luck in a very difficult area.

For the last three years the fishing industry has benefited from the 200-mile limit, and the returns can be seen throughout Nova Scotia and other areas of the Atlantic. A dramatic increase in the landed value of the fish catch was recorded in the first nine months of 1978. The catch for the Atlantic region had a landed value increase of 49 per cent over the record increase of 1977. The size of the catch rose 21 per cent. The remarkable increases demonstrate the success of federal fishery policy. The minister has turned a herring fishery, which previously concentrated on fish meal, into a viable food industry. Last summer it had an estimated landed value of $17.6 million compared with a value of $12.4 million in 1977, $6.5 million in 1976, and $5.8 million in 1975, despite the fact that last summer was a bad year because fewer herring were landed in the Bay of Fundy area. The minister worked with the fishermen, the industry and the provincial governments to achieve this outstanding success with little cost to the Canadian taxpayer.

In the past three years companies in the fishing industry in South Western Nova have expanded. This is made quite clear from the amount of assistance which has been given to fish companies. I am informed that $1.5 million was awarded as incentive grants to fish companies through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion between 1974 and 1978. This minister has made it his policy, which I hope he will incorporate into the new department, to look first at the fish available and how best to provide for everyone, never forgetting the backbone of the industry—the fishermen, including the smaller fishermen who have been forgotten by many in the industry in the past. If the fishermen are working to full productivity, it follows that the plants are also working.

We hear about the need for freezer trawlers. I for one would say to the minister, "go slowly." In fact, I wonder if we need them at all. We are just now becoming efficient with the existing fleet. We already have shortages in our traditional fisheries. Perhaps we should look at some of the existing fishing boats and determine whether or not they can be used to catch these underutilized species rather than investing in the high cost of freezer trawlers.

I can understand why the foreigners needed freezer trawlers. They came from far away. But do we need them when we are so close to the fishing grounds and can return quickly to shore with our catches? I agree with the minister when he says that we have to improve the existing fishing capabilities before turning to freezer trawlers, which may be very detrimental to the fishery if not properly investigated. After all, it was the same companies which are asking for these freezer trawler boats now which felt the foreign fleets were depleting their fleet capabilities four years ago.

A freezer trawler, in order to pay for itself, is going to need a large catch. Let us ask these questions: whose fish will they catch? Who will be allocated the permits for the freezer trawlers? Will the fishermen themselves be able to go into this, or will it be the companies? Will the province take part in this and allocate the fish from these freezer trawlers to the various plants located all over the Atlantic provinces? Do we need them at all? All these questions at a time when we have just begun to reap the returns of the 200-mile limit, have to be answered before any Canadian freezer trawlers can be allowed to rape our fishery.

Let me now turn to small craft harbours. In South Western Nova, for example, where harbours have been long neglected, we have had major multi-million dollar harbours built since July, 1974, at West Head, Yarmouth, and Meteghan. In addition, there has been major wharf construction or reconstruction at Argyle, Pinkney Point, Pembroke, Cape St. Mary, Tiverton and Freeport, not to mention the work that has been carried out at other harbours such as Smithville, Southside, Woods Harbour, Saulnierville, Sandy Cove East and Sandford. This is to mention but a few areas where work has been carried out. This year, again, I am anticipating major undertakings. I look to Wedgepoint getting under way with a $2 million wharf facility in the very near future, and a decision for a deep water harbour on Digby Neck. Dredging and reconstruction are needed on the south wharf at Dennis Point, work at Westport, Short Beach, Port Maitland and a floating breakwater at Cape Forchu are a few of the needed repairs in this area.

Another innovative area that this Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) can take praise for is the assistance given by the small craft harbours branch to the Canada Works Program. Funds under Canada Works Program and capital expenditures from small craft harbours have provided slipways, haulouts, additions to wharves and general upkeep, as well as providing an input from the fishermen for the use of these funds from the Canada Works Program.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss the matter of jurisdiction. There seems to be a lot of discussion on this word lately and I will approach this last topic as it relates to two areas of great concern in my area as a representative from the east coast. One is the federal jurisdiction in fisheries, on which I will be brief and say that in terms of quotas, surveillance, research, quality, inspection and markets—and the latter three as far as they relate to international markets—it would appear to me that the federal government must be the supreme power over these areas. We cannot control the areas where fish gather or travel—I can see fish wars developing between eastern provinces as to how and when they can fish. We have seen what happened with the foreigners who were fishing off our shores prior to the 200-mile limit and we have seen what happened between Canada and the United States on George's Bank, but we should control at a federal level how the industry is going to approach all of these areas within our 200-mile limit.

In my opinion, when a final decision on a fishery matter has to be made, and someone has to make it, that decision should rest with the federal department of fisheries since they can take all provinces into consideration.

The second point I wish to make with regard to jurisdiction is on the Canada-U.S. bilateral negotiations. I would like to discuss George's Bank which, as all members are fully aware, is of great concern to the southern part of Nova Scotia. Perhaps more than any other area of Canada, the people in that area realize how important this area is, not only because of its good fishing grounds but because traditionally the fishermen of Southwestern Nova Scotia have always gone to Georges Bank to fish. I am glad to see that the negotiators have recommended that the boundary dispute be sent to a third party. All of us are no doubt anxious to see what the negotiations will have accomplished in the allocation of the various fisheries which exist on George's Bank.

Different provinces have sent observers from government and from industry to the negotiations, and these people were asked to brief the negotiators with their views. With this in mind, I cannot help but feel that this has been truly one area where the industry, the provinces, and the federal government, have discussed what the future fishing arrangements and negotiations should be as they relate to George's Bank, and I look forward to hearing the proposals which the negotiators are putting forth to their respective governments.

One thing that the minister cannot be criticized for is the consultation that he has had with the fishermen and the industry. I do not recall any other minister responsible for the fishery, or any other person responsible for the fishery, having as many meetings with industry. He has told the fishermen to organize, and they have. He has organized the herring fishery. Seiners have been able to talk to him, as have weir fishermen and gillnetters. This week a representative of the gillnetters of South Western Nova talked to the minister in Ottawa.

The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) said there has been no consultation in the lobster fishery, but I remember that at the end of 1974 a lobster task force held meetings in Digby, Meteghan, Yarmouth and Barrington, to mention a few of the areas across Nova Scotia that happen to be in my constituency. The results were different categories and a buy-back arrangement. There must be built into that buy-back an opportunity for the young fishermen to gain entry into the fishery.

We have had the closing of Brown's Bank, which was sorely needed to save the inshore lobster fishery. Personally I feel that Brown's Bank should be closed to all boats over 65 feet. The licensing arrangements are being examined in consultation with the fishermen and the officials. I hope to see a policy regarding boats of 45 feet and under which will allow all fishermen access to all the fishery.

In conclusion let me say, Mr. Speaker, that over the past four and one half years there have been consultations between the provincial and federal governments, between fishermen, industry and governments. The credit for this has to rest with the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. He has been aware of the problems and, in my opinion, Canadians on both coasts and in the mid-west have a full time minister of fisheries.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) takes her seat, may I ask if she will entertain a question?

Miss Campbell: No, Mr. Speaker. I know there are other members who wish to speak, and the hon. member who spoke for the opposition had extra time. I would welcome a question later, but I have to go to another appointment now. Perhaps the hon. member would ask his question at another time.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I want for a few moments to refer to other clauses of this bill that have not received any or just brief attention in the debate to this point as far as I know. I refer specifically to Part VI with respect to the Medical Research Council, Part VII with respect to the National Research Council, Part VIII, the National Sciences and Engineering Research Council, and Part IX, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council.

Let me indicate at the outset that these parts are very similar to a bill that we debated during the latter part of 1976. At that time I spoke about some aspects of the legislation which dealt with the reorientation of the scientific organization. I have no intention of reviewing the content of my speech at that time, but I think two or three points are pertinent. I did raise the most important question not only as to the entire science policy in Canada but specifically the future of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology. We have seen what has happened to that particular ministry with the passage of time. It has been downplayed. Indeed its significance as a major ministry in this government has deteriorated with the passage of time.

• (2100)

As a matter of fact I indicated that I was quite pleased with the formation of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council. I can recall vividly in the Speech from the Throne in 1974 there was a great deal of interest given to the Ministry of State for Science and Techonology. At that time there was thought given to forming a natural science research council as no consideration at all had been given to the importance of engineering research. That I thought was a positive move. But, most important, at that time I raised the basic issue of financial commitment to research. It is in this sense that I wanted to speak for a few moments tonight specifically with respect to the medical research council.

Many of us on this side of the house have pursued this issue with a great deal of vigour, certainly I have since 1972 when I came to the House of Commons. I must say that despite the pronouncements of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in the early part of December, 1978, I am not convinced that this government understands the importance of medical research in Canada, the role it has played in the past, the role it could play now, and the role it could play in the future. I am amazed because as I have dealt with people in the past and as I have travelled across Canada I have found that virtually every family has had a member or perhaps even a friend afflicted with some illness or some type of disease. I am absolutely certain in my mind that individuals are concerned about these problems and are most interested in a government or any group that would demonstrate an interest in medical research and support it in an appropriate manner.

If one looks at newspapers over a period of time, I believe this is demonstrated by their editorials. For example, I can remember in the early 1940 there were many editorials at that time concerned about the side effects of lead poisoning. There were a number of children in Canada who had problems with lead poisoning and people were asking for increased research with respect to lead poisoning.

I have seen articles on the problems of aging and the importance of research in this area. There are articles on megavitamins and the significance they may have with respect to the health of individuals in our society.

I recall in the early 1970s there was a good deal of discussion as to how much research was being done in Canada with respect to matters such as acupuncture and what effect it might have in terms of being an anesthetic tool or in treating diseases, particularly those of a painful nature. Also in the early 1970s we can recall the problems associated with mercury pollution when that problem arrived on the scene. Editorials were asking why there was no additional research for mercury poisoning. And indeed when we had the opposition day in this House of Commons with respect to mercury poisoning that was one of the elements of the debate which was raised at that time.

I can recall during the days of the Le Dain Commission people across the country were asking why we did not have more research concerning marijuana and other hard drugs. One could go on and on. For example, cigarette smoking and cancer can be mentioned. As I have mentioned, there is an editorial interest and there is an interest in Canada in terms of this most important aspect of medical research. But two or three other things come to mind. I am sure in addition to the items I have listed there are many other targets and areas of research that are important. One thing that people and the government should recognize is the fact that researchers cannot be trained overnight. It is a prolonged process. To have outstanding researchers it takes years of practice. This must be built up over a period of time with a great deal of patience and a great deal of cost.

Another aspect that must be remembered, as I have indicated, is that we need a broad front. In other words our targets tend to change from day to day, from week to week, and from month to month. What is perceived to be important in terms of a research topic today may not seem to be as relevant tomorrow. Something more important may appear on the scene tomorrow. That implies that if we are to provide that type of service, and if we are to provide the basic scientific and the basic biomedical research necessary, then we must have a broad front for basic medical research in Canada.

I will attempt to define and enlarge on this a little later. We must recognize, and I have pointed this out before—perhaps I can try to explain it in a little more detail this evening—that we cannot divorce basic medical research from education and from the delivery of health care across Canada. Indeed I suppose one could include preventive type medicine itself. They are interrelated, sir. If one of the links is weakened in the chain, I can assure hon. members that the quality of health care will disappear.

I have heard individuals and senior government officials on the other side from time to time indicate that it is much cheaper to import a health science. I found that remarkably strange and I am not sure that I follow the logic of that. Think about it for a moment. We are now talking about a very high technology of basic research and assume we have the hypothetical situation that we do not have the capability in Canada because we are going to import it.

I ask hon. members do you know who the knowledgeable people are who can assess that type of basic research that is done elsewhere in the international community? Where is the type of environment, the symposia or the type of consultative process that one would have in Canada that can really handle that in a proper fashion? Who, sir, would have the knowledge to interpret such fundamental basic research that could then be applied appropriately and even determine if it was applicable in a very human and real sense in terms of the medical problems in Canada?

Another matter that bothers me considerably is hearing officials from time to time, within government and elsewhere, who say that people are not prepared to finance medical research across Canada. Frankly I do not accept that statement, for a number of reasons. I find it amazing, because as I recall there are funds set up across Canada totalling around $600 million which contribute roughly $20 million to medical research of one sort or another each year. That is a substantial amount of money that has been donated by private individuals for the most important area of basic research.

It does not matter whether one looks at the Heart Fund or Muscular Dystrophy or the March of Dimes—I could go on and on listing these types of programs. It is my perception that people are very generous in their support of this type of program which is for basic research. Within the last two or three years a great proportion of the money devoted to cancer research, I believe roughly in the neighbourhood of $5 million or $6 million this past year, came from the private sector, not from the federal government.

As I indicated at the outset, there seems to be an uncertainty in the mind of the government as to the importance of biomedical research. I want to spend a few moments tonight, because I do not believe this has been done in the past to any great extent, trying to demonstrate to this government the importance of biomedical or basic research in Canada. I want to do that by reviewing some of the biomedical research that has led to the improvement of health care of individuals across Canada.

Before I give specific areas of research, let me indicate that in the whole area of biomedical research, and I think this is most important, that an individual working on project X may well end up with results that are not relative necessarily to that project. But they may have great relevance to another area that is being assessed, analysed or studied in another part of the country. Let us look at some of the biomedical research that has contributed to the health of not only Canadians but people in the international context.

First, polio. I am sure we have all heard of all the various vaccines and so forth. Let me remind hon. members that the original breakthrough in the polio vaccine originated from another project in which polio vaccine was not the anticipated end result. Think about it for a moment. If we had not had that breakthrough and had not had the polio vaccine, we would be living with the mentalities of the thirties and forties, with iron lungs and all of this massive, expensive technology which has been cured by the introduction and discovery of a simple vaccine.

We know, for example, that Enders basic research paved the way for Salk's polio vaccine, which, incidentally, was somewhat different from the original polio vaccine when it was introduced by Sabin. It has been estimated that since 1955 there have been accumulated about 50,000 Canadians whose lives were spared by these vaccines which were developed for polio. Economists have estimated that is an annual saving of approximately $200 million per year in Canada. We must think also about the human suffering that has been eliminated by the introduction of such a vaccine.

Waksman's discovery in 1955 of streptomycin at Rutger's University in the United States was a milestone in the treatment of tuberculosis. A number of years ago, before the introduction of appropriate therapy, individuals with that disease were institutionalized for six months or a year. Now, with appropriate therapy, it is not inconceivable that they are returned home within a two or three week period on adequate therapy. Think of the savings in costs and the relief of human suffering in terms of that discovery.

Basic research in immunology was carried out in Liverpool with respect to mental retardation. It was most significant in terms of hemalytic problems that occurred in newborn children. Of course we see this with Rh negative mothers. That situation has virtually been eliminated by that very basic biomedical research.

Hepatitis, a very, very common problem and a very expensive one in the past, was eliminated by the discovery, and I may say accidentally, by Blumberg in Australia of an anti-protein substance that was very effective in assisting in recognizing this disease, saving incalculable millions of dollars a year and the associated human suffering.

I could go on—Dausset in France, Payne in the United States who improved the tissue matching for kidney transplants. We now see these patients surviving for a much longer period of time. It has been estimated there is a saving of at least $10 million to $20 million a year with this one basic research discovery.

I could turn to Dr. Judith Pool of Stanford and her basic, almost accidental, discovery of how to prepare simply large amounts of anti-hemophilic protein for the treatment of hemophilics, a most important problem. I recall in the past that without adequate treatment, hemophiliacs had a very prolonged stay in hospital. We had very limited tools in our possession. We talked of hospital stays that could cost $10,000 or $20,000 a year for a family before the days of hospitalization insurance. That has virtually been eliminated with that type of discovery.

Another area is the anti-psychotic drugs that were discovered. These were primarily produced in France in the fifties. I am not exaggerating when I say, and I think the facts will prove it, probably 100,000 people a year are kept out of our hospitals and mental institutions. They are kept at home for a far more prolonged period because of the discovery and introduction of this type of drug. I am sure hon. members can appreciate the cost involved without that type of biomedical research.

Let us look in the Canadian context. Many are familiar with all individuals here—Banting and Best for the discovery of insulin. Need I say any more? We all know what that has saved in terms of dollars to individuals in Canada. There is also the possibility of the prospect of being able to treat that disease in a far more responsible way than we could years ago.

There is also the test for determining a person's sex by Dr. Barr, a former professor of mine at the University of Western Ontario. If I may say, sir, I am sure that name rings a bell with you. It is a very international name, he is a great Canadian, well known in international circles.

Think of what Dr. Gold of Montreal has done in terms of basic research on cancer. There is the work of Dr. Barbeau and his colleagues on L-DOPA, a most impressive drug in the treatment of Parkinson's disease. Two or three years ago in this House we were talking about mercury pollution and discussing Dr. Barbeau's name. He is internationally known as a neurologist and neurosurgeon who is working on the Minimata disease with the Cree Indians in northern Quebec.

I am trying to make a point that has not been recognized by this government as to the importance of basic medical research. Let me go on a little further. I think this is most significant. I really want the government to get the message as to the importance of basic medical research in this country.

