London, Aug. 4.—The steamer Dione which was sunk by the large iron steamer Camden in the Thames, off Gravesend, on Saturday night, had a great many pleasure passengers aboard. The collision occurred about midnight, when it was clear and the moon shining. The Dione's port side was stove in and the vessel keeled over and sank in two minutes. Those who were saved rushed on deck and jumped overboard half-dressed, and were saved or rescued by tugs. The scenes are described as terrible and heart-rending. Ladies implored men to save their children, and plored men to save their children, and many women were carrying infants. One placed her infant on a crate, the crate drifted away, but was found off Thames haven with the infant alive and sound. The captain of the Dione was badly hurt.

London, Aug. 4.—A collision at sea oc eurred between the British brigs Belle Star from Nova Scotia for Queenstown and the Richard Owens from Cardiff for St. Johns. The latter was sunk and four of her crew were drowned. The rest were saved.

Let them do anything else, take any shape but that. Suppose, now, that colonial members were given seats in the house of commons. Of course the house of commons of course the house of commons. Of course the house of commons of course the house of course the house of commons of course the house of commons of the house of course the house the colonial members were given seats in the house of commons. Of course this could not be except the colonies resigned their present powers, and left all tariff questions in the hands of the imperial confederated parliament. That deed once done, it would quickly appear deed once done, it would quickly appear amounted to just nothing at all. Birmingham, Sheffield, Manchester, Leeds and Glasgow would with a touch of the little finger over balance all Canada and Australia together on tariff matters. But suppose that, in addition to seats in the commons, colonists were called upon to sit as "lords," too. Why, the last spark of colonial independence would be gone; we would not have a single public man left to say a word for us. Fancy Sir John, with a few of his particular friends, also Mr. Blake, with a few of his, taking a seat in "new nationality," or anything of the sort. She would be back again to where she was before William Lyon Mackenzie raised the banner of responsible government, and when the demand here for real, bona fide parliamentary institutions was

In details as well as in the general principle, it is the substance and not the shadow that we are driving at.

In England the power of "vested interests" to hold their own, and a great deal more than their own, too, has long been one of the most conspicuous facts of history. The expression has so far been used with reference to the landed aristocracy and the church mainly; though other "interests" also have made their power felt. A recent instance is the success of the railway interest in throwing out the Manches ter ship canal bill. The bill passed the committee of the lords, but the commons' committee threw it out. From which we may infer that it is not the monopolists of land, but the monopolists of trade and traffic, who are the real enemies of such

The sisters of charity, especially, have conquered all a relic of the middle ages, of small use then and greatly diminished use in these hearts by their devotion to the sick and suffering, and have put their official enemies to shame.

As is customary at this season, many of our contemporaries urge that swimming should be taught in the schools. There are more things taught in the schools now than are of practical benefit, and we fail to see how this idea is to be carried out in the vast majority of sections. Parents and guardians should certainly see to this matter themselves. Any boy will soon learn the house of lords. Canada would be no longer a practically independent colony, a "new nationality," or anything of the not learn to swim under the guidance of adult friends, either in swimming baths, where there are such, or in streams or ponds where there are not. "Mr. Stuart is rich and handsome;" here she sighed without any known reason. "Phœbe ought to marry himshe must do it-and let that stupid John Barnard go. I am sure-positively sure, Victor Stuart would suit her best, and I will make the match." It was Sunday afternoon, and Jean sa out under a big oak tree in the front yard. A book lay on the grass beside her, and a little crippled chicken, rescued from the horse lot, nestled in a fold of her buff linen

She was a supple, slender girl, oliveskinned, grey-eyed and black-haired, and just bordering on 18.

With the calm confidence of inexperience and positive ignorance, she had made up her mind to meddle in a very delicate mather mind to meddle in a very delicate matter—namely a love affair.

The Scotts were country people, owned a good farm and lived comfortably, and John Barnard, a neighboring farmer, had long loved Phœbe, the eldest daughter of the house, and a very pretty girl of 20.

The matter had not disturbed Jean until two things occurred. Her father suffered some reverses of fortune, and Victor came up from New Orleans.

