STRS. ALMOST COLLIDE IN FOG

Three Steamers Narrowly Escape Bunching Off Harding's Ledge

Boston, June 24.—Fog of the real old New England brand has imperiled shipping and hundreds of human lives of the coast for the last few days, and yesterday three great ocean steamers, the Caledonian and Sachem, outward bound for Liverpool, and the St. Croix, in-bound from St. John, narrowly escaped collision and the danger of piling up on the dreaded sea wall, Harding's half-tide ledge.

The freighter, Europe bound, was tugging about in the fog, with the deafening, mournful fog horns in warning and sending shivers through the passengers on the St. Croix.

Captain Thompson of the latter craft had been pacing the hurricane deck for twenty-nine hours without sleep.

CLOSE CALL FOR BOTH. With the hundreds of precious lives in his care, in possible peril, he took no chances.

He was about a mile to the eastward of Harding's when the wall of the Caledonian's siren piped through the misty blast.

An instant later the great, towering bulk loomed through the fog. Captain Thompson instantly ordered his engines stopped. The came the crunching in the sea as the propeller churned a reverse. Slowly the passenger flyer receded, and then, scarcely a biscuit toss away, passed the giant freighter.

It was a narrow escape, and the passengers on the St. Croix saw the British skipper suddenly change his ship's course hard over to the eastward.

BARELY MISSED HARDING'S LEDGE. Then, as she shipped from view, the threatened Harding's ledge showed its foamy crest of breakers.

It was a narrow escape for both craft, and the anxiety of the moment was increased when, with a shrill hoot, the Sachem loomed through the low-lying fog cloud's density. Through the trumpet came the call from the St. Croix, and with it three sharp blasts from the whistle. The second Englishman, too, saw his peril, as his fellow freighter had a few minutes before.

He signalled clear, first of the St. Croix, and then, in great haste, his helm was shifted, and the ledges were missed for a third time.

Captain Thompson, cool through it all, granted: "Three goose eggs for death."

"The lower harbor soon was reached and the fog peril passed for the passengers.

The advertising merchant is the one who does the business in these days of push and enterprise. There are more newspaper readers today than ever before in the history of the world. The newspaper places your business under the eyes of the buyer. He sees what he wants, and, knowing where to find it, looks up the wide-awake merchant, who asked him to come and see him. Success in these days of sharp competition calls for eternal vigilance. You can't keep a hustler down.

JOURNALISTS AT ST. PETERSBURG

ALL THINK GREAT CRISIS IMMINENT--RUIN OF IMPERIAL FAMILY AND NEW GOVERNMENT IS LOOKED FOR

St. Petersburg, June 25.—Never in the history of Russia have there been so many foreign newspaper correspondents here as now, and that significant fact tells in brief the crisis situation in this unhappy country. The leading editors of the world, as well as government chiefs, believe that the crisis is high which may wreck the imperial family of the Romanoffs and give to Russia a new government. More than forty famous foreign journalists are here now to chronicle the events upon which future history will be written.

There were gathered at the opening of the Duma and were photographed in a group on a palace stairway. This photograph is said to show more intellectual faces than any extant in this city. The men and women who posed for the group are of remarkable mentality. They know world politics, have extraordinary insight into human nature, are highly educated and trained to grasp the inner meaning of each event. Besides they all have an acquaintance which enables them to get at inside facts despite the reticence of Russian officialdom. The czar and his ministers do not like these newspaper writers. They tell the outside world of massacres and despotism.

The Russian government censors news and the correspondents, alert and brilliant as they are, are often forced to tax their ingenuity to the utmost to get to American, London, Paris, Berlin and other newspapers accounts of what has taken place in the czar's dominions. The Duma deputies who are watched the closest by foreign correspondents come from Poland. There, it is believed, the great revolution will begin. The Russian police are watching the police, too. When the mine is fired they will all be in danger, unless they can hide and escape the long sinister arm of police spies.

WALKING BAR-ROOM CAPTURED. Fred Foster Wanted for Stealing and Peddling Liquor in Nova Scotia. Arrested at St. John.

St. John, June 22.—Sergeant Baxter was able last night once more to show his efficiency by the quickness with which he landed a man whom he thinks is Fred Foster, wanted by the authorities at Middleton, N. S., who, according to communications received, is charged with selling rum in violation of the Scott Act while engaged at his trade of peddling.

Sergeant Baxter is this week on night duty. When leaving central station at seven o'clock last evening he was handed a letter from Policeman Woods of Middleton asking that Fred Foster, a peddler, who had been pursued all over Nova Scotia and who was thought to be in St. John, should be arrested.

A short description of the man was given, with an account of his past history. It would seem that he has been journeying over the country selling eye-glasses, while on the side he has been conducting a quiet little traffic in rum. He has been accompanied in his journeys by a woman named Russel, whom he calls his wife. Sergeant Baxter read the description of the man as he went along, and when about twenty minutes after leaving the office he came upon a man drunk on Brussels street who answered the description given.

Sergeant Baxter hailed him as Fred Foster, and the man responded willingly enough. The officer then inquired after the folks in Middleton and asked him when he came over. The prisoner replied that he was just leaving the city, that he was going back to Nova Scotia and that his home was in Halifax. He said that he was acquainted with Nick Power and the Halifax police.

When asked about the Russel woman he said that she was not with him. Placed under arrest, however, he became furious, swearing at the officer and asserting that his name was not Foster but James Doyle. He has been engaged for the last few days in peddling a cheap brand of writing paper.

(The Fred Foster referred to above belongs to Halifax, and is a well known fabric. Having made his living for years in following up shows all through the province.)

SACRIFICE OF HUMAN BEINGS

Strange Rites Followed by Believers in Sect Known as "Scarlet Death."

London, June 25.—The following remarkable description of the rites of the "Society of the Scarlet Death" is quoted from the Ural by a St. Petersburg correspondent, who states that the votaries of the strange society are located near the Savodsk Lake, and that the exposure has been made in consequence of the disappearance of one of the citizens.

The Scarlet Death is surrounded with much "circumstance." In the house designed for the sacrifice there is a room in which there is neither window nor fireplace. It is a grave with scarlet material, but one of the walls is covered with a black cloth. The floor is covered with scarlet. Two cushions are placed in the middle of the floor.

The victim is then led in, and his or her head is placed on one of the cushions. Then all the attendants leave the room. After a few minutes a young woman, clad also in scarlet, comes from behind the black cloth. She slowly approaches, takes the second cushion, and places it over the face of the recumbent figure. Then she sits upon the cushion, and does not rise till the condemned one has ceased to show signs of life.

What leads up to the sacrifice is variously explained by the local inhabitants. Some say that it is to expedite the progress of the sacrificed to Paradise; and others hold that it is a punishment for the commission of some mortal sin.

St. John, June 27.—H. P. Weidig, of New York, a guest at the Royal hotel here, was found dead on the sidewalk and underneath the window of the room he occupied yesterday. It is thought he fell from his window thirty or thirty-five feet and fractured his skull. He was a traveler of the firm of Chas. Cooper & Co., manufacturing chemists, New York.

Livingsburg, June 27.—After three months the body of Phineas Wellfist, of Blue Rock, was found yesterday at Vain Head, some distance below this harbor. Wellfist was drowned while sailing up here from his home in a whale boat. The gruesome discovery was made by the unfortunate man's widow and sister, as they were walking along the shore.