I remember when Dr. Charles Scriver appeared before the standing committee, at our insistence. We had been asking, and continue to ask this government to take positive action with regard to medical research in Canada. In one of his appendices he had what I considered to be very interesting information which may help elucidate the importance of this problem of research. In it he had a consensus on advances in medicine. He asked 40 physician consultants and 40 to 50 specialists in cardiovascular and pulmonary diseases, and I am now talking about problems relating to the heart and lungs, to select the top ten major advances in that area over the past 30 years. This is the consensus.

Rated number one was cardiac surgery. What does he mean by cardiac surgery? He is referring to open heart surgery or repair of valves. The second was vascular surgery. That, of course, refers to the repair or bypass of various major vessels in the body such as the aorta or ileac vessels.

The third was drug treatment for hypertension or high blood pressure. The fourth was medical treatment of coronary heart disease. The fifth was treatment of cardiac arrest and irregularity of heartbeat.

The sixth was the development of oral diuretics. Let me explain this for hon. members who may not know. A diuretic is used very frequently in the treatment of those individuals who have accumulation, and in this particular instance accumulation of fluid in the chest. Of course, diuretics work on the kidneys in such a way that they excrete an extra amount of fluid.

The seventh was for intensive care units. This was for post-operative patients, coronary patients, respiratory patients, and newborn patients. Let me remind the House again that I am just talking about illnesses related to cardio-pulmonary problems. The eighth was the development of chemotherapy and antibiotics. This is not uncommon, and we are now talking about individuals with rheumatic heart disease, those who develop problems like endocarditis. Included with this were drugs such as I indicated somewhat earlier, streptomycin for tuberculosis, various antipneumonia drugs, various antibiotics, and of course drugs related to some of the venereal diseases which not infrequently could affect the major vessels of the chest.

The ninth was new diagnostic methods, and the tenth was polio vaccine. This may sound strange, but we must remember that there was a marked correlation between respiratory paralysis and polio vaccine in those days.

The government has never recognized the importance of the time frame or the amount of time that is necessary for these advances. As I indicated earlier, in biomedical research you cannot have shooting targets. You must have personnel in a broad area who are working over a period of time. Advances are slow in many instances. There must be accumulation of material and basic medical research in various areas over a period of time. Let me give an example. Dr. Scriver did this very adequately when he was looking at just one example of open heart surgery. Open heart surgery was first performed in 1954 by Dr. Gibbon. The basic research for that really commenced in 1846. I cannot give all the elements of that research; time will not permit. In 1846 there was the development of general anaesthesia. Anaesthesia was obviously necessary for surgery of any kind at that time. Then we had the development of x-ray. X-ray is not simple. It involves the science of physics and other components.

Then we had to develop basic research regarding cardiac catheterization. We had to have all that technology, plus we had to develop the technology for cardio-pulmonary bypass, and then we had to have all the basic fundamental biochemical and physiological knowledge of oxygen and carbon dioxide, their uptake at the heart and lungs and their passage through the alveolar passages. There was a necessity for developing curare-like anaesthesia. That was developed in Canada, but the point I am trying to make is that to develop to that stage where Dr. Gibbon could do open heart surgery in 1954, we had to go through an entire list of many medical research steps. There had to be accumulation of medical research through projects over a period of years.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Centuries.

Mr. Holmes: Centuries, as my colleague says. This accumulation took place between 1846 and 1954. This is a concept which I really do not believe the government understands. I apologize for taking the time, but I think getting this concept across to the government is absolutely essential. Since I came here in 1972 I have been convinced that the government really does not grasp the significance of biomedical research.

I want to quote parts of an article which describes the problem very simply. This article refers to a speech which was given by Dr. Lewis Thomas, President of the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Centre in New York.

> Imagine this scenario: it takes place in a densely populated city in the northeast. Suppose you had to look after the majority of your patients on open wards, designed, say, for 26 patients each. Now suppose that these wards were kept entirely full, mostly by patients unable to pay anything at all for their care, throughout all 12 months of the year. Imagine that it is now late November, and the wards are not only full but you have had to arrange two rows of cots down the centre of each ward; you now have 40 patients in each 26-bed ward; and you know that within the next few weeks the cots will have to be extended out into the corridor, right up to, and perhaps even occluding, the elevator doors. This is the way things will be until next April, when it will slack off a bit and you can go back to a light service, with maybe only 30 patients on each 26-bed ward.
> Now imagine that this arrangement is only the beginning of the demand for service. You need another entire hospital building, built somewhere adjoining the general hospital if you are lucky (for you can then consolidate a few costly service functions) or built in another part of town if you are unlucky. Into this hospital you will have to crowd, during the winter months, about twice the number of patients it is designed to contain. Most of these patients will be young children, and you will have to invent ways to isolate them from each other, and from everyone else.
> Now imagine, if you can, that something like half of the patients in this huge nightmare of an institution are at risk of dying because of the severity of their diseases. Not that this number will actually die—indeed, many of them will survive and go home, but they will be deathly ill for weeks before they recover, and you will have to provide medical and nursing care around the clock to bring this off. Moreover, you will have to do this without much in the way of medicine, which means that you must be immensely skilled in the organization of general, non-specific, supportive measures in order to bring the majority of your patients through.

What I have been describing is, of course, the Boston City Hospital of 35 years ago; but it could be Bellevue, or Cook County, or Brady, or Charity—

It could have been in Alberta, Montreal or Toronto.

—or any large general hospital of that period, and for a great many so-called public hospitals, run by counties or municipalities, the situation was a great deal worse.

Everyone recognized that it was intolerable, and there was no lack of organized public protest and no end to the recommendations by public bodies that something be done to change it. It was an open scandal. The hospitals were crowded beyond the point of inhumanity; there were never enough doctors and nurses to meet the need; too many patients were dying; something had to be done to put a stop to it.

Okay, we fixed it. It took a while, but we accomplished the revolution, and institutions like the crowded Boston City Hospital of 1937 have vanished. The chief problem confronting the city hospitals today is that they are so uncrowded that they can no longer justify anything like their costs of operating. The contagious disease units have been closed down. The tuberculosis hospitals are out of business. It is a different world.

How did we do all this? Some people, most of whom are too young to have lived through the old ways of hospital care, assume that it happened as a result of a social revolution that is still in progress, and that we eliminated the intolerable crowding of city hospitals by changing the economics of health care. The reason we no longer have all those cots down the center of all those open wards is that most of the patients are insured, on way or another, and since they can pay for their care they have gone off to other, more human and habitable, institutions. According to this view, we solved our problem, or anyway that part of the problem, by money.

If this were true, it would obviously carry enormous implications for the future. Having made a quantum improvement in the quality of hospital care between 1937 and today, we could look forward to equivalent improvements in the future, subject only to our ingenuity in finding sufficient funds and seeing to it that they are distributed with something more like equity.

● (2130)

He goes on to say later what really happened at that time. This is what is most important. I hope you will get the graphic picture of the situation which existed at that time. What happened sir, as he goes on to say, is the following:

What happened was that we got rid of lobar pneumonia. This was the main event, surrounded by several others of somewhat less importance. We also got rid of meningococcal meningitis and scarlet fever; the great urban outbreaks of diphtheria finally came under control;

That was the reason that the situation improved, and that is the message I am trying to get across. As a matter of fact, he goes on to say something more, and I think it is important. I want to quote one final paragraph from his paper. He says:

If I were a policymaker, interested in saving money for health care over the long haul, I would regard it as an act of prudence to give a high priority to a lot more basic research in the biological sciences.

That is the message I am trying to get across to this government this evening. That is why I have taken the time to demonstrate so many areas in which advances have been made which not only have been of assistance to individuals in a very human sense but also advances that have been of assistance in the economic sense. I say to the government that there is no question that the biological sciences should be given a high priority for some of the reasons I have outlined.

For a moment or two now I want to review a little of what transpired on the Canadian scene. I think those who are in the House know that during the post war era, particularly during the 1950s and 1960s, there was a sense of euphoria in the research community. We saw that in the various faculties across the country. Medical schools were expanding, new staff was being hired, faculty posts were being developed, research projects were increasing at a rapid rate. I think that was part of the environmental attitude that existed in Canada at that time. All that has disappeared in the early 1970s.

Perhaps I should add one word here about something that has been poorly understood. We should recognize that scientists who are recruited to this most important area are not there for the financial reward. Those from the medical profession who are interested in that type of financial reward do not go into research. Financial rewards can be found in other areas. When we talk about moneys that are obtained by the important scientists in Canada who do major work, we must recognize that this is not money for their pockets but money for the various programs they are establishing. It is money for the support of their programs and for the technologists and equipment they need. As we all know, they are usually funded in the various chairs, or whatever position they hold in the universities.

As I indicated, in the early 1970s, and certainly since I came to the House of Commons in 1972, we have seen a slow but steady erosion in medical research in Canada. There is no question about that. There is no doubt that the abilities and skills of our investigators were there, but I want to assure you that despite the high quality of the research that existed, which would match any international standards, there has been a slow erosion in the research done in the Canadian scene. Although I indicated previously that the large portion of the funding for medical research comes from the public sector, we must recognize the major funding has come from the Medical Research Council.

If we look over the past nine years, it may appear to us that there has been a significant increase from about $34 million in 1970 to the present budget, which was initially estimated at about $60 million. I do not wish to get into a lot of statistics at this time, but let me point out that there has been a decrease in constant dollars with respect to medical research in Canada. We must recognize that the amount medical research has received is less than the annual cost of inflation across Canada. Bearing in mind that the cost of medical research—this could be well documented—increases at the rate of 15 per cent to 17 per cent a year in relation to the general rate of inflation which is now in double-digit numbers, there has been a steady erosion in the funding of medical research in Canada.

Let me put this in practical terms. What has this erosion meant to medical research in Canada? Perhaps members in the House know that there are two types of applications: there are requests for renewal of projects and there are requests for funds to support brand new projects. During the past two years, the approval rate for renewed grant requests has risen steadily, to the extent that less and less money for new projects is allocated. What we have found in 1977 is that 7.5 per cent of established or ongoing projects which were considered worthy of continued support had to be terminated and 25.5 per cent of the applications to fund new research projects that have been considered worthy of support were turned down or rejected because money was not available. Those figures had increased substantially by 1978 and 1979, to the point where 40 per cent of the new projects, highly qualified and meeting all the standards, were rejected. Indeed, if my memory serves me correctly, 20 per cent of the older projects have been terminated. That is the type of erosion we have seen in Canada.

There is one other small point I would like to make in that regard. A very special research council committee was formed to review applications for the purchase of major items of scientific equipment designed for multiple use in various institutions, and a sizeable number of applications came forward, but not one of them was approved because of inadequacy of funds.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that you are on the verge of rising to indicate to me that my time is nearly up, so let me conclude by saying that I hope I have demonstrated in a graphic way the importance of medical research and that I have made a case to the government on the importance of medical research in Canada. I wanted more time to talk about the minister's new formula. Let me say quite frankly that I do not find that formula to be adequate. I find that in many respects it is misleading and will again erode the dollars which should be going to medical research. But, as I said, I notice that you are on the verge of rising in your place, Mr. Speaker, so let me simply say again that I hope the government has received the message of the importance of medical research, and I look forward with anticipation to hearing the Minister of National Health and Welfare speak in the debate at a later time.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I enter the debate on Bill C-35 fairly late in the evening. I should like to address myself particularly to Part III which deals with the Department of the Environment. This bill deals with the organization of the Government of Canada, and particularly with the division of the present Department of Fisheries and the Environment into a separate department of the environment and a department of fisheries and oceans.

As members of this House are aware, my party supports the creation of a department of fisheries and oceans. Such action is a long overdue acknowledgement of the importance of the fishing industry to Canadians and the Canadian economy. The promise to create such a department was made five years ago on the eve of the 1974 election, but it looks like this time it will become a reality. I am interested primarily in the implications this bill will hold for the future effectiveness of Environment Canada. I am concerned that this bill does not just create a new department, that it signals the dismantling of an old one. Certainly Environment Canada has not lived up to the expectations generated at its inception back in 1970 when it was proposed as a super ministry with the powers to co-ordinate and consolidate the anti-pollution efforts of various federal departments and agencies. The mandate for the new department read as follows in the Speech from the Throne of October 8, 1970:

There will be proposed the establishment of a department to be concerned with the environment and the husbanding of those renewable resources that are a part of and dependent upon it, with a mandate for the protection of the biosphere.

Because of their close relationship at the time, the government argued it was essential fisheries be brought under the direct control of the new ministry. Now with Bill C-35 we are being asked to consider reverting back to two completely separate ministries, somewhat similar to what existed prior to 1970. I would not argue that fisheries should remain a part of Environment Canada. As my colleagues have already demonstrated, the department consistently struck out when it came to managing our renewable marine resources. Incomes in the fishing industry are generally low and unstable, employment is declining, and the plundering of our offshore resources by foreign countries has led to a severe decline in fish stocks. Perhaps with an independent department of fisheries and oceans, the government will do more to exercise its powers in the area of our offshore fisheries, conservation practices, the settling of quotas, and so on.

However, the removal of fisheries and oceans from the direct influence of the Department of the Environment signals another step in the erosion of the power of that department. The department's mandate is "to protect the biosphere", but the only power it exercises according to this bill is the power to set out guidelines and objectives for other government departments. It can make recommendations, but it does not have the power to enforce the co-operation of these other departments.

As set out in today's bill, foremost among the minister's duties is "the preservation and enhancement of the environment". Yet the actual powers to enforce this mandate do not lie with the Department of the Environment; they are exercised by other government departments. For example, the Department of National Health and Welfare is responsible for the administration of the Environmental Contaminants Act. The Department of Transport is responsible for the Canada Shipping Act which gives it the authority to deal with oil spills. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is responsible for the Atomic Energy Control Act which sets the regulations for the disposal of nuclear wastes. The Department of Agriculture administers the Pest Control Products Act, and so on. All of these deal with environmental concerns, but where is the Department of the Environment? It is setting guidelines and objectives, but with no power to see that they are met, or that they are enforced with any consistency by various government administration agencies.

In short, what I am saying is that while this department has the mandate "to protect the biosphere" and to preserve and enhance the environment", it does not have the power required to do so. It is entirely dependent upon the co-operation of other departments and agencies. Despite the minister's exhortations to the contrary, this bill underscores the sad fact that the Department of the Environment is a department without any teeth.

The main function of what I might call this lame duck Department of the Environment is to establish environmental objectives and standards, and to co-ordinate the actions of other departments in this regard. The minister's duties are indicated in Bill C-35 as follows:

For the purposes of carrying out his duties and functions related to environmental quality, the Minister of the Environment may, by order, with the approval of the governor in council, establish guidelines for use by departments, boards and agencies of the Government of Canada—

Whether these departments, boards and agencies adhere to these guidelines is a matter for some speculation. If past experience with guidelines set out for the improvement of Great Lakes water quality are any indication, there is little reason for optimism. Great Lakes water quality is an area of many overlapping jurisdictions: international, federal, provincial and municipal. It is of particular concern to me as a representative of the constituency of Brant in southern Ontario where we have witnessed the steady decline of the Great Lakes ecosystem. This situation presented one of the first and most pressing challenges to the Department of the Environment. It also provides an opportunity to assess the department's effectiveness in co-ordinating those activities which are necessary to protect the biosphere and enhance the environment. Unfortunately, many of those activities have been less than successful. The recent history of pollution control on the Great Lakes has been one of missed deadlines, ignored guidelines, and inadequate consultations between the various government agencies and departments involved.

It is interesting to note that when the Department of the Environment was created, it was to bring together concern for the quality of the environment and concern for the sound management of our fisheries resources. The department seems to have struck out on both counts as far as the Great Lakes are concerned.

According to a report issued by the General Accounting Office of the United States government as late or as recent as 1977, the fishing industry on the Great Lakes is doomed. At one time, fishing was a major element in the economy of the Great Lakes area. However, since the 1930s the industry has declined by 83 per cent. The report notes that in 1930 there were 5,284 full time and 1,617 part time commercial fishermen in the Great Lakes. In 1977 there were only 137 full time and 1,043 part time commercial fishermen. The primary reasons for the decline noted in the report are poor management of fisheries resources and, most important, contamination of fish by pesticides and other chemicals which find their way into the Great Lakes. The report indicates that with the present situation there is no chance the number of Great Lakes fishermen or the commercial catch will increase. It is a pretty serious situation.

The importance of Great Lakes water quality to the quality of our over-all environment cannot be underestimated. Together with the United States, we share one of the largest bodies of freshwater on earth. Almost half of the Canadian population resides in the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence basin. When the International Joint Commission issued its report in 1970 that Lake Erie and parts of Lake Ontario were dying, there was great cause for concern, possibly even panic. As indicated in the report, Lake Erie was in "an advanced state of eutrophication" and Lake Ontario was approaching a similar state". In addition, it reported a profuse and proliferating growth of aquatic vegetation in the St. Lawrence River. The causes were primarily attributed to uncontrolled discharges of municipal and industrial waste on both sides of the border.

The report was released at roughly the same time as the creation of the Department of the Environment, a situation which gives an interesting insight into the effectiveness of the department. When the original Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement was signed with the United States in 1972, it was clearly up to the federal government to demonstrate leadership on one of this nation's most urgent environmental issues. The responsibility fell to the Department of the Environment. Its duties and powers, as stated in the bill before us, include:

—the enforcement of any rules or regulations made by the International Joint Commission, promulgated pursuant to the treaty between the United States of America and His Majesty, King Edward VII, relating to boundary waters and questions arising between the United States and Canada, so far as they relate to the preservation and enhancement of the quality of the natural environment.