She felt peculiarly grateful to him, for he was not only young, handsome and rich, but he had also saved her life on a certain occasion, when she had been more reckless than wise, in running a horse-race with her brother.

Her pony took it into his head to run away, and Miss Jean's white neck might have been broken had it not been for the timely appearance of Mr. Stuart, who threw himself in front of the unruly horse and checked him.

That encounter led to a closer acquaintance with the family, and the young man had called several times.

He rode up to the gate, and dismounted, while Jean sat on the grass and meditated on her plan.

"You take compassion on all afflicted creatures?" he remarked, glancing down at the little downy chick which rested on the grass, with its broken leg bound up with a bit of linen.

Jean lifted it tenderly. "Ah yes. Poor little weakling! its life is but a frail thing, but precious to it no doubt. I love no pain or suffering. But pardon me, I will not keep you standing out here."

"It's very pleasant, I—"
"But much pleasanter in the house," she said hastily, confused by the way his eyes dwelt upon her. "Go in, Mr. Stuart."

"Will you come also?"
"When I have cared for this wounded chick—yes, sir, perhaps. Phosbe is in the

And when he had reluctantly departed, she sat down again and hid her face in her hands, her heart beating quick and loud. "Tis only his way—only his way, and I am a foolish, weak minded creature to

She had not long to sigh over her folly She had not long to sign over her long or scold herself for it.

Another young man had arrived on the scene, and she must prepare to meet him. He was an honest, good-looking young farmer, and from her childhood Jean had known and liked him; but to-day she must

"He here again?' said poor John Barnard, a faint spark of jealousy in his heart gathering heat and strength.

"Yes, certainly; but go in. Pa and ma are in the sitting room. The boys are not at home, I am sorry to say."

"Oh, no; I'il just go on back home. I suppose that fellow will stay all afternoon."

"Mr. Stuart? Very probably he will."
But hardly had Mr. Barnard ridden dejectedly away when Victor Stuart came out again. "Going so early?" said Jean, arching her pretty dark brows in surprise.

The sun had dropped much lower in the west, and the yard was all in deep purplish shade, when Phœbe came out where her younger sister reposed on the grass, her hands clasped over her knees, her eyes like the eyes of a dreamer.

"What are you thinking about," inquired Miss Scott.

"Nothing," starting up.

"Nothing," starting up.
"Interesting subject. You have been completely absorbed. What a dull day this has been! I thought perhaps John Barnard would come," looking carefully at her plump white hands.
"He did, but I sent him away," said Jean firmly.
"Sent him away?"

"Why?" "Because Mr. Stuart was here, and I did not suppose you would care to be dis-

"You take a good deal for granted. What do I care for Mr. Stuart? If you have offended Mr. John Barnard, I will never forgive you—never!"

"So am I, but I did it for your good." I promise you I will never meddle again."

"Why did you do it?" curiously.

And then Jean made a clean confession of her matchmaking.

"But, of course, if you intend to grieve your eyes out about John Barnard, I give up the whole affair."

Phœbe listened, first rather shocked, then greatly amused.

then greatly amused.

"Oh, you blind, silly child. What a mad scheme. Mr. Stuart cares no more for me than any other indifferent acquaintance. Do you think he loves me?"

"I think he would if you encouraged him. Why shouldn't he? You are sweet and lovely."

Phobe leaned over and kissed her, touched by her honest love and admiration.

There, child, go to sleep; for you seem to be eight instead of eighteen."

Now Jean longed to undo her work—to bring back her sister's love—but not a word of this did she breathe. It were best left untalked of until accomplished, she wisely thought.

And tate threw the chance in her way the very next afternoon.

And fate threw the chance in her way the very next afternoon.

Returning from the village she met John Barnard face to face in the road.

"Why, how do you do, John? Where have you been for this week past?" she said with a friendly smile.

"At home," he rather gruffly replied.