New York, June 27.—Stanford White, an eminent architect of the firm of McKevitt, Mead and White, was shot last night and almost instantly killed by Harry Shaw, a member of a prominent Pittsburgh family, during the performance of the musical extravaganza, Mamselle Champagne, on the roof of the Madison Square Garden. Mr. White died before an ambulance could be summoned and Shaw was arrested immediately after the shooting. Harry Shaw is a brother of L. Updeley Shaw, and of the Countess of Yarmouth, who was Alice Shaw, and of Mrs. George Landis Gammage, of Cumberland, Florida. He is also half brother of Benj. Shaw. The first intimation of trouble came when walking in front of his seated victim, the

The Pitiful Tragedy of Three Children Who Hid in a Trunk

THE MISTLETOE BOUGH.

The mistletoe hung in the castle hall. The holly branch shone on the old oak wall; And the baron's retainers were blithe and gay, And keeping their Christmas holy day. The baron beheld with a father's pride His beautiful child, young Lovell's bride; While she with her bright eyes seem'd to be The star of the goodly company. Oh, the mistletoe bough! Oh, the mistletoe bough!

"I'm weary of dancing now," she cried; "Here tarry a moment, I'll hide—I'll hide!" And Lovell be sure thou'rt the first to trace The clue to my secret lurking place. Away she ran and her friends began Each tower to search and each nook to scan; And young Lovell cried, "Oh, where's that thou hidest?" I'm lonesome without thee, my own dear bride." Oh, the mistletoe bough! Oh, the mistletoe bough!

They sought her that night, and they sought her next day! And they sought her in vain when a week pass'd away! In the highest, the lowest, the lowest spot Young Lovell sought wildly, but found her not. And when Lovell appeared the children cried, "See, the old man weeps for his fairy bride!" Oh, the mistletoe bough! Oh, the mistletoe bough!

At length an oak chest that long lain hid Was found in the castle—they raised the lid, And a skeleton form lay mouldering there. In the fatal wreath of the lady faded, Oh, sad was her fate! In sportive jest she hid from her lord in the old oak chest. It closed with a spring, and her bridal bloom Lay withering there in a living tomb. Oh, the mistletoe bough! Oh, the mistletoe bough!

(By Isola Forrester.)

It was late Decoration Day. Out in Kankakee, Ill., the last stragglers from the parade were coming leisurely homeward through the dusk, empty-handed, heedful of the strangely mingled sentiment of the day—sorrow for the dead; pride and happiness in their achievements. One of the very last to leave was little Ida Van Siette. Until the shadows deepened in the old cemetery and the wreaths and bouquets faded in the first chill of the night air she had lingered and looked backward, the mystery and marvel of it all holding her almost against her will. When she reached home supper was over. The two younger children, Rosella and Pearl, had been undressed and sent upstairs to bed. But there were seven brothers, and they had all gone outdoors to play. "Can't we play, too, mamma?" Ida asked at the foot of the stairs after she had eaten supper. "Just a little bit," And Mrs. Van Siette, mother of eleven and wise in the ways of children, glanced around from her housework with a smile of understanding and sympathy. Of course, they could play until she came upstairs if they wanted to. They could do no harm. And overheard, as she went on with her work, she could catch the patter of light running feet in the bedroom. Now it was hide and seek. She could hear their merry little giggles of dismay when a hiding place was discovered. Then it must be a pillow fight, Rosella was laughing so. And at last there was silence, and the mother, tired with the extra work that comes with a holiday, smiled to herself as she turned the light in the kitchen and went upstairs herself to her bedchamber. It was after midnight. There was no light in the upstairs rooms, and she went cautiously, half expecting a little white-dressed form to jump out at her from a shadowy corner. That was the favorite game, to scare mother. But tonight there was no sudden jump, no peal of laughter, no clinging arms around her neck as she went into the little bedroom where the girls slept, and lit a lamp. Still everything was silent. The bed was tossed and tumbled, the pillows gone, the quilt left over the footrail, where it had been used as a tent. On the chairs were piled the little garments, each in its place, as she meant, each in its place, as she meant, lay a bunch of fall-withered wild flowers that Ida had gathered on her way home, buttercups and daisies and a few last violets. On her pile of clothes rested the little five-cent flag she had carried so bravely in the parade. But that was all—noting but stillness, a strange, unnatural stillness that in spite of herself seemed to steal upon the mother like an icy chill of apprehension. She set the lamp down and tried to call to keep the tremor from her voice. Of course it was one of their games, only some crazy little childish prank. She would find them. They were hiding from her; under the bed, in the closet, in the next room, somewhere they were hiding, and laughing at her for being frightened. "Ida," she called. "Ida, dear, it is time to go to bed. Rosella, come now; you've played long enough. Come, Pearl, come to mother; tired baby girls, come and be rocked to sleep." No answer, nothing but silence and the rustle of the wind in the maple leaves against the window pane. Catching her breath, Mrs. Van Siette went into the other bedrooms and searched. That was part of the make-believe, part of the bedtime game. She knew to look under beds, lifted the curtains away from the window recesses, and even glanced behind the dressers, but there were no babies to laugh at her, no sudden shriek of delight, and she went back to the little bedroom. Everything was as she had left it. With a strange dizziness, a quick beating of the heart, she turned to go downstairs to seek for the trunks there, and perhaps could them a little for their game, the game that lasted too long, when all at once she caught sight of one object in the room, out of place. On the foot of the bed lay the empty tray from an old trunk. It was a useless thing, the trunk. Nothing was ever kept in it except a few of the children's toys. But to the three little girls it was the most wonderful trunk that ever happened. Even their mother knew some of the wonderful things it could do. It was an enchanted trunk. Sometimes it was a pirate ship, and carried a crew of three. Sometimes it was a robber cave. Sometimes it was the little brown house in the woods where the seven dwarfs waited for

Snow White. And sometimes it was just a cuddly corner, just big enough for three youngsters to curl down in and tell stories. And looking at the empty tray, at the closed trunk lid, Mrs. Van Siette wondered with a foreboding dread that gripped her very heartstrings what the trunk was tonight in the game of make-believe. She raised the lid fearfully. The clasp had caught on the outside; even in her fear and haste she noticed that. But the lid was in the trunk, and at first glances a wave of joy swept over her. They had been playing a game of make-believe after all. Tucked cozily in the trunk were the pillows from the bed, and on them lay the two youngest heads, Rosella, aged six, and the baby curls of Pearl, the two year old. Ida had clung in last of all, and there was hardly room for her, so she had slipped one arm around the baby, and fallen asleep with the rest. It was such fun, this game of make-believe in the old trunk. But as the mother raised the lamp to look down at the sleeping faces she gave a scream of terror that echoed through the whole house. It had been a game of make-believe, but there had been an unseen playmate, one who had not played quite fair, and it was Death, the reaper of young flowers. One by one the kindly hands of neighbors summoned by the mother's cry for help lifted the little ones from their trunk. Ida was still alive, but died within a few minutes. It was all so terribly, tragically simple! They had hidden in play in the old trunk, and the lid had fallen and caught fast. And they had waited for mother to come—waited until they had fallen asleep, and the reaper had gathered them mercifully as they lay unconscious. After all, he was not such a harsh playmate; merely a careless one. It is an old, old story, this one so recent and new out in Kankakee. Centuries ago it happened in Italy, and the sadness and mystery of its romance have thrilled many a chance reader of Samuel Rogers's poem "Ginevra." Ginevra, child bride of Modena, who ran "laughing and looking backward" from her wedding feast to hide in play in the old gallery of the palace. Great was the joy; but at the nuptial When all set down, the bride herself was wanting. Nor was she to be found. Her father cried, "It is but to make a trial of our love. And filled his glass to all, but his hand shook, And drew from guest to guest the panic spread. 'Twas but that instant she had left the room, Laughing and looking back, and by his finger, Her ivory tooth imprinted on his finger. But now, alas, she was not to be found. Nor from that hour could anything be guessed, But that she was not.