In the original Water Quality Agreement of 1972, target dates for substantial improvements in water quality were set for December, 1975. That date has long since quietly passed, and the objectives were not met. The latest report of the International Joint Commission, issued last summer, warns that Canada and the United States are still not catching up with pollution on the lakes. It states water quality is not improving and pollution control measures must be taken more seriously if the process is to be reversed. The recommendations of the report, which cost $20 million, took three years of research and involved more than 300 investigations, must be put into force by government action. However, I question whether the Department of the Environment possesses the power necessary to produce the required results. If so, it has certainly been reluctant to exercise it in the past.

Of course, it is powerless to elicit more co-operation from the U.S. to meet our mutual objectives. Studies have shown Canada is far ahead of the U.S on its municipal sewage treatment projects. We can be proud of the fact that Canada is now treating 99 per cent of the sewage waste dumped into the lakes. Only 68 per cent of the sewage from cities and communities in the U.S. meet treatment standards under the 1972 agreement.

However, we are lagging far behind the United States when it comes to enforcing guidelines for Canadian industrial pollution. The worst Canadian polluters are the pulp and paper companies, although Canadian steel producers also lag far behind American producers. According to a 1978 report by the Great Lakes Water Quality Board, the 24 pulp and paper mills in Ontario produced less than half the total tonnage of their 72 U.S. counterparts, but they discharged more than four times the pollution in the form of phosphorous and micro-organisms which feed on the lake's oxygen supply.

The new Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement signed last November will place much stricter limits on the dumping of phosphorous into the Lakes. However, the amount of phosphorous pouring into the Lakes is now far in excess of 1972 guidelines. The new agreement gives no indication that the new guidelines will be any more rigidly enforced. If they are not, there is a good possibility that parts of Lakes Erie and Ontario will be changed back into lifeless swamp water, reversing the progress that has already been made.

Part of the reason our corporate pollution record is poor compared to the U.S. is our unwillingness to put some muscle into the enforcement of water quality guidelines. Too often government enforcement agencies are willing to bend when a company threatens loss of profits or lay-offs. This is not the case in the U.S. In 1977 the U.S. Steel Corporation was fined $4 million for discharging ammonia and phenol into Lake Michigan. By contrast, the biggest fine ever levied in Canada was $64,000 against the American Can Co. of Canada Ltd., for allowing mercury to leak into Lake Superior. That is some contrast.

In short, Canada has been soft on its corporate polluters. In its latest annual report, the International Joint Commission wrote:

One of the primary differences between the United States and Canadian approaches to effluent quality, is that plants in the United States were generally required to achieve compliance by July, 1977. In Canada, the compliance dates vary from plant to plant. Also, the corporate stringency of . . . control requirements may vary depending on the industrial sector, plant, and pollutant being considered.

The U.S. government has used a system of formal permits setting out the limits that industrial plants are required to meet. The U.S. federal government sets minimum standards, but some states set higher standards on their own.

In Canada, the province's limits are set in consultation with the federal government, and I would argue that it is at this time that the Department of the Environment should urge the provinces to adopt the toughest, most uniform standards possible. As it stands now, the provinces negotiate individual compliance standards with each polluter. These schedules can be, and often are, amended at the discretion of the province, very often under extreme duress by a large corporation.

This lack of rigidity, of uniform standards and of federal guidance is one of the primary reasons we are lagging behind the U.S. when it comes to controlling industrial pollution.

This lack of direction from the Department of Environment is evident in other areas, most notably in its failure to live up to its obligations to co-ordinate the anti-pollution activities of other federal departments. I am thinking particularly at this time of the lack of dialogue or interchange between the Department of the Environment and the Department of Agriculture.

The International Joint Commission has identified farm land use activities as a major contributor to polluting Lake Erie. According to reports, two thirds of the phosphorous in the lake has its source in farm run-off. Agriculture has been singled out as a particularly important pollution factor because of the increasing use of pesticides and uncontrolled discharges of wastes from livestock and poultry.

I am not blaming farmers directly, but I think it is about time the provincial and federal environmental departments and various farm organizations in Ontario and in the United States got together in an attempt to arrange better farm management in order to prevent further pollution from these pesticides that run off from artificial chemical fertilizers on farms where rivers flow south into Lake Erie from Canada, or north into Lake Erie from the United States.

At the same time, erosion of farm land has increased tenfold in the past 15 years, adding a vast amount of sediment to the lakes and choking streams and harbours. There is so much silt in small harbours such as Port Hope, Port Stanley and Port Burwell, to name only a few, that it is dangerous to pleasure boaters and commercial fishermen, and virtually nothing is being done about that. Yet there is no indication the Department of the Environment has entered into discussion on this problem with the federal Department of Agriculture or its provincial counterparts. The Department of the Environment, in conjunction with other departments, should be developing programs which would assist farmers to change their farm management practices. There is also a need for financial assistance to establish measures to deal with sediment and farm run-off control. This is an area where the Department of the Environment should be playing a central co-ordinating role, but it is not.

Something has to be done very soon in order to rectify this very dangerous situation that has developed in the Great Lakes lower basin. When one talks about the quality of fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and offshore in eastern Canada, one should bear in mind an image of all this silt, chemical and human effluent, industrial waste and so on that is literally pouring down from the lower Great Lakes into the St. Lawrence River and, past Montreal where most of that city's human effluent is being discharged into the river, and out into the Gulf of St. Lawrence where it is harming fisheries off the east coast. In conclusion, there is a relationship between pollution in the Great Lakes and the fishing industry on the east coast.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FORESTRY—RESEARCH FUNDING OF FOREST MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, on November 6, 1978, as reported at page 812 of Hansard, I asked a question of the Minister of State (Environment) (Mr. Marchand) concerning a contract which was being negotiated by the Canadian forestry service with the Forest Engineering Research Institute of Canada. I suggested then that the work could have been done by the Forestry Management Institute, one of two forestry institutions in Ottawa, the other one being the Forest Fire Research Institute. Both of these institutions were slated to move to Petawawa after a lay-off of approximately 50 personnel.

The origin of this series of events goes back to the announcement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on August 1, 1978, of the intent to cut back government expenditures in a very massive way. The then president of the treasury board announced on August 15 that a series of government operations would be closed, including the Forest Research Institute at Petawawa. Very substantial representations were made by my colleague, the hon. member for Renfrew North-Nipissing East (Mr. Hopkins). The effect of his representations was to save the operation at Petawawa, and to bring about the closure of two institutes in Ottawa.

Since that time the minister has pursued a policy not only of relocation of what is left of these operations, but of privatizing two forest products institutes, one in Ottawa and the other in Vancouver. The minister confirmed in yesterday's Hansard at page 2515 that there exists an interim chairman of a board which has taken on the job of raising enough money from the private sector, which together with a government grant of some $4 million, will permit these two operations to continue.

My concern relates to the way in which this rather sad series of events unfolded. I support the decision of the government to cut back its budget and to adopt a policy of restraint because it is called for under the present circumstances. However, I cannot help but feel that it would have been better if the policy had been worked through more extensively in private before public announcements were made. Before an announcement is made the proposal should be carefully examined, with all its implications, to prevent changes after the initial public announcement.

I know that the employees of these forest products operations will accept the moves with the best grace possible, but I am concerned about those who terminate their employment with the public service, even if there is an offer forthcoming of private employment. A change of employer is not an easy thing. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan) has indicated that all agreements which are in existence will be honoured on behalf of those employees who are being transferred to the private sector. This involves changes which are not easily compensated for. For example, those who subscribe to the public service superannuation benefit scheme and who subsequently move to the private sector will find that there will be some pension adjustment. In many cases the benefits in the private sector are not equal to those in the public service.

I feel that the case for research is not being kept in sight, considering what is actually happening. The forest industry is responsible for something like $7.5 billion worth of exports, as the minister stated when his estimates were before the House.

• (2205)

The contributions of a number of dedicated scientists in this particular industry cannot be underestimated. When the minister assumed his portfolio he addressed a national meeting of foresters and made an inspiring speech, telling them that they had to go out and sell their case for research to the public of Canada. In my public life I have never heard of a stronger case that could be made.

I know every cut is going to hurt. I know the decision on how to cut back is one of the most painful to be made, but I truly believe that the cutback in forestry research will hurt Canadians over the long period. There is a tremendous amount at stake.

I should like to have an assurance from the government that long-term research objectives will continue to be supported when these laboratories are privatized. I should like an assurance that there has been some basic determination of our needs in this area.

At a committee meeting recently I sat with the new Auditor General and we talked about value for money spent. If there ever was a case where value for money could be justified it is in forest research, limited though it has been so far at the federal level.

The people I represent in the national capital region, Mr. Speaker, know that the decision of their employer, the government, has to be accepted and respected. Many members on this side as well as on the other side of the House have raised the question of what the government is doing in this area, and the decisions have now been made. Tonight, I should like to have an assurance from the government that its basic objectives in forest management research will not be neglected.

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, following the announcement of the government's expanded renewable energy program by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) on July 4, 1978, the Canadian Forestry Service exchanged letters of intent with a number of organizations and private firms, one of which was the Forest Engineering Research Institute of Canada—FERIC—with respect to the projects under this expanded program.

The agreement currently being negotiated with FERIC provides for the institute to undertake certain studies related to forest biomass for energy over a two-year period in exchange for contributions by the Government of Canada not to exceed $750,000. FERIC was chosen by an interdepartmental group to carry out these studies because it has the necessary management expertise, as well as the ability to mobilize quickly the necessary personnel for the limited period of the agreement. The government's decision to fund this project and to negotiate an agreement with FERIC for its execution is consistent with the policy of promoting an increased research and development capability in the private sector.

The decisions and commitments in respect to the FERIC project were made before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced major reductions in government spending. Incidentally, I should like to correct the hon. member's understanding that the Forest Management Institute is to be closed. Rather, it is to be moved to Chalk River where its programs will be amalgamated with those of the Petawawa Forest Experimental Station and the Forest Fire Research Institute.

The Forest Management Institute has some expertise in the renewable energy field. Indeed, these people will act as government project advisers to FERIC and as scientific authorities on other renewable energy projects contracted with the private sector.

To put the matter in perspective, FERIC is not being given funds to conduct forest energy studies at the expense of in-house forest energy research. The funds being contributed to FERIC are part of an expanding government renewable energy initiative shared by the Forest Management Institute and other government establishments. By making better use of the private sector in areas where it has the expertise, we feel this program will benefit the Canadian people and improve Canada's technological capability.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—CO-ORDINATOR TO ENSURE MAXIMUM USE OF RAIL CARS TO MOVE GRAIN

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I raised a question with the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board toward the end of December. I asked in effect would the government consider introducing the position of a grain transportation co-ordinator to help co-ordinate and straighten out the mess that we have in grain transportation in Canada. His answer was very unclear at that time, to say the least, and his actions since that time have not led me to believe that a grain transportation co-ordinator for this very vital industry is any closer.

I submit this evening that a grain transportation co-ordinator will help straighten out the transportation mess we have. Grain is not reaching the port of Vancouver in sufficient quantities. And when the port of Thunder Bay was open, it was not reaching that port. This situation was demonstrated by the number of waiting ships, especially at the present time in the port of Vancouver.

Demurrage last year was high. It was in the vicinity of some $25 million, and it will be high again for this coming year. An interesting sidelight that may force some action on this whole question is the fact that within about three weeks the Chinese will be coming to Canada to take the grain that was purchased in the past crop year. They are expecting some 17 ships to load this grain in Vancouver. The unfortunate situation arising at the present time is the fact that the grain is not available. As a result, farmers and people in this country incur large demurrage charges. We have had lost sales in the past year in the order of some $450 million. This has been admitted now by the Canadian Wheat Board. That comes to approximately $3,000 per permit holder.

Under the terms of reference of a transportation co-ordinator I feel that the co-ordinator should have the power over the railways, the unions, the grain companies, the elevator companies, in effect all facets of the grain industry. The position of a co-ordinator should be brought in and legislated here in the House of Commons. The grain co-ordinator should be responsible to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board who is in effect responsible to parliament. A person holding this position of grain transportation co-ordinator should hold it for two years. In other words, it should not be a permanent position. We do not want this kind of control over an industry to be permanent in nature. The situation is so serious at the present time that the ultimate or arbitrary power proposed for this individual is necessary for the immediate future.

It is interesting to note that the grain companies are in favour of a transportation co-ordinator, as are some other segments of the grain industry. I feel that this step should be taken immediately. If it is, all parties in the house should give it speedy passage. The time has come for this form of absolute power over the grain industry.

Losses to the farmer and losses to Canada itself in terms of the amount of money grain generates are too great. A grain co-ordinator could be of some help in a labour dispute, if one were to arise at any of our major grain ports. The office of the co-ordinator which I envisage, existed back in the early 1950s. I believe it should be in Winnipeg. The co-ordinator would only need a very small staff because he would have power from parliament. As I mentioned before, his terms of reference should be no longer than two years, and until we get the transportation mess in this country sorted out.

In my opinion the situation has reached a critical stage. The government has studied the industry to death and has not done anything of a positive nature to help it. As an example the situation in Manitoba is very critical in the context that grain has not been moving in this particular crop year and farmers are very short of ready cash. The farmers deserve something better in the way of grain sales than they are getting at the present time. I see no other way than to bring in legislation for a grain transportation co-ordinator and give him the necessary power to straighten out the grain mess in Canada today.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the hon. member's proposal for a grain transportation co-ordinator. This has been discussed in numerous fora. It was discussed briefly at the senior transportation committee meeting on December 13, 1978, and again at the federal-provincial conference of grain handling and transportation on January 8 and 9, 1979.

The general opinion at these meetings was that the setting up of such a co-ordinator is not the best solution to the problem at this time and that a more desirable approach to ensuring that the maximum use is made of our grain handling and transportation capacity is to foster the utmost co-operation between the various segments of the system. The various participants are each experts in their own areas and it is important to make the most efficient use possible of this expertise.

If it were to be shown that the appointment of an outside co-ordinator is desirable, that step would be taken. In 1969, with the increased volumes of grain moving into Thunder Bay and Vancouver, it was determined that a grain movement co-ordinator was desirable in order to prevent congestion and unnecessary delays.

Obviously, a co-ordinator who was knowledgeable in the fundamentals of railroading and with some authority was needed. Two co-ordinators were appointed to co-ordinate the efforts of the various segments of port operations toward improving the throughput of existing facilities. They work in close liaison with the local supervisors of the various segments of port operations improving the flow of information and assisting in the resolution of operating problems.

The grain car co-ordinators have performed a vital function in assisting the movement of grain through Thunder Bay and Vancouver. Grain handling innovations have been introduced which probably would not have been possible without the important control function of the co-ordinator. Car unloading levels, rail car utilization and terminal elevator handlings have increased since these co-ordinators were put in place.

While these co-ordinators were necessary and are performing admirably, it does not follow that the co-ordinating function should be extended from the ports to cover the whole system. The system involves interaction between many groups, and over-all co-ordination would be extremely complex. It is desirable to encourage a co-operative approach, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is doing through the senior transportation committee, and reserve the co-ordination as a position of last resort.

AIR TRANSPORT—CIVIL AVIATION INSPECTORS WITHOUT CONTRACT

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, on December 19 last, in a motion under Standing Order 43 I drew the attention of the House to the deteriorating situation in civil aviation standards in Canada. My motion requested the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) to put their heads together in order to solve the very serious deteriorating situation with our civil aviation inspectors group.

On December 20, just before the Christmas recess, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board I asked the Minister of Transport whether he was aware that comparability did not exist for that group with military pilots and air traffic controllers, let alone comparability with the private sector. In a rather offhand manner, the minister pointed out there had been difficulties and disputes involving the collective bargaining process. However, he shared my view that this is a very important group indeed.

The minister did not reply to my request asking him which of three crises he would wait for before something in a meaningful way was done to correct the deplorable condition that existed in the collective bargaining process. As in too many disputes today, the manipulation of the collective bargaining process is the root cause of attitudes and situations which affect a group as important as the one of which I am speaking.

I have three pages of chronology here involving some 32 steps since December 15, 1973, and this group has been without a contract since 1975. They submitted themselves to binding arbitration, and the Treasury Board negotiators at that time agreed to binding arbitration. Mr. Justice Hall ruled in their favour, yet the Treasury Board saw fit to appeal the case when it went before the AIB.

These people have fallen well behind the income levels of the military air pilots who serve Canada and the air traffic controllers who, because of their power, can shut down our air transportation system with the snap of a finger.

The civil aviation inspectors of Canada are charged with the responsibility of enforcing the law and maintaining a high and desirable standard of civil aviation safety. Their duties are many and varied. They look after more than 21,500 registered aircraft in Canada. There are 83,000 or more personal licences and permits which they supervise. There are licenced air carriers numbering something like 1,360. There are 950 licenced airports and 604 navigational aid systems which need their continuous supervision.

What has happened with this lack of comparability with their counterparts in the civil service, and most certainly with their counterparts out in the industry, is that they have lost spirit and are leaving their service. There are 369 man-years charged to this responsibility, and as I understand it now, over 60 of these have left that service and gone to the private sector.

The tragedy here is that this is a group which has a high standard of education and experience. They are the people who sit behind our commercial airline pilots and approve their performance and their knowledge of their aircraft. These gentlemen have 10,000 flying hours of experience, an average age of 49, and an average of 27 years of aviation experience.

I will give the particular case of one with 19,000 flying hours. He is paid a base of $18,620. He can get flying pay of another $2,400, for a total of $21,000. He is the gentleman who is supposed to rule on the ability of a young pilot flying a Cessna aircraft on the B.C. coast for about a six-month period during the open weather season. This young pilot can make up to $28,000 in six months. The whole flying industry is just laughing at the plight and the condition of these civil aviation inspectors.

I am quite frustrated when I see a government which is supposed to be responsible in this area, and a Minister of Labour who today answered my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), to the effect that it is strange to him that the hon. member would suggest that it is the principle of comparability which is at stake. I was quite shocked at the put-down given by the minister to my colleague, because I know the minister to be a serious and concerned individual. I suggest that he take a very serious look at this very serious situation and the lack of fairness with this civil aviation inspector group within the air operations group of the Department of Transport.

These people are not union-oriented. Their job is to enforce the law. They were told by the Treasury Board that negotiations would begin again on January 3. For some magic reason—part of this game again—negotiations were not proceeded with, and the inspectors went out on strike. Because of a technicality and their respect for the law, they went back to work. Then they were told that there will be negotiations on January 29, but I want to leave the message with the ministers responsible that unless there is a meaningful offer on January 29, I can see nothing but deterioration with regard to this important group, and it is not the type of group which can be put back together once it has disintegrated.

● (2225)

Why is this government insisting on an attitude of destruction and unfairness in the comparability of wage even with their own colleagues in the civil service let alone in comparison with the people they have had to supervise and on whom they have had to enforce the regulations?

I would be very disappointed if the minister replied to me by saying this has anything to do with restraint. There are all kinds of areas where restraint can be applied and there are all kinds of waste in management by this government, but restraint in areas as vital and important to civil aviation in Canada and standards of civil aviation is deplorable, and I urge all three ministers to get to work on this urgent problem.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to provide the hon. member with some additional facts surrounding the aircraft operations group withdrawal of service. At this time the government is seeking clarification from the Public Service Staff Relations Board, through an application process, requesting that the PSSRB declare whether the group is in a legal strike position. This group is responsible for piloting of aircraft as well as inspection and regulation of aircraft equipment and aviation facilities.

There are three subgroups involved. They are: the 356 civil aviation inspectors earning an average salary of $24,854; 17 executive pilots and supervisors whose average salary is $31,426, and the helicopter pilots and supervisors who number 51 and earn an average income of $25,732.

This brings the total number of employees in the aircraft operations group to 424. The average salary for the group is $25,240. In addition, the civil aviation inspector is eligible to receive up to $2,400 annually as a flying allowance.

The former bargaining agent for the group, the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, was decertified in July of last year. The Canadian Union of Professional and Technical Employees obtained the bargaining rights.

The group has been without a collective agreement since July, 1975. Both the former and current bargaining agents refused to enter into a new collective agreement. They thought it might prejudice their attempts to have overturned the order of the Administrator, under the Anti-Inflation Act, which restricted the compensation increases to the group to $2,400 annually, the maximum permissible increase under the AIB. This restriction applies to the two-year period from July, 1975, to July, 1977.

However, the government unilaterally implemented the maximum permissible increase under AIB in August, 1976, for the period concerned. This resulted in rates of pay being increased for the group by 11.5 per cent, effective July, 1975, and 9.86 per cent effective July, 1976.

The former and current bargaining agents have refused to sign a collective agreement incorporating these increases as the matter was before the courts. However, in November, 1978, the Federal Court of Canada rejected the challenge made by the bargaining agent.

On December 1, 1978, the government unilaterally implemented the maximum permissible increases under the AIB for the third guideline year giving the group a 9.41 per cent increase to rates of pay effective July, 1977.

As a result, for the period July, 1975, to July, 1978, the average salary for the group has gone up by 38.23 per cent, so that the current average salary is $6,756 higher than in June, 1975. On December 1 last, the government also served notice to bargain for the period beginning July, 1978, which is to start next Tuesday, January 30.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

POST OFFICE

DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY IN URBAN AREAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The city of Calgary is growing at the rate of more than 2,000 people per month. There are eight or more new, large districts in Calgary North and other areas where the Post Office has established postal depots, without boxes in many cases, and the depots are open only from eight o'clock in the morning to four o'clock in the afternoon. These new areas are made up mainly of young people from all parts of the country, and in many cases both spouses work and are unable to get their mail as the depots are locked by 4 p.m.. Family allowance cheques and personal mail are unobtainable.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre):

That the Postmaster General personally look into this serious situation and see that 4,000 boxes, unused and presently in the possession of the Post Office, are placed in these depots, and that the said depots remain open so that people, with or without keys, can obtain their mail after working hours; and, further, every effort should be made to see that all people get delivery of mail the same as established in other parts of the city of Calgary, in view of the present discriminatory policy, so that all taxpayers and Canadians have equal opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS—REQUESTED INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In the past three weeks the redemption of Canada Savings Bonds has accelerated, and again last week Bank of Canada figures showed a net decline of $90 million for that week, according to The Globe and Mail. This compares with $52 million the previous week and $22 million the week before. The average last year at this time was running at just $10 million. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That in view of the fact many of the owners of these bonds are just plain, ordinary Canadian citizens, the Canadian government increase the interest rates on these bonds to protect these ordinary citizens and/or consider seriously indexing these bond issues to the consumer price index.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SPORTS

UPGRADING OF WINNIPEG ARENA TO NHL STANDARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that officials of the city of Winnipeg, as well as those of other Canadian cities, have approached the federal government to aid in upgrading arena facilities to bring those arenas up to National Hockey League standards, a move which would allow for the possible expansion of the NHL into those Canadian cities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the federal government give the same support to representations from Winnipeg as it has to construction projects of sport facilities in other Canadian cities.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can only be presented for debate at this time with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BEREAVEMENT

EXPRESSION OF DEEP SYMPATHY TO FAMILIES OF STUDENTS KILLED IN TORONTO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That, considering the tragic events of yesterday that stole away the lives of four young Toronto students and sent 29 others to hospital, this House wishes to express its deepest sympathy to the bereaved families and the students and faculty of Weston Collegiate.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming), seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF FISCAL POLICIES OF OTHER COUNTRIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since World War II, only four major western nations have had fiscal policies successful in keeping inflation under control, namely, the Eisenhower government of 1953, the de Gaulle government of 1958, the West German government of 1948, and the Diefenbaker government under which the inflation rate in Canada was kept to 1.6 per cent annually between 1957 and 1963.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the finance committee of the House of Commons forthwith initiate a study into the prudent fiscal policies of these governments with a view to replacing the "spending our way to prosperity" policy of the present Liberal government with the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Speaker.]

NATIONAL SECURITY

SECURITY CLEARANCE OF CIVIL SERVANTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity concerning national security, and specifically in regard to two individuals, namely, Michael Pitfield, secretary to the cabinet and Eldon Black, under secretary of state for external affairs.

I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the Prime Minister confirm that Michael Pitfield was refused top security clearance by the armed forces security services within the past two years, and that this was one of the main reasons for the removal of Walter Dabros as head of armed forces national security and, further, that the Prime Minister confirm that Eldon Black, among other duties, has been and is directing the replacement of RCMP security officers at Canadian embassies abroad with security officers of the Department of External Affairs; and, finally, that Mr. Black is involved with others in a planned phase-out over six years of the entire security services of the RCMP.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RESPONSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT FOR INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fonse Faour (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That this House welcomes the action of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in suspending for six months the proposed guidelines respecting Indian health services, and now calls on the minister to rescind the Blue Cross and Blue Shield contract entered into on behalf of Indians in the maritime provinces so that during the coming six months all Indian health services will clearly be the responsibility of the federal Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can only be done with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

APPOINTMENT OF NEW DEPUTY MINISTER—EFFECT ON POLICY OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and touches upon his announcement yesterday of the appointment of a new deputy minister to the Department of Finance.

In view of the fact that in the past decade our budget surplus of $393 million has gone to a budget deficit of $12.1 billion, that the current account surplus nine years ago of $1.1 billion is now $4.4 billion, that unemployment is up 50 per cent and inflation is now at 9 per cent, compared to 3.3 per cent, with bankruptcies up dramatically, will the Prime Minister indicate if the appointment of the new deputy minister yesterday was in anticipation of a change in direction as far as the Department of Finance is concerned?

• (1115)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Deputy Minister of Finance can help the government, as in the past, to create jobs at a rate faster than any other industrialized country in the world, and if he can duplicate the record of the past ten years of creating more than 2.5 million jobs—

Mr. Lawrence: Good grief!

Mr. Trudeau: —I think that he will have demonstrated that the Canadian economy is in better health than any of the members of the opposition are able to put it into.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I would add to the Prime Minister's comments that if the deputy minister is instrumental in duplicating the record so far in this decade, God help Canada if the figures on inflation, unemployment, trade deficits and budget deficits continue to soar.

With regard to that general subject, would the Prime Minister indicate if the promotion of Mr. Shoyama to the position of special adviser in his own office is a further indication of the downgrading of the Department of Finance and the upgrading of the Prime Minister's office to deal with questions of the economy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is so concerned with the deficit continuing to soar, he should speak to his own leader who wants it to soar by another $2 billion.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is always complaining that he is being taken out of context, yet he repeatedly takes the Leader of the Opposition out of context when he refers to questions of the deficit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, on October 20, 1978, I asked the Prime Minister if he could give the House an explanation for the soaring bankrupticies in this country, which in 1970 represented one in ten, compared to the United States, and at the time were up to seven in ten as compared to the United States. The 1978 figures are up by 28 per cent over 1977. At that time the Prime Minister stated that he was not aware of these figures and that he would read the report to determine an explanation.

Now, three months later, could the Prime Minister indicate to the House of Commons if he has an explanation for the startling increase in bankruptcies in this country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member suggests that I take his leader out of context. I wish that he would put him in context, in the context of the hon. member's statement in November that we should hold budget spending steady, with the clear statement by the Leader of the Opposition who wants to increase the deficit by $2 billion. Let him put that in context.

Mr. Stevens: Answer my question.

STEPS TO REDUCE NUMBER OF BANKRUPTCIES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, but perhaps I should repeat the question asked by my colleague.

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister, three months ago, said that he would be taking some specific steps in looking at the bankruptcy rates within our economy, what steps, in fact, has he taken during this period of time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): None, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious that the government has taken no steps to deal with the bankruptcy rates in Canada. But if the Prime Minister is not doing anything about the situation, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that the business rate in Canada increased by 41.1 per cent in 1978 over 1977, would the minister be prepared, particularly within the small business sector, to look into areas which would reduce the bankruptcy rate—for example, amendments to the Small Businesses Loans Act?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we put certain measures in our last budget in order to help small businesses in Canada. For example, we changed the rules regarding capital gains and small businesses are now taxed at a rate which is half that of big business rates. It is a much better rate than their counterparts have in the United States. The legislation for small businesses in Canada is very good, and I am supported in that by Mr. John Bulloch who was very happy with what was done for small businesses in the last bill.

Of course, when operating in an open economy as opposed to a controlled economy everyone takes their chance, and if the competition is very strong—a situation which everybody prefers—then some businesses will fail. It is what we call a market economy.

• (1120)

Mr. Jelinek: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not a fact that the Small Businesses Loans Act is not operating as effectively as was expected? In fact, a recent poll indicated that 95 per cent of small businesses applying for assistance were turned down.

Could the minister advise whether he has taken this matter up with the banks and, if not, would he now be prepared to do so in order that the small business sector may have an opportunity to take advantage of the act?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be willing to look into the matter and talk to the banks, but I think there is a lot of credit available in Canada. In fact, for the third year savings in Canada are at a very high point.

I am told that the liquidity of the banks and other financial institutions is very good. In fact, not long ago one of the banks increased the rate for mortgages and then decided to put it back because there was too much competition. I think, therefore, that there is a lot of money available in the banking system for big business and also for small business. If there is some special problem that the hon. member wants to refer to, however, he can indicate it to me and I will talk to the banks.

EMPLOYMENT

FUNDING OF OUTREACH PROGRAM—REQUEST PROGRAM BE CONTINUED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration which concerns the Outreach program and particularly women.

On January 18, the Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Outreach program that was specifically directed at women received a notice that the funding would be terminated as of March 31. As the minister knows, that program aided hundreds of single-parent families and many hundreds of women in the last year in Saskatoon: it helped get people off welfare and found them work.

Will the minister reverse the decision of his department, make sure the program is not cancelled and that funding will continue for the Saskatoon Outreach program which is so valuable?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the department recognized it was providing a valuable service. In fact, over the last years we have provided $191,000—close to $200,000 in funding.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

We have done a survey of the various projects, however, and it was the feeling of regional officers that this particular service could be adequately performed on a cost-benefit basis by the Canada-Employment centre in that region and that a comparable service could be offered to women in the region.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. There are some 21 other programs that are similar in national scope across the country. Since the minister will not save the program in Saskatoon, can he assure the House that the other 21 programs will not be cut back and, indeed, will not be terminated but will continue to provide the excellent service they have given in those communities?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, these have all been looked at and some are in the process of being looked at. In some areas they will be continued with exactly the same funding, in other areas the project will be continued with less funding, while some will be cancelled as is the case with the one raised by the hon. member.

We are giving a close and careful look to each Outreach project with a view to determining which should be funded at the full level, at a reduced level, or cancelled altogether.

Mr. Nystrom: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister may add that the Outreach program in his own riding, as I understand it, is getting increased funding. I should like to ask the minister why, when he makes these decisions, he does not consult the head of the women's employment division in his department or the people involved in the training and development program. The information I have is that these people have not been consulted, and they have the direct knowledge of the value of these programs to women. Why have they not been consulted?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I shall have to check the allegation of the hon. member. I know that we have had a co-ordinator in this particular area since 1972, and it would be strange if that individual was not consulted. I will check to find out if that is the case.

REPORT OF ADVISORY COUNCIL ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN—EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Has the Minister had an opportunity to study the remarks made earlier this week, and the report of the chairman of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women published on January 10, with respect to the failure to involve the Advisory Council in the evolution of the employment strategy of the minister's department?

Has he conferred directly with the chairman or other representatives of the Advisory Council because of the very serious allegations raised about the lack of consultation and lack of input in terms of the formulation of employment policies and their impact upon women?

● (1125)

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the hon. member's question, I have not had an opportunity to meet with the chairman, Mrs. Rousseau, but in fact at the committee, when they were talking about job creation and encouraging workers to establish more stable work patterns, she indicated:

> The government may achieve this goal, not by reducing the benefits of the workers who are more likely to be affected by the a high unemployment rate, but rather by guaranteeing reasonable jobs and adequate training programs for women. The CACSW will go on studying very closely the employment strategy suggested by the government to inform women of their rights and job opportunities.

So, in fact, they have been studying the employment strategies: they have been looking at them and they have indicated that they are going to continue to do so. If there are representations to be made, they can be made. Mrs. Rousseau said:

> Women are full-fledged members of the labour force with the right to the same opportunities and advantages as their male colleagues on the work force.

And, Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Rousseau was quoting me.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would give this House an undertaking because of the very serious concerns raised about the lack of present consultation. Would he consult with his senior officials to see if there was any consultation with women or with the Advisory Council on the evolution of the employment strategy? Would he arrange, at the earliest possible date, a meeting in order to deal directly with the number of specific concerns that were raised at the recent quarterly meeting of the Advisory Council concerning the employment strategy and its impact upon women?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, as hon. members on both sides of the House know, my office door is open. I have met with many, many groups. There is never any difficulty getting in to see the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and I have received valuable assistance and advice from a whole series of groups in this particular field.

I will check with my officials to find out if there was some consultation or not on this specific matter. I am prepared, obviously, to meet with the president at any time she wishes in studying all the projects she says their group is going to undertake, and hear representations from them because they do have valuable points and ideas to put forward.

JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR IMPROVED AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION TO MEMBERS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As there are regulations governing the implementation of federal job-creation programs such as the Canada Works and the Young Canada Works programs, can the minister tell us why hon. members cannot acquaint themselves with those regulations? After all, they are delegated to represent their electors.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member has a hard time getting the regulations that govern the Canada Works program. If he has any more trouble in that regard, he can phone me and I shall give him the answer.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, the minister suggests that I call him. I must tell him that during the month of December last, I called twice without getting an answer. Finally I wrote to the minister and here is the reply he sent me, as sharp as a north wind: "The regulations you speak of in your letter dated November 8, 1978 were designed exclusively to guide manpower advisers in their respective provinces." I wonder why hon. members cannot get those regulations since they too are appointed to represent their electors who seek their advice with regard to the implementation of the Canada Works and Young Canada Works programs.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, every hon. member knows the details of the projects in his own riding; if the hon. member wants additional information, he can contact me and I shall give it to him.

AIR CANADA

PROPOSED MOVE FROM HEATHROW TO GATWICK—REPRESENTATIONS TO U.K.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am informed that he has made representations to the British government in connection with consideration being given by the government and the Board of Trade of the United Kingdom to switching air operations from the present Heathrow Airport to Gatwick. Air Canada, in consequence, will lose, in a little over 2½ years, $270 million.

● (1130)

What representations have been made? What is the present position? Has the British government given an indication that it is prepared to reconsider its desire to shift the operations at these airports?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As briefly as I can, Mr. Speaker, the sequence is that this matter emerged some months ago between the Board of Trade, the appropriate government agency in Britain, and Air Canada. At that time Air Canada indicated its opposition to the move. That opposition was reinforced in representations which I and the Minister of Transport made to the then minister of the Board of Trade, Mr. Dell. Within the last few weeks the matter has been moved to a government-to-government basis as a result of conversations between our Prime Minister, Mr. Callaghan and others in December.

The note which was referred to in the House a few days ago was delivered in person by our High Commissioner a week ago yesterday, I believe. Consequently, we are now awaiting the reaction of the British government. As of this morning, just shortly before coming into the House, no formal response—which, obviously, a formal note requires—had come from the British government. I stated in the House the other day, and I welcome this opportunity to reiterate it, that the Government of Canada agrees with Air Canada and will vigorously support all of its efforts to remain at Heathrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would it not help in the deliberations that are taking place if this House were to pass a resolution strongly objecting to a course of action that will be so detrimental to Air Canada? Surely the House in general would be prepared to do that. If so, it would add strength to the representations being made by the High Commissioner.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, no one in the House is more aware of the sensitivities and sensibilities of the British government and British parliament on these matters. I will consider it, if it appears it would be advantageous to do so. Certainly, we on this side would have no objection. The only qualifying consideration would be whether or not the judgment on whether it would be beneficial is sustained. I will look at it over the weekend.

TRADE

MEASURES TO STIMULATE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY AND REDUCE TRADE DEFICIT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

As the increase in our trade surplus last year was due solely to increased sales of our raw products, which provide relatively few jobs in their production and require absolutely no sales effort because of the great desire of other countries, particularly the United States, to obtain our raw products, and in view of the statement by Statistics Canada this morning that our trade deficit in fully manufactured products increased by 10 per cent during the past year to $12.2 billion from $11 billion in 1977, I ask the minister, will he not now come forward within the next week and announce to the House just what he is going to do to stimulate our manufacturing industry so that we can start to overcome this enormous trade deficit in fully manufactured products, the ones that produce the jobs?

I ask this especially in view of the fact that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association has stated that if we can overcome this enormous trade deficit, we can provide no less than 800,000 additional jobs for Canadians to work at, and completely eliminate unemployment in this country.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I just happen to have the music to answer the hon. member's question. Basically, manufacturing jobs are up substantially in Canada this year over a year ago. Capacity utilization is up substantially, nearly 5 percentage points, over a year ago.

With regard to manufactured goods, I have the Statistics Canada figures with me. Imports of manufactured goods, inedible, are up 5.2 per cent. Our exports are up 24.5 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I wish the hon. member would take a pencil and write these down. I have the exact figures for our imports of manufactured goods. The figure is $33,121 million for 1977. In 1978, imports of manufactured goods totalled $34,857 million. Compare that with the exports of our manufactured goods and the substantial increase is obvious. In 1977, we exported $30,042 million, and in 1978 we exported $37,412 million. That is a substantial increase in exports of manufactured goods. Naturally, this has been reflected in greater factory utilization and greater employment in the manufacturing field.

Mr. Hees: All of which adds up, Mr. Speaker, to the Statistics Canada announcement this morning that the trade deficit in fully manufactured goods had increased by 10 per cent to $12.1 billion, as opposed to $11 billion a year ago.

As the minister demonstrated when he was in China, figures confuse him, and when they do he is inclined to make statements that have no relation to fact and are ridiculous. In view of this, have we in this House any more reason for having confidence in the figures that the minister produces to try and convince us of his argument than did the Chinese businessmen when he tried to sell them trucks?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NORTHERN GAS PIPELINE

STATUS OF ALASKA HIGHWAY PROJECT—MANUFACTURER OF STEEL PIPE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as minister responsible for the Alaska Highway pipeline project. It has to do with the current status of this multibillion dollar project.

In view of concern registered in Hamilton and Washington that the project might not go ahead because of a possible deal between the United States and Mexico on the delivery of gas, can the minister give the House some kind of assurance that the pipeline will be built and, notwithstanding possible alternative arrangements the Americans may be exploring, can he assure us that the Canadian steel industry will not be delivered the kind of body blow that would be felt with hundreds of jobs lost? If this project is in jeopardy, it would have a profound impact on Hamilton and other parts of the country.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the Government of Canada is concerned, there is absolutely no weakening of interest or determination in pursuing the successful completion of this project.

With regard the hon. member's reference to an American-Mexican deal, I believe that suggestion was put to rest by Mr. Schlesinger in his testimony before Congress recently when he placed his priority on Alaskan gas as his first objective in the energy field. That, of course, indicated his support and the support of the administration for the northern gas pipeline. Yesterday, I had a conversation with Mr. Schlesinger. There is no question whatsoever about the common resolve of both governments to accelerate as quickly as possible this particular project.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am thankful for the minister's assurance. However, my understanding was that the closing date on tenders for steel was last October. I would like to know when steel contracts will likely be awarded, and whether the minister will give the companies adequate lead time for plant expansion, jobs, and so on. Can the minister give us any hope for relief in unemployment in the steel and electronics industries in Hamilton and other areas of this country affected by this project?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, shortly before the Christmas break it was announced in the standing committee dealing with the northern pipeline, by the pipeline commissioner, that I had approved—and a subsequent press release confirmed this—the procurement plan for Foothills. That procurement plan, of course, authorized Foothills to begin negotiations with Canadian steel companies both in Hamilton and in Saskatchewan for the supply of Canadian pipe for this particular project. Therefore, there is absolutely no delay whatsoever in the processing of the Foothills' procurement plan. I have not heard in the past two weeks the results of the negotiations between Foothills and the steel companies.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

RADIO AND TELEVISION SERVICES IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the recommendation of the Task Force on Canadian Unity which refers to the right of every Canadian to have access to radio and television services in both the French and English languages, will the minister tell the House what he has done, and what more he plans to do, to speed up the CBC's so-called accelerated coverage plan?

French-speaking Canadians in many northwestern Ontario communities in which they are a majority are becoming increasingly impatient with the CBC's foot-dragging in providing this service, one for which parliament has already voted the necessary funds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am aware of this situation, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has been pertinacious in bringing it to my attention—and I have discussed it with the CBC authorities. I will renew those discussions to try to make sure the hon. members's representations are given full and sympathetic consideration.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ROLLBACK OF BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday, Bell Canada announced a scandalous 37 per cent increase in profits for 1978, a year in which it was allowed higher rate increases by the federal government.

In view of the need to control inflationary pressures in Canada, can the minister tell us whether he will take the necessary steps to roll back the rate increases recently given to Bell Canada, thus reducing the cost of living burden on Canadians?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The government is concerned about these increases, but as far as I know we have no power to roll back at the present time. But I will look into that.

Mr. Blackburn: The minister should be aware of the over-all profit increases announced yesterday by Statistics Canada, showing profits increasing at a rate of 34 per cent. Can he tell us what steps he and his department are taking to get the corporations to reduce their prices, in view of this exhorbitant increase in profits, so as to lessen the burden of inflation this year?

Mr. Allmand: We have no program to try to prevent companies from earning profits, or high profits which may in some cases be due to their efficiency and to their ability to sell their products well. On the other hand, there could be cases where profits are unwarranted, and I shall be glad to look into the matter further.

POST OFFICE

DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY IN URBAN AREAS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question in line with the motion I sought to move under Standing Order 43.

There are eight new communities in Calgary—probably more—in which 30,000 or 40,000 people are obliged to get their mail from what they call the post office depots which open at 8 a.m. and close at 4 p.m. There are no post boxes there, with the result that these people are often unable to get their mail. This city has been growing at a rate of more than 2,000 a month and the fight for better service has been going on for months.

Will the Postmaster General take a look at the situation personally, because the present arrangements are highly discriminatory, unfair and unjust?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would be most happy if I could give door-to-door delivery of mail to every Canadian but, as the hon. member knows, we are operating under financial restraints and we have to abide by them.

The conditions the hon. member has described exist in other areas. They exist in my area, in the Scarborough area of Toronto and, of course, in Calgary; they exist in suburban areas where there is a fast-growing population. Maybe a more positive way of looking at this would be to say that if these areas are growing so fast, it is because the economy of the country is so good.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate the answer, but it is no answer at all. I am pointing out that 4,000 boxes could be put into this depot so that people could go there with a simple key, just as was done 40 years ago, and pick up their mail. The present system is holding up pension cheques, baby bonus cheques and all that class of mail. I would ask the minister to analyse his answer carefully and give me a proper answer with a view to giving these communities some service.

Mr. Lamontagne: I am as much concerned as is the hon. member about the postal service in these areas and I can assure him that, especially in Calgary and in the Toronto area, we have special teams now trying to give people as quickly as possible, the required service.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ATTITUDE OF GOVERNMENT IN NEGOTIATIONS WITH CIVIL AVIATION PERSONNEL

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. His negotiators are once again entering into talks with civil aviation inspectors of the air operations group: the date is January 30, I believe, if the meetings are not cancelled again.

I should like to ask the minister whether the negotiators will enter those meetings in a spirit which will resolve the lack of comparability which exists for that unfortunate group as between them and their counterparts in the military, and the air controllers group and their counterparts who supervise in the civilian sector? This meeting is very important for the civil aviation standards of Canada. Can the hon. gentleman give us some idea of the attitude his negotiators will be taking?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is obviously our intention to enter into the negotiations in good faith. As the hon. member knows, this group has since 1975 been contesting the status of the AIB and some of its rulings through the administrator and through the Federal Court. The matter was resolved last fall. Nevertheless, on two separate occasions we gave the group the maximum increases to which they were entitled under the AIB guidelines, even though there were no negotiations, and we are now in the process of entering into negotiations for the current period.

It is certainly our desire to arrive at a settlement and to do so in the most open and fair manner possible.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER PUBLIC SERVANTS HAVE TRADED IN PACIFIC PETROLEUM SHARES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has there been any investigation by officers of his department into whether there has been trading in any manner, shape or form by members of the public service in the shares of Pacific Pete at the time of the purchase and the offer by Petro-Can of Pacific Petroleum shares?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am not aware of that, Mr. Speaker, I would have to look into it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SECOND READING OF BILL CONCERNING ARAB BOYCOTT

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): My question is for the House leader, Mr. Speaker. When will the government call for second reading the bill dealing with the Arab boycott?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): As the hon. member knows, that bill is part of the legislative program and it will certainly be my intention to deal with it as quickly as possible. Indeed, I would consider having consultations with party representatives to determine whether there might be a way of expediting this bill.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISION COVERAGE IN SOUTHEAST MANITOBA

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one addressed earlier to the Secretary of State. When Bill C-58 was passed, a number of border communities lost the only television channel they had, because they had been getting American television. The CBC then came forward under the ACP, saying they would put in an English television service, though most Canadians take coverage in at least one language for granted and now are getting coverage in the second language.

When will the CBC finally fulfil its promise to operate an English service in southeastern Manitoba? The corporation now says it could not do so in 1978 because of restraint, though those commitments had been made well before the government's present restraint program was introduced.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am pleased the hon. member has referred to Bill C-58, which has now been in operation for four years, because of the extraordinary success of that measure, one which was passed despite the opposition of members on the other side of the House.

As far as the hon. member's representations as they relate to Manitoba are concerned, I will discuss them with the CBC and come back with an answer.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council, who is responsible for the GATT negotiations.

● (1150)

I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council the following question. Since there seems to be an appalling lack of communication between Ottawa and Washington, and some sources in Washington have indicated that unless there is some move made by Canada the whole agreement on the GATT package would be in serious jeopardy, and since Canada is one of the only countries that has made no move to sign an agreement, what are the problems at present, and why is it taking so long for our negotiators to complete this very important agreement with the United States which will eventually lead to the completion of the GATT talks?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): First of all, I should say that while progress has been made generally, no agreement has been signed and, strictly speaking, no moves have been made to sign such an agreement and probably will not be made until the spring because negotiations are still continuing. It is not a matter of surprise that comments will appear in one country or the other suggesting that more should be given by Canada. I would regard that as a normal bargaining technique. We are still negotiating intensively with the United States and with other countries and we will continue to do so.

I do not see any benefit in attempting at this stage to negotiate in public or to give explanations why Canada is taking certain positions. We are taking the general position to get maximum advantage for Canada, and it seems to me that the hon. member should commend us for having drawn such a reaction from our other partners.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, nobody is asking for public negotiations. I should like to ask the minister the following question. Since the United States has made its offer with the other countries and has an agreement with the European Economic Community, and since that offer cannot stand unless Canada makes additional offers—up to this point there has been very little movement made—would the minister inform the House what instructions the government intends to give to Canada's negotiating team so that the present round of tariff talks will be concluded as quickly as possible?

There is a great deal of concern in the United States and in some circles in Canada that these talks will not be completed and that Canada might withdraw from tariff negotiations altogether.

Mr. MacEachen: I can put to rest that concern. If there is any concern that the talks will not be completed or that Canada will withdraw from the negotiations, there is absolutely no foundation to any such suggestion at this time and it is my firm expectation that there will be a successful conclusion to these negotiations. But these are negotiations and Canada is attempting to get the best possible result in the service of Canadian interests. At the present time, it is not my intention to disclose publicly the nature of instructions that are given on a day to day basis to the Canadian negotiating team.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA'S POLICY ON APARTHEID

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At a series of votes at the United Nations General Assembly, apparently Canada voted affirmatively on seven votes and abstained on eight others. The favourable votes seemed to have been in favour of general expressions of world opinion against apartheid, whereas the eight votes, from which we either abstained or in which we voted against were against various forms of sanctions, including a proposed ban on new investment in South Africa and a pledge of assistance to national liberation movements.

Will the minister state whether it is Canada's definite policy to vote for rhetorical expression against apartheid, and then to vote against any practical steps to make the resolutions into additional binding sanctions?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. I have looked over the package of resolutions to which he has referred. The basic principle which was followed is one which I think the hon.

member, with his experience at the United Nations, can understand and would probably agree with.

In the General Assembly at the United Nations, we will support those resolutions which are critical or condemnatory of apartheid. Matters of sanctions are expressly, and quite legally and properly, the purview of the Security Council and consequently we do not believe that it is wise to have the debates on sanctions questions in the General Assembly, that the real focus for those is in the Security Council. That is the basic reason for the pattern followed in the voting yesterday, which I think the hon. member will find, on looking over the record, to be consistent with what we have done all along.

Mr. Brewin: Before Christmas, the minister agreed with the chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to have a briefing on Namibia and South Africa with which the minister was very much involved. Is the minister now agreeable to proceeding with this briefing as soon as possible and, if so, could the necessary arrangements be made with the President of the Privy Council to give proper terms of reference so that we can get on with the account from the minister of what happened in this important part of the world?

Mr. Jamieson: I have already had conversations with the chairman of the committee and I am informed by him that he has already written me a set of proposals in this regard. Of course, I will be more than pleased to appear before the committee in any form or way that seems to be most suitable.

In the meantime, I think the House might be interested to know, and certainly the hon. member will, that the UN representative, Mr. Ahtisaari, has now returned from Namibia, that what we had forecast hopefully before Christmas has transpired and the prospects, I am glad to say, look, at the very least, reasonable for United Nations' supervised elections in Namibia. So I will have something of a more substantial nature to report when the committee meets.

FINANCE

REASON FOR RAISING BANK RATE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Since the Minister of Finance just left his chair, I should like to address my question to the Prime Minister.

Since the government still claims it is not trying to prop up the Canadian dollar, can the Prime Minister tell the House why the bank rate was raised this month to 11.25 per cent, more than double the rate of 5.25 per cent which existed in January, 1973, just six years ago?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the hon. member would refer to the record, he would see that the parliamentary secretary is here to give the answer which has been given many times in the House.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Since university students and university graduates will be leaving colleges and universities in three months' time, I wonder if the minister has any plans to announce, and when he makes the announcement, if he makes it, will he speak about any summer employment programs or other summer programs to assist young people?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the press release of Young Canada Works projects was made public in the latter part of December. We are also looking at specific areas where it would have particular impact, such as the Sudbury-Nickel Belt area where a strike is in progress, to see whether we can find additional funding for such regions.

Mr. Dick: Accepting the fact that Young Canada Works is usually part of a package of summer programs which the minister usually announces, including a number of programs running to millions of dollars providing summer youth employment by different departments and agencies of the federal government, I wonder if the minister will announce how much money will be spent on such programs and whether there will be an increase over last year, in view of the high rate of unemployment among the young people in this country.

Mr. Cullen: I did circulate the figures and I commented on them to some extent last September. We reintroduced the job experience training program in which a lot of students are participating. Also, the employment tax credit program is in place to encourage employers to hire more young people. So there are those two additional projects in addition to those I mentioned, the 13 or 14 others that are aimed at young people. A quarter of the money spent on those programs—a quarter of $714 million—is specifically aimed at the employment of young people.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUESTED IMPROVEMENT IN METHOD OF SEARCHING LAND TITLES

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact the practice of searching titles each time a property or house is bought costs Canadians a sum which is onerous, particularly when they buy their first house, would the minister ask his provincial counterparts to establish, for the benefit of the consumer, registries containing up to date information on the status of titles, thereby replacing the costly procedure of searching titles from scratch each time a property changes hands?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member said, that is a provincial matter; but I would be willing to write my provincial counterparts concerning it and put it on the agenda for our next federal-provincial meeting.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday when the government House leader was absent from the House, for a good and sufficient reason, I asked his deputy about the House business for next week, and his answer did not deal with next week. Since the government House leader has returned, I wonder if he could give us an indication of the government's legislative intentions for next week. Perhaps the government House leader might be able to comment further respecting the Arab boycott bill. That would be helpful to the House. If he has any intention of calling it early in the week, he can be assured we will have no objection whatsoever.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to respond to the question of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. I thank him for his understanding of my absence yesterday; I was in Halifax extolling the immortal memory of Robert Burns.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I should like to tell the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands that the address she gave a year or two ago is well remembered. The hon. member drew a capacity audience, but not as great as it was last night!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The intention is to proceed today with second reading of Bill C-9. I will bring that forward on Monday if it is not carried today, and hopefully continue the second reading of that bill. Following that, it will be my intention to call Bill C-2 to amend the Health Resources Fund Act, and then vary somewhat the order which I gave earlier and call Bill C-12, which will be of interest to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

These are the items I will call within the next few days. Also, I should like the House to deal quickly with second reading stage of Bill C-35 which has already received three days of debate. Because of the general support for the bill, if possible I should like to have it passed within a relatively short additional time of debate.

Respecting the Arab boycott, it is on the legislative program. If we are able to secure an agreement to deal with it within a particular time frame—perhaps a day—I would be happy to send it to committee. At this point I cannot call that bill unless I have some understanding as to how long debate on second reading will take.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from the answer by the President of the Privy Council in respect of business of the House. You will recall, sir, that he said Bill C-12 dealing with public service superannuation would be called some time next week. I presume it will be dealt with at the first instance next week. It might be very helpful to the House if the President of the Treasury Board could early in the week table the figures the government will be disclosing in any event during the minister's speech on second reading, so that members of the House can see what figures the government feels are applicable for the first triennial period. The debate could then be couched with those figures in mind. In terms of the public interest, and certainly in terms of the interest of public servants, this is the $64 question. Perhaps the minister would consider that, and if it could be done I think it would add immeasurably to the debate and perhaps its early completion.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite prepared to look at that suggestion. For myself, I see no reason why that information should not be given early in the week. There may be some technical problems but, barring that fact, I would be happy to do that. I think it might do much to allay the concerns of some hon. members and those of public servants who are retired or close to retirement. For that reason I would be happy to do that.

VICTORIA HEALTH CENTRE—FREDERICTON

Question No. 804—Mr. Howie:

1. How many beds does the Department of Veterans Affairs have at the Victoria Health Centre in Fredericton, New Brunswick for the care of disabled veterans?

2. What is the rate of occupancy and is there a waiting list and, if so, how many veterans are on the list?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. The Department of Veterans Affairs has 57 domiciliary care beds for veterans at the Victoria Health Centre in Fredericton.

[Mr. Roberts.]

2. The present rate of occupancy is 100 per cent. On December 22, 1978, there were 65 veterans on the waiting list. Of these, 21 have been assessed as requiring domiciliary care, 21 requiring extended care, and 23 are in the process of having their care needs assessed by provincial authorities.

Approval has been given to develop 60 additional domiciliary care beds for veterans in New Brunswick, and as these beds come into operation in the near future, the waiting list at Fredericton will be reduced. Some of the patients on the waiting list (approximately ten) are now in other health care facilities in New Brunswick (hospitals or nursing homes) and are thus already receiving institutional care.

EXCISE TAX ON GASOLINE

Question No. 806—Mr. Howie:

For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1978, what was the total revenue received from the excise tax on gasoline?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue): Total revenue received from the Excise Tax on gasoline for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1978: Revenue, $770,402,453; Refunded, $171,999,746; Net revenue, $598,402,707.

NATIONAL REVENUE—FINANCE PROJECTS IN RICHMOND

Question No. 836—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Since 1968, did the Department of National Revenue finance projects in the Constituency of Richmond and, if so (a) what were the projects (b) what was the (i) total amount (ii) amount in each case (c) what were the areas?

2. Is the Department planning to do so in the near future and, if so (a) what will be the amount (b) in which areas?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue): 1. No. (a), (b) and (c) Not applicable.

2. No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—FINANCE PROJECTS IN RICHMOND

Question No. 847—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Since 1968, did the Department of Veterans Affairs finance projects in the Constituency of Richmond and, if so (a) what were the projects (b) what was the (i) total amount (ii) amount in each case (c) what were the areas?

2. Is the Department planning to do so in the near future and, if so (a) what will be the amount (b) in which areas?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs):
1. No.

2. No.

INDUSTRIAL MATERIALS RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Question No. 875—Mr. Howie:

What is the general theme of research to be conducted by the Industrial Materials Research Institute?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the reply is as follows: The general theme of the institute's research is the deterioration and durability of materials.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—DELAY IN ANSWERING STARRED QUESTIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have believed always that the essence of parliament is that questions, when they are asked, are answered within a reasonable time. I do not ask questions just for amusement. They have a basis in fact; otherwise they would not have been asked.

I intend to refer to three starred questions. On November 22 I placed question No. 610 on the order paper. It reads as follows:

1. Has the Department of External Affairs set up an exercise known as "Program for Foreign Visitors"?

2. Are funds available for foreigners touring Canada as "opinion formers"?

3. How many of such "opinion formers" have toured Canada under the auspices of the Department of External Affairs, and what was the total cost in each of the past four years?

These are simple questions. These people were going across the country singing the Hallelujah chorus for the government.

Next, on November 22 I placed question No. 611 on the order paper. It reads as follows:

1. In consequence of Mr. Igor Gouzenko's revelations, how many individuals were prosecuted and (a) who were they (b) what happened in their respective cases?

2. How many named in the revelations were not prosecuted and for what reason?

3. With the termination of the 30 years during which secret documents are not revealed, for what reason is an exception being made in connection with his revelations?

Parliament has a right to that information, even though it might be uncomfortable for the government.

Also, on November 14 I placed question No. 576 on the order paper. It reads as follows:

1. Was an order made that files containing secret or security information were not to be released until the expiry of 30 years and, if so, on what date?

2. Has the government decided that all files in connection with the Gouzenko revelations of 1945-46 shall not be released now and, if so, for what reason and on what basis?

3. Is the government aware of a press report that the reason given for non-production is "That they might hurt some people now living"?

4. Were any such individuals then or thereafter or since cabinet ministers?

This series of questions does not require very much research. In every case this House has been denied the information; it has been delayed six or seven weeks. Why? If the government has nothing to hide, why hide it? What has happened here is a flagrant disregard and denial of parliament. There can be no excuse, excepting that the government does not want to reveal this information before the general election expected by me to be in April. Incidentally, I predicted that time for the election last October.

I want to have these questions answered. It may be understandable that there is diffidence on the part of the government to reveal the answers, but there is nothing in those questions which is not in the government's files and known to the government. I rise at this time simply to say that if we cannot receive information on matters which may be uncomfortable or even understandably viewed with suspicions by the government, then we might as well close down parliament. There have been some six, seven and eight weeks with no answers. I bring this to the attention of the House and I shall continue to do so regularly because I want this information before the election and not after.

• (1210)

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to draw those observations to the attention of my colleague, the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader. If I may just briefly respond, we do attempt to do this work as quickly, as efficiently and as effectively as possible. Last year I recall, when answering for my colleague on several occasions, that we ran fairly currently at a rate of somewhere between 80 per cent to 90 per cent of answers given to the current list of questions as they existed from week to week on the order paper.

The right hon. member referred to the questions he had placed on the order paper, starred questions, as being fairly simple questions. That may be, but I can assure him, as I am sure hon. members of this House know, that not all questions on the order paper are simple. Some are very complex and very involved and require a few days and often months of research by officials to locate, collate and bring the right information forward to the House.

I will take notice of the right hon. member's remarks and draw them to the attention of my colleague, as I have said. I can assure him we will attempt to get all the available answers to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It should have been a minister answering, not a parliamentary secretary.

CANADA REFERENDUM ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR HOLDING OF REFERENDUMS ON CONSTITUTION

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 12, 1978, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde (for Mr. Reid) that Bill C-9, respecting public referendums in Canada on questions relating to the Constitution of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, let me continue the remarks I commenced late in the evening of December 12 when we last had a one-day opportunity to consider this measure. This is very important legislation in respect of which it now appears obvious, following that one-day debate, that the old alliance is once again appearing in parliament prior to an election. That old alliance, as you will recall, existed between 1972 and 1974 in respect of important issues this government brought forward in legislation at times when there was a serious prospect of the government being removed from office. The government was then invariably supported by my friends to the left in the New Democratic Party. We are again experiencing an example of that kind of "me-tooism". In fact, one person said to me, I think in jest, that once again the NDP was acting as a fellow traveller on the road with the government.

I am glad the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is here as I intend to address myself to this legislation in terms of its implications for provinces such as Saskatchewan, and in terms of the rights and regional interests of certain parts of Canada.

I think it is of the greatest importance to determine precisely what this legislation does, its extent and its scope in terms of the issue before us today involving the province of Quebec. From the introductory remarks and the remarks of various spokesmen on behalf of the government, including those of members of the NDP, it has become clear that this legislation is being brought forward for one purpose only, and that is to deal with the situation that now exists in the province of Quebec. No one has suggested, for example, that we have this bill before us because of the existence of a western Canada separatist party. No one has suggested we have this legislation before us because of an Acadian problem in Atlantic Canada. It is before us for one reason and that is the problem which exists in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am not going to become involved in a debate with the hon. member as I only have 20 minutes left. However, we are not talking in terms of any political party, however small it might be, in the province of New Brunswick. My colleague will know that some candidates ran during the last election with a separatist bent. We are simply dealing with this legislation now because of the situation in Quebec and we should analyse this bill from that point of view.

When we look at this bill we find it goes far beyond that problem and in fact introduces a new device for constitutional change. I am glad to note that the newly appointed Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Reid) has finally taken his seat in the House during the course of this debate. I should have thought he would be in attendance constantly during the debate, but I appreciate the fact that he is now here.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret interrupting the hon. member and I do not wish to be argumentative; I simply want to set the record straight. I know he is not trying to create a new issue, I am sure of that. I simply want to tell him that no party in New Brunswick during the last election ran on a separatist platform. There is a party in New Brunswick called Le Parti Acadien. Its aim is not to separate from Canada but to have a separate province of Acadia and remain in Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate hearing from the apologist of that particular group from the province of New Brunswick. I realize now that he acts as their spokesman.

Let me speak in terms of this legislation which in fact does create—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, will you tell them to keep quiet, please?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, for all the world—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has the floor and I suggest we listen to him. We might all learn something.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is good advice, sir. I wish whoever it was that installed the buzz saw at the back of the other side of this chamber would remove it.

This bill goes far beyond the particular problems we are facing today vis-à-vis the province of Quebec. It introduces a new device for constitutional change in respect of our provinces. I have some misgivings about this legislation which I should like to outline as quickly as possible within the limited time at my disposal. I hope the intervention by the hon. member opposite is not taken from my time.

Let me express certain misgivings I have because of this clearly very wide-ranging piece of legislation. As a result of statements by the responsible minister, and I say that in the legal sense as opposed to the actual sense, I have very serious misgivings as to how far this government intends to go with this legislation. Some of the clauses of this bill, specifically clause 3(1), provide in fact that referenda may be used for the discussion of constitutional matters. It is not a question of separation by any province, but a question of any constitutional matter. Clause 3 provides:

● (1220)

(1) Where it appears to the governor in council that any question relating to the Constitution of Canada or relating to or arising out of a proposed or possible change in the Constitution of Canada is of sufficient importance to warrant obtaining the opinion of electors on that question, the governor in council may, by proclamation, direct that the opinion of electors be obtained on that question by putting the question to the electors of Canada or of one or more provinces specified in the proclamation at a referendum called for that purpose.

Therefore, the government will define any question relating to the constitution, whether proposed or possible changes and whether in fact the matter is of sufficient importance. That is the reality of our parliamentary system. This power as to what issue is constitutional and of sufficient importance is left solely in the hands of the government of the day.

This government says that they are simply setting up the mechanics of a referendum and that parliament will be consulted. They then make provision for consultation, but is it a matter of introducing a bill where every aspect can be debated, or of using the normal parliamentary device and procedure of referring it to a committee before which parties or parliamentarians who are affected may come and argue their case, whether it be pro or con? What we have in this bill is the provision that we will magnanimously receive the opportunity to debate a resolution for 40 hours.

The leader of the New Democratic Party was ecstatic. He thinks that this is an amazing opportunity for us to examine the question with respect to the particular referendum. I suggest that that particular provision in itself is enough for people seriously to question this bill. Parliament in effect is being excluded from any specific question that has come foward with respect to a referendum in Canada. We know that the full extent of debate will be utilized by members supporting the government which put forward this legislation. There will be little opportunity for any minority points of view or for any dissent to be brought forward in the context of that kind of procedure.

I suggest that under the guise of bringing forward legislation, ostensibly to deal with the province of Quebec, the government is attempting to arm itself with powers regarding referenda and the concept of referenda in Canada. As a parliamentarian I resent that, because I was elected by my constituents from a particular area of Canada to talk in terms of their aspirations and hopes within Canada. I do not want the interests of my constituents to be diminished or sidetracked, even if the government offers 40 hours of debate in the House of Commons. How many members will have an opportunity of participating in that debate? We will have 288 members in this House after the next election. If one divides 40 by 288 one will get exactly the amount of time available to each member, and one can quickly see that that does not leave very much time for hon. members to speak on this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Two hundred and eighty-two.

Mr. Paproski: He knows that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I stand only second to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) on my figures.

Mr. Nystrom: The Tories are always wrong.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will deal with the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville very shortly, but I want to deal now with the government's intention with regard to this bill. To alleviate any doubt there might be in anybody's mind, I would like to quote from certain speeches made by ministers regarding this bill. In a speech made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) on the introduction of this bill, he said:

For instance: It could serve to acquaint the large majority of our citizens with the importance and character of proposals for constitutional changes and permit the people to express themselves directly on these proposals. Even if the proposals were supported by the great majority of federal and provincial governments and by the important political parties, such public participation on the process of constitutional change could be very valuable.

Further on in that same speech, he said:

Direct public involvement could also serve to guide the federal and provincial governments, should the process of constitutional revision ever become blocked.

At the conference of first ministers on the constitution last October, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

Once again, what will we do if once again we fail because one of us, or two of us, is not in agreement with the overwhelming majority? Do we just throw up our hands—let some constituent assembly made up of editorialists and professors and legal experts write the thing, we haven't been able to in 51 years, let's give it to somebody else? Or do we consult the people, as a suggestion that has sometimes been made?

The former minister of justice, who is now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), stated before the Senate and House of Commons committee on the constitution possible uses of the mechanism for a referendum. He said:

These options indeed contemplate the use of referenda in lieu of consent of parliament as well as in lieu of provincial legislatures. Second, a strong argument can be made for direct voter involvement in constitutional amendment, particularly when government are chronically unable to reach agreement.

Finally, the Prime Minister at a press conference indicated his use of referenda in terms of constitutional change. Theoretically, this government could, on a very broad and important range of issues dealing with constitutional matters of every type and of extreme importance, proceed to use this device as a very large club in terms of constitutional amendment provisions.

What of the interests of minority groups in this country? I was interested to hear the remarks of the leader of the New Democratic Party who, along with other members of his party, professes to be interested in minority rights. Does his party accept the proposition that the majority point of view shall prevail as implicit in the use of referenda? Is this somehow their idea of protecting the rights of minority groups across this country?

I ask the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, has he been consulted by his leader about this bill? Has the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) been consulted about this bill? Is there unanimity in their party with respect to this legislation? I challenge the hon. member to stand up and say that he has the full support of his party. I would like to know, for example, where the hon. member stands if the Government of Canada, with regard to our energy needs, decided that it will pursue the question of resource control and taxation in terms of constitutional authority and jurisdiction. What will happen then to the province of Saskatchewan if it has a minority point of view regarding the arrangement in 1930, where by the control of all natural resources was turned over to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and this arrangement is rescinded and the resources revert to the control of all Canada? Has Mr. Blakeney discussed this matter with the leader of the New Democratic Party? Is this a matter where they are on all fours, so to speak?

We know the New Democratic Party's position in the coming election. A former member of that party and a man who is on intimate terms with each of its members, Mr. Doug Fisher, wrote an article in which he pointed out that there is absolutely no dout where his party stands in terms of supporting parties in this House; that when it comes to the crunch his party will support the Liberal government and the Prime Minister of this country right down the line. I would like to hear from that party where they stand in terms of this particular bill. Is it just another example of their blind subservience and obedience to the great Liberal party of this country when it comes down to the crunch? I want to hear them in the next election speak about the right to and control of resources. Where will the New Democratic Party stand on that issue?

I know that the New Democratic Party, for example, has very close allegiance with the CLC. I suggest that on occasion the party should be renamed the "New McDermott Party". It is clear that the leader of the New Democratic Party is now relying very heavily on trade union leadership for support in the next election. What is going to happen when the leader of the New Democratic Party goes to Mr. McDermott and says that the government is under considerable pressure to include the right to work as a constitutional right in our country under a charter of rights? There is a substantial body of opinion in Canada that believes the right to work should be included in the constitution. I have met with a number of chambers of commerce that have made such representations to me, as I am sure they have to many other members. What is Mr. McDermott, the real leader of the New Democratic Party, going to say about that kind of referendum being held in Canada?

What is going to happen if there is a possibility of such a suggestion being endorsed by the majority of Canadians? Of course, then we would have to reconsider. The leader of the New Democratic Party says, "He will fight that. We have 40 whole hours to debate it in the House of Commons. You know what we can do in 40 hours, Mr. Speaker; we have demonstrated we can do it."

There are so many instances of possible abuse under the terms of this bill that I seriously question why any member of the House, including members of the government, should support it. The suggestion or the argument that the bill is limited in scope is preposterous. We are not dealing with a minor question such as whether someone's garbage is picked up in a municipality or whether a school should be built in one area of a province or another; we are dealing with matters of fundamental importance to our country. We are dealing with the constitution, which includes the question of rights, liberties and powers within our government. Let members on the government side remember that the role of parliament is to be a counterbalance against all-powerful governments.

If we in this parliament simply allow this kind of legislation—which arms governments, regardless of political stripe, with powers to involve the country in constitutional changes—to pass, then I say that regardless of on which side we sit we do a disservice to our constituents who have sent us there to represent them.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by dealing with a couple of other aspects of this bill.

Mr. Abbott: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Now we have the cutting and dashing Minister of National Revenue—the world traveller to India at public expense—trying to become involved in his usual way in these debates, speaking from a sitting position.

Mr. Abbott: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was talking to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), not heckling the hon. member who has the floor. If he wants to heckle me about travelling at public expense he should look to the performance of his own leader as he stumbled around the world.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the minister always has the appearance of heckling when he opens his mouth. If that is not what he was doing, then I apologize to him. Now that he has raised the matter I would point out that our leader paid for his own travel arrangements around the world. It was at our expense and was carried out with some greater degree of success than the trip to India that the minister made.

Miss MacDonald: Where he was going to give away our textiles.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to deal with the provisions of the bill if hon. members opposite will allow me to do so. I know they are very nervous about this legislation. In the usual way there has been a minimum of consultation about the bill in the party. Their members are never consulted; their function is to do as the Prime Minister tells them—to come here and jeer and applaud and support him in anything he may decide to do. I feel sorry for them and sympathize with their plight. They may be put out of their misery, however, after the next election, so I hope they enjoy doing what they are doing now.

I want to deal briefly with a couple of aspects of the bill, Mr. Speaker. The bill will set up the mechanism for referanda in this country. There are some questions that must be asked about this, however.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I have to inform him that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would merely inquire whether these interventions which were not of substance have been taken off my time. I think it only reasonable, if that be the case, that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Chair recognized that point and gave the hon. member an extra minute.

[Translation]

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to carry on the debate on a bill which in my opinion will be one of the most important to be considered by the House. It is a legislation which could play a predominant role in the constitutional debate and even in the existence of our country. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I cannot stress enough the significance of the legislation for us Quebeckers, my constituents in Quebec, and I know that I do not speak only for the Anglophones in Quebec but also for all Quebeckers who believe in a united Canada. It is essential that our federal government be in a position to protect the interests of Quebeckers in the face of the present threat, that is the referendum to be held by the Parti Québécois. Such is the object of the bill. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we hope that the debates in the House will rise above partisan considerations.

I was very disappointed to read the comments made by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) in connection with the bill. I even felt that her comments were demagogic. I would like to quote an example, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

At page 2039 of the Hansard for December 12, 1978, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands said:

> I do not find this legislation before us today to be in that spirit of honesty and forthrightness which this difficult subject demands. I see this legislation as being devious, dangerous and even deceptive. It purports to be an act respecting public referendums in Canada on questions relating to the Constitution of Canada. It is, instead, a blatant attempt to subvert and undermine the responsibilities and duties of the Canadian system of responsible government.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the contrary is true. She is looking for non-existent motivations in that bill. As we often say, she is looking for difficulties where there are none.

● (1240)

[English]

Mr. Paproski: You haven't been around here long enough.

Mr. Johnston (Westmount): I expect to be around here a long time.

I must emphasize the point that we in the province of Quebec, no matter which language we speak, are understandably sensitive to this particular issue. We want this law. My constituents are not interested in debating points or in playing partisan politics on a matter of this importance.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I wish the opposition would take the same approach.

[English]

During the course of my campaign as recently as last autumn, I found that one of the concerns of the people of the province of Quebec of whatever policitical stripe is what the federal government has done to help in the critical situation in which we find ourselves. This is a serious matter which I can understand members from other parts of Canada perhaps not being sensitive to.

Unfortunately many of the people in Quebec, probably like many other people across this country, fail to appreciate the nature of the federal system. They look to the federal government as having some magical, superior powers with which to deal with such problems and with Bill 101. Of course, that is not the case. Here we have before us a proposed law through which all members of this House can do something as a federal government for the people of the province of Quebec who are at this moment menaced, whose rights are threatened and who are also threatened with being separated from the rest of Canada, perhaps through the use of a referendum being proposed by the provincial government.

This is one of the few legal steps we can take and one of the few concrete things we can do to demonstrate the fact that we will not let the people of Quebec be the victims of a referendum on a question posed which is ambiguous, unfair or meaningless. I do not believe that this law will ever be used. I have more confidence in my government of Quebec as a resident of that province than to think that the government of Quebec will put forward a question deliberately designed to fool the people of that province into providing a yes answer to a trumped-up question.

The existence of this law is very important to me, Mr. Speaker, and it is very important to the people in my riding. I suspect the same holds true of all of the people across the province of Quebec. I would be very surprised if Conservative candidates and members of parliament from Quebec were to take the attitude taken by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands because they are not threatened with separation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is our country too.

An. hon. Member: Who do you think you are?

Mr. Johnston (Westmount): There are six million people in the province of Quebec, six million Canadians, and they have to be our concern. Most of those Canadians want this law.

An hon. Member: What about sovereignty association?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston (Westmount): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not interrupt the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Westmount has the floor. I suggest we listen to him.

Mr. Johnston (Westmount): Often in Quebec and elsewhere in this country I find a misconception in that we have grown so regional in our thinking. Some people outside the province of Quebec seem to have grown insensitive to the fact that, as I have said, there are over six million people at the moment who are faced with a referendum. This referendum will be conducted by a provincial government. Surely we are not to deny the federal government the right to conduct similiar referenda on any subject of constitutional importance.

I do not understand the basis for the objections of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, which I have read, but I will come back to that in a moment.

The fact is that today we often focus attention on Alberta. Alberta is a region. What is important about Alberta? Why we care about Alberta is the fact that there are approximately 1.8 million Canadians in that province, according to the 1976 census. There are approximately 2.8 million Canadians on the island of Montreal and there are as many Canadians that are faced with this menace from the province of Quebec as there are Canadians west of Ontario in the western provinces, including British Columbia.

Let us not lose sight and perspective of what we are dealing with. We are dealing with a very serious and real threat. It is very important to us in the province of Quebec that this law is put in place and put in place soon.

I noticed that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in his comments made on December 12 said that we should not move hastily. I do not think haste should be used in the adoption of any law of this importance. I think we should all work together in a non-partisan way to produce a law that is going to afford the kind of protection to Canadians who live in the province of Quebec which they require.

This bill is consultative. This bill permits the Government of Canada to take the pulse of the Canadian population. This bill cannot bring about fundamental constitutional change. This bill could be referred to, as we often refer to the Quebec referendum bill, as a sophisticated public opinion poll. What more can be read into it than that? Is the opposition saying to us that we are not to know what the Canadian people feel about particular constitutional issues? Would they also like to muzzle private polls, Gallup polls, and Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen polls which I receive regularly, to find out what business people are thinking in certain areas of the country and communities? That is what this poll is for. Are we to deny the people of Canada the right to express their opinions on matters of this kind?

I would be quite in agreement with the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar and with the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands if this situation were to be in any way binding upon parliament. I agree that that would be a denial of the parliamentary democratic system. I am sure everyone would agree with that, and the leader of the New Democratic Party stated it categorically during the course of his comments.

I find this debate quite extraordinary in that I find nothing in this bill other than the right of the federal government, after very substantial debate, in fact more debate than is allowed under the referendum bill of the province of Quebec, to put a question to the Canadian people or to one part of the country for their opinion. It can relate to anything contitutional, but it is certainly not going to change the entrenched provisions of any of our constitutional laws, particularly when it is not binding on this parliament. So there is nothing devious. There is nothing dangerous. I find it extraordinary that the Canadian people should be denied this right.

Accordingly I feel that the debate is somehow getting off track and into areas of partisan politics where it should not be. It is not that kind of legislation. I might also say that the consultative process is very important. However, there may be other ways we can go as well. This kind of referendum bill is certainly one of them.

I felt on this whole question of constitutional debate that we should have involved the muncipalities. I regard municipalities as having an important voice. I know that the Canadian Federation of Municipalities believes it has an important voice and should be speaking on constitutional issues and be at the negotiating table. In a very few years approximately 80 per cent of this country will be urbanized. The powers and the responsibilities of our municipalities are very great. In 1976 municipalities spent 23 per cent of government expenditures in Canada. They should be involved in a very real way. So this is another area of consultation that we should be looking at.

I say the more consultation with our constituencies, the better. That is why I go back to my riding to find out what the people are thinking. Apparently the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar prefers not to know what Canada is thinking. I want to know what Canada is thinking on these constitutional issues. I like to know what the mayors and the aldermen are thinking and what problems they have. The more input we have, the better. In the particular issue before us the immediate problem we have is a situation in the province of Quebec which is threatening.

● (1250)

In conclusion, I as a member from Quebec want to underline the significance of this legislation. I ask the opposition parties to share the concern of their fellow Canadians. I cannot emphasize the importance of not permitting this debate to degenerate into bickering and partisan politicking. I ask them to reconsider their views and the impact they can have.

I see nothing in this bill that can in any way be detrimental to the parliamentary democratic process. I prefer that a structure exist that can deal with all constitutional questions and the financing of all referenda so that provision will not have to come up if a referendum is indeed to be debated in this House. It can be debated now and the mechanism put in place so that it will be there for all of us.

At the moment we are dealing with an issue in the province of Quebec. In the future who knows what issue we will want to take the pulse of Canada on in this area of constitutional reform, which is so terribly important to all of us.

With those comments I will terminate my intervention in this debate. I repeat, my point of view may be somewhat different from that of members of the opposition. I put before them the point of view of someone directly involved with the problems of the Quebec referendum. I see nothing in their arguments that lead me to believe that this bill should undergo any alteration whatsoever. I am a listener. I do not believe I am partisan. However, in the arguments I have heard, as we often say in Quebec—

[Translation]

There is nothing there.

[English]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely appalled. I am also extremely happy to follow the hon. member for Westmount (Mr. Johnston). I would like to have seen the text of what he said because I cannot believe what he was saying, that this arm, tool, instrument or sword will never be used. Then why involve this House in a debate?

If as the hon. member for Westmount has indicated—and it is obvious from the way things have been developing—the problem of the separation of Quebec is the focus or feature that this government wants to attack, why the hell have they not been honest enough to say so?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Why have they not produced a referendum in the terms that they feel will be required to be used?

The other absolutely incredible statement made by the hon. member for Westmount was this: "Why are you going to deprive us of the instrument to make a sounding across Canada, so that we can disregard it?" They are not even going to use it when they get it.

Do they not know what Canada wants? I know what Canada wants. Canada wants to stay together. I take a back seat to no one in this House or in this country on my record for this country as a whole from coast to coast to coast. Now, put that in your buzz saw and buzz it a bit! I have proved that three times. The first time I proved it was the time when one member in particular in this House could not prove it. I was prepared to put on a uniform and prove it. Thank God there are more of us around this House who did that.

I also proved it when I proudly represented this country abroad up to the point when my pride in my country began to wither in the face of the policies of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his minions behind him. I had to resign. I could not represent the policies being negotiated by this Prime Minister and this government.

The third time I proved my desire to keep this country together was when I took the oath of office as a member of this House to represent my constituency. If anyone here feels they have to go beyond this oath, they should be ashamed.

Let us make no mistake. This is one of the most important debates facing this country. It is certainly the most important debate that has taken place since I have been in parliament. Let there be no doubt that we are embarked today on constitutional reform and institutional reform as well. That is certainly the way we are proceeding.

I ask myself this: should any government with the record of this government be given the right to introduce constitutional amendment or institutional reform of this general, sweeping nature and significance when, (a) it is in the final days of its mandate, and (b) it has such a dismal record of performance, bringing this country to its knees? During its ten years in office, this government has managed to drag this country down in a manner that no one would have thought possible ten or 11 years ago.

Miss MacDonald: The task force said it yesterday.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): As my colleague said, the task force said it yesterday. I wish to read from page 16 of the task force document which was praised yesterday by the Prime Minister. In the fifth paragraph, on page 16 of this document, I read the following words:

> Another factor concerns the central government itself. Fifteen years ago—

That was 1963. Let's remember what happened in 1963:

> —it stood high in the minds of a large number of Canadians, and was widely regarded with respect and a feeling of loyalty. Even those who felt little loyalty to it at least respected its efficiency and competence. Today, that is much less true; "Ottawa", as we found on our tour, is for many Canadians synonymous with all that is to be deplored about modern government—a remote, shambling bureaucracy that exacts tribute from its subjects and gives little in return.

I could not have said it better myself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, when I called it one o'clock I was being challenged to read on in the quotation I had already started. I see no reason why I should not read on. I was referring to the report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity. The first part of it describes how Ottawa, in the minds of so many, is synonymous with all that is to be deplored about modern government. I continue with the quotation I was reading:

> We recognize that this is an unfair stereotype, and that in another 15 years the pendulum may have swung back to the other extreme;

I emphasize the word "may". If this government were in power for another 15 years there would never be a chance—there wouldn't even be a pendulum to swing.

> This view of such a widespread appeal today is one of the significant elements which must be borne in mind in any attempt to improve our situation.

We must recognize that. This government does have a deplorable record.

Let us just turn our attention for a few minutes to 1967. Look at our history as it has developed from that time. In 1967, when we were at the peak of our self-confidence and enthusiasm, there was nothing which we in this country could not do. We were, perhaps, a trifle overconfident; I am prepared to admit that. There was not, perhaps, that dash of humility we needed to temper our approach to the future. Maybe that is why we are in trouble today. We lack humility, like certain other people we know in the House who have none of it. Yet genuine enthusiasm existed in those days.

● (1410)

There was enthusiasm to spare about the future, and with good reason. Our material resources were virtually limitless. Perhaps we lacked matching human resources in terms of quantity, but that really meant we would be longer developing that future in the days ahead of us. The only way in 1967 was up, we thought. Now look at us. Only 11 years later unemployment weighs heavily upon us, inflation destroys our earnings and makes us despair of the future. The Auditor General, an officer of this parliament, can see that parliament has lost control of its expenditures, and our national community lies in shreds before our eyes.

We had everything going for us in 1967, and now nothing is going right. We are hopelessly in debt and getting in deeper daily. What have we to pass on to the generations that follow but a monstrous burden of debt? This government has brought us to this pass and it has the nerve to suggest that it should be entrusted with a mandate at this late stage in its career to reconstruct and reconstitute the institutions of this country in such a broad, general manner, institutions and an economy that have been mauled so grievously.

I think it is time we took a very close look at this particular bill and its terms. The first thing that will strike us is that it does not set up machinery for just any kind of a referendum. It is not designed to find out what I or anybody else in Canada think about the death penalty or about abortion. In fact, such matters are specifically excluded from its ambit, the whole thrust being constitutional reform and constitutional terms. Therefore, it is by way of being a constitutional bill.

It is also aimed, as we shall see, at the Quebec referendum. We heard that pretty clearly from the hon. member for Westmount. But how sharp is the aim, Mr. Speaker? That too we should look at. In essence, the bill proposes a new dimension for political consultation in Canada on matters relating to the constitution of this country. As such it would be introducing, as I suggested, far-reaching institutional changes in our political structure.

Another feature which I hasten to bring to your attention is that the bill bypasses provincial legislatures, provincial governments and provincial electorates on matters which are within the provincial sphere of interest and jurisdiction. In this connection I think it is worth citing an extract from the communiqué issued on April 14, 1978 by the western premiers conference in Yorkton. It starts out by saying that:

> Last week the federal government introduced in the House of Commons the Canada Referendum Act. Section 3 of the bill provides a referendum can be held on "any question relating to the Constitution of Canada or relating to or arising out of a proposed or possible change in the Constitution of Canada."
> While the western premiers agreed that it may be desirable for governments to have the machinery to conduct plebiscites on certain matters from time to time, they strongly caution against any attempt by the federal government to substitute this machinery for the settlement of constitutional questions long recognized by constitutional practice and precedents as requiring the approval and consent of every provincial government.

Are we going to override the mandate of one of the constituent parts of this country?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have to ask why the Prime Minister is intent on going so far in generalities. The main constitutional issue of concern to Canadians at this time is undoubtedly that of the splitting up of our country, which is the aim of the PQ movement in the province of Quebec. Let us recognize that fact clearly and simply. The only referendum question that the government needs to pursue is therefore that of separation. So why introduce such a complicated bill as Bill C-9 and include in it a clause worded as follows, and I quote:

> Where it appears to the governor in council that any question relating to the Constitution of Canada or relating to or arising out of a proposed or possible change in the Constitution of Canada is of sufficient importance to warrant obtaining the opinion of electors on that question, the governor in council may, by proclamation, direct that the opinion of electors be obtained on that question by putting the question to the electors of Canada or of one or more provinces specified in the proclamation . . .

Why dodge the issue? Why indeed? The constitutional question which we will need to answer in the next few years is the following: Are we going to live in a federal system, as one country coast to coast, or are we going to let this territorial, federal and political entity be split up? That is the question. That is the question which the hon. member for Westmount (Mr. Johnston) put a moment ago. So let us have a bill which would allow this question to be put to the Canadian people across the country. But let us not come into the House with this multiple choice thing which the government is offering in the form of Bill C-9.

[English]

Bearing these particular considerations in mind, we have to examine what sort of constitutional questions are raised or could be raised by a referendum under the terms of this bill. I bet there are many people over there who have never read the bill, and I think it is worth citing clause 2 of the bill, which reads as follows. It defines the Constitution of Canada on which questions could be posed in the following terms:

—(a) the customs, conventions and enactments that comprise the Constitution of Canada,—

It is worded in an elliptical sort of way because it defines it in its own terms. Customs, conventions and enactments are worth remembering. Also:

—(b) the political and judicial institutions and processes of Canada,— are defined in this clause. In other words, a referendum could be taken on any of these matters if any of them or several of them should be "of sufficient importance" in the eyes of the government to warrant consultation.

We are bound to ask ourselves a few questions, such as what is meant by customs. I am not talking about the customs tariff, or anything like that, but rather about customs under the constitution. Is majority rule meant by that? Is it federal-provincial meetings? They are customs, not law. But what about conventions? What conventions might be submitted to a referendum? Would there be a referendum on how to amend the federal constitution? That is still being worked out and there is barely a convention in sight, although there was one once. Would there be a referendum on how to appoint a cabinet? Would there be one on how to select senators and judges? Those are conventions. As to enactments, even enactments can be submitted to a referendum. Would the various acts creating the provinces be submitted to a referendum? What about the Supreme Court Act and the Canadian Bill of Rights?

Then we come to the second portion, political institutions. What political institutions does the government propose to submit to a referendum? Would it be the general election or freedom of the press? What about judicial institutions such as courts of law? What about judicial processes? What does the government have in mind? Does it have in mind trial by jury or the right of an accused to be represented by legal counsel? Is that what the government is trying to do, submit these to referenda?

That is what it is trying to do in this bill. The bill has a shotgun approach. While it is true that none of these questions can be put to a referendum before being debated in the form of a resolution in this House, with limited debate of 40 hours, governments with majorities such as the present one have been known before now, and within my recollection of only six years in the House, to force through legislation or a resolution in the face of widespread political opposition in parliament and across the country. Does Your Honour remember capital punishment?

Bill C-9 is being touted as the Liberal government's response to the Quebec referendum proposal. If such should be the case, let the Prime Minister and the government be honest and say so. Why has Bill C-9 been cast in such general terms? Why is it not aimed specifically at the potential threat of separation which Mr. Lévesque and the Péquiste movement in the province of Quebec are doing their best to cultivate in that province to the detriment of my country? Why does it not say what it means to say? From my reading of Bill C-9, it seems to have adopted the shotgun approach rather than the single shot approach to a very worrisome question. I do not deny that it is a worrisome question. At this stage in its mandate, I am wondering whether the government has a licence to carry any kind of firearm, whether it be a shotgun or a rifle. Let the government go to the country. Let the issue be specific and go to the country. Therefore, I am wondering whether Bill C-9 is nothing but an exercise possibly in blackmail.

According to the hon. member for Westmount, it is a pure exercise, and the results of it will never be used; we can ignore the results. We are not here to exercise our virtuosity in debating useless bills which will not be used. We are here for a specific purpose, that of setting conditions which will permit the country to develop to its full potential. Yet this sort of nonsense comes before us. It is proposed in the name of one minister when the other minister, in whose name it ought to be, was not in the House to talk to it. He was not in the House when it was introduced, but I am glad to see him present now.

When anything is said concerning federal-provincial relations, who carries the can? It is not the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Reid). Who presided over the discussions in Vancouver? It was not the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. It was the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde), and he is a sham. The entire matter is a sham.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I should correct the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) because I know he would not want knowingly to make a mistake. There was no one chairman of this meeting in Vancouver. It was co-chaired by the Minister of Justice of Canada and the attorney general of Saskatchewan.

Also I may add that when the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) was the minister of justice of Canada, he was a co-chairman. The rules set out by the premiers provided that the co-chairmanship would be the Minister of Justice of Canada and the attorney general of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am glad the record has been put straight. We realize where the sham lies. Apparently the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations had no part to play in the meeting in Vancouver, any more than he has here. However, I hope he and the Minister of Justice will be given opportunities by the government House leader to take part in the debate. I hope they will have something to say when they participate. Perhaps the Minister of Justice is drawing up the list.

I must ask myself whether this is a purely cosmetic exercise, a gesture aimed at keeping attention focused on one part of Canada's problems, for example, by saying to Mr. Lévesque, "If you try anything with your referendum, we will do you one better". I remember singing a great song which has a wonderful tune: "Anything You Can Do, I Can Do Better". This particular bill does not do anything better; it does it a great deal worse.

Are these big stick politics likely to be effective? Have we not had enough confrontation? Has nothing been learned by the government arising from the Kingston meeting held by my leader? At that meeting co-operation and consultation were the spirit of the day, not confrontation. Must we put up with this any longer? Is confrontation the correct approach to constituent governments in a federal system? That is a basic question. Once again attention is focused on one particular question. In any event, it is time to look at something somewhat broader than the Quebec issue. That was all the hon. member for Westmount could talk about, but there are other issues in Canada which are vitally important.

Quebec is not alone in seeking a redefinition of the terms and conditions of its association with its fellow provinces and with Canada as a whole. Unlike the other provinces, Quebec has thrown in another word, "sovereignty". The sovereignty notion was put there by Quebec alone. The rest of Canada rejects sovereignty. Canada is one country. It is my country, and I will see that it stays one country.

Dealing with "association", the second part of that double-barrelled operation we hear so much about, it is a different matter. Every province in the country wants to have a look at the terms of association with its fellow provinces, the federal government and the federal authority. That is fair enough, and that is what constitutional reform is all about. How many hon. members have looked at the word "constitution"? It is a simple word. It merely means how our country is constituted. It is not very well constituted now, partly because of the confrontational tactics of the Prime Minister and the policies and failures of the government. The constitution of the country deserves re-examination, but it will not be done through a referendum on broad terms like this one. I hope the government is really serious and is not just bringing this bill forward as part of its electoral campaign, which I suspect is the only reason.

This morning we heard about other bills which the government has in mind, such as the Electricity Inspection Act, Bill C-13. Boy, that will be a dinger! At no time did I hear the government House leader say Bill C-9 would be on the floor of this House until it goes to committee. I was wondering, as a matter of fact, whether the government House leader was going to come into the House after lunch and say we will go to the electricity bill this afternoon. We do not even know that on Monday or Tuesday it is going to be seen.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

An hon. Member: It will be called Monday.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It will be called Monday? They are going to impose closure on Monday, I guess.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on; get serious.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am deadly serious. I have never been more serious in my life. My country is at stake and this bill is not going to save it. This bill could destroy it. It goes over the heads of the constituent members of this House. What a ridiculous suggestion, that I should get serious. I do not like that kind of talk from any side of the House, and I like it even less from people who cannot stand up on their own feet and get away from that man who has led this country into the morass. When are those lemmings over there going to get away from that man who has led them to the cliff? Is there not a man over there who will stand up and be counted?

An hon. Member: Now get serious.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Read the bill. I am serious; you are darned right I am serious. I have spoken about what this government has done to your country and mine. It is your country just as it is mine, so stand up and be counted.

An hon. Member: Say something original.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Boy, you did not do very well the other day with originality, did you? I know what it was in the past to proudly represent Canada abroad in the diplomatic service. Now I see that service torn apart, completely and utterly demoralized.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is true, unfortunately.

An hon. Member: What does this have to do with the bill?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It has a great deal to do with it. This government has brought my country, its public service and its diplomatic service into disrepute.

An hon. Member: It is the best diplomatic service in the world.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It was. How can they sit placidly by and allow a government with such a disastrous record as this one seek powers under this legislation that could spell the end of the country, a country which 11 short years ago on its one-hundredth birthday—

An hon. Member: Don't yell.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I do not think you have anything to tell me about how to represent Canada or how to be proud of my country. No one over there would dare do that. Eleven short years ago we stood proudly outside this building on this country's 100th birthday facing the world with confidence and hope. Look what has happened. I despair sometimes in attempting to reach my colleagues across the floor. Are they blind? Are they charismatized? That may be the right word. I reckon it is. They are charismatized; they are bedazzled. Have they no way of looking into the future in light of what has happened to us in the past? These are troubled times, they are worrisome times, and I do not like anybody over there asking me to be serious. I am deadly serious.

This bill is not needed in this form at this time or at any time. It is a dangerous bill. Let the representatives of Canada, those who were elected to speak for Canada and the Canadian people, stand up in this House and be counted, demanding explanations from this government as to why such sweeping powers are even being sought. If a specific issue is of concern, as we have been told, then let the referendum legislation be cast in terms of specific issues. Then we will look at it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-9 respecting referendums in Canada is designed to set up the necessary procedures for holding a vote on any controversial constitutional matter. Let us not delude ourselves: this bill is meant strictly to deal with the province of Quebec. For a long time now, at least Social Credit members have been calling for referendums, not necessarily on constitutional matters but on other matters which, to our mind, are every bit as important. We repeatedly called for a referendum, for instance, on capital punishment, but the government refused; it has never been willing to consult the Canadian people as a whole on such an important matter. Still, doubtless pressed by events, probably those of November, 1976, in Quebec, the government has grown alarmed and has decided to have a referendum policy; it has chosen to introduce a bill designed to thwart, if possible, the aims of the separatist government, or that claims to be separatist, in the province of Quebec.

It was especially after the election of November 15, 1976, that we heard a great many public figures make numerous speeches, statements and take a stand on national unity. However, instead of creating more national unity those same people, through most of their speeches and often their actions, managed to provoke even greater national discord because, Mr. Speaker, we are witnessing ever-growing misunderstanding between some Canadian provinces, or at least between one and the rest of the country, between one of the founding nations and the other; it seems that instead of looking for means to placate opposing views, an effort is being made to stoke the fire and stir up even greater dissension. Now, Mr. Speaker, impassioned statements or stay put speeches will never lead to the agreement and the harmony we wish for Canada.

There has been a great deal of talk about national unity. As far as I am concerned, national unity is a myth. When they talk about unity, they mean uniformity, a single option, a common voice. To my mind, we should stress, rather, national harmony. To that end, some representatives of various nationalities and religions could be made to work together towards the self-fulfilment of every Canadian citizen. This might seem like quibbling, Mr. Speaker, but such is not the case, since harmony means much more than unity. For example, a musical group consists of 20, 25 or 30 musicians playing together and producing pleasant and harmonious melodies. But it is clearly impossible to get the same sound out of them. So, in a country like Canada which is no longer made up of only two founding races but of many other ethnic groups which have even improved the very spirit of our country, Canada, I think we must try to live in harmony rather than attempt to achieve a kind of unity designed to cast everyone in the same mould.

Mr. Speaker, according to the drafters of this bill which would allow Canadians to take a personal part in the shaping of a renewed Canada, this is not the only answer, there are many others. But to have the Canadian people speak up, well, we do not know exactly what the government will do once Bill C-9 is passed. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that it will be, since the government has a majority. Even if all opposition parties opposed it, the bill would eventually be passed, but it is not the only way to allow Canadians to participate in the preparation or the drafting of a new constitution. Some meetings can be held at the government level; in fact, some are held at least once a year. There will be one in a few days. Now, Mr. Speaker, the first ministers who will meet in Ottawa at the beginning of next month are delegated by the population of their province precisely to negotiate, to discuss and reach a consensus on what the Canadian constitution should contain, the constitution that will replace the British North America Act under which Canada was administered since its foundation.

This measure stems mostly from the government's wish to get some working mechanism or means of propaganda, rather, similar to that used by the Quebec government in the present controversy over the country's future. According to rumours and to statements from the present Quebec government, it will benefit from a powerful propaganda machine to sell its position on the future of the province.

The purpose of Bill C-9 is precisely to give the federal government means of propaganda similar to those the province of Quebec has, probably to counterbalance that great debate which will be taking place when? We do not know exactly yet. The date of the referendum in the province of Quebec has not yet been set. We are told that it will be in 1979. If the federal election is called early this year, in early spring, we will probably have that referendum in the fall. We saw, particularly last year, that there was a fight going on between Quebec Premier Lévesque and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as to who would hold the federal election or the referendum first. It seems that the Prime Minister is losing the battle because his margin of manoeuvre is much more limited than that of the premier of the province of Quebec.

So, Mr. Speaker, despite that more or less legitimate objective the government hoped to incorporate four basic principles in drafting the bill. They wanted above all to impose financial controls to ensure a fair and open debate. Furthermore, the bill was to give the referendum process the same level of integrity as the election process. Third, it was intended to respect the federal nature of Canada without giving the federal parties or groups any advantage over their provincial counterparts. Finally, procedures should be as simple and as clear as possible. And in the course of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will try to determine to what extent the government has managed to incorporate those objectives in the wording of Bill C-9 respecting public referendums in Canada on questions relating to the Constitution of Canada.

The government limits the scope of referendums only to constitutional matters. It proposes a major legislation paper in which a large number of procedures are discussed in detail. For example, the limits on referendum expenses, the eligibility to vote in the referendum, the air time given opposing groups and federal and provincial parties—in short, the government is about to set up sophisticated structures relating to the referendum. Unfortunately the government restricts the areas where that new legislation will apply. Yet that consultative process of the people could put an end once and for all to several other debates of national importance including, for example, the question of the death penalty that I mentioned earlier.

The result of the referendum would not in any way oblige the government to respect the opinion expressed by the public. That is clearly spelled out in Bill C-9. Mr. Speaker, what would happen if the answer to the referendum of the government of Quebec were to be positive and the one to the federal referendum in that province and on the same issue were to be negative? None of the speeches we have heard so far from members of the government referred to that possibility. What would the federal government decide then? Which referendum would prevail over the other, the provincial one or the federal one? Who would decide on that? The Supreme Court? If it is to be so, I think we already know what the answer would be. Mr. Speaker, these are questions we have a right to ask because it is obvious that we are heading toward two referenda. The Quebec government will hold a referendum. The federal government will also hold one on the same subject, and probably in the same province, since I believe that it is up to the province of Quebec to determine its own future within confederation. It is not up to the people of British Columbia or Newfoundland to decide whether Quebec should leave confederation or not. I believe that should be left to the people of Quebec. And if the people of the rest of Canada insist that Quebec remain in the Canadian confederation, I believe that it is not by making speeches, but rather by taking concrete action that they will convince Quebeckers to remain in Canada.

[Mr. Laprise.]

• (1450)

My colleague, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), has stated this very clearly yesterday when he commented on the Pepin-Robarts report on the Canadian constitution. He warned the government. He told the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what should be done to make Quebec or any other province of Canada wish to remain within the Canadian confederation.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that under Bill C-9, the results of the referendum would in no way force the government to act according to the views of the public. The referendum remains an opinion poll. The government could arbitrarily choose to be bound or not by its results. This means that the government could continue to apply the policy established before the referendum. It also means that if the government had decided before the referendum to take any step necessary to prevent Quebec from leaving confederation and if the people of Quebec voted for separation from the rest of Canada, the federal government could decide to take other action, to use force or to call in the armed forces, for instance. Even if the results of the federal referendum were negative, the government would not feel bound by this decision and could take the action it had decided on before the referendum. And this in spite of the views expressed. We can therefore have serious doubts as to the legitimacy of a purely advisory referendum.

The question asked in the referendum must call for an answer expressed as a "yes" or a "no" as this will simplify the summing up of the votes and reduce confusion among voters. Subclause 3(3)(b) provides for the possibility of asking a question presenting several choices. On that point, Mr. Speaker, I think we should agree that in the event of a referendum the questions must be worded clearly to allow for an answer by "yes" or "no" which indicates clearly to the government the decision which the voters have arrived at in taking part in the referendum. The residents in the province of Quebec are now left wondering. They have yet to know what will be the question in the referendum or how it will be worded. Will it be a brief, clear and plain question or merely a question asking for authorization to negotiate sovereignty association?

Mr. Speaker, an answer at this moment to such a question would be very embarrassing because it would look very much for instance like a vote requested by labour unions before negotiating collective agreements. A union usually asks for a vote of confidence. It asks for the support of its membership. It requests the right to call a strike in order to be in a strong bargaining position before management. Having obtained the right to call a strike, the union then comes up with so many demands that management has to turn them down and it is then that the union will start a strike.

So if the question on the Quebec referendum is put this way, after having obtained an affirmative answer, namely a mandate to negotiate with the rest of the provinces or the rest of Canada, the government of Quebec will then present so many conditions that the rest of Canada or the provinces will have to say no. It will then be very simple, the separation of Quebec will have become a fact. There lies then the danger of having one or several controversial issues in the context of a referendum.