"Why, John!' in shocked tones.
"Well, to tell you the truth, Jean, I did not believe Phebe would care to see me."
"Indeed, she does care; but I shall not tell you anything about it," making a move as though to pass him.
"Oh, yes, Jean, please do! Where is that fellow Stuart?"
"I really can't tell you where Mr. Stuart is. It is not pleasant to hear him called 'that fellow.'
"Hang him"
"What for? Now, you are very unreasonable, and if you want to know anything more, you must ask Phoebe."
"One question! Are they—are they engaged?"

"Engaged? Good heavens, no! Who ever dreamed of such a thing?" she exclaimed, with as much astonishment as though she had not been planning to that very end.
"Poor fellow, he does love her. It was "Poor fellow, he does love her. It was a shame to make him suffer so," she thought, watching him as he walked on up the road, bithely whistling. "I will never try match-making again—never!" she continued aloud. "But what does the old sone asy?" the old song say?"

"If you do not succeed, try, try again," said a laughing voice close beside her, and blushing, she turned to face Victor Stuart.

'Care marks your brow, Miss Jean ; tell me your trouble."
"Not for the world," she cried quickly and with energy.
"Why not? I do assume you I will keep the secret, if secret it be, and give all the comfort I can."

"Thank you; but I am not in need of sympathy," she said, walking on. He kept at her side, carrying his gun on one arm. "Well, I am, for I love a girl-s sweet, beautiful, lovable girl; but I am afraid she does not love me." He stole a glance at the sober young face shaded by the broad-brimmed hat. It turned white, rather than red, and a faint quiver passed over the sweet, soft lips. "Have you asked her?" she managed to ay very steadily.

It was a dreadful thing to hear him talk of that girl.

"No; she is young, and I do not want to be too hasty. But I love her with all my heart, all my soul, and if she would but marry me—" He drew a long breath, his eyes alight with love's fire. "Tell me, Jean, shall I wait a while longer, or can I ask her now?"

"Do as you think best."

They were walking along a shady path, almost in sight of a house. Stuart flung down his gun, and stretched out his hands to Jean.

"Then say that you will be my wife,
Jean, for you are my love!"
So ended Jean's first and last attempt at match-making.
Phebe lives contentedly with her farmer, but Jean is in the city and is Mrs. Victor Stuart.

"The Slough of Despondency" —in which you are wallowing, on account of some of those diseases peculiar to you, madame, and which have robbed you of the rosy hue of health, and made life a the rosy hue of health, and made life a burden to you, you can easily get out of. Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" will free you from all such troubles, and soon recall the rose-tint of health to your cheek, and the elasticity to your step. It is a most perfect specific for all the weak nesses and irregularities peculiar to your sex. And placid Phebe's eyes flashed, and she turned away in anger.

The Lepers From San Francisco. Dr. C. C. O'Donnell, who is awaiting in Chicago the arrival of several Chinese lepers from San Francisco, which it is his purpose to exhibit throughout the country as a clinching argument against Chinese as a clinching argument against Chinese immigration, says of the leprous element of Cninatown, San Francisco:

These lepers live in subterranean passages, which are almost thirty or forty feet under the streets. The whole of Chinatown is honeycombed in that fashion, and when it is known any of them have the leprosy they are stowed away out of sight, so that the authorities, provided they had not been paid not to interfere with them, could not find them readily. They are kept at work making cigars, underclothing, etc. They are never seen on the kept at work making cigars, underclothing, etc. They are never seen on the the streets, and after a time, on account of the disease, they become totally blind. In 1881 I was showing a couple of lepers through the streets of San Francisco, and a summons was served on me. I attended the court, accompanied by a number of lepers. For want of a jury and witnesses the case was continued, the judge, myself and the lepers alone remaining in the court room. There are at present 13,500 Chinese employed as domestics in San Francisco, employed as domestics in San Francisco, and there are more of the inoffensive Chinamen in the state prison than of any other foreigners, and it costs more money to keep the Chinese in prison than the amount they pay in taxes. I have shown the lepers in many towns between here and San Francisco, and there are more of the inoffensive Chinase for four months for cruelty and failing to support his family.

Three car loads of agricultural implements were imported from Minnesota by the Qu'Appelle Valley farming company at a cost of $5400, the duty being $1900.