Full fifty years were past and all forgotten, When on an idle day, a day of mirth, "Did the old lumber in the gallery. With here and there a chest was noticed, And 'twas said, By one as young, as thoughtless as Ginevra, "Why not remove it from its lurking place?" 'Twas done as soon as said; but on its way! It burst, it fell, and lo! a skeleton. With here and there a pearl, an emerald stone, A golden clasp, clasping a shred of gold. And a small seal, her mother's legacy. Engraven with a name, the name of death.

There then had she found a grave, Within that chest had she concealed herself, Flattering with joy, the haphest of the happy. When a spring lock, that lay in ambush there, Fastened her down forever.

Centuries ago, later, in England, the story found its way into a song, and Christmas eve, the merriment was hushed while some one sang of the mistletoe bough, and of Lovell's bride, who had played hide and seek, and vanished, to be found years after, a skeleton in an old chest. Perhaps, if the old trunk had been concealed in a garret, the mystery of the three little ones might never have been unravelled until years hence, when the trunk had been dragged from its corner, and its secret laid bare. But this time the mother's hand opened it to the light and the story was revealed.

PUBLICAN'S TEN COMMANDMENTS

A publican whose home is situated at Marsden, has just issued to the public a set of ten "commandments" applicable to his own house. They are as follows:

1. Thou shalt come to my house when thou art thirsty.
2. Thou shalt always keep my name in thy memory.
3. Thou shalt visit me often on week days, also on Sundays.
4. Thou shalt neither break nor destroy anything in my house; if thou dost, thou shalt pay me each time double for it.
5. Thou shalt honor me when I deserve it, so that thou mayest live long, and continue drinking in my house.
6. Thou shalt not make any disturbance in my house, for such things are distasteful to me.
7. Thou shalt not dare to pass counterfeit coin on me.
8. Thou shalt not steal anything from me—I need all I have myself.
9. Thou shalt not expect large or full glasses, because the landlord has to live off the profit.
10. Thou shalt, after thou hast been eating and drinking at my house, pay me honestly for it, for the landlord never likes to have anything to do in the chalk line.

THE FARM

THE FROG OF THE HORSE'S FOOT

In a recent issue of London "Farm and Home," Mr. Patsy Bridge has an excellent article discussing the functions and the care of the frog in the horse's foot. So much misapprehension exists as to the office of this important organ, and so many horsemen's feet are spoiled every year because of this, that we reproduce Mr. Bridge's article in full, which reads as follows:

The average horseman is reluctant to allow nature fair play in the matter of permitting the frog to exercise its proper function by coming to the ground. Those who have experienced the advantages of doing so invariably express themselves as quite satisfied, and seldom wait to return again to the use of "thick, heavy shoes with wedge heels or calks, or to withdraw their veto against the ruthless employment of the knife in paring away the frog at each shoeing; but it is difficult to convince those who have not tried it of its practicality, or benefits that accrue to the foot. Shoeing has been called "a necessary evil," but Mr. Huntington declares this phrase a misuse of words, and that there is no necessary evil about it. When outrageously bad ill-effects can hardly be exaggerated, but when carried out on rational lines its benefits are fully apparent, and it is certainly necessary; for the foot of the horse, although admirably adapted to withstand injury, such as wear as it would be subjected to when the horse lives without work under natural conditions, is not equal to the wear and tear of paved streets and macadamized roads. If we must protect the foot with an iron shoe, let us have it so constructed and applied as to produce the minimum amount of injury, and permit the frog to do its duty to the full in its function as nearly as possible in the way that nature intended to do so. Experience goes to show that it is the crust or wall of the hoof, and not the frog, that is incapable of standing the heavy wear or constant attrition associated with traveling rapidly or drawing heavy loads on hard or rough roads. The frog of the horse that has never worn shoes, nor been unmercifully pared by the farrier, is full, prominent and tough, and the various tiny matters connected with the physiology of the foot can see that by its wedge-shape it is admirably adapted to prevent slipping, and to obviate or lessen concussion, or, in common parlance to break the jar to joints above when the feet are brought down on hard ground. With shoes with thick heels or high calks the frog is lifted clear of the ground, and as nature always assumes that an organ or structure that is not used is not required, it soon becomes shrunken, shriveled, and thereby, the same thing results when the frog is rubbished out away, or shriveling of the frog not only induces thrush, but favors contraction, and the absence of its anti-concussive function tends to cause navicular disease. The frog, which, contrary to its inventor's intention, is invariably cut from pressure, and regularly mutilated by paring at each shoeing, may, of course, soon get into such a state as to be quite unequal to performing its proper functions when asked to do so, and this is why systems of shoeing that permit of frog pressure do not favor or make headway in the estimation of the stable avocet.

"The frog is right on the ground," says the coachman in a fright when the shoes get thin, but what of that if the horse goes sound? Did not nature intend the frog to be right on the ground, to bear weight, to reduce concussion, and to prevent slipping? The time when horsemen begin to think of employing some form of shoe permitting frog pressure is when the horse becomes lame and unserviceable. Having learned that disease is the result of deprivation of function, it is not fair to begin at once to let diseased frogs on the ground, to be battered on hard roads, or bruised by stones, and then declare that systems of shoeing provided for, or permitting frog pressure, are all wrong. They should be applied to the sound foot, or the mutilated frog should be permitted to grow, and become to some extent serviceable by the use of pads. There is, of course, a vast difference between shoeing horses from childhood in a manner that permits of the frog coming to the ground, and applying the same system to an animal whose frogs have been regularly pared away and deprived for years of the exercise of their function, so that they have become shrunken; but, curiously, this fact is often lost sight of.

DAIRY DATA NEEDED.

Records Leanto Profit and Loss and Help the Feeder.

By CLARENCE W. LANE.

The condition of the farming industry as seen on the average farm points to the need of better business methods and more definite knowledge of the sources of profit and loss. In no department connected with the farm is there more need for absolute data than in the dairy.

The records of progressive and unprogressive dairymen indicate that there is no business which shows a greater range of profit than that of dairy farming. Investigations of creamery patrons illustrate this most strikingly and show that the dairyman who keeps accurate records of his business makes double the profits of his neighbors.

Good judges believe that one-fourth of the cows of the entire country kept for milk do not pay the cost of keeping and nearly one-fourth more fail to yield an annual profit.

Records of the performances of dairy cows form the only accurate and safe basis for judging their value. It is the constant aim of progressive dairymen to improve their herds, and such improvement must depend largely upon the ability of the dairyman to detect the unprofitable animals. From the records' standpoint records are especially valuable in assisting in finding causes for the trouble. Many buyers insist on seeing records of dairy performance before purchasing.

A record is also of great help to the farmer. If he knows exactly what a cow is doing he can prepare the ration accordingly and often feed more economically. Again, a daily milk record enables the dairyman to detect the approach of sickness in a cow and thus to take steps to ward it off.

Minimum Standard.

The New York state dairymen's convention passed a resolution favoring a minimum standard not only for milk, but for cream, butter and cheese, and a provision for the higher standards under registration with the department of agriculture, higher standards to be labeled and signs to be displayed on wagons, in places of business, etc., and a sufficient penalty for false registration. If some encouragement of this sort could be offered, it would seem that more milk testing above 3 per cent might be sold. Then, too, there would be some chance for a farmer to sell on a test basis and not be compelled to sell 5 per cent or 6 per cent milk at the same price that is paid for 3 per cent milk, says a writer in National Stockman.

Cloves and Lime.

When the common red clover, after taking root in the spring, is found later in the season to be making no growth and finally disappears in patches or altogether, then the need of lime is indicated. The appearance of the plant known as sorrel, or horse sorrel, is a further indication of the need of lime—Ohio Experiment Station.

LATE POTATOES.

(L. N. Cowdry, Granton, Mich., in the "Country Gentleman.")

Choose a sandy loam if you have it; if not, the next best ground you have. A clover sod is always best. Plough early and deep, not less than eight or nine inches. Manure should be drawn and scattered the fall or winter before ploughing.

After ploughing, work the ground grass and weeds, and make your frequently and deep. This will kill the ground line and mellow and warm. Wide tools may be used, so it won't take long to go over the ground. Bear down and make the plough run deep, so the mellow soil will roll back into the bottom of the furrow

Can make a success of real dairying, says Kimball's Dairy Farmer.

Nothing Beats Cow Keeping.

For the young and energetic man who wants to start out right, make money, keep up the fertility of his farm and win a reputation as a successful farmer, there is nothing that beats cow keeping.

Not an Easy Job.

Now, gloss it over as slick writers and persuasive talkers may, the fact remains that dairying is not a business of moderate demands. To succeed at it, even with the very best of special tools and the most refined brand of dairy knowledge, requires that a man shall put a vast amount of his life, his energy and his individuality into it.—W. F. McSpeman.

Two Pounds of Highest Butter.

Let me say as emphatically as possible, any cow that in her prime will make two pounds of highest butter a day for thirty days is a good cow, and a Jersey that will not make ten pounds a week or give over ten quarts of milk a day will be second rate. At three years old is not worth keeping, says a writer in American Agriculturist. And do not forget that fawn colors or solid colors, with black tongues and eyelids, do not make a Jersey pure bred, nor does a cow with white—lots of it, too—sometimes make a cow a grade.

A Vital Question.

With the advent of creameries, skimming stations and hand separators the question of successful dairymen has been raised of calves on skim milk is one of growing importance and vital concern to every creamery patron and private dairyman, and it increases in value we can no longer afford to keep a cow the entire year for raising one calf to be used as a feeding steer.—D. H. Otis, Kansas.

Live Dairy Practice

"Records of Dairy Cows in the United States" is a recent publication of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and is to be unique in that no complete compilation of this nature is at present existing in the United States. Its object is to act as an incentive to progressive effort among our dairymen and to the raising of the standard of herds. Part I deals with grades and native cows, and part 2 with pure bred cows.

Up to Dairymen and Consumers.

Growing interest in the production and sale of wholesome milk indicates that it behooves the dairymen to comply with the requirements of sanitary milk production and the consumer to insist upon the observance of these requirements.

The Hog a Dairy Adjunct.

In European countries where dairy farming is the chief occupation, the pig is reared and fed in considerable numbers as an auxiliary industry, and it appears that our dairymen should do so successfully. The pig is a most profitable animal, and it is especially in those countries which rank high in pig raising that the pig is reared in the greatest numbers. The real secret of success in European pig raising for prime bacon is due to the large amounts of skim milk and buttermilk fed with grain and meal.

Remarkable Development.

Alfa growers generally will be interested in the remarkable development of the alfalfa milk industry. New plants are being erected at many places throughout the United States, and the industry has been established with orders, remarks Denver Field and Farm. Eastern dairymen are becoming interested, and the prospect is bright.

First Cow Testing Association.

Michigan has the unique distinction of sustaining the first and only cow testing association of this country, organized last fall. It is claimed that the idea originated with ex-Governor Howard of Wisconsin some ten or twelve years ago. "The American dairymen seems to have overlooked the great value of this suggestion. At any rate it was the dairyman of Michigan who first put the work into practice," says Helmer Rabbin in an exchange.

Anna's the Good Calf.

Keep your eyes open, when you see your neighbor about to turn off a good calf secure it if you can.

Cut Pipe.

Every particle of roughage fed on the Detroit dairy farm, including hay and all soiling crops, is cut in quarter lengths. Even the bedding is cut up the same.

One sometimes hears the remark that such and such cows were "knocked in the head with the milk pail," which may be taken to mean that they were not fed liberally and properly when young.

Nature Calls For Salt.

Cows must have roughage as the ash content. This is also supplied by salt. Always have salt before an animal, especially a young animal. In the formation of bone it requires a great deal of ash. So essential is the ash compound that in China they use it for executing their criminals. They give the criminal all he wants to eat, but dipper him of the mineral salt. Frequently you see calves gnawing at posts or boards or gnawing the ground. They are after salt. They are after mineral matter. Nature gives them that peculiar instinct to get salt.

Carrots and Parsnips.

In some of the continental countries of Europe carrots and parsnips are used in the island of Guernsey. The latter are especially valuable for the cows because they do not taint the milk, as do some of the roots.

Early to Taste Good Work.

It is to be easily understood that a period of starvation or insufficient feeding in the early life of the future cow may have many functions, may be at a critical time, and all the fine trends transmitted by heredity and careful breeding be scattered and reversion to type undo years of labor.

C. K. Neal Makes Firm Butter.

It is considered worthy of note at the South Carolina experiment station that butter was appreciably firmer during a period when cottonseed meal was liberally fed than when bean was fed with less cottonseed meal.

QUEER COINCIDENCES.

Andrew Lang Tells Real Curious One About a Clock and a Letter.

Here is a real curious coincidence, reported to me by a trustworthy friend. My friend paid a visit, with a companion, also known to me, to a lady. On the chimney-piece of the drawing-room was a black marble clock, not going, and near it a small round clock in working order. Suddenly a child of the lady of the house, standing on the hearth rug, said, "Mother, the big black marble clock is ticking." "Impossible!" said his mother. "It has not ticked for many a month. It broke the pendulum myself. Every one present then examined the marble clock, which was ticking away steadily, and the coincidence was that it had taken up the time correctly and was in accord with the small clock beside it. No one had touched the black marble clock.

Of this coincidence I can only offer the explanation which must already have occurred to every reader. Somebody in the house must have got the clock mender to mend the marble clock without informing the lady of the house. The clock must have been set to the right time, and neither the lady nor her relatives happened to notice its ticking till it was observed by the child on the hearth rug. If this view be disapproved, then there was a genuine miracle—a clock going, or ticking at all, and with a broken pendulum. Such is the weakness of human testimony that my friend does not tell me whether the big clock's hands were moving or whether it only ticked.

I know nothing analogous to a clock that ticked without going except a story of a letter which is vouchsafed for by the signatures of the persons who wrote the narrative and who stuck to it when cross-examined orally. They were a brother and sister, living together. One evening a letter came to their house directed to their care, but addressed to a third person, who did not live with them. The sister placed the letter on the chimney-piece, meaning to bring it to the proper address. Presently the letter began to tick like a watch and kept on ticking. The brother came in and heard the ticking. They examined the letter, could find no explanation, and next morning carried the strange parcel to the person for whom it was meant. The letter proved to be extremely important, though the envelope was not marked "immediate"; it enveloped containing advertisements. Apparently the letter, like all matter, according to Haeckel, was not outside of consciousness and knew that it was in a hurry. Of course, the black marble clock may on these principles have had not only consciousness, but conscience, and said to itself, "Let me fulfill the purpose of my being. Go! I cannot without a pendulum, but tick I can and will." None the less the normal explanation seems the better.—Andrew Lang in Illustrated London News.

How to Grow Alfalfa.

Alfalfa must be reset every third year. I have been using cutaway harrows for resetting it along the Pacific coast for a great many years. The best method of resetting is to sow several pounds of new seed to the acre, then go over with a heavy harrow, set at a light angle, in both directions, split the heads of the old plants and reset with the new seed. By this means the crop can be produced continuously for a long term of years.—G. M. Clarke in Country Gentleman.

Setting a Separator.

In the mechanical operation of a separator none but the best oil should be used, and this should not be allowed to gum or become dirty on the bearings. It is good practice to flush the bearings with kerosene occasionally by making a run with kerosene in the oil cups. This will serve to cut out any gum or dust that has accumulated on the bearings and will make the machine run much freer and easier.

Another Ideal Tettering.

Another famous saying is now disputed. Dr. Miller Maguire contends that the Duke of Wellington never said, "Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton." Wellington himself knew very little of the playing fields at Eton. It is quite true that he was for a brief period at the famous school, but when his mother discovered that he was making no progress whatever there, she, at his name or at lessons, he was removed at about the age of fifteen, and sent to another school, in Brussels.

Insurance Companies Must Pay or Get Out of State.

San Francisco, June 20.—In the name of the city of San Francisco and the State of California, it was learned yesterday, demand has been made on sixty-one insurance companies that are accused of endeavoring to dodge their obligations for full settlement with the people of San Francisco who lost property by fire in April.

A telegram signed by Mayor Schnitz and Governor Pardee has been sent to the home offices of the sixty-one companies that voted in Oakland to cut all payments of losses twenty-five per cent.

The wording of the telegram is kept secret, but it is known that the message is a warning to the concerns addressed that they must deal fairly and honestly with the San Francisco public or be driven from California.

Before the message was sent it was submitted to Insurance Commissioner Wolf, who gave it his approval.

Keel, Child or Well

In thousands of homes throughout Canada there are bright, thriving children who have never seen and are kept well by the use of Baby's Own Tablets. In many homes parents say this medicine saved a precious little life. Dr. A. Dana, L. D. S., Avon, Mass., says: "At the age of five months my child was kept by the use of Baby's Own Tablets. He is now a healthy, happy child, and I can realize what a change this medicine has wrought in my child. He is now about eighteen months old, eats well, sleeps well, and is a lively, laughing child, and weighs 37 pounds. We always keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house now for we know their great value." If mothers wish to feel absolutely safe they should keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house always. How to Break Up a Cold

It may be a surprise to many to learn that a severe cold can be completely broken up in one or two days' time. It is, however, a fact. The first action is necessary. The first symptoms of a cold are a dry, loud cough, a profuse watery discharge from the nose, and a thin, white coating on the tongue. When Chamberlain's cough remedy is taken every hour on continued appearance of these symptoms, it counteracts the effect of the cold and restores the system to a healthy condition within a day or two. BIG EXHIBIT OF MANUAL TRAINING

T. B. Kidder Will be in Charge—Student Classes Will Attend—Labor Day Selected as St. John at the Fair—Alterations in the Buildings.

At a meeting of the executive of the St. John exhibition committee held in their rooms last evening, the chief question discussed was having a St. John day at the fair this year, and it was decided to use every possible effort to have such a day on Labor Day, September 3rd.

Another important matter which received attention last evening was the offer of T. B. Kidder to conduct a manual training department at the exhibition. Other matters of importance were also discussed.

Mr. Milligan submitted an estimate made by T. A. Adams for an addition to the restaurant of 20x42 feet which would enlarge the present restaurant nearly fifty per cent. The cost to be $245. The addition will not only give more room, but will provide in the room much more light, as the new side walls are to be built practically of glass.

The executive decided to accept this estimate and instructed the manager to complete arrangements with Mr. Adams for the completion of the work.

It was also decided to have Mr. Adams build two new outside stair ways to the large amusement hall, as the old stairs would be very inadequate in case of fire.

One of the new stair ways is to be built at the front of the hall near stage, while the other one will be built at the back of the hall, continuing from the present exit, but instead of going down in to agricultural hall, it will go outside of the building.

Mr. Milligan reported that the city had agreed to repair the floors in the machinery hall, and to put them in first-class condition.

The association accepted the offer of T. B. Kidder, superintendent of manual training in New Brunswick to supply a working exhibit of manual training with four to six benches in actual operation, by pupils from Kingston Consolidated Schools, who will come to the exhibition in charge of an instructor. This exhibit is in addition to exhibits of manual training work, which are promised from nearly all of the schools in the province, in which this system is in operation.

The selection of judges was left to Mr. Milligan to act in conjunction with the commissioner of agriculture for New Brunswick, and the Dominion minister of agriculture.

It was decided to have some tickets for the public with thirteen admissions for one dollar.

The question of St. John Day was taken up and the feeling was very strong that an organized effort should be made to enlist sympathy and support from the citizens of St. John for this day. Mr. Milligan reported that on account of Monday, September 3rd, being a holiday, none of the railways would run excursions on that day, and it being a holiday for all in St. John that this would be the day for St. John Day. This was considered to be a very wise idea, and all will try to make Labor Day a great success as St. John Day.

To prevent the Chinese in their city from having more than one wife, the ministers of Ottawa, Ont., are up in arms. They do not think the heathen Chinese should be allowed to practice the customs of their country, when they are against Canadian laws.

That practical slavery exists among the Italian immigrants coming to this country was shown by the recent report of New York License Commissioner John N. Bogart. Hundreds of these immigrants, who believe they are going to Philadelphia or Pittsburgh, are really landed in the swamps of Florida and the wilds of North Carolina, where they are kept on primitive construction work under armed guards. When they become too sick to be of value they are turned loose to make their way back to New York as best they can.

TRADE IS GROWING

An Increase Which is Most Creditable to a Toronto Firm.

When a business man discovers that he is doing less trade than in the previous year, he regards himself as a failure. He looks for a steady advance in business, perhaps, five, ten, or even fifteen per cent. increase. This is a normal condition among business firms when the increase goes beyond fifteen per cent. the proprietor begins to wear the smile that won't come off. During the five months ending on May 31, the firm of Gourley, Winter & Leeming, Toronto, had made and sold forty per cent. more Goulay pianos than during the corresponding period of last year. This is an increase that cannot be ascribed entirely to the prosperity of the country, or the progress of the piano trade. It means that the people of Canada, and even those of foreign lands, are beginning to appreciate the magnificent qualities of this truly high-grade piano. The Goulay has won high praise from some of the most promising musicians of Canada, and is winning its rightful place at the head of the best upright instruments in this country.

"The Shadow of Influence."

They brought the sick into the streets and hid them on beds and couches, that at least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.—Acts v, 15

Whether the shadow of Peter healed any whom it fell across, we do not know, but it is evident from the account that people recognized that the very presence of such a man as Peter must be beneficial. If the shadow of Peter healed the sick, it must have been by an unconscious influence, and it strikingly illustrates the fact that we are constantly in our daily lives exerting such influences upon others.

We are all casting shadows. The shadows of parents' influence falls upon the lives of their children and are never lifted. Your friends and acquaintances exert their unconscious influence upon you and you upon them. Some men are always without seeming effort or thought making other people happy. Meet them where you will and their smiling faces and cheerful voices and cordial pressure of the hand, encourage and comfort and cheer you. On the other hand there are people whose very presence depresses. Lord Lytton in his "Mr. Wormwood" drew a representative character. "Every day he has some new distress to relate. He goes home at night like an undertaker to a funeral and the children cease singing and the wife refrains from smiles. In the morning he goes abroad like a Scotch mist from the highlands, to drizzle discontent in the streets and market place. He enters the house of God to render all its songs of praise into dirges and his religious light shines, as if it came through smoked glass." So we go through life diffusing our influence and some are like palms beside a fountain and others like cypresses over graves.

What a sense it must have been when Peter walked that day through the streets. How eagerly the people crowded upon his footsteps. It seemed to them as if this old fisherman of Galilee were a very angel of God. But look, through another street another man is passing. The priest has just pronounced him "a leper" and with bare head and covered lip he is on his way to the wilderness. See how people recoil from him and hasten from his path as he goes on his way saying "Unclean! Unclean!" So the angels took council together and decided that whenever the saint's shadow should fall behind him or on either side it should have the power to cure disease, soothe pain and comfort sorrow. And so it came to pass. When the saint walked along his shadow made arid paths green, caused withered plants to bloom, gave clear water to dried-up brooks, fresh color to pale little children and joy to sorrowing mothers. But the saint simply went about his daily life diffusing virtue as the

RULES FOR THE BATHROOM.

Open the window top and bottom. Take out all soiled towels, wash-cloths and linens.

Take out the rug, if there must be a rug, and leave it in the air after shaking.

Run hot water into the bathtub, with a dash of ammonia or soda or plain soap, and scrub well, ends, sides and bottom. Rinse well with hot and cold water, and wipe dry.

Wash all sponges, and hang in the air to dry.

Wash soap dishes, mugs, clab, faucets, bowl and closet with spongy water, and wipe dry.

Wring a house cloth as dry as possible, and lightly wipe over the closet seat and lid and all wood work and walls, and last of all the floor.

It sounds long to listen to, but it is short and quick work to do. Fifteen minutes means a fresh, bright looking room, which can honestly call itself "clean" till the next day.

TO KEEP FOR ROSE TIME.

About this time the girls are hunting for roses for making a rose jar just as their foremothers did in the long ago. A rose jar rightly made is a joy, if not forever, certainly for many years, as jars of fifty authentic roses still live to give forth delicate fragrances. Rose sachets and pillows of dried rose leaves are worth the trouble of making, and the simplest way of preserving the rose leaves is to spread them on large sheets of paper and turn them over every day until dry. Pack them in the jar until you can crowd no more in; then put on a tightly fitting cover. Another way is to weigh the fresh rose leaves, and to each pound allow one-quarter pound of salt that has been thoroughly dried in a warm oven. Mix the leaves and salt in a jar that can be closed tightly.

Another way is to gather the leaves and let them lie until all moisture has dried off, which will take but an hour or two, and pack in layers in a rose jar without drying. First sprinkle a layer of salt in the jar, then put in some leaves, repeat the salt and leaves until the jar is full, then sprinkle the top liberally with pure white vinegar and close tightly.

To make a sort of potpourri with rose leaves for a foundation, first dry the rose leaves, then fill a jar in layers, sprinkling each with a mixture of oil of cloves, cinnamon, and lemon and rose petals. Keep tightly closed. If liked all sorts of bruised whole spices may be added to the leaves, and the mixture closed tightly to ripen. But after all there is nothing better than the dried leaves and salt for the rose jar, and the salt is easily added and the jar kept closed securely and the jar kept closed securely and the jar kept closed securely.

But after all there is nothing better than the dried leaves and salt for the rose jar, and the salt is easily added and the jar kept closed securely.

Another way is to gather the leaves and let them lie until all moisture has dried off, which will take but an hour or two, and pack in layers in a rose jar without drying. First sprinkle a layer of salt in the jar, then put in some leaves, repeat the salt and leaves until the jar is full, then sprinkle the top liberally with pure white vinegar and close tightly.

To make a sort of potpourri with rose leaves for a foundation, first dry the rose leaves, then fill a jar in layers, sprinkling each with a mixture of oil of cloves, cinnamon, and lemon and rose petals. Keep tightly closed. If liked all sorts of bruised whole spices may be added to the leaves, and the mixture closed tightly to ripen. HEAL AND TOILET.

Flabby and Delicate Skins.—Soft, flabby skins may be greatly improved by the steady use of cold water and lemon juice, and the lemon pulp on the skin makes an excellent soap, removing liver spots, as well as the moving liver spots, as well as the moving liver spots.

Hot water should be employed for delicate skins with the greatest care, as it still in a short time destroy the elasticity of the muscles.

Rules for the Eyes.—When the eyes ache, close them for five minutes. When they burn, bathe them in water as hot as can be borne, with a dash of witch-hazel in it. After sweeping, bathe them in rose-water and lay a towel wet in rose-water over them for five minutes. When they are bloodshot, sleep more. When the whites are yellow and the pupils dull, consult the doctor about your diet.

When going to bed brush the hair for twenty minutes. It will be glossier and thicker for the trouble, and your nerves will be soothed by the process. Then, after the exercise, rub yourself in a warm dressing-gown and drink a glass of hot milk, weak cocoa or even hot water, eating a biscuit or a bit of toast if you like. When the small supper is finished you will be ready to go to sleep without any insomnia, and in the morning you will waken refreshed and thoroughly in good humor with yourself and the world.

Softening the Hands.—The hands may be softened by the use of cosmetic mittens. After cleansing them carefully at night with warm water and soap, apply a paste made of almond-meal and rose-water. Spread this smoothly over the skin and then draw on the mittens, which should be several sizes too large.

For the Throat.—Every morning, before dressing, sponge the neck, throat and chest with cold water, and rub dry with a large bath towel; not only will this make you less liable to take cold, but it will bronchitis the chest and fill out the unwholly little hollows. The throat also will soon become round and firm.

BOOT AND SHOE TID-BITS.

Creaky Boots.—Stank the soles of the boots thoroughly with warm water, and while wet apply a liberal coating of oil or grease, and allow it to dry into the sole slowly. New boots will last longer and keep out the damp.

To clean white satin shoes try sprays of wine. Use a piece of clean flannel for the purpose, and be careful not to rub the grainways of the satin. If the shoes are only slightly dirty, there is no need to use sprays of wine. Rubbing them with stale bread will clean them in a short time.

Fashionable Footwear.—There is a decided liking for shoes which are strapped, and some of the prettiest footwear of the moment consists of little groups of straps, fastened to the feet by means of dainty stockings, but should on no account be adopted by girls having clumsy-looking feet.

Hand Leather Shoes.—To soften shoes or boots, first wash them over with warm water and then rub castor-oil into them; any oil will answer the purpose, but castor-oil is best. The shoes, after the application, will become quite soft and pliable.

SPOILING HUSBANDS.

There is no better way to make a selfish, spoiled husband out of a perfectly good man than by always being unselfish and doing a thousand and one things for him that he has been accustomed to do for himself. If you want a model husband, don't be always doing things for him, but try and train him to do for you. It is a recognized truth that we all care more for the person who is dependent upon us than for the one we depend upon. So, if you would keep your husband's love, make him feel that you are absolutely dependent upon him.

WHAT EVERY WIFE NEEDS.

She needs a good temper, a cheerful disposition, and a knowledge of how her husband should be treated. She needs a capability of looking on the bright side of life and refusing to be worried by small things. She needs a sincere grasp of such subjects as are of interest to men, and should not be above studying even politics in order to understand if her husband speaks of them.

THE MOTHER'S DUTIES.

The thoughtful mother will teach her child to be respectful to older people, gentle toward all, and not think that the earth and everything on it were created for her special edification, and she will teach her the beauty and value of neatness and economy. She will also teach her that when the little maid comes into her own kingdom she will be able to order it with neatness and despatch.

THE GRACEFUL GIRL.

If you want to be graceful you must learn to walk properly. Very few people walk correctly, and yet it is an art well worth learning, for it adds grace and charm to the figure even in moving about a room. The girl who walks correctly walks easily, and she generally delights in the exercise which all others help most to bring the bloom of health to her cheeks, brightness to her eyes, and adds to the beauty of her figure.

INVISIBLE PATCHES ON CURTAINS.

Cut a piece of the required size out of an old one, and dip it in starch. Then press it on the curtain with a hot iron, and you will have the defacing spot well mended until washing day for it comes round again. Do not iron your curtains, for ironing breaks the threads. Instead, mangle and shake them out, and any creases which remain will soon disappear when they are hung up.

VALUE OF CHEERFULNESS.

Men like cheerful women. They are not patient when it comes to tears, probably because they do not easily cry themselves, but they are quick to appreciate a second time, and a young man, "when a girl begins to pour out a long tale of troubles." And although this sounds like masculine selfishness, one really can't blame him. More sunshine and less woe is what the world cares about.

FOR HOME DRESSMAKERS.

In making buttonholes, if the material is of the sort which frays easily, first mark the buttonhole, then before cutting the cloth stitch it about on the wrong machine, and cut between the two rows of stitching. This not only makes a firm foundation for the buttonhole, but effectually prevents the material from fraying out.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT IN ITALY

Italy has her Beck case, with circumstances even more painful than in the famous English miscarriage of justice.

In 1882 Lieutenant Pasquini one night at noon left his overcoat hanging in the hall with six thousand francs of regimental money in the pocket. When he returned the money was gone, but he hesitated to accuse any one, and said nothing of the matter until the degradation being sustained by him with a courage which won admiration even from those who considered him guilty. As he was being taken by a picket of his comrades to prison he saw pass a detachment of his beloved Bersaglieri, and then, and only then, tears course down his cheeks. To the astonishment of all, the Bersaglieri stopped short, while the Lieutenant in command rushed forward, and embracing Pasquini, exclaimed: "Courage, dear innocent one!"

As then went on the many who had never believed in the guilt of the unfortunate man were reinforced by others, but notwithstanding many efforts, it was never possible to prove him innocent. Now, forty-three years

IF I KNOW HE LOVES ME

Shall Not be Lawful for any Young Man to Attempt to Court any Young Woman Before he is 24.

New Orleans, June 19.—Representative Smith of England has introduced in the State Legislature a bill, applying only to whites, which provides: It shall be unlawful for any young man to attempt to court any young woman before he is twenty-four years of age. Before making such attempt he shall inform the parents or guardians of the woman he proposes to court of his intention to do so. He shall make affidavit before a Justice of the Peace that his courtship is in good faith. It shall be unlawful for widowers over the age of forty years to attempt to court any woman under the age of eighteen beyond the confines of the parish of their residence. Summer Jing

After a certain officer has died, confessing that he stole the money from Pasquini's coat, but the confession is too late to be of much use to his victim. The matter is to be brought before parliament, and Pasquini will be rehabilitated. But how about the wasted years, the ruined career, and the shame?—Fall Mail Gazette.

Murderer Whipped Daily With Thorns; Walled in Living Tomb

Awful Doom of Slayer of 36 Women—Cobbler Who Was to be Crucified Meets a Terrible Fate

Tanger, June 23.—With such details of bestial cruelty that they cannot be fully realized, Mohammed Meskewi the arch murderer of Marakesh, has been walled up alive.

It was this same Meskewi who was whipped daily with the cruellest of whips, and he had been walled up alive in the living tomb of the Sultan's own signature, and the fact that the sentence was carried out in full view of the populace shows that the officials of Marakesh knew the awful program would not be interfered with.

The day of execution was set for Monday, June 11, that being the Marakesh market day. The news of the execution had been spread and the market place was thronged with thousands of Moroccans, who squatted in the blazing sunlight and waited for the ghastly show to commence. A death by walling up alive had not been seen in Marakesh for many years, but there were those who told others that victims had been known sometimes to live for a whole week, and so the good news spread and the people brought their provisions and the caravansaries were crowded.

Just inside the jail, where Meskewi was confined stands the chief bazaar. It has very thick walls, and in one of these, facing the market place, two masons dug a hole six feet high, two feet wide and two feet deep. Meskewi was very thin and these dimensions were just what he needed. He was taken to the hole and he was not allowed to enter until he was bound with chains every two feet. The purpose of these was to keep the victim erect so that he might not huddle down out of sight of the crowd. Meskewi had not been told of his fate and when he was brought out of

MOST MERCIFUL CRUELTY.

After each flogging the cobbler's back was oiled, so that he might be fit for the next day's ordeal.

So the daily whippings went on and when it was seen that despite all care Meskewi was falling into exhaustion it was decided to carry out the supreme sentence. This was that he be walled up alive in the public market place.

The cobbler who brings this news from Marakesh to Tanger asserts that the order of execution bore the Sultan's own signature, and the fact that the sentence was carried out in full view of the populace shows that the officials of Marakesh knew the awful program would not be interfered with.

So it went on, course by course, stone by stone, water and bread, until only Meskewi's screaming head was seen. The last stones were thrust in place, and Meskewi's living tomb was completed. But the crowd was not yet satisfied. Meskewi was not dead, and the throng pressed forward and kept quiet to hear the muffled screams for mercy that came out of the wall. Every time Meskewi screamed the crowd yelled.

Night came, braziers were lit, coffee was made and still Meskewi was not dead. Tuesday, June 12, came in, and the market place was as crowded as ever, and Meskewi was still screaming for mercy.

So it went on all day and all night. Only Meskewi's screams were heard. When morning came, it broke those close up to the wall reported that the dead-head was only moaning. Finally the morning stopped and we crowded across Meskewi for dying so soon, and the delayed business of the market was resumed.

No Hadj Mohammed Meskewi expiated his crime.

HE SEES HIS LIVING TOMB. As soon as he saw the expectant thousands, however, and heard their howls of hate he knew that his day had come. Then he saw the hole dug in the wall, and, being an old man, he knew what that meant. He had heard his whippings with fatalistic fortitude, hoping that he might die under the thorns, but when he was dragged toward the upright tomb he struggled with his jailers and screamed for mercy.

Screaming, he was thrust into the recess in the thick wall, and, screaming, he was chained up. There he was left for a while, for there was plenty of time. The masons stood aside and the crowd struggled and fought to get in the front rank, scoffing in derision at the screaming old man and pelting him with the frightful filth and offal of the market place.

MARTIAL LAW

A South African Commissioner Who Won High Praise Indicted.

It is generally believed that martial law is an unmitigated evil, and that it cannot be administered with any success. An interesting contradiction comes from Natal. Mr. R. C. Lloyd, Resident Magistrate and Civil Commissioner, has been in office at Barkly East for the past four years, and had a good deal to do with the administration of martial law. Recently he was promoted to a more lucrative post, whereupon he received complimentary addresses, not only from the English residents, but from the Afrikaners as well. The first address read from the residents of the town and district. It was most complimentary in character, and concluded with the cheering information to Mr. Lloyd that the committee had provided a tangible souvenir of their respect for him in the shape of an eight guinea piano. The piano secured for the presentation was a very fine Gurlay made in Toronto by the firm of Gurlay, Winter & Leeming. The Secretary of the committee had heard of the instrument through Canadian friends and selected the Gurlay because of its reputation as the best upright on the market. The reputation of good goods goes far, and it is certain Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd will spread its praises still further. Mrs. Lloyd is a magnificent singer and a musician of excellent taste.

TO FIGHT 151 DUBLS

Hungarian Sportsman Insults Bank Clerk and all Latter's Friends For Summer.

Vizsna, June 24.—Richard Zombory a well known Hungarian sportsman, residing at Budapest, has placed himself in the position of having to fight one hundred and fifty-one duels as the result of refusing to accept a challenge from a bank clerk whom he insulted.

On receipt of a challenge from the clerk M. Zombory sent back word that the clerk's social position precluded giving him the usual satisfaction. Thereupon one hundred and fifty officials of the bank championed the cause of their offended colleague and promptly challenged M. Zombory. Six hundred and four seconds held a meeting last night and arranged for the duels to be fought with pistols. The meetings will take place on Sunday night, one after another, until satisfaction is secured, one bullet being exchanged in each duel.

M. Zombory's doctor, Casper, was the cause of the challenge. He hit a bank clerk named Johann Szuesz, slightly tearing his leg. M. Szuesz railed at the dog, for which M. Zombory, it is alleged, insulted M. Szuesz. This was followed next day by the challenge.

M. Szuesz and the other challengers belong to the Hungarian Land Mortgage Bank. The 151 challengers will stand in rows, formed in military fashion, and lots will be drawn in order to ascertain who will fight the first duel with Zombory.

OF INTEREST TO PHILATELISTS

The Grecian, Italian and French governments are issuing new postage stamps, which show a distinct improvement over former achievements in philatelic art. The Greek publication is in the form of a series, with designs intended to symbolize the Olympic games. They display, respectively, a discus thrower, a jumper with jumping weights, Victory with a small caduceus, Atlas, having changed places with Heracles, supporting the heavens (represented by eight stars and a moon); Heracles and Antaios wrestling; wrestlers, with a view of the Acropolis; Victory holding a cock typical of cock-fighting; a group of runners; victor of torch race offering sacrifice. Every stamp of the series bears the words "Olympic Games" and "Athens, 1907," in Greek characters.

An interesting circumstance is connected with the issue of the new Italian stamp. It is the reproduction of the portrait of Victor Emmanuel III, which a canvasser of the manufacturers of souvenir postal cards has proved to be the most popular among Italians. With the new 10-centime stamp France for the first time adopts a postage which has long been in vogue in the United States; that is, the rate of 2 cents per half ounce for domestic letters. The new 10-centime red stamp takes the place of the old 15-centime stamp. In regard to the design of the cover upon its face, it is interesting to note that she spreads the seed against the wind, and not with it, as was erroneously depicted on the old stamp—New York Times.

A Will on Ice. The strangest will on record is that of a Connecticut clergyman who broke through the ice of a certain pond. Finding that he was unable to get out upon the ice and realizing that he had but a short time to live because of the bitter cold, he took his knife and wrote his will on the smooth surface of the ice. It was found, fully sworn to and recorded as his last will and testament.

Obsequies. "Some grocers," remarked the customer, "have an offhand way of weighing sugar, but I notice you're not one of them." "Offhand way? How do you mean?" asked the grocer. "I noticed you kept your hand on the scales just now while you measured out five pounds for me."

Simplexity. Only small souls assume exclusive airs. The more truly a man the more simple do we find him. Rarely do we come in contact with a person from whom we may not receive something if we meet him on the plane of a kindly human sympathy. It all lies in our innate feeling.

A Proof. "It is a great mistake, Madam, to trifle with the affections of a man who loves you by encouraging some one else." "Well, he's a little slow, madam. I think he needs a pacemaker."

Was to the Kettle. Gladly—Shall you marry Jack if I refuse him? Mad—Yes, and if you accept him!

We were presented yesterday with the first sweet peas of the season by Dr. Armstrong, picked from his garden the 26th. The doctor informs us that these are about ten days earlier than last year, but not quite so early as two years ago; other annuals such as phlox and petunias are also showing bloom in the doctor's garden.

The death occurred at Wellington on Saturday, of Mr. James W. Shaw, a highly respected and aged citizen of that place, having reached the advanced age of over 80 years. In former years Mr. Shaw had been a seafaring man, but long ago he retired from that service and has since run the mill at Wellington known as Shaw's mill. Four children, three daughters, Mrs. Thos. Cleveland, of Sabon, Mrs. Harvey Fice and Mrs. Jesse Ellis, of Wellington, and one son, Capt. Harvey Shaw, also of Wellington. The funeral took place on Monday afternoon. Interment at Beaton cemetery.

On July 2nd the Shaver Cup will be competed for by the junior members of the association. On same day there will be an open competition for the Professional Cup, ranges of 200, 500 and 600 yards. All members of the association will take due notice of above as no further notification will be given.

The Farmers' Association

The third annual meeting of the Annapolis County Farmers' Association convened here yesterday afternoon. E. J. Elliott, the president, gave a very interesting address, reviewing the work of the association for the past year and touched on many practical subjects of interest to farmers. The secretary reported for the executive and from reports it was gleaned that there had been seventy-two institute meetings held during the year. The speakers of the afternoon were Professor Lockwood, of the Macdonald Agricultural College, who spoke on "Soils, Weeds and Spraying," Professor Sears, who spoke on "Insects and Spraying," F. W. Foster on "Dairying and Hog Raising," and W. H. Woodworth, of Berwick.

The officers for the ensuing year are as follows: President—E. J. Elliott. First Vice President—F. M. Chipman. Second Vice President—F. H. Johnson. Secretary—L. W. Elliott. The farmers' association.

A TIMELY QUESTION

With the return of the shooting season, there is one question many a father will have to face: "Papa, may I have a gun this year?"

One father will say "Yes," another, "Wait till you're ten," another, "Wait till you're twelve," another, perhaps, fourteen.

For our part we would say, "Let him have it when he's ten; or, if he has developed ahead of his age, perhaps a little earlier."

There are countless men today who began to shoot about as soon as they had strength enough to raise a gun to their shoulders. Almost without exception such are men of quick decision, action and assurance.

The gun has a great deal to do with fostering these three qualities, and we say begin it early.

It is no theory; the readers of this paper have had it very ably presented in the announcements of the J. Stevens Arms and Tool Company, Chicopee Falls, Mass. The company is conducting a very laudable, and, we are pleased to say, most successful campaign in introducing a light, practical rifle to our young lads all over the country. Young eyes are being trained, young arms strengthened and young nerves steadied, which should be the better able to frame the destiny of our country a few years hence.

We wish the J. Stevens Arms and Tool Company the best of success in carrying out their splendid work, and we recommend most heartily to every young man, young woman, young boy and young girl, just issued, on the rifle and shotgun, with most interesting information on the care and use of these catalogues, just issued, on the get shooting, etc. This book of reference has 140 pages and is sent free to any one sending four cents to cover postage.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING

The home of Mrs. Adn Banks, Torbrook Mines, was the scene of an interesting event on Tuesday evening, June 19th, when her youngest daughter, Ethel Iona, was united in marriage to Arthur Spurgeon Jefferson, of Torbrook. The ceremony took place beneath an arch of green and white and was performed in a most impressive manner, by their pastor, Rev. C. H. Haverstock, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. Miss Florence Nealey played Mendelssohn's wedding march as the bride and groom entered the tastefully decorated parlor and Lohengrin's bridal march at the conclusion of the ceremony. The bride was becomingly attired in white organdie with silk trimmings and wore white pelargoniums and thyme. Both bride and groom, who are highly respected, were warmly congratulated by those present. The gifts included money, silver, glass, china, linen, etc., that of the groom to the bride being gold coin. Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson will be "at home" to their friends on the afternoons and evenings of July 3, 4 and 5.