Dr. O'Donnell declares that he will exhibit the lepers in Philadelphia, New York, Brooklyn and Washington, and leave them in the national capital, so that the government authorities can have a taste of life in San Francisco.

in the dreamer had an equally long dream in less than one second. A telegraph operator was one night, during the Turco-Russian war, receiving a press despatch reguding the war in which the name Gortchaffoff was being telegraphed. Goris chusoff's name appearing so often in such despatches, the operator, as soon as he heard the first syllable of the great premier's name, went to sleep and dreamed he went to his mother's home in the Indian territory; went hunting with some Indian friends; had a great deal of sport, and went through an experience it would and went through an experience it would take days to perform, and, finally, after returning from the hunt, during the divihear the final syllable of Gorschakoff's name and succeeded in making a complete "copy" of the message. At the rate of forty words per minute, at which telegraphing is usually done, you will see that the time of the dream, which commenced when the middle syllable of Gortechakoff's name was being made, was one-third of one and one-third of a second, or forty half an hour later I sat down to breakfast; four-one-hundredths of a second.

MABRYING FOR FUN.

From the New York World.

Two young ladies from Massachusett who are spending their holidays with relatives at New Rochelle have suddenly ound themselves in an awkward dilemma rom which they can only be extricated by the aid of the law. The girls are the Misses Lydia and Mary F. Wyles, both minor maidens, and at the same time the legal wives of two young cadets from the Bay state, with whom they had been indulging in an innocent flirtation, and with no thought of transferring their hands and hearts to the youthful admirers. They were only "in fun," they explained, when they asked the justice of the peace to unite them for better for worse, but they have since been aroused to a full appreciation of the startling fact that they are as much married as though the ceremony had been solemnized by a priest with the usual accompaniments of bridal veils, floral wreaths, congratulations of friends and a wedding breakfast.

The Misses Wyles arrived at New Rochelle recently from Brimfield, Mass., on a visit to Mrs. Wm. H. Ducker, a married sister. Soon after reaching their new abode they found, in the absence of gentlemen friends, the time hanging rather heavily on their hands. They put their heads together and the result of their cogitations was that the next mai carried a couple of daintily-penned notes addressed to F. G. Nally and Henry N. Walling, two gallant young cadets whose acquaintance they had made in Massachusetts. The young gentlemen were informed through the epistles that their presence at New Rochelle would not be objected to by the writers. The girls of course did not urge them to come, but as they were old friends, etc.

Upon reading the letter McNally and minor maidens, and at the same time the them to come, but as they were old friends, etc.

Upon reading the letter McNally and Walling were overjoyed. The Misses Wyles had long been admired by the boys and they lost no time in packing their gripsacks. Their arrival at Mrs. Ducker's house was of course a "surprise" to the girls, but they were nevertheless glad to see their old friends, and proceeded at once to make their visit a pleasant one.

Days passed into weeks and still the cadets lingered in the village. Mr. McNally monopolized Miss Lydia's time and attention and Mr. Walling found his whole time eugrossed by the charms of Miss Mary. Drives along picturesque roads were indulged in by the quartette, boating was found to be a delightful pastime, but the crowning glory was found in the moonlight strolls through the romantic and secluded suburbs.

The Rapidity of Thought.

Letter to the Scientific American.

In your issue of May 24 is an article on "speed of thought," showing the rapidity of thought as shown by an engineer dreaming a long dream while traveling 250 feet in four seconds. A case happened wherein the dreamer had an equally long dream in less than one second. A telegraph operator was a second. A telegraph operator was a second. A telegraph operator was a second of thought.

The Correct Habits.

Burdette, in the Brooklyn Eagle.

"For ten years past," said the new boarder, "my habits have been regular as clockwork. I roze on the stroke of 6; half an hour later I sat down to breakfast; at 7 I was at work; dined at 12, ate supper at 6, and was in bed at 9.30; ate only hearty food, and hadn't a sick day in all that time." "Dear me," said the deacon, in sympathetic tones; "and what were you in for?" And in the awful silence that followed you could hear the hash grit its teeth

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon treatment for catarrh. Out of 2000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety percent have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five percent of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished, the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal
